

The Bread of Life

By E. A. Marsh

"IT IS written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God" (Matt. 4:4). These words were uttered by the Savior under peculiarly trying circumstances. He had been led into the wilderness to endure a terrible temptation; to suffer the pangs of hunger, which He patiently bore for forty days and forty nights, and then to receive the evil suggestion that He should transform the stones of the desert into bread to appease His hunger. This was a powerful appeal to His appetite and His pride of power. He successfully repelled the tempter by an appropriate quotation from Deuteronomy.

"Man shall not live by bread alone." The lower animals may be said to live by bread alone. They are satisfied when the natural craving for food is supplied. It is so, too, with the mere natural man who has no higher object in view than the gratification of his animal desires; but, as we shall see, he fails to live the life God designed that he should live.

Experience is a good witness. It will testify that when trial comes, when adversity arises, and when all things earthly fail, there is no satisfaction, no relief, no heart support. But to those who are sustained by the assurances of God's Word, who feed on His promises, and are comforted by that Word, there is nourishment and rest.

WHAT THE WORD OF GOD ACCOMPLISHES

First, there is the word of truth, which satisfies the mind; second, the word of promise, which faith accepts; and, third, the word of duty, which love obeys.

Let us notice some of the all-satisfying utterances of that Word.

"Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters; and he that hath no money, come ye, buy, and eat."

Here is an earnest invitation to the soul that is thirsting for the water of life. It is not like the advertising notice of some famous mineral water for which a price must be paid; but this fountain to which sinners are called is so inexhaustible that all may quench their thirst. It is free! Oh, that every one could be prevailed upon to slake his thirst at the "fountain opened for sin and uncleanness"! No money is required-it is only drink and live.

Bro. G. E. Marsh found the following unpublished article recently among the papers of his father, the late Elder Edgar A. Marsh, who was a pioneer evangelist in Illinois, Missouri, and Iowa, and a frequent contributor to various religious and secular journals.

Then the sublime Prophet exclaims: "Yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price." A price-less offer, and yet how few accept it! In tones of kindly remonstrance and tender entreaty he inquires, "Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labour for that which satisfieth not? hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness. Incline your ear, and come unto me: hear and ye shall live."

The life of the soul depends upon heeding this carnest pleading. May many hear, and freely partake of this spiritual fruit, is my prayer.

NOURISHMENT PROVIDED IN THE WORD

We can only lightly touch in this short article the allusion to the Word as giving nourishment to the soul. Turning to the words of Christ recorded in John 6:27, we hear Him saying: "Labour not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life."

The Savior was reproving those whose only motive in following Him was the supply of their natural wants, as we learn from the previous verse. Human nature is ever the same, hence there are many now to whom this reproof applies. If it is the minister who preaches because he can thus supply his carnal desires, or amass property, it applies to him. If it be an individual who follows in the wake of some popular church in order to gain patronage and enrich himself, it is applicable there. Many, I fear, would be severely condemned under this text were it actually brought to bear in the day indicated by our Savior.

Signs of Soon-Coming Redemption

"None of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand" (Daniel 12:10).

The signs of gospel heraldry . . . force us to the conclusion that we are at the termination of the gospel age. Let us ... see if we can find any "signs" in the book of Daniel.

The first sign is: "The wise shall understand." This book of Daniel is a book of prophecy, and it was "sealed" "until the time of the end." As the end of time draws near, in "the time of the end," wisdom is given God's servantsthe walchers. Therefore, such uncovering of the prophetic mysteries, such inquiry and demonstration concerning the "what, and what manner of time" as our generation has witnessed, is a most striking token of the nearness of the ending of the gospel age. The prophetic spirit is in the Word, but that same spirit is in the church. And, as "the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy," so the witnesses of Jesus will be expositors of prophecy. They may here and there make a few mistakes, but the general consensus of their opinion will thunder along the prophetic track of the Old and New Testament. Therefore, the deepening search is a "sign" of soon-coming dawn.

Never did the church witness such a constellation of signs of the near coming of Christ as now. "The branches of the fig trees are full of sap; and the summer is at hand." Assuredly, we are not ignorant that a portion of the church has become gradually weary of the long-tarrying, and has fallen into doubt. You also shake your head, and are of the opinion that we have long talked of "the last time." Well, use this language, and increase the number of the existing signs by this new one. . . .

Language could not describe more accurately the attitude of a large section of the nominal church respecting the future. "Evolution, not catastrophe," is the cry. By the transforming power of Christian civilization, the world is to be gradually subdued to God, and the present good age, with its beneficent endowment of steam and electricity and printer's type and other inventions, is to terminate in a Christo-scientific "millennium." Darwin, the apostle of evolution, echoes back the words of Peter, the apostle of judgment, saying: "All things continue as they were since the beginning of creation. There is no need for miraculous intervention, no room for supernatural action; as it was in the beginning, so it is now, and so it shall ever be as regards the succession of physical phenomena." In this saying he speaks for multitudes within the Christian church. Man is the microcosm of creation, and as the doctrine of salvation by development has, with many, superceded that of salvation by regeneration, so has the theory of a "millennium" through evolution taken the place of that crisis, cataclysm, just ahead of us.

We should be reminded, at this point, that the signs of the approaching end of the age are both bright and dark. These signs have always been so at the crisis-point of history. The gloomy pessimism which looks only for deepening apostasy is quite as wrong as the placid optimism which expects the world to glide peacefully into the golden age of glory. The brighter the light, the deeper the shadow. The world-wide evangelization which our generation is witnessing; the translation of the Scriptures into innumerable tongues; the unparalleled study of the Bible through Sunday school and lay instruction; the revivalism promoted by such bands of earnest workers of every grade and orderthese facts indicate that a light is falling upon our lost humanity such as never was before. But the shadows are "the blackness of darkness" itself-avarice within the church, threatening to throttle the gospel just when the promise is greatest for its triumph; anarchy without, menacing all order and stability with its angry growl; the ruin which Christian nations are sowing in the path of the missionary's blessing by their opium and strong drink; the ingenious vice and elaborate debauchery which our higher civilization is begetting; the restrained anger of the nations, who wait only the slightest provocation to fly at each other's throats . . . —this outlook is so dismal as to be utterly appalling, were we not confident that even the shadows point to the dawn. "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." While the warmth of the gospel has reached many nations, the warmth has also brought "the snakes" out! . . . But "the path of the just is as a shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfeet day. . . . The energy of Satan is evermore a tribute to the zeal of God appearing in the church. If Christians are rising up to extraordinary service for God, because they know that "the time is short," what wonder if Satan should be "transformed into an angel of light"?

An Interesting Experience

By Albert J. Blakesley

ONE occasion when Robert G. Ingersol was lecturing on the Bible, he challenged God to strike him dead in five minutes. This instance, to which reference was made in a recent article in The Restitution Herald, reminds me that I heard the story at about the time it happened many years ago. How foolish it was for a man of his undoubted ability to issue such a challenge! How easily God might have answered that challenge and struck Mr. Ingersol stone dead!

At about the time this story was reported, I heard another one concerning the same man, but which I do not think has ever been published. Although I haven't the documents to prove the truth of this second story, I received it from a very reliable source, and have every reason to believe it to be true. It was related to me by a minister, and was as follows:

One time Mr. Ingersol was going on a business trip by train. The coach was rather crowded, and he looked for an empty seat but saw none. As he walked down the isle he noticed in the center of the coach a well dressed man occupying a seat by himself.

"Is this seat taken?" he asked.

"I am alone here," answered the man.

"Would you object to me sitting with you?"

"You are perfectly welcome," answered the man as he moved over next to the wall.

When Mr. Ingersol had sat down, he noticed that the man had a book in his hand which he had been reading. It looked quite familiar, but he asked: "What book are you reading, may I enquire?"

"The Holy Bible," was the reply.

Mr. Ingersol said, "You are quite an intelligent looking man, do you believe in that book?"

"Yes, sir," he responded, "I believe every word of it. It is the Word of God, why shouldn't I believe it?"

Mr. Ingersol then asked, "Do you know who I am?"

"No, sir," was the reply, "I don't think I ever saw you before."

"I am Robert Ingersol," said his questioner.

"I am pleased to meet you, Mr. Ingersol. I have heard of you through the papers many times, but have never met you before."

The man with the Bible then introduced himself as a minister of the gospel. I am not sure, but I think it was Elder John Cargile.

"Well," said Mr. Ingersol, "I do not comprehend how anyone can believe in a Bible, or in a God who has claimed to create a class of beings called men, made them indestructible, and placed them here on earth and, because they don't believe on Him and His plans, and don't obey Him, will at the end of their course here east them into a fire that can never be quenched, and keep them in pain and suffering for all eternity. How unjust that seems to be!"

"Well," said the minister, "you have been misinformed, I see. You have a wrong idea of Bible teaching. The Bible does not teach any such awful thing. That is what ministers are preaching, I know, for I have heard them many times. How far are you going on this train?"

When Mr. Ingersol mentioned his destination, the minister said: "I am going still farther, so if you will permit me to do so, I would be pleased to show you some things that may change your mind."

"All right, that will be agreeable," replied Mr. Ingersol

So the minister opened to Genesis 2:7, and called attention to the words: "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." He pointed out the fact that man did not become an immortal soul, but just a living being or creature. Then he called attention to Genesis 1:30: "And to every beast of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and to every thing that creepeth upon the earth wherein there is life" (margin, "living soul"). "No one teaches that the animals have immortal souls," said the minister, "but the same word is used in both places."

Then he called his attention to Genesis 3:23, and asked why God drove the man out of the garden? Answering his own question, the minister said it was because man became a sinner, and God did not want him to eat of the tree of life and live forever in sin.

Referring to various other places where the word "soul" is used, he showed him that the word "immortal" was never used in connection with the word "soul." But the Bible does say, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die" (Ezek. 18: 4).

Then he recalled many places of people who died and were buried.

"And David slept with his fathers, and was buried" (1 Kings 2:10). "And Solomon slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David" (1 Kings 11:43).

Not a word about a soul departing is found in any of these records.

Turning to the prophecies, he pointed out those which refer to Jesus' coming, and showed how they were being fulfilled. He told him about the resurrection, which was the hope of Job, David, and Isaiah, and quoted Daniel's words referring to that event: "And many that sleep in the dust of the earth shall come forth, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." Jesus spoke of the same thing: "Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming when all that are in their graves shall hear his voice, and come forth, they that have done good to everlasting life, and they that have done evil unto (Please turn to page 16)

Christian Duties

By A. J. Eychaner (deceased)

"If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts to your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask him" (Matt. 7:11).

JESUS, in that peerless sermon to His disciples on the mount, presents the fatherhood of God as the basis and security of our petitions. God is represented as sustaining the same relation to mankind as the earthly parent does to his children. His confidence in God's providence and goodness does not admit a shadow of doubt. God's ear and heart are ever open to the wants or needs of His children. If the text and its connections teach anything, they teach the boundless benevolence of our wonderful Creator. Jesus teaches this when He says: "Ask and it shall be given unto you; seek and ye shall find; knock and it shall be opened unto you: for every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened."

Has a human intellect ever conceived a more confidential expression as to the goodness and willingness of God to grant every need which can come to us; provided always that we come in the right manner? We are as helpless and dependent upon the care of God as the child is upon its parent. And this brings us to study:

THE DUTIES OF PARENTS

The duties of the parent toward the child are many and various. These duties begin at birth with the care and protection of its physical being. But there are duties that are prenatal and reach back and involve the physical, mental, and moral condition of the parent to be. The child has the right to be well-born—to be free from tendency to evil, and be started in the direction of life and its blessings. This can be only as the parents are pure in body and morals.

The transmission of complexion, the color of the eyes and hair, the tastes, habits, and even the morals are all alike transmitted to the child from the parents. The temperaments of the mother are generally transmitted to the son, while the temperaments of the father are the inheritance of the daughter; thus blending the gentleness of the mother with the rugged nature of the father in each sex.

Were it not so, the son in a few generations would become too masculine and angular, and the daughter too feminine and tender. Marriage, therefore, should seek an intelligent blending of desirable temperaments, and especially those good qualities of heart and mind which would be most desirable in the child.

The Apostle Paul has left us a hint of prenatal influences upon the child, in his letter to Timothy: "I thank God whom I serve from my forefathers with pure conscience." Paul considered his reverence to God was due to that trait of character in the line of his ancestors. And he expresses the same truth, that of prenatal influence in the molding of the character of the child, where he speaks of Timothy. He says, "When I call to remembrance the unfeigned faith that is in thee, which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice, and I am persuaded that is in thee also." By this we learn that even faith is transmissible from parent to child.

Can we wonder, then, when we understand the laws of life, why so few men have faith? The godless life, the faithless mind, the leprous vice, and moral darkness of the parents must and will tell its own tale in the life of the child; for the iniquity of the parents is visited upon the children to the third and fourth generation. It is, therefore, a primary duty which parents owe to their children, to see to it that no evil tendency is allowed to occupy the place of righteousness in the prenatal state. But use every element that can make for happiness and usefulness in the generations to come.

Parents should also consider the duty of being free from habits that are bad in themselves, such as the use of alcohol, opium, and tobacco, or any other habit that is not desirable to be in the life of the child. Drunkenness and its associates of evil are often transmitted and become the grief of the parents in after life.

TRAINING OF THE CHILD

Training is something, but not all. There must be a foundation upon which to build character and usefulness. There must first of all be the physical, mental, and moral conditions in the make-up of the child; otherwise the training will end in partial or total disappointment. The duty of careful training and instruction is not underestimated, but the proper elements of a good and useful citizen must be present in embryo if the training is successful. How can a child that is a weakling, caused by prenatal drunkenness in the parent, ever be trained to be a giant?

Education is training. The child has a right to instruction in all that makes for physical, moral, and spiritual excellence in character. It is the duty of the parents not only to supply food and clothing, but also the food that builds the moral and esthetical, as well. "Give us this day our daily bread," means more than the bread that is baked in a physical oven.

INDEPENDENCE AND HELPFULNESS

Many parents fail in the duty of teaching children to be independent and helpful. To illustrate: If a child falls down, many parents pick him up and say pitiful things, and make a great thing out of the fall. If the child falls again it looks for help to get up—it cries for pity, and soon it will depend upon the mother to come at every little mishap. It is fast becoming indigent and depends upon the mother for her care in every trivial accident, and is a regular cry-baby in everything. It has learned the lesson of dependence and helplessness.

Just the opposite lesson should have been taught the child. If Johnny falls down, let him get up himself. If he whines and cries to obtain what he has been denied, tell him to stop it—that is is not manly to do so—and be sure not to give him what he is crying for. Teach him when Mother or Father says, "No," that the matter is ended; and he will soon learn that teasing and crying are not keys to the storeroom. He will soon learn that when he falls, he can get up alone, and that kicking and squalling do not bring him help. He will learn to depend upon himself. This is true independence. A parasite does not deserve recognition.

Play is the life of children. It is the duty of the parents to help the children in their play. The more simple, the better. The play is the education of the muscle, the hand, the eye, the memory; and must teach fairness—treating others as they would be treated in turn.

Every child should be taught to be helpful in the home—to contribute to make home beautiful, supply something for its needs, bear some of its burdens, do some of the work to lighten the load upon the parents' shoulders, make himself or herself useful and helpful in the battle for bread. The child will do this if taught that it is a duty. And it is the duty of the parent to instruct the child for his future good. There is dignity and respect, and a noble future for the girl who is the queen of the kitchen, as well as the musician of the parlor.

The Psychology of the Gospel

By James M. Watkins

"And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come" (Matt. 24:14).

ON THIS precept the roots of the modern church organization were founded immediately after the time of Christ. If the slowly passing of churches from existence, the combining of churches in the smaller towns in order to preserve one, where once there were four, yes, the empty pews of those that still exist, are an indication of the success or failure of this aim, we can only assume that modern churchdom is daily losing ground.

Why? That is the question that dominates the background, if not the foreground, of the greatest minds of Christian thought. The intriguing answer to that little three-letter word caused us to do rash things. To a variety of people of three states we put this question, "Do you go to church?" If the answer was "No," we asked this question, "Why?" If the answer was "Yes," we asked the same question, "Why?" Among those of all denominations the almost universal answer of those who went to church was, "I think it is good for me to go," or "It is essential to my salvation."

Among those who did not go, we found a larger variety of answers. The amount they were expected to contribute and unsuitable clothes were the deterring factors for one group. To others it was the lack of friendly, personal interest, which they described as a tendency to tear down rather than build up the morality of others. To them the church lacked life and personal feeling, and in it they found only four walls. To another group, it was the failure to remain interested; they found nothing to claim their talents and their interest. The objections of the majority, however, centered around the tendency to preach on scenery or political subjects and prospects rather than on the things they had found so interesting in Grandmother's Bible. We admit a very few probably offered excuses because they didn't want to go to church anyway, but for the most part we do not question the sincerity of the responses received.

The most astonishing result of our survey was observed in the fact that not one gave as a reason for not attending church a lack of interest in the Bible, or a failure to believe God! On the other hand, when asked some such question, as, "What do you think happens to us when we die!" or that thought-provoking question, "Do you think the affairs of the world indicate that we are in the last days?" a discussion was elicited that in most cases could have well lasted for hours. Four out of five of these non-attenders are Bible hungry!

Can organized churchdom meet these conditions? Could Christianity be made to succeed? I would answer most emphatically in the affirmative. Not by an ostrich-like attitude, or sticking our heads in the sand and saying that such feelings do not exist, but rather by recognizing their existence and treating them in the same analytical manner that we treat other problems. I would not offer a modern paracea of brass bands and gay advertisements, but rather the wisdom of the eges.

First, let us understand that sincere Christianity is rarely attained save under the stress of some severe emotional upset. At such a time the individual is in need of one thing, personal interest and friendship.

While it is not given to us to control these emotional upsets to which we are liable, it is essential that personal interest and personal contact be maintained by any group that desires to influence others at that time. Although throughout the Scriptures interest in others is most ardently stressed, churchdom finds itself succumbing to the force that is gradually disintegrating the world—self-centered interest. Witness the personal pronoun in the answer of those who attended church, "It is good for me."

I venture to apply a thought to individuals that I have applied to nations. We blame churches for success or failure, but there is no such thing as churches, there are only individuals of a church. A primary law of nature asserts that nothing is animated save by the tiny component parts of cellular structure. The life and the characteristics of anything cannot be different from the tiny cells that animate it.

History tells of the beginning of the gospel's spread before the day of organized churchdom. There was no waiting for an individual to interest himself in Christianity and come to hear what a minister had to say, risking the stares of strange faces to do so. But rather, the teachers met individuals, the persons they taught, in their homes, where they also assembled for worship. As they came to an understanding of the gospel they were given a place as an elder, whose duty was to instruct new converts, to visit them and extend a hand of true fellowship, and to maintain their interest until such time as they took their place among the elders. Or they took their place as deacons to visit the sick, to offer friendship and help to the poor, to minister to the material needs of others. In any case, interest was maintained among the newly converted by the sincere concern the leaders showed in them. Compare this thought on the spread of the gospel by the apostles themselves, as recorded in Acts 2:46, 47: "And they, continuing daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart, praising God, and having favour with all the people. And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved."

Under such a practice of personal interest and contact, could any one of the reasons given for not going to church stand? Compare them closely, and we dare say you will agree that they cannot.

If selfish interests were abolished, would anyone say a thing that would hurt another? If the understanding of friendship was established, would clothes be important? If a desire to save others was paramount, would an excessive contribution be asked? Would a member lose interest as he daily strove to offer the gospel to others? Would churches find it necessary to preach on scenery and politics if they really had the "feel" of the gospel? I leave the answer for you to make.

I venture to say, that if the church of the future would succeed it must interest its members and non-members in a system of personal contact that includes sincere interest and friendship. An elder, with a special interest in four or five families, an interest in their everyday welfare, a thought to their place in the future, can do much to build up a spiritual atmosphere in those homes. Human nature craves companionship, burdens are only heavy when borne alone. That is the earliest law of social history. Christianity must go back to its individual aspects that these thousands of Bible-hungry people may yet be brought in, for, as we quoted above, only then will the end come.

God has said that this must be. If modern churchdom fails to understand, or fails to meet the challenge, it will be necessary for God to take drastic steps to accomplish this end. In foreign lands, Christianity has returned to its individual responsibility only by the absolute destruction of church organization and under that system Christianity is on the increase rather than on the decrease. Eyewitnesses testify to that. A word-of-mouth campaign is carrying it along. Perhaps God found it necessary to accomplish His purpose there in that way—through the overthrow of organized religion. We can only pray that He won't find it necessary here.

SCRIPTURE SERMONETTE

Our Tongue Rightly Used-

"The tongue of the wise is health."

"The wholesome tongue is a tree of life."

"The lips of the righteous feed many."

"He that keepeth his tongue keepeth his life."

"The words of the pure are pleasant."

Our Tongue Wrongly Used-

"If any man among you seem to be religious and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain."

"The tongue is a small member of the body, but it can boast great exploits. What a forest is set ablaze by a little spark of fire!"

"And the tongue is a fire, the tongue proves a very world of mischief among our members, staining the whole of the body and setting fire to the round circle of existence with a flame fed by hell" (Moffatt).

"With the tongue we bless the Lord and Father, and with the tongue we curse men made in God's likeness: blessing and cursing stream from the same lips! My brothers, this ought not to be" (Moffatt).

Counsel-

"Keep thy tongue from evil, and thy lips from speaking guile."

"For he that will love life, and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile."

"Do all things without murmuring and disputings."

"A soft answer turneth away wrath; but grievous words stir up anger."

Our Prayer-

"My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth."

"Let the words of my mouth, and the meditations of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my redeemer."—Selected by Lottie E. Young.

Christian Education

THERE is a reason for everything. Science is constantly busy finding out why forms and processes are as they are. Science is all based on the rational assumption that cause and effect are linked. In the moral and spiritual world no less than in the world of physical nature the same principle prevails. John Gunther, in his book, "Inside Europe," takes pains to comment on the personal background of the leading figures on the world's stage, and possibly the most interesting facts in his book are those which concern the early life of the men whose names we see daily, and whose activities so greatly affect the present and future happiness of mankind. It is not by chance that dictators appear.

The Bible, which is the only infallible rule of faith and practice, abundantly bears out this common assumption. "The curse causeless shall not come." That is one of the many statements of the Great Book which indicate the connection between past and present. Professor Drummond, long ago, coined a phrase: "Natural Law in the Spiritual World." He might as well have stated it the other way and called it: "Spiritual Law in the Natural World." The important fact disclosed in the saying is that for every effect there is a cause. The world of spirit, however, is vastly more complicated and the seemingly futile efforts of much modern psychology is due to the limited field of observation. The subject studied is too often like the "economist island," a place that does not really exist.

For example, no hope can be held out for any scheme of human betterment which fails to include God and His divinely appointed laws of human well-being. The changed man is the only material that will build a changed world. And the changed man must be a new man, new in right-cousness and reborn by the power of God in response to acceptance of the revelation of God in Jesus Christ His divine Son and the Savior of the world. The present rapid dissolution of civilization under the pressure of gigantic extra-mundane forces is only a pointed reminder of the age-old challenge to man to "be reconciled to God."

Among mankind, children are by God's appointment, and by every kind of natural characteristic the most fruitful field for the ministry of all those who are truly concerned for human welfare. It is of supreme importance for the church to recognize this responsibility as its greatest opportunity. A few years suffice to see the transition of a babe into a young man or young woman whose life trends and influence are already largely determined.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." But the present record of the church is disconcerting. In almost all quarters we find a falling off in the Sabbath schools. This is surprising, because never was there so much attention to religious education and never so much emphasis upon progressive Sabbath school helps and methods. One is constrained to believe that some of these devices are misapplied, and that some of them are radically wrong, untrue to the truth of God, and out of step with God's own revealed will and work.

Teachers in the church school may be better pedagogues than their forebears, but are they more pious? They prepare their lessons, but do they prepare their hearts? Is there that soul-searching zeal in their weekly ministry to the Bible class of boys and girls? We sometimes doubt it. We doubt it because of the indifference many evince for the practice of Christianity in the simple matters of worship and private Bible study. We miss in too many that constant pursuit of the child's personality that it may be captured for Christ. We find the sum total effect of many a teacher's influence is zero, half good and half bad.

Some teachers are not converted men and women themselves. Some are not willing to sacrifice enough to make their work effective. Some lead double lives, and the bright minds of children note the discrepancies and discount the precepts which are not confirmed by practice. We find parents at serious fault. The father and mother who send their children to church, but are unwilling to come with them into the sanctuary and enter themselves into the program of Christian teaching, are self-confessed hypocrites, and are laying the foundation for disillusionment and failure.

The Christian day school is a necessary factor. Parochial education must soon be the concern for Protestants as well as for Catholics. The Roman Church is wise in its recognition that one day's influence in the Sabbath school cannot be successfully pitted against five days of secular (and often irreligious, if not anti-religious) instruction in another quarter. Municipal education is hampered in this regard. Believing teachers in the day schools can do much, and we thank God, they often accomplish wonders, but their hands are tied, so far as direct religious teaching is concerned.

The private schools are freer, but even there, too often half-hearted trustees, anxious for secondary values, and a teaching staff not imbued with the principles of pure religion fail to exert the influence that conscientious parents often desire to see manifest in school life. Parents who are believers need to be more outspoken and more demanding in what they require of schools. People who are violently excited over unsanitary conditions, and even by the bad teaching methods of teachers, too often take complacently the inculcation of pernicious moral and spiritual teaching. Education being chiefly the child of Christian faith, can be geared to sound doctrine and not lose, but rather gain, its educational quality.

The essential thing, and the thing which is for all who will use it, is dependence on the power of God to mold and direct young life in this age by exalting the Lord Jesus Christ in word and deed. It is easy to criticize existing institutions, including the church. It is hard to live courageously the Christian faith. It is hard to live it out in life. It is hard in the home. It is hard in the school. It is hard in the community. But it is worth while, and the trying, when undertaken sincerely, with prayer, will invoke the divine blessing and bring results which will never be regretted, and which will make all the labor seem pure joy. Let children be first dedicated to God, then directed toward God, and then disciplined in the ways of God. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house."

"Against the Lord"

BECAUSE GOD in His Word has predicted the "battle of the great day of God Almighty," it does not follow that He wills it so. The nations which today are so feverishly preparing for war are not doing God's will, even though He has said through His prophets that war should come. In reality, the nations are fighting "against the Lord and against his Anointed, saying, Let us break their bands asunder, and cast away their cords from us."

They are saying this in their attitude toward one another. Instead of making God their strength, they are trusting in their armaments and material defenses. France has her Maginot Line, England her battleships, Italy her millions of trained soldiers, and Germany her immense mechanized army.

What a speciacle this world must present to God as He looks down upon the nations today. Men who were made to live as brothers in helpful comradeship, are standing ready to jump at each others' throats at the beck of arrogant dictators, who have reached their positions of power through force and kept them through fear. A civilization that boasts of scientific achievements unequaled in the history of the world, inventions intended to make life easier and increase human happiness, is yet a civilization that lacks the wisdom that comes from above, which is "pure, peaceable, gentle, easy to be intreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy" (James 3:17). Surely, the Apostle spoke truly when he said, "The god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them" (2 Cor. 4:4). If they were not blinded they would see that the course they are taking is leading to universal chaos and destruction; they would understand that "they who take the sword shall perish by the sword."

There is one ray of hope in the present situation. It is the fact that the people of the nations are not all as blind as some of their rulers. Last Sunday prayers were offered for peace throughout the world by thousands of men and women, in response to an appeal sent out by the Archbishop of Canterbury. Another appeal, signed by seventeen prominent men, including former Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin, was published in The London Times last week. It recognized the fact that world affairs have gotten beyond human control and only God can solve the problems confronting the nations today. Among other things, this appeal said:

"God's living Spirit calls each nation, like each individual, to its highest destiny and beats down barriers of fear and greed, of suspicion and hatred. This same Spirit can transcend competing political systems, can reconcile order and freedom, can rekindle true patriotism, can unite all citizens in the service of the nation, and all nations in the service of mankind. 'Thy will be done on earth' is not only a prayer for guidance, but a call to action. For His will is our peace.'

All Christians can say "Amen" to the truth here expressed. In fact, we would not wonder if some of the very rulers who today are causing the present world unrest by their belligerent attitude would admit that submission to the rule of God's Spirit would accomplish what is here declared. The trouble is, they do not want God's Spirit to rule, it would interfere with their plans. The spirit of exaggerated nationalism demands, not that all nations shall serve mankind, but that all mankind shall serve the particular nation one may belong to. And so long as that spirit dominates there can be little hope for peace.

Yes, "Thy will be done on earth" is more than a prayer for guidance, it is a call for the Lord Jesus to come and take His great power and reign: for God's will will never be done on earth as it is in heaven, until He comes. The Prophet declared, "The government shall be upon his shoulder." He will reign in righteousness, and "of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end." That is the best part of it—eternal peace. This is what this old world needs.

The growing sentiment for peace is to be regarded as a cry for release from the burdens which war lords have imposed on the great nations of Europe, and which fall indirectly upon all nations. Those who took part in the World War are, almost without exception, opposed to war now. Recently, surviving members of the "Lost Battalion" were questioned as to their present attitude toward war. One said: "War is the most foolish tragedy the civilized world could let happen." Another, who is a farmer in the Middle West, replied: "If every civilian could be given a true picture of what happened (in the World War), there would never be another war."

No doubt that is true; but only those who took part in the World War can have a true picture of what happened. It is upon the younger generation who have grown up since that time that the dictators now depend to do their bidding. And that is the tragedy of it, for when war comes (as it must come sooner or later), the flower of the manhood of the world will be destroyed.

Yes, and with destruction raining from the skies upon defenseless citizens in eities and towns, the older people will be destroyed with them. The prospect is a gloomy one for this old world, but it is in accordance with divine prediction. Yet again we say, God does not will it so because He has foretold it. Jesus foretold the destruction of Jerusalem, yet He wept over it, saying, "How oft would I have gathered you . . . but ye would not." So now God is seeking out a people for His name and preparing them for the coming of His Son from heaven. "He is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance."

May we be found fighting with God, not against him, in this day of His preparation. "Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life."—Editorial in The Herald of Life.

Planned Atrocities Aimed at Jews

I't IS not a good time to swell the chorus of hymns of hate against Germany; but it is always a good time to present any important facts from an authentic source. If they hurt Germany, that is Germany's hard luck. For instance, we read in The Nation, an article by William E. Dodd, formerly United States Ambassador to Germany, who tells a plain, unvarnished tale of the plight of Jews in the Reich. Mr. Dodd is not a Jew, and it is reasonable to suppose that he would not have been appointed Ambassador if he had any noticeable anti-Nazi prejudices. So it was what he saw and heard rather than any preconceived idea that turned him into the bitter critic of naziism he is now.

"Germany," he says, "shocked me." And he says that since the absorption of Austria, anti-Semitism is as bad in Vienna as it is in Berlin, and Austria was always tolerant of the Jews. Indeed, Austria had good reason to be proud of them, and anti-Semitism cannot be any more natural or congenial to the Austrians than to the English. According to Vincent Sheean, 20,000 Jews have been arrested and placed in concentration camps in Austria in the past five months.

INCREDIBLE ATROCITIES

Says Mr. Dodd: "Unless one has been an eyewitness of the atrocities inflicted upon the Jewish population of Germany and Austria, it is almost impossible to imagine the extent and violence of Nazi persecution. An entire race is being broken by methodical torture, perpetrated not by isolated individuals, but by the state itself. Never in modern times has a sovereign power bent itself so savagely upon the extinction of its own inhabitants, or so deliberately transgressed every tradition of culture and humanity."

It is important to remember that these Jews are not foreigners, for distrust of foreigners and perhaps hostility to them is common enough in most countries. Their families have been German for hundreds of years and have been identified with the national life as long and as intimately as, for instance, the Welsh have with Great Britain. There were about 500,000 Jews in Germany when Hitler came into power, less than 1 per cent of the population. Now it is supposed there are about 400,000. 100,000 of them fought for Germany in the Great War; 12,000 were killed; 35,000 were decorated for bravery; and in the face of Junker military traditions 2,000 won their way to commissions. One of the most distinguished of German fighting men, Baron Mannfred von Richthofen, the Red Knight leader of the Flying Circus, had Jewish blood in his veins.

THE JEW-BAITER

The spearhead of the anti-Jewish warfare is Julius Streicher, whose newspaper, The Sturmer, carries across the front page a standing headline, "The Jews Are Our Destruction," and at the bottom of the page, in red ink, "The Jews Are Our Misfortune." The paper is made up almost exclusively of stories of the atrocities of the Jews, their treachery, and the steps the Nazis are taking to liquidate them. One story mentioned by Mr. Dodd was of the castration of a Jew who had attempted to defile the Aryan race by marrying a Christian girl. Incidentally, an Aryan is described as a person who has had no Jewish ancestors since January 1, 1800. If such an ancestor is discovered, the Jew loses his citizenship and may not marry an Aryan or employ Aryan help. The Sturmer goes to comic lengths in the fury of its crusade. It says the Dawes Plan was a Jewish plot, and that Dawes' real name is Davidsohn. J. P. Morgan, who helped finance the Allies, is really Morgenstern, while the pope is a Jew named Finkelstein. Western democracy is denounced as Jewish decadence, and if somebody the paper does not like cannot be proved a Jew, it is safe enough to describe him as a tool of international Jewry.

No HELP FROM COURTS

In cafe and shop windows throughout Germany are such signs as "Only traitors talk or deal with Jews" and "Israel, there is no room for you here." District leaders of the Nazi Party now have authority to rule over the Jews in their area, and in the exercise of this authority they frequently summon Jews before them for questioning and search. The questionings are usually accompanied by a beating and the searchings give an opportunity to strip the unfortunate Jews of whatever valuables they possess. Courts offer no protection. Storm troopers, who in one case looted a Jew's store of 1,600 marks, were fined 12 pennies. In Magdeburg, a Jewish youth was sentenced to four weeks' imprisonment because he had invited an Aryan girl to accompany him to a picture show. The judge said that he had "too closely approached the honor of this young maiden." A Jewish lawyer, who sought in vain for protection in a police station, was forced to walk barefooted and pantless through the streets of Breslau bearing a placard, "I will never ask for police protection again." It was in protest of this kind of treatment that Stefan Lux, an exiled Jewish writer, shot himself before the League of Nations Assembly in 1936.

WAR ON CHILDREN

The only Jewish children permitted to attend public schools are those of war veterans, and they must sit on ghetto benches and are shamefully addressed as "You Jew." No Jew can send his child to a university; and all the learned professions are closed to Jews. German music teachers are forbidden to instruct Jewish pupils, to discourage Jewish competition in the musical profession. Mendelssohn's time-honored musical setting of "Midsummer Night's Dream" is barred because the composer was a Jew, and a German musician has been commissioned to write substitute music. The plain intention of the German Reich is to drive the Jews out. Probably they would leave in a body if they could take their property with them, but this they are forbidden to do. What is called the "cold program" will get them in the end. Hitler is on record as promising that no Jews will survive in Germany by 1950.

Take These Things Hence!

IN 1934, some eighty-five thousand churches, according to the report of the Institute of Social and Religious Research, found themselves poverty-stricken. Having in many cases wandered so far from the Bible plan for the church, both moral and financial, they discovered, like Esau, that they were "faint" and "at the point to die." And, like Esau, it appears from current newspaper and magazine reports, they have consented to sell their birthright for a mess of pottage.

They saw other churches successfully financing their programs by various commercial means, and they decided to do likewise.

As a result, they are repeating what Christ discovered the religious authorities doing some two thousand years ago, when He "found in the temple those that sold oxen and sheep and doves, and the changers of money sitting" (John 2:14). Surely the words of Christ were prophetic as well as admonitory, for His warning, "Take these things hence; make not my Father's house an house of merchandise" (v. 16), is as much needed by the church today as it was in His day.

In Milwaukee, a bill was introduced, supported by church recreational groups, to permit the selling of beer in their basement bowling alleys and pool rooms. It is not important that the bill was defeated (largely through the influence of tavern keepers, who objected to the dividing of their profits with the church). The serious phase of the matter is that the church basements contain bowling alleys and pool rooms, and that the church members who frequent these places want beer sold there.

In an attempt to interest the world in the church, the church, it seems, has succeeded in interesting its own members in the world. With dances, moving pictures, box suppers, raffles, card parties, bowling alleys, and pool rooms sponsored by religious organizations in order to raise money, the world has little left to call its own.

Concerning the dangers of thus merchandising the church, N. Clifford Bangham, writing in the Christian Century of November 25, 1936, declares:

"Just so long as the church is better known in any community—as I fear it is in many—for the quality of its dinners or minstrel shows than for the depth of its spiritual life, for genuine fellowship, and for prophetic vision, it is not difficult to understand the present plight of religion. The responsibility is chiefly upon the ministry, for what money-making affairs the laity cannot think up for themselves the ministers are too ready to supply....

"The church has become so set in this direction that nearly every mail brings letters promising full treasuries from concerns that see in the exploitation of religion opportunities for their own rich reward. Everything from candy bars (unfit for children to consume) to dishrags offers a quick way to financial security for the church interested in 'cheap religion.'... The quicker the church gets out of the money-making business the sooner it will command the respect and attention of the community."

Ecclesiasticism has likewise destroyed much of the respect that the world once had for Christianity by using modern methods of cheap, high-pressure advertising. In order to gain publicity and draw crowds into his church, one minister refused to return babies brought to him for baptism until after he had been arrested for kidnaping. Many other stunts have been tried, from burning Bibles to handling rattlesnakes.

Such conduct not only gives adverse publicity to the churches taking part, but the standing of more conservative and Christlike churches is also seriously impaired.

October 28, 1936, points out further evidence of popular religious apostasy:

"Protestant preachers add to the dignity of religion by conducting marriages (they don't call it holy matrimony any more) in a swimming pool clad in a bathing suit, or on a huge platform before curious and snickering thousands at a street fair, or in a store window on Main Street. The latest clerical stunt, I notice, is a wedding in a brewery, the beer foaming about the feet of the principals, beer kegs for an 'altar.'

"Perhaps you noticed the newspaper clipping from Los Angeles, telling with great gusto about the congregation (and it was of the most conservative denomination in Protestantism) which was celebrating its fifth anniversary. At the morning service a huge birthday cake would be at the head of the center aisle. At the proper time in the service several ladies would cut the cake, deftly wrap it in paper, and pass pieces among the people. Come one, come all: let them eat cake!

"Religion! Is it? Some might call it that, but whatever it is, it is cheap."

Small wonder that John the Revelator (Rev. 17:5) describes churches who thus commercialize religion as "harlots"! No matter how good the intentions of those who promote the commercializing of the church's religion or who indulge in cheap publicity, the fruit is sure to be bitter in the end.

It is not necessary for any church to sell her purity and integrity in order to stand on a sound financial basis. The Scriptures present a plan, fair to poor and rich alike, which will provide adequate money not only for the upkeep but also the expansion of the church. Wherever this plan is faithfully followed, there is no shortage in funds. No better or more just means of church support has ever been devised than the tithing system—the returning to God of one tenth of one's income.

Since God as Creator is the owner of the world and all it contains (Psa. 24:1), failure to return to God the portion which He declares He has never relinquished to man is a direct violation of the command, "Thou shalt not steal." The Bible declares this in no uncertain terms. Hear what Malachi has to say on the subject:

"Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts' (Mal. 3:8-11).

In commenting upon those who were particular about the paying of the tithe, Christ declared, "These ought ye to have done" (Matt. 23:23).

Paul admonishes the church: "Let all things be done decently and in order" (1 Cor.14:40), plainly indicating that box suppers and birthday cakes are not becoming to the house of God: "What, have ye not houses to eat and to drink in? or despise ye the church of God?" (1 Cor. 11:22).

Thus we see how some have wandered from the teachings of the Scriptures, embracing cheap publicity and commercialism in place of God's plan for the support of the church. And we cannot help remembering the words of Christ, "Take these things hence; make not my Father's house an house of merchandise."—Murl Vance in Signs of the Times.

THE LAND OF ISRAEL

Hushed is the harp whose music sweet Awoke on Zion's hill; The voice, prophetic and inspired, For ages has been still.

No more may prophet, priest, and king, In Salem's temple stand; Its goodly stones are scattered wide Through Israel's fallen land.

But brighter glory from the past Is mantling Judah's hills; Is breathing forth from Sharon's flowers, And sparkling in the rills.

For Jesus' sandalled feet once pressed
The heights and vales below;
His eye beheld her waving palms,
Her Lebanon's pure snow.

Oft to those groves of solemn shade The praying Savior came; The murmuring waves of Galilee Still whisper His dear name.

O sacred soil; near David's gate, In thee His cross stood high; Dead in thy bosom once He lay, Then rose, no more to die.

O'er Olivet that cloud of light A double message brings; He left you crags, but will return To reign as King of kings.

Thrice holy land; though alien feet
Have trampled waste thy sod,
In Christ's sweet day thou wilt revive,
Fair as the Rose of God.

The wonder of Immanuel's life
Is Israel's fadeless crown;
The glory of His deathless love,
The wider world's renown.

"Judge Not ..."

There is an old Indian story that tells how, when a brave left his father's wigwam, he sat around the campfire until the last ember was fading away. Then he arose and uttered the following prayer to the Great Spirit: "Help me not to judge another man until I have walked two weeks in his moccasins." This seems to me to be very good philosophy. We are prone to look upon the Indian as ignorant and savage but he, in his prayer, realized something that we oftentimes miss, that is, to "Judge not."

In Matthew 7:1-7, Jesus admonishes us to be very careful in our judging of others. It is in these verses that we find the reference to the motes and beams in ours and our neighbor's eyes. Let us turn to the Diaglott version of the New Testament for a clearer understanding of this passage. It reads, beginning with the 3rd verse, thus: "And why observest thou that splinter in thy brother's eye, and perceivest not the thorn in thine own eye? or, how wilt thou say to thy brother, Let me take the splinter from thine eye; and, behold, a thorn in thine own eye? Hypocrite! first extract the thorn from thine own eye, and then thou wilt see clearly to take the splinter from thy brother's eye."

In plain words, we should not be so willing to judge our brother in a supposed wrong until we can remove the wrongdoing in our own lives. Also, before we judge, we should find out, if we possibly can, what has prompted our brother or neighbor to act in the manner that he has. Perhaps if we were in his place we would do the same things. The Lord warns us not to judge lest we be judged, and also says we are hypocrites if we judge. That is, if we accuse our brother or neighbor of an unjust act, we are hypocrites. We should look mainly to removing the sin from our own lives, "for all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God" (Rom. 3:23).

No better example can I show you of what I mean than one taken from God's Holy Word. Let us turn to John 8. There (vv. 3-10) we have a beautiful story told. A woman had been taken in adultery, and the scribes and Pharisces brought her to Jesus to see what should be done with her. This was not because they respected His authority, but rather to try to catch Him. You see, adultery, under the Mosaic law, was punishable by death, and if Jesus permitted her death He would be a disappointment to His followers, to whom He had taught the gospel of love. On the other hand, if He said she should not be killed, they would accuse Him of going against the yet prevailing law and they could have taken Him prisoner. Jesus did not commit Himself in any way. Instead, He stooped down and wrote in the sand. What He wrote we do not know, but it had its effect.

As they kept on questioning Him, He finally looked up and said, "He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her." Then He stooped and commenced writing in the sand again. The next time He looked up no one but the woman was there, for all of her accusers, like the snakes they were, had sneaked away one by one. When Jesus found out that no one was left to accuse the woman, He sent her away, admonishing her to "go, and sin no more."

In every community, in every church, scenes like the one just described have been enacted. Cruel, ugly rumor, gone rampant within itself, has accused a brother or a neighbor of a wrong, either real or imaginary. We can almost hear the conversations of little groups of people gathered in the market place, at the sewing club, or the lodge, whispering, spreading the bad news along its gossiping way. If Jesus should suddenly appear and tell them the same things He told those ancient Pharisees, something like this, "Let those who have no sin themselves accuse this brother; let all others cease and go about their business," I wonder how long it would be until everyone was in his place, ashamed beyond measure of his conduct? All would be guilty, for their very judging and gossiping would be sin in a low form. They would probably sneak away, even as did the Pharisees.

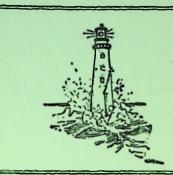

Friends, Jesus does say those things to us, not in so many words, but in His admonition to "Judge not, that ye be not judged." Remember the previously quoted words of the savage Indian, who, in his primitive way, was nearer to the correct attitude toward his fellow man than we are. Let's walk in our neighbor's "moccasins" and find out why his actions are as they are, before we condemn and judge. We might be surprised to find that those actions didn't concern us. After all, the judgment of all peoples is to be taken care of by the one just Judge, Jesus! It's really none of our business.

Let us so live that the judgment will give us immortality rather than death!

Possibilities

"We cannot all be heroes
And thrill a hemisphere
With some great daring venture,
Some deed that mocks at fear;
But we can fill a lifetime
With kindly acts and true,
There's always noble service
For noble souls to do."

PREPARED BY MADGE SAVAGE

"God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth" (John 4:24).

Our New Teacher for Children

Hello, boys and girls. I want you to meet our new teacher. She is Sister Madge Savage from Waite Park, Minnesota. Do you know where Minnesota is? Sister Savage is not savage, but there were real savages in Minnesota many years ago. Many people like Sister Savage, and she likes all boys and girls. She has three children of her own. Why don't you all write to her to find out their names and ages. You must tell who you are, too, and how old you are, and what you like to read about.

Sister Savage taught boys and girls for several years in public schools, and she was paid money for that. Now she is going to write for you in The Restitution Herald just because she loves you. Don't you want to know what she will say? Maybe your mother will read it to you if you are too little to read for yourself.

Sister Savage likes to sing and play the piano. I wish you could all hear her sing. If you will look on this page each week you will get to see her picture, so watch for it. Write to her and find out about her boys and girls. Do you think they go to Sunday school?

Putting God First

Hello, boys and girls! By this time you are getting accustomed to your new school teachers. You miss the ones you had last year, I know. Just so are you going to miss reading the stories and helps written by your own Mary Gesin. Have you written her yet, telling her you have enjoyed her page? I know all those cards and letters will make her happy.

Last Sunday you studied how God is to be our only true Lord. I especially liked last Friday's lesson, didn't you? What's that? You didn't have any? There is a lesson for every day from your Bibles. You can find them in your quarterlies. That is right, the Daily Readings are the lessons I had in mind.

How much you would miss in your arithmetic or geography if you studied only every Friday's lesson—or one lesson a week. Just so are you missing a great deal of pleasure if you study only your Sunday's lesson from your quarterlies.

Would you like to be a Daniel? He was very brave and dared to stand up for what he knew to be right, even when he had to stand all alone. Here is my suggestion:

The Daily Readings are fine for your home devotions. There's a lesson to read every day. You might get your family together to sing some choruses or hymns and then offer prayer, too. Choose any time of day that you can have all present. Early morning is a good time. Some use their time just before dinner to study and worship. If you are able to spend even a short time every day with God in worship, you'll find it a help in putting God first.

When a Mountain Smoked

The people of God, the Israelites, were camped in front of Mount Sinai. God spoke to Moses and told him not to let any of the people go up on the mountain, or come near, even so much as touch it. The cattle and sheep could not touch it either. Whoever touched it had to be killed. It was a holy place.

A few days after this the people heard the voice as of many trumpets sounding from the mountain top. Smoke and clouds covered the summit, while thunder rolled and lightning flashed. The mountain shook and trembled. The people stood far off; they were afraid.

Moses, when God called him, went up on the mountain to meet God. He stayed there for some time, talking with God and listening to Him. Two tables of stone, on which the Ten Commandments were written by the finger of God, were given to Moses (Ex. 31:18).

While Moses talked with God, the Israelites grew impatient and restless. Finally they asked Aaron to make them a god. Aaron collected their golden earrings, melted them together and made a golden calf.

Now God knew what the Israelites were doing, and told Moses to go down to them. God was so angry with them that He wanted to kill them. However, God listened to Moses beg Him not to destroy them, and He didn't kill them. Then Moses went down the mountain side to his people.

Moses saw the children of Israel, who had seen the glory of God and miracles performed to save them, kneeling around the idoi. He became angry and east the tables of stone out of his hands and they were broken. I expect he thought those laws would do no good for such a sinful people. He took the ealf and destroyed it. Begin reading at Exodus 32:19 to find out just what Moses did with the ealf. Did the people drink the golden ealf?

AMONG THE CHURCHES

AN INTRODUCTION

With this issue of The Restitution Herald the head of the editorial staff changes from G. Eldred Marsh to Sydney E. Magaw.

Bro. Marsh having closed his services as pastor of the Oregon Church to become pastor of the Southlawn Church in Grand Rapids, Mich., and Bro. Magaw being chosen as pastor of the Church of God in Oregon, and both the Oregon Church and the National Bible Institution board feeling that the time had not arrived when we could with safety break the union by which the pastor of the church has also served as editor of The Restitution Her-ald, the church and National Bible Institution sharing equally in paying the salary of the pastor-editor, which arrangement has been followed since the National Bible Institution was organized, the transfer of editorial responsibility follows the transfer of the responsibility as pastor of the Oregon Church from Bro. Marsh to Bro. Magaw. We sincerely trust that the sincere confidence and loyal support that our people imposed in and gave the preceding editors, who have discharged their editorial responsibilities so faithfully and well, may be given to the new editor, to encourage and assist him in discharging his

EDITORIAL CHANGE

This issue of The Restitution Herald is an in-between one. Bro. Marsh left Oregon for Grand Rapids, Mich., Tuesday evening, Sept. 27. He had intended to furnish copy for "Abreast of the Times," but in the last-minute rush was unable to do so. However, Bro. Marsh had most of the rest of the material in shape for this issue before he left.

Bro. Magaw and family arrived in Oregon from Tipp City, Ohio, Friday afternoon, Sept. 20. Bro. Magaw entered upon his duties as pastor of the Oregon Church on Sunday.

In order that he may get his work organized, the issue for next week, October 11, will be omitted. We had intended to miss an issue in September, but decided to make it a later one for this purpose.

LEAVING AND ARRIVING

Brush Creek, Ohio

The last week at Brush Creek was filled with events long to be remembered. On Friday evening, Sept. 23, both the Brush Creek and Lawrenceville congregations met at our home for a Berean social and a farewell. Nearly one hundred fifty were present, filling the house and lawn. There were warmth and meaning in the songs of the evening. While in sorrow to part with the Ohio brethren, we are glad to know that the work will go on. Lawrenceville reported at this social that a new pastor has been secured. Brush Creek is also looking for a new leader, and in the meantime is making use of the elders.

Sunday, Sept. 25, was our last day to conduct services at the Brush Creek Church of God. Large audiences were present at all serv-Two mothers, Mrs. Cromis of West Milton, Ohio, RFD., and Mrs. Earl Smith of Dayton, Ohio, RFD. 1, were baptized. A basket dinner was served in the church basement. Many pictures were taken. For a final farewell a number of the Lawrenceville brethren attended the evening service, when we gave our farewell sermon.

Oregon, Illinois

Friday, Sept. 30, we arrived in Oregon. where our household goods had preceded us. En route we visited with Mrs. Magaw's mother and brother, Sr. Hatch and Paul, at Harvey, The local brethren have already shown a willing hand in helping us to g.t established in our new home. So far we have really had eur breakfasts at home!

Sunday, Oct. 2, we gave our first pastoral sermons for the Oregon congregation. Knowing the importance of our new pastorate, we lean well on the arm of the Lord for strength. May many pray for us.

This morning, Monday, Oct. 3, we are at our desk in the office of the National Bible Institution-receiving our initiation to a work we know we shall greatly enjoy, but one that will challenge us. We shall give our best and, as in our pastoral work, we pray for help, and ask your prayers.

FAREWELL TO BRO. AND SR. MARSH

Oregon church members and friends to the number of more than 125 gathered in the Sunday school rooms on September 22 for a fare-well party for Bro, and Sr. Marsh. A program econsisting of music and readings was given by the young people of the church. Especially apthe young people of the entires. Superitten by preciated was a group of poems written by Edith Andrew Burchell of Oregon, Ill., in hours of Bro. Marsh and family. After refreshments and a social hour, Bro. B. H. Carpenter gave a farewell talk and presented a purse to Bro. and Sr. Marsh on behalf of the church. Thus came to a close seven years of faithful service in the Master's vineyard, with the regret of scores of brothers and sisters and friends in Oregon and the surrounding community for their departure and the Lord's blessing on their new work with the Grand Rapids Church.

DOLLAR DAY IN ILLINOIS

The Annual Fall Dollar Day in Illinois has been set for Wednesday, October 26. Watch for the notice and return envelope you will receive, and then send the envelope back with your dollar.

Bro. and Sr. Benjamin Johnson, who were members of the Summer Training School held at headquarters in Oregon, Ill., the past summer, have moved from their farm home near Becker, Minn., to 916 7th Avenue North, St. Cloud, Minn.

FREDERICKTOWN, MISSOURI

The 31st Annual Conference of the Church of God of the Faith of Abraham was held at the Fredericktown Church, beginning August 13, 1938, and closing August 21. Bro. S. J. Lindsay of Tempe, Ariz., was in charge of the services until Wednesday, when Bro. L. E. Conner of Dixon, Ill., came to be with us over the week-end, as Bro. Lindsay left early Thursday morning for Holbrook, Neb.

Bible class each day at 10:30 and preaching at night. On Wednesday, the 17th, our business meeting was held, with Bro. Lloyd Cooper, vice president, in charge, since the president was absent. In the election of officers, the following were elected: Bro. Ed. Williams of Hillsboro, president; Bro. Roy Graham of St. Louis, vice president; Bro. Clyde Graham of St. Louis, treasurer; Sr. Ethel Manken of Fredericktown, secretary; and Bro. Floyd Bailey of St. Louis, fifth member. It was voted that the board call a meeting to decide who would be our speaker and where we would hold the conference next year. It was decided to hold the conference next year at Fredericktown with Bro. S. J. Lindsay and Bro. L. E. Conner as the speakers. The date will be announced later.

We were glad to have the brethren from Morse Mill Church and the brethren from the St. Louis Church, also the visiting brethren from Hammond, La., with us.

There were no baptisms, but we feel that our meeting was a success, and we are looking forward, if the Lord tarries, to a better meeting next year.

(Mrs.) Ethel Manken, Sec.

A CORRECTION

In the report of my last letter "Among the Churches," I wish to call attention to an error I made, or a typographical error, where, in the 13th line from the bottom of the article, it reads that "the loving Father gave us the church." It should have read, "the loving Father gave us the Holy Spirit."

THE RESTITUTION HERALD advocates: the near return of Christ, Acts 1:11, and life only through Him, Col. 3:3; the literal resurrection of the dead, John 5:28; the immortalization of those in Christ, 1 Cor. 15:53, 54; the final restoration of Israel as the kingdom of God under the kingship of Christ, Luke 1: 32, the church to be joint-heirs with Him. Rom. 8:17, and Israel to be made head over Gentile nations, Isa. 60:13; the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began," Acts 3:21. It also firmly advocates repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, Acts 2:38, and a consecrated life as essential to salvation.

A TENTH FOR GOD

By Mrs. Clinton Appleby

I started tithing more than ten years ago because I believed it was the Scriptural method of financing church work. I came to realize that God owned all things, and it was He who gave me the ability to earn. He furnished everything and all I did was the work. We became partners; and what a wonderful partner He has been. He only asks one tenth of my earnings and leave nine tenths for me. And He blesses the nine tenths so greatly that I can buy as much with it as I ever did with the ten tenths. And what a satisfaction there is in always having money to give to help earry on His work in the church. Before I started to tithe I never had any to spare for the church. It seemed like I needed it all myself. Now I can see that I was selfish about it.

I know many people who tithe. I have yet to hear anyone say he hasn't been benefitted and greatly blessed since he started giving the Lord His portion. And one tenth is such a small amount in proportion to what He does for the tither in return!

A BETTER WAY

A pilot who had navigated a certain river for twentyfive years was interviewed one day by a man who was interested in his work.

"I suppose you know where all the rocks in this channel are," remarked the visitor.

"No, I don't," replied the pilot. "But I know where they are not."

There are some young folks who think that in navigating through life it is essential to know where all the rocks are. They seem to feel that unless they experience all the doubtful pleasures and sample all that life has to offer, they are not developing their characters properly and fully. They think that to sow a few wild oats will make them stronger in the years ahead.

But that wise pilot did not find it necessary to know where the shoals and rocks and other obstacles that would wreck the ship were, in order to be a good pilot. It was enough to know where the clear water was.

"I would have you wise unto that which is good, and simple concerning evil," advises Paul in Romans 16:19.

If you would be a good navigator through the seas of life, remember that all you are required to know is where the deep, safe waters are, and keep your course there.

BACKSLIDING

We notice that Israel, while being the selected child of God in a special manner, was given to backsliding. "The more the prophets called them, the more they went from them." We have here a picture of the tendency of all nations whom God blesses. When Israel was in slavery, or later in hardship trying to get settled in the Promised Land, it was humble and faithfully attended to the duties it owed God. But when Israel grew rich and strong it forgot its God and turned repeatedly to worldly and idolatrous ways. Is not this our experience? When we were small, when dangers and hardships attended the life of the early pilgrims who settled in this land, the people turned to God. They faithfully remembered the great Giver and on Thanksgiving Day as well as other special days flocked to God's house, humble though it was. Today we are rich and strong, there being no comparison between our experience and the life and dangers of the early settlers, yet have we not been backsliding !—Selected.

LIFE DEPENDENT ON THE BREAD FROM HEAVEN

Repeatedly does Jesus reiterate the fact that life is conditional and dependent on Him who is the "bread of life." He also impresses the minds of His hearers with the fact that the bread of Moses did not, and could not, perpetuate life endlessly.

The disciples were for some reason reluctant about receiving such instruction and many forsook Him. There are those now that are averse to believing this fundamental truth of life only in Christ, and it would seem they would prefer to forsake Christ rather than receive it. We forsake Him when we refuse to believe His teaching, and do not follow Him unless we admit Him into our hearts as the One who has "abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light."

"Lord, ever more give us this bread."

the resurrection of condemnation" (John 5:28, 29, R. V.). He also mentioned statements concerning the resurrection and the reward of the saints that would follow.

He then directed attention to the Old Testament record of the punishment of the wicked, which consisted of their destruction.

"If that is the teaching of Scripture," Mr. Ingersol asked, "why do so many preachers preach an eternal hell of fire for the wicked, and declare that 'the wicked are cast into hell, where their worm dieth not, and where the fire is not quenched?"

The minister took out of his pocket a small Greek and English lexicon, and showed him the different words that are translated "hell," and what they really meant. Sheol and hades were seen to be corresponding words, and meant the grave, or a place of burial. Gehenna only signifies a place of burning, but what is cast into gehenna burns up utterly. Compare Psalm 37:20 with Matthew 13:24-30, 36-40; also Malachi 4 with 2 Peter 3:10.

When Mr. Ingersol left the train, as they shook hands he said, "Thank you for your information. I would like to talk to you more about these things." Giving the minister his card, he said, "If you come into my city, please call on me."

The minister gave him some tracts, and when he got home he sent him more on the sleep of the dead, conditionalism, the nature of man, the resurrection, and other subjects.

Some time later Mr. Ingersol put a notice in a Chicago paper, challenging any preacher to debate on the Bible, but to state his denomination. Miles Grant saw the challenge and answered it, but Mr. Ingersol wrote a card right back, saying, "I have no quarrel with you Adventists at all."

After the event of which you just read, Moses called for volunteers. He said, "Who is on the Lord's side? let him come unto me."

The tribe of Levi came to him. Moses' face shone so brightly that he wore a veil, for the people were afraid of him. This was after he had again gone to meet God and had received the Commandments for the people the second time. This time God put His hand on a rock, and when He had passed by Moses saw His back. God told Moses that no man could look on His face and live.

Other Idols

There are many other idols besides golden images. Colossians 3:5 tells us of one. It says that covetousness is idolatry. Is that a big word for you? It means desire for something you have no right to have.

Did you ever read of Achan, who coveted a garment? It wasn't supposed to be his, but he took it (Josh. 7:21. What happened?

In Hebrews 13:5 we are told to let our conversation be without covetousness; and be content with such things as we have. Today, with so many luxuries and lovely things around us, let us pray that we will be satisfied with the things we can afford. For we don't want covetousness to be an idol in our hearts, do we?

Something to Draw

Draw a picture of the tablets of stone to represent the Ten Commandments. Draw a heart around them. That is where a Christian keeps the Commandments—in his heart. "Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee" (Psa. 119:11).

I'd be glad to hear from you if you succeed in starting a daily devotional service in your home. Or, if you already have one, let me know. Include your age if you write to me.

I Would Be True

- I would be humble, for I know my weakness; I would look up, and laugh and love and life.

May the above picture serve as a tribute to the loyal Ohio brethren, and as a challenge to all states for whole-hearted and true-hearted cooperation in the General Conference program.

Ohio, "my brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might." "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts."

Ohio, "let your conversation be as it becometh the gospel of Christ: that whether I come and see you, or else be absent, I may hear of your affairs, that ye stand fast in one spirit, with one mind striving together for the faith of the gospel."

"Here Am I; Send Me"

Our First Editorial

"Also I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then said 1, Here am 1; send me" (Isaiah 6:8).

Gop sits "upon a throne, high and lifted up." "His train filled the temple" in Isaiah's vision, and there has been no change in God. He is the Eternal, the Supreme, still He is "upon a throne, high and lifted up."

Let the chief angels hide their faces, wrap wings around their feet, but with other wings rise in speedy flight to cry, "Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts: his glory is the fulness of the whole earth" (Isa. 6:3, margin). When angels with covered faces give glory to God, by what unholy standard dare mortal men lose sight of God to glory in themselves? Should all this world's idolatry be turned to worship and praise, there would spring up fountains of joy, and rain down torrents of blessing from God "upon a throne."

With Isaiah's vision of God, truth strikes home. "Woe is me!... I am undone;... of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts." Likewise, Christ's rock character humbles the very elite of men.

Rapt with the scene of God's glorious throne, rapt with the song of angels, rapt with the glory that filled the house—that was Isaiah. Then came a shift of vision, a contrast of glory with shame. He was "undone," he was "unclean." God was the All of beauty and plan. As never before, Isaiah saw himself as flesh—flesh that was born naked, flesh nourished by milk from a woman, flesh that was "undone" and "unclean," flesh that at last would die and decay.

With such a confession in heart, the vision again changed scenes. Isaiah saw the altar and tongs. An angel mediator was there. Both purging and life-giving powers were sent in the coal. Isaiah understood. The God of Glory was his God of Love.

Then came "the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then said I, Here am I; send me." There was no pride in Isaiah's heart—he had seen "the Lord... upon a throne" (Isa. 1:1). To be sent of God, to go, was no hard duty for him. Somewhat like Isaiah, Paul cried out, "Though I preach the gospel, I have nothing to glory of: for necessity is laid upon me; yea, woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel!" (1 Cor. 9:16).

In presenting self it would be a sacrilege to draw too close a comparison to the Messianic Prophet. Isaiah was so outstanding as to be seen in Christ, some in Christ's day even thinking that Jesus was Isaiah raised from the dead. However, there is a vibrating chord reaching from Isaiah to me, and emotions of joy, thanksgiving, and praise are stirred to music there. Long puzzled with his chapter 6, the mystery unravels a little now. Ever leaning well on Jehovah of hosts, seeing Him "upon a throne, high and lifted up," hearing His call of "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" we gladly respond, "Here am I; send me."

We are ready to work, expecting both criticism and cooperation. You, readers throughout the land and beyond the seas, may be disappointed for a season. This is our first editorial work of any great importance. We hardly expect to immediately present to you a paper equaling the high standards of our predecessors, S. J. Lindsay, F. L. Austin, and the retiring editor, G. E. Marsh.

However, we shall really work. We need, want, and ask the hearty cooperation of all subscribers and contributors. God is still on His throne. God lives on. Faith lives on. Truth, like time, marches on. There are green pastures ahead. The kingdom of God is coming. We press toward it. "We are journeying unto the place of which the Lord said, I will give it you: come thou with us, and we will do thee good" (Num. 10:29).

SYDNEY E. MAGAW, Editor

The style of the paper will be very largely the same as in the past. Minor changes will occur only because no two people are exactly alike, and you will wish us to have some freedom. We plan to present a paper written as far as possible by our own Church of God contributors, and to use current pictures of Church of God interest.

Sunday

What Should Be Our Attitude Toward It?

By James A. Patrick

POSSIBLY I am letting myself in for a good deal of friendly criticism and raillery, but since I rather enjoy such things, here goes.

I would keep Sunday, the first day of the week, as a day of rest and worship, if for no other reason than that it is the custom of the religious world, and in many ways is covered by the law of the land.

Most of the religious world looks upon Sunday as the Sabbath and makes a pretense of keeping it as such. When they see anyone desecrating it, as they think, they look upon him as a heathen and have no faith in his Christianity.

I know of places among our people where they tie their fish poles on the side of their ears and go fishing on Sunday, and others point at them in scorn and say, "There go some of your soul sleepers."

"But, are we to be bound by all the foibles and beliefs of the so-called Christian world?" some will ask. Perhaps not; but Paul said, "I please all men in all things, not seeking mine own profit, but the profit of many, that they may be saved" (1 Cor. 10:33). And I am sure you will agree, that, when you have given people cause to say what I have quoted in the foregoing, you have lost much of your influence over them, and have removed them farther than ever from the truth.

Sometimes people go to Sunday school and church on Sunday morning, and then go to a baseball game in the afternoon and yell themselves hoarse, and then to a movie in the evening. I'm wondering how much spirituality they get out of such a day supposed to be devoted to the service of the Lord. Were they nearer to God, and did they feel more like praying when they retired, than if they had not engaged in the worldly things?

Besides, our farmers never think of taking their teams and going into their fields and doing work, nor do our business men think of opening their shops and doing business on the first day of the week.

"What do the Scriptures say?" some one will ask.

There isn't much said in the Bible about the first day of the week, but what is said is significant.

Immediately after the resurrection the disciples began to meet on the first day of the week. "Then the same day at evening" (day of the Lord's resurrection), "being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus and stood in the midst, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you" (John 20:19). It might well be said, that it was only natural that they should meet together that day to talk over the wonderful thing that had happened. But, we read in verse 26 of this same chapter, "And after eight days again his disciples were within, and Thomas with them: then came Jesus, the doors being shut, and stood in the midst, and said, Peace be unto you." Instead of "after eight days," as the Authorized Version has it in the foregoing verse, Weymouth puts it, "a week later." "The first day of the week," say Jamieson, Fausset, and Brown in their commentary, commenting on 1 Corinthians 16:2, "was already kept sacred by Christians as the day of the Lord's resurrection, the beginning day both of the physical and of the new spiritual creations." On this same verse the Abingdon Bible Commentary says, "The first day of the week was evidently already honored in Christian worship."

Why did the disciples begin to meet on the first day of the week immediately after Christ's resurrection? There is no New Testament command to this effect. I am wondering if they did it for the same reason that Paul and Barnabas turned to the Gentiles when the Jews rejected their testimony. We are told in Acts 13:46, 47, "Then Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, and said, It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you: but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles. For so hath the Lord commanded us, saying, I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou shouldest be for salvation unto the ends of the earth." How and when did the Lord give them this command? Back in the times when Isaiah was prophesying to Israel. This is quoted from Isaiah 49:6. They took the prophecy as a command.

We are agreed that the typical Passover lamb pointed forward to the antitypical Lamb, Christ Jesus. We are also pretty well agreed that we are baptized "that we die not," not only because of the command, but because of the type in the washing at the laver in the tabernacle service. "When they go into the tabernacle of the congregation they shall wash with water, that they die not" (Ex. 30:20).

The first day of the week is very clearly typified in the offering of the wave sheaf as described in the 23rd chapter of Leviticus. The wave offering, "a sheaf of the firstfruits of your harvest," was to be offered "on the morrow after the sabbath." The morrow after the Sabbath was the first day of the week. Christ rose from the dead on the first day of the week. Also, He is the first fruits. "And ye shall count unto you from the morrow after the sabbath... seven sabbaths shall be complete: even unto the morrow after the seventh sabbath shall ye number fifty days; and ye shall offer a new meat offering unto the Lord.... And the priest shall wave them with the bread of the firstfruits for a wave offering before the Lord.... And ye shall preclaim on the selfsame day, that it (Please turn to page 10)

Neglected Youth

By Otto E. Dick

SINCE today's youth must assume the burden of tomorrow's church, we, the leaders of the Church of God, should do much more than we have been doing to make our church program more attractive and inter-

Brother Dick, superintendent of the Scircleville, Indiana, High School, writes on a vital question. His article delves into a subject that all who teach the Bible know to be important. "Lo, children are an heritage of the Lord.".

pel should take into consideration.
the Lo,
They are more free than adults in expressing their true reacesting and attractive to youth. As we train youth in our public schools for a richer social and civic existence, so should we be training them in the church for future active service in the religious life of our respective communities. Our obligation in this respect has become greater during the last few years, because our churches must assume today that burden of religious education that was formerly a part of one's school and home training.

Our problem becomes even more important as we realize that competitive interests are keeping more and more of our young people away from church. We are not being able to interest many of them in the good news or purpose of the church at a time when we have never needed them more.

On several occasions I have noticed that many young people leave the church during the interval between Sunday school and church services. The sermons were good, but not good enough apparently to hold them. Some churches have attempted to solve the problem by holding church services first, but found that their young people waited until after church services to come. The reason for this must be that they like Sunday school better than they do church services. There is still a greater number who attend neither Sunday school nor church whom we are sadly neglecting. This leads us to an examination of the particular likes and dislikes of our subjects, namely, youth.

The story is told that during a faculty meeting in one of our largest universities the subject of salaries was being discussed. One of the Latin professors expressed the belief that the difference between his meager salary and that of the head football coach was too great, and elaborated upon the obvious injustice. The answer from the very successful and highly paid coach was, "But whoever heard of fifty thousand people willing to pay from fifty cents to two dollars for the privilege of yelling their heads off about a Latin recitation?"

The foregoing story illustrates a fact in life that cannot be ignored. Youth as well as adults enjoy action and adventure. They love liberty and like to be seen and heard. They are happier if allowed to participate actively in civic and social activities. Their gregarious and sexual instincts are strong forces, pulling them together in groups where these particular instinctive tendencies may have an opportunity for expression.

Another characteristic of youth that teachers of the gostions to the procedures used in our churches, and in expressing themselves about what they do or do not like. We may be shocked by their honest doubts relative to the generally accepted truths. We may wonder at their refusal to attend church when they are not convinced that they are being well compensated for attending or unless they have been trained to do so.

I hear such remarks as "We are too busy enjoying the present to worry about the past or future." "There will be plenty of time to go to church when we get old." Young people frequently contend that they do not have a background of Biblical information that will enable them to understand most sermons. They inquire into the meaning of such frequently used terms as "heaven," "hell," "spirit," "soul," and "God." Others point out that their parents have never made it a practice to attend church regularly.

The Sunday school program seems in general to appeal to youth more than does the church service, because it takes into consideration more of the characteristics of youth. Under a competent teacher, pupils are led to participate in group discussions and ask questions about what they do not understand. Formality gives way to variety and freedom of procedure. The lesson is presented in a different manner to each age group.

The writer does not contend that he has an answer to the problem herein discussed, but believes much progress can be made through research and experimentation. Only by making a diligent effort to understand young people and to determine the nature of those forces which keep them away from church can we hope to make much progress. Why not consult youth about the kind of church services they like? Why not let them help plan the program of the church?

Leading industries consider it necessary to spend thousands for the sake of growth and efficiency, while our church engaged in the business of saving souls is contented to operate much as it did before the automobile, radio, and moving picture came into existence. We are stockholders in a great business with a great purpose, but do we have enough faith to invest our time, energies, and money in that purpose?

"From a child thou hast known the holy scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus" (2 Tim. 3:15).

Shoulder and Breast

By S. J. Lindsay

BROTHER MAGAW has asked us to write something for the first issue sent out under his direction as editor. We will comply with a thought that is not altogether new to those who have been reading after us for some time.

The sacrifices and offerings of the ceremonial code of Israel are full of meat for thoughts on the part of the student of God's Word. In Leviticus we read of the heave shoulder and the wave breast. There is mixed with these offerings the burning of a part of the sacrifice. The burning in the type stands for the death of our Lord for us, but the shoulder and breast represent that upon which the priests are to feed. Why the right shoulder and the breast? It is surprising to one who has given little thought to the value of the types in the study of the Bible to find how often the shoulder and breast are referred to. The shoulder represents the strength of the sacrifice while the breast represents the heart; or, in other words, they represent just what Christianity as revealed in the Bible means to the true Christian. Not only is there strength in Christianity, but there is also that deep love that must predominate every Christian heart. God is strong to execute righteousness, but He is also full of pity and mercy and loving-kindness.

The high priest bore upon his shoulders on stones of onyx the names of the twelve tribes of Israel. He was strength for them. He also bore upon his person a breastplate in which there were twelve stones upon which were engraved the names of the same tribes. God was their strength and He kept them near His heart.

It is said of our great Priest that "Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows" (Isa. 53). It is said again of Him (1 Peter 2), "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree." Accepting Him as our sacrifice, we need to feed upon His strength. We rest our case in His death (burning), but we must feed upon His strength and love. We see in Him a strength of character seen in no other, yet we find in Him a love such as no other has ever exercised. In Job 36:5 we read, "Behold, God is mighty, and despiseth not any; he is mighty in strength and wisdom," but in the margin we find the word "heart" for wisdom. We find the two characteristics beautifully blended in Isaiah 40:11: "He shall feed his flock like a shepherd: he shall gather the lambs in his arm, and carry them in his bosom, and shall gently lead those that are with young." Paul's prayer for the Ephesians (1:9) is that they might know the power of God, and in chapter 3:19 that they might know the love of Christ.

In Leviticus 22:4 we read that if any son of Aaron (the priestly class) is a leper or has any "running issue," he may not eat of the holy things until he be clean. The unclean must not eat of the holy things now offered. In this we need to examine ourselves closely before partaking of the emblems of Christ's broken body and shed blood. In this connection read Hebrews 2:2, 3.

The Righteous Shall Inherit the Earth

By Emory Macy

THE PSALMIST has said: "The meek shall inherit the earth; and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace" (Psalm 37:11).

The critic has said: "By the time the meek receive the earth, it will be in such condition there will be no delight nor peace upon it."

"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth" (Gen. 1:1). God also created the grass, herbs, fruit trees, every living creature, the fowl of the air, and the fish of the sea. "And God blessed them, saying, Be fruitful, and multiply, and fill the waters in the seas, and let fowl multiply in the earth" (Gen. 1:22). "God saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, it was very good" (Gen. 1:31).

It has been stated by some that this earth, which God created, will come to nought and the righteous will have no need of it. But Isaiah has written, "God, himself, formed the earth and made it; he hath established it; he created it not in vain; he formed it to be inhabited" (Isa. 45:18).

God called Abram, "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will shew thee" (Gen. 12:1). "And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession: and I will be their God" (Gen. 17:8).

These same promises were made to Abram's son, Isaac, and then to Jacob, and yet it is said of them: "These all died... not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off" (Heb. 11:13). (Please turn to page 10)

"Thou Shalt Have No Other Gods Before Me"

By R. H. Judd

"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbour as thyself" (Luke 10:27).

THE more one comes into contact with the multitudinous theories put forward as a panacea for the terrible conditions of the present day, when men are baffled, and schemes of various kinds fail one after another, the more one is convinced that none of them have, as yet, reached what is the basic reason for all the trouble.

That the present trouble goes deeper than the laws that from a material standpoint affect human nature is evidenced by the fact that no plan of human origin has succeeded for long, no matter by whom, or where, it has been put into action. Here, then, is good reason for believing that something underlying them all, and common to all, still remains to be discovered before there can be lasting prosperity and success.

Moral law, and the Golden Rule in one form or another, have been propounded by civilized peoples from the very dawn of history. While there is no denying the fact that these are the best that unaided human nature has to offer, there is still the consciousness that something is lacking to give stability to even these. Excellent as the Golden Rule is, it unquestionably sets a standard of conduct subject to all the varying ideals of differing mankind. It lacks the concentrated power of a focal point—a firm and solid basis on which all may realize that their foundation is unified and secure.

It is, to the writer, somewhat significant that a scribe, representing the law, should have approached Jesus the Christ with a question that gave evidence of his own dissatisfaction with the existing voluminous codes of human legislation. He unquestionably seemed to feel that none of these had touched the pith of human need, and he appealed to the Master for help in solving a problem that had hitherto baffled his bewildered mind. Typical of his class, when faced with uncompromising difficulty, he went straight to the point, and asked, "Which is the first commandment of all?" The Master quoted from Deuteronomy 6:4, twice emphasizing the fact that in his opinion love of God is the first.

The Golden Rule of the Ten Commandments our Lord placed second, not merely because it comes second in numerical order, but because it is in reality second in importance. If anyone will honestly study the attitude of Scripture on this question he will inevitably come to the conclusion that until the first commandment is given first place, there cannot be, and never will be, permanent blessing for mankind.

Again and again have some of our honored brethren expressed the opinion that I give too much prominence to this question, one indeed stating that in his opinion it is of less importance than a true and Scriptural belief in the nature of man. One stands amazed at the apathy of Christian people with reference to this vital truth, for Scripture statements as to the unity of God are equally as emphatic as any other Bible statement, and certainly far more numerous.

Clearly, definitely, and repeatedly the statement is made that departure from the worship of Jehovah as the "one" and "only" living God will mean the anger of the Lord and sure destruction. In almost every book of the Bible these facts are strongly emphasized, and every reader of Bible history knows well their literal fulfillment. Out of many passages, attention is called to the following: Ex. 20:3, 5; Deut. 4:35, 39, 40; 5:7; 6:4, 14, 15; 11:16, 17; Josh. 24:20; Judg. 10:6; 1 Sam. 2:2; 7:3; 2 Sam. 22:32; 1 Kings 9:9; 2 Chron. 7:22; Ezra 8:22; Isa. 48:17; Jer. 2:13, 19; Joel 2:27; Mal. 3:7; Matt. 4:10; Mark 12:29.

It is impossible for a conscientious reader to get away from the plain teaching of these passages. The frequent repetition of the pronouns, "I," "me," "he," and "him," leave no option for any other interpretation than that of confirming the fact that "God is one," and that "there is none else beside him."

When the world comes to truly realize this stupendous fact, that "God is one," and that there is not, and there cannot be in the nature of the case another, (for then would authority and dominion be divided, and allegiance also divided, as it unquestionably is by so-called orthodox Trinitarian leaders), then and then only can men "love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, with all thy soul, and all thy might," and then only can the second commandment find its fulfillment.

I think I am not far wrong, if indeed at all, when I state that present-day teaching gives very much more preeminence to Christ than to God. You hear much of Christ, but little of God. So true is this that there is now no shame in declaring that "Jesus is God," and God Himself is robbed of the honor due to Him in creation and all that follows.

It is impossible that God can be pleased with an attitude that so completely reverses Scripture statement, which says: "All things are of God, who hath reconciled us unto himself by Jesus Christ" (2 Cor. 5:18), and we were reconciled to God by the death of His Son (Rom. 5:10). That is God's side of the matter. Christ's purpose on this question is no less clearly stated, viz., "Christ also hath once died, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God" (1 Peter 3:18).

Lively Stones

By J. R. LeCrone

"Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ" (1 Peter 2:5).

THE idea here expressed by Peter that each individual member of the church of God may be compared to a stone in the temple of God is startling in its simplicity and far-reaching significance. Even though we can lay claim to no special knowledge of architecture or of the building trade, the thought here suggested is immediately followed by a train of related truths. To the mind trained to think in terms of building and building materials, it must suggest a great many more.

When God's temple at Jerusalem was built during the reign of Solomon, the stones to be used were so perfectly cut and smoothed at the quarries that when they were brought together at the site of the temple, they fitted together without the sound of a hammer. There was a place for every stone, and every stone fitted perfectly into its place. The world still marvels at the accuracy and perfection of planning and execution displayed in the building of that house of God.

But think of the years of back-breaking labor, and months of patient, skillful cutting and polishing that must have been necessary at the quarries before these stones were ready to be assembled to form the beautiful and sturdy temple that erowned Mount Moriah. How the hammers must have rung and how the sparks must have flown as those great stones were prepared for their places in the temple of God.

In Ephesians 2:19-22 the Apostle Paul tells us that the foundations of the spiritual house have been laid by God, and that we are the stones that are to be built upon that foundation. "Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but felloweitizens with the saints, and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone; in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord: in whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit."

The local churches are the quarries where Christians as living stones are being formed and shaped for their places in the eternal and spiritual temple of God. It is too much to expect that stones but recently roughhewn from the rock of the world will fit into their places in the temple without any further attention. Always there is smoothing and polishing yet to be done, and often there are rough edges that must be worn off. Sometimes the process is responsible for a great deal of noise and many sparks fly. We wonder if the stones can ever be made to fit into their places. Yet, except for an occasional cross-grained stone which is brittle and flies to pieces during the cutting process, they are all good material and need but patience, skill, and perseverance to find their places in the temple. Builders tell us that the hardest stones, once cut and shaped, make the most enduring building material.

Occasionally we come into contact with an individual who tells us that there simply is no place for him in the church. Jesus said, "Whosoever will may come." It may be true that he will not fit into the church perfectly at the beginning. It is seldom that anyone does. Though he may not realize it, his trouble is that he shrinks from the annoying and often painful cutting and fitting process. He is not willing to make the sacrifice necessary to fit himself for a place in God's temple. He thinks that it is asking too much of him.

Yet, when we consider the sufferings of our Master when He was preparing for His place as Chief Corner Stone of the temple, we realize that by comparison what He asks of us is indeed insignificant. Looking "unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God. For consider him that endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds. Ye have not yet resisted against blood, striving against sin" (Heb. 12:2-4).

So let us not be discouraged when the sparks fly in the quarries. It is a part of the fitting process. When we have difficulty in adjusting ourselves to other members of the church, let us take a good square look at ourselves as compared with the ideal, the Chief Corner Stone. Possibly we shall find that the other stones do not need all the cutting. We may be a little bit out of line ourselves!

If Christians were immediately perfect upon their conversion and able at once to work in perfect harmony with every other Christian, the work of a paster would be easy indeed. But Peter, recognizing the present imperfection of all, admonishes us to "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ" (2 Peter 3:18).

Of course there will occasionally be differences of epinion and resultant friction in the churches. The vital question is not whether there will be differences, there is no doubt of that. The vital question is whether or not we can settle those differences in Christian love.

Christian Duties

Concluded

By A. J. Eychaner (deceased)

I wrote these things, "that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God which is the church of the living God, the pillar and stay of the truth" (1 Tim. 3:15).

WHAT is the church? And what are my relations to it? These are questions we should understand before we can properly adjust our conduct toward it. The text implies my duty toward this thing which is called the "church of the living God" It implies that my behavior toward it is governed by a law of duty. How came this power over my actions? Some way the truth rests upon it. In the storms of adversity, somehow, it becomes the stay or ground of truth. A knowledge of the church, therefore, is of first importance.

THE CHURCH

The church is God's building. He is the architect. The plan of the building is purely His conception. He selects his material—the choicest, most faultless, and most valuable material. The stones are living stones, because He is the living God. It must be a living thing, otherwise He cannot dwell in it. The object of its construction or organization is life—eternal life.

God is building for all time to come. If the world is to be governed by the church in the future ages, its foundations must be deep and broad, and its superstructure firm and faultless, to be the pillar of truth. No faulty material can be put into any part of that building. God, who knows the hearts and lives of all men, will not be deceived by outward appearance, but the X-ray of the all-seeing eye will perceive the secrets of the heart.

The materials of the church are men and women. They must have the qualities that God builds into the structure, otherwise they will not be selected. Men may think that they of themselves can become a part of God's church upon their own terms. But it is not that kind of building.

The first condition is a turning from sin. It is commonly called repentance. Many are in human organizations called churches who have never forsaken sin, and are deceiving themselves that they are in the church of the living God. They are just as they were before "joining"; live the same, and do not forsake themselves nor bear in their bodies the marks of the Lord Jesus. But repentance is one of the requisites of conversion. Conversion is a condition of change from a sinful life to one of purity.

A second condition is faith—believing, trusting, loving God, and obeying Him. Salvation depends as much on faith as it does upon repentance, while baptism is only one step in obedience. Many, too many, think baptism is the great qualification as a living stone in the temple of God. It is true that this cannot be ignored; yet many, it is to be feared, who were immersed in water, are still outside of God's church; because they were never baptized by the one spirit into the body of Christ (1 Cor. 12:13). "God hath set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him" (1 Cor. 12:18). He gathers the material. "Not every one that says Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven" (Matt. 7:21).

An organization of any locality may take the name "Church of God," or "The Church of God of the Abrahamic Faith," and not one of them may belong to the church of the living God. Yet, every one of them may belong to the church of the living God—it will depend entirely upon what kind of material they are. The fact that we are members of a local organization which we call the Church of God, does not prove that we are the real material that God has selected, and to which my deportment is so essential, as mentioned in the text.

The local organization may be necessary to do the work which a single individual could not do; and so for convenience and assistance it is necessary to become a member. But let no one suppose that by doing so it entitles him to a position in the temple of the living God.

MEMBERS

Members make up the church. Paul uses the human body as a type of the church. Our different members united constitute our physical body. The members of the church of God arc all of every clime and nation during past and future time, that God selects for His purpose. This will be the general assembly, the church of first-born ones, whose names are written in heaven. Jesus will be the Head, and the church as a mighty force will rule this world in right-cousness. O what a joy it will be to be found worthy of a place in that living temple! What possibilities under such a government—such a kingdom!

DUTIES OF THE CHURCH TO MEMBERS

The duties of members to the church and of the church to its members may all be stated in the one short word "love." It is the fulfilling of all law, both of God and man. Using our body and its various members as a figure of the church and its members, it is plain to see that our body should do nothing to hurt any of its members; and that no member should act in any way to injure the whole body.

There is no seism in the body of Christ. A house divided against itself cannot stand. The rule given by the Head of the church covers all duties. As ye would that others should do unto you, do ye also to them; for this is the teaching of the law and the prophets.

The duties of its members may be briefly stated as follows:

- 1. Attend the meetings of the church regularly.
- 2. Perform every duty assigned by the elders.
- 3. Contribute as God has prospered, for the sick or the poor, and toward all necessary expenses. Do not give what you have to a lodge; the church cannot care for its members if your tithe goes into some other treasury.
- 4. Treat with becoming reverence the place of worship.

The duties of the church to every member include the following:

- 1. Appoint officers through whom it can act.
- 2. To look after the moral and spiritual.
- 3. To take care of its poor, or sick, or discouraged, lest they faint by the way.
 - 4. Not to forsake the assembling together.
- 5. In the best possible way to provide some part for each member to take in the upbuilding of a godly life.

The Sunday School Superintendent

By A. G. Townsend

THE measure of the Sunday school superintendent's responsibility is determined largely by the position he holds in the life and activities of the church, and in many cases that position is next to the pastor.

Every Sunday school superintendent should acquaint himself with the great Sunday school movement, its origin, history, and progress.

The superintendent is responsible for knowing the present-day trends in Christian education. He needs to know that the Sunday school is not separate from the church. He should study books on these subjects.

The superintendent is largely responsible for his own personality, which is one qualification for leadership. His Christian integrity, habits, daily life, and appearance count in his work as a leader. He may be pious and good, and yet be unable to awaken in others the spirit, zeal, and joy of service.

The superintendent must be an organizer, and be able with his staff of officers and teachers to build a workable organization whether the school be large or small.

He should be able to visualize the kind of school he desires and to work zealously toward that end. In order to do this he must be able to work with others. He must be able to give and take. He must have certain objectives and goals toward which he leads the whole school. He should have goals such as enrollment and attendance. He should have teacher training goals. He should have spiritual goals, such as church attendance, worship, decisions for Christ, and personal Christian living. Without these his school will be a failure.

The superintendent should have a time and program schedule for all his work as far as possible. By this we mean:

1. Time for beginning the Sunday school sessions. An on-time schedule is vital. A superintendent who is careless about this one thing has a very uninteresting school. He should make ready everything for his session, and be present at least a half hour before starting time. There is a reason. The rooms must be checked as to ventilation, temperature conditions adjusted, the clock set at exact time, blackboards made ready, teaching material distributed, etc.

- 2. Every superintendent should see that the school is given a detailed report of its work at regular intervals.
- 3. The superintendent should provide a regular time to counsel with teachers and officers of the school, with a view to aiding one another in the solution of various problems that will arise.

The Sunday school superintendent should be progressive. People get tired of the same thing over and over. He must give his staff of workers the best that he can afford in lesson material and equipment. He should make the best of special days, such as: Christmas, Easter, Children's Day, Mother's Day, Father's Day, Thanksgiving Day, and Rally Day. These are just a few of the things that will help his school to progress.

Mr. Superintendent, are you a partner to every teacher and officer in your school? You should be. You should be an inspirer to every one of your coworkers, ready to share in the tasks of all who carry any responsibility. All have a silent partner in Jesus, but what a comfort there is sometimes in having a flesh and blood partner with whom a disheartened worker can counsel!

There are many times when you superintendents as leaders can help your coworkers by telling them that you really appreciate their work. You know that much depends upon them, and if you do not, you will not long remain a leader.

Thank you! Two words, eight letters, simple! Every child knows their meaning. They are said frequently by everybody, but not nearly often enough. Your teachers and officers get discouraged. They get no pay. Their faithfulness is unnoticed and unrewarded by you. Sometimes they are criticized. Seldom are they thanked. How would it be if you started at once expressing your appreciation to them?

Instruct your teachers to urge their pupils to attend the preaching services. (OVER)

Counsel often with your pastor in regard to your school. Work harmoniously at all times with him. No one but the pastor knows how much of a good right arm the earnest and devoted Sunday school superintendent is.

Always be on the lookout for new assistants.

Master your job. When anybody accepts the responsibilities of the Sunday school work he desires to give his very best to this very important task.

Be constantly on the lookout for results. It is a great and glorious privilege to be a Sunday school superintendent. At the same time it is a great responsibility.

Recent and continued trouble in Palestine is focusing the attention of many critics, writers, and students of prophecy to that land that cannot have lasting rest until her King comes. Without any Bible knowledge, one should easily see the strategic position of Palestine, and surmise for her an important role in the checker game of nations.

We know the kingdom is promised to Jesus Christ and is to be upon the earth. The angel said to Mary: "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David" (Luke 1:32). "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, and upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice, from henceforth even for ever" (Isa. 9:7).

To the righteous God has promised the land, to dwell therein forever. Christ promised: "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne" (Rev. 3:21).

The earth was made for man, and man for the earth. From the very beginning God planned that the earth, which He created, should be possessed by man. God had no intent that man should be desirous of the heavens. David said: "The heaven, even the heavens, are the Lord's, but the earth hath he given to the children of men" (Psalm 115: 16).

The Bible's last scene is laid in the new earth, and is pictured as it will be in the kingdom reign of Christ. All things that offend will have been taken out. All will be joy and peace and love.

"The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock: . . . They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord" (Isa. 65:25). "The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea" (Isa. 11:9).

WHAT OF PHARAOH?

By a friend, this question was asked of me: Did Pharaoh perish in the sea? I said, "Kind sir, I think he did. In time I'll prove what I have said."

Examine God's Word, it will answer all, I ween. In Exodus fifteen nineteen 'tis plainly seen That the horse of Pharaoh was in the swim. Now what do you suppose became of him?

"The horse and his rider," says the song; So surely Pharaoh was along. If that is not enough, further proof is seen In Psalm one hundred thirty-six, fifteen.

The Bible says, and I believe it's true, That Pharaoh and all his host God overthrew. It may be his body was washed up on the sand, But not so much as one was left on land.

This is found in Exodus 14:28, 30, and 29. You must believe it—'tis God's Word, not mine. Surely this proves without a doubt That even Pharaoh was not left out.

Please read Exodus 15:19-21; Psalm 136: 10:15; Exodus 14:22-30.

SUNDAY

may be a holy convocation unto you: ye shall do no servile work therein."

"But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the firstfruits of them that slept." Christ, the first fruits, rose from the dead on the first day of the week, the antitype of the first fruit wave offering. Fifty days afterward was Pentecost, when the Holy Spirit was given as evidence that the sacrifice, or the wave offering, had been accepted.

Several times in the Old Testament record we are told of sacrifices that were laid on the altar, and God sent the fire to consume the sacrifices as evidence that they were accepted by Him. On the Day of Pentecost "there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat on each of them."

Remember that in the type, the morrow after the Sabbath was to be a holy convocation in which they were to do no servile work.

In Acts 20:7 we read not only about Paul's preaching on the first day of the week, but that it was "the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread . . ."

That the Church of God at Corinth worshiped "the first day of the week" is evident from 1 Corinthians 16:2.

When the Faith Was Pure

By Mrs. Inez Titus

JESUS was resurrected from the dead. He was seen of His followers forty days, and was heard speaking the things pertaining to the kingdom of God. The apostles were looking for the restoration of the kingdom of Israel, and they asked Jesus if He would at that time restore the kingdom to Israel. He told them it was not for them to know the times and seasons which the Father had put in His own hands. As He was taken up into heaven two men in white apparel assured those disciples that this same Jesus should so come in like manner as He went away.

Ten days after His ascension, fifty days after the Passover, on Pentecost, they were filled with the Holy Ghost, and were endued with power to speak in different languages and to do miracles. Peter preached one of the most remarkable sermons ever recorded. In his sermon he told everything important for man to believe in order to become a child of God. He taught the birth, death, resurrection, and ascension of our Lord Jesus Christ. He told of the nature of man in the death state. He gave assurance that Christ will return to take the throne of His father David, to execute judgment and justice in the earth.

When the Jews heard this many were pricked in their hearts, and asked, "What shall we do?"

Then Peter said to them, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins."

There are two contending forces in the battle of life, the flesh and the spirit. They are continually striving against each other. The flesh refers to those things that pamper our natural desires. The spirit refers to those things which elevate and fit us for a nobler life. If we are true sons of God, we must believe His teachings, repent of our sins, and be adopted by baptism into Christ's name. We must mortify the deeds of the body, purify ourselves by believing the truth, and faith will make us an heir of God and a joint-heir with Jesus.

Peter and John, oldest and youngest of the disciples, partners in the fishing business, had been followers of Jesus from the first. As they went up to preach at the gate called Beautiful, a lame man asked alms of them. Peter said, "Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee: in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk." The lame man was healed and praised God.

Peter told the people some very important truths on this occasion, how through ignorance they had killed the Prince of life, how the prophets had foretold that they would laugh Him to scorn and east lots for his vesture. He called upon the people to repent and be converted, that their sins would "be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you:

whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."

Next we find Peter and John arrested. This gave them an opportunity to talk to the elders and scribes, and to show how Jesus is the only name whereby any can be saved.

Ananias and Sapphira practiced deception and were stricken dead. The disciples had given their finance into one fund to be used where needed. Some were neglected, so seven men were chosen to look after their needs.

In the apostolic days, many were added to the church. However, a charge of blasphemy was brought against Stephen. In his defense he called them stiffnecked, uncircumcised in heart and ears. They took him outside the city and stoned him. Faith, the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen, enabled Stephen, Noah, Samson, David, and all the heroes and martyrs to endure unto the end.

These faithful ones have all died, not having received the promises. They are sleeping in the cold embrace of death, waiting for the better resurrection, a time when they will stand again, crowned with honor, glory, and eternal life to be given at the coming of the Master.

The persecution of the church at Jerusalem caused the disciples to scatter, and they preached the word everywhere. Philip went down to Samaria, and when they believed him preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ they were baptized, both men and women. On the way to Gaza he met a eunuch, a treasurer of great possessions. He was reading from the prophets, but did not understand. Philip preached Christ to him. As he was a Jew, he understood all about the kingdom but did not believe in Christ. As they went they came to a certain water and the eunuch was baptized. Nothing else could symbolize the death, burial, and resurrection of our Lord. There is no way we can get into the family of God except by adoption by baptism. It is the seal of our faith. Faith in the promises and repentance must precede it

We find that Paul gave a lesson on humility. He put Christ before men as an example. Christ was made of no reputation because He pleased not Himself. He was made a servant by ministering unto others. He was made in the likeness of men because He was the seed of David according to the flesh. He was obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. He carned the right to live, but gave His life a ransom for man that the Captain of salvation might be made perfect through suffering. However, God highly exalted Him and gave him a name above every name. We have the assurance that if we humble ourselves in the sight of God He will lift us up.

How About It?

In a recent letter from Brother Harry Goekler of Hammond, Louisiana, he remarked about the numerous articles appearing on the Berean Page from that place, and then added: "Some of the other young folks are preparing articles to send in, and it looks as if Louisiana will be first next year again in the matter of articles sent in to the Berean Page."

How about it? Minnesota, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Iowa, California, and all other states, are you going to sit idly by and let Louisiana get ahead of you without even trying?

We do not want to turn this page into a contest of some sort, but spirited competition between states for the honor of having the most articles on the Berean Page for 1938-39 will help us to use the talents of the writers we already have and perhaps assist us in discovering some hidden talent. So send us your articles, reports, selections, or what have you! We will keep you informed from time to time as to what state is ahead.

Am I My Brother's Keeper?

Mary Richardson, Hammond, La.

Yes, we are our brother's keeper to a certain extent. All of us do not possess the same strength of character, and therefore the strong must bear with the weak and help them in every way possible. If a person with a strong character smokes or drinks in the presence of a weaker person, no doubt that person will be influenced by it. The stronger person may be able to control his appetite for those things, but the weaker person is more likely to sink deep in sin.

When the written law was in force each person could judge his fellow man by comparing his action to that which was in the law. But under Christ we can only judge ourselves, for we do not know what is in the heart of our brother. For this reason our chief concern must be our own actions, not his.

Romans 14:18-21. When we become a member of the body of Christ, the responsibility for the salvation of others is placed upon us, the same as Christ experienced. When we are baptized, we rise to walk in newness of life, and from that day forward our main purpose in life should be the conversion of sinners and the spiritual upbuilding of our fellow Christians.

The Christian is governed by love. Love considers the feelings of others, their needs, abilities, and inner thoughts. One who disregards these feelings toward others sins against Christ. A person who acquires the fruits of the Spirit has many advantages. Our duty to our neighbor decrees that we have equal concern for his welfare. Read Romans 14:13-23; 15:1, 2.

"It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor any thing whereby thy brother stumbleth" (Rom. 14:21). We should never do anything in our daily life that would cause some one else to sin. We should abstain from all appearance of evil, for other's sakes if not for our own.

If a man loves his neighbor as himself, he will not do anything or place before him anything that will cause the neighbor's undoing.

Therefore, let us lift up our weaker brother rather than do something that will lead him into sin. This, however, cannot be accomplished in one's own strength, but only by the power of God, given to us through Christ.

One Minute to Pray

By Lorraine Brossard

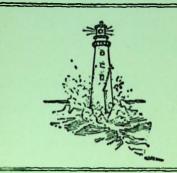

In a news flash, the commentator told of a munitions factory that ceased operations for one minute and the workers prayed for world peace. In our last war these manufacturers were the only ones benefited, because of the great demand for their products, and now on the eve of more war—one minute to pray for peace!

Throughout the Bible, prayer is emphasized as the greatest blessing of God's people. In answer to their prayers, He showed them the right way and they were richly blessed. We are given that same privilege, for "whatsoever we ask we receive of him, because we keep his commandments and do the things that are pleasing in his sight" (1 John 3:22). If we are true Christians we must abide by His commandments, for our services to Him are insignificant in the light of His saerifice, "for he gave his only begotten Son" (John 3:16). Are our prayers unanswered if we ask for temporal things and receive them not? "Seek ye first the kingdom of God . . . and . . . these things shall be added unto you."

Not only must we keep His commandments, but we must have implicit faith, as pointed out in James 1:6, 7: "But let him ask in faith, nothing doubting: for he that doubteth is like the surge of the sea, driven by the wind and tossed." In Matthew 21:22 Jesus told the disciples that "whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive."

Many hearts today are filled with that prayer for world peace, for it means safety of homes and loved ones, but we also know that events will take place according to prophecy; for as prophecy has been fulfilled in the past, so shall it be in the future. We who have faith in God's Word and live according to His commandments, have that great and precious promise of eternal salvation.

It is not Christ's desire that we take one minute to pray, for we have the promise of His second coming, so let us "pray without ceasing. In every thing give thanks, for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you" (1 Thess. 5:17, 18).

PREPARED BY MADGE SAVAGE

"And he came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up: and, as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the sabbath day, and stood up for to read" (Luke 4:16).

As His Custom Was

You boys and girls are now forming habits. That is, it is your custom to do certain things at certain times each day or week. While you should not go to church merely from habit, it is a good habit.

Jesus was used to going into His church to worship every Sabbath day. I expect His mother and Joseph took Him with them when He was small, just as your parents take you with them now. Is that not a good custom? In Hebrews 10:25 we are told to not forsake, or quit coming together, but to meet "so much the more" as we see the day of Christ's coming drawing near.

The day Jesus went to church, on the Sabbath, is not the day that we keep for worship now.

One reason we rest and worship on Sunday, the first day of the week, is because Christ was raised from the dead on that day. Is this one more way we can honor God and Jesus? We can keep Sunday set apart for rest from our daily work and for worship of God.

Christ is our example. Are you not glad Luke wrote that is was Jesus' "custom" to go to church? He also took an active part in the services.

A Sabbath Kept

The Lord, our God, told His people to keep the Sabbath day "holy." They were to do no work, neither were their oxen to work.

When Jesus taught the people, He told them to do good on the Sabbath. A woman had been sick for eighteen years. Christ felt sorry for her, so He laid His hands on her and she became well. How happy she was!

The ruler of the church or synagogue began to find fault. He scolded the people. He told them they had six days when they ought to work and that they could come to be healed on one of those six days. Could it be that he was jealous of Jesus? Why didn't he scold Jesus?

Our Savior answered the ruler. He knew He had done right. Does not our Bible say we should always do good? It tells us that if we know how to do good, but do it not, it is sin (James 4:17). He told the ruler that surely this woman was better than an animal, and the animals were watered and cared for on the Sabbath.

Day by day as you walk along life's way, remember that our Savior was never afraid to do what He knew to be right. Isaiah tells us some things to do on our day of worship. He says we should not do things for our own pleasure. To-day many people use Sunday as a day of pleasure. That man of God continues his thought by telling us to turn away from what we would like to do and to honor God. We should neither do our own way nor speak our own words. We are to do God's will and speak words for Him (Isa. 58:13, 14).

Have you told some of your classmates or friends about Christ Jesus today? Did you take some one to Sunday school with you who otherwise would not have been there?

Lights That Shine

Perhaps you are not very big. You may not be very old. Yet there are ways you can tell others about God and His Son, our Savior. You are a light that shines for Christ.

First of all, those around you see how you act. Even those whom you do not know see your actions. That is why we sometimes say that "actions speak louder than words." You can show your playmates that you honor God by going to church every Sunday. Your light will shine brighter if you go to both Sunday school and preaching services. By having your golden text learned and daily lessons studied, you are again a shining light showing others that you love the Word of God and want to know more about it.

Do you know that many—too many—boys and girls who can read, never read in their Bibles? They watch you instead! How necessary it is then that they will see your good actions. They may see you bow in prayer before you eat your lunch.

A second way in which you may shine for Christ is by the words you say. The tongue is the hardest member to control! A Christian puts away lying and tells the truth. He also says good things and keeps anger, bitterness, and evil speaking far from him.

Another way to shine for Christ is to "be . . . kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another."

How many opportunities did you have to do kind deeds today? Count them tomorrow. If there aren't enough to prove to yourself that you are being kind to all you may, why not look for more to do? You may begin with these around you. Perhaps you forgot to be kind to your little brother or sister.

How are your daily Bible lessons? You want to keep your light shining all the time, I'm sure,

AMONG THE CHURCHES

MICHIGAN FALL CONFERENCE

You are invited to spend the week with us, Oct. 24-30, when the Michigan Fall Conference will be held at Blanchard, Mich.

There will be services every evening at 8:00. Bro. Gerald Lee Cooper of Ripley, Ill., is to be the guest speaker. Some of his most interesting sermon subjects follow: "Our Inheritance," "The Service of Jesus," "Life Insurance," "Are Your Lamps Filled and Trimmed," "The Return of Israel," "The Holy Spirit Today," "Repentance and Immersion." "Restitution," "The Sower," "People and the Signs of the Times."

Come, expecting a spiritual feast. All-day meeting on the 30th. Church school begins at 10:30, dinner at 1:00, afternoon service at 2:30, evening service at 8:00. Come.

C. A. Smead, Pastor.

EVANGELIST McLAIN IN NEW FIELD OF LABOR

Bro. J. W. McLain has entered his new work in Indiana, whereby he is to serve as pastor of the Burr Oak Church and do evangelistic work in the State at the direction of the conference board, one half time for each work. Special pledges have been made to finance the State's portion of this work, and we are anxicus to have opportunity to open up some new field of work in the State of a really evangelistic nature. If you know of any such place, communicate with Bro. McLain, Burr Oak, or with some member of the conference board, that we may make investigation.

Bro. McLain assisted in a two-weeks' special meeting at the Hillisburg Church, of which Sunday, Sept. 18, was featured as "home-coming" day.

As a result of these meetings four conver-

As a result of these meetings four convertions were reported. They were baptized by Bro. J. H. Anderson on September 23.

Bro. J. H. Anderson on September 23.

This was Bro. McLain's first call in the State. Who will be next to request his service.

The conference treasurer is W. A. Roose. Nappanee, Ind. If you wish to make a pledge or contribution to this work, or pay a pledge you have already made, he will be glad to receive it.

IOWA FALL CONFERENCE

The Fall Conference of the Church of God in Iowa met at the home of Bro. and Sr. A. M. Jones in Eagle Grove on October 2. The meeting was very interesting and enjoyable, with visiting brethren from several places. Twenty-seven were present for Sunday school. Bro. Arthur Johnson taught the adult class, Bro. Jones the juniors, and Sr. Jones the primary class.

Short but interesting discourses were given in the forenoon by Bros. Jones and Hunt. A bountiful dinner was enjoyed. The State officers held a short business meeting. The afternoon session was well attended. Bro. J. W. Williams gave a very timely prophetical sermon, speaking of the European conditions.

"Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity" (Psalm 13:1).

BAPTISMS BY BROTHER ANDERSON

The following report comes from Sr. Ralph Smith, secretary, of Hedrick, Ind.:

"Our meeting began Wednesday, Sept. 28. We had a very large attendance, and Bro. J. H. Anderson delivered a wonderful sermon every evening.

"His efforts were rewarded by the following taking their stand for Christ: Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Reynolds, Anna Mac Reynolds, Lydia Lucas, and Gordon Hess. They were baptized on Wednesday afternoon, Oct. 5, and were extended the right hand of fellowship in the evening service. May God bless these who have just been baptized into Christ, and keep them in the straight and narrow path.

"The meeting closed by having the largest attendance of any evening during the special services."

The Los Angeles Church of God is located at 230 West 103rd St.

Twin boys, Donald Hugh and Dale Byron, were born on September 23, to brighten the home of Bro. and Sr. Byron Brewer of the Brush Creek Church near Tipp City, Ohio. The mother and sons are doing well, and the father is extra happy.

The Church of God near Hillisburg, Ind., now has electricity, a new carpet, and other improvements.

A recent Rally day Sunday school attendance broke a two-year record at St. Cloud, Minn., where Bro. C. E. Lapp is the pastor.

Bro. Glen Mills, a student at Aurora College, visited with the editor on October 5. He has applied for a ministerial certificate from the Minnesota State Conference, and wishes to enter the ministry of the Church of God. It was the editor's pleasure to baptize him eight years ago while he was still at home near Andover, S. D.

The Brush Creek Church of God, now without a pastor, is making good use of its elders, Bros. James Kessler, Vivian Magaw, and A. J. Hoke.

The Lawrenceville, Ohio, Church of God is now remodeling their building. When completed it will be furnished with basement Sunday school rooms, and a furnace, and will somewhat resemble the Oregon, Ill., church. Estimated expenditures will exceed $1,200.

Our president, Bro. L. E. Conner, has recently been preaching at Fredericktown, Mo.

Bro. and Sr. Frank Moran of Clinton, Iowa, were in attendance at the Oregon, Ill., morning services on Sunday, Oct. 9.

Srs. Chaffee and Eva Breaw of Golden Rule Home, recently ill, are both improved.

Bro. Ben Carpenter of the Oregon, III., church is now visiting with his parents, both well above the allotted span of years. They live in Perryville, Ky., where six brothers and one sister of Bro. Carpenter's also reside.

Bro. Harold Hardesty and Srs. Leota Hanson and Jeanette Romine, all of Oregon, Ill., attended the Minnesota Fall Conference, Oct. 6 to 9. They report a well attended meeting. Sr. Hanson, treasurer of the National Bible Institution was given an opportunity to speak before the Conference about the General Conference work.

Students of prophecy, and all thinkers, will find in next week's paper a well prepared and timely article by Bro. F. L. Austin, entitled "Today's Jewish Heartache."

Sr. Edna Brewer and son Kenneth, who have been visiting with Bro. and Sr. C. E. Lapp of St. Cloud, Minn., were suddenly called home to Tipp City, Ohio, when on Saturday, Oct. 15, they received word that Sr. Demmitt was to undergo an operation, Sr. Demmitt is a daughter of Sr. Brewer's, as is also Sr. Lapp. Sr. Demmitt is in the Stouder Memorial Hospital, Troy, Ohio. At 3:15 a.m., Sunday, Sr. Brewer and Kenneth stopped at the editor's home for a two-hour rest and visit, then hastened on their way, to complete an eight hundred fifty mile trip in one drive. A true mother's love sometimes causes one to question if Christian's love for truth is the half of what it should be.

Bro, Grover Gordon, many years the pastor of our church at Holbrook, Neb., has been invited to pastor our church at Lawrenceville, Ohio. This is encouraging news.

Since returning home to Dixon, Ill., from Fredericktown, Mo., Bro. L. E. Conner has been called again to Missouri for meetings at Bosworth. Bro. Conner is a hard and faithful worker, "his eye is not dim, nor his natural force abated."

A son, John Paul, was born to Bro. and Sr. C. A. Smead of Blanchard, Mich., on October S. Congratulations.

Bro. Danon Romine and family visited Sunday evening, Oct. 16, with his parents, Bro. and Sr. Lewis Romine of Golden Rule Home,

PENNELLWOOD CHURCH OF GOD Grand Rapids, Michigan

October 2 was the date set for Rally Day at Pennellwood, although the rallying started several days earlier. The new seats were delivered and placed in classrooms awaiting the time when they can take their place with the others in an auditorium. Two new classrooms were squeezed in, making it possible to divide one of the largest classes. The Wayland Dahlia Gardens, the largest of the kind in the world, donated ten bushels of giant blooms, which gave the auditorium and classrooms a very lovely appearance for this special day.

A request was made some weeks ago for a Pennellwood Sunday School song. From the several submitted, two, one by Miss Velora Hanson and one by Mrs. Ada Simpson, were chosen as our official songs. These, with the flowers and several musical numbers rendered by outside talent, were greatly enjoyed by the 241 attending Sunday school on Rally Day. Each one present received a dahlia, and those above the age of nine received a blue moire tibbon bookmark with the stamp of the day in black. Those under nine received a button. Many bouquets of dahlias were sent to brighten the lives of the sick and shut-ins.

In the following service Bro. Abbott continued the theme of the day with a sermon urging all to render their just service to God.

Out-of-town guests were Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Chase and Mrs. Ethel Hall of Coats Grove and Mr. Allen Richardson and son Kenneth of

CLEVELAND'S TENTH ANNIVERSARY

It has been ten years since the church building on Diana Avenue was built and dedi-The occasion was appropriately celebrated on Sunday, Sept. 18, with a program occupying all day.

A few minutes before Sunday school a messenger boy delivered a telegram bearing greet ings from the National Bible Institution, which we were happy to read at the morning services. Greetings were also received from the Hicks-Bullas family of Orlando, Fla.

After the morning service, everyone assembled in the basement, where dinner was catea. A 3 p. m., a special anniversary service was held at which the anniversary sermon was preached by Bro. F. L. Austin. He left us some exceptionally thought-provoking ideas which we should long remember. A splendid musical program was provided by a male quartette from Medina. Following, a series of short talks by different leaders on "Ten Years". of Progress in Our Church and Its Organizations" brought out many revealing facts and suggested the way to future advancement.

Those who were present stayed for lunch in the basement. The day was concluded with the first evening service of the season, at which Bro. Austin delivered the message.

Although the attendance was not as large as we might have hoped, the occasion was one of the most inspiring we have ever held. M. W. Lyon, Pastor.

OF GOD

Evangelistic services began here Tuesday evening, Sept. 13, with Bro. J. W. McLain speaking each evening. Good crowds were in attendance at every meeting. On Sunday, Sept. 19, our annual Home-Coming was held, with basket dinner at the noon hour. Bro. Anderson was the speaker for the afternoon Anderson was the speaker for the arternoon service. On this day several visitors were present from neighboring churches of our own "precious faith," namely, South Bend, Plymouth, Burr Oak, and Rensselaer; also Bro, Paul Hatch of Harvey, Ill.

On Friday evening, Sept. 23, at 4:30, baptismal services were held by Bro. Anderson. The following, having answered the gospel call, came forth in newness of life: Mrs. William Kirkpatrick, Mrs. Edith Huffer, Billie and Betty Dick. We pray that God's blessing will rest upon them.

Bro, and Sr. Carroll E. Hatch, for the past fifty years residents of California, greeted us with a splendid letter of faith and good cheer. They were once members of this church, but have been gone for half a century. They now reside at Santa Ana, Calif.

Services closed on Sunday evening, Sept. 25. We feel that the churches in the State are very fortunate to have Bro. McLain to assist them.

We were very happy to make the acquaint-ance of Bro, and Sr. McLain, and enjoyed having them in our homes, and will be glad to welcome them back.

SOUTHLAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS A Pastor Retires

Farewell Sermon Given September 25

On Tuesday night, Sept. 27, the annex was crowded with members and friends who came to express their love and good wishes to the retiring pastor and family.

After the regular devotional service of the week, the committee had a well arranged program of real interest, including a prophecy by each person present concerning the future of the pastor's family, and ending with some well-chosen and touching remarks by Bro. Niles in presenting a token of love from the

Had the oceasion been the ending of our life and labors with the brethren here, it would have been much more sad for the writer, but since we all look forward to continued labor together under a new pastor, much of the pain was removed.

It was an evening never to be forgotten, and we pray God's richest blessing to abide with these dear ones in the labors of the future.

F. E. Sinle.

A New Pastor Serves

Southlawn members and friends were present in goodly number on October 5 to extend a warm welcome to Bro, and Sr. Marsh as he undertakes the work as pastor here. In addition to our own group we were happy to have Bro. and Sr. Abbott of the Pennellwood Church, and to listen to his words of cordiality. Others to speak on the occasion were L. Bridegam, first elder of Southlawn; L. Stevens, superintendent of Sunday school; Ed. Dykstra, superintendent of Berean; Srs. Dolph and Baker, of the Doreas; Sr. Van Fleet, of the Christian Endeavor; Sr. Evelyn Barr, of the music department; and the writer as retiring pastor.

All expressed a cordial welcome to the new pastor and his wife, and pledged their cooperation and loyal support.

Slips were passed to all present, and each one was asked to write one suggestion to the pastor for the improvement of the work. Some splendid thoughts were given. Bro. Marsh read these aloud, commenting appropriately on each one.

Both Bro, and Sr. Marsh gave touching responses to the welcome extended to them.

The consensus of opinion was very evident that the church is in excellent condition, and everything favorable for entering into the work with a new pastor. We give God the praise for this blessing.

All are praying that God will guide Bro.

Marsh to lead to greater service and greater victory.

The Illinois Evangelist

HARVEY KROGH, JR., EDITOR

"When the Church Builds Evangelism, Evangelism Will Build the Church."

A New Beginning

We have begun a new church year. It is a new beginning in national, state, and local work. When we say, "We have begun," that means that you and I have begun. The National Bible Institution is your institution and mine, and the Illinois State Conference work is your work and mine. We are responsible for the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom. We have banded ourselves together into one organization, the National Bible Institution, and into suborganizations, such as state and local groups, that we might more effectively do the work which Christ gave us to do. United we work for Christ; divided we work for self. United we succeed; divided we fail.

A New Responsibility

During the past year thousands of children have been born, thousands of children have come to the age when they can conveniently attend Sunday school, thousands have come to the age of accountability. What does all this mean? It means that some one is responsible to Christ for preaching the gospel to every one who is accountable, for teaching the way of life to every one who is old enough to learn, and for contacting every parent, that these newborn children might be reared in Christian homes.

This responsibility is yours and mine or we are not of Christ. If we do not perform this duty some one else will, and they will receive the reward. Jesus said to preach the gospel to every creature. Every creature may not believe, but "this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world."

Let us fulfill our responsibility as faithful servants of Christ.

A New Inspiration

Strange as it may seem, the very thing that is causing men's hearts to fail them for fear is a thing that is giving us a new inspiration and a new drive in our service. It is the present unrest and nearness to war that give us that new courage. As much as we desire peace and have prayed for the same, it is strange indeed that war should cause us to lift up our heads; but there is ample reason.

We know that there shall be wars and rumors of wars. We know that the greatest of all conflicts among nations is to come and that conflict will mark the end of Gentile rule on earth. Then shall Christ set up His kingdom of right-coursess and peace that shall have no end. We are to faithfully labor until that day.

As the runner is spurred on by the sight of the last marker before the goal, so are we given new inspiration and new strength by the sight of what may be the beginning of that last great conflict for supremacy among the Gentile nations. Let us take courage, for our redemption is near.

The Month's Question

We often speak of the coming of Jesus and the nearness of His advent. Sometimes we pray that He will come very soon. Have you been doing everything you know to do to prepare yourself and others to meet your Lord? Are you satisfied with your Christian experience thus far?

Hundredfold Reward

There is a story of a certain godly and charitable bishop of Milan, who, journeying with his servant, was met by some poor people, who begged an alms of him. The bishop commanded his man to give them all the little money that he had, which was three crowns; but his servant, thinking to be a better husband for his master, gave them but two crowns, reserving the third for their expenses at night. Soon after, certain noblemen meeting the bishop, and knowing him to be a good man and one that was liberal to the poor, commanded two hundred crowns to be delivered to the bishop's servant for his master's use. The man, having received the money, ran with great joy and told his master of it. "Ah," said the bishop, "what wrong hast thou done to me and thyself! For if thou hadst given those three crowns as I appointed thee, thou shouldest have received three hundred."-Selected.

The State Program

The work at Macomb and Camden has started with good interest and attendance. The Macomb Church has Sunday school every Sunday at 10:00. There is to be preaching service every Sunday morning and evening, Bro. John Mercer taking charge on the two Sundays when the pastor will probably be at other places. Bible study and prayer service every Wednesday evening at 7:30. The place of meeting is 409 South Dudley Street.

At Camden there is Bible study and prayer service at the different homes every Friday night.

Plans are being made to go to Christian Neck one Sunday each month provided other of our churches do not take up the time for which we feel they should have the preference.

Our purpose is to preach the gospel first to those who have not heard, to strengthen and encourage the brethren to like service, and to do the most good where there is the greatest need.

Dollar Day—September 26

Illinois members will soon have the Dollar Day announcements. About $40 of the amount received will be used to finish paying the debt on our dormitory. The balance will be applied to the current evangelistic fund. Use the envelope and form furnished and mail your dollar to the treasurer on or before the day set, if possible.

Today's Jewish Heartache

By F. L. Austin

THE intensive Jewish "purge" from European and Asiatic states tends to challenge the faith of some in God, in the Bible, and in Christianity, as well as in humanity itself. The frequent pogroms at the recent changing of the centuries were unspeakably inhuman, bestial, and blood-curdling. When the popularity of those organized massacres of innocent humanity—babes, mothers, fathers—began to wane it was hoped that Judah's punishment of "seven times" was nearing an end—that better days awaited them. But, No! It seems as though those nations crushed in the Great War of 1914-18 may have felt impelled to vent the spleen of their mortification on some one, and that with oneness of mind all chose to inflict their vengeance upon the Jew.

Russia took the lead. Through "liquidation" by the police; through state inflicted pauperization and starvation she rid her state of many. Germany followed. Forced to discontinue their business houses, their professional occupations and lucrative employment; their properties confiscated: the Jew had to migrate or starve. But pauper migrants were not welcomed by Germany's neighbors, so many were compelled to remain in Germany and submit to added indignities. Austria being swallowed by Germany, the Austrian Jew was spued out. Italy follows along in the wake, while in Palestine the Arab stands on guard resisting Jewish entrance there.

How true the lines of an unknown poet:

"Amazing race! deprived of land and laws,
A general language, and a public cause;
With a religion none can now obey;
With a reproach that none can take away;
A people still, whose common ties are gone,
Who, mixed with every race, are lost in none."

But the Bible reveals the secret of all this.

Speaking generally, the Bible uses the word "Jews" as referring to the people of the nation of Judah. This nation was composed of the tribes of Judah and Benjamin. The other ten tribes continued under the name "Israel," or "Ephraim," or "Samaria"—their chosen capital.

In Deuteronomy 28 God foretells all Israel, the twelve tribes, the curses that will befall them who turn from God. Leviticus 26 speaks in like strain. This advance information, repeated often in after years, concerned all Israel or, it is thought, either nation thereof.

For specific references concerning Judah, or the Jews, the reader will be rewarded by reading Jeremiah 15:4, 7, 14; 1:3; 9:11, 15, 16; 24:9; 29:18, 19, and numerous passages where God asserts they will be "removed," "bereaved of children"; will "serve enemies"; will be without God's favor, "crushed," "desolate," fed "wormwood," "reproached."

In spite of all this foretold waywardness from and rebellion against God, yet He covenanted to regather and rebuild Judah. (Read Jer. 32:36-44; 23:5-8.)

God also warns in Zechariah 12:3-8 that all nations "that burden themselves with" this people (Judah) "shall be cut in pieces."

How Long?

Tucked neatly away in His sacred Word is God's revelation of the measure of Judah's punishment. Necessity of brevity forbids detailing explanation of this, so, suffice it to say that a "time" in Scripture seems often to refer to a sacred year of 360 days. Accordingly, the "seven times" referred to in Leviticus 26:18 may well indicate 7x360, or 2520 days.

Again, these "time" measures sometimes seem to be used symbolically in that a day symbolizes a year. In such usage 2520 days might refer to 2520 years.

A few months ago one J. Bernard Nicklin writing in The National Message magazine called attention that, prophetically, September 26, 27, 1938, seemed to be important dates for Israel and Judah, as also for the "desolator" of Israel and Judah. From his figures the writer quotes the following:

EDITORIAL

The Restitution Herald was entered as second class matter, October 16, 1911, at the Post Office at Oregon, Ill., under act of March, 1879.

Thank You, Minnesota

At the recent Minnesota Conference, reported fully in the "Among the Churches" section, Sr. Leota Hanson, treasurer of the General Conference and its National Bible Institution, was invited to speak relative to the opportunities and problems of the national work.

A wheel with no hub is useless, except to play with. The Church of God has no time to play. Present conditions demand a hub in our church work, and every spoke in its place.

Thus far the National Bible Institution has been unable to engage a field man. There is no question about the good a field man could do, but until there is one it is gratifying when information is invited from any qualified person.

In addition to the present members of the executive board, there are in many states former members of the board and ministers who have worked closely with the National Bible Institution who would gladly speak a word, if invited.

At every conference where some qualified person is present he should be invited to speak of the general work.

And Minnesota invited Sr. Hanson to speak before its Conference at one of the largest gatherings. Thank you, Minnesota.

Yes, California, We Saw

In sequence to the foregoing editorial we appreciate that the recent California Conference, also reported fully in the "Among the Churches" section, invited Bro. Reid to address one of its gatherings about the general work.

What Minnesota and California have done we recommend to others. It costs little; its value is beyond figures.

To the Work

All that I remember how to say in Greek is the proverb, "Well begun is half done." But there is a mountain of truth in that small remembrance.

In last week's issue of THE RESTITUTION HERALD you read articles by several of our experienced and talented writers, Bros. Patrick, Lindsay, and Judd. In this issue you have a message from Bro. Austin—study it before you criticize. Next week you will read from the able pen of your late editor, Bro. Marsh. Very soon you shall hear from Bro. Curtis.

Also, you are hearing from many of our younger writers, just as zealous for truth as the older ones, and because of their youthful vitality, education, and early experience we anticipate that their work will soon equal that of their seniors.

Brethren, with such strength we can lean a little to the proverb, "Well begun is half done."

One Hundred Writers

Hold your smile! We cannot say a hundred writers will help us. We know that goal is idealistic, but we believe in ideals. We have already contacted many of those writers who can be depended upon. We need more than we have enlisted now. Should some read this who wish to write but who have not heard from us, please do not wait. Write. Write! Write!!

The volunteer is a better soldier than the drafted one. Volunteer for Jesus. There are blank pages in the next few issues of The Restitution Herald waiting for volunteer writers to use.

In one more month we hope to have the cooperation of one hundred writers. Enlist now!

Desirable Articles

The Church of God has always been a Bible people. The RESTITUTION HERALD has always been a Bible paper. The sermons and articles that please our people best are those that have a depth and beauty of Scriptural meaning.

In preparing copy for THE RESTITUTION HERALD we ask that these landmarks be respected.

However, articles that deal with the art of teaching, current events, social problems of the church and Sunday school, etc., are welcomed though by their very nature they would not be as rich in Bible thought as articles on the kingdom of Christ, and kindred topics.

Keep Your Folder Filled

Each writer who has thus far sent copy has a folder in which his articles are filed until published. We hope to soon have in use a hundred such folders. With them alphabetically arranged it takes but a minute to check on copy from the various writers to be used for a given issue of THE RESTITUTION HERALD. To aid us prepare a balanced paper keep your folder filled.

The Rapture Includes This:

By Arlen Marsh

"RAPTURE," according to the dictionaries, means "the condition or state of being mentally exalted; transport of mind; ecstasy; enthusiasm; the act of carrying a person from one place to another, especially to heaven."

After reading that, I was far more mentally exhausted than mentally exalted. I didn't believe—and don't believe—in the theory that men ever will see heaven. And for me, "ecstasy" always has conveyed the idea of exceptionally happy, but somewhat unreasoning, emotion. Somehow, it has always seemed to me that those who would experience the "rapture" would be able to give reasons for their joy, would be able to express themselves better than they had ever expressed themselves before.

As a matter of fact, "rapture," as it is commonly used among Adventist churches, carries the thought of ecstasy only indirectly. Mainly, "rapture" seems to point to the actual act of resurrection and to the actual act of conversion of mortal beings into immortal beings. True enough, this resurrection and this conversion result in much joy for the participants; but the rapture itself is the act, not the result. There will be those who will disagree.

The Bible mentions the second coming of Christ 228 times. All 228 times point definitely to the rapture. The second coming would be worthless without the resurrection and conversion that automatically go with it. There would, for example, be no point in the Christ's returning to the earth in the role of invisible inspector; nor would there be any point in His return if the "saved" already were rejoicing in a far happier and nobler state than they could ever enjoy on earth. Wholly aside from any Biblical references on the subject, it would be illogical in the nth degree for Jesus to come back to earth, with or without an army of immortal souls, unless He had some purpose in His coming; and God and His Son are not illogical.

The Elizabethan style of the King James Version is a bit difficult to grasp today. The American Translation (a University of Chicago Press product) puts 1 Thessalonians 4:13-17 this way: "We do not want you to be under any misapprehension, brothers, about those who are falling asleep. You must not grieve for them, as others do who have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, then by means of Jesus God will bring back with him those who have fallen asleep. For we can assure you, on the Lord's own authority, that those of us who will still be living when the Lord comes will have no advantage over those who have fallen asleep. For the Lord himself, at the summons, when the archangel calls and God's trumpet sounds, will come down from heaven, and first those who died in union with Christ will rise; then those of us who are still living will be caught up with them on clouds into the air to meet the Lord, and so we shall be with the Lord forever."

It is notable that the American Translation changes the surface meaning of the King James. God "by means of Jesus" is going to bring the dead "back with him"—evidently in the same sense in which families, by means of letters which ultimately pull all members of the families into the same towns for Thanksgiving dinners, are reunited. In short, those who have been separated from God by death are going to be reunited with Him when Jesus returns to earth to carry out the promised resurrection. This interpretation is no unhealthy strain on the imagination, for the Diaglott's translation of the verses in question seems to support it. "God, through Jesus," says the Diaglott, "will lead forth with him those who fell asleep"—this, immediately after mention of Jesus' burial and resurrection.

The balance of the verses could hardly be clearer. "Those of us who will still be living when the Lord comes will have no advantage over those who have fallen asleep." First the dead will be resurrected; then those still living who have been faithful to God and to His Son will be "changed," as 1 Corinthians 15:52 has it, "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye."

The Apostle Paul himself was not altogether informative on the subject of the rapture. "Behold," said he, "I shew you a mystery; We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed." And mystery it is to this day; for Paul never once made his remarks more plain, other than to add that the "change" involved a shift from mortality to immortality. Paul meant that he was telling the Corinthians a secret, but the open sesame to the method involved in changing mortal men to immortal men has never been set down.

This change is not clarified by the Apostle's allusion in Philippians 3:20 and 21 to the fact that "the Lord Jesus Christ . . . shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." The American Translation calls "our vile body" "poor." Several billions of dollars are spent each year in an effort to beautify the human body; but this hardly seems to be the purpose of changing "our vile body." The purpose goes much deeper than that-to the roots of human physique and thought. "Poor" our bodies may be in health; "vile" our minds may be. The change to be effected by the coming of the Christ is to erase forever all poverty of health and mentality among those who have adhered to the principles of God. Death itself is to be destroyed, except among the ones who are not fortunate enough to be concerned in the rapture.

It is quite obvious that all the major doctrines of the church are bound inseparably to the doctrine of the rapture. Were man already immortal, there would be no need for a "rapture" to "change" his "vile body," Were Jesus, God, and the Holy Ghost an inseparable Trinity—one person with a triune personality—Jesus could not have died upon the cross, for God cannot die—and (in accordance with Paul's reasoning in 1 Corinthians 15) any resurrection for Christians would be unthinkable if Jesus did not die and rise a few days later. Were there no "rapture," there would be no need for Jesus' second coming, for the establishment of a kingdom on earth to be ruled over by the Christ first, and God Himself thereafter. Were there no "rapture," baptism—which represents death, burial, and resurrection—would be an empty rite. The Lord's Supper would be a viciously deceptive form if there were no resurrection, no transformation from mortality to immortality, for it to prophesy.

Hard on the heels of the "rapture" follows the ecstasy suggested by the lexicographical definition proposed at the beginning of this article. But this ecstasy will be more than unreasoning, inexpressible happiness—it will be the solid contentment, reasoned faith, made vocal by infinite wisdom and undying, ever-increasing knowledge. For the "rapture" is to make this "perishing nature" (again the American Translation) imperishable and all-wise!

In the Sands of Time

By James M. Walkins

WHAT is the greatest proof of the Bible outside of the Bible? An impertinent question? We think not, for if we were to philosophize on the future of the Christian religion it would be to prepare the answer to that question. Churchdom's reason for existence is the influence it may have on the outside world, and this, to my mind, is tomorrow's question from the world.

The future success of religion rests largely on the answer to that question. Yet, as we analyze the trend of human thought, we are appalled by the depth of mental depression abroad in the world today.

Our advance upward has led us to the bottom of the world's greatest decline in faith. I refer not only to faith in God, or faith in religion, but to our faith in fellow men. The inability of the world to cope with the forces of certain destruction that are upon it is traceable to that one factman no longer has faith in anything. Because of this ebbing faith we already begin to hear the challenge, not alone from radicals and disbelievers, but from sincere, earnest people who in their apathy would give a great deal for the truths of the Bible to tie to. Lurking in the shadows of these people's mind is the thought that man has made such a mess of everything that it is impossible that the book of God could be printed and reprinted without him making a mess of that too. So I say that tomorrow's question from the outside world, because of this declining faith, will center on the external proof of the Book that is the foundation of our faith.

We could, of course, merely shrug our shoulders and say that if men doubt the Bible there's nothing we can do, but if we do that Christianity will most certainly suffer.

Psychology teaches that the little imps that lurk back in the shadows of the human mind poison a person's thoughts. Dark words and dark deeds can exist only so long as they are in the shadows; when they are brought into the light they soon wilt. Here is the fundamental cure of the most persistent phobia.

Doubt is nothing more or less than a phobia, a fear of the disillusionment that may come from a faith built on unsound ground. Would it be wrong then to treat this for what it is, and consider it in the open? We cannot condemn worldly people for failing to accept the Bible in the same spirit that we accept it. We must treat this fear as we do other phobias, by removing the cause.

We believe in a God of wisdom and foresight. As such, I believe He foresaw the very circumstances with which we are confronted. Surely He realized that the different versions of the Bible that have been printed, the confusion of opinions and counter opinions, would produce the very effects they have, and that He prepared for it. Where? In the Sands of Time!

For this reason it is especially significant to note the advance that has been made in archeology in the past few years. Like all other branches of science, it has reached its ultimate, its zenith, in our present period, namely, since the World War.

Archeology was once nothing more or less than plundering for antiques, and such it remained until in 1870 Heinrich Schliemann set about to find proof of Homer's Iliad. This was the upward trend of excavations with a purpose.

For most people archeology ends with the excavations. It is far more than that. It is the unwritten history of all phases of human existence, including the social, religious, and economic. In the tombs of the past we note the positions of bodies, their care, and the articles entombed with them. Thus we read as in an open book the fundamentals of their belief, and the philosophy that inspired their religion. By their implements, trinkets, vases, etc., we place them in a certain age or culture, and by articles of another culture that we may find interchanged we determine their commerce.

Grade levels are established, maps made, photographs taken, every article numbered and its position accounted for. The years of different strata are established for as many as eight or nine cities which may be unearthed on one site, and from all of this model cities may be constructed to the last detail. Thus, we come to know many nations beyond the period of written history. The truth or fallacy of many written documents becomes very apparent.

Most striking is the fact that, until it came to be the science that it is, no excavations were permitted in the land of Palestine! Deepest secrets were hid longest in the sands of time. It is only since Palestine passed out of the hands of Turkey at the close of the World War that excavations have been permitted. If God proposed to preserve from the petty plunderers of the past the truths He now proposes to reveal at the time when they can be the best understood, it has certainly been well done. The facts are reason for faith!

It is useless to attempt to point out the full progress that has been made in Palestine excavations since the World War, for things are being uncovered so fast that what is news today may no longer be important tomorrow. Only by constant observation of the smaller details are we able to realize the full import of all that has been found.

So far the establishment of the sites of Old Testament cities has played an important part. Locations, once questioned, have been proved, establishing the truth of the Bible, and making us realize that from the earliest days to this the topography has changed, possibly with a divine purpose to at last establish truth. Ruins of cities described as seaports could not be found, but after turning our attention inland a few miles they were readily found, indicating

"God Is Not the Author of Confusion"

By M. W. Lyon

NOT long ago, when talking with an officer of one of our oldest churches, I asked him how many members he had on his roll. His reply was representative, I suppose, of what I would have received from many of our other churches around the country.

In short, he didn't know. He would have to go back over the books for several years to see how many had died or dropped out. The best he could report was an estimate. There seemed to be no exact figure obtainable.

I cannot believe that the God we serve is pleased with conditions such as this. Does not nature itself teach us that order is heaven's first law? Not the smallest created thing but bespeaks the law of its Creator in every cell of its being. Even inanimate nature is governed by infallible law. If it were not so, we could plan nothing and life would be a chaos.

We do not need to return to the methods of primitive times to be religious. God can be in the typewriter and the card index file just as surely as He was in the pen and voice of the ancients. Jesus kept no written records that we know of, but He did inspire His Apostle Paul to do so, and to write that "God is not the author of confusion" and "Let all things be done decently and in order."

One of the reasons why it is so difficult to gather the statistics for the recent census of our churches was that so few churches keep records. To be sure, I suppose most of them keep minutes of their business meetings (although I could be wrong here). But how many keep records of their membership, and if they do, how many keep them up-to-date. How many keep records of their attendance? A business man records and charts the progress of his business. If a church keeps no records of its attendance, how is it going to know whether it is going forward or backward? Our Sunday schools can show us the way here.

Likely one of the main reasons why people take more interest in the Sunday school than in the church is the lax and behind-the-times methods of the latter. If the church would awake out of its lethargy and adopt a progressive attitude in its working methods, perhaps people would not think it so dull and lifeless and uninteresting as they often profess. It is little to our credit, or God's either, that we still cling to customs discredited by the children of the world decades ago.

What right have we to call ourselves the Church of God when we represent God to be as unsystematic as most of our churches are? What reason have we for expecting that God will give us larger responsibilities and greater blessings when we have scorned to use the talents He has already intrusted to us?

Shall we still be satisfied with the status quo? Shall we still continue smugly content to let well enough alone, and continue in the old, inefficient, interest-destroying way?

Why not turn over a new leaf? Why not all our churches set their houses in order? What matter if others are not doing it? Should we be cursed with the millstone of lethargy just because others are? Set the lead for others! Show by your example what can be done. Go over your books. Remove all the names of dead members. Check up the disinterested ones. Contact the distant ones. You'll be surprised how they'll appreciate it. "Encourage the fainthearted, support the weak." When a member removes to another locality, recommend him to the Church of God in that place so that he may not lose contact with the church. Be alive to opportunities for constantly improving the quality of the service you are rendering and the quality of Christianity in your members.

It will mean for your church a resurrection from the dead! Who'll do it?

Conversion of a Pagan

By J. E. Adamson

IN THE late spring of the fifteenth year of the reign of Emperor Tiberias of Rome, there came down the slopes near Nazareth toward the Sea of Galilee a party composed mostly of men, one of whom had all the marks of a leader. Evidently a Jew, he had the features of one of the tribe of Judah, though his friends were from some of the other tribes. Grain was ripening in the fields by the wayside, and the little group plucked ears of wheat and after rubbing them in the palms of their hands proceeded to eat grain. It happened that the day was the Jewish Sabbath, and some saw them pluck and eat the grain, and soon a great outery went up that He allowed His followers to break the Sabbath. Then came the answer that revealed the great new leader, Jesus of Nazareth. After He had taught them both in the synagogues and in the streets, He entered into Capernaum where His newly won fame as a teacher and healer had preceded Him. This is where our story has its real beginning. Luke 7:1-10.

In Capernaum was stationed a company of soldiers of the Roman army, under the command of a centurion. Palestine at that time was a hotbed of rebellion, and the two legions of Roman soldiers quartered in various towns were all from Italy. In that force were many centurions, but it is doubtful if more than one had the character and qualities of this man at Capernaum. It so chanced that just at the time Jesus approached the town, one of the soldiers became seriously ill and all efforts of the crude medical knowledge of the time failed to cure him. He had evidently been given up to die.

The coming of the great Healer gave the centurion new hope, and he sent a party of Jews to meet Jesus and present a request that the power of God be used to heal his servant. The good character and devout life of the centurion were set forth, ending with, "For he loveth our nation, and he hath built us a synagogue" (Luke 7:2-5). Jesus went with them toward the house of the centurion, but was met on the way by other friends of the officer with the plea that he had faith that the power which was in Jesus could reach beyond space and heal the servant, if only Jesus would "say in a word." What faith! No wonder Jesus turned about and said to the company following Him, "I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel."

About two years later a great calamity fell on the land. The great Teacher, after a career of wonderful works and a rise in popularity that proclaimed him the "son of David that cometh in the name of Jehovah," was arrested, and after a mock trial was condemned to be crucified. All his followers who had hoped for so much were scattered in fear. What, then, were the feelings of the Roman centurion who had such sublime confidence in Him? The routine of army life had swept him out of sight, but this very routine shifted his company to Jerusalem, and to him fell the sad duty to be on guard on Calvary on that dreadful afternoon. Had he lost the faith that was greater than any found in Israel? Let us see.

We are told in Matthew 27:54 that "the centurion, and they that were with him, watching Jesus, saw the earthquake." They heard Jesus cry, "Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani?" and saw Him give up the spirit. Then they said, "Truly this was the Son of God." It was the supreme test of the faith of Jesus, and also of the centurion. Matt. 27:64-66. There is little doubt that the same centurion was the one to place the seal of Rome on the tomb, who also knew that no mortal hand rolled away the stone to steal the body of Jesus. Only a risen Christ could be the answer.

This remarkable Roman officer was evidently shifted from one post to another. Then after seven years he came to the center of the stage as the one chosen of God to be the first Gentile to be given the grace of God (Acts 10). This time he is given the same fine character, "a devout man ... who gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God alway." Suddenly his prayers were answered. An angel came to him in bright clothing and called him by name, "Cornelius," saying, "Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial before God. And now send men to Joppa, and call for one Simon, whose surname is Peter: he lodgeth with one Simon a tanner, whose house is by the sea side: he will tell thee what thou oughtest to do." Did he lose any time in wondering what to do? No! His faith was still greater than any in Israel, and he immediately prepared a party of soldiers to go from Cæsarea to Joppa.

In the meantime, God in His wisdom was making preparations at Joppa. Peter had been called to Joppa by the death of Doreas, and was visiting with Simon the tanner. Now Peter was a good Jew, and could not be expected to take readily to the request of a Roman army officer to visit him at his home. So the angel of the Lord prepared for Peter a lesson in tolerance and charity that made the request seem different. Sleeping after a fast, he saw in a vision a great sheet knit at the four corners and full of all manner of beasts and creeping things, many of them contrary to the law. Peter was told to slay and cat. But, in his most self-righteous and self-assured way, he answered, "I have never eaten any thing that is common or unclean." Then came the startling reply, "What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common."

While he pondered the vision and the command, the soldiers' party arrived at the door, and asked for Peter. This whole story is aflame with the unusual and dramatic, but this part of the chapter is the most thrilling: Peter going to Cæsarea against his own will, urged on by the vision on the housetop; then on the morrow the arrival in Casarea; the room filled with the family and friends of Cornelius, several of them Roman soldiers; Peter and his party entering to be greeted as supermen by the Romans Peter's exclamation, "Stand up; I myself also am a man."

The rest of this story is the crowning drama of a wonderful event in Christian history. Cornelius told of his experience with the angel, of the instructions he received and the immediate response to the command to send men to Joppa and inquire for one Simon Peter. Then came a remarkable confession from Peter: "I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness is accepted with Him."

Then, after recounting the story of the death and resurrection of Jesus, and while they still wondered at all the things that had happened, the Holy Spirit was poured out on all the Gentiles that believed, and they spoke with tongues and glorified God. Could anyone forbid water that the called ones might not be baptized?

The story closes here, ending a period of about nine years, covering the teaching and conversion of not only one but a number of pagan Romans, most of them soldiers of the army of Imperial Rome.

Is God Particular?

By D. G. Harvey

"There is a way which scemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death" (Proverbs 14:12).

IN THIS age of many beliefs or creeds the question often arises, "Does it matter what I believe? Is God particular?"

At one time I heard a minister declare, "The way to the kingdom of God is much like the roads to any large city. There are many roads, but all reach the same goal."

But, is God particular?

Perhaps I sacrifice many so-called pleasures of this world; perhaps I sacrifice much for the church, both time and wealth. Is that the all-important? "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice."

Consider Adam, our first parent. Did he sacrifice? Yes, even life itself; but he did not obey. Was God particular?

Cain—did he not sacrifice? Ah, yes, of the "fruit of the ground"; but it meant nothing. Was God particular?

Saul was commanded to destroy all the Amalekites and all their cattle, but he reserved the best of the sheep and cattle for sacrifice. Then it was that the Prophet Samuel spoke those words of truth, "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice." And Saul was rejected as king of Israel. Was God particular?

Jehovah has given us certain requirements. They must be met. Does it make any difference? Do they matter so much? Did it matter to Adam? Cain? Saul? Does it matter to you?

God has promised you the highest reward, a work of honor, and a King and Priest. He has promised to teach you all things.

But you must meet the requirements.

Before one can have faith in God, he must first have knowledge of the existence of the Deity. "He that cometh to God must believe that he is" (Heb. 11:6). As we understand Paul's reasoning in Romans 10:14, one must hear first before he calls on God. One may see in the work of nature the hand of a supreme power, but one must know that it is God before he feel the need of repentance.

Faith in God increases faith in God's Word. With that faith (confidence) the Bible becomes the guide in the Christian's life.

Our next requirement is repentance (Acts 3:19). To repent is to regret the past sinful acts and reform. "Surely that is all that is required," reasons man. But is God particular?

You must now show your faith and repentance by the third requirement, baptism (Acts 2:38). But why be baptized? "For the remission (forgiveness) of sins." "Surely that must be all," reasons man. "My sins are forgiven; there is nothing against me." No, nothing against him and nothing to his credit. He stands a blank. Is God particular?

The next requirement is the hardest step of all. Our duty henceforth is to be worthy of our Lord, our Example. "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service" (Rom. 12:1). "I therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with longsuffering, forbearing one another in love" (Eph. 4:1, 2).

Baptism is only the starting point in the life of the Christian, never a goal. You and I, after baptism, are under a new law. "That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; but speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ" (Eph. 4:14, 15). "But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. To him be glory both now and for ever. Amen" (2 Peter 3:18).

"Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice." Is God particular? Which will you choose, the way of God or the way of man?—Reprinted from THE RESTITUTION HERALD of November 14, 1933.

Little Children

By B. L. Hunt

IN Matthew 19:13, 14 we read, "Then were brought unto him little children, that he should put his hands on them, and pray: and the disciples rebuked them. But Jesus said, Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Writers of the New Testament frequently speak of adults in such terms as "little children," "children of God," "children of disobedience," "children of the devil," and sometimes as "babes." In the verses quoted above there is no question as to whom Jesus was speaking. But in 1 John we find John frequently referring to his disciples, or followers, as little children, as in 2:1, where he says, "My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not. And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous." Notice, however, that he also says in this verse, "if any man sin," whereas he begins the verse by saying, "Little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not." He could as well have said, "My brethren."

Just why he invariably used the expression, "little children," seems to be a mystery, until we search farther.

In Hebrews 5:12-14 we read, "For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat. For every one that useth milk is unskilful in the word of righteousness: for he is a babe."

In 1 Corinthians 3:1 Paul says, "And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ." He clearly indicates that those who are newly baptized are to be considered as babes, i. e., young in the faith.

Christ also speaks of babes. When praying to His Father, He said, in part, "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes."

In relation to God all Christians stand as children, as we find by reading Luke 20:36, "Neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." We also read, "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God: and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together" (Rom. 8:16, 17). Still another quotation is, "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus" (Gal. 3:26).

Thus, it is plain to be seen that children may mean either the young or adult men and women, according to the subject under consideration. If we were to assume that all references to children meant the young boys and girls, as referred to in the beginning of this article, we would utterly fail to understand what Jesus meant by "babes" in His prayer to His Father, quoted above.

Jesus taught, in John 12:36, "While ye have light, believe in the light, that ye may be the children of light." Paul, in speaking to the Ephesians, said, "For ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord: walk as children of light" (Eph. 5:8). "Darkness" in this passage might have been written "ignorance." If we are ignorant or unlearned in the ways of the world, or the Scriptures we are said to be in darkness. I thank God that we are not unlearned concerning God's Holy Truth. There are children of light as well as of darkness. Paul, in writing to the Thessalonians, says, "Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day: we are not of the night, nor of darkness" (1 Thess. 5:5). Notice, he says, "ye." He is speaking only to those of the Thessalonians who had believed and been baptized into Christ.

"In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil: whosoever doeth not rightcousness is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother" (1 John 3:10). When Jesus said, "Suffer little children, and forbid them not to come unto me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven," He was trying to impress upon the minds of the people that it was only those who could accept His truths or doctrines as a little child who could enter the kingdom of heaven. Jesus also said, "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. 18:3). He was teaching humility. The disciples had asked Him, "Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven?" and He "called a little child unto him, and set him in the midst of them."

Here, then, is a lesson for us, for except we become as little children we shall not be able to enter the kingdom. It is not that we should become foolish or childish except in worldly ways and knowledge, but that we should become spiritually wise concerning God's laws and the teachings of Christ. Oh! How many there are who rely on worldly wisdom, with the mistaken idea that it will obtain for them eternal life. What a mistake they are making! Oh, that their eyes could be opened to God's truth, that they could see the error into which they have fallen, and turn to the true and living God before it is too late!

ing them to unity, "Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ: that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive" (Eph. 4:13, 14). "Let no man deceive you with vain words: for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience" (Eph. 5:6).

Isaiah gives us a note of warning in these words, "Woe to the rebellious children, saith the Lord, that take counsel, but not of me; and that cover with a covering, but not of my spirit, that they may add sin to sin" (Isa. 30:1).

The Giant's Fall

By Marion Ellsworth

There were doubt and fear in the Hebrew host And their faint hearts quaked in fear, For the Philistines taunted with bitter scorn, And scoffed with jest and sneer. "Oh, ye who call on Jehovah's name, And His servants claim to be, Your God I defy, for you do not dare To come out and fight with me. Ye claim your God is the Lord of Hosts, Who o'er all gods has power, Yet I walk abroad with sword and spear, While in your tents ye cower. Now pick ye a man to fight with me, And if he shall me slay, The Philistines shall own your God, And bow to your rule and sway. But should I slay your chosen one, Ye shall bow to the god of the sea. If ye are not cowards, choose your man, And let him fight with me."

Then David came to his brother's tent, And heard with a heavy heart, "Is there no man of Israel's host, Who dares to do his part? Shall this braggart stand in Israel's sight, And Israel's God profane, While in your tents ye shake in fear, Like poltroons in your shame? Did not your God in power and might From Egypt bring your host? Then shall ye fear a single man, Tho' loud and long he boast? Through Jehovah's power the water burst From rock in gushing tide, Why should ye fear this giant's might While God fights at your side? Let me go forth to meet this man, In the God of Israel's name, For I will smite him that he die, And bring to naught his claim.'

"Thou shalt not go," said Saul the king, "For thou art but a child, For you to meet this man of war, Would be both vain and wild." "I fear him not," then David said, "I pray thee, let me go, By the power of Jehovah's name, I will lay this braggart low; All in the lonely midnight hours, My father's sheep I keep, There came a bear and lion to seize And tear the sheep. That lion and that bear are dead-I slew them there that night, Though none was there but Israel's God, To help me in the fight. So I shall smite this Philistine, Who dares defy the king: I pray that thou wilt let me go That I may do this thing."

"Go then," said Saul, "and may thy God Be with thee on this day, And may thou gain the victory In this unequal fray. Helmet and spear, and coat of mail, And other warlike gear, Choose thee then for thyself, I pray; Thou seest great store here. My own good sword hast served me well, I give the blade to thee. If thou wilt slay the Philistine My greatest prize shall be." "Not so, O King, I do not know The use of warlike gear; Thy blade would be in my poor hands A useless thing, I fear. The only arms that I shall need Is this-my shepherd's crook, My trusty sling, thou seest here, With stones from yonder brook."

Then down the hill he straightway Strode without a backward look, Pausing for just a moment as he Came beside the brook. Five smooth, round stones selected he From the many in the sand, Fitting them with careful hand To the good sling in his hand. The Philistine had watched him come, And loud he laughed in scorn, "Ho, Israel's king sends out to me A child, but newly born, Doth he imagine I will kneel With pleading, suppliant look, While a stripling lad shall smite My back with shepherd's crook? Haste, get thee back and tell thy king To send a man to me-If man he has in all his camp-I will not fight with thee."

Then David answered, "Thou hast mocked The God of Israel's name. I meet thee in the power of Him Whom ye have dared profane. Thou hast but a moment more to live; This instant shall ye die; Then all shall know the might of Him Whose name you did defy." He hurled his sling with practiced hand; The stone unerring sped, Struck just beneath the brazen cap Upon the champion's head. An instant more he stood erect-Who saw could scarcely know If the flying stone had missed its mark, Or dealt a fatal blow. Then like a smitten tree he fell; His armor, clashing, rang, In all the watching thousands' ears, Like smitten anvil's clang.

And then there came another sound, A wild, exultant cry, "Thus perish each and every one, Who doth our God defv." And David o'er the fallen man, Whirled high the champion's sword-It fell, the giant's lifeblood Stained the battle-trampled sward; Then with each bright sword waving high, Spears in unwavering row, The Hebrew host swept down the hill And hurled them on the foe. They struck-in instant wild turmoil The foe, fear-stricken, fled In panic wild across the plain, Now marked with mangled dead, Nor ceased pursuit till o'er the strife The shades of evening fell. In future years the wandering bard Will of the battle tell.

GOD'S PORTION

By Harvey Krogh, Jr.

I HAVE never given a tithe of what I earn, but I do pay a tithe. When I came to realize that God's work needed financing I found that God had already provided an excellent way to take care of His business. Long before the Mosaic law, tithing was known to be God's way, and it was practiced.

I learned to believe that one tenth of all I had and could earn belonged to God, my Father who protects me, cares for me, and provides wonderfully. Since then I have paid my debts to Him and He has helped me in everything I do.

I have never missed what I have paid to the Lord's work, because He has blessed me both in things measured by money and in things that cannot be measured in terms of temporal things.

I am not a tither because I am in the Lord's work and expect some of the Lord's tithe to come back to me, but I tithe because I believe it is the right thing to do. "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin," and I would be sinning if I held back that which I am certain belongs to God.

GET AWAY FROM THE CROWD

Robert Burdette, in a talk to young men, said: "Get away by yourself for a bit and—think.

"Stand on one side and let the world go by, while you get acquainted with yourself and see what kind of a fellow you are.

"Ask yourself hard questions about yourself.

"Ascertain from original sources if you are really the manner of man you say you are.

"If you are always honest.

"If you are always truthful.

"If your life is as good and upright at eleven o'clock at night as it seems at noon.

"If you are as good a temperance man on a fishing excursion as at a Sunday school picnic.

"If you are as good in the city as at home.

"If you are really the man your father hopes you are, and your wife or sweetheart believes you to be.

"Get on intimate terms with yourself, my boy, my girl, and, believe me, every time you come out of one of those private interviews, you will be stronger, better, and purer.

"Don't forget this and it will do you a world of good."

Now 604 B. C. was the first year of Nebuchadnezzar's reign—who a little later crushed Jerusalem and Judah. November 2, 1917, is the date of Lord Balfour's Declaration favoring the reestablishment of the Jews in their God-given Homeland.

Throughout the time of their judges and kings, God sold Israel and Judah again and again to enemy nations for brief periods. Leviticus 26:18 reveals that, if after much punishment "ye will not yet for all this hearken unto me, then I will punish you seven times more for your sins." May the "seven times" here mentioned be divinely intended to indicate "seven times" according to the longer, or symbolic, scale extending 2520 years from 604 B. C., while the three several "seven times" of Leviticus 26:21, 24, and 28 should be understood as referring to the shorter measure, that is, 2520 days? Such is the writer's query after studying Mr. Nicklin's continued reckonings, as follows:

Both 2520 and 1260 appear to be numbers referring to Israel and Judah. Is it a coincidence or a divine intention that these Bible measures terminate with these related events?

There is another number specified in Daniel 12:11 as referring to the abomination of desolation—to the desolator.

This is in connection with Daniel 11:31; 9:27; and Matthew 24:15 is very interesting at this time. Again Mr. Nicklin is quoted:

ckim is quoted:

More could be quoted, but the above suffices to suggest the possibility that Judah (the Jews) and Israel, may be in the period of the close of God's punishment for their continuous rebellions against Him. Accordingly, God, nor the Bible, nor Christianity could be successfully challenged.

Also there are suggestions that the desolator of Daniel and of Matthew 24:15 may today be at his height. If so, then the present Jewish Heartache will soon be turned to Heartiest Joy.

In closing, permit one further numerical suggestion. After giving the number 1290 as pertaining to the desolator, in Daniel 12:11, the Prophet continues—"Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and thirty and five days." If 1335 days are to be understood as adding 45 days to the 1290 days; and if the 1290 days of the desolator and the multiple of 1260 days of the punishment of Israel and Judah both terminate on or about September 26-27, 1938—Feast of Trumpets—then another 45 days will terminate on November 10-11 next—just twenty years from Armistice, November 10-11, 1918.

"Immediately after the tribulation of those days . . ."

that the sea had filled enough to deceive us.

The site of Armageddon has proved rich in historic data, not only of the place its twenty cities have had in different stages of the past, but also its logical place for the part we believe it is to play in the future.

Not until 1936 were the first papyri discovered in Palestine. Thirty-five rolls of Arabic and Greek script of about 600 A. D. were found at Auja Hafer, which leads us to believe that many truths will be established, and many falsehoods will fall as the future unravels the many mysteries that are certain to be revealed in Palestine.

Archeology, greatest ally of religion, provides today's answer to tomorrow's question in the unearthing of those little elements of truth ereated by a God of vision and foresight, earefully preserved, tucked away in the sands of time.

Berean Department

Gerald L. Cooper, Editor, Eden Valley, Minn.

Minnesota Berean Conference

Saturday, October 8, was set aside by the Minnesota State Conference for the Bereans. A wonderful day was enjoyed by all fortunate enough to be present.

In the morning session a very interesting class discussion was held on the subject of "Sunday Sports." It was inspiring to hear the views of these young people on this important subject.

The afternoon session opened with a song service followed by a sermonette delivered by Leslie LeCrone of Kennard, Nebraska. Bro. Leslie was a member of the training class this past summer. He shows good results of that training. We pray that he may continue to grow in service for his Lord. After the sermonette the annual business session was held. "The Nobler," State Berean paper, which has been delayed during the past few months because of publishing difficulties, was the chief subject of conversation. We are glad to announce that this splendid little paper will resume publication soon with Miss Muriel Randall of Minneapolis, as editor.

The election of officers resulted in the following: president, Carroll Bennett of Eden Valley; vice presidents, Lily Berry of Lester Prairie and Norman Ruhn of Paynesville; secretary, Lorraine Gaspar of Eden Valley; treasurer, Lorraine Brossard of Eden Valley.

In the evening, after a special song service, Bro. Denchfield gave the Berean sermon. Then a social was given in the church basement which was enjoyed by all.

Visitors from Nebraska and Illinois added much to the enjoyment of the day.

Observations

My husband's work had made it necessary for us to live in a vicinity in which there was no Church of God. We had chosen to attend a substitute church in order to be in the religious activities of the community.

On our first Sunday we accepted a proposal to attend a certain Sunday school and church. It was a beautiful Sunday morning as we wended our way toward a dignified structure in the small town. My first impression and thought upon entering God's sanctuary was—here is activity and growth; here we can work, for the church has all the necessities for such—a beautiful pipe organ, a piano, a choir loft, stained glass windows, comfortable seats, hardwood floors, separate classrooms. It was a typical, modern, comfortable church.

On a recent Sunday morning I observed the following things during the Sunday school and church services:

A few scattered people were present when the superintendent commenced the Sunday school. Those few were asked to move closer together in order to make the responses sound greater.

Out of six classes, only two had teachers present. After numerous beggings, the classes were finally combined and a teacher (?) found.

Our class read the lesson. When the name of Saul was mentioned one student said she thought he was comparable to Hitler. From that time forward the subject of the lesson was entirely forgotten—substituted with every one's version of the ever-present question, "Will there be war?"

At the close of Sunday school most of those present departed. A few elderly ones took their places, and the worship service began. I noticed that the last three rows of seats in the rear of the large auditorium were the only ones occupied—a characteristic of many of our own churches.

As the minister very ably began his discourse the occupations of the members were varied. The women in the choir daintily yawned behind gloved hands, while the men prepared openly for naps. Some leafed through the hymnals, while still others were actually listening attentively to the minister's timely warning.

What was wrong? Here was an able minister, a beautiful church, an approximate membership of two hundred yet with scarcely fifty persons present, and out of those fifty possibly twenty listening.

Those who have never attended other churches cannot appreciate our Church of God with its real study of the Bible, and its earnest members, anxious to "search the scriptures daily." Be thankful for what you have!

Notice

Your editor is thankful to be able to announce that he has accepted a call to be pastor of the Church of God in Eden Valley, Minnesota. Please send all communications, articles, etc., for this page to him at Eden Valley, Minnesota, after November 1. Thanks.

How Many Would?

Replying to the question, "Why are the socialists in Milwaukee so successful?" Victor Berger, the leader of the party in that city, replied: "Because we put nine tenths of our campaign funds into literature, and because we have three hundred men who are pledged to get up every Sunday morning at five o'clock for the purpose of placing socialistic literature into the Sunday morning newspapers found upon the front doorsteps."

Would it be possible to secure three hundred Christians to pledge themselves to arise every Sunday morning at five o'clock for the purpose of placing Christian literature upon the doorsteps of the people living in their communities?

Free to Do Right

What work do you intend to choose when you are grown? Will you be a doctor, a teacher, or a minister of the gospel? Perhaps you have not thought much about it, for it is quite a number of years before you need to know.

However, one thing I feel sure about is that you want to keep yourself fit for the better positions life has to offer.

Then, because of that, you are interested in hearing some facts that are too little known.

Those facts are about alcohol. You are thinking, no doubt, "What has alcohol to do with me?"

This is our temperance lesson. Temperance means moderation, as of habits. For example, if you eat too much candy and get sick you were not temperate in your eating. If you do the same thing over a few days later, I expect your mother tells you that you lack self-control.

I don't want you to wait until you are too old and it is too late to learn these truths. Learn them well now. Memorize these facts. Tell your friends about them. They may help you save a friend from many heartaches and grave discomfort.

Now it takes plenty of self-control to guard your appetite when there is no drug or other harmful substance in the food or drink.

Today we see too many signs telling of the sale of drinks in which alcohol is found.

It is now well known that alcohol is a narcotic drug. A narcotic drug is one which produces dullness and sleep. Alcohol is a habit-forming drug. That is, alcohol deadens or puts to sleep the nerve centers which control the best that is in one. It causes one to forget moral and social teachings, thus making one more of an animal and less like a human, civilized person, while under its influences.

Alcohol affects the nervous system and slows the reaction time. For example, when you touch a hot stove with your finger you take it off before you can say, "Ouch." Yet how did your finger know it was hot? You felt it because the nerves in your fingers feel heat. Those nerves sent a message to the nerve centers. How fast they work! Alcohol slows this reaction time and makes one act slower. A car driver sees another car coming. If he has been drinking strong drink, he cannot think or act quickly enough to keep from having an accident. Last year over 36,000 motorists were killed, many of them because of strong drink. Beer, wine, and whiskey are but a few I can name that have alco-

There is one more very important fact for you to learn if you want to be a useful citizen as well as a Christian. Remember, I told you that alcohol was habit-forming. Because of this, three persons out of every ten who drink get the drink habit. They become slaves to drink!

Hold up your hands. Count your fingers and thumbs. Fold down three fingers if you can. That many of every ten cannot stop drinking those alcoholic beverages. No one can say which one of those fingers represents you. You might not get the habit. But there's too much of a risk for you to try if you ever want to be a follower of Christ who will remain true to Him until death. Could one remain true to Christ and be a slave to drink at the same time?

What the Bible Says

Jesus said, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me."

These next verses show us plainly that anyone doing God's will cannot be the ones talked about in Isaiah 5:11: "Woe unto them that rise up early in the morning, that they may follow strong drink; that continue until night, till wine inflame them!"

Who has more sorrow than one who has a home where drink is a serpent? What a dangerous thing it would be to have a serpent bite you or an adder sting you! Unless you could get proper treatment, very soon death surely would result. Do you know what a serpent is?

"Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth his colour in the cup, when it moveth itself aright. At the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder" (Prov. 23:31, 32).

Surely, the men of God knew the results of strong drink. Proverbs 23:29 says, "Who hath woe? who hath sorrow! who hath contentions? who hath babbling? who hath wounds without cause! who hath redness of eyes?"

Get some one in your family to explain those words you can't understand.

To close our study about strong drink and temperance in other things, let us read the last verse of our lesson in our quarterly. Paul tells us in Romans 14:21: "It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor any thing whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak."

God expects us to do what is good. Let us watch and work and pray that we do not fail Him!

AMONG THE CHURCHES

CHURCH OF GOD AT BRUSH CREEK (Near Tipp City, Ohio)

Sr. Brewer, recently returned from her visit with her daughter, Louise Lapp of Minnesota, was at the bedside of her other daughter Dorothy Demmitt, when Dorothy underwent an operation for gallstones. Dorothy is improving steadily, and may be addressed at Stouder Memorial Hospital, Troy, Ohio.

No hope is held for the recovery of Sr. Martha Lehman who is very ill at the State Hospital, Troy, Ohio.

All were saddened October 12 by the sudden death of a former Berean member, Francis Etherington, age 19.

Sr. Belva Knife is ill with heart trouble.

The Sunday school attendance is again on the increase. On Sunday, Oct. 16, there were over a hundred present.

According to present plans, Bro. Glen Mills will preach on Saturday evening and twice on Sunday, Oct. 22 and 23.

Mrs. Eunice M. Pearson, Reporter.

BROTHER AUSTIN AT CLEVELAND

A new idea to us was tried this year. In previous evangelistic meetings, we had always had them prior to Easter. This year they had them prior to Easter. were planned for the two weeks between Anniversary Day and Rally Day, with the idea of stirring up interest early in the fall, when its results could carry through the winter, rather than in the spring, when we approach the summer let-down period.

The work of Bro. F. L. Austin, who supplied the church during July while the pastor was away, was so much appreciated, that the board engaged him to return and conduct the fall meetings. The services, which were held hightly except for Saturday, were very well attended and the interest was unusually good. Quite a few visitors came consistently night after night. Three nights the attendance sur-passed 100. Interest was so good that an extra service was inserted on the second Saturday night with good results.

Two came forward for baptism, Mr. and Mrs. M. V. Grable, whose acknowledgment of the Master caused much joy. There are several others whose interest leads us to hope they, too, will take the step a little later.

One of the most encouraging things about the meetings was the spirit in which the membership, right down the line, jumped in and worked for their success. The local residents went out every day, covering the entire neigh-borhood with eards advertising each night's subject and giving personal invitations. Several of those who live farthest away made the long drive to be there every night. Each did his part to contribute to putting it over, and that's what counts most.

It is still too early to tell how long the results will last, but we are much encouraged with what has been done and the prospects for the future.

MINNESOTA FALL CONFERENCE

The Annual Fall Conference of the Churches of God of Minnesota convened at Eden Valley, October 6-9.

Services began at 7:30 p.m., Thursday with song service, and sermon by Bro. G. L.

On Friday, Oct. 7, Bible classes were conducted both forenoon and afternoon for all ages, Sr. Hoskins taking charge of the small children, and pastors Denchfield, Lapp, and Cooper in charge of young people and adults.

On Saturday morning at 10, Bible classes convened for all ages. In the afternoon and evening the State Bereaus took charge of the services. At 2 p. m. a sermon was given by Bro. Leslie LeCrone of Kennard, Neb. At 2:45 the Bereans met in business session in the basement, while Bible class was held in the church for adults and small children. At 7:30 a song service was led by Bereans, followed by a sermon by Bro. J. Denchfield. Sunday at 10 a.m. regular Sunday school services were held, with our capable superintendent, Elmo Gaspar, in charge. There was an attendance of about eighty. At 11 o'clock a sermon was delivered by Bro. G. L. Cooper, which was followed with Communion service. At 12 dinner was served to about two hundred. At 2 p. m. a song service and short children's program were enjoyed. At 2:15 Sr. Leota Hanson of Oregon, Ill., spoke concerning the General Conference work. This was followed by a short talk by our Conference president, Bro. J. Denchfield, pertaining to business matters. At 2:45 Bro. C. E. Lapp preached. There were also special musical numbers by Bro, Harold Hardesty of Oregon. Ill., Bro. Gordon Randall of St. Cloud, a men's quartette, a ladies' quartette, and a piano solo by Lorraine Gaspar. As 7:30 the song service was led by Bro. Cooper, and the closing sermon was delivered by Bro. J. Denchfield.

The interest and attendance were very good, and the weather ideal. All were strengthened spiritually by meeting together in worship. We pray that each one may be inspired to greater service for the Master.

EVANGELISM IN THE SOUTH

Herewith is a report for August and September. During August, only six sermons were given-at Oregon, Ill., St. Louis, Mo., Driggs. Ark., and near Russellville, Ark., During September, fourteen sermons were given-at Cleveland, Ark., and Austin, Texas.

The first half of August I spent at General Conference. What a meeting! I had the pleasure of speaking before that fine gathering of people, and I am planning now to return there next year, the Lord willing.

At St. Louis we have a very fine number of brethren of the faith. May the Lord bless their efforts to please Him.

I was invited to speak the 3rd Sunday in a country church near Russellville, Ark., to a very interested number, a place where Bro. Smith, associate editor of the Gospel Trumpet, preaches each month.

The 4th Sunday in August was given to Driggs, Ark., where good interest was manifested.

A short meeting was held the first part of September at Cleveland, Ark. The attendance was not so good as on former occasions, possibly because of the busy season. From the 17th to the 25th of September was spent with the congregation in Austin, Texas. May the Lord bless this small but faithful band of brethren who are doing their part to keep the gospel work alive.

The work in Arkansas is being hindered by the teaching of error in the form of modernism, under the name of the Church of God, the advocate of which challenges the brotherhood to stop its proclamation. The Spirit warns, by saying, "Mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them" (Rom. 16:17). I plead that we follow the Spirit. Your support and cooperation in our evangelistic effort are humbly asked. May I hear from you! T. A. Drinkard, Handley, Texas.

Bro. Arlen Marsh of Oregon, Ill., recently visited his parents, Bro. and Sr. G. E. Marsh of Grand Rapids, Mich.

Gleanings From the Field

Bro. and Sr. F. L. Austin, Sr. Leila White-head, Sr. Mary E. Hatch, and Paul Hatch, all of Chicago and vicinity, were Sunday visitors at Oregon, Oct. 23. Come again.

Sr. Harriett Cawby of North Judson, Ind., has for five weeks been confined with a broken hip. She is eighty-two years old, and would appreciate a kind word through the mail. address now is Room 219, Holy Trinity Hospital, La Porte, Ind.

Bro. F. L. Austin spoke at the weekly meeting of the Rockford, Ill., Bereans on Friday evening, Oct. 21.

The new church building at Tempe, Ariz., where Bro. S. J. Lindsay is pastor, was used for the first time for regular services on Sunday, Oct. 16.

Sr. Frank Laning of the Ripley, Ill., Church has recently been in the Macomb hospital with a badly broken wrist.

"Our Glorious Task," a treat for our readers from Bro. G. E. Marsh, will appear in next week's paper.

Gerald Leslie was born on October 15 to brighten the home of Bro. and Sr. Roy G. Graham of St. Louis, Mo. Congratulations.

Bro. J. H. Anderson, due to a weak nervous condition, is urged by his doctors to avoid overworking. He, therefore, is unable at the present time to write for The Restitution Herald. He is continuing to preach as much as possible. We pray him needed strength to carry his load for Christ.

THE CALIFORNIA CONFERENCE

The yearly California Conference for 1938 was held at the Los Angeles Church, Oct. 7-9. We rejoiced to see so many for whom it is usually impossible to attend church. Among these were Bro. and Sr. C. E. Hatch of Santa Ana, Sr. Groat of Hanford, Bro. Wayne and Sr. Georgia Thompson of Tulare, Bro. Arnold Johns of Oceanside, Bro. Squires of Compton, Sr. Frier and Bro. and Sr. Cline of Long Beach, Sr. Calkins of Lynwood, Bro. Rich of Long Beach, Sr. Shepherd of Redlands, and Sr. Alma Brandt of Canoga Park. Our prayers were with Bro. and Sr. Elton of Ventura, and Bro. Groat of Hanford, who were unable to come, but sent the Conference their blessing.

Conference opened Friday evening with a benediction by President Jessie Kauffman: "The Lord is in his holy temple; let all the earth keep silence before him!" The Pomona Church presented a pageant, "Josiah." title role of the king of Judah as a child was taken by Duncan Macleod, and as a man by his father, Bro. Norman Macleod. Others having leading parts were Bernice Corruthers, who read the Scriptural accounts of Josiah's life; Bro. Adamson as Necho, king of Egypt; Bro. Will Reid as the scribe; and Margaret Adamson as the prophetess, Huldah. choir, consisting of Srs. Verna and Charlotte Rahn, Sr. Leta Macleod, Sr. Margaret Adamson, and members of the east sang, "Jerusalem, the City of Our King," and "Christ, Our Passover." The pageant was followed by a talk by Bro. Adamson on 2 Peter 1 and 1 Corinthians 13.

Bible school was in session all day Saturday. Sr. Railsback and Sr. Stearns taught the adult classes; Srs. Grace Adamson and Betty Hummel, the intermediates; Srs. Verna Rahn and Mildred Stantial, the young people; and Sr. Carlson, Sr. Leta Macleod, and Sr. Margaret Adamson, the baby class. Dinner and supper were served in the Sunday school rooms.

Saturday evening opened with Srs. Betty Hummel and Marie Bleasdale singing, "Behold, a Stranger at the Door." Then Bro. Will Reid gave a very interesting review of General Conference, Bro. Wayne Thompson added comments. Sr. Stearns gave a history of the Lowa Conference, telling many incidents of the early days of our church as recalled by her father.

The hour from 10 to 11 on Sunday was given over to the young people and the Sunday schools of Pomona and Los Angeles, Sr. Charlotte Rahn sang beautifully, as usual. Bro. Norman Macleod presented the talk of the morning, a discourse on present-day world affairs, comparing them with Ezekiel 38 and 2 Peter 3. Before the communion service, conducted by Sr. Railsback, the choir sang, "For Even Christ, Our Passover, Is Slain for Us."

During business meeting, Sr. Jessie Kauffman, president of the California Conference; Bro, J. E. Adamson, vice president; Sr. Gertrude Johns, treasurer; and Sr. Marie Bleasdale, secretary, were unanimously reelected. The board members are Sr. Stearns, Sr. Richards, Bro. Will Reid, and Sr. B. G. Bleasdale.

The afternoon services opened with Bro. Duncan Macleod singing "The Lord's Prayer." Bro. Lichty of Pomona gave a talk stressing the kingdom on earth and the nearness of its coming.

We who attended Conference could anticipate the joys of that kingdom—of being together and praising His name. May the time soon come when all those who sleep in Jesus will join us who remain until that day in singing His praises in the kingdom of God and of His Christ.

Marie Bleasdale, Conference Secretary.

To Our Brotherhood

I am coming to you again, asking for more or larger contributions to the National Bible Institution, that we may be able to carry on our work, as the contributions fall off during the summer months, and our expenses increase as winter approaches.

We are not increasing wages or salaries of employees, but we have installed a stoker in our plant, which, in real cold weather is a great advantage, as it will maintain a more uniform temperature in the plant, which is much better for the linotype, and makes all the machinery work better. We are also installing more radiation in the building, that it may be more comfortable for those who work in the office.

Then, too, this is the time when we put in our year's supply of coal, which is no small matter. I fully realize that our folks sometimes wonder where all the money goes, when they see lists of contributions given in The Bestitution Herald week after week. But these usually are small amounts, and when totaled they do not amount to as much as it would appear at a first glance.

I will give some figures here, with statements that will give you some definite knowledge that may be helpful. I cannot take the time nor use the space necessary to give itemized account, but will give some totals with some explanations which must suffice. (Itemized accounts are available for those who may desire to go over them.)

For this purpose I will use the present calendar year—January 1 to September 30, inclusive, except the month of July, which I have mislaid for the present. The total operating expenses during these eight months was $3,755.68. The total amount of contributions during the same eight months was $986.10. I do not have before me the exact amount of eash on hand and in the bank at the beginning and end of this period, but assuming that the amount was the same at these respective dates, the difference between operating expenses and contributions, viz., $2,769.58, represents the income of our plant other than contributions, assuming also that all bills were paid at the end of the period.

Again, the amount of income and expenses fluctuates very much from month to month. During the months under consideration, the cest of operation varied from $375,74, the lowest, to $711.92, the highest, January being the lowest of this period and September being the highest. This fluctuation is easily understood. Items of expenses are listed in totals in monthly reports for convenience as follows: office salaries; postage and express; plant salaries; sundry expenses; interest; repairs; merchandise purchases, meaning Bibles, etc., paper, etc., etc., all of which varies from month to month. When the Sunday School Quarterly is being printed extra help must be employed. Some months taxes, insurance, or interests must be paid. This last mentioned item caused a decided increase in expenses in September over those of January. On account of the depression and the deplorable financial condition of the National Bible Institution some years ago we were compelled to suspend payment of interest on annuity bonds and, in fact, almost all interest until obligations which threatened to wreck the Institution were liquidated in some way. (As we recovered somewhat from our financial situation, we resumed payment of these interests, and in September we paid the interest on these annuity bonds for the past year, which amounted to $149.70.) Repairs and other expenses were unusually high in that month, while in January we had no interest to pay, and other expenses were unusually low, hence these two extremes.

I trust this may be understandable to those interested, but if there should be anything in this connection and upon which you desire more light, kindly call our attention to it and we will try to clarify it. We sometimes make mistakes.

In this I have confined myself to the operation of the National Bible Institution offic: and publishing plant, with no reference to Golden Rule Home, and contributions to Indebtedness Fund.

The thing which I am trying to say is that we are in need of more financial assistance in carrying on our work of the National Bible Institution office and our publishing plant. We must continue our publications, and we must keep our property in repair and improve our facilities that we may be able to do more and better work; and as these demands increase we need more help. I think I can see better and easier days coming, but we still have burdens to bear that may seem to be heavy, and it is not a pleasant duty for me to ask you for more or larger contributions. have therefore delayed doing so as long safety permitted. I will not pile up more debts upon the National Bible Institution. If it is unable to pay its way in conducting its business it should reduce its activities to the point where it is able to support itself with honor.

I am sure we are fully able not only to continue our activities in our field of labor at our present capacity, but we can double and quadruple our work within our broad field within a comparatively short while if we will all make some sacrifices and cooperate according to our ability. We have done well during this period of depression. Can't we do a little more for a while longer until we get over the top of the hill? Let us try.

"Home, Sweet Home"

Provided by the love and sympathy of the entire brotherhood of the Church of God, Golden Rule Home assures to the members of its Family the comfort, security, and solicitous care which the word "home" always suggests.

Here the anxieties of earlier and more active life are laid aside forever. No threat of eviction for non-payment of rent or taxes or other indebtedness troubles the hearts of the residents of Golden Rule Home!

No doctor or hospital bills, no grocery, coal, or light bills to be met the first of the month, bring fear to the minds of the Golden Rule Home Family!

All such obligations and burdens are taken from the shoulders of these older ones immediately upon their entrance into the Home and are carried thereafter by the Golden Rule Home itself, which is amply able to bear the load on their behalf.

A hearty Christian welcome awaits all who seek the protection and lifelong support the Home provides.

Conditions of entrance into Golden Rule Home are as liberal as absolute security permits. Write for full particulars concerning the Home and its advantages. Or, better still, come and visit the Home itself and let the Family tell their own story of its advantages and comforts.

Address: Golden Rule Home, Mrs. Idona Romine, Matron, Oregon, Illinois.

Our Glorious Task

By G. Eldred Marsh

"I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus" (Phil. 3:14).

God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness. . . . And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul"—because God needed him, because He could not accomplish His mighty purposes, of which the whole creation formed but a part, without his cooperation.

To deny God's need for man and the service he can render would be to deny the essential wisdom of the Creator, whose every act is motivated by reason; for the very essence of God's character is wisdom. He does nothing uselessly, nothing without purpose.

When one comes to recognize that man is an essential factor in the eternal as well as in the temporal plans of God, it enhances his appreciation of the value of human life. With Browning, he is made to feel that "life has meaning," and to find that meaning is his "meat and drink."

When we discover our rightful place, and that we have a rightful place, in the cosmic scheme of the Almighty, life loses its sordidness, its littleness, its "vanity," to employ the Biblical term. Experience takes on a new and richer significance. We see in ourselves the product of divine foresight and supernal wisdom. We are associates of the beneficent, all-wise Creator, and contributors to the success of His inconceivably glorious accomplishments!

Not only this regarding ourselves, but we are led to see in each created thing, large or small, a necessary part of a stupendous and harmonious whole. In the natural forces permeating earth and sky, in the primary elements of which all material substances are composed, in history itself, we discern evidence, conclusive evidence, that a common purpose involves them all. Like Hilaire Belloc, author of "The Battle Ground of Syria and Palestine," we are convinced that not only is there a God, "but design in the universe and in the story of mankind." Nothing that exists has come into being by accident. Nothing is the result of blind chance or the result of undirected evolutionary processes.

Each existing thing has its place—its necessary place—in the plan of the great Architect.

"Nothing useless is or low,

Each thing in its place is best;

And what seems but idle show

Strengthens and supports the rest."

The whole creation is indeed a universe, a unit organization, brought into existence by a conscious intelligence to produce a single coherent and harmonious structure. And in that structure man occupies a place of preeminent importance. Without him the continuity and harmony of the design would be broken.

GOD NEEDS MEN!

God needs men! And that means that He needs you and me, and the service we are capable of rendering even in our present state of mortal weakness.

Of course, when such a thought first enters our minds, we are inclined to question its truth somewhat.

"If God is infinite," we ask, "if He is possessed of limitless power, why should He need a creature's help, especially the help of a creature so frail and helpless as man?"

I frankly admit that that is a question that cannot be satisfactorily answered except on the basis of God's superior, incomprehensible wisdom. A child cannot always understand the motives of an adult, nor can the adult explain to the satisfaction of the child reason for all that he does. No more can we hope always to grasp with our finite minds the infinite thoughts of Deity.

I cannot tell you why God needs anything. I do not know why He created the stars and gave them their mighty gravitational "pull" that keeps the wheels of the universe in constant balance and enables the machinery of the astronomical heavens to revolve smoothly. I do not know why God provided such richly varied vegetation, nor why He created so many orders of animal life. I do not know why He stored up in Mother Earth such vast supplies of energy in so many different forms. If He (Please turn to page 11)

"Honour Thy Father and Thy Mother"

"God Made Two Great Lights"

God provided one sun and one moon to give light by day and by night for His children. He likewise provides one father and one mother to give light by day and by night for all the children of men. Two suns or two moons would cause confusion. By divine law no child can be born from two women, nor call two men, "Father." The one father by day, and the one mother by night, give light to the child each step of his way. What need is there for a parent more? What need there is for that given!

Self-Condemnation

"And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil" (John 3:19). The world condemns itself by turning from loving obedience to Christ into the deceptive slavery of sin. "Because their deeds (are) evil," children condemn themselves by disobeying father and mother, in rejecting their wise counsel for the husks of the world. Children, come out of your hiding and shame; come into your light. God gave you but one father, whose voice will prosper you through all the hours of day; and He gave you but one mother, whose love has followed you, like the moon, through all the hours of night. Christ cannot be blamed for the condemnation of the world that "loved darkness rather than light." Neither can father or mother be blamed for the condemnation of sons and daughters who "loved darkness rather than light."

"What Shall We Have Therefore?"

With increasing age, your father and mother are slowing up. The world speeds on. Looking from one to the other you may be torn, with your faith and affections left in shreds. Then you make your decision: father and mother are surely as dear, and a little nearer than the speeding world that cannot speak your first name; the world, you recall, failed you in a sad hour, but father and mother have always been true; yes, you will live the life that your parents wish you to live.

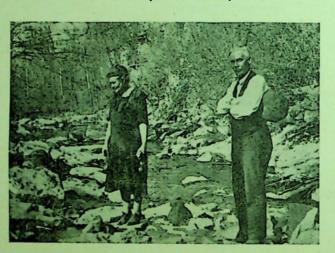

With your decision to live by the standards of your parents, this question arises in your heart, "Will it pay?" "What shall we have therefore?" asked Peter of Christ, when the apostles had made their decision to live by the standards of Christ. What shall we have? How carnal! Are there no debts to be paid?

Had you followed the ways of the speeding world, what reward could have come? Is there more in glamour than in God? "The wages of sin is death..." (Rom. 6:23). "Wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction..." (Matt. 7:13). "Yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be: yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be." No true parents have taught their children to travel the road to death.

There is a reward, sure and precious, for those who honor their parents in godly living. "Honour thy father and mother; . . . that it may be well with thee, and thou mayest live long on the earth" (italies mine).

Brother and Sister E. H. Magaw of Lester Prairie, Minnesota, parents of three who are all in the faith. The picture was recently taken on an outing in Ohio, where they visited their two sons.

A Basic Law

Obedience and respect of earthly parents is a first step toward obedience and respect of God, and of Christ. There is seldom found a faithful Christian who was a faithless child. Conversely, judging from the doubt and ungodliness of youth, our sight penetrates through the walls of homes, where we see little obedience and less respect for father and mother, God-given lights that are indispensable.

"That . . . Ye May Believe"

By F. L. Austin

MAKING it possible for His disciples to believe? Was that the force of the Savior's word? I think not. Rather, He was making it most difficult for them to disbelieve.

Has it not been the great work of the Father from the beginning to create a humanity permeated through and through with faith? Has He not evidenced the certainty of His word both to friend and foe again and again by His work, and has not the avowed purpose been that His creatures might believe? Witness the instances of the plagues in Egypt. Exodus 7:17 reads: "In this thou shalt know that I am the Lord: behold, I will smite with the rod... the waters... and they shall be turned to blood." Such was His word. His work followed at verse 20: "... and he... smote the waters... and all the waters... turned to blood."

Why?

"In this thou shalt know that I am the LORD."

Again, at Exodus 8:8-15: "Then Pharaoh called for Moses . . . , and said, Intreat the Lord that he may take away the frogs . . ."

"And Moses said . . . : when . . . ?"

"To morrow."

"... and the frogs died ..."

"But when Pharaoh saw that there was respite, he hardened his heart, . . . "

Yes, Pharaoh must have had a bit of faith, for he "called for Moses and Aaron" to "intreat the LORD." Later, when the intreaty was granted and Pharaoh saw that there was respite, "he hardened his heart."

There followed the plague of lice: "Then the magicians said unto Pharaoh" (v. 19), "This is the finger of God."

The works of God had convinced the magicians that the Lord God was One to be believed. Formerly they had duplicated the works wrought by God through Moses. That caused doubt in their ruler's mind. No longer able to duplicate God's works they, in opposition to the wishes of their Pharaoh, confessed: "The finger of God it is."—Emphasized Bible.

But Pharaoh again hardened his heart. (Truly, how like Pharaoh in this, are some of the rulers of today.)

At last, following the tenth plague, the works of God had tamed Pharaoh in part, for he "rose up in the night ... and said, Rise up, and get you forth . . ."

These works of God—together with His further works of opening the waters of the sea for Israel, and the closing of them upon Egypt, and the work of maintaining His glory of the cloud by day and the pillar of light by night—had caused faith to root deeper and deeper into the life of Moses, and of Aaron, and of Israel.

Now it was by virtue of this faith—this deep, controlling faith wrought into and through their lives, and because of which their lives were far more highly valuable, just as the richly beautiful needlework pattern greatly enhances the value of the otherwise commonplace cloth—it was by virtue of this faith, I say, that these people came to be of real personal value to God, witnessing both avowedly and unwittingly to the joy and the richness and the peace of being so quickened and patterned by faith as to become ever alert to His every wish and joyously responsive to His every bidding.

That They Might Believe was sufficient reason for the Omnipotent to do those works. Their well-being was in every way enhanced by that faith which permeated them, arousing them to listen for and give heed to God's guiding commands. Witness the resultant outpouring of joy as heralded in Exodus 15.

True, all did not believe. Some were hardened. Just as the beating rain followed by the bright warm sunshine makes pliable and mellow the land of one farm but hardens and encrusts the soil of another farm, so the word followed by the work of God infuses new obedience of faith into one soul and hardens and encrusts another unto increasing rebellion and perverseness.

But the word of our Saviour as used in the foregoing caption pertained to His apostles. It was

THAT THE APOSTLES MIGHT BELIEVE

—have faith in—Him. He knew that their hearts were fervently inclined toward Him, but, though yet unsensed by them, His death was but a few days away, and whither then might fervency flee? Something very convincing must needs be advanced by Him that would in due time fill them with faith, as it were, to their finger tips. He would thrill them through and through with a faith in Him and in His Father such that they would instantly react to Him and to His word as steel reacts to the magnet.

The method He used at that time was to foretell them what was about to occur.

Prophesied to them?

Yes, and part of the time He used "time" prophecy. He told them the number of days to fulfillment. Why so? To the better infiltrate faith through every cell and pore of their mental beings, unto the innermost depths and recesses of their minds, of their wills, of their lives.

The Passover was again at hand. To the sound of great hosannas He rode into Jerusalem on the colt. Ah! they now expected too much! Again He warned them of His approaching death of three days and of His exaltation to God's right hand. Read John 12; 13; 14; 15; 16; 17. "Ye have heard how I said unto (Please turn to page 10)

The God of Eternity

By Mary A. Gesin

"Thou, even thou, art Lord alone; thou hast made heaven, the heaven of heavens, with all their host, the earth, and all things that are therein, the seas, and all that is therein, and thou preservest them all; and the host of heaven worshippeth thee" (Neh. 9:6).

"THEY heard the voice of the Lord God walking in the garden in the cool of the day" are words found very near the opening words in the Book of Truth.

"Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God," is an assurance found near the close of the same wonderful Book.

Between the compass of these two statements lies the history of the ages. In it we find the mercy and the severity of a loving and a just God toward the erring creatures of His handiwork. The full tale of man's unworthiness in the light of God's infinite goodness is revealed therein. From it we may learn that which shall be for our everlasting benefit and God's eternal glory, if we but heed.

That puny men should challenge the God by whom they were created and should believe that the wonders by which they are surrounded were not the work of the eternal and immutable One is a staggering thought to those who are simple enough to believe the plain statements of Scripture. The very fact of the existence of the creature bespeaks a Creator in whose image the creature was fashioned (Gen. 1: 26, 27).

As we study the opening chapters of Genesis we are impressed, first of all, with the fact of the eternal, the infinite, Creator of all. Such a God ruled, and still rules, the universe because of His own inherent power, His unchanging nature, His infallible word. Because of these qualities in the God we worship we may be certain that He did not fashion the earth in vain, nor permit man to wander away from Him, never to return.

"Thus saith the Lord that created the heavens; God himself that formed the earth and made it; he hath established it, he created it not in vain, he formed it to be inhabited. Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth: for I am God, and there is none else" (Isa. 45: 18, 22).

These are not idle words, for we learn that man, so soon to sin in disobeying God's direct command, was given at once a promise of mercy and redemption. Read carefully Genesis 3, and realize afresh God's loving-kindness as well as His justice. Think you, that the immutable God would institute a plan so beneficent and so far-reaching only to desist because of man's instability?

This very fact becomes, therefore, our greatest bulwark in the days of insecurity in which we live. What though all things on which men place their trust may totter and fall! Above all stands the all-wise Creator with hands of love outstretched to His children. Beyond man's perception abides the infallible God, ready to assist and to reward those who serve Him.

It was only a comparatively short period from the time that God walked in the Garden and talked with man, calling all thing "good," even "very good," to the time that He saw "that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually" (Gen. 6:5). So swift is man's descent to evil when he wanders away from following God's righteous paths!

But the provision made for Noah and his family renews our faith, just as the promise made by God to Eve points us forward. And the "rainbow" of hope continues to shine through the densest clouds if we have confidence in God. "For thou art not a God that hath pleasure in wickedness: neither shall evil dwell with thee. But let all those that put their trust in thee rejoice: let them ever shout for joy, because thou defendest them: let them also that love thy name be joyful in thee. For thou, Lord, wilt bless the righteous; with favour wilt thou compass him as with a shield" (Psa. 5:4, 11, 12).

The subsequent history of men repeatedly confirms the truth that as they wandered away from God and followed their own devices, retribution descended swiftly. The story of the obliteration of nation after nation by their own evil deeds is to be found within the pages of the Bible. All of this is written for our "learning," those of us upon whom "the ends of the world are come" (Rom. 15:4; 1 Cor. 10: 11). It is not written, however, to instill in us fear, but rather, confidence toward our God.

Throughout the ages man has tried legislation, organization, forces of morality, pleas of good citizenship—everything—except the only way in which the beauty and order God instituted in the beginning can be restored. A return to following God's ways, His commands, is the only remedy. For He is a God "ready to pardon, gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness" (Neh. 9:17; Micah 7:18).

Right here, let us point out that the truth held especially dear to us—that man's future home will be located on the earth, as was man's first home—this truth, we repeat, stands out preeminent. That all will be restored to its pristine harmony is declared throughout the pages of the Book we hold so dear. Read Psalms 19; 27; 31; 37; 72; and many others: also Num. 14:21; Hab. 2:14; Rev. 5:9, 10; 21:1-7; 22:1-7.

Does it not appeal to reason that the God who created all things to be of use and pleasure to man, still retains His original purpose? Though man has endeavored and failed,

God will triumph in the restoration of the earth to its original state of sinlessness and harmony. Job, that most ancient of all writers, whose book is filled with the wisdom of the ages and whose words are replete with interest for us today, affirms the same truth. Read especially his words in chapter 19, verses 23 to 27. Chapter 38 reestablishes our confidence in the God who changes not. Note also Job's reward for his trust. That reward may be ours, as well.

Page after page is filled with the assurances of God, and to place our trust in His promises is to place it where it will not fail. All of this, however, is not to be brought about by men, but through God's own beloved Son promised "in the beginning." For He it is who was in the plan of God when it was necessary that God send man forth from the Garden.

For those of you who read these lines who already have placed your reliance upon God, may they serve to strengthen anew your faith in these days when that faith is so sorely needed. And if, perchance, one reads who has not found the Source of all confidence, may be carefully meditate upon God's words of assurance found in His Book. Both will be abundantly rewarded.

"For since the beginning of the world men have not heard, nor perceived by the ear, neither hath the eye seen, O God, beside thee, what he hath prepared for him that waiteth for him" (Isa. 64:4).

"Is Not Destruction to the Wicked?"

By Emma C. Railsback

I'T WAS the inspired Prophet of God who made this inquiry (Job 31:3). In view of the many Scriptural statements concerning the question, it would seem that the earnest inquirer after truth would find no trouble in arriving at the proper answer. Job himself, who propounded the question to his advisers, has given the answer, which is in harmony with the statements of the other writers of prophetic truth, "that the wicked is reserved to the day of destruction? they shall be brought forth to the day of wrath" (Job 21:30). Again we read, "Yet he shall perish for ever, like his own dung" (20:7). We find also David, Solomon, Malachi, the Savior, and His apostles, all making decided statements concerning this truth.

"But the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs; they shall consume, into smoke shall they consume away. . . . But the transgressors shall be destroyed together: the end of the wicked shall be cut off" (Psa. 37:20, 38). They will be cut off from life. "They that be cursed of him shall be cut off" (v. 22). "Evil doers shall be cut off" (v. 9). "For, lo, thine enemies, O Lord, shall perish" (Psa. 92:9). "Let the sinners be consumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more" (Psa. 104:35). "The Lord preserveth all them that love him; but all the wicked will he destroy" (145:20). "He that speaketh lies shall perish" (Prov. 19:9). "The way of the Lord is strength to the upright: but destruction shall be to the workers of iniquity. The righteous shall never be removed, but the wicked shall not inherit the earth" (Prov. 10:29, 30). "It is joy to the just to do judgment: but destruction shall be to the workers of iniquity" (Prov. 21:15). "Behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch . . . And ye shall tread down the wicked: for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet . . . saith the Lord of hosts" (Mal. 4:1, 3).

"Broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction," said the Savior in Matthew 7:13. The Apostle Paul spoke of the enemies of the cross, whose "end is destruction" (Phil. 3:19). "Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power," are the words of Paul in 2 Thessalonians 1:9. Peter speaks of a class who wrest the Scriptures, "to their own destruction," and Paul, again, tells of those who "perish, because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved . . . but had pleasure in unright-cousness." Judas Iscariot was called the "son of perdition" (John 17:12), which is likewise true of the Man of Sin or Antichrist (2 Thess. 2:3). "Total destruction" is the definition of perdition.

The foregoing quotations are a very small per cent of the statements of Scripture that are in answer to the Prophet's question. "Consumed," "perish," "destroyed," "burned up," "cut off" are all words used to describe the destiny of the wicked.

When we read in current magazines of the societies for the promotion of atheism, of Satan worshipers, and many other cults, practicing and teaching the awful sins of the Sodomites, and the antediluvians, we feel that God has indeed given them over to uncleanness, through the lusts of their own hearts, as the Apostle has said. It is now as it was in the days of Noah, when every imagination of men's hearts was only evil continually, and the earth was filled with violence. The sins of Sodom were very grievous. So it is today, fulfilling the very condition that is described in 2 Timothy 3, the perilous times of the last days.

It is almost impossible for those who are walking in the narrow way, to even conceive of the awful, corrupt practices among certain classes of humanity. Jude compares them to "brute beasts," "to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever."

Dear readers, let us not be deceived into holding out promises to the workers of iniquity.

"He Blessed, and Brake, and Gave"

By Harvey Krogh, Jr.

WHEN Jesus heard that John the Baptist had been killed by Herod, He departed into a desert place and when the people had heard, they followed Him. When He saw the multitude, and was moved with compassion toward them, He healed their sick. At evening the disciples suggested that the people be sent away to buy food, but Jesus said, "They need not depart; give ye them to eat." Now the disciples had only "five loaves and two fishes." Jesus said to bring them, and commanded the multitude to sit down on the grass. He then took the five loaves and the two fishes, and looking up to heaven, "he blessed, and brake, and gave the loaves to his disciples, and the disciples to the multitude. And they did all eat, and were filled: and they took up of the fragments that remained twelve baskets full. And they that had eaten were about five thousand men, beside women and children" (Matt. 14:19-21).

How much of blessing is there in the world today? Is it not cursing and using the Lord's name in vain that we hear on many lips? To bless is to pray for the happiness of one or to invoke God's favor upon one. We can bring more blessings if we bless our friends and loved ones, our pastors and our church officers. Let us invoke God's blessing on them.

Jesus called for God's power to be manifested in the loaves and fishes. Yes, and He has blessed something else since that time. "And he led them out as far as to Bethany, and he lifted up his hands, and blessed them" (Luke 24: 50). Then He departed from His apostles and ascended into heaven. And He sent them into all the world to preach, and by His blessing He added unto them daily. At the Beautiful gate of the temple Peter and John had no silver or gold to give the lame man but they did have the blessing of the Lord and the man arose strong and well, praising the Lord.

Paul endured the hardships that came upon him in his missionary work, and, after being stoned, went on the next day to continue his labors. It was the blessing of God upon him. Paul testifies to God's favor on him. "Whereof I was made a minister, according to the gift of the grace of God given unto me by the effectual working of his power" (Eph. 3:7).

What happened when the Lord blessed the loaves? They were multiplied in His hand. What happens when the Lord blesses the church? It grows. But this was not all that He did to the loaves and fishes.

"AND BRAKE"

Shortly after the early church began to grow and prosper, there came a great persecution. The Christians were scattered and they fled in every direction to escape. In a sense they were distributed everywhere, and Christianity was given out for all men to accept. Christ allowed the church to be thus broken that His word might go out into all the world.

There is an individual sense in which we are broken. Paul was struck down even as a colt is sometimes struck to the ground when being broken. He was blinded that he might see more clearly when his eyes were opened. Sometimes we, too, are broken; and why should we think it strange when our Savior had His will broken to the will of the Father and said, "Not what I will, but what thou wilt."

We are tried and tested. "Every branch in me that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit" (John 15:2). "For whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth" (Heb. 12:6).

"AND GAVE"

To the multitude He gave the blessed and multiplied loaves and fishes. The Lord is preparing His church. First He blessed it and is blessing it; then He broke it that it might become a strong and mighty body. Now we are being blessed and purged that we might grow and become strong. The next is the giving. Christ has not yet given the church to the multitude, which is the world. The world is waiting and has been waiting for a new age. "For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God" (Rom. 8:19). The church is to become priests and kings in the next age (Rev. 5:10), and the world needs righteous kings and faithful priests. Much of the trouble in the world today is because of the unrighteousness of rulers. When our Savior completes His work of preparing His church He will give it to the world that the world may be ruled in righteousness and Christ Himself shall be King of kings and Lord of lords.

Let us therefore pray for the continued blessing of God and ask for strength to endure the breaking and purging, in order that we might labor till that glorious day.

"JERUSALEM, ... CITY OF THE GREAT KING"

Trying to keep peace in Palestine, England has proposed a division of the land, giving the larger part to the Arabs, a smaller to the Jews, but retaining control of the section about Jerusalem. The Arabs are not satisfied, insisting Jerusalem is their city. The prophetic student can be assured that at last Jerusalem will be under Christ's rule with the Jews.

Duty of the Prudent

By S. J. Lindsay

"Therefore the prudent shall keep silence in that time; for it is an evil time" (Amos 5:13).

Israel for their continued wickedness. Grafting, cheating, oppression of the poor, and building for themselves with these ill-gotten gains stately mansions which, through the decree of God, they were not to inhabit—these were the outstanding sins of the nation. That there were those in Israel who were prudent (wise) is clearly set forth in the text quoted. Sin had become so dominant that Amos felt called upon to give some direction as to their part in the matter.

The prudent were to "keep silence in that time; for it (was) an evil time." He does not give them direction to unite themselves into societies for social and civic uplift, nor to go into politics to help correct the evil. They were to keep silence. It was theirs to enjoy the trust they had in God and to stay true to Him though all others turned against Him. It was not time for them to stir up enmity and strife by trying to force their ideas upon an unwilling world of sinners.

It occurs to us that the lesson is very fitting for our times. Compare the sins of that day with those of today, and you will find them to compare equally both in degree and quantity. It is for the people of God today to preach the Word; use only the Sword of the Spirit. It is the only weapon that has been put into our hands. On other matters it is time to "keep silence; for it is an evil time."

Clearly, we are in the last days of this age. Why do not Christians wake up? We should all be of the day and not of the night. With floods, storms, earthquakes, nation rising against nation, nations hungering for dictatorships, crime, the social evil, and so many other evils at hand, why can't we see the handwriting on the wall for the leaders of the world today? Brethren, examine yourselves. Are you lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God? Decide now. Some day you may want to decide when it will be too late. Shall we tell out the gospel message to a dying world as we have been directed to do, or shall we drown our fears by enjoying to the full the pleasures of the world? Where do you stand?

"This Is Life Eternal"

By James W. McLain

"This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent" (John 17:3).

"THE fool hath said in his heart, There is no God." In this he is as rational as the pantheist who declares that all is God, or the agnostic who says God is unknowable.

The endeavors to remove the personable, understandable existence of God by such human philosophy is to remove every vestige of hope for the future. Without the God of the Scriptures there is no orderly plan of redemption.

Without the revelation of God there is no knowledge of the future. Without the promises of God there is nothing beyond the grave. Except we know Him as He has revealed Himself, we must say we know nothing.

Without God, man must ever wallow in the mire of sin, disease, suffering, disappointment, and sorrow until his frail being is consumed in death. We must confess that in nearly six thousand years of man's inglorious career, the best he has been able to accomplish for himself is but short periods of rise to culture and human knowledge, only to lapse into the inevitable return to barbarism.

God may be approached only in active faith. That faith is presaged by an understanding of the reality, personality, and character of God. "He that cometh to God must believe that he is."

God is not found by those of shallow thought, who seek Him in idle curiosity. As a child would seek to know a father he has never seen by studying his father's works, his letters, his possessions, and those who knew his father; so we must seek to know God, our Father, whom we have never seen. God must be sought by studious research in His Word. Nature does much to reveal the mind of the Creator. Those who have known God by years of faithful walking with Him can tell us much that will help us to know Him.

Our difficulty in knowing God has prevailed, largely, because of our own human reasoning and faith in our own wisdom. "The world by wisdom knew not God."

God has amply revealed Himself to us for our own need. His being, His work, His wisdom, His faithfulness, His (Please turn to page 10)

Virtue, the Christian's Foundation

By Mrs. H. H. Kent

"Beware of covetousness: for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth."

IN THE first chapter of Second Peter, the Apostle gives us a knowledge of what Christian growth should be like. Faith is the fundamental principle upon which one must build. Then comes virtue. But faith and virtue go hand in hand. This is where many professors of religion have fallen short. There can be no substitute for virtue. The present times are proving that this is true. The plain paths have always proved to be the best ones. What will it matter if we have driven fine cars, possessed radios and other modern improvements, if we should lose out with God in the end? Although earthly possessions have their place in life, the accumulation of them may take us away from God.

The pure in heart are the only ones who will see God. Virtue will aid us in having a conscience void of offense toward Him. Those who try to build upon some other foundation, will find little comfort and satisfaction in the attempt.

Virtue gives strength and power that can come from no other source. We also need knowledge, but knowledge does not give the courage that virtue does. Knowledge may give power, but it can hardly give courage unless it is based upon virtue. Most of us have seen people who laked virtue, who would fight without principle when faced by justice. If one is building upon virtue, God will help him to face all the battles of life bravely. It will also help us to walk humbly before God and man, and keep pride (which is such a great drawback to Christians) out of our hearts.

We are living in a generation that prides itself upon its possessions, inventions, and knowledge, yet the world and mankind in general are faced by perplexities and troubles that were unheard of in the past. The more civilized the nations become, the more troubles they seem to have, because they have lost the old anchorage of honesty and virtue.

It is true, some have not had the opportunity to learn the value of virtue, while others have. Some have forgotten God, and when a time of crisis comes, they are likely to suffer most. The so-called "high cost of living" is in reality the cost of high living, and this forgetfulness of God is causing trouble, even to the wrecking of many homes.

The plain path is unattractive to Young America. It must have thrills! But America will have to suffer for her sins. Most of us can remember the time when silk hosiery was rare. Only the wealthy could afford such. Now, nearly every shop girl seems to have both shoes and hose to match every gown she has. Yet, with our abundance this is, without doubt, the most restless and dissatisfied generation that history will have record of. If possessions alone could give us peace, Christ would not have needed to suffer the agony of the cruel cross that we, through Him, might learn the way of wisdom, virtue, and peace that we might, in time, be cleansed from all unrighteousness and deception that mankind is heir to through the fall.

There is no other foundation or place of refuge (outside of Christ) from the present stress and nervous tension of modern life that seems to be urging mankind on to some unknown goal that cannot bring peace. The world has no hope and can bring no lasting peace. The general opinion among worldly leaders is that the race is facing self-extermination and chaos, which is quite evident unless there is divine intervention. Man, in himself, has no virtue to cleanse or stabilize his ways. He must learn it from the Word of God and in his contact with the Christ of the Bible which is the only shelter from the storms of life.

Surely, this present age, with such great opportunities and possessions and yet such unrest, is ample proof that things cannot make us happy, and that mankind can never save itself. In all times of crises and depressions, nations have usually resorted to war and violence, because they have depended largely upon their possessions to make them happy in times of peace and prosperity.

Christ once said, "What is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" Man's soul is his life, that which gives him his personality and character, either good or bad. What profit is there, then, in the life that has been spent in obtaining only earthly possessions and self-satisfaction? Such a life will be like the one who built his house upon the sands, with nothing to stand on at the end of life when the storms increase. We can replace losses that are financial, if we have worked hard during life and been thrifty and have this world's goods, but they will not do us much good if we have built upon the wrong foundation and if we have brought forth no fruit of the Spirit. A soul that is lacking in virtue is empty and void. It cannot be easily reached after the life has almost been spent, unless some outside power can renew it and give it life. Christ, alone, can lead us into ways that are virtuous and into paths that bring peace.

The Psalmist once said, "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright; for the end of that man is peace." It is the end of life, then, that is so important. When peace is our aim in life it will enable us to enjoy our work day by day; our ways will be stabilized by temperate living and just dealing because we have an eternal hope that guides us on. If we build upon virtue, it will aid us in being faithful Christians.

Whom Am I Serving?

By Charles W. Lapp

"Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world."

JESUS told the lawyer what to do in Luke 10:27: "And he answering said, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbour as thyself." There is no dividing of affection between God and Satan.

When God took the children of Israel out of Egypt, they were forty years in the wilderness before they arrived in the Promised Land. During this time they did much grumbling against God. In Exodus 16:3 we read: "And the children of Israel said unto them, Would to God we had died by the hand of the Lord in the land of Egypt, when we sat by the flesh pots, and when we did cat bread to the full; for ye have brought us forth into this wilderness, to kill this whole assembly with hunger."

To the Christian, worldly amusements are just like the flesh pots of Egypt. They mean bondage to sin, or lust of the flesh. But we have something better. In Galatians 5:13 Paul says, "For, brethren, ye have been called unto liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another." We are free from the bondage of sin. In 1 Corinthians 8:9-13 Paul says, "But take heed lest by any means this liberty of your's become a stumblingblock to them that are weak. For if any man see thee which hast knowledge sit at meat in the idol's temple, shall not the conscience of him which is weak be emboldened to eat those things which are offered to idols; and through thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish, for whom Christ died? But when ye sin so against the brethren, and wound their weak conscience, ye sin against Christ. Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend."

Let us examine the theater? Is it of the world? In John 15:19 we read, "If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you."

Drunkenness, jealousy, covetousness, witchcraft, hatred, wrath, strife, seditions, envyings, murders, revellings, lying, anger, slander, and filthiness are products of the lusts of the flesh. I cannot go to the theater and watch through a show without seeing some one of these lusts acted out, and generally there are a good deal more than one acted out. I am told not to love such things. 1 John 2:15-17: "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lusts thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever." Any amusement that ministers toward the lusts of the flesh is of the world and should be avoided.

In 1 Corinthians 6:19-20 we find that our bodies are not our own. "What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's." Therefore we cannot do just as we please with our bodies and expect God to give us our reward of eternal life.

Are the things we see at the theater to the glory of God? In 1 Corinthians 10:31 we read: "Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." Should I take the temple of the Holy Ghost into such a place? Should I take my son into such a place, where the things put before him are not to the glory of God? The more sensational the picture, the greater its success. Licentiousness is not a bar to success in the movies. Should I seek amusement at the cost of debased lives?

In James 3:11 he asks this question, "Doth a fountain send forth at the same place sweet water and bitter?" Therefore, will the theater make my spiritual life stronger? I say, No. Can I commune with God while indulging in this pleasure? Let us see. In 2 Corinthians 6:14-18 Paul gives us a little advice on the subject. "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? and what agreement bath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said. I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you. and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty.'

In Proverbs 4:14-21, Solomon gives us instruction: "Enter not into the path of the wicked, and go not in the way of evil men. Avoid it, pass not by it, turn from it, and pass away. For they sleep not, except they have done mischief; and their sleep is taken away, unless they cause some to fall. For they cat the bread of wickedness, and drink the wine of violence. But the path of the just is as a shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day. The way of the wicked is as darkness; they know not at what they stumble. My son, attend to my words; incline thine ear unto my saying, let them not depart from thine eyes:

Then in Romans 14:21 Paul says: "It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor any thing whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak." Therefore, if I attend the theater and some weak brother that is following me as his example sees me go to such a place, he is going to lose faith in me and the church. In Mark 4:19 Jesus says: "And the cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, and the lusts of other things entering in, choke the word, and it becometh unfruitful." That is the result of theater going.

Again, in 1 Thessalonians 5:22, Paul says: "Abstain from all appearance of evil." Am I doing that if I go to a place where I see evil acted out before my eyes? No. I cannot take Jesus with me to such a place. Jesus does not say He will follow us, but we must follow Him. In Matthew 16:24 are these words: "Then said Jesus unto his disciples, If any man wil! come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." In each case when Jesus was selecting His disciples, He told them to follow Him. He did not say, "Go wherever you want to and I will follow you."

mercy, His love, His nature, His covenant, are all revealed in His Word as recorded in the Scriptures. These may not be seen until we realize the insufficiency of our own wisdom. We must forsake human argument, human reason, and commit our wills humbly to that which He has to say to us.

We must seek God with open minds, forsaking preconceived ideas of Him. Only in this way can we expect to know Him as He is revealed.

There is great reward to those who seek to know God and find Him. "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."

"For thou must share, if thou would'st keep
That good thing from above;
Ceasing to share you cease to have—
Such is the law of Love."

"THAT ... YE MIGHT BELIEVE"

you, I go away, and come again unto you. If ye loved me, ye would rejoice, because I said, I go unto the Father: for my Father is greater than I. And now I have told you before it come to pass, that, when it is come to pass, ye might believe" (John 14:28, 29).

"Now I tell you before it come, that, when it is come to pass, we may believe that I am he" (John 13:19).

True, at His death they were nonplussed, for they did not comprehend His plainly spoken words. But, on the way to Emmaus (Luke 24:13-35), two of them narrating His death to the Unknown Stranger, said, "and beside all this, this is the third day." And, "their eyes were opened, and they knew him."

How spontaneous faith thrilled them to new hope, new life, new vigor.

And so the Holy Word reveals that prophecy, even "time" prophecy, has been one of God's formulas since the early dawn for compounding faith within the human breast, much as the chemist compounds within his laboratory. Not prophecy as a means of instruction, alone, but prophecy as a means also of assuring man that God is God, that His word is based on foreknown fact, that His promised work and reward are unalterable.

Events long ago foretold, in some instances "timed," and which are right now in the process of fulfillment before our own eyes, trumpet to the people of 1938 that we, too, "live, and move, and have our being" in Him.

No, God has not changed His method as regards the people of the present day. He still works, and that to the end

THAT WE TOO MIGHT BELIEVE

True, there are no acting prophets in these days, but God directed His Isaiahs and Daniels and Johns of former days to so write that, though their statements might need be sealed "to the time of the end," yet they would be unsealed and understood at the proper time. Not only would they be understood, but they would also react upon those living in the times of fulfillments as did fulfilling prophecies of earlier days react upon Israel in Egypt and upon the Apostles with Christ.

During recent years, especially the years 1936-'38, the fulfillment of different prophecies has been progressing rapidly. Others seem to be crowding for position upon the world's stage. Query some, Of what use is the study of them? The answer seems to be—

That Ye Might Have Faith, and be watching in faith, and share the blessings of faith, as the threshold is being crossed into the new age.

P. S.—It seems undoubtedly true that God has identified certain governmental characters of prophecy by certain numerical signs. It may be of interest to add another suggestion as to possible identification of one of our current European governments. Mr. Eric J. Parkinson calls attention to the fact that on September 26 last, Hitler presented his ultimatum to Czechoslovakia to expire October 1st. Odd as it may seem, yet, the following numerical pattern is true to fact:

Now 1290 is the number associated with the desolator of Daniel 12:11.

is infinite in power, as we know Him to be, why should He need these material forces? Why could not He who created the worlds with a spoken word, bring about all other desired conditions in the same way?

No, I cannot answer such questions concerning the reasoning of God frem the viewpoint of human logic. But this I do know: The God of all wisdom made all of these things and He uses all of these things, and therefore they must be necessary to the accomplishment of His works! Men and angels, worlds, planets, and natural forces—God needs them all, for He made all and He uses all!

MAN'S PLACE IN THE COSMIC SCHEME

David thought about this question and wondered greatly. He saw, no doubt, more deeply into the mind of God than many of us are able to do, and yet he was unable to find the answer to our question.

Out under the midnight sky, studded with stars, many of which were thousands of times greater than the sun that shines down upon the earth today, impressed with the vastness of what he saw, David talked to God about it.

"When I consider thy heavens," he said, "the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars, which thou hast ordained; what is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him?"

How insignificant man is, when compared with those mighty heavenly bodies! How limited is his strength when brought into contrast with the resistless forces that sustain and govern those orbs in trackless space!

The contrast becomes even more pronounced when we delve into the deeper meaning of the original words here rendered "man." Dr. James Moffatt, in his excellent version, observes the true meaning of the Hebrew terms.

"What is man," he finds David asking, "that thou should'st think of him? What is mortal man" (the italics are ours), "that thou should'st need him?"

In the first clause, the Hebrew word translated "man" is enosh, and means "frail, feeble, desperate, incurable, woeful," and, as Dr. Moffatt notes, "mortal." In the second clause the Hebrew word for "man" is adam, which primarily means "ruddy," a term often applied to the white or "ruddy" race, but which conveys also the thought of one of a "common sort, that is, of low or mean degree." Enosh, according to the author of "Two Thousand Hours in the Psalms," "has reference to man's weakness."

David looked upon himself and his fellow men as weaklings, as mortal beings whose span of life was brief and whose wisdom was as foolishness when compared with that of the One who rules the planets and prescribes the bounds of human habitation.

Yet in spite of his obvious frailty, the prophet-king of Israel saw in man "the noblest work of God." "For," he said, "thou hast made him but little lower than God, and crownest him with glory and honour. Thou makest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands; and hast put all things under his feet."

The authority bestowed upon man was not restricted to rulership over the creatures named by David—"all sheep and oxen, the beasts of the field, birds of the heavens, and fish of the seas," for even those deathless angelic beings, who wait to carry the messages of God to men, are subordinate to man, for "are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to do service for the sake of them that shall inherit salvation?" (Heb. 1:14, R. V.).

ETERNAL SERVICE TO BE RENDERED BY MAN

It is apparent that God's purposes for man are not limited by time, but extend to the farthest reaches of eternity. This is evidenced in that, of all the creatures He has made, man is the only one to whom He has promised eventual immortality as a reward for faithful service. God would not give us life in the future, life that will have no end, if He did not have work for us to do that requires the boundless ages of eternity to accomplish.

Furthermore, He would not promise to make us sinless—that is, incapable of making mistakes—unless the service He plans for us to render in eternity was of a vital and exacting nature. It is because the work to be done in the future is of great importance, and must be carried on in complete conformity with the divine plan, that God requires unquestioning faith on the part of those whom He is now choosing to serve Him when time shall be no more. He needs men, He must have men, who are so thoroughly convinced of God's wisdom, who are so certain that His ways are always best, and that whatever He purposes to do He can and will accomplish, that they will obey His orders implicitly, even when such orders appear to them to be unreasonable and incapable of being carried out.

Only when one trusts completely in God will he observe in the service he renders that scrupulous adherence to divine directions that Moses observed in the construction of the tabernacle, which, we are told, was "a copy and shadow of heavenly (or eternal) things." "See," God said, "that thou make all things according to the pattern shewed thee in the mount" (Heb. 8:5).

Only men experienced in exact and unfaltering obedience to orders can carry out successfully a work that demands constant observance of minute technical details of construction. Such is the class of servants God is developing today to be coworkers with Him in the immeasurably greater and more splendid tasks they will be called upon to do when the King comes! We are being schooled now for divine service that will know no end, and God is developing within each one of us who will submit to His discipline and instruction those qualities and tendencies that will make us available for further development and usefulness in the new heavens and new earth.

[&]quot;I am fearfully and wonderfully made: marvellous are thy works; . . . My substance was not hid from thee, when I was made in secret, and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth" (Psalm 139:14, 15).

Peace?

"Peace at last!" From our radios' loudspeakers, from the blaring headlines of our newspapers, came this longlooked-for statement. The reaction in various parts of the world was interesting to note. In the United States it meant a return to normal programs on the radio, and to newspaper discussion of the latest political scandal. In England Prime Minister Chamberlain was hailed as a peacemaker and as a traitor. The Premier of France was given the same treatment. Mussolini was hailed as a national hero; and Hitler was proclaimed by two great nations and a portion of another as their very savior. Had not these men averted another war disaster? Even though Czechoslovakia did suffer, what difference did that make? Hitler had promised peace, and even signed an agreement with Chamberlain that England and Germany would never go to war again!

Peace? Yes, but to the students of Bible prophecy these things are but fulfillment of the things we have been studying for years. We have read in 1 Thessalonians 5 that when "they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them." We know that no true peace can come into this world until the Prince of Peace brings it with Him. We also realize that all the peace efforts of man have failed in the past regardless of treaties, pacts, and so forth. Let us consider these "scraps of paper," as some of the dictators have called them.

Even prior to the great conflict called the World War, men strove in a feeble way to establish peace. Witness their efforts in calling two peace conferences at The Hague, capital of The Netherlands. For some time all world peace efforts concentrated at this place. Of course, these efforts failed, for almost without warning the world was plunged into war—a war to "save the world for democracy."

Since the war there have been many different plans for peace and all of them have failed. The treaties after the war were carefully drawn up, so that it seemed that the war had really accomplished its purpose in being a "war to end wars." We know how utterly this has failed.

Perhaps the greatest farce of all the peace efforts has been the League of Nations. Composed of practically all the great nations of the world (the United States does not belong, although it sends a representative), this League was formed to thrash out the problems of the nations so that there would be no necessity for war. We know the result! Japan has ignored the League in having already taken one liberal slice of China, and is now trying for another. Germany, who, out of courtesy, was invited to join, has since left the League, and has repudiated it altogether. Italy has also ignored it, and has annexed Ethiopia within the past few years. Little Ethiopia has ignored the League, but in a different manner. When this farcical organization refused to recognize her as a nation but rather as conquered by Italy, Hailie Selassie, exiled king, ignored it by paying his yearly dues of one thousand dollars. Thus, we can see this once great League, hailed as being able to bring about everlasting peace, not only a failure, but a laughingstock.

Another treaty, thought to be one that would strengthen world peace was the Locarno Treaty of 1925. It has been called by statesmen, "an excellent gesture," but did little toward permanent peace for Europe or any other place. It was just another example of the futility of man in establishing peace.

In 1928, from out of our own land, came the great Kellogg Peace Pact. Nations hailed it as the greatest thing of its kind ever brought forth. Sixty-four nations signed this piece of paper, and it turned out to be just that. For not very long after it had been signed, nations from all sides began repudiating it.

At last, however, we are to have peace! Hitler and the others have brought it about, and the world is to live on without fear of war any more. Do you really believe this to be true? I do not! In fact, I believe that it is just one more useless scrap of paper, that the leaders will ignore when they please.

What, then, do these things mean to us? Let us turn again to 1 Thessalonians 5. After Paul had spoken the words mentioned previously in this article, he continued with these words: "But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day: we are not of the night, nor of darkness. Therefore let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober."

So, brethren, we do know these things. We know that peace will not come in these days of the rule of man. However, we also know that there is going to some day be everlasting peace. This can only be brought about by Jesus, whose very name is "The Prince of Peace." Let us watch for that time to come. Let us notice with interest the things that are coming to pass before our very eyes, and thus be ready to meet our Master when He comes.

Three Months to Live!

Suppose that an eminent physician told you that you had only three months in which to live, what would you do?

Would you sit down and cry to think that your span of life was to be shortened? Would you start immediately to "enjoy life" and perhaps cut short even the time the doctor had given you? Or would you take that three months as a challenge to see just how much good you could do in that length of time?

God grant that you will never have to make such a decision. But just what would you do? Many souls could be won for Christ during that time!

PREPARED BY MADGE SAVAGE

"Honour thy father and thy mother; that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee."

The Fifth Commandment

We have studied four other commandments so far this quarter. First, we learned that there was only one true God. Then we found from God's Word that we should worship God in spirit and in truth. Third, we should revere our God. The fourth commandment was about our weekly day of rest.

The fifth commandment (Ex. 20:12), which is our golden text, is printed at the top of the page. It has a promise for you. If you honor your parents you have one more opportunity of living long than if you dishonor them.

Your parents are your guides. They have another far greater work to do than to feed and clothe you. You see, God is the Father of us all. He has given earthly parents some instructions about you.

We read, "Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old, he will not depart from it." There is a work for your parents! Can they train you in a day? Can you train a pet to do tricks in a day? You must be very patient and help your pet over and over. That is why we need our parents near by when we are small. Your parents must train you in the Christian life if you are to be Christlike when you grow older. They should do it very carefully, for God has told them to do so.

There is more to honoring your father and mother than just obeying them. However, obedience is a very important part. You look up to or respect or revere them even as you and your parents reverence God because you love Him. Jesus said that one cannot love God whom he hath not seen, if he doesn't love his brother whom he has seen. Then, is one apt to reverence God if there is no respect in his heart for his earthly parents?

Jesus is our example and pattern. In Luke 2:51 we find the words, "and was subject unto them." Find that phrase and read the entire verse. Jesus did what Joseph and Mary asked Him! I suppose He did many things for them to show His love, without waiting for them to ask Him. I know you, too, can find ways in which you can help your parents.

Three Boys You Know

Let us call to our minds some of the boys about whom we have learned from our Sunday school lessons. Shall we find out if they were boys who honored their parents or who dishonored them?

Samuel had a mother who loved God. You recall, Hannah prayed for a son. Eli, the priest in the temple, told her he hoped God would answer her prayer. He didn't know she was asking for a son. She named her boy Samuel, for it means, "asked of God." Hannah gave her son to God's service. He lived in the temple and helped Eli. He obeyed his mother and Eli. He grew up to be a prophet of God.

Absalom, another boy, took the kingdom away from his father, David. Your other story lady told you about David. He had many sons, but was so busy with his duties as king that he had no time left to teach his sons to be good. So most of his sons grew to be very wicked men. Absalom even tried to kill his father!

Do you remember Daniel? He is the one who was in the lions' den. Daniel was taken captive. He refused to eat the king's food. It was too rich and had been offered to idols. He refused to drink the wine, too. Daniel ate pulse and drank water that he knew was good, just as he had at home! The Bible tells us that Daniel "purposed in his heart" to keep himself pure and good.

We have had three examples of boys from our Bibles. We find that if they were honorable men they were also good boys. The same is true of girls.

Have you ever thought, "I won't do that when I get big!" when you have been corrected for something? It takes much more than saying a thing to make it true. You are big and strong enough to correct your bad habits, I know. Those around you who love you will help you, if you ask them. Be sure to talk it over with Jesus. He never fails anyone.

Those Who Are Wise

Because we understand we must obey God's Word in order to do right, let us listen quietly to Him, for He says to each of you boys and girls, "My son, hear the instruction of thy father, and forsake not the law of thy mother" (Prov. 1:8). "My son, forget not my law; but let thine heart keep my commandments; for length of days, and long life, and peace shall they add to thee" (Prov. 3:1, 2).

Even as Timothy learned of God from his grandmother and mother, may you learn to love, trust, respect, and obey your parents more and more as you grow older, while you learn from them of God.

And as a closing thought for the days before you, remember always, "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favour rather than silver and gold," by those who are wise.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

ILLINOIS QUARTERLY CONFERENCE November 10, 11, at Macomb

The Fall Quarterly Conference of the Illinois Churches of God will be held at Macomb on November 12 and 13. The place of meeting is at 409 South Dudley St. A short business meeting of the executive board will be held at that time.

THE CHURCH OF GOD AT LAWRENCEVILLE, OHIO

We, of the Lawrenceville, Ohio, Church of God, are anxiously awaiting the arrival of Bro. Grover Gordon, who has accepted our call to come here as our pastor. In the mean-time, work is progressing on the remodeling of our church building. The basement is dug. and work is started on the foundation and Lasement floor. At the present time we are unable to hold meetings in the church building because the old stove and chimney have installed until the basement floor is laid. In the meantime, meetings are being held in the home of Sr. Belle Hartman.

The church building itself was badly in need of repair, all of which work is now costmg a great deal more than was anticipated. The original estimate was for about $1,200, but as it now stands will run at least $2,000. We have about $1,500 subscribed for this work, but have just about exhausted the source cs of revenue from our members here. would rather not go into debt to finish the work, as we all have subscribed about as much of our incomes as possible to get a minister, and we would hardly be able to carry a debt on a loan as well. If there are any among the membership of the associate churches who would be willing to aid in the financing of our work here, we would certainly appreciate eny financial support.

We need His help.

SEDAN, KANSAS

On October 20, we closed our eight-day meeting in which Bro. T. A. Drinkard of meeting in which Bro. T. A. Drinkard of Handley, Texas, delivered nine beautiful ser-mons. We had a fair attendance, and some interest was manifested. It had been a year since we had heard the truth, but we hope and pray that it will not be so long until we can have some more preaching. We surely can have some more preaching. We surely need some more of the gospel taught here. Bro. Drinkard has promised to take care of this field. We are surely glad to have him

After many years of longing for good roads to lead to the church their prayers are about to be answered. The last stretch of road has now been graded and put in shape for gravel. If good weather continues it is expected that the gravel will be applied yet this fall, which will make possible the continuation of services through the winter months.

The continuation of our present meetings is entirely at the mercy of the weather, for rain would make the road in its present condition altogether impassable. Thus far the weather

WE ARE GRATEFUL

Since severing our connection with the editorial work of The Restitution Herald, we have received letters from all parts of the country, both from our own brethren and from ministers and communicants of other churches, expressing approval of our past efforts for the paper and revealing depths of personal feeling for which we are exceedingly grateful. As soon as circumstances permit, we shall answer all such communications personally, but at the present we are busy establishing ourselves in our new home and in becoming acquainted with the particular spiritual needs of this com-

We again take occasion, as we did in our last editorial, to ask on behalf of our new and able editor, the same splendid support that was so generously rendered to us. And we assure all interested ones that we intend to submit articles to The Herald for editorial approval at as frequent intervals as possible. G. Eldred Marsh.

Gleanings From the Field

An all-day rally is scheduled for Eden Valley, Minn., Nov. 6. We anticipate a great day, especially for Bro. Gerald Cooper.

Bro, and Sr. Grover Gordon, en route from Holbrook, Neb., to their new pastorate at Lawrenceville, Ohio, and Bro. Gerald Cooper, en route from Blanchard, Mich., to his new pastorate at Eden Valley, Mina., were recent visitors with the editor and family. Come

The church at Niagara Falls, N. Y., held its annual all-day meeting, Sunday, Oct. 30. This is one of the churches pastored by Bro. C. E. Randall, and, judging from the neat folders announcing the special meeting, there are some wide-awake workers there. Sr. Tinlin prepared the folders.

Sr. Leota Hanson, ever zealous, visited the Michigan Fall Conference at Blanchard. While we miss her in the office, we are glad she is sometimes able to be among the brethren at Bro. William Arbogast of Oregon, Ill., and Sr. Thelma Richardson of Hammond, La., have recently undergone operations, from which we are glad to report they are speedily recovering.

Mr. Russell Shellhaas of West Milton, Ohio, ar attendant of the Brush Creek Church of Ged, has recently suffered two strokes, and is still seriously ill.

The Omaha, Neb., brethren were favored with sermons from Bro. Grover Gordon on October 30.

The ladies' aid society of Eden Valley, Minn., are now organized to assist bereaved families with the work about the home, and the providing of lunch for visitors on the day of funeral services. This is a novel and commendable work.

If there are any readers of The Restitution Herald near either of the parties listed below, please communicate with them:

Mrs. R. M. Hunter, 1008 N. Denver St., Tulsa, Okla.; Marie Brown Schreiber, 1802 N. 8th St., Boise, Idaho.

Sr. S. J. Lindsay of Tempe, Ariz., has been ill for two weeks, and her daughter, Sr. Hazel Mattison of Oregon, Ill., is now taking care of her. We hope for a speedy recovery.

Distant visitors at Oregon services on Sunday, Oct. 30, were Bro. and Sr. T. J. Ellis of Waterloo, Iowa, Bro. and Sr. Frank Moran of Clinton, Iowa, Bro. and Sr. D. Hatten and family of Culver, Ind., and Bro. and Sr. L. E. Conner of Dixon, Ill.

Your editor was called upon to officiate at the funeral of Mr. C. R. Eyster, Chana, Ill., on November 1.

GRAND RAPIDS CELEBRATES TWELFTH ANNIVERSARY

The twelfth anniversary of the establishment of the Southlawn Church of God in Grand Rapids, Mich., was celebrated in a series of services which began on Friday night and concluded with an all-day meeting on Sunday, Oct. 23.

Among the number specially honored at the dinner given Sunday afternoon, were Bro. and Sr. Richard Skeels, Sr. Fletcher of Kalamazoo, Sr. Shepherd of Hopkins, Sr. Blakely, and Bro. Lawrence Bridegam. To the ladies mentioned was assigned the task of cutting the great anniversary cake which had been provided for the occasion.

The day's happiness was crowned when Miss Schooley, a member of Sr. F. E. Siple's class of young people, requested baptism.

Plans for an intensive exangelistic campaign to be carried out this fall and winter are well under way by the pastor, the Sunday school superintendent, and leaders of work among the young people among the young people.

The new pastor and his wife have been most agreeably surprised and greatly encouraged by the activity and zeal displayed by all departments of the church.

Sr. Richard Skeels, 1228 Eastern Ave., S. E., celebrated her birthday on October 29. Sr. Skeels is the beloved "Mother" of this congregation, and all join in wishing her many more years of happiness and prosperity.

The church board announced that the evening service on October 30 would be omitted in order that all who could do so might attend the fall conference at Blanchard.

Bro. Gerald Cooper, soon to be installed as pastor of the Church of God at Eden Valley. Minn., spent Sunday in Grand Rapids. In the morning he addressed a fine congregation in the Pennellwood Church at the invitation of Fastor Ray Abbott, and in the afternoon and evening joined in the anniversary services at the Southlawn Park Church. Bro. Cooper was on his way to Blanchard, where he was the guest speaker at the conference.

Tuesday night, Oct. 25, Bro. F. E. Siple, former paster of Southlawn Park Church, opened his new home at 140 Delia St., S. E., to a large group of church folk. The party was sponsored by Sr. Siple's class of young people, and was a most enjoyable affair. Early Wednesday morning Bro. and Sr. Siple left for Marshall, Ill., where he is to conduct a series of special meetings in the Salem Church off God.

GOLDEN WEDDING

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Rynearson, 1540 First St., Dixon, Ill., celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary on Sunday, Oct. 23.

At noon a family dinner was served at the Colonial Inn at Grand Detour, Ill. In the afternoon from three to six many friends and acquaintances called to offer congratulations and best wishes.

Mrs. Rynearson was born north of West Brooklyn, March 18, 1870. Mr. Rynearson was born at Lenox, Pa., July 24, 1862, and came to Illinois at the age of seventeen. The wedding vows were taken in the home of the bride's father, at West Brooklyn, Ill., on October 24, 1888, and they lived in that vicinity until the following September, when they came to Dixon. In those forty-nine years they have made many friends.

Three sons were born to this union: Glen and Earl of Springfield, Ill., and Ferris of Chicago. There are also two grandchildren.

Mrs. Rynearson was reared in a Methodist home, but about forty-two years ago became a member of the Church of God at Dixon, being baptized by Bro. Huddler. She has been a faithful member since that time.

Monday evening, Oct. 24, the members of the Dixon Church of God pleasantly surprised them. Vases and baskets of yellow dahlias, marigolds, and chrysanthemums adorned the home. A social time was enjoyed, after which refreshments of ice cream in the form of gold hills with gold-trimmed cake were served. Mr. and Mrs. Rynearson were presented with a gold plate, with best wishes for many more happy years.

Mrs. Wm. G. Ford, Sec.

ELBERTA DECKER

On September 3, 1938, I journeyed from Puyallup to Hoquaim, Wash., to preach the funeral sermon of Sr. Elberta Decker of Copalis Beach, Wash. She was born February 2, 1908, and fell asleep in Christ August 31, 1938

She leaves to mourn her loss Bro. Bert Decker, her husband; Wayne and Warren, sons; Hazen and Forrest Decker, brothers-in-law; Mande, a sister-in-law; elderly Mrs. Decker, mother of her husband; and her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Kruiswyk; two brothers, Herman and William; one sister, Mrs. Loeffelbain, all of Cashmere, Wash.

She was a member of the Church of God, Faith of Abraham, of Cashmere. I had the pleasure of baptizing her in the all-saving name of Jesus Christ some six years ago. She fell asleep in Christ, waiting the coming day of her blessed Savior. Thomas D. Foster.

MRS. HARRIET REED

On October 7, Sr. Reed of Arkansas City, Kansas, fell asleep in death, having reached the good age of 92. She was born in Indiana, but had lived most of her life in Oklahoma and Kansas. Twenty-seven years ago her husband died, at which time she moved from Oklahoma to Arkansas City, Kansas, where she resided until death.

Both Sr. Reed and her husband were baptized about seventy years ago by Bro. H. R. Carter. Both were faithful until death.

Near relatives who survive are; one daughter, Mrs. A. J. Chaplin of Arkansas City; four sons, Mandes of Attica, Kansas; Edward of Santa Ana. Calif.; Andy of Arkansas City; and Clarence of Willow Green, Colo. She has left thirty-three grandchildren, many great-grandchildren, and a few great-great-grand-children.

Bro. George Waters preached the funeral sermon. Burial was made in Hope Cemetery, where she awaits in rest the coming of her Savior. She was indeed a true Christian.

JESSE BOUK

Jesse F. Bouk, of the Peter Bouk family, well known in the early years of the Fonthill Church, died at his home in Niagara Falls, N. Y., on October 1 at the age of 78 years. He had been a resident in the city for a number of years and, being retired, became a very familiar figure on the streets of the north end. He has been in failing health the last few nonths. A couple of weeks previous to death he suffered a stroke which culminated in his yielding to the last enemy.

Funeral services were held from the home

Funeral services were held from the home in the city and the Fonthill Church on October 4, after which he was laid to rest in the Fonthill cemetery, where he sleeps in the city of the dead until called forth.

Sr. Priscilla Clark, a sister, is the only surviving member of the original family. Besides her, two sons remain to miss their father. The writer had charge of the services.

C. E. Randall.

SHERMAN BENNETT

Sherman Bonnett was born on September 8, 1877, and died October 15, 1938, at his home in Paynesville, Minn. He was born in Le Seur County, and lived there until manhood.

On October 3, 1900, he was happily united in marriage to Martha Robbins and settled in Stearns County. Their union was blessed with thirteen children. One child died in infancy. The others are: Elsie, Mrs. Gap Urbach of Frazee, Minn.; Gladys, Mrs. Rozelle Jenkinson of Marathon, Iowa; Hazel, Mrs. Clem Darweiler of Minneapolis. Minn.; Maurice of Walker, Minn.; Howard of Vergas, Minn.; Melvin of Paynesville, Minn.; Violet, Mrs. Marcus Oster of Bloomer, Wis.; and Thelma, Milo, Gerald, Ione, and Edwina at home, with the mother.

He is also survived by four brothers: Lee, Charles, John, and George; and one sister, Mrs. Sumner Hurd; and ten grandchildren.

He was baptized many years ago by Bro. James Patrick and, though unable to speak, shortly before his death made known that he still loved his Lord.

His family, other relatives, and a great number of friends paid last respects at services held at the Church of God in Eden Valley, with the writer in charge. Interment was made in Lake View Cemetery, looking toward the "resurrection at the last day" and the life of the world to come. John Denehfield.

"Home, Sweet Home"

Provided by the love and sympathy of the entire brotherhood of the Church of God, Golden Rule Home assures to the members of its Family the comfort, security, and solicitous care which the word "home" always suggests.

Here the anxieties of earlier and more active life are laid aside forever. No threat of eviction for non-payment of rent or taxes or other indebtedness troubles the hearts of the residents of Golden Rule Home!

No doctor or hospital bills, no grocery, coal, or light bills to be met the first of the month, bring fear to the minds of the Golden Rule Home Family!

All such obligations and burdens are taken from the shoulders of these older ones immediately upon their entrance into the Home and are carried thereafter by the Golden Rule Home itself, which is amply able to bear the load on their behalf.

A hearty Christian welcome awaits all who seek the protection and lifelong support the Home provides.

CHURCH OF GOD OF THE FAITH OF ABRAHAM, TEMPE, ARIZONA S. J. LINDSAY, PASTOR

It is a pleasure to present a picture of the new church building at Tempe, Arizona, and the note of description by the secretary, Mrs. Victor Corbell. This splendid work speaks well for the faithfulness of both Brother Lindsay, the pastor, and his loyal congregation. Let the Lord be praised, and let all His people rejoice.

"Our new church is constructed along English lines and is a very unusual style of structure for our western country. The Arizona Republic, in giving a cut and write-up, said: 'Many who have viewed it consider it the most attractive small church in the State.' It is admired by all who have seen it. It is a credit to the membership and to the community in which it is located. The main audience room will seat one hundred fifty persons comfortably. Besides this we have a small assembly room for the Sunday school, two classrooms, a pastor's study, and conveniently located rest rooms. The style of architecture is simple. In its construction we sought convenience and comfort, and we have both. We invite the brethren from over the states to come to spend a winter with us, and to make their church home with us.'

"So Great Faith . . . Not in Israel"

Sight was weak, ears were dull of hearing, and hearts were cold. Few Israelites were Christian. "Despised," our Lord suffered the pangs of an artist whose work is but seen by children's eyes. There was little place in Israel for the Artist of Nazareth. Knowing, however, that He was the Savior, these gnawing pangs in Christ's breast ever urged him on and on, seeking any who would listen, believe, and obey. He found a few.

A Roman centurion, whose loved servant was near death, prayed of Jesus, "I am not worthy that thou shouldest enter under my roof: . . . but say in a word, and my servant shall be healed" (Luke 7:6, 7). He spoke too of the prompt obedience of his soldiers at his command, suggesting his faith in Christ as a Centurion over a hundred forces quick to obey Him in every good work.

"When Jesus heard these things, he marvelled at him, ... and said unto the people that followed him, I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel." The servant, unseen, untouched, was healed by the Great Physician, but "great faith," faith above any found in Israel, was the price of the Physician's cure. Faith of a non-member did its work! Faith of a non-member was rewarded by the Son of God!! And Israel, we think, was roused a little.

So very few of our brethren have responded to Brother Conner's recent plea for financial assistance that the response of one who is not a member stands out as a bold reminder that the Church of God is a bit like Israel of old, having eyes that are closed, ears that are dull of hearing, and hearts that are cold. There must be pangs of sorrow in the breast of the Artist whose work is so little esteemed. He, the Christ, is urged on, ever looking for any who will listen, believe, and obey. He finds a few. Faith is still doing its work.

There is surely an analogy between the faith of the Roman centurion and the faith shown in the following quotation:

"Enclosed find $20.00 in response to your appeal in the last issue of The Restitution Herald for more funds. While I am not a member of your 'Brotherhood,' to whom your appeal is particularly addressed, I am a regular reader of The Herald, and am interested in a great many of its articles relating particularly to the 'last days.'"

Ought not the Church of God be roused a little?

"Worship God"

Thanksgiving Day is fast approaching. How will you use it? With so much trouble abroad, every church in America should hold worship services on Thanksgiving Day, and every able Christian should attend such services.

Football and little more will be the (thanksgiving?) of thousands on November 24. Pastime of any such nature was farthest from the minds of the Pilgrims on their first Thanksgiving Day. They worshiped God. It is incredible, impossible, for the consecrated Christian to substitute the so-called "pigskin" for the God of the universe. We seriously question if rabbit hunting is any better.

It is your editor's hope that every congregation of the Church of God will hold a worship service on Thanksgiving Day, and that the day may be kept in the spirit of true thanksgiving and praise. "Worship God."

Faith, Where Are You?

Jesus asked, we think prophetically, "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" Should Christ come today He would find some faith, but He would find more idolatry. While such a condition is to be expected, the question of Christ is a warning rather than a license.

Not less than fifty requests were recently sent to Christians of our personal acquaintance, all in one state, asking for cooperation in a Christian work. Thus far only one response has reached us. It came from a father and mother who a short while ago lost a child in a fire. "Where are the (forty and) nine?" (See Luke 17:17.)

Eleven, Eleven, Eleven

The Armistice following the World War, which we shall again soon celebrate, was signed on the eleventh hour of the eleventh day of the eleventh month of 1918. Never before had man struggled to gain his selfish ends as he had during the more than four years of war, his eleventh hour struggle.

While we have no faith in date-setting for the second coming of Christ, the mentioned series of elevens has left its impression upon us as more than a coincidence. Jesus said, "Are there not twelve hours in the day?" God's clock is ticking off the minutes; evidently we are fast approaching the twelfth hour, when man's day will be completed, and the day of Christ will begin.

"I Go to Prepare a Place for You"

By R. H. Judd

NOT so very long ago a genial gentleman in my home was discussing in a friendly manner the text here quoted, he bringing it forward as one that is commonly given in support of the doctrine that men and women go to heaven at death.

"In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am there ye may be also" (John 14:2, 3).

roboration of this interesting fact we are again thrown upon Scripture, and it does not fail us. The story of heavenly visitors to earth is woven into Bible history so skillfully as to disarm any denial of its actuality; and the promise of future intercourse with them is unmistakable in Hebrew Bible prophecy.

I suppose there is no true Christian who has not at times given the subject considerable thought, but how many seek an answer to it directly from Scripture? So much are we influenced by those who are leaders in our churches, that we temporarily forget that they are but human like ourselves, and we therefore place a confidence in them which they are not always able to sustain. Glad, indeed, as the writer is to get help from others, he has learned by experience that everything gained in this way needs to be tested by the written Word.

Looking up concordances we find that the particular Greek word translated "mansions" or "abiding places in the Authorized Version and the Revised Version occurs only twice in the New Testament, and each time in this 14th chapter of John's Gospel. Even so, we find that there are various translations given. Some give us the meaning "resting places," some give the word "stations," while another, I am informed, gives the thought of "positions of trust." What we gather from concordances at our disposal is that "mansions" or "abiding places" is the most acceptable with the best authorities.

THE FATHER'S HOUSE

How very simple, yet how very full are the words of the Lord Jesus—"In my Father's house are many abiding places, if it were not so I would have told you." Naturally the question arises, "Where is the Father's house?" Nature cannot furnish a definite answer, and no uninspired source has yet been able to supply it. The Bible alone has done so, and that in language majestically beautiful, yet sublimely simple in expression.

In Psalm 123:1 King David says, "Unto thee lift I up mine eyes, O thou that dwellest in the heavens." Solomon in his wonderful prayer at the dedication of the temple, says, "Hear thou in heaven thy dwelling place: and when thou hearest, forgive." It is a remarkable fact that in all the Old Testament expressions concerning heaven, the word in the original Hebrew has no singular. It is always "heavens." God is not limited to any portion of the heavens—the heavens are His "dwelling place," His house, and in it are many "abiding places."

VISITORS TO EARTH

I can well remember as a lad wondering with an intense wonder, whether this earth of ours is the only dwelling

THE COMMON BELIEF

It is the next point, "I go to prepare a place for you," that touches the heart of concern for the believer. The common belief is that these words convey the idea that the "place" is elsewhere than this earth of ours, but as to where, the unaided mind becomes a complete blank. We think that the popular idea is entirely erroneous. Not only because in our judgment they have misunderstood the language of Christ in John 14, but because we believe that Scripture has given us very definite information.

Suppose we try to get exactly what Jesus did say. Following the words quoted above, He says, "And if I go I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also." Weymouth's annotated translation renders the passage, "I will return and take (italies ours) you to be with me." (Personally, the writer has a strong aversion to annotated Bibles and Testaments, for the sufficient reason that the binding together of other matter on the same page as the text, has often caused the reader to have the same reverence for the notes as he has for the Bible text. If notes are printed at all in the same binding. they should be in an appendix at the end of the volume.) Such a translation lends not a little support to the common view. Strangely, however, he admits in a footnote that the literal reading is, "I will receive you unto myself." This we need scarcely say could well be accomplished without His again departing. Indeed it is worthy of note that while the Bible in both Old and New Testaments contains almost countless references to the coming again of the Lord Jesus, there are not, I think, any which speak with definite voice of His return to heaven. Before passing on to what we believe to be the Scriptural explanation of the passage under consideration, we would like to point out one or two interesting facts.

So far as human knowledge goes, and what is more important, so far as can be gathered from the Scriptures, this earth is the only abiding place in God's universe into which sin has found admission.

Bringing in the Sheaves

An Anniversary Sermon

By G. Eldred Marsh

THE deep bass voice of Grandfather Snow blended harmoniously with the softer alto of his wife as they sang in unison those old familiar words:

"Here I'll raise my Ebenezer,
Hither by Thy grace I come;
And I hope by Thy good pleasure, Safely to arrive at home."

Grandfather still held the "tuning fork" in his hand, that simple little instrument that was the symbol of his office as leader of the New England choir and by which he "pitched the tunes long before anyone had invented a reed organ or considered the purchase of a harpsichord or melodian for the church.

"Here I'll raise my Ebenezer . . ."

People sang from their hearts in those days! They remembered with gratitude the graciousness of the Lord. They appreciated His goodness, the protection He had afforded them under the dangerous pioneer conditions that then prevailed

Away back in the early seventeen hundreds, our forefathers had driven their lumbering oxcarts through the rugged mountain passes into New Hampshire. There they built their one- and two-room cabins of unhewn logs, taken from the primeval forest that clothed the rocky acres they called their "farms."

With them, of course, they brought their Bibles, a hymn book or two, and a tuning fork. When the sun had set after a long day of toil, they would meet with friends and neighbors and lift their voices in song and their hearts in praise to Him who had thus far helped them on their perilous way. Happy is the people that can remember the goodness of the Lord to them! Happy were those grandparents of ours as, dressed in homespun, living in huts of logs on sanded floors, fighting for their lives, laboring for their daily bread, praying always, they sang those old songs of thanksgiving in the wilderness! For God was with them! His presence was felt and clearly recognized among them. Religion was no mere theory in the lives of those men and women of another day! It was the thing for which they lived and struggled and died, if need be!

They had come to this wild country of the New World that they might do this. They had fled from religious persecution and political oppression across the sea, in order that they might find here, not a haven of physical security only, but "a cot in some vast wilderness" where they could worship God and rear their children in His honor and fear.

Now that their prayers had been answered and they were here, they gratefully acknowledged that their escape from the many dangers they had seen, and from countless other dangers which they had not seen, was by God's grace alone.

"Hither by Thy grace I come . . . "

Thus they sang and thus they believed. And as they looked courageously into the future, their faith strengthened by what they had experienced of God's goodness in the past, they sang in fullness of faith:

"And I hope by Thy good pleasure, Safely to arrive at home."

This week the Churches of God in Grand Rapids are looking back over the road they have come, and remembering the difficult trail they have followed. Their hearts are lifted up by the cheering consciousness that God's watchful eye has been over them, that His blessing has attended them, and that they can press forward into the mist-shrouded future with boundless assurance of His continued favor. With Samuel, they cry from the depths of their overflowing hearts: "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us!"

Just as Israel entered as strangers the Land of Promise, so the Church of God entered this community twelve years ago.

When the tribes followed Joshua into Canaan, they took with them a new God, a new religious faith, a new conception of man and his relation to the Deity and to his fellow men. No one in all Canaan, so far as we are informed, was a worshiper of Jehovah at that time. No one knew of the promises He had made to Abraham nor how those promises concerned the idol-serving people then living in the land. No one in all that region knew what sin was and the dreadful results that followed man's disregard for righteousness.

It is true, they entertained vain dreams of immortality, misty conception of a future life; but they were dreams without reality and hopes devoid of solid foundation. With groping hands they reached out in the darkness to find some one who could lead them into the light. But they failed to find such a one.

Israel had knowledge of the Light! Israel knew the place where God dwelt in fullness of glory! Israel knew how He could be reached by needy man! Israel knew the reality of sin and the even sterner reality of its penalty, death!

So Israel entered that land of ignorance and superstition and heart-hunger with knowledge at her disposal that would dispel the gloom and bring "life and immortality to light through the gospel," that gospel which had first been preached to Abraham four hundred years before, "In thee shall all families of the earth be blessed." So it was with the Church of God when it came into this community. It came as a stranger in a strange land. It came bringing with it a new conception of God, a conception that differed widely from the unbiblical Trinitarian ideas which were then, and still are, held by the majority of religious people. For our understanding of the nature of God, like our understanding of the entire plan of salvation, is essentially different from that which is entertained by the great mass of mankind.

The Church of God came into this new and flourishing territory with no mystical and visionary doctrines which can be expressed only in emotionalism! It came here with the truth of the Abrahamic promises firmly intrenched in its mind and heart. It came here in full realization that sin spelled death—literal death—for the sinner unless he found a divinely provided way of escape from it.

The Church of God came here prepared and determined to teach and preach "the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ," and to insist that to believe this gospel message and to obey its requirements in baptism and in life, constituted the only means by which salvation and immortality might be attained.

Such were the strange truths, the unique truths, the hitherto unknown truths in this community, the Church of God brought to Grand Rapids when it came, and these are the truths it has since sounded forth with all the fervor and power of a profound faith.

In the short time we have been here, we have been strongly impressed with the volume of work that has been accomplished in so short a time. Not only that, but we have been astonished at the number of men and women who have been brought to a knowledge of the kingdom of God and who, because of the knowledge thus obtained, have been led to consecrate their lives to Jesus Christ and His service.

Much indeed has been done. Much good seed has been sown. Many faithful sowers have gone forth and we believe that shortly they will return, "bearing their sheaves with them." Well may you, who have labored here from the beginning, at this point in your advancement toward the promised land, raise a memorial, an Ebenezer, and say, "Hither hath the Lord helped us!"

You could not have done this work alone, without the help of the God of Abraham and of Isaac and of Jacob, whom you serve. And it is His help that we shall need if we are to continue to go forward and win new and greater victories for the cause of truth. (Please turn to page 11)

By James W. McLain

"IN THE beginning was the Word." This was true in the very beginning of things, when God created the heavens and the earth. His Word was authority. It was all-powerful. He said, "Let there be light: and there was light." There was no question as to the authority of the Word. God was the Word. So Moses, led by the Holy Spirit, testified concerning creation, "In the beginning God."

There has been much debate concerning the time application, and person involved in John 1:1. The important conclusion is that the Word of God is of prime importance in any beginning.

We must recognize that John does not begin his gospel as a commentary of Moses' record of creation. Rather, he has a new and vital truth to record. He is deeply concerned with a new creation. It must be apparent, to every conscientious student of the Bible, that there is a natural, and there is a spiritual creation.

As God was Creator of the first man, Adam, so was He the Creator of the second Adam, His Son, the Lord Jesus Christ. There is no doubt as to the identity of God as the authority for this new creation. "In the beginning was the Word." God was the Word.

In the Garden of Eden, God spoke concerning the Seed. God spoke to Abraham of his Seed (which was Christ). God spoke to the prophets, foretelling the Son, the Prince of Peace. God's Word was authority that the Son, the Seed, the Savior should be given. All through those long centuries Christ existed only as a promise by the Word of God. In that sense only was Christ in the beginning with God. In due time the Word of God was fulfilled. The Word became flesh. God spoke to Mary, saying, "Thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus."

The Westcott and Hort Greek text makes the clearest distinction between God (the Word) and His creation, Jesus Christ. "In beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and God was the Word. This was in the beginning with God. All things through him were made (came to be), and without him was made not one thing." (To this point in the text, God is the only person in evidence. He is set forth as the Creator of all things. From this point the subject of the sentence changes to that which has been created by God.) "That which has been made in him life was, and the life was the light of men."

There is no evidence here that Jesus either preexisted or was creator of heaven and earth.

"In the beginning was the Word." God was the Word.

Jesus is the creation of God, the Word become flesh, the Word fulfilled.

Our Changing World

By F. L. Austin

EING requested by the Editor to offer a series of articles D in the study of prophecy, the writer-in view of the rapid downward slide of governments, and peoples, and world-wide economics, and organized religion, and social standards—desires to present a short series of suggestions as gleaned from his Bible studies relative to the general subject of the above caption. This is with a view to heeding the Master's repeated injunctions to "Watch." In so watching, may we become the better prepared to identify "these things" of Matthew 24:33. For, he who can identify "these things" is to "know that he (margin) is near, . . . at the door." Identify conditions and characters foretold by the "sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place" (2 Peter 1:19).

To date, this year of 1938 seems to have staged some strikingly strong characters. These characters have entered, one from the south wing of the Rome-Berlin axis, another from the east wing of the Berlin-Tokio axis, while he who has taken the leading role entered from the center. Witness Mussolini staying the hand of Britain in the Mediterranean, in Egypt, in Palestine, in Spain. Hitler, after previously occupying the Rhineland, proceeded to absorb Austria, incarcerate Schuschnigg, and purge the land of the Jew. Again! It is September 26-27, the God-appointed date for the Feast of Trumpets, and he sounds his ultimatum with no uncertain blast on September 26 to the Czechs; Britain and France, former opponents, extend their blessing on September 29, and on October 1, at the expiration of the ultimatum, Sudetenland is occupied, and embalmment of the Czech nation begins by the process of injection of Naziism; Benes withdraws.

But, look youder! It is the Jap. He is forging a new boundary toward the setting sun, slaughtering in battle, and capturing other hosts to be murdered in mass, shot down by soldiers.

Yes. It is in the year of our Lord, 1938. It is 1900 years future from the year in which our Saviour spoke. It is a long corridor of time down which He looked to see our day, but He saw it, clearly, with its many lineaments. And He enjoined the Christian to "Watch."

While these lines are being penned on this 31st of October additional press reports arrive from yesterday depicting the shooting forth, like a flood stream from a geyser, of constantly new and ravishing results from the Munich Agreement of September 29. Practically all eastern adjacent and near-by peoples are trembling under the presence of the murky Nazi pall emitted from the Munich Agreement beclouding every phase of life:

Memel and Lithuania are revamping laws to satiate the Nazi regime, some of which changes become effective this night.

The League of Nations Secretariat, for declared economic reasons, is dispensing with about fifty leading officials. The Nazis note with satisfaction that this purge appears to affect for the most part, if not entirely, officials who are opposed to Naziism.

The Swiss Government is heeding the handwriting on the wall and modifying its ways in hope of remaining in

Italy yields to German preference regarding Hungarian claims.

The building of a new highway, which might also become of greater military value, is announced for construction from west to east through Czechoslovakia. Ukrania, as also Rumania and Poland, query the full meaning of this.

The rights and liberties and dignities of individuals are being restricted by those who wield the power of dictatorship.

All these non-military gains of territory, of submission of rights and liberties and dignities of governments and of people above mentioned, together with the falling of China before German-approved Japanese pressure, and the cowering of France and Great Britain in their Asiatic possession adjacent to China, in addition to very many other developments-all of which changes have taken place within the one current month of October following the blowing of the Hebrew Ram's Horn and of the Desolator's (?) ultimatum on September 26, the first day of the Feast of Trumpets-all of these, I say, can apparently be attributed to the Munich Agreement of September 29.

What mean all these things? What are we seeing?

We are witnessing the behavior of nations and of peoples. Not merely of two or three or four nations, but the behavior of the whole family of nations. With yet two months to go, this year of 1938 already sees the nations trembling for looking after those things which are coming on the earth. Rapidly the nations are either gathering-or being forcefully corralled—into one of two companies. The one company is headed by the dictator, or totalitarian, which has repudiated God and looks to crowning and enthroning himself in God's stead, raising the war cry of-Might makes right. The other company is headed by Great Britain, a government of the people who openly acclaim the majesty of God, and whose war cry is-Right makes might.

OUR SCIENTIFIC AGE

Because of astounding achievements in numerous scientific fields-achievements unimagined a century pastmany have turned from God and His Word to rely upon the word of humanly educated man-scientific man. But have you stopped to recall that every one of our scientific achievements has resulted from first having discovered God's laws relating to nature's facts and that only by the slow, tedious process of experiment with those laws have workable gadgets been produced? Consider the automobile. Compare in thought the first world-wide acclaimed model with the 1939 models. Think of the many myriads of gadgets built and tried, only to be scrapped as useless—all in search for the chosen gadgets which, combined, constitute the machine of today. The shelves of the Patent Office are crowded with scores of thousands of specifications of patents describing ingenious devices which experience later proved to be useless. This is true in every known field of science. Yet people do not repudiate science because of its myriads upon myriads of such failures. Rather, they cling to it, properly. For, out of the numberless of tested devices, now and then one proves to be a veritable gold mine of value.

OUR BIBLE DAYS

As never before, this generation is living in real Bible days. The days of the writing and of the evidencing of the truthfulness of God's Scriptural Words were grand, good days indeed. But the days of the fulfillment of Biblically recorded facts and of Biblically pre-written history are the fruit-bearing days of those earlier plantings. Such is our day—a veritable harvest day of Biblical assurances. It is a day when "all these things" are rapidly coming to pass.

In these days the Bible student is observing the "test" results of many past theories. Like the story of the Patent Office shelves regarding scientific theories, so also many theological theories are, in these days of prophetic fulfillment, being proven useless "gadgets." But not all. Some prove to be valuable expressions of the true laws of God pertaining to spirit-led and evil-led peoples and nations. Today's "proving ground" for the field of Biblical science—just now testing out the national and governmental "gadgets" of Europe and Asia—is revealing many useless and obnoxious devices of man, as also sound laws governing progress in the field of Bible learning. (When God's "judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness."—Isa. 26:9.)

"Stop, Look, Listen" before this "proving ground."

TWILIGHT

The Treaty of Versailles, signed June 28, 1919, apparently intended to reduce to submission for all time Germany and all eastern and southeastern Europe. It apparently intended to make Great Britain master of Europe, if not of the world.

Today, twenty years after the Armistice of November 11, 1918, "all the world" is wondering after a man who, then a paper hanger in Austria, has since entered Germany, seized power, exalted himself and Germany to such point that, on September 29, last, "power was given unto him" (cf. Rev. 13:3-7) which already, in the first month, he is using to subdue and control in every direction. He has notified France and England that he cannot trust them unless they control by dictatorial methods the expression of public opinion against Germany.

Certainly it behooves every Bible student, in disregard of every former theory, to "watch" "these things" so rapidly developing, that they may be quickly and correctly identified.

The writer is very glad that from 1893 and after he met and many times conversed with the late R. S. Dwiggins, John L. Wince, S. Roxanna Wince, Mrs. Nichols, A. J. Eychaner, all of whom, with others, and with himself, were deeply convinced by Bible study that Great Britain was the governing head of the dispersed ten-tribed Kingdom of Israel.

In Ezekiel 38:14-23 there is much to suggest that Israel, in the day there spoken of, will be victorious, but not by her own military power. Rather, a "great shaking of the land of Israel" and the raining of "pestilence" and of "hailstones, fire, and brimstone" by God, will defeat the enemy. By His own great miraculous power God "shall be sanctified in thee, O Gog, before (heathen) eyes." This suggests not only national weakness of Israel but also national sanctification. Is the first now overtaking England that the second may be brought forth?

A similar thought is possibly suggested in Revelation 12, where Israel seems to be symbolized by "the woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars." The only recalled Scripture of this symbology is that of Genesis 37:5-10. Joseph had two dreams. In the second, "the sun and the moon and the eleven stars made obeisance unto me." (He was the twelfth star.) His father's chagrin is noted in verse 10 in the words, "sha!! I and thy mother and thy brethren indeed come to bow down ourselves to thee to the earth?" And they, father, mother, brethren, constituted, at that time, the whole house of Israel. Returning to Revelation 12, it reads that, after delivery of the expected child (vv. 5, 6), "the woman fled into the wilderness, . . . a thousand two hundred . . . threescore days." If this chapter refers to Israel, it indicates that she shall be helpless before the dragon, protected only by God's power. And, if Israel in prophecy refers to Great Britain in history, then this would indicate England's temporary let-down.

When Italy struck Ethiopia, England talked but did not act. Why? Because her navy was relatively weaker for Mediterranean service than was Italy's. When Italy and Germany sent aid to Spanish rebels, England talked; never marched. Why? She was slipping, relatively, from strength. When Germany marched in Rhineland contrary to treaty, England watched and complained. When Japan struck China, England, though her warships and diplomatic officers were humiliated, only talked. When Hitler six months ago marched on Austria, England again talked. When Hitler issued his ultimatum to Czechoslovakia September 26 last, England, on September 29, signed and blessed—and lost, unspeakably.

Apparently a great power (read Daniel 7) is rising up in the person of Hitler. So also indicate the numeries on page 1 of October 25 Herald. His identification marks already seem to be similar to those of the dragon-serpent of Revelation 12:15 and of the dragon-beast of 13:1-7. Let us "Watch" coming events.

Apparently England is losing her military prestige, giving way to hideous, subversive, God-opposing powers.

As a result of present developments regarding England and Germany, many peoples of Europe and Asia fear they are in the twilight of a setting sun. But-

God rules; not man. Therefore, to the Christian, "Lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh" (Luke 21:28). And,

Out of the confusion of twilight of this rapidly closing world a bright new world of peace seems to be in the dawning.

"When ye see these things" "Watch" and discern.

Let's Talk of the End

By James M. Watkins

INSTEAD of deep, profound study, I am thinking of a little story I heard about a boy, a BB gun, and a hornets' nest. In the case of the boy and the BB gun we're not so much interested, for they're only the forerunners of other events; but in the case of the hornet, the end is important.

Much will undoubtedly be said by many other writers in the months to come about the world's parallel of the boy and the BB gun, the forerunners of the great event; but it is about that really important thing I wish to speak—the end itself.

Over the past (who knows how many years?) people have come to speak of "the end of the world." My elders can undoubtedly recall better than I the concern and actual fright that have been stirred up by these periodic prophecies of the certainty of the world's complete doom and destruction on a certain date, and how it has led to the giving away of property and all worldly assets, although for what reason I can't possibly imagine. It points out the unreasoning fear that has been inspired by these seasonal outbursts.

Of the fears that I have known in my early childhood, I think one of the most important was inspired by one of these calamity predictions. I recall how I spent hours of many sleepless nights in contemplation of the dreadful and terrifying aspect of the end of the world as it has been pictured over many years by those who have never understood, I'm afraid, what the Bible does say about this so-called event.

If only these prophets of doom created these impressions it wouldn't be so bad, but I sometimes wonder if there are not times when we all say things that create impressions that we do not intend to create simply because we do not choose our words carefully enough.

Did you ever consider the psychology of the words you use? To make it simpler, let us assume that you gave each of two sons five dollars to go to the circus (more likely you'd give them fifty cents; but we can assume anything). After a short time you meet them and the first son says, "Father, my money is half gone." But the second son, a bright young man, speaks up, "Why, I have half of mine left yet." Almost invariably you'll think what a thrifty young man the second son is. What makes the difference if you say a glass is half full of water or is half empty? Certainly the amounts of water are the same, but the impressions you create are

I think we are inclined to pay too little attention to the effect our words have on people, and particularly on children. We may mention that we are nearing the end of the world, when we don't even believe that, certainly I don't, and a few minutes later we've forgotten all about it, but to the listener it may bring many distressing thoughts, merely because he did not thoroughly understand.

I said I don't believe in the end of the world. I don't; for it is clearly indicated that the kingdom of God is to be on earth while the finality of the word "end" indicates that the earth would return to the void it was at the beginning. "They shall sit every man under his vine, and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid" (Micah 4:4). So says the Scripture. A fig tree is material. It has to have roots in good solid earth. It couldn't exist in a void. The close of this age is no implication of the end of the world, i. e., universe.

That the old order shall change and a new order be instituted I do not doubt. So instead of mentioning the end of the world, let us say rather the present order is rapidly approaching the end. Such, it most certainly is. But the fact that we are nearing the end of the mess that man has made of his social existence is nothing to arouse fear or distress, for the new order ushers in a new day where the unpleasant things have no place. We certainly can't be sorry for that.

Like the hornet, that thing called "the end" is important, and the way we speak of it is doubly important. Instead of calling it the end, why not call it the beginning, for it is just as much that? It is the beginning of a new day, the great day of Christ's reign on earth. Considering the muddle we're in, it is certainly something to long for, not to fear.

Let us consider well the psychology of the words we use to describe this approaching time. The end implies the ultimate, nothing more to be accomplished, a fearful, terrifying finality, and endless void. The beginning implies hope, joy, a pleasure in the years to come, a bright and optimistic future. The end robs us of our hopes, our ambitions, and plunges us into the apathy of despair in which the future is meaningless. When we speak of the beginning we have hope, ambition, a sense of pleasant purpose and desire in the though that we may have a place in what is yet to come.

Making Our Religion Attractive

By Mary A. Gesin

"And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."

EVERY teacher of God's Word desires, among several other things, to make that teaching so attractive that it will win to Christ those under his instruction. Even before that teaching is recognized as truth it must be attractively presented in order to win the hearer away from error. It goes without saying that the honest teacher will strive to make his teaching conform to truth, as his own understanding progresses, and his own convictions grow in a like direction.

The Master Teacher is the great Example for all lesser teachers to follow. He is the One by whom they must pattern their teaching. But, first of all, to do this successfully they must pattern their lives after His, for one's teaching is reflected in one's life.

If Jesus were now on earth we could picture the "common people" following Him "gladly," as they did in the days of His ministry (Mark 12:37). He drew to Himself by His own winsome personality those whom He would win to His Father's ways. Those whom we might shun sought the Savior of men to learn from Him the way of life. And there was a reason for this.

Perhaps one of the most outstanding characteristics of the Christ was His humility. It was the more evident in view of the lofty position He occupied before God. Study the story found in John 8:3-11. Can you find in it any evidence of stern authority and repellent justice such as one of us might display? Though the Son of God might well have shown unyielding severity, yet His kindly words, we may be sure, did more to win this erring one to the path of rectitude than any of the accusations of scribe or Pharisee.

The apostles marveled at His sinless life, but they loved Him for His gentle kindliness, His unassuming graciousness. As He went about teaching the gospel, He did not condone evil, nor did He incur the opposition of those He would teach by an ostentatious display of His own right-cousness. He allowed the purity of His life to speak for itself.

A study of the four Gospels, with an intensive survey of the way that Jesus taught and lived, is at all times most helpful. Study Him, imitate Him, for He is our model in winsomeness of personality as well as in spotless purity. Note His attitude in public places, along the seashore, in the synagogue, among the homes of those whom He loved and those who loved Him.

What Christ was every Christian, and most certainly every teacher, should endeavor to be. The Apostle Paul paints a word picture of the true Christian, and of Christ, surely. These are the colors and tones he uses in the portrait: "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things" (Phil. 4:8). Can you picture any finer things to "think on"?

Remember, the wisest man wrote that as a man "thinketh in his heart, so is he" (Prov. 23:7). What nobler results could one desire than those that come from thinking on truth, honesty, justice, purity, and loveliness? Such would be reflected in the features of the thinker and are the crowning attractions of the Christian's character.

A student of the Word tells us that in the above verse (Phil. 4:8) is the only place in the New Testament where the words "lovely" and "of good report" occur. The former means that which is "dear" to anyone; the latter signifies "that which excites admiration and wins approbation." The two expressions signify, together, "Be lovable; let your life win the hearts of all around you."

Can a teacher of the Bible strive for a more effective means of impressing his hearers? Can he find a better way to gain their acceptance of these same truths, provided always that he studies intensively the subject matter taught, and arrives at truthful interpretations of it? God Himself will "guide you into all truth" (John 16:13).

Not every pious Christian is a lovable one. Some people "sour" their Christianity by too much acidity, too much censoriousness. Others are so just that they lean backwards, away from people whom they might uplift. Some, calling themselves Christians, may never consciously do a wrong act, but they may never do a pleasant one, either.

All Christians, especially teachers of young people, need a "dose" of the Apostle John, as some one aptly put it. His first letter, as well as his Gospel, reveals the pathway that a lovable Christian should follow. Listen: "If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John 1:7).

Further: "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure" (1 John 3:2,3). There are many more similar expressions in this brief letter. Read it prayerfully.

Let us all, as teachers of God's Word, lean on the Master Teacher. Let us study His life and pattern our lives after it, even as we would have our pupils do. His example can turn the most repellant life into one of winsome personality. A lovable Christian is always the most powerful argument for the gospel. If we would attract others to Christ we must make our religion attractive by our manner of living.

"GO HOME TO THY FRIENDS"

By D. G. Harvey

THE fall conferences are over, local churches have held their annual home-comings, where isolated brethren have driven miles to meet again with those of like faith in the home church. The long winter months draw near, long months when those isolated brethren are alone to fight a lone fight of faith, without the close fellowship. It is to those brethren that the writer would bring this message.

Mark records the story of a man, wild, insane, one who made the tombs his abiding place. No doubt this man had friends who loved him and desired to care for him, but because of his mental condition, even their attempt at kindness seemed harsh. We read that this man was captured and bound with chains, but with the brute strength of the insane he broke his chains, cut and tortured himself with stones. "No man could tame him."

Then Jesus came by. When this man met the Son of God he was healed. His mind at peace, he became sane, even a follower of the Christ.

The day came, however, when the Lord must move on to new fields. As He left by ship this man, whom "no man could tame," begged to be allowed to follow. What disappointment when the Master refused to grant his plea, saying to him, "Go home to thy friends, and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee"!

Like this man we were born in sin, wild, and, while most doctors would declare us of sound mind, just so long as we live apart from God we cannot be wise. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom" (Prov. 1:7). While we do not live among the graves, a home without love is like a tomb. We are not bound with chains, but are restricted by laws and customs which we sometimes break in following our natural desires. Then we injure ourselves more than others, and no man can give us peace.

We, too, met the Son of God through the Word. Repentance and baptism followed. We, too, are followers of Christ. Do you remember the great desires that sprang in your heart, desires to do great things for Him? Did you ask His will to be done? Perhaps your work is not in some strange land. It may be you are needed for some humble task. Can you hear our Lord's words, "Go home to thy friends, and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee"?

What has the Lord done for me? I was deep in sin. I feared what I knew must come—my life must end. I had seen my friends die. I had carried them to their resting places. I knew death would come. No hope! Fear of the unknown!

A dear friend then told me of Jesus. I began to learn of Him—how His death on the cross was for me, that He had promised to call me from death. He was my Friend. Hope sprang up. I saw death as but rest till Jesus comes; then a new and greater life. What peace! What joy! No fear of death! "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" (1 Cor. 15:55).

"Go home." What greater work could you ask than to "go home to thy friends and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee"? Go home to wife or husband. Go home to father or mother.

We have an example in the Word. When Jesus first called Andrew, Andrew went home. He found Simon Peter, his brother, and told him, "We have found the Christ" (John 1:41). Not much is said of Andrew, but Peter did a great work. Andrew's work went on through Peter, John Mark, and on an on through others. The truth spread. What if Andrew had not gone home?

Truly, God has done great things for you. "Go home and tell thy friends." Perhaps your brother, like Peter, will be a great worker for Christ—if you, like Andrew, do your part.

A DOUBT MADE CLEAR

By Mrs. William Stine

O, happy heart,
With a mind at peace!
When will the dying
Of loved ones cease?

When will the grave
Open her dark mouth,
And allow those asleep
To wake and come out?

You say, "Christ will come!"
But how do we know?
There is nothing but strife
In this world below.

Will He come to a world So full of distress? Or will He await a A time of righteousness?

Dear one, the tree is in bud,
And summer is nigh;
God's sign to watch
For the Savior on high.

To a world of trouble
The trumpet will sound,
And God will awake
Those asleep in the ground.

Some to life everlasting,
Some to shame and contempt;
But in a world made new Wickedness will be exempt.

God's kingdom established
On earth will be—
A heavenly place
Throughout eternity.

The fields that in the past have been sown to gospel seed—true gospel seed—are now ready for the harvest. Hundreds have been reached through the Sunday school, Berean society, and Bible classes. Many of these have been carefully taught in the doctrines that form the intellectual basis of our faith and have been led to see that knowledge alone is not sufficient, but that to be effective faith in the gospel must be supplemented by baptism for the remission of sins, followed by a life of consecrated service. But all have not responded to your appeals. All have not taken a definite stand for the truth. We want these dear ones, we want them every one! God wants them! Christ wants them for His church!

And that is our task now—your task and my task—to bring them in. And what a joyful task it will be, that of bringing in the sheaves! For "he that goeth forth weeping, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him" (Psalm 126:6).

"I GO TO PREPARE A PLACE FOR YOU"

Consequently, it is the only place that requires to be prepared. Indeed, Scripture seems to recognize but two spheres of service, viz., heaven and earth, and generally places one in contrast to the other. May we not, then, reasonably assume that when our Lord used the word "heaven" as in Matthew 6:9, 10, He had in mind the same "heavens" (plural) as spoken of in the Old Testament, to which we have already made reference? (See also Psalm 103:19-22.) We come then to the natural conclusion that His words clearly convey the inference that this earth is the only place where God's will is not done, and therefore the one place that needs preparing.

Further, if we consider in conjunction with these thoughts the oft-repeated promises that wars shall cease, that sin and death shall be no more, that the earth shall "be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea" (and what could be more complete?), and that God's will shall be "done on earth even as it is in heaven," have we not ample proof that this is the place that our Savior has gone to prepare? "The heavens even the heavens are the Lord's, but the earth hath he given to the children of men."

THE PARABLE OF THE NOBLEMAN

There is one parable which seems such a perfect parallel of the events spoken of in John 14 that we are surprised that they are seldom if ever brought together, for they would seem to be but different expressions of the same subject. We refer to the parable of the nobleman in Luke 19: 12, who goes to a "far country." It is acknowledged by nearly all Christians that Christ is represented by the nobleman, and the far country to which He goes is admittedly heaven. Let us notice the order of events in these two passages which appear to be so closely related. As in the promise of the prepared home, the nobleman "goes into a far country" to receive for himself a kingdom and to return. Just as an Englishman living in India, and having become proficient in knowledge concerning India, goes to London, England, to "receive" the viceroyship of the Dominion of India, and to return to that country to receive the people over whom he will rule. The only place he is said to return to is the country he left. No mention is made of return to the far country.

Further, we should take into account that Christ promised His disciples that they should be rulers over cities, that they should judge the twelve tribes of Israel, and that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob would "sit down in the kingdom of God." With these thoughts in mind, and many others that might be mentioned, the accumulating evidence becomes almost overwhelming that the earth is itself the "place" being prepared, and over which Christ will ultimately rule, not only as "King of the Jews," but as King of the whole earth.

One more thought before we close. When we carefully study the descriptive passages concerning the joys of the redeemed on the renewed earth, it is almost impossible not to be impressed by the fact that only through actual service that expresses itself in bodily action, can happiness be manifested. We assert, without fear of being disproved, that Scripture does not contain any record of bodiless beings of any kind going to heaven. Indeed, bodiless beings are a contradiction in terms. Popular theology may teach it, but the Bible certainly does not. The Bible and nature divide life into two great classes-one dormant, the other active. Life is dormant in the seed, and all but valueless, but expresses itself in glory and power only through the body which God gives to the seed, for He "giveth to every kind of seed a body of its own." Comparatively few know of the glorious wonders of the living trees, and their actual active individual existence for the good of mankind. Few know but little of the amazing instincts of the animal world, many so minute they are only capable of discernment through powerful microscopes, and little do they know of the capacity for knowledge that God has given to the human race, yet the characteristics of each and all can only be manifested through the body which God gives to the seed of vegetable, animal, or man. In every instance the expression of life is limited to the body through which it is manifested, in this or any succeeding age. "It doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." There is not a promise in the Bible that we shall "see him" before then.

"Behold, the tabernacle (dwelling place) of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away" (Rev. 21:3, 4).

Whittling!

How many of you were reared in a small town? I was, and it was a great experience. There one gets to intimately know practically every one in town—their eccentricities, their joys, and their sorrows. Yes, and you will come to gather about "the town pump," and to join in the small talk that is invariably going on. Before you know it you will be whittling on a small stick with the rest of the men who are gathered there, or sitting about a roaring fire at the post office in the wintertime.

Let us notice these whittlers for a time. Practically every man when he is loafing will whittle. Some of them are really great artists at this pastime. I have seen some works of art come from the knives of these idle men. Most of them, however, just whittle without even trying to make anything. Sometimes they will take long strokes with their knives, and before long the stick they are working upon will be all gone. Others will cut away with patience, and the tiniest shavings imaginable will fall to the floor as a result of their efforts. Some of the whittlers, after littering up the floor or making a pile of shavings on the ground will clean them up and burn them. One man once remarked that he didn't know why he whittled as he did, for it never availed him anything but work in cleaning up the mess.

These men just whittle on a stick. I am thinking at this time of another "whittling." Let our lives resemble the stick and ourselves the whittlers. We have seen men take their lives, and with bold, long strokes, really do things with them for a short while. But before long the life is gone, and with nothing to show for the energy used. Remember Alexander the Great? He was the greatest warrior the world has ever known, capturing practically all of the then-known world. Alexander died at the age of thirty, because of the fast life he had lived. Most authors and music composers die at an early age because they study too hard and dissipate their lives for the sake of their art. Then, too, we have the common run of people who put on a show of their lives for a short while but seldom last very long.

The great majority of men can be compared with the man who makes the small shavings from his whittling stick. These men just go along in the same old way that their fathers and their grandfathers have gone, with never a desire for anything better. I know of many people who are completely satisfied with the bare necessities of life, and nothing more. They work during the summer to live during the winter, and cure their meat in the winter so they will have it during the summer. They never go anywhere, especially to church, and no one ever goes to visit them. Some of these people, when they see that they have made a

Even as there are some whittlers who really make some articles beautiful to look upon, so there are some people who whittle their lives so that they will really amount to something in this life, and in the next. The best knife to use in this type of whittling is the Holy Word of God. There you will find instructions in what to do to round out your life in a uniform way. If the edges of life are a bit rough, either through your own fault or some one else's, the Scripture will help you to smooth them. When you are through with this life, people will remember the beauty. You will make no litter, will leave nothing behind that will make people think evil of you. Your diligence in shaping your life to the rules laid down by the Scripture will gain you eternal life in the age to come.

You cannot shape my life. Neither can I shape yours. The shaping of our lives is up to our individual selves. How are you going to shape yours? To conform to the world, or to conform to the rules of Christ?

Opportunity

By Mary Richardson

Opportunity often comes without our seeking. But this is not always the case. Frequently opportunity must be developed. There are people who are not anxious to do certain things, and find an opportunity to get around them. Once we have dedicated our lives to Christ, it will not be hard to find opportunities to do good. Also, after we have started to live for Christ, it will not be hard to find an opportunity to go back to the world, but let us ever guard against this. One must live fully for Christ, not be a backslider. If one constantly keeps gazing back over the past life, and side-steps every opportunity to do good, his life is one of wastefulness. It should be particularly emphasized here that we will not be rewarded for what we might have done, but will be held responsible for what we could have done.

A true Christian has the outstanding traits of faithfulness and preparedness. He is ready for an opportunity of service when the time comes. Everyone should be ready to serve, as Peter states in 1 Peter 3:15. Most people prepare themselves ahead of time, so when the time arrives they are ready for service.

May God ever give us the strength to prepare for the opportunity of service when it presents itself. May we never pass up an opportunity to tell others of Christ.

PREPARED BY MADGE SAVAGE

"Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect" (Matt. 5:48).

Is There a Difference?

We hear parents, older brothers and sisters, and friends speak of some of the rulers of countries far over the seas. Do you know in some countries people cannot worship God as they desire? They are unable to go to church where a minister tells them of God! These people are not even allowed to worship Him in their homes!

How wonderful it is that we can worship God at church, and in our homes!

Or, is there a difference to be seen in our homes when compared with their homes? If our clocks talked, how many hours—or minutes—would the clock say were spent in home worship?

Have you been able to start a daily home devotional?

Some day, perhaps, we may be as those persecuted people across the ocean, for "Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord." But if we all forget to follow God our land will be different.

If our nation were to forget God, and the privilege of freedom of worship were to be taken away from us, would there be sorrow in our hearts because we had not taken time to pray and study and sing His praises when we should have?

Let us make our homes Christian now!

Better Than the Mighty

When a man captures a city he receives a great amount of praise. "He is strong," some one says. "He must be wise," remarks another. Yet you may be better than any such leader. You may be a greater hero! You need neither conquer any land nor capture any people. All you need do is to be "slow to anger," and to "rule your spirit" (Prov. 16:32).

In our lesson for this Sunday, Jesus tells His followers not to call their brothers names, for He says it is just as bad to hate as it is to kill. When we speak, our words reveal our thoughts. When we say words which show we hold our brother in contempt or scorn, then our hearts hold him in contempt, too. If we scorn a person it means that he is thought so low, or inferior, as to not be worthy of our attention. In other words, we think we are better than he. Whoever says such words or thinks evil thoughts will be punished unless he repents.

Jesus says if you are angry with your brother without a cause no gift you bring Him will be accepted. Go first and make things right with your brother. Then offer Him your gift.

What causes us to say evil things? Yes, one reason is that we generally lose our tempers. We fail to keep the instruction, "Rule your spirit." Perhaps we get angry too quickly, also.

Jesus is our guide and example, but we are the rulers, too. We are not machines that must work without choice, but we have a choice to make about everything that we do or say. When we get angry and call names we make the wrong choice. Jesus is never our guide when we do wrong. An angry person cannot think clearly, so he who is angry is a very poor ruler. That is why so much harm is often done in "fits of anger." May we pray, "Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me."

Temples

Where did Mary, Jesus' mother, find Him one day when He was twelve years old? That is correct, He was talking to the doctors in the temple. Perhaps you have seen pictures of that visit. It would be a lovely picture for your room.

There is another kind of temple for us to consider. Friday's lesson tells us of this other temple. "What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you?... Therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit which are God's" (1 Cor. 6:19, 20).

The Holy Spirit lives in each of us. Our body is a temple! If we rule our spirits then the spirit of lust and anger will not get control. God's Spirit is good. We are not our own to act any way our mind or heart desires. But we are bought with the blood of Jesus. Because we are not our own, when we accept Jesus as our Savior, we have all the more reason to control our tempers and our tongues. You may not yet have been buried with Christ in baptism, but you may be in training in walking a Christlike life. The sooner we begin to control ourselves the easier it will be as each day comes. Let us glorify God with our tongue, and use our spirits to express the love of God toward friend and foe. By so doing, we will keep the sixth rule God has given us to use as a guide to being perfect, even as He is perfect.

BURR OAK CHURCH OF GOD Burr Oak, Indiana

We are planning an all-day fellowship meeting at Burr Oak for Sunday, Nov. 13. All churches of this State and immediate states are asked to participate.

The afternoon service is to be an impromptu symposium of visiting ministers and leaders. Morning and evening speakers are being contacted with a view to bringing the best available.

We are not calling it a "home-coming." It is hoped it will be state-wide in scope, taking the form of a quarterly meeting.

It is hoped this will set a precedent for greater intercourse among the churches of the State. All are welcomed.

James W. McLain.

TO BRETHREN EVERYWHERE

In building our church, the cost went far beyond our original plans, and this taxes our people in and about Tempe to the limit, and then some. If your eye falls upon this appeal, we ask any brethren, who are so inclined, to help us even though it be ever so small. There are really only a few of us to bear the brunt of the burden and we will appreciate any help that may be given in love. We feel that now we are in far better condition than ever before to press the Master's cause in this community. We have had an uphill fight in having to meet in a hall where conveniences were few. Address any communication or offering to Mrs. Victor Corbell, Tempe, Arizona.

VACATED ROOM IN GOLDEN RULE HOME

Mrs. Minnie Steffa, for six years a resident of Golden Rule Home, has recently gone to make her home with her cousin in Tacoma, Wash. This leaves a vacant room in the Home for a new member. Anyone interested in coming to the Home may write to Mrs. Idona Romine, Golden Rule Home, Oregon, Ill.

ILLINOIS QUARTERLY CONFERENCE November 13, 13, at Macomb

The Fall Quarterly Conference of the Illinois Churches of God will be held at Macombis at 409 South Dudley St. A short business on November 12 and 13. The place of meeting necting of the executive board will be held at that time.

Paul C. Johnson, Pres.

ILLINOIS NOTES

Bro. Harvey Krogh, treasurer of the Illipois State Conference reports that so far he has received $84 in response to the Dollar Day eards. If you haven't sent yours in yet, do so how.

He also states that rain has put an end to evangelistic meetings at the Independence School near Camden. There seemed to be some interest and he hopes to hold another meeting these concertainty presents.

when opportunity presents.

Bro. and Sr. Bernard Crofton and family of Mt. Carroll, Ill., were in attendance at the morning services of the Oregon, Ill., Church on November 6.

BRUSH CREEK CHURCH OF GOD Near Tipp City, Ohio

Sr. Martha Lehman died October 27, and following the funeral sermon, preached by Bro. J. A. Patrick, Oct. 30, was laid to rest near her parents to wait the call of her Master. Burial was in the cemetery adjoining the churchyard.

Russell Shellhaas, husband of Sr. Pearl and father of Sr. Vivian Magaw, is slowly recovering from a second stroke in one week.

Sr. Dorothy Demmitt is recovering satisfactorily from her recent operation, but is not yet able to leave the hospital.

A fine, inspiring sermon by Bro. Patrick, a former pastor, was enjoyed by everyone Sunday morning, Oct. 30, The evening service was conducted by Bro. Emory Macy, who spoke on "The Truth of the Bible." It was very well presented, and showed what can be done when we carnesly put forth our best and trust in the Lord.

Bro. Charles Doll plans to conduct the evening service on November 6, and urges all children and young people to be present.

Mrs. Eunice M. Pearson, Reporter.

A WELCOME FOR BROTHER MAGAW

Oregon church members, to the number of about 75, invaded the home of Bro. and Sr. S. E. Magaw on the evening of October 21 to tender them a welcome. An enjoyable evening was spent in listening to a fine musical program, and in joining in two or three stimulating Bible games, after which Bro. Magaw kindly contributed some of his entertaining sleight of hand numbers.

Lunch was served by the committee in charge, and an hour of getting acquainted followed, for many of the Oregon members were new to Bro. Magaw and family.

Mrs. Mary Gesin.

SOUTH LAWN PARK CHURCH Grand Rapids, Michigan

Twenty-two, including the pastor, were present at Blanchard on Sunday to represent the South Lawn Park Church at the quarterly conference of Michigan. With the rest of the large congregation Sunday afternoon, the Grand Rapids delegation was deeply impressed with the splendid analysis of present world events made by Bro. Gerald Cooper. It was one of the finest prophetic discourses we have heard in a long time.

At the request of the group meeting on Tuesday nights for devotion and Bible study, the pastor has entered upon a series of illustrated studies on the Great Prophetic Periods. Each member of the group is provided with an outline chart and lesson material for advance study.

The senior Berean class, which is composed largely of Sunday school teachers, are taking up each Thursday evening the lesson for the following Sunday, studying under Bro. Marsh's guidance the doctrinal features presented.

Last Friday night a large group of church folk gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Witham to help Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Barrows celebrate their silver wedding anniversary. Entertainment was provided by Bro. Van Fleet and Bro. Hopkins.

Next Sunday night the pastor will speak on "President Roosevelt's Personal Message to the Jews of Grand Rapids." A representative group of Jews of this city requested the President to exert his influence on behalf of their persecuted brethren in Europe. The President, in replying to their request, outlined the policy of this country with regard to Palestine and expressed his sympathetic attitude toward that long-suffering people in most significant terms.

Sr. Richard Skeels is slowly recovering from

Sr. Richard Skeels is slowly recovering from a serious illness which overtook her shortly after the anniversary services in South Lawn Church. The sympathy and prayers of the entire body are called forth whenever this be leved "mother in Israel" is suffering.

Gleanings From the Field

The brethren at Kokomo, Ind., have recently remodeled their church building, having raised the ceiling six feet, and added sixteen feet to the length of the auditorium.

Jerry, seventeen-month's-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Byron Cummins of West Milton, Ohio, died in the Troy hospital, Oct. 20, from the effect of acid fumes. The maternal grandmother is Sr. Sara Curtis of Troy, Ohio, Rt. 3.

Bro. L. E. Conner plans to assist in the Burr Oak, Ind., conference, Nov. 13.

A request for prayer for Sr. (Mrs.) Lillian Brewer of Macomb, Ill., has come to us. Sr. brewer has just undergone a serious operation at the St. Francis Hospital in that city. Also, a word of encouragement from any of the brethren would be much appreciated.

With no pastor, the Brush Creek, Ohio, congregation carries the following Sunday schedule:

Sunday School 9:30 Morning Worship 10:45 Evening Worship 8:00

The elders of the church, Bros. James Kessler and Vivian Magaw, and two other willing workers, Bros. A. J. Hoke and Emory Macy are doing the preaching. This is all very good news. "Press on."

Bro. F. L. Austin will be the guest speaker at the Illinois Quarterly Conference at Macomb, Nov. 12 and 13.

Bro. Rolland Stilson informs us that the South Bend, Ind., brethren anticipate erecting a church building within another year, and that 133 opera scats have recently been purchased for use then.

MICHIGAN CONFERENCE

The fall Conference convened at Blanchard, Oct. 24-30, with Bro. Gerald Cooper of Eden Valley, Minn., as guest speaker. He gave some variey, Alini., as guest speaker. The gave some very interesting sermons on "The Preaching of Jesus," "Our Inheritance," "The Holy Spirit Today," "Repentance and Immersion," "Jesus, Light of the World," "The Return of Israel," "Why I Believe in God," and "People, and the Signs of the Times."

Sunday was an ideal day and was well taken advantage of. The most distant point represented was Coats Grove, with more than half the members in that vicinity attending. Grand Rapids was also well represented.

We are indeed glad to welcome to Michigan, Bro. G. E. Marsh, the new pastor of the Seuth Lawn Park Church, and will appreciate the lift of his large "spiritual" shoulder to our wheel of progress.

A short business meeting was held Sunday afternoon, at which time Miss Leota Hanson, Treasurer of the National Bible Institution, gave a short talk on the work in general-The Herald, Truth Seekers' Quarterly, Golden Rule Home, and the Training School.

The sermon hour was divided between Bros. Cooper and Marsh, after which the ordinance of Communion was observed,

How thankful we are for the inspiration and encouragement these meetings in fellowship bring in these trying times. Therefore, plans are under consideration for another conference to be held in early spring at the Pennellwood Chapel.

When Christ comes, we trust He will find the banner of truth still unfurled in Michigan. Mrs. L. F. Sloeum, Sec.

ARKANSAS CITY, KANSAS

Elder T. A. Drinkard of Handley, Texas. closed a ten-day meeting at Arkansas City, Kansas, Oct. 30. Owing to different causes. in many cases unavoidable, the meetings through the week were not, I am sorry to say, very well attended. But there were several from a distance in attendance at the Sunday services. Attica, Wellington, Milan, and Caldwell were represented, and our little church was pretty well filled.

Bro. Drinkard gave three sermons each Sunday to appreciative audiences. All were happy te hear again the gospel message of hope and comfort. Sunday noon a basket dinner was served in the church basement. The day was spent in Christian fellowship, showing how good it is for brethren to dwell together in peace and love.

Bro. Drinkard left Sunday night after evening services for his home in Texas. We had very enjoyable meeting. We hope he will sit us again. Mrs. A. J. Chaplin. visit us again.

OUR COMFORTING HERALD

It was suggested by Sr. William Hanson the other day, that Sr. Ross, who lives near Alaska, Mich., and has been confined to her hed for some weeks, would welcome a call from the former editor of The Restitution Herald before she went to Lansing for the winter. Bro. Abbott, pastor of the Pennellwood Church of God, having kindly consented to accompany us, we drove to the pleasant country home of Bro. and Sr. Ross, both of whom were baptized by Bro. James A. Patrick years ago.

Sr. Ross had not been informed of the day of our coming. As we entered her room, where she lay reading in bed, we saw on a chair close to her hand, a pile of Restitution Her-After a few moments' conversation, we questioned her about them, and she said that she was going over them before she went away, picking out old papers containing the choicest articles to take with her and read again during her confinement in the house this winter. She told of the joy she experienced in reading our little paper from week to week and said that she depended upon it for news of the outside world, especially for informa-tion concerning the Jews in Palestine and of other events which prove that our Lord's return is near.

We had never met this sister before, but she knew us, and we felt that we knew her. The Herald was the tie that had brought us together and helped to make us one in faith and hope and love.

If those who "give of their best to the Master," through the columns of this journal, could know of the pleasure they afford such shut-ins as Sr. Ross, and of the inspiration and uplift they bring to hundreds of others whom they may never see in this life, I am sure they would feel amply repaid for their painstaking efforts and perhaps respond more frequently to the plea of our new editor for helpful "copy" for the paper.

WILLIAM COULTER

William Coulter was born in Wisconsin on January 26, 1865, and died October 22, 1938, at his home near Eden Valley, Minn.

On September 7, 1893, he was united in marriage to Belle Driver. To this union eleven children were born, all of whom, with their mother, survive to mourn his death. The children are: Ethel, now Mrs. Roy Cloukey; Esther, now Mrs. Elmer Wendroth; Ida, now Mrs. Chester Goble; William; John; and Russell, all of this community; Lizzie, now Mrs. Walter Randall of Mora, Minn.; Alma, now Mrs. Lester H. Vadner of Monticello, Minn.; Mary, now Mrs. Carl Storlie, and Eileen, both of St. Paul, Minn.; and Dorothy, now Mrs. Clayton Magee of Gary, Ind. There are also thirty-one grandchildren, other relatives, and a great number of friends who knew and loved him, who now mourn his passing,

Services were held at the Church of God in Eden Valley on October 25, 1938, with the writer officiating. Interment was in Lake View Cemetery.

May we, family and friends, cherish his memory as we look toward the great day of resurrection in which the "dead shall hear" and "live." John Denchfield.

Board of Evangelism

Preach the Word

C. E. Randall, Superintendent

The fall work in our churches is well under way. It seems that this season of the year is the most suitable for hard driving church work, and it is also the most ideal time of the year to do evangelistic work. Weather conditions are generally favorable; income, especially in the rural communities is better at this time of year, therefore making it easier to finance a revival. Considering all these factors, the Board of Evangelism would like very much to take advantage of this favorable season to press its work. It can move only as the membership make it possible by their contributions. We would like to pioneer in new districts where the message-the distinctive message of the Church of God-has not gone. If you would like to have new fields evangelized. then send your offerings to the treasurer. whose name and address are given below,

Then, too, the Board has made certain commitments to assist the work in the South, and, according to the expressed feeling of these attending the General Conference, the money spent in the Southwest has been wisely invested. In order to carry out this work of assistance in reestablishing the southern field, we need regular monthly offerings. We could do much more if we had the means to do with. These efforts are deserving our full hearted support. Remit your gifts to the cause of Church of God evangelism to Elder C. E. Lapp. 41-31st Ave. N., St. Cloud, Minn.

"Home, Sweet Home"

Provided by the love and sympathy of the entire brotherhood of the Church of God, Golden Rule Home assures to the members of its Family the comfort, security, and solicitous care which the word "home" always suggests.

Here the anxieties of earlier and more active life are laid aside forever. No threat of eviction for non-payment of rent or taxes or other indebtedness troubles the hearts of the residents of Golden Rule Home!

No doctor or hospital bills, no grocery, coal, or light bills to be met the first of the month, bring fear to the minds of the Golden Rule Home Family!

All such obligations and burdens are taken from the shoulders of these older ones immediately upon their entrance into the Home and are carried thereafter by the Golden Rule Home itself, which is amply able to bear the load on their behalf.

A hearty Christian welcome awaits all who seek the protection and lifelong support the Home provides.

NUMBER 6

THE CHURCH OF GOD AT EDEN VALLEY, MINNESOTA

The Eden Valley Church was organized by Elders E. E. Thoms and S. P. Matheny, February 16, 1899. On March 26 a hall was rented, and on April 2 the first Sunday school met. In 1900 the present building, shown above, was erected.

Now a new pastorate begins. Elder Gerald Cooper of Ripley, Illinois, was installed as pastor on Sunday, November 6. Brother Cooper is a former member of our Bible Training School; is the present editor of the Berean page in The Restitution Herald; and has already proved himself a capable, zealous, and acceptable minister. May God bless both pastor and congregation in their work.

The Restitution Herald was entered as second class matter, October 16, 1911, at the Post Office at Oregon, Ill., under act of March, 1879.

We Look at Palestine

On July 8, 1937, a British Royal Commission recommended to divide Palestine into three parts, one for the Jews, a larger for the Arabs, and a third—including Jerusalem, Bethlehem, and a narrow strip to the Mediterranean—to be continued under British control.

Now, November 9, announcement is made by Britain that it has abandoned its own proposal of dividing Palestine into these three parts. The proposal had been unpopular with both the Jews and the Arabs, but the Jews had agreed to it as a step toward something better.

Still hopeful of finding a peaceful settlement of the problem. Britain now plans to soon call a conference in London, to which leading Jews and Arabs will be invited. If this conference fails, as it very likely will, Britain will then assert her rights and "announce the policy which they propose to pursue." A little time will be gained in the play.

"Peace at any price," which has recently stamped Britain as a lion losing its howl, may soon be the rule laid down for Palestine, a land much farther from the Lion's protection than Czechoslovakia was, though of course of more interest to the Lion. The Jews and Arabs are surely going to keep right on in their fussing. Either would welcome the aid of some strong nation and, while the Jews can hardly expect such aid from other than England, there are possibilities of the Arabs finding a sympathizer. Hence, peace in Palestine, if at all possible, is vital to England.

Palestine is in a strategic position. It is on the north flank of the Sucz Canal which, though belonging to England, is of interest to Italy as a way of intercourse with her Ethiopia. Palestine is also on the path along which German domination is spreading since the moral defeat of Czechoslovakia.

Germany is looking eastward, for there is no other direction for expansion, and Hitler is ambitious. Germany cannot look westward against France and England, nor northward against Russia, nor southward against Italy. It is now "Eastward, the course of empire takes its way." Who knows it any better than Hitler?

Italy, interested in Mediterranean control, is threateningly calm! Benito Mussolini, though a measure less bold than Herr Hitler, is by that same measure more crafty. Benito, we think, is finding a peculiar satisfaction in calm waiting to see what England can do to cure the boil in Palestine. Italy is studying the game. We may expect her to move. The game nears the climax.

In the past four months the Arab rebellion has resulted in 2,458 casualties, which is more than twice as many than during the previous two years. Italy sees. And now with Britain's abandonment of her own proposal to divide Palestine, Italy sees a German-humbled England admitting she doesn't know what to do.

However, Britain still has 20,000 soldiers in Palestine. She is still very much in the game. Before the game is over many men will be forfeited, the God of heaven will make a decisive move, and there shall appear a crowned King, and victory for the people of that King.

Until then, it is a fight. "Watch and pray."

When the Moon Withdraws Her Shining

When the sun, moon, and earth are in direct line there is an eclipse. Such a phenomenon occurred on the evening of November 7. Then the three spheres were so aligned that the earth was directly between the sun and the moon, and the earth cast her shadow on the moon.

When the earth, sin cursed and war smitten, insisted on getting in the way and being noticed, she could do nothing but east a shadow. Then the glory of the moon was lost, and, looking farther, the glory of the sun was lost, as the moon is non-luminous and really gets its light from the sun.

Now Jesus is prophetically called "the Sun of righteousness." All light is in Him. Like the moon, the church of God can reflect only the glory of the "Sun." But when the earth insists on getting in the way, and it does, there of necessity appears an eclipse. Then the church withdraws her shining, and the glory of the "Sun" is lost.

Christian, beware. Do not allow the world to get between you and the "Sun."

Writers

We are still in need of more contributors for the columns of The Restitution Herald. Especially do we urge all the ministers of the Church of God to assist us, and thereby assist themselves and the cause we are working for, that of sowing the precious seed in all places. We need you.

COOPERATION

By Gerald L. Cooper

N THE great State of Minnesota we hear a great deal about cooperation. There the people have joined hands in forming cooperative creameries so that they might sell their milk and cream at better prices. They have gasoline companies, groceries, machine shops, feed stores, and many other examples of cooperative selling and buying. It seems to me that if these businesses are run as they should be, the idea is a splendid one. However, man being as he is, we find that many of these places have been corrupted, and that the real purpose of the cooperative has been lost. The leaders have so arranged it that they are making the profits and the common people, the members of the organization. are the losers. It has ever been thus. Men have never been able to work unselfishly together for any length of time, no matter what they were trying to accomplish.

Most of you have seen at one time or another the very apt illustration of the two mules and the two piles of hay. The mules are pictured as being tied together, and each one is straining at his end of the rope to get to the pile of hay closest to him. As long as they do this neither can eat his hay. The picture then shows both mules working together, first eating one pile of hay and then the other. Men are that way also. As long as they pull in the opposite directions nothing is accomplished, but let them begin to work together and twice as much can be done.

GOD'S COOPERATIVE PLAN

The plan of God in regard to man is the greatest cooperative that has ever been founded. Sometimes we think that God is not cooperating with us, but if we will be reasonable we will find that it is the other way around. Let us review a few examples of cooperation given us in the Scripture and see to what conclusion we can come.

At the time God cursed the earth because of the sin of Adam, He also gave us a promise. "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou cat bread, till thou return unto the ground" (Gen. 3:19). If we will but work and till the soil we shall be granted a living from that soil. This is the promise of the Creator! Later, when God began to deal with the nation of Israel, He gave instructions in regard to the treatment of the land. Every seventh year the Israelites were to let the land lay completely idle. Not only did this allow the land to rest, but it gave the Israelites more of an opportunity to worship God. Today in our country the most of the land has been so overworked that it won't raise anything. Perhaps if the farmers would do as God commanded the Israelites, and would let their land rest, utilizing the time they weren't working to serve God, their land would raise the crops they desire. There is no doubt, that if we cooperate with God, He will do the same with us.

Moses, the great lawgiver, was a man who worked with God most of the time. He obeyed God in leading the people of Israel out of Egypt. He gave the law to the people as God gave him instructions. In all of these things he praised God and took no credit unto himself. One day (Num. 20: 8-10) God commanded Moses to speak to a rock, to bring forth water. Instead of doing as God had commanded, Moses smote the rock, bringing forth the water. Almost immediately we find God telling Moses that because of his disobedience in this thing, he would not be allowed to go into the Promised Land. This lack of cooperation on the part of Moses cost him this prize he coveted.

Jonah, a prophet of God, was told to go down and prophesy to the people of Nineveh. Jonah didn't want to do this thing, and went in the opposite direction. We know the story of Jonah and the whale, how God caused a great fish to swallow him, keeping him in the confines of the fish's stomach for three days and nights. When Jonah was finally liberated he went gladly and did as God had commanded him. A working attitude on his part, in the first place, would have saved him from his difficulties.

It seems to me that we have a good many people like Moses and Jonah today. Especially in church, people show a lack of willingness to do what they can to cooperate with their fellow members and with God. You will remember the following words, found in Acts 2:1: "And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place" (italies mine). Suppose that some of the early apostles had not been in accord with the rest of their fellow workers. Do you think the blessings of Pentecost would have been as wonderful as they were! Many church members today remind me of the small boy with a new baseball who let it be known, "If I can't pitch, I'll take my ball and go home." We shouldn't be like that in God's work, but rather cooperate to the best of our ability.

As I write these words, I am preparing to take over the pastorate at Eden Valley, Minnesota, a place where many of our best workers have labored. No one realizes better than I the responsibility that is mine. I need the cooperation of every member of my church and we need to cooperate with God!

There are many of our churches that have new pastors this fall. Remember, brethren, pastors are but human beings like yourselves, and they will make mistakes. Work with your pastor and, together with him, cooperate with God. Your reward will be great in that great cooperative movement that God and His Son, Christ, will bring at the soon coming of our Lord! May we all so live and conducour lives that we may have a place with Him then, is my prayer!

"If Thou Hadst Known"

By Harvey Krogh, Jr.

IT 18 told that a man who went on an ocean voyage took food with him for the journey. Each day at mealtime he would eat, but soon discovered that he had not taken enough food along. After suffering the pains of hunger for a few days he came out of his cabin and begged of the steward if he might have some food, stating that his provision was exhausted.

The steward told him that he had paid for every day's food when he paid for his ticket, and that food was served for him but he had not been coming to the dining room for it. For lack of knowledge the man might have starved.

God said, "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge" (Hosea 4:6). So many are destroyed and so much is lost for want of a little knowledge.

When Jesus rode toward the city of Jerusalem just before His triumphal entry, He wept over the holy city, and said, "If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes" (Luke 19:42). Yes, the things which belong unto thy peace. How well He knew of the destruction that was coming upon that city. Jerusalem, the city that killed the prophets and stoned those righteous men who were sent unto it!

Jesus knew the Scriptures. He had no doubt read Ezekiel 16, which tells of God's former dealings with that city which He said was naked and filthy when he found her. God washed and clothed and adorned her with gold and silver and became as a husband unto her. But she played the harlot and turned away from God and worshiped other gods. Even the daughters of the Philistines were ashamed because of her lewdness. Therefore God said that He would cause both her enemies and her lovers to destroy her and her children. And as God foretold, so was Jerusalem destroyed by the Babylonians about 600 B. C. After seventy years of desolation, that great city was restored in the days of Ezra and Nehemiah. For a time the people again worshiped God and lived in peace. But the priests changed the laws and the people worshiped only in form. The temple became a den of thieves and they loved not the Lord their God.

Now, in the days of our Savior, Jerusalem had an opportunity to repent. The greatest of prophets had walked her streets and healed her sick, yet they knew not Him who wept and said, "If thou hadst known... the things which belong unto thy peace!" Jesus knew what would happen. He would be crucified and would rise the third day. His church would take form on the following Pentecost and it would grow. But the wickedness of that city would start the great persecution of His followers. Her sins would soon come to the full and her enemies would besiege her. Her children would starve to death and she would be utterly destroyed as a city.

These things all came to pass in 70 A.D., even as Jesus foresaw them. It is no wonder that He wept over that city. For, had they only known, they could have repented and there could have been peace for a long time to come. It grieves me to think of the beauty of Jerusalem, the city of peace, and the blessed peace that belonged to it, but it was lost.

I sometimes wonder if we know the things that belong unto our peace. Do we know the things that are ours? I mean the things that are ours right now. If people only knew the joy of salvation and the peace that passeth understanding how much more they would get out of the life that God has given them and how much more they would want to put back into this life for Him. It is our duty to impart that knowledge.

Sometimes we think that if it were not for the consolation of the resurrection and the accompanying rewards, this life would be a terrible trial, for no more than we get out of it. We may think of 1 Corinthians 15:19 and say that proves it. "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." It might well seem that the only thing we get out of this life is just an anticipation of the life to come and if we did not receive that eternal life, we would be the most miserable of all creatures.

Let us not be so pessimistic! Many other translations render that verse similar to Weymouth's translation. "If in this life only we have had nothing more than a hope in Christ, we are the most pitiable of all men." Paul isn't talking about this life and the next, he is talking of this life and the effect of Christ's resurrection upon our life now. If you are not getting a lot more satisfaction in life since you became a Christian, you are to be likened to the man who went on the ocean voyage. If you don't have more in this life than just a hope in Christ, you are missing almost all in this life that you are supposed to be enjoying in the Lord. If you have been thinking that 1 Corinthians 15:19 meant that we were to be miserable in this life, and have been finding it so, you are indeed the most miserable of men.

We praise God that we have more than just a hope in Christ. We have Him. "He that hath the Son hath life" (1 John 5:12). Who is the Son but the risen Christ? "Sceing then that we have a great high priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession" (Heb. 4:14). "Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him."

Do you come unto Him every day in prayer? It is one of the things that belongs unto thy peace. That is why Paul spoke of having more than just a hope in Christ in this life. Because Christ is risen and has ascended He makes intercession for us and has given us the Holy Spirit as an earnest of our inheritance of eternal life (John 16:7; Eph. 1:13, 14).

Do we as individuals have peace? "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ'' (Rom. 5:1). And therefore we have peace also with all men.

Do we have love and hope? "And hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost (Spirit) which is given unto us" (Rom. 5:5).

All of these things make the Christian life more than worth while without counting the joy of the resurrection. "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose" (Rom. 8:28). That doesn't mean that just whatever happens to us will be for the best, but God will see that the best things come to us if we love Him. The little promise of John 15:7 can change our lives into the rich fullness that is ours.

Jesus paid for all of these blessings of this present life for us when He died, was buried, and raised to the right hand of God. Therefore let us know of the things that belong to our peace and let us be enjoying the Christian life to the extent that we will not be able to keep from telling these blessed things to others.

Why Does God Permit War?

By Harold Hardesty

THE recent war scare in Europe brought home to many THE recent war scare in Europe crought world-wide proportions is in fact a possibility. We have been covering our eyes to realities and making ourselves believe that although wars have been spreading destruction in other countries, we are beyond the pale. Now we note the ease with which the world could again become involved in the flames of a universal war. We are forced to realize that the greatest peace efforts of all time have failed utterly in their purpose and that the "war to end war" was fought in vain. Already our President has asked Congress for increased appropriations to be used for defense purposes during the coming year. Thus, America cannot get around the dread possibility that sooner or later she may again be called upon to offer up her youth in human sacrifice to appease the god of war.

After twenty years we still have with us some of the more awful and lasting results of the last war. We have but to look inside our Government institutions and hospitals to witness them. There we find men with bodies that are crushed and broken. In some cases they are so horribly mangled that it is hard to recognize them as human beings. There, also, we find the living dead—dead in mind, yet alive in body—to be tormented day and night for the remainder of their natural lives. Only death can relieve these people of their agony.

And all this must be done again!

It is small wonder that ever since there was a war the cry has gone up: "If there is a just and merciful God in heaven, how can He permit war to exist?" This question has gone unanswered for many people, Christian and infidel alike. Yet it is a question which requires an answer if God is to be known and understood.

Let us stop and analyze it, however, before we attempt an answer. First, we find that it carries the inference that God had no part in bringing about war, but that He merely allows its existence in the world, which is true. Sinful man has brought it upon himself; he is punishing himself for his own disobedience. It also presumes that God has the power to banish war from the earth. War can only destroy. It can bring only heartache and pain and cruel death. So why does not God abolish war if He is all-powerful?

The time is coming when He will put an end to war, for "there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain" and "nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more" (Rev. 21:4 and Isa. 2:4). But for the present He is content to allow war to continue. Our question, then, resolves itself into this: what purpose can God have in permitting war to exist? To answer this we must have a proper understanding of God's plans and purposes in dealing with mankind.

God created man for His own pleasure and glory (Isa. 43:7). By obedience through faith man glorifies God (Heb. 11:6). Adam no doubt glorified God on many occasions, for he had many reasons to do so, but one day doubt crept in and weakened his faith, causing him to disobey God. Because of his disobedience God pronounced death upon him by separating him from the Tree of Life. Death was the punishment meted out for disobedience, which is sin.

As mankind multiplied, sin and disobedience increased at an alarming rate until God repented that He had created man. Then the Flood came. "The windows of heaven were opened" and "the fountains of the great deep" were broken up and gushed forth to drown the entire population of the earth like so many rats, with the exception of eight persons. Noah, a preacher of righteousness," found favor in the sight of God, and he and his family whom he had converted were provided for, but God passively allowed the others to die.

We observe two results of the Flood: it punished the wicked and it made it easier for the man of God to live righteously. It was a curse upon the sinner and a blessing to Noah.

Although the wicked had been cut off, sin again pre-(Please turn to page 10)

Our Changing World

Article 2—God's Schools

By F. L. Austin

"The earth is the LORD's, and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein" (Psalm 24:1).

The earth and its fullness are the creation of God. He created them; both are His.

Of man and woman it is written (Gen. 1:28),

"Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it: and have dominion over . . . every living thing that moveth upon the earth." Then followed the first recorded test of man's tenancy in God's planted garden. He failed God by turning from His word, and in misusing the provision essential to life. Thus, in the early morn of human history man demonstrated to himself his ineptness to dwell in the paradise of God's presence. "So Yahweh God put him forth from the garden of Eden,—to till the ground wherefrom he had been taken. So he expelled the man,—and caused to dwell—in front of the garden of Eden—cherubim, and a brandishing sword-flame, to keep the way to the tree of life" (Emphasized Bible, Gen. 3:23, 24).

No, man's failure under test in no wise indicated his final overthrow. Nor did it indicate God's capitulation to man. Rather, God "expelled" man from the garden of His presence, provided for keeping "the way to the tree of life," and put man under training.

We must quickly pass over the childhood of the race. Notice, however, that "Enoch walked with God"; "Noah was a just man"; Abram believed God: which facts, with others, bear witness that God was guiding and building the race of man during those first centuries. To correct "the wickedness of man" that was in the earth in Noah's day, God brought on a flood; to shield against increase of Nimrod's wickedness, God confounded the language that they might "not understand one another's speech" and "scattered them abroad... upon the face of all the earth" (Gen. 11:6-9), thus leading them toward national establishments. Later, He called out a lone man, Abram, and his wife. Of Abram He said (Gen. 12:2), "I will make of thee a great ration, and I will bless thee, ... and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed."

And so He did. To Abram were given two sons: Ishmael, who was born to him by Hagar, his bondmaid; and Isaac, born to him by Sarah in her old age. At Genesis 21:10-13 God instructed that, though of Ishmael, the first-born, He would "make a nation," yet, for the particular nation which in Genesis 12:2 He had promised Abram, the plan was that "in Isaac shall thy seed be called." To Isaac, Jacob was born, whose name was later changed to "Israel." He was the third link from Abraham toward a nation. To Jacob, twelve sons were provided—the twelve sons of Israel.

These twelve great-grandsons of Abraham, and all their families, were, by famine, driven into Egypt and "became there a nation, great, mighty, and populous" (Deut. 26:5).

GOD'S BEGINNING SCHOOL

This Israel nation, made of Abraham's seed, in Egypt, was God's nation. He made it for a special purpose: that He, through it, might manifest to all the world His mighty power in righteousness. Through miracles of plagues and other wonders He took that nation of people from Egyptian bondage to Mount Sinai and to the Promised Land. He stayed their journey at Mount Sinai till He could seal an added covenant to, and with, them. The commandments, words, judgments, laws of this covenant are written in Exodus, chapters 20:1 to 24:8. To these the people said, "All that the Lord hath said will we do, and be obedient."

This Law-Covenant I have likened unto a Beginning School. I have done this because of Paul's inspired comments found in Galatians 4:21 to 5:1. Referring to Hagar and Sarah, Abraham's bondmaid and his wife, the freewoman, he says (vv. 24, 25), "Which things are an allegory: for these are the two covenants; the one from the mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar. For this Agar is (in allegory) mount Sinai in Arabia, and answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children."

That is, Hagar, the bondmaid mother, did, in Abraham's day (and now, also), represent the Mount Sinai covenant and the later Jerusalem capital which enforced the covenant, while her bondson, Ishmael, represented the children of the covenant. The covenant, which was conditioned upon obedience to the commandments and judgments and statutes and ordinances, was, in its fullness, the God-given text of instructions for Israel to learn and obey. That people were the pupils placed by God under that school of instruction. All of their citizenship standards were the results of the lessons from that covenant-school. Moses and Aaron and their true successors were the master instructors, and later, Jerusalem was the seat of learning to whose campus all Israel were to repair at least three times a year to attend to certain matters as instructed by that covenant. Jerusalem was, in the language of today, the Alma Mater of all Israel, that is, of God's nation.

I have called it God's school for His nation Israel. It was more than that. In twentieth century language it was His university established for them. It was a university because it taught, not only one subject, but every subject pertaining to every phase of life. The laws and judgments and rules of that government regulated in theory: their relationships and duties toward God; their relationships and duties toward one another domestically, socially, industrially, economically. They directed their agriculture, their legal processes, the care of their poor and sick and orphaned; the punishments and methods toward their criminals. These laws were their National constitution; their industrial, economic, financial, jurisprudential, sabbatical code of operation. Faithful obedience thereto rewarded them years of blessings of Heaven far greater than was ever experienced by any other people. God evidenced His mighty power for good unto them. Their snitching of contrary customs and rules from other peoples and incorporating them into daily life habits wrought heartache, devastation, national overthrow.

GOD'S FINISHING SCHOOL

A new School, new covenant, has been assured. It has been sealed by the given life of Christ. It is not of the character of the bondwoman, Hagar, but of the freewoman, Sarah; not Sinai, but Zion; not of bondage, but of freedom; not under Moses, but under Christ. Its campus, which will be established when God's nation Israel is ready to return to God, will not be at old Jerusalem but at new Jerusalem. Its teachings are, in the meantime, available to all inquirers who are willing to learn by faith, in advance.

More of this must be deferred to the next paper. In the meantime, duty requires that we shall search for the educational status of that nation which walked out from God's Beginning School. That School has now long been closed and God's Finishing School for His renewed Israel has not yet been opened. Where is Israel getting her education? is the query.

ANOTHER WOMAN, BABYLON-A FOREIGN SCHOOL

Some nine centuries before Christ, God divided Israel into two nations as recited in 1 Kings 11:20-40 and 12:12-20. Judah and Benjamin formed the kingdom of Judah, having Jerusalem for its capital, while the other ten tribes were given three several names—Israel, or Samaria, or Ephraim—with the city of Samaria as capital. A little before 700 B. C. God cast out ten-tribed Israel unto the Assyrians. About 600 B. C. He delivered Judas unto Babylon, for seventy years. It is indicated that at this latter time God largely withdrew His guiding hand, for a time, from the whole of the twelve tribes, and permitted Babylon almost unlimited power over the earth. Not Made With Hands

By F. E. Siple

A RED-BLOODED American boy with lots of energy was given a bicycle. His father in making the gift explained to the lad that this particular bicycle would not last so very long, but that he wanted him to learn how to use it and use it well, and that a much better one was already prepared, and would be given to him when he had learned to use this one properly.

It is not difficult to understand how a boy under those circumstances would do his best to master the art of handling a bicycle. One can easily sec that he would study it from every angle, and do his best to convince his father that he was worthy of, and capable of handling the better machine.

How few of us realize that this is almost the exact situation that prevails between ourselves and our heavenly Father, except that most of us do not show the same intelligence in dealing with our bodies and life that the boy uses with the bicycle! This life is the gift of God. This body, though not permanent or very lasting, is the result of a Father's love. The human surroundings in which we find ourselves are far from perfect, but they have been given us in order that we might learn how to live—how to deal with life.

There is much comfort in the words of 2 Corinthians 5:1, "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." We all love this life, and our present human surroundings. Years of association have made these conditions dear to us, even though in them we often "groan, being burdened." But, though we love this present order, there are none of us who do not long to be clothed upon with the better life, the house not made with hands. That this life is eternal and is in the heavens is easily understood, because we are taught in the Scriptures that our life is hid with Christ in God, and that when he who is our life shall appear, we also shall appear with him in glory.

In spite of all the unpleasant things of life, we never desire to be "unclothed." None of us under normal circumstances wish to die. But though we do not care to give up what we have by way of life, yet we do long for Jesus to come, and give to us the better life, that we may be "clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life.

The picture of this happy event is given to us very beautifully in the last part of 1 Thessalonians 4. Jesus shall come, His voice shall ring out, the trump of God shall sound, the dead in Christ shall rise, and the living in Christ shall be changed. These are the ones who shall be clothed upon with immortality.

What believer is there who does not long for that day? Who would not yearn for the house not made with hands, and pray, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly"?

Saul of Tarsus

By J. E. Adamson

TARSUS, a city in Cilicia, lay snuggled among the mountains at the crossroads for the caravans trading between Asia and Europe in the days of the greatness of Imperial Rome. Its geographical location gave it an importance out of proportion to other cities of Asia Minor. Rome, in those days, always had armies on the move, and large amounts of supplies were needed. It was this trade that brought considerable wealth to the family of a Jewish trader who was the father of our leading Bible character, Saul of Tarsus. As one of the items of trade with the Roman army and also with the caravans, was tents, and other canvas goods, it was enly natural that the growing boy should learn the art of tent making, as all Jewish boys were required to learn a trade, even though their family position should be such as to make it improbable that they would be called on to earn their own living.

This boy was born about twelve years after Jesus of Nazareth was bern. As he came to advanced boyhood he was educated in the fine schools of his native city, and enjoyed the freedom of a citizen of Rome, as he says in Acts 22:28, "I was free born." About the time that Jesus of Nazareth was thirty years old, Saul was sent from Tarsus to Jerusalem to finish his education in the synagogue school of Gamaliel, and was a student in that school during the thrilling events leading up to the crucifixion of Jesus. The young men in these schools became strongly enthused by the adverse teachings the scribes and Pharisees poured into their ears. Saul, and probably many others, joined the sect of the Pharisees, and at times came to lead demonstrations against the followers of Jesus the Christ. In fact, soon after his graduation we find him in charge of the group that stoned Stephen to death, where they laid down their clothes at the feet of a young man whose name was Saul.

At that time Saul received some sort of commission as a prosecuting officer, and he asked and received authority to go to Damascus to carry on the effort to stamp out by death and imprisonment the followers of the great Teacher. With this authority went the right to take along soldiers of the high priest to carry out his orders.

Leaving Jerusalem by the Damascus Gate, the party crossed the Brook Kedron and journeyed across the hills past Bethany, and on to Jericho, then turned up the Jordan Valley toward Damascus. They found the first part of the trip pleasant, but the last part across country that is almost desert, a total of one hundred sixty miles, about the distance from Los Angeles to Yuma, Arizona, and much the same character of country and climate. While traveling in the hot part of the day, members of the party became very quiet, each occupied with his own thoughts. Even the horses became listless. Then suddenly with a flash of white light brighter than the sun, the summons to Saul came,

"Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? It is hard for thee to kick against the thorns." Blind from the rays of white light and stunned by the voice he had heard, Saul answered, "Who art thou, Lord?" Imagine the shock to his self-assurance to hear the answer, "I am Jesus whom thou persecutest."

The effect of the vision would indicate that there was somewhat of an explosive effect, as we are told in Acts 26:14 that, "When we were all fallen to the earth, I heard a voice speaking to me in the Hebrew tongue, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? It is hard for thee to kick against the thorns."

The entire party saw the light and heard the voice, but only Saul understood the words, only Saul saw the one who spoke, and only Saul said, "When I could not see for the glory of that light, being led by the hand, I came to Damascus." Here he was made recipient of God's mercy and his blindness healed at the hand of one Ananias, who said, "The God of our fathers hath chosen thee that thou shouldest hear the voice. For thou shalt be his witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard." What a change for the young man who had but a few days previously held the garments of those who had stoned the martyr Stephen to death! The young man who had been taught that the disciples of Jesus had removed and hidden His body and spread the story of the resurrection, came now to see that Jesus was really the living Christ, "declared to be the Son of God by the resurrection from the dead" (Rom. 1:4), and that the story of Jesus Christ was the "gospel . . . which is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth" (Rom. 1:16).

Saul remained in Damascus until he recovered from the shock of the vision. He then went into Arabia (Gal. 1:16-20), and in the solitude of the desert he saw the Christ and received the "revelation of Jesus Christ" (Gal. 1:12) so that he needed not the story from man. Then he went back into Damascus. After three years he went to Jerusalem, and afterwards went preaching in the regions of Syria and Cilicia. His experiences in the districts where he was well known brought him to a change of name to get away from the old disgrace of having "done many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth."

Ten years after his experience on the road to Damascus, we find Saul entering upon a missionary effort in company with his friend Barnabas. Leaving Antioch in Syria, they went to the Island of Cyprus and from there to parts of Asia Minor, for about two years. This trip called for travel by foot of about 665 miles. It was during this trip that the change of name took place and from then we find him always as Paul the Apostle. He had become a wonderful exponent of the gospel of Christ and from him we get most of our knowledge of the resurrection in its threefold aspect, "Christ the firstfruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming," and the others "when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father. Read 1 Cor. 15: 23, 24; 1 Thess. 4:14-16; Rev. 20:4-6.

The second missionary trip took about thirteen years, and brought many wonderful experiences and remarkable sermons, which are too long to reproduce here, but the reader should not miss them. Read Acts 13:16-38; 16:20-34; 17:16-31; 21:37-40; 22; 26.

His ministry was not all pleasant. Listen to his words in 2 Corinthians 11:22-27, "In labors more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, of the Jews five time received I forty stripes save one; thrice was I beaten with rods; once was I stoned; thrice I suffered shipwreek." Be sure to read the entire quotation.

After fourteen years of the Master's work, he says of himself, as he looked back to the days when the great change in life came, "I knew a man in Christ above fourteen years ago, (whether in the body, I cannot tell; or whether out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth)." Then he says, "Lest I should be exalted above measure through the abundance of the revelations, there was given to me a thorn in the flesh. . . . And he said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee."

His sermons and his letters abound with the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, with the story of the resurrection and the eternal judgment, giving comfort and assurance to those who look "unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith." His words have come down through the centuries to us. "Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way," and "having an high priest over the house of God; let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water. Let us hold fast . . . without wavering."

His return from the last missionary journey brought his arrest at the insistence of the Jews, and ended in his death in Rome, but it gave opportunity for some strong talks on his favorite subject, the resurrection. Notable among these was the address before Agrippa, also the letters to the Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians. 2 Timothy, and Hebrews. The second letter to Timothy is aflame with the Spirit, but the crowning statement in chapter 4:6-8 should be seared into the mind of all those whose lives have had the influence of this man's wonderful gift. Knowing that he was soon to suffer death, he said, "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."

God's Power

By Mrs. W. F. Hoskins

GOD is all-powerful! Man's power is great, but it is limited. God's power is unlimited. He is also all-wise, and the Maker and Giver of every good and perfect gift in life. His marvelous power formed the heaven and the earth (Gen. 1:1). His power, wisdom, and goodness are shown in His dealings with men and nations.

We see God's power manifested in the leading of animals into the ark, where Noah waited to receive them. Two by two the animals of all descriptions went into the great ark of safety, well typifying that men and women who are now led by God's power are also entering into their great Ark of Safety, even Jesus (Gen. 7:9).

God's marvelous power is seen in the story of Abraham, especially in the offering up of his son, Isaac. Miraculous power provided an offering when Abraham, through his great faith in God, knew of none other than his own son for an offering (Gen. 22:10-13).

When the children of Israel came to the Red Sea, divine power parted the waters, and they went through on dry land. Wonderful, unlimited, beyond measure is His power (Ex. 14:29).

Again, we see God's power as the children of Israel marched through the wilderness, though they murmured just as we are prone to do today. There in the wilderness God heard their cries and murmurs, and sent them quaits and manna, that they might eat and be filled (Ex. 16:8-11).

In Exodus 17:6 we see that by God's power water was brought forth from a rock, a type of the lifeblood that flowed from the Rock, Jesus Christ, whereby Christians receive everlasting life, and all this is governed by God's great power. God further showed the Israelites that He was with them by leading them in a "pillar of the cloud by day," and "the pillar of fire by night." "He took not away the pillar" (Ex. 13:21, 22).

Oh, that we might all come to realize that power in its fullness! That we might be as obedient as our father Abraham!

Again, we see God's power as it raised Jesus our Savier from the tomb (1 Cor. 15:14). We know Jesus now has that same power. Once He raised the dead back to mortal life. When He returns He will raise His sleeping people to immortal life, when indeed the sick will be healed, and the ears of the deaf will be unstopped, not for a few short years, as was the case in His first ministry, but for eternity.

In Matthew 8:24-26 we read of a great storm at sea, and "the ship was covered with the waves: but he was asleep." Then His disciples awakened Him, saying, "Lord, save us: we perish." Then He said unto them, "Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith? Then he arose, and rebuked the winds and the sea; and there was a great calm." Power? Yes, the power of God was working through Christ.

Multitudes learned of Christ's power when He fed the five thousand with five loaves and two fishes. They did all eat, and were filled. Christ's power revealed the true powers of God, for it came from God.

Now the power of God is in the world today, and it is doing its work. Paul said, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." Have you come into the light and favor of God's power? Has the gospel done a work with you?

BIBLE CURIOSITIES

THE learned prince of Granada, heir to the Spanish throne, imprisoned by order of the Crown for fear he would aspire to the throne, was kept in solitary confinement in the old prison at the place of skulls, Madrid. After thirty-three years in this living tomb, death came to his release, and the following remarkable researches taken from the Bible are marked with an old nail on the rough walls of his cell. They told how the brain sought employment through the weary years:

"In the Bible the word 'Lord' is found 1,853 times, the word 'Jehovah' 6,855 times, and the word 'reverend' but once, and that in the 9th verse of the 111th Psalm. The 8th verse of the 118th Psalm is the middle verse of the Bible, the 9th verse of the 8th chapter of Esther is the longest verse, the 35th verse of the 11th chapter of St. John is the shortest. In the 107th Psalm four verses are alike, the 8th, 15th, 21st, and 31st. Each verse of the 136th Psalm ends alike. No names or words with more than six syllables are found in the Bible. The 37th chapter of Isaiah and the 19th chapter of 2 Kings are alike.

"The word 'girl' appears but once in the Bible, and that in the 3rd chapter and the 3rd verse of Joel. There are found in both books of the Bible 3,586,483 letters, 773,693 words, 31,373 verses, 1,189 chapters, and 66 books. The 26th chapter of the Acts of the Apostles is the finest chapter to read. The most beautiful chapter of the Bible is the 23rd Psalm, and the four most inspiring promises are John, the 14th chapter, 2nd verse; John, 6th chapter, 37th verse; St. Matthew, 11th chapter and 27th verse; and the 37th Psalm, 4th verse. The 1st verse of the 60th chapter of Isaiah is the one for the new converts. All who flatter themselves with vain boastings of their perfection should learn the 6th chapter of Matthew."—Canadian Magazine; selected by G. M. Birkey for The Herald.

APPRECIATION OF GOD'S KINGDOM

By C. E. Randall

"And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever" (Rev. 11:15).

To appreciate anything to the fullest extent, we need to have an understanding of it. To merely see a vial of adrenaline would have little effect upon us, but to understand the processes by which it is obtained, and the uses to which it is applied causes one to appreciate its scientific value to mankind. So it goes in all fields of human activity—true knowledge of the worth-while creates appreciation of it. Tacitus has said: "It is common to esteem most what is most unknown." And this is true in a narrow field of thought, more among the unstudied. But to the thinker the relative value of knowledge to appreciation is an accepted proposition.

How true this is of the kingdom of God! If people had a knowledge of God's kingdom and correctly understood its earthly nature, they would, like Peter, give all diligence to make their calling and election sure in order to obtain an abundant entrance into it.

The basic fact of the kingdom is its external character. It is not the triumphant company of believers in heavenly bliss—but a material kingdom under the direct, personal, and visible rule of the Christ. It is no less material, earthly, and outword than the kingdoms of this world; for it is the kingdoms of this world that become the kingdoms of Christ upon His return to Zion. This is an all-pervading truth.—Church of God Messenger.

WHY DOES GOD PERMIT WAR?

vailed in the earth. Now we come to see the divine purpose brought about by war. God had made a promise to Noah that a flood to cover the whole earth would never come again, so He allows earthquakes, floods, pestilences, and wars to exist now for the same reason He permitted the Flood to come upon the earth in Noah's time—that the wicked might be held in check and that those who desire to live in righteousness might do so without fear. The Christian can thank God that He permits wars to exist in a world filled with wickedness and sin. War is a blessing to the Christian just as much as the Flood was a blessing to Noah. "All things work together for good to them that love God"—including war.

In the scientific laboratory it has been discovered that maggets, hatched from the eggs of flies, are of invaluable service in cleansing wounds and human bone tissues by eating away the decayed matter. Wars serve much the same purpose by cleansing the world of moral decay. History gives ample evidence that every empire that rose in splendor soon lapsed into decay and was wiped out of existence by war. In the conquest of Canaan, Israel was commanded at times to completely annihilate whole cities because of their moral and spiritual depravity.

A more up to date example of the divine purpose in war is modern France. Prior to the World War, France was perhaps the most morally corrupt nation in existence. From France has emanated much of the poisoning and degrading literature of today. Most of the lewd and passion-arousing dance steps originated in that country, Paris was, and still is to some extent, the fad and fashion center from which shocking fads spread over the world. France also enjoys the distinction of originating the nudism cult.

What happened to France in the World War is a matter of recorded history. She suffered the effects of the war more than did any other country, not excluding Germany. Most of the fighting took place on French soil, leaving much of it unfit for use of any kind to this day. So many of her young and middle-aged men were killed off that the birth rate fell far below normal, and for a long time her population kept decreasing instead of increasing. France knows that another such war would be fatal to her existence.

World conditions and Bible prophecy indicate that another such war is just in the offing. But it will be far more ghastly. The deadliest weapons which human minds can devise will be used. A gas will be found which will be so powerful that men's flesh will consume away, leaving nothing but human skeletons (Zech. 14:12). It will be a war of which "there nath not been ever the like, neither shall be any more after it" (Joel 2:2). The world has become a festering sore of moral and spiritual degradation. Not until the sore breaks and the blood flows freely (Rev. 14:20) will it be cleansed.

God provided the ark to carry Noah and his family over the judgment which terminated "the world that then was." He has also provided an ark to carry the righteous over the tribulation which is to mark the end of this present age. That Ark is Jesus. "Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is" (Jer. 17:7).

But Babylon was the idolatrous, sensual head and beginning of a succession of kingdoms that, according to Daniel 2, were to rule throughout Gentile times. At the close of Gentile rule, Israel is promised restitution beneath the care of God's new covenant.

Too much has the writer in former days thought of Babylon in the sense of a politico-military power. That she was all that is not doubted. That she was also the leading head of an economic and commercial system that was destined to control, temporarily, the earth, must, he thinks, also be recognized. This economic system of thought has spread its tentacles into nearly every phase of industrial, commercial, social, religious, political, patriotic, and criminal activity. It is the one system today of whose golden cup of finance the world as a whole prays to drink. In a sense the dollar seems to be the rudder to guide the whole combined ship.

Concentrated superior economic power at the center and heart indicates widespread poverty and suffering elsewhere.

That industry, labor, boards of trade, market managements, as also organized crime, have long sought—some unwittingly, others knowingly—how to entrap the dollar for economic advantage is quite common thought.

Our madly rushing age is the pupil of this ungodly school. Its teachings permeate deeply and widely.

As God's inspired Word teaches that by allegory Hagar and Sarah indicated two covenant systems of instruction, also associating them with "Jerusalem which now is," and "Jerusalem which is above," so also the writer believes that the same scripture refers to Babylon, the capital city, as related to a ruling system which in Revelation 17 is spoken of as the woman, Babylon. Revelation 16:19 reads, "Great Babylon came in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath." In the following chapter (v. 4), He speaks of her as "the woman" who "was arrayed in purple and scarlet color . . . and upon her forehead . . . a name written, MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, . . ." Verse 18, further describes her, "And the woman which thou sawest is that great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth."

Within the coils of this far-reaching system both Israel and Judah undoubtedly find themselves. Indeed, they have partaken of her instructions. They have learned them well. Both are now wailing at their predicament.

But a new thing is happening. Listen to John on Patmos. In Revelation 17 and 18, the doom of this great city, this woman, is definitely pronounced. "Babylon the Great is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils." Kings and merchants and shippers wail and mourn at her death. She is completely brought to naught.

The Bible gives us these facts in inspired language. It gives no certain dates. There are Bible numerics which many have computed as indicating these very years of economic depression through which the world is now passing. The Pyramid scalings indicate strongly that the date of Babylon's rapid decline is now upon us.

OUR CHANGING WORLD

If the Babylonish system is the world's school which has developed a world of pupils, and which system is now being eradicated by God, then our world is today passing through that change which is necessitated by the quitting of this ungodly, unholy, poverty-making school, and preparing to accept and engage in God's Finishing School to be dedicated by Christ at His return. To that new campus Israel and Judah will be gathered.

To the Christian, the question of the day is not, What shall happen to this nation or to that nation; to the gold or wealth or status of nation or family? The question is, Can he, by faith, withdraw himself from participating in the God-rebuked ways of Babylon, and zealously push forward in the ways of Christ?

The Safety Line

In this modern age of speed we hear a great deal about safety. Devices are put on our cars to make them safer for us to drive. Traffic rules and regulations are rigidly enforced in order to cut down a mounting accident toll.

On practically every state and federal highway on which I have driven there is a dividing line down the center. We all know, of course, that we should always stay on the right side of that line, except in passing. The other morning as I was driving on a highway on my side of the road, I met a car which came dangerously close to mine. I suddenly realized what that line down the center meant to me. If I had been even six inches across it I would have collided with that other car. That line is a safety line that keeps us all from serious accidents.

There is a "safety line" in our lives today that keeps us on the "strait and narrow" path of life. That line is the Bible, the inspired Word of God. As long as we read its commandments, and stay on the side to which it directs we shall be all right. If, however, we cross over the line we will collide with the world. That collision may be so great that it will cost us eternal life.

Let us stay on the right side of the "safety line."

Brighten Your Light

By Mrs. Jane LeCrone, Woodstock, Va.

"Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven" (Matt. 5:16).

We sometimes hear the first half of the above verse quoted, and wonder what has become of the rest of it. Have we forgotten to glorify God in our good works? Do we do good, only to be seen by men?

All of us have had the experience of being in homes for a short time and, while there, we heard nothing but pleasantries, saw nothing but kindness. Yet, we knew, definitely, that when that family was alone, all was discord in that home. People will show nothing but the best side of their natures to others, but they bare their souls to God.

Do we forget that God sees what man can never see, that He knows the thoughts and intents of the heart? Do we snap at members of the family, who should come first in our thoughts, and purr to the stranger, who should be secondary in our consideration?

It has been said that "God only, knows." But you, too, know your own shortcomings. What are you going to do about it?

Shall we put it this way? "Let your light so shine before men, . . . and glorify your Father which is in heaven." Think it over, friends!

Isaiah 2:5 cautions us to "walk in the light of the Lord." If we walk in the light of the Lord we will have to walk, not blinded by petty grievances against the other fellow. We know what our Lord expects of us as Christians. Then listen, when He speaks through His holy Word: "And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but perceivest not the beam that is in thine own eye? ... And why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" (Luke 6:41, 46).

If we are afflicted with the "nag" habit, and pray for patience, shall we not do our best to overcome the habit, when we are given an opportunity to use that patience? Shall we forget, or—better still—quit looking for "the mote" that is in our brother's eye, and "cast out the beam" from our own eyes? Then we can, indeed, let our light so shine before men, that they may see our good works, and glorify our Father which is in heaven.

Brush Creek Bereans

The junior Bereans at Brush Creek, Ohio, are earnestly working for their Bibles. They have until the end of the year to complete the work. The requirements are:

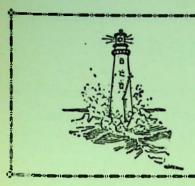

- 1. Memorize the books of the Bible in order.
- 2. Memorize the Twenty-third Psalm.
- 3. Memorize fifteen New Testament verses.
- 4. Memorize the names of the Twelve Apostles.
- 5. Write or relate the life of ten characters of the Old Testament, and ten of the New Testament, giving main characteristics, sins, and accomplishments.
- 6. Be present at least ten times in the last quarter.
- 7. Be responsible for at least three visitors.
- 8. Lead the class in prayer at least once.
- 9. Write a fifteen hundred word story about a person or happening in the Bible.
- 10. Obtain one subscription to The Restitution Herald.

The Bibles are furnished by the Bereau society of the church. We believe this helps to create interest in the work, as well as being a fine thing for those who earn the Bibles.

Eunice M. Pearson, Teacher of Junior Bereans.

Answer

The answer to the question asked in a previous issue of THE RESTITUTION HERALD in regard to Ehud is found in Judges 3:15.

PREPARED BY MADGE SAVAGE

"Keep thyself pure" (1 Tim 5:22).

From a Window of a Home

The evening is cold, and stars are shining brightly. Snow has formed a white blanket on the ground. Let us peep into a window of the home we are passing.

See! There is a motto on the wall which reads, "God Bless Our Home." The room looks warm and comfortable.

What! The whole family appears to be gathered around the piano. One of the children, a girl, is playing. All are heartily singing, "By and by we're going to see the King."

The music stops. The mother speaks, "Dad, you're singing so loudly I can't hear anyone else." The father answers something we do not hear, but makes the family laugh.

They start over. Now we hear a boy soprano. Three small girls sing lustily.

Hush! A baby cries! All the girls rush from the room to be first at the baby's side. Back into the room they come, bringing a little chubby baby girl. All are smiling happily. Mother takes the baby, and once more they join in singing, gathered around the piano.

That look from the window showed us a home with peace, and love, and God enthroned. The family was all together. All were singing that they wanted to see the King some day. He has not yet appeared, but we are expecting Him soon.

Will you be ready when the great day arrives? Make the golden text, printed above, part of your life.

A Change of Clothes

Mary finished her bath, and dressed in clean clothes. As her mother was busy with the smaller children, she did not notice when Mary went outside.

It had rained the night before, and a large puddle was still beneath the swing, toward which Mary ran.

"I'll pump," thought she, as she looked the situation over, "then I won't get dirty." Mary liked to swing just about as much as you do. She climbed into the swing without getting more than the toe of one slipper a tiny bit muddy.

"O, my hands hurt," she sighed after a while. "I'll hold my feet up. Then I can sit down without getting dirty."

"Mary, come here!" called her mother. "Your Uncle Ed is here. He wants to take you to visit Grandpa and Grandma. Hurry, for you must take the next street ear, which will be here soon." As Mother finished speaking, Mary came into view. Yes, she was quite spattered.

Uncle Ed whistled, and her mother frowned.

"Hello, Mary! Where have you been?" laughed Uncle Ed.

"Swinging," answered Mary, hanging her head, for she was sorry her clothes were so dirty.

"Come," said her mother, "we have time to change your clothes. Then you can go with Uncle Ed." Her mother knew how well Mary liked to swing. She also knew how much Mary loved her grandparents.

"I'm ready!" laughed Mary a very few minutes later.

"And just in time. We must run to eatch the car," answered Uncle Ed, as they started on their way.

Our lesson is about keeping ourselves pure. If we wish to keep sweet and pure we must think clean thoughts. For, is it not true that "from within, out of the heart of men, proceed evil thoughts" (Mark 7:21)? Some boys and girls think they are brave and very wise when they accept dares to do things they know are not right. Do you think they forget Proverbs 9:10?

It takes more than a change of clothes to purify one who is spotted with sin. David tells us not to be as the mule or the horse. Read Psalm 32:9.

Building Stones

Shall we recall a little of the previous lessons? First, I'll ask the questions and you answer them.

Who is the one true God we are to worship?

Why should we worship Him in spirit and in truth? In what ways can you show reverence for God?

Now you ask the questions, and I'll answer them.

Our day of rest is used for worship and rest from our daily tasks.

Temperance means moderation, generally. But when habits may be formed from drugs such as those found in alcoholic drinks or tobacco, it means total abstinence.

If we honor our parents we respect their ideas.

Ah, that is an easy question. Last Sunday we learned it is wrong to kill anyone. We also learned it is just as bad to hate anyone.

Read again the story of Mary and the swing. Think of the mud spots of sin. See how first there are a few, then more. Finally an entire change is needed to make one right in God's sight.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

TRUTH SEEKERS' SUNDAY SCHOOL OUARTERLY

Work is now progressing on the Truth Seekers' Sunday School Quarterly for the first quarter of 1939. It will soon be printed. Please send in your order at once if you have not already placed a standing order. This present quarter we sold out and found it necessary to cancel a few orders. Be prompt, so that we will know how many to publish. In-crease the size of your order if your Sunday school can use more.

The price is 15 cents each if three or more are sent to one address. Single copies cost 17

EVANGELISTIC NOTICE

It is our present plan to make a trip South immediately after Christmas. At this time meetings will be held in the two Louisiana churches. If there are other places which would desire us to stop briefly we would be glad to know of such wish as early as possible. Address 140 Celia, S. E., Grand Rapids, Mich. F. E. Siple.

LOUISIANA CHURCH NOTES

It is extremely gratifying to witness the regular attendance of a large number of our church folks at each service. Such loyalty indicates an interest in the spiritual side of life and the gospel of the kingdom of God.

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Kennard left this past week for their home in El Paso, Texas, after spending a number of weeks in Hammond, vis-iting relatives and friends. During their stay here Mr. and Mrs. Kennard attended every service at both churches each Sunday and made for themselves many friends. We surely appreciated their attendance and interest and trust that they will return again.

The Blood River Church has just purchased a new supply of song books.

Miss Thelma Richardson and Mrs. Taft Richardson are recovering from recent opera-tions. Mrs. Gilbert Bottolf was able to attend Sunday school at Happy Woods for the first time in many weeks.

Both churches are looking forward to the Christmas season, and are preparing programs in keeping with the spirit of Christmas.

Our Berean classes have been enjoying some interesting lessons recently and the interest and attendance are good.

Surely we are living in the "last days" when God's Word is being fulfilled before our eyes. Let us all stand firm for the truth and be leady when the King shall come.

Harry Goekler, Pastor.

NEWS OF THE VIRGINIAS

We have just recently returned from West Virginia, where we held a series of profitable and encouraging meetings with the brethren, Oct. 18-27. Good interest was shown, and although the last few days were rainy and cold. the brethren were faithful in attending. We were favored several evenings with special music by some of the local talent, and Sr. Le Crone had a story for the children each evening, which feature was also enjoyed by those "many years young." Although the membership is small, this faithful group are formulating plans for the building of a church in the near future. We pray for their success in this venture and ask God's blessing on these brothers and sisters of like precious faith.

At the present writing we are preparing for like series at the Dry Run Church, Nov. 16-27. We invite all within walking or driving distance to join us in our worship of the Lord.

On Thanksgiving morning we will join in thank service at the Maurertown Church. "Oh, come, let us worship and bow down; let us kneel before the Lord, our Maker." All are invited to attend.

Mrs. J. R. LeCrone.

IN TEXAS AND ARKANSAS

The first week in October the writer held a meeting at Westbrook, Texas, which resulted in two baptisms, Mrs. T. E. Grant and Miss Florence Stewart.

On October 7, Bro. Clint Scott and I started south. We stopped at Normandy, Texas, and preached Sunday night to a very attentive audience. The next day we drove on to Hargill, in the beautiful Rio Grande Valley, where the writer engaged in a four-nights discussion with a Church of Christ preacher upon the subject of the establishment of the kingdom. Loudspeakers were stationed to accommodate the listeners.

Leaving the beautiful valley, dotted with orange, lemon, and grapefruit groves, we motored up the Gulf Coast, via Houston, and into the beautiful mountain scenery of Arkansas. At Bear we held a few nights' meeting. Then on to McGintytown, to the home of Bro. C. E. Weaver, where six sermons found response 13 the hearts of Mrs. Pete McGinty, Mrs. Harvey McGinty, and Mrs. Era McGinty. These three splendid women came forward for baptism, for which we are thankful. We left with a strong solicitation to return for meetings in the spring and summer.

We are now at Cleveland, Ark., where a splendid interest is being manifested. We have three more weeks' work in this State, then we will return to Texas. I will return to Arkansas in March. Those who desire my services will please write me at Sweetwater, Texas. Box 485. Arrangement should be made before I leave home, as it is difficult to rearrange

That you may share in the joys of Bro. S. J. Lindsay of Tempe, Ariz., we quote a few lines from his recent letter, "Our reception (refer-ring to a recent meeting held in the new church building) came nearly running away with us.
... Had all the people remained who came to see the church, we could not have seated them all. . . . God has surely been good to us. Our attendance has increased steadily from the first. With Sr. Lindsay's prospective recovery, and the new church, and the wonderful spirit of our people, I have so much to be thankful fer. May God be praised."

Mrs. Rose Eby of Emmett, Idaho, is visiting her mother and sisters of Oregon, Ill., and vicinity. The mother is Sr. Julia Ordnung.

We were delighted to learn from Bro. A. B. Wilson of Longmont, Colo., that he has baptized his son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Bryce Wilson, also of Longmont. Bryce has considered this step, we know, for a number of years. We pray both he and his wife will stand fast in the faith that Paul calls "one faith."

Elder T. A. Drinkard of Handley, Texas, writes, "Any place where they want meetings I shall be glad to hear from them." That is showing the true evangelical spirit.

Bro. J. E. Miller, St. Jacob, Ill., and a member of the Oregon, Ill., church, is slowly recovering from a tonsillotomy.

The Rally Day services at Eden Valley, Minn., were attended by well over a hundred people. There were several special features, and the day was the beginning of the pastorate of Bro. Gerald Cooper. His picture and a message from him appear on page 3, and the church at Eden Valley is shown on the front cover.

Bro. Arthur Johnson reports plans for the baptism of his wife, Marie, on Sunday, Nov. 13. Bro. Johnson is vice president of the Iowa Conference, and we all rejoice with him in the obedience of his wife. Their address is Lake View, Iowa.

Visitors in attendance at Oregon church services on Sundny, Nov. 13, were Charles Lindsay and family of Pearl City, Ill., and Mr. and Mrs. George Loudenslager of Washington, D. C.

A scribe sends word, "Hooray! I am writing an article for The Herald; believe it or not." He has caught the spirit, and lives way out on the Pacific Coast. Hurrah! Hurrah! Let's have

T. A. DRINKARD'S OCTOBER REPORT

Places Visited-Dates-Number of Sermons

Ater, Texas (1, 2), 4; Mullin, Texas (8, 9), 3; Sedan, Kansas (13-20), 9; Arkansas City, Kansas (21-30), 12. Total number of sermons, 28,

It is a pleasure to present this report to our brethren that they may see that I am still busy in the Lord's work, which demands much The future will tell the value of the work I am doing. May the Father receive all the praise and the glory. I am asked occasionally why it is I do so much preaching withcut baptizing very many, which is a fair question. Bro. Bradley once said that in preaching he often had to convert the brethren before trying to convert the world. This may be true in many cases; many of the brethren become indifferent and seem to be sleeping away the time. Herein lies part of our duty-to wake them out of this sleep of indifference, and persuade them to go forward in real Christian service. Please read Matthew 26:38-41.

Two special meetings were held during the month among brethren where I had never gone before. The many expressions of gratitude and real joy by brethren and friends indicate to me that real good is being done. The first meeting was held at Sedan, Kansas. There are a few brethren there, who came to know and embraced the truth through the efforts of Bro. Owen Jones, Magazine, Ark., who is now sleeping in death. They had not heard any other minister of the Church of God until I went there. I feel that efforts spent in this field will bring results that all like to see. I promised to go there again, as soon as possible. There is another place just across the line in Oklahoma that I have promised to visit later.

It was indeed a pleasure to be with the brethren in Arkansas City, Kansas, I sincerely pray that the efforts put forth there will bring results worthy of God's blessings.

I am rejoicing that we have men and women who give of the means that God blesses them with toward carrying the gospel into these fields where few of our brethren live. Your help given toward this great work will enable me to stay in the field, warning the brotherhood against indifference and neglect, and going forward in the work for Christ, I shall be glad to hear from anyone interested in the gospel work.

SALEM CHURCH (ILLINOIS)

One of the most inspiring meetings that we have had the privilege of taking part in for a long time was the series which closed at Salem Church, near Marshall and Martinsville, Ill., on Sunday night, Nov. 6. The house was packed to capacity with most attentive listeners.

During the many years of our acquaintance with the Salem Church it has been very encouraging to see the younger generation taking the places of responsibility which the older ones laid down as death claimed them, one by one. And the enthusiasm for the cause of truth appeared stronger than ever on this occasion. This was no doubt partly inspired by the fact that their long-standing prayers for a gravel road to the church are being answered. but even more inspired by a vision of the rapid development of God's plan as evidenced in the present international situations.

It was a genuine pleasure to discuss the prophecies with these loyal workers, and we pray God's guidance to be with them in the continuation of their work.

A note of sadness was sounded while we were there by the death of Charlie Claypool, long-time neighbor and friend of the church. Two of his daughters, and other relatives, are members of our group there. Concern was also felt in the sudden illness of Dean, the son of Bro. and Sr. Homer Hendrix. At present writing he is in the hospital at Paris, Ill., being treated for pneumonia.

F. E. Siple, Evangelist.

RIPLEY, ILLINOIS

Two months have passed since we began working with the Ripley brethren. We can report good attendance at all services. The members are widely scattered; some must drive several miles in order to attend. We are organizing a choir and an orchestra, the latter, we hope, will be able to make its first appearance at Christmas.

The church granted us a leave of two weeks in September. With our small son, Billy Ray, Betty Thoms (Mrs. McKnight's sister), and Bro, Gerald Cooper, we drove to Minnesota to visit friends and Mrs. McKnight's parents, Elder and Mrs. V. R. Thoms. We found Mrs. Thoms' health much better this fall; she has been very poorly for some time. Bro. Cooper stayed for the Minnesota Fall Conference.

When we became settled in our new home, the church gave us a reception which was a complete surprise. Besides gifts from each family, we received from the church a gift of new furniture--a heater, studio couch, and several other pieces.

We are enjoying the work with this friendly group of people, in their well-kept church, of which they can justly be proud. Wilsie J. McKnight, Pastor.

ILLINOIS QUARTERLY CONFERENCE

The Illinois Quarterly Conference was held at Macomb, Saturday and Sunday, Nov. 12, 13, The attendance this year was somewhat larger than at a similar meeting held here just a year ago, there being 72 present at Sunday school. There were visiting brethren from Ripley, Oregon, and Camden, in Illinois, and St. Louis, Mo.

JAMES T. FOX

James T. Fox was born in Lawrence County, Ohio, August 25, 1864, and died October 9, 1938.

When a young man he came to Hamilton County, Neb., and on March 24, 1889, he married Rebecea Stahlnecker at Giltner, Neb. Here they lived on a farm for five years, then moved near Moorefield, Neb. To this union were born six children, three girls and three boys. Two boys preceded him in death. He leaves to mourn his passing his wife and four children: Mrs. Margaret Wilson, Mrs. Minuic Peter, and Mr. Clarence Fox, all of Moorefield; and Mrs. Verlie Johnson of Fort Collins, Colo.; ten living grandchildren and one greatgrandchild; four living brothers; other relatives, and a host of friends.

He was baptized into Christ, and became a member of the Church of God, Sept. 29, 1911. He was a faithful follower of the Savior until death.

Services were held in the Union Church by Eld, J. E. Cowles. He was laid to rest in the Moorefield Cemetery, there to wait the resurrection.

Address

"Home, Sweet Home"

Provided by the love and sympathy of the entire brotherhood of the Church of God, Golden Rule Home assures to the members of its Family the comfort, security, and solicitous care which the word "home" always suggests.

Here the anxieties of earlier and more active life are laid aside forever. No threat of eviction for non-payment of rent or taxes or other indebtedness troubles the hearts of the residents of Golden Rule Home!

No doctor or hospital bills, no grocery, coal, or light bills to be met the first of the month, bring fear to the minds of the Golden Rule Home Family!

All such obligations and burdens are taken from the shoulders of these older ones immediately upon their entrance into the Home and are carried thereafter by the Golden Rule Home itself, which is amply able to bear the load on their behalf.

A hearty Christian welcome awaits all who seek the protection and lifelong support the Home provides.

PILGRIMS GOING TO CHURCH

"In Every Thing Give Thanks"

"O SING UNTO THE LORD a new song: sing unto the Lord, all the earth. Sing unto the Lord, bless his name; shew forth his salvation from day to day. Declare his glory among the heathen, his wonders among all people. For the Lord is great, and greatly to be praised: he is to be feared above all gods. For all the gods of the nations are idols: but the Lord made the heavens. Honour and majesty are before him: strength and beauty are in his sanctuary. Give unto the Lord, O ye kindreds of the people, give unto the Lord glory and strength. Give unto the Lord the glory due unto his name: bring an offering, and come into his courts.

"O worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness: fear before him, all the earth. Say among the heathen that the Lord reigneth:.. Let the heavens rejoice, and let the earth be glad; let the sea roar, and the fulness thereof. Let the field be joyful, and all that is therein: then shall all the trees of the wood rejoice before the Lord: for he cometh, for he cometh to judge the earth: he shall judge the world with righteousness, and the people with his truth" (Psalm 96).

"He Took the Cup, and Gave Thanks"

With too much to be seen vision is blurred, with too many noises little is heard. Modern surprises have numbed our wits, leaving us immune to thrill. The bushel has been so often multiplied that we have lost our taste for grain; and having so much, there are so few who pray.

"He took the cup"—where was blessing in disguise. And for this cup Jesus "gave thanks." "My meat," said He, "is to do the will of him that sent me." To do God's will "he set his face like a flint," He gave His "back to the smiters," and His "cheeks to them that plucked off the hair."

When Peter would have fought for His Lord, Jesus said, "Put up thy sword into the sheath: the cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?" Into that cup flowed blood from His thorn-crowned brow. There were wagging heads, and shot-out lips, faithless friends, and nails, then gall. What dregs to drink! Unyielding, what a victory won!

Death failed to hold her prey. Though crushed beneath the foot of careless man, the "Rose of Sharon," never to die again, will bud throughout earth's desert lands. For this our Savior offered "thanks."

A wise Creator has so made man that triumphant joy, and heartiest thanksgiving, are found in the way of the cross. A whole flock of turkeys cannot make a Thanksgiving Day.

Jesus said, "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." Peter said, "All the glory of man (is) as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away: but the word of the Lord endureth for ever. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you." Paul said, "I bear in my body the marks (whip and rod marks) of the Lord Jesus," yet steadfastly affirmed, "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ." John said, "All that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever."

Thank God for those who can truly thank God. Thank God for those who get their "thrill" out of the cup of which Jesus said, "Divide this among you." Thank God for the men and women who are the "salt of the earth."

America's First Thanksgiving

The first Thanksgiving Day in America followed Governor Bradford's proclamation, which follows in full on this page. The simple wording, old spelling, and childlike faith should help the reader to better appreciate that day which we are now commemorating. May the United States of America ever build on the Pilgrim's basic confidence in God.

Solomon warns (Prov. 14:34) that while "righteousness exalteth a ration," "sin is a reproach to any people." Does it appear to the reader that the governors of our nation have the implicit faith of the Pilgrim's leader?

Governor Bradford's Proclamation

"Notwithstanding all their great paines & industrie, and ye great hope of large cropp, the Lord seemed to blast, & take away the same, and to threaten further and more sore famlie unto them, by a great drought which continued from ye 3. weeke in May, till about ye midle of July, without any raine, and with great heat (for ye most parte), insomuch as ye corne begane to wither away, though it was set with fishe, the moysture whereof helped it much. Yet at length it begane to languish sore, and some of ye drier grounds were partched like withered hay, part whereof was never recovered. Upon which they set a parte of solemne day of humiliation, to seek ye Lord by humble and fervente prayer, in this great distress. And he was pleased to give them a gracious and speedy answer, both to their owne and the Indeans admiration, that lived amongst them. For all ye morning, and greatest part of the day, it was clear weather and very hotte, and not a cloud or any signe of raine to be seen, yet toward evening it began to overcast, and shortly after to raine, with such swete and gentle showers, as gave them cause of rejoyceing, and blessing God. It came without either wind, or thunder, or any violence, and by degree in ye abundance, as ye earth was thorowly wete and soked therewith. Which did so apparently revive and quicken ye decayed corne and other fruits, as was wonderful to see and made ye Indeans astonished to behold; and afterwards the Lord sent them such seasonable showers, with enterchange of faire warme weather as through his blessing caused a fruitfull and liberal harvest, to their no small comfort and rejoycing. For which mercie (in time conveniente) they also set aparte a day of thanksgiving."

Thanksgiving Messages

Thanksgiving Day

By S. J. Lindsay

"Giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ."

T IS a nice thing to congregate from time to time to give thanks unitedly to God for His illimitable goodness to us. It seems that the spirit of Thanksgiving Day grew up in this country in the early history of the colonies, who suffered so many hardships in their efforts to tame the wild country into which they had come. It is sometimes asked what people who suffer so much have to be thankful for. It is the history of man that with plenty on every hand it is hardest to give thanks, and to worship God. It is said of Israel, "But Jeshurun waxed fat, and kicked, thou art waxen fat, thou art grown thick, thou art covered with fatness; then he forsook God which made him, and lightly esteemed the Rock of his salvation" (Deut. 32:15). It is the very nature of man to forsake God when plenty is on hand. Under such conditions man hasn't the time to take for thanksgiving. It is his nature to grab everything in sight and feel it his right.

But to the thoughtful one the time of plenty is the best time for thanksgiving. Is it possible that owing to our being so busy we set aside a day in which we may do the job of thanking God up in one great effort to go thankless the rest of the year? It seems to us that the true Christian will be in the spirit of Paul as revealed in our initial text.

If we take the time to meditate upon God's goodness we will be full of the spirit of thanksgiving always. God is so good to us. Daily we should praise and thank Him. We, here in Tempe, Arizona, feel so thankful to God for giving us such a nice place in which to worship Him. It is a sanctuary where reverence insists upon attending as we enter. Thank God for His goodness to the children of men. Thank Him always.

Thanksgiving

By J. R. LeCrone

"Be careful for nothing; but in every thing by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God" (Phil. 4:6).

WE HAVE frequently observed the heartening effect of the very pleasant custom observed by thoughtful people of recognizing any special service rendered by a friend by offering him a small gift. Such gifts are not intended nor regarded as a payment or reward for services rendered. They are merely gestures of appreciation. The thoughtful kindness thus displayed makes for a feeling of fellowship and good will far in excess of their monetary value.

While we were in meditation upon this our thoughts turned to the approaching Thanksgiving Day-the day that we have set aside as a day for recognizing the manifold blessings that our heavenly Father has bestowed upon us during the past year. We began to wonder what portion of men show to God even the small measure of appreciation that we show our friends and neighbors for services rendered and favors granted.

"I was so grateful for the favors that you have granted me that I went and bought myself a big dinner as a token of my appreciation." Should one of your friends to whom you had rendered a service make the foregoing statement to you, you should consider that he was making light of your services or else that he was a fit patient for the mental ward of some hospital! Imagine him thinking that he was showing his appreciation to you by buying himself a treat! By what twisted mental process could he possibly imagine that by stuffing his own stomach he was thanking you for what you had done for him?

Yet, on Thanksgiving Day, millions of otherwise rational people will spend half of the day preparing feasts for themselves, and the other half in trying to overcome the unpleasant after effects of overeating. This they will do as a means of expressing their gratitude to God for having provided so bountifully for their temporal and spiritual needs during the past year.

At the close of the day they will retire feeling that they have kept a day of Thanksgiving to God in a very acceptable manner. Have they not spent the day in seeking amusement and in eating until they could eat no more? Does that not amply express the gratitude that they feel for blessings received and answered prayers? What more could be expected of them?

But did not the Pilgrims, whose example we are following, spend the day in feasting and in merrymaking? Of course they did, but first they held a service of thanksgiving unto the Lord at their church, during which they testified to the goodness of God. They sang hymns of praise unto Him and offered up prayers of thanks. They read from His Holy Scriptures and listened to the admonition and exhortation of their spiritual leader. Then, and not until then, did they begin to feast and otherwise seek pleasure.

It is right and proper that men should enjoy their day of thanksgiving with feasting and fun. May we suggest, however, that we feel certain that our commemoration of the day will be a great deal more pleasing to our heavenly Father if it is begun with a period of prayer and thanksgiving to honor Him!

From Darkness to Light

By R. H. Judd

SEVERAL times during recent months our attention has been called to the seemingly paradoxical fact that we, as believers in the Word of the living God, may actually give thanks for the terrible conditions that now prevail—the whole world arming for mighty conflict that cannot be so very far distant. We thank God, why? Because we know that the very darkness of midnight precedes the dawn of glorious day—the day of Christ.

We cannot understand why the darkness of midnight is necessary to present conditions, but we do know that God does not cease working. We are told that "God created the heaven and the earth" even before we are told that God said, "Let there be light: and there was light." Then light beamed upon a wonderful world of which God gloried that He had made—a world of mountains and valleys, hills and dales, peaceful streams and rushing torrents, that God Himself had created for the habitation of man (Isa. 45:18). And why these varied scenes? God foresaw that man needed all these, for only by contact with the things that respond to a being so fearfully and wonderfully made, could the wonders of man's being be fully developed. Only in comparatively recent years has man become acquainted, in small degree, with the marvels that are daily being discovered in reference to this bountiful home that God has prepared, and is preparing, for him; and more recently still is he learning of potential transcendent powers of which he himself is possessed, but which will not be unveiled except in those redeemed by the blood of the Lamb. The darkness of midnight is passing, the dawn of a new day—Christ's day-approaches.

These same things are true of the Word of the living God. The great themes of the Bible were penned in the infancy of the human race, when darkness, as the blackness of midnight, covered the earth. But now, "the light of the gospel of the glory of Christ, who is the image of God" (2 Cor. 4:4, R. V.), is becoming better and more widely known among those whose "delight is in the law of the Lord." "For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ."

As we thank God with all our hearts for the hills and the valleys, the rough places and the smooth of the natural world, so with all our hearts do we praise Him (for thanks and praise are often synonymous in Scripture) for the difficult places as well as the smooth in His wonderful Word. We thank Him that in many places, yes, in most of them, the "vision" is written "plain upon the tables (wayside tablets or boards, see concordance), that he may run that readeth." Upon these we may base our faith, and stand upon them as upon a rock, in the full assurance that they cannot be overthrown, or their meaning misunderstood.

We thank Him, too, for the places "hard to be understood," that take abundance of time, prayer, and patient study before we find the true interpretation that is, and must be, in harmony with the literal and the plain. Sometimes, indeed, we may get a sudden ray of light upon the Word, like pure sunshine after rain, but in the main God in His wisdom has so ordered it that we need to "search and see," and to dig deep for hidden treasures, so that our characters may be strengthened, and that we do not quickly let slip the truths that are revealed to us. Let us not forget to pray, "Open thou mine eyes that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law." Then we shall be able to join with King David, and say, "Let my lips utter praise; for thou teachest me thy statutes" (Psalm 119:17, R. V.), and to exclaim in exultant thankfulness with Job, "Who is a teacher like unto him?"

A Few Thanksgiving Thoughts

By F. L. Austin

OD instructed Israel in Exodus 23:14-19, "Three times thou shalt keep a feast unto me in the year. Thou shalt keep the feast of unleavened bread:... and the feast of harvest, the firstfruits of thy labours...: and the feast of ingathering,... in the end of the year, when thou hast gathered in thy labours out of the field."

These several feasts were named: Passover, Pentecost, Tabernacles. The Feast of Tabernacles was also called the Feast of Booths. It commenced upon the fifteenth day of Tishri, which this year was our October 10, and continued over eight days. The seventh and eighth days were days of thanks giving. We here quote portions of Deuteronomy 16:13 from the Emphatic Bible rendering: "The festival of booths shalt thou keep for thyself seven days, when thou hast gathered in out of thy threshing-floor and out of thy wine-vat. And thou shalt rejoice in thy festival, . . . for Yhaweh thy God will bless thee in all thine increase and in all the work of thy hands, . . . therefore shalt thou do nothing but rejoice."

The Feast of Tabernacles was for double purpose: first, as memorial for God's blessings and watch care during the forty years of wilderness journey while they necessarily dwelt in booths; and, second, as a rejoicing and thanks giving to God for the abundance of harvest and provision during the season passed. The two closing days of the feast, Tishri 21 and 22, were days of "solemn rejoicing" to God for past blessings, and days of prayer to God for continued blessings.

Since President Lincoln issued a proclamation setting aside the fourth Thursday of November, 1864, as a day of thanks giving and rejoicing to the God in heaven for His goodness to the people of America, the last Thursday of November has been set aside annually for such purpose. True, the Pilgrim fathers had previously designated days of thanks giving, but there had never been a set annual day for our great nation, until Abraham Lincoln's appointment in 1864.

How like the ancient Israelites was the spirit of thanksgiving in the early Puritan days, as also in the days of President Lincoln. God was honored as being the Giver of the harvest. Like Biblical patriarchs they looked to Him as the One who blessed the soil, and the weather, and the productivity, as rewards for man's recognition of the fact that God was the Authority over nature as over man. They recognized that wickedness of mankind did, through God, affect not only the heart of the wicked doer, but also the very soil upon which the wicked persons labored. Please read again carefully the words of God unto Cain after he had slain his brother. They are found in Genesis 4:11, 12, and read: "And now art thou cursed from the earth, which hath opened her mouth to receive thy brother's blood from thy hand; when thou tillest the ground, it shall not henceforth yield unto thee her strength." Such was God's voice to Cain—"it shall not henceforth yield unto thee her strength."

How sad it is that in recent years Thanksgiving Day is anything but a day of thanks giving. Like Sunday, the day set aside for worship, and Independence Day, the day set aside for righteous patriotic spirit, so also Thanksgiving Day, which was instituted as a day of rejoicing in thanks giving to God, has been commercialized for social and sportive occasions where man more than God is exalted.

That the world is in another wilderness trek dwelling in temporary booths of frailty looking for rest and righteous conditions of permanency is sensed by many. Such will be glad that our President and governors have seen fit to again appoint a day which, upon the face of it, is to be used in devotion and thanks giving to the God of heaven and to His dear Son. I would that everywhere all professed Christian people would break away from the unholy revelry of our times and consecrate Thanksgiving for a day of solemn rejoicing to the God of heaven for His wonderful goodness to the children of men.

Are We to Blame?

By James M. Watkins

"Death and life are in the power of the tongue: and they that love it shall eat the fruit thereof" (Prov. 18:21).

IF YOU are interested in observing the reaction of people to the everyday affairs of life, and noting their inconsistencies, perhaps you'd like to try this one.

Go into any home carrying a rifle, or other firearm, and begin to handle it a little carelessly. If necessary, look down the barrel! You know in advance what will happen. Immediately the old hue and cry will go up, "Is that thing loaded?"

Why do people always raise this question? Because tucked away in the tiny capsule at the end of the barrel is the power over life and death. As such it is nothing to be treated lightly. Every consideration must be shown it.

Now lay the gun gently aside, and inquire if they have heard about the young lady in the next block. Immediately they're all ears, glad of the chance to hear something to repeat at the club meeting tomorrow. There is no fear in that, and yet the old proverb rates the power of the tongue no less than the power of the gun, for to it is given the power over life and death.

I know what some of you are thinking by now, that we're making it a little too important. But what made the gun important? Wasn't it merely because it threatened you instead of the other fellow? I believe that this thought is important, to us as well as to the other fellow.

That I believe this proverb literally I would not have you doubt. Many things have happened in the last few years to call our attention to this fact. Having happened in my locality, undoubtedly they have happened in yours. Have you heard of a man in your neighborhood who, for no reason that you could see, took out his best friend and killed him or her? I dare say you have. But have you ever asked yourself the question, "Did I help him kill that man?" No, it isn't a silly question. It may be a fact that you are guilty.

In many cases the murderer is what is known as a paranoiae. He may be perfectly normal in every way, except that he feels that the world is against him. His motive is revenge for some fancied wrong. He wasn't made that way in a day. It was done gradually over a period of years, perhaps even back to the time in the fifth grade when he tendered a none too enticing apple to the girl up ahead, only to feel the tang of rebuff as she turned her nose up and then smiled at the banker's son—because he had a box of chocolates.

Perhaps at adolescence, the most sensitive period of anyone's life, some one he worshiped from afar thoughtlessly mocked his mannerisms or ridiculed his dress, leaving little wounds that never healed. So he has gone through life building up to fortify himself against the deeper cuts of thoughtless words that are growing more and more noticeable to him. That fortifying goes on and on, until at last the first little twinges of revenge culminate in the destruction of some one who has done him, in all probability, only a fancied injustice.

Unfortunately, all of this is locked up inside, and is not visible to us until it is too late. If it were not so, we would readily judge the little things we say by their true importance.

You may recall reading, a few months ago, the newspaper accounts of the young man who plunged to his death from a tall building while scores of curious onlookers invited him to hurry it up so they could go home. This young man represents another side of the picture. He suffers similar pangs to the other at the unkindness of people, but his feeling of inferiority does not permit him to build his fortification to the point of revenge. So he suffers alone in self-pity, and eventually destroys himself.

Genuine interest and brotherly friendship of the Christian people would have been the salvation of such a person. I wonder if in that crowd there were not those who knew that young man and who called themselves Christian people. Yet they had withheld their interest and friendship, and in so doing had gone as far as the others in inviting him to jump. I do not propose to judge, I only ask that if there were such ones, can they truthfully say that they have never killed a man?

Yes, death and life are in the power of the tongue. I know that many times I have hurt people with the things I have said. Somehow I wish I hadn't, for when the day of revelation comes, with the judgment set and the books opened, and I am asked gently perhaps, but firmly, "Hast thou killed?" I'm not sure that I'll know what to say.

I have often wondered, if we regarded every word we uttered as a prospective nail in somebody's coffin, how much it would affect our lives and speech.

If speech, like the gun, is only important when pointed at us, it still behooves us to give it its rightful portion of consideration. See the warning of Matthew 12:36, "But I say unto you, That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment."

The Covenant With David

By T. A. Drinkard

"Therefore being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne" (Acts 2:30).

THE covenant which God made with David many years ago holds for the Church of God many great and precious promises which will be fulfilled when Jesus Christ, in person, returns to earth; and He is coming just as surely as God's Word is true. This great message comforted the hearts of our brethren who are sleeping the sleep of death; their faith rested upon its rays and beams of light that emanated therefrom. This was as it should be, and the same should be true today, as the message is still in force.

God promised David in that covenant that Christ would build "an house for my name," and that God would "stablish the throne of his kingdom for ever" (2 Sam. 7:13). That house is in the process of being made today, as shown by, "how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth" (1 Tim. 3:15). Have we grown tired of presenting this great covenant in gospel form to the people? Have we discovered something that is better than what the Father has chosen for us? The warfare seems long, and we grow weary, forgetting to trust the living God.

Jesus consecrated Himself to do the Father's will in all things, and because of this the Father exalted Him to the position which He now holds in glory, and further plans to make Him "King of kings, and Lord of lords." These promises are all included in God's covenant with David. You will see that the "Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David" (Luke 1:31), and thus fulfills His part of the contract made with His servant David through Samuel the Prophet. In this great plan God is seen as the architect and Christ as the builder, as indicated by Matthew 16:18, "Upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." The Father and the Son have always worked together perfectly.

In the covenant the building of the house comes first; so it is being built during this age. Jesus said, "I will build," indicating that He was fully authorized to do that very thing according to the plan previously given in the covenant itself. This building has already started, and is growing "unto an holy temple in the Lord" (Eph. 2:21). In majesty and beauty it is unequaled by all the counterfeits that may appear. The house in the plan was to be erected according to certain specifications, fully outlined in the New Testament by Jesus Christ and the Apostles. After this house is perfected, it is represented as being presented to Jesus Christ as a "glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish" (Eph. 5:27). After the perfecting of the church, comes the work of carrying into execution the second part of the covenant, the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth. What a work that will be!

During the intervening space of time from the call of the church to its completion, Christ is on the Father's throne. But when that moment comes when the Father announces that the time is ready for Christ to start earthward, things will begin to change very rapidly. Then the end of all earthly affairs will come. What a day!

Jesus, by reading the prophetical writings, clearly understood the glorious part He would play in God's great plan. He understood that He would call for men and women to build His church; and that after this He would be exalted to His throne.

Jesus was raised up from the dead that He might be exalted to sit upon His father David's throne, according to the flesh. But by Matthew 25:31 you will note that He will not ascend to His throne until "the Son of man shall come in his glory." It is written of Him: "Upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever" (Isa. 9:7). Again it is written: "And in mercy shall the throne be established; and he shall sit upon it in truth in the tabernacle of David, judging, and seeking judgment, and hasting righteousness" (Isa. 16:5). And by Acts 15:16, it is seen that the "tabernacle of David, which is fallen down," will again be built after the church of God is taken out, and Christ returns to the earth.

REPENTANCE

By George M. Siple

"If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us" (1 John 1:8).

DOWN through the ages God has selected certain men to carry on His work. We read in Genesis 6:6, "And it repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart." This was on account of the extreme wickedness that existed upon the earth at that time. But one just man, even Noah, was selected by God to build an ark. In this way Noah and his family were saved, and much wickedness was destroyed by the flood of waters.

Later, the city of Nineveh became very wicked. God called Jonah to go to Nineveh, a great city, and warn the people that if they did not repent of their wickedness within forty days the entire city would be destroyed.

This was a very disagreeable task, and Jonah tried to shirk his duty, like some of us do sometimes, by running away. He boarded a ship, thinking he could best escape in that way. Then God sent a great storm. The sailors became frightened, fearing the ship would be dashed to pieces. Finally, lots were cast to see who on board the ship was to blame, and the lot fell upon Jonah. Jonah acknowledged that he was the guilty one, as he knew that God was punishing him for running away. At last they were compelled to cast him overboard, according to his own request.

Now the Lord had prepared a great fish to swallow Jonah, so Jonah was three days and three nights in the stomach of the great fish.

Then Jonah prayed very earnestly to be delivered; so God spoke to the fish and he delivered Jonah upon the dry land.

"And the word of the Lord came unto Jonah the second time, saying, Arise, go unto Nineveh, that great city, and preach unto it the preaching that I bid thee" (Jonah 3: 1, 2). After his experience on the ship and in the fish, Jonah was very glad to obey God this time.

Children, Obey Your Parents

By Mrs. William Stine

"A LL RIGHT, Mother, I will," are beautiful words to hear in answer to a mother's request, but more often excuses and disobedience follow. Many children have forgotten the Apostle Paul's command, "Children, obey your parents" (Eph. 6:1). Many more have never read or heard of it. This command has much more significance than we find in the title of this article, and we must complete the verse to understand it fully. We read, "Children, obey your parents in the Lord: for this is right."

Non-Christian, as well as Christian parents, expect obedience of their children, but not knowing the Lord's will, how can they guide them his way? More often they cause them to despise anything connected with God's teaching by their godless lives. If the child of this parent is able to decide the right way for himself to follow he is not going against Paul's command if he disobeys his parents for the right. We who have Christian parents who have loved the Lord enough to want us to learn of him and who did all in their power to guide us aright, have much for which to be thankful. By obeying them we have been saved from temptations that so many have yielded to and for which they are paying a very dear price. Some of sin's wages in this life are sickness, sorrow, bad habits, and weakness of will. Strong Christian characters are built by obedience to parents in the Lord. So it is right to do as they ask. To forfeit the pleasures of this world your parents ask you to omit is not a loss to you, but a gain. By obedience we gain happiness in this life and life everlasting when God's kingdom is established on this earth.

Our parents have learned through the Bible that they are children of God and that He wants them to obey Him. Only by their obedience can the world see that there is a God who is loved and honored. They always have in mind the promise of eternal life which He has given, and faith that it will be fulfilled. They knew also that there will be a just and final punishment of the wicked, and to escape God's wrath they must obey Him.

Knowing the love and mercy of God alone commands obedience. The parents' first steps in bringing up their children to love and obey is to teach them of Him. Their own example of obedience to their heavenly Father is the second step. Punishment should be used as a final resort to save children from sin.

Children, you know that your Christian parents are asking you not to do the things that will drag you down to sin and everlasting shame, but rather to do those things that become Christian behavior. Therefore, honor them, and glorify God by loving obedience, because this is right.

The Gospel of the Kingdom

By E. C. Pearson

"When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory: and before him shall be gut hered all nations" (Matthew 25:31, 32).

IN MARK 16:15, 16, Jesus said unto His disciples, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not, shall be damned." The word "gospel" means good news or glad tidings.

In Luke 9:2, 6, we read, "He (Jesus) sent them (His disciples) to preach the kingdom of God, and to heal the sick. . . . And they departed, and went through the towns preaching the gospel, and healing everywhere." They preached the gospel, a definite gospel, not just a gospel. Further, "Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness among the people" (Matt. 4:23). There are many similar quotations, but these are sufficient to show that the gospel concerns the kingdom of God.

In Romans 1:16, Paul says, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek." It is very evident how necessary it is to know what gospel is, that we may believe it and be saved. Yes, it does make a difference what we believe, because faith in the gospel saves. The gospel is just broad enough to save all who believe it, and narrow enough to reject those who disbelieve it.

Now the gospel embraces this fact: Jesus Christ, the only begotten Son of God, is to be King over all the earth. The angel, speaking to Mary about the conception of Jesus, also said, "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end" (Luke 1:30-33).

We know that the kingdom of David, known as the kingdom of God, was reigned over by wicked kings. In the days of Zedekiah, the last king, God said, "Remove the diadem, take off the crown . . . I will overturn, overturn, it: and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is: and I will give it him." Surely this points to the reign of Christ on David's throne even as was told to Mary.

God made a covenant with Abraham and his seed (because he was obedient to God) of the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession (Gen. 17:7). "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ" (Gal. 3:16).

To identify Christ as the heir to the promises made to Abraham, as heir to David's throne, as "heir of the world," requires only a little study of God's Word.

Daniel told of kingdoms represented by beasts, how their dominion was taken away for another. "I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed" (Daniel 7:13, 14). Further, "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of Villiam Stine, whose artcle the daughters.

Further, "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him" (Daniel 7:27).

No, the kingdom is not the church. It is not in the heart. It is not in heaven, as is sometimes understood. It is real, and is to be upon the earth—its territory. It's King is Jesus Christ, the one who died, was buried and rose again, who ascended into heaven, who is coming again, who will take over the kingdoms of this earth. The church, as "jointheirs with Christ" (Rom. 8:17), shall rule real, tangible people, and govern in righteousness in a real, tangible kingdom. Hence, we pray, "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven."

May we still have faith in God's Word, believe the gospel, and be ready to meet Christ when He comes. Not until the "King of glory" comes can we hope for God's will to be done on the earth.

Brother and Sister E. C. Pearson, Tipp City, Ohio, have for many years been faithful members of the Brush Creek Church of God. Their nine children have all accepted the faith as taught by the Church of God, and have been baptized into the fold. How good it would be if all the members of our families were thus united! Brother Pearson here greets you with his first contribution to our columns. Mrs. William Stine, whose artcle appears on page 7, is one of the daughters.

Judgment and the Three Worlds

By Mrs. H. H. Kent

THE Apostle Peter, in 2 Peter 3:6-14, tells us of three worlds. They are: "the world that then was," the "world that now is," and the "world to come." They cover a long period of time. At last, there will be brought about a "new heaven and a new earth" wherein righteousness and justice dwell. Further, the Bible speaks of "ages to come," but God in His wisdom has not seen fit to reveal to us much about the future ages that lie so far ahead of us. Just imagine, if you can, what the people who lived even a hundred years ago, would have said and thought if some one had told them about our modern conveniences in our homes, our automobiles, airplanes, and the other things that are so common today. They would have seemed impossibilities. God's children have always had foresight, but God has only revealed to them that which was necessary for their welfare. Isaiah says that God will tell us of things before they come to pass (Isa, 42:9).

Not a great deal has been written about "the world that then was," the antediluvian age. It began with the creation and extended to the time of the flood. To look back and to imagine what the Garden of Eden was like in its earthly perfection seems almost like an idle dream; for according to Bible chronology, it is nearly six thousand years since the creation of man. I often wonder, when I hear modern teachers speak of the story of Adam and Eve as a fable, what the rest of the Bible could mean to them, if they refuse to accept these important facts as history. For, God's plan for the future is based upon the fall of man, and the restoration of Edenic conditions cannot be brought about until the curse is removed. The Bible would not mean anything to me if I rejected anything in its sacred pages. I tried it once and was a most miserable creature until I again made my peace with God. Higher criticism does not appeal to me now.

When the "world that then was" ended by the flood of waters during Noah's time, great changes took place. Climatic conditions were not the same after the Flood, at which time the canopy was removed. With the many opportunities that men had in those days and the beautiful natural surroundings, they forgot God. Wickedness became so great that God repented that He had made man. The world was filled with violence, so after Noah had warned the inhabitants for one hundred twenty years this great catastrophe came. Christ mentioned it as a warning. All flesh except that which was in the ark perished. Before the Flood, the moisture coming from the canopy that covered the earth must have caused vegetation to grow to immense size. The prophets, in telling what conditions will be like when Eden is restored in the coming age, paint in glowing terms the beauties of vegetation. Isaiah says that even the desert will blossom like a rose. An example of what animal life was like then may be seen in the size of the mammoth and the mastodon. They are now extinct, but we see their skeletons in the zoological displays in our large museums. That some of them died suddenly, is shown from the fact that some, when discovered, were found in distorted positions which may be because the water came so suddenly and they may have been swiftly swept away. I have read that some of them had what resembled food in their mouths. That climatic conditions were changed is proved, because these monstrous animals which could live only in tropical climates, have been dug up in northern latitudes where, under present wintry conditions, they would not ordinarily be able to live. The civilization of that day perished, and God began anew to plan for the good of the human race.

The second world began with the flood, and we are still in this period of time according to Peter's division of time. In the New Testament, the latter part of this time is spoken of as "this present evil world." In this world period there are other dispensations, or ages, all of which ended in tribulation periods. We are now facing the judgment period that is to come at the end of the gospel age. There was the patriarchal age that began with the call of Abram (Abraham), and ended with the Jewish age, which, in turn, began when Moses ordained the law covenant.

It is not my intention to speak fully of these periods of time, but just to mention them briefly, and call attention to the judgments that were visited upon the people who lived at the close of these periods. Judgments always came because the people had rejected the light. The Jews who disobeyed God were taken in Babylonian captivity in Nebuchadnezzar's time for seventy years. At that time Solomon's wonderful temple was destroyed (see 2 Chron. 36). Still the age did not fully end until 70 A. D., with the destruction of the temple that had been rebuilt in Ezra's time. My human sympathy almost gives way to tears, in sorrow for some of them, as they refused to leave that temple that had proved to be such a blessing to them. Yet the end came when the Roman soldiers destroyed it. Their stiffneeked leaders who had criticized and rejected Christ deserved the punishment they met with. Josephus tells us there may have been about two and a half million Jews gathered in Jerusalem at that time, for they were celebrating the Jewish national holiday, the Passover. Terrible things happened to them there because they had not heeded Christ's warning to flee. Christ had reproved them often for not knowing the signs of the times in which they lived.

He said, as He wept over Jerusalem, that the future was now "hidden from their eyes" (Luke 19:41-45). They were not ready to escape because they had not listened to Him. After pronouncing the judgments that were to come upon those who lived in the Jewish period, in the same discourse He looked forward to the end of the gospel age which, after many centuries, would end in even more serious judgments. And they would come "as a snare" to all those who were not watching (Luke 21:34-36).

This judgment is right upon us. Daniel tells us that it will be a "time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation" (Dan. 12:1). Jesus speaks of national strife when there will be "distress of nations with perplexity." Peter, many centuries before our day, pronounced the doom of the present order of things. It will come just as he prophesied. Paul tells us, in speaking of this judgment period, that everything that can be shaken will be shaken and then those things that are shaken will be removed. Zechariah's prophecies tell of unemployment problems (Zech. 8:10), when there will be "no hire for man nor beast." In James 5 we read of those who have "heaped up treasure for the last days." They are to weep and howl when their gold and silver become "cankered" (Isa. 2:18-21; James 5:2). In Zephaniah 1:14-17, there is further description of this day of wrath and great distress.

The latter part of the present age has been marked by great inventions, some beneficial to mankind, others not. From the standpoint of man, this has been a time of great achievement, but we are now nearing the time for the judgment. Other civilizations have fallen. Now many of our greatest statesmen and writers are telling us that our present civilization is falling. When we read of the preparations that the nations are now making in the way of acrial defence, such as bombing planes and poison gases that could quickly wipe out a city with millions of inhabitants, we believe we have reached this great crisis period. When our larger cities are taking every precaution against such dangerous warfare, in the way of underground passages for safety, it looks as if it is time to sound the alarm. We are told that nations are armed to their teeth. What may we expect?

Neither time nor space permits one to speak extensively of two great systems that have hindered Christianity's fundamental truths, and which systems are to come into judgment at this time. It is urgent, however, that we realize what these two antichristian systems are. They are Mohammedanism and Romanism (pagan and papal). E. P. Woodward in his book, "The Threefold Witness," Vol. I, says that the results of their teachings, which I am summing up, will lead to a crisis. He says that "Mohammedanism has struck at Christianity by despising and denying the claims of its Founder." Mohammedanism has exterminated Christian civilization wherever it made permanent conquests. "Current events prove that it is not dead today, any conditions that come out of double-dealing and deception, savor of Mohammedanism." Romanism, on the other hand, did not deny Christ. It did corrupt Christian doctrine, introducing grievous errors such as everlasting torment for those who disagreed with them; going to heaven at death, instead of sleeping in the grave until the time of the resurrection; also the immortal theory doctrine. The result was that by Rome's bloody persecutions of Christians, the flame of true devotion was kept alive. Quoting: "These errors kept the true church to be hidden from view for many years . . . In other words, papal Rome corrupted the church, endangering its existence, but coming short of that result: Islam destroyed the church, root and branch, in all it wide domain."

Robert Burns once said, "Man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn." What would be have said had be lived in our present times when there is such a conflict of ideas and when men are making all kinds of destructive and peisonous gases and death rays, that when put to the test in aerial warfare, could destroy large populations in a few hours? Greed, envy, and strife prevail in the human heart that has not been cleansed by Christ. These are the results of the curse that Christ's coming will destroy.

The above conditions are very common now and show us that we are in the harvest time of the age that Christ talked so much about. Read Matthew 13:39. In verse 40 of this chapter, Christ compares the gathering and burning of the tares at harvest time to what will happen at the end of the world. We know what happens at harvest time, when everyone reaps what he has sown, either good or bad; sometimes with great increase. The Weymouth translation makes it plainer by saying that "the harvest time is at the close of the age." Moffatt reads (Luke 21:31), "Whenever you see all these things happen, be sure the Reign of God is at hand." Christ explains these catastrophic changes (Luke 21:25-28). John gives us another view of them in Revelation 6:12-17. These things take place during the sixth seal.

We are told in Ecclesiastes 1:4, that this earth is to abide forever. It is the people who are to receive punishment and judgment. This earth, after it is cleansed, will be the home of the saints. All the meek are to inherit the earth. The world that Peter speaks of that will be destroyed consists of the ungodly people, the wicked governments, fashions, customs, etc., that exist at this time. The translators often confused the words "world," "age," and "earth," using them interchangeably. Job says, "The heavens are not clean in God's sight," meaning the present order of ecclesiastical things. Peter said they would pass away. The kingdom of heaven that we are looking for will be established upon this earth. This will be under the heavens that we call the starry skies. The heaven of heavens, where God's throne is, will still continue. David said, "The earth hath he given to the children of men" (Psalm 115:16). Isaiah said of the passing away of the second heaven and earth, that "the heavens shall vanish away like smoke, and the earth shall wax old like a garment" (Isa. 51:6). This great change will take place when Christ comes.

Now let us look at the bright side of this, after the clouds have all passed away. Our great hope lies in the fact that we know that Christ is coming back to earth to take over the governments of the earth and give us a righteous rule (Isa. 9:6; Luke 1:32; Rev. 2:26, 27; 11:15). His coming will be a blessing and a comfort to all who are able to go through or escape the coming judgments. "The Sun of righteousness (shall) arise with healing in his wings" (Mal. 4:2) for those who fear God's name. Not until then will we have universal peace and justice.

The sorrows and sicknesses that we now have as the result of the curse will be no more, for the curse is to be removed and its effects will be blotted out. Christ will then reign supremely as "King of kings and Lord of lords." Daniel says that the kingdom of God will be under the whole heavens (the starry heavens), not up in the skies, as some teach. It means that it will cover the whole earth. This will be the beginning of the millennium. The great hope that all Christians of the gospel age look forward to, will be realized then. The many promises of the Bible will be fulfilled during that period. At the beginning, there will be the resurrection of the just. What a great union and reunion that will be! Then will come the kingdom that we have so long prayed for!

When this wonderful age begins, Christ will have to begin to rule with a rod of iron (Rev. 2:26, 27). This means that He will need to be firm in dealing with evildoers. There will be no more oppressors then. This will be a time of great improvement. No evil system will have any opportunity to flourish, for it will be speedily dealt with in Christ's just form of government. Our social conditions will be greatly changed. There will be a mutual interest and helpfulness manifested toward everyone. The proud will be cut off. No liars will be able to stand in the presence of Christ the King.

The vegetable kingdom will put forth marvelous growths, for even the desert is to blossom like a rose. It will be because God will change climatic conditions and Eden will be restored during this thousand years. Psalm 85:12 says, "The Lord shall give that which is good, and our land shall yield her increase."

Another great change will be noticeable in our animal kingdom. After the curse is removed, neither animals nor men will fear each other. There will be nothing to fear. God is going to make all things new. All our loved ones who have died in the Lord will again be reunited with us. What a great time of rejoicing that will be! Surely, these great promises are worth striving for.

CHURCHES WITHOUT PASTORS

We have often wondered what happens to all of the money, the Lord's money, that would have been paid to a pastor for the guidance and upbuilding of that church. It is still the Lord's money, and it should still go to support the work somewhere. If every church without a pastor would help out in organized evangelistic work, some day that church may have a pastor.

It might be well for us if we were called upon to go through a similar experience, when we try to run away from duty.

"So the people of Niueveh believed God, and proclaimed a fast, and put on sackcloth, from the greatest of them even to the least of them." God heard their prayers, and the great city was spared. Thus, many lives were saved, because they carnestly repented of their evil deeds.

Coming to the New Testament, we learn of Jesus Christ, our ark of safety. It is just as important for us to get into our ark of safety as it was for Noah to prepare and get into his ark. Jesus says (Mark 1:15), "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel." Of course, it is absolutely necessary for us to believe before we can repent. Jesus also said, "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance" (Mark 2:17). These are the exact words of Jesus spoken when He was on earth. Only if we have not sinned during our lifetime we are not called upon to repent. How many of us can truthfully say that we have never committed sin? (See 1 John 1:8-10.)

Again, Jesus speaks in Luke 11:30, "For as Jonas was a sign unto the Ninevites, so shall also the Son of man be to this generation." The Ninevites believed God, and took the warning He gave through His servant Jonah. Shall we, of this generation, be less thoughtful of our future welfare than the Ninevites were? Shall we refuse to take the necessary steps in order to gain an entrance into that everlasting kingdom promised those who accept the terms, and then live a life becoming a person who has named the name of Christ?

Again, Jesus, speaking to the Galilæans, said, "Suppose ye that these Galilæans were sinners above all Galilæans ...? I tell you, Nay: but except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish" (Luke 13:2, 3).

Soon after Christ's resurrection He gave these words to His apostles, "And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem" (Luke 24:47).

If these lines should catch the eye of anyone who has not already accepted Jesus Christ as his Ark of safety, I plead with you to do so as quickly as possible before the Master returns, and the door is shut. It will then be too late!

The "signs of the times" are pointing more and more to the soon coming of our Savior. Peter says, "Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord" (Acts 3:19). On Pentecost Peter said to them, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost" (Acts 2:38). Paul says, "Godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation not to be repented of: but the sorrow of the world worketh death" (2 Cor. 7:10).

When our editor invited me to write something for The Restitution Herald, I first thought I could not, as I never had had any experience along that line. My second thought was that I would try! Here is the result. If this should escape the much dreaded wastebasket, as found in all well regulated printing offices, I may try again, basing my thoughts on another necessary step toward salvation.

Thanksgiving

At this season of the year it is our custom to pause, for a day at least, to count our blessings and observe a day of thanksgiving to God. As I pause to reflect on the happenings in my own life during the past year, I realize that they were not the results of luck or chance. They were the results of God watching over His people, providing them with the blessings He has promised, watching over them and shielding them from harm. Many times when things happen to us we cannot understand just why they happen, but later see that it was for our own good. We realize that God is true to His promise that "all things work together for good" (Rom. 8:28). This Thanksgiving, then, let us truly give thanks to God, the Giver of all good gifts, and not attribute anything that has come our way to luck or chance.

The Trinity

Mrs. Claibourne Lee, Hammond, La.

The doctrine of the Trinity is a false doctrine. The doctrine teaches that there are three coequal and coeternal persons in the Godhead, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost; that the three persons are one substance, and that each of the three is God in person. The Father is God, the Son is God, and the Holy Ghost is God, and yet there are not three Gods, but one God.

There is no Scripture to support the doctrine of the Trinity. That doctrine is unreasonable, because it is impossible for three persons to exist in one.

Note what the Bible, the Word of God, says, showing that there is one God, and one Lord and Savior, Christ Jesus, "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth: for I am God, and there is none else" (Isa. 45:22). "Grace be to you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ" (Eph. 1:2).

Jesus said, "I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me" (John 6:38). Also He said, "For as the Father hath life in himself; so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself" (John 5:26).

Just before Jesus was crucified He prayed to God, His Father, in these words, "Father, the hour is come; glorify thy Son, that thy Son also may glorify thee: as thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him. And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent" (John 17:1-3). Surely we can conclude from these verses that God and Christ are separate persons.

We note further that Jesus prayed to God that His disciples might be one, even as He and His Father were one (John 17:21, 22). This shows that the oneness does not mean one in person or substance, but that God and Jesus are always working together in full harmony and unity.

The words "Holy Ghost" do not refer to a person. They are properly translated "Holy Spirit," and refer to God's power and influence. This power is invisible to the human eye, but God uses it as He sees best and for the accomplishment of His plans.

Precious Members

Mrs. Annie Mills, Piedmont, S. C.

We know that we have many members of our bodies, and that when one of those members—the eye, ear, brain, or heart—gets afflicted and ean't carry on its duty, it affects the whole body. We do anything in our power to get that member in shape to resume its work. We often see a physician. We realize how precious one member is to the body. Each member has a duty that it must carry out before we can have a strong body.

The church of God is the body of Christ (1 Cor. 10:17; 12:27). Each one has a certain duty to carry out (Rom. 12:4-13). These members are just as precious to Christ as the members of our own body are to us, and we should be just as particular not to harm one of these as we would not to harm a member of our own body. We should love them, pray for them, visit them, be true and trustworthy to them, and be always ready to forgive them. "Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love" (Rom. 12:10). Don't do anything to cause one to quit his duty, but do everything to help keep him in action, in order to make this body of Christ a strong one.

My Creed

By Granville Lecke, South Bend, Ind.

Most men have some sort of creed.
You'll find mine in the Book of books.
That Book reveals and supplies man's need,
But none observes until he looks
Between the lids of Truth's confines.
Overshadowed with God's great grace:
Each word, each page grows rich with age,
No years, nor skeptic can efface.
An earnest quest for what is best
Will bring you to this glorious creed:
Comes inner sight to read aright—
Moreover, see another's need (James 1:27).

PREPARED BY MADGE SAVAGE

"Thou shalt not steal" (Exodus 20:15).

The Eighth Commandment

The eighth commandment does not limit the meaning of "steal." It is wise for us as Christians, who wish to get wisdom and understanding of God's will, to be sure we know the full meaning of the word "steal."

It means to take something which belongs to somebody else, as money or objects which the rightful owner may recover.

It also means to take things which belong to others that cannot be recovered. Perhaps these examples will help us to understand more fully.

Mary's duty each morning before going to school is to make her bed. If she leaves it for her mother to make, then she is stealing her mother's time. Her mother is being robbed of the time she uses to do Mary's work. Time keeps going on. No one can recover stolen time.

It is examination time in John's school. He knows the answers to the test, for he is a good worker. But Joe can't remember one important word. If he fails to get that word, he also fails in his examination. John wouldn't think of copying from Joe's paper. Do you think John should let Joe see the word he needs? Let me ask it in another way. Should John help Joe, his best friend, steal that word? Cheating is dishonest. The one who copies, and the one who lets his friend copy, are both cheats, both dishonest.

Those are but two examples of wrong-going called stealing.

Whether we are at play, at home or at school, we must remember to be honest in all things.

You think of some things one might steal that could not be recovered.

When Curiosity Brought a Blessing

Were you ever a chief in any of your games? It means the leader or head one. Zacchaus was the chief among the publicans. The publicans were taxgatherers. They took too much money from the poor people, and kept it for themselves.

One day Zacchæus heard that Jesus was to pass near by. He was a short man and so many taller people were in front of him he couldn't see well! So He decided to climb a tree. Before Jesus passed that way Zacchæus was up in a sycomore tree, high enough to get a good look at this Jesus of whom he had heard so much.

When Jesus came to the tree He knew where Zacchieus was to be found. He looked up and said, "Zacchieus, make haste, and come down; for to day I must abide at thy house."

This pleased Zacchæus, but the crowd murmured. There were some of the same kind of people we have today. Some said, "Look at that! He's going home with that sinner!"

Jesus heard Zacchæus say a little later, "Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor; and if I have taken any thing from any man by false accusation, I restore him fourfold." Zacchæus was not going to do any half-hearted repenting. Jesus' purity had touched his heart.

If all wrongdoers could restore four times as much as they stole, many would be happier for it. The sad part is that often the wrongs we do can only be made partly right. We can only say, "I'm sorry. Forgive me! I did not intend any such harm." So many sins are like those illustrated above.

Jesus went home with a sinner, but the sinner became a saint. Christ said, "This day is salvation come to this house. Zacchæus was not a good companion. Jesus didn't copy his ways or approve of his actions. When Zacchæus took a good look at Jesus all was changed within him. As soon as Zacchæus gave Jesus the opportunity to enter his heart, He showed him His way.

Christ is still ready and waiting today for us to open our heart's door so He can come in and dwell with us always.

A House of Prayer

The church building is the house of prayer.

Mark 11:17 says it is called "of all nations the house of prayer."

The first time Jesus made the temple pure He said to those who bought and sold, "Take these things hence; make not my Father's house an house of merchandise" (John 2:16).

Merchandise is anything bought and sold for profit. So it is wrong to buy or sell in our house of prayer. Let us use our church buildings for what they were intended, that is, for spiritual purposes. Offer up a prayer when you enter your "house of prayer,"

AMONG THE CHURCHES

BROTHER GROVER GORDON LEAVES HOLBROOK, NEBRASKA

A farewell party was given in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Grover Gordon who were leaving for Lawrenceville, Ohio, to assume the pastorate of the Church of God at that place. The evening was spent in playing games, then lunch was served, and, in behalf of the church, Bro. Geisler of Moorefield gave a short talk and presented us with an electric wastle iron and teaster. Thus ends almost twenty years of labor with them in the work of the church, twelve as Bible teacher before the church building was creeted, and eight years as pastor. They are a fine group of people and are anxious to keep the work going, but have been hard hit by drought for several years. In spite of hard years they have their church free from debt, and now have enough money in the seat fund to purchase new pews. When times permit I am sure they will establish full-time work. Our best wishes and prayers continue with them.

Arrives at Lawrenceville, Ohio, via Omaha and Oregon

On Tuesday, Oct. 25, after taking leave of the brethren at Holbrook, we started on our journey eastward. That evening we were in Omaha, where we held meeting every evening that week, closing with an all-day meeting (three sermons) on Sunday, Oct. 29. After the morning service a pot luck dinner was enjoyed in the park. All services were well attended, and the church seems to be very much encouraged, as they are zealous for the truth, and are doing all they can to earry the message to others in that locality. They have purchased a building and are improving it as they can. A new coat of paint has recently been put on, which adds a great deal to the appearance from the outside. There is a good field in Omaha and, now with a building of their own in a good location where there is no other church, we predict a bright future and full-time work soon.

Leaving Omaha on October 30, we drove to Oregon, Ill., where we spent a very enjoyable evening with Bro. and Sr. Magaw and family. Next day we drove to Columbia City, Ind., stopping off for au hour or so on the way to visit Bro. Paul Hatch and his mother. We arrived in Lawrenceville, Ohio, on November 2, and found the brethren busily engaged in improving their church building, which is very encouraging indeed. They have done and are still doing all they can to make us feel at home and to get settled. Bro. Magaw has been serving this church once a month for several years, and now the result of the combined labors of him and the faithful members here is a full-time work. We ask the brethren everywhere to pray the heavenly Father's blessing to attend us and that our efforts will be for His glory, the edification of the church, and for the salvation of any who are without hope and without God in the world.

Grover Gordon.

MINNESOTA EVANGELISM

Last Sunday, Nov. 13, was spent at the home of Bro. and Sr. Orlando Berry near Oamia, Minn. Two services were held during the day at a near-by schoolhouse. Attendances were 18 and 20. In spite of many difficulties this group has maintained a Sunday school, meeting practically every week in summer and winter, which really deserves commendation.

Next Sunday meetings are scheduled at the Johnsons' home near Hector.

HILLISBURG COOPERATES

Twenty-nine members of the Hillisburg (Ind.) Church of God demonstrated an earnest desire to meet in Christian fellowship with the brethren of our other Indiana churches by driving almost eighty miles to Burr Oak to attend their special meeting on Sunday, Nov. 13. A school bus was used to take twenty-six of this group.

ST. LOUIS CHURCH NEWS

The St. Louis, Mo., Church have elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President, Claude Graham; vice president, Earl Logan; treasurer and song leader, Edwin Graham; secretary, Mrs. Alice Jennings. We have Sunday school Sunday morning, and Bibbe class on Wednesday evening, preaching services just as often as a preacher is available.

It has been our privilege to have preaching service a number of times the past year, and we feel so thankful for these privileges.

We would be glad to have any of the brethren who are visiting in our city or vicinity to bunt us up.

Gleanings From the Field

Sr. Nancy B. Robison and her nephew, Hugh Gillespie, both formerly of Arkansas City, Kansas, are now at Whittier, Calif.

A new record of attendance was established for the Sunday school at Burr Oak, Ind., on November 13, with 126 present.

Bro. Rufus Curtis will greet you in next week's paper with his first of a series of articles on "Thoughts for Thinkers."

Sr. Rose Starbuck of California, was in attendance at the Oregon morning services, Nov. 20, with her son Harold of Rockford, with whom she is visiting.

Sr. Mary Gesin, ill for the past ten days, was very sorry to be unable to write her usual Thanksgiving Day message for The Restitution Herald. Her condition is improving.

Elder J. R. LeCrone is now holding a series of evangelistic meetings at the Dry Run Church in Virginia. The meetings will close Sunday, Nov. 27. We pray for the success of this effort, and with this note send greetings to the brethren of Powell's Fort Valley.

We are glad to have a new order for Truth Seekers' Sunday School Quarterly. It will go to our brethren at Tempe, Ariz. Thank you. Bro. Lindsay.

We are sorry to report the death of Sr. Arthur Johnson of Lake View, Iowa. She failed to recover following an operation, death coming on November 20. Our sympathy surely goes out to Bro. Arthur.

Bro. Conner reports that a very good meeting was held at Burr Oak, Ind., on November 13, and the brethren showed a splendid spirit of cooperation with the National Bible Institution by sending with Bro. Conner a contribution of $20,00.

We have been very pleased to have the foliowing to recently visit us at the office: Elders F. L. Austin, Harvey Krogh, and Clarence Lapp, also Bro. J. H. Williams of Rochelle, Ill., and Bro. Charles Lindsay of Pearl City, Ill.

The Rockford, Ill., brethren have rented a church building, in which they hope to soon hold regular services.

LAWRENCEVILLE, OHIO

The Sunshine Class of the Lawrenceville Church of God met at the home of Bro. and Sr. Paul Overholser on the evening of November 4, for their regular monthly meeting. This was a Hallowe'en party, to which the entire Sunday school was invited. The new pastor and wife, Bro. and Sr. Grover Gordon, had arrived two days previously. This was therefore a get-acquainted party as well as one of entertainment. A number of the guests came in cestumes and the entertainment of the evening consisted of games and contests, after which a light lunch was served.

We are very glad to welcome Bro. and Sr.

We are very glad to welcome Bro. and Sr. Gordon into our midst, and we anticipate many happy and helpful hours together.

Helen Overholser, Secretary.

A LETTER FROM BRO. J. M. MORGAN

I am in evangelistic work with my whole heart, and I wish to continue in this great work of helping others to be ready for the coming of Christ. My record books show that I have baptized more than two hundred.

In October I delivered 38 sermons; traveled 540 miles; but received only $19.50. One was baptized, Nov. 2, near Sallisaw, Okla. I plan to return to Sallisaw November 17, to hold a two-weeks' meeting. I am praying that the Lord will direct and bless, and that lasting good will be done in His holy name.

Will you who love the good cause of Christ send in a small donation for the work of love? The Lord will bless you.

Eld. J. M. Morgan, 525 N. Washington St., Edmond, Okla.

ORTIZ - WILLARD

Mr. Wayne Willard and Miss Ruth Ortiz were united in mariage on October 22, at the Church of God in Holbrook, Neb. Only the immediate families were present. After the ceremony, dinner was served in the basement of the church.

Wayne is a member of the church, a nephew of the writer, and is a graduate of the McCook Junior College. At present he is superintendent of the Beverly, Neb., school. Ruth is a graduate of the McCook High School and a very talented young lady. They will make their home in Beverly. The best wishes of their friends and relatives go with them as they enter life's journey together.

Grover Gordon.

MOLA - BARBER

A wedding of interest to church people of the Northwest was the marriage, Saturday evening, Sept. 3, of Miss Margaret Mola and Carl William Barber of Corvallis, Ore. The ceremony was observed at 7:00 p.m., at the home of Sr. Edith Barber, the bridegroom's mother, with Elder H. J. Prosser of Newport. Ore., officiating.

Mrs. Barber attended the public schools here, graduating from Corvallis High School, and becoming the secretary in the office of the superintendent of public schools, which position she has held for a number of years, and where her personality and charm have won her a wide circle of friends and acquaintances. Mr. Barber attended school in Corvallis and was later graduated from the Hemphill Diesel Engineering School of Scattle, Wash. Both Mr. and Mrs. Barber were born in Corvallis. They are at home at 2053 Harrison Street, in this city.

MARTHA MYRA LEHMAN

Martha Myra, youngest daughter of Algie and Daniel K. Lehman, was born in Prairie City, Iowa, June 9, 1892, and fell asleep in death October 28, 1938, In 1901 she came with her parents to Ohio, and has since lived in the vicinity of West Milton.

In September, 1912, she accepted Christ and was baptized by Eld. J. H. Anderson, who was pastor of the Brush Creek Church at that time. The hope of Christ's soon coming was a great comfort to her during her affliction.

She leaves to mourn her death, four sisters. Mrs. P. N. Benn, Mrs. Edna Brewer, Mrs. Ray Jones, and Ethel Lehman; one brother, H. A. Lehman; one aunt, Mrs. Anna Eidemiller; one uncle, John Lehman; besides other relatives and friends.

A short service was held in the Hale Funeral Parlors at West Milton, and the funeral sermon was given in the Brush Creek Church, by the writer. We laid her to rest in the cemetery hard by the church to await the call of her Master.

ALBERT D. ESHELMAN

Albert D. Eshelman was born in Lancaster, Pa., January 12, 1846. In 1890 he came to Scattle, Wash., where he lived until 1930, when he went to San Francisco to live with one of his sons.

In carly manhood he became a Christian and an active member of the Church of God in proclaiming the message of the second coming of Christ, eternal life only through Christ, and kindred truths. In the early 1890's he was a leader in organizing the first church and community Sunday school in West Scattle. During part of the time he published a Christian paper setting forth the Advent views and testifying to the grace of God.

He is survived by his two sons, Wallace of San Francisco, with whom he made his home. and Earle of Scattle; one sister, Mrs. Anna M. Young of West Scattle; and two grandchildren.

Funeral services were held from the Bonney-Watson Parlors in Seattle, Oct. 31, where many of his former friends gathered. Words of comfort were spoken from the text of the Psalmist, "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness," setting forth his faith and lope in the coming Redeemer. He was laid to test in Lakeview Cemetery, beside the grave of his sleeping companion who, with him, awaits the summons to life immortal.

JAMES POLAND

James Poland was born on September 25, 1872, at Kingston, Tenn., and died on November 11, 1938. He moved to Skelton, W. Va., in 1924, where he spent the balance of his days. On January 25, 1902, he married Mary Capps. To their union were born four children. He leaves to mourn, besides his wife, two sons, Clarence and Clyde, and one daughter, Ellen, and three stepsons, Arnold, Lon, and Roy Capps. He was baptized in 1911 at Kingston, Tenn., was a member of the Church of God, and his faith was in God until the end.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer.

"Home, Sweet Home"

Provided by the love and sympathy of the entire brotherhood of the Church of God, Golden Rule Home assures to the members of its Family the comfort, security, and solicitous care which the word "home" always suggests.

Here the anxieties of earlier and more active life are laid aside forever. No threat of eviction for non-payment of rent or taxes or other indebtedness troubles the hearts of the residents of Golden Rule Home!

No doctor or hospital bills, no grocery, coal, or light bills to be met the first of the month, bring fear to the minds of the Golden Rule Home Family!

All such obligations and burdens are taken from the shoulders of these older ones immediately upon their entrance into the Home and are carried thereafter by the Golden Rule Home itself, which is amply able to bear the load on their behalf.

A hearty Christian welcome awaits all who seek the protection and lifelong support the Home provides.

Why I Believe the Story of Creation

By James A. Patrick

"Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that the things which are seen were not made of things which do appear" (Hebrews 11:3).

OUR editor has asked me to tell the readers of The Restitution Herald why I believe the Bible account of creation.

I believe the Bible account of creation because it dovetails in with all the known facts better than the theories advanced by scientists. This may seem a strange statement from one who makes no pretense of being a scientist. The reason I can make such a statement without fear of successful contradiction is because there are some well-known facts that have been overlooked by scientists in their eagerness to prove their theories.

The evolutionists tell us that no one should presume to speak on this subject unless he has read one good book on the subject. If this is what it takes to qualify, I guess I can speak, for I have read Dr. Vernon Kellog's "Evolution." Dr. William M. Goldsmith's "Evolution or Christianity," Rev. Alfred Wesley Wishart's "Evolution and Christianity," and "Debates on Evolution." The last named was a stenographic report of a series of debates held in San Francisco, California, some years ago, between the then president of the Science League of America and two Seventh Day Adventist ministers. The judges that presided were judges of some of the courts of California. I am sorry I have mislaid the book and cannot give names. Possibly I have loaned the book to some one, and he has forgotten to return it, as is sometimes the case.

Besides the foregoing, I have before me a pamphlet entitled "The Building of the Earth," by Carroll Lane Fenton. I cannot quote at length from this book, but would like to call attention to some expressions in it, such as "almost certainly represents," "which is supposed to indicate a structure that is essentially gaseous, although authorities are not quite certain that this is the actual condition." Mr. Fenton said this in speaking of the "nebulae known at the present time," Further, he says "it is almost certain that these nebular materials exist in finely divided and widely separated particles." Again I quote, "In every way, therefore, they (the nebulae) are to be favored as possible ancestors of the solar system." Then he concludes, "And so, out of the supposed chain of events here sketched, we have the spiral nebulae ready for final development into the solar system." So at best we have only a supposed chain of events to account for our solar system. (Emphasis in the foregoing is mine.)

I wish to quote further from an article by Francis D. Nichols in Signs of the Times. And, by the way, if my memory serves me aright, Mr. Nichols is one of the men who took part in "Debates on Evolution" mentioned in the foregoing. Mr. Nichols is quoting from a book entitled "The Evolution of Man," pp. 76, 77. This book was written by a group of Yale professors. Here are the quotations from the book: "May be," "may perhaps," "is possible," "indicates the possible," "seems to be," etc. Again I give quotations as given by Mr. Nichols from Darwin's "Origin of Species": "Perhaps," "reasonably suppose," "seems impossible to determine," "difficult to say."

I have quoted all this to show how much uncertainty there is in all the writings of evolutionists. Yet, these same men would laugh at you if you quoted, "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth," or "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul."

The two main hypotheses by which men have tried to account for the origin of the earth are, Laplace's Nebular Hypothesis, and Chamberlin's Plenetesimal Theory. Both go back into the past millions of years and try to find a starting point. Through the powerful telescopes they have found what they are pleased to call "nebulae." The dictionary defines a "nebula" as "a faint cloudlike self-luminous mass of gaseous (Please turn to page 11)

"Earnestly Contend for the Faith"

"Jude, the servant of Jesus Christ" taught a certain kind of contention. He was no trouble maker, nor busybody. In greeting the "called" he wrote, "Mercy unto you, and peace, and love, be multiplied" (Jude 2). However, that "servant of Jesus Christ" did not suggest that peace should be multiplied at the expense of truth. He said, "It was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints."

"Paul and Timotheus, the servants of Jesus Christ," in addressing the church at Philippi, wrote, "Grace be unto you, and peace," yet they did not cry, "Peace at any price."

Those "servants of Jesus Christ" taught a certain kind of strife, saying in Philippians 1:27, 28, "Only let your conversation be as it becometh the gospel of Christ: . . . that ye stand fast in one spirit, with one mind striving together for the faith of the gospel; and in nothing terrified by your adversaries." Christians are charged by Paul, "not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake; having the same conflict which ye saw in me."

Christ contended for truth. Paul "fought with beasts at Ephesus." Millions of martyrs shame the modern church's chatter, "It doesn't make any difference what you believe."

Christians must today carry that "same conflict," must "earnestly contend" for that same faith. There can come no crown without first bearing the cross. Those who love peace so much that they will not "fight the good fight of faith" have not peace but ease; they cannot know "the peace of God, which passeth all understanding."

People who will not contend for the faith have no faith to contend for. There are too many record-book Christians who do not know "the faith which was once delivered unto the saints," and who scarcely know any faith. The anyold-religion that is good enough for the crowd is the religion the crowd has.

One Gospel

Ten thousand brands of oleomargarine isms cannot be substituted for the sweetness and vitamins of the pure, golden gospel. To the Galatians Paul wrote, "I marvel that we are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel: which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. . . . For," says Paul, "I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ."

Now the preaching of Paul was not in "enticing words," nor in language that only a pope could correctly comprehend. As Christ and the Twelve taught, so did Paul. The message was clear, the promises were sure, the requirements were simple but definite.

John the Baptist had said, "Repent ye," and many, "warned . . . to flee from the wrath to come," "were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins."

Jesus said, "Suppose ye that these Galilaeans (whom Pilate had destroyed) were sinners above all the Galilaeans, because they suffered such things? I tell you, Nay; but, except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." Further, Jesus said, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God," and commissioned His disciples, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."

Peter said, "Repent, and be baptized (not sprinkled) every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins," and "Save yourselves from this untoward generation."

Philip preached Christ to the Samaritans, and when "they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women."

So preached Paul: "As many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ," "buried with him in baptism," "redeeming the time, because the days are evil," "and to wait for his (God's) Son from heaven . . . even Jesus, which delivered us from the wrath to come." "As he reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come, Felix trembled."

Not only in these several respects, but in all points of faith and doctrine were Christ, the Apostles, and Paul firmly agreed. Christ's words echoed from His Apostles, rechoed from Paul, and are yet, after nineteen centuries, the message of those who believe and care. Faith may wane, the gospel stays just the same.

Facts for Thinkers

Article 1

By R. A. Curtis

IF "GOD himself that formed the earth and made it," and created man upon it," will condescend to invite His rebellious creatures, "Come now, and let us reason together," is it not commendable in us, His wayward children, to emulate His example and strive to compose our differences by reasoning together upon our origin, nature, and destiny, as disclosed in the Scriptures?

It is not stating a new axiom to say, "The proper study of mankind is man." "Know thyself" is just as important now as when it first was uttered by the lips of philosopher. The Psalmist David, in contemplating "thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars, which thou hast ordained," exclaims in wonder and adoration, "What is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him?" (Psalm 8:3, 4).

Let us look to the proper source for "light" and "understanding" (Psalm 119:130; John 5:39). "How readest thou?" (Luke 10:26).

"Happy they of human race,
To whom the Lord hath given grace,
To read, to heed, to hope, to pray,
To lift the latch, and force the way.
But better had they ne'er been born,
Who read to doubt or read to scorn."

MAN'S ORIGIN AND NATURE

Man existed first in the mind of God. "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth" (Gen. 1:26). In the next chapter, we are informed that God began carrying out what He had previously planned. "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul" (Gen. 2:7).

From the above authentic statement concerning man's origin, the following facts stand out in bold, promontory conspicuousness. He was as tangible and real a person as "the dust of the earth" of which he was "formed." No legerdemain can substitute an immaterial man for the man that God formed and made amenable to a law, whose penalty was death (Gen. 2:15-17). No advocate of the first lie recorded in the Bible, "Ye shall not surely die," can ever make the statement fit in with the history of the man God formed; for "all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years: and he died" (Gen. 5:5). The statement that "deceived" Mother Eve has long since been discredited by good authority (2 Tim. 2:14; John 8:44). It is always best to "let God be true" (Rom. 3:3, 4). God termed this creature He formed "man" before he had any life of any kind imparted to him. Man "became a living soul."

"Truth crushed to earth will rise again, The eternal years of God are hers: Whilst error, sinking, writhes in pain, And dies amidst her worshipers."

THE EARTH MAN'S ETERNAL HOME

Another fact in the brief narrative of the Lord, who "made the earth, and created man upon it," was that he should "have dominion over all the earth," his primeval home (Gen. 1:26; Isa. 45:12). This patrimony was lost because of willful rebellion (1 Tim. 2:14). "Therefore the Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden" (Gen. 3:23). He went out of Paradise through the gate of unbelief. If he ever enters it again, it will be through faith in Christ, "the door" into the sheepfold of safety (John 10:1-5; 14:6). The first dominion, forfeited by the disobedience of "the first man Adam," who was "of the earth earthy," is secured by "the second man," who "is the Lord from heaven" (1 Cor. 15:45-49). He it is to whom God has said, "Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession" (Psalm 2:8; Ezek. 21:25-27). God's original purpose to have the earth "inhabited" has not run out by limitation or met with defeat because of inability on His part to bring to a glorious consummation His "eternal purpose which He purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord" (Eph. 3:11). Believing the Word of God is "for ever settled in heaven," I reject the theory that our earth is a transient nursery for the training of immortal and immaterial souls for eternal happiness or everlasting misery in heaven or hell (Psalm 119:89). So far as our earth, which is man's home, in time or eternity (see Isa. 45:12, 18; Matt. 5:5: Psalm 37:9, 11, 22, 29, 34; Prov. 2:21, 22; 11:31) becoming an unsightly einder, or stricken from the sisterhood of worlds, we have this statement from "God himself that formed the earth and made it," "The earth abideth for ever' '(Isa. 45:18; Eccl. 1:4). In speaking of the works of His hands, God declares, "They all shall wax old as doth a garment; and as a vesture shalt thou fold them up and they shall be changed" (Heb. 1:10-12). He has purposed in His heart to "make all things new"-"a new heaven and a new earth" (Rev. 21:1-5). (Please turn to page 10)

Our Changing World

Article 3—Babylon vs. Jerusalem

By F. L. Austin

THE scripture which likens Abraham's bond-- maid, Agar, to "Jerusalem which now is," continues by likening Abraham's freewoman, Sarah, to "Jerusalem which is above," and "which is the mother of us all." Galatians 4:26 is translated in the Diaglott to read: "But the EX-ALTED Jerusalem represents the Free-woman, who is our Mother."

F. L. Austin

For the reason that "the two covenants"—the one given to the Kingdom-nation Israel of yesterday, and the other given to the Kingdom-nation Israel of tomorrow-do each consist of Jehovah's manual of instructions concerning national and private behavior, and are each provided by God with complete and competent instructors and administrators, the writer makes bold to liken the two covenants to two schools for God's two-phased Kingdom nation. The reason for using this illustration is that people in thinking of a kingdom think of it as limited by certain geographical boundaries. While this is Biblically true of God's Israel kingdom, it is also true that every member of God's kingdom should, in behavior, comply with the instructions of God's covenant rules, though he may be living in earth's remotest corner. He is expected to do just as the graduate settling in distant parts is expected to do: to pattern his professional behavior in harmony with the principles instructed by his Alma Mater. Those who pledge themselves to God's covenant of instruction and blessing are the subjects of that covenant no matter where on earth they may dwell. Geographical boundaries warn opponent nations, "Thus far and no farther"; but they do not relieve the citizen of God's covenant nation who may dwell beyond said boundaries from the principles of His covenant instructions. In obedience to this truth we read in Acts 2:9, 10 of "Parthians and Medes and Elamites, and dwellers in Mesopotamia . . . in Egypt . . . strangers of Rome," all subjects of God's Kingdom, gathered on the campus of old Jerusalem to observe the Feast of Pentecost. For, whether dwellers of Rome, or Egypt, or Mesopotamia, all of His people were first and always responsible to God. Being educated under God's instructions they all-regardless of geographical boundaries-belong to His school of life behavior. They are God's citizenship-pupils in His Kingdom.

The same general principles regarding instruction and development of scholarship apply in

BABEL'S SCHOOL OF CONFUSION

In this the first seat of learning was Babylon. A great variety of similar lesser schools had long time prevailed. But about 600 B. C. God made Babylon head over all such. God gave to Babylon's king the privilege of capturing and demolishing Jerusalem's whole seat of learning and authority and of instituting another in its stead. That was a most terrible punishment to Judah inasmuch as it compelled her to submit to a tremendously inferior system. It was as much inferior as man is inferior to God; as much as man's wisdom is inferior to God's wisdom. For, while Israel's covenant system was a revelation of the infinite wisdom of God as regards provision for human welfare and conduct, Babylon's empirical laws were but the oozings of finite mind so codified as to deify the selflusting few by the compulsory serfdom of the many. No blessings were rewarded. The very system decimated even the normal blessings of Heaven. As for Babylon, she was utterly helpless to bestow any such. The enactments of the

seem to be records of inerasable stains produced by mental drippings from voluptuous selfishness.

At first this university was dignified with a campus site. It was the city of Babylon, Though Babylon was shortlived, yet subversive principles of the ingratiated system have permeated through a series of successive man-made kingdoms down to the present day. In 1938 it has its controlling graduate servants in practically every phase of human action and ambition. As examples of its achievements witness numerous current national pressures: In Russia, Turkey, Germany, Italy, Spain, et al.: lands and chattels expropriated by state while owners are left to starve; husbands and fathers committed to concentration camps that wives and daughters may be confiscated for state or public; leaders purged by firing squads that incumbent officers might tighten their hold; maiden youth enthused to rapid patriotic production that the army shall be enlarged; the Jewish race despoiled of means and opportunity that another race may profit; small estates pawned for other states' pleasure. Or, as further witness, survey the social, economic, political, industrial, religious trends in general: criminal gambling charges quashed; crime patronized that political support might be strengthened; constitutional law subdued for official strength; vice promoted for financial advantage. But why go farther? These, as all their kith and kin, are the output of the handicraft of pupils impregnated with Babel's system of theories.

No longer has this Babylonian Empire a geographical location—unless it be that of the circumference of the globe. It is no longer a kingdom of location but a kingdom of condition-of ill-savored condition of life resultant from two and a half millenniums of instruction in the idolatrous school of

MAN WORSHIP

It is this condition that must be changed. The changing of international boundaries only changes the location of battlefields. The change must be from the condition of unrighteousness founded upon man's unrighteous and inequitable laws and practices to the condition of righteousness and equity founded upon "the way" of the Anointed Son of God.

How weary is mankind! What dreadful world-wide conditions prevail! In statecraft, industry, finance, economics, politics, religion, education—everywhere—the general pub-lie yielding (bowing) to forceful man! It was the world's "head of gold" of Daniel 2:38 which said in chapter 4:30: "Is not this great Babylon, that I have built for the house of the kingdom by the might of my power, and for the henour of my majesty?" Though verse 31 begins the story of his pitiful downfall, yet individual and group successors have through the centuries mastered Mother Babylon's God-contradicting curriculum of life and qualified in ever increasing numbers the continuously succeeding generations for scholastic "degrees" agreeable in type to the humanly organized and equipped Alma Mater itself—even

The Sunday School Teacher

By A. G. Townsend

"And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever" (Daniel 12:3).

THE teacher is the hinge upon which the Sunday school swings. The importance of the teacher's office cannot be overestimated. There is a sense in which the teacher is the highest officer in the Sunday school. Certainly the superintendent outranks the teacher only in an executive capacity. Jesus was a teacher. He commands us to teach. Surely the teaching of God's Word is a worthy task, and one that is full of promise. It is my purpose here to give a few suggestions regarding the teachers and their work.

GENERAL PREPARATION

Other things being equal, the difference between success and failure in the work of a Sunday school teacher is usually the matter of preparation.

The teacher should have a knowledge of the Bible, that is, a general knowledge of the book itself—the relation of one part to another, its general scope.

The teacher should have a knowledge of teaching—what it is, and how to do it.

The teacher should have a knowledge of the mind. It is just as important that a teacher study the minds of his pupils as it is for a farmer to study the soils in the various fields of his farm.

The teacher should have faith in the work. Certainly no teacher will be a large success unless he has faith in his work. He should believe in the power of God's Word to do all things that God has said it would do. He should recognize his opportunity as God-given, and the Sunday school as the choicest field he can work in. He should believe in his work with all his heart, and be filled with enthusiasm for it.

The teacher should be one who believes in prayer, one who practices prayer. How can one teach that which he does not do himself?

The teacher must be one who is anxious and has a real passion to save souls. For without this passion we cannot expect any lasting results.

The teacher must study the Bible for the strengthening of his spiritual life. Sunday school teaching is spiritual work. The teacher who would succeed must have spiritual life. This can be found only in communion with God through His Word. The faithful teacher should say, "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth."

But it is more important that we hear God when He speaks to us. A teacher's reason for entering into the work should be the joy of service for the Master, and not with the attitude of teaching because no one else will.

Classes have often been held together by ignorant men whose power lay in their simple spirituality!

This power can be gained only in one way. We reflect the company we keep. We must daily walk with God, have quiet talks with Him, and make the study of His Word our daily food. God will not place His spiritual power in vessels unprepared and unclean.

The teacher must be sincere. The children are very keen in their judgment of character. Make the children love you. Shams are very easily detected. What the teacher really is and what he or she does through the week may make or destroy the thirty minutes of teaching on Sunday. The teacher must be what he seeks to have his scholars become.

Teachers, do not allow yourself to get discouraged. Whoever does his best succeeds. God's promise is to the faithful. Today it may seem that you have failed, you have gone to your home with tearful eyes and a heavy heart, only to discover later that it was one of the most profitable days that you have ever had.

"We must not hope to be mowers
And gather the golden ears,
Unless we have first been sowers,
And watered each furrow with tears."

The End of the Chapter

By James M. Watkins

IN these turbulent days we are inclined to fix our attention on the brightest light and forget the lesser lights that, by being less blinding, might do much more in lighting the pathway ahead.

We have constantly centered our attention on the actions of Hitler in Europe, and well we might, for we dare not minimize his importance there, but in so doing we may overlook some of the lesser lights that would do much to help us to anticipate the future of Europe.

One of these lesser lights was in the passing, a few days before this writing, of Kemal Attaturk, dictator of Turkey. In the minds of most people it has made little impression. His successor is almost certainly established by circumstances. As far as the world can notice, there will probably be little change in the policies of Turkey. The logical successor has long been a power behind the throne; his opinions have long carried weight with the dictator, so much so that those things he was inclined to frown at were discarded. Attaturk has at times affectionately called him his conscience, every action being put to the test of what he thought.

Attaturk appeared to have no other conscience, his life showed the least moral restraint of any of the modern rulers. He not only talked against, but lived against every possible teaching of God, although at no time permitting his subjects to go to the same extreme that he did. Apparently, he realized that in a country as devoid of morals as he was himself he would lose control. Entirely against the teaching of Christ, he yet instituted through peace and prosperity a modernization of his country that has not been equaled by any nation since the World War—even including those attempting to do so by force. Now he has come to his end. We look ahead.

We center our studies in the eighth chapter of Daniel. To students of history, we believe that the application of this chapter to the Ottoman Empire is obvious. It carries us in thought to the time back in the sixteenth century when the Ottoman (Turkish) Empire was brought into conflict with the Hapsburgs, not in the land of Turkey as we know it today, but up in Austria.

As in many other prophetic studies, we find ourselves in both the case of the Hapsburgs and the Turks at the dividing line of much prophetic thought, the World War. The close of the World War found the rule of the Hapsburgs ended by the exile of Kaiser Wilhelm. We also find Turkey driven back into Asia Minor with her holdings on the European continent confiscated.

In this realignment of nations we observe some very significant factors. Observing Daniel 8:22 we are told of four nations standing up in the area of the Mcdo-Persian Empire. Twice in history has this occurred: first, at the beginning of the Ottoman Empire, and second, at the close of the World War. The first did not continue to complete the prophecy, possibly because in that alignment the pattern of Genesis 10 was not followed. As given there, the people of the earth are divided according to the sons of Noah. History shows that any alliance involving more than one of the major groups of that division has not stood. The Hapsburgs learned this to their sorrow when they attempted to hold Poland in their dominion. They found themselves in conflict with Russia, a fact that we feel will exclude Poland from the Germanic alliance now forming.

At the close of the World War, again four nations stood up, but not under one power, as prescribed. They were Turkey, Syria, Iraq, and Persia. As the remainder of the world is forming itself according to the prescribed pattern, it would appear that we can rightfully anticipate the completion of the prophecy.

As we anticipate a little of what is yet to come in the prophecy of these four nations, we do so only in the spirit of study. We have collected and analyzed a wide variety of prophetic writings, ranging over a period of several hundred years, and in so doing have been impressed, not with their differences, but with their similarities. The opinions offered are the results of these studies, and embody only what old-time prophetic students have anticipated, yet brought up to date and applied to those things now revealed which they could not possibly have foreseen.

In the writings of these students the visions of Daniel were applied over a period of years and some worth while observations resulted. Yet Daniel in different instances was told that at the time of the end would be the visions, a period which I feel began with the World War. For this reason all of my personal studies have been brought up to date and applied to this latter period.

These views are presented not as fixed obsessions, but rather in the same spirit of study as they were received. The world today is progressing at such a pace that the daily paper is the best commentary we have on the prophecies of the Bible. Each day's news substantiates some old views, proves some wrong, reveals new understandings. We discuss them as we see them today and as they are revealed tomorrow, changing our views if necessary, but striving only for the truth as it is revealed to us. It is with this spirit that we approach prophecy, and it is in this spirit that these thoughts are given to you. They will be continued from time to time only if a majority of readers request them.

We would like to discuss the four beasts of Daniel 7, particularly the fourth beast—its nature and the countries involved. Each of these is a study in itself. However, this fourth beast is very important, not alone because it represents the climax of world governments, but because as we study prophetic history of any nation we always find it at last merging with that of the fourth beast in one way or another.

We find this to be true as we study Turkey, and attempt to establish Attaturk in prophecy. A period of time clapse-between the verses of Daniel 8:22 and 23. After these nations had been established (by the World War), they were to continue for an indefinite period of time. Their history is not discussed in this chapter until it merges with that of the fourth beast, in verse 23. It is evident that one by one each of the major groups of nations has fulfilled each prophecy to the point where they stand ready to be merged, in the not too distant future, with that of the fourth beast.

It is in this lapse of time between verses 22 and 23 that it appears that we find Attaturk and his successor, a thought more clearly indicated in Daniel 11. Verses 18 and 19, describing the trouble with isles (in this case Greece), and how a prince in behalf of the rulers caused this trouble to cease, identifies for us the rule of Mohammed VI, who ruled Turkey following the World War. It was the Treaty of Sevres which he signed, not through his own design, but through the domination of Attaturk, that signaled his deterioration politically. As Attaturk rose to power and overthrew the Moslem religion his power as its head was also (Please turn to page 9)

England Concerned Only With War

By John Eagleston and G. E. Marsh

ELDER John Eagleston of Pomona, California, who was appointed special correspondent for The Restitution Herald in England, breaks a silence of nearly three months to tell of the misfortune and disappointment that has overtaken him. Brother Eagleston, after an absence of half a century from his native land, returned to England last August with the expectation of continuing his ministry in that country. His hopes of successful and happy service were high. How could they be otherwise? Was not the message of the kingdom the most splendid announcement any man could make to the anxious, war-weary world? Would not that message be received with joy everywhere by those who were waiting for deliverance from the terror of death that hung like a storm cloud over their heads? But how different was the reception the glad tidings received from that which had been expected!

Disappointed, disillusioned, and seriously ill in a hospital, into which he was taken for an emergency operation on the very "night when the terrible tension into which the entire country had been thrown by the threat of immediate war had reached its highest point," Brother Eagleston awaits in physical pain and, in spite of abiding confidence in God, mental despondency, the outcome.

"If you could see with what earnestness everybody waited for the word to go (to war with Germany in defense of Czechoslovakia)! It seemed to me pitiful. I think all of Europe is so worked up over war that they are confident they can subdue all of their enemics. But it seems to me that there will be no war between Great Britain and Germany or Italy (immediately?), but that the danger is to be looked for from the Arabs and from all the black and yellow races which are growing stronger and more aggressive and are mobilizing their forces according to the Master's orders. Soon He will command the opening of that great and mighty struggle that is to start around the Plain of Esdraclon. Every day I see in the London Daily Telegraph some new act of violence of the Arabs reported, and I believe that the 'time of the end' is right upon us.'

"Now, dear Brother Marsh," writes Brother Eagleston, "for the brethren's sake, will you say I am not staying here any longer than I must. I am ready to leave any moment. None of the truths of the kingdom as we teach them have been found here, and neither do people want to learn them. Even if I were a Noah to warn them, they would cry, 'Leave us alone! We will live today if we die tomorrow!' As soon as I know what I can do I shall write to the brethren with whom I feel bound to communicate, personally. It gives me a buoyant feeling to think that I may see my dear brethren in America again. I hope to be back among them by the end of the coming December."

Resuming his review of prophetic world conditions, Brother Eagleston says:

"By 1940 this great cloud, now gathering in the East, will have made itself felt over the land of Canaan and the nations will be finding themselves busy in preparation for the most terrible conflagration this world has ever witnessed. And what about ourselves, Brother Marsh? I hope and trust and pray that we shall be ready for the fulfillment of 1 Thessalonians 4:16, and that we shall soon stand with the faithful of past ages before the Son of God. Oh, I pray that none of our brethren will be so diligent in their business in this world that they miss the sound of the trumpet that is to call the Lord's own sleeping ones from their earthy beds!

"This is the most important thing in which we may engage our minds and to which we may devote our efforts at this time. I am determined that I will hold no sense of ill feeling against my brother and in the midst of all of these worldly controversies in and out of the churches, I shall permit nothing to come between us as I await the Master's call.".

The Word Made Flesh

By Alta King

"And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth."

THE foregoing scripture refers, we suggest, to the resurrected Jesus. It was spoken by the Holy Spirit through the Apostle John. It speaks John's intimate knowledge of the Savior and furnishes rich food for growth in grace and in knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, as urged by Peter on believers, for it reveals the origin and the continuing cause of His oneness with God. The following consideration is offered as an aid to this understanding and growth.

To understand John 1:14 one must first identify the terms—the "Word," and "grace and truth." The identification of the "Word" is in the verse itself. Jesus, because He is the "Word" made flesh, sheds forth a certain glory. The fullness of this glory is "grace and truth." Hence, the essential meaning of the "Word" is "grace and truth." Words in general are sound formations that express thought power. The "Word" expresses that thought power, the fullness of which is "grace and truth."

The life of Jesus furnishes the identification of "grace and truth." The Apostles beheld the glory that Jesus, the "Word" made flesh, emits. They beheld it in His words and deeds. Without exception the words and deeds of Jesus are words and deeds that meet man's needs and overcome evil. the cause of need. These words and deeds are grace and truth in action. They form a working concept of grace and truth just as the manifestations of electricity form a working concept of electric energy. The finite mind cannot encompass and confine an infinite idea within the limits of a formal definition. But it can know and make use of an infinite idea through those manifestations of it that are within the grasp of the physical senses. This statement is true of electricity. It is likewise true of "grace and truth." The words and deeds of Jesus open the meaning of "grace and truth" as no formal definition can open it, and they build a concept of them that brings their infinite power within man's grasp.

It is to be noted that "grace and truth" are the fullness of the Word's glory. The thought power expressed by the "Word" contains no other ingredient. As the thought power born of instinct life force—the fullness of man on the natural plane—impregnates and controls the flesh of the natural man, so the thought power born of grace and truth—the fullness of God—impregnates and controls the flesh of the resurrected Jesus. From Him come grace and truth only. He is the "Word" made flesh, and the fullness of the Word's glory is the fullness of His glory.

Summarizing our study this far, we have: The "Word" is the expression of that thought power which sheds forth a glory the fullness of which is grace and truth. The "Word" made flesh is the resurrected Jesus in whose flesh the thought power of grace and truth has complete and exclusive control. The glory of this thought power is brought within man's grasp and possession by the words and deeds of Jesus meeting man's needs and overcoming evil.

A third idea to be considered in John 1:14 is that the "Word" made flesh is the only begotten of the Father. When the Apostles beheld the glory of the "Word" made flesh in the words and deeds of Jesus, they beheld the glory of the only begetten of the Father. They, therefore, beheld the glory of the Father Himself, for the only begotten and the Father are one in glory (John 17:5, 22). Thus, Jesus is the true and the complete revelation of the Father in the fullness of His glory. As grace and truth are the fullness of Jesus' glory, so they are the fullness of His Father's glory. As His words and deeds are the media through which His fullness is making contact with man, so they are the media through which the Father's fullness is making contact with man.

According to John 1:1-5, the "Word"—the thought power of grace and truth—made flesh in the person of the resurrected Jesus is not God's initial expression of Himself. He is the finish of an unfolding expression, but in this finish only does the expression become a revelation that enlightens man about God. The unfolding that preceded the "Word" made flesh left man in darkness.

Through God's thought power He created all things and all creation is a manifestation of grace and truth. In it was the life and out of its fullness of grace and truth the life emits light that was the light of men. But these expressions of God are appearing in darkness that does not comprehend them. The darkness of man's mind concerning God does not give way before the word of grace and truth as manifest in and through creation—so hard and blind and unresponsive is the natural mind to the things of the Spirit. Paul speaks of this darkness of the natural mind in 1 Corinthians 2:14.

Though man has ever claimed that he can find and know God through nature, John says that God's expression of Himself through creation and through the light going out from His life force does not enlighten him, and against this background of unbroken darkness he sets God's expression of Himself through Jesus as the revelation that dispels it. His first statement concerning this revelation is the declaration of God's purpose in it. John 1:7, word for word translation, says, "this one (John the Baptist) came into witness that he should be witnessing about the Light that all should be believing through it."

dispelled except by the Light shining through Himself. He says, "No man cometh unto the Father but by me."

God's purpose to enlighten all through Jesus began to be fulfilled even before Jesus was born. Through the prophecies concerning Jesus and the types foreshadowing Him, the Light was offered to Israel, "his own," many centuries before Jesus' birth. Though Israel as a nation did not receive it, a few did, and these few looked forward to the day of Jesus and rejoiced in it as did Abraham, and through it received power to become the sons of God (John 1:8-12). This power, which generated in them the son of God birth, was the power of that love which responds to the love of God as it is made manifest through the fact that He sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins (John 4:7-11).

Thus the "saying" of God in its fullness of grace and truth portrayed in prophecy and type the Christ of Israel and made its first inroad against the darkness of the mind of man concerning God the Father. Jesus, even when He was in promise only, brought to man the consciousness of a living God who is the Father, so effective is the Light as it shines through Him. Through no other medium can this consciousness come to man. Even the exact knowledge of today's scientist does not reveal that there is a living God who is Father. It does bring to man a consciousness of infinite power and wisdom, but this consciousness is not the consciousness of the living God who is the Father, and is not, therefore, the revelation of God.

But not through Jesus as conceived of through prophecy and type is the full scope of God's purpose to enlighten man accomplished. The full accomplishment is possible only through the Word made flesh in the person of the resurrected Jesus. The assurance that this is being accomplished and shall be finished through Jesus is given in Isaiah 55:11. God's word that goes forth out of His mouth shall not return to Him void. It shall accomplish that which He pleases and prosper in the thing whereto He sends it. Thus powerful and sure of fulfillment is God's spoken word.

Jesus is the living Word of God. He is the enactment in flesh of God's fullness, grace, and truth. It is God's offer that through this living Word all men may be saved and come to a knowledge of the truth (1 Tim. 2:4-6). God's living Word no less than His spoken word shall prosper in the thing whereto He has sent it. God's spoken word does not return to Him void the fullfillment of His purpose in it. No less does His living Word, the Word made flesh, the only begotten of the Father, return to Him void the fullfillment of His purpose in Him. There is no darkness that is proof against the Light as it shines through Jesus in words and deeds of healing and teaching and redemption.

Jesus, the Word made flesh, is the Light of the world. During this gospel age God is making this Light effective in the hearts and minds of those chosen to be members of Christ's body when He shall sit King and Priest in the kingdom of Israel restored. He is abounding toward them in all wisdom and prudence by making known unto them the mystery (secret) of His will that in the dispensation of the fullness of times He might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven and which are on earth, even in Him. He is giving them this Light that they who first trust in Christ should be to the praise of His glory (Eph. 1:8-12), even as Jesus is to the praise of His glory through His words and deeds of grace and truth working man's salvation. The believer's prayer as he receives this Light is that the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give us the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Jesus; that He may enlighten the eyes of our understanding that we may know what is the hope of His calling and what are the riches of the glory of His inheritance in the saints (Eph. 1:15-18).

broken, and he was forced into exile in Switzerland, of which Scripture says simply, "He shall stumble and fall, and not be found" (Dan. 11:19).

Verse 20, referring we believe to Attaturk, predicts his destruction neither in anger nor in battle, a natural death.

It is evident that verse 21 refers to the same man as does Daniel 8:23. At first thought it would seem then that he was to be the successor of Attaturk, but as we read through the chapter we find mention of his trouble with the king then in power. So there must be a ruler, unimportant in prophecy perhaps, who must succeed Attaturk, and be brought into conflict with the ruler receiving his power from the fourth beast.

It is interesting to notice the method of this ruler of Daniel 11:21 in gaining power. In sequence we find, he shall enter peaceably with flatteries; become strong with a small people; take the most prosperous places peaceably; forecast his devices against the strongholds, and finally (v. 26), destroy the king with the very ones who ate of his meat. There is revolution. We need hardly point out that all of these are the present policies of the Nazi regime, and are followed to the letter.

We do not have the time to discuss the events that will follow the time that this ruler is placed in power. Our purpose is to discuss the signs of his ascendancy. We realize that according to Daniel 8:23 his rise to power will assure us that the transgressors (the fourth beast) have reached the peak of their power; that the last period of tribulation will be ushered in by the placing of the abomination of desolation referred to by Daniel, and last but not least we understand, according to Daniel 12:11, that from that day it shall be just 1,290 days to the time that Christ shall set His feet on the Mount of Olives.

Again considering Daniel 8:23 we find this ruler indicated as a dark man who understands dark sentences, who is strong, but not with his own power. His power then must come from a source foreign to that country (the fourth beast), working through one of the members of that beast. A dark man indicates to me that he will be backed by one of two countries, Greece or Italy. Preferably, I think the latter, because "dark sentences" in Seripture seem to indicate the Latin language. Italy as a member of the fourth beast is of the so-called neo-Latin group. The near future should add much to our thought along this line.

All these things refer to the external relations of the fourth beast. We have not attempted to discuss its internal aspects. We can profit much by observing in our daily papers the tendency of these nations toward the alliance that marks the fulfillment of these prophecies. I think we should be observing, because the remainder of this eighth chapter is devoted to the policies of this last ruler, and as we read we are impressed that he uses the identical policy of peace and prosperity that Attaturk found so successful during his rule.

Remembering that this last ruler will obtain his power by flattery, it is only natural that he will advocate what the people have already found popular. But to be successful his work must be done in the near future, and as its success is implied, we feel that its nearness is implied in the matter of a few years or less, while the generation that has served under Attaturk still lives—while the memory of his accomplishments are yet fresh in their minds.

"BABYLON THE MOTHER."

"Babylon the Mother" of governmental, political, industrial, economical, religious harlotry! A few bow to God's laws in life's practices. They earnestly seek His will and pleasure. But it is evident that the world's many have found much pleasure for self in the discovery and proficient use of Babylon's system and philosophy. From kings to slaves they have turned from God to the golden-headed Mother. Therefore, she is called in Revelation 17 and 18 "THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS." "For all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication, and the kings of the earth have committed fornication with her, and the merchants of the earth are waxed rich through the abundance of her delicacies." Therefore, "with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all."

Yes. "The God of Heaven" gave Babylon "a kingdom, power, and strength, and glory." Those gifts were to continue through succeeding administrations until a stone should smite "the image on his feet" and "the God of heaven" should "set up a kingdom which should never be destroyed." Read Daniel 2 and gather the whole thrilling story.

God's Finishing School

In contrast with the present condition of earth's peoples—a condition resultant from the planting and cultivation unto harvest of man's finite tastes and demands—one does well to think carefully of the Heaven-made description given in Genesis 1:31: "And God saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, . . . very good." By the side of this statement concerning conditions in the morning time of the Adamic race one should place the description of John, who "in spirit" was transported forward to "the Lord's day" to hear and see God's future wonders of glory. At Revelation 21:1, 5, 4 he records that he saw One "upon the throne" who "said, Behold, I make all things new." And concerning the process of making "all things new" John "heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, . . . And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away."

What change! How inexpressibly great! Man's finite thoughts and habits and sorrows and pains all erased, and God's thoughts and teachings enthroned forever, to regulate man's habits and deeds unto eternal righteousness in the Anointed Jesus.

To make such a sweeping change God must needs begin at the root of all conduct and cultivate and train unto perfection. The Scriptures reveal that it is unto this very end that the Father purposes to set up under the Kingship of His only begotten Son "a kingdom which shall never be destroyed," and which in this continued allegory of Galatians 4:22, the writer is likening unto God's Finishing School.

THE CHANGING WORLD

The writer is convinced that it is not the changing of international boundaries with which Bible students should be so much concerned. Rather, it is the change of the heart of peoples that is of importance. It is the heart change of the student, the pupil, from Babel's man-designed system of life, to Jerusalem's God-taught and Christ-taught system.

The latter system educates, righteously, in every sphere of action of man's life: in government, finance, industry, agriculture, jurisprudence, militia, society—everything.

Man's system is already being crushed. Witness the world's gold standard, her finances, industry, transportation. Witness the fearful downtreading which Judah is today receiving.

Yes, the change is progressing. But this specific must be deferred till another paper.

The future inheritance of God's saints, called to a life of "peace" and "holiness," are "to inherit substance" (Heb. 12:14; Prov. 8:21). Their incorruptible, undefiled, and fadeless inheritance will be adapted to just such tangible creatures as His Word portrays them to be, both in "the life that now is, and of that which is to come" (1 Peter 1:4; 1 Tim. 4:8). Now they are "mortal," "corruptible," and can die and cease to live (Job 4:17; Rom. 1:23; Isa. 38:1). Then they will be deathless and "equivalent unto the angels" (Luke 20:34-36). Having "by patient continuance in well doing" sought "for glory and honour and immortality," they will have rendered to them "eternal life" (Rom. 2:6, 7). "Immortality" is too priceless a treasure to be given to those who are "unworthy" of it, and unthankful to Christ, through whom it is obtainable (Acts 13:46; 1 Cor. 15:42-58; Rom. 6:23; 1 John 5:9-12; John 20:31).

"Immortality, 'tis a priceless boon, 'tis wealth untold,
The choicest diamond, the purest gold,
Ah! better the world and all therein
To lose, if so doing the prize we win."

"Yea, forty years didst thou sustain them in the wilderness, . . . their clothes waxed not old, and their feet swelled not" (Neh. 9:21).

matter situated at the distance of the stars." There is no difference in the starting point. The difference between Laplace and Chamberlin is the manner in which they think the nebulæ finally became our solar system.

Whatever the process may have been, scientists generally agree that when the earth finally settled into its present shape and condition there was no life upon it. Mr. Fenton, in his pamphlet mentioned in the foregoing, in which he reviews favorably Chamberlin's Planetesimal Theory, says, "The time and manner in which life began on the earth are lost in the unrecoverable past."

I have before me an article written by Earl W. Rowell, which I clipped some time ago from Signs of the Times. From this I quote the following: "Often, when desirous of enjoying a good laugh, I read—not Mark Twain, or Irwin Cobb, or even Ring Lardner—but the deliciously unconscious humor of the many evolutionary theories, especially in their naive attempts to account for the origin of man.

"For instance, in the life of Lord Kelvin (Sir William Thompson, 1824-1907), one of the world's admittedly greatest scientists, written by his son Sylvanus P. Thompson, pages 598-610, there occurs an incident that has amused me for fifteen years. I pass it on to you."

And then Mr. Rowell quotes from Mr. S. P. Thompson, as follows: "Sir William Thompson's presidency of the British Association of Scientists, at Edinburgh, on August 2, 1871, was an event of great importance. His address was awaited with expectancy, for he was to be introduced by no other than Huxley. The assembly was a brilliant one. Huxley, the retiring president, was accompanied on the platform by the Emperor Don Pedro of Brazil, and by a crowd of most distinguished savants, British and foreign."

Then Mr. Rowell comments as follows: "With such a background of learning, Huxley presented Lord Kelvin as the next president of that sternly august body of learned men, the British Association of Scientists."

I have quoted the foregoing in order to give a background for what follows, lest some one should think that the words were spoken by some crack-pot scientist of no reputation. Again I quote from Lord Kelvin's son, the words of his father: "Dead matter cannot become living without coming under the influence of matter previously alive. This seems to me as true a teaching of science as the law of gravitation . . . and I am ready to adopt it as an article of scientific faith, true through all space and all time, that life proceeds from life and from nothing but life."

"The following startled even the most advanced thinkers present: 'How, then, did life originate on the earth? Tracing the physical history backwards on strict dynamic principles, we are brought to a red hot globe on which no life exists. Hence when the earth was first fit for life, there was nothing living on it.... Did grass and trees and flowers spring into existence, in all the fullness of ripe beauty, by the fiat of creative power?' " Lord Kelvin seemed to think this idea quite absurd, and one that needed no reply, for he dismissed it with the asking. Then he proceeded: "Every year thousands, probably millions, of fragments of solid matter fall upon the earth. Whence come these fragments? ... We all confidently believe that there are at present, and have been from time immemorial, many worlds of life besides our own, and we must regard it as probable in the highest degree that there are countless seed-bearing meteoric stones moving about through space." Then he went on to say that some such meteoric stone might have brought to our earth a piece of moss or small beetle, and then he continued: " 'All creatures now living on earth have proceeded by orderly evolution from such origin.'"

It will be noted that his Lordship made no attempt to show how life came to be on the "many worlds of life besides our own." Why? He dared not make the attempt. Life comes only from life, according to his own positive statement, and somewhere back in the dim distant past there was a starting point. He dared not consider that.

But, let us suppose, that Lord Kelvin's meteorite could bring life to the earth, what then?

You try planting a piece of moss in clear sand and see what will happen. The moss will die! Why? Because there is no plant life in clear sand. There could have been no plant life in Lord Kelvin's earth when it cooled down to a temperature where life could exist, because no life, not even seed life, could exist on a "red hot globe." But you see here, as in other "worlds of life," he didn't follow his argument through to a logical conclusion. Why? He dared not. It would spoil his theory.

Isn't it strange that such a learned body of men did not ask Lord Kelvin to explain the beginning of life on those "other worlds of life"? Or why didn't they ask him to explain how plant or animal life in the form of a piece of moss or a little beetle could exist on our earth which had once been a "red hot globe" and therefore could have had no element of plant or animal life in its soil, water, or air? It doesn't take a scientist to see the inconsistency in such attempts at argument. This is the more strange when we remember that Lord Kelvin's sou said, "The following startled even the most advanced thinkers present." They were startled, yet they didn't question the statements.

In a future article I wish to examine the argument of the so-called Christian evolutionists.

What Next?

Thanksgiving is now over. How did you celebrate the holiday? If you celebrated as did the majority of people, you ate too much for dinner, perhaps went to a football game in the afternoon, and topped off the day with a harmless movie. If you celebrated as the originators of Thanksgiving Day celebrated you went to a church service where you returned your thanks to a gracious God, who is ever mindful of a worshipful people. It is my hope that you celebrated in the last mentioned way. Whichever way, it is now over, and we can settle into the old routine of life. Or can we?

I am afraid not. Christmas is coming upon us with rapid strides. Only a matter of days now until this great day, the greatest day in Christendom, will be with us, and then become a thing of the past. How will you celebrate that great day?

Will you tell your children of the mythical Santa Claus, and perhaps scare them into being good? Or will you tell them of the Savior, whose birthday Christmas commemorates? Will you send a gift to Uncle "so-and-so," who is fairly wealthy and forget a poor friend, because you think the uncle would return a gift while the friend could not? The answer is in your hands!

Let us all, for once, get the true meaning of Christmas, and not celebrate this day amiss as did many the holiday just passed.

The Future Life

* * By Mary Richardson, Hammond, La.

Without some hope of the future our life now would be truly uscless. But we are most thankful that we have a hope in the future. Every Christian looks to the future. In fact, every one looks to the future for various things, temporal, material, perishable; but the Christian has a better outlook on life. He looks forward to the future life eagerly with hope and expectation, because therein lies his goal.

Jesus said: "I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live" (John 11:25). These words were spoken to Martha after the death of her brother Lazarus. It is the person who believes who comes under this promise. "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. . .. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first" (1 Thess. 4:14, 16).

Read John 14:1-6. Jesus does not here paint a picture of the future home of the saints, but He is reassuring His followers that although He must leave them He will not leave them without comfort. He will provide them a way in which they may be spiritually in union with God and Christ until He comes again.

Future life is a gift from God to man (Rom. 6:23), but if one wishes this gift he must seek after it (Rom. 2:7). We cannot expect to obtain eternal life until the day of the Lord's appearing (2 Tim. 4:6-8), because our eternal life is hid in Christ, and "when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall (we) also appear with him in glory" (Col. 3:3, 4).

Jesus proved the literal reality of His death and resurrection when He said: "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore" (Rev. 1:18). Jesus was mortal before His death, but received His immortality at resurrection.

Truly our hope of a future life is glorious and precious in that He "shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body" (Phil. 3:21).

It, therefore, behooves each of us to walk worthy of the kingdom (1 Thess. 2:12).

Be Ye Thankful

By June Macy, Troy, Ohio

"In every thing give thanks; for this is the will of God in Jesus Christ concerning you" (1 Thess. 5:18). Paul preached the gospel of a thankful heart. He was constantly harassed and persecuted by bitter enemies, yet he was deeply thankful for the privilege of living and serving. When he wrote to the Corinthians, "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift," we know he was profoundly thankful for his knowledge of Jesus Christ. Are we?

We should assemble ourselves together in our respective places of worship and offer unto God thanksgiving for His countless blessings.

We, in America, should thank God in the year of our Lord, 1938, for our glorious free country. When the Mayflower came to the shores of America, the Pilgrims brought with them the corner stone of our national life—religious freedom! Freedom of worship, freedom of speech, and freedom of the press are our sacred heritage. Let us show our gratitude for freedom of the press by sending in more articles to The Restitution Herald.

EDITOR'S NOTE: While this article was intended as one for Thanksgiving Day, it is equally applicable for all parts of the year.

NOTICE: If any one has any intentions of writing a Christmas article for this page please mail it so it will reach the editor before December 12, 1938. Please do!

PREPARED BY MADGE SAVAGE

"Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour" (Exodus 20:16).

Gehazi's Sin

Naaman, a great captain, was a leper. His wife had a captive maid. When this maid heard that her master had leprosy she said she knew God could cure Naaman. She told them of the Prophet of God in Samaria, Elisha.

Finally, Naaman went to visit Elisha, who sent a messenger to see Naaman and told him to dip seven times in the River Jordan and he would be healed. Now Jordan was a muddy river. Naaman was much provoked that Elisha did not make a great ado over his visit. Then, too, he disliked the idea of dipping in the muddy river.

He was persuaded to do as Elisha told him and was cleansed of his leprosy.

How joyous he was! He offered to pay Elisha for healing him. There are some people today who think money can buy everything, aren't there? Elisha said, "As the Lord liveth, before whom I stand, I will receive none."

Shall we say Elisha was a man with whom right was right, and he lived up to his ideas of right and wrong.

Gehazi, Elisha's servant, thought, "I will run after him, and take somewhat of him." He disliked to think Elisha would not take all he could get from Naaman. He was very greedy, wasn't he?

In order to get something from Naaman, Gehazi had to have a reason. So he told a falsehood! He asked for some money and clothes for some young men who were supposed to have come to Elisha.

Naaman gave Gehazi more money than he asked for, and some clothes. Naaman had his own servants carry the articles for Gehazi.

Gehazi hid the clothes and money in the house. Then he went to stand before Elisha. Elisha asked him where he had been. Gehazi told a second lie to cover up his first. He said he had been nowhere.

Elisha knew differently. He told Gehazi he was sorry, but now Gehazi would have the dreaded leprosy of Naaman the rest of his life. He went out from Elisha's presence, "a leper as white as snow" (2 Kings 5:27).

What Is a False Witness?

Ananias and Sapphira wished to make the other people think they were giving all their money from the sale of their earthly possessions, to the Lord. Yet they had decided to keep a part of the money. Their falsehood to the Holy Spirit cost them their lives. Were they false witnesses?

Judas betrayed Jesus with a kiss after he had sold Him for thirty pieces of silver.

Peter denied his Master three times. Then he wept bitterly.

Shall we, then, watch our hearts and lips that no lies come from them to cause grief and tears?

Who is Thy Neighbor?

Jesus told the story (Luke 10:30) of a man who fell among thieves. He was wounded, robbed most likely, and left half dead. Were those thieves acting neighborly?

Then a priest and a Levite both passed by. They looked at the poor, helpless man and went on about their own work Along came a third man. He bound up his wounds, took the injured man to an inn, paid for his lodging, and was kind to him.

Jesus asked, "Which now of these three, thinkest thou, was neighbour unto him that fell among thieves?"

The lawyer replied, "He that shewed mercy on him."

We cannot be Christians and be honest part of the time with some people, and tell lies to others of our acquaintance. We must speak the truth to all men at all times, and not forget to show mercy.

The Ten Commandments in Rhyme

How many of you know the Ten Commandments? This rhyme makes it easy to remember the order of them as well as the main thoughts. I hope you will memorize it.

- 1. Thou shalt have no gods but me.
- 2. Before no idol bend the knee.
- 3. Take not the name of God in vain.
- 4. Do not the Sabbath day profane.
- 5. Give both thy parents honor due.
- 6. Hate not, that thou no murder do.
- 7. Abstain from words and deeds unclean.
- 8. Steal not, for thou of God art seen.
- 9. Make not a sinful lie, nor love it.
- 10. What is the neighbor's dare not covet.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

CALLING ALL MINISTERS

All ministers are invited to send for publication a few lines of Christmas greetings to their many scattered friends. The Christmas issue will be that under date of December 20. Your message for that issue may be sent in now, and should not arrive later than December 12. Try to limit your message to about fifty or sixty words.

Also, send us promptly the names and addresses of your friends to whom you wish to send the Christmas Herald. These extra copies will be mailed out for 5 cents each, and we will be glad to have large orders for them, but you must let us know promptly how many you wish. Cooperation, you know, works both ways.

Be a missionary! Don't be a Ben Putinitoff.

IOWA WINTER CONFERENCE

The Iowa Winter Conference will be held December 10 and 11 at the home of Sr. Lottie Sealine in Stanhope. Bible class will be held Saturday at 7:30 p.m. On Sunday there will be Sunday school at 10:00 a.m.; preaching at 11:00 a.m., 2:00 p.m., and 7:30 p.m. There will be a basket dinner.

Will any planning to arrive Saturday, please write us a card in advance?

Mrs. Oscar Jenkins.

BURR OAK, INDIANA, SERVICES

In reply to an inquiry, we are glad to publish that Bro. J. W. McLain preaches morning and evening on each of the first two Sundays in each month. The first half of the month he coes pastoral work at Burr Oak. The last as opportunities arise.

Bro. McLain is working hard, and is receiving hearty Christian cooperation.

NEW CHURCH AT TACOMA, WASH.

Starting out with four families and several children we started on November 20 to hold Church of God services here in Tacoma. Eld. Thomas D. Foster is to be the pastor. We are interested in getting some of the Truth Seekers' Quarterlies. (An order was enclosed editor.)

We have a store building at South 13th and Tacoma Ave., where services are being held. If there are any of our members near by we would like them to know we now have a church here, and invite them to worship with us.

HIMMELRIGHT - McCORKLE

On Saturday evening, Nov. 19, 1938, Charles eland McCorkle of West Point, Ind., and Verna May Himmelright of Attica, Ind., were united in the holy bonds of matrimony in a private, parlor service at Hammond, Ind., the undersigned officiating.

The bride, a much respected high school teacher of her home town, is the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. George Himmelright, and the groom, a well and favorably known farmer, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. McCorkle.

It is with high ideals and worth that this devotedly religious couple enter upon wedded life to mutually share their joys and blessings, and problems and sorrows, in their journey "toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

May their home near West Point, Ind., ever be a tower and strength of Christian truth.

Gleanings From the Field

Eld. J. W. McLain, pastor at Burr Oak, Ind., is now conducting a series of meetings at Kokomo, Ind., which will close December 3. He has consented to conduct a similar series of meetings for the Brush Creek (Ohio) Church some time after the new year.

"Following the custom of thanksgiving set by our hardy forefathers who had the courage to found a country where in freedom they could worship God, a well attended praise and prayer service was held at the Pennellwood Chapel in Grand Rapids at seven o'clock Thanksgiving morning." B. C. Slocum.

Bro. Emory Macy of Troy, Ohio, visited with your editor Saturday and Sunday, and delivered the morning sermon, Nov. 27, for the Oregon congregation. This was his second sermon, the first having been recently given at his home church, where he serves on the executive board.

Ezra Pearson is now in the Stouder Memorial Hospital, Troy, Ohio, recovering from a goiter operation.

Bro. and Sr. Paul C. Johnson of Oregon, Ill., and Sr. M. J. Osborn of Culver, Ind., were in attendance at the funeral of Sr. J. Arthur Johnson at Sac City, Iowa, last week. Sr. Osborn remained for a visit.

Bro. and Sr. T. J. Ellis rejoiced on Thanksgiving Day because Sr. Ellis' sister, Mrs. G. H. Loudenslager of Washington, D.C., with her husband, and her brother Eldridge Appleyard of Cherokee, Iowa, with his wife, were in their home in Waterloo, Iowa, the first time they had all been together for sixteen SCREEN, Bro. Harvey Krogh, Illinois Evangelist, will preach at Eldorado, Dec. 3, 4, and at Casey the following week-end, Dec. 10, 11.

Bro. F. E. Siple writes that with Bro. G. E. Marsh's leadership the South Lawn Church at Grand Rapids, Mich., is doing a splendid work. "Three at least are to be baptized Sunday," Nov. 27.

Dr. O. R. Jenks, President Emeritus of Aurora College, Aurora, Ill., visited with the editor and his family Sunday afternoon in Oregon. After seven years we rejoiced to see him again.

We anticipate articles now in the making from Bros. Judd and Patrick.

Bros. L. M. Howell of Illinois, H. H. Hawkins of Ohio, and N. J. Macleod of California plan to contribute articles beginning after the new year.

Sr. Melba Glanton Arlington, Huntington, Ind., reports briefly the death of her mother, Laura Slusser Glanton. Also Sr. Arlington sends greetings to her friends, and says, "The that Christ's second coming is not far off."

Sr. Alta King, Palo Alto, Calif., writes, "The issue of The Herald for November 1 was unusually good. 'Our Glorious Task' by Bro. Marsh, and 'That . . . Ye May Believe' by Bro. Austin make it an outstanding issue."

Bro. John Denchfield, who served as temporary pastor at Eden Valley, Minn., was given a farewell party at the W. F. Hoskins' home, Nov. 21,

MARIE SODESTROM JOHNSON

Anna Mary Sodestrom, daughter of John and Anna Sodestrom was born June 9, 1899, at Sac City, Iowa.

Her mother being in ill health, she was taken early to be eared for by her grandmother near Pomeroy, Iowa. When she was eight years old she went to make her home with her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur E. Johnson, and here she grew to womanhood.

Her mother and father preceded her in death when she was two and eight years old respectively. There were also a brother and sister who preceded her in death.

Marie was married to J. Arthur Johnson December 23, 1934, and started filling the place of mother to little Ruth Esther, then nearly three years old.

From childhood she learned to honor the Word of God, and as she understood she believed its teachings and promises. She yielded herself to the commands of that Word and was buried with her Lord in baptism only a week before her death came following an operation for appendicitis.

She leaves to mourn her passing, her husband and daughter; her aunt and uncle, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur E. Johnson, who had been as father and mother to her; two sisters, Mrs. Emma Ingman and Ellen Sodestrom, and her step-mother, Mrs. Fannie Sodestrom of Riverside, Calif.; a brother, Andrew of San Francisco, Calif.; also the cousins who have been as brother and sisters to her, Theodore, Alyes, Gladys, Juvannah, Vivian, Helen, Fern, and Lois; besides a host of other relatives and friends.

A true wife, a loving mother, a sincere friend, conscientious in all that she did, Marie made many close friends, and now a loneliness saddens the hearts of many, a darkness which finds its only brightening in the assurance that she sleeps in Jesus, free from the pains that wracked her frail body, to be awakened when her Lord comes with the trumpet call.

Funeral services were conducted from the home near Lake View, Iowa, and the Swedish Mission Church near Pomeroy. Bro. A. M. Jones of Eagle Grove, Iowa, had charge of the services.

The Illinois Evangelist

HARVEY KROGH, JR., EDITOR

Who Are We?

We are "the children of God." We are "fellowcitizens with the saints, and of the household of God." We "are the temple of God," we "are not our own," we "are bought with a price." We are God's servants and representatives in the world. We are His spokesmen. We are His ambassadors. We "are the light of the world," and "the salt of the earth." We are God's heirs, and we are His workmanship. We are part of His new creation in Christ Jesus.

Seeing who we are and knowing of the high position in which we are placed, we might be lifted up with pride and self-satisfaction if it were not for the orders given us that really give us this high position.

The Master's Orders

In Christ's command to His disciples to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, we many times feel excused for many apparently good reasons. First, He was speaking to His selected faithful eleven. The next thing is that we cannot all be preachers and, besides, many of us cannot speak in public. We also have to make a living, or we would starve. I wonder if God excuses us when we give Him all of these reasons?

In the very first place, Jesus told His faithful few to teach all others to observe all of the commandments He had given to them. That makes your duty and mine to God just as great as was the duty of the eleven.

In the next place, we discover that there are several very effective ways of preaching the gospel and not one of us is excused from all of these methods. If we belong to God we are to be at work, one way or another, in His field.

Three Ways

When we think of preaching the gospel we think of the hired pastor or evangelist. This way of carrying the message to those who know not God is very effective, but think how ineffective it would be if all pastors and evangelists had to take time out to make their own living as well as preach. In Acts 6 it is recorded that it was not reasonable that those attending to the Word should do the work that others could just as well be doing.

The second way of service is the financing of the preaching. Every one has that way of helping, even the hired pastor may help this way.

The third way is a way that we seldom think of as a real help. Paul said, "Brethren, pray for us." I believe Paul meant that every one of us should pray for the laborers and the brethren individually, and for special specific blessings. Effective prayer is real labor. If we realize what God has for us to do we will better appreciate who we are, and also be what we should be.

The Month's Question

Could you fast one meal a week? Say the evening meal on prayer meeting night. If you and every other member in the State of Illinois would do that and put ten cents in a bank for each meal for the Lord's work, at the end of the year there would be $3,286.40 for the Lord's work. Figure it up. There are about 632 members in Illinois.

Did You Know?

Though is is not our aim as Christians to make the whole world Christian, it is our duty to see that all shall hear the message and have opportunity to accept Christ. For "this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world." But did you know that if every Christian would make one new convert each year, and that new convert would make another new follower of Christ each year, the whole world would be Christian in less than thirty-three years. Figure this up, and meditate on the possibilities if we would put forth a greater effort in the service of our Lord.

Dollar Day

The total received for the Illinois Dollar Day this year is $102.00. We will welcome any dollars that might be late, as there is work for every one of them. Let us see if we can exceed last year's record of $139.00.

Part of the work of the State fund is to pay for sending a RESTITUTION HERALD with this page to every Church of God family in the State of Illinois.

The Power of Example

A young infidel, one night in bed, began contemplating the character of his mother. "I see," said he within himself, "two unquestionable facts. First, my mother is greatly afflicted in circumstances, body and mind; and I see that she cheerfully bears up under all by the support she derives from constantly retiring to her closet and her Bible. Second, she has a secret spring of comfort of which I know nothing; while I, who give a loose rein to my appetites, and seek pleasure by every means, seldom or never find it. If, however, there is any such secret in religion, why may not I attain to it as well as my mother? I will immediately seek it of God." Thus the influence of Christianity, exhibited in its beauty by a living example before him, led Richard Cecil to know Christ Himself, and to glorify Him by a life of most successful devotion to His service.—Selected.

Next Quarterly Conference

It will be held the last Saturday and Sunday of March, 1939. Any church in Illinois desiring to entertain a Quarterly Conference, please write to Mrs. Tessa Laning, Secretary, Mt. Sterling, Illinois,

NUMBER 9

CHURCH OF GOD AT SAINT CLOUD, MINNESOTA

The Saint Cloud Church had its beginning in the home of Robert Whitelock in 1866. In its early days the ministers were Elders Simon Peter Matheny, A. J. Bolster, Orrin Roe Jenks, and William Parson. At first a union Sunday school was organized, and preaching services were held but once a month.

In 1890 meetings were held in an artificial stone factory on Breckenridge Avenue. There Elders S. P. Matheny and E. E. Thoms conducted evangelistic meetings. At that time there were thirty members. The present site at 20th Avenue and 4th Street was bought in 1891, and a building erected. The following have served as pastors: Stanley, M. W. Hamilton, P. L. Sweany, Charles Blanchette, John Driver, Win Thoms, E. E. Thoms, Fred Daubanton, T. M. Savage, Adna Hoskins, John Denchfield, and the present pastor, C. E. Lapp.

The building shown above was completed in 1920, at which time Bros. Daubanton and Savage were leading the church. Their services were donated, as both had other employment.

Bro. C. E. Lapp, pastor for the past three years, greets you with a message awaiting you on page 3.

The Verdict of the Twelve

It is a unique coincidence that the number of the Apostles was the very number of those who today constitute a jury. Twelve sober men decide. Regardless of the station of the man on trial, the verdict of the twelve is final. Not only does the one on trial suffer or prosper in accord with the decision of the twelve, but the public, as well, abides by their decision.

Pilate's question, "What shall I do then with Jesus which is called Christ?" is the question all who hear the gospel call must answer. The answer may be, "Crucify Him," or "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" He who makes no answer "scatters abroad"; there is no neutral ground.

Now in the case of Jesus there has been two trials from which one may find the verdict he should accept in making reply to the question. One trial was in Pilate's judgment hall, the other was before the jury of the Apostles.

What a trial was that in Pilate's judgment hall! A mock trial, and nothing more! "No fault" was found in Jesus, yet no witnesses were called on His behalf. What criminal has been so vile or so despised as to be scourged, stripped of his clothing, crowned with thorns, spit upon and slapped in the face before the verdict of the law was given? At what other time did regal Rome allow the mob to decide her law? There was no justice, no order, no true trial in Pilate's condemnation hall.

The other trial, that before the Twelve, appeals to me. There twelve sober men agreed. No star witnesses were used for effect. No smooth tongued orator swayed the jury into an unfair decision. No minds were distorted by the cry of the mob. There were no bribes; the verdict of the Twelve cannot be questioned.

True, Jesus selected the Twelve, but this can be no objection when one considers how they failed Him, how they cursed, how they doubted, how they betrayed, how they returned to their fishing after having twice seen Him risen from the dead. Hardly could they be called His friends until at last the evidence of His Messiahship overwhelmed them. Against doubt, and fear, and open denial they were at last, at the end of the trial, convinced by unfailing evidence that caused even the centurion of Rome to confess, "Truly this was the Son of God."

This trial lasted for months, possibly years. It was in session night and day. These jurymen "followed him."

Jesus "went in and out among (them) beginning from the baptism of John, unto that same day that he was taken up." Thus, the Twelve had every opportunity to detect any flaws.

At times the Twelve, like any jury, doubted. They could not be sure. They were inclined to doubt. Yet it was the very Thomas who said, "Except I shall see . . . the print of the nails . . . I will not believe," who at last, overwhelmed with the very signs he had demanded, cried out in rapture and surprise, "My Lord and my God."

The same Peter who said, "I do not know the man," at last testified, "This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses," and died a martyr in "the faith."

Nor is there even Judas whose testimony can be used to "throw the jury," for, ashamed, he "repented himself," saying, "I have sinned in that I have betrayed innocent blood."

Joseph was a doubter. Mary said, "How shall this be?" John the Baptist asked, "Art thou he?" Saul of Tarsus "compelled (Christians) to blaspheme; . . . being exceedingly mad against them." Yet all these at last saw the Light that drove the shadows out of their lives.

How clearly the evidence rings! The Twelve sober men agreed. They died upholding their decision. Who am I to appeal from their verdict?

Flowers in Time

Brother Rufus A. Curtis of Dayton, Ohio, has been a defender of the faith for almost seventy years. Though not a minister in name, he has taught many the truths he is now bringing to you. He has baptized several, and through his writings converted some of his own kin who were so prejudiced that they would not listen to him speak. He not only believes truth, but he disbelieves error.

The Brush Creek Church of God, fourteen miles north of Dayton, is Brother Curtis' home church, and for an average lifetime he has been one of its most loyal supporters.

He writes, "Most of my eighty-five years, since coming into a knowledge of the truth and obeying it by baptism into Christ, have been spent to show the utter falsity of this gigantic error of errors, the inherent immortality of the race."

Brother Curtis, the Church of God still needs you, loves you, and is inspired not a little by your life, your voice, and your pen. We pray that many good things are yours,

"Except Ye Repent"

By C. E. Lapp

"Your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear" (Isaiah 59:2).

WE NEVER have to read between the lines to determine what Jesus means when He speaks through the Word. He always comes to the point without fear or favor. It is possible for Him to do so, for He was entirely without sin. One thing is certain: when Jesus speaks we must all listen, for none can find a fault with Him.

"There were present at that season some that told him (Jesus) of the Galilaeans, whose blood Pilate had mingled with their sacrifices. And Jesus answering said unto them, Suppose ye that these Galilaeans were sinners above all the Galilaeans, because they suffered such things? I tell you, Nay: but, except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish" (Luke 13:1-3).

Some were pointing the finger of condemnation at others for some sin they saw in their lives. Sin is sin, and a small black spot is as black as a large black spot. Jesus said one sin was as bad as another, for it was all sin, and had to be cleansed from the human heart. He came not to call those who were so self-righteous, but sinners were called to repentance.

David knew what real repentance was when he said: "Against thee, thee only, have I sinned, and done this evil in thy sight" (Psalm 51:4). There is a godly sorrow for sin that leads to repentance (2 Cor. 7:9). David repented in a most humble way, and perhaps that is why he is spoken of as a man after God's own heart (Acts 13:22).

Some will say that being sorry is repentance, but there is a sorrow of the world that does not lead to repentance, but to death. The man who commits a crime is many times sorry, not that he has sinned against God or his fellow man, but because he is caught or exposed.

The godly sorrow for sin is the deep conviction of sin that makes us want to be free from its guilt. To be free from it we must forsake it. "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon" (Isa. 55:7).

To be a partaker in sin and its evil practices is bad enough, but when we have the gospel light and still desire to remain in the darkness of sin rather than to the light and be purged, then the condemnation of the Lord is upon us. It would be a terrible thing to know that we were condemned sinners with no way of escape. Millions today are in that condition because they not only love wickedness, but take delight in those who do such things.

When the truths of God really grip a man of sin, there will be a great change. This was well illustrated in the person of Zacchæus. He was a Jewish taxgatherer, and was rich. The Word does not say he was dishonest in his dealings, but when Jesus came to stay at his house Zacchæus stood, and said to the Lord, "Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor; and if I have taken any thing from any man by false accusation, I restore him fourfold." And Jesus said unto him, "This day is salvation come to this house." Just to be with Jesus, who looked on the human heart, was enough to make Zacchæus feel guilty, and immediately he was willing to give of his wealth to help the poor and make restitution for anything he had taken under false pretense. He knew that the law said such an offender should restore fourfold what was taken.

Too often we think that if we just feel badly about our lives, and are baptized, everything is all right; but how about the wrongs we have committed against our fellow man? Getting right with God makes us get right with everyone else, and until we are right with others we cannot expect God to accept us.

John the Baptist was preaching. The Pharisees and Sadducees came to his baptism; and when he saw them, he said, "O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance."

We should not discredit the idea of making restitution. Some may say we would be doing nothing else but asking forgiveness and making correction. The thought is untrue, for after a couple of experiences the offender would be a little more careful about offending further. We have not repented so long as we know a wrong has never been accounted for

The proud and self-righteous seldom repent. That is the reason Jesus said we must become humble as little children if we are to follow Him.

True repentance is followed by baptism, just as Peter said on the Day of Pentecost: "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins."

"Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish,"

Our Changing World

Article 4—Wearing Out the Saints

By F. L. Austin

BEFORE making application of current events to foretold prophecies, attention is earnestly directed once more to a great and underlying truth revealed by the Savior in John 14:29, namely, "And now I have told you before it come to pass, that when it is come to pass, ye might believe." Events foretold create faith in the watchers when said events are fulfilled in action.

It is no purpose of the writer to foretell coming events. That is farthest from his intention. His purpose is to try to identify some of the current happenings to the end that believers in God's Word may the more zealously "watch," in faith. Proverbs 25:2 reads in the Emphasized Bible: "The glory of God is to conceal a thing, but the glory of kings is to search out a thing." This and other scriptures indicate that believers who will be constantly in search for the fulfillment of God's promises will be much blessed thereby.

The jig saw puzzle craze of the recent past provided a good illustration. Who has not placed a block in a certain position with the full conviction that that particular block belonged there, and no place else? Then some hours later became convinced that that particular block having been wrongly placed had wholly blocked success to solution of the puzzle!

Likewise, explorers in the great maze of truths of God's Word have many times sincerely felt that they had discovered true and proper historical niches into which given prophecies perfectly fit. Some such human emplacements have proven erroneous. Such human errors do not repudiate God's Word. Being identified as errors, the searcher only quickens his zeal to discover the truth.

In the present endeavor to seek correct application of the previously studied principles the writer suggests that the reader simply take note and weigh the evidence. If the suggestions appear to ring true to Scriptural statements, the writer urges the reader to profit all possible thereby.

WEARING OUT THE SAINTS

Saints are of several classes. The angels are called saints. Israelites are so called. So also are Christians.

In the study of any special scripture it is important to determine carefully the people addressed.

Daniel 7:24, 25, in explaining the works of the horn which had "eyes like the eyes of a man, and a mouth speaking great things," states that "he shall speak great words against the most High, and shall wear out the saints of the most High..." Daniel is expressly told in verse 24 that "the ten horns" previously referred to are "ten kings that shall arise: and another shall rise after them..." The indication is that the little horn which in verse 8 is described as rising from among the ten horns represents another king that shall rise from among the ten kings. It was this "little horn" king that was to speak great "words against the most High, and wear out the saints of the most High."

The entire narration of Daniel 7 is very suggestive that the saints there spoken of are the people of Israel, and not the people of the Christian church. A hundred and fifty years prior to Daniel's prophecy the Israelitish people had by God been divided into two separate groups. (See 1 Kings 11:31; 12:24.) One of these groups was Israel, or Ephraim, or Samaria; and the other, Judah, or Jerusalem. Daniel was of the Judah group.

In the years 1937 and 1938 the world is witnessing a terrible devastation of the people of Judah, called Jews, as mentioned in preceding articles. One particular European government is especially determined to rid its entire state of the Jewish race. Tighter and tighter have the thumbscrews been twisted upon them. The government's announced purpose is to completely rid the country of their blood.

It is also strikingly noticeable that the authority who is outdoing prior examples in similar persecutions has for some time past, both by voice and press, spoken strongly against the God of heaven.

Following the lead of Germany in this particular, other nations are intensifying their Jewish persecutions. Further, in still other nations, individuals are disseminating propaganda with a view to so stirring up governments that they shall join in similar local Jewish persecutions.

True, the British and American nations are taking the lead in trying to provide easement for those thus persecuted. But this is another subject.

In THE HERALD of October 25 attention was called to the fact that 2,520 years have already expired since Judah was overthrown by the Babylonian government.

Three things thus stand out in the current year in such a manner as to be strongly suggestive that they are related in fulfillment to the prophetic declaration of Daniel:

(1) The Jews being of the two-tribed group of the original nation of Israel still are "saints" in the Old Testament usage of the word. For, the "saints" of which Daniel was told were "saints," not of his current day, but of the day of the establishing of the kingdom "of the most High." Today, 2,520 years after deliverance to Babylon, most diabolical steps are being taken to "wear" them entirely "out." The last noted announcement is to impoverish them of buying power, which would force them to steal foods, thus giving the government apparent excuse for executing them as criminals.

(2) The power thus persecuting them openly blasphemes the name of God as foretold to Daniel. (3) 2,520 years have now expired since Gentiles captured God's Judah people and their capital city.

1937 - 1938 seem to record three witnessing testimonies indicating fulfillment of Daniel 7:25.

The Unanswered Question

By Harvey Krogh, Jr.

THE question of our study is a question that no one can answer. There is no lawyer living who is clever enough to contrive the answer. There is no doctor of medicine or philosophy who is wise enough to prescribe an answer. If an angel would come down from heaven and offer his service, and we would ask him the answer to this question, he would have to turn his head and blush with shame, for neither could he answer this question. God Himself has not made provision for an answer for this question.

In Hebrews 2:3 we find this unanswerable question: "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him." We seldom realize how much we need salvation, and how miserable is cur poverty without Christ. We think little about the condemnation under which man finds himself.

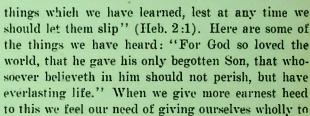

Only once in a while are we brought face to face with the facts of life that cause us to think deeply on spiritual and essential things. Our Savior knew this and, though we often speak of the love and mercy of God, yet he who despises mercy deserves God's wrath. Seven places in the New Testament it is recorded that Jesus spoke of the anguish of the unsaved, such as, "there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth" (Matt. 24:51, etc.). These seven references all refer to the end of the age when the kingdom shall be established.

In John 3:18 these words cause us to pause: "He that believeth on him is not condemned: but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God." The condemnation is death and a punishment of remorse for neglect.

It is a great salvation, because the Lord Jesus gave His life for you and me. He not only gave His life, but He endured suffering that you and I would not endure and could not, unless it be for Him in return.

Let us look at this great salvation: We say we don't have time for much prayer and Bible study, but if we will spend a little time taking heed to salvation we will have all eternity in which to do some of the things we would like to do now. Salvation means being saved from sin and its results. Without sin and death there will be eternal life.

How can we get that life? Since there is no way for escape if we neglect that great salvation, what must we do? "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the the Master. We will love Him and trust Him and place our entire hope in Him because we believe in Him.

Again we have heard, "Whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed." And, "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved" (Rom. 10:11, 13). We call upon Him too little and too late, and there is more to do than just to call upon Him. If we have not already done so we must heed the admonition of Peter to all those who desire to do God's will: "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost" (Acts 2:38).

Is that all? That is just the beginning of a life of service that is henceforth directed by Jesus our Lord and Master. His laws of life then become our laws of life. His principles then become our chief concern. His will becomes our way in all things. His fellowship becomes our chief joy, and we follow Him in the keeping of both the letter and the spirit of the things which He commands. We resist not evil; we turn the other cheek. We give our cloke also, and go another mile. We give to those who ask, love our enemies, bless them that curse us, do good to them that hate us, and pray for them that despitefully use us and persecute us (Matt. 5:38-43). All of these things we do when we earnestly take heed to the things which we have heard.

When we love our enemies, how much more we love the brethren! We "love not the world, neither the things that are in the world"; for we are filled with the love of Christ and all the fullness of God. With all of this we become wise, "understanding what the will of the Lord is." We become filled with the Spirit of Christ; we "rejoice evermore, pray without ceasing, in every thing give thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning (us)" (1 Thess. 5:16-18).

These words again ring in our ears: "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard," for they slip away from us so easily if we do not more diligently hearken unto them.

Facts for Thinkers

Article 2—Concerning Souls and Natural Immortality

By R. A. Curtis

THE BIBLE speaks of souls as being born (Gen. 46: 26, 27). Souls die (Rev. 16:3; Ezek. 18:4, 20). Souls can suffer hunger (Prov. 19:15). Souls can be so well fed and "full" as to loathe "an honeycomb" (Prov. 27:7). Souls can touch other literal objects (Lev. 5:2). Souls have lips and can swear (Lev. 5:4). Souls were "utterly destroyed" "by the edge of the sword" of Joshua's army (Josh. 10:28, 30, 32, 35, 37, 39). Please read the references.

Souls were actually so tangible that they "breathed" in order to live (Josh. 11:11). Souls can eat (Lev. 17:12). In fact, souls are never the immaterial, immortal kind that are being worked off upon a too gullible people by "false prophets," for people "will not endure sound doctrine," but have "turned unto fables" (2 Tim. 4:1-4).

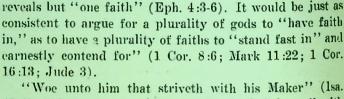

In their willfulness, people have deserted "the old paths" (Jer. 6:16; 18:15). Souls "that will not hear that prophet," like unto Moses, "shall be destroyed from among the people" (Acts 3:22, 23; Matt. 10:28; Prov. 29:1).

The term "soul," in the original Hebrew, is in four instances applied to the lower order of living creatures, before man—the highest order in the animal creation—was created (Gen. 1:20, 21, 24, 30). Job, in speaking of the creative energy of "the hand of the Lord," says, "In whose hand is the soul of every living thing, and the breath of all mankind" (Job 12:9, 10).

The hands of the wicked are strengthened in his evil ways "by promising him life" (Ezek. 13:22). My aversion is stirred to the depths for "the son of man, which is a worm" of "few days," then "dieth and wasteth away," to arrogate to himself that which can truthfully belong to Jehovah alone. Only God can say, "For I lift up my hand to heaven and say, I live for ever" (Job 25:6; 14:1-3, 10-12; Deut. 32:40). "What man is he that liveth, and shall not see death? shall he deliver his soul from the hand of the grave?" (Psalm 89:48).

Every cemetery of earth bears mute testimony to the solemn fact that "all go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again" (Eccl. 3:20; Gen. 3:17-19; Joh 14:10).

Platonic philosophy has been substituted for Pauline theology, until Paul exclaims, "I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you unto the grace of Christ unto another gospel: which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed" (Gal. 1:6-9). The Bible

"Woe unto him that striveth with his Maker" (Isa. 45:9). "Say ye to the righteous, that it shall be well with him: for they shall eat the fruit of their doings. Woe unto the wicked! it shall be ill with him: for the reward of his hands shall be given him" (Isa. 3:10, 11). "The eyes of the Lord are upon the rightcous, and his ears are open unto their cry. The face of the Lord is against them that do evil, to cast off the remembrance of them from the earth" (Psalm 34:15, 16).

NATURAL IMMORTALITY

The doctrine of the natural immortality of the race of Adam is the chief corner stone of Spiritualism, Mormonism Swedenborgianism, Catholicism, and other false systems of belief that nullify God's Word. "Take heed to thyself that thou be not snared by following them" (Dent. 12:30; Isa. 8:11-15; Psalm 11:6, 7; 91:1-11; 124: 6-8). Any doctrine that does not coincide with the "testimony" of God's Word is "another gospel," to be speedily rejected; for we are only to hold fast to that "which is good" (Isa. 8:20; 1 Thess. 5:21).

The most powerful motive that can be offered to a dying race is "life"; not its conditions, but "life itself. "I call heaven and earth to record this day against you, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing; therefore choose life, that thou and thy seed may live" (Deut. 30:19; Psalm 66:9). It is "life" that is to be lost or found, and not happiness or misery (Matt. 10:39; John 20:31). When this distinction is recognized it may help you to "fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, whereunto thou art also called" (1 Tim. 6:12).

In the economy of God's "household of faith" there can be no room for "seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils" (1 Tim. 3:4; Gal. 6:10). Our race has suffered enough already from the seductive words that greeted Mother Eve's ears in the Garden of Eden: "And the serpent said unto the woman, Ye shall not surely die: for God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil" (Gen. 3:4, 5). It does make a difference what you believe, for sincerity on the part of Eve (who was deceived) was disastrous to her and to her posterity (Gen. 3:14; Rom. 5:12).

The Bible facts of creation are sure. The theories of evolution that man is descended from the lower order of animals, in graduations from monkeys, baboons, and apes, up to man, does not and cannot remove God, the "faithful Creator," from the creatures He has made and the planet they were to inhabit (1 Peter 4:19; Isa. 45:12, 18). He still lives, although "the fool hath said in his heart, There is no God" (Isa. 57:15; Psalm 14:1). Atheism has nothing to offer but an aimless life, a hopeless death, and "the blackness of darkness for ever" (Jude 10-13; Eph. 2:12; 1 Thess. 4:13).

The "blessed hope" of the gospel presents to its followers "beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness; that they might be called trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord, that he might be glorified" (Titus 2:13; Isa. 61:1-3; Psalm 30:10-12; Isa. 35:10; 51:11).

It is the height of folly to claim "eternal life" indiscriminately, for the race as a whole now or hereafter; for it is specially bestowed upon believers, and not upon those "unworthy" of it (1 Tim. 4:10). It is not to be given to the purest and holiest of Christ's followers during "this present evil world," but will be received "in the world to come," with its resurrection triumph and new world habitation forevermore (Gal. 1:4; Mark 10:28-30; Luke 20:36; Prov. 2:20-22; Hosea 13:14).

"The brightest landscape eye hath seen,
The greenest dells and hills,
The massiest rocks, the clearest brooks and rills,
Are only emblems, dim and faint,
Of what this earth will be,
When robed in beauty in the morn
Of glad eternity."

Baptism Equally Essential With Faith

By W. A. Reid

SINCE returning from the recent Bible Training School at Oregon, Illinois, I have had a number of conversations with people holding ideas different from our own. In these I have been surprised to learn how many there are who do not believe in baptism as a required step in obtaining salvation. In most of these cases the opinion is that a belief in the gospel alone, is all that is necessary.

Upon close examination of the question, we find the ordinance of baptism was not only a command given by Jesus Himself, but the divinely appointed means of becoming members of the household of faith.

Primarily, haptism means submersion, a cleansing, a washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Spirit, and is thus as necessary to salvation as belief of the gospel, both being essential.

Having attained, by the reading of the Word of God, the proper degree of knowledge, followed by faith and repentance, the ordinance of baptism should be eagerly conformed to by the one about to take on the name of Jesus.

One of the earliest examples of baptism being observed by onyone is referred to by the Apostle Paul in 1 Corinthians 10:1, 2, where he speaks concerning the nation of Israel, "Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea, and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea." When pursued by the Egyptian army to the borders of the Red Sea, the water was miraculously piled up on either side and Israel passed through. The water thereby provided a means of escape from their pursuers.

The very act of passing through those walls of water, and being under the shadow of the pillar of the cloud, was the method adopted by the Lord to bring them into covenant relationship with their heavenly Father.

The proper attitude exhibited by one who is eagerly searching for truth is beautifully illustrated by the narrative recorded in Acts 8:26-39, of the Ethiopian eunuch, who was returning in his chariot from Jerusalem. Here was the case of a man who did not know to whom the Prophet Isaiah was referring in chapter 53 of his book until he was instructed by Philip the evangelist that Jesus was the one who was led as a sheep to the slaughter. Quoting, we read, "As they went on their way, they came unto a certain water: and the eunuch said, See, here is water, what doth hinder me to be baptized?" And Philip said, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. . . . And they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him."

In connection with this incident, we have the direct command of our Lord Jesus, spoken to the eleven disciples just before He was taken up out of their sight. His charge was, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned" (Mark 16:15, 16). Why should Jesus stress this question so strongly if He did not consider it necessary?

The Apostle Paul employs in Romans 6:3-5 a line of reasoning peculiarly his own, by asking the question, "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death?" Using that question as a basis for his thought, he proceeds with the statement: "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death:

that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection."

From this beginning, made in the act of baptism, let us heed the admonition of the Apostle Paul to "go on unto perfection," that we may "be found in him, not having (our) own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith; that (we) may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death; if by any means (we) might attain unto the resurrection of the dead."

A Message to the Churches

By Nancy B. Robison

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Sister Robison, one time evangelist in Ohio, now retired in Whittier, California, sends this letter for publication. While it is especially for the Brush Creek, Ohio, congregation, she suggests that much of the message is timely for all the brethren. We gladly put wings to her message.)

DEAR BROTHERS AND SISTERS IN THE ANOINTED:

I see in The Restitution Herald that since Brother Magaw has gone, the brethren at Brush Creek, Ohio, are carrying on. This is just as we are taught to do. Paul admonished Timothy, "Be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus. And the things that thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also" (2 Tim. 2:1, 2). Dear brothers and sisters, it fills my heart to know you are being guided by the Word.

"The night is far spent, the day is at hand." The nations are crying, "Peace, peace, when there is no peace." The Jews are being driven from one place to another. We are truly nearing the time of Jacob's trouble. "For thus saith the Lord; We have heard a voice of trembling, of fear, and not of peace. It is even the time of Jacob's trouble; but he shall be saved out of it" (Jer. 30:5, 7). Then they will not be the unbelieving, rebellious Jews they now are. The Prophet says (Ezek. 20), "I will bring you out from the people, and will gather you out of the countries wherein ye are scattered..., and I will cause you to pass under the rod, and I will bring you into the bond of the covenant: and I will purge out from among you the rebels, and them that transgress against me..." (vv. 34, 37, 38). In view of all that, Paul tells us that "the night is far spent."

It behooves us to walk circumspectly. Over and over the great Teacher, and his Apostles, tell us to admonish one another, and Paul says, "so much the more as ye see the day approaching."

Paul wrote to the Philippian brethren, "Paul and Timotheus, the servants of Jesus Christ, to all the saints in Christ Jesus which are at Philippi with the bishops and deacons" (Phil 1:1). He makes it more certain as to our duty, saying, "Do all things without murmurings and disputings: that ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights." (See marginal note, where it is put as a command, i.e., "Shine ye as lights.")

In the next sentence Paul tells how we are to shine, saying, "Holding forth the word of life." Whom is Paul addressing? All "the saints in Christ Jesus." And this is just why he says, "Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth" (2 Tim. 2:15). Peter tells us, "Sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear" (1 Peter 3:15).

If each member took a part we would be surprised how the weak would grow strong. If only to read an appropriate verse, they would soon feel they were adding courage to their faith.

Hebrews 10 tells of the great Sacrifice, and warns us against treading under foot the Son of God, and counting the blood of the covenant, wherewith we are sanctified, an unholy thing. We are sanctified through the offering (see v. 10). We come in touch with the blood when we are baptized into His death. Then we are not our own. "Ye are bought with a price," even "the precious blood of Christ."

What more fitting time could there be to exhort one another, than when we commemorate the Lord's death? I believe it was for this purpose the Apostle Paul tarried at Troas. "And on the first day of the week when the disciples came together to break bread," certainly cannot refer to a common meal. They came together, history records, because it was the custom of the early church to commemorate the Lord's death.

Let us strive to build one another in our most holy faith, and know and believe that "we are labourers together with God."

Now another report comes from the Brush Creek Church: "Brother Macy spoke in the morning. Brother Charles Doll will speak next Sunday evening." The Lord bless your efforts! This speaks well for Brother Magaw, that the church doors did not close when he was called to new fields. Your sister striving for the victory.

THOUGHTS ON THE TWENTY-THIRD PSALM

By a Truth-Loving Friend

"The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; he leade:h me beside the still waters. He restoreth my soul: he leadeth me in the paths of right-eousness for his name's sake. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me. Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemics: thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over. Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever."

"THE LORD is my shepherd; I shall not want." Just who is this shepherd? It is the Lord, the Anointed One, the One with whom the heavenly Father is well pleased, the One who will reign in righteousness over all the earth. This One is my Shepherd, not by force, nor trade, nor by selling, nor buying, but by my own choice. By my selection does He become my protector and provider—protecting me from all the evils that may befall, and providing me with food, drink, shelter, peace, and quiet. I shall not want or lack anything. Every good thing will be provided.

"He maketh me to lie down in green pastures." Here in the green pastures I can rest, with no fear to disturb or take away the appetite, and no struggle to get the necessary food; for it is supplied. The pastures are green, living; not dry and burned with drought till there is no nourishment in it. Oh, no! The Lord has the words of life and I may partake as I am able.

"He leadeth me beside the still waters." The waters are still, not lashed and beaten by waves to make it muddy and earry debris so that it is unfit for drinking. Still water us usually clear and easy to drink from. Dashing, restless, turbulent waters impart to the onlooker something of that same uneasy, restless force; but still waters bring ease and rest, peace and quiet contentment.

"He restoreth my soul." He supplies the courage that is necessary to face each day. He gives me a new start each morning.

"He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake." He leads; and only asks that I follow. I need not try out a new path. He has taken it before me. May I follow in the path of righteousness so that I may not bring dishonor to His name, His name that I have chosen to wear. If I only trust Him and cling to Him, the Lord will walk with me; yes, even through "the valley of the shadow of death." With His help I can go through that shadow, where I cannot see, without fear, for I know that He is the resurrection and the life.

The Lord not only has gone before over every path, but will go with me. Further, He gives me a rod and a staff, tools to occupy my hands as a means of help to stay in the path, to prevent my stumbling or falling. What a comfort they are!

Still, this is not all. He is able to provide. I may sit down at the table, where all may see, even in the presence of my enemies, and not be afraid. There is no hiding or sneaking required of me. I can be bold before my enemies.

He anoints me and takes me as His own. Now my cup of joy is full, yes, more than full; it runs over and spills on others. Oh! the bounty of the Lord! It is all mine if I only submit my will to His and be lead by Him. Then "goodness and mercy" will fill all the days of my life, and I shall be given a dwelling place, a place of permanence, "in the house of the Lord for ever."

The words of this Psalm are so simple, yet so full of meaning. Please read it now. Listen to the choice of rich words and the music they hold. It is a hymn of praise and thanksgiving written by David, the sweet singer of Israel.

TITLES An Introduction

By Paul M. Hatch

"I am the LORD: that is my name: and my glory will I not give to another, neither my praise to graven images."

A TITLE, that is, an appropriate title, is an all-important part of any subject, book heading, thought provoked, news imparted, or any word voicing a personal position in relation to other persons or positions. In the latter named comes the most common usage, common because of the fact that practically every day such titles are said and thought of. Some in common usage are: President, Secretary, Treasurer, Governor, Senator, Representative, Doctor, Reverend, Attorney, Professor, etc. In foreign lands: King, Emperor, Premier, Minister of Foreign Relation, Propaganda, Interior, etc., Fuhrer, Ghazi, Duce, etc. Then there are degrees of colleges and universities: (in abbreviation) M.A., B.A., Lit.D., M.D., D.D., etc. And in business: Corp., Ltd.,

In a lesser degree, but nevertheless in daily attention, are our news headings, imparting at a glance generally all that is necessary about an event in brief. These news item titles have been, by selection of choice words, brought down to an exact science, so that the busy world can get a cursory knowledge of the event. If the individual is interested further, the item or column may then be read for a fuller view and understanding. Sometimes when an item is of trivial import the title is made obscure to invite your interest and the reading of the item to get the connection with the heading and the news body. Quite often such headings are poetically expressed as in words of similar sound or words beginning with the same letter headings.

Other forms of titles familiar with us all are book headings, that may or may not give a clew as to the contents. Quite often a book title or chapter title has a Biblical thought or quotation used because Biblical expressions are often enlightening and adaptable to the writing of books.

These, however, are not our concern. Our concern is in the Scriptures, and there we find an abundant use of titles. Every characteristic of the infinite person known to us as God and of His only begotten Son Jesus Christ is bound up in titles. In the English translations the various titles of God, however, are not apparent, and no clew is given to the reader that a particular characteristic is expressed in the original language. Only through examining the explanatory notes of the translators or commentaries of other dependable students is a knowledge of these acquired. These words and phrases translated from the ancient Scriptures, as a rule, become our English words "God" or "Lord," less frequently "Jehovah," "Almighty," or "most High." Often, if the reader or student of the Bible will notice in the Authorized Version, these words are written in small letters with capital headings, others in small capitals, and still others in large capitals, Although the words are the same in the translation, they indicate a special word in the original language, but which word is not apparent unless the nomenclature is understood. Invariably, with one exception, the word "Lord" (small capitals) refers to Jehovah of the original, and the word "God" to other titles in all the variations of the type

When they are understood and the usage of them in relation to the subject matter in connection therewith or event that transpired in those ancient days, a new world, as it were, is opened up to the reader—a wonderful world; it is almost like coming out of darkness into a marvelous light. In darkness we stumble, but in the light there is no excuse of stumbling. To the intent that we may come into the light and understand a little more fully the wonderful character of the infinite One, we bend to the burden and task in subsequent articles, our offering.

TWO RESURRECTIONS

By J. M. Morgan

THERE are two resurrections which differ as to nature and time. The Church of God in Christ believes that all of Adam's race who die will be made alive or raised out of the first death. Paul says in 1 Corinthians 15:21-23, "For since through a man, there is death, through a man, also, there is a resurrection of the dead; for as by Adam all die, so by the Anointed also, will all be restored to life. But each one in his own rank; Christ a first-fruit; afterwards, those who are Christ's at his appearing" (Diaglott). Hebrews 2:9 says, "That he by the grace of God should taste death for every man." The foregoing is good proof that all who die by Adam's sin will be raised to life. We learn that the Anointed is the first fruit, and afterwards those who are Christ's at His appearing will be raised. This tells us who will be raised at the coming of Christ.

Now we will inquire as to time and nature of the two resurrections; first as to time. Christ was the first to rise of His kind or nature, i.e., the immortal. He is alive forevermore. Revelation 1:18, "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore." Just so will His dead ones be made alive to die no more. Luke 20:36, "Neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." This resurrection is the resurrection to immortal life.

Jesus thus divides the resurrection as to time and nature of those raised. In other words, Jesus can call some, and they will hear and live, while others will not hear at that time and therefore will not live. John 5:25, "The dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live." John 5:28, 29, "For the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life." The time of this resurrection will be at the coming of Christ (1 Cor. 15:23), and those raised will be like the resurrected Christ.

Christ also points out a different kind of resurrection for evildoers by saying, "And they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damation" (judgment).

In Revelation 20:6 we find the two resurrections very plainly set out in these words, "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection." Here is one kind of resurrection, called the first resurrection. One must be holy in order to have part in the first resurrection. Then we read, "On such the second death hath no power." But the second death will have power on others who have no part in the first resurrection. This class of dead folk will be raised at the time the books are opened. "And another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works." This is the resurrection unto judgment (John 5:28). This is the time in which the everlasting gospel will be preached "unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people" (Rev. 14:6).

Now we are saying or preaching the coming judgment of the world, but the angel will be "saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come" (Rev. 14:7). This will be the first and last chance for the unnumbered multitudes of people, small and great. This is the closing scene of the final judgment. "And whoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire" (Rev. 20:15).

"He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son. But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death."

THE END OF THE WORLD According to the Bible

By R. M. Abbott

"The enemy that sowed them is the devil; the harvest is the end of the world" (Matt. 13:39).

"As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire; so shall it be in the end of this world" (Matt. 13:40).

"So shall it be at the end of the world: the reapers shall come forth, and sever the wicked from among the just" (Matt. 13:49).

"And as he sat upon the mount of Olives, the disciples came unto him privately, saying, Tell us, When shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" (Matt. 24:3).

"And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come" (Matt. 24:14).

"But Christ as a son over his own house; whose house are we, if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end" (Heb. 3:6).

"Whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished: but the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men... But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up. Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat?" (2 Peter 3:6, 7, 10-12).

"And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea" (Rev. 21:1).

Matthew 18:16, as also Deuteronomy 19:15, direct that "in the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established."

If the above stated matters are correct, then we are now living in days of tremendous importance.

During these 2,520 years Judah has been under the tutorship of the Babylonian system. Unto this punishment God thus delivered them. If, as some would think, more completely than all other peoples the Jew has adopted the Babylonian golden system of industry and commerce and economics, having become most proficient experts therein, let it be remembered that instruction in the same Babylonian standard is the one and only business and national scholarship offered by man's world today. All nations and races of peoples are evidently cast in the same mold. Like Judah, all have greatly turned from the pure teachings of the God of heaven unto the idolatry of this great humanbuilt system until the world today, listening to the "click" of its social, and industrial, and military machine, exclaims with Nebuchadnezzar in Daniel 4:30, "Is not this great Babylon, that I have built for the house of the kingdom by the might of my power, and for the honour of my majesty?"

Judah and Israel and Gentiles seem to be alike in that all are of the same school. Many freely gloat over Judah's plight. But where is the "pot that calls the kettle black"? And if God's foreview reveals that a fierce power should rapidly rise over all other powers—and current events reveal that at least one group is already succumbing—what, I ask, must rightly be the attitude of Bible-informed, Godfearing people?

The writer feels strongly that Christian students should consider all these things with a view to ascertaining the relative position of today with reference to the further prophecies of Daniel 7. That there is a change taking place in the world relative to the Jewish portion of God's chosen people is recognized by all. Query: Are "these things" spoken of by Daniel now coming to pass? Are we living in the time when our faith should be increased because of specific fulfillment of this prophecy?

If these suggestions are correct, then all Christiaus should "watch."

P. S.—I will gladly welcome corrections, criticisms, or suggestions if addressed to 5439 West Ohio Street, Chicago, Illinois. F. L. Austin.

HIGHWAY ROBBERY

The other day a man was knocked down by a robber and his money was taken away from him. The robber has been caught. There are robbers who have not been caught, but as surely as a man must die, they shall be. They are called Christians (we doubt if they are), who could easily afford to pay their tithes, as well as a small offering to the Lord's work, but do not. The Bible says that men will rob God. Beware that you are not numbered with those robbers.

THE PARABLE OF THE POND

There is an old parable of a man who had a pond of water on his land. He was always hoarding water, turning every little ditch into his pond, setting tubs and buckets under the caves and spouts, and carrying the water thither. He envied even the birds what they drank, fearing lest some day the pond would be dry and he would perish with thirst. But coming one day with an unusually heavy load of water, he slipped and, falling into the pond, was drowned. In like manner many have hoarded wealth to their eternal undoing.—Selected.

Is It Luck?

As we go about our daily duties in life we often hear those who have had good fortune or, perhaps, a narrow escape from accident or even death, say, "Yes, I certainly was lucky." Also when we are preparing to go to a new position, or to leave on an extended journey, our friends and our relatives will almost always say, "Good luck to you!" Of course it is just a custom that we have, and we really don't know just what we mean by it, but we say it nevertheless.

Let us turn now to a standard dictionary to find the meaning of the word "luck." It means simply, "chance." The question then arises in my mind, "Should Christians, who believe and testify that God is watching over them, and who pray for His guidance, attribute their success and good fortune to luck or chance? Should we wish our friends luck? Now, we turn to the Scripture, and as far as I have been able to find, with the help of a large concordance, the word "luck" is not found there. We have, contained therein, however, numerous examples of blessings conferred by God upon a praying people.

Therefore, my friends, we come to this conclusion: While we mean no harm, we are doing wrong when we attribute any success we might have to luck, and when we wish our friends luck. The Christian isn't taking any "chance" when he truly serves God, for he is promised emphatically more times than once that he will receive a reward. We have one very true promise—"Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things (necessities and blessings of life) shall be added unto you."

Best Thoughts

The following thoughts are from pupils of the South Bend, Indiana, Sunday school.

- 1. Trust the Lord!
- 2. Follow His ways!
- 3. Never doubt His Word!
- 4. When in trouble go to Him in prayer!
- 5. Believe only what the Bible teaches!

Logan Pickerl.

Even though our lessons have covered many individual stories, each one expresses love and faithfulness. Two or three best thoughts repeated themselves in each lesson. Baptism was brought out by Christ's example. We especially enjoyed the lesson "Cleansing the Temple," where Christ drove out sin. We have followed Christ through His life. We have learned what living water is.

Elwyn Stilson.

Most of our lessons so far have been based upon faith and belief. Baptism was also an equal factor. We studied love a great deal, and applied it to our everyday lives. Each of these topics requires much study, and can help every individual. Obedience and prayer were two excellent thoughts that everybody should observe and use.

Donald Stilson.

The Bible, His Witness

Selected from an article written by John L. Hill by Gordon Miller of Louisiana,

The Bible is the Christ Book. The Old Testament tells of One who was to come. The New Testament tells of one who has come, lived, died, and lives again to make intercession for all who would come to God through Him, and will some day come again to claim His own.

The Bible is precious because it tells of Christ—the way, the truth, and the life. The Bible is the record of God's revelation of Himself, which revelation reached its glorious climax in the coming of Christ.

The world's greatest need today is to hear and properly evaluate the witness of the Bible concerning Christ. If the lost people of the earth would pause in their fatal march toward inevitable doom to hear and heed the witness of the Word, they would see the awful end of their course, and turn about and travel the way of light. If the nations would give car to the witness of the Book concerning the Prince of Peace, they would speedily find the solution to all their problems—political, economic, social, racial, and religious. Where Christ reigns, love abounds, and perfect love casteth out fear, hate, and distrust. If homes, Christian homes, would give the Bible a chance to witness completely for Christ, the resultant transformation of life would become immediately apparent.

The main business of the churches, in their various ministries, is to evaluate the Bible to its rightful place as Christ's witness in teaching, training, and preaching. What the Bible says concerning our Lord is authoritative.

My Bible, or your Bible, is Christ's witness. Is it a hidden, silent, unseen witness? or is it a living, vital, vocal witness? That depends upon you and me. My Bible will speak to me daily concerning the Christ if I open its pages, look, and listen. My Bible will point my lost friends to the Savior if I have studied to be a workman unashamed, handling aright the Word of Truth.

Christ-working young people will do well to remember that the effective Bible is the open Bible in the hands of a consecrated Spirit-minded Christian.

Let'your Bible speak its message.

Three Sins at One Time

"Even though my skates were old and none too sharp, they were better than none! And to think I had forgotten them today," I muttered angrily as I boarded the early bus for home.

The bus was crowded. Finally I espied an empty seat next to a fine appearing boy. As I sat down I greeted him as one boy does another.

"Hi!" he answered shortly.

I ventured a little later, "What grade are you in?"

"Fourth," came the short response.

"My name is Jack Wilson. What's yours?" I again tried to begin a conversation.

Again he answered briefly, and as he said no more we rode in silence. I couldn't help admiring his splendid skates. Just the kind I wanted for last Christmas! I forgot my own disappointment in trying to figure out what made Dave so cross. I wouldn't be cross if I had a pair of skates like that. He must have thrown them down carelessly. Once, soon after I sat beside him, I thought he gave them a kick!

"Here's my block," Dave said after some time. He sounded as though he wasn't so cross now. Perhaps he was even sorry he'd been so short with me. Well, I'd try again to get into a conversation. We "Truth Tellers" were always on the lookout for new class members.

"Do you live near the bus line?" I asked.

"620 Seventh Street. Just three blocks over, just moved last week. Don't know many of the fellows yet. I'll be in your room after vacation. I'm finishing this year at Garfield, where I started last fall," he answered, and hurried out

"O, he's forgotten his skates! I'll call him. No, I won't I'll take them on home. Wish I could keep them . . . Um . . . I'll tell Mother I found them," I finally decided. "Dave would never know they were his, for several of the boys had some just like these," I thought.

I tried to sound natural as I called, "Hello, Mom!" But those skates did bother me. I'd never done anything like this before.

"Home early, Son. Where did you get those nice skates?" asked Mother.

"Found 'em," I answered. "I'll tell you all about it," I lied. "You see, it was this way." And before I knew it, I was telling a tale that had very little truth left in it,

After dinner Mother began playing our theme song, which called us from all parts of the home to the "Quiet Hour," as we call it.

As I hurried in, I thought, "Just last Sunday we studied about lying. Before that, stealing. This Sunday, it's about coveting. Why, I'm breaking three commandments at once!"

"Mother," I began, for I knew I had to tell her that I couldn't keep them. "She'll understand," I said to myself, "for she's something like God that way."

She said, afterwards, "I understand. Perhaps you can earn enough money to buy you a pair."

The next morning, Saturday, I climbed off the bus at a new stop. I easily found Dave's home.

"I came to return your skates you left on the bus last night. I might as well tell you I wanted to keep them, but I knew they were yours, and—well, I try to live up to my home and Sunday school teachings," I stammered.

"Why, you may keep those skates, Jack. I have another pair. They were both given me last Christmas, but these don't fit me very well," generously offered Dave.

As I hesitated, he announced, "Here's Mother. Shall we let her decide?"

I replied, "Why-yes, that ought to be all right."

"So you keep them," said Dave's mother, after she had listened to the facts.

"Whee! Thank you! I have the skates and I'm still a Truth Teller!" I shouted. That's the name of my Sunday school class. Won't you join?" I added.

"Yes, I'll be glad to be in such a class," thoughtfully answered Dave.

"And I'll be glad to have you there," smiled his mother.

"Come on, let's go skating," suggested Dave, and away we went.

A Child's Prayer

"God, make my life a little light
Within the world to glow,
A little flame that burneth bright
Wherever I may go.
God, make my life a little song
That comforteth the sad,

That helpeth ethers to be strong, And makes the singer glad."

AMONG THE CHURCHES

CALLING ALL MINISTERS

All ministers are invited to send for publication a few lines of Christmas greetings to their many scattered friends. The Christmas issue will be that under date of December 20. Your message for that issue may be sent in now, and should not arrive later than December 12. Try to limit your message to about fifty or sixty words.

Also, send us promptly the names and addresses of your friends to whom you wish to send the Christmas Herald. These extra copies will be mailed out for 5 cents each, and we will be glad to have large orders for them, but you must let us know promptly how many you wish. Cooperation, you know, works both ways.

EDEN VALLEY, MINNESOTA

On the evening of November 21, 1938, about forty of the brethren met at the home of Bro. and Sr. W. F. Hoskins, to extend their thanks and good wishes to Bro. John Denchfield, who had been working as pastor here since Bro. J. R. LeCrone left last February. Games were played, which no one enjoyed more than Bro. Denchfield. At a late hour all departed. Bro. Denchfield is going to do evangelistic work for the State Conference, and our prayers are for his success.

On Thanksgiving morning a very representative group of our people met at the church to give thanks to a merciful God for the blessings He had bestowed on us. It was an inspiration to hear the testimony of these people, and we pray that God may bless all of us in the future as He has in the past.

Plans are rapidly going forward for the annual Christmas program, which will be given by the Sunday school a night or so before

Our Sunday school superintendent, Elmo Gaspar, reveals plans for a more lively school than we have had heretofore, beginning with the new year. Bro. Gaspar has wonderful cooperation from the officers, teachers, and the pupils of the Sunday school.

The Eden Valley Church wishes to thank The Restitution Herald for the recent recognition given it and its pastor. We pray that we may be at all times worthy of that recognition rition.

The pastor is privileged to teach a class of approximately twenty high school pupils each Monday afternoon from 3 to 4 o'clock. The inspiration received, and the potential good that Mrs. R. Overholt may be done are something for which we are indeed thankful.

The November meeting of the Ladies' Aid was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Bennett. There was an attendance of thirty-five. The afternoon was pleasantly and profi-ably spent in cutting and sewing rug rags. The Eden Valley Church and its pastor, ex-tend to each reader of The Restitution Herald a very merry Christmas-one in which you will better come to recognize Christ as the coming King-and a Happy New Year, in which we all will be privileged to work more and more for that King.

Gerald L. Cooper, Pastor.

Gleanings From the Field

Word from Eld. A. M. Jones of Eagle Grove, Iowa, states, "We hope to do some in-tensive evangelistic work in Iowa next spring, continuing to conference time."

We are sure the many scattered friends of Sr. Nancy B. Robison will rejoice to read her message on page 8 of this issue of The Her-ald, and to know that after over half a century of service in the Church of God she is still at her post. She may be addressed at 346 N. Friends St., Whittier, Calif.

Our few brethren at Geneva, Ohio, are planning a series of meetings. Sr. Florence Tuttle and Bro. B. L. Hunt, whose writing has appeared in The Herald columns, are two of the leading workers.

Sr. Maybelle Hanson of Chicago writes, "I like The Herald very much, with articles by our own people, also the pictures, as we can see what the writers look like."

Eld. J. M. Morgan of Edmond, Okla., still active in gospel work, will be seventy years of age on Christmas, Dec. 25, 1938.

Remember! Bro. Harvey Krogh, Illinois evangelist, will preach for the Casey brethren December 10 and 11.

Bro. S. J. Lindsay writes, "We had Thanksgiving dinner about a half block away and Sr. Lindsay walked there and back." We are glad that Sr. Lindsay has about recovered from her very serious illness.

Bro. Lyle Rankin of Cashmere, Wash., writes, "When a student of God's Word seethe abundance and waste of fruit here and the lack of fruit in other parts of the country it surely causes him to think of the conditions to prevail just before our Savior's return."

Bro. L. E. Conner, faithful veteran of the cross, will preach at Fredericktown, Mo., Sunday, December 11.

Do you wish to see the rebuilt church at Lawrenceville, Ohio? A picture is promised.

Words of appreciation to Bro. R. A. Curtis for his messages are very much in order. He writes under difficulty, as his hands are stricken with rheumatism. His address is 1825 First Ave., Dayton, Ohio.

"As per request of the Minnesota State Conference, the Eden Valley Church has set uside December 11 as a day for special thoughts of the Conference and its evangelistic efforts."— Gerald L. Cooper,

BURCH - FISHER

Saturday evening at eight o'clock, Nov. 26, in the North Salem Church (Ind.), which had been tastily decorated for the occasion, a large audience assembled to witness the mar-riage of two of its members. The contracting parties were Harvey L. Fisher, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey L. Fisher, Sr., of Niles. Mich., and Evelyn E. Burch, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Burch of Tyner, Ind.

After "O Promise Me" had been beautifully rendered by Mrs. R. C. Stilson, accompanied by Mrs. Lobert Pickerl, to the strains of Lobert Strains Wedding March the nuptial party entered the main aisle, the groom accom-panied by Frank Smith, followed by the bride's attendant, Dorothy Lolmaugh, then the bride on the arm of her father. Their vows were exchanged under a beautiful arch that had been arranged. After the ceremony they marched to the rear, where they received the congratulations and best wishes of their friends. All were then invited to the church basement where nearly a hundred were served refreshments.

At present they will be at home with the groom's parents on the farm near Niles, Mich. We wish for them a full measure of joy and happiness to make sweet the toil of building their home. May the Father's blessing attend

Appropriate Books for Christmas Gifts

Reviews Prepared by Mary A. Gesin

The Song of Our Syrian Guest by William Allen Knight. This is a widely known and beautiful interpretation of the Twenty-third Psalm. All students of the Bible love this Psalm and will also cherish this little book as a gift from a friend at Christmas. The author, Dr. Knight, is famous for his interpretation of Oriental life and customs. The simplicity and the beauty of his literary style bring an added appeal. For teachers he gives unusual information in the 16 to 18 pages of Author's Notes, at the end, which have a ring of authenticity, for the writer has journeyed throughout the country of Palestine. One page is interestingly given to the prevalent idea of a stable as the Christ's birthplace.
Following is Dr. Knight's paragraph on,

"He restoreth my soul."
"You know," he (the Syrian Guest) said, turning to me, "that soul means the life or one's self in the Hebrew writings." Then addressing us all he went on: "There are perilcus places for the sheep on all sides, and they never seem to learn to avoid them. The sheepherd must ever be on the watch. And there are private fields and sometimes gardens and vineyards here and there in the shepherd country; if a sheep stray into one of them and be caught there, it is forfeited to the owner of the land. So, 'He restoreth my soul,' means, The shepherd brings me back and rescues me from fatal and forbidden places.

If you are looking for a small but beautiful remembrance, your choice of The Song of Our Syrian Guest, will be a happy one.

In the Steps of the Master, by H. V. Morton. The author of the "Search" books, has unquestionably written his best book, among many fine ones, in this story of the land where Jesus lived. He follows a fascinating pathway, recalling events in the life of Christ in colorful, out-of-the-way places, which becomes for the reader an informal pilgrimage in His tootsteps. Through the most interesting country in the world, the reader journeys under the guidance of a seasoned teacher. In this beautifully bound book of 450 pages, H. V. Morton brings to an age-old subject an apreal that is universal and a freshness that is There are many well chosen illusdelightful. trations. The author says in his Introduction: "I have attempted to express in this book the thoughts and experiences which come the way of a man as he travels through Palestine with the New Testament in his hand." And well he has succeeded!

The author's description of the Sea of Galilee with its surrounding desolation, is one of the finest of word pictures. He says it is a "deserted lake with the exception of the white town of Tiberias. . . . But even in its desola-tion it breathes an exquisite peace and a beauty that surpasses anything in Palestine. The landscape has altered in detail since Jesas made His home in Capernaum, but the broad cutline has not changed. The lights and shad ows that turn the Gergesene heights to gold and purple, the breezes that whip the lake into whiteness, . . . these are the things that Jesus locked upon and loved." The parables of Je-sus become more understandable after reading the customs and life of the people as Morton describes them. No finer gift could be given a friend who loves the Bible, particularly a teacher of it. Bound in blue with the title in gold lettering, this makes a fine Christmas gift. It will be read and reread for its beauty and accuracy, and will be often used as a refcrence book, as well. Dodd, Mend & Co.--$3.00.

"Home, Sweet Home"

Provided by the love and sympathy of the entire brotherhood of the Church of God, Golden Rule Home assures to the members of its Family the comfort, security, and solicitous care which the word "home" always suggests.

Here the anxieties of earlier and more active life are laid aside forever. No threat of eviction for non-payment of rent or taxes or other indebtedness troubles the hearts of the residents of Golden Rule Home!

No doctor or hospital bills, no grocery, coal, or light bills to be met the first of the month, bring fear to the minds of the Golden Rule Home Family!

All such obligations and burdens are taken from the shoulders of these older ones immediately upon their entrance into the Home and are carried thereafter by the Golden Rule Home itself, which is amply able to bear the load on their behalf.

A hearty Christian welcome awaits all who seek the protection and lifelong support the Home provides.

The Anvil of God's Word

Last eve I stood before a blacksmith's door,
And heard the anvil ring its vesper chime;
Then, looking in, I saw upon the floor
Old hammers, worn with beating years of time.

"How many anvils have you had," said I,
"To wear and batter all these hammers so?"

"Just one," he answered; then, with twinkling eye,
"The anvil wears the hammers out, you know."

And so the Bible, anvil of God's Word,
For ages skeptics' blows have beat upon;
And though the noise of Paine, Voltaire, was heard,
The anvil is unworn—the hammers gone.

Apprentice blows of ignorance, forsooth,
May awe with sound, and blinding sparks, death-whirled;
The Master holds and turns the iron, His truth,
And shapes it as He wills, to bless the world.

"I Will Come Again"

When friends must part it is good if they can assure one another of being together again. Before the ascension of Jesus Christ He promised His apostles, "I will come again, and receive you unto myself." Though Christ's people will be throughout all the world, when He comes all will be found of Him and gathered unto Himself. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air." It is planned of God that "whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with him." (1 Thess. 4:16, 17; 5:10.)

At the very time of Christ's ascension, "while they (the apostles) looked stedfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven" (Acts 1:10, 11). As surely as "he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight," He "will come again" "with clouds; and every eye shall see him." (See Rev. 1:7.)

Three times in the last chapter of the Bible, Christ promises to return, saying, "Behold, I come quickly: blessed is he that keepeth the sayings of the prophecy of this book, . . . I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be, . . . (and) he which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly. Amen." Hurriedly, John adds his prayer, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus." (See verses 7, 12, 20.)

With many such texts in the Bible there can be no doubt to the Christian about the return of Jesus Christ. Christ will come. He will not fail. He will keep His part of the pledge. But, for any person to share in the blessed reunion there is something required of him. To sinful Israel Amos cried, "Woe unto you that desire the day of the Lord! to what end is it for you? the day of the Lord is darkness and not light. As if a man did flee from a lion, and a bear met him; or went into the house, and leaned his hand on the wall, and a serpent bit him." Are you pledged to meet Christ when He comes? Are you keeping your baptismal vows? Are you "strong in the Lord"?

"Occupy Till I Come"

Before Christ's ascension He spoke in parable about "a certain nobleman" (himself) going "into a far country" (heaven), first giving "his goods" (Christ's talents) unto "his own servants" (Christians), for "his citizens" (Israel) "hated him." Leaving His talents with His servants, Christ charged His Christian stewards, "Occupy till I come."

As long as Christ continues in heaven there is work for you and me. He will return too soon for some. Some have put their hands to the plow, and, now looking back, are not "fit for the kingdom of God." (Luke 9:62.) Some are trying to serve two masters, both God and mammon, though Jesus said it could not be done. (Matt. 6:24.) Some, like Demas, "hath forsaken" the cause, "having loved this present world." (2 Tim. 4:10.) Some have buried their talents, as the "wicked and slothful servant" buried his. (Matt. 25:24-29.)

Where today are the talents from Christ? Who preaches like Peter of old? Who is bound in chains? Who sings? Who prays? Who pays the choice out of the flock, or knows what the first fruits are? In houses that are nests we have forgotten neighbors. With so many by the side of the road, the Samaritan spirit has grown cold. Who cares? If the Chinaman on the opposite side of the earth would but dig he might easily find the buried Christian talents of our Western world!

Jesus said, "After a long time the Lord of those servants cometh, and reckoneth with them" (Matt. 25:19). That Christ has not yet come does not change in one iota the truth and certainty of His coming. Rather, having waited long, the "long time" referred to by Christ appears to be about up. Regardless of the time of Christ's return, His charge is, "Occupy till I come" (Luke 19:13). Let all His stewards remember, "Be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh" (Matt. 24:44).

Salt!

What a privilege is the Christian's! He, as "salt of the earth," has Christ's message and blessing to save a stale world. What a danger is the Christian's! If he fails to "occupy," if he loses his Christ-inspired determination to serve in this distasteful earth, he in turn becomes a very part of the earth "to be trodden under foot of men."

The Sin of Manasseh

By Grover Gordon

"The Lord is longsuffering, and of great mercy, forgiving iniquity and transgression, and by no means clearing the guilty, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation" (Numbers 14:18).

FIRST, I wish to ask that the scriptures given in the following article be carefully read and studied and that it will not be thought sufficient to just read what is written, for it would take too much space to give all that should be given in connection with the thought I wish to present. Hence, I will give the scriptures to be studied, and endeavor to make a framework so they may be fitted into it.

The sin of Manasseh, and all that he did, and the judgment which God pronounced against Judah and Jerusalem because of that sin are recorded in 2 Kings 21:1-18. That judgment fell upon the third and fourth generations and had its effect even fourteen generations after that, so it will be necessary to follow that line very closely.

Amon, the son of Manasseh, did evil in the sight of the Lord as his father did (2 Kings 21:19-26)—first generation.

Josiah, the son of Amon, was one of the best kings ever to rule over Judah (read 2 Kings 22:1 to 23:29)—second generation. "Notwithstanding the Lord turned not from the fierceness of his great wrath, wherewith his anger was kindled against Judah, because of all the provocations that Manasseh had provoked him withal" (2 Kings 23:26).

But God made a promise to Josiah, because he had inquired of the Lord and set his heart to follow after Him, that he would be gathered to his fathers in peace and would not see the evil the Lord had pronounced against that place and the inhabitants of the same (2 Chron. 34:26-28).

After the death of Josiah the people made Jehoahas the son of Josiah king. He did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord, and was only permitted to reign three months. He was then removed and his brother Eliakim, whose name was changed to Jehoiakim (2 Kings 23:30-34), was placed on the throne. Thus Jehoahas is not included in the genealogy of the kings.

Jehoiakim did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord (2 Kings 23:35-37)—third generation. It was during his reign that the king of Babylon came up and Jehoiakim became his servant, so we see that the judgment of God began to be executed in the third generation from Manasseh. "Surely at the commandment of the Lord came this upon Judah, to remove them out of his sight, for the sins of Manasseh, according to all that he did" (2 Kings 24:1-5).

I now want to call particular attention to the son of Jehoiakim (he being of the fourth generation) who was known by several different names which we must know so we can arrive at a definite conclusion as to the effect of the sin of Manassch and the pronounced judgment of God upon this line. Jehoiachin (n) the son of Jehoiachim (m) was also called Jeconiah (2 Kings 24:8, margin). Further, we read, "And the sons of Jehoiakim: Jeconiah his son, and Zedekiah his son" (1 Chron. 3:16). Notice the margin to find that Jeconiah is Jehoiachin, referring to 2 Kings 24:6 and to Jeremiah 22:24 where he was called Coniah.

The lineage then is: Amon, first generation from Manassch; Josiah, second; Jehoiakim, third; Jehoiachin (Jeconiah or Coniah), fourth. This being true, we may expect to find God's judgment upon the fourth. This we do find recorded in Jeremiah 22:28-30 (speaking concerning Coniah who was also called Jeconiah and Jehoiachin): "O carth, earth, earth, hear the word of the Lord. Thus saith the Lord, Write ye this man childless, a man that shall not prosper in his days: for no man of his seed shall prosper, sitting upon the throne of David, and ruling any more in Judah."

Now if Zedekiah, the son of Jeconiah (1 Chron. 3:16), ever sat upon the throne of David, then the above scripture has been broken; but it was not that Zedekiah who ruled. When Nebuchadnezzar carried Jehoiachin (Jeconiah) to Babylon he took Mattaniah, who was Jeconiah's father's brother (2 Chron. 36:10, margin; which agrees with 1 Chron. 3:15, margin), and changed his name to Zedekiah (2 Kings 24:17). This is to establish the fact that the statement made in Ezekiel 21:25-27 ("And thou, profune wicked prince of Israel, whose day is come, when iniquity shall have an end, Thus saith the Lord God; Remove the diadem, and take off the crown: this shall not be the same: exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high. I will overturn. overturn, overturn, it: and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is: and I will give it him.) was not made to Zedekiah, but to Coniah (or Jeconiah, Jehoiachin), who was the last of the line of rightful kings, for God had said: "No man of his seed shall prosper, sitting on the throne of David and ruling any more in Judah."

With these things in mind let us examine the New Testament. I think all will agree that the first chapter of Matthew contains the line of kings of Judah beginning with Abraham, for God had said to Abraham, "Kings shall come out of thee" (Gen. 17:6).

Matthew 1:17 tells us there were fourteen generations from Abraham to David, and (Please turn to page 10)

The Jewish Question Again

By Otto E. Dick

NO NEWS in recent years has so effectively commanded the attention and sympathies of the American public as have the persecutions of the Reich. Newspapers and public men the country over have expressed horror as Germany through new decrees deprives German Jews of their few remaining civil rights, and snatches away their last possibility of earning a living. Christians and Jews alike have protested loudly against the Nazi display of mass brutality and destructiveness only to find that their protests fan the flame of hatred. It seems that a government that will hold a racial group responsible for the act of a seventeen-yearold Jewish boy is beyond the reach of ordinary remonstrance. In fact, Germany is so determined in her policy of anti-Semitism that the recent incident is only an excuse for increasing the burden of oppression of German Jews and demonstrates to the world that she intends to obliterate her Jewish population.

The emergence of anti-Semitism in our own country in more than one state in the recent election campaign and the existence of American anti-Semitic societies threaten the basic decencies of democratic life, and should bring united action from our great army of Christian people. We should use our influence and demand that our nation respect the people through whom God gave us the Bible and our Savior. The recent radio utterances against the Jews by Father Coughlin are to be deeply deplored, and we believe that he does not speak for the majority of the Catholic clergy or laity. We hope that our President speaks with the approval of America when he denounces Germany for her recent persecutions. It is known that a complete diplomatic break with the Reich is being considered. Such action might be without precedent, but would quite forcibly establish our position as a nation relative to the Jewish question.

It seems that we need not fear a marked growth of anti-Semitism in this country as long as we maintain our democratic traditions, and that we stand a good chance as a nation of sharing in that blessing that God has promised to those who bless the Jew (Gen. 12:3). The Jews' belief in the popular enlightenment of the masses and their high regard for every form of intellectual aspiration and spiritual effort is in keeping with democratic principles. It does not seem probable that we shall debase our reputation by the violation of one of the most important principles upon which our government was founded, freedom of worship.

An examination of a few facts will show how God has blessed the Jewish element throughout the world and how that blessing is shared by nations who are friendly toward them. God has given them a zest for education and success that has enabled them to become a world power and a people of intellectual independence, though scattered. As a class of people they possess an uncanny faculty for succeeding in business, in politics, and in the professions. In every country where Jews have been given equal opportunities with other citizens a high percentage of them have risen to positions of prominence. Even when they have been discriminated against, they have been able to compete favorably with their Gentile brothers.

Since Mussolini threatens to follow the example of Hitler in persecuting the Jews, the following quotation from a reliable authority is interesting. "In 1934 the King of Italy, receiving a delegation of foreign Jews, remarked with satisfaction that the Italian army numbered eleven Jewish generals.

"Before the war the Italian Senate, whose members were appointed by the King, had thirty Jewish senators. Among the senators appointed by Mussolini, fourteen are Jews, . . . Under Fascism, 203 Jews are—or were until recently-professors, associate professors, or lecturers at Italian universities."

The same authority from which the above was taken continues with the information that several other prominent men in the Italian state are Jews, and reveals that among the many biographies of Mussolini he has given but two his support and approval, both of which were written by Jews, an Italian Jewess, Margherita Sarfatti, and a German Jew, Emil Ludwig.

As an example of how Germany is already suffering through her attitude toward the Jews the following information is submitted. Ever since 1933 the German film industry has been in a dilemma because of a marked decline in the demand for German films. In order to make money the producing companies must export their films. In 1931 Germany exported films to the value of 59,000,000 marks, while in 1937, after all "destructive" elements had been eliminated, the industry exported films to the value of 7,000,000 marks. One of the main reasons for this is said to be the expulsion of the best producers, directors, writers, and actors, who were Jews. In the December 3 issue of The Nation we find this paragraph:

The newest German air-mail stamp depicts the globe of the earth with the German eagle's wings inclosing it. The rising sun of Naziism is expressed by Old Sol wearing a swastika. But the sun is on the wrong side of the globe; it is a setting sun."

If the design of the stamp is such as to enable one to determine that it is a setting sun, the mistake would seem

"Thought It Not Robbery to Be Equal With God"

A Consideration of Philippians 2:1-8

By R. H. Judd

THIS passage is confidently brought forward by believers in the preexistent deity of Jesus the Christ as the second person in a trinity of persons, claiming that it affords conclusive proof of their doctrine. So strongly is it regarded by them that those who deny that Jesus is God, because the Bible emphatically declares that "there is but one God, the Father," are considered as disbelieving the plain teaching of this scripture (1 Cor. 8:6).

We are willing to admit that to a mind already saturated with the aforementioned traditional theory, thoughts along this line, more or less inconsistent, might possibly be extracted from some portions of the passage as it appears in the Common Version. But anyone who will carefully devote his attention to the language used, and who will take the time and patience necessary to examine the context, and the evidence of other recognized translations, will find that instead of supporting that view, it is actually refuted. Further, they will not be a little surprised at the undoubted references to incidents in the life of the first Adam, and the unmistakable connection of these with the second man, the last Adam.

We confidently submit that there is not a statement in the whole passage under consideration which does not apply to Jesus the Christ subsequent to His birth by Mary.

None of them have any reference to a preexistent state.

Humility is the keynote of the passage. Paul is enjoining the Philippian Christians to live, not for themselves only, but to look "every man also on the things of others." And whom does he take as an example? Obviously, not one of the angels, for Scripture reveals but little of their character except in a general way; and an example to be of value to humanity must be within the bounds of human understanding and experience. Nor does he take as an example one of those to whom he was writing. He could not, for they were all, apparently, culpable of the charge of self-seeking which he brought against them. He took as an example a man (John 8:40) known to them all, who had said, "I am among you as he that serveth" (Luke 22:27).

To ask anyone to answer the question above asked, would almost appear as suggesting an ignorance of which he was not guilty. The answer unquestionably is that Christ was the example set before them by Paul; and to Him, as such, all that follows applies. Verse 1 makes that abundantly clear.

But another question inevitably comes to the front, for "Christ" is not a personal name but a title, and implies by its very meaning a subordinate position. So again we ask,

Who was Christ? Who was the Anointed? That we are justified in putting the question in this form is demonstrated by John 20:31, Acts 2:31, and elsewhere, where the definite article is placed before the word "Christ," and it becomes "the Christ," viz., the Christ of prophecy. Paul recognizes this, and gives the answer to our question when he says, "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus." By linking the personal name with the title he establishes the identity of "the Christ." As to who Jesus was, could any one of them have any possibility of doubt? Three out of four of the evangelists record His birth, and the fame of His name and His doings throughout the whole land of Palestine is recorded by all four. John says, "These (things) are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ'' (John 20:31). Again he says that they had seen Him with their eyes, and had handled Him with their hands, and that "the blood (demonstrating His humanity) of Jesus Christ his (God's) Son cleanseth us from all sin'' (1 John 1:1, 7).

We have thus been particular to ascertain the identity of the personality of the passage, that the exegesis of what follows may be the better understood.

Now let us turn again to Philippians, chapter 2, and note that verse 5 has reference to this same Christ Jesus, about whom we have been speaking. Then note that the very first word of verse 6, viz., "who," definitely connects what follows with Christ Jesus already named. Can any student of the Scriptures recall in the life of Jesus any occasion when it could be truly said that He considered Himself "equal with God"? We are confident none can, for on the contrary He affirmed, "My Father is greater than I" (John 14:28).

What, then, are the explanations of the words, "Who being in the form of God," and "thought it not robbery to be equal with God"? At the risk of persistent repetition, we would again point out that the pronoun "who" has unquestionable reference to the man Christ Jesus, and it was He, and no other, of whom the statements are made.

The answer, then, to the first question is, that as the first Adam was made in the image and likeness of God (Gen. 1:26), so also was the last Adam (2 Cor. 4:4; Heb. 1:3); proof positive that neither of these men could be God or equal to God, for the very sufficient reason that an image is so called because it is not, and has not, the reality.

As to the second, viz., "thought it not robbery to be equal with God," even as expressed in the Authorized Version distinction between God and Christ is emphatic. But let us endeavor to find what further light other recognized translations throw upon the passage.

The Revised Version reads: "He counted it not a prize to be equal with God," a statement, surely, which definitely denies any desire to be equal with God. It also clearly implies that He was not equal with God. The Emphatic Diaglott gives us the following translation, "Who, though being in God's form, yet did not meditate a usurpation to be like God, but divested (or emptied) himself, taking a bondman's form, having been made in the likeness of men; and being in condition as a man, he humbled himself, becoming chedient unto death, even the death of the cross. And therefore God supremely exalted him, and freely granted to him that name which is above every name."

Various translations, such as the Revised Version, margin, (and others we might mention) give us "He counted it not a thing to be grasped at to be equal with God." When this rendering is accepted in the light of Genesis 3:5 (R. V.), the astonishing fact is revealed that this is the very temptation put before the first Adam, and through which he fell. The second and last Adam did not fall, but "emptied himself," doing exactly what any man does when he surrenders his own will to that of another.

Now, in harmony with the foregoing explanation, listen to the words of Jesus the Christ, "I seek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent me" (John 5:30). The whole context makes it abundantly clear that it was Christ who "emptied himself," and not one who was to become Christ.

Again note the contrast in the two Adams. The first Adam was disobedient unto death. The second Adam was obedient unto death: and, because of that, death could not hold Him, and God gave Him life (Psalm 21:4; 2 Cor. 13:4), and "a name which is above every name: that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow . . . to the glory of God the Father" (Phil. 2:9-11).

If God gave him life (Psalm 21:4), and if "he liveth (now) by the power of God (2 Cor. 13:4), and God also gave him "a name," how then can He be equal with God? For Hebrews 7:7 tells us that "without all contradiction the less is blessed of the better."

Our Changing World—Concluded

Article 5—The Kingdom of God

By F. L. Austin

"AND in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever" (Dan. 2:44).

"And, behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name JESUS.

"He shall be great, and shall be called the son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David:

"And he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end" (Luke 1:31-33).

The Kingdom of God upon and throughout earth is the one and only all-inclusive subject of the Bible.

Biblical teachings and instructions concerning God's Kingdom give revelations:

Of God in all of His attributes;

Of the created earth and its fullness;

Of created man and God's provisions for him;

Of the Kingdom's chief family head-Abraham;

Of the central kingdom-nation-Israel;

Of the Kingdom's eventual Builder and King and Priest—the Anointed;

Of the Royal-Priesthood's helper—the Church;

Of the classified salvation befitting and assured each elemental phase of the Kingdom's personnel.

All things Biblical seem to pertain to information in portrayal of the glory and grandeur and greatness of the Kingdom of God in its earth-wide completeness.

In the language of Psalm 72 the ultimate domain of this now approaching Kingdom will extend "from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth," while "the spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him" who "shall have dominion" throughout this earth-wide domain-even "the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord; and shall make him of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord: . . . ," as described in Isaiah 11. With such infusion and envelopment of the spirit of the LORD as to "give the king thy judgments, O God, and they righteousness unto the king's son," that Royal Son, according to Psalm 72, shall so guide the inhabitants by His reins, that as, "like rain upon the mown grass" stubble, restoring a new green blade, so, "in his days shall the rightcous flourish; and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth." In the great and ultimate perfection of this prophesied Kingdom of divine righteousness and peace under the Kingship of God's anointed Son, "John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem," in Revelation 21:1-5. And "he heard a great voice out of heaven saying, . . . God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and . . . Behold, I make all things new."

Myriads of times richer than this poor selection of finite words can possibly depict is the Biblical portrayal, in sparkling colorings of Heaven's Precious Stones, sketched by "the finger of God," of the Kingdom of God in its divine heauty.

But the description of this Kingdom is a description of prosperity, of abundance, of peace, of righteousness, of life, of continuance. It is not a description of a mere portion of land bounded by certain mountain chains, or river banks.

Earthy?

Oh, Yes. Occupying "the whole world," as in Romans 4:13.

Geographic?

Certainly. "From sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth."

A central Capital?

Surely. "Yet have I anointed my king upon Zion, the hill of my holiness," as told in margin of Psalm 2:6. And, as in Isaiah 2:3, "Out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem."

But-listen to the Lord as He speaks through Moses to Israel in Deut. 18:15-19: "I will raise them up a Prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and I will put my words in his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I command him. And it shall come to pass, that whosoever will not hearken unto my words which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him." Peter told the people of Jerusalem, as recorded in Acts 3:19-26, that the prophet mentioned above by Moses was none other than Jesus the Anointed. Also, "It shall come to pass, that every soul, which will not hear that prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people." Now Jeremiah 31:31 and Hebrews 8:8-13 indicate that the "word" that the Savior shall speak will be the words of the "new covenant" which will be put "into their mind," and written "in their hearts." Laws thus written will change, to the core, the individual, the family, the municipality, the state life throughout the earth.

No longer will or can usury (interest) be charged a fellow man. For this is contrary to God's every precept.

No longer will or can God's law of "release and rest" in the seventh year be ignored, to the impoverishment of the weaker, and to the impoverishment of the soil.

No longer will or can any individual, family, municipality, state, rules and laws, in disparagement of equity, be established and enforced upon the neighbor. For—

God will no longer permit man to legalize that which He has condemned, incriminated, penalized. The Christian (?) excuse of today that while we are in the world we must do as does the world, will then be tried before the bar of Righteousness.

Not in geographic boundaries so much as in human hearts must there change be made in order to the setting up of the Kingdom of God. This New Heart was first displayed by Jesus the Anointed. By Him it was taught that all who would follow Him must follow Him with Hearts rather than with feet.

God's LIGHTHOUSE

The Prophetic Word is like unto a strong, sturdy, storm-resisting lighthouse built in the midst of rocky crags and shallows where wind-driven waves ever swish and swash tempestuously. Its polygon structure having a clear vision window on every side through which the keeper may follow the penetrating rays of light as the revolving beacon throws its beams far, far out over the horizon line. The purpose of the lighthouse and of the keeper is to warn all sailors not to approach these rocky shallows.

In the midst of the shelter of this Grand Old Book, like the keeper within the lighthouse, the writer feels that he can peer through the windows of God's divine promises in every direction as the revolving beacon light of Truth throws its beams of light upon every point surrounding of man's life. Every human problem, from the individual to the state, is touched by that light. From individual to state all are warned to stay distant from these rocks destructive of every approaching craft. Through the windows, in every direction, is clearly seen the regions of God's Kingdom—regions of safety.

But the lower lights reveal that many are the craft that are being pounded into pieces against these rocks. Their pilots trusted not the lights. Also, from every direction, ocean ships seem to be bearing down almost directly toward the light. As though to repudiate and ignore the warning the pilots brazenly sail on. But!

They're here! The Light of God's Word reveals that they are in too far! They'll never be able to clear the reefs! the rocks! the shoals!

THE NATIONAL AND ECONOMIC GRAPH

In 1912 the international status of the world didn't look too bad. In 1913 the Balkan states entered into turmoil. In 1914 the great World War was pitched. By 1918 many long-standing empires of state had fallen. Many millions of lives had been fed to the war-god. All this was because man had been following religiously the Babylonian system of life. That system was no longer centered in the old Babylonian regions, but it had been following the trek made by God's Israel of former days.

But these stated results were not of greatest concern. As revealed through the 20's, and sharply between 1928 and 1936, the economic structure of industry, agriculture, commerce, transportation, manufacture, had been undermined. The last of May, 1928, witnessed a depression in Europe different than any prior economic depression. The president of the Chamber of Commerce of France declared in December, 1928, that the depression which began the last days of May, 1928, was beyond analysis. None could see a reasonable reason for its existence. Commerce lagged. The United States prosperity intoxicated its citizenry to the point where it lunged headlong into the gambling stock market. October, 1929, like an earthquake, in one day the market failed, and billions of dollars in market value faded. Creditor nations in Europe defaulted their debts to each other, and practically all defaulted to the United States. The gold standard in which all economic structure had for centuries been built toppled as a city before an earthquake. Read these sentences gleaned from the very extensive and complete work of Prof. Arnold J. Toynbee as taken from his "Survey of International Affairs" under the caption "Annus Terribilis," 1931: "The year 1931," says Prof. Toynbee, "was distinguished from previous years-in the 'post-war' and in the 'pre-war' age alike-by one outstanding feature. In 1931, men and women all over the world were seriously contemplating and frankly discussing the

By R. A. Curtis

A FTER a brief respite I will continue to "search the scriptures," as requested by Christ who "died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living" (John 5:39; Rom. 14:9). "Eternal life" is the goal, but it is intimately connected with "Jesus, and the resurrection" (Phil 3:8-14; Acts 17:18).

We are anxious to know how we "might have life" (John 5:40; Matt. 19:26). It is attainable "through Jesus Christ our Lord" as "the gift of God," to those who have sought for it "by patient continuance in well doing" (Rom.

2:6, 7). No "other name" can be substituted here, nor "some other way" do just as well, as strict obedience to the plan of salvation, as disclosed in the Bible (Rom. 6:23; Acts 4:12; John 10:1).

"Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall: for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ" (2 Peter 1:10, 11).

It requires "diligence" to win; "neglect" is sufficient to lose. "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him" (Heb. 2:3).

CERTAINTY OF RESURRECTION

"Blessed is the people that know the joyful sound" of pardon for the penitent, hope for returning prodigals, and life for the dead" (Psalm 89:15; Isa. 55:6, 7; Col. 1:23; Isa. 26:19; John 10:27-29). My heart has been grieved to hear teachers publicly proclaim from the rostrum, "It is impossible for God to raise the dead." Inspiration terms such, false teachers (2 Peter 2:1).

"Go see the ocean's boisterous foam,
With fury dashed against the shore,
Then ask if God who raised the storm
Can into life the dead restore."

"Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?" (Acts 26:8; Dan. 12:2; Hosea 13:14). "God is not a man, that he should lie; neither the son of man, that he should repent: hath he said, and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good?" (Num. 23:19; Rom. 4:20, 21). "He that is our God is the God of salvation; and unto God the Lord belong the issues from death" (Psalm 68:20).

To deny the statements of "almighty God" is to be truthfully told, "Ye do err, not knowing the scriptures, nor the power of God" (Gen. 17:1; Matt. 22:29). "Yea, they turned back and tempted God, and limited the Holy One of Israel" (Psalm 78:41).

It requires no greater faith to believe that God can cause "many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth" to "awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt," than it does to believe the following statement: "My substance was not hid from thee, when I was made in secret, and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth. Thine eyes did see my substance, yet being unperfect; and in thy book all my members were written, which in continuance were fashioned when as yet there was none of them' (Psalm 139:15, 16).

Christ "marvelled because of their unbelief" (Mark 6:6). Abraham "staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God; and being fully persuaded that, what he had promised, he was able also to perform" (Rom. 4: 20, 21; Heb. 11:8-10, 17-19).

R. A. Curtis

THE FAITH OF ABRAHAM

We should emulate "the faith of Abraham; who is the father of us all," and "walk in the steps of that faith" (Rom. 4:11, 12, 16). Abraham's heirship will not only include "the land of Canaan," but also "the world" (Rom. 4:13). When Abram was called to get out of his "country," and away from his "kindred," he did not know where he was to go, but he knew under whose instruction he was going. "And the Lord said unto Abram, after that Lot was separated from him, Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward. For all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed for ever" (Gen. 12:1-3; 13:14, 15, 17).

Many centuries after this solemn promise of God to Abram had been ratified by an oath (see Gcn. 15), we are informed by Paul, "For when God made promise to Abraham, because he could swear by no greater, he sware by himself, saying, surely blessing I will bless thee, and multiplying I will multiply thee. And so, after he had patiently endured, he obtained the promise. For men verily swear by the greater; and an oath for confirmation is to them an end of all strife. Wherein God, willing more abundantly to shew unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath: that by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us. Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and stedfast, and which entereth into that within the veil: whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, made an high priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec" (Heb. 6:13-20).

The fleshly or natural descendants of Abraham, who dwelt in Canaan for a time, are not the "seed" contemplated in connection with Abraham, who "was called the friend of God" (James 2:23). "Know ye therefore that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham. And the scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed. So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham" (Gal. 3:7.9). "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ" (Gal. 3:16).

The contemplated blessing, through "Abraham and his seed," of "all nations," and "all families of the earth," constitutes "the gospel" preached to Abraham (Gen. 12: 1-3; Gal. 3:8; Psalm 72:6-9, 19). Are you walking "in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham" (Rom. 4:12)? "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves" (2 Cor. 13:5). If you are in the faith, "watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong" (1 Cor. 16:13). "Be ye stedfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord" (1 Cor. 15:58). If we would "be not moved away from the hope of the gospel," we must be "grounded and settled" in our convictions of "the faith which was once delivered unto the saints" (Col. 1:23; Jude 3). "Have faith in God" (Mark 11:22; Heb. 11:6). Look hopefully forward to the future!

"A silent murmur of the soul, Tells of a world to be; As travelers near the beach, Hear the roaring of the sea."

THE BUSINESS MAN ON SUNDAY

By Russell Currens

MANY business men in this rush-order business world think they need to "keep open" on Sunday. Perhaps it is necessary in a few cases, but not in many.

God would more than repay the feared money loss we would sustain on Sundays closed, if we would only observe a day of rest and worship. God expects us to do His will at all times, but Sunday, especially, should be devoted to Him, as we have all the other six days for our labor and enjoyment. God does not ask too much.

God is always more than fair with His people. The tithe proposition is a good illustration. There God asks only a tenth, while with our time He asks a seventh. In 1 Corinthians 16:2, we read, "Upon the first day of the week (Sunday) let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him." From six days of earning, only a small proportion of our profit is called for "upon the first day of the week." God allows the tither to use the remaining nine tenths for his needs, but expects the other tenth for the church, and its work.

God asks us to give one seventh of our seven-day week to Him. God knows it is best for His people. He also knows that it can be done. Otherwise He would not ask us to do it.

Yes, God wants the business man to "keep closed" on Sunday. Further, it is good for the good business man to keep the entire day holy in His service.

possibility that the Western system of Society might break down and cease to work. By the time when this possibility thus presented itself, Western Society had come to embrace all the habitable lands and navigable seas on the face of the planet, and the entire living generation of Mankind; and, within narrower geographical limits, it had been in existence as 'a going concern,' without breach of continuity, for from twelve to thirteen centuries . . .''

He goes on to speak at length of the great economic distress as being the greatest ever known to man.

TODAY

Please remember that the writer is not looking upon the geographic world at this time. He is considering the status of conditions as they have developed under the Babylonian gold-headed system; and that system has, like the octopus, embraced largely every known phase of human activity, including the religious phase. Individual, family, state, industrial, social, and religious pilots have steered their respective ships in utter disregard of God's Word of instruction. The Israel of God, both the ten tribes and the two tribes, have likewise followed on. (over)

Many are the indications today that we are now within that period of Bible time known as the period of God's judgment in the earth. The states which apparently withstood the military storm of 1914 are toppling under the economic earthquake of the 1930's. The states, which by the treaty of Versailles of 1919, were left paupers have, gangsterlike, risked all against the society of nations. Today they are causing the British-Israel nations to tremble. The Judah phase of Israel is fearfully ravished. But—

Isaiah 26:9 declares, "When thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants will learn rightcousness." Like Egypt in the days of the exodus of Israel, the world is being put to its wit's end. Great unexplainable changes are taking place. This all men know. As in the recent past, so still more now, men are trying to clear the rocks by their own maneuvering schemes. Like Pharaoh's army in the sea, they are surely doomed to fail. But—

During this time, as in the days of the exodus, God's Israel, though weakened, and destined to even greater weakness, is always under the protection of God's judgments. Israel, wheresoever she is, God knows, will be reestablished—and that under Christ.

May faith in God stabilize all.

Corrections — In Bro. Austin's "This Changing World" for November 8, fourth line from bottom of page 7, correct to read, "apparently England, as leader in Israel, is losing," and in the issue under date of November 15, page 7, first line, the fifth word should be "covenant" rather than the printed "government."—Editor.

to be a bit of ironic prophecy; and even if it is a rising sun, the sign on the stamp would still seem to be a sign of things to come. A sun that rises must set.

No nation is making more rapid strides in the field of learning than is Germany. She has risen from a miserable post-war condition to become a leading world power. This has been accomplished with few natural resources or little national wealth. All things considered, there is little doubt that Germany today leads the world in many fields of endeavor. How, then, a nation apparently so highly civilized, could resort to such brutal persecution of God's chosen people has been the subject of much discussion.

We have had the opinion advanced by many that the Jews are a form of scapegoat for Hitler and his intimate followers. Albert Einstein, a famous German Jew now in America, adds the following:

"To the Nazi group the Jews are not merely a means for turning the resentment of the people away from themselves, the oppressors; they see the Jews as a nonassimilable element that cannot be driven into uncritical acceptance of dogma and threatens their authority because of its existence on popular enlightenment of the masses."

In the past God has used strange methods to effect His will. He has permitted His people to suffer great losses by hardening the hearts of their enemies. He has permitted rival nations to wax strong and overthrow them. He has willed that the Jewish group should thrive on the oppression and on the persecution that it has forever met in the world. When he desired that they should leave Egypt, He laid careful plans, provided a leader, and had Pharaoh drive them out through oppression. Likewise has He permitted the rise of present governments and leaders whose very natures are opposed to Jewish traditions. As of old He is taking the people of Israel from among the heathen whither they have gone, and will gather them on every side, and will bring them into their own land (see Ezek 36:24; 37:21).

Through suffering their hearts are being softened for the acceptance of their true Messiah, the Stone once rejected by the Jewish builders. "Behold, your house is left unto you desolate: and verily I say unto you, Ye shall not see me, until the time come when ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord" (Luke 13:35). If we are not mistaken we see a homeless Israel being chastened in preparation for the promised blessing. From reliable reports we learn that never has there been a more fertile field for Christianity than among exiled Jews.

Paul assures us that we are the children of God by adoption, that we are heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; thus we shall have opportunity of sharing in that precious, promised inheritance. Then, instead of giving vent to our indignation about recent injustices suffered by the Jews, instead of praying that the Nazi wrath might be lifted from the Jews, should we not pray that Christ's kingdom might come and God's will be done; and trust Him to bring it about by whatever method He deems necessary. (Not our will, but Thine be done.)

from David to the carrying away into Babylon were fourteen generations, and from the carrying away into Babylon unto (not including) Christ were fourteen generations. Jeconias was carried away into Babylon. Therefore it would be fourteen generations from Jeconias unto Christ (my reason for saying that the sin of Manassch affected even the fourteenth generation after the fourth).

I had it lately called to my attention that the fourteen generations from the carrying away to Babylon unto Christ would necessitate the use of the name of Jesus. It caused me to investigate, and I found that in Matthew 1:11 it reads, "And Josias begat Jechonias," etc., but in the margin, "Some read Josias begat Jakim (Jehoiakim, 2 Kings 23:34, margin), and Jakim begat Jechonias." This is correct according to the Old Testament record and accounts for the fourteen generation without the use of the name of Jesus.

The point is this: If Jesus is the son of Joseph, as some believe, then He will never prosper sitting upon the throne of David and ruling in Judah, for that was written against Coniah's seed. It is very evident that Joseph is of that line, for "Jacob begat Joseph the husband of Mary, of whom was born Jesus, who is called Christ" (Matt. 1:16). Again, if Jesus is of that line He is not the one "whose right it is." (EDITOR'S NOTE: It must be then that Matthew's genealogy is of Joseph rather than of Jesus, for the very purpose of showing that Jesus was not of the Manasseh line, nor under his curse.)

What then? Seeing that God had condemned the line of Solomon because of the sin of Manasseh, and had spoken against the seed of Coniah, it is impossible for Christ to be of that line. But because God had sworn by an oath unto David that of the fruit of his loins He would raise up Christ to sit on his throne it was necessary to go back to David and come by another line. The result is that in Luke 3, the line from Abraham to David is the same, but from David to Christ it comes through Nathan (the line of Mary) instead of Solomon.

"And Jesus began to be about thirty years of age, being (as was supposed) the son of Joseph, which was the son of Heli" (Luke 3:23). It is evident at first sight that Heli and Jacob could not both be the father of Jesus by begettal, as they are from different lines. Notice in Matthew 1:16, "Jacob begat Joseph." This is not said of Heli, so he was reckoned by law because of his marriage to Heli's daughter, Mary, the son (i. e., son-in-law) of Heli.

Some may ask the same question as the people of Nazareth (Luke 4:16-22) and the Jews (John 6:41, 42), "Is not this Jesus, the son of Joseph, whose father and mother we know?" Notice the questions as asked are recorded, not a statement that He was the son of Joseph. We also refer to Luke 2:21-24, where they took Jesus after that He was eight days old up to Jerusalem to present Him to the Lord according to the law of Moses (see Lev. 12). In that act Joseph acknowledged Jesus as his foster son. It is a custom even in our day for an adopted child to be called "son" by the foster father. So we can see why He was called the son of Joseph by some, being (as was supposed) the son of Joseph.

The miraculous begettal of Jesus was by the Holy Ghost, which is the power of God through His Word. "She was found to be with child by the Holy Ghost" (Matt. 1:18). "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee" (Luke 1:35). "And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth" (John 1:14).

When the announcement was made to Mary she said, "Behold the handmaid of the Lord: be it unto me according to thy word" (Luke 1:38). The begettal by the power of God through His word does not conflict with any of His laws, but brings it into harmony with all of His creative works. "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth" (Psalm 33:6). "For he spake and it was done; he commanded, and it stood fast" (Psalm 33:9).

In speaking to Coniah, the last of the line of Solomon to sit upon the throne of David, the Lord said: "And thou. profane wicked prince of Israel, whose day is come (fourth generation), when iniquity (the sin of Manasseh) shall have an end, Thus saith the Lord God; Remove the diadem, and take off the crown:" (Israel had not rejected Samuel, but God from being their king, and God had invested His dignity and power in the hands of the kings; now He is removing it from them) "this shall not be the same (line): exalt him that is low." "Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem; behold, thy king cometh unto thee: he is just, and having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt the foal of an ass" (Zech. 9:9). This scripture is applied to Jesus in the New Testament, and surely refers to the line of Nathan who was the second surviving son of Bathsheba and David, Solomon being the first. So, through His mother, Jesus was of the lower or second line. "Abase him that is high" (Solomon's line). "I will overturn, overturn, overturn, it (the line of kings): and it shall be no more, until (showing that God's regal dignity and power will again be established) he come whose right is is (Christ, the seed of Abraham, Gal. 3:16; the seed of David, Acts 13:22, 23); and I will give it him."

Here is the declaration to Mary: "And, behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name JESUS. He shall be great, and shall be called the son of the Highest: and the Lord God (the I of Ezek. 21:27) shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end" (Luke 1:31-33). "Iniquity will have an end" when there is a righteous ruler sitting upon David's throne, Jesus Christ our Lord and Master in whom was no sin, neither guile, no, not even the "sin of Manasseh."

Recently, in talking to one who had believed in the human paternity of Jesus, I presented the Scriptures as I have here. Tears came to the almost blinded eyes of the one with whom I was talking, and his reply was something like this: "I believe God has sent you to me to show me the truth, for I want to know the truth, and am willing to accept it when it is proved by the Scriptures. I believe that Jesus is coming back to earth again to sit upon the throne of David and rule over Israel and all the earth. You have showed me by the Scriptures that this would be impossible if He was the begotten son of Joseph, who was of Coniah's line. You have also made clear the fourteen generations from the carrying away into Babylon unto Christ, by showing that the name of Jehoiakim is omitted in Matthew 1:11, but preserved in the margin. I can see now; I had thought that Jesus was the begotten son of Joseph and the adopted Son of God, but now I can see the truth that He is the begotten Son of God and the adopted son of Joseph.

That confession encouraged me to put this line of reasoning into print as best I could, in hope that it will be of some help to others who may be troubled in regard to this question, and seeing it to be the truth, might make the good confession which was made by the cunuch, "I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God" (Acts 8:37). Upon that faith is the church founded.

"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost" (Matt. 28:19). This verse is known as the Great Commission which Jesus gave to the then eleven apostles.

We must first realize that baptism is necessary. To be a Christian one must be baptized, and be obedient to Christ. Christ commanded water baptism, which symbolizes certain things one believes—the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ. Unless one sincerely believes these things baptism loses its value and meaning.

A clear understanding of the scriptures pertaining to the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ and other essential truths should be attained before one puts on Christ through baptism. In baptism one confesses his faith in the saving power of the Lord's death and resurrection.

In Matthew 3:16, when Jesus was baptized, the divine seal was placed upon baptism. But why should Jesus be baptized when He was already spotless? In Matthew 3:15 we find the ready answer: "To fulfil all righteousness." It therefore follows that it is vitally necessary for us to be baptized, because we are sinners.

Baptism is the exercise of faith. If we have faith in Christ's death and resurrection we indicate it by being buried in the likeness of His death and we rise to walk in newness of life (Rom. 6:3-6). As we go down in the waters of baptism we put off our old life, our old desires. We bury them in the waters of baptism, and we arise to a new life in Christ, with new purposes and ideals.

Care should be taken in forbidding baptism, for in so doing the way to remission of sins is closed (Acts 10:47; 2:38). If a person rejects baptism he is rejecting the counsel of God (Luke 7:29, 30, 37).

Baptism should be practiced along with the teaching of the gospel, for they are inseparably connected. The purpose of baptism is for the remission of sins (Acts 2:38).

So it behooves each of us to put on Christ through baptism after obtaining a clear understanding of the Scriptures, for we must all pass through the watery grave (1 Cor. 10:1, 2).

Christmas Carols

Many of the time-honored customs of Christmas such as the tree and Santa Claus have come down to us from paganism. There is one, however, that is based wholly on Bible facts, and that is the custom of singing carols on Christmas Eve. Do you remember the story of the birth of Jesus, how the angels came and sang, "Peace on earth, good will toward men"? That is the record of the first carol, this song the angels sang to the shepherds. It was a joyous song, proclaiming to the world that a King had come at last to free it from oppression, proclaiming to Bethlehem that the prophecy concerning it (Micah 5:2) was being fulfilled. It was something to sing about.

Today we go about on Christmas singing the carols that we have come to love to the aged and shut-ins. How glad they are to hear the songs we sing to them about Jesus and His birth! We also have much to sing about, for we can tell, in song, of the soon coming of this same Jesus, of whom the angels sang so long ago.

Bereans, did you ever go around on Christmas Eve and sing carols? If you haven't, you have missed something in your life. Try it this year, and see what enjoyment you get as your aged and shut-in friends shout their thanks to you for this remembrance. In this way you can indeed help them to have a Merry Christmas.

Help Somebody Today!

Thelma Richardson, Hammond, La.

Jesus' life was one of daily service to others. He did not confine His service to one day, or month, or season, but it was a continuous work. Christ was never too weary, too busy, or too deeply absorbed in something else to respond to the call for need. Christ never lost an opportunity to do good. I sometimes think that Christ's whole-hearted devotion to the well-being of the human race rebukes the failure and negligence on our part of not doing good to others.

We should yield our personal interests to the welfare of others, as well as the church.

Today, opportunities for doing good are ever more appealing. We are living in troublesome times and it behooves each of us to give our best. We are tested in these times by life's emergencies.

We should have a willing spirit to always help others. In doing so we are coming closer to Christ. We should catch the spirit of helpfulness. Let us, as we journey along, always strive to perform daily deeds of helpfulness.

Why not make that dream of service a reality? Do it today!

We need not be afraid that we shall go too far in serving others. There is no danger that any of us will ever go too far in the work of active love, or become too kind or too helpful to our neighbors.

A Love Story

There was very little food to be had in Judah, for the crops had been very poor.

From his home in the town of Bethlehem, a man named Elimelech, with his wife, Naomi, and their two sons, went to live in the land of Moab. Moab was on the east of the Dead Sea, and Judah was on the west.

There they lived for ten years, during which time Naomi's husband, Elimelech, died. Their two sons had married women from the idolatrous country of Moab, one named Orpah, the other named Ruth. As the two young men also died there, Naomi, Orpah, and Ruth were left widows.

Naomi heard that the land across the Dead Sea, Judah, had again been blessed by God and good harvests, so she made ready to return to Bethlehem.

Her two daughters-in-law loved her greatly, and both would have gone with Naomi, although they would have been strangers in Judah.

Naomi gave them her blessing, told them to go home to their mothers, and hoped they each would find another husband among their own people. She kissed them good-by, and they wept at the thought of parting. The two young ladies again asked to go with Naomi.

As Naomi again told them to go to their own people, Orpah turned back, but Ruth said she would follow Naomi. Her love prompted her to say that she would go wherever Naomi went, that Naomi's people should be hers, and that Naomi's God would be her God. Naomi must have told her daughters-in-law about her God—our God—for Ruth's people were idol worshipers.

Ruth and Naomi returned to Bethlehem. There Ruth found happiness among Naomi's people. Because of her great love which moved her to follow Naomi, she became the mother of kings, for she married Boaz, a kinsman of Naomi's husband. Ruth's son was named Obed. Obed, later on, had a son named Jesse, and Jesse was the father of David, the shepherd boy who became king.

A New Problem

Let us make a scrapbook to use each week in connection with the work on this page.

Make your own book, if you are a boy or a girl big enough to go to school. Your mother will give you suggestions if you ask her help.

Your tiny brothers and sisters, who can only look at pictures, can get your mother or some other person to make the books for them.

The best material to use is oilcloth. Anyone who writes to me will receive full instructions for making one. They are easy to make and last longer for little children. Other materials can be used such as wall paper. Some of you may prefer to buy your scrapbooks already made.

I suggest you begin at once. Send for your directions, or buy your book. Perhaps you can make some for your younger brothers and sisters for Christmas gifts.

We'll begin using them next quarter. The lesson of the love story today will make a good picture. Why not draw it and save it until you get your book made?

Directions

Select a large, clean sheet of white paper. On the left foreground draw a large tree, too large to draw it all on the picture. Now draw two women near the center of the sheet. Draw them walking toward the left. Draw them large, for they are the central part of our story. They are Naomi and Ruth. Then draw, farther in the background on the right side, Orpah, on her way back to her people. She is going away from us. Draw your skyline if you have not done so. Add a few other trees in the background. Color the picture if you wish.

A Free Get-Acquainted Gift

If you write to me within a week I shall include the picture for today's lesson, with the directions for making the scrapbook. My picture may not be done as well as you will draw yours. You may color it, and save it for your scrapbook.

A short note is all you need write. Tell me the number in your family who will be making scrapbooks, so each will get a picture. Also tell me the ages of each. Be sure to send a stamped, self-addressed envelope with your address plainly written. If you are not making your scrapbook, but want the free picture, send for one. I am expecting a large number of you to send in. That is why I am asking for the stamped envelopes. You will write to me, today? I'll watch for the postman!

LOUISIANA CHURCH NOTES

The Happy Woods and Blood River church groups are busily engaged in preparing Christmas programs to be presented shortly before Christmas. We anticipate helpful and inspiring programs.

The Happy Woods Church has a new floor, and other improvements are contemplated.

Both churches are looking forward to a series of meetings to be held in January by Bro. F. E. Siple of Grand Rapids, Mich. Bro. Siple needs no introduction here, as this is his boyhood home, and he has held a number of meetings here in the past. We extend a cordial invitation to any of the brethren within driving distance to attend these meetings.

SOUTH LAWN PARK CHURCH OF GOD Grand Rapids, Michigan

Thanksgiving morning was set aside by our people to give thanks to our heavenly Father for His manifold blessings. This was carried out by the thoughts and messages of several of our people.

Eld. F. E. Siple gave a most inspiring talk to the students of Godwin Heights High School on "Thanksgiving." In his message he brought out how thankful we should be for the freedom in our country and how much better off we are here than others in the Old World.

Our most joyful news is that we have recently received three new members, all young people, into our church. On Sunday, Dec. 4, they were officially welcomed into our family. They are: Kathrine Crawford, 55 Conrad St., Marjorie Barrett, 3556 Burchwood, and Olive May Schooley, 207 Allen Rd. May God bless them in their work.

Mary Newell.

Friday evening, Dec. 2, the annual church election was held. The results are as follows: Elders: Lawrence Bridegam, Mrs. Dorothy Siple, Mrs. Martha Doan; deacons: Oscar Hopkins, Lyle Doan, Ralph Downing, Leon Kiper; deaconesses: Mrs. Esther Holmes, Mrs. Ethel Hopkins, Mrs. Lucretia Ackerman; secretary: Leslie Niles; treasurer: Gerald K. Niles; director of music: Miss Evelyn Barr; Standay school superintendent: Lloyd Stevens: Sanday school superintendent: Lloyd Stevens; Berein superintendent: Mrs. Lyla VanFleet; Doreas superintendent: Mrs. James Baker.

At this business meeting a committee was appointed to study the advisability of combining the Berean society and the Christian Endeavor society in one working unit.

Sunday morning, Dec. 4, the service was in 5 form of welcome to the three new members of the church. Bro. Marsh spoke on "Christian Fellowship." At the close of this inspiring service the glad hand of fellowship was served to the pay ones and then followed. extended to the new ones, and then followed the sacred rite of Communion.

REPORT FROM VIRGINIA

The closing days of the evangelistic services held at the Dry Run Church in Powell's Fort Valley were seriously hampered by heavy snowfall and zero weather. The snow, which started on Thanksgiving Day, and the cold weather which followed could hardly have been anticipated since such weather has not been experienced at that time of year in this section of the country for many years.

Until that time the interest and attendance at the services were very good. After the change in weather only a few hardy souls braved the elements to attend. Considering that such weather is the exception rather than the rule here, we could hardly blame them.

The special Thanksgiving service at the Maurertown Church on Thanksgiving morning lished in 1930. This also has articles from the was most inspiring. Nearly every person present took part in the service in one way or another, offering prayers of thanksgiving, reading favorite scriptures and appropriate poems, and singing hymns of praise unto the Lord. We were much impressed with the testimony to the goodness of the Lord voluntarily offered by many of the brethren. A Thanksgiving of-fering for the benefit of the National Bible fering for the beneat of the state of the state of the bound of the bo Dec. 2. There were forty people, mostly young people and children, in attendance at the first meeting, and we are praying that the number will grow. We invite any who may live within driving or walking distance to attend the class. At present the class is divided into three groups, and may have to be divided

The people of Virginia are to be congratulated on the splendid manner in which they cooperate in carrying on the work of the Lord in this State.

GO PREACH THE GOSPEL

The command given by Jesus seems to me to be a very urgent one. I could not "go," but I did prepare the message in book form, and have sent it out as far as possible for several years.

The first book was printed in 1912, called "The Visitor." It contains 211 pages of both lecture and lesson form, two articles from the pen of our deceased sister in Christ, Elizabeth A. Reed—one on "Evidences of the Resurrection of Christ" and the other on "Seven Victories." Both her articles are unexcelled in their masterly presentation of truth for the unconverted and for spiritual encouragement for the Christian.

The second "Visitor," 180 pages, was pubpen of Sr. Reed, Bro. Reed, and Sr. Wince, all now waiting in the silent grave for their Master's call.

If you, like myself, cannot "Go," why not send out these books? They will serve not only for evangels of the gospel, but for teaching the young the foundations of our faith, and to help them meet the infidelity of our

Reviews Prepared by Mary A. Gesin

Bible Pictures and What They Teach Us. In this volume are found 400 pictures (in black and white) illustrating the entire Bible, with descriptions in easy words written by Charles Foster. All children love pictures and impressions made by them often are more lasting than words. This beautifully bound book of more than 300 pages is suitable for a wide range of readers, for the explanation following each picture is simple enough for young children to understand and yet interesting for older ones as well. Bible names and events for older ones as well. Bible names and events become as familiar as the children's own friends. The author thus expresses his purpose in planning the book: "It is hoped, by observing in the accounts given how good is rewarded and evil punished, that the youthful mind may be trained to look up to God as noticing and reconvening our every extraction.

naind may be trained to look up to God as noticing and recompensing our every action and overruling all things."

The pictures illustrating the life of Abraham, Joseph, Moses, and David are particularly interesting. Those depicting the life and work of Christ are the most beautiful in the book, many of them being copies of famous paintings. The reproduction of the well-known painting by Hoffman, "Jesus and the Children," will be loved by every child who is fortunate enough to receive this book for a gift.

Standard Bible Story Readers by Lillie A. Faris. These may be had in books one to six, each one suitable for children of the ages of 2 the first reader, Book 6 the fifth reader. These are small books of 125 to 200 pages, but each contains many beautifully colored pictures, as well as poems and songs with nasic. Sturdily bound in blue, one of these books will be a joy to all through the year to the child who finds it among his girts at Christmas time.

Dr. E. H. Bean, well-known Sunday school worker of Columbus, Ohio, says, "I am eager to tell you that in bringing out these books, I think you have accomplished a great work for al' time. The illustrations are so profuse, so very appropriate to the text, the tinting so delicate and idealistic, that, while I am an adult, I find them very inspiring. But the illustrations, delightful as they are, would lose their value were it not for the elevated thought ef the text."

"Home, Sweet Home"

Provided by the love and sympathy of the entire brotherhood of the Church of God, Golden Rule Home assures to the members of its Family the comfort, security, and solicitous care which the word "home" always suggests.

Here the anxieties of earlier and more active life are laid aside forever. No threat of eviction for non-payment of rent or taxes or other indebtedness troubles the hearts of the residents of Golden Rule Home!

No doctor or hospital bills, no grocery, coal, or light bills to be met the first of the month, bring fear to the minds of the Golden Rule Home Family!

All such obligations and burdens are taken from the shoulders of these older ones immediately upon their entrance into the Home and are carried thereafter by the Golden Rule Home itself, which is amply able to bear the load on their behalf.

A hearty Christian welcome awaits all who seek the protection and lifelong support the Home provides.

Joy to the World

By Mary A. Gesin

"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

Busy times were those! The great world passed by in a neverending procession. Down the smooth Roman highway caravan after caravan moved along in a colorful parade from Damascus to the sea.

The commerce of the East must be carried over the blue Mediterranean. Wealthy merchants, intent on garnering greater wealth, passed along in their cushioned litters. Awkward camels, burdened with silks from Damascus, spices from Arabia, jewels from Greece, silently traversed that great paved road of centuries ago.

Roman soldiers, their shining helmets and bright spears flashing in the brighter sunlight, must be transported to the farthest confines of Roman territory. Fine Arabian horses, chariots of brass—all the warlike implements needed to maintain peace—these, too, poured forth their dazzling display.

The splendor and power of Rome must be enhanced. This was the day of the great Augustus Cæsar, master of many kings!

On a hill above the sleepy village of Nazareth, quietness reigned. Here, perhaps, often a man and a maid rested while they talked of the things uppermost in their minds. Here they could see far below them the crowded highway, visible and yet apart from the stillness of their daily lives. Here they spoke in the hushed evening hours of many things that they must do in preparation for a great event, an event apparently foreign to Roman activity.

A look of beauty, both an outward and an inward beauty, adorned this simply clad maid of Nazareth. Her hair was touched with gold in the bright sunlight, her skin was fair and smooth, her deep blue eyes invited confidence and trust, though at times they were questioning, troubled with a strange anxiety. For this was Mary, of the royal lineage of David.

To her an angel had appeared, the angel Gabriel, and announced joyful, yet disturbing news. Mary had long been familiar with the words the angel had spoken. She knew that one day the Redeemer was to come to Israel to free her people from the hated Roman oppression. But to (Please turn to page 16)

Good Tidings

Jesus, "horn king," came not "to destroy men's lives, but to save them." His very name, Jesus, advertised His work as sacrificial Lamb, or Savior, His title, Christ, meaning anointed, revealed Him as the "Prince of Peace" to reign as Monarch "upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom . . . with justice . . . for ever." With equal importance prophecy declared Him "wounded for our transgressions" and "the King of glory . . . anointed with the oil of gladness above (his) fellows."

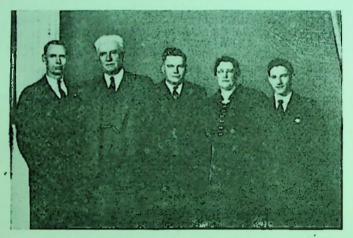

Evaggelizomai

Disregard its pronunciation; marvel at its meaning! This Greek word evaggelizomai is translated in Luke

2:10 with these four words: "I bring good tidings." One can readily see the words "evangelize" and "evangelism" as coming directly from evaggelizomai, and, in turn, a-n-g-e-l can be readily seen as the very core of the word "evangelize."

Now, since this Greek word actually means, "I bring good tidings," it follows that true evangelism cannot ignore the "good tidings" of the angels, who told both Mary and the shepherds that Jesus would be a King to reign in Jerusalem on the throne of David. It further follows that true evangelism cannot be the terrifying eternal-torture doctrine of high pressure revivalists who, to receive applause and good pay, must get many "joiners" in a hurry. By a horrible theology some speakers, unworthy the title of evangelist, have made merchandise out of boys and girls, and infidels out of thinkers like Burbank and Ingersol. Jesus said, "In vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Man's theology is pusillanimous.

Not until Christ is King in Jerusalem will the prayer of all Christendom, "Thy kingdom come," have its answer. Well did the angel say, "He shall be great, . . . and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end" (Luke 1:32, 33).

When Christ Is King

"Why do the heathen rage?" Though "the kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together, against the Lord, and against his anointed," yet "the Lord shall have them in derision." Promised to this Anointed One are the heathen, "and the uttermost parts of the earth for (his) possession." (Psalm 2.)

True was the prophecy,

"All they that see me laugh me to scorn, . . . they pierced my hands and my feet, . . . they part my garments among them." Now the very same David, in the very same Psalm, about the very same person, also prophesied, "The meek shall eat and be satisfied, . . . all the ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the Lord: . . . nations shall worship before thee. For the kingdom is the Lord's: and he is the governor among the nations." (Psalm 22.)

"Thou art fairer than the children of men, . . . the seeptre of thy kingdom is a right sceptre. . . . All thy garments smell of myrrh, and aloes, and cassia, out of the ivory palaces. . . . He is thy Lord . . . worship thou him" (Psalm 45).

"He shall judge . . . with righteousness. . . . In his days shall the righteous flourish; and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth. He shall have dominion . . . unto the ends of the earth. . . . all nations shall serve him. . . . His name shall be continued as long as the sun: . . . all nations shall call him blessed. . . . Let the whole earth be filled with his glory." (Psalm 72.)

Happy Are Ye

By J. R. LeCrone

RECENTLY we visited the toy departments of several large department stores, and gazed with wonder at the exquisite toys and mechanical wonders on display there. Many of them would have been considered as museum pieces a few years ago. The impression that we carried away with us, however, was not one of toys, but rather of children. How bright and happy they were in their confidence that soon the toy of their hearts' desire would be theirs and their happiness would be complete. Apparently the thought that father and mother (or Santa Claus) might not be able to provide what they most desired never entered their minds. And so in their confidence and hope they were filled with joy.

Then, in our mind's eye, we looked into three homes on Christmas morning. In one we saw that the furniture was beautiful and expensive. In one corner of the living room the pampered pet of the family stood before a sumptuous Christmas tree, listlessly examining one expensive toy after another, while his indulgent parents looked on, puzzled that he did not show more enthusiasm over his gifts.

In the second home we saw several children climbing out of their beds and braving the chill of an unheated house that they might look in the stockings that they had so carefully and expectantly hung the night before, only to go creeping sadly back to their beds, disappointed to find their stockings empty. In another room broken-hearted parents, hard put to provide even the bare necessities of life for their family, pretended not to hear, dreading the hour when they must face their disappointed youngsters.

In the third home we saw a happy family group, excitedly opening packages, and all talking at once as they tried on new scarfs and gloves, or played with inexpensive toys-some of which had been made at home. In the background the father and mother beamed upon their family, each thinking of the sacrifices that they had made, and the secrets that they had shared, and how worth while it had been to provide this happiness for such an appreciative family, and occasionally winking back tears of joy when one of their children came forward with a gift carefully wrought out by its own hands or bought with pennies and nickles carefully saved over a period of many weeks. As they raised their voices in a carol of praise one could sense a joy and completeness of love that fairly radiated the "peace on earth, good will toward men" of which they so enthusiastically sang.

As we meditated upon these three pictures, our thoughts turned to our all-wise heavenly Father, and the gifts that He, on that first Christmas morning when the angels sang their carols of joy, provided for His children. Which of the three pictures considered will be the most nearly resembled when the time comes for His children to receive those gifts in their fullness?

God, in His wisdom, knows that unsought-after and unworked-for gifts are likely to go unappreciated and unused. Therefore He provided that His children must seek after and sacrifice for His marvelous gifts. He promises "to them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honour and immortality, eternal life" (Rom. 2:7). Paul recognized this same principle when he said, "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service" (Rom. 12:1). God will not bestow His gifts where they are neither appreciated nor wanted.

As to His ability to provide for His children, there can be no doubt. "The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein" (Psalm 24:1). Yet, because He knew that gifts that occasion no sacrifice, and will never be missed, express no love, He sacrificed that which was nearest and dearest to Him in order to purchase a gift without which all other gifts are empty mockeries for His children. "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John 3:16).

What a glorious privilege to be a child of God! "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God" (1 John 3:1). "And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together" (Rom. 8:17).

So we, the children of God, like the children of men whom we observed in the toy departments, are happy in that which we do not as yet possess. We are not happy because we do not yet possess the health and perfection that God has promised His children an eternity to enjoy, but because our Father in whom we have the utmost confidence, and who cannot fail, has promised them to us. We are happy because they will soon be ours.

Jesus must have had some such thought as this in mind when He uttered the famous Beatitudes. "Happy are they that mourn," not because they mourn, but because of the blessed assurance that "they shall be comforted." "Happy are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake," not because they are persecuted, but because they know that they shall soon possess "the kingdom of heaven."

If we are the children of God, we are of all men most blessed and most happy. We have a loving Father, eternal in the heavens to provide for us the things needful for our happiness, brethren to whom the first law of life is love with whom to share them, and (Please turn to page 15)

"The Elders
Send Greeting unto the Brethren"
(Acts 15:23)

To ALL our friends and brethren we send Christmas greetings, and pray you health, happiness, and Christian success throughout the coming year.

Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Magaw and Family, 109 S. 7th St., Oregon, Ill.

May the excellent joy of renewed fellowship with the Savior be yours this Christmas and the whole year through.

Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Krogh, Jr.,

409 S. Dudley St., Macomb, Ill.

To ALL our brothers and sisters everywhere, greetings: Peace, amid all of today's confusion and turmoil, peace and a sure confidence in tomorrow's perfect joy, these are the true Christian's heritage today. And may He who only can give you that peace, be with you and abide forever.

Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Jones and Delbert, Eagle Grove, Iowa.

THE world at this time of year endeavors to honor the Christ; it is our desire to honor Him each day of our lives. Let us endeavor to understand and realize the truth concerning Him, and may He help all of us to be of greater service to God throughout the coming days.

Bro. and Sr. Lyle Rankin, Cashmere, Wash.

No words of my own can so well express my season's greetings as these of John: "Beloved, I wish above all things that thou mayest prosper and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth. For I rejoiced greatly, when the brethren came and testified of the truth that is in thee, even as thou walkest in the truth" (3 John 2, 3). I wish also to add my prayer for more harmony and greater love among the brethren, which, as accomplished, will show to the world that we are true disciples of Christ. (John 13:35).

D. G. Harvey, 907 S. Waugh St., Kokomo, Ind. NEARLY two thousand years have passed since the angel of the Lord said, "Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." Now we wish to join with those who are proclaiming these "glad tidings" in thanking God for His "Unspeakable Gift," and extending the season's greetings to all of the faith.

Mr. and Mrs. Grover Gordon, Springfield, Ohio, Rt. 2.

To ALL our companions in the love of Christ:

"May your heart receive the message which at every Christmas rings, May your life know every blessing which this festive season brings:
May you share its joy and bounty as gifts from One divine,
And His star of hope and guidance brightly on your pathway shine."

"Sing unto the Lord a new song" (Isaiah 42:10).
Mr. and Mrs. John Denchfield,
910-10th Ave. S., St. Cloud, Minn.

Not only in memorial of the first advent of our Lord, but also in glad anticipation of His soon second coming do the undersigned extend Christmas greetings and heartiest wishes to the readers of The Herald, praying them to diligently draw ever closer to Him whom to know aright is life everlasting.

Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Austin, 5439 Ohio St., Chicago, Ill.

MAY we be drawn closer to our Savior this Christmas season. Wishing the members of THE HERALD office and the readers a Merry Christmas and Happy New Year.

Wilsie J. McKnight, Ripley, Ill. "GLORY to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." Thus sang the angels at Jesus' birth. As we commemorate that birth may we have "the peace of God, which passeth all understanding," and may we be ever looking forward to Christ's second coming, when permanent peace will be established.

Gerald L. Cooper, Eden Valley, Minn.

"IT is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord." Many in other parts of the world are suffering untold hardships and privation. It seems the reason is that this nation has, in a measure, known the great teachings of Jesus. Let us praise God more than ever before as we celebrate again His coming to this world, for we know this same Jesus shall soon come again.

C. E. Lapp and Family, 41-31st Ave. N., St. Cloud, Minn.

MERRY CHRISTMAS! The writer and family wish to express to our brothers and sisters throughout this broad land a very hearty Merry Christmas. Our earnest wish is that the season may be an especially happy one because of a deep roalization that our Savior is coming soon. May we be kept worthy to meet Him in that glad day.

F. E. Siple and Family, 140 Celia St., S. E., Grand Rapids, Mich.

Christian greetings to all the household of faith, this yuletide season. As I look over the field in general, it seems to me the church has made decided progress in the past year. New churches have been built, old ones remodeled or repaired, two congregation bought churches already built, the Gospel Trumpet is revived and greatly improved, a new congregation is organized in the Northwest, and there are many other indications of an awakened condition among the brethren that should stimulate to still greater zeal. May the coming year witness a work with every shoulder to the wheel, no jealousies, no faultfinding, no hobby riding, but an ever-increasing love for the truth and its promotion unto the coming of our Lord, is my prayer.

Emma C. Railsback, 1020 S. Burlington Ave., Los Angeles, Calif.

WE ARE glad of the privilege of again sending the season's greetings to our brethren. We haven't wished you a Merry Christmas, because of the terrible condition of God's ancient people, but it can be a joyous one, if we are daily expecting our blessed Lord.

Mr. and Mrs. James A. Patrick, Ashland, Ohio.

As we approach the Christmas season, I sincerely wish for every brother and sister a full measure of God's abounding grace, and that it will fill your hearts to overflowing with joy, and during the coming year many of His choicest blessings will be your portion.

T. A. Drinkard, Handley, Texas. MERRY Christmas and a happy and prosperous new year to everybody.

L. E. Conner, 610 Brinton Ave., Dixon, Ill.

To THE Brethren Scattered Abroad, Greeting: May the memory of our Savior's birth inspire us to renewed interest in His glorious return, and incite us to greater zeal in His service.

G. E. Marsh, 3514 Oakley Ave., S. W., Grand Rapids, Mich.

IN TAKING advantage of the generous offer of The Res-TITUTION HERALD we extend to the Christian brethren everywhere our most sincere good wishes for a Christmas season filled with godly happiness and a new year full of joyful anticipation of the soon coming of Jesus.

> Elder and Mrs. J. R. LeCrone, Woodstock, Va., Rt. 1.

Greetings to those of the household of faith in distant climes, in cities, towns, and hamlets of our homeland, on farms, by running streams or quiet lakes, beside the restless sea, on hill or dale or meadow, in homes where the fuller light has shined—to all these places where are happy Christian brethren we send our good wishes, our benison of peace.

The Pennellwood Church of God, Grand Rapids, Michigan.

WE extend to all our Christian greetings at this Christmas time. "May the God of all grace, who hath called us unto his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered a while, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you" (1 Peter 5:10).

Mr. and Mrs. Paul C. Johnson and Family, Oregon, Ill.

CHRISTMAS THOUGHTS

By Mary E. Hatch

CHRISTMAS is the day that all the Christian world celebrates as the birthday of our Savior Jesus Christ. Many centuries before His birth Jehovah God promised Him as the "seed" of the woman. His birth is fully told in Matthew 1:18-21, where it says that Mary should "bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name JESUS: for he shall save his people from their sins."

All of this, His first coming, is now in the past. Most interesting now is Christ's second coming. In His last message to the disciples He promised, "I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also" (John 14:3). This is our faith. For this we pray, "Come, Lord Jesus," in response to His words, "Surely I come quickly." (See Rev. 22:20.)

Christmas and God's Feast Days

By F. L. Austin

THE season for the expression of good will by people generally is again adorning our homes and streets and mails with holly and evergreen and best Christmas wishes. Well it is, that it is so. In spite of all the spirit of commercialism and the spirit of carnal rivalry, still there remains a sense in which attention of old and young is brought to focus upon the Son of God with abiding emphasis. May the focus upon the Son of God with abiding emphasis. May the latter increase more and more unto the perfect day.

Christmas means Mass, or Feast, of Christ. There is no passage in the Bible authorizing its observance, or indicating— either directly or by computation—that December 25 was the birthday of our Lord. According to Encyclopedia Britannica the earliest literary reference to the day of His birth-and that is stated to be of doubtful authenticity-was some two hundred years later. The same authority states, however, that in the third and fourth centuries several different dates were presented with claims for recognition. Among them were January 6, March 28, May 20, December 25. All could not be correct. Eventually December 25 came to be the generally recognized date. In the beginning the early church seems to have had little or no thought of the date of Jesus' birth unless, possibly, they had common knowledge of that which Luke later included in his record in chapter one, and which may have been regarded as all-sufficient. For

In Luke 1:5 the "certain priest named Zacharias" is stated as being "of the course of Abia." Now 1 Chronicles 24 tells of the "divisions of the sons of Aaron" into twentyfour groups or courses. Verse 5 says: "Thus were they divided by lot, one sort with another; for the governors of the sanctuary, ... "; while verses 7 and 10 state: "The first lot came forth to Jehoiarib, . . . the eighth to Abijah." The Jewish historian, Flavius Josephus, who lived supposedly from about 37 A.D. to 95 A.D., in referring to the division of the priesthood, writes, in harmony with 1 Chronicles 24:6: "The courses were distributed by lot, in the presence of David, and Zadok, . . . and all the rulers." He then adds, "This partition remains unto this day." He also states that each "course should minister to God eight days, from sabbath to sabbath." So, Abia, of Luke 1:5 (which was Abijah of the Old Testament) was of the eighth priestly course.

Both Lightfoot and Bullinger—two highly respected students of Biblical data—explain that the priestly courses served in consecutive turn, from sabbath to sabbath, excepting that on each of the three great annual feasts, as recorded in Exodus 23:14, ff.; 34:23; Deuteronomy 16:16, all of the courses united in service. This, because of the greatly increased amount of labor placed upon them when "all the men children" of all the tribes appeared "before the Lord" in Jerusalem. Then, following the feast, but not counting the week of the feast, the courses resumed their orderly sequence. They further explain that course number one began with sabbath following Passover week.

Now, upon the basis of the foregoing, some years ago Bullinger computed from the statements of Luke 1:8-13, 23, 24, 26-36, and others, that Jesus was born upon the first day of the Feast of Tabernacles.

Should this conclusion be found to be accurate, what additional meaning there would seem to be in such as the above texts of Exodus and Deuteronomy.

THREE GREAT FEASTS

Three special annual feasts God appointed for Israel. At each of these all men of Israel were commanded to be present, yearly. Distant from Jerusalem might be the residence—but, at Jerusalem must they be present at these feasts.

What did it all mean? Did our God merely hunger for human praise and acclaim? No, no. God forbid any should thus think of Him.

Passover, the Feast of Unleavened Bread, was the annual commemoration of that Egyptian opposition to God which made necessary such punishment as the slaying of the first-born. God, however, preserved the first-born of Israel to an exodus deliverance.

But, true as that was, Passover Feast was also much more. Prophetically it pointed to the Lamb of God. It was at the Feast of Passover that the "great city" of man's cruel system—"which," reads Revelation 11:8, "spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified"—that the Lamb of God became our Passover that was "sacrificed," according to 1 Corinthians 5:7, "for us." But, upon the morning after, there was a new exodus—a new deliverance. For He was raised out of death and became, by the reading of Colossians 1:18, "the first-born from the dead." Passover pointed forward to Christ's death, and to His birth as "the firstborn of every creature." He was the true "sheaf of the firstfruits" waved before the Lord on the morrow after Passover.

Pentecost, "the feast of weeks," fifty days after Passover, was also true in fact. But it, too, held a secret prophecy which was fulfilled ten days after Christ's ascension, when it became the day of the evidencing of the outpouring of God's "spirit upon all flesh" that obeyed God's voice in His Son. Pentecost was the second of the three annual feasts.

With the fulfilled history of these two feasts in mind, how the writer's life was thrilled some twenty years or more ago when he first saw Biblical indication that the third great feast, Tabernacles, pointed to Christ—even to His birth. Surely, he thought, those feasts, while they were all real historic facts, were, at the same time, secret prophecies, even "time" prophecies, relative to the promised Messiah.

And now comes that much known mathematical and astronomical scientist of England, David Davidson, the highest authority to date in pyramid studies, with the illustrated information that for centuries past the Pyramid of Gizeh has been holding an index finger, as it were, pointed directly at the first day of the Feast of Tabernacles of the year 4 B. C. The Pyramid says nothing. It just indicates October 5, 3996 A. M., which was the first of the Feast of Tabernacles of that year, just as it also signifies something of great Israelitish importance to have taken place on April 5 of the year and day of Christ's resurrection.

Indicated by Biblical texts and numerics, and corroborated by the mathematics in the geometric dimensions of the Pyramid's solid masonry, the birth of our Lord seems evidently to have been on the first day of the Feast of Tabernacles in the year of His birth.

Let us join with the Christian world in the merry Feast of Christ on the approaching Christmas Day. Let us, in our individual thoughts, give to it all the meaning and significance belonging to the real anniversary of His birth.

But, as the God-given Feast Days return from year to year, let us ever increase our knowledge of their deeper meaning. For —

Not only did they foretell of Christ in His first advent, but they also evidently mirror much relating to His second advent, and the events and associations connected therewith.

"Unto Us a Child Is Born"

By Cecil A. Smead

"For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder" (Isaiah 9:6).

"A CHILD is born!" "A child is born!" "A child is born!" Over and over this announcement is made. Always it's important news. Visit any hospital. Look at the rows of mask-like faces, like so many little Buddhas. What lies dormant there in those baskets?

At first, life is very serious. There is no time for humor in those uncompromising demands for the necessities of life. But very soon the baby learns to smile. He takes on new powers, becomes an active member of society, takes his place in the world of human beings. What will it be, for good or for evil, for glory or for shame?

A lady told us she just loves those stories in the gurglings and coos of the tiny babe. She doesn't understand them, but knows they must be good stories because a baby doesn't know anything different. How shocking, then, to see in those sweet little faces, the faces of future murderers, dictators, and God-haters! Or, how wonderful to see in them future friends of God, men after God's own heart, future joint-heirs in the kingdom of God, associating with the highest glory of ages!

"A child is born!" Oh, it's an extremely important announcement.

"Unto us a child is born" (Isa. 9:6). Bursting upon the bloody history of man, "garments rolled in blood... burning and fuel of fire" (v. 5), comes this oft-given, but pregnant with possibilities, announcement. There is new hope!

This child is born, not alone unto parents, relatives, community, or nation, but "unto us." He belongs to the whole world, whosoever is sick of the sinfulness and misery of Man's Day, and longs for the coming of the Lord's Day. For the passage before us carries that little Child on from glory to glory until all the earth is filled with the wonderful fruits of His life. (Isa. 9:6, 7.)

Although this little Babe looked and felt and acted like all other little babies must of necessity do in order to live at all, there was one great difference. It was in His parentage. And where other little babies start out pure and sweet, and acquire the mud of more or less sinfulness as they travel along the muddy road of this mortal life, this little Babe remained pure. Not that He did not travel the road of other men, for He did, only the situations in life that tore down the character of other men, became instruments in His hands to please God. He was the direct creation of God. The word went forth from the Father, power overshadowed the Virgin Mary, in her body lodged the Seed placed there by divine will, and it came to pass, "God sent forth his Son, made of a woman" (Gal. 4:4).

"A child is born!" This is the outward fact, to be observed by anyone, a fact of history.

"Unto us a son is given!" This is the hidden truth in that Child's life. It is to be known only by those of faith. It is announced in His miraculous conception and birth. It is proclaimed in His baptism. It is demonstrated in His holy life. It is evidenced by His signs, miracles, and by the truths that He uttered. It is completely demonstrated by His death on the cross, and is fully proved by His resurrection from the grave. It is finally to be fulfilled by His coming again in power to sit upon the throne of David.

In the Days of Thy Youth

By Lottie E. Young

FEW people in this world are satisfied with their position in it. The rich think if they only had less care and fewer enterprises on their hands they would be able to eat and sleep better and, of course, be happier; while the poor are equally sure that if money in large amount was their portion they would give away enough to make everybody happy, to say nothing of the good things they would add to their own lives. The healthy person thinks if he only had time to meditate and study how much wiser he could become; while the person confined to the sick room feels certain he could learn more from nature's books than all he could read in his room, even though time is unlimited.

And so it is with young and old: the former think if they were only grown up and could do as they liked, what large places they would fill in the world; while those of more mature years sigh for the carefree life of the children. But one and all of us can be assured that we are occupying just the very best places in this world of ours, and it is our duty to make such good use of the talents God has given every one of us that age may bring no sorrow with it for wasted time.

The Bible makes mention of several children who found favor in the eyes of God; perhaps they were no brighter than ordinary children, but they followed the advice given in the verses: "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth," and "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." It is to these children that I call your attention as showing that, though small and insignificant in the eyes of the world not as much influenced by little folk as the present, God could make use of them.

Suppose the girl Miriam, sister of the baby Moses, had not been faithful to her trust when her mother told her to watch the basket in which the tiny brother was sleeping, but had grown tired and wandered away and so did not see the Egyptian princess who adopted the baby! She obeyed her mother's voice, however, and when the princess asked for a nurse was quick-witted enough to recommend their mother. So the little boy was brought up in the Hebrew faith and, when he became a man, recognized the fact that he was a brother to those who were greatly persecuted. The name of Moses has come down to us in Biblical history as one of the greatest, and the Hebrews of Jesus' day boasted openly that they were disciples of Moses, and desired nothing more.

We read in chapter five of second Kings, that Naaman, captain of the host of the king of Syria, had brought a little girl captive from the land of Israel to wait upon his wife. Now this Naaman, though a mighty man in his land, was a leper, and death was his sure portion if one could not be found to cure the disease, the most loathsome known. Undoubtedly many remedies had been tried, but all had failed. Then this little girl, feeling sorry for her master, and without any of the revengeful feelings most of us might have cherished, said, "Oh, if he would only go to the prophet, Elisha, I know he could sure him." Finally Naaman, willing to try anything, went to Elisha, and although at first he was angry at the Prophet's advice, after persuasion he did dip seven times in the River Jordan, as he was told to do, and we read that his flesh became as the flesh of a little child. So this little captive, by full belief in the God of her father and mother, though among idolaters, did the best she could as a child, without waiting to grow larger, and God honored her faith.

Daniel is best known as a man when his faith was tested in many ways, but his bravery in the den of lions was equaled when as a little prisoner he dared to defy the great king, Nebuchadnezzar, by refusing to eat of the meat, or drink of the wine which he had been taught by his parents would defile him.

The child Samuel, talking with God and ready to do what He commanded, and the youth David, going out to slay the giant, Goliath, the champion of the enemies of Israel, armed only with a sling, but with the words, "In the name of the Lord of hosts," in his mouth, are both familiar figures in the Old Testament.

Turning to the New Testament, the coming of Jesus into the world as a tiny baby, the weakest of all created beings, has forever lifted childhood above the rank it held in the ancient world, where the father could put his children to death if they disobeyed him, and still not transgress the strict terms of the law. The boy Jesus in the temple doing His Father's business is a forerunner of the man who said, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work," and He has glorified labor. Children are often mentioned in the ministration of Jesus on earth, and the boy who gave his lunch to the disciples, making possible the wonderful miracle of Christ feeding the five thousand men and women with two small fishes and a few barley cakes, and probably leading many to believe that "this is indeed the Christ, the Son of the living God," must have been a happy child.

The Great Physician was not above bringing back to life the young daughter of Jairus, and I think the little ones He held in His arms when He said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God," must always have had a tender recollection of that touch and those words.

The lessons to me from this thought are that nothing is too little to be ordered by our Father; nothing too small in which to see His hand; no one so young but what he can speak of the Savior; and nothing too little to be done for Him.

"It is good to be children sometimes, and never better than at Christmas, when its mighty Founder was a child Himself."—Dickens.

SIX WAYS OF GIVING

Careless—Giving something to everything and everybody. Impulsive—Giving without proper consideration and inquiry.

Self-Denying—Saving the cost of luxuries by only using what is actually necessary.

Systematic-Either one tenth, or one fifth, or one half.

Equal—Giving God as much as we spend on ourselves.

Heroic—Limiting our expenses to a certain sum, and giving the rest to God.

We Have Come to See

A Christmas Sketch

By Paul M. Hatch

L ONG, LONG ago in a little Roman province lying in a semi-mountainous region between a Great Sea on the one hand—where gallant ships were wont to set sail for points west, to Egypt, to Athens, to Corinth, to Rome, and where other ships were casting their anchors of a voyage end, and discharging their cargos upon the quays—and on the other hand a barren sandy waste—where ships of the desert came in with their spicy burdens from Damascus, Arabia, Mesopotamia, and the East—a little story comes to us that is marvelous and new and absorbing. Every time that it is read from the pages of Sacred Writ, we become enthralled with its beauty, its simplicity, its sweetness, and its soulful message, which is for all people of every nation.

Let us go back along the path of history to a city, a capital city of this land, beautiful in its situation, nestled on the hill tops and flowing down into the sloping valleys, and observe the happenings thereabout in the fall of an eventful year. It is toward evening and all is industry within the walls. Merchants are hawking the remaining goods of the day's trade, camel boys are bedding down their dromedaries and getting provender for them before the setting of the sun, and preparing to get to rest early for the early start the following morning. Some priests are leisurely gathering up their flowing robes, and greeting each other in the temple courts, while others are preparing the evening oblation. On the hills round about now and then a flock of sheep or goats are seen grazing, with the attendant shepherds near by holding the shepherd crooks and staffs.

As we watch all this bustle and activity of men in their various stations of livelihood, we soon begin to see the shadows lengthen, as the sun descends and color deepens in the valleys round about. The last rays of the sun are beaming eastward, and we observe—if our eyes are sharp—the outline of three solitary riders, swaying on their camel mounts, at the point of the road that tops a mount to the east of the city. Instantly they have disappeared, being swallowed in shadows and the descent of the road. Probably some traders hastening toward the city to get quarters for the night, and to arrange to barter their goods in the morrow's markets.

A light, flickering in the wind, soon appears in the cita del, and soon lesser lights begin to gleam out in the semi-darkness. Upon the battlements and protecting walls of the city solitary figures of men are seen to begin pacing slowly back and forth. Occasionally their breastplates reflect a gleam from the lights, for the first watch of Roman soldiers has been set for the night.

The Joppa Gate, for the city is Jerusalem, is now being closed, and the portcullis is drawing up. Any tardy way-farer will now have to demand entrance by a shout, and be summarily brought before the commander of the watch before the huge wooden gate will be lowered to admit the camels and riders into the city. Inside the city every man is now taking up his night's work, or he is homeward bound to his humble dwelling to greet his faithful wife who has prepared the evening meal. Soon he will be there, and thanks will be given for God's mercy and care for the day as the meal is eaten, for these are devout men and women who truly try to be as the priests advise and repeat out of the scripture scrolls.

Yes, this is a scene in this city, happening in any day. Just ordinary happenings, taking place without incident day after day! However, as each one paced his way homeward, absorbed in his thoughts, in all probability he had glanced at the star spangled heavens, and the Psalm had entered his mind that "the heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handiwork." But had they seen any new star or strange light in the sky that arrested their attention? Evidently not. Nothing was unusual about the heavens.

About this time a shout goes up at the Joppa Gate, and the answering call comes from the citadel. The watch hurries down to see who the late comers are. After being satisfied that all is well, and that only three men with their camel mounts are before the gate, the drawbridge comes

The Life of Christ

By Mrs. William Stine

"And the angel said unto them, Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David, a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord" (Luke 2:10, 11).

AS WE read the story of Christ's birth, let us try to see in our minds a picture of two weary travelers, a man and his wife, entering the little town of Bethlehem to pay their taxes. They have journeyed many miles from Nazareth in Galilee, and are inquiring at the inn for a night's lodging. They find the inn already crowded, and turn away to look elsewhere. The wife must have a place to rest, being very great with child, and about to be delivered. A little stable in the country near by affords a refuge.

Leaving them preparing to sleep on the hay, we go out into the starry night. On the hillside we see the shepherds watching their flocks. Everything is peacefully quiet, when suddenly an angel of God stands before the shepherds. A blinding light appears around them, and they are very much afraid. The angel assures them he brings only good tidings of Christ's birth in Bethlehem; that they will find the Babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger. A host of angels is now by the side of the messenger, praising God and saying, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." This glorious news is confirmed by the shepherds to everyone they meet.

We now visit the court of King Herod, and hear wise men inquiring about the One who is born to be King of the Jews. They tell about a star which they have followed, and that they wish to worship the child. Herod is troubled with this bit of news. He demands of his chief priests and scribes where the Child is born. The answer he receives is the prophecy of Matthew 2:6: "And thou Bethelehem, in the land of Juda, art not the least among the princes of Juda: for out of thee shall come a Governor, that shall rule my people Israel." Herod is very deceitful in his promise to worship the Child also, if the wise men will only tell him where Christ can be found.

However, the wise men are warned in a dream not to return to Herod. We see them now worshiping at the manger. Their treasures are opened and rich gifts are presented to the baby King.

Upon learning that the wise men have returned home without the information he has asked, King Herod becomes angry, and sends out a decree that all male babies from two years old and under must be put to death so that Christ will come under this sentence. What a horrible sight now greets our eyes! Many innocent babes torn from their mothers' arms and murdered, so that a selfish, wicked man may have his own way. Had he taken into consideration

God's power he would have known that this attempt would fail. At this very moment Mary the mother, and Joseph the stepfather, were fleeing into Egypt with Baby Jesus to escape the sentence which would mean His death. After Herod's death we see the three living in the city of Nazareth. Thus, Christ received the name, Nazarene.

We read in Luke 2:40 that Christ "grew, and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom: and the grace of God was upon Him. We conclude that He was not weak, but strong physically, very intelligent, and beautiful.

At twelve years of age Jesus went with His parents to the annual feast of the Passover at Jerusalem. Returning home they discovered, after a day's journey, that He was not with them. After three days they found Him in the temple at Jerusalem, with the doctors, hearing them and asking questions. When asked concerning His behavior He answered, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" (Luke 2:49). His parents did not understand this statement, but Mary always pondered these things in her heart.

At thirty years of age Jesus asked John the Baptist to baptize Him. John could not understand why a man without sin as Jesus was should come to him for baptism. Christ answered that He should be baptized that all righteousness might be fulfilled. Immediately after baptism the Spirit of God descended upon Christ, and a voice from heaven acclaimed Him to be God's beloved Son.

We read that Jesus was tempted in all things as we are. In the wilderness He fasted forty days and was very hungry. It is no wonder He was tempted, when Satan said, "If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread" (Matt. 4:3). Jesus always turned from His tempters with answers taken from God's Holy Word.

When calling helpers, we find Jesus going to people in the humblest walks of life. His first disciples were Simon and his brother Andrew, James and his brother John, all of whom were fishermen.

While teaching among the people, Christ was so pressed by the multitude that He went up on a mountain. There He taught His disciples the principles of Christian living, which sermon is known as the "Sermon on the Mount," and is recorded in Matthew 5, 6, and 7. Concluding this sermon, He returned to the people, teaching them and performing miracles so that they might believe Him to be the Son of God. Many were converted and baptized.

The Flight Into Egypt

Christ gave to His apostles the power to heal, commanding them to go to the lost sheep of Israel and preach that the kingdom of God was at hand. The scribes and Pharisees were so willingly blind to the teachings of Christ that He taught many things in parables.

The prophecy of Christ's trial was fulfilled as He said, even though His apostles lost faith for a while and forsook Him in His greatest hour of need. Let the crucifixion be pictured again in our minds, as we read, so that we may never forget the price that was paid for our redemption. We see Judas, one of the Twelve Apostles, in hiding, after selling his Master for thirty pieces of silver. Christ is taken by men with swords to the high priest Caiaphas to be tried. No fault can be found. In spite they spit in His face, also slap Him. In the morning He is brought before Pilate, the governor. Pilate is persuaded by his wife to have nothing to do with Christ's death, because she has had a troublesome dream concerning Him. He washes his hands of the whole matter. He has Jesus scourged, and delivers Him to the people to do with Him as they please. They exchange His clothes for a scarlet robe, put a crown of thorns upon His head, and a reed in His right hand, then mock Him.

After this demonstration we follow the ghastly procession to Golgotha, while a man named Simon carries the cross of our Lord. For water, they give Him vinegar to drink. While hanging in agony on the cross His garments are divided by casting lots. Two thieves are crucified, one on either side of Him, to discredit His goodness. In a taunting spirit they put this inscription over His head: "THIS IS JESUS THE KING OF THE JEWS," a truth they would not recognize. Darkness has now covered the earth. The veil of the temple is torn from top to bottom, and at the same time our Lord and Savior dies.

Buried with Him were all the sins of those who are willing to take up their cross and follow Him. This we do by belief in His word, obedience in baptism, and a life of Christian service.

down, and the camels pad their awkward way across it. The commander of the watch observes the men are dusty and show weariness from hard travel. He also notes that they are garbed as men of the East. Appearances of their clothing indicate a station of culture and wealth. The commander asks their desire and they say, "We would see the King." The commander gives them direction to the palace of the governor. The men quarter their camels, and on foot plod up the crooked street to the palace of Herod the King. A runner from the commander has gone before to see Herod to say that wise men from the East had arrived, and desired greatly to see him.

Upon their arrival at the court of the palace the learned travelers are admitted immediately. Herod advances and greets them with a courtly greeting, and inquires closely of their journey and their mission to Jerusalem. To this they say, "Where is he that is born king of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him." Consternation passes over the visage of Herod as he hears these words. Not knowing the import of the inquiry of the wise men, he summons the chief priests, the scribes, and the people of Jerusalem and inquires eagerly, "Where is the Christ to be born?" They say, "Why, in the writing of the prophet Micah, he is to be born in Bethlehem of Judea," for it says, "And thou, Bethlehem, in the land of Juda, art not the least among the princes of Juda; for out of thee shall come a Governor, that shall rule my people Israel."

The wise men immediately desire of Herod the privilege of continuing their journey that night to Bethlehem, but Herod invites them to rest a while, and to give him a fuller explanation of the star and the time it first appeared. He takes them into the private rooms of his palace to be refreshed. There couches are arranged where distinguished guests lie down for rest, and to receive the welcome of the host. Here in their conversation Herod desires that when they have found the Child they let him know where He is that he might also go and worship the Babe. So the wise men departed out of the city with the star leading them onward to the south of Jerusalem, along the road to Bethlehem. Slowly the weary camels make their way along the road. The bells on the bridle reins are tinkling at every step. The light of the star is leading the way and lighting the road as it winds in and out of the mountain defiles.

Presently the lights of Bethlehem appear. The camels, sesnsing that it is journey's end, quicken their pace. A drowsy shepherd, shrouded in his burnoose or cape, wonders at the shadowy forms of camels in the moonlight with equally shadowy forms of the riders, going along the road at such a late hour.

Into the village the wise men ride, following the star until it comes to rest at the stable of the inn. Dismounting rapidly, the wise men see, within the dimly lighted stable, the mother, and the Child lying in a manger. Late visitors are still wondering at the shepherds message who had come and departed earlier in the evening. The wise men fall on their faces, in adoration and worship. With heartfelt exclamation they say in one accord, "We have come to see. Thank God in the highest, for we have seen our lives' desire and the star has led us here. We have beheld the King in His innocent beauty, kindly and good." Opening their traveling bags of treasure, gifts of gold, frankincense, and myrrh are presented to the mother and the Babe.

Off in the distance of the night, sweet and low, comes a sound of song as if an angelic host were singing out in glad refrain, and faintly, it dies away in the hills. The night wears on, for the King, the Christ, our Savior and Lord, is born!

Thus, every year people of every land have come to see, wonder, and adore, and give gifts to one another in commemoration of the glad event of those far-off years in the little town of Bethlehem.

But King Herod came not to see, as he desired, for the wise men returned not to him or Jerusalem, but returned to their native country by another way. THE WEST CHEST CHEST

The Birth of Our Savior

Mary Richardson, Hammond, La.

The story of the birth of Jesus never loses its appeal, no matter how many times it is repeated. For on that night the angels announced the most wonderful news that has been known to man. His birth was proclaimed first, not to great men, but to humble shepherds tending their flocks on the hillside.

The Jews were tiring of their harsh treatment and burdens under the Roman government, and were looking eagerly for the coming of the Messiah, their Redeemer. The shepherds did not hesitate about going to see the child Jesus, but acted promptly because they had faith in the word of the Lord. Everything else was forgotten, for "they came in haste." This can readily be applied in our liveswe must seek "first the kingdom of God, and his rightcousness" (Matt. 6:33), if we are to find the Lord Jesus Christ. Although the Jews had waited so long for the coming of the Messiah, the news brought by the shepherds seemed too good to be true, and they were filled with doubt and wonder more than faith in the announcement. After the shepherds' wonderful experience they returned to their flocks, with their hearts filled with praise to God for what they had seen and heard.

It was difficult for the shepherds to grasp the significance of the birth of the Savior. Jesus was God's gift to the world in that He was sent to tell men the truth about God and about His own mission among men. He came that men "might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." Many people have a lack of appreciation for this great Gift; they have an indifferent attitude toward it. The way of salvation was clearly depicted in Jesus' birth.

Great men have been born, and achieved a measure of success, but in time they died and were forgotten. No matter what their accomplishments were they are pushed into the background and others take their places. This is not true of the Savior whose birth we celebrate at this season of the year. Nothing can dim the vivid reality of His coming. Although Christ died long ago, the significance of His life and works lives on through the ages. What He accomplished was not to the Jew alone, but to the Gentile alike. The result of His coming and sacrifice was the breaking down of the wall that separated the Jews and Gentiles, and granting to them equality before God (Eph. 2:11-22).

What a wonderful Savior we have in Christ Jesus! He died to redeem us from our sins. He gave His life that we might live! Why not accept Him as your personal Savior, and live acceptably to the Father? Accept God's Word graciously, humbly, and devoutly.

A Star in the East

Leslie Niles, Grand Rapids, Mich.

What was it the wise men saw there high in the Eastern sky? Yes, it was a star, so radiant and beautiful that it awed even them. Then you ask, "Why should they be so interested in just a star?" We answer by pointing you to the scripture: "There shall come a Star out of Jacob, and a sceptre shall rise out of Israel" (Num. 24:17).

Again comes a question, "Who was this Messiah spoken of in prophecy, and what was His mission?" Listen while we tell you a story.

Because of the sinful and hopeless condition of all mankind, God promised a Savior to the world—One who would wipe away all tears and bring peace to the hearts of men. Then a star appeared in the sky guiding the wise men to that lowly manger in Bethlehem, the birthplace of Jesus, of whom the prophets had spoken in ages past.

Today we again approach the season when we celebrate the birthday of Jesus. Let us pause for a moment. It is nighttime, and we gaze into the dark sky above us, just as did those wise men nineteen hundred years ago. What are our thoughts? Do we rejoice with exceeding great joy? Do we worship Him in spirit and thankfulness? Do we bring our gifts before Him just as they did?

No, I think not. The world at large has forgotten why we celebrate this occasion. It has lost the vision and inspiration of that Star in the East. However, there are still those who love Him and want to tell to an unbelieving world those words of old: "For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord" (Luke 2:11).

The Beautiful Gift

What can a mother give her children Greater today than this one great thing-Faith in an old, sweet, beautiful story, A star-a stable-a newborn King? Shining faith in the young lad, Jesus: Lover of high white things was He; Jesus-straight as a Lebanon cedar: Jesus-clean as the winds from the sea. Faith in the young lad come to manhood; Jesus-compassionate, tender, and true-Oh, my children-what more glorious Gift in the world can I give to you? Carry it high like a lamp in the darkness, Hold it for warmth when the day is cold-Keep it for joy when youth goes singing, Clasp it for peace when you are old. What can a mother give her children More than a faith that will not dim? Take it, my dear ones-hold it forever; A lamp for a lifetime—faith in Him.

The Birthday of a King

The ruler had ordered that everyone had to go to the city or town from which his family had come, to be taxed.

Joseph and Mary went from Nazareth in Galilee to Bethlehem, Judea, as they were from the family of David—and David had been born in Bethlehem many years before.

So many people had come to be taxed that Joseph and Mary could find no room in the inn. Mary, therefore, brought forth her first-born Son and wrapped Him, then laid Him in a manger.

There were shepherds out in the country, keeping watch over their flock by night.

Suddenly, the angel of the Lord came to them, and they were afraid. The angel told them he brought them good tidings of great joy for all people, and that they should not be afraid. He told them of the birth of our Savior. Christ the Lord, in Bethlehem. As a sign, he said, "Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling elothes, lying in a manger" (Luke 2:12).

Suddenly, as the angel finished speaking, there was a great number of other angels with him, praising God, and saying, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

As soon as the angels were gone the shepherds went with haste and found Jesus.

The Wise Men

Wise men from the East came to Jerusalem during the days of Herod, who was the king when Jesus was born. They came to find Jesus, for they had seen His star in the East. They were wise, and had read of the coming Savior.

Herod was troubled at their news, and gathered his chief priests together. From them he learned that in our Bibles, in Micah 5:2, that Christ's birth was foretold many, many years ago by that Prophet.

Herod didn't want anyone else to be king, but he told the wise men to let him know when they had found the Christ, so he could go and worship the Child also.

The star went before them and guided them to our Lord. They brought Him gifts suitable for a king.

However, God warned them in a dream that they should not return to Herod, so they went to their country another way.

Modern Wise Men

The baby Jesus, who was born many years ago, was born your Savior and mine.

We can be like the lowly shepherds who were surprised when the angel of the Lord appeared unto them, yet were glad to hear the good tidings and went "with haste" to worship their Lord.

There is another group mentioned. They were the priests of Herod. They knew that Micah had foretold Christ's birth. Do you think they believed it? Why did they, then, do nothing about finding Jesus?

Let us at this season do something about finding our King. Let us draw closer to Him by hearing His word, studying His word, and by prayer.

Scrapbooks

You have a choice of several scenes to draw and color today. The town of Bethlehem, with the tops of the buildings and the star above; the wise men and their camels; or the shepherds with their sheep, make interesting pictures.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

NEW MEMBERS AT GOLDEN RULE HOME

Bro. L. E. Conner, manager of the National Bible Institution and its Golden Rule Home has interesting news for all. The family circle at the Home is growing. He reports that arrangements have been made whereby Mr. and Mrs. G. H. Loudenslager of Washington, D. C., will enter, as residents of the Home, about the first of April, 1939. The present The present members are looking forward with joy for the arrival of these new members.

On December 16, Bro. and Sr. Lewis Romine, caretakers of the Home, motored to Pence, Ind., to get Miss Belle McCandless, who will spend the winter months in the Home. At this writing she is making her first acquaintance with Golden Rule Home.

RESULTS AT KOKOMO, INDIANA

The Church of God at Kokomo, Ind., closed on Friday, Dec. 2, a very successful and beneficial three-weeks' series of meetings conducted by Elder J. W. McLain, Indiana state evan-

Bro. McLain is an enthusiastic worker, with many talents. During the half hour children's service each night, the books of the Bible, many important texts, and songs were memorized. His chart work is so clear that even a small child is able to understand "the things concerning the kingdom of God."

Attendance and interest were excellent, although it was cold and rainy the second week.

The leaders at Kokomo recommend McLain to the brethren everywhere. Visible results of the meetings were six baptisms, all adults: Miss Marie Payne, 807 S. MINNESOTA EVANGELIST'S SCHEDULE

The schedule of regular services each month is as follows: first Sunday at Onamia, second Sunday at Heetor, and the third Sunday at Mora. The remainder of the month, as well as time between Sundays already scheduled, is used, insofar as profitable, by special meetings and study sessions. The missionary outlook is bright for Minnesota.

GEORGE T. RENNARD

George T. Rennard was born in Bridlington, Yorkshire, England, on February 13, 1867, and died at his home on Sunday, Nov. 27. About fifty years ago he left England and came to Toronto, Ontario, and three years later moved to Niagara Falls, N. Y., where he lived the remainder of his life.

Shortly after coming to the Falls he came in touch with the Church of God, whose teachings made an immediate appeal to him as being both reasonable and Biblical, and, with a love for truth, he went forward in obedience-sealing it with baptism at the hands of Bro. Oak-From this new beginning he took an active interest in the work of the church, an interest that grew as the years passed by. His energetic labors contributed much to the life of the church that opened up life to him. He was on the official board for about forty years, and filled his various offices with dignity and faithfulness. To him, official responsibility was a sacred thing. He was never known to shirk his duty or shift his responsibility to another's shoulders. A record of faithfulness will remain to remind us of his work in the Niagara Falls Church of God.

He delighted in singing and blessed those who heard his voice as he magnified the Holy One. Being versatile of speech, and possessed of a liberal knowledge of the Word of God, he could fill the pulpit, conduct a Bible class, or act in any capacity needed by the church. His prayers were filled with gospel meat, and his conversation savored with the Word of God. He fulfilled the office of clder with grace.

For over two years he has been confined to his bed as the result of a stroke. His days were made pleasant by the tender care of his daughter Grace. His last conscious moments before he lapsed into unconsciousness which several days later terminated in death, we spent with him in prayer. In reality, he died in prayer!

He leaves his wife, Elizabeth Ann, and two daughters, Grace Rushton and Elsie Houlihan, and his church as immediate ones to suffer his loss. The writer led a large number of friends in paying homage. C. E. Randall.

Gleanings From the Field

Sr. Martha Sutterfield of Bismarck, Mo., recently fell, breaking her hip, and was for some time confined in a hospital. She has now returned home. She has been very faithful, and, not being yet completely restored in strength, we suggest that brethren write her.

Bro. and Sr. Francis Carpenter, 3705 Ames Ave., Omaha, Neb., have been ill. Bro. Car-penter, confined in a hospital, hopes to be able to return home for Christmas. but recently added to the fold at Omaha, Bro. and Sr. Carpenter have served well in advancing the work there the past year.

Greetings to Sr. George Holly of Dutton, Mich., who is reported ill and confined to her

It has been a pleasure to edit this Christmas issue of The Herald, as so many able writers have assisted with their articles. Thank you, and a Merry Christmas to all.

"I am enjoying The Herald, especially the front page pictures of the various churches, and the pictures of the contributors. It makes one feel acquainted with those he has never met."-Bee Slocum.

He must be working! A recent letter from Bro. M. W. Lyon, pastor of Golden Rule Church of God in Cleveland, Ohio, and who lives on the shore of Lake Erie, was signed: "Yours in the sweat of the brow, Melville."

Bro. and Sr. Lyle Rankin and little son of Cashmere, Wash., accompanied by Bro. Nichols, recently motored across the Cascade Mountains to Puyallup for a visit with Bro. Rankin's "folks," and the brethren of the faith. Bro. Rankin preached for the Puyallup church on Sunday, Dec. 4, using for his subject. "Bread and Water." Bro. Nichols stayed, and may spend much of the winter there.

Sr. Esther Jenkins reports that over seventy attended the Iowa Winter Conference, and that about half of the people came an average distance of seventy miles. The next conference meeting will be held August 22-27, 1939.

Bro. S. J. Lindsay of Tempe, Ariz., writes. "We had three fine audiences at our dedication on Sunday, Dec. 4. There were brethren here from Los Angeles, Riverside, Pomona, Watsonville, Calif., and from El Paso and Newman, Texas, to say nothing of several that came from points between." He further mentions that at a recent funeral, he had in the audience Jews, Catholics, Mormons, and many members of the other churches in Tempe.

Bro. T. A. Drinkard, now ill and bedfast at home, reports having held services at Mullin, Texas, on Sunday, Dec. 11; and that funeral services were held on Monday, Dec. 12, for Bro. Dave Warren of Ater, Texas, who was 82 years of age at the time of death, and who had been a member of the Church of God for some fifty years.

GOLD, AND FRANKINCENSE, AND MYRRH

By M. W. Lyon

If YOU were called upon to choose a gift for the King of kings and present it to Him in person, what would you select? It is interesting to observe the selections of the wise men (it does not say three) who journeyed far to lay their gifts at His feet. Surely nothing but the richest treasures would be worthy, and so we read, "When they had opened their treasures, they presented unto him gifts; gold, and frankincense, and myrrh" (Matt. 2:11).

Gold is the symbol of royalty and of incorruption. It was used lavishly in the tabernacle to line the walls and plate the furniture. The mercy seat in the holy of holies was made of solid gold. Moreover, it has a deep prophetic significance, for when He shall sit upon His throne in the kingdom, "to him shall be given of the gold of Sheba" (Psalm 72:15). It is also mentioned in Psalm 45 as being worn by the queen, and in Revelation as forming the paving material of the Holy City.

Frankincense is the symbol of divinity and of worship. It was an ingredient of the sacred perfume of the tabernacle, used only in worship, was carried by the high priest into the holy of holies once a year, and placed there before the Almighty. It, too, has a prophetic significance, for incense is one of the gifts people will bring Him again in the day of His kingdom. (Isa. 60:6.)

Myrrh is the symbol of anointing and of holiness. It was an ingredient of the holy anointing oil with which were consecrated not only the priests, but all the vessels of the tabernacle, including those in the holy of holies. And when Jesus was taken down from the cross, it was in myrrh that they buried Him. Its mention occurs eight times in the Song of Solomon as delighting the King and His bride in the day of their glory. Both frankincense and myrrh are bitter to the taste, but very sweet to the smell.

All three of these treasures, then, were present in the holy of holies! Gold all over the ark, inside and out, with the mercy seat of pure gold with its cherubim on either end stretching their golden wings over the Presence there; frankincense in the holy perfume that was offered by the priest; myrrh in the sacred anointing oil with which the ark was anointed, and which the priest also bore upon his person. All three are pure, precious, prophetic.

What nobler gifts could the Magi have chosen to bring to Him who is the best and noblest of all mankind? For in these offerings they not only brought rich, rare treasures, but also foreshadowed that future "day for which creation and all its tribes were made" when, with the hallelujah chorus of "ten thousand times ten thousand" throats ringing in His ears, the King shall come to His throne.

And when, this Christmas, we open our gifts to make our offerings to our King, what shall they be? Surely nothing but our best and dearest, for He is worthy of the finest we can give!

A SMALL GIFT FOR A LARGE ONE

By John Mercer

THE twenty-fifth of December, 1938, suggests two miraculous births of our Lord and Master. To be born twice one must inevitably have two birthdays. Our Lord has two, the birth into the natural life and the resurrection birth, and this year they are both commemorated on Sunday.

Those who know Christ realize that no gift we could give Him can equal the gift He has given us. On such an occasion as Christ's two birthdays being commemorated on the same day, should we not give Him all we can. Let us present our bodies as living sacrifices to Him. Even that seems like such a small gift compared to what He has given us, but it is the best we have to offer.

Especially on a great day like this one, we should seek His fellowship. Those who do not know Him will celebrate, but let us who know Him not only celebrate His birthdays, but give Him something.

Christ had two births, but they were not just alike. The second, according to Scripture, was far superior. His first birth was on the same plane as Adam was created on. Christ chose just the opposite, however, on the important question that confronted them both. Christ never sinned, and therefore experienced a second birth, after He had died for Adam's sins and our sins.

This second birth was different from His first birth in many respects. John recorded Christ's exact words on how we might experience the second birth (John 3).

Before we can celebrate one birthday we must be born of father and mother. If we are to celebrate two birthdays, we must be born of water and of the Spirit. As we are born babes of mother and of father, so are we born as babes in Christ. We need easily digested food at first in both cases, till we become stronger.

We pray that our churches might break all records in attendance on this special occasion. Our Christmas Day will be much happier if we put the Lord first.

HAPPY ARE YE

eternity in which to enjoy them. "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ: by whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God. And not only so, but we glory in tribulations also: knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope: and hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us" (Rom. 5:1-5).

Which of the three pictures presented at the beginning of this article do you think most nearly parallels in spirit the scene of the second coming of Jesus and the glorious resurrection foreshadowed "when he ascended up on high, . . . led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men"?

think that she was to be the mother of the Messiah—this was the amazing announcement—mother of God's only begotten Son!

"Hail, thou that art highly favoured, the Lord is with thee: blessed art thou among women . . . Thou shalt bring forth a son, and shalt call his name JESUS. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

Joseph and Mary lived in quiet Nazareth, close to a hundred miles from Bethlehem, whence was to come forth the One that was to be Ruler in Israel! Had not Micah the Prophet foretold it? And as the days and weeks grew into months these two, no doubt, often asked themselves this, and many other perplexing questions. Yet they were content that under God's guidance all things would be well. Of such stuff is faith made!

One day news came that a decree had been sent from Augustus Cæsar that a new tax was to be levied, additional tax on a people already burdened almost to the point of starvation and revolt. A tax to heap more and ever more luxuries upon their sated rulers! Everyone must be enrolled in the tax lists of his own city, by tribes and families.

Unjust though it was, Joseph and Mary bowed to the inevitable, and the long and tedious journey was begun scarcely a week before the time for the great event. Bethlehem was David's city, and Joseph and Mary were of his royal line. Thus does God sometimes use the evil devices of men to bring about His own purposes.

No one in Nazareth, we think, knew, or if they knew, believed, that Mary was chosen to be the mother of their Savior. We think she told none, for she was of the type that "kept these sayings in her heart." Only Joseph believed and accepted the word of the angel, and for that faith he must be commended.

Even so, they arrived at the overcrowded town of Bethlehem barely in time for Joseph to find scanty comfort for the wearied Mary. None among the noisy, clamorous multitudes realized that an event greater than any that had yet touched their feverish lives took place that very night. Impatient, pushing throngs, they had long sighed for some one to arise, shake off the Roman yoke, and free them. The treasured promises to their fathers found their fulfillment at midnight, but of that wondrous blessing all were unmindful. To a heedless, unbelieving world God gave His greatest Gift that night.

Merely a handful of untutored shepherds, beholding the dazzling radiance and hearing the heavenly music, said, "Let us now go unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known to us." And they went in haste to find the Child, and worship at His feet.

With the exception of Elisabeth and Zacharias, and Simeon and Anna, the wise men from afar were the only other ones numbered among those who knew and believed. God's people Israel had forgotten or purposely ignored the promise He had given of a Redcemer, so bowed down were they by oppression. They looked for a king who would take away their burdens, lessen their taxes, give them ease and comfort, a king perhaps of their own blood, or even a Roman. So far had they strayed from the Scriptures.

Busy times are these! The great world passes by in a never-ending procession. Along innumerable highways swift automobiles speed along, often in a race of destruction. The business of the world must be carried on!

Wealth, pleasure, worldly honor—these are the gods of today. They must be served. Every effort must be bent to attain recognition, to find forgetfulness, to realize the pleasures derived from the senses of man. But lo! when once served, man turned from these gods only to seek others less satisfying.

Everywhere we hear the cry going up that finally men will find the solution, and find it by their own wisdom. Philosophy after philosophy has been investigated and experimented with, only to be cast aside as inadequate. By lecture, press, and radio we are advised, counseled, informed, and reformed, but not reassured.

When the world is least expectant, wholly unprepared, utterly indifferent to the ways of God, running "to and fro," the great event of all time will occur. While many may "slumber and sleep" in disbelief, though their minds may be actively devising mischief, the Redeemer of the world will come, seeking His own.

To a heedless, unbelieving world God will again send His Son, the only One through whom the longings of men of all ages can be realized. But this great joy will be found only by those who have prepared themselves for it by faith in God's promises and obedience in following His commands. Even as long ago a few heard the joyful message, believed it, and hastened to behold the fulfillment, just so shall Jesus' second coming be.

"Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh."

Let us not miss that joy!

"UNTO US A CHILD IS BORN"

"And the government shall be upon his shoulder!" Here we have the highest offices of earth conferred upon Him by Almighty God. This is yet future, but just as surely as history tells us the Child was born, even so will this final prophecy come to pass.

What was in the manger? To Almighty God, it was His only begotten Son. To the millions of the redeemed who shall inherit the kingdom and dwell on the earth, it was the "Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace" (Isa. 9:6).

What was in the manger? "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men" (Luke 2:14).

Life or Death

By R. A. Curtis

A VERY important question to settle is that concerning God's disposition of the finally impenitent. It should not be ignored by any person who acknowledges a system of revealed truth as disclosed in the Scriptures. (John 5:39.) Let us lay aside our preconceived notions, and with sincerity of purpose, and honesty of heart seek a solution to the oft-recurring question, "What shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God?" (1 Peter 4:17.)

Stop and think, my friends. Can any person with an endless existence ever come to an "end"? Is it not possible that modern eschatology has made some mistake concerning the nature of the persons to be saved or lost? (Luke 19:10.) A system of salvation to rescue men from the thralldom of sin and the dominion of death cannot be at all adapted to a race of deathless creatures. The question propounded by the Apostle Peter is a plain question, and deserves a plain answer, which the Bible abundantly furnishes in upwards of some two hundred instances, out of which I cite the following:

They "shall be destroyed" (Prov. 13:13).

"He that being often reproved hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy" (Prov. 29:1).

"But the transgressors shall be destroyed together: the end of the wicked shall be cut off" (Psalm 37:38).

"When the wicked spring as the grass, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish; it is that they shall be destroyed for ever" (Psalm 92:7).

"For, behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch' (Mal. 4:1).

"And it shall come to pass, that every soul, which will not hear that prophet (like unto Moses), shall be destroyed from among the people" (Acts 3:23).

"The soul that sinneth, it shall die" (Ezek. 18:20).

"For evildoers shall be cut off: but those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth. For yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be (or exist): yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be. But the meek shall inherit the earth; and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace" (Psalm 37:9-11). For similar corroborative testimony read Proverbs 2:21, 22 and Obadiah 16.

I am glad that God's Word assures us that good and evil will not run in parallel lines forever.

"Truth forever on the scaffold; wrong forever on the throne," will be reversed, and both the Devil and his works will be destroyed. (Heb. 2:14, 15; 1 Cor. 15:21-26; Rev. 20:1-5.)

"Tis only noble to be good,
Kind hearts are more than coronets
And simple faith, than Norman blood."

1939 raps at the door. The stranger insists on coming in. That it is midnight makes no difference. That tasks of the old year are unfinished is of no consideration to our visitor. Time will have her way. Open the door, 1939 is coming in.

Greeting

Like crossing the border between states, all seems the same. There is no blow-out, no barking of earth or sky. The hands on the clock have scarcely moved, the face looks just the same. The moon dips only a notch, the stars shine on in glee, and the early morning air is just as invigorating as ever before. If eternity is from everlasting as well as to everlasting, there is a sense in which we are in it now. In Christian poise we await the slipping of the veil from the face of the unknown visitor.

Virgin

She is as spotless as the falling flakes. The cool of the outside air typically rushes in with our guest. Like "a virtuous woman," 1939 has seen no dissipation yet. "Her price is far above rubies." Let us keep her clean, and "she will do (us) good and not evil all the days of her life."

Vision

As a corollary from Solomon's proverb, "Where there is no vision the people perish," we are sure that where there is vision the people prosper. No great work has yet been done that was not first resolved by its architect. Some have mocked at New Year's resolutions; but mockers are seldom builders. Do any mock the law because it is so often broken?

Let the Church of God stand to the plummet; then make her resolutions. When David determined to build a house for the Lord the temple of Solomon was on its way. We must determine to build, and thus leave a blue print from which our children may yet develop and enrich and beautify the living temple of God, after our days.

With the church having so great a mission, but so despised by the masses, every warm and true blooded Christian should plan for the Lord's work just as devotedly as any man ever planned for his own work when driven by depression to the wall. When men get hungry they eat. When the Church of God hungers and thirsts after righteousness it shall be filled. When we have a mind to work there will be preachers and teachers, new churches, new Sunday schools, new Berean societies, successful evangelism in all directions, cheerful and edifying conferences, sufficient capital, and even winter baptisms. That Christ has not yet returned is proof of further work to be done. His coming draws near. The cry of a John is needed in the wilderness.

Let all brethren, every church, every conference, enter the New Year with prayer, study, and determination to give Christ preeminence in all things. Let executives, pastors, and evangelists convene to plan and resolve.

"Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things" (Phil. 4:8). Sordid thinking is ball and chain to any individual or group. Christian thinking can result only in Christian achievement.

Resolution Prompters

Develop the church-family spirit. Be a brother or a sister to others in the family of God. If you are in your senior years pattern well from Deborah, "a mother in Israel," or from Abraham, "our father."

Uphold the honor of the family. Replace that five-year ill with seventy-times-seven forgiveness, and in return receive the "good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over."

Take an active interest in the business of your church, remembering the zeal of Christ at the age of twelve. Get something done. Don't fuss. Beware of I. Kant.

Volunteer your services. Jesus coaxed none, and your pastor may be in the dilemma of trying to follow Christ's example and of getting you to work with a ready heart.

Determine to work with as well as for others in service to the King.

Remember that Israel cried, "Wherein have we robbed thee?" even at the time she offered the sacrifices of "polluted bread," the "sick," and "blind," and "torn," and "lame." He who would deceive God only fools himself.

Live close to the Lord. Pray every day of this bright New Year. When in private prayer take a minute more. Kneel. Train yourself to be like Christ. Study the meat of the Word. Teach others the gospel. Practice your faith, and you will ascend to a spiritual stratosphere that theoritsts never find.

The Time of the End

By James M. Walkins

A S TOGETHER we undertake a further study in the field of prophecy we are confining ourselves to its historical and racial aspects. For the sake of new thoughts which we may derive thereby, we are departing from the usual interpretation of selected scriptures, but not without copying the texts exactly as they are written, as we apply them to our present-day period.

Previously we have said that it is our thought to apply the visions of Daniel directly to the time of the end, wherein he was told that the visions applied. We further stated that we felt that period began with the World War. It is to this period that we now wish to direct your attention.

We have found it to be generally conceded by prophetic students down through the years that "wind" in prophetic thought indicates the turbulent times of war. The first mention of Daniel to his own vision of chapter 7 is with this thought, "Four winds of the heaven strove upon the great sea" (7:2). The "great sea" indicates the multitude of people. The unusual extent of this trouble is shown in that it reached out from the four winds, or the four corners of the earth.

Inaugurated by this unusual political upheaval, four beasts were to arise. Since the World War there have been only four outstanding governments peculiar to that period, and each has been instituted by its policy of a dictatorial government. They are, in order, Italy, Russia, Turkey, and Germany.

"The first was like a lion, and had eagle's wings: I beheld till the wings thereof were plucked, and it was lifted up from the earth, and made stand upon the feet as a man, and a man's heart was given unto it" (7:4).

I realize that perhaps I differently interpret this beast or nation from what is usually accepted, but in the spirit of study, as an exchange of ideas, I submit my views to you. The lion, while accepted as the symbol of Great Britain, was outstanding only in its application to the Roman Empire, and has been more rightly used as the symbol of Rome.

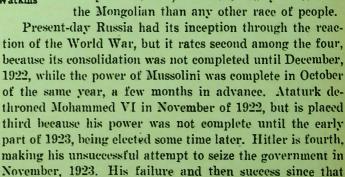

The "cagle's wings" have been used consistently as the symbol of Germany, or the German subjects. Plucking indicates the taking out or the uprooting of something. With this thought we observe that Italy, in 1882 during the reign of Humbert I, entered into the so-called Triple Alliance, linking her with Germany and Austria-Hungary, an alliance that lasted until 1914. Then Italy declared her neutrality, and later declared war on Austria, in May of 1915. The close of the World War found Italy completely freed from the German alliance.

The course of Italy in the affairs of the fourth beast seems to be definitely established. One of the marks we find of those who rule with the fourth beast is the opposition to the Church of Rome. The early years of the present regime in Italy have been marked by constant dissension with the pope, and, although it eased somewhat following the signing of the Lateran Accord in 1929, events of the past week indicate that it may again flare up, even to an unprecedented stage, over the Aryanization program being instituted. This program is especially interesting to watch, as it provides us with an interesting racial alliance which we expect to discuss in greater detail with the fourth beast.

"And behold another beast, a second, like to a bear, and it raised up itself on one side, and it had three ribs in the mouth of it between the teeth of it: and they said thus unto it, Arise, devour much flesh" (7:5).

Ascribing the bear to Russia we find ourselves in possession of material, not for an article—but for a book. The racial descent of Russia is a confusion of many tribes, intermingled perhaps by the thirteenth century invasion of the Mongol tribes who swept a great many of the Tartaric tribes with them in their advance. We would note, however, that essentially it is Slavic, and more nearly allied with the Mongolian than any other race of people.

time is, of course, a matter of current history.

Regarding the three ribs, or rulers, in the mouth of the bear, whose purpose was to devour much flesh, the third now stands in power. They are Kerensky, Lenin, and Stalin—Trotsky being under the control of Lenin.

"After this I beheld, and lo another, like a leopard, which had upon the back of it four wings of a fowl; the beast had also four heads; and dominion was given to it" (7:6).

This beast having the four parts, which we believe to be the four nations now standing in the area of the old Medo-Persian Empire, we have already discussed at some length in our previous discussion of Dictator Ataturk. May we only point out for future (Please turn to page 11)

The Blessed Hope

By Harry Goekler

"Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ."

THE Church of God teaches most firmly and positively the return of Christ to earth, and that this return will be literal, personal, and visible. This doctrine has ever been one of the fundamental truths of the Scriptures, and dates back to the days when Christ was here. It was held as an indispensable belief by the early church.

The hope of the church is always set forth as resting upon the "glorious appearing" at the end of the dispensation of grace. Death is never in any single instance even remotely hinted at as a thing to be desired or hoped for, but rather as an "enemy." (1 Cor. 15:26.)

Some time ago we heard a minister of another denomination preach on the subject of Christ's second coming, and he declared that when He finally did come back to earth it would be to establish or set up a "political kingdom," similar to other such kingdoms as history reveals.

This interpretation surely cannot be correct, because the teaching of Jesus is that He was born to be King and for that purpose He came into the world. (See John 18:37.) He assured His disciples that it was His Father's good pleasure to give them the kingdom. The Prophet Isaiah declared that Jesus was to reign on the throne of His father David forever. The fact that this coming kingdom, for which we are told to pray, will be totally unlike the kingdoms of this world, does not in the least militate against the belief that it will be a literal kingdom, when Christ will reign with His redeemed and immortalized people on the redeemed earth.

This minister declared that the words "second coming" are not found in the Scriptures. We wonder how he could have overlooked the statement of Paul in Hebrews 9:28: "So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."

He then proceeded to divide Christ's return into several comings. The first coming was said to be "His coming after His death in order to make it evident to the disciples that He continued as their ever living Lord." This was not a coming at all, for He had not gone away. He was still on the earth. He said plainly to Mary, "I have not yet ascended to my Father." The next coming referred to was said to be "to the disciples in the person of the Holy Spirit." We certainly cannot by any Scriptural argument make the coming of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost mean the same thing as the glorious coming, nor is there any allusion here to a coming in any sense such as the early Christians would regard as the fulfillment of their hope to see Jesus face to face in His coming glory.

Another "coming" referred to was said to be "His coming to remove His people from this life to the life beyond, taking them to His Father's house." Such teaching is foreign to the New Testament. If Jesus now comes to take His people to His Father's house at the event of death, who came to take them there before Jesus came into the world and died on the cross to redeem them and rose again for their justification? Paul declares that death is an enemy, for he says, "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death" (1 Cor. 15:26).

Death surely would be a friend if it were the avenue into a happier life.

Is death the obedient servant of Christ to assist Him in removing us from this life to His Father's house? Where in the New Testament is death extolled as a thing to be desired or hoped for? Is it not rather that always the return of Christ in His glory, the sounding of the trumpet of God and the voice of the archangel which we are exhorted to look, hope, and even pray for? Looking through the Scriptures, we find that death is called "sleep"; not sleep of the body, merely, but a sleep of the individual—all of that which is understood to comprehend a living, conscious, personal being.

When Jesus said to His disciples, "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth," they thought He was speaking of taking rest in natural sleep, but Jesus said to them plainly, "Lazarus is dead." It was Lazarus who was dead. It was Lazarus who was raised, and Lazarus who came from the tomb; not from the realms of glory, but from the tomb where they had laid him four days before.

The speaker's final coming of the Christ was placed at the end of the age. This is the coming that the Church of God believes and teaches, because it is in harmony with the Word of God. It is the only coming that will fulfill the prophecies, and complete the plan of redemption.

The promise of the angels to the disciples as they stood watching their Leader ascend into heaven comes vividly before us. "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven" (Acts 1:11).

The hope of Paul is clearly expressed in 1 Thessalonians 4:13, and on to the close of the chapter. He speaks of those who have departed this life as asleep. He declares that Christ is coming to raise the dead. He shows that the living saints will be caught up to meet the Lord, as He descends in power and glory. And the grand climax of it all is: "So shall we ever be with the Lord." Truly, His coming is the "blessed hope" of the ages. May you and I be worthy to have a place in that glorious kingdom.

Fullers' Soap

By C. E. Lapp

"And the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, . . . behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap" (Mal. 3:1, 2).

OD speaks through Malachi to give the people some inkling of what to expect of Jesus when He was to be on earth for His first ministry. He is, among other things, likened unto fullers' soap.

Mark 9:3 records the scene of the transfiguration and, describing Jesus, said, "And his raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can white them." A fuller was one who washed clothes, and of course the soap used was the thing that cut the grease and dirt loose, that the water might wash them away. What wouldn't any commercial firm give today to discover a soap that would cut dirt loose, so clothes could be made white as Jesus' clothes at His transfiguration? No fuller or washer on earth could make clothes as white as they appeared there.

When Jesus was on this earth He was to be like fullers' soap, a great cleansing agent. He didn't come to cleanse men outwardly, but to cleanse them of the dirt and filth that forms a crust around the human heart. Nevertheless, we do know that when men are cleansed of their inward sins many times the outward filth also disappears.

Anyone who has ever washed clothes knows it is necessary to combine two things to get them clean, soap and water. Soap is not used alone, neither is water; but the two must be combined in order to obtain satisfactory results.

Jesus was the one who loosed people from their sins. John wrote, "Unto him that loved us, and washed (or loosed, R. V.) us from our sins in his own blood" (Rev. 1:5). Like fullers' soap He has loosed the filth of sin from all those who have received Him.

While men were under the law the sign and rite of circumcision was practiced. It was an outward symbol of cleansing of the flesh that was supposed to have taken place in the heart. "For he is not a Jew, which is one outwardly; neither is that circumcision, which is outward in the flesh: but he is a Jew, which is one inwardly; and circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit, and not of the letter; whose praise is not of men, but of God" (Rom. 2:28, 29).

Every Christian must also put off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ. This is a cutting away of the filth of the flesh nature by a spiritual circumcision not made with hands. Baptism is the outward sign of cleansing to the believer. "Buried with him in baptism, wherein ye are also risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead" (Col. 2:12).

God's operation takes place in the human heart. When He operates on a sinner it is necessary to remove all filth that the sinner might be a fit temple in which His Holy Spirit might dwell. All the little idols in every corner must be thrown on the rubbish heap, and habits and ways of thinking must be changed. When we have completely consecrated ourselves to Jesus and rely entirely on His saving grace, we are loosed from our sins. After the loosing process we are baptized that we might be washed or made clean.

We might say, "He is not a Christian who is one only outwardly; neither is it baptism which is outward on the flesh: but he is a Christian, which is one inwardly; and that is baptism which is a washing of the heart, and a regeneration by the Spirit of God."

When Paul related his conversion to his own people, he told them how Ananias came and told him that he was a chosen vessel of God to witness unto all men what he had seen and heard. And further—"And why tarriest thou? Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord" (Acts 22:16).

Most of us are very much concerned about our physical cleanliness, and if our hands or face are dirty we apply soap and water to wash them clean.

If we are outside of Christ, our sins make us filthy and unclean before God. We should have a greater concern for the inward cleansing than the outward, for only man looks on the outside. God looks on the heart. The words of Ananias are of equal import now to any sinner. "And why tarriest thou? Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord."

Jesus fulfilled the prophecy that spoke of Him as a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap. His power was greater by far than the magic claimed by modern soaps. The sin of doubt and unbelief was dispelled from many a heart because of His miracles. Men were convicted because He, who knew no sin, spoke with authority. Fishermen, doetors, tax collectors, harlots, and thieves turned with sin-laden hearts to Him, and went their way rejoicing in the saving grace of Jesus Christ, God's Son, who cleanses us from all sin.

Surely, Jesus was like fullers' soap-the Great Cleanser!

Saul of Tarsus

By J. E. Adamson

THE story of Saul of Tarsus would be only half told if we did not concern ourselves with the spiritual gift he left us in his many writings to the churches of his time. From his church letters we get an intimate picture of these communities of followers of the Christ in their contact with the mystery of the gospel, and their handicaps from association with the Jews on one hand, and the pagans on the other. Only three religions were in existence at that time in the Roman world, the pagan or Roman-Greek national religion, the Jewish religion, and the Christian religion which was suffering at all times from the overbearing effort of both the former groups to destroy once for all the new thought, the religion inspired of God.

Paul was one apostle prepared by training and by association to be the "wise master builder" to take material from both pagan and Jewish sources and build well on the "foundation which is in Christ." He was "circumcised the eighth day, of the stock of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin, an Hebrew of the Hebrews; as touching the law, a Pharisee." He knew well the entire Jewish story, and could guide the church away from the shoals of Judaism. His early life among the Roman-Greek people is well portrayed in his letters to several churches by his use of synonyms based on the contests in the Olympic games.

It was the effort of the Jews to force on the Gentile converts to Christianity the rite of circumcision. This brought on dissension which resulted in Paul and Barnabas going on a one-hundred-twenty-mile trip to Jerusalem to attend a conference of church leaders to decide the question. The decision was that no burden about the law should be laid on "them, which from among the Gentiles are turned to God: but that we write unto them, that they abstain from pollution of idols, and from fornication, and from things strangled, and from blood." Twenty years later Paul still warned the church in Galatia, where the Jewish teaching had been preached and was coming into practice, that "if ye be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing. For I testify again to every man that is circumcised, that he is a debtor to do the whole law . . . For in Jesus Christ neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision; but faith which worketh by love" (Gal. 5:2-6).

Paul further covered this question, saying, "He that loveth another hath fulfilled the law. For this, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not kill, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Thou shalt not covet; and if there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." Why? Because "love worketh no ill to his neighbour: therefore love is the fulfilling of the law" (Rom. 13:8-10). These words are from one familiar with the ethics and spirit of the law as compared to those who see only the letter of the law. Much of this came to him by revelation from Jesus Christ. As the years passed he was able, more and more, to see the truth, and to say confidently that the "law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death" (Rom. 8:2).

The law had carnal offerings—"if the blood of bulls and goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh: how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?" (Heb. 9:13, 14). With these and other words Paul was able to confound the argument of the Jews.

To pagan people he used arguments against the worship of idols. One such instance is found in his talk on Mars' Hill in the city of Athens (Acts 17:22-34). At the same time he proclaimed his favorite subjects of the resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment through Christ.

These pagans had a belief that the disembodied spirits of men went either to the Elysian fields for glorious reward, or spent eternity in the darkness of Hades, a region under the surface of the earth. The story of the resurrection was in absolute contrast with this idea, hence we find them saying, "He seemeth to be a setter forth of strange gods," because he preached unto them Jesus and the resurrection. It was a new doctrine to the philosophers of Greece. "Some mocked: and others said, "We will hear thee again," and some clave unto him, and believed."

Paul has given us more real information about the resurrection than any other writer in the Bible. He is the only one who sets forth, in words so plain anyone may understand, a list of the foundation principles of the doctrine of Christ which, added to the fact that Jesus Christ "died for our sins according to the scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the scriptures" (1 Cor. 15:3-4), form the foundation on which we must build our Christian faith. These principles of the doctrine of Christ are found in Hebrews 6:1, 2.

Jesus gave us the first definite promise of the resurrection, but He chose Paul to enlarge on, and give it more in detail, such as found in 1 Corinthians 15, where he not only proves the fact of the resurrection, but for the first time divides it into three classes: Christ the first, they that are Christ's at His coming the second time, and the others when Christ shall deliver up the kingdom to the Father. To show that this is no idle theory, John gives the same succession of resurrection when he says, "I saw thrones, and they sat on them, . . . and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished" (Rev. 20: 4, 5).

Paul, in so many ways, set first things first, and showed that the resurrection is of first importance in the gospel of Christ. By resurrection Jesus was "declared to be the Son of God" (Rom. 1:4). Also, Paul said he was "not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation" (Rom. 1:16).

Again he says, "What things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ... that I may win Christ, and be found in him, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith: that I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his suffering, being made conformable unto his death;

if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead" (Phil. 3:7-11).

In another place he tells us that certain gifts are desirable and valuable for the follower of Christ, but adds, "Yet shew I unto you a more excellent way." Then he sets forth the guide for a Christian life based on charity, and closes with "Now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity."

This charity which Paul gives so high a place in Christian life—what makes it so important? It is greater than knowledge, for he says, "Though I have the gift of proph-(Please turn to page 10)

Advent Christian Church vs. Church of God

By S. J. Lindsay

WE HAVE been requested by Church of God leaders for some time to give a statement of differences existing between these two religious bodies as to their cardinal principles of faith. The reason for this is obvious. There must have been a reason for their separate existence, back somewhere in the years that are gone. We have lived a fairly long life, and we have known these two religious bodies since childhood. In all that time, the differences between them have not been softened by any attempt at union.

There must be some outstanding reason for the organization of the body known as the Church of God of the Faith of Abraham. It has been known in different localities as the Age to Come faith; others have known it as a body of Restitutionists. The Church, as an organization, holds firmly that the Bible teaches that the fleshly house of Israel, after a long experience in the furnace of affliction, will be gathered back to their old homeland, Palestine, and that in due time restored Israel will become the head of nations, and no longer the tail. The Advent Christian Church, as a body, rejects this teaching. We say, as a body, for we know individuals among them that now accept this teaching, yet hold their membership with the Advent Christian people.

Another point of difference is found in the teaching regarding what will take place when Jesus returns to this earth. The Church of God maintains that He comes to occupy the restored throne of David in Jerusalem, at which time He will become King over all the earth; and that, under His unerring guidance, the nations will be called upon to turn to the Lord. Instead, the Advent Christian people contend that at the coming of Christ the earth and all that is therein will be burned up, and that for a thousand years the earth will be a smoldering void, at the end of which time a new heaven and a new earth will be brought forth, and that this new earth will be the everlasting abode of rightcous people. In other words, the Church of God teaches future probation to certain of earth in the Age to Come, while the Advent Christian people reject all this.

The Church of God teaches that the work of the coming age is the gospel of the kingdom. It was that which Jesus taught while He was among men.

The further feature of the gospel, the resurrection of Jesus Christ and the resurrection of His saints, is agreed upon by both bodies, but there they divide on what will take place immediately thereafter.

The two bodies differ upon methods and procedure in church work. The eastern bodies of the Advent Christian Church still exercise themselves in altar services for the conversion of sinners, while the Church of God holds strictly to teaching the Word of God and making that the means of turning a sinner's heart to his Maker.

For these two bodies to try to unite with these varying ideas would produce only confusion and continual trouble. We feel that it is far better for us to work in our separate stations to avoid the unpleasantness that is bound to come if an attempt at union should be made. We feel sometimes that if certain of our younger ministers had been properly indoctrinated, there would be less of the attempt at mixing things up. We believe that it is best for us to serve where we may feel free to teach the principles of truth as they exist, without being bound or hampered by any other outside influence.

We are adding our own personal feeling in what may be said from this on in this article. What we are now about to say is that it is far better for us to be true to conscience even though it may not make us popular with any considerable number of people. We would rather preach to half a dozen true blue people who rejoice in the truth as it is in Jesus, than to preach to a large assembly with a muzzle on our mouths. The Advent Christian people would not invite us to come into their assembly to speak openly on these subjects; neither would we invite them to come into our assemblies to speak against them. If they are doing God's will in their direction, why not let them go on unmolested in their way? And if we are filling our place to the glory of God, why not go on doing that way without giving birth to a source of annoyances that must sooner or later cripple the work of both?

Every now and then we see reports which lead us to believe that emotionalism is stressed a great deal, we fear, to the disadvantage of the Word of truth. If I have faithfully brought to bear upon the people the pure Word of God in just as appealing way as I can, why should any other influence be brought to bear to lead people where the Word has not led? We have known people to be converted to the preacher. Others have been converted to those who have coaxed and pleaded with them, even though they knew not God's plan of salvation.

"Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." Many other scriptures might be cited to show our need of staying close to the Word of God. I exhort that we give more time and attention to the study of that Word with a view to preaching it faithfully to the people. It matters not whether the teacher becomes popular or not. The chief concern is to get the Word of God before the people.

That Blessed Hope

By Lottie E. Young

NOT so many years ago the second personal Advent of the Lord Jesus Christ was a discredited subject among many of the established, so-called "orthodox" churches; but now it is a perfectly "safe" subject on which to touch as an introduction to a religious talk. Many have affirmed that this return was in the past, or that the Lord of life comes at death, both of which ideas are out of harmony with the Scriptures. The doctrine of the return of the Savior is a:

Personal Doctrine. At the ascension of Jesus "two men in white apparel" promised that "this same Jesus" would return even as He went away, with hands and feet, a head and body—not an unsubstantial spirit unseen by men, but One "whom every eye shall see."

Primitive Doctrine. It is no new belief, as in the book of Jude we are told the first adventist was Enoch, the seventh from Adam, who prophesied, "Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousands of his saints."

Prophetic Doctrine. It was foretold by worthies of old. Seven hundred fifty years before the Babe was born in Bethlehem, Isaiah told not only of the One who should sit upon the "throne of David" when "of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end," but he also graphically described the "man of sorrows and acquainted with grief" who was "smitten of God and afflicted." Daniel had wonderful visions of the time "when all peoples, nations, and languages should serve him"; while Zechariah foretold the time when "his feet shall stand . . . upon the mount of Olives."

Principal Doctrine. It is a fundamental doctrine of man. There can be no kingdom of God on earth without Christian faith and teaching. It is the "blessed hope" of the church, for without it there is no glorious future for the coming of the King.

Prominent Doctrine. It is mentioned more often in the Old Testament than the first advent of Christ, and in the New Testament it is spoken of three hundred eighteen times. It is the burden of the last prayer in the Bible, where the Apostle John calls longingly, "Come, Lord Jesus," while the hymns, prayers, and sermons of the early church are permeated with the doctrine.

Plain Doctrine. There is no mystery about it; it is stated in the clearest language. Jesus said on the last night before His crucifixion, "If I go away I will come again." None need be in doubt or ignorance concerning this glorious truth.

Perverted Doctrine. It has been denied by many of earth's learned ones. It has been scoffed at, misrepresented, and explained away. Modernism laughs at the thought, and there were some even in the days of the Apostle Peter who said, "Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." To this the answer was given, "The day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night." Unbelief, selfishness, worldly ambition have no use for the doctrine; still it shines forth from the pages of the Book.

Precious Doctrine. It is full of comfort, blessing, encouragement, and hope to the Christian. It gives us something worth while to which to look forward, to live for, and to work for. The thought of His coming fills us with cheer and gladness, for it means deliverance from sin and sorrow, when pain shall be unknown and even death, "the last enemy," shall be conquered forever.

And more than all else, it is a:

Practical Doctrine. It exalts Christ as does no other view of Him. Some day every knee shall bend, and every tongue shall proclaim Him as Lord over all. It magnifies other Bible teaching. There is no other doctrine in the Bible that becomes so great an incentive to sober, rightcous, and godly living right here in this wicked world as that of the second personal coming of Christ.

No one can be a faithful student of the Bible and deny this doctrine. The knowledge of His soon coming should transform our lives and send us forth to be living epistles of the "blessed hope." May God keep us faithful unto the end and soon send back to earth His only beloved Son to be our King.

His Work Before Him

By F. E. Siple

THE words of our title are quoted from Isaiah 62:11, and they offer the key to a correct understanding of that greatest of all coming events—the return of our Lord.

We have just celebrated the birth of Jesus. A large part of the civilized world displayed decorations, and joined in the singing of carols. All this is praiseworthy, and expresses a beautiful sentiment, but the entire value of that first coming of our Savior is lost unless one gets the true picture of why He went away, and why and how He is coming back. Christmas becomes an empty sham unless it points us, not only back to Bethlehem, but forward to the kingdom.

It was a very real and literal Jesus who walked beside the apostles to the Mount of Olives for the events recorded in the first chapter of Acts. His were very literal lips speaking the words of verse 7, "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power." It was a very personal and real man who was "taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight" (v. 9). And the heartache and loneliness felt by those men, left without their leader and friend, were very real.

Imagine, then, the comfort of the words of the angels who appeared at this dramatic moment and said, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."

Though lonely, they now had hope. Though left without a leader they now knew He would return to be their leader again. This was the great hope that burned in the hearts of those faithful men, and which made possible the years of conscientious labor that followed. Always in their cars were ringing the words "shall so come in like manner," and no one could take from them the hope of Jesus again working by their side in helping to solve the problems of old Mother Earth.

Any act to remove the literal from the coming of Christ is an act to spoil the whole picture. It was a very personal Jesus who years ago won friends to Himself and to the gospel of the kingdom. It will be the same personal Jesus who will complete the plan in the years to come.

Referring to this great event of the future, Isaiah says, "His reward is with him." In Revelation 22:12 the same words are also used. Jesus is our life. Since we have no hope of anything between death and the day of Christ's coming we naturally look with great joy to the reward of life which He shall bring to us at that time. But that is not all. Empty belief in a future life has characterized religions of all kinds. True Christianity rises beyond that, and our hope is not simply for life, but for real, literal life among real, literal people, and an opportunity for useful service.

Life, in itself, is not necessarily a blessing. Happiness is found in service, in seeing others happy and helping to make this condition possible. Hence the "reward" which Jesus will have with Him is more than life. It is the plan of organization, the set-up of the kingdom, and the arrangement for positions into which He will put us.

The rest of the statement, "his work before him," is simply an enlargement of the thought. Jesus is coming to do things. The kingdom must be organized. Corrupt politics must be completely removed. The living nations must be taught to know God. Boys and girls must be reared in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Swords must be beaten into plowshares (Micah 4:3), and all things that destroy the happiness of mankind taken away.

This, in part, is Christ's work, and this is the work for which Christians are being called out and prepared today. The inspiration of training and preparing for a task that is greater and more noble than any task ever before allotted to men should spur us to highest degrees of service.

While so many nations are giving evidence of the fact that man cannot properly govern himself, may we find our joy and happiness in service to the One who shall soon come, having "his work before him."

TRY TITHING-TRUST GOD-AND SEE

WHEN any of our churches, or the National Bible Institution, lack funds, it is because of lack of faith on the part of our members; lack of faith in the ability of God to carry out His promises.

He has a remedy—tithing! This is a word that seems to be dreaded by some, when we listen to their arguments as to why they "cannot afford" to tithe. We listen to their insistent profession of their faith in God, in Christ, that they believe absolutely in the Word of God, even to the story of Jonah! But, when we ask them, "You trust God with your life—why are you afraid to trust Him with your pocket-book?" so far, they have given us no answer.

The person who tithes, whether he is able to give much or little, is giving in proportion to every other tither. All are on an equal footing in the sight of God—the widow with her mite, the rich man with his check. The arguments for it are well known; those against it will not stand up,

We offer the tither's challenge: "Try Tithing-Trust God-and See!" Reader, do you dare trust Him? Can you stand the prosperity of God?—Arthur Gilbey.

PERFECTION

By Lyle Rankin

JESUS tells us that if we keep His Word the Father will love us. Now David was a man beloved of his God; therefore we conclude that David kept the Word of the Lord. Though David sinned, when he was corrected of God he realized his evil way, and repented. God has informed us through His Word that we, too, sin; and when we sin we should confess our sins, and the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanses us from all sin. Thereby we are justified, and can be referred to as just persons, walking in uprightness.

Noah was a just man and perfect in his generations. From this we do not understand that he never sinned, but that he kept the ways of God in rightcousness. Because of Noah's uprightness and having found grace in the eyes of God, he was commanded to prepare an ark "to the saving of his house." Being obedient, he was delivered from the flood that came upon the world of the ungodly to destruction.

"Behold, the eye of the Lord is upon them that fear him, upon them that hope in his mercy; to deliver their soul from death, and to keep them alive in famine" (Psalm 33:18, 19).

David says that God's way is perfect: His Word is tried, and that God makes His way perfect. Our way is likewise made perfect, that is, we must keep God's Word (doctrine, law). It "is perfect, converting the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple" (Psalm 19:7). Perfection can only be attained through the wisdom of God. He has commanded us to follow in the footsteps of Jesus, our perfect example, and if we fall, to rise up; for we have a Mediator, our faithful High Priest, who can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities. It was the mind of our Savior to keep and do the Word of God. Even so we are to keep the Word of God if we are to follow our perfect Example, and thereby walk before God with a perfect heart.

Jesus gave a parable to teach the way of perfectness. It is recorded in Luke 8. Some had received the Word, but allowed the cares, riches, and pleasures of this life to choke out the Word. They brought forth no fruit unto perfection. We should seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, not giving ourselves over to temporary cares, riches, and pleasures, which give no promise of eternal life.

Through Paul we learn that charity is the bond (joint band) of perfectness; the love of God, then, is that which holds one up in perfectness. One of the evidences of our having this joint band is in our love for our brothers, and not only love for the brethren, as Jesus tells us to show the love of God in our attitude toward all men. (Matt. 5: 43-48.)

God's love was manifested not only to those who did His bidding, but to the world, in that He sent His beloved Son to be the propitiation for our sins. "Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another" (1 John 4:11). Love is to be without dissimulation. (Rom. 12:9.) Let us have perfect love, for we are commanded to live so that when Jesus comes we may be found of Him in peace, spotless, blameless, and be rewarded in being made perfect like our Master. (2 Peter 3:14; 1 John 3:2).

"A day in thy courts is better than a thousand. I had rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness. . . . The Lord will give grace and glory: no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly" (Psalm 84:10, 11).

eey, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge . . . and have not charity, I am nothing." (Read all of 1 Cor. 13.) Charity is more than faith, for he says, "Though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing." Charity is greater than martyrdom, for he says, "Though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing."

Charity is little understood, but it is the element in character which makes us able to look deeper than the elemental surface into the spiritual character, to overlook the errors and weaknesses of those with whom we come in contact. "Charity suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things, . . . endureth all things. Charity never faileth."

This charity is a power for Christ, because it gives us the will and the courage to admit that "we know in part," and to hope for the time "when that which is perfect is come, (when) that which is in part shall be done away," and to admit that "now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face." "Now," says Paul, "I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known."

Paul also clarified the meaning of baptism to both Jew and pagan, showing that one is in reality "buried with him (Christ) by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life" (Rom. 6:4). Baptism takes on a new meaning to all in Christ, regardless of race or station. (Gal. 3:26-28.)

Paul gives us some of the most beautiful and descriptive portions of the Bible, using the Olympic games in striking illustration. Writing to the church in Corinth, where all were familiar with the strict rules of the games, he says, "Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run, that ye may obtain" (1 Cor. 9:24-27). How they do train for those games! There are no orgies of sin and gluttony. Paul continues, "Every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things." Then, speaking of his Christian struggle, he says, "I therefore so run, not as uncertainly; so fight I, not as one that beateth the air: but I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection: lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway."

Then, appealing to the Greek, there is the beautiful text, "Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God" (Heb. 12:1, 2).

None so well as Paul understood both Jew and Gentile. He was indeed "an Hebrew of the Hebrews," yet a free-born citizen of Rome. He had the necessary approach to convert both Jew and pagan unto Christ, where they were blended together in resurrection faith, in Christian love, and as runners together for the crown of life.

have heard "the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12). We are informed that "they believed," and as a result of that belief "they were baptized, both men and women." That is the divinely appointed way in which they "put on Christ"—by being "baptized into Christ" (Gal. 3:27). "But the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him" (Luke 7:30). "Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone" (James 2:17). Faith and works are to be indissolubly joined together in order to achieve any profit whatever. (James 2:14-16, 26.)

Any person hearing "the glad tidings of the kingdom of God" will, after complying with the terms of heirship himself, want to influence his neighbors to "seek the kingdom of God"; "for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." (Luke 8:1; Matt. 6:33; James 2:5; 2 Peter 1:4-11.) Righteousness is a necessary prerequisite to "enter into the kingdom of heaven." (Matt. 5:20; Heb. 12:14; Rev. 21:7, 8.) The "good tidings of great joy," which the Bible reveals, cannot be circumscribed by a few favored ones "that know the joyful sound." (Luke 2:10, 11; Psalm 89:15, 16.)

"The Lord is good to all: and his tender mercies are over all his works" (Psalm 145:9). Our loving Father has planned, in His "eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord" (Eph. 3:11), that this "good tidings" "shall be to all people" (Luke 2:10), "all families" (Gen. 12:3), and "all the nations of the earth" (Gen. 22:18). "And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely" (Rev. 22:17).

In our building for eternity, a rock foundation is absolutely essential to withstand the "perilous times" "in the last days," through which we are passing. (Matt. 7:24, 25; 2 Tim. 3:1-5.) "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ. Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble; every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is" (1 Cor. 3:11-13).

The test of Christianity can be known by the practical results, or the fruits produced, in the lives of Christ's true followers. "Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles? Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit" (Matt. 7:16-18). "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world" (James 1:27).

Under the benign influence of Christianity, thieves and law violators will "cease to do evil; learn to do well" (Isa. 1:16, 17).

"All honor, then, to that brave heart,
Though poor or rich he be,
Who struggles with the baser part,
Who conquers and is free.

"He may not wear a hero's crown,
Or fill a hero's grave;
But truth will write his name among
The bravest of the brave."

reference that their racial stock is that of the Aryan tribes, originating in the area east of the Caspian Sea.

As we review these beasts, and their places in this period since the World War, we find that they have risen in exactly the prescribed pattern, in the proper order, fulfilling what has been written. More important than all this, is that each has fulfilled its destiny.

Italy, as represented by Mussolini, has passed the peak of its power, favors a racial stock of only pure Aryan people, and now revives an old enmity with the Roman Church. The third of the three prescribed rulers for Russia is now holding a none too secure position against rising opposition in Russia. In Turkey the reign of Ataturk has already ended, while in his place is a man who we feel sure will stand against the opposition of the ruler whose power shall come from the fourth beast as he reaches out to control the world.

What is the outlook? There appears to be only one, the ascendency of the fourth beast is taking place rapidly before our very eyes. The world is rapidly making the last moves for the completion of his power and the final desolation it shall usher in, at least in the European countries. With this in mind we can see no wrong in anticipating in our next article something of the nature of this fourth beast, and the events that appear ready to transpire to bring its formation to completion, and that together we may observe events while the fourth beast rises.

An Unimportant Day?

One of the most unimportant days in the year is December 26. It is then that all the excitement of the holiday season begins to wane, and people begin to once again come into their usual routine of life. I wonder what the thoughts of these people are. Let us peep into their lives for a while, and see if we can find out.

Mrs. Doe is resting, as we look in upon her household, resting from all the duties that have been hers during the last five days. It was wonderful to have all the children home for Christmas, but the children seemed to be extraordinarily active and boisterous this year. At times it seemed that she could scarcely stand to have them around. Her eldest son-in-law did not seem overly pleased with the gift that she and her husband had given to him, but they had done the best they knew how. How were they to know that he abhorred the author of the book they had given him? After all, they weren't made of money, and there were others in the family who had to have gifts also. Oh, well, he would probably get over it, and if he didn't it didn't make much difference. That scarf that her maiden aunt had sent her, though, didn't seem to amount to so very much, and she had sent her aunt such a "nice" set of dishes. What was the use of this Christmas business anyway? About all the good it seemed to do was to make trouble between people, and to wear them out until they were glad when it was over.

In another room, this good lady's husband was wrestling with another, altogether different, problem. Bills, bills, bills! It seemed as if he were surrounded with them. How could they have spent nearly as much money as they had? When one stopped to think, though, buying gifts for so many people did count up fast. There was only one thing to do, and that was to pay the bills, and be more careful another year. Oh! that pain in his stomach made him wish that he hadn't tried to eat as much as his grandson, who was a growing boy with the corresponding appetite. Christmas hadn't seemed very merry to him this year, was his conclusion.

These two people are only the products of our imagination, but they are comparable to millions of others in the United States. After the great holiday is all over they just can't see why such a thing must be. Looking at it from their viewpoint, we cannot understand it either.

Let us be on our way, however, and see what we can find in the household of Brother Smith who lives on the other side of town, near that little church. Mr. Smith looks happy, and not a bit worn out or disgusted like the others we have mentioned. The reason for this is that he has been thinking of the real and true meaning of Christmas. It is true that he gave some much needed things to the poor family across the street, and didn't receive a thing in return. Neither did he expect anything. His thoughts are on the Bible. Wasn't it prophesied in the Good Book that there would be a little baby born in the city of Bethlehem who was destined to be, not only the King of the Jews, but of the world? Yes, he had been reading that only last evening. Also, it was prophesied how His mother was to be blessed of God and become the mother of the future Savior of the world. He thought of how the birth of Jesus proved the veritableness of the Bible. Such things were what occupied the thoughts of this kindly old man.

After all, wasn't Christmas supposed to be the birthday of Jesus? Why not occupy the time in studying about Him? Brother Smith had discovered other things, also. He had found in the Bible that it spoke of another coming of Jesus, not as a babe in a manger, but as a King in great glory. As far as he knew this thing had never come to pass. It seemed to him he had heard a traveling preacher tell about the second coming of Christ, but he had not been taught that in his youth, and was a little skeptical.

Brother Smith had also been taught in his youth to believe every word in the Bible, and as he laboriously read the following words: "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven" (Acts 1:11), he knew that he had discovered a vital truth of the Scriptures. It said plainly that Jesus was coming again! It had said plainly many times in the Scriptures that He was coming the first time, and he believed that—had, in fact, reverently celebrated that first coming only yesterday. If the Bible was true in one part it was true in another!

What to do then? The only thing Brother Smith knew to do was to study further the truths of the Bible. This he did, and found, among other things, that there were signs foretold in the Bible of Jesus' second coming. Yes, he had observed the unrest in the world, but had not connected it with the Scriptures. Suffice it to say here, that Brother Smith, as a result of his study of the Bible on Christmas and the day after, became one of the most ardent teachers of the precious truth of the second coming of Christ.

What are you going to do? Will the day after Christmas give you a let-down, or will it inspire you on to further truth-teaching of the Bible? The general belief of many people that Christmas is the birthday of Christ affords an excellent opportunity to teach the second coming, not only on Christmas, but on the day after, and all through the year. In that way December 26 will not seem so unimportant!

"Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men" (Mark 1:17).

Do You Know?

Another year is nearly over, and a new one about to begin. As you boys and girls read this page, I want you to think first of all about yourselves, then about others.

That is just the opposite of the way we are generally told to think. We know God is first, others second, and ourselves third. However, God cannot be first in our lives unless we pause to study ourselves a while, occasionally.

Have you grown taller in the past year? Did you have to get new clothes because your old ones were getting too tight or too short? You have a mark in your room on the wall, or in the basement so you can see exactly how many inches you have grown this year.

How about your spiritual growth? Do you have as definite checks to tell you exactly how you have grown? Do you have report cards in your Sunday school? They tell you some interesting facts about yourself. Do you know how many times you missed Sunday school last year? Or, how many preaching services you attended?

Have you learned your lessons each week? Do you remember any of the verses you studied, for example, the golden texts? Those are a few of the checks you can make for spiritual growth.

Here are some questions to which you alone can give your correct answers: Have you learned to love God and Jesus better than you ever did before? Do you obey quicker, more willingly? Do you study and pray every day? I hope you have grown ever so much. Then you are ready to turn your thoughts to others.

We Have Found the Christ

Do you know what Peter's brother did when he found Jesus? He saw Him. Then first of all he went to find his brother and told him of Jesus. You, too, have some one you love, to whom you can tell the story of Jesus.

Andrew was not contented to merely tell Simon Peter of the Christ. No! He brought Simon to Jesus. So don't you be satisfied to sit and only talk about our Lord. Take your loved ones to the church services, or by the study of the Bible, help them to see and know our Savior.

Now, do you see why you were asked this time to think of yourself first? You can't help win others unless you are right in God's sight first.

Make it a resolution for this year, to help some one to learn to know Jesus so well that he can shout with gladness as did Andrew, "We have found . . . the Christ."

A Fisher of Men

The Sea of Galilee is called the Lake of Gennesaret in our lesson.

Christ had told Simon he would be called Peter, which meant a rock. Read about it in your lesson. Peter, with some others, was washing their nets. Christ was talking to the crowd of people. They followed Him until He came to the lake shore. There He climbed into Peter's boat and Peter pushed Him out a little from shore. There He sat and taught the people.

After He finished talking He asked Peter to let his net down. Peter told Him that they had worked all the night, but hadn't caught any fish. But because Jesus asked Peter to let down his net, he did so. Did Peter net any fish?

He had to call for help from his partners in their boat, there were so many.

How do you think Peter felt? What did he say to Jesus? It was then that He answered, "Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men."

I THINK WHEN I READ THAT SWEET STORY

I think when I read that sweet story of old,
When Jesus was here among men,
How He called little children as lambs to His fold,
I should like to have been with Him then.

I wish that His hands had been placed on my head,
That His arm had been thrown around me,
And that I might have seen His kind look when He said,
"Let the little ones come unto Me."

NEWS OF THE WORKERS

On Sunday, Dec. 4, it was my privilege to preach for the Church of God in Dixon, Ill., at the forenoon service. In Dixon, there is an attractive, well arranged house of worship, where will be found a sincere, prayerful, truth-loving people under the pastoral care of Elder L. E. Conner.

The Sunday school is carefully directed by Bro. William Ford, with faithful teachers to assist. In the home of Pastor Conner I found hospitable entertainment. He and his gracious wife know how to make people feel at home.

My visit there is a pleasant memory.

Yesterday, Sunday, Dec. 18, I was with the Church of God in St. Cloud, Minn., where
Clarence E. Lapp is the pastor. I was here many years ago when efforts were being made to organize a church here. Such men as Elders William Parson, Simon Peter Matheny, E. E. Thoms, and J. Raymond deserve the first credit for gathering the people here. Others followed them and labored faithfully.

Pastor Lapp and his gifted wife have been here two and one half years. When he began work here no preaching service was held on Sunday forenoons—only the church school. Now an inspiring worship service is held, with Pastor Lapp as preacher. It is well attended. There is also an excellent evening service, also a mid-week service. The pastor is being supported so that he can give his whole time to the work of the pastorate. We rejoice in the spiritual prosperity of the Saint Orrin R. Jenks. Cloud church.

HELEN MAE HARLAND

Helen Mac, aged eight, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Harland, was born June 12, 1930, at Cedar Falls, Iowa, and quietly fell asleep at the home of her parents and grandparents December 17, 1938, after a lingering illness of five years, during which she was tenderly cared for in all that home love and medical skill could do, but she was too weakened to continue the life struggle longer.

She was an affectionate and unusually intelligent child, and was given home instruction by a special public school teacher up until the last few days of her life.

She was reared in full reverence for the Lord and instructed in gospel truth, as far as her early age could be expected to receive, and so was a religious and believing child.

She is survived by her parents, one brother James Wallace Harland, her maternal grand-parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Allard, her paternal grandmother, Mrs. Sarah Harland of Wheeler, Wis., her maternal great-grandmother, Mrs. Irene Oaks of Gladbrook, Iowa, and others.

While we realize that it is better for her to rest from a hopeless struggle, the hardship is upon those who remain to mourn her loss, but blessed hope sustains until we meet again.

Funeral services were held December 19, in the forenoon at Cedar Falls, and in the afternoon at Gladbrook, by J. W. Williams, and she was buried at the Badger Hill Cemetery at Cladbrook

Departing From the Faith

By T. A. Drinkard

THE Spirit of God reveals the fact that in the latter times I some will depart from the faith of the gospel of Christ, giving heed to doctrines that are inimical to the welfare of the church of God. How sad it is to realize that some will go astray by departing from the faith, thus denying their Lord and Master that did so much for them. The Spirit gives this warning in order that those faithful to the cause of truth might understand better how to meet the prevailing difficulties that confront them. This departure is from the faith, and indicates that before anyone can depart from the faith he must first be connected with it. By denying the faith there is a denial of the saving efficacy of the blood of Christ, which is the blood of the covenant wherewith those of gospel faith are sanctified (Heb. 10:29). What advantage has been gained by allowing the seducing doctrines of men to lead them away from the faith? The Spirit of God knew what the conditions would be and wrote accordingly.

Speaking by authority of the Spirit of God Paul says, "Of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them" (Acts 20:30). The spirit of God, foreseeing this condition of things, forewarned the church to be on guard, and defend her interests against those doctrines that undermine her faith.

So it is today, the Church of God is confronted with some of the most destructive teachings that could possibly arise to undermine and destroy her faith. And we must note that the Spirit of God particularly warns that the trouble starts on the inside. She must arise in her strength and might and renew her faith in the guiding counsel of God, follow the Spirit as it directs in matters concerning the gospel faith and Christian living. She must go forward to exalt her risen Lord, and to uphold the faith of the gospel, the power which God uses in saving men and women. By authority of the same Spirit it is written, "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God" (2 John 9). Then, recognizing the necessity of safeguarding the faith of the gospel it further says, "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed: for he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds" (vv. 10, 11). His evil deeds would be the teaching of error that tends to undermine the faith of the gospel.

The Spirit continues to warn the church against false teaching, which, if allowed to go unchecked, will lead away those of the faith, by saying, "There shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction" (2 Peter 2:1). Not only will these heresies be brought in, but "many shall follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of" (v. 2). Just think about them even denying the Lord that bought them! The Master said, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life" (Rev. 2:10), which means loyalty to the faith of the gospel of Christ.

In writing to them "that are sanctified" by the Father, in Jesus Christ, Jude, in verse 3 of his letter, says, "Ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints." Why contend for the faith? Does it matter whether we are faithful or not? Can we be faithful, and at the same time depart from the faith? How can the Church of God be true to her Lord and Master and at the same time allow error in doctrine to enter our hearts and lives which wrecks and ruins where it takes root, and thus see a departing from the faith take place? When the parents of the home see danger approaching they take means of safeguarding its interests, thus protecting themselves and their children. The same principle holds true in protecting the interests of the Church of God by those who are leaders. Sad indeed it is to deny the faith; deny our Lord and Master that bought us with His own precious blood. May we see the urgent need of contending for the faith of the gospel, and by so doing we can both save ourselves and them that hear us (1 Tim. 4:16).

STEPPING INTO JORDAN

By Gerald L. Cooper

TURN back with me into the times of the past, and let us halt for a time in the year 1451 B. C. It has been a memorable year for the children of Israel. Moses, the great lawgiver, the one who had led them out of the land of Egypt, who had given the Ten Commandments, and who had told them so many precious things about God, was dead. In his place a young man by the name of Joshua had arisen and had taken over the leadership of the people. They were not yet fully aware of the qualifications of Joshua to lead them, but they knew that he was a godly man, and hoped he would prove to be the same type of leader that Moses had been.

Hence, it is with a great deal of interest that we see the children of Israel watching what is going on at the banks of the Jordan River. Joshua has just given one of his first commands as their leader. The people had to cross Jordan, and as it was in its flood stage, they were experiencing great difficulty. Joshua told the priests of God to take up the ark of the covenant, which was a sacred chest used in connection with their worship, and to enter the river with it. He also gave instructions to the people to follow at a certain distance from the ark. When the time came the priests bearing the ark stepped into the waters of Jordan. Nothing happened at first, but suddenly the waters parted and the people were enabled to pass over unto the other side. After they had gone over the people went over also and the water went back into its accustomed place.

This must have taken a great deal of faith on the part of Joshua, the priests, and the people. Those priests who went out into the midst of Jordan must have wondered if the water would really part or if this was just a wild dream of Joshua's. The people as they walked through the river on the dry land, with the water on either side of them, must have been fearful, imagining all sorts of things that might happen to them if suddenly the water should rush upon them. Their faith was wonderful, both in God and in Joshua, whom we see leading, directing the people as they made this important crossing into the Promised Land. Joshua knew that God had told him that He would always protect him and be with him regardless of what came. This promise of God was the only thing that enabled Joshua to carry out his work in crossing this rushing river.

Faith was their keynote to success; and faith will work similarly for us today as it did for the people of Israel in 1451 B. C. We, too, have come to the banks of the River Jordan—the sins of the world, even the world itself. Our great Leader, Jesus, whose name means the same as Joshua, has commanded us to go across. As priests for him, the church is leading the people through. It picks up the Word of God, typified by the ark which contained the Ten Commandments, and starts through the river of sin. Sometimes it seems that nothing is going to happen. We make no headway against sin; then suddenly, because we keep on going, by faith, the sins of the world become easier for us to conquer. Some leaders are skeptical, even as were the priests of God, as to whether the venture will be successful, and the people as they see the great sins of the world on all sides of them, almost lose heart. But we keep plodding along, and with the help of our Leader we are successfully going through the river of sin, safely unto our promised land, the kingdom of God. We are not there yet, but let us keep our faith, ever following the Word of God and our great Leader, Jesus.

ARE YOU A FINGER?

Dr. H. C. Mason tells of the man who prayed earnestly in meeting that God would with His finger touch a certain man. Suddenly he stopped his prayer. Some one asked him why he had stopped, and he replied, "Because God said to me, 'You are My finger.' So now I must go and touch that man for God."—Selected.

THE CONSUMMATION SUFFICETH

By J. S. Lyon

WHAT if Miriam (so called 14 times, and "Mary" 6 times in the Greek Scriptures) were but a humble maid of a downtrodden race, to whom the annunciation of the angel came? It was in accord with the wisdom of God in choosing the poor, and those ill esteemed by the world, for the purposes of election and salvation.

What if it were a stony road to be traveled on the back of a plodding donkey, if the road to Bethlehem led to the fulfillment of prophecy and the birth of the Savior of the world?

What though it were but a lowly manger of a wayside public inn wherein the infant Babe was laid, when for that spot more homage was to be paid than for the birthplaces of all other potentates combined?

What if that birthday was little noted by the people of that time, when it had been noted by the prophets in the past, when it was announced by angelic hosts, and when it would be remembered and feted in the civilizations that followed?

What matters if men conspired to destroy that child, to end the teaching and life of that Man, so long as God protected and led Him all the way?

What matters if they hated and slew Him, if He had power to take up that precious life again, and thereby take away the sins of the world?

What matters it to us when our way in life is rough and trials sore, if journey's end finds us seated with our Savior?

What matters the scorn of the world, wayward and unthinking, if we, indeed, are the sons of God, and joint-heirs with Jesus Christ, our Lord?

NUMBER 13

ONE GOD

By S. J. Lindsay

A GRIEVOUS error exists in the theology of a majority of religious people with regard to the unity of God. It is almost universally believed that there are three Gods in one, and one in three. Over the land there are many churches bearing the dignified name of Trinity Church of this or of that denomination. The name conveys the thought of the religious principle back of it. In song we have:

"Holy, holy, holy! Merciful and Mighty! God in three persons, blessed Trinity."

"Praise Him above, ye heav'nly host; Praise Father, Son, and Holy Ghost!"

From song we learn that time was when one of the three left His throne in heaven to come to earth to work out man's salvation, as in the following:

"My Father's house of light,
My glory circled throne,
I left for earthly night,
For wanderings sad and lone;
Hast thou left aught for me?"

If it is as much out of place for us to sing what we do not believe as it is to preach it, we serve ourselves well to be careful what we sing. Paul says (1 Cor. 14:15), "I will pray with the spirit, and I will pray with the understanding also: I will sing with the spirit, and I will sing with the understanding also." This comes to us with authority, but we still have reason to fall back upon. If it is wrong for us to preach a lie, it is just as wrong to sing a lie.

If there were three Gods in heaven, and it was determined that one of them should come to earth to redeem men, why was Jesus selected for that task, and who chose Him? Could one or two give orders to the third to do so if all were equal? It has been said that Jesus was sent because one must come who could die. It is said that God cannot die, hence it must be one who could die. If Jesus was coexistent with the Father, was He not just as immortal as God, and would it not be as impossible for Him to die as for the Father to die? "God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man" (James 1:13). That being true, could Jesus be tempted more than could the Father? If Jesus could not be tempted, then what means the text which tells us that though He was tempted and tried in all things, like as we, He was without sin?

Jesus puts an end to the controversy when He says: "Ye have heard how I said unto you, I go away, and come again unto you. If ye loved me, ye would rejoice, because I said, I go unto the Father: for my Father is greater than I" (John 14:28). Again, He says of the Holy Spirit (Ghost), "And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter (the Holy Spirit), that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you" (John 14:16, 17).

Texts that are relied upon to teach the contrary may easily be cleared up if a little search is made. In John 6:38 we find one of the texts, as follows: "For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me."

This text weakens the reasoning claimed for it in that it shows the supremacy of the Father over the Son. In this same chapter, the Jews reasoning with Jesus, said, "Our fathers did eat bread in the desert; as it is written, He gave them bread from heaven to eat." Likewise the quails were from heaven also; that is, they were the food provided by the Father in heaven, just as Jesus was provided by the Father to be the world's Redeemer.

Another text is found in John 17:5, "And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was."

As a great architect, God had the whole matter in hand. He evidently saw man in sin, and at the same time provided to meet the conditions that sin brought, by providing for man a way out of his dilemma by offering redemption by one who should overcome sin and give a perfect life for the sins of the world. For this work of righteousness, there was in store in the plan of God (Please turn to page 11)

The Perfect Man

Jesus was no fanatic. There was a conquering and an appealing poise in His life. Deeply emotional, He never lost control of His emotions. When He wept it was correct to weep: His friend had died; Jerusalem, "the city of the great King," had rejected Him; Gethsemane was hard. Real appreciation of the facts of life in their stern realities, and genuine sympathy glistened in His tears.

When Jesus drove the money changers from the temple He was, though angry, well within the bounds of reason and prophetic authority, for it was written, "The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up." Men had desecrated His Father's house, had merchandised the house of prayer, and that at the expense of the poor!

When Jesus walked some sixty miles to be baptized, buried in Jordan's muddy water, He went not as one temporarily inspired by noisy revival, but in humble yet iron determination to tread another long road that led to His baptism of grief, suffering, death, and burial in the cold tomb. Neither sprinkling nor pouring could have typified that later immersion of which Jesus said, "I have a baptism to be baptized with; and how am I straitened (pained) till it be accomplished!" (Luke 12:50). The shadow of Calvary's cross could be dimly seen even at the water, and in that shadow Jesus steadfastly walked from Jordan to the cross, though John questioned the need of baptism at Jordan, and though Peter saw no need of Calvary. With a selected goal Jesus, faithful unto death, is earth's only man who could at last justly say, "It is finished."

When Jesus prayed there were no vain words, little repetition, no interjections from emotion-mad followers to help Him get it said. He communed with a ready and an understanding Father.

None could blame Christ. False accusations were made against Him. He "did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth: who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously" (1 Peter 2:22, 23).

With power to calm seas and to raise the dead, He sought no glory of men. To one who spoke of being His disciple, but who had not counted the cost, Jesus said, "Foxes have holes, and birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head" (Luke 9:58).

Jesus came to serve, not to be ministered unto. His work varied from caring for multitudes to blessing (not sprinkling) children. We find Him at Mount Hermon, beyond the Jordan, in cities, in country, before rulers, and in private homes of both friends and foes.

Everywhere He was the same Jesus. He never played the role of actor. He never erred. Not only as Adam, was He made in the "image" of God, but He is declared to be "the express image" of God.

The Master's Use of Scripture

As to faith, none could put Jesus to shame. He knew and taught and lived the doctrine of Moses, all the prophets, and the Psalms. Though various sects of the day had much in common with His views He kept His own standards high; not once did He compromise truth with error.

He was steadied, consecrated, nourished by the Word of God. Truth, in Christ's estimation, was worth living and dying for, though it is well to note that He seldom argued on technicalities. Chiefly with those who were eager to learn did He enter into resurrection details, or the "mysteries of the kingdom of heaven." Pilate heard; but Martha understood, saying, "I know . . . Yea, Lord: I believe that thou art the Christ, the Son of God, which should come into the world."

To prove a point Jesus always quoted scriptures, and held the religious leaders of His day as duty bound to know and teach the same. Questioned by the crafty Sadducees, Jesus said, "Ye do err, not knowing the scriptures." What might our Lord say today to the garbed and titled who not only lack in Bible knowledge, but are Jonah-doubters and inspiration-deniers of what little they do know? The preachers who really use the Bible in their pulpit work are few. Jesus quoted, read, and said, "This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears." Is the cloth so stretched and biased that the pattern can do no good? Why do men still stand at pulpits, if the Book is out of date? Who throws away the chart to better sail the seas?

Sensible Religion

Considering the bogus and counterfeit enemies of true Christianity, it is encouraging and surely providential that there are many who still live the faith of the Son of God; who cherish that life above the deceitful lusts, pleasures, and carnal goals of a world intoxicated with these things; and who are the ballast of too many religions.

The Virgin Birth

By A. J. Blakesley

I'll IS not necessary to enter into the question as to whether the date recently observed in honor of the birth of Jesus falls at the right time of the year, to assert that no other season for observance better serves to emphasize the essential and irreconcilable conflict between Christian faith and religious modernism. Neither is it needful to accept or condone the paganistic fancies which have grown up about the celebration of the Savior's birth, to recognize that the field, encumbered as it is with the accumulations of the centuries, is the scene of one of the major battles of the end-time struggles between faith and skepticism.

Strip the celebration of Christ's birth of its paganism, acquired through the years, eliminate the argument as to the proper date for the observance, and the essential thing which remains is the virgin birth.

The conflict between belief, on the one hand, and irreverent, jeering agnosticism, on the other, turns on this fundamental thing: that the man called Jesus of Nazareth was born of the Virgin Mary.

VIRGIN BIRTH DEFINED

The position of believers on this point is very clear. They are in agreement that the entrance of their Lord into the experiences of physical existence, "in the likeness of men," was by means of a birth; that He was "born of a woman," without the agency of an earthly or human father; that the child was conceived in the womb of Mary through the agency of the Holy Spirit; that Joseph, who later became the father of other children by Mary in the sacred relation of marriage, was not the father of Jesus. In short, the position of Bible believers is that Jesus Christ was born of a woman who did not enter into the relation by which human life is reproduced, with any man, either within or outside the sanctity of marriage, until after the birth of Jesus.

By virgin birth much more is meant than the miraculous element involved in the births of Isaac or John the Baptist, which were instances of divine intervention, whereby God removed the natural physical obstacles attendant upon advanced age, and made possible the conceptions of a son of Abraham and Sarah, and the prophetically promised forerunner of the Lord, John the Baptist.

The virgin birth was the elimination of human father-hood altogether. This is the plain teaching of the Bible. Prophetically, it was recorded in Isaiah, "Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel."

THE GOSPEL RECORD

Historically, two of the biographers of Jesus set in order the facts pertaining to His virgin birth. No more beautiful or reverent record is to be found in all literature than that contained in the opening chapters of Luke. The angel of God visited Mary, of whom it is expressly stated that she was a virgin, and announced that she of all women upon earth, had been selected as the one of whom the long-promised Deliverer was to be born. Humbly and submissively, Mary made the natural inquiry, "How shall this be, seeing I know not a man," The reply of the Angel Gabriel is significant in the extreme: "The Holy Spirit shall come upon thee, and the power of the Most High shall overshadow thee: wherefore also the holy thing which is begotten shall be called the Son of God" (Luke 1:35, R. V.).

Matthew's Gospel account of the nativity places the virgin birth in the position of central importance. He asserts in positive language that before Joseph and Mary "came together she was found with child of the Holy Spirit." He then reports the problem which confronted Joseph, to whom Mary was betrothed, and the settlement of his perplexity by the appearance of God's angel, who gave him such assurances of the innocence and purity of Mary that he turned aside from his intention of privately breaking the betrothal, and took her as his wife, biding his time in peace, having reverence and respect for her Godappointed mission.

The reality of this angelic visitation is understood by the fact that it was Joseph himself who gave the name of Jesus to the Child. This, it is to be remembered, was the name commanded by the angel. Louis Matthews Sweet, writing in the International Standard Bible Encyclopedia, says: "Virgin birth is the correct and only correct designation of the birth statement contained in the Gospels of Matthew and Luke."

MODERN SADDUCEES

"This is the teaching which the liberal religionists, in the Sadducean fashion, deny," says L. P. Buroker. One of the noted skeptics of a few generations ago accused the biographers of Jesus of inventing the story of the virgin birth, and the journey to Bethlehem to cover up the supposed shame of Mary in Nazareth, where, he said, she gave birth to the child of some unnamed libertine. It is with such blatant, irreverent, blasphemous, and outright atheism that the modernists of the present day have their true spiritual affinity! A preacher in Wisconsin, in conversation at a meeting of ministers, said, "Jesus was the illegitimate son of the adulteress Mary." When asked if he delivered himself of such teaching in his pulpit, he replied that his people were not yet able to bear it.

Schooled in the subtleties and arts of diplomacy, not all modernists are as straightforward in their repudiation of the Biblical record. They talk (Please turn to page 10)

The World That Perished

By T. A. Drinkard

"Whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished: but the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men."

THE same Word referred to in 2 Peter 3:6, 7 that reveals to us information relative to the overthrow of that ungodly world because of its sin, also reveals that the present heavens and earth will also come to a sudden end, because of its sin and corruption which are contrary to God's will. No one should question the rightcousness of God in inflicting punishment upon those that would not repent at the preaching of Noah, "a preacher of rightcousness," bringing in the "flood upon the world of the ungodly" (2 Peter 2:5).

Could this punishment be viewed as a corrective measure? Just how could it have been corrective, since it overthrew the entire system and the people, except those in the ark? If such was corrective, why not extend probation a little longer, thus giving them an opportunity to further see the need of salvation? And since "God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually" (Gen. 6:5), would that indicate that their wickedness was a manifestation of God's righteousness? If so, why is it written, "And the Lord said, I will destroy man wohm I have created from the face of the earth" (v. 7)? Then, too, it is written, "The Lord said, My Spirit shall not always strive with man" (v. 3). Why was the Spirit striving with man? Was it trying to persuade him to sin a little more in order that more righteousness might be credited to his account? If so, why the Flood?

I make mention of these things because they are referred to by the inspired Apostle in connection with the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrha, and "those that after should live ungodly" (2 Peter 2:5, 6). The outstanding feature of it all is, God overthrew these cities because of their sin, and just as surely as He did, and inasmuch as their overthrow was an "ensample unto those that after should live ungodly," those now who practice sin will meet a similar fate, even destruction.

I have no apology to make for sin; it brought disaster to Adam, Eve, and their children. It finally brought the people in the day of Noah to an untimely death, and led to complete destruction of Sodom and Gomorrha, and is leading the present world, including many people, to the same doom. Discussing the destruction by the Flood, and that at the close of this world, Jesus Christ had this to say: "For as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be" (Matt. 24:38, 39).

A cry, or report, had come to the Lord that Sodom's sin was very grievous, and regarding it He said, "I will go down now, and sec whether they have done altogether according to the cry of it, which is come unto me; and if not, I will know" (Gen. 18:21). God's plan to destroy Sodom was made known to Abraham, who in turn took issue with the Lord as to the advisability of destroying the city, because it contained so many righteous people. There were not ever ten righteous souls in that city of sin and corruption. Are we guilty of using the same kind of argument that Abraham offered in favor of his own ideas in the matter? His argument was based upon, "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" (Gen. 18:25). It was the righteous act on God's part to destroy man when man refused to do His will, as shown by Paul in Romans 3: 5, 6, saying, "Is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance? God forbid: for then how shall God judge the world?"

This same Apostle Paul refers to a destruction that will take place at the close of this age, which is in accord with the account that Jesus Christ gave, saying, "And to you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power" (2 Thess. 1: 7-9). Shall we warn men and women that such a day of judgment is coming, or shall we make excuses for them with vain promises of hope and consolation, when inspired testimony is against it?

Shall we console these practitioners of sin, saying that God, being the "Judge of all the earth," will possibly have mercy upon them, and not carry out His Word by destroying them, but give them an opportunity to reform? God has never inflicted punishment upon any people until He first warned them of the impending punishment. And the people today are without excuse before God, as His Word indicates. "If God spared not the angels that sinned, . . . and spared not the old world," and turned "the cities of Sodom and Gomorrha into ashes," He is also able to punish the present world for its sin in its "day of judgment" (2 Peter 2:4-9).

The old world was not destroyed by washing the sin out of its practitioners with water, and cleansing them clean and white, so that another race could be started, but they lost their lives. The world—the people and the system—passed away. Sin had done its work of ruin and disaster. The same condition exists today, and only God knows the outcome.

When the Lord Jesus comes, may He find us faithful to Changing and Changeless

By Harvey Krogh, Jr.

THE old year is gone. We might be a little sentimental, and think of the good times we had in good old nineteen hundred thirty-eight, and remember that those good times are gone, never to return again. If we don't want sentimentality we can account that the new year is just a man-made mark in time that isn't the same everywhere we go. If we had lived in London our old year would have gone six hours earlier.

Let us be sentimental, if that is what you would call it, and look at some of the changes that have taken place. First, the map of the world has changed in several places. The maps of China and Japan have been changing. The map of Germany has swelled, and that of Spain has become wide or narrow in this place and that.

Styles change, from the design of the new cars to the latest garment, from the last word in home furnishings to the latest design of the electric razor. Everything is always changing in every way. The old home town is different than it used to be. Some buildings are torn down, some new ones are in their places. The roads are changed, and graveled or paved. The streams have washed new channels for themselves.

Even some of your friends have been different toward you than they were in the preceding year. Homes have changed. Children grow up; they go away to work; they get married. The vacant chairs appear for one reason or another. It is because there is change and decay in all things about us. There are changes that benefit us; there are changes that hurt and grieve us.

May we look at something that will help us in this new year? We may point to nothing better than the Word of God. When changes come that hurt us it is well to consider, "I am the Lord, I change not" (Mal. 3:6). It gives us hope to know of One firm, dependable, and constant. In Hebrews 13:8 our Savior is mentioned as "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to day, and for ever."

Christ's creed does not change. God is His Father. God's will was His law, and it does not change. His principles change not. He stood for truth. Truth is that which no man can change or destroy. He stood for righteousness, in deed as well as in word.

His salvation is constant. "All that the Father giveth me shall come to me; and him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out.... And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day" (John 6:37, 40). "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved"

(Mark 16:16). This does not change. The time may come when these opportunities will be no more, but these opportunities are firm and true.

Speaking of Christ, the writer of the Hebrew letter says, "But this man, because he continueth ever, hath an unchangeable priesthood. Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them" (Heb. 7:25, 26). Jesus is the gift of God. "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning" (James 1:17).

Christ's power changes not. His own words are, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth" (Matt. 28:18). God's power and God Himself are changeless. God "hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things," even God's eternal power (Heb. 1:2).

Last, but far from being least, Christ's love does not change. The greatness of it is ever the same. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends" (John 15:13). Jesus did this for us, while we were yet sinners. That love toward us shall never change, though it is up to us if we would feel love's warm benefit.

Though you forget the rest, remember this: our Savier changes not. When you think of change and decay, grieve not for loss or hurt, but think on their opposites. Christ. His principles, salvation, power, and love change not. This is our comfort, strength, and courage for the year.

Revelation Twenty

By A. E. Griffiths

BEFORE we discuss this chapter let us turn back to the first verse in the book of Revelation, where we read, "The revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass." This gives us the information that God personally gave Jesus Christ His Son (whom He had now removed to His own abode in heaven) the particulars of events which would shortly come to pass.

When God says, "shortly come to pass," we must remember He does not reckon time as we do. In Psalm 90:4 David says, "For a thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday." This is one place in the Scripture where God computes time as one day for a thousand years in our time. In Numbers 14:34 we read, "After the number of days in which ye searched out the land, even forty days, each day for a year." This would give a thousand days for a thousand years. This same reckoning of time is spoken of in Ezekiel 4:6. These references show us that when we read, "must shortly come to pass," it does not necessarily mean just a short time from when John received this message.

After John received this information on the Isle of Patmos he had to write it down, and then it had to be received by believers, who at that time were not easily reached, as they were being persecuted for believing in this man Jesus. We really get no definite information that these things were much known for at least two hundred years after they were received.

When the apostate Catholic Church obtained possession of the records they were withheld from the public for centuries—known as the Dark Ages—eventually coming to light after the Reformation started by Luther, Calvin, Knox, and others. If God had wished these things to be known immediately after the angel had signified them to John, He would not have allowed them to be hidden so long. As it was all to take place in the distant future, He took this means of keeping His Word on the earth. As it was so valuable He allowed only a few and faithful hearts to hear it until He was ready to commence His judgments on the earth. Hence Revelation 20 is most definitely future.

With these preliminary thoughts in mind let us now approach the subject. Continuing the first verse in Revelation 1 it says, "And he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John." Notice, He "signified" it. We must discriminate between literal and allegorical prophecy. In this case He gave this prophecy by signs. Therefore we must arrive at the proper meaning of each sign, and that can only be done by "comparing spiritual things with spiritual" (1 Cor. 2:13).

In the first verse of chapter 20 we read, "An angel came down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit, and a great chain in his hand." An angel is a messenger, sometimes referring to an immortal being, and sometimes to a mortal. In this case it is an immortal messenger, because he comes from heaven with authority from God.

In Matthew 13:41 we read, "And the Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity." This harmonizes with a messenger from God coming with the key of the bottomless pit (the grave).

For proof that this is the meaning we read, "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death" (Rev. 1:18). Hell, translated from the Greek hades means "the grave," and death is its occupant.

The great chain well indicates that the subjects in the grave are bound so that they cannot escape without help from their jailer. The words "bottomless pit" are translated from the Greek abussus, meaning "a deep hole, the bowels of the earth, a pit." Therefore, it clearly signifies the grave. There are other references of chains in darkness. We read of this same condition in Jude 6, and in 2 Peter 2:4.

The same language is used in Revelation 9:1, and this chapter clearly indicates the resurrection of the unjust. Remember, Paul says, "There shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust" (Acts 24:15).

We also have a prophecy of Christ, in Isaiah 42:7, where we notice He is given power "to open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that sit in darkness out of the prison house." The prison house is surely the grave, and it is only the power of God that can release the dead from this bondage.

This proves, without doubt, that Revelation 20 is future, for it is certain the resurrection has not taken place yet, and cannot until Christ returns.

The thought following the first verse is that sin is restrained for a thousand years, due to the influence and presence of Christ, and His righteous reign. There will of course be two classes of people on the earth during this period: the saints, who are the immortal rulers; and the remnant of the nations that have escaped destruction.

We must remember that this chapter covers a very long period, commencing with the message to John about 96 A.D., continuing through the centuries since then, on to the coming of Christ, and through the thousand-year reign—culminating in the age when the earth is in eternal perfection and God's plan finished.

The first four verses cover the first resurrection, and when it states "first resurrection" we must be careful not to put a numerical interpretation on this sentence. The fifth verse says, "But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection."

To whom does He refer by "the rest of the dead"? We know that the mortal people in the kingdom will live and die like men do now, and these subjects who die during this period will not be raised again until the kingdom is completed, by entirely abolishing sin and death from the earth. So when He speaks of the first resurrection He is making it the chief resurrection, because the subjects of it become joint rulers with Christ (Rom. 8:17), and help Him in bringing perfection to the earth. This is certainly the chief resurrection, because those raised ones will have the honor of helping our King to do such marvelous work. This important feature of the kingdom will be accomplished before the rest of the dead are raised, which clearly makes it the most important resurrection of the two.

When we get to verse seven we have arrived at the end of the thousand-year reign, and find there will be a revolution among the nations. After showing their dislike of being ruled over by King Jesus they are destroyed by fire from heaven. Then comes the last resurrection, when all things that offend shall be burned up, leaving the earth in perfection, and inhabited by a race of immortal, perfect people.

This is the wonderful hope that Christians have to look forward to, knowing that God never promises anything He does not perform. May we all see this great day, is my prayer.

"Ye Must Be Born Again"

By R. M. Abbott

"Verily I say unto you, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. 18:3). When must this conversion take place? All will answer, "In this present gospel age."

"Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God" (John 3:3). When must he be "born again"? Since it relates to the same change that is required in the preceding verse, the answer is the same: "In this present gospel age."

"Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God" (John 3:5). This doesn't say that if a man isn't born at some future time of water and of the Spirit, but the past tense is used in the expression and signifies he must be already born, or else remain outside the kingdom of God.

"Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever" (1 Peter 1:23). When or what time does this refer to? Not something to occur in the future, but something that has already taken place. "Being born" doesn't mean to be born at a later time.

"If ye know that he is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness is born of him" (1 John 2:29). Not going to be, but "is born of him."

"Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God" (1 John 4:7). Do you have love in your heart? "Every one that loveth is born," not is going to be born.

"Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God" (1 John 5:1): Christians may as well testify that Jesus is not the Christ, as to say they are not born of God already. Of course, no one will say he even knows Christ unless he is keeping His commandments. (1 John 2:4.)

"We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not; but he that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not" (1 John 5:18). "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God" (1 John 3:9). Some one may say that this is impossible, but if it is, it can only be impossible to the one who has not been born again. Jesus does not require anything impossible of anyone.

"For if we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation" (Heb. 10:26, 27). This is God's law and not that of any man.

"There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit" (Rom. 8:1). How can anyone walk after the Spirit? Answer: By being "born of the Spirit." Read John 3:5.

"The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit" (John 3:8). No one can understand all about the wind. We may go up a few hundred feet in the air and find the wind is blowing in an exactly opposite direction from what it is near the earth. We may not understand the wind, but just for that reason alone should we declare that there is no such thing as wind?

My friends, you might just as well declare to me that there is no such thing as wind as to tell me there is no such thing as a man born of the Spirit. I have felt the Spirit of God working in my heart just as plainly as I ever felt the wind blowing in my face. There are a great many things I cannot reason out that I believe. I never could understand how God made a world out of nothing, but I believe He did. I have seen some of the worst kind of characters transformed by the power of God, and while I cannot understand all about it, I know it is true. No, we can neither explain the wind nor the work of the Spirit, but we believe in both, because both are realities that we have experienced.

"Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again" (John 3:7).

New Year's Greetings

By J. M. Morgan

BEFORE these words greet you the old year will be gone, and the record of our deeds for 1938 will have closed. All who read these lines must agree with me that a life spent in service to God and men is the most valuable, considering the short years we have here. Some give all their time to heaping up "treasure for the last days" (James 5:3), but Jesus said, "For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul (life)."

May I speak kindly to all in His service. It may seem to you that your life is but long years of trouble and heartaches, with heavy burdens to carry. The road is not so long, dear ones, and the burdens are not so heavy if we will take Jesus into our lives. Jesus said, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls (selves). For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light" (Matt. 11:28-30).

The word "yoke" means "to tie or link; to join or couple together." The yoke may be adjusted so the strong can help the weak to carry a heavy load. The Lord's burden is light, and His yoke is easy, because He is a strong and present helper, and you are yoked with Him in the service of God. He says, "I will never leave thee, nor for-sake thee" (Heb. 13:5).

Christ is able to succor them that are tempted. How is He able? Because "he himself hath suffered being tempted" (Heb. 2:18).

We now look out into the new year. We know not what it has in store for us. For some it holds sorrow, sickness, and death; for others, joy and inspiring hope. Looking back to the joyful night in which the baby King was born, which was indeed a time of great rejoicing, we know that any blessings which the new year may bring must fade into insignificance in comparison to the wonderful age of ages, the glorious age of the coming King.

To some the coming age will be a time of gladness, but to others it will be a day of sorrow and death. Let us be ready for that new day. We must live in keeping with the teachings of God's Word. "The grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world (age); looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ" (Titus 2:11-14).

I pray God that both reader and writer will have a part in the good things of that coming kingdom.

The Spirit of Giving

By Charles Pearson

WE HAVE just passed the season when many people throughout the world celebrated the birth of Jesus. Many hearts were opened in the spirit of giving. Some were not able financially to give as much as others. The amounts given, however, were not so important as the spirit in which the gifts were presented.

While still in this spirit of giving, let us not forget to give unto the Lord. According to John 10:10, Jesus gave His life for us, that we might have life, and have it "more abundantly." It was Jesus who gave His life for you, and for me. What are we giving Him in return? Can we be followers of Christ, forgetting our debts to Him?

In Acts 20:35 we read Paul's charge to elders assembled at Miletus, "I have shewed you all things, how that so labouring ye ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive." Are we, as members of His body, giving all we can in return for what He has done for us?

There are several ways that we can give. Some can give time, some can give money, some can teach, some can sing. Are you doing your part? Am I doing mine? Whatever we do, let us do with all our strength and with full heart.

We do not forget to give gifts to our children, and have often given until it hurt. Surely, the Lord does not forget to give to us the things we have need of. "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask him" (Matt. 7:11).

At times our means of giving run out, but God's gifts will never stop, if we only present our bodies as living sacrifices, "holy, acceptable unto God, which is (our) reasonable service" (Rom. 12:1). If we give our service unto the Lord there will be crowns of righteousness laid up for us, to be given us at the appearing of the Lord, the "righteous judge," and such crowns are for "all them also that love his appearing." (See 2 Tim. 4:7, 8.)

Let us practice the spirit of giving of life to the Lord. The time is near, even at the door, when He shall appear "to give every man according as his work shall be" (Rev. 22:12). Then Jesus will give eternal life to those who have labored for Him, and this eternal life will be in a world restored to its Edenic glories.

"Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him" (1 Cor. 2:9). In the last two chapters of the Revelation the reader can get a picture of times and conditions as they will be at Christ's coming back to earth, when He shall rule until all enemies have been subdued. "He must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet" (1 Cor. 15:25).

Are we, as followers of Jesus Christ, giving our lives in daily sacrifice? If so, we shall hear the Savior say, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord" (Matt. 25:21).

"Paint was made for wooden things,
For iron pots, and places;
"Twas never meant for Christian girls,
With smiles upon their faces."

IGNORANCE

By Russell Currens

"IGNORANCE of the law excuses no man," is a saying understood by all to mean that if a man breaks the law, even not knowing he did the act, he is guilty.

God's Word is given to man, and the only way any person would be ignorant of any one of its commandments would be not to study the Scripture, or not to listen to it. Our many ministers and teachers proclaim regularly the gospel to every creature.

No man should be ignorant of God's Word in this age of knowledge and speed. We have the radio. Soon television will penetrate the homes of the lowest of humanity, and reach the highest of society. That alone should be a cure for ignorance of the law. The blind, deaf, and maimed ones are aware of the latest news today, the same as those who are able to enjoy the best of life.

Many people use ignorance as an excuse for not obeying some of Christ's commandments, given to us in the Scriptures. There is no excuse for breaking any of Christ's laws, as any child knows right from wrong. But get him to confess it some time!

The only way God excuses is to forgive sin or guilt. God forgives all but one sin, and that is against the Holy Ghost.

If we give much study, prayer, attendance, and help in God's vineyard, there should be no ignorance of the law: neither of God's law, nor of national law.

THE DANCE AND CARDS

By Charles W. Lapp

NUMBER of professed Christians are today telling us that it is all right for us to dance. Let us examine the dance, and other so-called amusements, in the light of gospel truth. Can I go to a dance, stay there until two o'clock in the morning, and ask God's blessing on it? In Proverbs 10:22 we read, "The blessing of the Lord, it maketh rich, and he addeth no sorrow with it." How many times sorrow is added to the dance, in one way or another! Sometimes a murder is committed, or a fight is started. It is not uncommon for young girls to be mistreated. In Columbus, Ohio, two young girls went to a church dance. They met two young men there. After the dance these girls were being escorted home by these young men. On the way one girl had to jump from the car to protect herself, and the other received bruises from them. The two young men were lodged in jail under $5,000 bond, and the girls suffer shame. They met at a church dance. Was that dance to the glory of God? No!

How about the time wasted, and God's money that is spent for the dance? Is that to the glory of God? Can I commune with God while sliding over the floor to the tune of the heathen tom-toms, and the tin-pan music? No. All I should have time for is the will of God. Dancing as recorded in the Bible is in no sense comparable to the immoral craze of today. Things are permitted on the dance floor that would not be tolerated elsewhere; for instance, one man hugging another man's wife. He would be arrested for that if he did it out on the street.

Has the dance the appearance of evil? It has. When the different lusts of the flesh are named we find them to be: envy, strife, hatred, drunkenness, and jealousy. How about a home dance? It is never confined to that. It is too tame. Why play with fire?

Now, can I join in gambling and card playing? Gambling includes: betting on horses, sweepstakes, raffles, lotteries, and card playing for the prize or money. Is this amusement of the world? It is the lust for money that is back of it. In 1 Timothy 6:10 Paul tells us something about money, "For the love of money is the root of all evil: which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows." Some one is sure to lose. Many a little boy or girl has to go hungry, because of this lust of the flesh.

What is the atmosphere? Is it good? It is a game of trickery or chance. In Matthew 20:28 we read, "Even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." Jesus came to minister, and said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." As Christians, have we any right to take a chance with the money the Lord has entrusted into our care? We are stewards of God's things, and we read in 1 Corinthians 4:2, "Moreover it is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful. If we should bet the Lord's money.

or gamble with it, would we be very faithful? Would you like to have your banker do the same with your money that has been entrusted into his care?

Cards are also the tool of the gambler. Will the works of the gambler abide? In 1 Corinthians 3:13, 14 we read, "Every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire: and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward."

"All the ways of a man are clean in his own eyes; but the Lord weigheth the spirits" (Prov. 16:2).

A MEDITATION OF PILGRIM LIFE

By Mrs. William Stine

In sanctuary of my home
I take the time for prayers and dreams,
And I am carried o'er the foam
Beyond the ocean, so it seems.

I reach the land of Martyrs' trails
Where I am met by wondrous Friend
Who is my Guide that never fails,
Who stays near by till journey's end.

The path He leads is "strait" and steep;
The way seems rough, and very long,
Yet Jesus pleads this road to keep,
For on the broad way all go wrong.

My Guide leads through Gethsemane
Where shades of night obscure His face.
I fear I'm lost; He answers me,
"Fear not! Long past I learned this place."

The Garden passed, but I'm weary;
The Lord, my Guide, urges, "Go on."
Says He, "Darkness makes life dreary;
There's rest and joy in coming dawn."

The words He speaks encourage me;
My strength returns, I clutch His hand.
He leads me on in my journey—
My wanderings in pilgrims' land.

My hope of dawn was nearly gone,
And night seemed like so many years,
My feet were bruised, and, oh, so tired!
My heart was pained; there fell some tears.

But see! There's dawning in the east,
The rising sun dispels all gloom;
And I'm so glad, though one of the least,
To press the path that leads us Home.

learnedly of "biological absurdities," and "scientific impossibilities," and prefer to speak of the "ethical concept" and "moral tone" of the life and teachings of Jesus.

But since their system begins with the illegitimate offspring of a shameless woman, and ends with His body rotting in the grave, their system reduces its adherents to the morals of the gutter, and limits their hopes and aspirations to the vagaries of spiritism.

There is a narrow border line here. On the one side lies that which is holy; on the other that which is degraded. The modernists have gone over on the side which places our Lord's origin under a black cloud of suspicion, and puts into His veins the blood of an unidentified profligate.

WOULD INVENT SCRIPTURE

In their unholy zeal to strip the Lord Jesus Christ of His divinity, the modernists go so far as to insist upon the insertion of a "begat" between the name of Joseph and Jesus in the genealogy of Matthew, to make it read, "Joseph begat Jesus."

Wilson's Emphatic Diaglott, with its literal word-for-word rendering of the Greek text, leaves the modernists without a single vestige of evidence for support. The "begat" upon which they insist simply does not appear in the Greek. As one able writer says, "The most ancient manuscripts available to the translators of the American Standard Version offer no encouragement to such a contention, since that body of distinguished scholars rendered the disputed passage as follows: "And Jacob begat Joseph the husband of Mary, of whom was born Jesus, who is called Christ."

This is by no means the only example of the departure of modernists from the principles of scholarship in their attempt to get rid of the virgin birth, their whole criticism being entirely lacking in the things known as literary sensitiveness.

One wonders why both Matthew and Luke should deliberately lay themselves open to censure if they knew their statements to be without factual support. Surely, they were astute enough to know that the story of the virgin birth is one that no one would believe unless it were true.

If the story of the virgin birth were an invention, then its very appearance in the Gospel record is contrary to every dictate of reason and common sense.

If the modernists expect serious consideration to be given their contention that fiction was resorted to in order to conceal what they prefer to think of as the shame of Mary, one cannot but wonder why the Gospel writers did not resort to the simple and easily accepted expedient of moving up the date of Mary's marriage to Joseph a sufficient time to cover the situation. Their failure to do this is a powerful argument for the facts as they have stated them.

ISSUES AT STAKE

The modernists are well aware that much more is at stake here than the supposed intellectual difficulties involved in our Lord's surrender of His heavenly character and state. They know full well that once they admit the virgin birth that a number of other matters of controversy, among them the inspiration of the Bible, will go by default to the defenders of Christian faith.

A God who could send forth His Son in such a way that His entrance into the world clothed Him with human flesh from the body of a virgin, could also inspire men in such a way as to produce a Bible free from historical and theological errors.

They know, too, that the virgin birth points directly to the cross and the empty tomb, and that once the divinity of Jesus is admitted in His birth that Calvary is no longer "the world's surpassing tragedy," as it has been called, but an essential element of the divinely thought out and executed plan for the redemption of believers through the shedding of Christ's blood.

But the virgin birth is more than a field of battle; it is a rallying point for all the friends of Christ. To the defense come both devout Catholies and Bible believing Protestants to stand shoulder to shoulder against the common enemy of unbelief.

True it is that Catholicism teaches many things about the birth of Jesus which Protestants find it impossible to accept. But even so, it is the virgin birth which stands at the center. Catholics entertain no doubt on that subject. To them Jesus was the Holy Child of the Virgin Mary. It is gradually dawning upon Bible believing Protestants that the Roman Catholics, with their undeviating faith in the deity of Jesus, are much more nearly their brethren than the modernists, who, though they may wear the same denominational name, deny the fundamentals of the "faith once for all delivered unto the saints" (Jude 3, R. V.). The close affinity of the modernists and outright atheists should prove a powerful factor in moving hearts of Protestants and Catholies to united action. That communism-which is nothing more than modernism and atheism at work in the political and economic arena-makes no distinction between Catholics and Protestants, but accounts them all worthy of death, as has been amply demonstrated in both Russia and Spain, should cause all true believers to emphasize the theological and doctrinal points upon which they are in agreement.

THE CALL TO BETHLEHEM

Having recently passed the season when men's hearts yearned toward David's town of Bethlehem, where, like the shepherds of old, the world was minded to go to "see this thing that is come to pass," it is evident that the appeal which tugs at the hearts of men is based upon the virgin birth of the Gospels of Matthew and Luke.

The sterile gospel of modernism has no such appeal, for it repudiates the true Christian faith, from His very birth.

"The wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who hold the truth in unrighteousness" (Rom. 1:18).

A PRAYER

By B. I. Webster

When my hair is thin and silvered, and my time of toil is through,
When I've many years behind me,
and ahead of me a few,
I shall want to sit, I reckon,
sort of dreaming in the sun,
And recall the roads I've traveled,
and the many things I've done.
I hope there'll be no picture that I'll hate to look upon
When the time to paint it better, or to wipe it out, is gone.

I hope there'll be no vision of a hasty word I've said
That has left a trail of sorrow, like a whip welt sore and red.
And I hope my old age dreaming will bring back no bitter scene
Of a time when I was selfish, or a time when I was mean.
When I'm getting old and feeble,
and I'm far along life's way,
I don't want to sit regretting any bygone yesterday.

I am painting now the picture that I'll some day want to see.

I am filling in a canvas that will come back soon to me.

Though nothing great is on it, and though nothing there is fine,
I shall want to look it over when I'm old, and call it mine.

So I do not dare to leave it, while the paint is warm and wet,
With a single thing upon it that I will later on regret.

ONE GOD

glory and honor and life everlasting for the One who should accomplish it.

There is but one God, and His Son Jesus Christ, who by yielding obedience, even to the death of the cross, is now set at the right hand of the Father. Profitable Christianity

A Thought for the New Year

As we begin an entirely new year, we feel much as a person does at the end of a day when he realizes that his unfinished task cannot be finished until the next day.

Is Christianity profitable? If we think in terms of the future, in regard to the true Christian, our answer could only be an enthusiastic "Yes!" Now God is calling those whom He desires to be in His church, in the blanket invitation of Christ in "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest" (Matt. 11:28). In the kingdom age, after the coming of Christ, this church will be the leaders in the rejuvenation of the earth and its inhabitants. They will be immortalized, and will be even coinheritors of the entire world with Christ. Yes indeed, it is profitable to be a Christian, to prepare oneself for the great kingdom of God.

In addition to this, it is my sincere belief that the person who is today consecrated to God through Christ is blessed above all men. You may say that you have never felt those blessings. But I wonder if that isn't your own fault. In the continuation of the passage of Scripture given above we read that Jesus invites us to take His yoke upon us, and learn of Him, for His yoke is easy and His burden is light. Perhaps you are trying to carry your burdens by yourself, never asking for this help that your Lord has offered you. Try taking the yoke of Christ, and He will help with yours.

Do you have peace in your heart? Hear the words of Paul: "Be careful for nothing; but in every thing by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God. And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus" (Phil. 4:6, 7). The secret of real peace in the heart is in prayer. Don't try to make your decisions in life, no matter how small they may be, without the help of God. He knows best, and if you pray to Him, asking that His will be done, you cannot help but be peaceful. Surely there is much for us in prayer if we will but take advantage of it. Have the "peace...that passeth... understanding" in your heart, gaining it by close contact with God through prayer.

In addition to the peace gained through prayer, we have the peace that we derive from the study and reading of God's Word. This Book, the Bible, is the greatest Book in the world. Just by reading it, you can forget your cares and troubles, and will derive much peace. Try it.

Finally, friends, have you learned the secret of being content? Paul learned it and told us about it. Let us read: "I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content." Glancing briefly through his life we find that the hardships that he underwent were much more painful and terrible than the ones we undergo. Yet he was content, and at the end of his life he could say, "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of rightcousness, which the Lord the rightcous judge, shall give me at that day." He further assures, "And not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."

Think on these things. Heed these words of God. Make your Christianity profitable. If you aren't a Christian, resolve to be one in the very near future.

Diligence in the New Year

Granville B. Leeke, South Bend, Ind.

We face the New Year's advent, As this year's embers die out. Custom should not stale the mind In our being less devout.

The greatest room in the world Is verily, improvement. Whose retains this watchword Will, henceforth, be diligent.

Diligence in God's service Pays the larger dividends; With this great purpose in mind No one needs to make amends.

Dove of Peace

Lucille Brossard, Eden Valley, Minn.

Just recently I picked up the January issue of The American Magazine. The illustrated cover was striking—that of the dove, the symbol of peace. The picture and the thought carried with it, were beautiful, but on this modern, bloodthirsty world that thought has been lost. Strife, hatred, greed, and mad desire have placed it in the background. War in China, war in Spain, continued strife in Palestine and Ethiopia, tortures, murders, kidnapings, robberies, and strikes in countries supposedly at peace, have made peace a dim light in a shadowy background.

Yet in the minds of true Christians, that word is ever present in emblazoned figures, an ultimate aim to be achieved only with the coming of our Savior, when worldly hatred will vanish, and peace will reign eternally.

"Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God" (Matt. 16:16).

Peter's Confession

Our story today tells of Jesus and His disciples along the coasts of Casarea. This city is inland, far up in the north, at the foot of the snowy Mount Hermon. Find it on a Bible map. So that this city would not be confused with another Casarea upon the seacoast, it was called "Casarea Philippi," or "Philip's Casarea," from the name of one of King Herod's sons.

Do you notice that, although this is an inland city, our Bibles read, "When Jesus came into the coasts of Casarea Philippi"? The word "coast" sometimes means a boundary, or region.

There, in that inland, mountainous region, Jesus talked with His disciples. He asked them who the people thought He was. The answers the disciples heard people give were varied, even as they are today. There was no doubt in Peter's heart as to who his Master was, and as he answered our Lord's next question, he said, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Why do you think Peter added the words "living God"? Do you suppose it could be on account of the many idol worshipers of that day?

Peter's confession would not have amounted to a great deal if he had not followed his Master as proof of the words he said. We, too, must not confess only in words. We must have more than knowledge. In 1 John 3:18 we read: "My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth."

There are many lessons for us aside from the study of Peter and his relation to Christ. Try asking the questions as though we were in Peter's place. Then let us study our own lives to discover what kind of followers we are of Christ. As we grow in knowledge and love of God, may we be better examples of true Christians.

Jesus, from this time on, began explaining some of His sufferings and trials to come. Peter loved our Lord and didn't want anyone to harm Him in any way. Peter, in our lesson today, began to rebuke Christ. He said, "This shall not be unto thee" (Matt. 16:22).

Now it was Peter who was being rebuked by Jesus. He told Peter that he did not understand the things of God, but was looking on them from man's viewpoint. What did He call Peter?

Then Jesus said something that showed how He Himself lived, and how He expects us to live. "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me'' (Matt. 16:24). If Jesus had let Peter have his way, He wouldn't have died on the cross to save us from sin, would He?

A Club for All

Will you join my ECE Club? Send me your name, age, address, and tell me what you think the letters ECE stand for. Won't it be fun to see how many of you can guess the correct name?

If you write to me this week you may be counted as first members. The main aim is to study the lessons each week. You do that now, so why not join? Another aim is to help at home, school, and wherever you are, with your smiles and kind deeds.

For Your Scrapbook

Is your scrapbook ready? Save the poems and clippings until you get your book. You most likely can catch up with the others on some afternoon when you are unable to go outside.

Keep watching in The Herald, magazines, and newspapers for material for your books.

For your lesson today draw several disciples grouped around Christ. If you illustrate the golden text, Peter would be kneeling with one hand raised; or in your own original way show that he was saying, "Thou art the Christ." Why not write those words below your picture?

You can find out how men dressed in those days by looking at Bible pictures from your Bibles, Bible story books, or Sunday school papers.

Write a short story, using this title, "What I Can Do for Christ," and paste it in your scrapbook.

Suppose

Suppose the world doesn't please you, Nor the way some people do. Do you think the whole creation Will be altered just for you? And isn't it, my boy or girl, The wisest, bravest plan, Whatever comes or doesn't come, To do the best you can?

-Phoebe Cary.

I'll be looking for your eards and letters; and good-bye now, boys and girls!

AMONG THE CHURCHES

CHURCH OF GOD, RIPLEY, ILLINOIS

Tessa Laning has about recovered the use of her arm. She had suffered a serious fracture of the wrist.

Margaret Cooper Ward, who was operated on recently for appendicitis, is getting along well. She is living in Alexis, Ill., where her husband is a teacher in the high school.

Bro. and Sr. Wilsie McKnight have been with us about four months. We have listened to many splendid sermons. The work is progressing under his leadership.

The Christmas program was given on Sunday evening, Dec. 25, to a full house. The orchestra also made its appearance for the first time this year. Bro. James McLain and family of Burr Oak, Ind., have spent the holidays with home folks. Bro. McLain helped with the musical part of the Christmas program. He also gave a fine sermon to a good crowd on Thursday evening. Dec. 29.

On the evening of December 14-the church held its annual business meeting to elect officers for the coming year. Those elected were: Presiding elder, Lawrence Howell; second elder, J. W. Cooper; deacons, Francis Burnett, Herman Lewis; deaconesses, Mildred Hetrick. Lucille Lewis; deaconesses, and a ferrical function of the Lewis; treasurer, Vena Logsdon; trustee, Fred Paisley. The Sunday school officers are: superintendent, Wayne Laning; assistant superintendent, Lozelle Burnett; secretary, Esther Laning; assistant secretary, Helen Lewis; treasurer, Pheobe Lynd; assistant treasurer, Mary Long; pianist, Hildreth Worley; assistant pianist, Ednah Cooper; librarians, Marjorie Burnett, Shirley Logsdon, Orville Dale Lynd; program chairman, Mrs. Wilsie McKnight.

Loren Burnett, Secretary.

A LETTER FROM BROTHER FOSTER

When I was a young man I was very skeptical of the Bible, but in the study of God's Word I learned of the Bible truths, such as no immortality out of Christ, the second coming of Christ, establishment of the kingdom at His appearing, restoration of Israel to their homeland, and many other truths. I was baptized, when twenty-four years of age, in the all-saving name of Christ, by Bro. N. D. Titchenal, near Spokane, Wash. I moved to Wenatchee to be close to a church that believed in the same things that I did. I served the Wenatchee church as elder for seventeen years. I moved to Cashmere, Wash., and was elder-pastor of the church there for twenty years. During these years in service I have taught and baptized a goodly number into the faith of Jesus our Lord.

During the time I was pastor at Cashmere, was also an evangelist for Washington, and today still hold this last office. I am still preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and intend to, if it be my Lord's will, until I come to the end of the way. I have now served Him thirty-four years. My wife, Cora, and I have nine living children. Six of them have obeyed the Master's call.

We are now opening a new work in the city of Tacoma (604 South 13th St.), with the assistance of a few brethren and friends, whom I have found very faithful, and ready, to support and help in any way they can. We have rented a room, purchased seats, piano, and other furnishings, and have held several services in this new place, with a small crowd of from twenty to twenty-four persons. We have Bible school and preaching services. We hope to grow, as the Lord prospers us. We need the prayers of all the household of faith everywhere, that we might do the Lord's work in this city of 107,000 population.

This brings memories to my mind about the story of Jonah, when he was called to go to the wicked city of Nineveh to preach the gospel, and he tried to get away from God. He went down in the ship, and went to sleep. Finally he was wakened out of his sleep, and to go. We don't want to be that way.

God has laid it upon my heart to work at this place, and I want to be ready and willing to go wherever He calls me to go. I hope and pray that our work here may please Him who has called us out of darkness into His marvelous light. Jesus is soon coming back to make up His jewels for His kingdom. If we want to be jewels there, we must wake out of our sleep, and labor in His vineyard.

Jesus said to Peter, "Feed my lambs."
Again He said, "Feed my lambs." Then again, "Feed my sheep." Are we, dear brethren, hunting lambs and sheep for God, that they may some day become saints in God's kingdom through the belief of the gospel in Jesus Christ our Lord?

Are we like Abraham, looking for "a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God"? With such thoughts before us, let us press forward to the high calling in Christ Jesus, that when He comes we may be accepted in that kingdom. Pray for us that we may be faithful.

Thos. D. Foster, 1602 12th Ave. S.E., Puyallup, Wash,

Gleanings From the Field

It is sad to report the death of Bro. T. J. Ellis of 319 Cutler St., Waterloo, Iowa, where he died suddenly on December 30. He had faithfully served the Church of God for many years, and for several years was treasurer of the National Bible Institution. He was a re-tired foreman of the Illinois Central Rail-

Srs. Louise McRoberts and Julia Ordnung of the Oregon, Ill., church, who are both ill, were cheered with many remembrances at Christmas time, and, being unable to write, herewith send their thanks to those who remembered them.

The brethren at South Bend, Ind., are working faithfully toward the erection of a building. Elders James McLain and J. H. Anderson were their speakers for December 18 and 25, respectively.

On Christmas Day Bro. and Sr. Sidney Jacksaw a double meaning in "unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given." The mother and son are doing well. Congratulations.

The dedication of the rebuilt church at Lawrenceville, Ohio, January 15, will be followed with a series of meetings in which Bro. Grover Gordon, the pastor, will be assisted by Bro. J. W. McLain of Burr Oak, Ind.

An order from the secretary of the Pennellwood Church of God in Grand Rapids, Mich., for baptismal certificates indicates that their pastor, Bro. Ray Abbott, is being blessed with visible results.

Next week's Herald will feature the growing church at Lawrenceville, Ohio.

Grandma Hatch, visiting at the home of the editor, is slowly recovering from an attack of pneumonia.

"The Web Duster" of last week's Herald goes unanswered. Give up?

Bro. Harvey Krogh, Illinois Evangelist, delivered the Christmas evening sermon at Oregon, Ill. Thank you, Bro. Krogh.

Ars. Minnie C. Steffa, for seven years a resident of Golden Rule Home, and who recently went to live with her niece in Tacoma, Wash., was taken to the hospital on Sunday. Dec. 25, and is in very serious condition.

The young people of the church at Tempe, Ariz., are planning to put on "The Challenge of the Cross," which Sr. F. L. Austin directed at our last General Conference.

The widow of the late James W. Wilson, who was president of the Illinois Conference for many years, died December 26 in Chicago.

The Promise of God

By Henry Dauterich (deceased)

"In hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world began; but hath in due times manifested his word through preaching which is committed unto me according to the commandment of God our Saviour."

A PROMISE is an assurance; a purpose expressed; a word pledged. Man may make a promise, but circumstances often prevent him from fulfilling it. But when God makes a promise we can rely on its being fulfilled when due.

The text reads, "In hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world began" (before times eternal, R. V.). "In hope of eternal life." Hope is a firm expectation of things promised; anticipating what is future. The same Apostle who wrote this text, elsewhere defines "hope," saying, "We are saved by hope. But hope that is seen is not hope; for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for? But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience weit for it" (Rom. 8:24, 25).

Thus it is evident that hope pertains to the future. What does a Christian hope for? Our text gives the answer: for "eternal life." On a certain occasion one of the disciples of our Lord said, "Lo, we have left all and followed thee." The Master answered and said, among other things, that they shall receive eternal life in the world to come (Mark 10:30). There are several views held as to "eternal life. Some hold it to be a quality or attribute; a sort of a moral characteristic—an abstract. Others hold it to mean eternal happiness. The latter is the definition given in the lexicon used in the seminaries.

The Bible view is the only correct one. From the Scriptures we learn that it refers to a real, eternal existence in the world to come. The contrary views referred to above are inferred on the supposition of inherent immortality, and have no basis in the Scriptures, which teach conditional immortality.

ETERNAL LIFE THROUGH CHRIST JESUS

God designed to give eternal life through Christ Jesus, our Lord. "The gift" ("free gift," R. V.) "of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom. 6:23). God, in His wonderful plan of salvation, designed to save us through or by Jesus our Lord, His only begotten Son. The supreme Architect designed this plan before the world began, showing that it was of His own free will, as it is written. "According to the eternal purpose which Hè purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord" (Eph. 3:11). Again, "Who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began" (2 Tim. 1:9, 10).

GOD'S PROMISE FULFILLED IN CHRIST

Agreeable to the eternal purpose of God, all benefits and favors toward us were to come through His beloved Son, who is the source of all spiritual blessings (Eph. 1:1-11). Although God predestinated to bless mankind through, or by, or in His Son, it does not necessarily follow that the heavenly blessings will be imposed upon any one. All who will may come into the favor of God, the state of grace, by complying with the conditions. All of God's blessings are free in Christ Jesus only, and out of Christ there is no salvation promised; beside Him there is no Savior (Isa. 45: 21-24; Acts 4:12; Rom. 14:9, 10).

God, who is rich in mercy, designed that all men shall come unto the knowledge of the truth, and have an opportunity to be saved (1 Tim. 2:4-8), and to this end He hath raised up a Savior, even Jesus; hence He is also called the Savior of the world, because He is able and willing to save all who come unto Him. There is no difference between Jew and Gentile in the new covenant. Jesus broke down the middle wall of partition by His death and, since His glorious resurrection, ordained His Apostles to proclaim the glad tidings of salvation (Acts 10:42-48; 13:39-48; 2 Cor. 1:19, 20).

Thus we can understand how God fulfilled His promise, namely, in the resurrection and exaltation of Jesus, in that He raised Him up to die no more (Rom. 6:9), and exalted Him as an omnipotent Savior, having "all power in heaven and in earth." All who acknowledge Him and confess Him as Lord, to the glory of God, to them will He give, at His glorious appearing, an endless existence in the kingdom of God.

This, in substance, is the message which God in His own seasons manifested through the preaching of the gospel, which was committed to the Apostles (Luke 24:47; Acts 1:8; Titus 1:3).

(The foregoing article was submitted by Sister Elizabeth Dauterich of Baltimore, Maryland. She is the widow of the author, Henry Dauterich, whose faith can well be seen from this, his writing.)

TITHING

The great danger to the non-tither is not that his pocketbook will shrink, but that his soul will shrink. Tithing is like prayer—it benefits the giver as much as the recipient. It establishes habits of generosity, responsibility, and self-respect. The fact that it is not required of Christians does not lessen their obligation. Does it not the rather increase it?—M. W. Lyon, Cleveland, Ohio.

"When the Church Builds Evangelism, Evangelism Will Build the Church."

The Let-Down

The holidays are over and we all have a more or less tired feeling that comes after eating too much, sleeping too much, or sleeping too little. Maybe the hustle and bustle of buying and wrapping Christmas presents has almost given you a nervous breakdown.

I hope you are not tired at all and the extra work at this time of year has given you pleasure and the joy that comes from doing things for others.

Now that the new year has begun I hope the "let-down" is of an entirely different nature. You know, you let down the bucket to get a nice, refreshing drink of pure, cold water from the well in the country. The old year has expired; we have been tried, but now we desire new strength and a new refreshing for the days before us.

The Fill-Up

Yes! How we did fill up on the good things during the holidays. Good things? Yes, the candy and nuts, turkey and fruit cake, and the other choice foods! But surely this is not what we are talking of now. The real fill-up is the feast on the Word of God, the mention of Messiah in the Christmas program, the wonder of the star and the blessed fact that God first told the lowly shepherds of the birth of Jesus. Fill-up? We may have been as empty buckets these past few weeks when we were so busy we had little time to think of the real meaning of Christmas.

Now that the rush is over we will find that our lives have been filled with good things when we pause and meditate on the beauty of it all after these nineteen hundred years.

The Pull-Up

After the old bucket is full of cool, sparkling water it is pulled up and then is when it proves its real worth to the weary and thirsty one.

The "pull-up" is the effect that the Christmas season should have upon us. It should lift us to a higher plane than we have ever reached before, nearer to God, "filled with all the fulness of God," touched by His great love.

This is the time when we can do our best, when we can prove our worth. A new year has begun. We are going to make this year better than last year because we will walk closer to our Master.

Our resolutions will be kept with His help and guidance. Our ways will be prospered, for they are His ways. Our hands will be steady, for His hand is upon them.

Who can fail if God be with him? God shall be with you and bless you in this new year if you let Him be your Partner in all your words and deeds and thoughts,

The Month's Question

Does God care more for your ease and comfort than He does for the millions of men, women, and children that are dying without even a knowledge of the Savior?

What are you doing to help those millions to hear the good news of the Savior and God's plan of redemption.

When?

"Now!"

"Why?"

"Because there is no time like the present and the present this time happens to be the first of the new year. This is a good time to start anything that is good and profitable. Especially, would it be a good time to start to tithe. There is no way so easy, so convenient, practical, and profitable as the tither's way."

"Well, I have never felt that I have done much for the Lord, considering His blessings to me, and as I believe His coming will be very soon I am resolved to pay my tithes as well as give an offering to the Lord's service."

Why So Soon?

That was what I thought the other day when I saw a sign in the post office reminding people to start a savings account for next year's Christmas shopping. I can see the advantage of beginning early. You don't miss the small amount that you put away regularly, and it helps you keep your plans in mind.

Why not begin now to think about going to the Illinois Bible School and General Conference next August? If you need to save money to go, now is the time to begin to save. Begin now to plan your work and your vacation so that you may attend the full time.

When Shall Jesus Be King?

The Christ shall reign over the whole earth when He comes again and sits upon the throne of His glory, upon the throne of David, to order it and to establish it with judgment and with justice. But He shall also be King of your life today if you let Him.

He should rule your very thoughts, your words and deeds. If you would have Him be your King in the age to come, He must be your King today.

Are you serving Him as your King?

Obey His commandments, follow in His footsteps, love and serve Him as your King today.

OREGON, ILLINOIS, JANUARY 10, 1939

NUMBER 14

THE REBUILT CHURCH OF GOD, LAWRENCEVILLE, OHIO GROVER GORDON, PASTOR

We rejoice with the congregation of Lawrenceville, Ohio, in the completion of their rebuilt church. The pastor greets you with a message appearing on page 3. Several of the members report this work on page 15. Brother Paul Overholser, a leader of the building program, writes as follows:

"It is my privilege to be a member of the congregation which has recently completed such an attractive church as we have here. This work has been accomplished against great odds, as it had been thought impractical to try to remodel our old building. Then the seemingly impossible happened. Within twenty-four hours it was decided to remodel, and work started early the next morning. We pray that our light may so shine as to be a guiding light to others in our community, and that we may be able to bring others to believe in our Lord Jesus, and be baptized in His name. Now that the new year is upon us, we are making resolutions to actually do the things which we have always just talked about.

"All are invited to our Dedication Services, January 15, and to the meetings following, January 15-29, conducted by Brothers Gordon and McLain."

Preaching the Word

Paul wrote to Timothy, "Preach the word," foretelling the day when people would "not endure sound doctrine." While Paul was educated "at the feet of Gamaliel, and taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers," he never quoted from the great Gamaliel, he never quoted from any of the Hebrew Pharisees, but always used the writings of Moses and the prophets. He said, "My speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, . . . that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God."

Peter said, 'The word of the Lord endureth for ever.' In preaching "the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ," Peter said, "We have not followed cunningly devised fables, . . . but were eyewitnesses of his majesty, . . . when we were with him in the holy mount." Now notice: though Peter had been an "eyewitness," in the mount of transfiguration, of Christ's "power and coming" and "majesty," he said, "We have also a more sure word of prophecy." In short, the Bible prophecy is "more sure" than sight. Sight sometimes deceives. God's Word is positively sure.

James said that Christians are begotten "with the word of truth," and that all should be "doers of the word, and not hearers only."

When Jesus once read from the prophecies of Isaiah, and then preached to the people about the written Word, "all bare him witness, and wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth." There is grace and wonder and blessing in the Word of God; Jesus knew it, and, in pattern for all His true workmen, used the Word of God in His own sermons and conversations.

The most helpful, inspiring, and edifying sermons are those made rich by the Word. The Word will ever accomplish its divine purposes, nothing more, nothing less. The Word, "sharper than any twoedged sword," is better than fiction, better than philosophy, better than history, better than diplomacy, better than sight. "Preach the word." It has not lost its edge.

A Divine Necessity

The Apostle Paul said, "For though I preach the gospel, I have nothing to glory of: for necessity is laid upon me; yea, woe is me, if I preach not the gospel" (1 Cor. 9:16).

When Moses said, "They will not believe me, nor hearken unto my voice," the Lord said, "What is that in thine hand?" The rod of Moses, because it was God's implement, parted the sea, brought water from the rock, and met every need of its time. How much like this will the Word of God suffice when it is used and not despised! "What is that in thine hand?" What is that in your house, on the stand or mantel? If despised and cast to the ground it will cease to bless, but as the rod became a serpent when it was cast to the ground so is there death in the Word to those who cast it from them. Moses fled from the serpent, but God said, "Take it by the tail." Again, "it became a rod in his hand." Try the Word; study the Word; preach the Word, or it "shall judge (you) in the last day" (John 12:48).

The minister's method to win people to Christ is not to frolic with the crowd, but to minister the Word. Today a complex church system all but defeats the primary mission of the church. When burdened by too many duties the Twelve Apostles said, "It is not reason that we should leave the word of God, and serve tables" (Acts 6:2). Hence seven deacons, "men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom," were appointed over "this business." Today the popular minister is often the one who is mixed up with a dozen different tables to serve, while he hardly has time to hear the cry of the hungry, let alone feed them with "meat in due season."

Success of the Word

"The word is gone out of my mouth and shall not return" (Isa. 45:23), "it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it" (Isa. 55:11). "Yea, I have spoken it, I will also bring it to pass; I have purposed it, I will also do it" (Isa. 46:11). Jesus said, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away" (Matt. 24:35). "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly" (Col. 3:16).

With the little chance the Word of God has in this hard-hearted, scheme-cluttered, pleasure-mad world it is manifestly God's blessing upon His own Word that keeps the church an active institution. What other business exists, that is nation- and world-wide, that has so few hours and so small a capital to build from? While we are very sure it is not God's intention to reform the world in this present age, we ask, nevertheless, what voice has moved the world, and produced choice fruit, as the Word of God?

"O Come, Let Us Worship"

By Grover Gordon

"O come, let us worship and bow down: let us kneel before the Lord our maker" (Psalm 95:6).

THE definition of "worship": To prostrate oneself (in reverence) is the outward act; to revere, to feel awe, is the inward feeling; to be pious or devout toward anyone; to act with reverence, respect, and honor.

It seems to be a part of man's nature to worship something. To direct our worship in the right direction we shall examine some of the examples which are given for our instruction, as well as for correction, if we are not worshiping "in spirit and in truth." The Savior said, "It is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve" (Matt. 4:10). Again, a warning is sounded through Jeremiah the Prophet as follows, "And go not after other gods to serve them, and to worship them, and provoke me not to anger with the works of your hands; and I will do you no hurt" (Jer. 25:6).

In spite of these warnings, and many others, people did and still do "worship the works of their hands" (see Isa. 2:8; 46:6-10, and worship in vain, for "in vain they do worship me (how?), teaching for doctrines the commandments of men" (Matt. 15:9). Some worship in ignorance (Acts 17:23), just as the Savior told the woman of

Samaria, "Ye worship ye know not what: we know what we worship: for salvation is of the Jews."

From the foregoing we find it is necessary to know what we worship, in order to be able to "worship in spirit and in truth." Also, we must know something of God's plan of salvation through the "Seed of Abraham," which is "Christ" (read Gal. 3:16), and to know about the nation which sprang from Abraham (the Jews), also the reason why that nation is passing through the time of trouble that we are witnessing today; for, concerning the flesh, Christ came from that nation. (See Rom. 9:4, 5.)

When we see the prophecies concerning this people being unfolded before our eyes, we think of the witness which God gave of Himself, as follows, "Remember the former things of old: for I am God, and there is none else; I am God, and there is none like me, declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure" (Isa. 46:9, 10).

Some people wonder why Jesus said, "Salvation is of the Jews," when the Bible tells how they delivered Him into the hands of wicked men to be crucified (Luke 24:7). But just as Joseph was sold into Egypt by his brethren (they meant it for evil and suffered for it), yet when he made himself known to them, he said, "Be not grieved, nor angry with yourselves, that ye sold me hither: for God did send me before you to preserve life" (Gen. 45:5), and again, "God sent me before you to preserve you a posterity in the earth, and to save your lives by a great deliverance" (Gen. 45:7). Just so, even though the Jews in crucifying their Messiah meant it for evil to Him, God turned it to the salvation of the Gentiles. Paul said, "I say then, Have they stumbled that they should fall? God forbid: but rather through their fall salvation is come unto the Gentiles, for to provoke them to jealousy. Now if the fall of them be the riches of the world, and the diminishing of them the riches of the Gentiles; how much more their fulness?" (Rom. 11:11, 12).

When Jesus returns, and is made known to His brethren (the Jews), and they look upon the One they pierced, they will "mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only son" (Zech. 12:10).

If we can recognize the fact that the Jews are suffering for having denied "the Holy One and the Just," and for killing "the Prince of life," and that through their time of suffering the Gentiles are being of-time of suffering the Gentiles are being offered salvation, then we can have more compassion and sympathy for them. For this very reason the Apostle Paul, who was the Apostle to the Gentiles, writes the following,

"As concerning the gospel, they (the Jews) are enemies for your (the Gentiles') sakes: but as touching the election, they are beloved for the fathers' sakes'' (Rom. 11:28).
Again, "For as ye (the Gentiles) in times past have not believed God, yet have now obtained mercy through their unbelief: even so have these also now not believed, that through your mercy they also may obtain mercy" (v. 31).
Cannot we, then, have mercy on the Jews, knowing that "salvation is of the Jews," and because "we know what we worship"?

Paul said of prophesying that if one came in who was not a believer, and was unlearned, he would be convinced, and falling down he would worship God and report that God was in those prophesying. (1 Cor. 14:24, 25.) This is our evidence that "God is"—the fulfillment of His Word.

This question was asked by Paul, "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him; God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miraeles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according (Please turn to page 11)

The Title of the Workman

By Paul M. Hatch

FOREWORD

THE DEITY has, in times past and in diverse manners, made Himself known unto His man creatures under various names and titles. By those very names and titles He has indicated the particular relationship that they have in themselves. These relationship names have to do vitally with His characteristics. We might say that these characteristic names are His attributes. If, instead of these names being translated into English as they are, they had been transliterated in their original language, it seems that a greater appreciation of the One we worship would have been brought about. For the very word itself would have given men an instant grasp of the relationship that the name implied. As the translation stands, however, we will have to rely, as stated in the introduction on page 9 of THE HERALD of December 6, 1938, upon other sources for our information. It is the purpose of this series of articles to first give the names and titles of the One that Jesus called the Father, with their probable meanings, as gleaned from the various occurrences. Stress will be placed, though, on the first occurrences of the title name. In this way some thought may be acquired that will hold true in any other occurrence of the name title in Scripture. Afterward, the various titles of Jesus Christ will be taken up, and it will be shown how in numerous occasions the names of Jesus have rooted themselves in the names of the Father.

THE WORKER AND HIS WORK

When the title of a worker is mentioned, there is set up in our minds a vision or picture of the work that he performs, or has completed. If the name "farmer" is mentioned, immediately we will see in our mind's eye a plowed field, or a meadow with cows, horses, or sheep knee-deep in the grasses or clover, or some other similar picture relative to a farm. If on the other hand, a carpenter is talked about we immediately receive in our mind a picture of a house, or some other building; an ironmaster, to the smelting process of iron with its attendant pictures, or to some creation made of iron. In like manner, when we think of the universe, and the things around us that were not made with hands, we think—if we are truly religious—of God.

"God" in the English language, however, may mean one of several things. It is used rather loosely. But in the main, the name singles out our conception of the One to be worshiped, because He it is to whom we look for our very existence and sustenance.

In the original language the word used in connection with the creation of the universe is Elohim. This, and no other word, is used for God in the entire story of the creation of the worlds. You will find this story in the first chapter of the book of Genesis, and up to, and including, the third verse of the second chapter. So with an indelible stamp we may assume that wherever the name Elohim occurs it means God in the sense of Creator, and relates to His creations.

The name Elohim is the most common word used for God in the Old Testament, occurring some 2,700 times. Many, no doubt, will wonder why the name is so commonly used since God has long ago completed His creations, for does it not say that He rested from His labors on the seventh day? Yes, it does say that very thing, but after all, is God's creative work completed? Has He made everything that He wishes to make, and turned the world over to man to run as best he can? We hardly think so.

God has created, is creating, and will create. He has created the worlds and earth for the habitation of mankind. (Isa. 45:8, 12, 18.) He is creating a right-minded people, holy and acceptable to Himself. (Eph. 2:10; 4:24.) And He will create a new habitation for His perfected people (Isa. 65:17, millennial), (Rev. 21:1-5, postmillennial).

To demonstrate to those who doubt the almighty power of God (Elohim) to create the physical heavens and earth, some pertinent questions are asked Israel, of whom some were prone to doubt at times His creative ability. Through Isaiah the Prophet in chapter 40, these questions are propounded: 12th verse, "Who hath measured the waters in the hollow of his hand, and meted out heaven with the span, and comprehended the dust of the carth in a measure, and weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance?" 13th verse, "Who hath directed the Spirit of the Lord, or being his counsellor hath taught him?" 26th verse, "Lift up your eyes on high, and behold who hath created these things, that bringeth out their host by number: he calleth them all by names by the greatness of his might, for that he is strong in power; not one faileth." 28th verse, "Hast thou not known? hast thou not heard, that the everlasting God, the Lord, the Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary? there is no searching of his understanding."

To attribute the spanning of the heavens, the suspending of the constellations in the firmament, or the balancing of them, so that "not one faileth" in its association to another, to gods that were represented in graven stone or molded metal is sheer nonsense. That these physical representations of the creative power of God are all-inclusive none but a fool would gainsay or deny. The things that we see should give assurance that these things were arranged by none other than the God that appeared to some of the ancient worthies of His creation. But on the other hand the things that are seen, and appear, are not formed as if a man would take up a mountain of earth, form a ball in his hand, throw it out into space, and there it found its place and station, and began its rotation or other duty, as it was ordained to do. Rather, as we read in Hebrews 11:3, "Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of the things which do appear."

Taking this statement of faith, that through the spoken word of God the things that we see materialized and ar(Please turn to page 11)

Our Reward

By Roy Johnson

WHAT was the main incentive when we started our Christian careers? Did we appreciate what an opportunity it was, or did we just look at it as a very good and cheap eternal life insurance policy?

Reason tells us that if Adam and Eve had obeyed God they would still be living, as they had access to the tree of life whose fruit had life-preserving qualities.

Evidently we started our Christian careers when we realized that we are not in touch with the tree of life, and are subject to death. The Savior aptly questioned, "What shall a man give in exchange for his soul (i.e., life)?" For what will one exchange just a temporary bit of life? We see the force of this question illustrated daily in our newspaper accounts of holdups.

It is evident that life is our most valuable possession, and the condition of being alive eternally seems to have been the "logos" or idea of the Almighty when He began His creation. Man's waywardness has merely made the process take more time. God's plan has not been thwarted.

In Numbers 14:21 (R. V.) we read, "But in very deed, as I live, and as all the earth shall be filled with the glory of Jehovah." This is an expression of God's purpose. When Jesus talked to Martha He called the raising of Lazarus from the dead the "glory of God" (John 11:40). Thus, having the earth filled with living beings who are righteous, with death removed, seems to be the Almighty's ultimate object. If we are to participate in that glory it will have to be of our own choosing. It is better that way, than if we were mere machines, for then there could be no struggle, no crown.

God has provided the way. The Savior has informed us that He came that we might have life and have it more abundantly. (John 10:10). It is hard to even imagine the blessing it will be, to be in possession of eternal life, with no evidence of old age creeping up.

Job 33:25 reads, "His flesh shall be fresher than a child's: he shall return to the days of his youth." Man could not return had he not been there before. Positively, the actual being that grew from childhood to manhood is that which shall be crowned with the more abundant life.

We find this a prominent theme of the early Christians. Paul spoke thus to the persecuting Jews (Acts 13:46, R. V.), "Seeing ye thrust it (the gospel) from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of eternal life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles." Paul knew that he himself fitted in here, as he continued (v. 47), "For so hath the Lord commanded us, saying, I have set thee for a light of the Gentiles, that thou shouldest be for salvation unto the uttermost part of the earth."

And the "Gentiles heard this, they were glad, and glorified the word of God: and as many as were ordained to eternal life believed." We gather from the foregoing that the object of the gospel, or Paul's preaching, was eternal life. Since before they had heard it, salvation had not come to them, and they were still under condemnation, the penalty, "Thou shalt surely die," still applied to them, without a promise of future relief.

However, we read that those who believed the Apostle were glad. To them Paul's message was good news, as it should be to us. It seems as all generations are passing before the Almighty, and when one fits some place in His plans, this one joyfully accepts, and is eager to fit himself or herself for that place, whatever the requirements may be.

Thus the process of creation continues from the time man was first created on the earth, pointing forward to the time when "the glory of Jehovah will be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together" (Isa. 40:5, R. V.).

Our time here is a part of God's plan to bring out from the world a people for His name by growth unto Christ, as the Apostle enjoins us. (Eph. 4:15; 1 Peter 2:2; 3:18.) The outcome of our Christian growth is to be a people for God's own use in ruling the world in the kingdom age.

It is not surprising that our writers call the coming of our Lord with eternal life the "rapture." It is not hard to imagine that happy multitude. No wonder they sing a new song; these we sing now will then be out of date.

Paul well sums up the Christian's reward in his letter to Timothy (2 Tim. 4:8), "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." James also calls this the "crown of life." And in the Revelation the Savior gives us this promise, "Behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be."

Evolution or Christianity

By James A. Patrick

CAN a man believe in evolution and at the same time be a Christian? I shall give you the evidence that I have gathered, and let you make your own decisions.

In this discussion I shall quote mainly from two books, namely, "Evolution or Christianity" by William M. Goldsmith, Ph.D., and "Evolution or Religion" by Alfred Wesley Wishart, D.D. I shall abbreviate as follows: E. C. and Dr. G. for the first named book and its author; and E. R. and Dr. W. for the second book and its author.

Let us examine some of the statements of these two men, as given in their books, for any possible difference between the atheistic evolutionist, and the theistic evolutionist. Each of the two men mentioned in the foregoing professes to be Christian.

In their attempts to account for the solar system as we have it now, the atheist and the theist start from the same point. They both go back to the nubulæ for their starting point. They both believe that natural forces finally brought our solar system out of this nebulous mass, and made it what it is today. The atheist calls these forces, "the forces of nature," the theist calls them, "God." Let me quote a stanza of poetry with which Dr. G. begins a chapter of E.C. on page 32:

"A fire mist and a planet,
A crystal and a cell,
A jellyfish and a saurian,
And caves where cave men dwell—
Then a sense of law and beauty,
And a face turned from the clod;
Some call it evolution,
Others call it God."
(Emphasis the author's.)
—William Herbert Carruth.

Now I quote from E. R. by Dr. W., page 17, as follows: "There is no disagreement among the great scientists of the world concerning the fact of evolution; namely, that at one time this world upon which we live was a nebulous mass, which became more solid as it revolved until the earth as we know it was made. Upon it there was no living thing." This agrees with what Lord Kelvin said, as quoted in my former article.

Again, I quote from page 20 of E. R.: "It is well for us to remember that for centuries upon centuries the theological view was that of supernatural creation which might be called 'manufacturing.' You see at a glance the difference between the making of an automobile and the growth of a plant. One is manufactured from the outside by putting the parts together, the other grows from within. Man, the creator of the machine, stands on the outside of the machine and puts it together. On the other hand, life, or if you please, God, the creator of the plant, resides within the plant and makes it what it is."

While Dr. G. does not come out quite as plainly with his idea of God, I think we can see from the following quotations and the stanza of poetry quoted in the foregoing, that he is in full agreement with Dr. W.

On page 9 of E. C., in speaking of the great scientist,

Pasteur, he says, "Over his tomb in the Institute Pasteur are inscribed these words of his: 'Happy is he who carries a God within him, an ideal of beauty to which he is obedient—an ideal of art, an ideal of science, an ideal of the fatherland, an ideal of the virtues of the gospel.'"

We can see here that to Pasteur and Dr. G. God is simply an ideal.

Now we come to a statement of Alfred Russell Wallace as quoted by Dr. G. on page 55, as follows: "We find that Darwinism does not oppose but lends a decided support to religion; it teaches us that we possess intellectual and moral faculties which we could not have developed but for an unseen Universe of Spirit." Here, as in Dr. W's. statement, life in the plant is God. We see that Dr. G. contends for the same thing—God everywhere and in every thing, but calls it "Universe of Spirit," instead of calling it life, as Dr. W. does.

From page 49 of E. C. I quote Dr. G's, own words: "The vitalistic evolutionist objects seriously to the fundamentalist's conception of this physical God and His carpenter-like methods of creation. The absurdity of the physical 'image of God' is made obvious when we accept the common conception of God as an incomprehensible Being, a Spirit-infinite, eternal, and unchangeable. . . . Is it not much more ennobling to conclude that man is created in the spiritual 'image of God' than to materialize the creator and involve the physical?" (Emphasis is the author's.) Then we turn to page 50, and find these words: "Is it any more degrading to hold that man was made through a long line of animal ancestry than to believe that he was made directly out of dust?" It can be clearly seen that Dr. G. does not believe in a literal interpretation of the first part of Genesis. In fact, he has but little confidence in any Bible statement that does not agree with his theory.

Let us consider what Dr. G. says about man being made in the "spiritual image" of God. I am wondering how, if God is a "Universe of Spirit," God everywhere and in everything, man could be made such an image. Is there anything about the life of a plant of which an image could be made?

I realize that Dr. G's. view is in harmony with that of the most of Christendom. But, is this the Bible idea? What did God mean when He said, "Let us make man in our image"? Was He talking about the man He made out of the dust of the ground? That is the only man He talks about when He is speaking about the creation of man. Let us turn to Genesis 9:6 to see if this text will throw any light (Please turn to page 10)

Thy Kingdom Come

By E. O. Stewart

"After this manner therefore pray ye: Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is done in heaven" (Matt. 6:9, 10).

MEN repeat this prayer with very little thought of its meaning. They believe that the kingdom has come already, and that it is their duty to see that it spreads to every nook and corner of the globe. The church is the kingdom, as they see it, therefore, it is the duty of the church to reform the political condition, and make the world a safe place in which to live. They forget the prayer Jesus taught them to pray, and put their trust in princes, "in whom there is no help" (Psalm 146:4). They pray to such men as Hitler, beseeching him to cease from his atrocities that peace may smile upon the world of mankind. Then when Hitler fails to heed their petitions they ask the armies and navies to settle their difficulties.

We do not say these things with any ill will toward those who desire peace on the earth. But it is their inconsistent claim, that the kingdom has come, and that the church is the kingdom, which we wish to examine.

It is the minister's duty to teach men the gospel, and prepare them for the coming kingdom, instead of trying to reform the kingdoms of the world. The reformation of the kingdoms of this world is to be the work of Jesus Christ and the church after He returns to the earth.

SATAN IS THE GOD OF THIS WORLD

When the Devil took Jesus up into that exceeding high mountain, he showed unto Him all the kingdoms of the world, saying, "All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me" (Matt. 4:8).

Jesus did not dispute the Devil's claim as the possessor of the kingdoms of this world. He admits the truthfulness of this statement in Mark 3:27, in saying, "No man can enter into a strong man's house, and spoil (take) his goods, except he first bind the strong man; and then he will spoil his house."

As Satan is not yet bound, the kingdoms of this world still belong to him, and he will remain in this exalted position as the god of this world, posing as an angel of light, until he is hurled from his heavenly position by Michael. (Rev. 12:7.) After that he will no longer pose as an angel of light, but will assume the role of a roaring lion, having great wrath, for he knows his time is short. (Rev. 12:12, 13.)

After Satan is east out, it is then that a voice is heard in heaven, saying, "Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ:" (Why?) "for the accuser of our brethren is cast down, which accused them before our God day and night" (Rev. 12:10).

When the seventh angel sounds, it is then that the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and His Christ. (Rev. 11:15.)

Then, "Blessed is that servant, whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing. Verily I say unto you that he shall make him ruler over all his goods" (Matt. 24:46, 47).

What is that servant to be found doing when his Lord comes? Is he to be out trying to reform the kingdoms of this world? No! He is to be giving the household of faith "meat in due season" (Matt. 25:45).

That servant, then, becomes ruler over the kingdoms of the world. The kingdoms of this world are the goods, over which Satan is now the ruler. When Satan, the strong man, is bound, the goods will pass into the hands of Christ, who will then give them to His faithful servants as the rulers thereof.

These immortalized rulers shall then inaugurate a system of reformation which shall result in all kings falling down before Him, and all nations shall serve Him. (Psalm 72:11.)

Professed Christianity, in attempting to reform the kingdoms of this world now, are attempting to do the work now, which Christ and the immortalized saints are to do in the world to come. There can be no greater proof of the apostasy of Christendom than this very thing.

Here is exactly where Satan, posing as an angel of light, enhances his deceptive work. To speak against it is next to blasphemy, yet one who studies the Scriptures closely knows we are stating the facts.

The stone cut out of the mountain without hands does not begin on the inside of the image (which represents human governments), and work outward till it reforms them: but it strikes from without, suddenly grinding the image to powder.

May we have the faith in these trying times to put our trust in God, and not in princes in whom there is no help.

Jesus Is Coming

By R. A. Curlis

NO EVENT of the future can transcend in importance the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, "the second time," and "our gathering together unto him." (1 Cor. 1:7; Heb. 9:28; 2 Thess. 2:1.) Those who have heard the "glad tidings"—"the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ," and who have "turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God; and to wait for his Son from heaven," will receive the consummation of their "blessed hope" at that glorious event. (Acts 8:12; 1 Thess. 1:9, 10; Titus 2:13.)

Paul gathers up, combines, and centralizes all the glorious expectations of God's people, from Abel down, and condenses them in a single statement, "For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming?" (1 Thess. 2:19). The Bible associates the premillennial coming of Christ with the "resurrection of the dead." (2 Tim. 4:1, 2; John 5:28, 29.) This will include "both of the just and unjust," but "every man in his own order." (Acts 24:15; 1 Cor. 15:23.)

Note the conversation between Jesus and the sorrowing sisters of Lazarus: "Jesus said, "Thy brother shall rise again. Martha saith unto him, I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day. Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?" (John 11:23-26). I am glad, for that fully covers the needs of His loyal followers. Those that have fallen asleep will need a resurrection, and those "which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent (precede, Diaglott) them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words" (1 Thess. 4:15-18).

"Forever with the Lord,
Amen, so let it be,
Life from the dead is in that word,
"Tis immortality."

"For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself. For whether we live, we live unto the Lord; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord; whether we live therefore, or die, we are the Lord's. For to this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living" (Rom. 14:7-9). With this blessed assurance, I can say, in the language of Paul, "I am not ashamed: for I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day" (2 Tim. 1:12).

The bestowal of crowns will take place "at that day," not to Paul "only, but unto all them also that love his appearing," which is indissolubly linked with "his kingdom." (2 Tim. 4:8, 1; Matt. 25:31-40.) Things of greatest importance should be sought after "first." (Matt. 6:33.) In the conflict between truth and error there is not, and cannot be, any neutral ground, or "no man's land." The Captain of our salvation, who was made "perfect through sufferings," has said, "He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad." (Heb. 2:10; Matt. 12:30.)

The Pharisees and Sadducees desired that Jesus "would shew them a sign from heaven. He answered and said unto them, When it is evening, ye say, It will be fair weather: for the sky is red. And in the morning, It will be foul weather to day; for the sky is red and lowering. O ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times?" (Matt. 16:1-3). It is not with hypocritical pretense that Christians scan with eagerness the signs that a loving Father has placed along life's highway, that they may know how soon their Life-Giver will "appear," for it is "then" that they shall also "appear with him in glory." (Col. 3:3, 4.) They will then have their heirship exchanged for actual possession. (James 2:5; Dan. 7:13, 14, 18, 27.)

"They may tell us of rulers
Ascending the throne,
Amid glory and grandeur
That brilliantly shone,
But a scene far surpassing
Will soon be enjoyed
When Jehovah shall set up
The kingdom of God." (Dan. 2:44.)

James admonishes the brethren, "Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh" (James 5:8). "But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father. Take ye heed, watch and pray: for ye know not when the time is" (Mark 13:32-37). The signs of the times indicate Christ's coming "is nigh, even at the doors"; even as "ye know that summer is near," by the leaves of the budding fig tree. (Mark 13:28, 29.)

Do not be misled into thinking that the signs must be fully completed before Christ returns, as earth's absent Nobleman, "having received the kingdom." (Luke 19:15; Rev. 11:15; Matt. 25:31.) "And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh" (Luke 21:28). I have heard preachers of "another gospel," which is a perverted gospel, say publicly, "Jesus possibly may come sometime, but not in our day; maybe in a thousand years from now." (Gal. 1:6-9.)

The evidence is before us that we are "in the last days," when "scoffers" and "blind leaders of the blind" abound. (2 Peter 3:3, 4; Matt. 15:14; 1 John 4:1.)

Dictatorship, Fascism, and Communism

A Selection by Glen Birkey

DURING the last few years a complete transformation has been taking place in the governing power of the nations. To every close observer of the times, it is manifest that democracy is dying, and two alternative forces are taking its place—dictatorship and communism. Signor Mussolini led the van of the first with his fascist army of Italian black shirts, followed in Germany by Herr Hitler with his army of brown shirts, or "storm troops." Struggles are now taking place in several countries, and ere long we may witness their fateful decision, as to whether they are to have

DICTATORSHIP OR COMMUNISM.

The leaven of Russian godless communism is mysteriously working in numerous directions. It would appear that one or other of these two methods of government will ere long dominate most of the nations.

There is one peculiarity that is possessed by both systems—both have the spirit of dictatorship, but in practice their methods and purposes are worlds apart. One is a personal dictatorship, and so far as Italy is concerned, has the papacy at the back of it. On the other hand, the communist objective is destructive—by means of world revolution to establish the dictatorship of the so-called proletariat into one world union of soviet socialist republics, with the capital at Moscow. This is in curious contrast to Mussolini's "new Roman Empire," or combine of Latin kingdoms—a Roman league of nations with its center at Rome.

Three things specially distinguish communism from fascist dictatorship: (1) communism displays a hatred of God and all forms of religion; (2) it aims at destruction of private property and inheritance; (3) it promotes class hatred by working for strikes, riots, and civil war.

"EUROPE MUST UNITE"

"Europe must unite," said Signor Mussolini, in a significant speech at Rome. The capitalist system as it is known today, he said, was tottering, and must be replaced either by fascist capitalism or by communism. The only answer to communism's challenge was an economic and political alliance between the nations of Europe, which would enable Europe to take into her hands again the rudder of civilization.

Now, as keen Bible students recognize, all this is in line with the working out of Scripture prophecy. It has been well said that "prophecy is history written in advance." "But what," some one asks, "has present politics to do with prophecy? Is it a fancy theory or whimsical stunt to associate the two?" Not at all.

DANIEL'S PROGRAM TO CONTINUE

Notwithstanding all that can be said by unbelieving modernists, we still accept the prophecies of Daniel as divinely inspired and therefore authoritative. Indeed, history has showed this to be so, and as so much of his prophecy has been fulfilled, it is reasonable to expect the program to continue.

Now, it is well known and recognized that Daniel's interpretation of the "image of a man," which Nebuchadnezzar saw in his vision, clearly foretold the four great world empires which were to sway the world-politic from that day until "the time of the end," and history has proved it to be a true prophecy. The head of Gold, the breast of silver, the thighs of brass, and the legs of iron have all been fulfilled successively in the Babylonian, the Medo-Persian, the Grecian, and the Roman dynasties. Of the fourth, Gibbon the historian said: "The empire of the Romans filled the world," and school children read of "The Iron Legions of Rome."

Whether pagan or papal, Rome has always showed its strong "iron" characteristics. Even the symbolic two legs of the image had their fulfillment in the division of the Roman Empire into two halves, the western capital in Rome, and the eastern capital in Constantinople. The western division continued four centuries after the first coming of Christ, and the eastern until 1453, when it was taken by the Turks. But after its "decline and fall," the Roman dominion became further divided, and Signor Mussolini's great ambition to gather the fragments of the Latin nations into one combine is clearly in line with the expected revival of the Roman Empire as the last phase of "the times of the Gentiles."

The seer of Patmos describes, in Revelation, the imperial head of the empire as a beast whose "deadly wound was healed," meaning that it will be restored. The ten toes of the image suggest what may be the future League of Nations, over which the superman of prophecy will preside. The present League is clearly weakening in power and influence, and we may ere long witness the development of a ten-kingdomed Confederacy, with Rome as the leader.

ONE FEATURE OVERLOOKED

Now there is one feature of Daniel's explanation of the great image which is often overlooked. And yet that is one of the most significant things concerning present world politics. Nebuchadnezzar, the head of the Babylonian worldempire, was identified as the head of gold; the Medo-Persian dual kingdom, which succeeded Babylon, was symbolized as the chest and arms of silver; the third great monarchy, the Greco-Macedonian, as the thighs of brass; and the fourth Gentile monarchy as the legs of iron. Instead of the image progressing from the base metal to one more precious, as would be necessary by the theory of evolution, it ran exactly the reverse. When we come to the feet, we find a strained inapposite unity of iron and elay. The process thus ran from the most autocratic government, through its various broadening stages to a mixture in which the challenging. erumbling clay is working with (or against) the strength of the iron.

TWO SYSTEMS SIDE BY SIDE

Here we have clearly the two systems side by side, representing the dictatorship and communism of today working for power, and herein lies the seed plot of a great future struggle. The ten toes of the image indicate the number of rulers (or dictators) who together will supersede the present League of Nations, and probably fulfill the dream of many statesmen for a United States of Europe.

The map of Europe is being gradually revised, and the nations are being brought to conform to Daniel's declaration of ten kingdoms. There was a significant development in this direction when the Little Entente formulated a policy of virtual amalgamation, which simply means that three of the nations in old Rome's territory, Rumania, Jugoslavia, and Czechoslovakia, are on the verge of shrinking into one.

THE APPEARING OF THE ANTICHRIST

All these things indicate that we are in the preparatory stages for the appearing of the Antichrist. We have also reached the period when Christ will call His people to Himself, and the terrible rule of world chaos begins under the "man of sin," through which those must pass who reject today the only Savior of mankind.

The persecutions and terrors of the Antichrist, however, will not be of long duration, for at the moment he expects complete victory in the battle of Armageddon, the Lord Himself will appear with ten thousands of His saints, and, destroying the Antichrist and his supporters "with the brightness of his appearing," the Lord will begin the establishment of His kingdom on the earth—the kingdom of righteousness, equity, and peace.

Thus men of enlightenment who study the prophetic scriptures can observe "the signs of the times" in the realm of politics, and there will doubtless be further progress in the direction we have indicated, in the increase of dictatorship in some directions, and the growth of communism in the others. Soon the call will be heard by true Christians to "meet the Lord in the air," and the Antichrist will be manifested on the earth. Our great need is to be "ripe and ready" for His appearing, and meanwhile to be active in winning others for the Master's kingdom, so that we may not appear before Him empty-handed.

on the question: "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed, for in the image of God made he man." What man? The one that had blood. That is the only man that He is talking about. Please don't anyone say that I said God has blood. I didn't, but I did say that the thing created in God's image had blood. No, I didn't say it either, God said it.

But let us get back to the subject on which we started out—evolution. The foregoing has been given to show that neither of the learned doctors has much confidence in Bible statements.

It will be remembered that Dr. W. said that there was no life upon the earth when it had settled down, ready to receive life.

Dr. G. dodges the question of the beginning of life in a chapter of E. C., on page 52, in which is this subhead, "Origin Is Not Evolution." In this chapter he lightly passes over the origin of things by telling something with which we are all familiar, namely, the development "of our large domesticated porker" from the "wild hog." The good Doctor forgets that such development could not have come about, but by the help of man. And his theory is spoiled by the fact that, if the "large domesticated porker" were turned out to shift for himself, he would soon become "wild hog" again. So, even after man helps nature to develop the fine porkers, nature alone cannot keep them that way. If nature cannot keep them fine porkers after man has helped her develop them, how could she ever develop them into fine porkers without man's help?

Dr. G. will not discuss origins, and Dr. W. does not tell us how life came to be on a globe, "upon which there was no living thing."

Henry Drummond, F.R.S.E.; F.G.S., in his "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," tells of a Dr. Bastian who made "elaborate experiments on the Beginning of Life." Then Prof. Drummond comments as follows: "Stated in his own words, his conclusion is this, 'Both observation and experiment unmistakably testify to the fact that living matter is constantly being formed de novo, in obedience to the same laws and tendencies which determine all the more simple chemical combinations (Beginnings of Life)." Then Prof. Drummond says, "This announcement called forth a phalanx of observers, and the biggest authorities in Diological science engaged themselves afresh upon the problem." Then after discussing the work of this "phalanx of observers" he says, "These experiments have positively closed the question... So far as science can settle anything, this question has been settled.... Huxley categorically announces that the doctrine of biogenesis, or life only from life, is 'victorious along the whole line at the present day.' And even while confessing that he wishes that the (Please turn to page 15) ranged themselves into the marvelous machine that they are, what a stupendous monstrosity of faith the idolater must have to believe that they came to be through some ingenuity of the gods of stone and metal!

However, on the rock of faith the spiritual creation of God is founded. The nucleus of this creation is in Christ Jesus. He was truly God's spiritual creation, in that His spirit bore witness to the spirit of God which brought forth spiritual fruit. In Christ, God created His spiritual creation; for we read in Colossians 1:16, 17, these words, "For by him (Christ) were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him: and he is before all things, and by him all things consist."

Of the things mentioned that Christ is the author and creator of, not one concerns the physical earth or heavens, but to spiritual positions in His prepared assembly and kingdom, and by His own sacrifices and offerings has arranged the creation of a people to fill these spiritual offices of His church and kingdom. "For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them" (Eph. 2:10).

The spiritual creation which begins in Christ Jesus ends in the prepared people to bear His name in the world, through calm and storm, through days of growth and days of adversity in the church. He promised that He would go to the Father to prepare a place for them, and also to come again, and receive them unto Himself that where He is they may be also. (John 14:3.)

The places that He is preparing, in the sense of creating, are, no doubt, thrones, dominions, principalities, and powers (that is, positions of authority), for those who are His, created unto good works. "It is a faithful saying," says the Apostle Paul to Timothy, "For if we be dead with him, we shall also live with him; if we suffer, we shall also reign with him: if we deny him, he also will deny us" (2 Tim. 2:11, 12).

This leads us to the next creative step: the establishment of these thrones, principalities, dominions, and powers, His coming again, and the establishment of His kingdom. In this we are assured that His retention in the heavens is "until the times of restitution of all things, . . . spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began" (Acts 3:19-21).

"O COME, LET US WORSHIP"

to his own will?" (Heb. 2:3, 4). I will let Jeremiah answer that question for you. He says, "This evil people, which refuse to hear my words, which walk in the imagination of their heart, and walk after other gods, to serve them, and to worship them, shall even be as this girdle, which is good for nothing" (Jer. 13:10).

Some will perhaps say, "That was written to Israel," which is true, but Paul tells us, "For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the scriptures might have hope" (Rom. 15:4). Again he says, "Now all these things happened unto them (Israel) for ensamples (examples, or types, margin): and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come. Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest be fall" (1 Cor. 10:11, 12).

To those who are without Christ, "having no hope and without God in the world," and who are "strangers from the covenants of promise," I would say with the Psalmist, "O come, let us worship, and bow down: let us kneel before the Lord our maker." I ask that you heed the call of the Master, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly of heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light" (Matt. 11:28, 29).

To those who are of the "household of faith" (Gal. 6:10), and "heirs according to the promise" (Gal. 3:29), and "children of God" by baptism into Christ (Gal. 3:26, 27), I would call to mind this admonition by the Apostle Paul, "Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; (for he is faithful that promised;) and let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works: not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching" (Heb. 10:23-25).

It certainly looks as though "The Day (is) approaching," as we see God's Sign People (Israel) fleeing at the rebuke of one and of five, casting its beam across the horizon as a beacon light. (See Isa. 30:15-19.) Therefore, the following advice from the pen of the Apostle will never be more fitting than now, "And that, knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep: for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. The night is far spent, the day is at hand: let us therefore east off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armour of light. Let us walk honestly, as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenness, not in chambering and wantonness, not in strife and envying. But put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make not provision for the flesh, to fulfill the lusts thereof" (Rom. 13:11-14).

A Crippled Hand

"For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all members of that one body, being many, are one body: so also is Christ. For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit. For the body is not one member, but many."

The above words, taken from 1 Corinthians 12:12-14, are words that have been more or less familiar with me for a good while. I can remember several occasions when I have used them in an article or a sermon. However, their significance was never so vivid to me as they are now. The other day, while trying to start my ear, the crank slipped out, and sprained my right hand and wrist. Since then I have been forced to use my awkward left hand to perform the duties of both it and the injured member. I find it impossible to drive my car, eat properly, write longhand, tie my shoes, or do any of the things that are ordinary routine of life. All because of the inability of one member of my body to perform its duty!

Paul, in this 12th chapter of 1 Corinthians, is comparing the body of Christ, that is, the church, to the physical body. The body of Christ, he says, also has many members, and unless every member is functioning properly the Christbody cannot do its work as it should. My body cannot say to my injured right hand, "I have no need of thee," for all members of my body are slowed up in their work because of it. So is the body of Christ, for it needs the cooperation, and work, of every member. The gifts that are given to the members of the Christ-body differ. Some are particularly suited to Sunday school work, some understand young people much better than others, and can do more with them. Others are musical, and sing in the choir or play the piano. There are still others who have no particular talents, but may always be found in their accustomed places at worship. Let any of these forget their duties, or neglect them even once, and the church work will suffer. The church body, even as our human body, needs the cooperation of each and every member or it cannot survive.

This message of Paul is to the Corinthian church, and to the called out church, the body of Christ. It can equally be applied to our own church organization. Members of the Church of God of the Faith of Abraham, everywhere, cooperate in the great work that lies before us. From your local organization to the National Bible Institution—cooperate. When the Sunday school superintendent asks you to do something for the school, do it! If Brother Magaw asks you to do your bit in contributing articles to The Restitution Herald, do it! If an appeal is made for monetary support of the work, and you are able to contribute to the Lord's work, do it! If you can do none of these things, be sure that you regularly attend services. Your pastor will very much appreciate that.

Let us remember, then, that even as our body needs every member to function properly, so does the body of Christ. Don't be a crippled hand!

Faith

By Mary Richardson

Faith is a very vital force in the life of the human race. We have faith in our own ability, in each other, hecause of previous things. Unless we have faith, life is very miserable indeed.

Abraham is known as the father of the faithful. (Rom. 4:1, 12, 16.) He had a living faith. He desired to obey the call of God, and went, not knowing where God was leading him. This made his faith all the more apparent. Faith and obedience guided the life of Abraham. The evidence of faith is works. In Hebrews 11:1 a clear definition of faith is given.

A person never knows how strong his faith is until it is severely tested. Those trials reveal our faith, its quality and amount. Peter was found to be weak in the judgment trial. "From that time many of his disciples went back, and walked no more with him." Jesus' sayings brought out the weakness of faith in many of His followers.

In Matthew 8:10 will be seen, in the centurion, an example of outstanding faith. The begging blind man was given his sight, because of his faith. (Luke 18:42.)

If one has a knowledge of the truth, and doesn't live up to that knowledge, then there isn't any faith in his life, and possibly if he has any, it is at least a dead faith. Those who have been in the way of the Lord, and then turn back to evil ways of living, have a dead faith. (2 Thess. 2:1-3; James 2:17.)

Our obedience is the test of our faith. May we be found faithful when the Master shall return.

The ECE Club

The "Truth-Tellers" classmates were on their way after morning worship services.

"Isu't it fun that we all are invited to David's birthday dinner?" laughed Stella Rose.

At the dinner table when all were beginning to feel rather comfortable (and who wouldn't after a lovely dinner of chicken and noodles?), Margaret spoke as the group grew quiet, while waiting for Dave to finish serving them with ice cream, "Will some one tell me what you remember of the sermon today?"

"There was something about doorposts," said Bill.

"And something about gates," added Joe, "but I can't recall what was said about them."

"Well, let's ask Dave's mother," suggested Peter. And that was the way they left it as they began eating their birthday cake and ice cream.

"We'll all help do the dishes," whispered Jack to his classmates. So, soon the dishes were finished.

"Now, please, Mother," said David, "Come in and help us about those posts and gates."

"First of all," said Mrs. White, "I'll read about them from Deuteronomy." (Read Deut. 11:18-21.)

Joe began, "O! it's God's words we're to write in our hearts and ——"

"On the doorposts and gates," finished Peter.

"I know it does help to have something of our Lord written where we can see it often," said Mrs. Waite. "See my mottoes!" she pointed as she spoke.

"'God Bless Our Home'; 'Christ is the unseen guest at every meal, a silent listener to every conversation'," read the children.

Mother White explained, "There's one in the library which reads, 'Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth' (2 Tim. 2:15). That helps remind us to study our lessons."

"Let us form a club!" Margaret announced. "We'll study our lessons every day, if possible, with both Mother and Father, at least part of the time; and alone sometimes, also."

Joe said, "What shall we name our club? We'll have mottoes on our walls, too."

Grace, quietly listening as usual, suggested, "How is Everyday Christian Expression Club," for a name?"

Peter nearly shouted, his usual keen interest bubbling over, as he said, "And we'll abbreviate it to the ECE Club, and keep others guessing. Perhaps they'll want to join if we have them guess what our club initials mean."

"Those are splendid ideas," agreed Mrs. White, "and I have one more aim for you. It is an easy one. You already have lived up to it today when you all helped do the dishes. That is to try to help others every day, too."

"Thank you, Mrs. White, we'll include that one, too. Grace, will you do the writing for us?" asked Stella Rose, our class president.

Scrapbooks

There are many kinds of scrapbooks. I do hope you will keep the kind of a scrapbook that will help you to become a fine Christian.

If you made your book of oilcloth, and haven't many pages, then I suggest you use mostly class materials.

Choose your picture to draw, to represent the transfiguration scene. One often sees pictured Jesus standing between Moses and Elias, mountains in the background, and Peter, James, and John, kneeling in the foreground, and bent over, almost upon their faces.

Here is a poem to help the girls be good ECE Club members. If you want the other verses, send for them. There are six.

"O, Mother, have you seen my hat? It's nearly half past eight; I thought 'twas earlier than that,

I'm sure I shall be late."

Now, can this little girl be you?

A Cordial Welcome

Grover Gordon, Pastor.

SOUTHLAWN PARK CHURCH OF GOD Grand Rapids, Michigan

At eight o'clock Christmas evening, in the Godwin High School, this church presented to the community the pageant "The Holy Naunder the direction of Miss Evelyn Barr. The choir gave a beautiful interpretation of the spirit and sacredness of this occasion. The pantomime was under the direction of Miss Mary Newell, and included a cast of twenty young people. At the close of the program Bro. Marsh pronounced the benediction, and the activities of this church on Christmas Day were brought to a fitting close.

Bros. Arlen Marsh and Robert Hardesty of Oregon, Ill., spent the Christmas week-end with Arlen's parents, Bro. and Sr. G. E. Marsh. Arlen also returned for New Year's Day.

The church annex was the scene of an enjoyable party on New Year's Eve. The affair started at nine o'clock with games, and later a lunch was served. At 11:30 a devotional service was held, with short talks being given by Srs. Doan and Siple, and Bros. Marsh and Siple, the preeminent theme being a review of the old year, and a hope for the new. With the church bell tolling out its good-by to a year gone by, and its song of welcome to the beginning of a clean, new year, the benediction was pronounced by Bro. F. E. Siple, and the members went to their homes with a new-born hope and faith in the work that lies ahead.

Sunday morning, Jan. 1, 1939, the worship hour was devoted to a consecration service, at which time the new church board was officially installed. The title of Bro. Marsh's sermon was, "We Tear the Last Leaf From the Calendar of 1938."

On December 18 the church here had the privilege of listening to Dr. O. R. Jenks of Aurora College. Both morning and evening a good sized crowd was present while Bro. Jenks broke the Bread of Life. We all felt that it was a time of refreshing and of being built up in Christ.

Tuesday we took Bro. Jenks to Eden Valley, where he had been some fifty-four years before. In the evening he gave a very inspiring message to the brethren there. It was good to have Bro. Jenks with us, and we invite any others who will strengthen us in faith to speak from our pulpit.

Christmas Eve a number of the young people were out carol singing. After visiting a number of homes we were served refreshments at the home of Bro. and Sr. Carolton Hoskins,

On Christmas morning each of the Sunday school classes gave scriptures relating to Christ's first coming, His birth, and His second coming. Although it was an old story to some, it comes each time with new life, because He lives.

Christmas evening witnessed a very inspiring program, "The Light of the World." It made us feel, more than ever before, our responsibility to the One whose birthday we C. E. Lapp, Pastor. were celebrating.

OUR SOUTHERN TRIP

We plan to start our evangelistic trip South on January 3. The first stop will be at Marshall, Ill., where we will be glad to greet all the brethren Tuesday night, the 3rd.

The second stop is Eldorado, Ill., where meetings are planned for Wednesday, Jan. 4, over the following Sunday. We trust that all who reside in that district will make it a point to attend these services, and give a real boost to the Eldorado church. The writer had the pivilege of conducting several series of meetings which led to the construction of our building at Eldorado, and now looks forward with joy to meeting again the dear ones of several years past.

Our trip then points to Louisiana, the old boyhood home, and the two churches where Bro. Harry Goekler is doing such a splendid pastoral work. Meetings are to be held at both churches, beginning at Blood River on Wednesday, Jan. 11. We anticipate the whole-hearted cooperation of these Louisiana brethren during the meetings with their churches. The writer also looks forward to seeing many old friends and relatives, including his aged mother.

Mrs. Siple plans to make the trip, also, and following the Louisiana meetings we hope to visit her old home at Citronelle, Ala., and her parents, Bro. and Sr. J. S. Lyon.

Later it may be possible to make a western trip, and we will welcome communications from places that would wish us to stop. One invitation, from Kansas, is already here. Address all correspondence to 140 Celia, S. E., Grand Rapids, Mich.

Gleanings From the Field

Bro, and Sr. J. H. Williams of Rochelle, Ill., celebrated their fifty-fourth wedding anniver-sary on Sunday, January 8, 1939. Both were in their regular places at Sunday school and church on that day.

Sr. Alice V. Blakesley of Bellingham, Wash., writes that she has now received enough help to secure an "Invalid's Easy Lift," which will greatly help to make life cheerful for her.

Sr. Olive Wood has returned to Golden Rule Home after an extended visit with relatives at Sugar Grove and Aurora, Ill.

Bro. Howard Goodwin of Emerald, Wis., immersed by the editor fifteen years ago, writes, "Buddy (Bro. Goodwin's 13 year old son) always says he's going to be a minister." We pray the lad may attain his goal, Sr. Leona Marsh of Cleveland, Ohio, spent the Christmas season with her parents, Bro. and Sr. F. L. Marsh of Oregon, Ill.

Word has been received that Mrs. Minnie Steffa, a former resident of the Home, died at Tacoma, Wash., on Tuesday, Jan. 3.

Two of the elders of the Oregon, Ill., congregation, Bros. George Siple and Ben Carpenter, will have articles in next week's Herald.

Miss Gertrude Huntley of Coleraine, Minn., who was one of our high school teachers, visited with the editor and family on January 5.

Bro. A. E. Griffiths of Cleveland, Ohio, is preparing "several articles on The Coming of Christ." The first will appear in the next issue of The Herald.

LETTERS FROM LAWRENCEVILLE, OHIO

"I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord" (Psalm 122:1). After meeting in private homes for seven weeks we were all thankful when the church was completed so we could hold our services in it. We are grateful to Bro. Finch and Sr. Hartman, also Bro. and Sr. Paul Overholser, for opening their homes for services while the church building was being remodeled. We ask our heavenly Father to guide us as we take up the new work here, for without Him we can do nothing. "Let brotherly love continue" (Heb. 13:1), as it is here, for the Savior said, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."—Mrs. Inez Gordon.

"And they that know thy name will put their trust in thee: for thou, Lord, hast not forsaken them that seek thee" (Psalm 9:10). Putting our trust in the Lord, we have undertaken a great work in this community and know that God will not see us fail. It is our aim to spread the "glad tidings of the kingdom," and to lead others that they may seek and know the Lord.—Mrs, Clark Ballentine.

We are now enjoying our recently remodeled chapel, which we had hoped and prayed for. Knowing that "the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also," we decided, with God's help and the hearty cooperation of all members, to make a start, and our fond hopes are becoming realities. The basement is completed, a new furnace is installed, so our floor is comfortably warm—thanks to Bro. A. J. Hoke of Dayton who installed it. Our chapel will soon compare favorably with others of our faith, for which we are very grateful. We pray God's continued mercy toward us. Pray for us, that the efforts of our pastor, Grover Gordon, may be crowned with success.—Mrs. Belle Hartman and L. M. Fineh.

I feel like saying, "Come and see what the Lord has done!" For with His blessing and the cooperation of the brethren, though few in number but strong in faith, we went to work to change our old "schoolhouse" into what you now see, and we feel with much joy that our labor has not been in vain in the Lord, and that others may see our good works and glorify our Father in heaven. Let us all press forward "toward the mark for the prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus" our Lord.—Mrs. Margaret H. Poole.

"Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." Come, study with us; let us rightly divide the truth on each Tuesday evening. God wants workmen who are not ashamed to recognize Him. If you just want to listen, come Sunday morning or evening, and hear the Word as presented by our able pastor, Grover Gordon.—Clark Ballouting

We are grateful that we have been given the opportunity to improve our place of worship and to have secured the services of such an able pastor as Elder Grover Gordon. We have great hopes for the future growth of our church, and pray God's blessing on our efforts. Did not Christ command His disciples to go "into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature"? Ought not we, then, do our very best to bring the good news to the community in which we live, and not hide our light under a bushel? "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."—Mrs. Helen Overholser.

The Apostle Paul said, "All scripture is given by inspiration of God." Surely Bro. Magaw was inspired when he said to us in his last sermon that we needed and should have a preacher of our own. Those words inspired our younger brethren to get to work, and how they did work, for it meant a new church building. The result of their good work may be seen on the front page of this Herald. With our own preacher, Bro. Gordon, God's blessing to us, we hope to let our "light so shine before men, that they may see (our) good works, and glorify (our) Father which is in heaven."—Miss Manie L. Kauffman.

EDEN VALLEY, MINNESOTA

Our Christmas program, composed mainly of a pageant, was well attended, as were the morning worship services on Christmas Day. We feel that our church grasped the realmeaning of Christmas.

Mr. Clarence LeMasurier has been at Miller's Hospital in St. Paul for some time, receiving treatment. Mr. LeMasurier is a son-in-law of Bro. and Sr. W. F. Hoskins, faithful members of the Eden Valley church. We are glad to report that he is improving.

Sr. I. Wood, one of our faithful senior members, has been ill for some time, having recently returned home from a hospital in Paynesville. Sr. Wood will appreciate your prayers for her, and a greeting addressed to her at Eden Valley would be welcomed.

The church here regrets very much the death of Mrs. George Hoskins. Our sympathy goes out to the family. A son, Orrin, will be remembered by many in attendance at the General Conference in 1936, Bro. Orrin Jenks, accompanied by Bro. and Sr. C. E. Lapp and Bro. and Sr. Charles Thoms, visited with old friends here recently, and spoke to a representative group of the brethren. We very much enjoyed his inspiring words, and invite him to stop whenever he is in this community.

Gerald L. Cooper, Pastor.

evidence were the other way, Tyndall is compelled to say, 'I affirm that no shred of experimental testimony exists to prove that life in our day has ever appeared independently of antecedent life.''

But for the sake of argument let us grant that life can be spontaneously generated. "Tracing the physical history of the earth backwards on strict dynamic principles," said Lord Kelvin, as quoted in my former article, "we are brought to a red hot globe." Atheists would laugh at the mere mention of miracles, and yet, they ask us to believe in one of the greatest of miracles: the spontaneous generation of life from dead matter in which there is no element of life of any kind, because according to their own claim, this matter came from a "red hot globe."

But going back to the theist's argument, and in order to cover every phase of the question of creation, let us grant again for the sake of the argument, that the original soil could have had plant life in it.

With all the elements that go to make up plant life in the soil, nature could never produce the simplest plant cell. Why? Because wood fiber, chlorophyl, and the carbohydrates are not found in the soil, air, or water. "But," I hear some one say, "the elements that go to make up wood fiber, etc., are in the soil, air, and water." Very true. But where, how, and when does nature combine these elements into the ones that go to make up the plant? In the plant, of course. Can nature produce wood fiber, etc., anywhere but in the plant? No. Then the plant is the factory where these things are made. A factory must be complete in every detail before it can begin to produce. Therefore, the following is the only scientific explanation of the formation of a plant: "These are the generations of the heavens and of the earth when they were created, in the day that the Lord God made the earth and the heavens, and every plant of the field before it was in the earth, and every herb of the field before it grew" (Gen. 2:4, 5). The same thing is true of animal life. Nature cannot, and never could, produce the simplest animal cell. So then, the following is the only scientific explanation of the formation of animal life: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul" (Gen. 2:7).

"Home, Sweet Home"

Provided by the love and sympathy of the entire brotherhood of the Church of God, Golden Rule Home assures to the members of its Family the comfort, security, and solicitous care which the word "home" always suggests.

Here the anxieties of earlier and more active life are laid aside forever. No threat of eviction for non-payment of rent or taxes or other indebtedness troubles the hearts of the residents of Golden Rule Home!

No doctor or hospital bills, no grocery, coal, or light bills to be met the first of the month, bring fear to the minds of the Golden Rule Home Family!

All such obligations and burdens are taken from the shoulders of these older ones immediately upon their entrance into the Home and are carried thereafter by the Golden Rule Home itself, which is amply able to bear the load on their behalf.

A hearty Christian welcome awaits all who seek the protection and lifelong support the Home provides.

Is Baptism Necessary for Salvation?

By George M. Siple

"Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved."

BAPTISM may seem to many as a threadbare subject. I am not egotistic enough to think that I can bring anything new out of God's storehouse of knowledge. I only wish to rehearse a few of the fundamental truths regarding this sacred ordinance.

Following belief and repentance the next important step toward salvation is baptism. Jesus says, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned" (Mark 16:16). This would indicate that none of those who fail, for any reason, to obey the plain teaching of Jesus regarding baptism could expect to share any part with Him in His future kingdom. Jesus the Christ was Himself baptized of John in the Jordan River, thus setting the example for us to follow in His steps. "And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water" (Matt. 3:16).

"Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection" (Rom. 6:3-5).

"In whom (Christ) also ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ: buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead" (Col. 2:11, 12).

We see from the foregoing references that baptism is referred to as a planting, a burial, and a resurrection. When we plant anything it is completely covered, or it would not be very likely to grow. When a person is buried in water, he must be completely covered by the water in which he is buried.

The meaning of the word "baptize," as usually given, is "to dip, plunge, or immerse in water." It is impossible for us to conceive how a small amount of water sprinkled or poured upon the head, as is often done, could properly represent a planting, a burial, or a resurrection. After one is planted or buried in the water he comes forth from the water a new creature, typifying the actual resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead.

"As many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ... And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise" (Gal. 3:27, 29). We can see from these verses how important it is to be baptized, as it is only by yielding our will to God's will, through obedience to the many commands given in the Scriptures, that we can obtain redemption from all past sin:

"For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit" (1 Cor. 12:13);

"Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new" (2 Cor. 5:17);

"The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us . . . by the resurrection of Jesus Christ" (1 Peter 3:21).

Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews, came to Jesus to learn the way of life. "Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God" (John 3:5). These are very positive words coming from the lips of the Muster.

We read in Ephesians 4:5, "One Lord, one faith, one baptism." This verse plainly states that there is only one baptism. In John 3:23 we read, "And John also was baptizing in Aenon near to Salim, because there was much water there." This verse (Please turn to page 10)

EDITORIAL

The Restitution Herald was entered as second class matter, October 16, 1911, at the Post Office at Oregon, Ill., under act of March, 1879.

Sydney E. Magaw, Editor Two Dollars per Year Paul C. Johnson, Associate Editor

"A Convenient Season"

Preaching to Felix "concerning the faith in Christ," Paul "reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come." Paul, twice a prisoner (to Rome, but more to God), wasted no words in tactful introduction, but launched his message as for the rescue of a soul at sea.

"Felix trembled"! What an insight this affords of the power of Paul's preaching. Positively, Paul's message carried conviction. There could have been none of the itdoesn't-make-any-difference attitude in this sermon. The pomp of Felix wilted before "the faith of Christ" of Paul. This Paul had "fought with beasts at Ephesus," and though opposed by the coppersmith, "was delivered out of the mouth of the lion." As Paul and Felix faced each other, the one called "prisoner" was surely the less shackled of the two. With Rome soon to pass judgment, not Paul, but "Felix trembled," because of the "judgment to come."

Stirred, yet not repentant, his own flesh trembling against him, Felix said to Paul, "When I have a convenient season, I will call for thee." Now, while Felix often "communed with him," Paul refused to sell! "Felix, willing to show the Jews a pleasure, left Paul bound." The "convenient season" never came! . . "The sluggard will not plow by reason of the cold; therefore shall he beg in harvest, and have nothing." For some people the water is always too cold, the "convenient season" never comes.

Winter Baptisms

Winter baptism, like tithing, is robbed of its glory by those who fear to try. Some of the most faithful members of the Church of God were buried in the water where walls of ice more clearly symbolized the tomb.

It is true that in Palestine, where baptism was first commanded, the weather is not severe, but another objection of similar force was there overruled. That Jordan was muddy was no excuse, but it rather intensified the test, and hence its worth.

But at its worst, the test is not so hard. When the ice, regardless of its thickness, is cut away, the water will register 32 degrees. One person obeys, to typify his faith in the buried and risen Lord, and by this faith his sins are washed away. Another stands aloof. One enters the water, let us say, at 32 degrees. The other one says, "No," or "Some more convenient season." How often is the outside air even colder than the water down under the ice! Which of the two will tremble like Felix, out in the cold?

If the water must be so comfortably warm, the songs so perfectly sung, if the minister must not get wet, and the watchers be only a few, if baptism is changed to all sham and the death and burial are all lost, where, oh! Church of God, will our converts go when the cross grows heavy or cold? If our baptisms are flimsy our members cannot be strong. How well does the sprinkling of babies typify the Christianity (?) of our day!

"Ye Are Circumcised"

Abraham "received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith," and he is the "father of circumcision" to true Christians "who also walk in the steps of that faith." (Study Rom. 4:1-3, 11, 12.) The seal of circumcision was a daily reminder to Abraham that he belonged to God, and dared not glory in his own flesh or works. The seal, stamped in blood, was a cutting off, and symbolized a denial of the things of the flesh in which he could not glory before God.

Baptism is the Christian's scal. "Ye are circumcised ... by the circumcision of Christ: buried with him in baptism" (Col. 2:11, 12). Further, by being baptized with Christ, one becomes a member of the family of the faith, of which Abraham was father, and to whom the gospel was first preached. "Abraham believed God, and it was accounted to him for rightcousness. Know ye therefore that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham. And the scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed" (Gal. 3:6-8).

"As many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ" (Gal. 3:27). Warned by Paul, but not warmed by the atoning garments of Christ, Felix had no covenant relationship with Abraham or the family of the faith, and thus had good cause to tremble. "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise" (v. 29). Now God promised Abraham not a home in heaven, but "the land of Canaan" (Gen. 12:1, 5, 7), "to inherit it" (Gen. 15:7), later the promise included "this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates" (Gen. 15:18), and still later the promise enlarged until Abraham "should be heir of the world" (Rom. 4:13).

The Coming of Christ

By A. E. Griffiths

THERE is no subject of more vital interest to true believers than the coming of Christ. It is the very essence of the truth, and is, in fact, the only hope we have of escaping from the present unrest of the world. The words of Luke 21:26 are surely coming to pass, "Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken." We are all anxious to know when this great event will take place, and the surest way to ascertain this is to study the signs given in the Scriptures, rather than the chronological prophecies.

There has been a great divergence of opinion about the date of His return, and many mistakes have been made. In 1842 the Millerites sold their belongings, and waited for a certain hour, but that hour did not bring Christ. Hence, they lost their hope, and also their worldly goods. Again, in 1914 Pastor Russell prophesied Christ's return. In that year the world war broke out, and again Christ failed to put in His appearance. To patch up the miscalculation, it was claimed that Christ did come, and that He is now ruling in the air. This, unfortunately, did not harmonize with the doctrine that Pastor Russell had been teaching, namely, that eternal life depended upon a resurrection from the dead. So he had to invest his followers with immortal souls, that they could be present with Christ in the air, instead of on solid earth.

Seeing the errors of those who have made these false predictions, let us avoid these mistakes, and look for signs rather than dates.

When Jesus was on earth the Pharisees and Sadducces asked Him for a sign. "He answered and said unto them, When it is evening, ye say, It will be fair weather: for the sky is red. And in the morning, It will be foul weather to day: for the sky is red and lowring. O ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times?" (Matt. 16:2, 3). These sects were the religious people of Christ's day, and although He was present among them, they did not recognize Him as their Messiah. Let us not be blind as they were.

The solution to our problem will be found in Europe. When God started this world He began east of Jerusalem, near the River Euphrates, and He will complete His program in that same part of the earth. The whole of His plans are of a progressive nature, and nothing is done for spectacular effect. When the Pharisees asked Christ "when the kingdom of God should come, he answered them and said, The kingdom of God cometh not with observation (margin, with outward show)" (Luke 17:20).

This policy agrees with present conditions. If the kingdom had been set up one hundred fifty years ago, it would have been exceptionally spectacular, but how many of the things that will be in common with the kingdom we enjoy in a modified form.

We read in Daniel 12:4, "Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." This scripture has certainly been fulfilled during the last one hundred fifty years. Prior to that period there were no steam trains, steamships, turbines, electric transportation, electric light, radio, telegraph, telephone, all kinds of electric appliances, automobiles, airplanes, modern ordnance in warfare, poison gas, and other means of exterminating mankind. What a change in a short time! While some of these are destructive things, most of them tend to bring us nearer to the perfect state of the kingdom, so that the change will not be so pronounced when it comes.

To get an explanation of the conditions now surrounding us, let us turn to prophecy. The king of the north is a power that has been much written about in the past, and is generally supposed to be Russia. If that is correct it will not be the present power that will destroy Israel, because the personnel of the Russian government is mainly Jewish, and we can find no instance of the Jews destroying their own nation. It is always the Gentile nations, round about them, that have done this. Consequently, there will have to be a change of government in Russia to bring this to pass.

The only way to solve this problem is to study the prophecy. Therefore, let us carefully read Daniel 11:36-45. Here we get particulars of a power that is going to bring this dispensation to a close.

The Prophet speaks, in verse 36, of a "king (that) shall do according to his will; and he shall exalt himself, and magnify himself above every god, and shall speak marvellous things against the God of gods." This is exactly what Hitler is doing today. Germany is at present the center of interest, because of its inhumane treatment of the Jews, and also its opposition to the Catholics.

We must remember that the Kaiser, during the World War, boasted that he was a Hun—therefore, a descendant of Atilla, who was the natural enemy of the Jews and represents the Assyrian of Scripture. There is another reason why Germany is persecuting the Jews and Catholics. The German government needs money to continue this drive for power. The Jews have control of the money market, and the Catholic Church is rich. Hence, Hitler's eyes are on every avenue where wealth can be acquired, and through his bitter enmity against the Jews he is determined to eliminate them from his domain.

Continuing in verse 38, we (Please turn to page 11)

The Name of the Covenantor

By Paul M. Hatch

NOW in the things that God proposes to do, create, or make, another name (in addition to Elohim, meaning God the Creator) is invariably used to designate God. It is true of the references used in Isaiah 45 and 65. The name is Jehovah. The title Jehovah does not necessarily mean the promise to create anew, although it is, in these references, used in that way. Its connection is with any promise, covenant, or contract that He enters into. Wherever the name Jehovah is used one may be reasonably sure that a promise or covenant is connected therewith.

In Isaiah 45 God, or Jehovah, made a promise concerning Cyrus of Medo-Persia, and so used the covenanting name Jehovah. He then proceeded to explain that the creation of the world and man made His covenant binding, and that Cyrus would do as was promised. The creative name Elohim is also used, for He created Cyrus for the special work of liberating His people from bondage.

The first occurrence of the name Jehovah is in Genesis 2:4, and is there combined with the word Elohim. It occurs in the English Bible as "Lord God," and in the Hebrew as Jehovah Elohim. Through this entire chapter, and in Genesis 3, the names are combined. We may derive from this combined name, and from the events that follow in their places, that the Creator-God, responsible for the creation of our first pair, made a covenant with them in respect to punishment for disobedience, and also promised a seed to come from the woman to undo all the mischief that the beguiling serpent had caused. So we might say these names in combination could very well be entitled in English "Creator Covenantor" or "Lord God"—translated from Jehovah Elohim.

It seems that, of all the names used in connection with God, Jehovah is the most intimate of them all. This is true, no doubt, because of the very nature of the name, and the close association that it has in the aspirations and expectations of Christians. All of us are Greek enough to be interested in anything that is made, curious enough to have an inclination to know more about things, if given the opportunity. These are inbred in every living thing to a greater or lesser degree. The opportunity to educate ourselves increases this particular characteristic. If, on the other hand, a promise is made to us, or something that we have greatly desired is given us, how our interest and joy in these things become redoubled! No longer do we show just a casual interest, but an intense interest is aroused. So it seems that the name Jehovah, being used in the sense of promiser and covenantor, brings the Deity into our very lives.

Perhaps because of the close association of the name Jehovah to mankind the ancient Hebrews felt an unnatural awe for the name that was akin to terror or great fear, and so would not utter the name, or even write it down in any utterable manner. To have done so would have been sacrilegious, and great punishment, it was feared, would have been meted out to the guilty one of such a misdemeanor. So it was generally written as Jhvh in the original texts. Later, in a number of references, after the Hebrews had become a settled people in their Promised Land, the scribes altered this name to that of Adonia on account of that very fear. In all there are one hundred thirty-four places where the name was changed, and only in four has it remained as originally placed in the text. These places are to be found in Exodus 6:3, Psalm 83:18, Isaiah 12:2, and 26:4. Whether this was a direct violation of the warning of the Almighty or not, as stated in Deuteronomy 4:2; 12:32; Proverbs 30:5, 6; Revelation 22:18, 19, is problematical. Adonia is one of the titles of the Deity, but is used in a little different sense than the name Jehovah.

One of the greatest promises ever given by Jehovah was expressed when He appeared to the patriarch Abram, in the land of Haran, and said to him, "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will shew thee: and I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing: and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed" (Gen. 12:1-3). And again, "And the Lord said unto Abram, after that Lot was separated from him, Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward: for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed for ever" (Gen. 13:14, 15).

Moses, in writing of these episodes, used the name Jehovah, but in Exodus 6:2, 3, where the Lord was speaking to Moses, we read, "And God spake unto Moses, and said unto him, "I am the Lord: and I appeared unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, by the name of God Almighty, but by my name JEHOVAH was I not known to them." Here is a direct statement that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob did not know the Lord by the name of Jehovah, but rather by the name of God Almighty (El Shaddai). However, the name Jehovah was most certainly known to Abraham, for in Genesis 15:2, he addressed the Lord in this manner, "And Abram said, Lord God, what wilt thou give me, seeing I go childless, and the steward of my house is this Eliezer of Damascus?" The word used here for Lord God in the Hebrew is Adonia Jehovah. Then again in Genesis 18:3, where Abraham greeted the three strangers, he addressed them, "My Lord, if now I have found favour in thy sight, pass not away, I pray thee, from thy servant." In both cases the name Jehovah is used. Then to clinch the fact that Abraham knew the name Jehovah, we have the episode of Abraham and his son Isaac, in which Abraham took the lad up into Mount Moriah to sacrifice him to the Lord. After preparing the altar and laying the wood on the altar, Abraham prepared in all earnestness to make the sacrifice of his son. Suddenly he heard the voice of the angel of the Lord commanding him to desist in the slaying of his son. Abraham raised his eyes and saw a ram caught in a thicket near by, which he took for an offering instead. Then in evident gratitude for the furnishing of the sacrifice, he "called the name of the place Jehovah-jireh: as it is said to this day, in the mount of the Lord it shall be seen" (Gen. 22:14),

Although the name, as far as the phonetic sound was concerned, was known unto Abraham, the meaning of the name was obscure and was not comprehended. The name "God Almighty" (El Shaddai) was better understood. Let us look at Genesis 17:1, 2, where the name first occurs alone in the Bible, and see if a meaning can be derived from the passage, "And when Abram was ninety years old and nine, the Lord (Jehovah) appeared to Abram, and said unto him, I am the Almighty God; walk before me and be thou perfect. And I will make my covenant between me and thee, and will multiply thee exceedingly." Here again occurs a combined name-title from El and Shaddai. El is the Elohim, not as Creator, but the omnipotent, and Shaddai is the title of giver, who is able to supply all the needs, and who is able to perform all His promises. So Abraham, who had been called out to follow Him, was assured that He that called him was able, yes, abundantly able, to provide all his needs under God's mighty power. Further reading of the chapter brings out this great fact.

The Lord Loves a Cheerful Giver

By Mrs. Emory Macy

"Remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive" (Acts 20:35).

BETHREN, let us ponder on the Golden Text of the Bible, John 3:16, how God, through love, gave us His only begotten Son, that the world through Him might be blessed. .

Since creation began, love has held dominion over all blessings; and love prompts us to give. It was love for man that prompted God to give Adam a helpmeet. We read in Genesis 2:18, "It is not good that the man should be alone; I will make him an help meet for him." As time passed, sin entered into the world, man yielding to temptation was led astray. God, again moved by love, provided a way whereby man could be lifted up, and given a new hope.

Through faith the patriarchs of old inherited the land of Canaan. In return for the faith of these men God fulfilled the promises which He made to them. Even when temptations led them astray He continued His watch and care over them, and gave them chastisement that they might again look unto their Creator. How much more, then, can we apply this to ourselves, and look to His Son, in whom there is life everlasting!

Remember the Christ who gave His own life that we through Him might be saved. Christ said, "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out" (John 6:37). What greater blessing could be given to the faithful? Not one!

Christ daily gives to us peace that "passeth all understanding." "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you" (John 14:27). Peace is rest, case, and security. No fear is to accompany peace. Peace has been since the beginning; our great need is to seek for it. When the Christ Child was born the angel spoke, saying, "And on earth peace, good will toward men" (Luke 2:14).

Day by day we receive grace and truth from our Master.

"For the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ" (John 1:17). If we have grace we have favor with the Lord. Let us strive after those things which Jesus sought after. If we accept the truth, as our Lord directs, we will be honest, sincere, and steadfast to the end.

Christ gave to the chosen Twelve instruction in prayer that we, as well as they, might profit thereby. Vain repetitions profit man nothing. "And all things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive" (Matt. 21: 22). Wherefore, let us pray without ceasing; for it was meant that all men should pray.

Love, the greatest of all gifts, casts out fear. To us, Christ gives faith, hope, and love, these three, but the greatest of these is love. If we have love within us we will have pity and mercy for our fellow men, and cleave only to that which is pure. "And though . . . I could remove mountains, and have not charity, I am nothing" (1 Cor. 13:2). "Charity never faileth" (v. 8).

Peace, grace, truth, answered prayer, and love are daily blessings from Christ, but through faithfulness a greater blessing shall be ours, even everlasting life. "Every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labour" (1 Cor. 3:8). Is it not a pleasure to strive for a goal, a promise, or a reward, whether great or small? Few there are who enter into a race and expect to lose. Even with temporary loss we should reap encouragement to try again, and to restore that hope that is within us: "And, behold, I come quickly: and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be" (Rev. 22:12). "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne" (Rev. 3:21).

The Disciple Jesus Loved

By J. E. Adamson

THE Christian religion began as a young man's movement, and quite naturally so. Jesus was a young man, and the group He first gathered about Him were young men and, in some cases, young women. Many of the early converts were young people; even children were welcomed into His presence, as when He said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not."

The youngest man among Christ's disciples—His favorite—sat next to Him at the last supper, leaned on His shoulder and, when they were seeking to find out who Christ had in mind that would betray Him, Peter asked this disciple who was nearest Jesus to ask who He meant.

John, the brother of James and son of Zebedee, began life as a fisherman, but lived to become a great preacher and prophet for the work of Christ Jesus.

John's writings are composed of three letters to the church in general, the book of Revelation, and the Gospel of John; and this is in the order of their writing. After the conference in Jerusalem, A. D. 50, John seems to have made his home in Ephesus. From there he wrote his letters and the Gospel, and from there he was banished to the Isle of Patmos "for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ."

His letters are pastoral in style, and are overflowing with love of God for us, and love of the service of God by us, as he says, "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God:... Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him" (1 John 3:1, 2). These letters seem to be full of urgent exhortation to the church to hold fast to the fact that Jesus was "God... manifest in the flesh" (1 Tim. 3:16), as opposed to the growing doctrine of the Nicolaitanes that Jesus was the son of Joseph, and not the Son of God.

In the first few verses of his first letter, and also of his Gospel, he uses similar language to illustrate the relationship of Jesus and the writings of the prophets. Before Jesus was born He was existent only in the "sure word of prophecy," but when He was born "the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us." There was no doubt in John's mind, as he says, "That which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of the Word of life."

John's Gospel was the last of his writings, and was produced late in the first century, A. D., after an urgent appeal by members of the apostle's circle of friends that he add his story of the beginning of the Christian era to testimony of the others. That is why he begins the first chapter in the words, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God" (John 1:1). John's account contains much that was not spoken of by the other three Gospel writers, and leaves out some things that seemed to them important. He says little about the early life or ministry of Jesus, and much about the events leading up to the crucifixion of Jesus. He gives none of the parables, and says nothing about the temple being broken down, or Jerusalem being surrounded by armies. This resulted from the very good reason that there was nothing of interest in warning his readers to watch for signs of something that had already taken place twenty years before his writings were made.

As years had passed, and through his experience with the Holy Spirit, John was able to see more clearly the important things of his association with Jesus. He tells us much of the lessons in communion with the Father, and the relationship of the Father with the Son. He tells much of the conversations between Jesus and His disciples, much of the resurrection, and the way to attain it. He is the author of wonderful sayings, such as the ever-beautiful words, "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself: . . . I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me" (John 14:1-3, 6).

Also in John's writings there is the prayer of Jesus to the Father on behalf of the men who had so faithfully and constantly followed Him. "These words spake Jesus, and lifted up his eyes to heaven, and said, Father, the hour is come; glorify thy Son, that thy Son also may glorify thee: as thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him. And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent" (John 17: 1-3). This prayer, spoken as Jesus stood on the threshold of His great trial, was a symposium of confidence in the God whom He called Father, and in it He came to the throne of grace "in full assurance of faith." His requests were not so much for help for Himself, as for those men of whom He said, "I have manifested thy name unto the men which thou gavest me out of the world" (John 17:6).

John was one of the group at the foot of the cross, and it was to him that Jesus commended the care of His mother. John was one of the little party that was the first at the tomb, after the report of Mary Magdalene that the tomb was open and empty. John was at the fish dinner on the beach of the Sea of Galilee, and was one who took part in the conversation following the meal. No doubt, John was along when the disciples asked Jesus, "Wilt thou at this (Continued from page 10)

God's Promises Can Be Fulfilled

By Ben Carpenter

IT IS such a common thing for one to hear or read about things, and immediately forget them, or only retain a very small portion of what has been read or heard. Very often we doubt the truth of some of it, also, but maybe it is just as well we do, unless it is "Thus saith the word of the Lord."

God has made many promises to mankind that we do not realize how they will come to pass, or if they will really be that way or not. For example, very few have been able to comprehend the resurrection, and to tell us how it will be accomplished. Many people doubt if it will or can be accomplished, especially after one has been dead for so long a period of time, and some have been disposed of in such a manner that their remains have been scattered to the four winds.

Some people, however, take His Word on faith, not doubting that it will be done, though not understanding how.

Some wonder how all the people could find room on the earth if all who have ever lived were brought back to life.

Do they realize that all of the two billion people who are alive on the earth today could be packed in a box one half mile each way, which, if flattened out, just allowing each person to be six feet tall, would be only approximately one hundred seventeen square miles? The little country of Denmark contains sixteen thousand square miles!

In God's promise that the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose (Isa. 35:1), can we comprehend the expanse of land that is desert? There are five million square miles of desert lands in the world, besides more than twenty million square miles of wilderness and solitary places. In the promise of Revelation 21, that "there shall be no more sea," and in Habakkuk 2:14, "the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea," we can hardly comprehend the vast expanse of sea. The great Pacific Ocean, alone, covers sixty-eight million, five hundred thousand square miles. Together with the rest of the oceans and seas and lakes and rivers, it amounts to one hundred forty-one million, five hundred thousand

Things Eternal

By J. W. Cooper

"FOR the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal" (2 Cor. 4:18). Paul then continues in the next chapter, "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

How many have traveled along a country road, and have seen old, dilapidated, deserted houses? It may be that more appear in some localities than in others, but here in central Illinois it is often that we see, as we travel along, old abandoned houses, left to disintegrate and decay as the years pass. The result is a part of the roof gone, a door partly open, windowpanes broken, and porch posts hanging, showing marks of time, and that the house is temporal.

If we are disposed to let our imagination run along for a while, we can vision a sturdy young man and his wife going forth to establish a home. Probably they will first consider the kind of a house they can afford, and they will then plan it. The house is built, and they begin life. Because they are industrious and thrifty, they accumulate a fair portion of this world's goods. Children arrive to bless the home, and grow to be a blessing to the home and parents.

The years have passed and, as we look in the living room after the tasks of the day are finished and supper is over, we find this couple by the fireside, enjoying each other's company until bedtime. It is an ideal picture, and one that should appeal to any peace-loving, home-loving, Godfearing individual. But does it? Can it continue? No! Even this peaceful scene is but temporal!

More years have passed, and we take another look at this home. The scene has changed. Father and Mother, having grown old in service, have been laid to rest. The children have grown up, have become dissatisfied with the old home, and its surroundings, and are scattered over various parts of the country. Nothing is left, but the old house at the side of the road.

In this manner the world continues to move along. Some are building for eternity, and some are looking only for the temporal things of life. It will be the same until the coming of our Lord and Savior.

The reading time of the foregoing is very short, but the scenes that are mentioned require a lifetime to bring to pass. In our efforts to obtain things that are temporal, let us not crowd out our efforts to strive for things eternal, for Paul says, "Here we have no continuing city, but we seek one to come."

Speaking in Tongues

By F. O. Sapp

"AND there appeared unto them cloven tongues, like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost (Spirit), and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them

While the editor attributes the modern so-called speaking in tongues to religious insanity rather than to a supernatural power, he agrees heartily with the warning against this modern delusion, and gladly publishes the article.

England's greatest preachers, into this delusion. In part, it is said that tongues were associated with Mormonism from its beginning, and also with modern spiritualism. Modern Pentecost does not have a monopoly on tongues.

utterance." So reads the record of Pentecost in Acts 2:3, 4.

There seems to be a great deal of confusion in regard to

There seems to be a great deal of confusion in regard to the kind of tongues the apostles spoke in on the day of Pentecost. It would seem that if we would study the Bible for truth on the subject, with "the spirit of a sound mind" (2 Tim. 1:7, Weymouth), not forgetting to pray, we would be led into much light on the matter.

Modern Pentecost, so-called, is popularly known as "the tongues people." They object to this designation; but why should they? The movement was born of tongues, lives by tongues, grows by tongues, prospers financially and otherwise by tongues, and tongues are its chief standard of measure of spiritual attainment. It is the test of fellowship. Why protest the name?

Take tongues away from modern Pentecost, and you will silence its loudest note, and defeat its main objective. Take tongues away from modern Pentecost, and you will curb that emotionalism and fanaticism that appeals to the public. It will be admitted that something in this movement has made it the most successful religious sect of our day. Is it not true that that something is its supernaturalism of speaking in tongues?

I hear some one say, "Why go to the time and trouble of writing an article exposing present-day Pentecost? We reply, that if in this movement we recognize the spirits of fallen angels, transformed into "angels of light," personating the Holy Spirit, why should I not give a word of alarm? This thing has become a problem in some churches, even to causing division. This should not be. (See Acts 20:30; Titus 3:10.)

People who are victimized by this delusion come to believe the false claim of modern Pentecost that this so-called baptism is the restoration of the original Pentecost, after centuries of apostasy, being a lost gift of the church.

History disproves this to be a fact. There have been frequent manifestations of tongues since the apostolic days of the church of God, each one putting forth the same claims. Historians go back to A. D. 157, where tongues were associated with gross immorality, scourging the church. During the Reformation, from 1517 to 1648 A. D., there was a revival of tongues in Germany, among a people who practiced polygamy. In the year 1650 A. D., a company of people, known as the French Prophets, arose speaking in tongues. A little more than a century ago the tongues movement broke out in England, which swept Irving, one of

What we witness today is not a revival of Pentecost, but a recurrence of a counterfeit in its religious garb.

When modern Pentecost broke out in this country great things were expected, but its adherents were doomed to disappointment. Sincere, but deceived, recipients of tongues left America for the foreign mission fields, believing they could take the gospel to the heathen, in their native language, by the gift of tongues as at the original Pentecost.

C. S. Todd of the Bible Missionary Society, Macus, China, writes of three great mission fields, China, Japan, and India, where modern Pentecost missionaries came, expecting to preach the gospel to the native people in their own language.

Mr. Todd writes of a Mr. McIntosh and his wife, going to China, and of their personal admission that, from the day of their arrival in China, neither he nor his wife had been able to speak a single sentence in Chinese. He also writes of a party of missionaries going over from the State of Washington to Japan, believing they could preach the gospel to the Japanese in their native tongue, but failed to do so.

He wrote also of A. G. Garr and his good wife going to India to preach the gospel to the Hindu in tongues, but confessing their inability to do so. He also writes of others meeting disappointment, and says, "The tongue, which is being given to so many in America, is not a tongue with which the heathen can be evangelized."

Modern tongues have no authority in the Word of God, but are prominent features in spiritualism, hypnotism, and certain psychological deceptions—such as falling over backward, lying helpless upon the floor, under spirit control, speaking in tongues, angelic singing, and wonderful visions of heaven and hell.

It is to be noted that every outbreak of tongues carries in its forefront the doctrine of Christ second coming. The sacred doctrine of Christ's second coming has been brought into disrepute by this false delusion. The more truth carried by error, the more dangerous it is, and greater is its power to deceive.

The demonstrations in Pentecostal meetings today have no likeness of the apostolic Pentecostal baptism. I fail to find anywhere in God's Word where Christ, or the apostles, or any disciples of the early church, ever became so emotional and high pitched as the professed recipients of tongues do. The tongues in modern Pentecost have no value to Christianity; they do not serve the purpose they did at the original Pentecost. The claim that to speak with tongues is the sign of the incoming Spirit cannot be Scriptural. When we read in the Bible that men were "filled with the Holy Spirit," it does not mean that the One from whom the Holy Spirit comes has entered into the persons of men, but that these men were filled with the power and influence of that One, who could only be God.

The Bible teaches that devils are personal beings. In Mark 5 we read of the man in the tombs, of whom Jesus cast out spirits of devils. It was not the Being, or Devil, that was in the man, but that the man was under the influence and predominating power of evil.

Just as the Devil troubles some who are converted into believing that they are not converted, by holding up before them a false standard of conversion, so the Devil troubles some today who are already filled with the Spirit of God (the Holy Spirit) into believing that they are not filled with the Holy Spirit, by holding before them a false teaching of the baptism of the Holy Spirit.

When one becomes a Christian, it is more of a question to yielding to the Spirit already received, than it is of receiving the Spirit. The most blasphemous delusion ever perpetrated by Satan is the personating of the Holy Spirit by demons in a spurious baptism. Only a loving God can deliver those who are victimized by the baptism in tongues. Brethren who are sound in the adventual truths given to the Church of God for the last days of the age will not be deceived. Those who fall for modern Pentecost will sooner or later be persuaded into believing the Devil's first lie (Gen. 3:4), and deny that conditionalism is a fundamental doctrine taught in God's Holy Book.

There is only one heavenly institution on earth, and that is the church of the living God. (Acts 20:28.) Paul experienced many conflicts with wicked spirits in the church. (Eph. 6:12.) Such has been the main ground of conflict during the gospel age, to drive out of the church those who are there to corrupt it with false doctrine, and lying manifestations. The conflict is not only on the natural plane, but also upon the supernatural. All will agree that modern Pentecost is the working of supernatural power; only such can take full control of a person's vocal organs, independently of one's choice, and cause him to speak in an unknown language.

The question at issue is, "From what source of supernatural power do these manifestations come?" There are two sources of supernatural power, that of God, and that of Satan. Then there are two ways to answer the question. If the fruits of these manifestations are of God, then the power producing them must be of God. However, if the fruits do not appear to be in harmony with God's character, then it is evident that the power does not come from God.

Again, if the claims of modern Pentecost are sustained in the Word of God, then such power must be of God. But if those claims are not supported in the Scriptures, then the tongues are not from God. To this all will say, "Amen."

Finally, brethren, continue in the love of Christ. (John 15:9.)

THE HOLY SCRIPTURES

By Mrs. Mae Nedrow

"From a child thou hast known the holy scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus" (2 Tim. 3:15).

AFTER Jesus' baptism He was led into the wilderness and tempted for forty days and forty nights. After having fasted these many days He became hungry. Satan told Him to turn some stones into bread. Jesus answered with a quotation from the Scriptures, saying, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." (See Matt. 4:4; Deut. 8:3.)

Then the Devil took Jesus to the holy city, and set Him on the highest pinnacle of the temple, telling Him to cast Himself down, that if he were the Son of God the Scriptures said, "He shall give his angels charge concerning thee, and in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone." (See Matt. 4: 5, 6; Psalm 91:11.) Jesus answered, "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." (See Matt. 4:7; Deut. 6:16.) Jesus knew that if He threw Himself down from the pinnacle of the temple He would be tempting God.

The Devil then took Jesus up into an exceedingly high mountain, and told Him that he would give Him all the kingdoms of the world if He would fall down and worship him. Again Jesus answered, "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." (See Matt. 4:10; Deut. 6:13.) Satan then left Him, and "angels came and ministered unto him" (Matt. 4:11).

Yes, from a child Jesus had known the Holy Scriptures. May we profit by the Christ's great example.

The Apostle Paul tells us that "there hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man: but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it" (1 Cor. 10:13).

The Lord's brother James admonishes us to ask God to give us wisdom to enable us to endure the testing times, for testing brings patience. "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him" (James 1:12).

What does it matter if the believer is ridiculed because he studies his Bible, and if he is persecuted because he tries to be the kind of person God wants him to be? God knows what is in his heart.

Christ's life was a perfect example of the truths He taught. Still they spit upon Him, they called Him a blasphemer, they put a crown of thorns upon His head. "His visage was so marred more than any man." He was mocked by the very people who, had they really known the Scriptures, should have seen in Him the promised Messiah, the Lamb of God; but they crucified Him, the sinless One. Even Pilate could find no fault in Him.

Five times the Apostle Paul received forty stripes save one, three times he was beaten with rods, once he was stoned, and he was imprisoned, but he sang praises unto God.

Dear brethren, let us lift up our crosses and carry on. Let us occupy until He comes, for "from a child thou hast known the holy scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus."

GOD'S PROMISES CAN BE FULFILLED

square miles of water that covers the earth. How all that vast quantity of water will be disposed of I do not know.

But God created it in the beginning; so I must take it on faith that He will dispose of it, as He says, or else limit God's power. When the wilderness and all the solitary places and deserts rejoice and blossom as the rose, and all that water is removed, and the knowledge of the Lord and His glory fill the earth, what a vast difference there will be in the earth over what it is today!

Bound down by mortality and human limits, I do not know how all these things will be accomplished, but I do believe the promises of God will be fulfilled. "So shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it" (Isa. 55:11).

"Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief."

God gave to the world the greatest gift of all, His only Son. Giving did not cease here, but continues even to this day, and Christ is giving blessings beyond measure to those who love Him. Therefore, we should give in return the best we have. "Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver" (2 Cor. 9:7). To give grudgingly to the Lord would be robbing ourselves of spiritual blessings.

To the Twelve Apostles Christ said, "Go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. . . . Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils: freely ye have received, freely give" (Matt. 10:6, 8). We may not be able to do just such things in like manner as the apostles were instructed, but we can seek those who need a helping hand. If it is impossible for us to help, in any way, let us remove ourselves that we may not hinder. A word of kindness may reap a hundredfold, where quietness may allow some one to fall. Freely we have received, so let us give.

It was not intended that all men should be teachers, pastors, or prophets, but until Christ comes each should be "an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity" (1 Tim. 4:12). "For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul? For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works" (Matt. 16:26, 27).

THE DISCIPLE JESUS LOVED

time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" (Acts 1:6). John was with Peter "at the gate of the temple which is called Beautiful" (Acts 3:2) when the man "lame from his mother's womb" was made well.

John was a most ardent worker, but the ever-increasing persecution in the reign of Domitian brought him arrest and banishment to the "isle that is called Patmos." But what seemed loss for him turned out to be gain for the service of Christ. John was made a chosen vessel to receive and record for future generations the last "sure word of prophecy" the world would be given.

John was always an active, eager worker for the spread of the gospel of Jesus Christ, yet in the first sentence of the prophecy which we call the Revelation, he classes himself not as a leader, but as a servant. He says, "The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to shew unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass; and he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John: who bare record of the word of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all things that he saw."

John, in this book, saw and recorded a number of visions, or pictures, by which the wise could get the story of the future as it would affect the church, the people of Israel, and the kingdoms of the world, up to and including the coming Jesus as the "Lion of the tribe of Juda," to take up His great power and reign. (See Rev. 11:17.)

There is a code by which the signs may be read, but as a great writer once said, "That is another story."

IS BAPTISM NECESSARY FOR SALVATION?

shows that much water is necessary for Scriptural baptism.

Peter, in preaching to the multitude on the Day of Pentecost, explained fully that people must be baptized in order to get into Christ, and thereby receive remission of sins. "Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost" (Acts 3:38).

Referring to Philip's baptism of the Ethiopian cunuch, we read these words in Acts 8:38, "And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him."

It is not our purpose to over-emphasize the importance of baptism—if that were possible. It seems to be the nature of human beings to want to find some new or easier way than the one baptism so clearly taught in the Scriptures of Truth. In other words, men like their own way rather than to follow out the plans and purposes of God. Jesus says in John 10:1, 2, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that entereth not in by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber. But he that entereth in by the door is the shepherd of the sheep." Jesus is the door to salvation, and we are fully convinced that the only way to get through that door is by being baptized into Him.

If we wish to share a place with Christ in the earth made new and purified, we must also go with Him through the watery grave of baptism, and arise to walk in newness of life.

There are many examples of the folly of disobedience in the Scriptures. Adam and Eve were driven from the beautiful garden, and forced to toil for their daily bread, because they disobeyed God. In the destruction of Sodom, Lot's wife, after being delivered from the city, was destroyed, because she looked back after being commanded of God not to do so. There are many other similar references, but these will suffice.

We do not wish to censure or judge, in any way, those who disagree with us, knowing as we do that many have been trained even from infancy to think other modes of baptism will do as well. As the time draws nearer and nearer the end of the age, let us make sure that we are not deceived by the teachings of men, but that our faith and hope are founded upon the rock, Jesus Christ.

THE COMING OF CHRIST

read that he shall "honour the God of forces." This represents his inordinate desire for supremacy of power by military force. Since his anshluss in Austria, and his diplomatic victory at Munich, he is gaining control of all central Europe. After gaining Czechoslovakia, he has obtained economic control of Hungary, Rumania, Jugoslavia, and Bulgaria, and can now force these countries to supply him with all their natural products, such as wheat and other cereals, meat, tobacco, timber, and-most important for war purposes-oil. Greece and Turkey are now falling in line with these other countries, so that he has a clear path to Bagdad and India, the very goal which the Kaiser was so anxious to obtain. Hitler's friendship with Italy will also bring under his control Libia and Ethiopia, and will thus fulfill Daniel 11:43: "And the Libyans and the Ethiopians shall be at his steps." All these signs point directly to the German power as the desolator.

After reading verses 38 and 39, showing how a certain king has gained dominion over these lesser countries, verse 40 says, "At the time of the end shall the king of the south push at him, and the king of the north shall come against him like a whirlwind." Many writers in the past have referred to the king of the north as Russia and the power that is to come down on Palestine "to take a spoil." (Read Ezek. 38:11, 12.) But is this so? Beginning at verse 36 we read of this power which is so opposed to God. Then in verse 40 two kings oppose him, the king of the south and the king of the north.

Presently, in verse 41, this king gets into Palestine, but does not get as far as Edom and Moab. These two countries represent the British power, which will be held in readiness to chase the desolator when Christ wreaks His vengeance on him. This feature of the return of Christ is portrayed in Isaiah 17:12-14, "Woe to the multitude of many people, which make a noise like the noise of the seas: and to the rushing of nations, that make a rushing like the rushing of mighty waters . . . But God shall rebuke them, and they shall flee far off, and shall be chased as the chaff of the mountains before the wind, and like a rolling thing before the whirlwind. And behold at eventide trouble; and before the morning he is not. This is the portion of them that spoil us, and the lot of them that rob us." The type of this disaster to the destroying power is found in 1 Samuel 17:49-53: as the men of Israel pursued the Philistines, so Britain will pursue the desolator, after Christ pours fire from heaven upon him.

These thoughts lead us to anticipate Germany and Italy, in combination, to be the power chosen by God to nearly annihilate Israel. We must watch with intense interest the movements of these two countries.

The British government is now the barometer for future developments. As long as Chamberlain is in power there will be no fighting, because he is of a conciliating character; but sooner or later he will be replaced by a man of the Anthony Eden type. Then the patience of Britain will be exhausted, and its government will flatly denounce Hitler. Hostilities will then commence in carnest, and we must be prepared for Christ to take out His saints, and get them down to Sinai in readiness for the final scene. Mr. Eden's recent visit to America is a forecast of a change in government in his country. We must not be surprised should we see all these things crystallize into realities soon after he arrives home.

If war starts early in the new year, as many people and writers predict, it is possible that Christ may return this coming Easter. We all know God raised Christ from the dead on Easter morn, to life eternal, and as God does everything in an orderly fashion, it is only likely that His dead brethren will be raised on such a great anniversary. The time we are to be with Him before His manifestation to the world is not given in the Scriptures, but we do know that when conditions get too unbearable, "for the elects' sake those days shall be shortened" (Matt. 24:22).

With these thoughts in mind it behooves us to watch ourselves, and remember John's words, "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God; because many false prophets are gone out into the world" (1 John 4:1). Let us, therefore, carefully weigh these things that we be not led astray.

This Unemployment Situation

Muriel Randall, Mora, Minn.

Are you unemployed? If so, do you go regularly to such and such a place and present your social security card to make application for compensation?

We might easily divide the meaning of the word "unemployed" into two classes. One class would be those who are unemployed and cannot earn money to supply their physical needs. The second would be those who are unemployed in God's sight, and who are not working for treasures in the kingdom to supply their spiritual needs. It is to the second class that this article is directed.

In this physical world of political and social chaos we readily see why there are millions unable to find work to enable them to live independently.

In Matthew 9:37 we read, "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few." This, of course, pertains to the spiritual labor situation. It is a challenge to everyone who is not already working for God. The greatest Employer of all times calls for workers.

Many will ask, "What shall we do, that we might work the works of God?" The verse following this question (John 6:29) answers, "This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent." Belief (Webster) is "a conviction; the thing believed; or faith." We read in James 2:20 that "faith without works is dead." Now we are back to the fact that there must be works, hence workmen. "Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed . . ." (2 Tim. 2:15).

Accordingly, one need to overcome the unemployment situation is study, a searching of the Scriptures daily. Secondly, don't forget that non-Christians are ever looking toward Christians. Whether they realize the need for some spirituality in the world, or whether they watch to jeer, we should at all times be in a position that would testify the love of our Savior. That, alone, is a task large enough to keep any real Christian off the spiritual unemployment list.

In our spiritual walk it is necessary to eat, as in our earthly life; and to eat, we must work. God, in His all-sufficient way, provides a spiritual feast for us far superior to any earthly food ever spread before us. But we cannot eat of spiritual food until we have done some work for God.

God has opened so many channels for us to work through, and it is now up to us to go to work.

Might I say here that one of the greatest unemployment solutions offered to Church of God young people is the Summer Training School.

At the beginning of this article the subject of unemployment was divided; now let us join the two again. Perhaps one of the greatest causes of such a deplorable situation is the fact the people have forgotten their Creator. Read Matthew 6:25-34, and particularly verse 33, "But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his rightcousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." If we will only employ ourselves in God's vineyard, and seek His kingdom, I have faith to believe He will add unto us the necessities of life.

Lastly, there's a security, too—not social, but a supreme spiritual security. The compensation is an eternal reward.

No Divisions Among Us

Mellie James, Picdmont, S. Carolina

"Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no division among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment" (1 Cor. 1:10). Christians are thus required to speak the same thing. "But speak thou the things which become sound doctrine" (Titus 2:1). "For it hath been declared unto me of you... that there are contentions among you" (1 Cor. 1:11).

If the Apostle Paul would appear at the Church of God today, would he find contentions among us? Would he find us speaking the same thing? If we speak sound doctrine we must be of one body, "for as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body: so also is Christ. For by one Spirit are we all baptized unto one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit. For the body is not one member, but many" (1 Cor. 12:12-14). "Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular" (1 Cor. 12:27). The body thus signifies the Church of God firmly united to Christ.

There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism" (Eph. 4:4, 5). When Jesus left this earth there was unity among His followers. Will He find unity when He comes again? At His appearing will we be able to say, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing"?

Good Resolutions

If you made some resolutions for the new year, I am sure you are trying to keep them.

From one year's beginning to the next is much too long a time to wait to make more good resolutions. I think they should be made every time you discover something you need to add to your "list" of resolutions.

In today's lesson we read that Peter made a resolution, too. They are so easy to make. Peter was surely determined to keep his. (Luke 22:33.)

Shall we see how he kept it?

Afar Off

There is no doubt about Peter's love for Christ. He knew Him to be the Savior and wanted to follow Him, so we see his heart was right. We read, "For as he thinketh in his heart, so is he" (Prov. 23:7).

Jesus knew that Peter was not yet tested; that he had too much self-assurance; so He prayed for him.

Just what did Jesus ask His Father for Peter? Surely He would ask for the very best for His friend, Peter. Was it riches? Was it for luxuries and fine clothing? No! It was that his faith would not fail.

As we continue to study the life and works of Peter we shall watch to see the other words come true which Jesus commanded Peter in Luke 22:32.

Strengthen Thy Brethren

We know our neighbor is anyone in need, and that we should help such a neighbor. But just who are our "brethren"? In your family there are several children? As used in the Bible the word "brethren" expresses the spiritual relationship of true followers of Christ. We are all of the same family, in Christ.

When you are with the other boys and girls at a social gathering or worship service, do you help to strengthen those around you, as you visit together or wait for services to begin? Or do you weaken them by getting them to do, say, or think things that are not helpful in making them better boys and girls? Your influence is great. Be like Peter! Strengthen your brethren!

Hello, There!

Perhaps you were too busy to accept the offer extended to you the week before Christmas. I hope more of you have written to join our ECE Club. It isn't too late to join, so why not send me a card? We have readers I have heard from, in Illinois and Minnesota. Who is to be the first to write from your state? I am anxious to know in which state we have the most readers.

If you have your scrapbooks, select your scene to help you remember the lesson of "Peter's Denial of Christ." Will you draw Peter weeping, or scated with others around the fire with the maid talking to him? You could draw the cock crowing, and Jesus looking at Peter. Paste in the other treasures you wish to keep. If you are keeping each lesson, copy your golden text and title, as well as the number of your lesson. For the younger ones the pictures alone will be enough.

Today I have a poem for the boys. Last week I had one for the girls. I am wondering whether there will be more boys or girls send for the rest of their poem. It isn't too late, girls, to send now, if you wish.

Boys, send right away and see if you can't beat the girls in the number writing to me.

By the way, if you missed the story last week, explaining the meaning and aims of our ECE Club, I shall be glad to tell you and add your name to our members.

A Gentleman

I knew him for a gentleman
By signs that never fail;
His coat was rough and rather worn,
His cheeks were thin and pale.
A lad who had his way to make
With little time for play;
I knew him for a gentleman
By certain signs today.

He thinks of you before himself, He serves you if he can; For in whatever company, The manners make the man. At ten or forty 'tis the same; The manner tells the tale, And I discern the gentleman By signs that never fail.

Something to Find

- 1. What is faith (Heb. 11:1-3)?
- 2. What do we need to please God (Heb. 11:6)?
- 3. How do we get faith (Rom. 10:17)?
- 4. How do faith and belief differ (James 2:17-20)?

AMONG THE CHURCHES

THE NORTHWEST CONFERENCE Oregon and Washington

The Northwest Conference of Oregon and Washington will hold its quarterly meeting in Corvallis, Ore., February 3 to 5, Bros. H. J. Prosser of Newport, and A. W. Darby of Gresham, Ore., will be the speakers.

A cordial invitation to all. Flora E. Hogue, Conf. Sec.

ST. CLOUD, MINNESOTA

On Sunday, Jan. 1, almost everyone in the congregation responded with a New Year's resolution. Each one came with a Scripture verse committed to memory, which is to serve as a motto for his or her life during 1939.

Several in the congregation have read the Bible entirely through during 1938. If you wouldn't have time, think about this: two of those who read their Bibles from cover to cover were mothers. One has five children, the other has three. They just took time. A number of others have resolved that they would try to read the Bible this year.

We are sorry to report that T. E. Bremer is in the beautiful.

in the hospital.

On January 1, we assisted Bro. Gerald Cooper to conduct the funeral of Mrs. George Hoskins at Eden Valley, who had died the preceding Thursday. C. E. Lapp, Pastor. ceding Thursday.

SOUTHWARD BOUND

Leaving Grand Rapids early Tuesday, Jan. 3, my wife and I had the pleasure of bringing Sr. Holland as far as Westfield. Ind., where she is now doing some work for WLS. Reaching Marshall, Ill., in the late afternoon, we were royally welcomed at the Allan Claypool home. Several of the brothers and sisters were in during the evening, and it was a very pleasant occasion.

On the following day, Jan. 4, we motored on to Eldorado, Ill., where the church brethren were awaiting us and a short series of meetings had been planned. It was like home to be with these brothers and sisters again. The five days together were spent in reminiscenses of many happy days of labor together in years gone by, and in discussion of the development of God's plan. The large portion of members of the Eldorado church acknowledged the gospel under the writer's ministry when he was evangelist in Illinois, so the tie of love is very

The weather for our Eldorado meetings was ideal, closing Sunday, Jan. 8, as mild and sunny as a spring day. Splendid audiences greeted us, and it was an inspiring period. Among the things adding to the joy of the Among the things aliding to the Joy of the occasion was the attendance of Sr. Margaret Donaly, Sr. Ida Jeffrey, and the Loren Margraves of Herrin, Ill. Part of these good people, together with the late Peter Jeffrey, at tended a meeting which the writer held here seventeen years ago-long before the present church was organized.

These lines are written as we leave the fa-miliar scenes in southern Illinois and head southward for Memphis, Tenn., and Hammond, La. Pray for the success of our meetings in the South. Further reports will follow. Communications addresesd to us at Hammond, La., F. E. Siple, Evangelist. will reach us.

On December 23, 1938, the Gospel Gleaners Class sponsored a Christmas earol party, visiting Sr. Estella Pearson, Belva Knife, Calmeida Worley and son Ora, Bro. Howard Pearson, and Mr. Russell Shellhaas, leaving baskets of fruit. Srs. Edna Brewer and Dorothy Demmitt eared for the children at the home of Bro. William Stine, where, also, refreshments were Sr. Worley wishes to thank the carolers, In all her life she says she has never experienced anything quite so inspiring. Having already retired, Sr. Worley was awakened to hear "Silent Night" being sung outside her bedroom window.

On December 25, a Christmas program was given at the church.

On December 30, the monthly Berean social was held at the home of Bro. and Sr. Earl Pearson. At this time it was reported that the following girls had completed the regular work and would receive their Bibles: Margaret and Vergie Smith, Helen Thompson, Juanita Macy, Rosella, Dorothy, Peggie and Joy Ann Pear-

On Sunday, Jan. 15, there will be no services here, as most of the brethren are planning to attend the dedication services at Lawrenceville. The choir is preparing to help Sr. Clyde Pearson, whom with the music. many will remember from General Conference last summer, has been confined to her bed the past month. A word of cheer would be appreciated. Her address is Tipp City, Ohio, Rt. 2. Eunice M. Pearson, Reporter.

A VERSE EXPLAINED

Bro. S. J. Lindsay gives the following reply to a query about 1 Corinthians 15:29, received recently from Sr. Barbara Addington of Colton, Calif .:

"The subject Paul is discussing is the resurrection of Christ, showing that salvation depends upon His resurrection from the dead. If Christ never arose, then why do we baptize in the symbol of death and resurrection? That is what baptism symbolizes, as per Romaus 6:3-6. We are baptized for the dead Christ, but raised for the living Christ who arose from the dead."

Gleanings From the Field

Following the lead of Illinois, a Minnesota page of evangelism, to appear once a month, is starting in this issue. While these special pages are regularly sent only to those residing within the state sponsoring the page, unless the information in such is of general interest, we are this time sending the Minnesota page to all. We understand that Indiana will soon follow with a state evangelistic page.

Bro. Joseph Fletcher, Jr., of Fonthill, Out., Canada, writes, "It is encouraging to meet through The Herald several of the brethren, both by their pictures and articles; and to read accounts of what our people are doing in the Master's vineyard."

W. G. Mathieson of Durban, Natal, South Africa, writes for sample copies of The Restitution Herald. They will be gladly sent. A similar request came recently from Sweden.

"... He Made the Stars Also," by Bro. Norman J. Macleod of Pomona, Calif., will appear in a near issue of The Herald.

Members of the Oregon, Ill., church gave a housewarming for Bro. and Sr. F. L. Marsh on the evening of January 13. Bro. and Sr. Marsh recently took possession of their refin-ished home, having moved to Oregon from Ames, Iowa, late last fall.

We are sorry to hear that both Bro, and Sr. Francis Carpenter of Omaha, Neb., are in the hospital. We had supposed Bro. Carpenter Carpenter had recovered some time ago, but he is just now getting strong enough to walk. Sr. Car-penter is also recovering.

Bro. F. L. Austin of Chicago will be in Cleveland, Ohio, Sunday evening, Jan. 15, and on Tuesday evening following he will begin a series of evangelistic meetings at Geneva, Ohio. He may be addressed at 101 Walnut St., Geneva, Ohio.

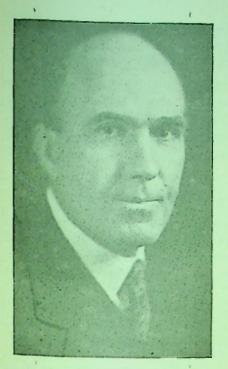

Sr. Hatch, previously reported ill at the editor's home, plans to cat Sunday dinner with the rest of the family.

"As well might a person expect to become an athlete by reading books or sitting in the bleachers as to become a strong Christian by reading the Bible or sitting in a pew."—M. W. Lyon.

A Christmas package weighing 91/4 pounds, labeled Nyle Wayne, arrived on December 24, to cheer the home of Bro. and Sr. Reuben Scaline of Stratford, Iowa. Congratulations.

A baby daughter weighing eight pounds, five ounces, arrived on Friday, January 13, to brighten the home of Bro. and Sr. Emory Macy, Troy, Ohio. Congratulations.

Bro. F. F. Upton of Geneva, Ohio, writes, "The splendid articles from various writers. and in their own individual ways, are very inspiring. While I like them all, I must mention a few: first, our Bro. Curtis, who has for tion a rew: first, our Bro. Curtis, who has for years written those logical, sensible, and reasonable articles; then, Bro. F. L. Austin, with his scholarly mind—his latest contribution being 'Our Changing World'; and last, but not least, I was so glad to see Bro. T. A. Drinkard's picture with his last article."

T. J. ELLIS

Thomas Jesse Ellis, son of Thomas and Euphema Ellis, was born in Columbus, Neb., May 20, 1878. On June 2, 1903, he was united in marriage with Miss Alena Appleyard in Wymore, Neb. To this union two children—Margaret, now Mrs. Edward Barck of Detroit, Mich., and Eldridge A. Ellis of Waterloo, lowa, were born.

He began his railroad activities with the Chicago, Burlington and Quiney Railroad, and remained with that organization until August 22, 1906, when he joined the Illinois Central Railroad, and moved to Waterloo, Iowa. There he worked as a machinist in the shops until 1924, when he became acting foreman, theoregular foreman until 1935. Then, on account of failing health, he retired from the labor and heavy responsibilities that position imposed upon him.

Hoping that his health might improve, he, with his family, moved to the State of Oregon some two years ago, but in the spring of 1938 they returned to Waterloo, where he resided until the time of his death, which occurred suddenly at his home, December 30, 1938, in his 61st year, leaving surviving, of his immediate family, his wife, one daughter and son above named, one grandson, and three brothers, Arthur, William, and Harry, all of Seattle, Wash.

He became a member of the Church of God years ago. He was one of its faithful, substantial, and active members to the time of his death. In 1931 he was elected treasurer of the National Bible Institution, which position he held until he felt that he could serve no longer on account of his failing health, and his moving to Oregon.

Bro. Ellis was a most dependable man, true to his convictions of what he believed to be right; a wise and conservative counsellor, kind and generous in supporting the cause of truth and righteousness, making many liberal contributions to the National Bible Institution. Only a week before his death he presented a splendid motor truck, worth some hundreds of dollars, to Golden Rule Home. Such acts were characteristic of the man, whose contributions of service in every way were cheerfully made. He was one of God's noblemen.

The profusion of beautiful floral offerings, and the multitude that followed him to the grave, gave silent testimony to the love and respect in which he was held by those with whom he had associated in life.

After appropriate services we laid him to rest, and to wait for the realization of his hope in Christ.

MRS. G. W. HOSKINS

Jennie Louisa, daughter of Albert and Sarah L. Nicholas, was born September 21, 1877, in Stearns County, Minn., and has lived her entire life in this community. She died in the hospital at St. Cloud, Minn., December 29, 1938.

On December 9, 1896, she was united in marriage to George W. Hoskins of Eden Valley, Minn. To this union were born five children, Mrs. Mabel Schultz and Donald W. of St. Paul, Minn., Forrest M. of Chicago, Ill., Florence E. Marshall, Litchfield, Minn., and Orria R. at home. With these she leaves to mourn her death her husband; nine grandchildren; two sisters, Mrs. F. H. Hoskins of Kimball, Minn., and Mrs. Ezra R. Palmer of Paynesville, Minn.; two half sisters, Mrs. Claire Tempest, Fairfield, Wash., and Mrs. Ben Weaver, N. Hollywood, Calif.; and three half brothers, William L. Thurman, Jacksonville, Ore., Wesley B. Thurman, St. Cloud, Minn., and John L. Thurnan of Great Falls, Mont.

In early childhood she became a member of the Church of God at Eden Lake, and has ever been faithful and true to her convictions.

Funeral services were conducted Sunday afternoon, Jan. 1, 1939, at the Church of God in Eden Valley by Eld. C. E. Lapp of St. Cloud, assisted by Eld. G. L. Cooper, the local pastor. Interment was made in Lakeview Cemetery at Eden Valley. E. W. Marshall.

TO OUR BROTHERHOOD

I am coming to you once more relative to our National Bible Institution Indebtedness Fund. We are now nearly to the halfway point, but contributions to this Fund are slowing down very much. The National Bible Institution official board has thought that inasmuch as the other National Bible Institution creditors, owing to the embarrassing financial condition into which the Institution had been plunged, accepted fifty per cent, or less, of their claims in satisfactory settlement, these creditors, being members of the church, and interested in its welfare, would cheerfully respond with a reduction of 25 per cent of their claims, since whatever is paid on these claims must be contributed by our brethren. In response to my letters proposing such cooperation in this way, a majority of these creditors promptly replied favorably, offering to make substantial reductions in order to secure what is usually considered reasonable settlement in such situations, and assist our General Conference honorably out of this embarrassing situation. However, some of them seem to be unwilling to reduce the amount of their claims, except that one or two propose to donate a portion at least of the interest.

I am hoping to be able to raise, by this means, 75 per cent of the principal amount of these notes, and when we have reached and have in hand this amount, it is my intention to distribute the amount pro rata to these creditors.

The National Bible Institution, like many corporations and business firms and individuals, made investments in enterprises which appeared to be very safe and prosperous, but which the depression swept away, leaving the investors to lose far more than 50 per cent of 75 per cent. It seems to me that a creditor of the National Bible Institution should be glad to know that his friends, upon whom there is no legal responsibility, will voluntarily contribute to the amount of a large percentage of his claims. It speaks well for our people.

Let us do our best in our efforts to climb speedily to the top of the steps.

L. E. Conner, Manager.

What We "Go Fer"

We of the Gopher State "go fer" the great game of football in a big way, as the rest of our nation knows. Of course, there are many other things we go for in a similar manner, and there are some things we pass up with indifference, but when it comes to football, we're out in the lead.

Our title to this page not only indicates that the words which follow concern evangelism in Minnesota, but is also an exhortation to all to obey its command and "go pher" evangelism in a really sincere, enthusiastic, and energetic manner. Let's get at it! We may be in enemy territory, the opposition may be strong, but keep your eye on the goal, and carry the Word across! We'll win if we work together, for our Master has said of His church: "The gates of hell shall not prevail against it"!

Gophers-let's go for evangelism!

To Be or Not to Be!

There are those who can remember when Minnesota was one of the leading states in regard to evangelistic effort. A burning zeal to see men and women brought to a saving knowledge of Christ was responsible. Are we to be one of those "has beens," or will we become a powerful force working for the spread of the gospel? That is the question! We are the ones who will answer it. We are not so much concerned now about what has been, but what we are concerned about is—what will be in the future?

Let's Not Hibernate

Just because we are Gophers we should not hibernate. To do so means to spend the winter in close quarters, usually in profound sleep, from which it is very hard to awaken. If you have been keeping under cover, think of Paul's words in Ephesians 5:14, "Awake thou that sleepest," etc. The churches here in Minnesota will be just as much alive as we make them. Will you be a helper in this work? We need you, and you need us. In order that we may all "Go-pher" Evangelism, each church will have what we wish to be known as "Conference Sunday."

Conference Sunday

Conference Sunday is one Sunday each quarter set aside by your church for special evangelistic effort. At this time information will be given concerning past work and future plans in evangelistic work, as well as an opportunity to assist financially by means of special offering. Be on hand, and use this golden opportunity to have a share in this work.

The Minnesota State Conference will convene the second week in June.

The regular schedule of evangelistic services at the present time is as follows:

Elder John L. Denchfield is in charge. The first Sunday of each month, morning and evening, eight miles southeast of Onamia; second Sunday, morning and afternoon at the Johnson's home, three miles south of Hector; third Sunday, morning and evening at McKinley School, eight miles southeast of Mora. If it is possible, we plan to arrange for meetings at Lester Prairie and White Pine, Minnesota, and Clear Lake, Wisconsin.

THE RESTITUTION HERALD

This religious paper should be in every Church of God home in the State of Minnesota. If you will examine this copy you will find that Brother S. E. Magaw, who was formerly pastor of the Eden Valley Church, is the editor. Brother G. L. Cooper, who is now pastor of the Eden Valley Church, is editor of the Berean Department. Mrs. Tom Savage of St. Cloud, Minnesota, is editor of the Children's Page. You are either personally acquainted with these people, or have heard of them.

You will enjoy reading THE HERALD, for many of our own Church of God writers are making it very interesting, as well as instructive, in teaching the things of the Word of God. If you do not now take it, only $1.00 will bring it to you for nine months, while the regular subscription price is $2.00 per year. You could never spend $1.00 in a way that would bring greater returns.

This copy of The Herald is being sent to you by the Minnesota State Conference. We hope you will enjoy it so much that you will send in your dollar right away, and become one of the many who would not now do without it in the home. If possible, we want to devote this page once a month to the work of the gospel just here in Minnesota, but it will only be possible as you respond.

Is Your Radio Working?

If so, tune in to the morning devotions at station KFAM, 1420 Kilocycles, in St. Cloud at 7 a.m. each morning. The St. Cloud Church of God will broadcast once every three weeks, on Monday morning. The date this month is January 30. Next month it will come on February 20. Will you listen in, and then drop a card to C. E. Lapp, 41-31st Ave. N., to let us know how the program is received. Thanks!

Our Aim

It is our aim to put The Restitution Herald with the Go-pher Page on it into every home of Church of God people in the State of Minnesota. Our mailing list at the present is far from accurate and complete. Please help us. If you know of any who are members of the church and yet isolated, please send in their names. This page is just a start toward unifying the work here in Minnesota. If you are not a subscriber, this paper cost us three cents to put into your hands. If you are a subscriber it has cost us nothing. The State Conference will be helped very materially if you will send your contribution to our treasurer, Mrs. Ruth Hoskins, Eden Valley, Minnesota. Little or much will be appreciated.

What a Book

By F. L. Austin

WHEN the eye first rests upon the majestic massive mountain, or upon the never-ceasing waterfall of a Niagara, the witness seems stricken dumb in awe. As knowledge increases he sees more and more of the beautiful detail and workmanship essential to the construction of these wonders of nature—more of the matchless precision with which the Creator works His works. Man's feebly increasing knowledge lifts veil after veil from off the veiled beauties all about him.

So also is the Bible. Looking at it as a whole, it is majestically grand; in its details, it is exquisitely beautiful. Some of its glorious mysteries had, said Paul in Romans 16:25, been "kept secret since the world began," while 1 Peter 1:5 reads that some are "to be revealed (unveiled) in the last times."

UNVEILED BEAUTIES

The Bible was not first written in English, or other modern language. The Old Testament was written mostly in Hebrew—a little, including Daniel 2:4 to 7:28, in Aramaic. The New Testament was written in Greek. Students say that it is extremely difficult to translate the inspired Hebrew and Greek so as to convey to the English reader all of the delicate and beautiful shadings, and meaningful richnesses of Bible thought contained in those original languages. Not only are the languages widely different, but the translators possibly lack some of complete inspiration.

Let us turn to Matthew 1, and unveil some of its hidden beauty of strength—strength unbreakable, immovable. First, we must realize that each letter of the Greek alphabet, like those of the Hebrew, represents a specific number. Alpha, or A, in addition to its sound value, has also the value of our figure "1." B = 2. I = 10. The eleventh letter = 20; the seventeenth = 100; the next = 200; and so on. Thus, each and every letter, each and every word, each and every sentence, in the Greek or Hebrew, have their respective, as well as their combined, numerical values. The numerical value of the word "Jesus," which in Greek is spelled "I E S O U S," is 10, 8, 200, 70, 400, 200, a total of 888. With these explanations, and further, that Matthew and is as follows:

"The vocabulary of the first half of this genealogy of the first eleven verses has 49 words. 49 happens to be 7×7 . It has two separate numeric features. First, it is a multiple of 7; second, the sum of its factors is 14—twice 7. Of these 49 words 28 or 7×4 , begin with a vowel and 21, or 7×3 , with a consonant. That is to say, the words of the vocabulary are divided into words beginning with a vowel and words beginning with a consonant, not at random, but by sevens. So we have four features of sevens. The 49 words of the vocabulary have 266 letters. That is a multiple of 7, i. e., 38×7 , but that is not all. The sum of the figures 266 is 14, or twice seven, and the sum of the factors $7 \times 2 \times 19$ is also a multiple of seven; and we have three additional features of seven.

"I have said that the 49 words in the vocabulary are divided between vowel words and consonant words by sevens. The 266 letters of the vocabulary follow exactly the same plan, namely, 140 of them, 7×20 , are vowels, and 126, or 18×7 , are consonants.

"There is only one chance in a million that these things could have happened accidentally, but if that were all we might say—'Well, a strange thing may happen once in a while, even though the chance is only one in a million'; but it so happens that of those 49 words, 42 are nouns and 7 are not nouns. Of the 42 nouns, 35 are proper names, the other 7 are common names. Of the 35 proper names, 28 are male ancestors of the Lord Jesus Christ. This presents not only a set of divisions of seven, but it diminishes the chances 345 times. In other words, this scheme shows that some mathematical artist, for some reason, sat down and said to himself—'I will construct that small portion of genealogy in such a way that when I get through, all these remarkable features of 7 appear.' I tried to (Please turn to page 10)

"Dust Thou Art"

Man and all his works are made of dust. Scholars may not believe that "God formed man of the dust of the ground," but it is evident that in death man turns to dust. His end is evidence of his origin.

Mother Earth, so correctly named, has scattered her dust from deserts into kings' houses. Luscious fruits were once, in substance, hid in the earth. Towering sky-scrapers can be traced backward to mine, and to forest with billions of roots grasping and feeding in the earth. Speeding monarchs of the sky were conceived in the womb of the world, and, as if to warn all lofty monarchs, now and then one plunges to the ground, burying itself by its own weight in the substance from which it came.

Gold and silver tarnish. Iron rusts away. Empires "became like chaff . . . and the wind carried them away."

Only by breath from God can earth, organized a little, walk on other earth. "Dust thou art." Nor is the journey very long. Then the "lovely and pleasant," those "swifter than eagles," and "stronger than lions" are blown away. "How are the mighty fallen!"

"Hope Maketh Not Ashamed"

That the flower of this present life quickly fades has always been understood by the people of God. Further, the faithful have always had a hope. Isaiah's voice that "the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose," has echoed and reechoed in the testimony of all saints.

Abraham and Sarah "died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth" (Heb. 11:13). And Abraham "looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God" (11:10).

Moses "refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt: for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward. . . . He endured, as seeing him who is invisible" (Heb. 11:24-27).

Isaiah prophesied, "All flesh is grass, and all the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field: . . . surely the people is grass." But Isaiah was not discouraged. He cried, "O Jerusalem . . . lift up thy voice with strength; lift it up, be not afraid; say unto the cities of Judah, Behold your God!

"Behold, the Lord God will come with strong hand, and his arm (Christ) shall rule for him: behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him.

"He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth: and the isles shall wait for his law.

"The sun shall be no more thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee: but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light....

"I the Lord will hasten it in his time.

"The wolf (wolf) and the lamb (lamb) shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock... They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord." (See Isa. 40:6-11; 42:4; 60:19-22; 65:25.)

The Savior who said, "Foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head" (Luke 9:58), also said, "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory" (Matt. 25:31). . . . How soft is the stone pillow upon which come visions of glory! It is no wonder that Jacob tithed!

Paul said, "Here we have no continuing city, but we seek one to come" (Hcb. 13:14).

James said, "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him" (James 1:12).

Peter quotes, "All flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass" (1 Peter 1:24), but adds, "When the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away" (1 Peter 5:4).

"In My Flesh Shall I See God"

So testified Job, as he foresaw his Redeemer and the resurrection. David said, "I will behold thy face . . . when I awake, with thy likeness." "Jacob shall not (then) be ashamed, neither shall his face (then) wax pale." "The inhabitant shall not say, I am sick," but "the eyes of the blind shall be opened, . . . then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing." "Now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face." Now "we look for the Savior . . . who shall change our vile body," that at last "the pure in heart , . . shall see God."

Messengers With a Message

By J. R. LeCrone

SEVERAL years ago the writer served for a period as a messenger for one of the world's largest telegraph companies. Though he was a very unimportant cog in a very large wheel, he was in a position to observe some highly important truths. Chief among these was the fact that any message, in order to properly perform its function, must be delivered promptly and accurately. Indeed, "speed and accuracy" is the slogan of the company.

Though the percentage of error is small, and every effort is made to insure prompt delivery of messages, inaccurate transmission and delayed delivery costs the company hundreds of dollars annually for adjustments and lawsuits. A message that is delivered too late is of no value, and one that has a message differing from the one originally handed to the clerk, even though the difference be small, might better never be delivered at all. Though speed and accuracy are both necessary, accuracy is of the first importance. The company that accepts the message for delivery is held responsible for losses resulting from errors in transmission or undue delay in delivery.

When the Great Commission, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature," was given Christianity by Jesus, He made of Christians the most important of all messengers. The eternal life of many of God's people depends upon the speed and accuracy with which they deliver the "good news" (gospel) of the kingdom. While speed is essential, accuracy is of the first importance. If we are to deliver the message of salvation accurately and in its fullness, it behooves us to first thoroughly acquaint ourselves with its contents.

Foolish indeed would we consider the messenger who came to us with the information that he had important news for us—a matter of life and death—and then seemed uncertain of what the news consisted, and was unable to answer our questions concerning details. In the Old Testament we find the record of a messenger who did just that.

Absalom, one of David's sons, had rebelled against his father, and had gathered about himself an army for the purpose of slaying the king and himself mounting the throne of Israel. David sent out an army to oppose him, but gave explicit directions that Absalom was not to be harmed.

During the course of the battle Absalom caught his head in a tree, and the mule upon which he had been riding continued its course, leaving Absalom hanging in mid-air. Being found thus, he was thrust through the heart and killed. It then became the duty of Joab, the commanding officer, to send a runner to David with the news of Absalom's death. Accordingly, he dispatched Cushi, a man who had witnessed the slaying of Absalom and who was thoroughly familiar with the events of the day, to carry the news to David.

Then Ahimaaz, son of Zadok the priest, saw that the battle had gone in favor of the forces of David, and begged to be allowed to run to the king with the news. Joab refused permission, but Ahimaaz persisted. What happened then is repeated here just as it appears in the record. "Then said Ahimaaz the son of Zadok yet again to Joab, But howsoever, let me, I pray thee, also run after Cushi. And Joab said, Wherefore wilt thou run, my son, seeing that thou hast no tidings ready? But howsoever, said he, let me run. And he said unto him, Run. Then Ahimaaz ran by the way of the plain, and overran Cushi.

"And David sat between the two gates: and the watchman went up to the roof over the gate unto the wall, and lifted up his eyes, and looked, and behold a man running alone. And the watchman cried, and told the king. And the king said, If he be alone, there is tidings in his mouth. And he came apace, and drew near. And the watchman saw another man running: and the watchman called unto the porter, and said, Behold another man running alone. And the king said, He also bringeth tidings. And the watchman said, Me thinketh the running of the foremost is like the running of Ahimaaz the son of Zadok. And the king said, He is a good man, and cometh with good tidings.

"And Ahimaaz called and said unto the king, All is well. And he fell down to the earth upon his face before the king, and said, Blessed be the Lord thy God, which hath delivered up the men that lifted up their hand against my lord the king. And the king said, Is the young man Absalom safe? And Ahimaaz answered, When Joab sent the king's servant, and me thy servant, I saw a great tumult, but I knew not what it was. And the king said unto him, Turn aside, and stand here. And he turned aside and stood still.

"And, behold, Cushi came; and Cushi said, Tidings, my lord the king: for the Lord hath avenged thee this day of all them that rose up against thee. And the king said unto Cushi, Is the young man Absalom safe? And Cushi answered, The enemies of my lord the king, and all that rise against thee to do thee hurt, be as that young man is. And the king was much moved, and went up to the chamber over the gate, and wept" (2 Sam. 18:22-33).

Proud of his fleetness of foot, anxious for the opportunity to display his skill, and at the same time gain the honor of being the first to deliver the good news, Ahimaaz overlooked one very important detail—the message itself. When he reached the king he discovered, much to his chagrin, that he was unable to answer the king's questions. He was forced to confess that he "saw a great tumult, but . . . knew not what it was." Then, at the king's command, he was further humiliated by being forced to stand by while his slower rival, who knew the details of the message, told the king what he wanted to know (Please turn to page 12)

Signs of the Times

By R. A. Curlis

"THE signs of the times," presaging our Lord's return, are so well known now, as historical facts, that I need but briefly refer to them here.

Wireless Telegraphy. "Canst thou send lightnings, that they may go, and say unto thee, Here we are?" (Marginal reading, "Behold us.") That question (Job 38:35), made in the oldest book in the Bible, finds its answer in our time by Marconi. Many lives have been saved at sea by the SOS calls for help in times of distress at sea.

LACK OF EMPLOYMENT. "For before these days there was no hire for man, nor any hire for beast; neither was there any peace to him that went out or came in because of the affliction: for I set all men every one against his neighbour" (Zech. 8:10). To the 10,000,000 out of work today, comment is needless.

TRAVEL BY AIRSHIP. "Who are these that fly as a cloud, and as the doves to their windows?" (Isa. 60:8). Some years ago, here at Dayton, Ohio, when the aircraft people were practicing, and maneuvering, I counted fifty-five airplanes in formation, flying "as a cloud" of birds, or "doves to their windows." It was a beautiful sight in times of peace. For rapid travel across continents and oceans it is marvelous to contemplate such conquest of the air for the betterment of man. But consider, too, what horror can come when these birds of the air are used to spray poison gas, and death-dealing missiles from the sky.

TRAVEL BY AUTOMOBILES. "The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall justle one against another in the broad ways: they shall seem like torches, they shall run like the lightnings" (Nahum 2:4). This was written 2,700 years ago.

Many Shall Run. "Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased" (Dan. 12:4). "And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people: and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time: and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book. And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt" (Dan. 12:1, 2).

Never in the history of the world has there been so much travel on the earth, over the oceans, and in the air, as at the present time. The floodgates of knowledge seem to have all been opened wide, for the diffusion of knowledge, in all lines of endeavor. Such running to and fro, and such knowledge, indicate Daniel's "time of trouble" is near.

NATIONAL DISTRESS AND PERPLEXITY, "And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh. . . . So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand. . . .

"And take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares. For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth. Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man' (Luke 21:25-28, 31, 34-36).

As prophecy is history written in advance, we have here a divine portrayal of the national affairs of all governments of earth today, written over nineteen centuries ago. Does not history fill the mold of prophecy? Facts are said to be stubborn things, and to admit them is to concede that we are on the very threshold of the most stupendous events the world has ever witnessed; the coming of Christ and the kingdom of God. The Master has said, "Be of good cheer: it is I; be not afraid" (Mark 6:50). We may soon "see the king in his beauty" (Isa. 33:17).

"The King in His beauty is coming,
His form soon descending we'll see,
Attended with hosts of bright angels,
Lo, Zion is waiting for Thee.

"Our harps which have hung upon willows, Shall be strung anew to Thy praise, In shouts of thanksgiving and honor, To Thee, 'King of Beauty,' we'll raise."

GREAT WEALTH AMASSED. Amassing of great wealth is a sign of Christ's coming. There were a few millionaires some years ago, who could almost be counted on one's fingers. John Jacob Astor, A. T. Stewart, the Goulds, Fields, and Carnegies, stood in a class by themselves, as financiers. Now every populous city has to have several officers to keep tab on the numerous millionaires and multimillionaires, so as to collect the right amount of taxes for the government. James informs us by "the sure word of prophecy," concerning "rich men," in the following language, "Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are mothcaten. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days. Behold, the hire of the labourers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth: and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of sabaoth. Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton: ye have nourished your hearts, as in a day of slaughter. . . .

"Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain. Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh" (James 5:1-5).

From the language of Elder D. T. Taylor who, a half century ago, wrote many articles and books concerning Christ's second coming, I quote his earnest desire, which expresses my own, "Oh! that men would preach it, not as a sectarian theory, but as a God-appointed reality, an indispensable necessity, an eternal truth."

Man's Salvation

By Emory Macy

IN THIS present age most people desire to gain wealth and fame, while others are satisfied with that of which Paul wrote, "And having food and raiment let us be therewith content" (1 Tim. 6:8). Think not that we should not strive beyond that point, but that is a blessing from God for which we owe Him our daily thanks.

Regardless of our station in life, God created the first man from the dust of the earth, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life. Man, rich or poor, has the same breath, the same source of life from the Creator. Every man is willing to give all that he possesses to retain this life just a few more hours.

The right to live forever was forfeited when Adam and Eve yielded to temptation while in the Garden. They were not content to abide by God's law, for they disobeyed His command, "But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die" (Gen. 2:17). Because of disobedience, God drove man from the Garden, "lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live for ever" (Gen. 3:22).

At the time of creation God made man on a higher plane than he is now—pure, spotless, and without sin—but man fell, fell into a plane of sin, strife, envy, and hate. Hope for life was restored when God promised a Savior to the world that by faith man might have life and "have it more abundantly." It was not God's plan in the beginning that man should die, but that man should look to Him as the source of all that is right. The curse, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground" (Gen. 3:19), was pronounced upon man. In labor he realizes that there is a God, but in the lust of the flesh often puts all of his confidence in his own strength, and neglects God's Word and the hope for life again.

It was through the first man, Adam, that sin and death were brought into this world. Through the "last Adam," Jesus Christ our Savior, God has made a plan that all who prove faithful, and believe in Him, may gain everlasting life. Let us take unto ourselves the meaning of Jesus' words, "I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live" (John 11:25).

The faithful servants and prophets believed in God, and it is said of Abraham, father of the faithful, that by faith he was willing to offer up his sou Isaac. "By faith Isaac blessed Jacob and Esau concerning things to come" (Heb. 11:20). True faith in God prompted Joseph's desire to have his bones carried into the Promised Laud. "By faith Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season" (Heb. 11:24, 25). David, strong in faith, "was a man after God's own heart." Solomon, the son of David, believed in the God of Abraham, and according to 1 Kings 3:28, all Israel feared the king, "for they saw that the wisdom of God was in him, to do judgment." Job was a man of much patience, with great faith in God's promises.

Much time and space could be taken up with several more examples of the faithful, but instead, let us consider ourselves. By daily prayer our faith may be made stronger. Faith will make us whole. "Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer: . . . be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life" (Rev. 2:10).

· Christ is Heir of the world, and shall reign until He has put all things under His feet. "But when he saith, All things are put under him, it is manifest that he is excepted, which did put all things under him. And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all" (1 Cor. 15:27, 28).

"He Made the Stars Also"

By Norman J. Macleod

"The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God" (Psalm 14:1).

NOT long ago a certain popular preacher in our own group gave a sermon in which he extolled the magnitude of God. He dwelt at length upon the wonders of astronomy, of how God was a God of magnitudes such as would almost stun the mind of man to comprehend. He spoke of the immeasurable vastness of the universe, and of the God that made it. When he had finished, members of his congregation swarmed around him to congratulate him upon the many things that he had said. Yet many of those same people, had they understood fully the implications of his words, would have been horrified and shocked to think that he would preach such things.

This minister spoke of a heavenly body that had been recently discovered, that was approximately three billion light years distant from the earth. What does that mean? That means that the light that is now reaching the earth from that heavenly body must have started its journey through space three billion years ago! Yet most Bible students will not admit that the stars are more than six thousand years old.

We read in Genesis 1:16, "God made two great lights; the greater light to rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night: he made the stars also." This, if we follow the strictest of "fundamentalist" teachings, took place after God made the earth. Certainly both ideas could not be correct. Either the Bible does not say that the stars were created after the earth, the sun, and the moon, or else we should reject the teachings of the astronomer.

Many fundamentalists utterly reject the teachings of astronomy. This latter rejection is one reason that educated people who understand the sciences reject the Bible. Let us look further.

(1) The Bible student will look in vain to find anything in the divinely inspired Word that tells how old the earth is, or that says how long it took God to do the work of creation, or that says anything about the earthly span of the life of man on the earth as being 6,000 years.

About the year 500 A. D., there lived a man by the name of Origen who, in conjunction with Eusebius Africanus, wished a theory onto the Christian world that is still doing its deadly work of creating skeptics and infidels. Whoever was first responsible for the idea is not definitely known, but they conceived the idea that the span of man's existence upon the face of the earth would be 7,000 years, including the millennial reign of Christ. In other words, they conceived that from the creation of Adam to the second coming of Christ should be 6,000 years. Eusebius asserted that the coming of Christ could not be any more than 500 years from his day, and, therefore, the coming of the Savior to reign would be at the year 1,000 A.D. That would place the creation of Adam at 5,000 B.C. So certain was he of the accuracy of his theories that he asserted that to be a fact—he even fixed the time of the creation of Adam to the very hour and minute!

Archbishop Usher, living in the time of Cromwell in England, found the writings of Origen and Eusebius fascinating to him. He said that their theories were correct, except for the fact that they miscalculated the date of the Second Advent, as was evidenced by the fact that the world had continued on its weary way for more than 500 years beyond the time of Origen. He merely shifted the date of the Second Advent 1,000 years farther along, and said that Adam was created in 4,000 B.C.

In the time of Washington, the new Gregorian Calendar was adopted, and thus shifted our dates to make 4,004 B.C. the date that appears at the top of the margins of the old King James Versions of the Bible.

Why do Bible students insist on making the age of man 7,000 years? I can find not a single item in the Bible that gives the slightest authority for such a conclusion! Yet many of the ablest of our ministers will tell their congregations that such is the case. They assert, without proof, that each of the previous "days" of creation were each 1,000 years long, and that the age of man is 7,000 years. That would mean that the sixth day of creation is much longer than any other. If those days are not days, then why limit them to 1,000 years, or 8,000 years, or any other number of years?

The only indication of authority for using 1,000 years for a day is found in several such passages as 2 Peter 3:8, where we read, "But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." If we look at the context we readily see that the Apostle is not saying that when God mentions a day through the prophecies he means 1,000 years. If that were so, where do the innumerable teachers of prophecy find that a day equals a year? The Apostle is saying, that though we count God slack with us by waiting so long to send Jesus, He is not slack, but wishes to wait a long time until He gives all of us a chance to come to His knowledge and saving grace. If Jesus had come when the church fathers wanted Him to, where would we be found? But, thanks be to God, we were not left out of His plan, by what some men count slackness.

(2) If the Bible student is exact in his utter literality of the Bible, then he is confronted with a dilemma: the first chapter delineates seven days; the second chapter of Gene-

The Coming of Christ

Secret Manifestation

By A. E. Griffiths

A FTER studying Daniel 11:36-45, we have found a great military power is going to descend on Palestine, and capture it, including Jerusalem, the city that God has reserved for Himself. We read in 2 Chronicles 6:6, "But I have chosen Jerusalem, that my name might be there." Again in 2 Chronicles 12:13, speaking of Rehoboam, we read, "He reigned seventeen years in Jerusalem, the city which the Lord had chosen out of all the tribes of Israel, to put his name there."

This gives us a clear understanding that God has chosen this city for His earthly abode. To emphasize this He tells us some five hundred years later through the Prophet Zechariah, "And the Lord shall yet comfort Zion, and shall yet choose Jerusalem" (Zech. 1:17). To make this prophecy sure God employs the rule given in Matthew 18:16, "that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established." So the Prophet repeats his assertion, "And the Lord shall inherit Judah for his portion in the holy land, and shall choose Jerusalem again" (Zech. 2:12).

This leaves no alternative, but to believe that God has reserved Palestine for Himself, and particularly Jerusalem for His capital city when He takes over the rule of the earth. This being the case, why does God allow this particular location to be polluted by a vile horde of heathers? Let us turn to the Scripture for an answer.

When Moses was near the end of his life, he gave this prophecy, "But if thine heart turn away, so that thou wilt not hear, but shalt be drawn away, and worship other gods, and serve them; I denounce unto you this day that ye shall surely perish, and that ye shall not prolong your days upon the land, whither thou passest over Jordan to go to possess it" (Deut. 30:17, 18).

We know that the Jews have been driven out of their land time and time again for that one great sin, "unbelief." Hosea 3:4 says, "For the children of Israel shall abide many days without a king, and without a prince, and without a sacrifice, and without an image, and without an ephod, and without teraphim." This prophecy has most certainly been fulfilled to their everlasting shame and disgrace. To climax their sin, when the Son of God was proclaimed their King, they murdered Him, just as Jesus had said they would. See His parable of the wicked husbandmen (Matt. 21:33-41). This utter disregard for God brought on the punishment they have been receiving ever since.

However, God has meted out mercy with His judgments. He says in Amos 9:8, "Behold, the eyes of the Lord God are upon the sinful kingdom, and I will destroy it from off the face of the earth; saving that I will not utterly destroy the house of Jacob, saith the Lord. For, lo, I will command, and I will sift the house of Israel among all nations, like as corn is sifted in a sieve, yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth." Therefore a remnant of Israel will be left out of the wreck of the nation, which Paul also speaks about in Romans 11:5, "Even so then at this present time also there is a remnant according to the election of grace."

Having ascertained the reason why God has allowed His own special territory to be invaded by His enemies, it is now necessary for us to find out where Christ appears from to rescue His land, when the nations have reached the height of their ambitions.

There are two phases of Christ's coming, His secret, and His open manifestation. We are now dealing with His secret coming, which will only be known to those who have learned the truth, and obeyed it.

Paul tells us in Hebrews 9:28, "So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time, without sin unto salvation." Notice, it is only those who look for Him that will be rewarded, not those that are indifferent. Paul explains the order of the resurrection: "But every man in his own order: Christ the firstfruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming" (1 Cor. 15:23).

It is important to understand why Christ's appearance to His own people is to be in secret. Paul tells us, "But of the times and the seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you. For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night" (1 Thess. 5:1, 2). This agrees with the words of Jesus in Mark 13: 35-37, "Watch ye therefore: for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cockcrowing, or in the morning: lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping. And what I say unto you I say unto all, Watch."

The fact is, the inhabitants of the world are in spiritual darkness, and are doomed to destruction, and so Christ's appearance to them will be one of anger and punishment. His meeting with His own brethren will be one of love and friendship; therefore will be of a private nature, giving Him an opportunity of imparting to us the details of His manifestation to the world, and our parts therein.

When Christ is prepared to descend from heaven, He will do so in the same manner as He went into heaven (Acts 1:11). He will come in the company of angels, "And then shall he send his angels, and shall gather together his elect from the four winds" (Mark 13:27). This is also foretold in Psalm 50:5, "Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice."

Paul makes this very clear in 1 Thessalonians 4:16, "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel (Michael, Jude 9), and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first." The angels will assemble all the dead first, and then the living (1 Thess. 4:17), and transport them through the air to the meeting place, where Jesus will receive us. We must remember that at this stage we have been made immortal, and shall have power over the air even as Jesus had when He ascended "out of their sight" (Acts 1:9).

We shall not require trains, or steamships, or even airplanes to move around the earth. We will then be able to pass through the air, invisible to mortal people, the same as Jesus suddenly appeared among His disciples, when the doors were shut. (John 20:19.) This phenomenon was not caused by vanishing into thin air like a ghost, but by causing the eyes of mortals not to see what was before them. This is explained in Luke 24:16, "But their eyes were holden that they should not know him."

Having been raised from the dead, or changed to immortality if living when His angel comes for us, we shall then travel as described to Sinai to meet our Lord. David tells us the location in Psalm 68:17, "The chariots of God are twenty thousand, even thousands of angels: the Lord is among them, as in Sinai, in the holy place." This is not the first time God has used this location for an interview with man. He chose this same place when He gave the law to Moses. "And the Lord came down upon mount Sinai" (Ex. 19:20). This was a figure of the time to come, when a greater than Moses will stand there. When the proper time arrives Christ will start from this point on His march to Jerusalem. "The Lord came forth from Sinai, and rose up from Seir unto them, he shined forth from mount Paran, and he came with ten thousands of saints: from his right hand went a fiery law for them" (Deut. 33:2).

Coming up from Sinai Jesus will pass through Edom and Bozrah. "Who is this that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah? this that is glorious in his apparel, travelling in the greatness of his strength" (Isa. 63:1). He will be bent on vengeance on the world. "For the day of vengeance is in mine heart" (Isa. 63:4). He will eventually reach the Mount of Olives, just at the moment the enemy has captured Jerusalem. As soon as He places His foot on the Mount the great earthquake will take place, which will completely change the topography of that part of Palestine (Zech. 14:4), leaving a great valley in which He will destroy the nations (Joel 3:12). "Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision" (Joel 3:14).

This earthquake will enlarge the present Valley of Jehoshaphat, so there will be plenty of room for a horde of fighting men. They will then be chased to Armageddon (Rev. 16:16), where the final battle will take place, and that will be in the Valley of Esdraelon, near the site of old Nazareth. Thus, Jesus of Nazareth will look up His old home as the place where His enemies were finally conquered.

This gives us a dim vision of that great event. May we all be there to see it is my prayer.

sis says this, "These are the generations of the heavens and of the earth when they were created, in the day that the Lord God made the earth and the heavens" (Gen. 2:4). Thus, I have as much authority for saying that God created the universe in twenty-four hours as anybody has for saying seven times that much.

The key to the situation lies in a phrase which is found in Genesis 2:3, "And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it: because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made." The margins in the old versions say "created to make." That does not make sense until we find an antiquated meaning of the word "created," namely, decreed or planned. Then if we reread Genesis 2:3 this way we obtain an entirely different point of view, "And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it: because that in it he had rested from all his work which God planned to make." In other words, the seventh day is not a thing of the past, for it is still in God's plans.

That would agree with other thoughts in the Scripture. When the Jews accused Christ of breaking the Sabbath, He replied as follows, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work" (John 5:17). In other words, Jesus said that His Father was "working up till now." God has not yet stopped working; He will not stop until the work of creation is finished, when at the end of the millennial reign Jesus will turn over His kingdom to God. (Hebrews 4 also teaches the same doctrine.)

(3) Our learned Bible commentators should realize that in the public schools the facts and theories of astronomy are presented in a most convincing manner. They are in accord with the best observations of facts. When a scientist invents a theory he does so with an attempt to explain facts which have been proved so positively that he cannot doubt them. His theories are based upon evidence so indisputable that no other scientist or group of scientists has been able to refute his theories. Most religious theorists are not nearly so careful: they put out a theory without even carefully examining it themselves, and expect to earry it by weight of their position, and by force of their own prestige as ministers of the gospel. They build up a kind of "infallibility doctrine" around themselves.

Why should a minister attempt to build up about the Bible a set of doctrines in conflict with science, when he has not carefully examined the Bible to see if those doctrines really agree or conflict with the Bible? Many religious theories do not agree with either the Bible or scientific fact. Let us discard them entirely,

I can see no conflict with the Bible and the scientific dating of the ages of geology, except the conflict of such men as Origen and Usher and their followers. The Bible says merely: "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." How long did it take Him? The Bible does not say. How did God do it? The Bible does not say. If the Bible is silent, why should we be averse to accepting the teachings of the scientists?

Along the Last Mile

Part 1

By James M. Walkins

"A FTER this I saw in the night visions, and behold a fourth beast, dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly; and it had great iron teeth: it devoured and brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with the feet of it: and it was diverse from all the beasts that were before it; and it had ten horns."

The fourth beast of Daniel 7:7 is all-important because it indicates that the last milestone has been passed, that we are now trudging wearily, hopefully, through the dust and the heat, observing with every step we take new signs and new wonders along the last mile in prophetic thought.

The ten horns we had especially wished to discuss, offering our views according to race and history on the following ten nations: Germany, Italy, France, Spain, Austria, Hungary, Yugo-Slavia, Rumania, Bulgaria, and Greece. As we study these nations, even allowing for some disagreement as to their rightful place with the fourth beast, we observe enough to convince all students that this last beast of Daniel is progressing much more rapidly than we previously thought.

It appears most important, as we consider prophecy from our point of view, that the progress of the fourth beast should be realized.

Our only definite landmark in his progress is his zenith when, according to Daniel, our daily sacrifice (Christ) shall be taken away, and "the abomination that maketh desolate" (a substitute religion) shall be placed in Christ's stead.

We are told that this beast will dominate the world, and the tendency of thought is to expect that an increasing length of time will be necessary to accomplish this after the formation of the beast is complete. To me it appears that by the time that formation is complete, domination will also be complete. No additional time will be required.

Christ foretold, in Matthew 24:15, the peak of power of the beast, "When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place." When a ruler of Turkey will have favor with the Nazi regime, by the acceptance of a religious doctrine formulated by the Nazi, the Nazi will feel called upon to offer armed force, if necessary, to assist the return of Palestine to Turkey, because it is the practice of Germany to demand the return of colonies taken away by the World War. At that time this abomination of the Germanic beast may readily stand in the holy place, or Jerusalem.

Revelation 13 visualizes the same thing in a little different way. Here the power is completed by the uniting of two forces, politics and a religion. Here again this government is said to continue only forty-two months past this point, or three and one half years, a time of extreme trouble and desolation.

In this final treading down of the Jewish people, and later the city of Jerusalem itself, Daniel was told only 2,300 days or less than six and one half years would elapse. When the power of the fourth beast is complete nearly one half of that time will already be passed. The favored ones of Christ will have been already selected and delivered away to a place of safety, and only forty-two months of extreme trouble will intervene between that day and Armageddon.

Unless we anticipate the peak of the power of the fourth beast, then surely we will have been like the foolish virgins and caught unawares. It is for this end, that we might be ready for the coming of Christ, that we have been given prophecy. We must recognize the ascendency of the fourth beast, because if we wait to see the peak of his power then our chance of standing with Christ will be gone.

Thus, we direct attention to the little signposts along the last mile. The most interesting is a headline of the holiday season. Previously we had no indication of the counter-religion that we felt sure must soon show up. The following headline of a large mid-western newspaper provides the beginning of our best signpost, "Nazis throw out story of Christ for a pagan rite." Daily dispatches since are providing us with a side of the Nazi Party that we had heard nothing about before, involving a system of sun worship, and the old Norse gods, that is appalling in its prophetic application. We must reserve a more complete coverage of this thought for a later time.

Another signpost is the nature of the beast itself. Revelation 13 describes it as "like unto a leopard." Such is the main body, or people, of which this group of nations is composed. We have previously ascribed the leopard to Turkey, or more properly, to the old Medo-Persian Empire.

The dictators of Italy and Germany are constantly, in the last few weeks, advancing their theories of a pure Aryan race. Here is our best clue to the beast, as it forms. The Aryan race did not originate in Germany, but the descent of these people can be traced back to the land of the leopard, in the area and vicinity of the Caspian Sea. From there they gradually spread toward the south, populating what is now Persia, Iraq, Syria, and Turkey; thence they moved westward, passing to the south of the Black Sea. Continuing their advance, they finally covered the ten nations we have previously mentioned. The Aryanization program, being fostered by both Italy and Germany, has always been more or less of an unreasonable mystery to the world at large. Christians should watch it with a great deal of interest, for it represents the fundamental nature of the beast itself.

There is much of interest concerning this race that does not appear on the surface. First of all, Japheth, the father of the Gentile race whose period of history we are now closing, had seven sons. One by one these sons, represented by their descendants, have come into power.

First of all was the youngest, Tiras. It was his people that resided in the vicinity of Greece, and who founded the Agean period of history.

Following was Meshech, and then Tubal, in the area of what is now northern Turkey.

Javan, the fourth from the youngest, is represented with a little more scope in his expansions, being credited with four sons. Their names and respective territories are as follows: Elishah, Italy; Tarshish, Italy and Spain; Kittum, Cyprus; and Dodanin, the Greek Isles. We have listed them in entirety, because from them we can readily identify the expansion of the Greek civilization.

Madia, the fifth from the youngest, had his period under Alexander the Great, in the area east and south of the Caspian Sea, extending up through Mesopotamia and including Greece.

Magog, i.e., Turkey, was the sixth, and surely had his turn with the Ottoman Empire, ending with the World War.

We cannot hope to bring out the dozens of interesting side thoughts that a complete study of these sons and their national descendants presents. Each is perfectly placed to contribute his part to the recorded word of prophecy. An understanding of each is necessary for a complete understanding of this last and seventh son that is now rising to power.

Naturally as brothers or, let us say, national brothers, each has contributed much to his successor. Areas have been overlapped, races have been mixed, but all in preparation, it seems, that the hold of Gomer, the seventh, might be more complete by his racial ties over a greater area.

Gomer was the eldest son of Japheth, holding what in most cases is the favored position. It was the custom that all the power, all the wealth, the ultimate in the accomplishments of the father, should be showered upon that position. It seems that this is no exception. Gomer is the Hebrew word meaning "completion." Seven is God's number for completion. It thus appears that both God and man have decreed that after Gomer there shall be no other of the Gentiles come to power. He is the last of the Gentile powers. So it is to Gomer, this Aryan race, that we will next turn our attention.

"I waited patiently for the Lord; and he inclined unto me, and heard my cry. He brought me up also out of an horrible pit, out of the miry clay, and set my feet upon a rock, and established my goings. And he hath put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God."

A QUESTION

Is not the one who keeps Sunday as a holy day in just the same position as the one who holds to the Sabbath? Is it possible for a Christian to keep one day as a holy day above all other days? To our mind, it is utter folly to say that because a man is not a Sabbath keeper or a Sunday keeper he is lost. It is not a question of keeping days holy. The question is, Shall we keep all time holy? Should a Christian be more holy one day than another? Yet, we are not allowed to condemn God's servant whether he keeps one day above another. If the Sabbath keeper keeps it as unto the Lord, that is his matter. The same is true with the Sunday keeper. Then there is the man who keeps every day alike.

We are not to judge God's servants in such matters. Read Paul's line of reasoning in Romans 14:4-6. The worst feature about day keeping is that those who differ spend more time finding fault with each other about the days they keep than they spend trying to be true Christians.

sit down and figure out how long it would have taken Matthew to write that particular piece of genealogy, and I reckoned that it would have taken him, if he did nothing else, and did not sleep or eat or do any business or see any visitors, a good month to do that. You will soon see that it would have been impossible for him to do it at all, because there are features that make it impossible."

Mr. Panin continues, "The whole book of Matthew is built on the numeric pattern of 7. So are Mark and Luke and John." The last 12 verses of Mark are denounced as spurious, by some critics. Mr. Panin, in agreement with other like students, states that those verses are true to the pattern of 7. They are not spurious.

What a Book! Recording history and story and prophecy and promise always, throughout, in patterns of mathematical accuracy! No mortal unaided by inspiration could possibly perform such feat. Did some one exclaim, "I never appreciated the greatness of God so much as when I stood before one of His great, strong, massive, towering mountains? But—

Look at His Book! Gaze upon its numeric patterns! They are 3's, and 5's, and 6's, and 7's, and 10's, and 12's, and others! Each pattern is perfect in itself, yet so accurately interlocked with other crossing, crisscrossing, and paralleling patterns as to form one interlaced, unbreakable, immovable, massive, majestic whole more astounding, more awe-striking, than mountain peak or range. All, for the Creator, in the language of the late O'Connell, is "as effortless as woodland nooks send violets up and paint them blue" and received the honor of being the bearer of the tidings.

MESSENGERS WITH A MESSAGE

We sometimes wonder if it could be possible that the same bug that bit Ahimaaz does not sometimes bite Christians today. Becoming aware that momentous events have taken and are taking place, with more to come, they observe that others are achieving personal glory, and drawing crowds of people to themselves by telling of these events and interpreting their meaning. Then, like Ahimaaz, they become enthused and decide that they, too, must carry the news, and receive the plaudits of the crowds. They must do it quickly, they think, before some one else gets there with it first. So enthralled do they become with the prospect of displaying their oratorical prowess, and becoming the center of attraction amid crowds and excitement, that they overlook the same detail as did Ahimaaz. They neglect to become thoroughly acquainted with the message itself. They seem to be a little vague as to what their "good news" really is, and are unable to harmonize its details. It seems altogether probable that some Christian leaders, were they as honest as was Ahimaaz, would have to report, "I saw a great tumult, but I knew not what it was."

Many times the evangelist or pastor who draws the largest crowds, who shouts the loudest and creates the most excitement among his listeners, is considered as the most successful messenger of the gospel, regardless of the details of the message that he carries. In the confusion that marks some religious gatherings, excitement is taken for information, uproar parades as news, shouting becomes religion, fancy disguises itself to resemble truth, and imagination is accepted as revelation.

The Apostle Paul, recognizing this danger, gave the young evangelist Timothy the following advice, "Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. But shun profane and vain babblings: for they will increase unto more ungodliness" (2 Tim. 2:15, 16). Paul's conclusion, arrived at, no doubt, after years of observation, was that the babblings of the uninformed only increase unto more ungodliness and were worse than no message at all. Paul then pointed out the example of Hymeneus and Philetus; "who concerning the truth have erred, saying that the resurrection is past already; and overthrow the faith of some." Their inaccurate message was tending to the destruction of the faith "without (which) it is impossible to please God."

Paul must have felt very strongly on this subject, for he most sternly warned the people of Galatia against receiving a perverted gosepl. "I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel: which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed" (Gal. 1:6-8). The real test of a pastor or evangelist comes after the magnetism of his personality, the persuasion of his oratory, and the pulse-stirring atmosphere that he is able to create, have been withdrawn. When his converts must face the harsh realities of life without him, then shall be revealed whether he was an Ahimaaz seeking personal glory, or a Paul becoming "all things to all men, that (he) might by all means save some." Then shall be known whether the people have been converted to a pleasant voice and a pleasing personality, or have been transformed by the true gospel of Christ. "Every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is" (1 Cor. 3:13).

How we thrill when we read of some church unable to secure a pastor, yet invariably carrying on in spite of that handicap! Such things say most eloquently that some faithful messenger of God in the past has built into that church "gold, silver, (and) precious stones." Conversely, if the work "folds up" upon the departure of the leader it is a fairly conclusive evidence of the presence of a great deal of "wood, hay, (and) stubble."

How often do you say to your pastor, "I wish that you had been with me yesterday, for a friend of mine was asking questions concerning our faith, and I didn't know how to answer him"? The commandment to "be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear" (1 Peter 3:15), was not only addressed to pastors, but to all Christians everywhere.

"All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, throughly furnished unto all good works" (2 Tim. 3:16, 17). That the shoutings and emotionalism of many religious services are of God we cannot be sure. It is a far safer plan to insist upon Scripture.

"No prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (2 Peter 1:20, 21). The prophecy of the Scripture is God's interpretation of the events that transpire in the world. He is the only One who knows exactly what is taking place, and shall yet take place, and what it means. On man's interpretation we cannot depend. Since eternal life hangs in the balance, that man is a wise Christian who insists upon Scriptural proof for the message that he accepts.

When telegraph companies deliver perverted messages, money is lost. When churches make the same mistake, lives are lost, and that for eternity. We cannot afford to have our attention diverted from close examination of the message itself by the manner in which it is delivered. If we insist upon making ourselves familiar with the original copy of the message, as God originally caused it to be written, there is little likelihood that we will be deceived. We shall then be messengers worthy of the message.

May God grant also that our feet may be swift!

... Skatin' on thin ice, my boy?
Parents, sometimes, seek my advice
As to the harm of this or that,
Their boy and girl they'd guide aright,
Till they come to discern what's what.

Again, I point to the danger
Of letting them skate on thin ice;
Then I give an illustration
That doth adequately suffice:
Go put your hand in the ashpan,
Perhaps there were no live coals there,
Lo, the hand is more or less soiled . . .
If you would be pure white, beware!

Hope

Mrs. Hazel Moore, Tipp City, Ohio

Hope is a firm expectation of all promised good things. Everyone has a hope in something. The world has its hopes. However, they are very uncertain, because there is so much deceit and dishonesty in the world.

The world has its hopes of position, wealth, and of obtaining peace, but surely we can see there is no peace. The world, at its best, has plenty of sorrow.

On the other hand, let us look at the hope of the church. What is it? "Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ" (Titus 2:13).

Let us look to that hope with a joy, knowing that when it is revealed it shall never be taken away, but shall last forever through eternity. Our hope is of the glorious appearing of Christ, and the wonderful things that shall come to pass—resurrection, healing the sick and blind, a perfect rule, and at last all sin and death will be taken away. "There shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away."

Is this not a hope worth striving for? So, "Let us not be weary in well doing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." "If we suffer, we shall also reign with him."

All the faithful of old looked forward to that blessed hope which is in Christ Jesus, so while we can see prophecy being fulfilled, let us have faith in that hope till the end, which is nearing.

A Precious Stone

A Brush Creek (Ohio) Berean

"Surely there is a vein for the silver, and a place for gold where they fine it" (Job 28:1).

I know of one who has passed the flower of age, lost all of this world's goods, yet who is rich in faith, having passed through the refiner's fire, and is now pure gold. It is an inspiration to meet such a person. Probably he is doing more good in the world than we anticipate. All who come in contact with him go away with higher ideals of living. He is not preaching Christianity; he is practicing it. And it is practice that changes others. With so much of materialism in the world, so much chasing after sounding brass and tinkling cymbals, it is most refreshing, and also inspiring, to find one who rises above all these; catching a glimpse of the light of a better day when Christ shall return.

Saved

* Annie Mills, Picdmont, S. Carolina

Can anyone get saved on his deathbed? He cannot, if he stubbornly waited till that day. Why? Because one must have faith, works, and baptism. If we live in sin all of our lives, and call, in repentance, upon the Lord on our deathbed, we certainly will not get rewarded. The Lord will reward "every man according to his works" (Rev. 22:12).

If we have faith in God and do not have works, we cannot be saved. James 2:17 says, "Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone."

Now, can faith and works save us? No! Jesus tells us in John 10:9, "I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture." How are we going to enter this door? We must be baptized unto Christ's death. (Rom. 6:3-8.) Again, "Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved" (Acts 4:12).

If we endure unto the end we will be saved. (Matt. 24:13.)

We often hear people say today, that they know such a person was saved before he died, yet knowing he did not have Christ.

Christ said, "What I say unto you I say unto all, Watch" (Mark 13:37).

The Peter of Yesterday

Everyone, all over the world, who is following this series of Sunday school lessons, is learning about Peter, the fisherman. I know you are anxious to learn about him.

We have already learned that he was a fisherman when Jesus called him to follow Him and catch men. We know also that Peter loved Jesus, and was first of all the apostles to declare, "Thou art the Christ." Peter was one of the three apostles chosen to go into a high mountain with Christ where He was changed and glorified before them. Jesus afterward told the three to tell no one about this vision until after He was risen from the dead. "And they kept that saying with themselves, questioning one with another what the rising from the dead should mean" (Mark 9:10).

The Peter of Today

The apostles had been on a mountain in Galilee where Jesus appeared to them after His crucifixion. There He told them to go and teach and baptize, and He would be with them always. (Matt. 28:16-20. Read also Mark 16:14.) However, we find Peter and some others had fished all night without catching any. A man on shore, whom they did not recognize, called to them, and asked them if they had any meat. What did they answer (John 21:15)? Then, casting the net under His direction, the net was so miraculously filled with fishes that some exciting events began to happen.

After they had dined, Jesus asked, "Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me more than these?" Peter answered, "Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee." He did not boastfully reply that he loved Jesus more than the others, as our Peter of yesterday might have done. Peter had learned he had enough to do in taking care of himself, and in seeing that he did what was right and pleasing to Jesus. We cannot judge another's heart as Jesus can, for we merely see the actions, while He looks on people's hearts. We must continue to try to let our actions speak always for Christ.

Three times Jesus asked Peter, "Lovest thou me?" Three times Peter confessed that he did. Those three confessions, no doubt, reminded Peter of his three denials shortly before Christ's crucifixion. This is also the third time Jesus had been with His Twelve Apostles in a group, since His resurrection.

Read the last two verses. Do you think Peter glorified God in his death, as well as in his life? Jesus said, "Follow me." (John 21:18, 19.)

Have you enrolled in our ECE Club? I'm counting on you!

Today we have another state to join our ranks. It is California. So far, more boys than girls have written to me. Girls, you'd better get busy!

Write your title for today. Copy in your book the golden text. Memorize and write where the verse is found.

What picture will you draw today? Why not send me a copy of your drawing? I'll put it in my scrapbook. You might draw a picture of Jesus on the shore in the distance, with a boat out a little way, and Peter wading to shore to be with Jesus. Color, then paste it into your book.

There is still time to send for the rest of your poems. I have a song for you today:

Give of Your Best to the Master

Give of your best to the Master,
Give of the strength of your youth;
Throw your soul's fresh, glowing ardor
Into the battle for truth.
Jesus has set the example,
Dauntless was He, young and brave;
Give Him your loyal devotion,
Give Him the best that you have.

Give of your best to the Master Give Him first place in your heart; Give Him first place in your service, Consecrate every part; Give, and to you shall be given, God, His beloved Son gave, Gratefully seeking to serve Him, Give Him the best that you have.

A Bible

"Mother, I've found an old dusty thing High on the shelf. Just look!"
"Why, that's a Bible, Tommy dear;
Be careful—that's God's Book!"
"God's Book!" the child exclaimed.
"Then, Mother, before we lose it
We'd better send it back to God,
For, you know, we never use it."

AMONG THE CHURCHES

QUARTERLY CONFERENCE NOTICE Pomona, Calif., Feb. 5

We are looking forward with great hope to the coming Quarterly Conference of the Church of God in California. On February 5 we will meet at the Williams' Street Chapel to hear Bro. Lichty, Bro. William Reid, Sr. Railsback, and Bro. Maelcod.

You, in California, who hold a "like pre-cious faith" with us, come! Let us meet together in His name!

Marie Bleasdale, Conf. Sec.

CHURCH OF GOD, TACOMA, WASH.

Our new church group will meet next Sunday (Jan. 15) in our present location. The following week we will move to larger quarters, that we hope will be permanent or used until we can buy a building of our own. The new address will be 1904 South Tacoma Ave., which is just five blocks south of the present location. The building we are moving into is much larger than the one we have been using, and will have more classrooms. We are growing a little. On Sunday, Jan. 8, there were five new attendants.

MEETINGS IN NEBRASKA AND OKLAHOMA

Hemingford, Neb., "beautiful for situation," is a village of one thousand inhabitants in the northwestern part of the State, near the famous fossil beds. The surrounding country is noted for wheat, corn, eattle, and pota-toes; but most interesting of all, there are about thirty carnest, devout members of the Church of God in and near the city. Elder Adams brought the truth to this group of be-lievers many years ago. They had been without a shepherd for the past five or six years, but had continued in the faith, and remained true to their Master and Savior Jesus Christ. The writer conducted services there December 9-18, 1938. Our service there was of the greatest pleasure to the wife and myself,

A series of meetings was held in Apperson, Okla., Jan. 4-12, 1939. Apperson is a new field of labor. The interest was more than we expected. Professor Felty and his daughter Thelma, teachers in the Apperson school, were good to us. The meeting was held in the school building, and it was some trouble to get the rooms arranged for the evening services. However, they seemed to take pleasure in it all, and they were otherwise a great help in the meeting. One young married lady came forward, and there would have been others, had the meeting continued longer. We were called Thursday, Jan. 12, to go to Arapahoe, Neb., to conduct the funeral service of our beloved Bro. Arthur Hornaday.

The Lord providing, we will reopen the services at Apperson. I hope this may be soon.

Preaching services and Sunday school are maintained at Moorefield, when I am at home. Special services and dinner at the Holbrook Services at church come each first Sunday. Jeffry Queen are held each third Sunday.

I shall be glad to conduct services in any part of the State when wanted. Call on us. Box 75, Moorefield, Neb., Phone 5L616.

LOS ANGELES CALIFORNIA

At the annual business meeting of the Los Angeles Church of God all the officers of the church were unanimously reelected.

As a church is more than a building, we are glad to add to our membership roll, by baptism, three new members: Mrs. Le Nora Board, Kenneth Macleod, and Dr. Samuel Mevers.

It is with sadness we cross from the roll, on account of death, four members: Mrs. H. S.
Billings, John Corbaley, Walter Gray, and Mrs. L. E. Rich.
A. L. Brady and Wilson Calkins, by joining another church, have automatically canceled their membership.

Sr. Railsback, who acted as our delegate to the General Conference, reported a new ruling limiting the membership to active members. It seems this determines the number of votes per church. On this account our membership is now about eighty-five, instead of one hundred

During Sr. Railsback's absence the pulpit was filled by Bros. Lichty and Macleod. Dur-ing the year we have enjoyed sermons from Bros. Grover Gordon and L. E. Conner, and Sr. Eva Stearns has given two very interesting sermons.

Before summer all the indebtedness of the church will probably be cleared. There is now about five hundred dollars left to pay. Already plans are being made for an enclosed back yard, where a suitable place can be beautified for out-of-door picnics.

We are all enjoying a visit from Mrs. Leona McDonald of Mt. Vernon, Ohio, who is spending a month with her sister, Sr. Emma Rails-back. Her presence added to the enjoyment of the Doreas Society, when they gave Sr. Railsback a surprise birthday shower this week.

Bro, and Sr. S. G. Elton of Ventura recently wrote us of an ocean storm which drove them from their home. Two inches of water covered their floors, and they were glad to be rescued by their son, who lives on higher ground.

Sr. Gertrude Johns, after a month's illness, is again at work-and at church.

Sr. Nellie Rahn is still confined to her bed. Sr. Jessie Kauffman of Riverside, Bro. Will Reid, the George Rahn family of Pomona, and our Tulare members, Wayne and Georgia Thompson, and Bernice Roberson were all recent visitors.

Laura H. Bleasdale, Sec.

STEDMAN WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

On January 4, 1939, Bro. and Sr. James Stedman of Arapahoe, Neb., had been married forty years. On January 8, relatives and friends spent the day with them, some of whom were present at the happy event forty years before. Among those present were the two daughters, Icel, and Zola who was accompanied by her husband, Mr. Orval Shepherd of McCook, Neb.

Bro. and Sr. Stedman, who were both members of the Church of God before their marriage, have maintained a home where the truths of the Bible have always been taught and upheld.

Mrs. Orval Shepherd.

Gleanings From the Field

In the 1939 graduating class of Mercy College of Nursing, San Diego, Calif., was Miss Rosalie Carpenter of Oregon, Ill. She is a daughter of Bro. and Sr. Ben Carpenter, and is a member of the Oregon Church of God.

Bro, James A. Watkins of Oregon, Ill., who is a frequent contributor to The Herald, assisted his brother Fred of Franklin, Ind., to conduct the funeral services of their grand-mother, Nancy A. Miller of White Pigeon, Mich. Grandma Miller died at seventy-eight years of age, and was buried on January 10. The grandsons who conducted the funeral had not seen each other for twenty-two years.

"The Three Worlds and Our Present Outlook" by Mrs. H. H. Kent, and "Dictatorship, Fascism and Communism by W. P. Hicks are two tracts recently published. They may be had, while the supply lasts, for postage.

Bro. L. E. Conner gave the morning sermon at Oregon, Ill., due to your editor's trip to Amazonia, Mo. There were many appreciative remarks about his message.

Bro. R. H. Judd of Toronto, Canada, hopes soon to be back as one of our Herald contributors. He has for several weeks been confined with a knee abscess, necessitating an operation.

"We often hear the expression, 'While there is life there is hope.' How thankful we are that even when there is no longer life there is still hope."—The Searchlight, published by the Iowa State Berean Society.

Bro. W. H. Allard of Cedar Falls, Iowa, recently underwent an operation to remove an eye which was accidentally injured while he was chopping kindling. Bro. O. J. Allard, who had suffered a similar accident some twenty years ago, was on hand to encourage his

"I am Charles Lloyd Randall. I arrived at 9:00 a.m., Jan. 18, and weigh eight pounds. I am Grandpa Drinkard's first grandchild. My mother will be remembered as Dorothy Drinkard."—Mrs. T. A. Drinkard. Congratulations.

Sr. Leila Whitehead of Chicago attended the funeral of Sr. Julia Ordnung, and was guest. during her stay in Oregon, of Bro. and Sr. George Siple.

Bro. Cantwell Drabenstott is doing evan-gelistic work at El Paso, Texas. We pray for his success.

MRS. JULIA ORDNUNG

Julia Shellenberger was born near Brownville, Neb., March 6, 1862. At three years of age she moved with her parents to Andrew County, Mo.

At nineteen years of age she was baptized by Elder Bittner of Kansas. She was a most loyal member of the Church of God.

On January 26, 1882, she was united in marriage with John C. Ordnung, to which union five children were born. Her husband preceded her in death February 6, 1908.

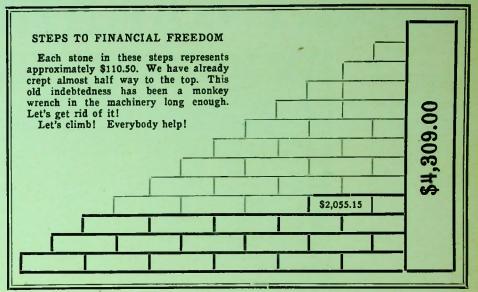

Sr. Ordnung was claimed by death on January 18, 1939, at her home in Oregon, Ill., where she had lived the past eighteen years.

Those surviving are: four daughters, Mrs. Ida Hardesty of Oregon, Ill., Mrs. Rose Eby of Emmett, Idaho, Elizabeth of Oregon, Ill., and Mrs. Maude Young of Rockford, Ill.; and five grandchildren, Mrs. Arthur Cletus of Oakland, Calif., Eldon Eby of Los Angeles, Calif.. Marvin Eby of Emmett, Idaho, and Harold and Robert Hardesty of Oregon, Ill.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer on Friday afternoon, Jan. 20, at the Oregon Church of God, and on Saturday afternoon, Jan. 21, at Amazonia, Mo., where she awaits the call of Christ to resurrection and life everlasting.

MRS. ANNA BARKER

Sr. Anna Barker, wife of Bro. James Barker, daughter of James and Mary Flint, was born in Warren County, Ind., March 21, 1888. She fell asleep in Jesus in the St. Elizabeth Hospital, Danville, Ill., Sunday, Jan. 8, 1939.

She and Bro. James Barker were united in marriage in 1916. To this union were born four sons, Delmar, Delbert, Harold, and Robert.

She leaves her husband, the sons, one sister, Etta Hurley, Williamsport, Ind., and one brother, Joe Flint, Veedersburg, Ind.

She was a member of the Pleasant View Church of God, Hedrick, Ind. For the past several years she has lived in Hoopeston, Ili. Bro. Barker and sons will keep up their home, 316 North Market St., Hoopeston, Ill. A letter from anyone of God's children would be of help. Sr. Barker was a niece of Sr. Lydia Railsback of South Bend, Ind.

The funeral service was held at Pence, Ind., Jan. 11, 1939, by the writer. After the service she was laid in the Pence cemetery to sleep until Jesus comes. J. H. Anderson.

ARTHUR HORNADAY

Arthur Hollingsworth Hornaday, eldest son of Nathan and Mary Hornaday, was born December 20, 1872, near Kokomo, Ind. He came with his parents to Kansas in 1879, and resided there until the fall of 1882, when they moved to Furnas County, Neb.

He was baptized into the Church of God at Holbrook, Neb., when seventeen years old, and continued in this faith through life.

On February 2, 1896, he was united in marriage to Matildy Krause of Holbrook. To this union were born two children, Floii and Clifford, both of Arapahoe, Neb. He with his family lived on farms near Holbrook until the spring of 1915, when they moved to Arapahoe.

He died Thursday morning, Jan. 12, 1939, at his home in Arapahoe, after an illness of several months. Surviving, besides his wife and children, are one brother, Charles of Arapaboe, a number of more distant relatives, and a host of friends.

Bro. Hornaday was always active in church work, and served the church at Holbrook as minister, teacher, and elder since it was dedicated in 1928.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer at the Hornaday home on Sunday after-noon, Jan. 15, after which Bro. Arthur was laid to rest in the Arapahoe cemetery, there to await the call of his Master in the morning of the resurrection.

"Home, Sweet Home"

Provided by the love and sympathy of the entire brotherhood of the Church of God, Golden Rule Home assures to the members of its Family the comfort, security, and solicitous care which the word "home" always suggests.

Here the anxieties of earlier and more active life are laid aside forever. No threat of eviction for non-payment of rent or taxes or other indebtedness troubles the hearts of the residents of Golden Rule Home!

No doctor or hospital bills, no grocery, coal, or light bills to be met the first of the month, bring fear to the minds of the Golden Rule Home Family!

All such obligations and burdens are taken from the shoulders of these older ones immediately upon their entrance into the Home and are carried thereafter by the Golden Rule Home itself, which is amply able to bear the load on their behalf.

A hearty Christian welcome awaits all who seek the protection and lifelong support the Home provides.

FEAR NOT

By D. G. Harvey

"The Lord is on my side; I will not fear: what can man do unto me?" (Psalm 118:6).

IN THESE early days of 1939 there is a dread, yes, even a fear in the thought of what 1939 may bring forth. The past year has been one of unrest throughout the whole world. War, though undeclared, rages in Asia and Europe. We have seen the Jews, God's chosen people, terribly oppressed in Central Europe. Our daily papers reck with crime news, graft, and swindle. Is it, then, any wonder that men falter, and look with dread on the coming events of 1939? But with you, brother and sister in Christ, should there be dread or fear in your hearts, as the pages of 1939 are turned?

How many times did Jesus say to His people, "Fear not"? So many, many times He spoke these words that space would not permit us to even consider each case.

When God called Abram and promised to make of him a great nation, fear caused Abram to delay about eight years. He had no son. The son of his steward was his only heir. He was afraid to trust God, and to leave that boy. But God said, "Fear not, Abram: for I am thy shield" (Gen. 15:1).

Moses had led Israel to the Red Sea. There the sight of the water in front, and the host of Pharaoh after them, caused Israel to fear. They were "sore afraid." Then God caused Moses to speak, saying, "Fear ye not, stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord" (Ex. 14:13). God was able to save Israel. He is able to save you.

When the disciples saw Jesus walking to them on the water they cried out in fear. Jesus said, "Be of good cheer; it is I; be not afraid" (Matt. 14:27). It was not Jesus, their Lord and Teacher, who caused them to cry out; it was their fear of the unknown. They could not understand His power over the water. A similar condition prevailed with John on Patmos, when he saw the vision of the Christ of glory. Fear caused John to fall as one dead.

Then, again, Jesus used those words of cheer, "Fear not; I am the first and the last" (Rev. 1:17).

Today, in famine, in depression, when nations and men are intolerant, when persecution of races and religious sects prevail, when graft and greed are rampant, when men do not know what to expect next, when all plans fail, when the statesmen throughout all the world are fearful, surely we have reached the time of Luke 21:26, which says, "Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." But remember, this prophecy of our Lord does not apply to the people of God—the true church—but to the world, political and industrial. True Christians will have no fear, for they are assured that "when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh" (Luke 21:28).

Jesus has also assured Christians with these words, "Fear not, little flock; it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom" (Luke 12:32). Our Lord has promised us peace, not fear. "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid" (John 14:27).

Jesus further consoles His people, saying, "I have spoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world"; and "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

The world gives peace, but it is only a temporary peace. We remember the peace (?) and safety we felt during 1928-29. We also remember the sad awakening when the world took away its peace with a crash we feel even today. But the peace of Christ remains. Christ's strange peace the world cannot know, for it is "the peace of God, which passeth all understanding" (Phil. 4:7). By that peace the apostles were able to sing in prison, rejoice in tribulation, and by which Paul could say, "I have learned, in whatseever state I am, therewith to be content" (Phil. 4:11).

Will the Lord reproach us as He did His disciples at one time when their faith wavered, "O ye of little faith" (Luke 12:28)? We, as they, have need to go to our Lord, and to pray, "Lord, increase our faith" (Luke 17:5). Then, and then only, can we cry as did David, "The Lord is on my side; I will not fear: what can man do unto me?"

Keeping House

It is often true that when newly weds start keeping house they must do so with but little of this world's goods. Invariably the critic says, "I can't see how they will make it go." The young husband's salary may be small, the young bride may not know how to make biscuits, but where there is love, and a true desire to build a home, there will be success.

Keeping house is entirely independent of better houses the neighbors may have. When children are born it is not long until they must have their own yard in which to play. Their own parents must father and mother them.

The Church of God Must Keep House

The Church of God has no grand cathedrals, no standard college, no endowment for its National Bible Institution. Its income is small. It has no foreign missions to boast of. Compared to neighbors there is more contrast than likeness. A short time ago a salesman came into my office and asked where the headquarters were! Our congregations are small, and dispersed. Neighbors may even have their fingers crossed.

What Shall We Do?

The Church of God must keep house, and do it as never before. Our children are already growing up. Our neighbors have beautiful yards, better than we can hope to immediately have; but to depend entirely upon what neighbors have is an unwise way of keeping house.

The Church of God must pay her debts. "A Good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favour rather than silver and gold" (Prov. 22:1).

The Church of God must have a denominational school. It will surely take time and sacrifice to develop such a school, but that is exactly what it has taken to build any other school. That the Church of God has no resources, nor scholars, are unsound objections to our progress.

God is not weak, nor unrighteous. By God's help the Church of God can have anything she needs, and is willing to sacrifice for. It is characteristic of God that He helps the poor. He has blessed millions of homes that started from "scratch." David said, "I had fainted, unless I had believed to see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living. Wait on the Lord: be of good courage, and he shall strengthen thine heart: wait, I say, on the Lord" (Psalm 27:13, 14).

"Blessed be the name of the Lord.... He maketh the barren woman to heep house, and to be a joyful mother of children. Praise ye the Lord" (Psalm 113:2, 9).

Denominational Consciousness

In the past generation there has been more than a trend to cooperate among churches of differing faiths. What has been gained for Christ and truth? More has been lost!

Mixing error with truth is like mixing water with oil. It can be done by adding lye (suggesting the Devil's lie) to the mixture, resulting in soft soap!

In any home, if there are members who are little interested in "keeping house," there is indeed a problem, and the home may be wrecked. In the Church of God there are those who ask, "What difference does it make what we believe, or where we worship?" This attitude breaks homes; it must not be tolerated in the Church of God.

On the other hand, a majority of the Church of God people believe it does make a difference what we believe, where and how we worship. One particular minister comes to mind. He is sometimes criticized for being over careful and positive in doctrine, but God has blessed him with many converts to the Lord, and in his senior years he sees all seven of his children in "the faith."

Jesus said, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Right makes might. The Church of God is strong!

Invisible Power

"Alas, my master! how shall we do?" So asked Elisha's servant when the Syrian hosts were encamped against Israel. Elisha answered, "Fear not: for they that be with us are more than they that be with them." Then Elisha prayed, "Lord, . . . open his eyes, that he may see." Whatever the servant was soon to see had been there all the time. "And the Lord opened the eyes of the young man; and he saw: and, behold, the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha."

As surely as the Syrian host was stricken with blindness, God will ever give victory to His faithful few. Unseen, but a very real power awaits the Church of God. We cannot afford to not afford the development of our every possible opportunity and responsibility.

A Shadow of Christ

By Wilsie J. McKnight

I'T WAS a hot wind blowing over the Nebraska prairie. Not a tree was in sight; just the waving of the tall grass. Nothing had broken the monotony of the day except a few campfire beds along the trail, a grave of a white woman, and the sight of an Indian riding over a far-away hill. They were in a wilderness, plodding westward—west to a promised land. They endured the hardships in the months of travel with oxen and covered wagons, endured the horrible fear of lurking death from the Indians or from the strenuousness of the journey, for the chance of finding gold in California.

Not only is such a picture of less than a century ago, but it is also one of nearly four thousand years ago. Abram, with a small group of his relation, left his home to go westward to a promised land. The reward was not a chance for gold, but a surety by a promise from God. He had the same dangers to face in a strange land that our forty-niners had, even his means of warfare being comparable to those of the American Indians. It was a test for his faith in God, and in His promise.

From there, we have the story told in detail of Abraham: of his first son, Ishmael, of his second son, Isaac, of the intended sacrifice of Isaac, of the promise to Isaac, and of his marriage to Rebekah. Why was the story of Isaac so minutely told by Moses five hundred years later? For the beauty? for the history? No, I think not. It is a picture of Christ, lived nineteen hundred years before Him. Let us consider the comparison.

In order to receive the Lord's promise, it was necessary for Abraham to have a child, so Sarah gave her Egyptian bondwoman to him for a wife, since she, herself, was too old to expect a child. Ishmael became Abraham's first-born, but, being born under bondage, he was not accepted by the heavenly Father to receive the promise. Hence, Sarah, at the age of ninety, gave birth to Isaac—a freeman to receive the promise. (Gen. 17:21.) Isaac was not born after the manner of men, since Sarah was too old to naturally give birth to a child.

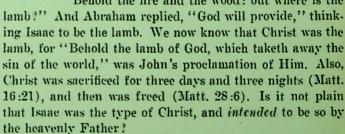

Adam, God's first son (Luke 3:38), was also under bondage—bondage of sin and death, for "the wages of sin is death" (Rom. 6:23), "in Adam all die" (1 Cor. 15:22), and "the children are partakers of flesh and blood ... who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage" (Heb. 2:14, 15). Christ, "the second man," is to receive the promise, and we receive it through Him. "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many, but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ" (Gal.

The time came when Isaac should be sacrificed. Abraham saddled an ass, and with Isaac went a three-days' journey to Mount Moriah. Three days and three nights Isaac was sacrificed in Abraham's mind, but in the end was freed.

Christ, too, rode on an ass to Mount Moriah when He rode into Jerusalem, since the temple in Jerusalem was also on Mount Moriah (2 Chron. 3:1).

It was in this temple that Christ was condemned by the high priest; and it was just outside of the city (I think on Mount Moriah) that He was crucified. Isaac carried the wood on his back up the mount, and Jesus carried His cross of wood. Abraham carried a knife by which he intended to kill Isaac, and Jesus was pierced with a sword. Two young men went with Isaac and Abraham, and two men were crucified with Jesus. Isaac asked of his father, Behold the fire and the wood: but where is the Abraham sent his servant into his former country, to his household, to secure a wife for Isaac. When reaching the city of Nahor in Mesopotamia (Gen. 24:10), the servant prayed unto the Lord, "Let it come to pass, that the damsel to whom I shall say, Let down thy pitcher, I pray thee, that I may drink; and she shall say, Drink, and I will give thy camels drink also: let the same be she that thou hast appointed for thy servant Isaac" (v. 14). Rebekah must have been kind to strangers, for she did just this, and also said they had room at her home for both the servant and his camels. Rebekah went, of her own free will, with the servant to Isaac (v. 58). She was the very bride for Isaac, since she "was fair to look upon, a virgin." It was evening when they were arriving home, and it happened that Isaac met her part way. Isaac took Rebekah to his

By C. E. Randall

"And now men see not the bright light which is in the clouds" (Job 37:21).

IN THE normal course of life, we see the clouds from below-the shaded side. At times they become so dense that they darken the atmosphere, and obscure our vision of the sun. When we wing our way above the clouds in plane, or wind our way up the mountain side aboard a transcontinental train-looking down upon the thunderheads bathed in heaven's light-it is then that we get a contrast between the bottom view or shaded side, and the light side from which God sees them. To see the bright light in the clouds is enchanting to any soul. Perhaps our vision of the work of the "Sun of righteousness" is too often the bottom view, with the illuminating light cut off. When such happens, we can only get a shaded view, which gives us an imperfect concept of the beauty and design on the side next to God. Well wrote the Prophet, "His ways are not our ways, neither are his thoughts our thoughts." To bring our ways and thoughts into near likeness with God's requires constant development, growth, and change. To steel our minds against change bars us from the market where we can "buy the truth." If in our reexamination of our Biblical positions there appears needful readjustments, then spiritual growth necessitates that such changes be made. Much good would result if we, as a people, would give our prophetic moorings a thorough checking over for possible weaknesses.

According to the Word, "evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving, and being deceived." This multiplication of iniquity in both degree and quantity, even though discouragingly dark, should not obscure our vision of God's side of the scene, on which He is working out His perfect plan with accuracy, and according to scheduled time. Righteousness is not being choked to death! In contrast with sin, righteousness may appear to be in the "red" in respect to bulk, yet we choose not to yield to the idea that it is subdued in power. Just how, and to what extent, we wot not, but accept the full marvel and meaning of the saying, "The most high ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will." God has not, and will not, relinquish the guiding hand that rules over the creation which was created for His glory. He "hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation." Does this indicate a lapse of control or lack of design?

The handiwork of God is as pronounced in His dealing with certain nations today as when He charted the daily conduct of the "chosen nation" in the land of milk and honey. In filling in the prophetic framework of apostasy, we are inclined to lose sight of the steady work of right-eousness. It is true that the "love of many (is waxing) cold" because of iniquity, but what about the love for the Word that still lives and works in the lives of thousands upon thousands? We must not overlook this, or diminish aught from its importance.

In speaking from a national point of view, there are some nations that are going to be righteous when the Lord comes. The judgment of Matthew 25:31-46 confirms this statement. As a people, we have accepted the interpretation of this portion of the Word as applying to nations, rather than to individuals. "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory: and before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats. . . . Then shall the King say unto them (nations) on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." In verses 37 and 46 these right-hand people are termed "righteous" by the Judge of all the earth. What constitutes their righteousness? The record would seem to indicate that their righteous standing before the Son of man was based upon their Samaritan attitude toward the brethren of Christ-Israel. What nations of the world are today showing this spirit? We answer, "The Anglo-Saxon." They are the Big Brothers of this oppressed and persecuted people. They are opening their national boundaries, their hearts are "touched with the feeling of (their) infirmities," their homes are receiving these despised children, and they are sending "once and again unto (their) necessity." Will God forget this labor of love? "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Righteous works! Indeed!

Then there is the work imposed by the Great Commission, "The gospel must first be published among all nations." Who are the people that are carrying out this task? Again we reply, "The Anglo-Saxons." All the gospel light that this world enjoys has come from these people. Millions upon millions of Bibles, and portions of the Word, have been distributed throughout the world by them. Is this noble and holy work to be ignored by Him who commanded that it be done? "God is not unrighteous to forget your work and labour of love, which ye have shewed toward his name" (Heb. 6:10). In righteousness, this work of love far transcends the selfishness of dogmatism.

Evil is becoming more apparent in the lives and actions of certain nations, and rightcousness is being exalted in the lives of other nations. At no time in the history of the Anglo-Saxon peoples has the spirit of rightcousness so characterized their works, as nations, as it does today. These nations are more and more drawing nearer to the practice of the Golden Rule. Take, for example, the matter of caring for the unemployed. Allowing for all the evils charged against the administration of this work, when in the history of nations has there been such care given to the less fortunate? The Anglo-Saxon peoples are not only sensing that they are their "brother's keeper," but they are practicing it as has never before been done. Because there is corruption in the effort does not destroy the righteousness of the enterprise. We can't just dismiss the matter by saying it is unequal or maladministered. It should be remembered that it is going to take the great King a thousand years plus to correct all the abuses attendant to the government of the world. Old age pension, unemployment insurance, and a number of other worthy undertakings of recent years, have their background in the Golden Rule. There are about ten thousand industries in the United States that are using the "Profit Sharing Plan," and at present a Congressional committee under the chairmanship of Senator Vandenburg is holding hearings in an effort to work out a plan whereby all industry can be placed on this basis. Such a plan comes near to the Golden Rule. These ventures cannot ruthlessly be classed as corrupt politics, and works of the Devil. God is working in these nations! When there is a typhoon in Japan, a famine in Russia, a scourge in India, or a pestilence in China, what peoples of the earth rise with big Samaritan hearts to bind up the wounds and pay for the keep of the suffering? The answer is clear, and the response is immediate—the Anglo-Saxons. What has created this righteous spirit? It is the Word taking root, the Word which they have spent millions of dollars to spread throughout the world.

There are evidences of the hand of God in these nations that are more pronounced than many of the faith-creating miracles performed in ages past among the children of Israel. We have been looking at the shaded side of the clouds, and have failed to see God's light from His side.

We hope in the near future to bring forth more specific evidences of the work of God among the Anglo-Saxon nations. In concluding, let me urge you to fulfill Scriptural injunction to pray "for kings, and for all that are in authority," "for they are God's ministers."

Carry Over the Christmas Spirit

By Mrs. William Stine

A T CHRISTMAS time peace and good will toward men are observed all over the world. Man forgets his enemy for a day, and wishes all a "Merry Christmas." One day, however, is as long as this spirit prevails. A few hours pass, then he falls back into the regular habits of scheming to get all this world's goods that he can, even though this requires cheating the neighbor he wished a "Merry Christmas." It is easy to smile when all around smile, but when we are confronted with life's problems our attitude often changes.

Do we carry good will toward men who despitefully use us? Are we peacemakers in times of dissension? Are we always ready to forgive, and slow to anger?

The giving of gifts at Christmas results from the Wise Men presenting riches to the baby Jesus as a token of their love. Today, gifts are priced according to gifts expected, or they are given with a feeling of obligation. Few are given with real love.

An example of good will is shown in a story told about two men who were returning in their cars from Christmas shopping. It seems that the one was not carefully watching the turns, and ran into the other, damaging his car's fender. The man having the right of way climbed out of his car to look it over, while the other waited for the usual bawling out. Instead of retorting with sarcasm, the offended man waved a friendly "Merry Christmas," and went on his way. Do you suppose this story might have had a different ending a few days later?

Just as the world forgot Christ almost before the echoes of the glad tidings announcing His birth died away, so the Christmas spirit is today forgotten by men. In its place greed, hatred, and jealousy rule, causing nations to crumble under the weight of wars both civil and international.

The world as a whole has lost the true Christmas spirit, and can only hope to find it in Christianity. It is to Christians that we make this appeal to carry over peace and good will from year to year, even to the coming of "The Prince of Peace," which is Jesus Christ. We must so live that men may see Christ in us, and willingly receive the gospel of the coming kingdom. Ignorance of the glorious promises causes most people to seek only after worldly gain and pleasures.

Christians have gifts to give other than material things. Some are gifted in music, others are able to preach, and some to teach. These talents were given to us by God, and should be used to glorify Him. More important than the gift, however, is the spirit in which it is given. In 1 Corinthians 13 Paul tells the Corinthians that charity is the thing that gives value to any gift. We study the characteristics of charitable persons, and we find one word that includes them all, "love." Love is the true meaning of the Christmas spirit. Verses 4 to 6 tell us that charity is kind, long-suffering, not envious or boastful, slow to anger, thinks not evil but only good, finds happiness only in truth.

Charity is even greater than faith or hope, for what would our faith in God's promises amount to without love? Or our hope of the coming kingdom, without love?

Again, we urge the Church of God to earry over the Christmas spirit so that the world may have in our living examples a foresight of what the coming kingdom will be.

What a Book!

(Concluded from Last Week)

By F. L. Austin

LOOK again! This Grand Old Book's history and prophecies and promises are all bedecked in best of attire—in glittering, vivacious

FIGURES OF SPEECH

Their number is uncounted hundreds, and their variety is reckoned by the score. There are similes and metaphors and parables and metonymies, and other dozens.

Isaiah 40:6 reads: "All flesh is grass." This seriously minded, earnest metaphor is, in 1 Peter 1:24, changed to a smiling, vivacious simile, which reads: "... all flesh is as grass." Their divine intent seems to be one and the same thing, namely, to teach man of his weak, ephemeral status. But how much more emphatic is that truth as expressed in these figures.

Matthew 26:26, 28 is clothed with two striking metaphors. If we first inform ourselves of the surroundings we will quickly understand the state of the apostles' minds, and the readiness with which they understood. It was the week of Passover, when all were repeating the reminders of the death of the first-born in Egypt, and of the exodus that was thereby provided. At supper the Savior said, "... this is my body," and "... this is my blood ... " Supposing the Savior had said, "This broken bread represents my body which will soon be broken for you," would it have been any stronger? Perhaps Rome could not have openly blinded the millions which now she has apparently blinded with her false construction, but it seems certain that the text would not have stood out so strikingly through the centuries as it has. For note the other figure of speech, and the reaction of the apostles that followed. The other figure is in verse 28, and reads, "... which is shed ... " (Compare also, Luke 22:19 and 1 Cor. 11:24.) It is called, heterosis (of tenses). His blood was not already "shed," nor was His body already "broken." But the blood (was soon to be) shed, and His body (was soon to be) broken. No wonder that the apostles, being present, and verily feeling the atmosphere of the occasion began to inquire, as in Luke 22:23, "which of them it was that should do this thing,"-"Lord, is it I?" For His words, as uttered in figure, struck home to their hearts. Yes, being filled with the Spirit, He knew what style of language to use with greatest effect.

Consider the parable. It is "a continued resemblance." Consider the deep, rich truths it so strikingly conveys. Reread Judges 9:7-15.

THE FIGURE OF ELLIPSIS, OR OMISSION

This is a much used figure of speech in the Hebrew and in the Greek, as well as in the English. Understood, it adds greatly to the smooth and striking emphasis and beauty of the Word. The original Hebrew and Greek texts contain hundreds of these inspired omissions. Woe to puny man who undertakes to fill in, and cover up these inspired gaps.

Study John 4:24 which reads, "God is a Spirit." Omit the supplied "is," and read it—making a rhetorical pause after "God"—"God spirit." Better still, read it as in the Greek,—"spirit God." Now read the remainder of the text, omitting the italicized "him," and note the smooth, rich emphasis placed on the need of man worshiping "in spirit" rather than with the works of the hands, as indicated in verses 20 to 23. Jesus was here emphasizing that the manner of worship "shall" be "in spirit" rather than in works.

While "is" is here essential for grammatical completeness, yet when printed, it veils, or bedims, the prominent thought. Therefore, the inspired ellipsis in the Greek.

The translators did not always identify the inspired ellipses in the Hebrew and Greek texts. Many of them they filled in, or covered up, by the use of Roman type. But many of the inspired ellipses they did identify by the use of italic type. All italic type in the Authorized Version of the Bible indicates that the words thus italicized are words supplied, or added, by the translators.

This writer feels bold to think that no human being has any right to add human made veils to sacred writ by covering up inspired omissions, or by other means. And, inasmuch as every italicized word in King James Bible is so italicized in order to indicate that the translators supplied English words for which there were no equivalent Hebrew or Greek words in the original texts, therefore, the writer feels it is proper to censure every writer, or editor, or printer, who changes, or knowingly permits to be changed, the italicized type of the Bible text into roman type in man's printed page. To do so is both to misrepresent the translators and to alter, without indication, inspired writ. (The writer has refused requests for articles from more than one editor, unless assured that the Scripture quotations of his articles would be printed true to Bible usage.) But, inasmuch as many prefer to conform to the style of the day in this matter, rather than to conform to the true facts of the Bible, it seems necessary that the readers should compare printed quoted texts with the Bible to insure accuracy.

Matthew 16:7: "It is because we have taken no bread." This seems a bit confusing. The supplied words seem to lack something. Careful Biblical Greek students suggest replacing them with the words, "He thus spoke." Reading Is Capital Punishment Scriptural?

By Laurence M. Howell

BY "capital punishment" we mean infliction of the death penalty by any state or nation for the breaking of some of its laws.

In reply to our query many people will quickly say, "No," citing the sixth commandment, "Thou shalt not kill" (Ex. 20:13).

To avoid wrong conclusions that may finally result in serious consequences to individual Christians, as well as nations, a most careful study of the subject is needed.

First, let us examine Exodus 20:13. By reference to Young's Analytical Concordance we find the word "kill" in the Old Testament comes from ten different Hebrew words. In Exodus 20:13 it is translated from the Hebrew ratsach, and is defined as meaning, "to murder." Moffatt translates the passage, "You shall not murder." Peloubet says that the verb here translated "kill" in our King James Bible really implies violent, unauthorized killing. We, therefore, see the passage in question can have no reference to the execution of the death penalty, as prescribed by a duly constituted court of law under any state or nation. Rather, the commandment merely prohibits the premeditated, malicious, or violent killing of anyone in a private capacity without authority of law.

We have positive proof that the death penalty for criminals is authorized by the Bible. In Exodus 21:12 we read, "He that smiteth a man so that he die, shall be surely put to death." Again, in Exodus 21:16, "And he that stealeth a man, and selleth him, or if he be found in his hand, he shall surely be put to death." In this last passage our modern kidnaping is covered. What a wholesome effect would result if this penalty were only now everywhere applied for this crime! Exodus 21 gives various other crimes for which death was commanded.

Let the foregoing suffice for our consideration of capital punishment as given in the Old Testament. The New Testament is not silent on the question. Study carefully Romans 13:3-6. Verse 3 speaks of rulers, under whom we live, as being not a terror to good works, but to evil. Verse 4 reads, "For he is the minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain: for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil."

Since the sword was used in many cases of Bible times for execution purposes, the language above, we must couclude, means its use in executing evildoers. Hence, any means of execution now lawfully used for criminals is just as right and Scriptural as in Paul's day, for both periods come within the gospel age, or Christian dispensation.

Please note that in Romans 13:9 part of the Ten Commandments are repeated by Paul, including the sixth, "Thou shalt not kill." "Kill," in this case, comes from the Greek word phoneuo, meaning "to murder." The meaning here is exactly the same as with "kill" in Exodus 20:13, and has no reference to the lawful execution of criminals.

It is obviously essential that we distinguish between the authority of the state, which God authorized to use the sword in the gospel age, and the church, which Christ faught should be ruled by love within itself, toward its enemies, and to all mankind. (John 15:12; 1 John 3:23; Matt. 5:44; Rom. 12:14.)

What harm, if any, can come from Christian people opposing the principle of capital punishment? The criminal laws of our country, and the strictness of their enforcement, are pretty much what public opinion demands. If a large number of church people oppose the death penalty for such major crimes as murder and kidnaping—which penalty is not even prescribed by law in some States—what is the result? Only a prison term is given the most hardened of criminals. In some cases only a few years pass. Then the criminal is pardoned, or paroled, to begin anew his old crimes. In many cases such convicts plan and plot from the start how they may escape from prison. Many times in the course of a year our daily papers record such prison breaks. The notorious John Dillinger figured in such an escape, only to continue his mad career, until finally shot and killed.

Now, which is of the most importance in God's sight, the lives of the villainous, bloodthirsty criminals, or the innocent, law-abiding people upon whom they prey? The public has a right to expect effective protection from such crimes. God, in His wisdom, recognizes such need for protection, and authorizes through His Word the death of such menacers to the public welfare. We can recall no instance in which Christ condemned or attacked the criminal laws of Rome, to whom He acknowledged allegiance. When God sanctions the death of criminals by law, if we as Christians oppose such law, and thus help make it impotent, are we doing the Father's will? Can we, by such an attitude, become more just or righteous than God Himself? Can we, by requesting that the death penalty be not invoked against a murderer, better safeguard society and its happiness than by following God's plan?

We firmly believe that if every state in our union enforced capital punishment for murder, kidnaping, and such serious crimes, we would not see the crowded prisons and prison breaks we have today. (OVER)

Laurence M. Howell

Some one may say, "Does not 2 Timothy 3:13 tell us that 'evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse,' so how can we help it?" We freely admit such a condition is to come. But does that justify any Christian in helping to bring about the condition? We feel fully convinced that we are each responsible to God for any influence we exert in the matter.

In Luke 22:22 we read, "And truly the Son of man goeth, as it was determined: but woe unto that man by whom he is betrayed!" If we, by taking a position against God on the subject being considered, lend our influence to lawlessness, might not God also pronounce a woe on us.

We pray that what has been written may be the means of causing a deep and earnest study of our subject by the brethren, to the end that God's will may be known. If such is done, we shall feel that our effort is not in vain.

"He Shall Divide the Spoil With the Strong"

Isaiah 53:12

By Nancy B. Robison

WE HAVE read and heard about the beautiful story in Luke 1:28-55. "The angel came in unto Mary, and said, Hail, thou that art highly favoured, the Lord is with thee: blessed art thou among women. Mary was troubled at his saying, and east in her mind what manner of salutation this should be. And the angel said unto her, Fear not, Mary: for thou hast found favour with God. And, behold, thou shalt . . . bring forth a son, and shalt call his name JESUS. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

Mary knew from the prophets, a "seed" or Son was promised, to do what the first Adam failed to do. But that she was to be the mother of this long-promised One, was awe-inspiring. The angel assured her, "The power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God... For with God nothing shall be impossible." And Mary said, "Behold the handmaid of the Lord; be it unto me according to thy word."

We come now to the thrilling part of the story, "Mary arose in those days, and went into the hill country with haste, into a city of Juda; and entered into the house of Zacharias, and saluted Elisabeth." She, too, was filled with these glowing promises, and said to Mary, "Blessed is she that believed: for there shall be a performance of those things which were told her from the Lord." Mary said in her response, "My soul doth magnify the Lord."

First, let me ask, why did her soul (her very being) magnify the Lord? Her mind was filled with the things that were proclaimed by the prophets concerning this promised Seed. She quotes from 1 Samuel, Psalms, Habakkuk, Genesis, and Isaiah. Look up these references, and you will see she had reason to rejoice. She concludes, "He hath holpen his servant Israel, in remembrance of his mercy; as he spake to our fathers, to Abraham, and his seed for ever." Mary was familiar with all these promises, and rejoiced.

You and I may rejoice in these exceeding great and precious promises, if we are familiar with what is written in prophecies concerning Him. We follow this promised Seed to His birth, and find "shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flocks by night. And lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them: and they were sore afraid. And the angel said unto them, Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord. . . . And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men" (Luke 2:8-14).

We now follow the promised One to the cross, and learn from the Prophet Isaiah, "He was oppressed, and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth: he is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he openeth not his mouth. He was taken from prison and from judgment: and who shall declare his generation? for he was cut off out of the land of the living" (Isa. 53:7, 8). Notice the Prophet asks, "Who shall declare his generation? for he was cut off out of the land of the living." No one could do this but Jehovah, who with His mighty power could raise Him from the dead, and declare Him that righteous Seed.

The Psalmist says, "A seed shall serve him; it shall be accounted to the Lord for a generation" (Psalm 22:30). The Prophet Isaiah says, "When his soul shall make an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, and shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand. . . . Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong" (Isa. 53:10-12). Why shall He do this? "Because he poured out his soul unto death." Are we strong enough to rejoice in the promises as Mary did? If we are, the spoil is ours, for he sent the message to us, "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death" (Rev. 1:18).

The assurance of the spoil to the strong is given those who believe the blood of Jesus sealed these promises. When we go down into the watery grave, we are baptized into His death, we affix the seal to our faith, and arise to walk in newness of life. "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise" (Gal. 3:26-29), and can say with Mary, "My soul doth magnify the Lord."

The Name of the Covenantor

By Paul M. Hatch

"Being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they" (Hebrews 1:4).

THE focus, or assembling point, of all of God's covenants that have been made down through the many centuries of ancient days, and to men of various times, is in His Son, Jesus the Christ. Under the covenant name Jesus has been designated under many titles. In the Old Testament, to name a few, we have the first in Genesis 3:15, where He that is promised is called "seed." The seed of the woman was to be constantly at war with the seed of the serpent. Notice, there was to be the good seed, and the evil seed. How aptly does the parable of the seeds fit into this scene: the offspring of the woman sowing the good seed of the kingdom, and those of the serpent sowing the evil seed in the field of the world. But the Lord of harvest forbids the workers to pull up or destroy the shooting forth of the evil seed, for He fears that thereby some of the growth of the good seed shall also be destroyed. Only a wise God can foresee the results of the harvest. However, the reference to the seed of the woman relates to seed in the singular sense. (See Genesis 21:12 and Galatians 3:16.)

Other names of the promised One appear, and in their order are hereby cited with references, so that the reader may look them up at his leisure. In Genesis 49:10, Christ is designated under the name of "Shiloh," meaning tranquil, and giving the tribal name from whence the people of God may look for the scepter to arise. In Genesis 49:24 He is called the "shepherd" and "stone of Israel." These are two very contrasting names: shepherd, impressing on our minds the tenderness and carefulness of the Good Shepherd; and stone of Israel denoting something hard and flinty, but adamant in the work of goodness and righteousness. Then in Numbers 24:17, we have the names "Star" and "Sceptre" assigned.

In our search so far, how significantly the names stand out, designating the preeminent position of the One promised. In all the realms of reality Christ has His place: in the earth by the name "Seed," on the earth by the name "Stone," authority over the earth by the names "Shepherd" and "Sceptre," and above the earth in the heavenly places by the name "Star." The name "Shiloh," meaning tranquil, has a beautiful metaphor stated in Isaiah 8:6-8, which is quoted in full so as to bring out its entire significance: "Forasmuch as this people refuseth the waters of Shiloah that go softly and rejoice in Rezin and Remaliah's son; now therefore, behold the Lord bringeth up upon them the waters of the river, strong and many, even the king of Assyria, and all his glory: and he shall come up over all his channels, and go over all his banks: and he shall pass through Judah; he shall overflow and go over, he shall reach even to the neck; and the stretching out of his wings shall fill the breadth of thy land, O Immanuel."

To grasp the significance of this prophecy we refer to a historical happening just after the days of this prophecy. It is found in 2 Kings 15:37 to 16:5. The people of Judah and Jerusalem having been threatened with war and invasion by Rezin, the king of Syria, sought not the help, nor put their trust in Jehovah their God, which is typified by the waters of Shiloah; i.e., waters arising from the Spring of Gihon without the walls of Jerusalem, and flowing through King Hezekiah's aqueduct below Mount Zion to the Pool of Siloam. Rather, they were putting their trust in an alliance and treaty with the troubled and bitter waters of the king of Assyria, which nation was the great and terrible scourge of the earth in those days. The fact was that Israel chose waters of trouble for defense, instead of the tranquil waters of the Almighty. When great trouble threatens today we find that nations, and peoples, are likewise inclined to seek allies of apparent strength for solution of their problems, instead of seeking out the everpresent help of the Almighty. It was this national fault of Israel, time and again, which brought them many days of sorrow. The tranquil waters of Shiloah, which could have been such a strong help in those days but were left unheeded, typified the Savior in His role of waters of salvation, and for cleansing of later days under the metaphor. To Him, then, we should go for our counsel and defense in our daily walk and problems.

The titles mentioned so far are in connection with the promised One under the covenants of promise. There are others, almost too numerous to mention, that have reference to the work of the Savior, or are characteristic of the Savior. Hannah, the mother of Samuel the Prophet, calls Him, "King" and "Anointed." David in his Psalms calls him "Thine Holy One," "The King's Son," "My Lord," and others. Isaiah addresses Him as "Immanuel, Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, The Everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace, Stem, or Root of Jesse, The Offspring of David, My Scrvant, Mine Elect, Man of Sorrows," and others. Daniel designates Him as "Son of Man"; Zechariah, "The Branch," "Thy King"; Malachi, "The Sun of Righteousness."

Closer than even these, in the usage of the covenantname "Jchovah," comes a prophecy that is regarded as a direct reference to Jesus Christ. In Zechariah's prophecy about Judah and Jerusalem, found in chapter 14, mention is made of the time of the end, when "the day of the Lord (Jehovah) cometh, and thy (Jerusalem's) spoil shall be divided in the midst of thee." The whole chapter is a most solemn promise, and so the covenant-name Jehovah is used throughout the chapter. Yet the fourth verse stands out to indicate the Lord (Jehovah) mentioned is Jesus Christ, in that it proclaims that at that time His feet shall stand on the Mount of Olives when He returns to earth to assume His ministerial and kingly duties.

It is not well for us to jump at conclusions at this point, and say that Jesus is God, or a part of God, or any other idea that other portions of Scripture indicate to the contrary. Better is it for us to search out why the person Jesus is so closely associated with the covenant-name of Jehovah. When we have so informed ourselves on that point, it brings out, it would seem, the grandeur of the Scripture, in portraying and painting for us the beautiful picture of a perfect fleshly man.

As stated before in our theme, the name Jehovah is the most intimate and closely associated of the numerous titles of God, because of the intimacy of the One that God sent to fulfill all His wonderful promises. In sending Christ, God also gave Him the divine name of the Covenantor, and thereby sealed for us in the Father's name all the precious promises that were spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets of old. Jesus then becomes God's executive and has the authority to seal and deliver and execute the great Covenant God to the children of men. So we conclude, that in some cases where the name Jehovah is used in Scripture, it turns the thoughts to Jesus Christ and His ministerial work in the flesh, and later to His eternal, enduring work of the ages.

Jesus never admitted that He came as God, nor did He ever say, "I am God and there is no other." He did admit that He came in the Father's name (John 5:43 and 10:25), and that His ministerial authority came from the Father (John 3:32-34 and 6:27), also that His Father was greater than Himself (John 14:28), and that there is none good but God, in denying His own goodness (Matt. 19:17).

If we would take a practical example of the same, citation may be made of kingly decrees where certain ones are appointed to execute those decrees in the name of the king. Invariably the people living under a king's rule recognize the decree as being from the king, and so order their conduct to conform to the word of the executive, or appointee, who came in the name of the king. So we, recognizing that Jesus is the appointed One in the Father's name, should likewise conform our duties and actions with the will of Jesus, whose will is that of the Father (2 Tim. 2:19).

THE HOUR

In the years immediately prior to 1914 it was a practice of high German officials to meet frequently at banquets and, when they drank, to raise their glasses, touch the clinking brims together, and pronounce significantly the words, "Der Tag" (The Day)! Meanwhile the Kaiser was hoarding gold; the nation was building up a navy; it was training military officers; it was recruiting its man power on land and on sea; it was storing munitions. The Kaiser was training his sons in plotting battles, and with him the leaders of the nation were plotting an aggressive campaign of arms. If others did not know the significance of "Der Tag." the banqueters themselves were anticipating the day when Germany would at last be ready to strike suddenly the blow that would crush her rivals and bring the fulfillment of her dreams.

When Germany was getting ready, but before The Day, when the Kaiser was receiving Theodore Roosevelt, the two sat side by side as the Kaiser reviewed his army. After seemingly endless divisions had filed past, Roosevelt said to the Emperor, "William, with that army you could conquer the world!" The Kaiser was sufficiently void of sense, he confessed after 1918, to believe him.

The other day in a big-sounding declamation introducing Chancellor Hitler, who was about to broadcast to the world, the speaker made frequent use of the words, "Diese Stunde" (This Hour). That was a more definite and significant phrase than "Der Tag." It implied that Germany, having recuperated, rearmed, trained, and equipped with forces "such as the world had never seen," was now ready to strike immediately the blow that would avenge her and settle her "last territorial dispute." "Der Tag" had been a phrase born of a fatuous dream. "Diese Stunde" was a phrase born of hysteria. The former had set the world reeling into a slump from which it has not recovered. The latter spread a universal heart-sinking.

Then, at Munich, it was termed "the hour of decision," the executive representatives of four leading world powers sat in conference to attempt, when there seemed not a Chinaman's chance to do so, to find a way to save the world from a mutilation the dread of which made all hearts recoil. Out of that conference emerged a vague optimism promising that a broad peace was now about to settle upon Europe and the world.

In former days the world has been filled with fiddle-faddle about universal peace. But there is no peace. Men are rivals. In a selfish world antithesis of interest leads to irritation. Irritation, in a world of sin, leads to blows. Ours is not a world of peace, but of "treasons, stratagems, and spoils." Germany, when the day of her dreams had come, took the sword; but by the sword she was forced to "peace." But she has not practiced peace. The peace that is peace is never enforced by arms. So, the world has trembled at the German hand upon the hilt.

The nations dream of their days. They come to their hours. They are forced to their decisions. But there is a day appointed when they will stand disillusioned before the passage with these words in mind, but omitted from use, one gets the heartfelt meaning of the apostles.

One whose right it is to rule. . . . "In such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh."—Editorial in World's Crisis of October 19, 1938.

WHAT A BOOK!

Jeremiah 16:7: "Neither shall men tear themselves for them in mourning." This has no clear meaning. The definition of the Hebrew word paras is, "to break, cleave, divide." The Hebrews commonly spoke of "breaking of bread," not tearing of bread. Therefore, if paras were translated "break," instead of "tear," the text would naturally read, as in the margin, "Neither shall men break bread for them in mourning." Unveiling this text by removing the wrongly supplied word "themselves" solves the problem, and gives beauty to the text.

Ephesians 3:17, 18, 19. In verse 18, Bullinger in his Figures of Speech Used in the Bible, points to omissions in the Greek text not here indicated in the Authorized Version, thus: "May be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth (of it, i.e., of "love," in the prior context), and length (of it), and depth (of it), and height (of it);..." With these omission gaps occupied by the English pointer words, "of it," pointing back to "love," of verse 17, how much clearer and smoother the thought becomes. Then, omitting the pointers, but retaining the thought, how much more meaning there is in the words "breadth," "length," "depth," "height."

I cannot refrain from referring to one of many texts where the italicized supplied words are added though there is no omission or gap in the Greek grammar.

Hebrews 9:12. The last clause reads, "having obtained eternal redemption for us." The words "for us" are usually emphasized by the religious press and pulpit. But there is certainly no grammatical portion missing in the Greek. It reads simply, "having obtained eternal redemption." "Obtained" is the middle voice. The contrast is between Jesus, as Priest, entering "the Holies," and former priests entering "the Holies." They entered by appropriating the blood of "goats and calves," but He, "by his own blood." "Goats and calves" obtained the redemption and entrance of former priests, but He, Himself, "obtained eternal redemption."

While verse 14 includes "us" as a result of the work of verse 12, yet the injecting of "us" into verse 12 heavily veils the face of Christ in that verse. It is "Christ" our "High Priest" that is there emphatic; not "us."

Lifting this veil from off the word "Christ," He and His work are seen in greatly enhanced beauty.

These are but a few samples of the many hundreds of like texts in the Bible. It would seem as though those who accept the responsibility of teaching God's Word should give careful attention to the forementioned facts, that they might the better aid those whose life work is largely devoted to material labors, but who crave deeper understanding of Scripture.

One asks why all these confusing omissions. One answer is, to produce increased emphasis and strength of thought—if the omissions are properly recognized. But there is another amazingly wonderful reason, namely:

In our preceding article reference was made to the fact of definite numeric patterns throughout the inspired Word. If the omissions had been filled in, the numerics could not have been the same. The beautiful numeric patterns would have been spoiled. The Book would have been robbed of this unbreakable strength.

WHAT A BOOK! Unveiled that one may behold its inspired beauties, and-father's home, where he married her and "loved her." Such is the story of Christ and His bride. The heavenly Father has sent His servants, the disciples and apostles and now the preachers, "into all the world" (His former country, and of His household) to seek a bride for His Son. This wife, too, must be considerate of every person-"Come . . . inherit the kingdom . . . for I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in" (exactly as Rebekah did to the stranger) (Matt. 25.34, 35). Are we virgins as was Rebekah? "I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ" (2 Cor. 11:2). A virgin, in our case, is one that is pure, undefiled, and one that has not known the world. Are we as clean and pure as Jesus Christ, the One to whom we will be wedded, or have we committed fornication and adultery (spiritually speaking) with the world as Israel did with idols? Do we meet Rebekah's third test of going willingly, and her fourth, by traveling all the way?

A SHADOW OF CHRIST

Christ, too, will meet us part way in the evening. He "shall descend from heaven (in the night—1 Thess. 5:2), ... we ... shall be caught up ... to meet the Lord ... and so shall we ever be with the Lord" (married) (1 Thess. 4:16). He will take us, His bride, to His Father's abode, where the marriage will take place (Rev. 19:1-9); will love us, for He gave Himself for us; and will share with us His Father's riches, as Isaac did with Rebekah. Is it not more than worth our while to follow the pattern of Rebekah, considering that Christ is after the pattern of Isaac? Do you expect the pure, undefiled Christ to marry a bride that is tainted with the world?

Life's Highway

As is evident from our present-day conditions, men are always seeking for something. Life, in its very essence, is a quest. Some say that without a quest there is no conquest. In Tennyson's poem, "The Holy Grail," we are given a picture of one quest. Many quests are ever before us. Education is a common quest. It is a pursuit for knowledge, and a quest for wisdom. Tennyson gives an inspiring thought that "sometimes knowledge comes, but wisdom lingers."

Every person has some aim in life, and is pursuing his quest along Life's Highway. Along this way are certain guideposts that enable the individual to come closer to his goal, in the end. The Master has said in John 1:38, "What seek ye?" Whatever the Christian's goal may be, these guideposts on Life's Highway play an important role. But you ask, "What are these, by which we are known on Life's Highway?"

The first essential guidepost we wish to consider is Faith—what one believes. Faith in God, and in the eternal things of His kingdom, is absolutely necessary. Most people accept the temporal, but do they accept the spiritual? We partake of food; why not feed upon the Word of life? We all believe in our father's and mother's love for us; why not accept that of our heavenly Father? Why can't we believe in prayer, when we believe in the radio? To be a real success it is necessary to have faith in the eternal things of God.

Another guidepost along Life's Highway is Character—what one is. It is said of man, "As he thinketh in his heart, so is he." Our characters are daily forming, and they are of the world's greatest assets. Our characters influence others. Therefore, their correct forming should be one of our high ideals. By coming into contact with the rich young man, Christ revealed a lack of character. God sees through all disguises, but goodness is victorious in the end.

Another guidepost is Conduct—what one does. "What is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" Paul says, "Every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things." Conduct either makes or breaks. In God's Word are found rules and directions for conduct in life. The Bible is not out of date; it is up to us to study and meditate upon it. One cannot succeed, leaving the religious side of his life undeveloped.

We come to the fourth guidepost. It is Conversation—what one says. "If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man" (James 3:2). Jesus Christ says, in Matthew 12:37, "By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." Words must be kept in control to secure happiness. Our lives, and the lives of others, are uplifted or defamed by our words. It would do well for us to guard our language.

Another guidepost is Service—what one gives. "And whosoever of you will be the chiefest, shall be servant of all" (Mark 10:44). Are you living to get, or to give? Those who are today truly great are the ones who serve. Are you using your talent? Are you living a life of service?

The last guidepost, and equally important with the rest, is Ideals—what one desires. One should never be a dreamer, unless his dreaming leads to real attainment. We can never gain without ideals. Lowell says, "The thing we long for, that we are, for one transcendent moment." Paul had a great ideal in "I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Why not have that ideal in your life? Why not have some plans for life, and aspire unto them?

The guideposts which we have given are not, by any means, all of them. Let us have the perfect Guide, Jesus Christ. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his right-cousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." Aim high in intellectual, moral, and spiritual attainments.

His Commandment (John 15:12)

Marie Bleasdale, Los Angeles, Calif.

He has told us to watch until He comes again,

To abide in His Word every day,

To be true to His counsels each step of the way,

To curb each desire, each thought of our brain,

And to love one another

As He has loved us.

Christ has called us His friends, who before were not His,
Who were wanderers in darkness alone,
For we had no Savior, no one to atone
For our errors and sins until He came with this
One petition for us:
That we love one another.

He has told us He loves us as God has loved Him—
His own Son which He gave for our sake,
And Jesus the sacrifice for us did make
Who will follow Him, love Him, and be cleansed of sin.
This one thing He asks us:
To love one another.

Day by Day

Below are some brief glimpses of the daily lessons. They are not in order, as given in the Truth Seekers' Sunday School Quarterly. Can you match them with your quarterly titles? It should be easy if you have studied your daily reading for the week.

Did you ever say "goodby" to a friend whom you would not see again for a long while? Jesus was sure as He said "goodby," that His apostles would receive a gift, power from on high, after He left. How sorrowfully they gazed into the heavens as He went from them to His place at God's right hand. What a wonderful promise to us, as well, to know that "this same Jesus . . . shall so come in like manner as ye (the apostles) have seen him go into heaven." I hope you are looking forward with joy to that time.

The sermon at Pentecost was given by Peter, yet not the same Peter we saw a short while ago, for at Pentecost he was filled with power. He also understood then what had puzzled him before, "what the rising of the dead could mean." Had he not talked to Jesus face to face several times since His resurrection?

The listeners were filled with amazement, for did not each man hear Peter, and the others, speak in his own language? Did you count the names of the different places from which the people had come. There are nearly a dozen and a half! What a wonderful thing for God to direct the apostles to speak through the power of the Holy Spirit in such a manner that all understood!

The listeners were hearing themselves condemned for crucifying Jesus, who died and was raised from the dead—a living Christ! The listeners felt convicted in their hearts, or sorry for what they had done, and asked, "Men and brethren, what shall we do? Peter then told them the same things to do that we must do to become "heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ": "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."

When we become children of God, by repenting and being baptized into Christ, we should draw near to God with hearts full of faith, in prayer. We must not forget to study the Bible so we will be workmen who need not be ashamed, rightly applying God's Word. Nor should we forget to gather together in worship. One of our lessons tells us that we must assemble ourselves, and exhort one another, "so much the more" as we see the day of Christ approaching.

At first the good news was given only to the Jews. Now we learn that Peter had also been sent to the Gentiles. We learn that Peter saw a vision while he was praying. Read about it. Some of Peter's friends thought he shouldn't have preached to the Gentiles, but after Peter explained that the Gentiles also were filled with the Holy Spirit, Peter's friends "held their peace, and glorified God, saying, Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life."

Vocabulary List

Each week select the words you wish to learn the meaning of, and write under this title in a corner of your book.

- 1. Pentecost—feast day, Israel began to show praise to God for the harvests.
- 2. Exhort—urge to good deeds.

Birthday Corner

When is your birthday? Send a postal card giving your name and address, age, month and day of your birth. I want to have a mailing list of my readers. You need write to me only once then, and I can write to you when I get some special poem or picture for the ECE Club members.

If you did not learn the meaning of the ECE Club I shall be glad to tell you.

Don't forget to send me news of your birthday. Then we can print your name and age on our page, and send you "Birthday Greetings." Who's going to be first? If you have had a birthday since the first of the year, send in your name and age, and we will publish it, even though it is a bit late. Those whose birthdays are in March should report at once, as I write the page a few weeks in advance.

BIRTHDAY WISHES! From our ECE Club to you:

AMONG THE CHURCHES

HEDRICK, INDIANA

We are making every effort to raise a fund to build a small church in this community. If we can raise $3,500, with a good part of the work donated, we can build a church suitable for our needs.

We have had no church building since the tornado in 1922, which destroyed our former building. The public school building has been used for church and Sunday school services.

This, however, has proved very unsatisfactory.

EDEN VALLEY, MINNESOTA

The pastor of the church wishes to take this opportunity to thank the people of the church for their recent generosity, and to let the readers of The Herald know of it. At a rereaders of the Herald know of it. At a re-cent gathering in the home of Bro, and Sr. W. F. Hoskins, at which over sixty of the brethren and friends were present, a purse was presented to me, with which I have pur-chased a typewriter. Such demonstrations can only serve to bring us much nearer to our Master. Again I say, "Thanks!"

We are sorry to report that Bro. Earl Brossard has gone to the University Hospital in Minneapolis for treatment and observation. Bro. Brossard has been unable to do his work since the first of November. Your prayers and good wishes are asked.

Bro. C. E. Lapp and family accompanied Bro. John Denchfield to Eden Valley for a board meeting of the Minnesota State Conference, and attended the above mentioned reception.

Three of our Sunday school pupils received prizes at the first of the year for a year's perfect attendance. Jimmie Mills and Dickie Hoskins, members of Sr. Alda Ruhn's class, each received a Bible, and Evelyn Mills of Sr. Lillian Mills' class received a Bible game, having received a Bible the previous year. We commend these young people, and pray that they may remain faithful.

As we write these words, a typical Minne-sota storm is raging, which will probably cur-tail our activities for some time. We are anxiously awaiting the spring.

THE SUMMER BIBLE TRAINING SCHOOL

Yes! It's coming, the Summer Bible Training School!

There has never been a time in the history of the Church of God when it stood more in need of trained workers-preachers, teachers, and writers-who are thoroughly acquainted with the great Biblical doctrines for which this denomination has contended for a century and a half, and for which it must continue to contend if it is to remain true to the name it bears-the Church of God.

If the doctrines for which the Church of God stands were of but minor importance, if they were not absolutely necessary to the salvation of men, or if other religious groups taught clearly and constantly these same truths, the situation would be quite different. But there is not another denomination in America, of which we have knowledge, that believes and teaches these things from the standpoint of their positive necessity as elements of saving faith. Consequently a great responsibility rests upon us to send out men and women under the banner of the Church of God, who are qualified to present with assurance these splendid truths. To prepare such preachers, teachers, and writers will be the purpose of the forthcoming Training School.

Bro. S. J. Lindsay has again consented to be one of our instructors. His work will have to do with the prophecies of the Old Testament, and the doctrines of the New.

Begin now to plan to attend this Bible Training School. The cost for board, lodging, and tuition will be the same as it was last year—$30.00 for the entire six weeks' course.

Board of Religious Education, G. E. Marsh, Chairman.

LOUISIANA CHURCH NOTES

Our special series of meetings at the Blood River Church, conducted by Bro. Siple, began Wednesday night, Jan. 11, and came to a close Sunday morning, Jan. 22. We were favored with good weather throughout the meeting. and the interest and attendance were splendid. The little church was filled practically every night, and it was gratifying to note a large number of nonmembers attending regularly. Bro. Siple, in his usual forceful and convincing manner, presented the gospel truths each night to an attentive audience, and it was evident that quite a number were becoming more and more interested as the meeting progressed. A direct result of the meetings was the obedience of six persons through baptism into the saving name of Jesus. The names and addresses of these are as follows: Mr. and Mrs. Ed Patterson and Mr. Ivy McKinney of Springfield, La.; Mr. Walter Kennedy, Mr. Maurice Robinson, and Miss Thelma Richard-son of Hammond, La., Rt. 1. We feel that a number of others are considering obedience in baptism later on as a result of this meet ing, and that the members of the church received wonderful spiritual uplift and inspiration.

Meetings began Sunday night, Jan. 22, at the Happy Woods Church, and will continue until February 5. Fine attendance and in-terest were shown the first night, and we are looking forward to a successful meeting at Happy Woods, also.

Harry Goekler, Pastor.

Gleanings From the Field

Sr. Ada C. Simpson, president of the Pennellwood Berean Society of Grand Rapids, Mich., writes, "At a recent Berean meeting we decided to send one collection each month to the National Bible Institution." Thank you, Pennellwood Bereans.

Sr. L. E. Conner of Dixon, Ill., accompanied her daughter, Corinne Armstrong of Hollywood, Calif., and Mrs. Mayme Stevens of Akron, Ohio, on a trip to California, where Sr. Conner will visit for several weeks. The party left Dixon on the morning of January 22.

Sr. George Holly of Caledonia, Mich., died January 25. She has been a loyal member of the Church of God, and is the mother of Sr. Rhoda Hanson, who has for several years served on the correspondence committee of the National Berean Society.

The special meetings at Lawrenceville, Ohio, are being well attended. Both Bros. Gordon and McLain are preaching, Bro. Gordon speaking one night on prophecy, and Bro. McLain following the next night with a sermon of evangelistic type.

A three-weeks' series of special meetings will begin February 13 at the Church of God in Burr Oak, Ind., with Bro. F. L. Austin as the evangelist.

Work is starting on the Truth Seekers' Quarterly for the second quarter of 1939. Have you ordered yours? The price is 17c each, or 15c each if three or more are ordered to be sent to one address.

By request of her physician, Sr. Mary Gesin of Oregon, Ill., who has so faithfully con-tributed to the Truth Seekers' Quarterly, is now giving up this work. We are sorry of this necessity. However, we are sure this responsibility has been transferred to one who will also prove worthy. The three Bible lectures which had been announced for Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday evenings of January 17, 18, and 19, at 47 N. Broadway, to be given by the Backto-the-Bible lecturer, F. L. Austin of Chicago, were listened to with rapt attention and interest. The four persons of Geneva who were interested in making an effort to have the gospel of the kingdom proclaimed in their town after the manner of their own understanding of Bible revelation, were quite at a loss to estimate the amount of real reception that the citizens would give such. Therefore, while it was privately understood that an evangelistic series would, if warranted, follow, the three "Bible Lectures" only, were announced, as a feeler.

Bro. and Sr. Tuttle, and Bros. Hunt and Smith worked hard and faithfully in making ready for the effort. The room previously investigated and found acceptable had been, when finally a date had been set, previously secured by other interests. A recently vacated store building was immediately secured, but at nearly five times the price of the contemplated hall. Some twenty brethren of Unionville, five miles distant, and possibly a half dozen local citizens attended, with apparently enthused interest.

Owing to inability to secure a desirable hall at a reasonable price at this time, it was unanimously decided that it would be better to forego an evangelistic series until later. Accordingly, the lecture series being finished, the meetings were ended.

It would seem that there might be good work done in this field from now on. As usual, there are some handicaps. And, as usual, there is large, open opportunity for zealous work and faith. The writer will be much interested and faith. The writer up.

OUR SOUTHERN TRIP

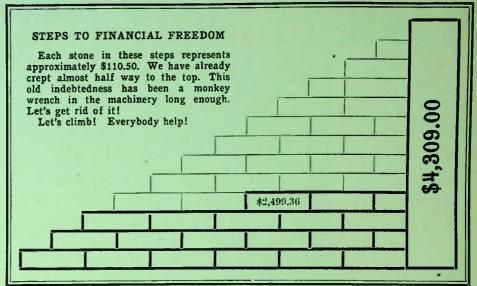

After leaving Eldorado, Ill., it was our privilege to stop one night in Memphis, Tenn., at the home of Bro. and Sr. Marrs. These were new to us, but having seen our notice in The Herald they had asked us to stop. We were more than pleased to find them well-read in the Scriptures, and very sound in the faith. They have some splendid young folks, and we have promised to the to atom an armonized to trip to preach, and perhaps baptize some.

On January 10 we reached the old home at Hammond, La., finding Mother and the folks quite well. The following day meetings were started at the Blood River Church, and these are still in progress at this writing. Bro. Harry Goekler has labored here faithfully for two years, and the results are evident on every hand. The building has been enlarged and improved. The membership has been enlarged, and the interest and loyalty run high. The church building has been well filled every night, in spite of rain and changeable weather.

Results in several ways are expected from this present effort. The meetings are scheduled to close January 22, and another meeting at the Happy Woods Church is to begin immediately.

We anticipate a trip to some of the western states in the early summer. If any along the route would be interested in having us stop, please address us at 140 Celia St., S.E., stop, please audices. Grand Rapids, Mich. F. E. Siple, Evangelist.

FRANCIS BLAKE

Francis Marion Blake was born in LaSalle Co., Ill., March 5, 1858. He moved with his parents to Kansas in 1874. In 1881 he joined a construction company of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad, now the Santa Fe. In coming west, it was with a view to returning at some early date, but like many others, he never returned to the Middle West to live. In 1881 he came to Tempe, Ariz., where in 1883 he married Celeste Holmesley, who survives him. For many years the family occupied a republication of Tempe. For eight ranch just southeast of Tempe. For eight years he has made his home in Florence, where his daughter Jessie is a teacher in the schools. Blindness had overtaken him for eight years or so. He now sleeps in Double Butte Cemetery, awaiting the coming of our Lord. He had been a member of the church for many years.

The funeral was held from Tempe on Sunday afternoon, Jan. 22, 1939, this being the first funeral of a member of the body held in the new church.

S. J. Lindsay.

I. C. McCHESNEY

Bro, I. C. McChesney was born in Marshall Co., Ind., Sept. 30, 1859, and fell asleep in Jesus at his home five miles north of Plymouth, just across the road from the North Salem Church, Jan. 17, 1939.

Just last May his wife fell asleep in Jesus. He leaves to mourn their loss: one son, Orville of South Bend; five daughters, Marv Logan, Inez Powell, Lydia Barnett, Tressic Snyder, and Beatrice Walter; two sisters, Frances Pierce and Janette Conger: brother, Schuyler; and twelve grandchildren. The writer has spent many nights in Bro.

McChesney's home, as he roomed there when in attendance at the Indiana Bible School for several years. He found Bro. and Sr. Mc-Chesney true Christians. Words of comfort were spoken to a large crowd, who had come to pay their last respects to him. Thursday, 2:30 p.m., Jan. 19, in the North Salem Church, where he had been a member for many years, having been baptized by Eld. A. H. Zilmer. May we meet him in the kingdom is the prayer of the writer.

J. H. Anderson.

FRED V. HENDRIX

Fred V. Hendrix was born in Greensboro, N. Car., June 2, 1876, and died January 6, 1939, at 710 S. 5 St., Kansas City, Kan.

At an early age, with his parents, he moved to Liberty, Mo., where he grew to manhood. At the age of twenty-three he was united in marriage to Miss Carrie Reynolds of Liberty. To this union was born one child, Mrs. Adabelle Harris, now residing in Los Angeles. Calif., He is also survived by one sister, Mrs. Eliza J. Whitton of Kansas City, Kan.; four brothers, George and Will of Kansas City, Mo., Al of Liberty, Philip of Ozawkie, Kan.; and one grandson Loyd Harris of Los Angeles.

The deceased has been a resident of Kansas City for the last thirty years, where he has been engaged in the contracting business, and he leaves a number of splendid buildings as monuments of his vocation.

His wife preceded him in death about eight years ago, and his only child lived so far away that much of the care for him during his last sickness fell to his only sister. Mrs. Whitton.

The writer, in the funeral sermon, called attention to the fact that he is now in the valley of death, but only for a short time, and that he will come forth in his order, and will be judged by the Supreme Judge who "doeth all

John F. Green. things well."

"Home, Sweet Home"

Provided by the love and sympathy of the entire brotherhood of the Church of God, Golden Rule Home assures to the members of its Family the comfort, security, and solicitous care which the word "home" always suggests.

Here the anxieties of earlier and more active life are laid aside forever. No threat of eviction for non-payment of rent or taxes or other indebtedness troubles the hearts of the residents of Golden Rule Home!

No doctor or hospital bills, no grocery, coal, or light bills to be met the first of the month, bring fear to the minds of the Golden Rule Home Family!

All such obligations and burdens are taken from the shoulders of these older ones immediately upon their entrance into the Home and are carried thereafter by the Golden Rule Home itself, which is amply able to bear the load on their behalf.

A hearty Christian welcome awaits all who seek the protection and lifelong support the Home provides.

Conditions of entrance into Golden Rule Home are as liberal as absolute security permits. Write for full particulars concerning the Home and its advantages. Or, better still, come and visit the Home itself and let the Family tell their own story of its advantages and comforts.

Israel to Be Restored

By S. J. Lindsay

WE HAVE been requested to point out from Scripture where we find the authority for saying that Israel will be restored to the land of Palestine. First, we will consider Old Testament evidence.

In Jeremiah 24:6, 7, we find this spoken of the people of Judah, "I will bring them again to this land: and I will build them, and not pull them down; and I will plant them, and not pluck them up. And I will give them a heart to know me, that I am the Lord: and they shall be my people, and I will be their God: for they shall return unto me with their whole heart."

Have they ever been planted in that land and no more pulled up?

They are, as a people, to come to a time when they will recognize and acknowledge their Lord and King. Zechariah 12 is distinctly a prophecy concerning the house of Israel. In it we find the account of God's defense of Jerusalem. One needs but read this text to see that God means to protect Jerusalem from the attack of nations. "And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will seek to destroy all the nations that come against Jerusalem." The close of the chapter shows that the house of Israel will then become mourners, in recognition of the manner in which they have been saved.

References of this nature are too many to enumerate in a short article. We go now to Ezekiel 37, to his vision of the valley of dry bones. This chapter is so plain and self-explanatory that little comment is needed. At the conclusion of Solomon's reign, the house of Israel was broken into two sticks or rods. A rod (scepter) is a symbol of power. Today, in democratic countries, the gavel takes its place. The rod of Israel was broken, and became two rods or sticks. In this chapter the Prophet is bidden to reunite these two sticks, when they are to become two sticks no longer, but one stick. I quote verse 22, "And I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all: and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all."

We read in Amos 9:14, 15, "And I will bring again the captivity of my people of Israel, and they shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof; they shall also make gardens, and eat the fruit of them. And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God."

According to this language, they are to be planted and never pulled up out of their land. This has never been fulfilled.

Let us now consider the division of the land among them. When Israel returned from Egyptian captivity, reaching the Land of Promise, the land was allotted to them in small portions with irregular boundaries, as any good Bible map of that time will show.

"In the same day the Lord made a covenant with Abram, saying, Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates" (Gen. 15:18). This promise has not yet been fulfilled to Abraham's fleshly seed. But in Ezekiel, chapters 47 and 48, there will be found a division of land guite different from that which was made at Israel's return from Egypt. Instead of the irregular boundaries as before, the boundaries will run parallel with each other from the Mediterranean east to the Euphrates, with Dan's portion on the north, and with Asher, Naphtali, Manasseh, Ephraim, Reuben, Judah, in strips north of Jerusalem. Then is given the division belonging to the priests and Levites, followed on the south, next, by Benjamin, Simeon, Issachar, Zebulun, and Gad. The southern boundary of Gad's allotment will reach to the River of Egypt (not the Nile). There is a small stream emptying into the Mediterranean east of where the Nile empties. This division has never taken place. It is often said that there is not land enough in Palestine to house all the Israelites today, God's wisdom has provided for that.

We now come to the New Testament to bring forth some of its evidence. (Please turn to page 10)

Speed

The world is on wheels. Speedometer figures mock the law. Once we said "train," now we say "zephyr." Regardless of his non-angelic nature, man has invented wings, and for greater speed, wheels have been lifted up from the earth. (Cf. Ezek. 1:19.)

The birds, traveling only in second gear, edge over to either side as men fly by. Flying from New York to California, men race the sun. With great possibilities in stratosphere flying still undeveloped, faster speeds are sure to come.

With modern speeds, and all the complexities of a machine life, there is little time to rest or think, almost no time to worship. When a moment of rest does come it is usually taken as an opportunity to refuel, and the unnecessary sign then says, "Resume Speed."

Chased by a ghost until he was out of breath, Sambo sat down on a log. The ghost sat down too. "Some race we've been having," said the ghost. "Yassah, and as soon as ah gits mah bref wez goin' to run some mo'e," panted Sambo, and he was soon in high gear, kicking dirt in the apparition's eyes.

Judging from the speed men are traveling, some mad specter must be haunting them. The ghost it seems, though close behind, is still in second place.

When Religion Was Not So Fast

John the Baptist "had his raiment of camel's hair, and a leathern girdle about his loins; and his meat was locusts and honey." Most of his work was done outdoors. His chapel was "the wilderness," his baptistry was the Jordan River. His lectures were called "preaching," and his theology was a roughly old-fashioned "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." He debated not at all about the Sabbath, limited resurrection, or the personality of Satan, but had much to say about Jesus, and warned many "to flee from the wrath to come."

John had no degrees, no title but "John." He never knew what a stiff collar means. Streamlined religion cannot be traced to John. Nobody knows what his salary was, but many people know what Jesus testified of him, and everybody knows why and how he died.

The standards of Jesus were much the same as John's. Our Lord was a man of power, rather than a man of the hour. Streamlined religion meant nothing to Him. Let us consider briefly Christ's coming into the world.

A stable in quaint old Bethlehem was the maternity hospital where Mary gave birth to her son. Though Joseph alone was doctor, nurse, and medical staff, "blessed (was) she that believed: for there (was) a performance of those things which were told her from the Lord" (Luke 1:45).

A long time ago a boy's teachers were his parents, and that boy "was subject unto them." His toys are not so much as mentioned, but it is evident that Jesus learned to build with carpenter's tools. Without the thrill of the gridiron, without any records of speed, without a college fraternity, "Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favour with God and man" (Luke 2:52).

In manhood Jesus was the greatest of pastors, but like John, much of His work was out in the open. So-called "social visits" to be made on Friday afternoons were no part of Christ's ministerial course. Both day and night and all week long He went about "doing good." He fed multitudes, but when tempted of Satan made not a crumb for Himself. He journeyed on foot over mountains, seeking sheep that were willingly lost from the fold.

Christ's message, like John's, was one of repentance, and His doctrine was about the kingdom of God. His best friends were poor—He was no politician. His sermons were not gauged by a clock on the wall, nor was the temple in Jerusalem ever called His church. He had no salary. His congregation quit. But with His face set as flint, our Captain went on, and on, and on.

Desirable Speed in Christianity

Not to copy, but to learn from the world's speed is a crying need of religion. Christianity can be too slow. Forgiveness, true charity, and financial support are like the proverbial molasses in January. "Hasting righteousness" (Isa. 16:5) is prophetically spoken of King Jesus. "Go quickly," said the angel to the women at the tomb, and "they departed quickly...; and did run to bring his (Christ's) disciples word" (Matt. 28:7, 8).

"The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light" (Luke 16:8), and are likewise faster. From pulpit, by press, by radio, by daily life and conversation, the Church of God must speed her messages of truth; must do so quickly, for the fields "are white already to harvest." The King is at the door.

Walking With the Lord

By H. H. Hawkins

AVE you at any time stood at some elevated point on a busy thoroughfare, or in the lobby of a large railway station, and observed people walking to and fro? No doubt most of you have.

In our observation we note that each person has some peculiar stride in his walk, or a certain swing of the arm that sets him apart from any other person. In similar observations you will further notice that one individual seems to have a great deal of time on his hands. In his meandering he often blocks the footsteps of some one else. Then, there is another who, looking neither to the left nor to the right, forges straight ahead, unconscious of the milling crowd or of the vendor selling his wares along the wall.

We, who are traveling through this life and have decided to walk with the Lord in the spiritual pathway, experience many things en route. Some of our readers, no doubt, have just been in the fold only a year or so, then there are others who have been soldiers of the cross for a half a century or more.

The writer and his dear wife put on the allsaving name twenty-five years ago last November (a quarter century, if you please), and we have been rejoicing in the hope ever since

(Rom. 12:12), and are still clinging to that "hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world began" (Titus 1:2).

By a probable coincidence, and being one of four elders, it so happened that it was my turn to preside at the Communion table on this particular anniversary Sunday, and to me this made it all the more impressive, and a double occasion in testifying for our Lord.

We learn that "Noah walked with God" and he, in his generation at that time, was a just and perfect man. Then we, in our generation, should strive to walk with our Lord and Master, and to so walk is our admonition to those who have just started the Christian life. None will find this pathway adorned with roses all along the way, because it is through much tribulation that we enter into the kingdom.

We should be like the man in the railway station who had a destination and was eager to reach it, looking forward. This brings to my mind those who were offering excuses to Jesus when He told them, "No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God" (Luke 9:62).

The Apostle Paul exhorts us to forget "those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before," to "press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus" (Phil. 3:13, 14).

David, in writing one of the Psalms, asked the Lord not to hide His face from him, and further wanted to know the way wherein he should walk. As David wanted to be guided, we also should desire God's pathway. We can be guided by consulting the Word of God which is unchangeable. Therein Jesus has advised us about two pathways—a broad way, and a strait way (Matt. 7:13, 14).

Have we ever stopped to ponder just how temporary the things of the flesh are, and of very short duration at that. Paul, in the Roman letter (8:4-13), tells us among other things to "walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the > flesh; but they that are after the Spirit the things of the Spirit. . . . So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God. But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his. ... For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die: but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live."

> If we make an effort, and truly strive to live in the Spirit, it will then be easier for us to walk in the Spirit. We shall then walk circumspectly, that is, we shall walk with caution, and not be caught napping and be drawn into the broad way that leads to destruction.

In these perplexing days, we sometimes become discouraged or disheartened when problems arise, or when things do not turn out as we anticipate. Then we should go to the Lord in prayer, and bring to mind the faith that our forefathers had.

Faith is a great stimulant, and it buoys us up. It helps us to get hold of ourselves, and to look for that new age, as did Abraham who had great faith and through whose seed all nations are to be blessed. He was distinguished for his integrity, generosity, and hospitality. But most of all, he was remarkable for his simple, unwavering faith, for he obeyed unhesitatingly, not wavering at the most fearful trial ever imposed upon man-that of offering in sacrifice his only son, as recorded in Genesis 22:1-14.

Then we think of David, known as "The Shepherd King," who was distinguished for fidelity, and had great faith in God. He was notably a man of prayer and, while he yielded to many temptations, he repented and found mercy from God. His character was marked by generosity, integrity, and perseverance. His trust and faith fully disclosed the type that God is well pleased with.

Sometimes, it being human nature to be a little stubborn, we do not want to go in the same direction, or in the same path, with God. We very much desire to have God walk with us, and we may be (Please turn to page 91

RIOT OF WORDS

By Arlen Marsh

June 1, 1938

Dear Phil,

It was exactly one year ago today that we met through the good graces of Contacts. During that year we've discussed just about everything under the sun, and a good many things that aren't under it. Let's see—there's been mention of literature and fashions and astronomy and economics and paleontology (remember our argument about whether the Field Museum or the Smithsonian Institute had the best exhibits of prehistoric animal skeletons?) and philosophy and languages. As I think of it, there's been only one major subject omitted—religion.

Maybe that's been, Phil, because I'm not exactly given to religion. A reporter generally isn't, though there's one man on the Pantograph staff who goes to church every Easter without fail. For one thing, you get cynical, Phil; very cynical indeed. You see the seamy side of life—that's news, which is a good thing. When the world gets so bad that practice of the Golden Rule is news, it'll be time to be looking for the nearest tombstone and the most high-sounding epitaph. Because, Phil old soul, I'm willing to admit that religion has done great things for the world.

But as I say, reporting makes you cynical. You look for the "hidden motives" behind what people do; you expect to find people concealing their genuine thoughts behind hypocritical language. I don't mind finding that out in the world, Phil—out where I toil and toil and toil and rake up dirt; but I went to Sunday school when I was a kid, and I was taught that the church ought to be a little bit better than the Great Outside.

It isn't, Phil; and that's why I don't go to church and why I take no interest in church work. If there are any Christians in this country, they're effectually hiding their lights under the Biblical bushel. Ministers row among themselves at ministerial conferences and weekly association meetings—I know; I cover the ministerial association front as that better reporter covered the water front. Down on the water front, you find 'em openly admitting to being thieves; but the gloriously religious church members steal each other blind, and still stick to their story of good will toward men.

Maybe I'm morbid or low-down just now. One of our local churches just split again—this is the third time in a year. Each group has about a hundred members now. The fight started over something everybody's forgotten, but they got the habit and kept it up, like sit-down strikers on a spree. They gossip—I could get enough dirt about any member from the other members to start another Winchell column! They let the mortgage-holders go on holding; they may have money, but they won't spend it, not on a church building. When they broke up, their minister was $800 behind in salary. So I say they steal each other blind.

But enough of this moralizing, and on to lighter things. Such as the international situation and the problem of social security. Do you think . . .

Cordially,
Ash.

June 10, 1938

Dear Ash:

You were right. After a year of writing back and forth about what seems like every subject in existence, your letter was the first mention of religion that was more than casual that has occurred in our correspondence.

It is not too surprising that you feel as you do. Many others feel the same way. Possibly they have reason to do so. Personally, I feel they—and you, too—are wrong. Churches are made up of human beings, and human beings who are church members have as many faults as others. The chief difference between them and the Great Outside you mentioned is that they, the church members, at least try to do the right thing, while the Great Outside usually does not.

There is another difference, also. This one is psychological. Church people on the whole may not be able to write with the pens of Kelland and Sheean and Nordhoff and Hall; they may not be able to put personality into their choirs—although some of the greatest choruses in history have been church choirs; they may not talk entertainingly and frivolously of life, and the way it is lived; they may be too serious, as they often are. But they have something you will never have—they have a peace of mind and contentment that passes all understanding.

I quoted that directly from the Bible, of course. You hardly would know that, in spite of your allusion to the Biblical bushel. You probably do not believe me; you probably do not believe that much, at least, of the Bible. Yet it is quite true. The solid church members have a conception of life that carries them through adversity without the panic-stricken whining that accompanies so many appeals for political panaceas and economic nostrums. I know. I have been a member of a church all my life. That conception is called faith in God.

I disagree with your opinion of the results of Hitler's unpublicized efforts to place Nazis in influential positions in Fascist Italy....

Sincerely yours, Phil.

July 2, 1938

Dear Phil,

Religion appears to have boosted itself at last into a place of almost major importance, doesn't it? What with my initial comments and your somewhat labored reply (d'you realize you're becoming positively pedantic?), the facets of Faith seem to be reflecting upon us in all their sorry glory.

For you haven't convinced me, Phil; you haven't convinced me. I doubt very much if you ever will. Reporters are rarely convinced of anything; if they were, they'd not write political news for a Republican paper today and a Democratic paper tomorrow. Reporters can't afford to have convictions.

Which is one of the things that so irritates me about you religious souls. So many of you spout off about Faith and Salvation and the Hereafter, and how many of you know anything about it? Religion to you is a riot of words, a fanning of emotionalism, a sensational chair-breaking by crackpot successors to Billy Sunday. You burst out with enthusiasm about how good it is to be a Christian, and you can't tell me anything about why you believe what you believe, other than some such sentimental vaporing about the Inner Feeling.

Inner Feelings don't go down with me. Me, I'm like Darrow. I want facts—vague sentiments aren't news. I've been trained to pry into the source of things, and I can't find any source for most "Christianity." It's chiefly a mass of words spilled about with no apparent purpose, although it does seem to result in capturing a good many of the masses, who are easily swayed by anyone who can orate happily about good times are a-comin', hurray, hurray!

I still insist that Hitler is trying to absorb Italy slowly, but surely. Approximately the same tactics were used prior to the Austrian fiasco. . . .

Disagreeably, Ash.

August 15, 1938.

Dear Ash:

Pardon the delay in my replying to your letter. This is vacation time, and I steadfastly refuse to write anyone a letter during my vacation. Now that I am home again, however, I take my pen in hand. I wonder who started that ancient terminology? Everyone since Adam has taken his pen in hand.

When I was on my vacation I ran across a prime example of what seems to irritate you about religious faith. It was a church Bible class—a mixture of both old and young people—which was studying a lesson about which no one except the teacher knew anything at all. Those "students" had been members of the church for most of their lives; for there were no strangers there, except me. Yet none of them, except the teacher of the class, could give definite reasons for their beliefs, or find Bible references which would substantiate their ideas. (Turn to page 11)

A Savior Needed

By Lyle Rankin

WHEN the people in the days of Noah had turned to do wickedness, God provided a way of salvation from the determined destruction of the Flood, a punishment to be sent because of their exceedingly wicked ways. (Gen. 6.) Noah, a preacher of righteousness, informed the people of their appointment with the Flood, and at the same time made ready the ark of safety. Others could have had a part in Noah's work if they had but believed and obeyed the word of God, as spoken by Noah. God said, "My spirit shall not always strive with man, . . . yet his days shall be an hundred and twenty years," thus signifying that God was giving people an opportunity to accept the salvation offered, and that one hundred twenty years was the limit of the offer.

We find also, that when the children of Israel turned unto God in the time of affliction and sought Him with their whole heart, He, in His "manifold mercies," gave them "saviours," or provided salvation from the affliction. (Neh. 9:27.) Oftentimes the Father sent them prophets. Many were abused even unto death, but last of all He sent them His Son. Him they "slew and hanged on a tree" (Acts 5:30; Matt. 21:33-41).

Let us now consider some of the things written concerning the Savior:

"Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world" (John 1:29).

"Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners" (1 Tim. 1:15).

"The grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men" (Titus 2:11).

"He (Christ) is the saviour of the body" (Eph. 5:23).

"The Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world" (1 John 4:14).

Here we have several statements concerning the provision of a Savior. The children of men are "by nature the children of wrath," and abide in condemnation (Eph. 2:3; John 3:18, 36), but a Savior has been provided, and the way of salvation has been made known. Hence, we may come to God by Him (Christ), and abide in life, i.e., have the promise of life abiding in us (1 John 2:25), and so be "not appointed... to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Thess. 5:9).

God, in mercy, gave His Son. Jesus gave His life. What have we given?

When Jesus comes again, He will give life eternal to as many as love Him, and keep His commandments. "If ye love me, keep my commandments" (John 14:15).

Along the Last Mile

Part 2

By James M. Watkins

A STHE milestones of current events pass us swiftly by, as never before in the history of the world, the attention of all people is centered upon one race. To each individual the rise of this race offers food for different thought. To us, it is the rise of the seventh son of Japheth, the gentile come to power—the seventh for the last. All our other political or historical concern in this Aryan race is insignificant compared to this.

Although Gomer, this seventh in power, more properly represents the Celtic nations as represented today by England, Ireland, and Wales, we find this interesting distinction. Of the seven sons (see part 1 of this article, January 24, page 9) only two are mentioned as having sons. These two are Javan and Gomer. In this, we can readily see that the power of these two brothers was not complete in their respective races, but each would develop in an alliance of its racial descendants. Thus, the power of Gomer was not complete in the parent race, but will be in the sons.

I think that it is to be conceded that the power which the Celts (England, etc.) held prior to the World War is now being superseded, not by a different race, but by the sons of that same race, and the alliance that is becoming more apparent each day is between those sons. Now these sons of Gomer are recorded in Genesis 10 as Ashkenaz, Riphath, and Togarmah. Ashkenaz is head of the Germanic tribes, Riphath of the Slavic race, and Togarmah of the Armenian Turks. To be true, the forming of power must of course be vested in the elder son, borrowing only that power which is necessary from the younger brothers.

It can hardly be credited to mere chance that these three Aryan brothers sprang from that parent race, the Celts. We have taken a great deal of pains to verify these sons and their descendants, and to place them in the affairs of today. That these Aryans are the sons of Gomer, the Celt, we find well recorded in history. It is said of the Emperor Caius (recorded on documents of that day) that his personal troops were Germans, and, out of tribute to the land from whence they came, he called them The Celtic Legion.

Through the names of men and their sons the prophetic implications of the Bible have been recorded for our use in a way that could not possibly have been improved upon. The Bible provides us with a written record of these people for all time, not only anticipating what is yet to happen, but, what is probably more important, providing a reason for the things these races are now doing. This feature is something we are unable to find in any other branch of learning.

When the power of Gomer is complete in his sons, according to tradition the power will be vested in the elder. Accordingly, we can see no reason for disappointment in the things we find in the world today, for the eldest was Ashkenaz, head of the Germanic tribes. Although the other two brothers are necessary in world dominion, it is undoubtedly this elder brother that is to be acknowledged as the power. With his territory of Germany, France, Italy, Austria, Hungary, Rumania, Yugoslavia, Bulgaria, Spain, and Greece we visualize the ten horns in Daniel and Revelation. Three must fall, it is said. Germany, sworn to return all territory taken away by the World War, has already erased Austria from the map. There remains only Hungary and Yugoslavia to follow in that route.

In the description in Revelation 13:2, this mouthpiece, the lion, has borrowed his people from the land of the leopard (Armenia in Turkey), his future religion and doctrine from the bear (the Slavs in Russia), both of which are merely his Aryan brothers. With so complete a description—not only of what he is, but of what he thinks—we can be pardoned for a little elation in seeing one so described materializing before our very eyes.

Two things yet remain to be done to make our prophetic picture complete. One is the uniting of these three Aryan brothers as they are shown united at Armageddon by the Prophet Ezekiel, and the other is the completion of the tennation formation already spoken of. We are assured, as we observe the trend of world affairs, that these things will be done, although we do not know the exact order. However, even the order seems well indicated at the present time. The order is not important so long as the end is attained

In our next and last article we will, through a psychological analysis of the leader of this group, discuss in more detail this final completion of the ten-nation formation. We shall also consider the future doctrines and religion of this power, as indicated by the character of this man—seeing how these things dovetail with awe-inspiring accuracy into the word of the prophets, as concerns this race of the last of the age. There remains then only the uniting of these Aryan brothers to be discussed.

Germany has already turned her attention to the Ukraine. To the world, Germany is merely planning a conquest for raw materials. Undoubtedly it is only intended as such, but to prophecy it is far more than that. It is the conquest of the seat of the Slav race, the other Aryan brother, forming a wedge through which—by the setting up of the heir to the throne of Russia—the Slavs could readily dominate Russia, and the area of Norway, Sweden, and Finland. This would completely unite the Slavs.

Such a move would be most important in prophecy, because it would be the last conquest necessary in the power of Gomer and his sons for world control. In the external relationship of the Germanic—that is, the ten-nation power already named, and which is indicated in prophecy as being completed by the time the alliance of the sons is completed—only two other alliances are necessary for the complete union of Gomer, an alliance with England, and one with Turkey. At that time this may readily be done without conquest. Hitler has already indicated in his book, Mein Kampf, that his greatest aim is to make an ally of Great Britain, to curtail the possibility of war. With an alliance between the other sons (Slavs in Russia, Armenians in Turkey) controlling every nation in Europe and Asia Minor, Great Britain would have no choice. There is no longer a possibility, it is a probability.

Merely as an interested spectator on the sidelines we observe Germany, and look with pleasure to her future. No matter what we may think of her politically, prophetically she is anything but a disappointment!

Reflecting the Light

By E. L. Mann

OD is continually pouring out His goodness upon us, giving us blessings so numerous that we are not conscious of possessing many of them. These blessings we have had so long, and taken so for granted as our just due, that we complain not a little when any one of them is withheld for a very short time.

Sunlight is one of these blessings. Of course we expect to see the sun every day. It has shone on us nearly every day of our lives. How we miss it when the day is dark! How much harder it is to get up in the dark and go about our daily tasks without the sunshine! Our dispositions are affected, and it is so much easier to complain than not to—and then blame the weather.

These facts have a deep significance. Light and heat are usually associated together, and we know how essential these are for life and growth. All living things depend upon light and heat for their existence, either directly or indirectly.

Let us take a look at the very beginning of things. On the very first day of creation God created light, and separated it from the darkness. Later, the sun was created to give light, and we know the sun as the source of all material light. The moon and the stars give light, too, but differing in glory from the sun. Each has its place and is important there. The light of the moon and the stars is reflected light from the sun. They would be nothing without the sun. We need their light, for in the light things are revealed; objects are illuminated so that they are visible, and we are able to find our way.

Jesus, in teaching His disciples, tells them, as it is recorded in John 8:12, "I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life."

Now let us give just a few examples to illustrate how God uses material light to show us that Jesus is our spiritual light. When Jesus was born, we read in Luke 2:9 that "the glory of the Lord shone round about them" (the shepherds). Matthew 2:2-10 tells us of the star that led the wise men to the manger where Jesus lay. The lowly shepherds, folk who toil with their hands, having had little education, are just as important, and have the same opportunity to follow the light. We see that the wise men who held a more favorable place, as men count things in this world, needed the light also to guide them, and to show them the way. But, they would never have found Jesus if they had not followed the light all of the way.

Then again at the transfiguration when Jesus had taken just three of His disciples, Peter, James, and John, the ones who were zealous and eager to learn of Jesus, who also were being taught by Him, even they falter and are afraid when they behold the face of Jesus shine as the sun and His garments become white as the light; with a luminous cloud above them, out of which comes a voice, saying, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him."

Paul, too, was given temporary blindness, caused by the brightness of the light that shone about him on the way to Damascus, so that he might have time to think; to face about and do the Lord's will, instead of persecuting the followers of Christ.

Now, Christ is the Light of the world. If we want the Light we must make contact with Him. This we know, that light is necessary for life. Not one of us has light in or by himself. If we have light, it is because of our contact with Christ, and we reflect His light.

A mirror is one of the best reflectors that we have, yet it can reflect nothing as long as it is kept in darkness, neither can it reflect an object until it is brought into focus with the object to be reflected. Now, mirrors vary in many respects, and each one is different from every other. A good mirror is one free from flaws, that gives back the image of the object reflected in its true form. We will understand a perfect mirror better if compared with faulty

Open Manifestation

By A. E. Griffiths

HAVING considered the details of the secret manifestation of Christ, we will now take up the open manifestation, or His appearance to the world.

There is nothing secret about this phase of Christ's coming, because He will then be engaged in dealing out punishment on the nations. Therefore, to come as a thief in the night would not be consistent with the work He has to do.

We must remember that before Christ makes Himself visible to the world, He is already on the earth with His saints, but is hidden until He is ready to judge the nations. "For in the time of trouble he shall hide me in his pavilion" (Psalm 27:5). "Thou shalt hide them in the secret of thy presence from the pride of man: thou shalt keep them in a pavilion, from the strife of tongues" (Psalm 31:20).

There will be several factors governing the precise moment of Christ's arrival at Jerusalem. In the first place, the change from the kingdom of men to the kingdom of God will be attended by unprecedented troubles. It will be "a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation" (Dan. 12:1). "For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be" (Matt. 24:21). "Alas! for that day is great, so that none is like it: it is even the time of Jacob's trouble; but he shall be saved out of it" (Jer. 30:7). This last text shows that Israel, the Jews, will be saved at last, and once more receive God's favor.

There is a belief among some people that the kingdom of God will be set up overnight, so to speak, and will appear like a mushroom; but this is not so. They quote Malachi 3:1, "And the Lord, whom ye seek, will suddenly come to his temple." This is referring to John the Baptist preparing the way for Christ's first coming, and took place over nineteen hundred years ago. The fact is, the setting up of the kingdom will take considerable time. Christ will receive opposition as soon as He sets up His government in Jerusalem. "Why do the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing? The kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together, against the Lord, and against his anointed" (Psalm 2:1, 2). This shows the nations will rebel at first, but will eventually give in when they find Christ and His followers are invincible, and can kill thousands without weapons. "A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand; but it shall not come nigh thee" (Psalm 91:7).

When Christ reaches the Mount of Olives, the great carthquake will take place. In Revelation 11 we read about the second woe, and that terminates with the earthquake (v. 13). "And the same hour was there a great earthquake, and the tenth part of the city fell, and in the carthquake were slain of men seven thousand." Seven, being a complete number, indicates that all the wicked assembled at this place who are condemned to death, are here destroyed. In using this quotation from Revelation we must remember that this book must be understood to deal symbolically and not literally. The earthquake, however, here referred to can have two meanings. It can be a literal earthquake, or a great disturbance which has a destroying effect on the nations. This harmonizes with Zechariah 14:4, "And his feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east, and the mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof toward the east and toward the west, and there shall be a very great valley; and half the mountain shall remove toward the north, and half of it toward the south." Of course, this only refers to the people who are situated in that locality, but Christ's punitive actions will extend eventually to the ends of the earth. "And the slain of

The question may be raised, How will Christ and His saints without any weapons of war cause men to fall dead? We have a good illustration of this in Acts 5:1-11. Here we read that Ananias and Sapphira both fell dead at the instigation of Peter, i.e., they died by the will of God, who used His power through Peter to show those who witnessed this spectacle that willful sin is visited by death. God naturally can cause death to anyone He chooses, just the same as He causes life. There are quite a number of references to fire in the destruction of the wicked at the last day; the agent of death will probably be electricity.

Fire is the most permanent destroyer known to man. Therefore, God uses this to exterminate the works of man. "A fire goeth before him, and burneth up his enemies round about" (Psalm 97:3). "For, behold, the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire. For by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh: and the slain of the Lord shall be many" (Isa. 66:15, 16). "When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ" (2 Thess. 1:7, 8). When we consider all the marvelous edifices erected in this country and in Europe, where idolatry is practiced not only on a spiritual form, but by bowing down to images as indulged in by the Catholics, is it any wonder God is angry? He will not only destroy those things, but also the people who so flagrantly disobey His commandments. The heads of these organizations will receive the same punishment, including the false prophet. "And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshipped his image. These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone" (Rev. 19:20). The head of the Catholic Church is inferred in this passage, but it also covers all the different denominations of worldly churches that profess to be Christians, and yet do not believe in or look forward to the promises made to Abraham.

For the definition of the word "Christian" let us read Acts 11:26, "And it came to pass, that a whole year they assembled themselves with the church, and taught much people. And the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch." So the people that were called Christians were the disciples, and they believed what Christ had taught them, and understood the promises made to Abraham, and how they would inherit the earth in an immortal state when Christ returned, instead of owning immortal souls that eventually went to heaven, which is taught by all these false prophets. So there is nothing remarkable about them being subjects for destruction.

The word "Christian" naturally means a follower of Christ, so a person bearing this name must of necessity believe in the doctrine Christ taught.

The open manifestation of Christ will cause a great deal of consternation. It will be witnessed by a multitude. "Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him" (Rev. 1:7). The idea conveyed in this passage is often misunderstood. We must remember that when He comes to Jerusalem to show himself to the world He comes from Bozrah, Edom, and not from the sky. Therefore, the clouds here mentioned refer to a multitude of saints. A similar passage occurs in Ezekiel 38:9, "Thou shalt ascend and come like a storm, thou shalt be like a cloud to cover the land." This is how Gog comes down to Palestine to take a spoil, but these are mortal soldiers and we can't imagine them coming from the sky. It is a form of expression often used in the Scriptures, and frequently denotes a mass of people.

When Christ arrives at Jerusalem the Jews and their allies, Britain for one, have been conquered. "For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle; and the city shall be taken, and the houses rifled, and the women ravished; and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city" (Zech. 14:2). So the first act is to drive the nations that are left out of Jerusalem, and set up a temporary government center there.

The Jews, of course, being rescued from their oppressors, will now accept Christ, and will be organized as a mortal army to help their allies in chasing Gog to Armageddon, in the plain of Esdraelon, where his army will be destroyed. Christ will use the Jews He has rescued in subduing the nations. Thus, the Jews will be restored to their original sphere, as they were promised so many generations ago. "And thou, O tower of the flock, the strong hold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion; the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem" (Micah 4:8).

In executing this maneuver Christ is now established in Jerusalem, but there is plenty of opposition from the nations that were not on the scene when His demonstration of power took place. Thinking they can overthrow Him, they come against Christ to conquer Him, but His power is greater than they bargained for. The result is their own overthrow, leaving Christ safely enscenced as ruler in Jerusalem. To extend His rule will take time, because every country must be brought under His rule.

Jerusalem today is a very small place, not large enough for the capital of the world, but when the earthquake takes place all this will be changed. It is now composed of five hills, but some of these will be leveled off by the land disturbance—leaving Mount Moriah prominent.

This is the spot where Abraham prepared to sacrifice Isaac, and it will eventually be the center of the temple building, with the altar on the top. This temple will be a mile square, bigger than the city of Jerusalem is today, and when all the idolatrous buildings now standing have been destroyed, then the mortal nations will build this marvelous temple. "And the sons of strangers shall build up thy walls, and their kings shall minister unto thee: for in my wrath I smote thee, but in my favour have I had mercy on thee" (Isa. 60:10). This edifice will not only be the central place of worship, but will also contain all the administration buildings where Christ and His saints will hold court, and direct the destinies of all the people of the world. What a wonderful time that will be when peace shall reign permanently. Peace on earth will then be established.

WALKING WITH THE LORD

very sincere in believing ourselves deserving of such goodly companionship. But the Scriptures say, "Walk with God"—go His way, not ours, even if we think ours is a pretty good one. Do not try to take God your way, as that is entirely the wrong method to pursue. First, earnestly consult God in prayer, ask to be shown His way, and to be guided in His paths. Then, walk with God.

"He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God" (Micah 6:8).

Let us, who have put on the breastplate of righteousness, continue to sow to the Spirit, so that we may reap life everlasting.

REFLECTING THE LIGHT

ones. Most of us at some time or other have seen mirrors with flaws, and were not very well pleased with the reflection. Perhaps you have gone into one of these so-called "fun houses" whose walls are covered with mirrors, some convex, some concave, etc., in which you appear as very small or very large; or the mirrors may be a combination of the two so that in the reflection one part of the body appears very small or very large in proportion to the other parts. Still other mirrors elongate the object, and the reflection appears long and thin; others seem to shorten and widen the figure. All of these distorted reflections are disturbing, and not at all pleasing to the one whose reflection is shown.

Now we, who have accepted Christ, are as mirrors, reflecting Christ if we have brought ourselves into focus with Him. To me, this is a staggering thought—how truly do I reflect the Christ? Does my life, which is my mirror for reflecting, show Christ as He really is, or is His reflection so distorted as to repel those who get a glimpse? If we are true followers of Christ we want to be like Him and to show others His great merey and loving kindness, that they may be drawn to Him also. We realize how imperfect we are, how many flaws we have, and how much must be added to our best efforts to approach the perfection of Christ.

This we should remember, too, that a mirror, however perfect, reflects only what is focused before it. Mirrors can, and do reflect evil as well as good, and with the same accuracy.

Let us keep ourselves turned toward the Light, and in focus with Christ through prayer and study of the Word. Paul exhorts Timothy to study to show himself "approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." Let us beware of trifles that can so easily come between us and Christ, causing us soon to have no light.

David says in Psalm 119: "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path" (v. 105). "The entrance of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple" (v. 130).

We learn of the Lord from His Word. When we accept Christ and are baptized into Him, then we have made a start to walk in the light. "For ye were once darkness, but are now light in the Lord: walk as children of the light (for the fruit of the light is in all goodness and righteousness and truth) proving what is well-pleasing unto the Lord; and have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather even reprove them" (Eph. 5:8-12, R. V.).

Let us keep our faces toward the light, so that we may see our way in Christ who is the Light. There is no variableness nor shadow of turning with Him, for He is constant and faithful. It is we who are fickle and erring. Help us, O Lord, to study Thy Word, and to commune with Thee daily that we may keep our feet in Thy paths, and reflect Thy image more perfectly.

LINCOLN'S GETTYSBURG ADDRESS

Address at the dedication of the Gettysburg Cemetery, November 19, 1863.

"Fourscore and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

"Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any other nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battlefield of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting place for those who here gave their lives that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

"But, in a larger sense, we cannot dedicate-we cannot consecrate—we cannot hallow—this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember, what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work that they have thus far so nobly carried on. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us, that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they here gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

Men are ever highly honored for giving their lives for the success of a nation. What few monuments have been built in honor of those more noble dead who have suffered and died on the battlefields of faith!

Jesus made the burden of His teaching the kingdom of God. Then He sent out the Twelve to teach it; afterward seventy were sent to the same task. Evidently He believed their understanding of the subject was sufficient to entrust them with the teaching of it, or He would not have sent them out. Their understanding was that the kingdom was to be restored to Israel, for, as the disciples went with Him out to the mount of ascension, they asked Him, "Wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" (Acts

1:6). If they were mistaken in their conception of the kingdom, then was His time to correct them. But He did not rebuke them. He simply told them that the time when this shall be done was not for them to know then.

When the impetuous Peter asked Christ what the Twelve were to have for having left all to follow Him, His reply was, "Verily I say unto you, That ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel" (Matt. 19:28).

Again, the twelve tribes in their tribal relationships are mentioned in Revelation 7.

In Romans 11:25, after a discourse on the relation of Israel to the Gentiles, we read the following, "For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits; that blindness in part is happened to Israel (for how long?), until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in." Then follows the statement, "And so all Israel shall be saved: as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob." Reading the balance of the chapter will confirm this idea.

What other nation has ever passed through the furnace of affliction as Israel has, and survived? Why have the Israelites so miraculously been saved, as they are at this time? God answers, "But I had pity for mine holy name, which the house of Israel had profaned among the heathen, whither they went. Therefore say unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God; I do not this for your sakes, O house of Israel, but for mine holy name's sake, which ye have profaned among the heathen, whither ye went" (Ezek. 36:21, 22).

God had made promise unto the fathers, and this promise He would not break.

We have called attention only to the principal texts. There are many others.

RIOT OF WORDS

I am not surprised that a condition like this irritates you. It irritates me, too. One finds it often among church people. But one finds it quite as often among students everywhere. When you were in school, did you always learn for yourself that what the teacher said was right? Perhaps you did; you were a Phi Beta Kappa. But most people are not Phi Beta Kappas; most people have the approximate intelligence of what a 14-year-old should have. They must be expected to take things for granted when they are taught, just as your fellow students took it for granted that matter can neither be created nor destroyed when they studied chemistry. Did you ever ask what happens to a copper bar when it is dropped into hydrosulphuric acid? It disappears; analysis cannot find a trace of copper; there is no extra weight in the liquid; the atomic content has not changed. Yet students say matter can neither be created nor destroyed, because their teachers tell them that. Just so, Bible classes take it for granted that the various items in their creeds are true.

This must be cut short. I am exceedingly busy with work at the office just now, since this is our rush season.

Sincerely, Phil.

August 21, 1938.

Dear Phil,

Pedantic, did I say? You're heavier than uranium, which is some degrees heavier than lead! Aren't you ever happy? Or are you personally as solemn as your letters have always sounded?

Pedantry discourages me. I always get discouraged when someone tries to teach me something—in this case, particularly. For, I still don't quite get the drift of your thoughts about religion.

It's true enough, as you say, that most people take things for granted, because they're told those things are true. But you Christians are supposed, as I understand it, to go into all the world and teach the gospel. I read that in Matthew, I think. Newspaper offices include Bibles in their libraries, and I looked in ours yesterday. How do you or the others expect to teach something you don't know about yourselves? Students in school aren't expecting to save the world from its vile horrors; they're frankly expecting to get jobs and make enough to live on. Christians have that same problem, of course; but they always talk about something Greater, something Eternal. But they never can tell you what the 'something' is or why they believe in it.

The church is driving away the brilliant minds. Back in the Middle Ages, the scholars kept the church alive. Today, the scholars are corroding the church as surely as oxygen corrodes iron. People who think demand facts, not fancies—and I pretend to think now and then! I said religious faith was chiefly a riot of words, and I stick to it. When you can correlate your beliefs, prove them with the Bible—I'll even go that far with you!—I'll admit there's something to churchgoing; until you can, well—I can acquire as much general morality from a Rotarian luncheon as I can from a Bible class, and have a lot more fun.

Keep your sentiment, and add a little foundation to it, or put a little foundation under it, or something. Bryan was a noble fundamentalist, but Darrow caused his death because Bryan grieved so much over his inability to answer Darrow's questions at the Tennessee "monkey trial." If Bryan had had the answers, Darrow's agnosticism, not Bryan's religion, would have been disgraced. Bryan was conscientious, to be sure; but being conscientious doesn't make for evidence for a jury—and the world is your judge when you're a Christian! The moral life helps, but I know atheists who are moral. Tell me why you believe what you believe, and I'll go along with you—so will some of the friends I know—but unless you can tell me the reasons for your ideas, I'll cling to what I think right now.

I'm busy, too. Three-alarm fire last night kept me up till four this morning.

Sleepily, Ash.

BEREAN DEPARTMENT

Gerald L. Cooper, Editor, Eden Valley, Minn.

Shipwrecked

Were you ever in a shipwreck? I never was, but judging from descriptions of such, it must be a terrible thing to be out in the middle of the ocean without any support of any kind, nothing but water all around. There is a very interesting story found in the Bible, regarding a storm at sea, and finally a shipwreck. It is found in Acts 27.

Paul, endowed with power from on high, predicted that the journey would be anything but pleasant, but the centurion in charge of the voyage determined to sail. True as was the prediction of Paul, the boat did encounter a storm, a very severe one. For days the tiny boat wrestled with the tempestuous sea, but Paul calmed their fears by telling them that no one would be lost. On the fourteenth day of the storm the men at last decided to cast anchor. In verse 29 of the chapter we find these words: "Then fearing lest we should have fallen upon rocks, they cast four anchors." Finally the boat was wrecked, and the party aboard was cast upon an island. Many more adventures awaited them, but we have covered the part which I wish to point out.

We ourselves are on a troubled sea. We also have been warned that we shall be shipwrecked unless we beware. You will remember that the sailors cast out four anchors when they feared trouble. We can do the same as they. When we are about to be shipwrecked by the sea of life, let us cast out the four anchors of Faith, Hope, Love, and Courage. The combination of these four will surely hold us up, and care for us until the "Captain of our Salvation" comes, and permanently rescues us from the troubled sea.

Have the Faith of Abraham! Lay hold on the precious Hope of the soon coming of Christ! Show the Love of Christ to your fellows!

Begin Now

• • J. R. Lecrone

The story is told of a young girl who had been to see an old lady whom she very much admired. On her way home she remarked to her older companion that if she could be such an old lady, so beautiful, serene, and lovable, she wouldn't mind growing old. Her companion made the following very wise reply, "If you want to be that kind of an old lady, you had better begin making her right now. She doesn't strike me as a piece of work that was done in a hurry."

You and I, as Christians, have taken Christ as our example because, as Peter points out, "Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps." Paul also admonishes us that "speaking the truth in love, we may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ." But it is well to remember that He is not "a piece of work that was done in a hurry." Ever since the beginning of the world He had been in God's plans, and even after His birth He did not become the Savior of sinners until He had been thoroughly trained for the position. "For it became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings."

We each have a picture in our own minds of the person that we would like to be when the Master shall come to claim those who are His own. We want to present to the Master a person who resembles Him in spirit, thought, and deed; one for whom we will not be called upon to make embarrassing explanations as to why his Christian character is so undeveloped. We do not want to have to explain to Christ that first business, then pleasure, then perhaps just plain negligence, caused us to put off our Christian training until our bad traits were thoroughly established, and there was not much time left in which to do anything about it. We have every reason to doubt that such explanations or excuses will be acceptable with Him.

If Jesus' parable of the ten virgins teaches anything, it teaches the dangers of procrastination—putting it off. The five foolish virgins were not admitted into the marriage supper, because they waited until the last minute to begin to make their preparations, and it was then too late. Therefore the door was closed, and they were not admitted. They waited too long to get the oil for their lamps.

It is true that people are often converted overnight, but it is not true that they become mature Christians in the same length of time. That is a job that takes a lifetime of diligent watchfulness and hardest striving. So let us not, dear young people, be deceived into waiting until tomorrow, or next week, or next year, to accept our Savior in baptism and start our course of training that we might "rule and reign" with Him in His kingdom. We shall reign with Him only if we suffer with Him. We may rest assured that He is not going to choose a lot of "Ben Puttin'-it-offs" to be co-rulers with Him.

If we are wise we will begin this minute, if indeed we have not already started months or years ago, to begin to create the person that we want to present to Jesus at His coming.

"How can we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?"

"Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee" (Acts 3:6).

The Hour of Prayer

We find that the ninth hour is one of the three hours known as the hour of prayer. Do you recall that Daniel's custom was to kneel in prayer three times every day (Dan. 6:19)? Did you remember that Daniel's enemies used that fact to get him thrown into the den of lions? Today, with work and school hours arranged as they are, everyone needs to plan carefully to find time for prayer. The hours of prayer in olden times were nine o'clock in the morning, at noon, and three o'clock in the afternoon.

It was at three o'clock in the afternoon that our story begins today. A man, lame from birth, was at his usual place at the gate of the temple, asking alms of those who came to pray.

When Peter and John came along, Peter said to the beggar, "Look on us." The lame man most likely expected money. How surprised he must have been when Peter said, "Silver and gold have I none." Was he unable to understand, that he sat there still? Peter continued, "But such as I have give I thee: In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk."

Or was it that Peter's faith was tested, too, for would it not take faith to stretch out his hand to help the lame man rise? But our Peter was filled with divine power. The miracle came to pass! The man was made whole!

Today our men of God do not go around healing the people on every hand. There is power in prayer, and our Bibles plainly tell us to pray for the sick; that the "prayer of a righteous man availeth much," and that "the prayer of faith shall save the sick." But the main work today is the transforming of men's hearts by faith in God and obedience to Jesus' commands. The ministers don't do the transforming or changing of our hearts, neither do our teachers or parents. The changes take place in our hearts by God's power and our faith in Christ. We must open our hearts, and let Him enter. The love of God makes us into living witnesses. Don't you want to live for Christ, even as did Peter?

Peter Talks to the Rulers

Peter's enemies "put him in hold," which I suppose means that they put him in a kind of jail for overnight. The next day the rulers and elders gathered to hear Peter tell by whose power and in what name he healed. Was Peter afraid? or was he able to meet this test, also? (Acts 4: 10-12.) Yes! He boldly declared, "There is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved."

- 3. Miracle—supernatural event.

The Quiet Hour

It has been quite some weeks since I mentioned much about our daily Bible study in our homes.

Do you study your lessons with some or all of your family?

If those of you who can will study with your mothers every day, I am sure the others will be able to find a period each day to study their Bibles, even though they study alone. Don't forget your regular daily lessons, for you want to know ever so much on Sunday, when you meet at church to study and praise and worship.

ECE Club

Are you a member? Don't forget, I'm waiting for you to write, telling me your age and birthday. Hurry now! Seven boys from Ohio enrolled in our Club this week! Isn't that grand! Where are the girls? You'll have to hurry!

Treasure Books

Have you a sister or friend who draws very well? If you get a fine picture to represent some one of our lessons about Peter, send it along to me. Will you draw the lame man with his crutches, sitting on the steps outside of the temple with Peter and John beside him, Peter with outstretched hand?

A CORRECTION

Since writing my former article in which an attempt is made to lead our people to believe that the Advent Christian people advocate the idea that the earth will be on fire a thousand years, I find I was mistaken as to their present belief on that point. For this reason, and having no desire to misrepresent any people in such matters, I seek to make this correction. The mistake was of the head and not of the heart.

A class in "Fundamentals of Christianity" met for the first time Tuesday night, Jan. 17. Meetings are to be held for a period of twelve weeks, culminating at Easter. The purpose of this class is twofold: first, to instruct those who are thinking of being baptized in the faith of the Church of God; second, to lead others who are already members of the church to a more complete understanding of the meaning and doctrine of our faith. Bro. G. E. Marsh, pastor of the church, is the teacher of this series of lessons. The men's class of this church met Saturday evening, Jan. 14, in the church annex for their monthly meeting. An oyster supper was prepared by the men, and enjoyed by all. After the supper a talk was given by Charles Corbin, a member of the Conservation League of this city, and a man deeply interested in conservation. Mr. Corbin used Deuteronomy 22:6, 7 to substantiate his views that God meant man to conserve all things that He gave Him. Motion pictures were also shown that depicted the work and duties of the Conservation Department.

THE SUMMER BIBLE TRAINING SCHOOL

Yes! It's coming, the Summer Bible Training School!

There has never been a time in the history of the Church of God when it stood more in need of trained workers—preachers, teachers, and writers—who are thoroughly acquainted with the great Biblical doctrines for which this denomination has contended for a century and a half, and for which it must continue to contend if it is to remain true to the name it bears—the Church of God.

If the doctrines for which the Church of God stands were of but minor importance, if they were not absolutely necessary to the salvation of men, or if other religious groups taught clearly and constantly these same truths, the situation would be quite different. But there is not another denomination in America, of which we have knowledge, that believes and teaches these things from the standpoint of their positive necessity as elements of saving faith. Consequently a great responsibility rests upon us to send out men and women under the banner of the Church of God, who are qualified to present with assurance these enleyed it truths. surance these splendid truths.

To prepare such preachers, teachers, and writers will be the purpose of the forthcoming

Training School.

The Illinois Evangelist

HARVEY KROGH, JR., EDITOR

"When the Church Builds Evangelism, Evangelism Will Build the Church."

Would You Like to Know?

Of course, we would all like to know many things. The most important right now is: "When will evangelism build the church?" We are told in the words of our theme that this will be done "When the Church Builds Evangelism."

Now we ask, "When will the church build evangelism?" Well, what does it mean to build evangelism? Evangelism is simply the preaching of the gospel. To build evangelism is to do everything in your power toward that preaching of the gospel. The church will build evangelism when it does everything in its power to preach the gospel. Then and only then will the church be strengthened and built up, because the only time the Lord provides strength is when we are using strength to do the work He gave us to do.

But the church is made up of individuals, and if the church is to preach the gospel, you must do it. Our question was: "When?" The answer depends on you.

What Have You Done for Christ?

You were sold in sin, but Jesus bought you with His own blood and set you free. He called you into His glorious light and gave you a hope that can brighten the darkest of gloom. He so influenced the world that you and I have a multitude of blessings that could never have been had He not come. You cannot think of a single blessing you enjoy that did not come either directly or indirectly from Christ's wonderful influence upon men.

These things should make us pause to consider if we have really done anything for our Savior.

What Can We Do?

The greatest thing that we can do for one who has such great power to bless others is to bring others to the position where they may receive those blessings. In order to receive the greatest benefit from Christ one must trust Him and love Him. We can tell others of Him. Are you afraid to talk with people about the Savior, and the coming kingdom? What if everyone had been afraid to tell you of the things you now hold so dear?

You can let the light of Jesus shine from your face all of the time if you will walk with Him all of the way. There is something that is literally noticeable about a Christian that is in full fellowship with Jesus. The reason we seldom notice this is because so few really fellowship with Him.

You can also serve by giving a portion of your life to others, that they may preach the gospel for you. You ask, "How can I give part of my life when I am kept busy working for a living?" Answer: When you are working you are turning that part of your life and time into money. God has given you life and by supporting His work in a financial way you are giving a part of your life back to Him.

The Month's Question

They say that an article that is criticized is at least read, but we have had no criticism good or bad about this page. We cannot scold anyone for not reading it, because one would have to read it to be rebuked, and he is just the one who does not deserve to be scolded. Here is the question: Do you like the page? Has it done anyone any good? Will you send us any suggestions and criticisms that you may have?

A Description of Christ

The following epistle is said to have been taken by Napoleon from the records of Rome when he deprived that city of so many valuable manuscripts. It was written by Publius Lentulus, Governor of Judea, at the time and on the spot where Jesus commenced His ministry, and addressed to Caesar, the Emperor, and to the Senate at Rome. It was the custom in those days for the governor to write home about any event that transpired while he held his office.

"Conscript Fathers: In these our days, appeared a man named Jesus Christ, who is yet living among us, and of the Gentiles is accepted as a prophet of great truth, but his own disciples call him the Son of God. He hath raised the dead and cured all manner of diseases. He is a man of stature somewhat tall and comely with a ruddy countenance, such as any beholder may both love and fear. His hair is the color of a filbert when fully ripe, plain to his ear, whence downward it is more of orient color, and waving on his shoulders; in the middle of his head is a seam of long hair after the manner of the Nazarines. His forehead is plain and delicate; the face without spot or wrinkle, beautiful with a comely red; his nose and mouth are exactly formed; his beard is the color of his hair and thick, not of any length, but forked. In reproving he is terrible; admonishing, courteous; in speaking, very modest and wise; in proportion of body, well shaped. None have seen him laugh, many have seen him weep. A man, for his surpassing beauty, excelling the children of men."-December issue of Progress.

Next Quarterly Conference

Watch for announcement of the next quarterly conference. It is to be held some time near the last of March, but the exact date and place will be announced later.

The Name of the Covenantor

By Paul M. Hatch

"The Lord is my shepherd" (Psalm 23:1).

WHAT could be said or written concerning the covenant name "Jehovah" would require much time to tell, for it is an almost inexhaustible subject. It is so intricately interwoven with every subject of Scripture that its patterns and tapestries, so to speak, are ever bringing out the name. The garments of the high priest, the fine twined and pictured linens of the tabernacle, the golden furniture and the exquisite curtains of the holy of holies, breathed out the name of "Jehovah," i.e., God of the Covenant. As beautiful as these things were, and as surely as the antitypical figure of Jesus Christ fits into the theme, we are not taking the liberty at the present time to pause and observe. Rather, we are wishing to go further into some of the qualities that are associated and used with the name "Jehovah."

These qualities of the name "Jehovah" are expressed in the mien of an abiding kindness, helpfulness, and protection. They consist of the name "Jehovah" combined with words expressing quality of, and characteristic of, God in His covenants. The Hebrew names of ten of these combinations are herewith listed, and references given to locate them to the reader. There are others, but these are sufficient for bringing out the qualities of the name.

Three of the names that are transliterated are given first; the remaining seven are translated into English in the Authorized Version. The three are:

Jehovah-jireh, i.e., Jehovah will see or provide. (Gen. 22:14.)

Jehovah-nissi, i.e., Jehovah is my banner. (Ex. 17:15.) Jehovah-shalom, i.e., Jehovah will send peace. (Judg. 6:24.)

In each of these occurrences of the transliterated name an altar had been built, which became a memorial of a memorable occurrence which occasioned the naming of the place in accordance to the circumstance. To Abraham, Jehovah had seen, and provided a sacrifice; to Moses, He had reared up a banner against Amalek from generation to generation; to Gideon, He had sent peace by the angel that Israel might be released from the affliction of the Midianites.

The seven translated names are:

Jehovah-ropheka, i.e., Jehovah "that healeth thee" (Ex. 15:26).

Jehovah-mekaddishkem, i.e., Jehovah "that doth sanctify you" (Ex. 31:13; Lev. 20:8; and other places).

Jehovah-zeba'oth, i.e., Jehovah "of hosts (military)" (1 Sam. 1:3, and frequently).

Jehovah-zidkenu, i.e., Jehovah "our righteousness" (Jer. 23:6; 33:16).

Jehovah-shammah, i.e., Jehovah "is there" (Ezek. 48:35). Jehovah-elyon, i.e., Jehovah "most high" (Psalm 7:17; 47:2; 97:9).

Jehovah-ro'i, i.e., Jehovah "is my shepherd" (Psalm 23:1).

To illustrate the beauty, kindness, and benevolence of these names we only have to turn to the 23rd Psalm. Therein we see a new beauty for eight of these qualitative names. The Psalm has for centuries been a favorite to the Jewish and Christian people for the expression of its sympathy, faith, courage, and peacefulness. Its simple expression, combined with its poetry, attracts the attention of even those in great distress and creates for them a quietude. In some way or another, even though the actual knowledge is missing, it is sensed that the Lord (Jehovah-shammah) "is there." Just as a lamb that gambols in the meadow with its mother, and is given confidence by seeing its shepherd near, so the very opening of the Psalm breathes out confidence to the reader, an assurance that the Lord is near.

"The Lord is my shepherd (Jehovah-ro'i); I shall not want (Jehovah-jireh will see and provide for me). He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: he leadeth me beside the still waters (Jehovah- (Please turn to page 10)

When Suicide Will Fail

Even the judgments of men are stern. Criminals hate courts. Occasionally culprits prefer death to the punishment of law that is none too strict.

On February 8, Clayton J. Morse, fifty-five years of age, and president of the Bankers Service Corporation and the Colorado Gold Mine, Inc., New York City, was found dead at his west side apartment. His trial on conspiracy charges had opened just the day before. Police reported that his wife found him hanging from a rope in the living room, and the case was listed, "Apparent suicide." He beat the law of men.

Revelation 6:15-17 shows that many of earth's mighty men will prefer death to the judgment of Jesus. We read, "They hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: for the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?" Shall these men beat the law of Christ?

Revelation 9:3-6 presents a very similar picture. It is there stated that "those men which have not the seal of God in their foreheads" shall not be killed, but that "they should be tormented five months." It is well to note that this torment does not last for endless ages, as some might suppose; but it is likewise well to note that God's Bible does teach a temporary torture for some wicked ones, and that from this severe judgment there will be no escape—not even by suicide. We read in verse 6, "In those days shall men seek death, and shall not find it; and shall desire to die, and death shall flee from them."

Law's Favor and Fear

There were law and order in Israel. God has never been the author of confusion, but by His laws has been the author of peace. (1 Cor. 14:33.) The power and enforcement of God's laws for Israel can be seen not only in the strict keeping of a day, but in the ceasing from labor every whole seventh year, and in keeping of the forty-ninth year plus the year of jubilee—and especially do we see the force of God's laws governing such rests when we consider the pronounced characteristic of Israel to work tooth and nail in order to get gain.

The death penalty put teeth in God's law to Israel. Punishment of lawbreakers is an integral part of all systems of law. In fact, the measure of law is in its enforcement. Nevertheless, Israel had peace when he obeyed.

"Be ye not as the horse, or as the mule, which have no understanding" (David in Psalm 32:9), for there must be "a whip for the horse, a bridle for the ass, and a rod for the fool's back" (Solomon in Prov. 26:3).

Paul said, "Rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil . . . do that which is good, and thou shalt have praise of the same" (Rom. 13:3).

Some, because they are criminals against Christ and His church, shall flee "from the face of him who sitteth on the throne." Others, because they "do that which is good," can sincerely pray, "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven" (Matt. 6:10). Those who obey Christ will have no fear when He comes; they will have no need to flee. Rather, they "love his appearing" (2 Tim. 4:8), and "will...go out to meet him" (Matt. 25:6).

"Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem: behold, thy king cometh unto thee: he is just, and having salvation" (Zech. 9:9). Likewise, Malachi joyfully announces "the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts" (Mal. 3:1). But that conspirators may know the Messiah will punish as well as bless, Malachi hurriedly adds in the very next verse, "But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth?"

Choose Life

Adam and Eve chose death. Weeds in the garden, tears of mothers, the unsolvable problem of many fathers to "sweat" enough to care for their families, disease, suffering, and death, are everyday proofs, preached in every nation under heaven, that Adam and Eve chose death. No skeptic has such solid evidence for his theory of the beginning as does the child of God who believes in the story of Genesis.

"I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing: therefore choose life, that both thou and thy seed may live" (Deut. 30:19). "Behold, I set before you the way of life, and the way of death" (Jer. 21:8).

Jesus said, "The Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them"; "to seek and to save that which was lost"; "that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." To reject life is to choose death. Choose life. There is no glory in suicide.

Meditations on the Gospel

By A. Anthon

THE GOSPEL to God during Adam's heyday would have been: "Adam and Eve love you, God, with all their mind, strength, and life. They are very obedient and appreciative children, ever mindful of serving thee."

But it was not thus. Adam and Eve did not honor their heavenly Father. They brought sadness to their Father's heart.

After Adam and Eve were driven from Eden, and began meeting the vicissitudes of the God-cursed earth, gospel to them would have been: "God has forgiven your trespasses, and will now let you back into Paradise." My! how much joy it would have given Adam and Eve if they could have had their sins forgiven when they began stepping on thorns, and mosquitoes began biting. This would indeed have been good news (gospel) to them.

When God promised Eve a Sced (Christ), that was gospel to Adam and Eve, for God promised that this Christ should destroy the serpent (Satan), and all his works. If the Devil's works were destroyed, the earth would again be Edenic, paradisaic, curse-free, death-free. Did this news give them joy? It was gospel!

Surely this news made Adam and Eve love God, made them contrite of heart when they realized what naughty, self-willed creatures they had been, when they would not obey God just that little bit—to leave the tree of knowledge alone. Surely they must have nestled into God's bosom, loving Him more, because He had not punished them as much as they deserved. Thus they came to love and appreciate God, and God loved them. It was mutual joy, God's ideal. Their contrition and appreciation made them the sweetest of children to God.

Contrition will not pollute a paradise, no matter how wicked the person may have been. It is impossible but that he without contrition will pollute everything wherein he is. This is why self-righteous persons cannot be permitted in Paradise. Christ came to save sinners only, only those that feel and confess their guilt.

That this contrition-producing knowledge is able to make wise unto salvation is gospel. That contrition will secure forgiveness of sins is gospel. To us it is gospel to know that if we repent (have a contrite heart) God will impute righteousness unto us.

When God preached "the gospel unto Abraham" (Gal. 3:8), saying, "In thy seed (Christ) shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed" (Acts 3:25), the meaning is that one of Abraham's descendants would be God's great leader of all people of the world. This was good news (gospel) to Abraham to be thus honored. This honor came because Abraham obeyed, and humbly believed all God told him. This Seed would be such a great, perfect, superhuman leader that all nations of the world will rally to Him

(Psalm 72:17), and He will lead all His followers to Paradise. Abraham rejoiced because He was one who would submit—be led into Eden. (See John 8:56.)

Did this gospel preached to Abraham make him love God? Surely! When Abraham understood that gospel, his sins were forgiven (for if they had not been he would have to die the second death which he deserved), and he knew that at the revelation of God he would rise to dwell in the kingdom of Israel restored. Did this make Abraham more humble, appreciative of God? Evidently.

Is to teach men contrition, and to love God whole-heartedly, all that God is trying to do? Yes. Just as soon as a person finds that he has wronged God and repents of it—comes to have a contrite heart, then realizes that God will yet forgive such an one—this makes the person truly contrite and he will love and appreciate God's fatherliness. All this is good news (gospel) to man, and to God also.

This is the "power" that is in the "gospel." (See Rom. 1:16.) It makes us realize our wickedness. When we understand that though we have sinned God is anxious to forgive, we are made to be contrite, and to love. Persons of this sort are the only ones God will allow into His "rest." (See Heb. 4:8, 9.)

All of the evils touching us are punishments for our sins, God attempting to cause us to notice that we are sinning. The vicissitudes of life are punishments (corrections) for sin. We realize that these punishments are not as severe as they might be. If these vicissitudes are not enough to correct us God will lay us to one side in a "long home." (See Eccl. 12:5.)

When Peter preached the first gospel sermon at Pentecost, he convinced the three thousand who were later saved that they had crucified God's only Son, and that this Son had gone among them "doing good," and he explained to them how God had sent Him to beg them to return to Paradise—that God wanted all persons to come and live at home, not in Satan's land (grave—second death). But Peter showed that instead of heeding Christ's admonition, they had crucified Him. What reprobates they were!

The cry of the three thousand was, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" (Acts 3:37). In substance they said, "It is a sure enough fact, we have murdered God's only Son. He was doing nothing among us except good, and bringing us word from Father that He wanted us to come back home and live with Him in Paradise. But we have murdered this beloved Son. Surely God will now slay us!"

But when Peter explained to them that not only God, but Christ also, was anxious to forgive them, did it "break them down"? Did it make them contrite? Did it make them love God? Did it make them realize how wonderfully fatherly God is? Could they (Please turn to page 11)

A Little of Vitamin "D"

By Harvey Krogh, Jr.

IT MAY not be so pleasant to take, but it is most necessary for proper growth, and is a great help in maintaining a good condition of the body structure. Good doctors see that people get the needful things.

Good ministers, in like manner, take heed to the instruction of 1 Peter 5:1-3: "The elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed: feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; neither as being lords over God heritage, but being ensamples to the flock."

The "flock" refers to God's people, and the food is the Word of God that causes growth and healthy activity in His service. Some of the service is that performed by the officers of the church, the first of which are the elders. The minister is an elder and the highest officer in the church, but we must remember his position is high because he is humble as his Master, and rules by the power of love and prayer.

Before we speak of the service of an elder we should consider his qualifications. When Paul told Titus to appoint elders in every city and to set things in order, he said this: "If any be blameless, the husband of one wife, having faithful children not accused of riot or unruly. For a bishop must be blameless, as the steward of God; not selfwilled, not soon angry, not given to wine, no striker, not given to filthy lucre; but a lover of hospitality, a lover of good men, sober, just, holy, temperate; holding fast the faithful word as he hath been taught, that he may be able by sound doctrine both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers." With these qualifications the duties of the elders shall be to have oversight of the church, looking to its upbuild, spiritually, and to the maintenance and furtherance of Christian living among the members, and looking to the proclamation of the gospel in the vicinity of the congregation. The elders should counsel often as to the spiritual welfare of the church and its members, and should endeavor by prayer and labor to strengthen one and all in Christian living.

Because the elders of the early church felt that they should give themselves continually to prayer, and to the ministry of the Word, they called out certain men with similar qualifications as their own, and called them deacons. Their duties were to take care of the temporal needs of the congregation. We might, therefore, say the duties of deacons are, to look to the needs of the sick and afflicted, in behalf of the church; to wait upon the congregation with the Communion emblems, and to have charge of the ushering and comfort of the congregation during the hours of service.

Deaconesses should cooperate with the deacons in looking to the needs of the sick and afflicted; to see that the emblems of Communion are properly prepared and made ready for Communion services and to assist, in ways proper, in the comfort of the congregation at services.

The qualifications of all other officers should be the same in principle to those of the above. A good study of this can be found in 1 Timothy 3:1-13.

The secretary should keep record of the doings of the congregation as such; make and maintain a complete membership roll (this isn't to tell who will be in the first resurrection, neither are you lost if your name isn't there) for convenience in contacting the congregation, etc. The secretary should also conduct the usual correspondence for the church.

The treasurer should devise, in conformity to the wishes of the church, ways and means for the financing of the activities of the church, care for and properly protect in behalf of the church such funds as may be on hand, and to disburse these funds on order of the church.

The Sunday school superintendent should properly promote a Sunday school upon the advice of the congregation or of the elders, and should be responsible to the elders and to the congregation.

The church trustees have power to deal with the church property as the church instructs them. They are to see that the property of the church is properly maintained and cared for, in conformity to the wishes of the congregation. The providing of a caretaker, that rooms may be ready for announced services, is also a duty of the trustees.

If there may be any doubt as to whether your church officers have exactly these stated duties your church constitution should tell you. You know a constitution is for no other purpose than to help a group of people work together, every one in his place, to further the cause of his Master.

Sunday school officers should have the same relation and duties to the Sunday school that the church officers have to the church.

If any officer of either Sunday school or church is to be absent when his duty should be performed, it is well if he appoint one to perform that duty in his absence.

This instruction would be incomplete if we did not quote a few words for the benefit of the congregation. "Likewise, ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder." (If there are not enough officers to go around, this does not mean that you are necessarily one of the younger ones in the faith.) "Yea, all of you be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility: for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble" (1 Peter 5:5).

May you who are officers fill your places to the glory of God, and may you who have no special office put yourselves wholly to the work, for every child of God has a position to fill, and a work to do for the Savior.

The Real Peace

By John Mercer

THE United States is often referred to as a peace-loving nation. But did it ever occur to you that every nation wants peace. Not only does every nation want peace, but every individual wants peace. Multitudes are deceived by those who offer peace but cannot possibly give it. Peace is sometimes promised, that position or honor might be gained. Worldly leaders thus promise peace, but none has as yet offered everlasting life, which, in the strictest sense, would be essential before real or lasting peace could be given.

What is peace?

Dividing peace into two categories, we find that there is man's chimerical promised peace, and God's genuine proven peace. This indicates that there is really only one kind of peace we can actually have. Man's peace is only promised—never reached. Thank the Lord for His real peace. The definition of the word "peace" is: "to be completely at ease, or rest, and to have security."

When a man is at peace he has no worries, and he is sufficient in everything needful to satisfy his desires. In short, a man satisfied is at peace. This is where the trouble comes in. To really satisfy the desires of everyone is impossible. God does not promise to satisfy everybody.

The dead are at peace. (Isa. 57:2; 2 Chron. 16:13, 14.) The dead do not desire anything. (Eccl. 9:10.) But peace in death means little; to live and have peace is everything.

When Christ establishes His kingdom everyone privileged to be there will enjoy peace—the resurrected dead and the living saints. However, before this kingdom is established those in Christ should live in peace. (Psalm 29:11; 2 Thess. 3:16.)

To find out why all who confess to be Christians do not enjoy peace, their desires must be considered. It would be to our disadvantage if all our desires were granted. Adam and Eve were at peace in the Garden until an outsider influenced Eve's desires. (Gen. 3:4-6.) Our desires are greatly influenced by our associates. We should be very careful with whom we associate. While Christ worked with all classes, His personal friends were those of godly lives.

What should we desire? Does God desire things? God desires to carry out His great plan of salvation. (Job 14:15.) Should we desire to carry out our own selfish plans? How thankful we should be that we often cannot. We must look to our great Example for guidance. What were His desires? They were the same as His Father's. (John 4:34.) If we focus our desires in the same direction as Christ did His, we will inevitably live in peace. Our desires are not now filled in reality, but by faith in His precious promises. (2 Peter 1:1-4.) What more can we now desire than His promises? They give us all things that pertain unto life and godliness. "Let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing" (James 1:4).

Until Christ sets up His kingdom there will not be peace among the nations. (Matt. 24:6, 7.) The righteous and the wicked cannot live together in peace. (Luke 12:51-53; Rom. 12:2.) But God says He will bless His people with peace. (Psalm 29:11.)

Hitler wants peace, yet wants to rule the world. His desires have been influenced by Satan, as were Eve's in the Garden. He wants to be as God. Hitler has put his name in the place of God's name in the German Bible. He is going at things just backwards to carry out his desire to maintain peace if he did rule the world. His terms of peace cannot be carried out, for he creates fear. Where there is fear there is no love (1 John 4:18). Where there is no love there is no peace. Where there is fear there is unrest, worry, and no peace. To portray a great contrast, let us contrast Hitler's procedure to rule the world with that of Christ's.

HITLER

Forces people to accept him.
Rules by fear.
Gave other people's lives to gain his own position.
Denies God.
Fails to keep promises.
Takes lives.
Is mortal.
Will disappear.
Drives people out.
Chose mammon.
Relies on man's protection.
Has no bride.

CHRIST

Forces no one to accept Him.
Rules by love.
Gave His own life to gain
His position.
Recognizes God.
Keeps all promises.
Gives life.
Is immortal.
Will appear.
"Come unto me."
Chose God.
Trusts God.
Has a bride.

Add to this list. The two leaders are as different as can be. What a joy to know that Christ is our leader.

Men spend their lives trying to perfect the governments of this world, but all in vain, because man in himself is incapable of such a task. What a joy to know that we do not have to depend on mortal man, in his weakness. Christ is not only capable of molding a perfect government, but is able to give us a life of peace so we can enjoy His reign forever. (1 Thess. 4:17.)

The Great Image

By A. R. Johnson

A S THESE are momentous days to Christians, a study of what the prophets have written should be of in terest. Let us begin with Daniel 2 and the subject of the Great Image. While this has an interpretation, let us look a little farther. Please note that Daniel told King Nebuchadnezzar that the God of heaven had made known to him what should be in the "latter days," which we understand to be from the present until the Savior's return. This is Daniel's first statement in regard to the image. Also, "the aspect thereof was terrible" (v. 31, R.V.). How terrible would a lump of gold be with a man's face on one side of it; no power in it, except its commercial value? This is also true of the silver breast and arms, the brazen belly and thighs, the iron legs, and will even apply to its feet of mixed iron and clay.

We find another statement here in regard to the king addressed, which was, "Wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field and the birds of the heavens hath he given into thy hand" (v. 38, R.V.). It is evident that both Americas had children of men dwelling on them at that time, and most assuredly there were birds. So what is the import of this statement? To give King Nebuchadnezzar a "build up"? No, God doesn't need to do anything like that. We feel that it was put there for our information, that when the great dictator comes up we, the church, will know what to expect. This is also in line with the fact that when the stone that was cut out without hands smote the image, it broke the clay, iron, brass, silver, and gold "in pieces together." Thus we find that the golden head was on the image in the "latter days," when the stone smote it on its feet.

The eighth chapter of Daniel explains it in like manner. Please note that in this chapter only Persia and Greece are mentioned up to verse 9. But, "Out of one of them came forth a little horn, which waxed exceeding great, toward the south, and toward the east, and toward the glorious land." This definitely leaves Rome out, and does not touch Roman territory. Palestine, the glorious land, is identified by reference to the "burnt-offering, and the place of his sanctuary" (v. 11, R.V.).

Verse 23 places this little horn as Nebuchadnezzar's antitype. At the "latter time of their kingdom, when the transgressors are come to the full, a king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences, shall stand up," and "be mighty." "Not by his own power" (v. 24), is a statement which is food for thought. It makes one think of Hitler's methods. He prospers, destroys the mighty ones, and the holy people. Who are "the holy people" referred to in verse 24? In Isaiah 63:18 (R.V.), we read concerning Israel, "Thy holy people possessed it but a little while: our adversaries have trodden down thy sanctuary." Israel is also called "The holy people" in Isaiah 62:12. As we continue our study Israel cannot be left out. Daniel 12:7 tells us that the main work of this king of fierce countenance is to break "in pieces the power of the holy people."

A question might be raised as to why a heathen king who soon passed away should be informed as to the history of the latter days—his successor being more ignorant than he in regard to God's plans. We believe it was because we who are living now need the information. Giving it to Nebuchadnezzar was God's method of putting it on record, and, as the Savior put it, "That ye might believe," and that our faith might be strengthened for the troublous days ahead.

Nebuchadnezzar had another dream, recorded in Daniel 4. However, he remembered his first dream, but had evidently already forgotten the God of heaven, and God's servant Daniel who was the very last of the wise men to be brought in. This time Nebuchadnezzar had seen a great tree "in the midst of the earth, . . . the height thereof reached unto heaven, and the sight thereof to the end of all the earth. The leaves thereof were fair, and the fruit thereof much, . . . the birds of the heavens dwelt in the branches thereof, and all flesh was fed from it" (vv. 10-12). When this was said the tree had reached its fullness, and this sentence was passed upon it, "Hew down the tree, and cut off its branches, shake off its leaves, and scatter its fruit" (v. 14). Its fruit has been scattered, and all the world has since been corrupted by it.

This dream Daniel explained to represent the Babylonian kingdom, showing its world-wide extent. However, the birds of heaven and the children of men were then roaming the western hemisphere, and even Japan, where Babylon was unheard of.

"Let the beasts get away from under it, and the fowls from its branches. Nevertheless leave the stump of its roots in the earth, even with a band of iron and brass" (vv. 14, 15). This was to continue until seven times had passed over Nebuchadnezzar.

In verse 30 the king claimed credit for building his great city. This also means something to us. Nebuchadnezzar's father, Nabopolasser, was an Assyrian general who had subdued Chaldea. As a reward, his king made him ruler or king of the territory, the richest spot then known on the earth. He prospered, and subdued his Assyrian overlords, and became the first ruler with world dominion since Adam fell.

We are not left entirely in the dark as to who Nabopolasser's antitype will be, as we know that he also will be an Assyrian by birth. (Isa. 10:5; 24:22; Micah 5:5, 6.)

According to Daniel 4:36 the king was restored to power after a complete cycle of time had passed over him and his kingdom, and absolute authority was regained. "Excellent greatness was added unto me." "Excellent greatness" will be added unto his antitype, in that he will truly reign wherever the birds fly, or the children of men dwell, even though it will not be for long. The old stump is still there, waiting to sprout again at its proper time. Then again the great image will stand under its golden head, to be smitten on its feet, and all its different metals ground to pieces together. This also identifies the fourth beast of Daniel 7, or rather, the little horn of it. This little horn is there identified as the one the Savior will destroy at His coming.

The Prophet Zechariah recorded a similar view, which reads in part, "(And, behold, there was lifted up a talent of lead); and this is a woman sitting in the midst of the ephah. And he said, This is Wickedness: and he cast her down into the midst of the ephah; and he cast the weight of lead upon the mouth thereof. Then lifted I up mine eyes, and saw, and, behold, there came forth two women, and the wind was in their wings; now they had wings like the wings of a stork; and they lifted up the ephah between earth and heaven. Then said I to the angel that talked with me, Whither do these bear the ephah? And he said unto me, To build her a house in the land of Shinar: and when it is prepared, she shall be set there in her own place' (Zech. 5:7-11, R.V.).

This explains that Wickedness will be established in the land of Shinar or Chaldea, the country of the Babylonians. Wickedness is to be headquartered there, and is mentioned also by John in Revelation 9:14, 15.

The two women who bear the ephah with its load of wickedness are a portrayal of the false churches of the (Please turn to page 10)

Seraphim and Cherubim

By Emma C. Railsback

ISAIAH 6:1-6 is the only place in all the Scriptures where we find a reference to and description of the Scraphim. "In the year that king Uzziah died I saw also the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple. Above it stood the scraphim: each one had six wings; with twain he covered his face, and with twain he covered his feet, and with twain he did fly. And one cried to another, and said, Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of his glory . . . Then flew one of the scraphim unto me, having a live coal in his hand, which he had taken . . . from off the altar."

In Ezekiel 1 and 10 we find a more detailed description of the cherubim. "Every one had four faces, and every one had four wings" (1:5), "they ran and returned as the appearance of a flash of lightning" (1:14) they had wheels and rings and were "full of eyes" (1:18; 10:12).

The first use of the word "cherubim" is found in Genesis 3:24, where it is said that God "placed at the east of the garden of Eden, Cherubim, and a flaming sword which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life." In Exodus we find the instructions given to Moses for making the cherubim on the mercy seat which covered the ark of the covenant in the tabernacle. Both the mercy seat and the cherubim were made from one piece of gold. (Ex. 37: 6-9.) The cherubim made for the temple built by Solomon are described in 1 Kings 6:23-30.

From the descriptions found in the above mentioned references, and those in Isaiah and Ezekiel, we gather that seraphim and cherubim are heavenly angels, God's ministering spirits, and that the scraphim are of a higher order—the highest perhaps—as they have six wings, denoting swiftness, and are seen standing above the throne of God.

The wings, rings, wheels, eyes, etc., are symbolic descriptions of their attributes. We could not expect to take the description of them as literal, any more than we could expect some day to see a literal beast with seven heads and ten horns rise out of the sea. (Rev. 13:1.) Neither do we take the cherubim and flaming sword as literal. As the tabernacle first, and later the temple, were the places where God met and communed with the Israelites through their mediator and high priest, it was appropriate to have these symbolic representatives of His ministering spirits in the holy of holies. Read Numbers 7:89 in connection with this thought. The mercy seat typified Christ, the cherubim the church, and both being beaten out of one piece of gold typified their being made perfect through suffering.

Looking now at Revelation 4 and 5 we see another group described in symbolic language. It was John the Revelator's view of the establishing of the political powers of Christ's kingdom. We notice in 4:6-8 the "four beasts" (living creatures, R.V.), the "six wings," "faces," "eyes," the ery, "Holy, holy, holy." The elders and the living creatures join in singing the new song, "Thou art worthy to take the book . . . and hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth" (5:9, 10).

Dr. Seiss, in his treatise on Revelation, declares that the book of Enoch states that there are "seven presence angels" who watch and stand before God. He gives the names of six: Uriel, Raphael, Michael, Raguel, Sarakiel, and Gabriel. In Revelation 8:2 John saw the seven angels who stand before God.

From the similarity of the symbolic descriptions of the immortalized saints, the elders, and the living creatures, we gather that they will have the same or similar attributes as the scraphim and cherubim, and no doubt will hold the relation to Christ as the heavenly orders do to Jehovah.

Will Your Anchor Hold?

By R. A. Curtis

THE falling away "from the faith," and "giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils" constitute an appalling sign of the ending of "this adulterous and sinful generation." "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils; speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their conscience seared with a hot iron; forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats, which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving of them which believe and know the truth." (Mark 8:38; 1 Tim. 4:1-3.)

"The serpent said unto the woman, Ye shall not surely die," which is a positive contradiction to the statement of the Lord God who "commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat: but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely dic." (Gen. 3:1-6; 2:16, 17.) From that line of cleavage, between truth and error in the Garden of Eden, to the present hour, the natural immortality of Adam's race has been the base upon which has been built all the gigantic errors that curse and perplex the world today; such as Catholicism, Mormonism, Swedenborgianism, Universalism, Reincarnationism, Confucianism, Mohammedanism, Eddyism, Spiritism, and Everlasting-miseryism for the finally impenitent "without regard to race, color, or previous condition of servitude," as some express it. Not until this last named fiendish slander against the Lord who "is mereiful and gracious, slow to anger, and plenteous in mercy" is dislodged from the minds of professed religionists, and supplanted with a deep, heartfelt conviction that "God is love," and "will abundantly pardon" repentant rebels who seek His forgiveness and help, can their fears be turned into love. (Psalm 103:8; 1 John 4:8; Psalm 55:6-8; 2 Chron. 30:8, 9.) I could fear such a tyrant, but I could not love him. (Psalm 139:17-22.) "Ye that love the Lord, hate evil"; hate it with a godly hatred. (Psalm 97:10; 101:3.)

"Perfect love easteth out fear." (1 John 4:16-19.)
"Fear thou not," oh doubting, "trembling" one, "for I am with thee, be not dismayed; for I am thy God: I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness." (Phil. 2:12, 13; Isa. 41:10.) What more could you ask of God, as a "Helper," than to be strengthened, upheld, and helped? "He knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are dust. As for man, his days are as grass; as a flower of the field, so he flourisheth. For the wind passeth over it, and it is gone; and the place thereof shall know it no more. But the mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him, and his righteousness unto children's children; to such as keep his covenant, and to those that remember his commandments to do them." (Psalm 103: 14-18.) Truly, "happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord his God." (Psalm 146:5; Jer. 17:7.)

"Perilous times" are to culminate in lawlessness as a world wide sign that we are "in the last days. Inspired utterances of Paul, in his second epistle to Timothy, reads as follows, "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away. For of this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts, ever learning, and never able to come to a knowledge of the truth' (2 Tim. 3:1-7). Do you think Paul was too pessimistic—using seven-

Sailing at night in a storm at sea it does no good to say the sea is calm. The ship of faith is being tossed by raging black waters of doubt and sin. In the east the day is breaking. Christian, will your anchor hold?

"I am waiting, ever waiting,
For the brighter, better day,
Just beyond the clouds and shadows,
That surround my lonely way;
For a day of light and gladness,
Such as earth has never known,
When in equity and justice,
Christ shall reign on David's throne.

"Go, then, earthly name and treasure,
Come, reproach and scorn and pain;
In Thy service pain is pleasure,
With Thy favor loss is gain.
I have called Thee Abba, Father;
I have set my heart on thee;
Storms may howl and clouds may gather;
All must work for good to me."

Our Responsibility to the Young of America

By G. M. Birkey

JESUS said, "The things of Casar render unto Casar, and the things of God unto God" (Rotherham's translation). The Bible teaches that all should be obedient unto rulers, and show respect for them. 1 Timothy 2:1, 2 would have us pray for those in authority. But in glancing over the front page of a daily paper for January 27, 1 was surprised to see the following news dispatch:

"New York, Jan. 27.—The Boys Athletic League announced today that 50,000 New York children between the ages of six and sixteen had voted Hitler the most hated man in the world today, closely followed by Mussolini. President Roosevelt was ranked the most loved, just above God.

"The two dictators received 88 per cent of the boys' votes and 98 per cent of those cast by the girls. In third place the boys placed the Devil, followed by Stalin and Franco.

"The boys gave President Roosevelt 39 per cent of their votes for the most beloved man. God got 22 per cent. George Washington and Abraham Lincoln received 15 per cent. The girls gave the President 47 per cent and God 24 per cent."

The sad thing about the whole idea is its disrespect for God, in comparing Him with man. Had these children been properly taught in the home and Sunday school, no such item would have found its way into the newspaper. We should teach our children to honor and respect righteous rulers, but not to worship them.

Evidently the first commandment has not been impressed upon these fifty thousand children and, according to statistics, our country from the Atlantic to the Pacific is filled with young people who lack proper training in God's Book of rules for right thinking and right living. As proof of this your newspaper is filled with stories about young people between fifteen and twenty-five years of age who have committed crimes.

In one of his radio broadcasts Warden Lawes of Sing Sing Prison stated that the environment of our youth is far from what it should be, or there would not be so many young criminals going to prison.

While all must admit that with evil rampant throughout the entire world, and with the majority of our magazines and newspapers filled with liquor and eigarette advertisements urging both young boys and girls to use them, and our countryside filled with roadhouses where the environment is very detrimental to good morals, we have a big problem to influence our young people to live for better moral and spiritual values. Yet we who are trying to be true to the teachings of Christ are the ones commissioned to proclaim the good news of the coming reign of Christ on earth, and by so doing give an opportunity for these young people to decide between life eternal or eternal destruction—to impress upon them the judgments that will follow the results of sin.

The surprising thing is that one meets so many professing Christians who insist that the world is getting morally and spiritually better. They resent any statement to the contrary, and even scoff if you quote scriptures which state that at the close of the church age conditions will be as they were just before the Flood. They seem to forget that by so reasoning they make the prophets of old, Christ, and the Apostle Paul as speaking untruth.

Possibly the teaching of evolution in the public schools and colleges has so changed young people's conception of God as to cause them to express the opinion as stated in the news dispatch quoted. It also seems to me that teaching that there is no Creator causes crime, in that a person is not responsible to a higher being. Thus, what can be done and not discovered by human authority is not wrong in the conscience of the one doing the wrong.

I can recall the impression that the reading of a chapter in the Bible and the repeating, in unison with others, of the Lord's Prayer each morning at school made upon me, and no doubt you who read this had similar experiences. To my mind it was a great mistake to discontinue this practice. Many homes had no Bible reading or prayer, and this afforded children from such unfortunate homes to have this wholesome influence at least five days each week during nine months of the year.

Let us do everything we can to encourage the youth of our land to not only read but study God's Word, and get the parents of children to see their responsibility. Impress them with this verse of Scripture, "Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter; Fear God and keep his commandments; for this is the whole duty of man."

THE SMOKING FLAX

"Bruised reed . . . smoking flax" (Isa. 42:3).—The reed (Hebrew ganch) was a tall species of cane with hollow stems. Scribner's Dictionary of the Bible notes: "A slight force is sufficient to crush them, and then the elasticity and strength are gone. Yet even such, by God's help, may be saved from fracture."

The Hebrew word translated "flax" is pishtah, "flax"—by implication, "wick" ("smoking flax" being a figure of speech denoting a poorly burning lamp wick made of flax fiber).

Note Moffatt's reading of the verse: "He shall not erush a broken reed, nor quench a wick that dimly burns." Discussing "not quench," the Oxford Companion Bible says: "Not to put it out, but trim it and make it burn brightly."

—Editorial from The Messiah's Advocate,

OUR FUTURE HOME

By C. P. Loomer

THERE is a song which was quite popular several years ago, the first verse of which was as follows:

"Above the blue ethereal skies
Where many glorious mansions rise,
Where all is peaceful, bright, and fair,
My home is there!"

The words express a very consoling sentiment, but not very good theology. Man's home and destiny are here upon earth. God created man upon the earth, and told him to replenish and subdue it, and have dominion over every living thing on the earth. Here would he have continued to live for all eternity, had he not yielded to the seductive words of Satan, and not have transgressed God's command, for there was no prohibition upon his partaking of the fruit of the tree of life.

This whole earth would have been a paradise, but it has been cursed for Adam's sin. Thorns and weeds grow up, and man must needs earn his living in "the sweat of (his) face." How Satan must have gloated over his success! Although he had interrupted God's designs in mankind, Satan could not defeat God's purpose to have the earth ultimately peopled by a race of immortals.

Adam was sorely depressed over the prospects of the future, so God, out of His great love for the being He had made "in his own image," to reconcile man to his fate, promised to send him a Savior—the Seed of the woman—who would redeem fallen man. This promise was cherished as a most precious heritage, and was handed down from generation to generation through all the long centuries until, in God's own good time, He sent His angel to the shepherds of Bethlehem with the announcement, "Unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord" (Luke 2:11).

Christ's mission was to fulfill the promise made in Eden: namely, the purchase of man's redemption by the sacrifice of His life for the sins of the world. Nevertheless, the redemption of man does not imply the transportation of an immortal being away from this earth to "a home beyond the ethereal skies." When John the Baptist saw Jesus coming to him, he said to those who thronged him, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."

Daniel, when he had explained the king's dream, said, "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed" (Dan. 2:44). This kingdom, as were the others, would be here on earth. This prophecy is made plainer in Daniel 7. Peter stated that there is to be "a new heaven (the visible) and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." And Jesus said, "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" Evidently He is coming back to earth to set up His kingdom here.

The new earth will be this same old world, but under new conditions; evil will be driven out. The physical conditions may also be changed somewhat. The ice from the polar regions may be illuminated by means of lenses to concentrate the sun's rays, and by electrical appliances on a large scale. It is feasible.

THE GREAT IMAGE

earth carrying old Babylon's doctrines all through the ages, since the time she ceased to be a political power.

The reestablishment of Babylon is also shown in Revelation 17. There the government is described as a beast (scarlet colored), having seven heads and ten horns. The woman which the beast carries is the false religious system, headed by the false prophet. (Rev. 19:20.) The place is even called by name, and adds, in substance, "Excellent Greatness," by calling it "BABYLON THE GREAT."

In Revelation 13 this beast is described the same, except that the false prophet and his work are described as a two-horned beast, which "spake as a dragon," but depended on the first beast for his power, a sort of pope-Mussolini arrangement.

Revelation 17:8 reads, "The beast that thou sawest was, and is not; and is about to come up out of the abyss, and to go into perdition."

These scriptures cannot be applied to any other power, except the one addressed. When this quotation was written Babylon, as a power, did not exist—its city even being completely obliterated in the years following this statement

This also indicates that the final Babylon will be of short duration. In order to fulfill the type, the antitype must also build his city. In this age when "time hasteth," that will not take long. When the site of the Garden of Eden is located we believe we shall find that old Babel is occupying this place. The scrpent's lie proceeded from there, and all the world has been tainted with it. A by-product of it is the theory of reincarnation, and all the other forms that it has taken.

The Apostle Paul tells us that the natural precedes the spiritual. Here we have the natural, in all its errors, preceding the spiritual or righteous reign of Christ and His saints.

First a counterfeit universal rule will prevail. But it will be shortly followed by the righteous rule of Christ.

THE NAME OF THE COVENANTOR

shalom leadeth me beside the waters of peace). He restoreth my soul (Jehovah-ropheka heals me); he leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake (Jehovah-zidkenu is my righteousness, directing my walk in righteous paths). Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me (Jehovah-shammah is there, fear not); thy rod and thy staff they comfort me. Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies (Jehovah-nissi is my banner lifted up in the presence of my enemies): thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over (Jehovah-mekad-dishkem doth sanctify me). Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever."

The 23rd Psalm is never directly referred to in the New Testament, but Jesus has taken on the name of "Good Shepherd," and quite well can we say that the Psalm refers to Him in His trying hour, and that He confidently approached it and went through it, for Jehovah was ever near, directing His steps, showering upon Him peace, health, guidance, leadership, sanctification. It would have been most appropriate for Jesus to have taken consolation in reciting this Psalm at the cross, though we do not have any record that He did. But we know from the fact that He was given victory over death in resurrection that He shall dwell forever in the house of the Lord.

The other two titles that were not in the Psalm are "Jehovah-elyon" and "Jehovah-zeba'oth." These have to do with Jehovah in His capacity of authority. "Jehovah-elyon," translated "the Lord most high" in frequent places, is really a combined title of the two names of God: "Jehovah" (covenantor), and "Elyon" (most high). The other, "Jehovah-zeba'oth," is a military name translated "Lord of hosts." "Jehovah" is not the only title that "Elyon" is combined with. It also combines with the title "El," generally translated into the English "GOD" (capital letters) in contrast to "God" the Elohim.

The first occurrence of "Elyon" being combined with "El" is in the account of the battle of the kings found in Genesis 14. After the battle, and after the spoil had been divided among the victors, we have the account of Melchizedek, king of Salem, who also was "the priest of the most high God," coming out and blessing Abraham. To Melchizedek, Abraham gave a tithe of all of his possession. The blessing of Melchizedek upon Abraham brought an invocation of "the most high God, the possessor of heaven and earth" (14:19). So then, the title "Most high" indicates the title of the possessor and owner of heaven and earth. When it is combined with the title "Jehovah" the inference is that God, in relation to His mortal creatures as giver of promises, is to be worshiped as the possessor of heaven and earth, and that He has all authority to assure His covenants connected with the heaven and earth.

The combined name of "Jehovah-elyon" is found in three places only, all of which are in the Psalms. They are found in Psalm 7:17; 47:2, and 97:9. These three Psalms are most praiseworthy of God as king of the earth, and the avenger of His own against the wicked. God the covenantor gives assurance of protection to His elect and promises retribution to His enemies. This theme holds as well as the authority of a householder over his house.

The title name "Jehovah-zeba'oth" is one of the most frequently used of all of Jehovah's qualitative names, and to give it its due notice it will be necessary to give space enough for another article.

MEDITATIONS ON THE GOSPEL

continue to despise God? Hardly! Would such ever get to feeling that God was oppressive? No! Such persons would not pollute a perfect kingdom, a heavenly "rest," a paradisc.

That their sin was forgiven was gospel to the three thousand on Pentecost.

Peter convinced them that they were sinners. After that they could be blessed, not before.

We notice that these three thousand did not rejoice that they had crucified Christ. Peter did not tell them to rejoice because they had crucified Christ, nor that God would now save, not only them, but all. Peter did not say, "If you had not crucified Christ God would save no one, but now are ye healed by His death."

No! No! Ten thousand times no! Peter did not say this. Rather, Peter convinced them of the dastardliness of their deed. This made these three thousand persons wail! (Others were there looking on sneering.) Immediately those three thousand persons were fit candidates for salvation and Eden.

Christ's death does not make God forgive us, does not appease God's wrath, does not make God anxious and willing to bring us into His home.

When Christ was crucified it proved to man what a "low down reprobate" man is! What dastardly deeds he will do! How sinful his sins are! shows man that he actually deserves death, and everlasting death at that!

Every person, beginning with Adam and Eve, is guilty of crucifying Christ. Every person has sinned under no more provocation than they who did crucify Christ. A person who cannot keep from sinning at any time during his whole life would have surely followed the mob that crucified Christ, if he had lived at that time. It is easier to keep from sinning at any other time in man's history. Therefore, the person who has sinned, though he did not actually help to crucify Christ, is guilty of crucifying Him. If Christ died for your sins, then your sin crucified Christ. If God let man crucify Jesus to show to man his wicked soul, then everyone who has sinned took part in the crucifixion of Christ. We note that Christ also agreed with God to let man crucify Him.

But God and Christ are yet willing to forgive men who will come to be persons who would not perpetrate such wickedness in Paradise. If we will not obey God now, we would not in Paradise. Therefore, God cannot let him who is not touched with God's forgiveness enter Paradise.

When we realize, like the three thousand saved ones on Pentecost, that we are guilty of Christ's crucifixion, and yet may be forgiven, this, indeed, is "gospel." This is how Christ's death heals us, how Christ's stripes heal us—the stripes He let us put on Him to show us that we were wicked enough to do it—to show us that we deserve eternal death.

May we all let Christ's stripes heal us.

"Be Strong and of a Good Courage"

Lorraine Brossard, Eden Valley, Minn.

Away back in olden times when the Israelites were freed from Egyptian bondage, they wandered for forty years in the wilderness, in search of the land that God had promised them. Moses, their leader, was a true servant of the Lord. However, he died before Israel entered this land of Canaan.

God then said to Joshua, "Moses my servant is dead; now therefore arise, go over this Jordan, thou, and all this people. . . . I will be with thee: I will not fail thee" (Josh. 1:2, 5).

God has reiterated many times that He will guide those who are faithful, and live according to His law. Joshua had followed the Lord when Moses sent him to spy out the Promised Land, and had returned with a good report. True, there were many tribes to be conquered, but God kept His promise to the Israelites. They easily overcame all obstacles, as long as they were obedient.

So, as God commanded His people then, He commands them now. "Only be thou strong and very courageous, that thou mayest observe to do according to all the law, . . . turn not from it to the right hand or to the left, that thou mayest prosper whithersoever thou goest" (Josh. 1:7).

As the Israelites had a great promise and a rich reward, so have we. Until Christ comes, to end all turmoil and strife, may we each be strong and of good courage. These virtues overrule fear and dismay.

Smile Into Your Mirror

* * Mrs. Richard LeCrone, Woodstock, Va.

There is a story told of a mother who kept her daughter smiling, although the mother died when the girl was very young. In part, the story follows:

Many years ago, in the days when a mirror was a great treasure to the woman who owned it, a husband, upon his return from a business trip, presented his wife with one of these precious gifts. It was her first experience with one, and when she looked into it for the first time she exclaimed, "what a beautiful picture! How sweetly she smiles!" The husband, delighted with his wife's reception of his gift, explained to her that it was a mirror, and that the lovely, smiling girl was herself. For the first few days after that the young wife gazed into the mirror many times. Then she decided to put it away, and twice a year she would take it out to look at herself and see if she was still the beautiful girl who had received the gift.

Some time later the wife fell ill, and knowing that it was a disease from which she could not recover, she one day called her young daughter to her bed, and handing her the mirror, instructed the girl to look into it twice each day. When the girl looked for the first time, she exclaimed, "Why Mother, it's you! How beautiful you are!" Then the mother, pleased with her daughter's words, told her to always smile when she looked into the mirror, and the image would smile back at her. But if she did not smile, the image would not smile. Soon after, the mother died. The daughter, though grief-stricken, took out the mirror twice each day, and smiled into it. Each time, the image smiled back, and the girl went about her duties much more light-hearted and happy, for that smile.

What do you see when you look into your mirror? Do you see only the features of your face, or whether your make-up is on evenly, or whether you need a shave, or whether your hair is combed? Or do you see a kindly smile, eyes that not only see, but which have the light of God in them, a face that is beautiful, though perhaps not beautiful according to the present-day standard of measurement for beauty, and which shines with that love for your fellow men which of itself is beautiful?

Some of the most beautiful people in the world are the most ungainly to look upon. You don't think about his looks at all. You remember all of his kindness and the good that he does. That is what being a Christian can do for you. It can change you so that when you look into your mirror you will see not beauty of features, but beauty of the soul, which long outlives any outward beauty which you may be fortunate enough to possess.

Think on these things when you gaze into your mirror, and start today to do a good deed. Then forget you did it. The person you did it for will not forget it, but let him be the one to pass the story on to others. And, above all, if that person should at some time do something which is not exactly what you like, don't say, ". . . and after all I've done for you!" For, after all, that would steam up your mirror, and you could see nothing in it as long as that thought remained.

Wouldn't it be a wonderful world to live in if all of us were beautiful according to God's standard of judgment? Let's help to make it that way by remembering that:

"There's a destiny that makes us brothers;
None goes his way alone.
All that we send into the lives of others,
Comes back, into our own."

Dear Readers,

My! We're glad to hear from you; Send your birth date when you write to join our Everyday Christian Expression Club. There are still so many states and churches that have no members in our club! Who will be the first from your locality to join? Ask your minister and Sunday school teacher about joining. One teacher in Ohio sent the names of her whole class! Five more boys from Ohio joined this week.

We have a most important study for this week. So far we have had seven wonderful lessons about Peter. Today's lesson is about

Public Enemy Number One

In olden times the Prophet Amos went to the city of Samaria, and talked to the people against selfish and heartless living. What other things did he tell them?

Peter, in the first book of Peter, tells Christians how to live. I expect you, too, use the Truth Seekers' Quarterly published by our National Bible Institution at Oregon, Ill., so you have all those splendid helps on today's lesson.

What would Amos, or any of the prophets, tell us today if he were to look at our own free nation? We know what happened to other countries and nations when they became users of alcoholic beverages.

The old saloons were for men only. I remember when I was a child that men, too filled with liquor to walk, sat or lay on the streets around our home-town business places. They had spent all their money, no doubt, and their children and wives were often at home, cold, hungry, and sad.

Today we have a different picture, even a sadder one. A neighbor I had a few years ago gives us an example. The mother was most concerned when her daughter first went to a newly opened drinking place to spend the evening. Now, not only the daughter, but the father and mother as well, spend some of their evenings there!

Boys and girls, our nation is made up of people; and when those people no longer have homes with Christ enthroned, then our nation is no longer Christian. Do you think beverage alcohol could be an idol? Surely it causes many to bow before it, and to do other than their own desire when they have drunk of its poisonous cup. Can you recall a Bible verse which tells us about the path of the wicked? "Avoid it, pass not by it, turn from it, and pass away" (Prov. 4:15). Do you think that a Christian should drink "a little"? The verse above certainly does not teach us any such thing, does it?

Since liquors have been sold as a beverage the toll of death on the highways has increased greatly. Can you name any other evil results? Drink harms a person's judgment so that one who drinks cannot be depended upon. It dims his vision so that he cannot see well enough to avoid accidents. It uses day by day the strength the body stores up otherwise, to have to use in case of sickness or other emergencies.

To you, Christian boys and girls, I say, "Keep your life bright, clean, and pure—for Christ, for you are the light of the world."

AMONG THE CHURCHES

A PLACE FOR EVANGELISM

The Restitution Herald which I so gladly receive each week is read by several different persons, and enjoyed by all. We have been studying, and several are desiring to hear the truth preached here that they might be baptized into the all-saving name of Christ Jesus our Lord. They know the scriptures which relate to the Lord's second coming, and they much desire to acknowledge their belief in the gospel of His kingdom.

LOUISIANA CHURCH NOTES

The special meetings at the Happy Woods Church came to a close Sunday night, Feb. 5. Fine interest and attendence were manifested each night, and Bro. Siple presented messages dealing primarily with world events in rela-tion to Bible prophecy. While there were no additions through baptism, we feel that a number of persons were led to think seriously on this subject. We hope they will, in course of time, come to realize the necessity and importance of obedience to the gospel. The membership of the church received spiritual uplift and inspiration from these services, and all look forward to greater work in the future.

The writer accompanied Bro. and Sr. Siple to Citronelle, Ala., and enjoyed a visit with Sr. Siple's parents, Bro. and Sr. J. S. Lyon. It was a pleasure to meet Bro. and Sr. Lyon, and to be entertained in their home.

The regular services at Blood River and Happy Woods have been resumed, and we trust the future will find us all laboring faithfully in Christ's service.

Harry Gockler, Pastor.

APPRECIATION - ENCOURAGEMENT

For several years the writer has had the privilege of enjoying the thoughts contributed to The Herald by its many writers, and takes this method of saying, Thank you. This we say not to any special one, but to each one of

While an article you write one time may not seem so good to me, it may be just the one to encourage some other readers, and what you write another time may be just the one to admonish or encourage me.

So I hope you may each continue to write, and if possible, even better thoughts that will help us to live according to the ideals in the Good Book, as taught by Jesus our Savior, the Son of God.

We may sometimes have what we feel to be sorrowful or bitter experiences, but it is my sincere hope that all such experiences may lead us to a better understanding of the scrip-ture, "All things work together for good to them that love God" (Rom. 8:28).

May your experiences through life lead you to say, as did the Psalmist of olden time, "Bless the Lord, O my soul: and all that is within me, bless his holy name. Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits" (Psalm 103:1, 2).

PENNELLWOOD CHURCH OF GOD

Grand Rapids, Mich.

Fire visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Hills a few weeks ago, in their absence, destroying everything. The home and contents were not insured. The church and friends have done much in replacing clothing, furniture. and linens, but there are always treasured possessions which can never be replaced.

Searlet fever has been trying to occupy prominent place this year. The Arthur Hale family were released Sunday from a several weeks' quarantine, Eleanor having had quite a severe case.

Betty Jane Cole came down with searlet fever at the home of A. G. Townsend, where she was staying during the absence of Mrs. Cole, who was called to Amasa, Mich., by the death of her mother, Mrs. Bergquist. Upon the return of Mrs. Cole, Betty was removed to her own home where quarantine still holds rule. The Townsend family were isolated for two weeks for safety.

Mrs. Leola Clark is at the home of her H. E. Shepherd daughter, Mrs. Slocum, where she is recuperating from a recent illness.

With the death of Mrs. George Holly, Jan 25, Pennellwood lost a loyal friend. The manner in which she testified for the Savior with her faith and patient endurance during the last trying weeks was an inspiration to all. She will be greatly missed at our Sunday school and church services.

Mr. Ralph Bloore underwent a minor op-eration at the Soldiers' Home Hospital. He is getting along well, and expects to be home in another week.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Simpson are enjoying the sunshine and balmy breezes of Florida again this winter.

The Young People's League is sponsoring a project to supply the church with new song books.

Bro. F. L. Austin will work with Bro. J. W. McLain in a series of meetings at the Burr Oak, Ind., Church of God, from February 13 to March 5. Services will be held nightly at 7:30. May the Lord bless, and may His people cooperate to the full in this gospel effort.

There recently appeared on the front page of section two of the St. Louis Globe-Demoerat a five-generation picture of the Townsend family. Those shown were: the baby Kathryn with her mother, Mrs. Milburn Schoene of Golden, Colo., Mrs. John E. Miller of St. Jacob, Ill., Mrs. C. J. THE CALIFORNIA QUARTERLY CONFERENCE

The California Conference is over. To us who attended it seemed a veritable gift of God that we should have one warm, sunny day in the midst of so many stormy ones. The church was crowded at every service, many coming from distant places. Among these were the Allenders from Yucaipa, Georgia and Wayne Thompson from Tulare, Alma Brandt from San Bernardino, and Bro. and Sr. Hatch from Santa Ana.

It was with a spirit of thanksgiving that services opened with "O, Worship the King." In the prayer which followed, Bro. Norman Macleod thanked God for the fact that we may worship with complete freedom—an undreamed of privilege in many countries.

The church at Pomona is fortunate indeed to have so many young people. A chorus of girls of high school age sang "Holy Spirit, With Light Divine" and "Savior, Hear Us When We Pray." Then our conference president, Sr. Jessie Kauffman, opened the service with words from Psalm 126: "The Lord hath done great things for us; whereof we are glad!" She emphasized that we should gather ourselves together "the more as we see the day approaching." This same thirst for the Living Waters was the theme of Sr. Charlotte Rahn's lovely solo, the 42nd Psalm set to music: "Like as a hart desireth the water brooks, so longeth my soul after thee, O God!"

Bro. Lichty of Pomona gave as the sermon of the morning, "The King's Signposts." His talk revolved around the fact that, although God gave man dominion over all the earth to keep it for Him, that the nations in general have misused this God-given power, employing it only in a selfish struggle for wealth. "What will the end of these things be?" We, through the open book of the Word of God, can see the hand of God in all things, the signposts placed on the King's highway for us who look for them. So we, who are the elect of the church, can separate ourselves to our own narrow path that leads unto salvation. Our Lord has bestowed this honor upon us, that we might point out these signposts to others.

Bro. Will Reid led us in Communion, reading from Luke the origin of this service.

Church adjourned while we all had a pienic dinner in Ganesha Park. The tables were set in the warm sunlight, and the delicious food tasted twice as good because of friendships renewed.

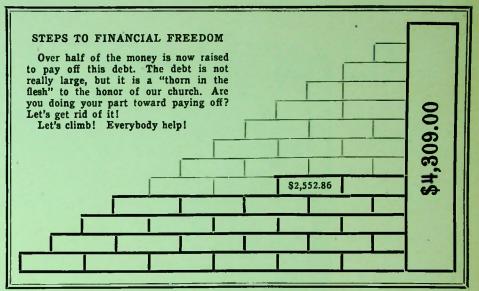

After a short business meeting, during which we discussed sending delegates to the Bible Training School next summer, we all joined in song service. Then came our question box, questions being answered by Bro. Adamson, Bro. Norman Maeleod, Bro. Will Reid, Sr. Emma Railsback, and Bro. Lichty. While they pondered answers to our questions, we listened to Bro. Duncan Maeleod and Sr. Charlotte Rahn sing "List to the Voice of the Savior!" Bro. Duncan Maeleod closed this service with the beautiful song, "The Lord's Prayer."

Sr. Railsback gave a short talk on "The Gospel in the 72nd Psalm." This Psalm, consisting of only twenty verses, presents a perfect picture of the setting up of Christ's kingdom on earth.

Bro. Norman Macleod gave us his views of symbolic prophecy, using as his texts Zechariah 14 and Isaiah 40.

We who came from a distance were entertained for supper with true hospitality in the homes of the various Pomona members.

The evening services opened with Bro. Duncan Macleod singing Psalm 91: "He That Dwelleth in the Secret Place." A chorus consisting of Bro. and Sr. Adamson, Sr. Blanchard, Bro. and Sr. Lichty, and Bro. Macleod sang "Pray for the Peace of Jerusalem." Sr. Anna Adamson, who has been a resident of Jerusalem for the last twelve years, gave an illustrated lecture on the Holy Land, emphasizing modern developments that fulfill prophecies.

As conference ended we all felt thankful that God had showed us His signposts of the King's highway.

MRS. DORA HOLLY

Mrs. Dora Holly was born near Moline, Mich., to Mr. and Mrs. Charles Watts, in 1872. She was united in marriage on July 30, 1891, to George Holly. To this union were born two children, Henry Holly and Mrs. Rhoda Hanson, both of Caledonia, Mich.

Besides her husband, son, and daughter, Mrs. Holly is survived by two granddaughters, one great-granddaughter, and a brother, Maurice Watts of Grand Rapids.

Mrs. Holly accepted Christ as her propitiation at an early age, and through an opening cut in several feet of ice was baptized into His all-saving name. She affiliated with the Church of God and, with the faith of Abraham, spent the remainder of life in active service, proclaiming by word and action the gospel story.

To all of us who have attended conferences

To all of us who have attended conferences at Dutton, the hospitality of the Holly home will always be a pleasant memory.

After many months of ill health, she fell asleep at her farm home near Dutton, on January 25, hoping for an early return of the Savior that she might not have to remain idle for a long period of time.

As she closed her Bible for the last time, she placed a bookmark where she had been reading, 1 Corinthians 15. Bro. Abbott used this chapter as his text at the funeral service held at the Dutton church, Jan. 28.

"Home, Sweet Home"

Provided by the love and sympathy of the entire brotherhood of the Church of God, Golden Rule Home assures to the members of its Family the comfort, security, and solicitous care which the word "home" always suggests.

Here the anxieties of earlier and more active life are laid aside forever. No threat of eviction for non-payment of rent or taxes or other indebtedness troubles the hearts of the residents of Golden Rule Home!

No doctor or hospital bills, no grocery, coal, or light bills to be met the first of the month, bring fear to the minds of the Golden Rule Home Family!

All such obligations and burdens are taken from the shoulders of these older ones immediately upon their entrance into the Home and are carried thereafter by the Golden Rule Home itself, which is amply able to bear the load on their behalf.

A hearty Christian welcome awaits all who seek the protection and lifelong support the Home provides.

Conditions of entrance into Golden Rule Home are as liberal as absolute security permits. Write for full particulars concerning the Home and its advantages. Or, better still, come and visit the Home itself and let the Family tell their own story of its advantages and comforts.

Address: Golden Rule Home, Mrs. Idona Romine, Matron, Oregon, Illinois.

George Washington

Cherry tree honesty was once the sane choice of American electors. Out of chaos of war, in spite of state jeal-ousies and acute prejudices of statesmen, still bewildered with intricate colonial problems, the United States of America was blessed of God in having for her first president a brave, intensely sober, and honest Englishman.

George Washington fought for what he believed to be right, and what his posterity still believes to have been right. When the British once came up the Potomac to Mt. Vernon they spared to burn his home, paying homage to the man they loved but thought was in the wrong.

In Valley Forge, where snow was tracked with blood, George Washington unceremoniously pleaded his cause with God and men. Allowing somewhat for the aid of France, historians are agreed that the iron character of Washington won the war.

Thus, too, before this new nation knew that it would need a president, George Washington had honestly won the election, eclipsing any party conventions or politics that may have blotched the pages of American history. Had any other been inaugurated on April 30, 1789, the Father of His Country would still have been George Washington.

Eight years of honest labor, 1789-1797, put new meaning into the colors of red, of white, and of blue. As though the hatchet had but pruned the cherry tree, George Washington saw it "bring forth boughs like a plant," and it is now a fond hope of two great nations that "the tender branch thereof will not cease."

If the inspired Paul who once "appealed unto Caesar" were living now, might not he give thanks on February 22?

"His Sepulchre Is With Us"

In his sixty-eighth year Washington said, "I am going, but I have no fears."

All in joy, one may walk where he surveyed, visit the rooms of his Mt. Vernon mansion, drink to the full of the scene across the Potomac, meditate in his gardens, be lifted to the top of his tower—five hundred fifty-five feet high. But at his tomb one stands in sad silence. There is little need for the sign of "Quiet." Death had his way.

"How sleep the brave who sink to rest With all their country's honors blest."

"Put Not Your Trust in Princes"

Flesh fails. Of any king it is truly written, "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish" (Psalm 146:4). But that man may not put his trust in man that fails, David quickly adds, "Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord his God: which made heaven, and earth, the sea, and all that therein is: which keepeth truth for ever."

The children of Israel were proud of their father, David. But, like Washington, David served his day, and died. On Pentecost Peter pleaded with Israel to turn from the dead to the living, from David to Jesus Christ. "Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day." In such language Peter was really saying that he could prove the death of David by taking those who trusted in him to the very place of burial; and to allow no chance of being misunderstood, he added, "David is not ascended into the heavens" (Acts 2:34).

Had David ascended into heaven he would have usurped the place of Christ, but David not only has not done that, but he was the very one to prophesy of Christ's right to that exalted position. "He (David) saith himself, The Lord (God) said unto my Lord (Christ), Sit thou on my right hand" (v. 34).

There can be no help from one who is dead; neither from David, nor Washington, or any other whose "sepulchre is with us unto this day." With but slight apologies to modern politicians and prophets, we quote and confess, "A living dog is better than a dead lion" (Eccl. 9:4).

The Prince Who "Ever Liveth"

Jesus said, "I am alive for evermore." Gabriel said, "The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David:... and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Paul said, "This man... continueth ever, ... to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing that he ever liveth." There is a "Prince of Peace."

The Man From Ur

By J. E. Adamson

THE Euphrates River, like our own Missouri and Mississippi Rivers, carries thousands of tons of silt down from the fertile mountain areas each year, and has been doing so for centuries upon centuries, until the estuary has been built into a vast flat plain of rich alluvial soil. Powerful nations have risen, prospered, built cities along its banks, and have passed into forgetfulness, but the river flows on.

Well down toward the mouth of the river once flourished the City of Ur. The home of kings of great power, it was the pride of the land of the Chaldees. The principal industry of Ur, and its surrounding country, centered in the cattle business. In this fact can probably be found the reason for the adoption of the beef animal as the central figure of the idolatrous worship common to the people of this great city. Then Ur suffered from flood troubles, and from international strife. It lost its prestige, became decadent, and in the end the protecting levees broke down, allowing the mud and silt to overflow it.

For many centuries many people believed that reference to Ur of the Chaldees was only tradition, and not based on fact. But a few years ago a party of explorers dug down a little deeper than any had dug before, and they came on evidence of a former city, found unmistakable evidence that Ur of the Chaldees was not a myth. Still further excavation uncovered palaces of great magnificence.

In or near this city, about four thousand years ago, was born the hero of our story this month-Abraham. Of his early life we do not have much in detail, but enough to show that he was a man of outstanding character and possessed of sublime faith. Ur was a city given over to idolatry, and Abraham was, no doubt, raised in close contact with its vile practices, but even at an early age of young manhood such became abhorrent to him. His spirit hearkened to the voice that spoke often to him, bending his will to see and obey the living God. He readily obeyed when the Lord said, "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee: and I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing: and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed" (Gen. 12:1-3).

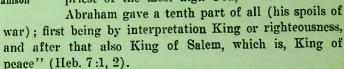

With the exception of his close relatives, Abraham left all that was dear to him, taking along only movable goods, and he went out not knowing his destination. Probably by nature the young man was possessed of the cardinal virtues of Christian character—faith, hope, and charity. At every turn we find his life guided by one or all of these three gifts.

In his exodus, the fact that he went in response to the call, not questioning, not having regret for the things he was leaving behind (and remember that "he went out, not knowing whither he went"), was such a display of faith that it becomes a serious thing to say that we have the Abrahamic Faith.

Abraham's long journey of about eight hundred miles, and in that it took him forty years to reach its end, was a display of hope.

But, as our Apostle Paul said of these gifts, "the greatest of these is charity." Abraham did not forsake his father, but took him along as far as Charan, and there stayed until the father died. Then Abraham went down to get the vision that had been promised him. In such consideration for his father he showed the love and good will and charity without which all else is but "sounding brass." Forty years passed. Then Abraham crossed over the mountains, and went down the great caravan road through Damascus into the Promised land; down past the site of Jericho, and the ancient city of Salem where he later paid homage to "Melchisedec, king of Salem, priest of the most high God," "to whom also Abraham gave a tenth part of all (his spoils of

Abraham was then in the locality where he would soon be given "exceeding great and precious promises," the central one being what is still the central figure of the gospel of Christ, "In thee shall all families of the earth be blessed" (Gen. 12:3). Paul says this was the gospel preached to Abraham. (Gal. 3:8.)

Because of famine (Gen. 12:10) Abraham first went on into Egypt. On the return, he and his nephew Lot settled in the region of Bethel, where he had pitched his tent when he first arrived. There he was soon to give an exhibition of the character of a man chosen of God. "Abram was very rich in cattle, in silver, and in gold." One of the first things he did was to build an altar for the worship of his God. Then, among all of the good things, came in the evil. There was strife about pasture lands among the herdsmen of Abraham and Lot. Abraham said, "Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee . . . if thou wilt take the left hand, then I will go to the right" (Gen. 13: 8, 9). Such is the ever-present Christian doctrine that distills as the dew." "Charity suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her (Please turn to page 10) own, is not easily provoked."

THE REVELATION

Historical or Prophetic?

By Grover Gordon

IF ALL prophecy has been fulfilled, and there is no future fulfillment, then the words of Peter concerning the "sure word of prophecy" being a light which shineth in a dark place "until the day dawn" and "the day star arise," is void of meaning.

"THE REVELATION OF JESUS CHRIST" (Rev. 1:1)

"Revelation" (1 Peter 1:13), "appearing" (1 Peter 1:7), and "revelation" (Rev. 1:1) are the same Greek word apokalupsis from which we get "apocalypse," meaning "to uncover, or to unveil." "The revelation of Jesus Christ' which God gave to Him to show unto "his servants," which He also signified by His servant John was simply a "program" which would accompany "the unveiling of God's Son," just as when men "unveil" a monument there are certain ceremonics or a program before it is uncovered, or made visible. Notice, too, that it is not given to those who were not "his servants." Neither was it for those who might be living and able to see a historical fulfillment, but to those who "readeth," "hear," and "keep"; "for the time is at hand." Similarly, Jesus said, "When ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors" (Matt. 24:33).

If this view is correct, and if we can establish a starting point, the program should proceed as scheduled. We should be able to recognize some of the things described in the Book that resemble conditions which are taking place in the world today, for we believe that Jesus is soon to be revealed (apokalupsis) from heaven. (See 2 Thess. 1:7.)

"THE SEVEN SEALS" (Rev. 6)

For a starting point, let us apply "noise of thunder" to the beginning of the World War. If that is correct, then the other things must come in rapid succession, and in the order as given. The World War came as a thunderbolt to the nations who had started to think world peace was about established. But the Bible warns, "When they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them" (1 Thess. 5:3).

The White Horse (v. 2).—I find that the Germany Imperial Army was called "The White Army." Surely that army "went forth conquering" and, from all indications, "to conquer." (Notice, colors agree.)

The Red Horse (v. 4).—Communism (Reds) came as the next menace to peace, as in verse 4 "to take peace from the earth." The statement "that they should kill one another" denotes revolution, which has been Communism's policy, desiring even to promote a "world revolution." "A great sword," i.e., Communism, has spread to all nations. (Colors again agree.)

The Black Horse (v. 5).-Mussolini and his "Black Shirts" came next. Hitler and his Nazis have joined with their "Black Trousers." We are told that Fascism and Nazism are the only weapons by which Communism can successfully be combatted. So, we are now witnessing a struggle between Communism and Fascism which can easily develop into a world dictatorship, or what is called "Antichrist," the "man of sin," "son of perdition," "the beast." (1 Thess. 2; Rev. 13.) "A measure of wheat for a penny," etc., denotes dictatorship, as does also the expression, "cannot buy or sell." (Rev. 13:17.) Notice (13:15) that they shall be killed who do not worship "the image." (cf., Rev. 6:11.) (Colors agree.)

Pale Horse (v. 8).—"Death and hell" (grave) under this seal represent pestilence, famine, etc., which Jesus said would come previous to His coming. (Matt. 24:7.)

Fifth Seal (vv. 9-11).-"Souls" (Greek psuche, used of man as an individual, just as we speak of a ship going down with every soul aboard, or of so many lives being lost in a railway accident, C.B.) "Altar" represents the earth upon which they were sacrificed. (Notice Exodus 20:24-26.) "Under the altar" would then signify buried people, i.e., those buried beneath the earth altar. "Crying out" means here, "demanding justice," as God said to Cain, "Thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground" (Gen. 4:10). Notice also Leviticus 17:11, "the life" (Heb. nephesh) "is in the blood." The words "soul" and "souls" in the same verse are likewise the Hebrew word nephesh; also in verse 14. "White robes" represent the righteousness of saints. (Rev. 19:8; Psalm 132:9; Isa. 61:10.) So there is a nice harmony in these various sayings: "He hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness"; "Rest yet for a little season'' (in the grave as in Job 17:13-16; 3:17-19); "When our rest together is in the dust"; and "Until their fellowservants also and their brethren that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled."

Sixth Seal (vv. 12-17).—The things here spoken of are the same as in other scriptures which describe the coming of Christ. (Luke 21:25-28; Matt. 24:29-31; Mark 13:24-27.) "The great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?" (Rev. 6:17).

Seventh Seal (8:1).—Before the opening of the seventh seal, the twelve tribes of Israel are sealed, and the great multitude out of all nations stand before the throne and the Lamb, clothed in white robes. When this seal was opened the trumpets sounded, and when the seventh (last) sounded (Rev. 11:15) it is the "time of the dead, that they should be judged"—evidently the same as "the last trump" (1 Cor. 15:52), and "the trump of God" (1 Thess. 4:15-17).

SEVEN VIALS, THE WRATH OF GOD (Rev. 15; 16)

It seems that the faithful are to escape the "wrath," for Paul said, "For God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Thess. 5:9). Also, Jesus said, "Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth" (Rev. 3:10).

Conditions such as we are witnessing will probably become more severe, but they seem to fit the program as given.

The Power of a Little Thought

By Arlen Marsh

PRESIDENT HUTCHINS of the University of Chicago threw something of a bombshell into educational circles when he decreed that the university over which he presided was going to teach students to think.

For thinking has not been popular. It never has been popular; but it is less popular today than it was in years gone by. One merely touches a button to bring light; one doesn't struggle over fifty miles of miry roads to buy oil for smoking table lamps. The REA and other government-subsidized organizations have blessed even the farthest hinterlands with the glow that springs from switches.

Because of this softening of living conditions, thinking has reached about its nadir—the lowest point to which anything can sink. Students cram themselves full of dates and other factual details the day before examinations—and forget nine tenths of the dates and the details the day the examinations end. Only the scientists, a few energetic businessmen, an occasional student of religion, and a few homespun philosophers manage to keep the art of thinking in a sort of sickly life.

It was this conviction which led to the somewhat experimental article appearing recently in The Restitution Herald under the title, "Riot of Words"—and which will lead, if current editorial proposals stand, to a similar expression in the American Mercury. Religion is not the only arena which is forcing Thought into limbo; education, mechanics, business, politics, and social living all turn a cold shoulder toward genuine, unadulterated thinking. Dictatorships thrive only when public mentality reaches a new low; oppression never fattens on near-universal thought.

At the moment, of course, it is only the effects of this intellectual retrogression on the church which is of concern. The effects of growing intellectual freedom were apparent with the overthrow of the Catholic hierarchy by Luther, Calvin, and the ambitious King Henry, and its partial replacement with denominationalism. The effects of the recurring lack of intellectual expression are now apparent in the growing demand—enforced in Germany—for what is tantamount to a single church, a church in which all beliefs and creeds are submerged either (a) for the good of the State or (b) for the good of Society.

Fifty years ago, there was little talk of a universal church. Enough universality had been experienced with the Catholicism of the Middle Ages, it was felt. Denominationalism was a vital—and sometimes violent—force, not merely in the religious world, but in the political, social, and economic worlds as well. People argued their religion, as they argued about free silver. Churches fought bitterly, and proselyted without shame.

With the greater ease of mechanized civilization, however, denominationalism, like education, lost its power. The button on the wall gave light; the button on the car floor gave eighty-seven (or, if one were lucky, a hundred fifty) horses; an extraordinary thermometer governed cold and heat. People grew lazy; there was no reason for initiative, no reason for seeking after wisdom, no reason for building up a carefully assorted variety of facts with which life could be supported. And the habits built up in everyday life were carried over to the church. Denominationalism perished, or at best became distinctly moribund; religious strife practically ceased, except in such enlightened nations as Germany and Russia; and the whole idea of intellectual laziness so permeated the earth that people, rather than think up new jobs when old ones disappeared, besought the government to come to their relief.

Here and there, however, in the desert of general thoughtlessness, arises a voice that cries with all the fervor of a John the Baptist. Phil and Ash, coauthors of the letters that made up "Riot of Words," were of this type. They had the conception of President Hutchins—that the world moves only as its thought processes and its public make it move. They were not the visionary dreaming of a slightly mad writer, but the embodiment of expressions which have come to be unnecessarily and almost disgustedly frequent.

The scene moves, the tempo changes, from a philosophic essay to a practical Sunday morning class of young people—young people, moreover, raised within the church, and supposedly blessed with a lifelong knowledge of religion . . .

"Who was Moses?"

This, from the teacher, is greeted with deep silence. Finally:

"Didn't he lead the Israelites out of Egypt?"

The teacher nods encouragingly; then: "What were the Israelites doing there?"

Again silence, this time broken only by an embarrassed scuffling.

Ultimately, the teacher says, "They had been in captivity for four hundred years, or very nearly that long. How did they get there?"

The minutes drag on leaden feet. Inspired, some one yelps, "Joseph or somebody took them there!"

"Tell the story," encourages the teacher.

Silence.

"We studied it last week," says the teacher.

Silence.

"Who was Joseph?" asks the teacher.

"Jacob's father!" . . .

Names, dates, and places added, this bit of dialogue would be a fair picture of nine tenths of the so-called Bible classes of the last ten years. Facts—simple facts that five-year-olds can tell—are frankly lacking from the orbit of most "scholars" in the church. What is even more important—for facts can be acquired by almost anyone not altogether lazy!—is the disinclination to interpret, to discuss, to think. Yet these same people who ignore the basis of their own convictions send a fervid invitation to the world to come drink of the fountain of Christianity!

They do get some reply—a reply from those influenced more by mob spirit than by faith. If faith be the substance of things hoped for, it is a belief so real that definite things are taken as existing, although those things have not yet happened. How can such faith exist if churchmen have only the vaguest notion of the things for which they hope?

"Faith," "salvation," "prayer-life," "immortality"—these are, perhaps, beautiful words as words; but not many know their meaning. Pin the average Christian down, and he can tell you very little about the things salvation brings, about the facts the Bible teaches about prayer—and the facts life teaches about prayer! He is apt to be indefinite on the theme of immortality; if he believes in orthodoxy, he refers vaguely to a heaven or a hell; if he believes in what he calls "conditional immortality," he speaks soulfully of the kingdom on the earth. But what difference whether one spend eternity in heaven strumming a golden harp, or eternity on earth lolling under a juniper tree? One is as uninspiring a prospect as the other; yet the advocates of each sneer at the opposing view as being a picture of laziness unparalleled.

This vagueness and the effects of this vagueness could be dissipated easily, and with a minimum of effort by the power of a little thought. Had Bryan been able to give facts in answer to Darrow's questions on religion, Bryan would have lived much longer than he did; as it was, the shattering of his nervous system by Darrow's merciless bombardment of apparently unanswerable questions sent Bryan to his grave within a few months after the notorious Tennessee "monkey trial" of the 1920's. . . Thought implies study, and study invariably produces facts.

With the most easily proved convictions of any church on earth, the Church of God, by adopting a Bryan-like view of its religion, has set the Ashes and the Phils against it. There are those teachers who do not; but there are more who do. Who, for example, is prepared to answer in a conversation on the street this question:

"What makes you think there is a God?"

Now there is the nub of Christianity, But put that question to the mass of Christians, and you will draw either profound silence or vaporings that are in no wise satisfactory. You may be told, "Well, there must be a power to create the world," or "The Bible says so." But, if you honestly want to know, will those answers call a halt to all your wonderings?

There is no reputable scientist in all the world who now denies the existence of a Supreme Being. Biblical prophecies are fulfilled today with astonishing exactitude. Biblical history, doubted yesterday, has been proved true today. Men have written books such as Who Moved the Stone in an effort to disprove the Biblical narration-and have ended by proving to themselves that everything the Bible says is true. The whole world furnishes facts for Christianity to bolster its waning faith; yet almost all these facts go begging, ignored by a religious zeal more fervid than Christlike. The Christ knew what He taught, why He taught, and why He taught what He did teach; and because of that brilliant store of knowledge, He could put such masters of debate as the Pharisees and Sadducees to shame. Bryan had the fervor, but he lacked the store of knowledge; and the Pharisees and Sadducees put him easily to rout.

To pin the problem of proving the teachings advanced by the Church of God down to definite doctrines would require an entire book, and then much material would have to be omitted. In skeleton, however, the major ideas might be advanced like this:

Man is mortal. When he is dead, he is completely dead. Medical science teaches this. Experience teaches this. The Bible says it definitely. Since science, experience, and the Bible agree, the Bible is true.

Jesus, the Holy Ghost, and God are not one person. It is impossible to conceive of three people being one person. The Bible says Jesus prayed that He and His apostles might be one as He and the Father were one; it is as logical to suppose that the twelve apostles were one person as to suppose that God and the Christ were one person. No Trinitarian ever has advanced a complete explanation of the three-in-one conception. The Bible teaches that Jesus called Himself God's Son, and that God called Jesus His Son. A son cannot be the same person as his father.

Jesus did not preexist. It is impossible for a man to enter into the state of birth a second time. If Jesus had preexisted—that is, if He had lived before His birth—the Bible would have told a lie when it promised Israel that a Savior would come. If Jesus already was in being, the Savior was there already.

Baptism by immersion is essential to salvation. Jesus Himself demanded baptism by immersion. He told His apostles that those who would not be baptized "shall be damned." Baptism itself means immersion. Baptism by any other form was not introduced until several centuries after Jesus' ascension. History, ethnology, and the Bible teach that baptism by immersion was considered an essential by the ones who learned their Christianity directly from its Author.

Salvation involves not some vague life in a hereafter, but definite work in a definite place. Agriculture, commerce, industry, education, transportation, and government operations all are mentioned specifically by Biblical descriptions of the kingdom on the earth. There is no reason for being vague—if one applies himself to acquiring the facts he was commissioned to teach to all the world.

Resurrection is reasonable. Having established the being of God, are we to assume that He, who created all things, is incapable of restoring life to His dead creation? The Bible describes the resurrection in detail. History (outlined minute by minute by Morrison in Who Moved the Stona?) proves that Jesus was resurrected from very literal death. Jesus taught that His resurrection was to make possible similar resurrections for others. History, logic, and Jesus' own words unite to prove the truth of the theory of resurrection.

There has been almost no Bible in this article. It was not to present a variety of well-known Bible references that this article was written. Rather, it was produced to show that generalities and fervid confidence are not enough—not for those who, like Phil and Ash, are desirous of knowing; not for those who must face the skeptical ridicule of an education that teaches students only to question, never to think; not for those who want their religion to be built on rock foundations instead of on sand. Paul quoted even from the poets to establish his view that God is a unit being. If we, too, must sink so low today, so be it!

Be of Good Cheer

By Mrs. Florence E. Tuttle

THE SHIP was now in the midst of the sea, tossed with waves: for the wind was contrary. And in the fourth watch of the night Jesus went unto them, walking on the sea. And when the disciples saw him walking on the sea, they were troubled, saying, It is a spirit; and they cried out for fear. But straightway Jesus spake unto them, saying, Be of good cheer; it is I; be not afraid. And Peter answered him and said, Lord, if it be thou, bid me come unto thee on the water. And he said, Come. And when Peter was come down out of the ship, he walked on the water, to go to Jesus. But when he saw the wind boisterous, he was afraid; and beginning to sink, he cried, saying, Lord, save me. And immediately Jesus stretched forth his hand, and caught him, and said unto him, O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt? And when they were come into the ship, the wind ceased. Then they that were in the ship came and worshipped him, saying, Of a truth thou art the Son of God" (Matt. 14:24-34).

Beloved brothers and sisters in Jesus, now as never before, in our little ship of faith we are being carried out into the midst of the sea, out over the wicked troubled waters. For, "the wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt" (Isa. 57:20).

Out in the midst of the sea, with the wind contrary to us, our little ship of faith will go contrary if we do not give all our strength to guiding it.

Let us heed the warning of Paul in Ephesians 4:14, "that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive." Jesus will be soon coming toward us, over the raging waves, and He will again speak peace to them, and they shall be ashamed. Jude 13 says of sinners that they are "raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame; wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever."

Yes, Jesus is coming. We are, figuratively speaking, in the fourth watch of the night. Soon we shall see the dawn, and the realization of our blessed hope, if our ship of faith is not blown contrary with the boisterous winds.

As we feel the wind of false doctrine about us, and see Jesus walking on the sea, we may have a foreboding that He is only a myth. We, too, shall cry out in fear, if our ship of faith is weak. But Jesus is not a spirit, but a real being. He is able to stretch forth His hand and to keep us from sinking, if we venture out over the waves to get closer to Him.

Beloved, fear not to leave your ship of safety to venture out over the waves, as did Peter, for Jesus is coming, and He will save you. Get closer to Jesus in prayer, and He will ever guide you back to your ship of faith, should you sometimes almost sink, and need His help.

- "Jesus, Savior, pilot me
 Over life's tempestuous sea;
 Unknown waves before me roll,
 Hiding rock and treacherous shoal;
 Chart and compass came from Thee:
 Jesus, Savior, pilot me.
- "As a mother stills her child,
 Thou canst hush the ocean wild;
 Boisterous waves obey Thy will
 When Thou say'st to them, 'Be still!'
 Wondrous Sov'reign of the sea,
 Jesus, Savior, pilot me.
- "When at last I near the shore,
 And the fearful breakers roar
 Twixt me and the peaceful rest,
 Then, while leaning on Thy breast,
 May I hear Thee say to me,
 "Fear not, I will pilot thee."

Beloved, look up, and lift up your heads. The dawn is breaking. Our Savior is calling, "Be of good cheer; it is 1; be not afraid."

Smoking to God's Glory

By Charles W. Lapp

THERE are many carnal amusements in the United States. One of these I should like now to consider in the light of the Scriptures. That is the smoking of tobacco. I, as a Christian, would not use tobacco in any form, because of the sense of condemnation and shame in so doing. Paul said, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ," and if we search his writings, we shall see that he lived a life that proved it, because he was willing to forsake everything that he might not be ashamed. In 2 Timothy 2:15 he says, "Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." Study of the Scriptures will help us to live lives so that we need not be ashamed.

I cannot use tobacco because doing so could not be to the glory of God. Tobacco destroys man's will power. In 1 Corinthians 10:31 Paul tells us, "Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do; do all to the glory of God." Am I chewing tobacco to the glory of God when I am spitting tobacco juice around for some one else to walk in? Am I smoking to the glory of God, when I blow smoke in my wife's face, or in my little boy's face? They are entitled to have pure, clean air to breathe. Should they have to leave my company to get it? No. Not if I am a follower of Christ!

Isaiah 55:2 reads, "Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labour for that which satisfieth not? hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness." I can spend my money for that which is more truly bread than tobacco. If the tobacco is food one should eat it instead of spitting it out and throwing it away, or burning it up and blowing it away. Should I spend my money for tobacco and let my family go hungry? I know of little boys and girls that have to go without the proper food to eat, because their father is a slave to the lust of the flesh, which is selfishness, because he must have his tobacco. In Romans 6:16 Paul tells us, "Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness." In verse 19 to the end of the chapter we find some more about servants. "I speak after the manner of men because of the infirmity of your flesh: for as ye have yielded your members servants to uncleanness and to iniquity unto iniquity; even so now yield your members servants to righteousness unto holiness." Read the remainder of the chapter. It is good advice to any person.

All men that use tobacco tell me that the use of tobacco is a dirty, filthy, and expensive habit, and that one ought never to start it. Why don't they quit it? If it is a bad habit, it is a lust of the flesh. It causes the user to crave more of it. It causes a man to be cross and mean if he runs out of a supply of it. Is a man free when he is under the bondage of such a habit? No, he is not. He is under bondage of a lust of the flesh which is of the world, as I read from 1 John 2:15-17.

Can I win souls for Christ with tobacco juice running out the corners of my mouth, or by blowing smoke in their faces? I am afraid not. They will tell me they are just as good as I am, and will not have anything to do with me or the Lord. When Jesus comes back to get his bride, will I want to be clothed with tobacco smoke and stains, or with the Word of God and His righteousness. Would I offer Him a smoke? If it is good for me, it ought to be good for Him. Oh, no! We are to follow Him, and our lives are supposed to be witnesses to His saving power.

It has been proved that a baseball pitcher loses twelve per cent of his accuracy after smoking one cigarette. Is it good for the body, especially a Christian's? No. He is liable to lose his accuracy of the Word. One glass of beer slows the action of the brain one fifth of a second. What will more do?

Now dear ones, here is some of Christ's advice. In Matthew 6:24 we read, "No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon." We read in Matthew 12:25: "And Jesus knew their thoughts, and said unto them, Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and every city or house divided against itself shall not stand." In Matthew 7:13, 14, Jesus says, "Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: be cause strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

If a Christian wants to quit the tobacco habit, let him lay hold on the promise in John 8:36, "If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." In John 14:13, Jesus says: "And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son," and in Matthew 7:7, He says, "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." The Christian has many promises of help, if he will only follow Jesus instead of the world.

Paul speaks again in 2 Corinthians 7:11, "Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God."

[&]quot;Behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; ... and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: it shall leave them neither root nor branch" (Mal. 4:1).

Melchizedek

By A. E. Griffiths

MELCHIZEDEK is a Bible character that has received scant notice from writers. He has very little appeal to so-called orthodox writers, no doubt because of the mystery surrounding him and, from the standpoint of truth, little has been said about him, possibly for the same reason. Many of our people are inclined to avoid deep subjects. That, no doubt, accounts for the scarcity of information concerning this strange and obscure high priest.

Melchizedek's origin and personality are, to a great extent, shrouded in mystery. After considerable study on the subject, the writer is offering his humble efforts to dispel, if possible, some of the doubts and obscurities concerning this great high priest.

We shall first review his origin. He appears abruptly in Genesis 14:18-20, without any introductory comments, and all that he did and said was recorded in these three verses. Later on in the Scriptures David refers to him in Psalm 110:4. In the New Testament, Paul gives us a masterly discourse concerning him, which is practically the only direct information we have about him, but it is of sufficient interest to enlighten us as to his origin and personality.

Some expositors say that Shem was the person who met and blessed Abraham, but this we must reject as unscriptural. In speaking of this incident, Paul says in Hebrews 7:7, "The less is blessed of the better." As Melchizedek did the blessing, he was naturally the greater of the two. Therefore, if Shem was so much greater than Abraham, why did not God choose him as the recipient of the promises? We must not forget that Abraham was a direct descendant of Shem, who was five hundred twenty-five years old when Abraham received the promises and, being so much older, would naturally have more knowledge than Abraham concerning the plans of God.

In Paul's account of Melchizedek, in Hebrews 7:2, we read that he was "by interpretation King of righteousness, and after that also King of Salem, which is King of peace."

Many writers claim from this passage that he was King of Jerusalem, but Jerusalem was not in existence at that time. For proof, let us review the account of Abraham going out to sacrifice Isaac. In Genesis 22:2 God told Abraham to go to the land of Moriah to offer the sacrifice. Just as he was about to plunge the knife into his son, an angel called out to him, "Lay not thine hand upon the lad, . . . and Abraham lifted up his eyes, and looked, and behold a ram caught in a thicket by his horns." (Gen. 22:10-13.) A place overgrown with brambles could not be a city. And according to verse 5, Abraham left his young men and ass, and went alone with Isaac to the place of sacrifice. So it was just a hill far away from any city or inhabitants.

This same Moriah is the identical spot where afterwards Solomon built the temple. "Then Solomon began to build the house of the Lord at Jerusalem in mount Moriah" (2 Chron. 3:1). Therefore, God designated this spot, where He had led Abraham to sacrifice, as the place where His city should be built, and the identical point where He would accept sacrifices in the future from the children of Israel, after the kingdom of God was established. In the reading of Genesis 22 we discover that God provided a sacrifice for Abraham to offer, typifying the sacrifice that He later provided to take away the sins of the world. (Heb. 10:5.)

Paul is careful to explain that this priest was King of rightcousness and King of Salem by interpretation, thus proving that the tithes were not literal, but symbolic. Shem was an ordinary mortal man, and so could not be a King of rightcousness, or a King of peace. Those titles apply only to the Son of God, and could not be held by any mortal man; and that brings us back to this strange character, Melchizedek. Paul, in Hebrews, is discussing this higher order of priests in contrast with the Aaronic order. In verse 3 he proves that Melchizedek was not an ordinary man, because he was "without father, without mother, without descent (pedigree, margin), having neither beginning of days, nor end of life" (Heb. 7:3). This cannot apply to an ordinary man.

An objector once said that he preferred to leave Melchizedek a man as Paul did (v. 4). But if you search the original Greek text you will not find the word anthropos (Greek for man) in it. Therefore, Paul did not call him a "man." Only the Greek word outos, a pronoun referring to Melchizedek is used in this reading, which the Diaglott will prove to anyone doubting this assertion.

Another objector raised the point that if he was a celestial being, he was not less than God Himself, and if "he abideth a priest continually" (Heb. 7:3), he was not only a priest in the days of Abraham, but is a priest now, and always will be, which would give us two priests of the Melchizedek order. We answer to this objection by saying that when we thoroughly understand this priesthood we shall find it to be a multitudinous order, which means a great many more than two.

This objector also overlooked the point we have already shown, that the titles were symbolic, and not literal. The fact is, the Melchizedek order of priests has been in existence ever since the creation. The beginning of this order was when, through His Spirit, God created the heaven and the earth, using the Elohim, or mighty ones, to do His bidding. God appeared to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob through this same medium, also to Moses, David, Solomon, and many others. The first gospel promise was given in Genesis 3:15, and this was before Abel was born. Adam had personal interviews with the Elohim before this period. How could Abel have known how to sacrifice legitimately to God if he had not known about the Melchizedek order of priests? All knowledge was orally given in those days, but when Moses was instructed to write for posterity it was necessary that this higher order of priesthood be explained; and so God manifested Himself in the person of Melchizedek to teach Abraham and future generations His requirements for a man to obtain salvation. God even caused this high priest to bring forth bread and wine to symbolize the ordinance of breaking of bread, which Christ instituted nearly twenty centuries later—a most significant prophecy.

God has appeared to man through the medium of the Elohim on many occasions. So why should it be thought strange if Melchizedek was one of these manifestations of the higher priesthood?

He was a type of the kings and priests spoken of in Revelation 5:10, but before these kings and priests shall attain to such positions they must be eligible for the "great and precious promises: that by these (they) might be partakers of the divine nature" (2 Peter 1:4). John says: "Now are we (Christians) the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he (Christ) shall appear, we shall be like him" (1 John 3:2). When we are raised to immortality we shall be priests after the order of Melchizedek and, as Jesus said in Luke 20:36, we shall be "equal unto the angels." When these events take place the Melchizedek order of priesthood will be in evidence as the supreme ruling power in the persons of the immortal priests of Zadok, who will dispense the laws from the temple in Jerusalem, under the rulership of King Jesus; and the mortal priests of Levi will come in contact with the nations during the thousand year's reign.

In closing, let us consider another phase of the subject, namely, the so-called Christ spirit. We read a good deal about this in various parts of the Scriptures. Jesus said, "Thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world" (John 17:24). When we read this we do not presume that Jesus existed before the foundation of the world, but that He-being a most important factor in the plan of salvation-existed in God's mind. Peter makes this plain, "But with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot: who verily was forcordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you" (1 Peter 1:19, 20). God, having the person of Jesus in view, spoke of Him as existing before He was born, or made manifest-a principle He sometimes uses, as explained by Paul, "(As it is written, I have made thee a father of many nations,) before him whom he believed, even God, who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not as though they were' (Rom. 4:17). Let us not lose sight of the fact that Jesus was the name of the person, and Christ was His title. The word "Christ" means "Anointed" of "King," and although Jesus did not exist before He was born, yet the title "Christ" existed before the foundation of the world.

Having arrived at this conclusion, we can better understand the words of Jesus, "Before Abraham was, I am" (John 8:58). This signifies that the Christ spirit existed before Abraham's day, and Abraham knew this, for Jesus said, "Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day: and he saw it, and was glad" (John 8:56).

These readings will help us to place the personality of Melchizedek. We have ascertained, previously, that he was not an ordinary human being, that he, therefore, must have been a manifestation of the Elohim. In Genesis 12:2, God clearly states, "I will bless thee, and make thy name great," but do we suppose that God personally did this? Did He not bestow His blessing through the medium of His Elohim, just the same as He has bestowed His blessings upon others. Therefore, when this high priest met Abraham, God was bestowing upon him another blessing, and teaching him what order of priesthood the Messiah would belong to when He would come to redeem sinners. Thus, God's blessing was conveyed through the medium of His Elohim, in the person of Melchizedek.

It is evident that David understood this high priest when he said, "Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek" (Psalm 110:4). David, as king of Israel, was very familiar with the Aaronic priesthood, and knew that those priests officiated from the ages of thirty to fifty years only, but here was a priest who would be always a priest, whose term of office would never cease. David realized that his greater Son would occupy this position when he would take possession of the earth. Hence, his quotation in the Psalms.

There is a difference between the law of Moses and the law of faith. Paul differentiates between the two in 2 Corinthians 5:17. Now notice what John says, "But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name: which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God" (John 1:12-13). So those that are sons of God are like Melchizedek, "without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life; but made like unto the Son of God" (Heb. 7:3). This is true of Jesus, and every member of the order. When one is, therefore, begotten of God and born of His will, he is born into the Melchizedek priesthood. This order has been forming since the days of Abel, and when Christ comes there will be the complete spiritual temple, built without hands. These are the people to whom God has revealed much, and for whom He gave His only begotten Son. There was a time when the Aaronic priesthood did not exist, but the Melchizedek order has existed from Abel to the present time. Let us all strive to be among this glorious company.

THE MAN FROM UR

After each victory over the flesh, Abraham seems to have been given further evidence that he was "well pleasing to God." After Lot separated from him, the Lord said unto Abraham, "Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward: for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed for ever" (Gen. 13: 14, 15).

After about fifteen years in the Land of Promise, Abraham began to wonder, though not to doubt. All these promises carried the inference of a family-children of his own-yet so far his wife Sarah had been childless. He was definitely promised a child of his own, but he was by this time over eighty years old. The natural question came to his mind, and he asked, "Lord God, whereby shall I know that I shall inherit it?" (Gen. 15:8). As to the promised child, "he believed in the Lord; and he counted it to him for righteousness" (Gen. 15:6). All this chapter should be read, not once, but many times. The faith of Abraham was put to many tests, but he always came through them more than conqueror. In harmony with such tests we read, "Knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience" (James 1:3), and "Through faith and patience (we) inherit the promises" (Paul in Heb. 6:12).

Abraham saw the promise of the seed fulfilled in the birth of Isaac from one who was as good as dead, thus carrying forward the promise of a resurrection. This was another victory for Abraham, and he was accorded another vision of the future. This time he was shown that it was part of God's plan that though he should go down into the darkness of death, and though long centuries should pass over him, that the true seed would be developed. The seed included both those that were to be numbered like the sands of the sea, and also the one definite "seed, which is Christ" (Gal. 3:16). This seed is far more important than the "seeds, as of many," because he was to "save his people from their sins," and also to bring the promised blessings to all nations.

Here was the story of the resurrection in its first definite presentation to man, to be made more definite and in greater detail as the generations of men passed, until the word was made flesh. In His turn, Jesus spoke to men with great assurance, saying, "Abraham rejoiced to see my day: and he saw it, and was glad" (John 8:56). With great assurance Jesus also said, "I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live" (John 11:25). We have also the witness of Paul, "Behold, I shew you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye. . . . Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. 15:51-57).

Four thousand years seem to be a long time, but the intermediate step brings us to Christ, and the next step brings the story of the promise to each of us, for "as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ ... And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise" (Gal. 3:27-29).

Sinful Ur vanished from the earth; the faith of Abraham lives on.

MEDITATIONS ON SIN

By A. Anthon

"Are we sinners because we sin, or do we sin because we are sinners?"—S. J. Lindsay.

ARE WE sinners because we sin? Yes. We do not have to sin. We are free moral agents, and as such we can choose to do what we do. God sees to it that we are not tempted above what we are able to bear, or resist. (1 Cor. 10:13.) Therefore, we of our own free choosing do those things performed by us, whether they be righteous or unrighteous. There is no coercion brought to bear on us; the temptation was not more than we were able to resist if we had chosen to stand faithful. Thus, we see that when we sin the fault is ours. This gives God a right to punish us for our sins.

Do we sin because we are sinners? God did not so create us that we have to sin. We were created free moral agents—prsons having power to choose to do.

But notice, a free moral agent created in such a way that he could not choose to do right or wrong, just as he took a notion, would not be a free moral agent.

Plainly, a young free moral agent that had not yet learned how to choose to advantage must learn by practice. Practice is God's method of teaching. It is the very best method, known to be best by all leading instructors. One must be put among good and evil; allowed to choose this or that; learn the consequences, until he gets so that he knows what is good and what is evil.

It is most probable that he who has learned to choose good, did at several times in his past choose to do evil. He did not know any better. If he is willing to learn his lesson and not choose this evil again, but continues getting wiser and wiser, he will learn how to choose good only. Thus, we see how a free moral agent flounders around among the good and evil his environment contains, not always choosing good, but getting wiser and wiser until he has become as wise as God requires before granting him an entrance into Paradise.

The old free moral agent who delights in evil is to be "rocked to sleep" to sleep forever.

Therefore, we are sinners because we choose to sin. We do not sin because we were created to have to sin. But we are all free moral agents that choose of our own free will to sin.

Some of us learn easily; some never learn—refuse to be taught. Let us be apt students—students that at last will have happy, joyous lives in Paradise.

"Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh" (Gal. 5:16). We know that drunkenness is a lust and a drunken person has no respect for himself or others. Those who seek after the lusts of the flesh cannot inherit the kingdom of God.

Christian Living

Mary Richardson, Hammond, La.

How good it would be if everyone would but realize that the Christian life is the ideal life! To the one living such a life, it is very profitable, and to the one coming in contact with it, it is a blessing. A Christian life gives a person real peace and contentment, it is a way by which one may reach these ideals he aspires to, it is a present and future blessing. No other way of living can give such a sense of contentment as does the Christian life. To those who are really Christians, God is their constant companion.

Christians cannot be self-centered, but must think of the welfare of others. A Christian's heart longs to see people converted by the gospel, and like to live its teachings. "Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others" (Phil. 2:4). A selfish person cares for no one but self; the Christian should be different. Christ was not selfish when He gave His life that others might live. Love is a service so deep, that self is forgotten. Christians should forget self, and look to the well-being of others.

"Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life" (Rev. 2:10). Faith is the first step toward the Christian life. We must have faith, must repent, and be baptized, to gain entrance into God's family. "Without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him" (Heb. 11:6).

"Christ liveth in me" (Gal. 2:20). When one becomes a Christian, he must give up the former things, and let Christ rule in his life. When one rises out of the waters of baptism, he arises to walk in newness of life. A new relationship is established when Christ comes into one's life. That person is a new man. Malice, anger, and such, have been cast aside. Where anger was, now love abides, and love secures peace and contentment. Higher ideals are held, and one has different objectives in life. Vulgar thoughts and profane language that once occupied the mind are cast away, making room to think now of the pure, beautiful, and virtuous qualities-having the mind of Christ. The more we "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord," the more closely to our Master we will live, and the more the "peace of God" will rule in our hearts. Clean minds will always be found among true Christians. The Christian is particularly exhorted to keep his mind and body healthy and clean. Right thinking facilitates right living, and right living produces healthy bodies.

"As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God" (Rom. 8:14). True Christians walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. He lives no more after sinful flesh, which is worldly lust, but lets the Spirit of God that dwells in him guide his every action. "And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts. If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit" (Gal. 5:24, 25). "For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting" (Gal. 6:8).

Christians should lay down their lives in service for the lost, and in doing good to the saved. Few literally give up their lives in doing good, but their lives can be such that good will come of them. Too many people love their own lives, and do nothing but work for the satisfaction of their own selfish desires. The opposite should be true of the Christian. The Christian dedicates his life to service for the Master. He goes about doing good to all, especially to the household of faith. The Christian's will to do is characterized by the ever-readiness to serve. The one thing peculiar to Christianity is the desire to serve others.

"Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples" (John 15:8). These words apply to Christians of today as well as to Christ's disciples at that time. Jesus said, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven" (Matt. 5:16). Christians, to be fruit-bearing, should build up their characters to such an extent that others seeing them will know that they have learned of God, and who may then likewise try to pattern their lives after Christ.

When everything is going smoothly, it is easy to be for God, but when the way is hard with suffering, sacrifices, and much opposition, then and there is where true Christianity is brought to light. When a Christian suffers for Christ, it brings into that life a joy and glory that is difficult to express. In Ephesians 6:13 this is brought out more fully.

It is equally true in Christian work, as in secular work, that to succeed one must put his whole being in the task at hand, work with a will, and have a mind to do. The Christian life can be likened to protecting one as the wall of Jerusalem protected those who dwelt therein. A Christian must have determination and courage; these are necessary for success in Christian work.

May we all go forward in Christian service, becoming more as the Master would have us be.

"Come ye, buy and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price" (Isaiah 55:1).

How the Gospel Was Spread

There was a great persecution against the church at Jerusalem (Acts 8:1), so the people scattered. As they spread they told the Good News, or preached the Word of God. Then Philip, one of the apostles, went to the city of Samaria. Samaria is also a province in Palestine that is between Galilee and Judea. Jerusalem is in Judea; therefore the city of Samaria is north of there. Philip found these people anxious to receive his teachings. He baptized many. Simon was one of the people who believed, and he was baptized.

Now Peter and John came to Samaria to help Philip with his evangelistic services. They prayed for some of the ones who were baptized to receive the Holy Spirit. Simon was not one of these.

When Simon saw that through the laying on of hands, the Holy Spirit was given, he offered them money so he could get this power!

What did Peter tell him (vv. 21-23)? Peter told Simon to repent and pray to be forgiven, and he warned him of what would happen to him if he didn't. Simon asked Peter to pray for him, that none of those things which Peter had spoken of would come upon him. Our Bibles do not say whether Simon repented or not.

Today many people think everything can be bought with money. But can you buy any of the worth-while qualities a true Christian needs? Joy? Love? Peace? Longsuffering? Brotherly kindness?

After leaving Philip, Peter and John went back to Jerusalem, but they now preached in many villages they had never gone to before, so we see how the wonderful promises of God were spread abroad in that way.

Next week, our lesson tells us of the gospel being taught in the home town of Philip, our evangelist. Where is it?

ECE Club News

Today I have two more names to add to our growing list of members. A girl and her brother are the first to be added from the State of West Virginia. Let's join the parade.

I hope to publish the names of the members soon. If you want your name to be on the list, send me your name, month and day of your birth, your age, and address. We now have nearly thirty members. Let's double that soon.

Today I wish to introduce to you two of our members from the State of California. Jerrold Moore writes:

"I am in the third grade and will be nine years old, August 8.

"Did you know that Mt. Lassen is the only active volcano in the United States? We live near the foot of it.

"The school is about one hundred feet from my home.

"My father works for the U.S. Forest Service. We like to live in the mountains.

"I have a book called 'Bible Talks' which Grandma gave me."

His brother Dean tells us about his activities and surroundings:

"I live in the high mountains where there are a lot of snow and tall pine trees. We live at the entrance of Mt. Lassen Volcanic National Park. I go to school every day. My mother is the teacher. We play in the snow and slide on the ice. We have snowball fights, and build snow men. I often go skiing on the hills.

"I am in the sixth grade, and am eleven years old. I will be twelve on March 20.

"I go to Red Bluff almost every Saturday to take piano lessons.

"I have a book by the name of Hurlbut's 'Story of the Bible,' and a Bible of my own which my Grandmother Railsback gave me.

"We don't get to Sunday school very often, but we have Sunday school lessons at home. I will keep my book up every week. I like the story best on the Children's Page."

Outside My Window

(For your Treasure Books)

The yellow moon is up tonight,
And peeking in my window.
The lawn is full of lovely light
And dancing spots of shadow.

I'm going to say my prayers tonight
Beside the open window,
And thank God for the lovely light
That makes the spots of shadow.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

THE TOWNSEND FAMILY

Five Generations

The five generation picture appearing on the front cover is one of especial interest to the Church of God, as the four adults are members of the faith. While four generation pictures are not uncommon, the editor knows of no other family in the Church of God having five living generations. Still another feature making this group most unusual is that all five persons are of the fairer sex.

Those shown are: the baby Kathryn Mae with her mother, Mrs. Milburn Schoene of Golden, Colo., Mrs. John E. Miller of St. Ja-cob, Ill., Mrs. C. J. Hanson of Lebanon, Ill., and the great-great-grandmother, Mrs. Catherine Townsend of Lebanon, Ill.

OUR RETURN TRIP

At the conclusion of the meetings at the Happy Woods Church near Hammond, La., we drove along the Gulf coast of Mississippi and up to Citronelle, Ala., where we visited a few days at the home of Mrs. Siple's parents, Bro. and Sr. J. S. Lyon. Bro. Harry Goekler accompanied us on this trip, and continued till Thursday before returning to the Louisiana churches where he has done such splendid pastoral work for the past two years.

On Saturday, Feb. 11, we began the journey northward, driving to Memphis, Tenn. Here, at the home of Bro. and Sr. Marrs, we were pleasantly entertained, and conducted services Saturday night and Sunday. On Sunday afternoon we went to the water, and assisted the following in putting on Christ in baptism: Mrs. G. W. Marrs, 2472 Yale St., Miss Mae Marrs, same address, Memphis, Tenn., and Miss Beulah Ham, Collierville, Tenn. Sr. Marrs has been a believer and a reader of The Restitution Herald for many years, and had prayed for the opportunity of being baptized by one of our ministers. The two young ladies had learned the gospel in the home of Bro. and Sr. Marrs.

We recommend these new members to our brotherhood, and especially hope that the Bereans will correspond with the girls.

As a result of our stop in Memphis we are turning over to the census department of our church the names of eleven members which this department had no knowledge of.

On Monday, Feb. 13, we left the sunny South behind, and drove to Chicago, where banks of snow still told tales of the recent blizzards. The following day brought us home, thankful to find all well. We were also very relieved to find that Sr. Skeels had survived a painful operation at her advanced age, and is hopeful of being well again.

Some plans for the future include speaking at South Bend, Ind., March 12, and if possible we will grant the request of the brethren at Eldorado, Ill., to hold a series of meetings at Eldorado, Ill., to hold a series or incerings for them after Easter. We repeat our previous statement that a western trip is being planned for the early summer, and that if there are other points desiring us to stop we would like to know of them as soon as possible. Address us always at 140 Celia S.E., Grand Rapids, F. E. Siple.

SOUTHLAWN PARK CHURCH OF GOD Grand Rapids, Mich.

short time ago Sr. Richard Skeels of 1216 Eastern Ave., S.E., underwent a major operation at St. Mary's Hospital. From the latest report "Mother" Skeels is showing a slight improvement, and we surely hope and pray that she may recover, and be back with her family and friends again soon.

Sr. G. E. Marsh is also on our sick list. She has been confined to her home at 3514 Oakley S.W., for several weeks, but Bro. Marsh states that she is improving and will be out of bed soon. We eagerly look for her return to church and Sunday school.

The men's class entertained their wives at a party in the church annex on Saturday night. Feb. 11. After an evening of games, the men served ice cream and cake. A business meeting was also held.

The church services have been unusually interesting the past few weeks, and the attendance has been very encouraging. On February 12 we had the largest crowd that we have had in months. Much credit should be given to Bro. Marsh for his inspiring sermons and the work he is doing here.

Bro. A. R. Johnson, one of our new contributors, lives at Hector, Minn. He writes, "Bro. Almus Adams practically built the work here. His work was painstaking, and he baptized all of us, except our daughter who was baptized last summer by Bro. Denchfield. However, the truth has been in this community since pioneer days, Bro. Griffith first preaching here back in 1886. He came from Brooklyn, N. Y. If some of our brethren feel that my articles are pretty radical, I should like to remind them that I had nothing to do with writing the Good Book."

Bro. S. J. Lindsay, Tempe, Ariz., is having the pleasant experience of instructing a class of non-members in the doctrines of the Church of God. He gives a Bible to each non-member who attends five consecutive lessons. He has recently ordered five Bibles from this office.

Read Revelation, chapters 10 to 16, inclusive, and then try to answer the following questions:

Chapter 10.—Here is an interlude before the last woe. Why? Chapter 11.—Why is the third woc a reason for rejoicing?

Chapter 12.—Harmonize the first clause of verse 7 with the last clause of Matthew 6:10.

Chapter 13.—Are miracles always evidence of divine approval?

Chapter 14.—Is death ever a blessing? If so, when?

Chapter 15 .- In view of the frightful judgments recorded in this book, do you agree with the sentiment of verse 3?

Chapter 16 .- Why are all these terrible plagues poured out upon the earth?

DAVID ALEXANDER WARREN

David Alexander Warren was born in Pontotoc County, Miss., Oct. 2, 1856, and died Dec. 11, 1938. He came to Texas with the family in 1880. He was preceded in death by two brothers and one sister. Surviving are two sisters, Mrs. Mitchell, DeQueen, Ark., and Mrs. Webb, Sinton, Texas. In addition to these a large number of nicces, nephews, and cousins survive him.

The large number of friends and members of the Church of God who gathered to pay their last respects to this brother indicated their love for him. Bro. Warren had been a member of the Church of God for nearly fifty years. He surely wanted to live, but said if he could not, he fully believed that he would be in the kingdom of God. He wanted to live to see the Lord coming in glory, but death intervened and cut short his aspirations.

The writer had charge of the services on Monday, Dec. 12.

MRS. FRONA SMITH

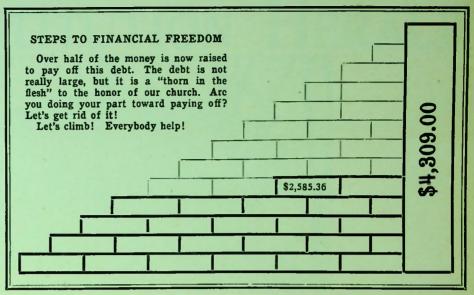

Mrs. Frona Smith, 57, died at her home, 4515 W. 22nd St., Little Rock, Ark., Saturday, Dec. 31, after a short illness. She is survived by a son, Richard Stanton, of Little Rock; three daughters, Mrs. Della Small, Mrs. Stella McCown, and Mrs. Lucille Cheek, Little Rock; four brothers, George Matthews, Ravenden Springs, Ark., Zack Matthews, Safford, Ariz., Monroe Matthews, Naple, Texas, and Sam Matthews of Oklahoma. Funeral services were held on Sunday, Jan. 1, at Griffin-Leffett Funeral Home, and she was buried in Geyer Springs Cemetery.

Sr. Smith had been a member of the Church of God about thirty years, and her sudden death came so unexpectedly to all her loved ones who were so dear to her, that they can hardly realize that she is now sleeping the "sleep of death." Thus has fallen another soldier of the cross who longed for the Savior's return to earth to establish His kingdom, as promised in the Word of God; to resurreet and reward those who have fallen in death.

A BEAUTIFUL LIFE

By Virginia Smith

A beautiful life is a life that's spent In doing deeds for others; A hand that lifts the heavy load And helps a brother on life's road; Who feels our joy, shares our pain And helps us on through sun or rain,

A life that's been to duty wed, And followed where the Master led Gives peace and joy to all who's near, Because this life is filled with cheer. We feel its comfort-it's pure and wise, And has the power to sympathize.

A Christian life is one that pays, That follows Christ in all its ways, Who lifts a burden, gives a smile;
The heart that feels, makes life worth while.

"Home, Sweet Home"

Provided by the love and sympathy of the entire brotherhood of the Church of God, Golden Rule Home assures to the members of its Family the comfort, security, and solicitous care which the word "home" always suggests.

Here the anxieties of earlier and more active life are laid aside forever. No threat of eviction for non-payment of rent or taxes or other indebtedness troubles the hearts of the residents of Golden Rule Home!

No doctor or hospital bills, no grocery, coal, or light bills to be met the first of the month, bring fear to the minds of the Golden Rule Home Family!

All such obligations and burdens are taken from the shoulders of these older ones immediately upon their entrance into the Home and are carried thereafter by the Golden Rule Home itself, which is amply able to bear the load on their behalf.

A hearty Christian welcome awaits all who seek the protection and lifelong support the Home provides.

Conditions of entrance into Golden Rule Home are as liberal as absolute security permits. Write for full particulars concerning the Home and its advantages. Or, better still, come and visit the Home itself and let the Family tell their own story of its advantages and comforts.

Born of the Spirit

By T. A. Drinkard

"That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit" (John 3:6).

POR many years the writer has taken pleasure and interest in discussing before many people this great question, because of the important place it holds in the plan of God. The question has been, is, and will continue to be, Can a man be "born of the Spirit" in this life? This is a very legitimate inquiry, and one that demands a candid answer-an answer that is in perfect harmony with the Scriptures of divine truth. I submit that there is but one safe, reliable answer to the question, said answer being the one that the Church of God for many years has held to be true, and which has withstood criticisms of every kind from different sources, and still it has come forth unscathed. I hold that this position is true, not because my brethren as a whole do, but because it is true absolutely. The Master said, "And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free" (John 8:32). Therefore, let us consider briefly some of the main evidence relative to this question.

First, let me say that the expression, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit," clearly and positively indicates two separate and distinct births: one fleshly, the other by the Spirit of God. The first takes place in this life; the second at the coming of Jesus Christ. That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and comprehends three important things: (a) a begettal, (b) a period of preparation for, (c) the deliverance. Inasmuch as Jesus Christ used the fleshly or natural birth to illustrate that of the Spirit, therefore to be "born of the Spirit" will also comprehend just three similar things. When we understand these things clearly we shall better understand the subject under consideration. To me these two and separate births bring their participants into two different kinds of life and conditions. In the first, the begettal, to and including the deliverance, is always subject to death. In the case of the second, after the begettal and during the preparation period there can likewise be death. but should there be no interference until after deliverance the participant will be beyond the possibility of death.

After being "born of the Spirit" it will be impossible to sin, and, therefore, impossible to die-no sin, no death.

The Spirit of God reveals this through 1 John 3:9, saying, "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God." He that "is born of God" will never sin because he "cannot"; and if he cannot sin, therefore, he cannot die. Just because the expression "is born" is used, it does not justify us to conclude that such action takes place in this life, no more than "is born... is given" means that Jesus Christ was born in the days of Isaiah. (Isa. 9:6, 7.) We must remember that God "calleth those things which be not as though they were" (Rom. 4:17).

Jesus Christ experienced two births, as the Scriptures indicate. The first was by His mother (Luke 1:30-32), the second was at His resurrection (Col. 1:18). As head of the new creation He is the "firstborn of every creature . . . from the dead" (Col. 1:15, 18).

On the flesh plane after the begettal and during the preparation period before deliverance, the undelivered child draws its life from an outside source, its mother; but after the deliverance it no longer draws its life in this way, but has life within itself. Now, with those that are in Christ, or in the begotten state of preparation for the sublime act of deliverance, they draw their life from Christ as He taught that they would when He said, "Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me" (John 15:4). So long as we are in Christ that life is not ours as an inherent possession. By virtue of being in Christ we are in contact with life divine. Accordingly, we read, "And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life" (1 John 5:11, 12).

The deliverance, the consummating act of the flesh birth, gives to the begotten child a self-existing life in contrast to its former condition when it drew its life through its mother. So with those who (Please turn to page 11)

"Wake Up the Mighty Men"

"Big Bertha," used by Germany to shell Paris during the closing period of the World War, is reducing. She will soon be "Little Bertha."

Manufacture of a gigantic honing machine, capable of turning a gun barrel seventy-six feet long and thirty-two inches in diameter—"Big Bertha" had a bore of but nine inches—has just been completed by the Barnes Drill Company of Rockford, Illinois. Significantly, especially to those who study Ezekiel 38, this gigantic machine has been shipped to Russia, none too gentle in her ways. It may be of course, that Russia plans to manufacture seventy-six foot guns for defense, or target practice, or possibly to shoot holes in doughnuts. One never knows just what Russia is going to do. At any rate, "Big Bertha," used in offensive war, had a shooting range of seventy-five miles. Russia will soon be able to manufacture larger guns than any ever made. We foresee new and horrifying records.

Such news items almost daily remind the Christian of scriptures which foretell a devastating war to precede the returning "Prince of Peace." What is the gain to cry, "Peace, peace; when there is no peace" (Jer. 8:11)? England's cry of "Peace at any price" may easily cost her the very peace she tries to save.

It is true that the Christian must "follow after the things which make for peace" (Rom. 14:19). Every disciple of Jesus desires to "follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord" (Heb. 12:14). There is not a little inspiration in the Savior's saying, "Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God" (Matt. 5:9). Fortunate is the man who knows to "pray for the peace of Jerusalem," for "they shall prosper that love thee" (Psalm 122:6).

But the nations of this world who sacrifice blood for steel are not governed by Christian standards. Nor is God's Bible so simple as to suggest that by scheme or parley the lustful hounds—Christ called one a "fox"—may find a lasting peace. The world has no claim on peace.

"The Harvest of the Earth Is Ripe"

"Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles; Prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near... Let the heathen (the nations) be wakened, and come up to the valley of Jehoshaphah (Jehovah judges); for there will I sit to judge all the heathen round about.

"Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe: come, get you down; for the press is full, . . their wickedness is great.

"Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision: for the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision. . . .

"The Lord also shall roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and the earth shall shake: but the Lord will be the hope of his people, and the strength of the children of Israel. . . .

"Judah shall dwell (abide, margin), for ever, and Jerusalem from generation to generation. For I will cleanse their blood that I have not cleansed: for the Lord dwelleth in Zion" (Joel 3:9, 12-14, 16, 20, 21).

"The Land of Unwalled Villages"

It should not be overlooked that the gathering of "all nations against Jerusalem to battle" (Zech 14:2) "to take a spoil" (Ezek. 38:12) will occur at a time when Israel is regathered, in peace and prosperity, but with little or no protection. "In those days, and in that time, when I shall bring again the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem, I will also gather all nations, and will bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat, and will plead with them there for my people and for my heritage Israel" (Joel 3:1, 2).

Notwithstanding the pestiferous Turk, there is todayafter almost two millenniums of waste and suffering-a New Palestine! The Dead Sea is alive with treasures well known to Jew and Mother England, and yet to become the coveted "spoil" of "Meshech" (Moscow?), "Tubal" (Tobolsk?), "Gomer" (Germany?) and "many people." (Ezek. 38:1-23.) The Ruttenburg Dam on the Jordan has spread light and power throughout the land, which physical blessings may indeed foreshadow spiritual light and power yet to come. Thousands of Jews have returned. Jerusalem is being modernized. Not at all out of harmony with Zephaniah 3:9, "a pure language" is being taught in a Hebrew university in "the city of the great King" (Matt. 5:35). "The waste cities" (Amos 9:14) are being rebuilt, but this time without protecting walls. Tel Aviv is a dream come true. Mountains roll with fruits of orchards, if not yet with the fruits of righteousness. British warships grace the harbor of Haifa.

Oh! Blind world! What do you ask to see? Would you believe if one rose from the dead? Call upon Him, and He will answer you. His grace is sufficient for all.

"YE HAVE NOT"

By C. E. Lapp

THERE are two kinds of people in the world, those who "have," and those who "have not." Speaking of earthly possessions, we usually think that the man who has nothing is a poor manager, or is careless, or a spendthrift, or is lazy. Even these things may not always be responsible for his lack.

We know there are great spiritual blessings that come only from God's hand to those who live by faith in Him. When God is the One who is giving, is it possible that we do not receive what is for us? James says, "Ye have not, because ye ask not."

Since God has given us a little girl in our home, some of the Scripture has become more real, because I have experienced some of the words that have been spoken. Jesus said, "What man is there of you, whom if his son ask bread, will he give him a stone? Or if he ask for a fish, will he give him a serpent?" Supposing that my little girl asked for a piece of bread, would I deny her or would I give her moldy bread? Of course not. She gets the best I have. Does she ever think that I will deny her? No. Furthermore, she is never afraid to ask me for anything. "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask him?"

Great spiritual blessings could be ours for the asking, if we could become as little children. We need not be deceived. God will not give evil things any more than we would to our children. How long must we continue among the "have nots"? Must we be in darkness concerning God's wonderful truths? If we will but order our praying according to God's Word there will be many glorious answers.

Many, many instances in the Bible are recorded about men who asked in sincere prayer for something from God, and with childlike faith their desires were granted. Paul said, "My God shall supply all your need according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus" (Phil. 4:19). We have the promise of all our needs, not wants, being supplied. Now we are needy in spiritual things as well as physical. Therefore, they are to be supplied also. If we lack, or are among those who "have not," should we not say, "Lord, teach us to pray"?

James gives some timely thoughts on prayer, and if we want our prayers to be heard and answered, we should believe what he has written. First, he said, "Ye have not, because ye ask not" (4:2). The self-sufficient man does not have to spend time in prayer, for whatever he does will be done because of his own strength of body or intellect. But, for the one who feels his weakness before God, there will be a daily, if not hourly, trip to the throne of grace, that he may obtain mercy and find grace to help in time of need. Suppose, for instance, that a man felt that he should have more love in his heart for sinners. God is the only one who can supply such a need, and unless he prays for a real love for sinners, he will probably be a "have not." Even in the small things of life, Jesus says, "Ask, and it shall be given you" (Matt. 7:7).

"Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts" (James 4:3). We alone are not to benefit from answered prayer. If we will very carefully examine our prayers, we shall discover that a large portion of them are requests for blessings on ourselves. Selfish motives hinder us from receiving what God has for us. If we could catch the spirit of Jesus when He prayed in Gethsemane, "Nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt," more of our prayers would and could be answered. When our wills come into subjection to our heavenly Father's will, then more prayers will be answered.

Jesus had a mind to glorify His Father, and our aim should be the same. Paul said to pray for the rulers, those in authority, for all the saints, for all men, and for him that he might speak the gospel boldly. Prayer for others will enrich us more than all the prayers we pray for ourselves, for they will take us out of ourselves and let Christ in.

Again, "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. If ye shall ask any thing in my name, I will do it" (John 14: 13, 14). We must remember that we are not our own, we are "bought with a price"; therefore, to pray that we might receive something when we only want it to satisfy selfish desires, is sin. To exalt God and lift up Jesus to a sin-sick world should be our sole motive. When we ask with a selfish motive we need not expect to receive.

"If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you. Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples" (John 15:7, 8). Nothing will be withheld from the one who has Jesus' words in his heart, and has committed his all to Him. It is not a question of whether God can answer prayer. It is a question of whether we are abiding in Christ, and His words abiding in us so that He will answer. We sing, "What a privilege to carry everything to God in prayer," but still question whether we should or not. How great a power the Lord could and would exercise for good if each of us would become one of those who "have" asked, instead of one of those who "have not."

The Downward Trend

By Alice B. Curtis (deceased)

IT IS a generally conceded fact, and one that is supported by statistics, that crime of all kinds is rapidly increasing. The newspapers abound with accounts of numerous divorce cases, kidnaping, robberies, murders, and lawlessness of every description. Marriage vows are lightly assumed and easily broken, in utter disregard of God's teaching on the subject. The sanctity of the home is being destroyed; and the home is the foundation of the nation.

There is a large and ever growing number of drug addicts, the number running into many thousands in the large cities. The habit is a most pernicious one, cuslaving both body and soul of those who indulge in it, and is almost never cured. The morals of the people are descending to the low level that was occupied by the lewd cities of the plain, that God destroyed by fire and brimstone as an example to those who should afterward live ungodly.

It is not difficult to locate the underlying cause for this lamentable condition of affairs. It is to be found in 2 Thessalonians 2:3, and is termed by Paul the "falling away." The "mystery of iniquity" was already at work in the great Apostle's time, but he said that Christ's coming should not take place until after the "falling away." The mystery of iniquity was doubtless the attempt of wicked ones to subvert the gospel, and Paul feared, because of the persecutions the early church must suffer, that many would "fall away" from the truth, which history shows did occur. The falling away seems to have been in progress for a long time, but has now reached an alarming stage.

The masses are forsaking God, and are deluded by false religions, spiritism, atheism, theosophy, phychology, and healing cults; infidelity is bold and spreading. But man's theories and vagaries are poor substitutes for God's "sure word of prophecy." And man, having thrown aside the Bible that was meant for his chart and compass over life's dangerous sea, has lost his bearings, and is headed for the reefs of destruction, instead of the great harbor of safety.

The charge is publicly made by those who ply the oldest trade on earth, that the present styles of women's dress are immodest, and conducive to immorality, and that some of them are more immodest than were worn a decade or two ago. This is a serious charge, and one that Christian women should carefully consider, looking to God's Word for guidance. It is a well known fact that Paris designs the style of women's apparel, and when we read that there are more immoral women in that city than in all other European cities combined, we can account for some of the styles of dress that are worn.

In 1 Timothy 2:9 Paul says that "women should adorn themselves in modest apparel with shamefacedness, and sobriety; not with broided hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array." This passage plainly excludes all immodest or costly clothing. The very narrow, short skirts and low cut bodices, many of them sleeveless, would not conform to the Bible standard. It is not surprising that worldly women wear them, but Christians should avoid even the appearance of evil. Pictures taken in beauty contests, for which the contestant poses in the brevity of a bathing costume, would shock our ideas of decency if we were not accustomed to seeing them in the papers.

Innocence does not consist so much in keeping the young ignorant of truths that pertain to their well-being, as it does in teaching them how to avoid evils with which they may come in contact. Our youth is being corrupted, and that at an early age. The blame rests far more upon the parents than the children, for children are not taught godliness and purity in the home, nor are they taken to church or Sunday school. Many of them never learn to live uprightly. The consequence is that they are swept off their feet by the tide of evil that is sweeping over the land.

Women are the mainstay of the home, for to them is intrusted the care and guidance of the young, and as the home is, so is the nation. Mothers should do all in their power to promote holiness and purity. Why do poets rhapsodize over the sweet demure violet, and why do people exclaim over the snowy loveliness of the madonna lily? Is it not because one is the symbol of modesty, and the other of purity? Some may quote to us, "Unto the pure, all things are pure." But, unfortunately, all people are not pure, as may be seen by completing the quotation, "But unto them that are defiled and unbelieving is nothing pure, but even their mind and conscience is defiled."

Unfortunately, our sins do not affect us only, but bring heavy sorrow to others. In some of the large hospitals whole floors are given over to infants who are suffering from congenital diseases of such character that the nurses who care for them must wear rubber gloves. These are stark, unpleasant facts, but they are facts that Christian people should face, and endeavor to change for the better, for the old world will wag on unheedingly. Wrongs are not righted by shutting your eyes to them and trying to forget them.

It should be our mark to uplift the fallen and try to show them "a more excellent way." God has implanted deep down in the hearts of most people a love of beauty and purity, and to them we should teach the "beauty of holiness." We are the salt of the earth, and Christian living should exert a saving influence in this sinful world,

It seems too much to hope that the masses will turn to God, which is their only salvation. The downward trend has acquired such speed and momentum that it seems nothing short of a miracle can stop the rush to destruction. But who shall say that miracles would be impossible, if we were not living in the Laodiccan age when many Christians are lax and inert? Let us leave the lukewarm stage that Christ cannot tolerate, and pray mightily to God that He will give us zeal and energy to occupy acceptably until Christ comes. God is working if we are not; if we sow sparingly, we shall also reap sparingly.

The subject of this article has seemed a little difficult, and not altogether pleasant to write upon, but for a time the writer has felt an urge to write something along this line. This has been written with the sincere hope that it will do no harm and may do some little good.—Reprinted at the request of James Kessler.

Along the Last Mile

Conclusion

By James M. Watkins

WE HAVE previously discussed the possibility of the tribal union of the three Aryan sons of Gomer the Celt, namely, the Slavs, the Armenian Turks, and the Germanic tribes—such a union offering world dominion for a time for the leader of these groups. We now turn our attention to the leader of this proposed union, Ashkenaz, as represented today in his descendants, the Indo-Germanic tribes.

The future of these tribes, so fast uniting and coming to power, is best anticipated in their leader. In the minds of many leading psychologists the emotional instability of Hitler is without question. His emotional stability is that of a small child. He weeps publicly, his reaction to music is uncontrollable, and to some this lack of self-control is indicative of that ill-defined borderline of mental unbalance. He lives entirely in his own fantasies, ofttimes carrying himself away completely by his own oratory. At times his suspicious nature comes to the front, and he exhibits definite tendencies of the persecution complex of the paranoiae.

To the world Hitler's ability to convince himself of the reality of what is but childish fancies, and his giving in to personal emotions, combined with his thought of personal revenge for fancied wrongs, are extremely dangerous. To us it is fortunate, for it provides us with a very reliable chart for the future. Knowing that these characteristics can only increase, because of the nature of their beginning and the life this man lives, we should be able to point out with reasonable degree of accuracy the ultimate of Hitler's ambitions, and to show how they conform to the written record of Scripture.

The best indication of the plans of such a man is not the great things he does, but the little things—those things he does in unguarded moments, and which are so much a part of the inner man that he guards them carefully from the eyes of the world.

Such a thing occurred at the time of Germany's annexation of Austria. Of all the loot possible to take at such a time, the mind of Hitler seemed centered to one objective, so much so that it must have been anticipated well in advance. Immediately upon entering Austria he provided himself with the crown, robe, and vestments of the Emperor Charlemagne. The world, if it ever knew, has forgotten about this. These vestments have not been heard of since. Nevertheless, Hitler's action was characteristic of a small boy pursuing an ideal. These items, so obviously considered as personal treasures, well indicate the path that fancy is picturing. We may also expect that they will show up again when that fancy is believed to be realized. When, in Hitler's own mind, he has attained his ultimate objective, we predict that the world will know it by the reappearance of the robes of Charlemagne. Where and when will this take place? To Charlemagne it happened after he had brought together the Germanic people, and when his feet at last stood in Rome, where he awaited the official commendation of the pope.

Some doubt that the empire of Mussolini will be brought under the control of Hitler, yet they are together in Ezekiel 38 as the Prophet visualizes the assembling of the armies at the return of Christ. But some say that they are friends. May we point out that Hitler is reported to have known only one man well enough to address his superior by his first name. That man was Ernst Roehm, and yet he was shot at the command of Hitler himself, merely because of the suspicious quirk of the Fuehrer.

Mussolini is useful to the plans of Hitler in attaining his aims. When his period of usefulness is over why should Mussolini rate any more consideration than Roehm? Isn't it strange that, whereas Hitler has demanded that all Germans must eventually be brought under the mother country, no mention has yet been made of the Italian Tyrol, although this valley, while controlled by Italy, is entirely German. What better strategy than to save this as a last demand—when Mussolini is no longer useful. That this is actually planned, read this from Mein Kampf, written by Hitler in 1924, "No great achievement has ever been effected in the world by coalitions; but has always been due to the triumph of one individual man." The death knell of his union with Mussolini was sounded before it was started.

Another dream of Charlemagne was a waterway from the North Sea to the Black Sea, extending entirely across the continent. That Hitler has also accepted this dream is manifest in the present construction of the Rhine-Danube Canal, the most expensive undertaking of its kind yet at-

Tongues and Miracles

By Z. B. Self

THE definition for the word "tongue" is nowhere given to be a jabber which is not understandable. True, a tongue may be unknown to some, but it must be known to others, else why did Paul command, "If any man speak in an unknown tongue, let it be by two, or at the most by three, and that by course; and let one interpret"? Paul further said, "But if there be no interpreter, let him keep silence in the church; and let him speak to himself, and to God." (1 Cor. 14:27, 28.) Still further, if the unknown tongues, here under consideration, are not also known to some, then why did those devout Jews out of every nation under heaven at Pentecost hear those tongues there spoken, in their own language? (Acts 2:6, 8.)

It is evident, therefore, that unknown tongues are also known and understandable; but that which the present-day, assumed, tongue-imitators mumble is not understandable, neither by God nor man. Still, some go so far as to bring up a false interpretation of such.

The latter day, assumed, tongue-speakers doubtless contend that they speak tongues under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit baptism, else why do they try to imitate those who spoke under that inspiration by many mumbling at one time—and that, most always, without an interpreter? At the same time they contend that water baptism is all right, but not essential to salvation. Therein they are deceived, for Paul says, A.D. 64, that there is "one Lord, one faith, one baptism'! (Eph. 4:5). If the Holy Spirit baptism is the one baptism remaining here, and spoken of by Paul in Ephesians 4:5, then there could be no forgiveness of sins, because the Holy Spirit baptism was never administered for the forgiveness of sins. It was first poured out at Pentecost upon those who already had their sins forgiven. To those on whom it was poured out at the house of Cornelius (Acts 10), who did not yet have their sins forgiven, Peter said, "Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Spirit as well as we? And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord" (Acts 10:47, 48).

Here, Peter was putting into effect the commandment of Jesus which He gave, just previous to Pentecost, in the Great Commission, which the disciples of Christ were to perform after they had been endued with power from on high at Pentecost. In records of both Matthew and Mark Jesus commands His disciples to go into all the world, teaching and baptizing. Peter proves this baptism to be water baptism in Acts 10:47, 48. Peter also proves, in Acts 2:38, that this same baptism is the baptism through which sins are forgiven.

Hear him, "Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." Hence, this water baptism is the one baptism remaining which is spoken of by Paul in Ephesians 4:5

John's baptism ceased with John, the Holy Spirit baptism was fulfilled at Pentecost (Acts 2:1-18), at the house of Cornelius (Acts 10), and at two other known times, by the laying on of the apostles' hands (Acts 8:14-19; 19:6). Shortly after these special manifestations the Holy Spirit baptism ceased. It was then that Paul's commandment in 1 Corinthians 14:27, 28 was made. He commanded that instead of speaking in tongues, many at one time and without an interpreter (as had been done under Holy Spirit baptism), they were to speak by threes or twos, and that "by course," or each in his turn, "and let one interpret."

Why do not latter day, would-be tongue-speakers conform to Paul's command in 1 Corinthians 14:27, 28? The answer is obvious. Nothing but a false interpretation can be brought forth from that which is not understandable. It is evident from Paul's teaching in 1 Corinthians 13 and 14 that unknown tongues or languages did continue for a certain length of time, even after the Holy Spirit baptism had ceased; but if there was to be no limit to these tongues, why then did Paul say, "Whether there be tongues they shall cease" (1 Cor. 13:8)?

Also, what was that "which is perfect" which was to come and to do away with those things said to be "in part" (tongues, knowledge, and prophecies without premeditation) (1 Cor. 13:8-10)? It is important to notice that the reason that the tongues, prophecies, and supernatural knowledge existed was for the purpose of establishing a perfect record of God's works and intentions toward mankind, in order that man might have something by which to believe on, and have faith in God. (Rom. 15:4; 2 Tim. 3: 14-17.)

The Bible was completed about A.D. 97, soon after John received the Revelation from Jesus, through vision on the Isle of Patmos. This made a perfect record for man to believe by. Hence, the Bible completed is that which came, "which is perfect," which did away with those things "in part," which were tongues, knowledge, and prophecies without premeditation on man's part.

It is plainly understood by Bible scholars who know and teach the truth that the prophecy of Joel 2:28, 29 was fulfilled at Pentecost (Acts 2:1-4), in the last days of the Jewish age. Peter plainly said so at Pentecost (Acts 2:14-18). Nevertheless, latter day, would-be tongue-speakers contend that this prophecy is being still fulfilled in the last days of the Gentile age, without any evidence from God's Word.

The Scripture plainly teaches that Christ and His disciples did perform many wonderful works, or miracles, during the latter days of the Jewish age; but who is performing signs and wonders in the latter days of the Gentile age? Not God's church, but who? Hear the Scripture: "And then shall that Wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming: even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders" (2 Thess. 2:8, 9).

"For there shall arise false Christ's, and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect" (Matt. 24:24).

"And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty' (Rev. 16:13, 14).

Jesus said, "Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity" (Matt. 7:22, 23).

Who will these people be to whom Jesus will say this in that day? The miracle workers of long ago, or those of today?

Why an Israelitish Nation?

By Wilsie J. McKnight

SOME people go about their work quickly and efficiently, but others seem to choose the harder way to their tasks. Why will they do it the harder way? While studying this, we asked ourselves the same question about the Lord. Thus, these questions came to us:

(1) Why did not God send the Savior soon after the fall of Adam (the one who brought in sin and death), or even at the time of Abraham? Abraham first received the promise of eternal life in the promise of an eternal inheritance on earth (Gen. 13:15). One can readily see that it was necessary for a Savior to raise Abraham and others from the grave in order for them to receive the promises, and that it was likewise necessary to have a free person (one not born under sin and death) to give his life to pay for the sins of those under bondage. "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ" (Gal. 3:16). God waited nineteen hundred years after the promise to make it possible by a Savior.

(2) Why did God strive with the Israelitish nation through the centuries, when there was no salvation through Israel (Gal. 3:16, quoted above)?

(3) Why did God sandwich the law in those nineteen hundred years, when it neither could bring salvation? "Man is not justified by the works of the law" (Gal. 2:16). If salvation were possible by the law, there was no need of Christ, "if righteousness come by the law, then Christ is dead in vain, . . . for if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law" (Gal. 2:21; 3:21). The giving of the law seemed to us a waste of time and of patience on the Lord's part. The only reward for obeying the law, that we could find, was temporal blessings to the Israelites as a nation—"if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people" (Ex. 19:5).

After thinking over these questions, we came to these reasons for the delay of the Savior's coming, for the preservation of the nation of Israel, and for the giving of the law:

Our God and Creator is working toward one final goal—a perfected and eternal kingdom where rightcousness will reign. This future kingdom was the theme of Christ's preaching. "He went throughout every city and village, preaching and shewing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God" (Luke 8:1). We understand that His preaching included the laws of the future kingdom, and that we are to live today according to those laws. Those laws are based on love, hope, faith, forgiveness, and on giving.

Had these laws been preached in the days of Abraham, neither he nor the people of his day would have been able to receive them. They were not civilized enough. Christ's teachings could not have been understood when the human race did things as Abraham's intended sacrifice of Isaac, his casting Hagar and her son into the wilderness to die, Jephthah's sacrifice of his daughter, and the prevailing custom of having the conquered king's sons killed before his eyes and then his own eyes put out, as in the case of Zedekiah.

Could Jesus have come at the time in history and civilization that He did, but to the Romans or Greeks, instead of the Jews? No. To the Greeks He would have been only another Plato or Socrates; and to the Romans, another lawgiver. It took the law to teach a people of the true heavenly Father; took it to show the people the nature of the coming kingdom, so Christ's teaching would not be in vain; and took it to prepare a people to look for a Savior born of a virgin. In order to keep and to develop the law, it was necessary to have a distinct group of people like the Israelites. Surely, "the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ" (Gal. 3:24).

The China Inland Mission and the Doctrine of the Trinity

Extracts of Correspondence With a Missionary Part 1

By R. H. Judd

IT MAY be well first to make reference to your comment, "Enough," which you placed on the outside of the envelope, when returning my articles on the Trinity and kindred subjects. I took the message as indicating that you resented them, but was careful to qualify my conjecture in case I was mistaken, at the same time giving further reasons for my opinion. That I was not mistaken, or rather, that I was not alone in my thought, I may state that my wife gained a similar impression before I had even seen it.

Your explanation that "Enough is enough, whether it be puddings or broom handles or anything else," is to my mind a poor comparison in respect to a subject of such vital importance, and evidences a lack of appreciation of the dignity and reverence that should be applied to it. With few exceptions, I can never get enough of any man's real thoughtful study of God's Word, even if it opposes mine. Such study gives me his viewpoint, and enables me to approach mine from a different angle, which will either confirm my own, or show me my weaknesses. Something is gained either way. Further, in view of the importance of the subject, and the seriousness with which it is regarded by yourself and the China Inland Mission of which you are a member, and the consequent influence which we exert upon others, I do not deem time spent in correspondence in search of truth as wasted.

It is evident that we cannot both be right, and the nearer we approach "sound doctrine" (Titus 1:9), and "sound speech that cannot be condemned" (Titus 2:8), the better for ourselves and those with whom we work. It is no light responsibility to bear testimony concerning God's Word, whether it be that of a humble layman like myself, or of ministers and missionaries whose messages are more readily accepted, without investigation, because of the esteem held for the society to which they belong.

There is one remark very pertinent to the subject which comes in here. You say you are "certain that the Trinitarian doctrine is correct," and that I am "equally certain that it is not so, so what is the use of writing?" Then you add, "If I send you one page of proofs you will send me three, I six, you ten pages, and so on." In this quotation from your letter you surely use the word "proof" in an exceedingly loose manner. Nothing is really proved until a conclusion is reached that cannot be disproved. That, I think, is a definition with which all thoughtful people will agree.

If you can bring forward just one actual Bible proof, stated in clear, unequivocal language having but one interpretation, that God is a trinity of persons, there will be no need to write "pages" for the very simple reason that one cannot get beyond proof. One may get additional proof, but that will not alter the fact that the thing desired to be proved has already been proved.

To me it is a most remarkable and wonderful thing that a Book comprising sixty-six books in one volume, written by men of varying ages and temperaments, and covering centuries of time, and having hundreds, if not thousands, of definitely expressed statements that "God is one," never once has the assertion made that God is a trinity of persons. The language used to express your doctrine is unscriptural.

You are an honored member of a society of over seventy years' standing that makes belief in the doctrine of the Trinity a necessary condition of membership, and the foremost of the items of doctrine to be taught to the Chinese converts. Yet, after thirty years of missionary service you are utterly unable to bring forward a single unimpeachable proof from Scripture that the doctrine is true! Your arguments are all based upon implications, while such scriptures as Deuteronomy 6:4, Isaiah 44:8, 45:21, John 3:16, 17:3, 1 Timothy 2:5, 1 Corinthians 8:4, 6, and scores more of passages equally definite in both Old and New Testaments stand as bulwarks against you.

Not only is that true, but so far are your arguments from being expressed by "sound speech that cannot be condemned" (Titus 2:8), your assertions are often self-contradictory, and worse still, directly antagonistic to plain Bible statements.

Strangely enough, different to most other Trinitarians, (and I have corresponded with many during the past twenty-five years), you "do not like the word 'persons,' but 'manifestations' does not fit," so you "have to fall back on the word 'persons.'" With such a declaration, your boast of being "certain" that "the doctrine of the Trinity is correct" has gone like a puff of smoke, for it is tantamount to a denial of the personality of even "God the Father," and your upholding of the doctrine of a pre-existent Son of God goes with it. Why not join the Christian Scientists, or some other cult, instead of the China Inland Mission?

You endeavor to sustain Mr. Baron in his futile attempts to prove the doctrine of the Trinity. His remarkable assertion concerning Isaiah 9:6, that "the child was born, but the son was not born but given" is the most puerile I have met with from any man carrying several letters of distinction after his name. (See 1 Cor. 3:19.)

The illustration which you give that Hudson Taylor (now deceased) might be spoken of as a "giant" by one person, and denied that description by another, because one spoke of his physical aspect and the other of his mind, courage, etc., is not applicable. These are not "seemingly antagonistic" as you suggest, for they are all necessary to a complete description of Hudson Taylor himself.

Further, your attempt to defend Mr. Baron in his assertion which differentiates between the child and the son is an amazing feat for a medical missionary. The beloved physician, Dr. Luke, gives a direct denial to any such proposition, as scriptures quoted later will testify. Your assumption either denies to every child born the gift of personality, or else it gives to the child Jesus two distinct living personalities in one body! Thank God, doctors differ!

You say, "The spiritual being of the Son of God existed before the Christ child was born," and you advance as proof John 3:16, 17, laying stress on the words "gave" and "sent." In Genesis 33:5 we read of Jacob saying, ". . . the children which God hath graciously given thy servant." Did they preexist? As they were "given" were they, therefore, not born? Again, in John 1:6 it is said, "There was a man sent from God whose name was John." Did John preexist? Surely a man who was one time principal of one of the finest colleges in the Far East can advance something more cogent! With further reference to your statement, just quoted, regarding the preexisting being of the Son of God (and a being is no insubstantial nonentity-see dictionary), we have the reasonable right to ask, What became of that being when the Son of whom Dr. Luke speaks (Luke 1:31; see also Isa, 7:14) was "conceived" in Mary's womb? Did the previous being die? Scripture is emphasic that Christ died but once (1 Peter 3:18; Rom. 6:10). We submit it as an incontrovertible fact that if the Christ preexisted His birth by Mary as the second person of the Trinity, He could not have become Mary's son without first suffering the death of His previous personality, which would render as untrue the scriptures which testify that "he died unto sin once."

Replying to the statement in my article regarding Mr. Baron's bold assertion that the "child was born, but the son was not born" and my rejoinder that the Son of God Himself said, "To this end was I born," you say, "He referred to His body born in Bethlehem-a physical body and a voice to bear witness." Putting aside, for the moment, the grammatical construction of the sentence in John 18:37, and the indisputable fact that the pronoun "I" stands for the person, and the consequently inescapable conclusion that it was the person who was born, the above statement from your pen presupposes some remarkable assumptions. The language of your remark clearly indicates that the Son of God, whom you say previously existed, had neither body nor voice before these "were born to Him in Bethlehem." The long-standing battle concerning Christ preaching to the spirits in prison, while his body hung on the cross or lay in the tomb, is here settled once for all by an "orthodox" missionary. He could not have done so without a voice! We agree, He had no voice in His preexistent state, for even according to your own statement He was no body!

You say that you "have been studying some passages in the Bible regarding the Trinity, and that you are now "more convinced than before of the correctness of the view." We would much like to know where these passages are, for I for one, cannot call to mind a single statement "in the Bible" that God is three persons in one God; or as otherwise put (though by no means the same thing), that the one God is in three persons. Evidently, you have not yet been really convinced of the truth of the doctrine, or you would not say that you are now "more convinced than before."

Just before closing your letter you say, "I fear it is no use giving you verses such as John 1:1, "The Word was God," and John 1:14, "The Word became flesh," for you would want to reply that they do not mean what I take them to mean." I reply that I most certainly would, and would like to ask, Why not take them to mean what they say? A definite reply to that question, clearly stated, would be very desirable. Logos primarily means, word, speech, promise, wisdom. Any one of these dovetails precisely with the historic testimony of Scripture, and the verses quoted in particular. May I state here one remarkable fact, namely, that Jesus Christ is never called "the Word" until after His resurrection from death to eternal life, which He now "liveth by the power of God" (2 Cor. 13:4). Why? Because "the word of God liveth and abideth for ever" (1 Peter 1:23). The Word of God does not die. "Christ died."

WHY PRAY?

By Mrs. William Stine

When you are discouraged with the cross you must carry,
And dark clouds over your path seem to lay,
Don't give up faith, your troubles go bury,
Then get down on your knees and pray.

When sickness and sorrow drop in on you,
And you believe they've come to stay,
You must needs your strength renew
By taking a little time to pray.

When everything's bright with laughter, Remember, dark clouds appear in a day— Storms, you may be sure come after, But you'll be prepared, if you pray.

When you are tempted by Satan to sin,
And in weakness you're about to give way,
Turn about—look on high to Him;
You'll receive strength as you pray.

A happy find for a so-called Orthodox preacher, who might wish a novel funeral text, should be: "We fly away" (last three words of Psalm 90). No charge.

APOSTASY

By E. E. Giesler

A postasia is a Greek word which means "falling away," and is so translated in 2 Thessalonians 2:3, "Let no man deceive you by any means: for . . . except there come a falling away first . . ." The falling away is inevitable, but you do not have to fall. If you will "watch . . . and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man" (Luke 21:36), you will not be left as the foolish virgins (Matt. 25:8), but will be among the blessed "which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb" (Rev. 19:9).

The apostasy will come. "Because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold" (Matt. 24:12). Transgressors must "come to the full" (Dan. 8:23). But, Brother, Sister, you need not be a transgressor. You need not be affected by the sins of others. Christ has called you to follow Him, to let your lights shine for others. Others need you, and if you fail to walk in the light of truth you will also cause some one else to fall. "But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are all the children of light . . . Therefore let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober" (1 Thess. 5:4-6).

Aposlasia will come because the Spirit has said, "In the latter times some shall depart from the faith" (1 Tim. 4:1). Paul says in Acts 20:29, 30, "For I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them." Was Paul's prophecy true? Has the word of this inspired man of God been fulfilled? If so, where would you look for the perverse thing? A quotation from history will throw a little light on the subject.

We quote from the Ecclesiastical History of Dr. Masheim, "Toward the close of the second century a new sect of philosophers rose of a sudden, spread with rapidity throughout the greater part of the Roman Empire swallowing up all other sects, and was extremely detrimental to the cause of Christianity. Its votaries chose to be called Platonist, because they preferred the sublime Plato to all other sages."

Tertullian, end of second century, is quoted in Ante-Nicene Fathers, Vol. 3, page 547, as saying, "Some things even by nature, the immortality of the soul, for instance, is held by many. I may use, therefore, the words of Plato when he declares, 'every soul is immortal.'" Both Socrates and his pupil Plato advanced the doctrine of the immortality of the soul. Plato says, "Our souls must have existed before birth, and will continue existence after death."

Paul says (Rom. 2:7), "To them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honour and immortality," and that we put it on at the time of the last trump. (1 Cor. 15:51-56.)

Brethren, who do you believe, Paul or Plato? Beloved, it is the "latter times," and the falling away has come. But God will keep you if you hold fast (Heb. 10:23; Luke 21:28), if you assemble with the saints (Heb. 10:25), if you keep the word of patience (Rev. 3:10). "For if these things be in you, and abound, ... ye shall never fall" (2 Peter 1:8-10).

YOUR GIFTS

You may not see, you may not know Just where your gifts of money go. But one in need, somewhere, some place, Will kneel and pray with upturned face, And say: "Dear God, I humbly pray That you will bless those friends today Who helped to lift our load of care; And gave that we with them might share Some of the comforts and pleasures, too; That we might live as others do. Dear God, please bless each one of those Who sent us food and shoes and clothes. Who they may be we do not know; But Thou, dear Lord, canst see, doth know So bless them, Lord, and help them see That in helping us they have helped Thee.

ALONG THE LAST MILE

tempted by the Nazis. When completed it will extend from Mainz on the Rhine to Kelheim on the Danube, linking these two rivers into one continuous waterway. We have only to trace the course of these rivers to see what countries must yet be dominated to make this waterway practicable. Hungary, Yugoslavia, Rumania, and Bulgaria are all crossed as the Danube wends its way to the Black Sea.

What do all of these things mean in the light of prophecy? They mean that, as one by one these Germanic countries are being welded together by circumstances, a tennation alliance we have previously named is forming under the rule of one man. While, and because of the fact that Yugoslavia and Hungary were taken from Germany by the war, the same as was Austria, we can assume that they will be returned as completely as Austria. Ten kingdoms with seven rulers, all under one man when completed, is the answer of this alliance to the prophetic student.

By the time that these nations are joined together, alliances can also be completed with the other two Aryan brothers. Then the Slavs will control the Ukraine, Russia and Poland will be united with the Baltic countries, and Turkey will control Asia Minor. At that time Turkey, also turning her attention to colonies lost during the World War, will undoubtedly—with the aid of her northern neighbors—turn her attention to Palestine.

If these things should work out as completely as they are indicated at the present, circumstances require no predictions from there on. All prophecies indicate the end.

BORN OF THE SPIRIT

are in Christ, they are now begotten by the Spirit through the Word of God, they are in contact with that Spirit life through Christ, but the time will come in their case, as with Christ, that they will be raised from the dead to die no more, for death will have no more dominion over them. (Rom. 8:11; 1 Cor. 15:51-56.) There is a beautiful analogy in birth of flesh and birth of Spirit.

Let us see if we can come to some understanding as to John 3:8, a verse about which much is said and so little understood, though Jesus expressed His thoughts so clearly. I have read and considered a number of translations other than the King James Version which I always use, but none of them gives any more beautiful view of the matter than it does. Hence, I give the passage as found therein, "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit." Just what did Jesus Christ mean by referring to the wind? Did He mean to say that the Spirit comes and goes like the wind, and you cannot tell where it comes from or where it goes? If He meant that why did He not say so? Instead, He said that the wind blows where it wills, and you know not from where it comes nor where it goes, and then added, "So is every one that is born of the Spirit. There is a comparison made here by the Master. What is is? The wind comes, the wind goes. Where? We know not: so will every one be who is born of the Spirit of God. Such can come, they can go, and no one will knew where they come from nor where they go.

Jesus Christ demonstrated this very fact after He arose from the dead. "When the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus and stood in the midst, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you" (John 20:19). Where did He come from? No one knew. Again, "And their eyes were opened, and they knew him; and he vanished out of their sight" (Luke 24:31). Where did He go? No one knew. Here was Spirit power of a Spirit-born Christ being manifested. When we have been born of the Spirit we shall be like Him, and, being like Him, we may then at will become invisible, then visible, to human sight, as Jesus teaches in John 3:8. (See also 1 John 3:2.)

Never have I seen any man that claims that he has experienced the birth of the Spirit that was able to demonstrate in any sense the powers as mentioned above. Most of those claims have come from those who believe in the immortality of the soul, and the direct operation of the Holy Spirit in conversion, separate and apart from the written Word of God. Much of the confusion that exists over this question comes through failure to understand that birth of the flesh comprehends at least three things, as heretofore mentioned; and that birth of the Spirit similarly comprehends at least three things. There could be no birth on the flesh plane without a begettal. Therefore, birth comprehends begettal. There may be a begettal, but without the preparation period there can be no deliverance. Therefore, the period of preparation is a part of the birth of the flesh. It is also a known fact that it is absolutely impossible to have both a begettal and deliverance at the same time on the flesh plane. We should remember that it is the man that is to be born of the Spirit.

So, if we follow the analogy made by the Master we will find that He taught the same progressive steps on the Spirit plane, from the begettal by the Spirit, through the period of preparation to, and including, the glorious act of deliverance that carries its happy participants past sin and death, to a life eternal beyond the veil of mortality.

The words "born" and "begotten" may appear confusing if we fail to understand that they are both translated from the Greek word gennuo, and that when reference is made to a being that draws its life from the kind of life lived, it should be considered begotten; but if applied to a being possessing an independent life, it should be considered born, in the sense of the act of deliverance. That those "in Christ" are in the begotten state is evident, for Paul says, "Though ye have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet have ye not many fathers: for in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel" (1 Cor. 4:15). They were begotten "through the gospel," or with the "word of truth," as it is written, "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of firstfruits of his creatures" (James 1:18). While in this begotten condition the begotten child feeds upon the right kind of food, the Word of God (Matt. 4:4). If nothing hinders "we shall reap, if we faint not" (Gal. 6:9).

Conversion has never been, cannot now be, and never will be the birth of the Spirit, for such would be a contradiction of terms and acts. It is against all reason and Bible teaching to so affirm. In conversion only a mental change is effected, while in the birth of the Spirit a physical, bodily change will take place, as proved by, "Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body" (Phil. 3:21), and "we shall be changed" (1 Cor. 15:51, 52).

That these few brief remarks may enable our readers to better enjoy further study of the subject is the prayer of the writer.

"For the coming of the Lord draweth nigh" (James 5:8).

God's Word declares that the Lord Jesus is really coming back again. "This same Jesus... shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven" (Acts 1:11). "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven" (1 Thess. 4:16). Christ said, "I will come again" (John 14:3). God's Word declares that Christ's coming will be very sudden, and very unexpected: "As the lightning cometh" (Matt. 24:27). "As a thief in the night" (1 Thess. 5:2). "In such an hour as ye think not" (Matt. 24:44). "In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye" (1 Cor. 15:52).

When the Lord's coming is very near we are to expect:

- (1) Wars, famines, pestilences, earthquakes. "Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places" (Matt. 24:7).
- (2) Revolutions. "Thus saith the Lord of hosts... I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come" (Hag. 2:7). "I will overturn, overturn, overturn it: and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is" (Ezek. 21:27).
- (3) World-wide distress. "Upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity" (Luke 21:25).
- (4) Jerusalem shall be liberated. "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled" (Luke 21:24).
- (5) Grave social conditions. "In the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents" (2 Tim. 3:2).
- (6) Disbelief in Christ's coming. "There shall come in the last days scoffers... saying, Where is the promise of his coming?" (2 Peter 3:3, 4).
- (7) Great travel facilities, and increased knowledge. In "the time of the end: many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased" (Dan. 12:4). "When ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the door" (Matt. 24:33).

God's Word declares: "As in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, . . . and knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be" (Matt. 24:38, 39).

God's Word declares what will happen when the Lord

Jesus comes: "The dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air" (1 Thess. 4:16, 17). "There was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh" (Matt. 25:6-10).

"God's Word declares what will happen to those who are left: "When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel" (2 Thess. 1:7-9).

God's Word declares why Christ has not yet come: "The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; but is longsuffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance" (2 Peter 3:9).

Now let all of us be ready to welcome His coming.

Show Them the Glory Side

Mrs. J. C. Waller, Cherry Valley, Ark.

To those whose work for Jesus is being hindered by others with our name, but not our hope:

Do we sometimes fail to present the truth so dear to us in a way that brings "glad tidings of great joy" to the hearers?

Do we offer only a gloomy blank in place of their most cherished hope that the righteous dead are now happy with Jesus in heaven? If we merely quote, "The dead know not any thing" (Eccl. 9:5), "The dead praise not the Lord" (Psalm 115:17), "In death there is no remembrance of thee: in the grave who shall give thee thanks?" (Psalm 6:5), "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest" (Eccl. 9:10), and forget to mention the Redeemer, whose death, resurrection, and coming again are so all-important, it is true that we will offer just a blank.

Without that Redeemer who holds the keys of death and the grave, none of the faithful mentioned in Hebrews 11 will ever be rewarded (Heb. 11:35-40), nor will those who sleep in Jesus (1 Cor. 15:16-18). Praise God! We do have a teaching to supplant their false hopes, that of the Redeemer who shall come again to reward all the faithful. Let us teach Him!

May He, "who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame," so guide us day by day, that by word and conduct, we may bear testimony to our faith in the glorious promise of His coming.

A Gentile Becomes a Christian

Today we are to study about Cornelius, an officer over a hundred soldiers. He was in Cæsarea at the ninth hour. He was a worshiper of God, but knew not Christ, for Christ so far had been proclaimed only to the Jewish people. Cornelius and "all his house" gave much alms and prayed to God often. We find that Cornelius saw an angel of God come to him in a vision. He was told to send to Joppa, a neighboring town, and ask for Peter.

As his servants went on their way, the next day at the sixth hour (noon) Peter went up on the housetop to pray. He became very hungry and, as he waited for his dinner to be served, saw a vision of a vessel let down before him from heaven, which looked like a great sheet held at the corners and filled with all kinds of beasts, creeping things, and fowls of the air. A voice told Peter to rise, kill, and eat. But Peter had been taught under the laws given to the Jewish people to eat only certain meats. Other kinds were unclean. So Peter said, "Not so, Lord: for I have never eaten any thing common or unclean."

The voice answered, "What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common." This was done three times, and the vessel was taken up into the heavens. While Peter studied over in his mind as to what this vision should mean, the men Cornelius had sent to Peter, arrived.

The Spirit of God, guiding Peter, told him to go with those men. So the next day Peter, and some of the brethren from Joppa, went with them to Cæsarea.

As they came to Cornelius' home, he met Peter and fell down at his feet and worshiped him! How do you think Peter felt? Peter, a true Christian, didn't want any glory for himself. He said, "Stand up; I myself also am a man."

Read Acts 10:28, 29 to see how Peter explained how he, a Jew, could come into the company and home of a Gentile.

Then our lesson for today took place. Aren't you glad and filled with praise to God, that any of us who fear God and do rightcous works are accepted with Him? Peter preached to Cornelius and his household. They also received the Holy Spirit as the disciples had, and talked with tongues. No further proof was needed to show Peter that these Gentiles were fully accepted of God! Then they were baptized.

So we see how Cornelius' prayers and good living were recognized by God, and we, too, are given the opportunity to become followers of Christ, for did not Christ die for all men?

Have you accepted Him as your Savior? Have you been baptized? If you understand fully, and believe with all your heart, don't wait any longer. These good people didn't wait, when they heard the good news, did they? (Acts 10: 43, 47, 48.)

You've Got to Dig

Said the little red rooster: "Believe me, things are tough.

Seems that the worms are scarcer, and I cannot find enough:

What's become of all those fat ones is a mystery to me;

There were thousands through that rainy spell—but now where can they be?

Then the old black hen who heard him didn't grumble or comptain, She had gone through lots of dry spells,

She had lived thro' floods of rain;

So she flew up on the grindstone, and she gave her claws a whet, As she said, "I've never seen the time there wasn't worms to get."

She picked a new and undug spot; the earth was hard and firm.

The little rooster jeered: "New ground! That's no place for a worm!"

The old black hen just spread her feet—she dug both fast and free.
"I must go to the worms," she said; "the worms won't come to me."

The rooster vainly spent his day, through habit, by the ways. Where fat, round worms had passed in squads back in the rainy days. When nightfall found him supperless, he growled in accents rough, "I'm hungry as a fowl can be. Conditions sure are tough."

He turned then to the old black hen and said: "It's worse with you; For you're not only hungry, but must be tired, too.

I rested while I watched for worms, so I feel fairly perk.
But how are you? without worms, too, and after all that work?

The old black hen hopped to her perch and dropped her eyes to sleep.

And murmured in a drowsy tone, "Young man, hear this and weep:

I'm full of worms and happy, for I've caten like a pig.

The worms are there as always—but boy, I had to dig!"

THANK YOU BROTHER BLYTH

Bro. F. T. Blyth, 2304 Noble Rd., Cleveland, Ohio, has just sent us nine new subscriptions to The Restitution Herald, Such cooperation not only puts joy into our work, but savors of the progressive spirit that any such work must have to succeed and fulfill its mission. ... Thank you, Bro. Blyth.

A LETTER FROM SISTER EIDEMILLER

Dear Brethren.

Let us join together to pay this debt that mars the pages of our valuable paper. It em barrasses us to have this debt still recorded against us when we hand the paper out to other people to read.

We cannot do without our Restitution Herald, and wish that it went into the home of every member. Those that are not taking it do not know what a feast of spiritual food they are missing.

All should be busy. The Bible teaches that unless we work we need not expect any re-ward. What we may plan to do for the Lord must be done quickly, as the signs indicate we are near the end of the age. There is no time to waste. I recall years ago of hearing one of our ministers saying that we do not have to do anything very bad to miss entering the kingdom, but to just do nothing. Dear ones, let us make every effort to enter that Happy Land.
We thank the writers for their valuable articles furnished each week through our paper. Mrs. Anna Eidemiller,

ST. LOUIS NEWS

We arrived in St. Louis, Mo., Tuesday, Feb. 14, and enjoyed four days with the brethren. After a basket supper at the home of Bro, and Sr. Claude Graham, a talk was given on "The Things for Which We Stand." Wednesday night we all met for preaching services at the hall where the church and Sunday school meet.
"Is the Church a Success?" was the subject.

Thursday evening we had a Bible class at the home of Bro. and Sr. Waggoner. On Friday four of us drove to Bismarck, Mo., about ninety miles south and west of St. Louis, to see Sr. Sutterfield, who has been suffering with a broken hip since November. She is eighty-two years of age, and is unable to be up, but her son cares for her and keeps house. Their faith is strong, even in this time of dis-

GOLDEN RULE HOME

Golden Rule Home wishes to come to the brethren over the country with a request for help on a problem which is facing us this spring. We have refrained in recent years from asking for aid for any specific needs.

A deal of work has been done each year in improving the appearance and comfort of the Home. Each matron, together with her assistant helpers, has put much of effort and labor into the task, ungrudgingly, unselfishly. Ali of it has been needful. In a house of this size, constant replacements and repairs are neces-

This year we are having to meet the rug problem-floor coverings. Last year we laid a new floor in the dining room, and had a good inlaid linoleum cemented down in the dining room and kitchen. We also purchased a congoleum rug for the downstairs "hospital room."

Our other floor coverings are very much worn. The two living rooms need to be re-carpeted. One rug is badly worn, the other will give considerable service if moved to a room where it will see less hard wear.

Five of our rooms upstairs, also the long halls, should have either linoleum or rugs. We are suggesting linoleum, as it makes for easier cleaning and better sanitation.

We are asking you for donations for this purpose. Send them either to the National Bible Institution treasurer, Miss Leota B. Hanson, or to me at Golden Rule Home.

MEET BROTHER HATHAWAY

My parents brought me to this section of the country from Illinois in 1852. Roads were nothing but trails. School advantages were very limited. How things could change so much in so short a time is a wonder to me. We wintered in Portland, Ore., our first winter out here. There were then about four hundred people in Portland; no sidewalks, but just split logs for walks. My father and his brother made the first plank walk. Now the city numbers 302,000, and there are miles and miles of pavement, electric wires all over the country, and now they have even damned up the grand old Columbia River to give us more power.

The world is surely changing. Bro, Austin's articles under the title of "Our Changing World" were very timely, and gave us some good pointers from the old reliable Book.

Having read the Bible a good deal, I joined a popular church when I was about eighteen years of age. But I could not understand much of the Bible, as it seemed to contradict itself in many places. There were too many things taught by that denomination that I could not endorse. One was the immortality of the soul. I asked some of the leading members to explain what the soul is. They answered that it is the thinking part of man. But, as thinking comes from the brain which is as destructible as any other part of the body, I could not see how the thinking part of man could be immortal.

Another doctrine that I could not accept, which I was taught by the church of my youth, was infant baptism.

When I was about forty years of age I met Bro. Prosser, heard him preach a few times, and he gave me some instructions about how to study the Bible. Then I heard Bro. Corbaley preach; then Bro. William Skeels. I obeyed the gospel by baptism, and how glad I was to get some understanding of God's great plan. It was so plain to me that I thought I could convert many, but I soon found out to the contrary.

I am now an old man, just watching and waiting for the Savior to come and bring peace to a troubled world.—H. B. Hathaway.

GRACELLE ELVA HUGHES

Gracelle Elva Moone was born in Machias. N. Y. At an early age she moved with her parents, Bro. and Sr. Peter O. Moone, to Niagara Falls.

Soon after their arrival in Niagara Falls. Bro. and Sr. Moone associated with the Blessed Hope Church of God, and Sr. "Grace," as she was familiarly known, was baptized by Bro. George Black. She was an active member of the church, and taught a Sunday school class for some time.

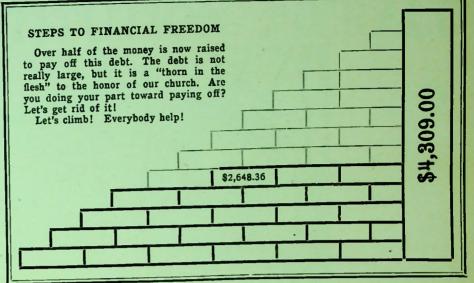

On March 21, 1925, she was married to Bro.

Harley E. Hughes by Bro. G. E. Marsh in the Blessed Hope Church.

In 1927 Bro. and Sr. Hughes moved from Niagara Falls to Waterford, Pa., and later to Mill Village, Pa., where Bro. Hughes owns a general store. They resided in Mill Village till the time of Sr. Hughes death, Feb. 5, 1939.

The writer conducted the funeral services at the Levine Funeral Home in Cambridge Springs, Pa., and tried to comfort the be-reaved husband and other relatives and friends with promises of redemption, from the Word of God. We laid Sr. Hughes to rest in the cemetery at Waterford, to await the eall of the Master.

If all that we say In a single day, With never a word left out, Were printed each night In clean black and white Twould prove queer reading, no doubt. And then just suppose Ere one's eyes he could close He must read the record through. Then wouldn't one sigh, And wouldn't one try

Provided by the love and sympathy of the entire brotherhood of the Church of God, Golden Rule Home assures to the members of its Family the comfort, security, and solicitous care which the word "home" always suggests.

Here the anxieties of earlier and more active life are laid aside forever. No threat of eviction for non-payment of rent or taxes or other indebtedness troubles the hearts of the residents of Golden Rule Home!

No doctor or hospital bills, no grocery, coal, or light bills to be met the first of the month, bring fear to the minds of the Golden Rule Home Family!

All such obligations and burdens are taken from the shoulders of these older ones immediately upon their entrance into the Home and are carried thereafter by the Golden Rule Home itself, which is amply able to bear the load on their behalf.

A hearty Christian welcome awaits all who seek the protection and lifelong support the Home provides.

Conditions of entrance into Golden Rule Home are as liberal as absolute security permits. Write for full particulars concerning the Home and its advantages. Or, better still, come and visit the Home itself and let the Family tell their own story of its advantages and comforts.

The Nature of the Soul

By Harold Hardesty

"Behold, all souls are mine; as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is mine: the soul that sinneth, it shall die" (Ezekiel 18:4).

DESPITE the fact that the One who created us tells us plainly that the soul is subject to death, the great majority of people prefer to believe that the soul of man is deathless. This indifference to God's teaching had its commencement in the Garden of Eden. God told Adam that he was not to cat of a certain tree, saying, "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." But the serpent contradicted God, saying, "Ye shall not surely die," and Adam and Eve preferred to listen to the serpent. Because man disobeyed God, and "lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live for ever: therefore the Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden." If there is in reality a part of man which is immortal and cannot die, then Adam is still living. This would mean that God's efforts to keep Adam from living forever were futile, and that He and not the serpent was the one who did the lying. Yet we know that God cannot lie (Titus 1:2) and that His efforts are never futile (Num. 23:19; Rom. 4:21). The false doctrine of inherent immortality was an invention of Satan to get people to obey him rather than God.

How tenaciously men hold to that doctrine!

Scientists often develop theories in order to discover new facts. Such theories are based, more or less, on coujecture, and are never accepted as factual until they have been subjected to every possible test and proved to be true. But the average theologian is content to accept theories based wholly on assumption, and untested by known facts. Particularly is this true in the case of the immortal-soul theory. The believer in soul immortality assumes that the soul is an entity separate from the body. There is no real basis for any such assumption. Because the life processes, such as the senses, emotions, intelligence, will, etc., are attributes of the soul and have their source in the soul, he reasons that the soul might very easily exist independently of the body.

Let us see what facts do to such reasoning.

I know a man whose mental faculties are impaired by disease. Although he formerly possessed normal intelligence, at present his intelligence compares to that of a moron. If intelligence is determined not by the brain structure but by an immortal, incorruptible "soul" within, the impairment of this man's mental faculties must of necessity be traced to that soul. That his brain was affected by the disease is affirmed by reputable doctors. But, according to popular theory, his "soul" could not have been affected by the disease for the very reason that it is supposed to be incorruptible. Thus, the impairment of his intelligence can be traced only to the impairment of his brain. This leaves us with but one conclusion: that intelligence has its source in the body structure. If that is true of one of the life processes—that they all have source in the body structure. We have already acknowledged that they have their source in the soul, and we have now found that they have their source in the body. This is all very consistent by reason of the fact that the soul includes the body, and is not separate from it.

consistent by reason of the fact that the soul includes the body, and is not separate from it.

In man's creation, "the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became (not incarnated) a living soul." When we analyze this statement of Scripture, we find that the soul has two component parts, namely: "the dust of the ground" (the elements and compounds actually found in the soil) and "the breath of life" (air containing oxygen, the element essential to all earthly life). The dust of the ground was fashioned into the form of a man. At this point man was nothing more than a lifeless body. He was not a soul in any sense of the word, dead or otherwise. It was after the breath was breathed into his nostrils that man became a soul. He became a "living soul"; literally, a soul

"Safety First"

"Safety first" is a slogan not yet overworked. It is one of more than good common sense, for it borders on necessity. As if breathing ozone, it refuses to die, outliving all other slogans, not excepting those of America's most ardent politicians.

The "Stop! Look! Listen!" warning at railroad crossings has saved lives that none can number, and has been America's most exacting statute, the death penalty being hurriedly inflicted upon many who disobeyed it.

"Haste makes waste." Moments of meditation save years of sorrow—Corrigan notwithstanding. When it is proved that he did not lie awake nights, meditating his tail-to flight, it will then be soon enough to quote that the exception proves the rule. Surely, he used gasoline for fuel, and he had supply enough to span the sea.

Let any bargainer overstep the boundary lines of safety, and, like Judas, he will soon "go to his own place" (Acts 1:25). Why will mortal man flirt with Flapper Chance? First, at least, he should choose his burial place,

Undeclared War

America is at war. The enemy, crafty and deadly, has slain hundreds of thousands. Like the Japanese army in China, our enemy, in an undeclared war, parades the streets of our chief cities, and overruns our fair country. Our enemy is double battalioned. He attacks in ever-silent germs, and stalks in stealthy accidents.

Six million Americans are sick. Including time lost from work, America's annual sick bill is $10,000,000,000. That amount of money would more than build forty-one hospitals in every state of the Union, allowing $5,000,000 to build and equip each hospital. In 1938 about 240,000 persons, including 70,000 babies under one year of age, all of whom could have been saved with correct care, died—unnecessarily died! The fate of chance is cruel.

Within the past fourteen years more people have been killed by automobile accidents than have fallen in all American wars. $2,500,000,000 annually go up where (?) in ruined cars and property damage. This amount of money would finance 1,000 churches, at $2,000 per church per year, for 1,250 years. Did I make a mistake in my figures? Americans can't be that careless? Figures say, "You are."

Also undeclared, doubt and infidelity are taking their costly toll. Millions of people are spiritually careless.

Religious Safety

The cost of denying Jesus is manifold greater, and without any possible gain, than is the cost of Christianity which, at the least, does some good. What is gained in adultery? Syphilis is its price! What is gained in drunkenness? Poverty, broken homes, insanity, are its bills!

Oh! What a harbor is Jesus! How does it happen that the voice of this Jew is always in the right? Two thousand years have not shattered, but rather proved, His Golden Rule. Stop adultery; then you have conquered its ills that legislatures are grappling with! Convert "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God"; then you have solved highway accidents! Make food out of grain; then drink will lose its sting!

Christianity, irrespective of its "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory" (2 Cor. 4:17), is today's most profitable investment. Christianity pays its way, and appears weak only when it is given no opportunity to work. Christians are "more than conquerors" (Rom. 8:37), for they alone gain "higher ground" to bless the very ones they take it from.

Why do men reject the Christ? The safest harbor in all the world is Jesus. Stop at the crossroads of life! Look! Listen! Be sure of your way. Meditate. None win in their bargains with the world. Beware of the germ of doubt. To accept chance is to unnecessarily die! You cannot afford to be careless in your attitude toward Him who said, "I am the way."

Prophetic Safety

The student of God's Word has a bright vision of safety. "The earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea" (Hab. 2:14). "Israel shall dwell safely" (Jer. 23:6), and "Jerusalem shall be safely inhabited" (Zech. 14:11).

In Jerusalem "the streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing" (Zech. 8:5), "and the inhabitant shall not say, I am sick" (Isa. 33:24).

Those who have "escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust" shall be made "partakers of the divine nature," and given "an entrance... into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." (2 Peter 1:4-11.) "Fashioned like unto his glorious body" (Phil. 3:21), "we shall reign on the earth" (Rev. 5:10).

The Gospel of the Kingdom of God

By Charles T. Lindsay

WE READ in Ephesians 3:6 that "the Gentiles should be fellowheirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his (God's) promise in Christ by the gospel." What body and what promise does this speak of? Paul is speaking of the body of believers and of the promise made to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Paul says, "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed" (Gal. 1:8). The one gospel was preached to Abraham, promising that "in thee shall all nations be blessed" (Gal. 3:8).

In making known the gospel to Abraham, God made a covenant with him, saying, "Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates" (Gen. 15:18). "I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession" (Gen. 17:8). "In thee shall all families of the earth be blessed" (Gen. 12:3). "Thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies; and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed" (Gen. 22:17, 18). These same promises were made known to Isaac and Jacob. (Gen. 26:2, 3; 28:3, 4, 12, 14.)

The seed spoken of in these promises, who is to "possess the gate of his enemies," is Christ, for Paul says, "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ" (Gal. 3:16).

Abraham, and those of his faith, could not receive the inheritance of the land promised (in which he, during his natural lifetime, was a sojourner and a stranger), until Christ the "seed" to whom the promise specifically referred (Gal. 3:19) should come to bless all nations of the earth. Hence it is said of them, "These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth" (Heb. 11:13).

In looking "afar off," Abraham saw the day of Christ and "was glad" (John 8:56), believing that He would come as "a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the fathers" (Rom. 15:8). The covenant was typically confirmed in the sacrificial offering that Abraham made (Gen. 15:7-18), also in his offering of Isaac, in which Abraham received Isaac from the dead "in a figure" (Heb. 11:19), which also prefigured Christ's death and resurrection in the full confirmation of the covenant. (Gen. 22; Heb. 11:17-19.)

When Mary realized that she was to give birth to this very person promised to Abraham, as the seed in whom all nations of the earth should be blessed, she gave eloquent utterance to the wonderful work her heaven-begotten Son was to do in fulfillment (after confirmation) of the promises:

"He hath shewed strength with his arm; he hath scattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts. He hath put down the mighty from their scats, and exalted them of low degree. He hath filled the hungry with good things; and the rich he hath sent empty away. He hath holpen his servant Israel, in remembrance of (or fulfillment of) his mercy; as he spake to our fathers, to Abraham, and his seed for ever" (Luke 1:51-55).

This beautiful prophecy has not yet been fulfilled; only confirmed. Its fulfillment requires the return of Christ to the earth. We are, therefore, assured that the heavens will retain Christ only "until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets." Then God will "send Jesus Christ." (Acts 3:20, 21.)

That Abraham did not receive the inheritance during his natural lifetime is positively declared in the Bible. After giving a brief account of Abraham's removal to the land of Canaan, Stephen says, "And he (God) gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on: yet he promised that he would" (Acts 7:5). Here is a statement that God did promise the land to Abraham; also that He has not yet fulfilled that promise. Will God fulfill it? According to some teaching the promise will be broken. But God's oath cannot be broken. His promise cannot fail. It was unconditional. Hence, Micah exclaims: "Thou wilt perform the truth to Jacob, and the mercy to Abraham, which thou hast sworn unto our fathers from the days of old" (Micah 7:20).

Now, if this is the one gospel, it follows that a gospel that offers to the father of the faithful and to the children of faithful Abraham (Gal. 3:7) an inheritance in heaven must be that so-called gospel "which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ" (Gal. 1:6, 7). We, therefore, submit a few questions for our readers' serious reflection:

If the place that Abraham was "after to receive for an inheritance" was in heaven, how do you account for the fact that he took a journey there to see it with his eyes, walked through the length and breadth of it, and sojourned therein "with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise? (See Gen. 12:1; 13:14-17; Heb. 11:8, 9.)

If the Promised Land is heaven, and cannot be seen this side the grave, how was it that Moses ascended the hill of Pisgah to look at it? (Deut. 34:1-4.)

If the promised inheritance is in heaven, and not on earth, how was it that the Lord showed Moses "all the land of Gilead, unto Dan, and all Naphtali, and the land of Ephraim, and Manasseh, and all (Please turn to page 3)

ALWAYS READY

By John Denchfield

JESUS said, "Be ye therefore ready also: for the Son of man cometh at an hour when ye think not" (Luke 12:40).

There comes to my mind an article read some time ago concerning the activities of our United States Coast Guard in which emphasis was placed upon their motto, Semper Paratus, or "Always Ready." It was indeed thrilling to visualize how boats, ropes, and various other paraphernalia were always kept in position, and in constant repair. Motors were kept always in perfect mechanical condition. Men were ever going through routine drill, again and again, to become thoroughly acquainted with each particular action of this lifesaving machine. Here were men pretending in practice that they might attain the highest possible degree of efficiency in saving lives, men watching day and night along the short, men wide awake and listening at radios, men with the aid of powerful glasses watching the sea closely from their towers. Every man on duty was always tense, watchful, ready: day after day, night after night, week after week. There was always this constant preparation and vigilance, with never a moment's relaxation. Why?

We know, as these men of the Guard know, that at any moment the watch may sight a ship floundering just beyond the breakers, or an SOS call may split the air waves. There is no time then to awake and prepare, if lives would be saved. Immediately, a message of encouragement and hope must be sent back across the waves. Every man, with keen mind and active muscle, must jump to his task. Motors must respond at the first turn of the shaft. All equipment must be ready for immediate use. With almost miraculous speed the business of lifesaving begins.

Is it worth while for our Coast Guard to maintain its standard of being "Always Ready"? Ask those to whom it has been the margin between life and death.

Our churches are sometimes called "lifesaving stations," but I have yet to see or hear of one which was worthy of this title when compared to the standard of our Coast Guard. About the only things I've ever found churches "always ready" for were arguments, scandal, or an excuse to avoid activity. Listen, members of God's church, and prove yourselves! Are you constantly seeking out those about to be broken on the rocks of sin? When you do find them, are you ready (prepared through contact with Jesus, study of God's Word, and with the resulting influence and power in your life) to give actual support and lifesaving aid? Are you always ready?

The Israelites of old wore very loose flowing garments which were much of a hindrance to them in time of action, much as a bed sheet draped about the shoulders would be to us. To overcome this difficulty, the girdle was used so that in times of physical activity it might be drawn down tightly about the loins, keeping the many folds of the garment in place and out of the way.

Thus, we understand that as God spoke to His people on the occasion of the first Passover, saying, "Thus shall ye eat it; with your loins girded, your shoes on your feet, and your staff in your hand" (Ex. 12:11), He desired them to be ready when the command to march was given. Later, and to us, Paul commands, "Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth" (Eph. 6:14); Peter advises, "Wherefore gird up the loins of your minds" (1 Peter 1:13); and Jesus urges, "Be ye therefore ready also" (Matt. 12:40).

The central point of emphasis in the story of the ten virgins which Jesus gave is that of being constantly prepared. Half of that group of ten had been ready previous to the coming of the bridegroom and, if given time, might have prepared again, but only those who were ready at that particular moment (because they had been ready all the time) "went in." And the "door was shut."

Time cannot be retraced. All realize this truth, yet usually overlook it. In a play, listened to recently, a young man about to die pleaded with Death for just one more day in which to set things right. His plea was granted—but that was fiction. We know that time does not turn back! Our present day ends at twelve o'clock midnight. When our days are crowded we sometimes long for the ability to lengthen them, but we know any such longing is all in vain.

The "darky" who said, "Ah'll finish this job tonight ef it takes me till tomorrow to do it," was mistaken. There are certain and definite periods of time for all things, and when the final moment arrives the door is shut forever. We know the time of ending of our day, of the week, as well as the month and year. We know the duration of our periods of vacation (if any) and the hours of our work. We know the dates of payment of debts, and of current bills. Yes, we keep some hours and dates fairly well in mind, and gauge our lives accordingly, but the greatest event of our lives is in the future, and "of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only" (Matt. 24:36). How, then, can we be ready at this great moment? The only way is by being always ready!

The mother who advised her boy, saying, "Do not go near the water until you have learned to swim," voiced a philosophy which could never bear fruit. Beware of similar error.

Paul tells us that the greatest event of all time—none other than the second coming of Jesus Christ to take out His followers for service as joint heirs with Him in His Father's kingdom—shall take place "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump" (1 Cor. 15:52). These words ought to impress upon us, as never before, the absolute necessity of preparing now; for just how much can we expect to make ready in the "twinkling of an eye"? Twinkle the eye just now! How long did it take?

Can you change a lifetime of selfish, useless, and filthy thinking into charitable purity of thought "without spot or blemish"—in just a moment? Can you cleanse the inside so that it will harmonize with all you've been pretending to be since joining the church—in just a twinkling? Can you soften, in a moment, the same heart you've been hardening for years? One might go on and on, but, conclusively, can you do anything "in the twinkling of an eye"? Definitely, now is the time to make ready. Then continue always ready.

We may be well aware "that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand," but who can say just how much time shall yet elapse before the "trump shall sound."

I would emphasize here for the benefit of those who, because their interpretation of prophecy may not admit of the coming of Christ in the near future, that any of us may cease to live at any moment, and "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest" (Eccl. 9:10).

The one and only, yet all-sufficient, assurance we have that we shall be ready at Christ's coming is that "the Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God" now, and, since nothing "shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus (Please turn to page 9)

Youth to the Fore

By Mary A. Gesin

IT IS OFTEN said that this is youth's day. This is a young people's world. To those in the younger years of life are given the opportunities and the advantages that formerly came to those of maturer years only.

In many ways and for innumerable reasons it is well that it is so. For, youth with its fearless vision is often able to accomplish what added years of caution and prudence could not do. The impossible happens before our very eyes, and the "I told you so" does not need to be said.

Even more than the world, the church needs youth. For the accomplishment of its program too often those of younger years are overlooked. Their loyalties and their talents are decried, their vision and their ardor disparaged.

In connection with the church is the finest "training camp" for youth in future service to God and to the world. But too frequently it ends there. We refer to the Sunday school, the place where youth meets youth under the guidance of adult minds tempered by years of experience and devotion.

Many of our city and larger town churches boast of a live and growing Sunday school. And well they may, for it numbers, frequently, three times the number on the church membership roll. Why does it happen, then, that that same roll does not grow year by year as the pupils of the school arrive at the teen age?

Have you ever visited a church other than your own, and noted in the interim between the Sunday school session and the following service the exodus of those in the best years of life? Have you wondered that the attendance at worship service was composed of "old people"? Have you pondered the causes for this, and the resultant decay of the church, in other denominations if not in your own?

If you have, you find yourself in the dilemma of many other leaders and teachers. May not the reasons, some of them at least, be laid at our own doors? Have we, as teachers, invited our pupils to remain for the services following? Have we, more important still, sought out their talents and preferences, and used whatever of value we have found? Have we, most important of all, made the work of the church so attractive by our own outlook upon life that they should desire to assist in its accomplishments?

There are as many avenues of service as there are talents latent in our young people. It is not necessary that all of them possess musical ability, though that is where many of them are appreciated deeply. Some of them can perform the humble duties more gracefully and with less effort than we older ones. The lowly tasks that are the accompaniment of every organization are just as essential, just as worthy of reward, as are the more spectacular duties.

In the February 14 issue of this paper, Brother G. M. Birkey pointed out in no uncertain terms, "Our Responsibility to the Young of America." He urged us to do all in our power to encourage our young people to read and study and live God's Word through the example of our own lives. Reread Brother Birkey's thoughtful exhortation, particularly you older ones. We need its admonitions.

And you young people (we trust many are reading these lines), know assuredly that your pastor desires your assistance. He earnestly prays that the service of God may be made so alluring by his own life and that of his coworkers that you, too, will want above all else to be numbered with them. You will subscribe yourself and all that you are.

The church needs your forward-looking vision. It needs your courageous loyalty. It needs your undaunting optimism in these trying days. The Church of God needs you.

Miracles That Testify

By Harvey Krogh, Jr.

THE nineteen hundred thirty-nine autos are more streamlined than ever before. The reason is not so much for beauty as it is for the efficiency and economy of a car that is less air resistant. The country schoolhouse is no more a pretty little building, but an odd-shaped structure with high windows on the north side only. What is the idea? The answer: such a building is more practical, giving the proper kind of light which is best for children's eyes.

We are living in a practical world, and the things that have been simply for beauty are not as popular as they once were. While we are speaking of practical things we should not fail to mention Christianity, for it is the most practical thing in the world.

When Christ founded His church He did so as a step in the fulfillment of the promise God gave to Abraham in Genesis 22:18, "And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." Christ was that seed of Abraham, through whom those blessings are coming and shall come. When the Son of God walked among men He showed the benefits of obeying and honoring God. He showed how practical and how useful are the blessings of God.

He fed the poor, He healed the sick, He restored sight to the blind, He gave hearing to the deaf, He raised the dead, He gave rest to the weary, He corrected the sinner, He condemned the oppressor, He denounced sin, He encouraged the weak, and He blessed the children. Every one of the things that he did was a benefit to mankind. They were practical, and they are still.

When Jesus was about to depart from His apostles He instructed them to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. The best follower of that commandment was probably the greatest evangelist that ever preached, the Apostle Paul. After he had sowed the seed that later brought forth the Corinthian church, he confessed his method. "And I, brethren, when I came unto you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God. For I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified" (1 Cor. 2:1, 2). It might be better if more ministers didn't know any more than what Paul knew when he came to the Corinthians. "And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power" (v. 4). There was no trickery in Paul's method, but he demonstrated the power of the Spirit of God.

If a salesman would come to you next summer when it is too warm for comfort, and try to sell you a little device for ten dollars that was supposed to keep your home cool all summer long with no cost other than the purchase price, would you say, "Yes, I'll take one"? No! You would first say, "Let us see how it works." You would demand a demonstration. And if the salesman could not demonstrate his machine, you would not care to buy it merely on the strength of his word.

Paul demonstrated what God could do through him, and thereby proved the benefit of believing on Christ, and of becoming a Christian. The reason for demonstrating was, as he said, "That your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God" (v. 5).

So many times man's wisdom is very impractical, but God's power is always efficient and effective. Paul performed miracles that men might know that God's power was with him. There are men today who believe that God still performs miracles, and the Bible does not say that God shall cease to perform His mighty works. There are miracles that God must perform through us that we might demonstrate the power of God's Spirit. These miracles are not necessarily miracles of healing and the like, for these, sometimes, do not convince the people of this enlightened age. They will say that it is another trick, or a discovery of modern man.

But there are strong evidences of the power of God's Spirit working today in men's lives. These miracles, which we may speak of as products of God's Spirit, are "love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance" (Gal. 5:22, 23). The natural man cannot imitate or duplicate these things that are produced by the power of God. Natural man may be able to almost reproduce the miracle of healing, but he cannot and does not even try to produce the fruits of the Spirit. These things are brought forth only as the child of God yields himself to the influence of God.

It was with the power of God that Paul demonstrated that he was a true representative of God by performing miracles, and by living the life that he did among the people.

The world has become skeptical because it has seen too much false Christianity. If Christianity doesn't turn a "dead beat" into an honest man, the world doesn't want any of that kind of Christianity. If Christianity doesn't give the drunkard, that professes Christ, a different kind of appetite, the world doesn't want that kind of Christianity. If it doesn't straighten out the "crook," or turn the sinner from the wickedness of his way, or make a man a better citizen, the world doesn't want any Christianity.

The world is looking for practical things, and it has a right to practical things. Therefore, we need practical Christianity. We also need the doctrine, for it is by the doctrine or teaching of Christ that we know what to practice. The first thing that most people will ever know about Christ and Christianity is what they see in your life and in mine. Paul told the Corinthians that they were an open letter "known and read of all men" (2 Cor. 3:2). Men can look at you and know who your God is. They can look at the congregation and tell something about the pastors that have led the flock. Everything and anything that you do is a reflection upon Christ if you profess to be His follower.

Are you demonstrating God's power in your life, and letting all men know that you are Christ's disciple by the love that you have for others?

The China Inland Mission and the Doctrine of the Trinity

Extracts of Correspondence With a Missionary Part 2

By R. H. Judd

T MAY be well to point out here what seems to me to be A a necessary basis for Scripture interpretation of fundamental doctrines. Any interpretation that is not in harmony with other clear and explicit statements of Scripture. obviously cannot be regarded as finally correct, for real Scripture truth is always harmonious with proved facts. Your interpretation of John 1:1 is a case in point. Instead of accepting the language of the statement you quote, "The Word was God," in its natural and simple sense, you import into it the meaning of a personal existence to which you give the name, or rather, title, of "God," and call it "God the Son" by way of distinction. Such an interpretation at once comes into conflict with the words of the Lord Jesus that His Father is "the only true God" (John 17:3), and "the only God" (John 5:44, R.V.). Obviously, your interpretation cannot be correct, for it creates another God beside "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ" (Eph. 1:3).

If the words are taken in their natural sense, as stated, there is no conflict with other scriptures. There is no precedent in Scripture for your interpretation, but there is much against it. Whereas, if taken naturally there is no antagonism with John 17:3, and there are many examples of where Scripture speaks of the Word as being considered separately and in conjunction "with God," having the same honor as God Himself, indeed, as being God. For instance, God says, "My word shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that whereunto I have sent it" (Isa. 55:11). Here God's Word (promise) is regarded as good as Himself. "He could swear by none greater," so "he sware by himself" (Heb. 6:13). Again, His Word is likened to a hammer, but it is "God himself" who does the work. Yet again, He magnifies His Word above His name. (See Psalm 138:2.) In all these instances, and others, God's Word is given the same dignity as Himself, yet it in no sense interferes with His absolute Deity, as "the only true God." Your interpretation attempts an impossibility. It is absolutely impossible for one God to be "with" another God, and it still be true "there is but one God." When the prelude of John's Gospel is viewed in the light of Genesis 1 with its oft-repeated statement, "God said," there is complete harmony with other scriptures, and if logos is translated "wisdom," as I think it is in the Septuagint, it is also in harmony with Proverbs 8.

Now then, as to John 1:14: If you had taken time to study the logical meaning of the language used, you could hardly have failed to see how completely it demolishes your theory (for it is nothing more) of making distinction between the child born and the Son given. Let us see the predicament in which you place yourself by making the distinction mentioned, and your flat denial that the Son was born. Not only do you contradict clear and positive statements of Scripture-in itself a serious matter-but you would have us, like yourself, assume without any authority, that logos of John 1:1 was a preexistent personal being, namely, "the Son of God." According to previous statements of yours, already noted, regarding John 18:37, "To this end was I born," you say that Christ here spoke only of His body-not of Himself. This you affirm was given to Him. Strangely enough, however, you maintain that "the Son" and "the Word" are identical-one and the same being. Now read your quotation from John 1:14 over again, "And the Word became (or 'was made') flesh." May I ask, If the Word was made (or became) flesh how are you going to distinguish between the Son of God and His body?

When you and I were boys together at school—over fifty years ago—we were taught that things that are equal to the same thing are equal to one another, and ten more fifty years will not alter that axiom. Apply that to the verse quoted, and see if you can escape the conclusion that when the Son of God said, "To this end was I born" He spoke of Himself, for He spoke of His flesh—"the Word (become) flesh." Christ gave His flesh for the life of the world (John 6:51). Elsewhere, we read that He "gave himself" (Heb. 7:27; 9:14; also Eph. 5:2).

Now as to my charge that you deny Scripture when you say that "Rev." Baron "told no untruth when he asserted that the Son was not born." Scripture after scripture states emphatically that the Son was "born." David Baron diametrically opposes Scripture, using the very language of Scripture to deny it. (OVER)

In Galatians 4:4 we read, "When the fulness of the time was come God sent forth his Son made (R.V., born) of a woman." If you accept Dr. Denny's statement that "the power to look at a sentence and see clearly the parts of which it is composed, and the meaning of the words one by one and together, is absolutely necessary to anyone who aspires to read the Bible understandingly," then there is no mistaking the meaning of the above scripture. It tells us who sent the Son, how He was sent, of what He was made, where He came from, and when.

In Matthew 1:23 we have almost a parallel of the language of Isaiah 9:6. In each instance the pronoun "his" has unquestioned reference to both the child and the son as one and the same individual. Further, the expression, "bring forth a son," is simply stating in other words that the Son was born. As a medical missionary of many years experience in China you will know that the Chinese, like the Hebrews, give preference to sons. Mary is here told, not only that she will have a child, but that the child will be a son. Put in terse language, Scripture repeatedly declares that the Son was "conceived," "brought forth." "born," and as such He was both "sent" and "given" by God. Nowhere does Scripture state, as does David Baron, that one was born and the other was "not born." Not only does David Baron speak an untruth here, but as you would have seen in my article of February 22, 1938, "Faithfully Handling the Word of God," he actually resorts to dishonest interpretation in order to make echad mean compound unity.

Every effort made by such leaders to prove the doctrine of the Trinity only lands them more deeply in confusion and wrong. The China Inland Mission in the February issue of Young China for the same year, for once departs from the usual practice of the Mission in refraining from stating in its official magazines any attempt at Scriptural proof of the doctrines held by them to be vital, but actually seeks to prove that "JESUS IS GOD" (caps not mine) by claiming that Jesus used the words, "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God" with reference to Himself as such. If that were true, how would it be possible for Him to say later to His disciples, "I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God and your God" (John 20:17)? We have no hesitation in saying that the language of the China Inland Mission is (unintentional) blasphemy.

Probably John's Gospel, more than any other book in the New Testament, is relied on for support of the doctrines of the Trinity, and that "Jesus is God." If the latter were true, no author recording it would omit mention of so momentous a claim in summarizing the purposes of his book. Yet John, in 20:31, does not even suggest it. Here is what he says, "These things are written, that ye might believe (that Jesus is God? No!) that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name." We might pertinently ask, Does it matter which we believe in order that we may have life? We might also point out that "Jesus" is here said to be "the Christ," and that "the Christ" is said to be "the Son of God," which calls to mind another well known axiom.

But there is a historical aspect to this matter of the Trinity, from which the supporters of the Trinity can find no escape. The early Christians did not teach it. Robert Foster, D.D., professor in the Cumberland Presbyterian Theological Seminary, in his work on "Systematic Theology," says, "None of the early fathers were Trinitarians. Theodosius, the tenth professedly Christian emperor of Rome, was the first to be baptized into the faith of the Trinity, A.D. 379, and it was not until A.D. 380 that the Nicene Creed was imposed by edict on his subjects." Dr. Summerbell also makes a similar statement. Here, undoubtedly, is one of the chief explanations why the doctrine of the Trinity became the teaching of theological colleges and ecclesiastical institutions and the threat of perishing everlastingly, which was attached to it, brought both pulpit and pew under bondage to it.

P.S.—We cannot be too careful in our choice of language to express Scriptural ideas. It is the writer's firm belief that it is not necessary to embody Scriptural ideas in language that Scripture itself does not use. To do so is often the thin end of the wedge that leads to increasing error.

The theological terms used to express the birth of the Christ well illustrate this important point. From pulpit and press we very commonly find leaders of Christian teaching giving expression to what they call "the doctrine of the Incarnation." The statement is intended to imply, as indeed it does as defined in the dictionary, "Christ's assumption of human flesh." Thus, the word "incarnation" implies a thought contrary to Scripture, for the emphatic declaration of Scripture is that it was "the Word became flesh," and not that a preexistent, living being (which from the necessity of the case must itself predicate bodily existence) became the tenant of still another living body. In John 20:31 Jesus the Christ, and the Son of God, are descriptive of one personality only, and if Scripture language is used there is not a shadow of a doubt that He was "conceived," "brought forth," and born of the Virgin Mary.

WHAT GREAT WORD IS THIS?

Because of it God sent His only begotten Son into the world. Paul says to owe no man anything except this. The debtor who was forgiven the greatest debt had more of this for his former creditor. Jesus said we should do this to God with all our hearts, and to our neighbor the same as to ourselves. Without it a home can soon be destroyed. No church can grow without it. Even if we should understand all the scriptures, have faith that could move mountains, and speak as angels; if we do not have this one thing all the rest amount to nothing.

Love is the great foundation principle upon which all of God's works and words are founded. If we have love we are kind, do not envy, are not proud, are unselfish, not easily irritated, and do not think evil of others. May the love of God rule our every motive and action.—C. E. Lapp.

FACTS FOR THINKERS

IS TRINITARIANISM A TENABLE DOCTRINE?

By R. A. Curtis

FROM the earliest of my recollections I heard from socalled "orthodox" teachers about "God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost, and that these three Gods are one God in substance, coequal in wisdom, power, and endless continuance of being."

Only the blessed "teacher come from God" (John 3:2) can open to us the Scriptures on this inexplicable problem of human contradictions; both to the facts of nature and the statements of revelation. However, it contradicts both organic and revealed law, that a son can be as old as his father, and equally as wise and powerful. Stop and think! Can the life of a "child born," a "son given," whose living existence depended upon being "made of a woman, made under the law," possess a living existence that antedates that of "his mother"? (Isa. 9:6; Gal. 4:4; Heb. 2: 14, 15; Luke 1:30, 31; Matt. 2:13.) Does this "Son of the Highest" claim equality with His Father? As a final answer to that question hear that Prophet that "the Lord your God" has raised "up unto you, of your brethren" (Acts 3:22). His testimony should be final: "My Father is greater than I'' (John 14:28).

Jesus in all things subordinated His will to that of His Father, who sent him. (John 4:34; Matt. 26:39).

Is it in accordance with reason, that a person, when beset with enemies, clamoring for his death, should pray to himself for deliverance "from unreasonable and wicked men"? (2 Thess. 3:2.) Jesus prayed upon many occasions to this Father, whom He acknowledged as "the only true God" (John 17:1-3). He spoke of Himself and His Father as two separate persons, with work for each to perform. (John 5:17.)

The statement of the Apostle Paul to "the church of God...at Corinth," when alluding to the plurality of gods adored by idolaters, was, "We know that an idol is nothing in the world, and that there is none other God but one. For though there be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth, (as there be gods many, and lords many,) but to us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom (through whom, Diaglott) are all things, and we by him." (1 Cor. 8:4-6; Eph. 4:6.)

There are two Adams spoken of in the Bible, chronologically separated by a period of four thousand years, from "the first man Adam," whose rebellion brought sin, suffering, and death into our world, to "the second man" who "is the Lord from heaven," whose obedience "brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." (Rom. 5:12; 1 Cor. 15:1-4, 21-26, 45-49; 2 Tim. 1:10.) If Trinitarianism is true, that Jesus the Son of God was in possession of an interminable life to be coequal with His Father, how could He die? How could He be "the last Adam"? Atheists might tauntingly ask, "If your 'three Gods in one' can be 'dead,' 'three days and three nights,' and the world move smoothly along without its divine Architect and Overseer (Matt. 16:21; 12:38-40), for that length of time, why can it not go on indefinitely?"

Do not give "place by subjection, no not for an hour," to any subversive doctrines, "that the truth of the gospel might continue with you." (Gal. 2:4, 5; John 8:32, 36.)

ALWAYS READY

our Lord," we shall be "kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time" (Rom. 8:16, 39; 1 Peter 1:5).

It is a beautiful bit of advice the grace of God gives us in Titus 2:12, 13, saying that "we should live soberly, right-cously, and godly, in this present world; looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ." "Looking" is the word used, not "having looked," nor "will look," but always "looking," always ready!

Whoever you may be reading these lines, are you ready for His return? Are you ready every moment? If you are, "Praise the Lord," but if not, Jesus says, "Come unto me."

THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD

the land of Judah, unto the sea, and the south, and the plain of the valley of Jericho, the city of palm trees, unto Zoar," and then said, "This is the land"?

If good people are "carried across death's cold flood" into the Promised Land, how is it that the Lord said to Moses when he was about to die on the mount, "I have caused thee to see it with thine eyes, but thou shalt not go over thither" (v. 4)?

Consider these questions, and reflect upon the following:

- (1) If it be said that the promise was fulfilled in Abraham's lifetime, the word, "He gave him none inheritance in it," will be denied.
- (2) If it be said that the promise was fulfilled to Abraham's seed, that will not meet the case, because God said, "To thee (Abraham) and to thy seed will I give it."
- (3) If it be claimed that the promise was only intended to apply to the temporary possession of the Promised Land by the many descendants of Abraham under Joshua, that will contradict Paul who says, "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ" (Gal. 3:16).
- (4) If the promise of the land to Abraham's seed was fulfilled in the possession of it by the children of Israel under the law, how could Paul say that the law "was added because of transgressions, till the seed (Christ) should come to whom the promise was made (Gal. 3:19)?
 - (5) If the promise made of God to the fathers of Israel had become obsolete and gave place to something else when Christ came, why should the Apostle say that "Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the fathers" (Rom. 15:8; Heb. 9:15)?

- (6) If the promise had already been fulfilled to the twelve tribes of Israel, how could Paul say, "Unto which promise our twelve tribes, instantly serving God day and night, hope to come" (Acts 26:6, 7)?
- (7) If the same Israelitish hope was not Paul's hope, how could he say, "For which hope's sake, king Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews" (Acts 26:7)? Again, Paul said, "For the hope of Israel I am bound with this chain" (Acts 28:20).
- (8) If what was promised to Abraham refers to something he was to receive at death, how could the Prophet Micah say, some thousand years after Abraham's death, "Thou wilt perform the truth to Jacob, and the mercy to Abraham, which thou hast sworn unto our fathers from the days of old" (Micah 7:20)?
- (9) If either Abraham or his seed (the Christ) or his children by faith and adoption, have—any of them—entered into the promised inheritance, how is it that as yet they are only spoken of as "heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ" (Rom. 8:17; Heb. 11:9)? How could Abraham be "heir of the world" unless he is yet (by a resurrection) to become a personal inheritor thereof (Rom. 4:13)?
- (10) How can the Promised Land be other than the country geographically defined to Abraham in the covenants of promise (Gen. 15:18)?
- (11) Where, throughout the whole Bible from Genesis to Revelation, are the words "Canaan" or "promised land" ever used to designate any place beyond the "bounds of time and space"?
- (12) How could Canaan be a type of heaven or a pattern of what heaven is, when we are taught in the Lord's Prayer that heaven is a pattern of what the earth is yet to be? And upon what Scriptural principle can heaven be surnamed after the wicked and idolatrous Canaanites?
- (13) Since the country Abraham looked for is described in Hebrews 11:16 as "heavenly," (which means like heaven), how is it possible it can be the very place which it is said to be like?
- (14) How can we say land means sky, and earth means heaven, or that the covenants of promise to "Abraham and his seed" shall not be fulfilled according to the obvious and grammatical sense of the words used, without stultifying our own reason, perverting language, making the Deity a liar, and rendering ourselves liable to condemnation for contempt of His Word?
- (15) How dare any man say that Christ is not the rightful owner, and His brethren the rightful heirs of the earth, in view of Jesus' words, "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth" (Matt. 5:5)? (Read also Psalm 37.)

Now the natural descendants of Abraham became God's favored nation. To them was revealed this one gospel of an everlasting inheritance in the earth, which of necessity involved the promise of eternal life. Those of the nation of Israel who understood the covenant made with Abraham looked forward to Christ—in whom the promises centered—as the end of the Mosaic law. Like Simeon, they could see that seed (Christ) to whom the promise was made would be "for the fall and rising again of many in Israel," and would be Israel's consolation. (Luke 2:25, 34.)

These "precious promises," and the "oracles of God" were all committed to Israel, not to Gentiles. How, then, may Gentiles share in this gospel? Let Paul explain: "By revelation he (Christ) made known unto me... that the Gentiles should be fellowheirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel." (Eph. 3:1-6.) But Gentiles are fellow heirs in Christ only. How may they get into Christ, and be of the one body to partake of the promise? Mark! Christ is the nucleus of a great body, composed of many members. He who becomes a member of that body will finally partake of the blessings of the Abrahamic promise. Let Paul explain again, "Know ye therefore that they which are of faith (the Abrahamic faith) the same are the children of Abraham" (Gal. 3:7).

By faith in God's promises Abraham became a son of God. Now the same one faith is come to the Gentiles, "for ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus."

Again we ask, How do Gentiles get into Christ? Paul answers, "As many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." There is then no difference between Jew and Greek in Christ Jesus. "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." (Gal. 3:7, 26-29.)

Remember the promise. Look back over the testimonies given. See that the promise was not heaven, but the earth, and remember that by the promise Abraham was made heir of the world; not heir of heaven. (Rom. 4:13.)

Since Abraham was "heir" and died, not having received the inherited promise (Heb. 11:13), he must be raised from the dead and join with the multitude of the redeemed, which John heard singing: "Thou hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth" (Rev. 5:10).

For all nations to be blessed in Abraham's seed (Christ), and all who compose the one multitudinous body to be rewarded, a great revolution must first take place among the nations of the earth. The mighty must be brought down from their seats, as Mary prophesicd. The God of heaven must set up His kingdom upon the earth, and break in pieces all other kingdoms, as Daniel declared in 7:44. "The kingdoms of this world (must) become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ" (Rev. 11:15).

When the kingdom of God is thus established in the carth, with Christ as its powerful, peaceful, righteous, and merciful King, truly the covenant with Abraham to bless all nations will be fulfilled. The news that God will set up such a kingdom is good news, or gospel—the one gospel. It was this message that Jesus "went throughout every city and village, preaching" as "the glad tidings of the kingdom of God" (Luke 8:1).

THE NATURE OF THE SOUL

its existence. The soul came into existence upon the union of the breath with the body, and not before.

When I studied chemistry I discovered, among other things, that under specified conditions the element hydrogen will unite with the element oxygen to form an altogether new substance called water. By being thus united these two elements become water, just as the dust and breath "became" a soul in Genesis 2:7. I discovered, further, that water can be broken up into its component parts by a process called electrolysis. So also is the soul broken up into its component parts in death (Eccl. 12:7; Psalm 104:29). When the water was broken up it merely ceased to exist any longer. That is exactly what happens to the soul at death. Its existence ceases altogether and completely. For Scriptural proof I will direct your attention to Job 7:21. Job is saying that because God will not pardon his transgression and iniquity, he must pay the penalty with death. He concludes by saying, "Thou shalt seek me in the morning, but I shall not be." When a person uses that little one-letter word "I," he invariably refers to his own soul, which is to say, himself. On the resurrection morning, will God call Job from the uttermost reaches of space to come forth and enter a new body He has created for him? Certainly not, for Job will not be. He says himself, "I shall not be." David expected to "go hence, and be no more" (Psalm 39:13). How could the Scriptures be clearer on this matter?

The immortal soulist looks upon a dead man, and says that this is not the real man but only the body or remains. He reasons that the real man, or the soul, is missing because the real man was able to hear and speak and move and comprehend, but this dead man can do none of these things. And he reasons correctly. But he concludes that since the soul is missing, it must then be in existence somewhere else. Here, of course, he is in error, due to a misconception of the nature of the soul. He is evidently unaware that the soul is not a part but the whole of man, that the body and the breath are the parts. Consequently, he fails to realize that the existence of the soul is entirely dependent upon both body and breath.

Although many will say that the soul cannot be de stroyed, that only the body is capable of being destroyed, we have God's own word that He "is able to destroy both soul and body in hell" (Matt. 10:28). It is worth noticing that, according to this verse, the same word "destroy" is applied to both soul and body. Whatever happens to one will necessarily happen to the other. If hell is a place of eternal fiery torment, then both soul and body are to receive the same fiery torment, which makes the immortal-soul theory a little inconsistent. If, on the other hand, hell refers to the grave or a place of destruction, both soul and body must come to an end in death. The word which is here translated "hell" comes from the Greek word genna, referring to the Valley of Hinnom, or Gehenna, which was a deep ravine southwest of Jerusalem where the refuse from the city was taken to be consumed by ever-burning fires. Indeed, in no dictionary of the English language is "destroy" defined as being eternal torment. Rather, it is defined "to consume or dissolve," the direct opposite of eternal torment.

Since God was once able to bring a soul into existence, it is only reasonable to believe that He can recreate it at will. And such the Bible teaches. David says, "God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave" (Psalm 49:15). David believed that the soul, as well as the body, is under the power of the grave, i.e., death (cf. Psalm 56: 13). He also believed that his soul would at some future time be liberated from death. If this be true, it follows that he will be brought forth with a body of some kind, a body being essential to existence. Hence, the logical question: "How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?" (1 Cor. 15:35).

When David is resurrected, death can no more lay hold upon him, because the ransom for his redemption has been paid (1 Tim. 2:6). That is what led the Apostle Paul to quote with such enthusiasm: "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" Because the soul can exist only as long as the body endures, and because David's soul is to be free from death, his body must also be free from death. He must be raised, then, with an incorruptible, immortalized body. Of the resurrection body we read in 1 Corinthians 15:42, that "it is raised in incorruption." It is called a spiritual body in contrast to the natural. "There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body" (1 Cor. 15:44).

"It doth not yet appear what we shall be" (1 John 3:2), for we have no way of comprehending what existence with a spiritual body will be like. But we believe that those who attain this "prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus" (Phil. 3:14), when they have attained it, will realize that its glory far outweighs whatever trials and sufferings must be endured in this present life (Rom. 8:18; 2 Cor. 4:17). Christ's resurrection proved the possibility of immortality. If you and I make the best possible use of the bodies God has already given us, by serving Christ the Life Giver, we will be accounted worthy of receiving eternal bodies that we might have life eternal in His kingdom. "If ye through the spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live" (Rom. 8:13).

The reason for an eternal, incorruptible body is that there might be eternal existence. If there could be eternal existence without a body, why should God bother to create eternal bodies for the righteous? Resurrection proves the nature of the soul. Certainly, God does not do things without purpose. The false doctrine of the immortality of the soul was proclaimed by the serpent, back in the Garden of Eden, and has continued the basis for all heathen religions and philosophies. "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ" (Col. 2:8).

Living the Christ Life

* * Thelma Richardson, Hammond, La.

Jesus' life was the most beautiful and of the highest standards man has ever known. We, as followers of Jesus, need to have lives patterned after His—rooted in loving hearts, and blooming in kind deeds. Imitations of Jesus are good, but not good enough. Lifelikeness is required.

To live a life like Jesus lived, we should have the spirit of love and forgiveness, and great resistance to evil. Once a sweet-spirited Christian thought more about getting his neighbors to pray than of getting them to pay what they owed him. This is a beautiful illustration, but Jesus' life was more beautiful. He gave His life that we might live.

Jesus' life is completely revealed to us in the Bible. Two of the greatest commandments given were: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength" (Mark 12:30), and, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself" (v. 31). We, as followers of Jesus, should always keep these commandments to the best of our ability.

Jesus' standards may have, at times, seemed impossible to attain unto, but God has promised those who have lived the graces of kindness and mercy that they shall be called the children of the Highest.

May we all grow to more fully live the Christ life.

The Search for Truth

E. Emma Murray, Springfield, Mo.

I am concerned today with the effect Adolf Hitler is bringing upon the populace of Nazi Germany. It is a commonly understood thing that the millions of sound waves, combined with their volume and intensity, emanating from the mouth of the Chancellor, have been the force that lies behind the mass hypnosis trailing his speeches. Inspired I am, but unbelieving that this fact is the only one causing such reaction. Couldn't it possibly be that inward urge for identifying a dominating force within oneself with the Omnipotent? Or, could it not be a consuming belief that there is something within oneself superior to circumstances. This is primarily the search for truth. (St. Justin, an ancient martyr, recognized the wisdom of searching for the truth, the belief in Christ as an authority on the precepts of life, and that there is a one and only existing God. It must have been his divination of the strength of the Word that led at last to his interment.)

In his youth, Hitler earned through humility the love and service of a small following. His work was that of a paper hanger. Now he strides over Germany like a Gargantuan centipede. How has he accomplished this? Hitler's rise to power came through the necessity of his people for a leader, actuated by the results of the World War. Germans felt the need of a Moses to lead them from their Egypt. It was a prominent psychologist, Moreno, who pointed out to us their fear of extinction as the cause for their call—a symbol of their belief that they are a chosen people. Poor, deluded fools! The Israelites had the Word of God. Germany has denied this blessing. Instead, she uses the sword. How essential is Germany's need for the Word. The lack will bring her final self-destruction, for the truth, or the Word of God, is the very essence of life.

Youth regimentation under the Nazi regime has realized its initial, material victory in the annexation of Austria. (Already 1'm suspecting Il Duce of sabotage. Germany's wooing is more subtle now.)

Psychology, sociology, and philosophy serve their purpose in the life of the youth today, academically speaking. Science, or partly unified knowledge has its place. Still it is theology, as pictured in the Bible, that means stabilization of the tomorrows, and that which is beyond the dimensions of natural life. Wasn't it Confucius whose Theology of Ethics guided his little world, and still does? What, then, can Christianity do with all its beliefs vested in truth!

Call it paranoia, paresis of the brain, or what you will, that magnetizes the people of Germany; instill this same phobia in the minds of all youth, supplying the Word of God for a cause, and you will behold a phenomenon superior to that of the Pied Piper of Hamlin. Place the gospel in the music of the Piper, and there will be an exodus, comparable only to Moses' hordes.

There must be an exodus of youth from the house by the side of the road with liquor served at its table, and cigarette fumes as a decorative quality, to the house by the side of the road that invites people into its shelter, regardless of race, creed, or class, and serves there the food of life.

Democracy, parallel with Naziism, must find a new and dramatic zest for God to withstand the barrage of dictatorships sweeping the world. Naziism and all its impish isms are soon to crumble before the oncoming surge of the universal need for Christ, a holy, unprejudiced ruler. Although the ultimate outcome is more than a prescience, we can prepare ourselves. There is a well known high school with a motto inscribed above its door, "Ye are the tomorrows, the day to come." I am waiting for that hour.

"Prayer was made without ceasing of the church unto God for him" (Acts 12:5).

The Lord Delivered Peter

We read often of people being put into prisons. Generally it is for something they have done which makes them feel ashamed and sorrowful.

Peter didn't feel that way about what he had done, for he had been preaching and teaching about Jesus. He slept when night came.

The rulers and guards had taken special care to see that Peter did not escape. However, the Lord sent an angel who guided Peter to safety, far away from the prison, without any alarm being given. The huge iron gate opened of its own accord. Then the angel left Peter.

Peter thought all this time that he was seeing a vision. It was not until after he was left alone that he discovered it all was real. How glad he must have been!

Read the comment in today's lesson on "The house of Mary," as given in the Truth Seekers' Quarterly. Don't you suppose those gatherings could be compared with our Bible study and prayer meetings? However, they had no church buildings.

The Answer to Prayer

The maid who came to see who was outside Mary's house before admitting him, recognized Peter's voice. In her joy she forgot to let him in, but ran to the group to tell the good news.

What did they say to Rhoda? How do we act sometimes when our prayers are answered? Let us not forget to be thankful, and to tell God so.

It is a wonderful joy to know how to pray. God has promised to provide for our needs. We must ask according to His will. Prayers are always answered, though not in the way, or at the time, one may expect the answers to come. Sometimes God answers, "No." Then we should think over our prayers to see that we are not asking selfish favors. God wants all men to be saved, for "whosoever will" may come. So pray, and keep on praying, that your loved ones will have place with Jesus when His kingdom is set up. As to the position one is to occupy, Jesus told the disciples that God would decide that. (Matt. 20:23.)

However, we know that one who desires to be a saint of God, who will be one of the bride of Christ, one who will be caught up, if living, to meet the Lord in the air, or be in the first resurrection from the dead, is plainly told what to do. He must believe on the Lord Jesus, repent, and be immersed by baptism, presenting his body "a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is (his) reasonable service" (Rom. 12:1).

ECE Club

We want more members! Will you send me your name, age, birth date, and address now?

I get many requests to explain the meaning and requirements one should fill in order to become a member. As there are new readers beginning to study our page all the time, I'll try to explain once again about our club.

ECE means "Everyday Christian Expression." Every Day tells us not once in a while, but every single day to do some kind deeds, speak some kind words, and do all the helpful acts we can for our parents, teachers, and strangers as well as friends. We must show those around us that we enjoy being Christians, or they may not wish to follow Jesus, if we are not good examples every day.

Then, too, if you join our club you are to express your love of God by studying your Sunday school lessons, which include the daily study of our lessons suggested by our Truth Seekers' Quarterly, or other quarterlies. We urge you to have family worship, a period of singing and prayer, as well as your Bible study each day. Also, expression reminds us to have Bible pictures, and Scripture texts as mottoes, in our bedrooms and other rooms of our homes to help guide us, and help us to remember about God—to help keep us Christians all the time. We also hope you find time to keep a book of the poems, lessons, and pictures you draw for your very own.

Vocabulary List

- 1. Ward-guard.
- 2. Prayer—asking God's guidance for yourself and others by talking to God.

Treasure Books

Most of our club members keep scrapbooks, or treasure books. Draw your picture for your book. Clip out the lesson story, or write a short story of the lesson yourself.

Happy Birthday Wishes!

Several Sunday schools are using well up toward the hundred mark, and we believe a wee bit of friendly rivalry would soon show good results. Where will the next order for a hundred quarterlies come from?

GLEANINGS FROM THE FIELD

Following the Sunday evening services at Tempe, Arizona, on February 26, two middle aged women applied for baptism. As a special feature of the evening services some of the young people presented a short drama, "The Challenge of the Cross," Bro. Lindsay reports that the church was filled to capacity.

"We are glad to see articles for The Herald being written by our own people. We have some good writers, and enjoy seeing their pictures, which add interest to what they write." —Will and Rhoda Hanson. Thank you! Send us some new subscriptions.

"We had twenty-two people at prayer meeting a week ago, and twenty there last night. And thermometers registered way below zero. Our membership is only about fifty-five."—C. E. Lapp, St. Cloud, Minn.

Bro. F. E. Siple of Grand Rapids, Mich., will be guest speaker for the South Bend, Ind., church on Sunday, March 12. Preaching services will be held at 10:45 a.m. and 7:30 p.m. in the Y.M.C.A. Community Room.

Joyous news comes from the editor's brother, living in Tipp City, Ohio. We quote, "Dear Uncle Syd and Aunt Margaret, and all the young cousins: Russell Harlow, a 7%-pound son of Ruth's and mine, arrived this afternoon (Feb. 28). You just ought to see him! He's some boy!"—Vivian Magaw. Congratulations! Bring him to Conference.

"THERE SHALL BE A VERY GREAT VALLEY"

According to Zechariah 14:4, old Mother Earth is going to some day play very unique pranks. We always thought the "very great valley" would result from an earthquake in Palestine. Now, somebody will be sure historical interpretation of prophecy is correct, for see what has already come to pass!

Those who have been to General Conference at Oregon, Ill., will recognize the dormitory in the rear left, and the Rock River in the background. A new sewage system in our town has been the earthquake, causing this chasm—well over twenty feet deep and as wide. . . . With such a golden opportunity, all church troubles are being tossed into this pit, to be washed into the river.

Come to Conference, August 1 to 13; we hope there will then be no ditch to fall into. Until then, hope for the best.

ILLINOIS CHURCH NEWS

NEWS FROM LAWRENCEVILLE, OHIO

With the winter winds whistling around the corners, and temperatures far from summer levels, we certainly appreciate our "now" building. Our pleasure is doubled because with adequate heat in the building, we are able to have with us several of the members who were not able to withstand the cold floors and chilly breezes which we always had with us in former winters.

us in former winters.

Though our dedication services and the meetings following were handicapped a great deal by cold and icy weather, interest was good, and meetings were well attended. Several people in Lawrenceville showed especial interest, and have been attending our Sunday evening meetings quite regularly.

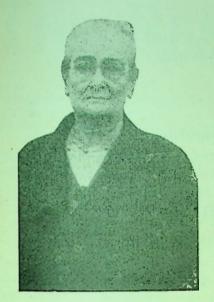

For our Tuesday evening Bible class, Bro. Gordon has been leading us through a series of lessons comparing the seven days of creation to the seven thousand years of God's plan on the earth. This is an entirely new thought to us, and much interest is being displayed in these lessons.

The ladies' society of the church met with Sr. Emma Beck Thursday afternoon, March 2. The lessons being taken up are a study of Revelation. This is a pretty big undertaking, but much benefit is being derived. If only we familiarize ourselves with the Book and its contents there will be gain.

The young people's class will meet Friday evening at the home of Bro. and Sr. Gordon. These meetings are purely social and are well attended, often with guests from the Brush Creek Church also, whose presence we always enjoy.

EVA L, UNDERWOOD

In the death of Laura Evelyn Underwood, who chose rather to be called Eva L., the Church of God in Christ Jesus throughout Indiana and the United States loses one of its most ardent and honored members. This active, capable widow of the late Arthur R. Underwood, onetime publisher of The Restitution, now The Restitution Herald, from early youth devoted her life of fourseore years to ardent Christian service in every open avenue. Her Christian vision penetrated her every walk of life. Always of a literary and evice as well as of a religious mind, she was active in the righteous advancement of education, music, and general community betterment.

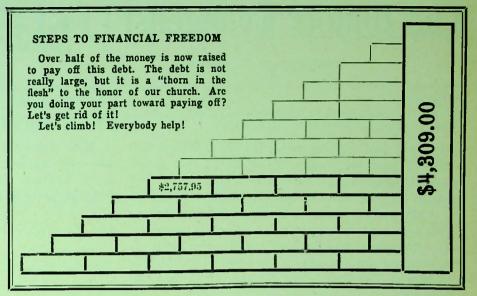

She was born near Burr Oak, Ind., July 10, 1857, the daughter of William and Amanda Thompson. When but a young girl her family moved to Plymouth. She became a charter member of the much famed Antioch Church.

In Plymouth she met, and later married, Arthur R. Underwood. To them were born four children: Arthur T., who died in 1926; Littie, who died in infancy; Harold V., now of Detroit, Mich.; and Glen L. of Plymouth. From the day of marriage this husband and wife were knit together in mutual interest in all of life's works. When Bro. Underwood became publisher and editor of The Restitution she was equally devoted with him in both the spiritual and mechanical welfare of the work. Early they became recognized leaders in the building up and establishing of Church of God activity in Plymouth. Together, they labored in the constructing of the church building, and assumed responsibility for continuance of its ideals as personal duty and obligance of its ideals as personal duty and obligashe continued to earry on.

In an emergency she took over the work of reporting for The Plymouth Pilot. Recently she was signally honored by the proprietor and staff of The Pilot for her twenty-four years of devotion to The Pilot's high standards.

Sr. Underwood's life was an outstanding example of open and censeless expression of Christian doctrinal beliefs, uncompromisingly, and in such a way that she merited and enjoyed the good will and cooperation of all others in united labor toward achieving every good and uplifting ideal for community welfare. Her religious, library, charitable, and club activities and associations, interwoven with her newspaper work made her to be of noteworthy and beneficent influence on the life and history of the past half century of Plymouth, and of Marshall County.

Sr. Underwood, though she passed her 81st

After being in the hospital for several weeks, she was moved to her apartments where she was about her rooms daily, with a practical nurse in attendance. Quarterly Conference at Ripley

The next Quarterly Conference is to be at Ripley, Saturday afternoon and Sunday, March 25, 26. Let us all, who can, attend and enjoy these services in the Lord, "not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together." We expect to have speakers from two or three other churches.

The purpose of the conference is to stimulate our minds, and to strengthen us in the work our Master gave us. A more complete announcement of the program will be in a later issue of The Restitution Herald. Don't miss this Conference.

The Credit May Not Be Long

From the writings of D. L. Moody we find these words, "I heard of a rich man who was asked to make a contribution on behalf of some charitable object. The text was quoted to him, 'He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given will he pay him again.' He said that the security might be good enough, but the credit was too long. He was dead within two weeks."

Since the dead do not reckon time, this man had only two weeks of conscious waiting, and will know nothing till the resurrection. We are expecting to live longer than just two weeks more, but we do not know how soon our Lord will come. What we give to the Lord's service now may bring us a very high rate of interest for the short time that we believe it will be until Christ comes to reward us.

We do not give for the purpose of receiving again, but we shall receive and, therefore, the receiving must be taken into consideration. It might be the incentive to start some who are slow to become acquainted with God.

Once a Month or Once a Week

Once I saw a man who advocated eating just one large meal a day, but there are not many followers of that theory. The reason is that most people have need of food more often than that. There is a food that our new life in Christ needs. That is the food we receive when we read God's Word, and the exhortations and comments on His Word. A chapter a day is the food that will pay, and three of them each day will enable you to read the whole Bible through in a year.

THE RESTITUTION HERALD will help you also. Do you get it once a week, or does it only come once a month to you? Send $1.00 for a nine-months' subscription.

Dollar Day — March 22

It was voted at the last Illinois Conference to have two Dollar Days this year. The receipts from this one will be used for evangelistic work in our State. Watch for the announcements which will be mailed in a couple of weeks.

The Month's Question

What makes the Dead Sea dead? Because it is all the time receiving, never giving out anything. Why is it that many Christians are cold? Because they are all the time receiving, never giving out anything.—Selected.

Do You Know the Reason?

There is a reason! There always is when our Savior does anything. When He spoke to His disciples, and gave them the new commandment that they should love one another, He also told them that by this love all men should know that they were His disciples.

The real reason is more important than this. Love is one of the strongest bonds of human relationship. Like doctrines hold Christians together, but the love of God that "is shed abroad in our hearts," the love for one another that Christ puts into our hearts, binds us closer together than any other thing. A similar hope and like aims may cause us to cooperate with one another, but the cooperation that comes when we really love one another is the collective action that counts in the sight of God.

The more we work together, the stronger will God's church be. "Beloved, let us love one another."

Hitler and Your Church Offering

In Hitler's last big speech to the world, he bragged a little on how much the German government gave to the churches, and how other governments don't pay a cent to the churches. Well, that may sound all right, but only half the truth may be misleading in some cases. The people of that nation are very heavily taxed. The government can afford to support the churches. The churches are not allowed to take an offering at any time or for any thing. Their pastors speak only those things the government allows them to speak.

Our government does not tax church property, and does not tell the ministers what to preach. We have the blessed privilege of taking all the offerings we please, and then using the money as we please, wherever we feel it will do the most good in God's service. Praise God for the opportunities we have.

It Won't Be Long

Have you made plans to attend the Illinois Bible School and General Conference this August? Illinoisans, this conference is the best two weeks of the whole year, and, besides that, you will meet brethren from many other states.

VOLUME 28

OREGON, ILLINOIS, MARCH 14, 1939

NUMBER 23

HOLD FAST THE GOOD

By J. R. LeCrone

"For he that will love life, and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile: let him eschew evil, and do good; let him seek peace, and ensue it."

MAN once held up, in a religious gathering, a large A sheet of white paper upon which there was a black spot, and he inquired of the people gathered there what they saw. When they replied that they saw a black spot, he asked, "But why don't you see the white, there is so much more of it?"

It would sometimes appear that we are in danger of developing the kind of eyes that can see only the black spots in our lives and in the lives of others. We see only the hole in the doughnut, and forget the delicious doughnut that surrounds the hole. We fix our minds upon the fur coats and automobiles that we cannot afford, to the extent that we completely forget that we have good Christian homes, friends, books, food, clothing, shelter, and a great many other possessions that are good.

The same thing is sometimes true of our spiritual lives. We worry about empty pews, members who do not attend services, sinners, and finances until we completely forget that there are still many faithful Christians whose fellowship we may enjoy, and many things that we can do for others despite the handicaps that stand in our way. Is there any reason that, while we struggle against the sins and shortcomings of the world, we should not enjoy the company of those who are striving to do their best?

Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity! It is like the precious ointment upon the head, that ran down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard: that went down to the skirts of his garments; as the dew of Hermon, and as the dew that descended upon the mountains of Zion: for there the Lord commanded the blessing, even life for evermore" (Psalm 133:1-3). Thus sang the Psalmist many years ago. Many of us smile when we think of applying those words to our own particular congregation or denomination. Yet, when we stop to consider, the trouble makers are a very small minority, and the vast majority of the brethren do "dwell together in unity." Even that small minority of members would lose much of their ability to make trouble, if the rest were to obey the admonition given through Paul to concentrate their attention upon the good things.

True, it is our duty to do what we can to eradicate sin wherever we find it, but if we concentrated all our energy in eradicating weeds from our gardens and never planted anything good in their stead, our harvest would be slim, indeed. Hence, Paul's admonition, "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things" (Phil. 4:8).

In his opening words in this same letter we find him giving a practical demonstration of what he had in mind. Hear his greeting to the brethren: "I thank my God upon every remembrance of you, always in every prayer of mine for you all making request with joy, for your fellowship in the gospel from the first day until now; being confident of this very thing, that he which hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ" (Phil. 1:3-6).

While he did point out their shortcomings to them, the dominant note of his epistle is of Christian love and fellowship.

"But others will find fault, and say evil things about me no matter what I do," people sometimes complain, and then proceed to the conclusion that, that being the case, it really doesn't make much difference what they do. Thus, they allow their concentration upon that tendency to darken their whole lives with the cloud of their self-pity. They would be much happier, (Please turn to page 11)

Short Words

"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind." Small words preach great truths.

Some scribes think they must use big words, a bit like some boys think they must smoke and swear to be like big men. Youth, do not for one day think that big words will make you big. A big word used in the wrong place may let you down to where you would feel most small. Learn to speak and to write short words, so that all will know what you mean.

Our Lord's Words

Christ spoke with short words that went straight to the point, and most of the time, straight to the heart. Feel the force of speech in these words of Christ:

"Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God."

"Judge not, that ye be not judged."

"Swear not at all."

"Seek, and ye shall find; ... what man is there of you, whom if his son ask bread, will he give him a stone?"

"Ye are the salt of the earth."

"The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost."

"I will; be thou clean."

"I will come and heal him."

"Thy faith hath made thee whole."

"Thou art made whole: sin no more."

"Whom do men say that I the Son of man am?"

"He that sent me is true, whom ye know not."

"I know him: for I am from him, and he sent me."

"I must work the works of him that sent me while it is day:... as long as I am in the world, I am the light of the world."

"Think not that I am come to send peace on the earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword."

"My house shall be called the house of prayer; but ye have made it a den of thieves."

"Ye shall know them by their fruits."

"They shall kill him, and the third day he shall be raised."

"I have meat to cat that ye know not of."

"My time is not yet full come."

"Watch and pray."

"I am that bread of life."

"I am the true vine."

"Come and dine."

"I am the door of the sheep."

"My sheep hear my voice, and I know them."

"I am the way, the truth, and the life."

"I am the light of the world."

"The field is the world."

"Go ye . . . preach."

"Wilt thou lay down thy life for my sake?"

"If I go . . . I will come."

"In such an hour as ye think not."

"Who hath ears to hear, let him hear."

Faith, Hope, Love

"These three" gifts, and we need none more, shall not cease. Faith is the rock the church is built on. Hope stays the soul in storm, and keeps it sweet in times of peace. Love heals each bruise, and seals the scar. The gift of tongues has gone its way. There are no men who heal the blind, or call the dead from tombs. The sage who wrote the Word of God has ceased from pen and scroll. But stay, dear friend; the stage is set for "these three" to play their role.

"Fight the Good Fight of Faith"

Like Paul who fought with beasts, the child of God may now have foes who seem like wolves. What of it? No cry of pain went out from Paul. He sang and prayed.

Though stoned by those he tried to save, and left for dead, Paul soon stood up in strength that came from God. No storm at sea could change his course. No rods or whips could bruise his zeal. True love for Christ made this man strong. He fought the good fight of faith, and won a crown.

Night Is Far Spent, the Day Is at Hand

Man has had his rule. His night is still stained in blood; nor is there sign that war may cease. All that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of God, but is of the world. Sin is king. The night must be "far spent."

No more than man can break the law of night and day can man break God's word to end man's night and send Christ's Day. "The Prince of Peace" "must reign."

Will the Literal Earth Be Melted?

By T. A. Drinkard

"The heathen raged, the kingdoms were moved: he uttered his voice, the earth melted" (Psalm 46:6).

THE writer would be very glad to present the entire Psalm, in connection with this verse, that foretells what will happen as this age comes to an end. The Psalm reaches farther, embracing the time when "he maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth; he breaketh the bow, and cutteth the spear in sunder; he burneth the chariot in the fire" (v. 9). That David said the earth "melted" is not called in question, but I do question the claim that he had in mind the literal earth which God formed to be inhabited. (Isa. 45:18.) By Psalm 37:9 we learn that "evildoers shall be cut off: but those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth." Why should God cut off the evildoers if they are doing the Lord's will? How can "the meek . . . inherit the earth" (v. 11), and "the righteous . . . inherit the land" (v. 29), if the literal earth is to be melted? There is no contradiction in these verses if they are allowed to teach the truth as they were intended. Trouble does not come through reading the Scripture, but in accepting human interpretation of the things that the Spirit directed the prophets and apostles to write. I have no desire to mislead, but I do say that there are two earths mentioned in the passages given above. One of them will melt, and the other will abide forever, or never cease to be. (Eccl. 1:4.)

I solemnly affirm that the literal earth, as such, will continue to abide. It will never cease to be. I shall present unimpeachable evidence to sustain this view. I fully understand the sophistry that is used relative to the Hebrew word olam, that is translated eternal, age lasting; and the Greek word aionios, that is also translated eternal, age lasting, according to Prof. Young. There are those that seek to make a show of themselves as to the deep meaning of these words, yet overlook the fact that God has chosen simple ways and means through which to reveal His will as shown by, "it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe" (1 Cor. 1:21).

Genesis 13:14, 15 says, "The Lord said unto Abram, after that Lot was separated from him, Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward: for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed for ever." Again, "The God of glory appeared unto our father Abraham, when he was in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran, and said unto him, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and come into the land which I shall shew thee. . . . And he gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on: yet he promised that he would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him, when as yet he had no child" (Acts 7:2, 3, 5).

These several scriptures clearly indicate that God originally promised to give Abraham and his seed "all the land" which he saw, but that during his natural lifetime he was not permitted "to set his foot on" it. Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were "heirs" of the same promise (Heb. 11:9), but they "all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth" (v. 13). I solemnly affirm that there is not one verse in the Word of God that can be used directly or indirectly in proof of the literal destruction of the literal carth, which will conflict with the scriptures given above.

God knew about His business better than we do, and it will be wise on our part to be pleased with His decision in the matter. Moses declares that God made certain promises to Abraham relating to his possession of this land forever. Stephen tells us that God did this very thing, but adds that Abraham was not allowed enough of the land to set his foot on. The Spirit of God through Paul informs us that the fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, were all heirs of the same promise, yet every one of them died without seeing the promises fulfilled. I submit that inasmuch as God made this promise to Abraham, and Abraham died before God fulfilled the promise; just as surely as God made such a promise, it will be carried out to Abraham after he is resurrected (Matt. 8:11). "The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness" (2 Peter 3:9).

Human theology demands that the literal earth be destroyed, because its existence does not fit in with the popular plans as to the future home of the saints. Men teach that death is the gateway into eternal life; that an immortal soul or spirit, when released at death, goes to be with the Lord. Why should they want, or need, the earth any longer? According to all that kind of teaching every righteous man and woman all through the ages are with the Lord now. Thus, there is no need for the coming of the Lord, the resurrection, and the judgment.

Why destroy the literal earth? I am not in favor of teaching it, nor encouraging anyone to do so. Why promise Abraham the land as an everlasting possession if such offer was not a part of God's plan and purpose? Seeing that such a promise was made, and realizing that Abraham died before its fulfillment, it necessarily remains to be carried out after he is resurrected.

The destiny of the earth and man are connected together; this fact is fully sustained by the Word of God. The time is coming when "the earth . . . and the works that are therein shall be burned up" (Please turn to page 11)

Outspoken Paul

By S. J. Lindsay

IN READING some of Paul's outspoken remarks we wonder if he ever stopped to think that he might hurt somebody's feelings. Sometimes he reached a point where he might easily have hurt people, especially such as were rather easily hurt. For instance, we have him telling of his conflict with Peter. (Gal. 2:11, 12.) Something was wrong with either Peter or Paul. At least, they didn't get along very well together. "But when Peter was come to Antioch, I withstood him to the face, because he was to be blamed." Do you wonder what the trouble was? Let Paul say:

"For before that certain came from James, he did eat with the Gentiles: but when they were come, he withdrew and separated himself, fearing them which were of the circumcision."

In other words, Paul openly told Peter that he was a hypocrite. How could that help hurting Peter's feelings, and the feelings of his friends. But that was Paul's way of doing. Had Paul let his zeal for truth run away with his sense of the fitness of things socially? There are those who feel that we owe society a certain degree of courtesy, regardless of what we may think about the conduct of society in general. It is considered uncouth to mention religious affairs if we are not to hurt people's feelings on such matters. But his trouble with Peter was not the only strong speech Paul ever used. We find him writing to the Galatian church on one occasion. It had come to his ears that other preachers had been with these brethren, and that they had been teaching them some things of which Paul didn't approve. So, he wrote them, "I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel: which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ."

Now here is where he again uses pretty strong language. Either Paul must be empowered from on high, or else he must be rather conceited to use language so strong. For this is what he says: "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed."

Is Paul's language in keeping with true Christian grace? Is he speaking the speech that love uses? Was he following the Master? Well, yes. For do you remember how Christ on one occasion called another set of religious people hypocrites? Does the love of Christ admit such language? It seems to have done so on certain occasions.

If Christ and Paul were within their rights in using this language, there must be some very good reason for it. We believe they spoke with the authority of heaven. Something very great must have been at stake.

Paul tells us elsewhere (Rom. 1:16) what there was about this gospel that made him so careful to see that it was properly taught. "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek."

To meditate: This gospel that Paul preached is the power of God unto salvation. It is the only means in this age by which any may come into the salvation offered.

Again, Paul stresses this point in 1 Corinthians 15, wherein he says, "Moreover, brethren, I declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand; by which also ye are saved, if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain."

Does Paul really mean to teach that without this gospel men and women cannot be saved? That's what the language would teach. A matter, then, of so great importance should be thoroughly known. Any knowledge that will help us to attain unto eternal life should surely be possessed by us all. If there is knowledge of so great importance, how much we should strive to know it, and how insistent should we be to see that others have it. Yet, sometimes we find our people acting so indifferently about it that we think we have reason to believe that they have not taken the matter too seriously themselves. Paul was serious, and he used language that would show that he was serious. To him it was a life and death matter.

This gospel, which is not to be polluted by bringing in something else in its stead, is not a hidden matter. It may be known in a very short time if people will but apply themselves. It didn't take the cunuch very long to get the knowledge.

Paul tells us that the most important message in this gospel is that one very thing that will bring rejoicing to the human heart. It is that, though we must die, Christ has overcome death by Himself being raised from the dead. Along with that goes the promise that He will raise us up, too, when the time appointed comes. He promises that when He comes, He will reach down into the grave and snatch us from the jaws of death and the grave, giving us eternal life. We also have been promised an inheritance "incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for (us), who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time" (1 Peter 1:4, 5).

Our prize of life and inheritance is now with the Master, and when He comes He will deliver to us what has so long been promised. We see the affairs of men fading fast away. Under the dominions of men, everything is fleeting. We are sure of no abiding thing. They have no power to stay the hand of death; they cannot secure to us any lasting inheritance; in fact, they can destroy, but they cannot restore. If we believe this gospel as strongly as Paul did, we, too, will be inclined to use some pretty strong language, now and then, to get people to see the future glory. We will say with him, "Yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord: for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ" (Phil. 3:8).

By living close to the knowledge of the gospel, knowing what it has the power to do for us, and knowing the fruit-lessness of the affairs of this life, we may grow into the same degree of enthusiasm, and into the same anxiety for others, that he had.

Questions: Paul evidently was fighting the false teachers who had come in with matters of the law. What good reason had Paul for believing that the law had death for people rather than life?

Do you think Paul would allow for gospel the teaching that good people go to heaven at death and bad ones to hell torment, in place of the gospel he had taught them?

Considering his strong language, do you think he would tolerate the teaching that it makes no difference what you believe, just live right and you will be saved?

What Is Your Life?

By Elsie M. Long

THERE are many questions in the Bible given for us to consider. There is none of more importance to us than this question the Apostle James asked in James 4:14, "What is your life?" James was careful not to permit us to guess at the answer to this all-important question. Listen to the solemn warning he gives in answer, "It is even a vapour, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away." James is drawing a comparison of our life with that of vapor. All know how quickly vapor vanishes away before the heat of the sun. That is how James describes to us how quickly our mortal life vanishes away.

David said, "Lord, make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days, what it is; that I may know how frail I am. Behold, thou hast made my days as an handbreadth; and mine age is as nothing before thee: verily every man at his best state is altogether vanity" (Psalm 39:4, 5).

"As for man, his days are as grass: as a flower of the field, so he flourisheth. For the wind passeth over it, and it is gone; and the place thereof shall know it no more" (Psalm 103:15, 16). Inspired men have written in a way that should seriously impress upon us how frail we are, and the brevity of mortal life. This present life may be snatched away at any moment, for Job says, "No man is sure of life" (Job 24:22). At the natural length, life is compared by David to grass, and by James to vapor.

We can plainly see how the decree that was issued at the fall of man has been carried out: "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return" (Gen. 3:19).

One might wonder why we are in this present frail mortal state. The answer is, Man is mortal and of the dying nature because of sin. It is God's law that sinners must die, and we are all of Adam's sinful nature—all have sinned. "Wherefore, as by one man (Adam) sin entered into the world, and death by sin; so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned" (Rom. 5:12). "The wages of sin is death" (Rom. 6:23). "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God" (Rom. 3:23).

On the first pages of the Bible we learn of the bitterness and ruin caused by the disobedience of God's law—the sorrow and suffering caused by violating the commandments of God. (Read Gen. 3:16-19.) Paul, realizing how frail our mortal life is, said, "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable" (1 Cor. 15:19).

WHAT IS THE FUTURE?

Is there no gleam of hope after this frail life is passed away? Is there no ray of hope that the curse will be lifted?

By turning again to the first book of the Bible, we find the promise that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head. (Gen. 3:15.) "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law" (Gal. 3:13). "When the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law" (Gal. 4:4, 5). "He sent redemption unto his people" (Psalm 111:9). "Ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, . . . but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot" (1 Peter 1:18, 19).

There is a glorious hope held out to God's servants that they will be redeemed. "The Lord redeemeth the soul of his servants" (Psalm 34:22). David said, "God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave" (Psalm 49:15).

Some will say, "How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?" (1 Cor. 15:35). Paul gives us a fourfold answer in verses 42-44. The resurrected body is incorruptible. "It is raised in incorruption." That is very different than these frail bodies we have now, subject to pain and death. Disease feeds on these mortal bodies—dimming our eyes and dulling our cars. But the resurrected body will not be so. No disease will ever sap the strength of these spiritual bodies. In Isaiah 33:24 we read, "The inhabitant shall not say, I am sick." These glorious bodies will not be swept away by death, "for there shall be no (Please turn to page 10)

"What Is Truth?"

By Howard D. Pearson

WE ARE of the opinion that one of the greatest questions of all time was asked of Jesus by Pilate, "What is truth?" (John 18:38).

As usual, the Scripture will answer Pilate's question. In Paul's charge to Timothy (2 Tim. 4:2), he says, "Preach the word." What is "the word"? Paul will answer again. "I am not mad, most noble Festus; but speak forth the words of truth and soberness" (Acts 26:25). Paul was even speaking here of the Word that became flesh, namely, Jesus the Christ. Paul, a prisoner, was being heard by Festus, and he was telling those assembled that what had happened to Jesus was according to the words of the prophets, and what "Moses did say should come." Paul said these things were truth. Pilate's question is partly answered at least.

In Jesus' last prayer (John 17) we read that He gave the disciples the words of the Father, and they received them. Further along Jesus says, "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth" (v. 17).

Now, if it was necessary for Christ's followers to be sanctified through His (God's) truth, is it not just as necessary today for the truth to do its work? Can the church be sanctified today, and be filled with the traditions of men? It is our thought that even one little error detracts from the truth of God.

To continue our search for truth, let us consider John 8:31, 32: "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Then in verse 36, we read, "If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed."

God's word of truth testifies of many things. In 2 Corinthians 4:3 it reveals, "But if our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost." Friends, it seems that we had better search to see what the gospel is. If we do not know what it is, let us see if God's Word will enlighten us. We have it, on reliable authority, that "gospel" means "good news," or "glad tidings." God's Word teaches us that His gospel is good news concerning His coming kingdom.

This gospel of a coming King and kingdom was so important that Paul dwelt in his own hired house in Rome for two years and preached about it to all who came to him. It is written that he was "preaching the kingdom of God and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ" (Acts 28:31).

Paul is the greatest apostle to the Gentiles, and he says, "I certify to you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man. For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ" (Gal. 1:11, 12). In Galatians 3:8 Paul says, "And the scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saving, In thee shall all nations be blessed."

It was God who preached this gospel to Abraham through His Word. In Genesis 12:3b we read, "In thee shall all families of the earth be blessed." We also read, "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed; because thou hast obeyed my voice" (Gen. 22:18).

Now, friends, do we believe that those promises of God to Abraham are a large part of the gospel, or are they hid to us? If they are hid to us, then we are lost. (2 Cor. 4:3.) Our elder Brother says (John 8:32), "The truth shall make you free."

Do we love God's Word? It is the truth. Do we love the truth? If we are so ashamed of the truth that we do not want our friends to know about it, then we should read 2 Thessalonians 2:10: "And with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved." Also, please read Ephesians 4:14, 15.

We would like to call attention to some of the truths of God's Word: "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth" (Gen. 1:1). "But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die" (margin, "dying thou shalt die") (Gen. 2:17). In our language we would say, "Adam, you shall take on a dying nature." "Wherefore, as by one man (Adam) sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned" (margin, "in whom all have sinned") (Rom. 5:12). And in Genesis 3:4, "The scrpent said unto the woman, Ye shall not surely die." His is not the truth of God's Word, but its exact opposite. We are giving these scriptures to give a clear understanding of the one who got us into trouble, also to reveal the One who is coming to get us out of trouble.

Because of Adam's disobedience God put this sentence on him, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return" (Gen. 3:19).

Now, let us more definitely consider Abraham and the promises. "I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed" (Gen. 12:3). Paul says, in Galatians 3:8, that this blessing was the gospel. In Genesis 15:6 we find why God blessed Abraham, "And he believed in the Lord; and he counted it to him for righteousness." Friends, read Romans 4:3, 9, 22.

We wish to add to our narrative some prophecy that God has revealed through His Word of truth. As we are beginning to see the need of a Savior to deliver us from the wickedness brought on by Adam's sin, let us consider.

Isaiah 7:14, "Therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign; Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel." This is confirmed fully in Matthew 1:23. Please read it. In Isaiah 53 we find a whole chapter devoted to our Lord Jesus, prophetically. Please read it.

We wish now to call your attention to a few sentences that show how He is going to undo the work of Adam. "But he (Christ) was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities, . . . and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all. He was oppressed, and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth. . . . He was cut off out of the land of the living: . . . He made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death . . . Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him; he hath put him to grief: when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of

Daniel Eleven

By A. R. Johnson

OUR SAVIOR endorsed this chapter which seems to be more or less of a forgotten one, though teeming with information for our edification and use.

Verses 2 to 4 refer to past history and are in close harmony with the 8th chapter. Beginning with verse 5 it is prophetic, and reads, "The king of the south shall be strong, and one of his princes; and he shall be strong above him, and have dominion; his dominion shall be a great dominion." Verse 6, "And in the end of years they shall join themselves together."

Right here, the question arises, Who is the king of the south, and who is the prince who shall be strong above him? This is an important question, though one we are not definitely informed on. But this "king of the south" must be somebody. Verses 8 and 9 lead us to conclude that it is not Egypt, the only nation directly south of Palestine. There is a clue in the statement that the prince is "strong above him," and has a "great dominion." By "dominion" we understand there are to be countries ruled by him, but inhabited by people of other races or families.

First among the "dominion" powers, we see Great Britain, with dominions so large and scattered that the sun never sets on her territory, which covers one sixth of the earth's land surface. Great Britain, too, is a former subordinate of Rome which, under Mussolini, has become strong in recent years, though not as strong as England. In these days of rapidly reshaping events the hand of Mussolini is seen in various places, now particularly in Spain, where a victory for General Franco will result in great benefits to Italy, if not actual dominance over Spain. This will make a joining together of Italy with Great Britain even more necessary to England than ever before—perhaps at the price of concessions farther east, which would put Mussolini astride the south of Palestine and qualify him for the title, "king of the south."

At the present Italy and England are concluding peace pacts and harmony agreements which are pointing forward to their joining together.

In verse 5 the "king of the north" is introduced by the statement that the daughter of the king of the south shall come to the king of the north to make an agreement. This ends in failure. But why was it mentioned? We feel that when a lady ambassador is sent by a person as masculine as the king of the south, it will be an indication to us, the church, that we have proceeded that far in the chapter.

Verse 8 reads, "He shall continue more years than the king of the north." To do this the "king of the south" must exist previous to the beginning of the king of the north, as they finish at about the same time.

In Daniel 2:40 we read that the great image had legs of iron, and was strong. In chapter 11 these legs are depicted as the "king of the south," and the "king of the north." In Revelation 12:3 the king of the south is depicted as "a great red dragon, having seven heads and ten horns, and seven crowns upon his heads." It is further stated that "his tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven." By the crowns (diadems, R.V.) on the heads absolute power is indicated, or power from the rulers down. This power is thus in contrast to the beast of Revelation 13, which also had ten horns and seven heads, but which had the crowns on its horns—which looks like a communist or soviet arrangement. Each of the heads represents a separate government associated or allied to work in unity with the others. This is true of both of these great prophetic powers.

In looking over the earth we see nations everywhere looking for alliances to protect them from other combinations of nations. All nations are seeking by mechanical, and other means, to protect themselves, and to dominate others. All nations are forgetting that there is a God in heaven who rules the kingdoms of men and gives them whom He will.

The earth appears destined, in the very near future, to be dominated by these two powers; the great red dragon having ten nations and a dominating influence over one third of the others.

Thus, as one of the great iron legs of the image, we have a Mussolini and associated nations and the papacy working in harmony. The other great iron leg is the king of the north, the man of sin not yet having made his appearance. However, this phase will have to be treated later.

Heredity or Environment

By Mrs. Mayme Jones

DECENTLY the Men's Forum of the Baptist Church in R Eagle Grove, Iowa, put on a debate, the subject being, Resolved: That heredity has a larger part in the molding of character than has environment. The affirmative was defended by the Congregational preacher, the teacher of sociology (and other subjects) in our junior college (a man high in the world of debates), and our foremost insurance man-strong on statistics. The negative side of the question was in charge of three humble housewives, of whom I was selected foreman. Though so far overshadowed by wisdom and ability, we made a very creditable showing, convincing all present that though good blood is very necessary, environment is just as necessary—and even more so. I derived so much benefit from my study that I have decided to pass it on to the readers of THE RESTITUTION HER-ALD. I was assigned the Biblical angle, and confined myself entirely to the Word of God, that highest source of human education. It has so much to say upon the subject that it is only possible to consider the high lights.

First, we call your attention to the Webster's Unabridged Dictionary definition of "environment": "the aggregate of all the external conditions and influences that affect the life and development of an organism." In other words, environment is everything that touches the life of an individual after birth takes place.

In Genesis 1:27 we read: "So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them." And in verse 31 of the same chapter are these words, "And God saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, it was very good." No one would even intimate that these two people had the traditional heritage of bad blood, for God saw that what He had created was very good. But even in the confines of their beautiful Edenic home, came evil environment in the form of the serpent, with whom Eve dallied until he had convinced her that God had made a mistake. God had said, "Of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not cat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." The wily serpent convinced Eve "Ye shall not surely die: for God doth know that in the day ye cat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil" (Gen. 3:4,5). Eve accompanied the serpent to Adam with the fruit after she had tasted it. We all know the remainder of that story-how Adam also fell, and the terrible results of that fall not only to themselves, but to all mankind. Oh, yes, in the Garden of Eden, environment played a large part in the history of mankind.

Two sons were born to this first couple—Cain and Abel. Both inherited the same blood; both were raised in the same home; both attained manhood under the same conditions; but as they grew older, each, for some untold reason, sought different environments. All know the story of the hatred Cain felt for Abel because Abel's sacrifice found favor with God. This hatred grew so strong that he finally slew his own brother—thus, the first murder was perpetrated.

There are some instances of environment's force which we must briefly recall, among others too numerous to dwell upon, in the book of Genesis: Abram and Lot came to the parting of the ways, because their flocks became too numerous. We find Abram generously gave Lot his choice of feeding grounds, Lot foolishly selecting the vicinity of the very wicked city of Sodom. Later, when Abram pleaded with God to spare the city for the sake of even ten right-cous, the ten were not to be found; and we see Lot, his wife, and two daughters escaping from the city. Even Mrs. Lot turned back to look. Environment had put its tongs into her.

We find Ahram offering up his only son through whom the promises of God were to be fulfilled, his faith assuring him that "God was able to raise him up, even from the dead" (Heb. 11:19). Yes, our very faith is a unit of our environment. Joseph's brothers, weak in faith, were so overcome with jealousy and hatred that they sold their father's favorite son into captivity into Egypt.

When God gave the law to Moses at Mount Sinai, His first two commandments were, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me," and "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image." Why? God so commanded Israel because He knew men's hearts and weaknesses, and He knew that in the wrong environment of idolatry they would fall away from His standards, to worship the image seen-even as they did when Moses was up in the mount with God. We recall how Aaron, at the continued pleading of the people, builded them a golden calf, which Moses found them worshiping. We recall, also, the terrible punishment meted out to them. When Moses finally had led the children of Israel to Kadesh Barnea-to the very border of the Promised Land-why did they not go into the land as Joshua and Caleb told them they could? Because they chose the evil environment of the ten other spies who lacked faith in the God who had led them so faithfully that far! As a punishment, they were turned back into the wilderness where they continued their wanderings until those held accountable by God for unbelief (another trait which is a component part of environment) had died.

The Old Testament is full of examples of the punishments God had to mete out to the children of Israel when they strayed from the good environment of God's counsel into the ways of wickedness. Joshua, Gideon, all the judges, prophets, patriarchs, were instruments in God's hands to keep His chosen people in His ways of righteousness. But we cannot pass without commenting about Hannah—that unhappy childless wife who sought the temple of God to pray for a son. We remember that she kept her promise to God to take her little son Samuel to the temple to be trained by Eli for the work God should call him to do. Eli's sons strayed from his counsel into the paths of wickedness, lost their lives, and were the cause of their unhappy father's condemnation and death—because "he restrained them not" (1 Sam. 3:13). These sons had a righteous father, but they departed from his counsel.

Time is too short to dwell further on Old Testament characters. But we must note the Proverbs—words of the wisest man who ever lived. We can mention but a few of his observations.

"My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not" (1:10). "Discretion shall preserve thee, understanding shall keep thee: to deliver thee from the way of the evil man" (2:11, 12). "Enter not into the path of the wicked, and go not in the way of evil men" (4:14). "He that tilleth his land shall be satisfied with bread: but he that followeth vain persons is void of understanding" (12:11). "Whose leveth wisdom rejoiceth his father: but he that keepeth company with harlots spendeth his substance" (29:3). Note this one especially: "Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart: from it" (22:6).

The opening of the New Testament shows the absolute necessity in God's eyes for proper environment. It was no accident that Mary and Joseph were in the little town of Bethlehem when it came time for the baby Jesus to be born. And in His earliest infancy, He was carried to the temple of God to comply with the God-given laws of the Jews. We read that at the age of twelve years He was taken to the temple where He astonished the elders by His wisdom and understanding. Little is told us of His childhood, except that he "grew, and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom; and the grace of God was upon him" (Luke 2:40). But who can question but that His mother and Joseph were as careful in His home training as they were with His infant care at the temple? We know it was the invariable custom of the Jews to have their boys trained most carefully in the synagogues, and His subsequent life showed that He was well versed in Old Testament history and law. The very fact that Jesus was the son of humble folk, that he learned the humble trade of a carpenter, and grew up among common folk, made for His tenderness and understanding to those of us who are numbered among the common people of the earth. It was no accident that God chose "the poor of this world rich in faith" (James 2:5).

When Christ chose His apostles, He said, "Follow me." Without exception (unless it be the young rich ruler), those to whom He gave this blessed call laid down the tools of their former professions, and followed Him. Luke 18:29, 30 gives us these words of Jesus: "There is no man that hath left house, or parents, or brethren, or wife, or children, for the kingdom of God's sake, who shall not receive manifold more in this present time, and in the world to come life everlasting."

What happened when Judas betrayed his Lord? Simply, he did not follow Him, but dallied with temptation in the presence of His enemies—inquiring what they would give him to betray Christ into their hands. When he tried to return his paltry thirty pieces of silver, he, in desperation, took his own life. Judas paid a terrible price for being in a wrong environment. What happened when Peter denied his Lord? He followed "afar off." Fear, another attribute of adverse environment, overcame him, and he denied with curses that he had ever known "the man." Doubt was almost too strong for Thomas when the Lord appeared after His resurrection—and doubt is too much for many people of today.

The Golden Text of the Bible, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life," leaves no doubt but that in the plan of God "whosoever" does not mean "just so he is born of proper parentage."

In Romans 14:19 we read, "Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace." James 4:7, 8 says, "Resist the devil, and he will flee from you. Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you." In Titus 3:9 Paul tells us that "foolish questions, and genealogies, and contentions, and strivings about the law . . . are unprofitable and vain."

In Galatians 5:19-21 we find stated in no uncertain terms the attributes of those in whose environment we, as Christians, should not be found: "adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like."

The fruit of the Spirit are these (vv. 22, 23): "love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." "If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit" (v. 25).

I think no one will question but that, according to the Word of God, environment is much more important in the molding of character than heredity is. Because of this, let us, as parents, be very careful with whom our children associate. We may be sure that even at a very early age evil environment will leave its foul mark on any subjected to it.

OVERTURNING OF A KINGDOM

By H. B. Hathaway

THE KINGDOM being considered is called "the kingdom of Israel" (1 Sam. 15:28), "kingdom of God" (Matt. 21:43), and "kingdom of heaven" (Matt. 11:12). It is to be overturned three times, after which it will be permanently established. In Ezekiel 21:27 God said, "1 will overturn, overturn, overturn, it: and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him." It has been overturned once. Christ preached to the Jews three and a half years, after which He was rejected, and put to death, fulfilling what is spoken of in Daniel 9:26. Christ's words were, "Behold, your house is left unto you desolate" (Matt. 23:38).

Daniel was informed that seventy weeks, or seventy weeks of years, were determined upon his people, and upon the holy city, "to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness" (Dan. 9:24). There is one week, or seven years, which is yet in the future, in which will come one who shall make a covenant with the Jews (vv. 26, 27). If Mussolini is the Antichrist, as many people think, he will make that covenant at the beginning of the last seven years, and restore the kingdom to them. This is what the Jewish people have desired, and expected, for many long years. Christ said, "I am come in my Father's name, and ye receive me not: if another shall come in his own name, him ye will receive" (John 5:43).

In the middle of the week, or after three and a half years, Antichrist will break the covenant (v. 27), and the Jews will again become Roman subjects. Thus the second overturning will occur.

After three and a half years Gog and his company will go up to Jerusalem to take a spoil. (Ezek. 38:11, 12.) This will bring on the battle of Armageddon, and the time of Jacob's trouble. (Jer. 30.) "He shall be saved out of it" (v. 7), for at that time He "whose right it is" shall come to take the kingdom. In that day He will stand on the Mount of Olives (Zech. 14:4), and Israel will say, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord" (Matt. 23:39). Much trouble is the reason for this confession.

When the above mentioned time expires, it will bring in everlasting righteousness. (Dan. 9:24.)

WHAT IS YOUR LIFE?

more death" (Rev. 21:4). The resurrected body is glorious, for it is raised in glory; and powerful, for it is raised in power. There will be no weakness, for these vile bodies will be fashioned like unto his (Christ's) glorious body" (Phil. 3:21).

Let us remember that Christ is the one who "brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." He alone is "the resurrection, and the life." He alone can give eternal life. These present frail bodies are given to all mankind, but the glorious bodies are only for those "who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honour and immortality" (Rom. 2:7).

We are laying the foundation now for our future life. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting" (Gal. 6:7, 8).

Are we redeeming the time? Christ said, "What is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" (Matt. 16:26). Are we spending our years "as a tale that is told"? Or are we so numbering our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom?

"WHAT IS TRUTH?"

the Lord shall prosper in his hand." What does all this mean? We shall let Paul explain, as he does in Romans 5:8, "But God commended his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us," and, "Therefore as by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the rightcousness of one (Jesus) the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life" (v. 18). (Eph. 2:3; Col. 2:11, 12.)

The foregoing truths have had to do with mankind in general. So, we would turn to God's Word for the truths that will make us Christians and heirs with Christ. In Mark 16:15, 16 we read, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." This Great Commission, as we sometimes call it, is the call that is now going out to men and women to repent and to be baptized. The purpose we will find later on.

Let us see if we can uncover the procedure necessary to make a Christian out of a sinner. In Romans 10:13-15 Paul says, "For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach, except they be sent? as it is written, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things!" In these words of truth we learn that the preacher must be sent, and that he must preach the gospel of peace. If the preacher doesn't know what the true gospel is, how can he teach the sinner? But the sinner, to become a Christian, must hear the gospel of peace preached, and he must believe it.

After the sinner has heard and believed, he must obey. In Matthew 9:12, 13 Jesus says, "They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick. But go ye and learn what that meaneth, I will have mercy, and not sacrifice: for I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." Here Jesus is telling the sinner to repent. In 1 Thessalonians 1:9 Paul defines repentance, saying, "For they themselves shew of us what manner of entering in we had unto you, and how ye turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God." In other words, they had turned from the pursuits and pleasures of the sinner's life unto activities that glorified the Father and the Son.

We find in God's Word an example of a sinner (the cunuch) who, after that he had been taught by Philip (the preacher) and after he had believed, said, "Here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized?" After Philip had asked him if he believed, and after the eunuch had confessed that he believed that Jesus Christ was the Son of God, then "they went down both into the water," and Philip "baptized him." (Acts 8:29-38.)

The sinner, if he has been baptized according to the scriptures and has obeyed from the heart, is a child of God by faith in Christ Jesus. Further, "As many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ ... And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise" (Gal. 3:27, 29).

After we have come into Christ, Peter instructs us: "Beside this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity (love)" (2 Peter 1:5-8). We believe the one we have designated as "sinner" is now a Christian, or calledout one, or a member of Christ's bride. He is now eligible to be caught up to meet the Lord when He comes. (1 Thess. 4:16, 17.)

After the faithful shall have been caught up to meet the Lord in the air, they shall be shortly called upon to reign with the Lord Jesus. "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years" (Rev. 20:6).

What is truth? "Thy word is truth." We understand truth, as used by our Lord, to be what God has revealed to us in His Holy Word, and that which is able to make us "wise unto salvation." We believe that Pilate's question has been, and can ever be, fully answered in God's Word.

Our writing here has not covered all of God's truths. Look for, and you shall find, many, many truths published by The Restitution Herald, on such subjects as baptism, the parentage of Jesus, resurrection, etc.

In conclusion, I have one request to ask of all our preachers: Preach and publish the Word.

God's Word is truth.

WILL THE LITERAL EARTH BE MELTED?

(2 Peter 3:10). But such can only refer to the human systems of government, and not to the literal earth. It is clearly taught in the Word of God that the church will reign with Christ (2 Tim. 2:12), and that reign will be on the earth (Rev. 5:10). Christ's dominion will be "from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth" (Psalm 72:8). The meek will inherit the earth. (Psalm 37:9, 22, 29, 34; Matt. 5:5.) In order for these promises to be fulfilled the literal earth must stand as it is. It is agreed that sin, death, and all forms of trouble—in fact, everything that is contrary to God's will—shall be destroyed.

When the literal earth is cleansed of these things, then it can be referred to as a new earth. For instance, the man in Christ is referred to as a "new creature," when, in fact, the same material is still there. He merely took off the cloak of sin, and put on the cloak of righteousness. Isaiah 35 clearly indicates all of these things. The curse that was pronounced after Adam sinned will be removed. (Gen. 3:17, 18; Isa. 55:13.)

The literal earth is referred to as God's footstool. (Matt. 5:35.) The time will come when it will be made glorious. (Isa. 60:13.) The old waste places that have been such for many generations will be built up, and repaired. (Isa. 61:4.) The waste and desolate places of Zion will be made like Eden. (Isa. 51:3.) What a wonderful earth it will be then.

and lead much more useful Christian lives if they bestowed the pity where it belongs—on their critics. "For he shall have judgment without mercy, that hath shewed no mercy; and mercy rejoiceth against judgment" (James 2:13).

In Psalm 15:3 we find the Lord answering the question, "Who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill?" by listing the qualifications of such persons. Among those qualifications is this one, "He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbour, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbour." Listed in Proverbs 6:16-19, we find seven things that the Lord hates. "These six things doth the Lord hate: yea, seven are an abomination unto him: a proud look, a lying tongue, and hands that shed innocent blood, an heart that deviseth wicked imaginations, feet that be swift in running to mischief, a false witness that speaketh lies, and he that soweth discord among brethren." Truly, the victim of a talebearer is much less to be pitied than the talebearer himself!

And even though he may know some bit of evil that he has discovered in the life of another to be true, the Word of God gives him little encouragement in "spreading" it. "A talebearer revealeth secrets: but he that is of a faithful spirit concealeth the matter" (Prov. 11:13).

We see encouraging signs and reasons for rejoicing on every hand. New churches are being built, others are being bought, and old ones are being remodeled. There is to be another Summer Training School this summer to help prepare leaders for these churches. In an age when Christianity, generally, is supposed to be on the decline, we see the Church of God awakening to new life, and becoming imbued with the spirit of evangelism. Other denominations are adopting, one by one, the doctrines of the literal second coming of Christ, the return of Israel, the kingdom of God on earth, and many other Bible truths that for years they have despised and rejected and which the Church of God, almost alone, has held forth. For these things we rejoice and thank God.

True, there are still many faults and shortcomings, and many critics. We must recognize our shortcomings and do all that we can to correct them, but let us be encouraged by the good that has been and is being accomplished and keep these ever uppermost in our minds. A sufficiently heavy yield of fruit will crowd out the weeds. Hold fast the good, eschew the evil.

Enduring Trials and Sufferings

* * * Virginia Smith, Russellville, Ark.

The Christian life is the happiest life. It is the only one worth while, yet the pathway is often rough, and the cross is heavy to bear.

We must all choose between the way of ease and the way of the cross. But the way of the cross leads us on, till at last by patient continuance we shall receive eternal life. The happiest people are those who are living for others.

Heroes are forged on anvils hot with pain—the greater the storm the greater the strength. The greatest souls get no reward in this life. Abraham lived a life for God, yet when Sarah, his wife, died he had no place to bury her, and had to buy one. But "he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God" (Heb. 11:10).

Moses chose suffering with the children of God, rather than to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, even though he could have enjoyed the pleasures of riches here in this life. He esteemed "the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt" (Heb. 11:26).

Paul was schooled in the world's richest culture. He was proud of his ancestry. He could have had much the world had to offer. But he chose to be despised by the world, for the sake of Christ and His gospel. He was beaten, imprisoned, deceived, and mobbed. He suffered that he might save men from their sins, and extend the church of God. He received no reward in this life, except the joy and peace he found in walking hand in hand with Jesus.

Jesus is the Son of God. Yet He received no honor on this earth; He had no place to lay His head. He was tempted, oppressed, despised, rejected, betrayed, crucified, and forsaken. "If we suffer, we shall also reign with him" (2 Tim. 2:12). Fellowship with Christ in suffering brings fellowship in His glory.

Paul says, "We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, but not in despair; persecuted, but not forsaken; cast down, but not destroyed" (2 Cor. 4:8,9). We should not become discouraged, even though we must suffer in this present world. "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look not at the things which are seen, . . . for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal" (2 Cor. 4:17, 18).

"For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us" (Rom. 8:18). "But rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that, when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy' (1 Peter 4:13).

If life is a burden, let's bear it. If there is a crown of thorns, let's wear it. Let's bear the cross, then wear the crown "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation, for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him" (James 1:12).

> Must I bear a cross, dear Lord, While I journey here below; When there are others living in sin Who never sorrow know?

He answered, "Yes, my child; On earth I carried a burden, too, And if you follow my steps, There'll be a cross for you."

I cried, "The way is dark!
The way I cannot see."
He answered, "Have faith, my child,
And place your trust in me.

"The path may be steep before you,
But I'll hold your hand each day;
I'll guide you, and cheer you each moment,
Till you get to the end of the way."

Junior Social Correspondence Committee

We were asked at the time of our appointment as Berean editor to give space from time to time to this allimportant committee; hence, these few lines.

It is our understanding that the work of this committee is lagging just a little at this time, because some of the members of it are not reporting to their chairman as they should. Would these members please report regularly, so the work can be kept in up-to-date condition?

Now, to the ministers and others: If you know of any young persons who have been recently baptized, or any others who desire correspondence with someone their own age and of like faith, will you please inform the chairman of the committee, Miss Lorraine Brossard, Eden Valley, Minnesota.

We have also been asked to inquire about the "Committee Circuit Letter." Whatever member has it, will he or she please send it on to the next member on the list?

Peter's Letter to Christians

The men who were chosen by God were ones who listened when He spoke to them, and obeyed His commands willingly. Abraham was ready to fully obey God. Noah built the ark exactly as God had planned it for him. Moses led God's people straight on and, when they came to the Red Sea, God parted the sea. So, today, if we follow our Lord, we must listen for His call and obey His commands.

Today, God calls to us through Peter. Peter might have called this letter Everyday Christian Expression; for that is what he wrote to those Christians about. Peter says that we must guard our tongues. Christians cannot do their best work if they say ugly things to one another. Often you say words to your little brother or sister that you didn't intend to say. But words once spoken, can't be taken back, can they? That is one reason why we want to become good guards over our tongues and lips. Some of your older brothers or sisters may be basket ball guards. It is much more difficult to be a "tongue" guard. A game of basket ball is soon over, and such guards can rest; but no one can rest from guarding his tongue!

Peter also told those people to sanctify God in their hearts. Can you tell anyone who asks you, what your hope is? By studying our lessons we learn more about the hope we have of Christ's soon coming, and our hope of living with Him. God's Word, also, helps us to "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ" (2 Peter 3:18).

If we are wise like those men of old, mentioned at the beginning of our lesson, we'll do what we know God says is best and right. That is the way to have "a good conscience" that Peter tells about (1 Peter 3:16).

Verse 12 tells us about two groups. To which group will you work and pray to belong?

ECE Club News

There are different ways to use our page. If the children are small the page can be read and then told to them, explaining the points they can't understand. They are:

- 1. Cradle Roll members-ages 2 to 5.
- 2. Active Club members—from their ages sent in to me they are from 6 to 13 years.

Let me hear from more of you, to join one of the two groups of our ECE Club. You've been told all about the Club, so why not join?

Then there are a great number of you who can read the page for yourselves.

Be Courteous

One of our duties as Christians is to be courteous. Let us try this week to make a list of the things we might do and say to be polite, as saying, "Please," Thank you," "May I help?" standing aside to let another pass, holding the door so it won't slam in your neighbor's face. Having a cheery smile and greeting can also be placed on the list. No doubt you can think of others,

BAPTISMS AT TEMPE, ARIZONA

On Wednesday evening, March 1, we officiated at the first baptismal service in the new church. At this time Mrs. Lottie L. Fait, and Mrs. Sue Irene Robson made the good con-fession and were baptized into Christ, thus giving a seal to their faith of the gospel. They have been considering this action for some time, and finally decided to become obedient at the time stated. They rejoice, and we all rejoice, in their new found knowledge. We will find in them two good workers in the vineyard. We want all brethren to rejoice with us.

We are thoroughly sold on having the baptism in the church-clean water, no mud or sand to wade through, no careless onlooker with sneering remarks. It is done more quickly and there is a solemnity that cannot be had outside. This was the first baptismal service held in the new church. We are all rejoicing in the possession of a splendid meeting place where all services may be conducted under the best of conditions. We thank God daily for His goodness to us.

Scarlet fever is still in our midst, and the flu is here, there, and everywhere, and for variety there is mumps, and James Rhoades, Jr., has a broken foot—incurred when a large piece of cement fell on it while he was working on the construction of the new Woolworth building.

We are glad to report that the good work of the Training School is still carrying on. Miss Frances Munshaw is a member of the teach ing staff of the Sunday school, and prominent in the young people's work.

Through the efforts of the young people, the church has been presented with one hundred new song books, for which we are very grateful.

Plans are made for two-weeks' pre-Easter services with Bro. F. L. Austin as guest Pennellwood extends to all a most hearty invitation to be our guests for the Spring Con-ference to be held March 24-26.

SOUTHLAWN PARK CHURCH OF GOD

Grand Rapids, Mich.

The Michigan State Conference of the Church of God will hold its spring meetings at the Pennellwood Church in Grand Rapids. These meetings are to be held March 24, 25, and 26. Bro. G. E. Marsh, pastor of this church, will give two of the sermons, and the Southlawn choir will also aid in the services,

A week of special evangelistic meetings has been planned by the official board for the week preceding Easter. These meetings will bring to a climax the class studying gospel fundamentals that has been meeting the past six weeks.

Sr. Skeels has left the hospital where she underwent a major operation, and is now at her home on Eastern Avenue. Her improvement is very slow.

Sr. Marsh is still confined to her home, but is somewhat better. We trust that at the next writing we shall be able to give a better report of our sick ones.

Speaking about Spain and the probable results of the war there, Bro. G. E. Marsh addressed the Federation of Women's Clubs of this city on February 21. After his lecture, many questions were asked of Bro. Marsh pertaining to world conditions, the Jews, and prophecy.

The ladies' class of this church, at their monthly meeting, listened to a lecture on "Mind Psychology," delivered by Mrs. Clayton Huffman, teacher of that subject in the schools here. Mrs. Huffman's strongest point can be found in the Bible-1 John 4:18.

LOUISIANA CHURCH NOTES

The Ladies of the Happy Woods church recently met and organized a Ladies' Aid Society. The group selected Mrs. Albert Siple as president, Mrs. Gus Landry vice-president, Miss Esther Bottolf secretary, and Miss Bernice Foster treasurer. The group plans to meet once a month at the homes of the various members.

Miss Ella Siple and Miss Ruchie Alexander have been on the sick list, and unable to attend some of the services. At this writing they are much improved.

The Blood River young folks are planning to present an Easter program, and work has already started for this event.

The attendance at the various church services is most gratifying, and the outlook is encouraging for further growth and develop-ment. May God direct our efforts in His Harry Goekler, Pastor.

THE FAITHFUL BEREANS

With this issue The Restitution Herald will start on its mission to twenty-five new homes in four different states, as the result of faithful and generous cooperation from the National Berean Society. Thank you, Bereans. Greetings, new readers.

This is by no means the first time the Bereans have cooperated in this way, but we call attention to it that you may know they are ever working, and that dues sent from local organizations to the treasurer of the National Berean Society find a ready and profitable outlet.

Many of the tracts published in late years have been financed by the Bereaus.

Gleanings From the Field

Bro. and Sr. L. E. Conner of Dixon, Ill., have been testing the modern trains. Sr. Conner has recently returned from a several weeks' visit in California, and our National Bible Institution manager is now on a business trip into Canada.

A son was born Tuesday, March 7, to Bro. and Sr. Ward Lindsay of Oconomowoe, Wis.

Sr. Verna Thayer is in the Rockford Hospital, Rockford, Ill. Though sick with pneumonia, we are glad to report she is gaining strength.

Robins in Oregon, Ill., are harbingers of

Only one hundred thirty-nine days until August 1.

Bro. O. J. Parker of Kokomo, Ind., is in e Veterans' Hospital in Indianapolis, receiving treatment for his eyes.

Many complimentary remarks were heard about last week's front page article by Bro. Harold Hardesty of Oregon, Ill. This week Bro. J. R. LeCrone greets you on the front cover. He is pastor of several churches in Virginia. His address is Woodstock.

71/2 pound daughter was born March 6. to Bro. and Sr. Leslie Hamilton of Litchfield, Minn. Congratulations.

Bro. Earl Brossard of Eden Valley, Minn., is still seriously sick. He is receiving eare in the University Hospital, Minneapolis.

"Some brother or sister has had The Restitution Herald sent to me. I want to thank whoever it was through The Herald. I wish this wonderful paper could be in every home, and read with interest and understanding."-Mrs. Damie Lowry, Vanzant, Mo.

Bro. A. E. Griffiths, whose articles appear from time to time in The Herald, lives at 1610 East 82nd St., Cleveland, Ohio.

Bro. Charles Doll, West Milton, Ohio, is sick in the St. Elizabeth Hospital, Dayton, Ohio. Sr. Zelma Kessler, also of West Milton, is af-flicted with blood poison. Both are members of the Brush Creek congregation. We hope they may soon recover.

Mr. Clarence LeMasurier, son-in-law of Bro. and Sr. W. F. Hoskins, has returned to his home in Paynesville, Minn., from a hos-pital in St. Paul.

REPORT FROM T. A. DRINKARD

It has been several months since the writer has given any report through The Restitution Herald. Only a part of the work planned for December, January, and February has been done, because of so much sickness in our home. During January I gave sermons at the following places: Ater, Texas, (1) 3; Mullin, Texas, (7, 8) 2; Little Rock, Ark., (11) 1; Cleveland. Ark., (14, 15) 3; Pleasant Hill, Ark., (20-22)

The Lord willing, I will fill all appointments in Texas during the first half of March. and will go to Arkansas for the last half. As we approach spring the prospects are that I shall be very busy. Two meetings have already been announced. If our brethren here and there plan on having a series of meetings during the spring or summer, and contemplate securing the writer, I suggest that he be informed as soon as possible.

The work which I am doing is wholly supported by freewill offerings on the part of brethren who see the need of carrying forward the gospel work. It takes faith, courage, determination, and money to do the work. It is interesting to note that several who contribute to our effort are sisters in the faith that never hear a sermon, but they want to share in sending the gospel to others.

The Church of God faith and doetrine are being opposed on every hand, and I pledge my faith in that doctrine to the extent that I shall defend it at all times, whenever and wherever called to do so. May I hear from you, whether you are able to contribute one penny or not. A dear sister in Ohio who was not able to do this, wrote me a very fine letter last month, and just told me how much good my articles in The Restitution Herald and the Gospel Trumpet did her. That is the reason I am encouraged to go on in the face of what sometimes looks like insurmountable obstacles. Will you help us to do what the Master commanded, to preach the gospel?

T. A. Drinkard, Handley, Texas.

EDNA BARKER

Edna, the beloved wife of Charles Barker, Jr., of South Bend, and only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Grayson Houser of Lakeville, Ind., came most unexpectedly to her death on February 8, 1939. After three weeks of suffering the baffling ailments terminated in spinal meningitis, and this much respected and beneficent life was brought to an untimely end. Born on September 15, 1907, Edna, at the age of fifteen chose to live unto her Lord and Savior, and was baptized, in the obedience of faith, into His all-saving name. She united with the North Salem Church.

On September 1, 1928, she was united in marriage with Charles Barker, Jr., of South Bend, Bro. Arthur Johnson officiating.

Besides her broken-hearted husband and parents, there survive her grief-stricken brothers: Walter, and family, of South Bend; John, and family, of Mishawaka; and Cecil of Lakeville. Also, numerous other relatives, and many respecting and grieving friends survive her.

The funeral services were conducted at the Lakeville Christian Church where she was at one time a Sunday school attendant. There the huge bank of flowers and the wholly filled house bore mute tribute of praise to her mem-

The strong faith of her people in the prom ises of Him who is the resurrection and the life is their one only consolation at this time. Their Christian hope and faith lead them to confidently expect to greet her in immortal life at the first and better resurrection.

JAMES J. MORTIMER

James J. Mortimer was born March 3, 1883, in Olsburg, Kan., and died February 12, 1939. His father and mother were born in England. He had four brothers and three sisters.

He came to Cashmere, Wash., in 1904, and was married to Manda Patterson, May 26, 1908. To this union were born two children: Elvira, and Darlene. Besides his wife and children he leaves four brother and two sis-

He was a member of the Church of God at Cashmere, having been baptized by Bro. N. D. Titchenal in April, 1912.

The funeral services were conducted by Bro. Lyle Rankin, pastor of the Cashmere church, and the writer. They were held in the Kuelb's Funeral Home, and were attended by a capacity house of sympathizing relatives and friends.

Bro. Mortimer was well and favorably known by the membership of the Church of God in central and western Washington, as he was for several years president of the Central Washington Conference of the Church of God. He was well informed in the Scriptures, and was respected and loved by both the members of the church and those without for his sterling virtues and Christian character. He will be sadly missed by the community where he lived.

He was perfectly rational until death, and fully realized his helpless condition. He called upon the elders of the church for the anointing, as commanded in James 5:14, 15, which was administered by Bro. Rankin and the writer. Although physically helpless, he looked forward to the soon coming of the great Life-Giver, "who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself" (Phil. 3:21). With this glorious hope in mind, he fell asleep in Jesus.

May we be ready to meet him, when the Lord comes to "make up (his) jewels." A. L. Corbaley.

"Home, Sweet Home"

Provided by the love and sympathy of the entire brotherhood of the Church of God, Golden Rule Home assures to the members of its Family the comfort, security, and solicitous care which the word "home" always suggests.

Here the anxieties of earlier and more active life are laid aside forever. No threat of eviction for non-payment of rent or taxes or other indebtedness troubles the hearts of the residents of Golden Rule Home!

No doctor or hospital bills, no grocery, coal, or light bills to be met the first of the month, bring fear to the minds of the Golden Rule Home Family!

All such obligations and burdens are taken from the shoulders of these older ones immediately upon their entrance into the Home and are carried thereafter by the Golden Rule Home itself, which is amply able to bear the load on their behalf.

A hearty Christian welcome awaits all who seek the protection and lifelong support the Home provides.

Conditions of entrance into Golden Rule Home are as liberal as absolute security permits. Write for full particulars concerning the Home and its advantages. Or, better still, come and visit the Home itself and let the Family tell their own story of its advantages and comforts.

THE CHURCH OF GOD AT BURR OAK, INDIANA

The Church of God at Burr Oak, Indiana, was organized at North Union, four miles west and one mile south of Burr Oak. Elder N. H. Geiselman was leader in forming the early organization, which was Advent Christian. In 1901 a group separated to Burr Oak, where a church house was built. That building was destroyed by lightning on June 21, 1908. . . . The present building was creeted in 1909, and dedicated August 8, by Elder L. E. Conner, who had also officiated at the dedication of the former building. Brothers G. M. Osborn, George Maxey, and Albert Overmeyer were the trustees when the present building was erected. . . . Many of our evangelists have spoken for this body. Those who have served as pastors are: Elders N. H. Geiselman, D. E. Vanvactor, A. H. Zilmer, J. R. Fox, O. R. Jenks, C. C. Maple, J. H. Anderson, F. L. Austin, A. E. Hoskins, C. A. Smead, W. J. McKnight, and the present pastor, J. W. McLain.

Hitler

Like Cunningham, when Hitler runs he is the whole race. Like the historic Casar, Hitler is out to conquer. . . . Maybe Brutus waits in Rome.

On March 14, with troops massed along the Czech border, with planes in readiness to rain fire from heaven, Hitler demanded that the Czechs bow inside of forty-eight hours.

They did! Stripped of the Sudetenland, denied even the pretense of aid from England or France who prefer to see this German Casar moving away from them, what else could President Hacha do but submit? A hare never fought a hound.

Militant German sympathizers in Slovakia invented an oppression howl. From this springboard Hitler dived into the swim. The bachelor's children were in peril; there must be meaning in "Vaterland"!

Riding triumphantly into Prague, Hitler reduced the once powerful Czech army to a mere police force, separated Slovakia from the Czechs, and pronounced the Slavs a free and independent people.

Free? Yes, for two days! Like the mouse is free before it is swallowed! Two days before, Slovakia was called an independent state; on March 16, 1939, it is absorbed in the new and rising German Empire as a "protectorate." Poland, Hungary, and Rumania are probably next on the menu. The cat licks his whiskers.

Nazis in the Sky

Hitler is a "prince of the power of the air." Germany has 2,500 speedy bombers, each able to carry a ton of explosives for a thousand miles, and then to return for another trip. The Nazis are superior in the air to Russia, twice as strong as England, and four times as strong as France. Hitler is ready to fight. Let the lion and all her cubs roar.

King of the North

Ezekiel 38, Daniel 11, Zechariah 14, and Joel 3 foretell a mighty expedition from the north into Palestine. This

THE PLAIN OF ESDRAELON

"king of the north shall come with chariots, and with horsemen . . . into the glorious land, . . . shall plant . . . his palace between the seas in the glorious holy mountain; yet he shall come to his end, and none shall help him." (Dan. 11:40-45.) Germany, now forming and moving eastward, may be "Gomer, and all his bands" (Ezek. 38:6) to descend on "the land of unwalled villages to take a spoil' (vv. 11, 12). "Thou shalt come . . . out of the north parts, thou, and many people with thee, all of them riding upon horses, a great company, and a mighty army . . . in the latter days" (vv. 15, 16).

The Plain of Esdraelon

The Plain of Esdraelon, also called the Valley of Megiddo, extends from the Jordan westward to the Mediterranean, following the Kishon River in the very heart of Palestine. It is a historic battleground.

There "the Lord discomfited Sisera, and all his chariots, and all his host" (Judges 4:15). "Then sang Deborah and Barak, . . . Kings came and fought . . . by the waters of Megiddo; . . . the stars in their courses fought against Sisera. The river of Kishon swept them away." (Judges 5.)

The Valley of Megiddo refers to the same place as Armageddon (Har-Magedon), i.e., the Mountain of Megiddo. Megiddo was an ancient city on the southern boundary of Megiddo Valley—the Plain of Esdraelan.

Will the cavalry of Sisera be again swept into the sea? The Kishon River waits for Armageddon! The king of the north comes down with his horsemen. "A great tumult from the Lord shall be among them." (Zeeh. 14:12-15.) In the River Kishon, perchance, "without the city... blood came... even unto the horse bridles." (Rev. 14:18-20.) When Kishon's water is colored with blood, a Sisera may get a nail driven into his head (Judges 4:21). "The stars in their courses fought against Sisera."... King of the north, you're doomed!

In the meantime, and "at the time of the end shall the king of the south push at him" (Dan. 11:40). A lion barks at the "power of the air."

The Church of the Living God

Article 1

By J. H. Anderson

THE strongest organization of the gospel age is the church, the church of the living God. However, in the next age there will be an organization stronger than this one, the kingdom of God.

Am I a member of the church of God? What is the church of God? How does the church of God receive members? Is it an honor to be a member? We wish to write a series of articles in answer to these questions, with the permission of the editor of The Restitution Herald.

The word "church" comes from the Greek word ekklesia, and means "called out ones." "Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name" (Acts 15:14). Then, to be a member I must be a called out one. (2 Cor. 6:14-18.)

The church is God's house. "Behave thyself in the house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth" (1 Tim. 3:15).

Every house must have a foundation. The foundation of the house of God was laid by God. "Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation: he that believeth shall not make haste" (Isa. 28:16).

Who, or what is this foundation stone that God has laid in Zion? Jesus "saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock (that Jesus is the Son of God) I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it" (Matt. 16:15-18). Here we learn:

- (1) God laid the foundation,
- (2) God revealed it to Peter,
- (3) Christ, the foundation, is the builder of the house, the church of God.

Hence, if I am a member of God's church I am in the house built by Christ upon the foundation laid by the Father, which foundation is even the Son of God. "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. 3:11).

There can be only one church on one foundation. Christ, head of the church, has only one body. "There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling" (Eph. 4:4).

J. H. Anderson

To be a member in this church of God one must be a "doer" of the Word. Jesus says, "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock. and every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell: and great was the fall of it'' (Matt. 7:24-27). James says, "Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves" (1:22). Am I a "doer"? Are you?

After God placed in Zion a stone for a foundation for His church He tested that Stone, even Christ, called "a tried stone" (Isa. 28:16).

God engraved all His attributes upon that Stone, His love, wisdom, power, person, etc. Zechariah, prophesying of the BRANCH, also said, "Behold the stone that I have laid . . .; upon one stone shall be seven eyes: behold, I will engrave the engraving thereof, saith the Lord of hosts" (Zech. 3:9). Paul describes Christ as "being the brightness of his (God's) glory, and the express image of his person" (Heb. 1:3).

This engraving of God upon His own Son was so complete that in the Stone there dwelt the fullness of the Father, so that anyone looking on the Stone saw all the fullness of the Father. "In him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily" (Col. 2:9). Answering Philip's request to see the Father, Jesus said, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father" (John 14:9).

It was through obedience to the Father that this Stone, the Son, was tried, so that He might become the sure foundation for God's church. "Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered" (Heb. 5:8). (See also Heb. 2:8, 10.) This testing lasted until death. Christ became perfect in resurrection. (Heb. 5:9.) Jesus said to His disciples, "With desire I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer" (Luke 22:15), indicating that His last few hours of testing were most severe. That perfection came in His resurrection is indicated in His words to Herod as recorded in Luke 13:32.

Every lively stone built upon this tried and true foundation must also undergo a test, so that it will correctly fill the place assigned to it by the Father. However, God will not permit the test to be too severe. (1 Cor. 10:13).

Once in Christ, Always in Christ?

By Laurence M. Howell

WE SOMETIMES hear the statement, "Once in Christ, always in Christ," or "Once in grace, always in grace." The thought of those making either statement is that once a person believes the gospel and obeys in baptism, thus putting on or coming into Christ (Gal. 3:26, 27), he is sure to inherit eternal life and enter the kingdom of God in some capacity, regardless of the life led following baptism.

What we wish to discuss, mainly, is the thought just mentioned, rather than the statement first quoted.

Galatians 3:26 says, "Ye are are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." This faith, if genuine, prompts us to obey in baptism (Mark 16: 15, 16; Acts 2:38; Gal. 3:27), and we become not only children of God, but "heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together." (See Rom. 8:14-17.)

Having become children and heirs of God, our names are said to be written in the book of life. In Philippians 4:1-3 Paul speaks of some "whose names are in the book of life."

The point in question is whether one can become a child and heir of God, have his name in the book of life, and still fail to receive eternal life and to enter the kingdom.

Let us first notice John 15. Christ here first gives the parable of the vine. Verses 1 and 2 read, "I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away: and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit." Then, verses 5 and 6 read, "I am the vine, ye are the branches: He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit: for without me ye can do nothing. If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned."

Now carefully note that by Christ's own explanation of His parable He is the vine and Christians or disciples are the branches. Since the branches, or Christians bearing no fruit, are to be burned and destroyed, it can only mean they will finally be destroyed in the second death. Hence, they cannot, from the teaching of this parable, ever receive eternal life or enter the kingdom. The burning or destruction here mentioned cannot refer to the Adamic death, for the righteous also suffer it.

It is through Jesus Christ that we have remission of sins when we believe the gospel, repent and obey in baptism. We then come into covenant relationship with God, Christ being our mediator and intercessor. (1 Tim. 2:5.) Hebrews 7, in setting forth Christ as our High Priest, reads thus in verse 25, "Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them."

Now it is through God's grace, favor or mercy, that He offered His only begotten Son to act as our Redeemer, High Priest, and finally our King to rule the world in righteous-

At baptism, if preceded by belief and repentance, we have all past sins erased, and are given a clean slate for the future. We are then repeatedly admonished by Paul to not continue in sin, but to be led by the Spirit, and war against the lusts of the flesh, to overcome evil with good.

If, in spite of the pleading of the Spirit and our better judgment, we yield to temptation, by following Hebrews 7:25, already quoted, we can obtain forgiveness. 1 John 1:9 also says, "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." Please note, forgiveness is conditional on repentance or confession.

However, if we revert to the works of the flesh enumerated in Galatians 5:19-21, and no longer repent and use the means of grace provided through Christ's mediatorship; in other words, if we turn our backs on God, we must conclude we come under the condemnation of Galatians 5:21. Paul here says that "they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God."

In Revelation 2:7 we read, "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God." In Revelation 3:21 we also read, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." Finally, in Revelation 3:5 we have these words, "He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name before my Father, and before his angels."

Now let us sum up our study. From the parable of the vine we find that the unfruitful Christian is to be burned up, destroyed in the second death, from which there is no awaking. From a study of Galatians 5, Hebrews 7:25, and 1 John 1:9 we must conclude that the backsliding Christian who no longer uses the means of grace provided for forgiveness "shall not inherit the kingdom of God." Lastly, we find that the overcomer shall not have his name blotted out of the book of life. Conversely, the Christian not proving an overcomer in the end, we must obviously infer will have his name blotted out of the book of life.

Hence, we see how one may be in grace, and fall from

it. He may be an heir of God, and a joint-heir with Christ, and by continued sin or apostasy be disinherited the same as a son by his earthly father.

Paul aptly compares the Christian life to a race. Whether or not we shall win the prize, eternal life, at the end of the race cannot be determined until the close of life. It behooves every professing Christian to heed Paul's admonition, "So run, that ye may obtain" (1 Cor. 9:24). He then closes the chapter with these words, "But I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection: lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway."

"The Field Is the World"

By Mrs. E. M. Pearson

JESUS said, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature (or being)" (Mark 16:15). He was speaking to his eleven apostles, but does not this command apply to all disciples who in the ages since have taken up their crosses to follow Him? "Go ye" means you, if you are to be a true disciple of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Your neighbor, friend, or brother may be doing a splendid work; but what about you? In Matthew 10:38 we read these words of the Master, "He that taketh not his cross, and followeth after me, is not worthy of me."

Where is, "into all the world"? Surely, we cannot all leave our homes and go to foreign lands. No, that is not expected of us, but "all the world" is full of creatures. Where I live there are people, and where you are there are people. If each one of us would preach the gospel to every creature with which we come in contact, soon the message would be in all the world!

With the poor means of transportation and communication available to the disciples in Bible times, the gospel was preached to both Jews and Gentiles in most of the known world. While some, as Paul, Barnabas, and Timothy, engaged in foreign missionary work, they did not wait until they were many miles from home in distant lands to begin their preaching of the gospel. Acts 13:2 reads, "As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them." Because they were already preaching the gospel to every creature they were prepared for further work which God had for them to do. They were continually spreading the gospel by word of mouth, letters, and songs. "At midnight Paul and Silas prayed, and sang praises unto God: and the prisoners heard them" (Acts 16:25).

Your world and mine may be very small, yet we must canvass it completely. Be sure there is no one in it to whom we have not preached the gospel by word, deed, song, or whatever legitimate method is necessary to bring them to the knowledge of the gospel. "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your father which is in heaven" (Matt. 5:16).

Let us ever be ready to give praises to God for the many blessings of life. Say not, "We are lucky"; but remember Psalm 50:23, "Whoso offereth praise glorifieth me: and to him that ordereth his conversation aright will I shew the salvation of God"; and James 1:17, "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning."

Do you have a telephone? Use it to preach the gospel. Call your friends and tell them the Lord is coming. Invite them to services to worship, and to hear the gospel from the lips of a more learned and talented speaker. Tell them of the latest blessing you have received from the Lord.

Write a letter; then another, and another. How quickly our mail carries news from one side of the continent to another. Use it to carry the glad news of the coming kingdom.

Call on your neighbors, chat over the backyard fence; but talk of things eternal—of the plan of salvation. Continually preach the gospel to every creature.

"My brethren, have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, with respect of persons" (James 2:1). Do not seek out only the rich or popular ones, or those you think most likely to accept, but preach (by word and deed) to every creature. "So then neither is he that planteth any thing, neither he that watereth; but God that giveth the increase" (1 Cor. 3:7). Christ said in Matthew 9:13, "1 am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance."

Perhaps we become too concerned over the increase (which is the Lord's work), and neglect our part, that of preaching the gospel or good news.

To this siek, sin-cursed world filled with wickedness, where every imagination of the thoughts of men's hearts is only evil continually (cp. Gen. 6:5), what could be better news than that the Son of God is coming to establish His kingdom and put all enemies under His feet.

"I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away" (Rev. 21: 3, 4).

Let us keep these promises ever in mind, and "press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus" (Phil, 3:14).

The Law of the Sabbath

By R. H. Judd

VERY reasonable question with which to start our A study would be, When did the Sabbath law come into force? Some of our friends claim that it started from creation. This idea is based on the word in Genesis 2:3, that "God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it." It should be noted, however, that while the day was sanctified, or set apart for the benefit of mankind, there was no law concerning it, and that it was "added," as we shall see, centuries later. That which starts from the beginning can searcely be said to be added. From the creation of Adam to the exodus is a period of 2,500 years, and during all that period there is no mention of any Sabbath law. No account is given of anyone being blessed for keeping any Sabbath, or of anyone being punished for breaking one. The Sabbath was not even known as the "Sabbath" day until the giving of the manna in Exodus 16, when Moses had to call the attention of the Israelites to the fact that they were then under law with regard to it. Previous to that time, though rarely mentioned, it appears only to have been known as the seventh day.

That the law of the Sabbath was specially given to the Israelites as a memorial of their departure from Egypt is clearly stated in Deuteronomy 5:15: "Remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched out arm: therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the sabbath day." This implies that the Exodus was the date of its first institution, and that it could not have been given to the Gentiles, for the Israelites were the only people delivered from Egypt.

In Nehemiah 9:13 we read: "Thou camest down also upon mount Sinai, and spakest with them from heaven, and gavest them right judgments, and true laws, good statutes and commandments: and madest known unto them thy holy sabbath." Here the "making known" of the Sabbath is said to have been at the same time as the giving of the law on Mount Sinai. In Exodus 31:13-17 the Sabbath is said to be "a sign between me and you throughout your generations; that ye may know that I am the Lord that doth sanctify you." Ezekiel 20:12 repeats the same fact. The cities of refuge were sanctified, that is, they were set apart. So God set Israel apart by giving them the law of the Sabbath. If the Sabbath were meant for the Gentiles, how could it make Israel a peculiar people above all nations of the earth? Further, in Exodus 20:11 the Sabbath is said to be a reminder that the Lord Jehovah, the God of Israel, was the Creator. Other nations had their gods, but these gods had no sign to connect them with the Creator.

Another argument often presented on behalf of Sabbath observance is that the Ten Commandments are moral laws, and that moral laws are eternal. Christians, therefore, have no right to break the fourth commandment, any more than the other nine. To this we reply that the fourth commandment is not a moral law. It is a statutary law which can be altered at will by one in authority. Christ had power to alter it, for "the Son of man is Lord also of the sabbath" (Luke 6:5). The other nine are moral laws. It is never right to worship other gods, or to take God's name in vain. It is never right to kill, to commit adultery, or to steal. All these laws are reaffirmed in the New Testamenf, but the fourth commandment is not. The apostles declared "the whole counsel of God" (Acts 20:27), but they never preached the Sabbath.

"The law" (including the Ten Commandments), as we shall see, was never intended as a means of obtaining salvation (viz., eternal life), but as a "wall" to separate Israel from the rest of the nations. "Ye shall therefore keep my statutes, and all my judgments, and do them . . . I am the Lord your God, which have separated you from other people . . . I have severed you from other people." (See Lev. 20:22-26.) In Deuteronomy 7:6-11 Israel is said to be a "special people" and the commandments were for the purpose of keeping them such. So effectual was this wall that not even Christ Himself preached the gospel to the Gentiles, and He commanded His apostles not to do so. (Matt. 10:5.)

We wish to emphasize this point, that the law was never intended to give eternal life. It is written, "The law is not of faith" (Gal. 3:12), and "without faith it is impossible to please" God (Heb. 11:6). Turn up all the passages which speak of rewards for obedience in keeping the law and it will be found that none of them make any reference to the future life. For instance, see the following: Exodus 20:12; Deuteronomy 5:16; Ephesians 6:2. "That thy days may be long upon the land" was the reward, a temporal one with no reference to immortality. (See also Deut. 11:8-25; 17:18-20.) But there is still stronger evidence. "If righteousness is through the law, then Christ died for nought" (Gal. 2:21, R.V.). We cannot put the matter more strongly: Christ did not die in vain. Therefore, righteousness cannot come by the law.

In Galatians 3:19 we read, "Wherefore then serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions, till the seed (Christ) should come." It was added to the covenants of promise given to Abraham and his seed. It was given to a nation of sinners who served idols (Josh. 24:14), in contradistinction to the promises which were given to the saints—Abraham and his family. The law was simply "a schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster" (Gal. 3:24, 25).

Had the Israelites not been forcibly protected in this way, they would have become mingled with the Gentiles, lost their line of descent from Abraham to Christ, and God's plan of salvation through Christ would have been frustrated. But, as Paul says, it was only "added until the seed should come to whom the promise was made." Christ broke down the wall.

But let us still continue the evidence that the law could not give life, namely, eternal life. In Ephesians 2:12 we read that the Gentiles were: (1) "aliens from the commonwealth of Israel," and (2) "strangers from the covenants of promise." The covenants of promise are the covenants made to Abraham, and are in the New Testament called "the gospel preached to Abraham" (Gal. 3:8). "The gospel," therefore, as preached to Abraham was preached four hundred thirty years before the law of Moses was given. How could Abraham obtain eternal life through the law, when he died hundreds of years before the law was given? We repeat, this clearly shows that eternal life does not depend on the law, and the seriousness of seeking to put Christians under the law becomes apparent. Of resurrection life beyond the grave the law has nothing to say. Hence, Jesus is said to be the Mediator of a better covenant—a covenant that gives life, eternal life.

Some still further try to strengthen their case by an endeavor to make a difference between the Ten Commandments and the ceremonial law, saying that we are not bound by the latter, but that the Ten Commandments are a law by themselves, because they were written by "the finger of God" (Ex. 31:18; Deut. 9:10), and because in Deuteronomy 5:22 it says, "He added no more." But the reason given why He added no more is that the people could no longer bear the awfulness of God himself speaking, and Moses was commanded to speak in God's place. When Exodus 24 is considered in conjunction with Hebrews 9:19, it is evident that the whole law was written in a book by Moses before God wrote a word on the tables of stone.

Those who advocate the law of the Sabbath have completely given away their whole case in the two-law theory, by the names they apply to the respective laws. They call the Ten Commandments "The law of God," and the ceremonial law, "The law of Moses." Let us test this.

In Luke 2:22, 23, 24, and 39 we read: "And when the days of her purification according to the law of Moses were accomplished, they brought him to Jerusalem, to present him to the Lord; as it is written in the law of the Lord. In the verses noted the ceremonial law is three times over called the law of the Lord, while once, in verse 22, it is called the law of Moses. "The law (not two laws) was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ" (John 1:17).

In James 2:10 we read, "Whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all." From the statement in verse 9, it is clear that he who has respect of persons also breaks the law, though this is not in the Ten Commandments. In Nchemiah 8 "the book of the law of Moses" in verse 1 is called "the book of the law of God" in verse 18. They are just different names for one and the same law! There was only one "book of the law" (Deut. 31:24, 26), and it was placed in the ark of the covenant. It is called "the book of the law of Moses" in Joshua 8:31, and "the book of the law of the Lord" in 2 Chronicles 17:9; 34:14. Thus, the two-law theory breaks down.

That believers are no longer bound by the law is proved by Paul, who says, "Now we are discharged from the law, having died to that wherein we were holden" (Rom. 7:6, R.V.). What law are we discharged from? Verse 7 clearly shows it to be the law of the Ten Commandments. Of course, the whole law of Moses is meant, but the essential fact is that the Ten Commandments are included. In 2 Corinthians 3:7 we read that "the ministration of death, written and engraven on stones... was to be done away." That unmistakably refers to the Ten Commandments; so, obviously, they were not to be perpetuated.

Who changed the law of the Sabbath? Some claim that the pope did so. The facts are, however, that Christ broke down the wall-of the law-five hundred years before there was any pope. This is proved by reference to Colossians 2:13, "forgiven you all trespasses; blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us . . . nailing it to his cross." Christians do not require to be put under law, for love is stronger than any law. Christ superseded Moses; and He superseded the law of Moses. He changed the law of adultery; He also changed the law of the Sabbath. He further told His disciples to "observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." In Revelation 22:14 we read, "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life," which is still another scripture affirming negatively that the law of Moses does not give life.

The law of the Sabbath was a kingdom law. It was a law given to Israel as a perpetual sign to separate them from all other kingdoms. When the kingdom of God is restored there is nothing incongruous in the idea that the Sabbath shall be restored also. In the meantime, Paul teaches us plainly, "Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holy day, or of the new moon, or of the sabbath days" (Col. 2:16). (Cp. Rom. 14.) Let us obey the injunction, for he that observeth the day observeth it unto the Lord, and the Lord is Master of the Sabbath day.

But it is the writer's firm conviction that while perfect liberty is given to the Christian in this matter, there is, nevertheless, real blessing in setting apart one day in seven in remembrance of our Creator who has called us and separated us as a peculiar people unto Himself. Let us turn for a moment to some passages bearing on this phase of the subject. We shall find them among the most sublime and the most helpful of any passages in God's Word that have to do with this present mortal life.

In Isaiah 56:2, 6, 7 we read: "Blessed (or happy)... is the man that keepeth the sabbath from polluting it,... and taketh hold of my covenant; even them will I bring to my holy mountain and make them joyful in my house of prayer." In Isaiah 58:13 we read, "If thou turn away thy foot from the sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honourable; and shalt honour him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words: then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

The nations who have honored God's Word in this way are the nations which God has honored. History confirms it.

"The Things Concerning the Kingdom of God"

Part 1

By J. M. Morgan

THE things (elements) of the kingdom of God (Acts 8:12), what are they? When will they be assembled, and where? There are those who teach that the kingdom is now set up in the hearts of God's people. They quote the King James Version (Luke 17:21), "Behold, the kingdom of God is within you." But the margin says, "among you." The Diaglott says, "The majesty of the God in the midst of you is." The King, Jesus, was there among the people, but not in their hearts, for the hearts of the Pharisees were "far from me," said Jesus. (Matt. 15:18.)

Others teach that the church and the kingdom are one, or mean the same thing. They try to prove that the kingdom came, or was set up, on Pentecost after Christ ascended. As proof they use Mark 9:1. The Diaglott says, "Indeed I say to you, that are some of those here having stood, who not not shall taste of death, till they may see the royal majesty of the God having come in power." They say, "Here is proof, for the kingdom had to come in the lifetime of the apostles." But verse 2 tells us that "after six days Jesus taketh with him Peter, and James, and John, and led them up into an high mountain apart by themselves: and he was transfigured before them." Here is the time and place when they saw Christ coming in His kingdom, or as in the Diaglott, "coming in his royal majesty" (Matt. 16:28). In Matthew 17:9 we read, "Jesus commanded them, saying, Tell the vision to no man, until the Son of man be risen again from the dead." They saw Him coming, in vision. This vision they saw in A.D. 32, and in A.D. 66, Peter gave us a true history of it in these words, "For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eyewitnesses of his majesty. For he received from God the Father honour and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. And this voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were with him in the holy mount" (2 Peter 1:16-18). This destroys all attempted proof for this-church-kingdom theory.

But advocates of this theory go to Luke 22:29, 30. This reads, "And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me; that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom." Here they stop reading, right in the middle of verse 30! And why stop? Because the last half of the verse destroys their theory. But Jesus did not stop in the middle of the verse. He continued, saying, "that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel." This eating and drinking, and sitting on thrones, and judging the twelve tribes of Israel will be in the coming kingdom of God—at the time Christ sits on His throne. In harmony with this, Jesus said, "I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom" (Matt. 26:29). This will be in the renovation and times of restitution. "Verily I say unto you, That ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel" (Matt. 19:28).

This period of regeneration will begin at the coming of Christ. "And he (God) shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you: whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things" (Acts 3:20, 21). This will be the time when Israel will be restored and saved. (Jer. 23:5, 6.) Then Christ will sit on the throne of His glory, for "when the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory" (Matt. 25:31). This will show that there is no proof in Luke 22:29, 30, that the church is the promised kingdom.

The kingdom had not come in A.D. 33, for after Jesus was dead, we read in Mark 15:43: "Joseph of Arimathæa, an honourable counsellor, which also waited for the kingdom of God." In A.D. 60, the rich in faith were still "heirs of the kingdom" which "was promised to them that love him" (James 2:5). If the kingdom had been set up in the past, they would have been in it, and not heirs of it. In A.D. 46, Paul and the disciples were not in it, for Paul says "to continue in the faith, and that we must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God" (Acts 14:22)... But it is no trouble to join churches (most of them teaching little truth), just so you pay as you go.

But the kingdom message does exist in the Word, and is the good seed to be sown. (Matt. 13:18, 19.) And the Word or "gospel" of the kingdom must be preached as a witness unto all nations, then shall the end come. (Matt. 24:14.)

Later I will consider all things that go into the established kingdom of God, and give the scriptures when and where all these things will be brought together.

ONE GOD

By Delbert A. Jones

THERE is utmost satisfaction in close communion with God, and in learning of Him through His Word, the Bible. But the people of this world are too indifferent to the study of the Bible. If they hear a statement which is said to be true, they are likely to accept it for fact, without going to a reputable authority to see if it is actually true or not. For example, we have all sung this hymn:

"Holy, Holy, Holy! Merciful and Mighty! God in three persons, blessed Trinity.

"Praise Him above, ye heav'nly host; Praise Father, Son, and Holy Ghost;"

It is very beautiful as far as the music goes. But, have you ever gone to the Bible for the verification of the words? Have you ever tried to find the word "Trinity" in the Bible? or the phrases, "God in three persons" and "God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost"?

Webster's dictionary defines the Trinity as follows: "the union of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost in one Godhead, three-in-one." In other words, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost are one and the same. An instructor defined it as follows: "They are three in one, just as water can exist in three forms, water as liquid, water as steam, and water as ice."

There are many reasons why I cannot agree with this Trinity doctrine. In the first place, the word "Trinity" is not in the Bible, neither is the expression, "God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost."

According to Trinitarian belief, Christ was with God at the creation of the world. If it is true that Christ is from everlasting to everlasting in body and soul, then Christ must have been immortal when He was on the earth. (The meaning of the word "immortal" is, the quality or state of being immune to death, pain, and suffering of all kinds.) Great anguish was suffered by Christ when He was nailed to His cross. It is clearly stated in Revelation 1:18 that He died. There, Christ says, "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore." When I was discussing this subject with a friend, he said that Christ was mortal when He came back to earth. However, there is no statement to be found in the Bible that even intimates that such a thing could take place, that is, the changing of one from the immortal to the mortal nature.

Assuming that Christ was equal with God, or that Christ was merely one third of God back on the earth, then that which was said of the one would be true of the other. In Matthew 4 it tells of Christ being tempted of the Devil. In another passage it states, "For in that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted" (Heb. 2:18). Yet the Bible says that "God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man" (James 1:13).

"Ye have heard how I said unto you, I go away, and come again unto you. If ye loved me, ye would rejoice, because I said, I go unto the Father: for my Father is greater than I" (John 14:28). This says that Christ was going unto His Father who was greater than He—not equal to Him, as they are in the theoretical Triune.

Many texts that are relied upon to teach conclusively the doctrine of the Trinity can be shown to have different meanings if one looks up the original translations. For example, "Let us make man in our image." They say that this verse proves that Christ was with God at the creation of the world. I believe that God was talking with the angels which were always with Him. We know that the angels are in the same form as man, for Jacob wrestled all night with one without even knowing that he was an angel. If the angel had had wings, or any other features which were out of proportion with, or different from, man's, Jacob could have told it. Is it not, therefore, feasible to believe that God may have been talking with His angels?

"For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will but the will of him that sent me." This text is supposed to prove that Christ came from heaven, but it weakens the claims made for it, in that it shows the supremacy of God over the Son. In the same chapter (John 6), the Jews were reasoning with Jesus. They said, "Our Fathers did eat bread in the desert; as it is written, He gave them bread from heaven to eat." Likewise, the quails were from heaven, that is, they were the food provided by the Father in heaven, just as Jesus was provided by the Father to be the world's Redeemer.

1 John 5:7 is a text quite extensively used to prove the Trinity. It says, "There are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one." Trinitarians say that the Word in this verse refers to Christ. The Emphatic Diaglott, which is a word-for-word translation of the original Greek texts, reads, "There are three which testify; the Spirit, and the water and the blood; and the three are of One." This means that they have the same aim or purpose.

Everything that I have tried to bring before you can be summed up in two verses of the Bible. 1 Timothy 2:5, 6, reads: "For there is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus; who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time."

A Proverb

There are three things that cause Christians to be untrue: another one that is untrue, a belief that there is no real help from the Lord, and simple neglect of those things that bring them closer to Him.

The Book of Books

By Gerald L. Cooper

THE BIBLE has the largest circulation of any book in any part of the world, yet is the most unappreciated book in the world. The Bible is considered a necessity in practically all homes, but in the majority of those same homes it is never used, except for family records of some sort. It is kept handy in ease the minister should pay an occasional call, and it looks better to have a Bible where people can see it, even though at times it may be dusty or under a pile of cheap magazines. No, the Book of Books is certainly not appreciated.

Suppose that a governmental decree of some sort should go out that all Bibles should be destroyed, or that the forces of evil in the world should devise some scheme to rid the world of their deadliest enemy, God's message to man? What would we lose? Let us glance at the worth of the Bible, and see.

We would lose the only book that has been translated into a thousand languages. The thousandth translation of the Bible was made just last fall, and was a translation into a dialect spoken in India. No other book can claim such a distinction.

We would lose the only book with at least forty authors, yet with one central theme—"Kingdom of God." Many individual authors today use the same theme in the writing of their books, but, taking forty authors, we usually have at least that many themes, and sometimes more. Yet in all the Bible this one theme of the "Kingdom of God" is used in complete harmony.

Most of us like a book to be emphatic in its story or its teachings. Such a book is the Bible. Note in the very first verse of the Bible, "In the beginning God." There are no lengthy explanations here, but an emphatic statement of fact. Likewise, the commandments given to the people of Israel are emphatic: "Thou shalt" and "Thou shalt not." The Golden Rule says, "Do." It is said that Confucius, the eminent Chinese who is worshiped yet today, and who lived some five hundred years before Christ, stated the Golden Rule negatively. How much better it is stated in the Holy Bible. The fearlessness of the various teachers, such as Elijah, Paul, and the Master Himself, is another proof of the Bible being the most emphatic book in the world.

If the Bible were lost, the most valuable literary work in the world would be lost. Today, if we desire to read a book of adventure, poetry, or any phase of literature, we are compelled to get a book dealing with that particular phase. The Bible contains them all. The story of Noah and the ark, Joseph and his captivity in the land of Egypt, the various stories of the judges, Jonah and the whale, Daniel in the lion's den, the adventures of Paul and of John the Revelator are all real adventure stories, and better far than most of the stories that are so popular today. They will hold your interest just as much as a Zane Grey novel. If it is poetry you like (and some people do like poetry), the story of Job, the Psalms, Proverbs, and portions of Isaiah will suit your fancy better than anything that Longfellow or any other uninspired author wrote.

The Bible has been studied in many of our larger schools as an example of correct speech, and when students delve into the original languages in which the Bible was written, they find this more true than ever.

Perhaps you are addicted to cheap love stories, that are found in some of our lower-grade magazines. If you are, throw them away, and read the stories of love found in the Bible. The book of Ruth is a wonderful example of love, showing first, the love that Ruth bore her mother-in-law, and then the love she bore her husband, Boaz. The love of God for the world is so great that men have never been able to understand it. Most of them give no sign of trying to understand it. This love will culminate in the marriage of His Son Jesus Christ to the bride, the church.

The Bible has given us Christianity, which in turn has given us many of our best hospitals, schools, and institutions of various kinds. Contained in the Bible is the hope of man, the coming of Jesus Christ to do away with the sins of the world.

Yes, the Bible is indeed a great book. We do not appreciate it! Perhaps, if it were taken away from us we would. The time may come (it is not impossible) when we shall not be privileged to study the Word of God. Many people in foreign lands cannot worship as they please, and are forced to read their Bibles in secret, hiding like common criminals from the authorities.

Let us resolve to appreciate this great book, this Word of God. Let us read it as well as possess it, and daily live by its standards.

PULPIT ECHO

What Pharaoh did to Israel 3,500 years ago, Hitler is doing to them today. After so long a time, history repeats. But the God of heaven, now as always, is on the side of the oppressed. Just as of old He sent Moses to deliver them, overwhelming the oppressor in destruction, so will He send Jesus Christ from heaven to deliver them again and crush the despoiler of His people. What fate awaits the modern Pharaoh when the judgment of God shall fall again?

MEDITATIONS ON EVIL AND SIN Part 1

By A. Anthon

A S WE open our Bibles to page 1, verse 1, we read, "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth"; later, "and all that therein is."

Yes? Who created the serpent—satan, devil, dragon—whichever you wish to call it? (See Rev. 20:2, proving that all four names mean one and the same thing.) Who created diphtheria germs? tuberculosis germs? yellow fever? typhoid? syphilis?

Some tell us that the devil is a fallen angel. For argument's sake let us grant it. Did God create this angel? Yes. Did God foreknow what this angel was going to turn out to be? If God was all-wise and knew what He was doing, He did. Well, then, if God did not want this devil, what made Him create it? Evidently God wanted it—if the devil is a fallen angel.

Again, did God foreknow that after the war in heaven the cast-out satan would head for us on this earth? Did God have power to make it go to some barren place, instead of here? Again, it is evident God wanted the devil to come here. God says He has power to destroy satan; but He has not done it yet. If God can do it in the future He is able to do it now, but doesn't. Therefore, God wants this fallen angel to dwell among us for a while longer. If God foresaw the end from the beginning and says that all things He does is for His pleasure (Rev. 4:11), then it must be a pleasure to God to have this fallen angel do the things it does, that is, if satan is a fallen angel.

The author once chatted with a certain "Reverend" who claimed that God did not know how this angel was going "to turn out," and that God did not know that this angel was going to cause war in heaven. Now isn't that an idea! If God didn't know that, it may be that about the time for the millennium another angel will insurrect another war. These date-setting failures could be accounted for in that way! Let us stop our "light" talk, though it does drive the point.

Our God is all-wise, foreseeing the end of all things. Thus, we have confidence and understanding in Him.

We turn to Genesis 3:1 to read, "The serpent was more subtil than any beast of the field which the Lord God had made." God created this serpent—devil, satan, dragon—on purpose, for His pleasure. God foreknew just exactly what this serpent would do, and watched over this serpent to see that it did just exactly what He wanted done, and in the exact way.

This brings us to the hardest subject of all Scripture—original sin, and sin as God's great beginning school. We continue by reading in Isaiah 45:7, "I (God) create evil," and in Revelation 4:11, "Thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created."

Question: Was it a pleasure to create the tree of knowledge of good and evil, and the scrpent? It evidently was. How? God foreknew what the result would be. He has ever since seen pain and woe, anguish and death. Also, after Adam and Eve were created, God, foreseeing all, said, "Behold it is very good." God was beginning His great school.

The serpent suggested to Eve that she disobey God. She did. She also influenced Adam to disobey. But God first gave them full opportunity to obey or disobey, whichever they liked.

Notice carefully: The serpent—devil, satan, dragon—did not put the curse on the earth. God did it. God did it, because Adam and Eve disobeyed. God punished them.

"Cursed is the earth" is the punishment. Harmless germs then became harmful, causing dreadful diseases and death. Droughts, storms, volcanoes, pests, all are part of this curse that God (all by Himself) is the Creator of.

Notice: This curse affected even the serpent (this serpent was not a snake, but some animal having legs; was not a superhuman being, for all the words that it said God put into its mouth). It was made to go on its stomach, as a snake does, till it died, or "all the days of (its) life." It soon died, because it was not allowed anything but dust to eat, and dust will not support life. So that particular animal very likely was the first animal to die, to suffer the extreme penalty of the curse—death.

Death is the most dreadful part of the curse that God has put on the earth because of the disobedience of Adam and Eve. All of their descendants have also disobeyed, so they deserve the punishment as well.

Some students want the devil to be the one who does all things "evil," and God to be the one trying to keep it from doing them. Thus, God is doing what good things He can—when the devil doesn't slip around and mess up God's playhouse. Now, "ain't" that an idea! God created something He can't control!

But our God is mighty. He has absolute control. Everything is working out just exactly the way He had it figured out before a thing material was made.

We continue with the thought, "I (God) create evil," i.e., He created the curse. "Curse" and "evil" are interchangeable terms, but the word "sin" is not interchangeable with "evil" and "curse."

God created the tree of knowledge and the serpent. These were "evil" things God did, but they were not sinful things. They only gave Adam and Eve the opportunity to obey Ilim, or to obey someone else—the devil.

It is an evil that alcohol has such devastating effects on man. God could have created alcohol so that it would not have had those effects. But, instead, God commands to leave alcohol alone. If I do not, I sin and am punished with aftereffects. If this is not punishment enough to cause me to obey, God will cast me into a lake of fire and brimstone.

If I touch a hot stove, I am injured. That is an evil, or a curse, that God has created. God did not sin; that is punishment for my sins. If I use profane language because of my injury, I sin some more and then deserve more punishment.

How Near Are You?

Jesus had been doing very many wonderful works, so many, in fact, that the old scribes and Pharisees, and others who disagreed with Him were beginning to fear His power and authority. Seeing this, they sent many unto Jesus to provoke Him and plague Him. Jesus withstood them very well indeed, for He had the power of God behind Him. Finally, we are told in Mark 12:28-34 the story of a young scribe who came to Him. Let us notice this in particular. The scribe asked the Master, "Which is the greatest commandment of all?" Jesus then quoted to Him from the Old Testament (Deut. 6:4), "Hear, O Israel; The Lord our God is one Lord: and thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength: this is the first commandment." Jesus then added, "And the second is like, namely this, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. There is none other commandment greater than these."

The scribe's next words are astounding when we consider that in the first place this man came to catch Jesus in some saying. The scribe said, "Well, Master, thou hast said the truth: for there is one God; and there is none other but he: and to love him with all the heart, and with all the understanding, and with all the soul, and with all the strength, and to love his neighbour as himself, is more than all whole burnt offerings and sacrifices." Such an unexpected answer would have startled a less able man, but not the Great Teacher, Jesus, for He said to the scribe, "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God."

No other record of this seribe is given in the Bible, other than that of the words of Jesus. Whether or not he changed his life, and became a Christian we have no way of knowing. It is doubtful that he did that, for there would probably be some further record of him if he had.

Now, Jesus told this man that he was not far from the kingdom of God. Notice that He did not tell him that he was in the kingdom, nor even that he would be in it. There were certain things yet that must be done, ere Christ could give the scribe that assurance.

How near are you to the kingdom of God? More properly, how near are you to the things taught in the Scripture, that will win you the kingdom of God? Examing again those words of the scribe. He said to love one God with all the heart, and understanding, and all the soul, and all the strength, and to love thy neighbor as yourself. These are great sayings, but there is yet something to do.

We may say that we love God and our neighbors, but unless we do something to prove that saying we are far from the kingdom of God. If we really love God we shall wish to keep His commandments. Right away that necessitates obedience in baptism, and a new life, totally different from the one we have been living. Then there are many other things that we must do for God if we really love Him. It is not sufficient to be just near the kingdom of God; we must be fully prepared to be accepted into it at the proper time.

Let us examine another very interesting story in the Bible. Paul the Apostle was before King Agrippa, a king high in the officialdom of the ancient empire of Rome. Paul was on trial for his life. The king was kind enough to give Paul an opportunity to tell his story. This Paul did, telling how he had persecuted the Jews, how he had later become converted to Jesus, and how that conversion had enabled him to withstand many trials and temptations. After the thrilling story that Paul told, King Agrippa was moved by it and said those words that we have heard many times, those words that have been used as a theme for many a sermon and hymn: "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian."

Almost! Paul had done his best and the King believed him, but was not willing to give up his kingly robes and duties, and become as Paul and the rest of the early Christians who suffered intensely. Agrippa was not converted; he was "almost." He was like the scribe. He was not far from the kingdom when he almost accepted Christ.

All have known many "almost" Christians, persons who were sympathetic with Christ and the church, people who gave liberally to the church, those who attended services more or less regularly, yet who have never really taken a definite stand for Christ. Such people are probably in the majority. It is a good thing that judgment is going to be in the competent hands of Jesus Christ, for we would not know how to judge in such matters. We know, however, that it is much better to be an out-and-out- Christian than to be one who is just "almost."

How near are you to the kingdom of God? You may find that you are not as near as you thought you were, if you will but stop and ponder a while. Do you, when an evangelist or your pastor issues the great invitation to come to Christ, feel that you are almost persuaded to become a Christian? If you are, take heed! Come over on the Lord's side. He needs you, and you need Him!

"Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God" (1 Peter 3:18).

Christian Love

"For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John 3:16).

Jesus was pure and holy. He never sinned. His blood was shed for us that we might be able to have a sacrifice for our sins, so that they can be forgiven. We read, "Without shedding of blood (there) is no remission" (Heb. 9:22).

In 1 John 1:9 we read that if we confess our sins God is ready to forgive us of them. God does not deal with us after our sins, but is merciful to us. (Psalm 103:10, 11.) God sent Jesus to die for us so we can have eternal life. That is the reason for the loving sacrifice of our Lord. We must accept Christ as our personal Savior, "put on Christ," by immersion, and live a holy life. We are then accepting that sacrifice of Christian love. If we are "faithful unto death" we will have "a crown of life."

How must God feel when He sees boys and girls who won't study their Bibles to learn about His Son, or won't listen to anyone tell of the loving sacrifice Jesus made for them?

Let us try each day to live so close to Jesus that we will be good examples of Christians. May we love Him even more, now that we know what He did for us.

Farewell to Peter

How much have you learned about Peter? Go through your lessons and make two lists. In one column write the "Characteristics of Peter." In the other write the "Acts of Peter." Choose one or more from each lesson. Here are examples to begin with:

CHARACTERISTICS

ACTS

Trusted in himself.

Denied Christ three times.

ECE Club News

It is surely "good tidings" to hear and know so many boys and girls want to belong to a club to daily study their Bibles. Some of you who have written to me, go twentyfive miles to get to church!

Sunday is our day of rest, but it is also a day for spiritual development.

A Naming Contest

Send in your favorite name or names you suggest for our period of home Bible study and worship. Some call it "The Quiet Hour," but we want a name that some of our members think of.

Send in as many names as you wish. I'll publish the list of names you send, and we'll vote. The name getting the largest vote will be our regular ECE Club devotional period's name. Send your suggestions in at once. You will have two weeks to send in your names. If there are several in one family who are members, all use the same postal card. Have your mother or some older person write them for you, so you can get all your names on the card.

The name of the person who sends the name we choose will be published at the close of the naming contest.

Vocabulary List

- 1. Sacrifice-offering made to God.
- 2. Remission-pardon.
- 3. Immersion-baptism, "buried with Christ,"

Bro. Dunean Macleod, thirteen-year-old son of Bro, and Sr. Norman Macleod of Pomona, Calif., will sing "O Divine Redeemer" over the Columbia Network on the Saturday before Easter. The program begins at 12:30 Pacific standard time. Duncan is a member of the Pasadena Boy Choir.

LAWRENCEVILLE, OHIO

The Sunshine Class of the Lawrenceville Church of God held its monthly meeting Friday evening, March 3, at the home of Bro, and Sr. Grover Gordon. There were seven members and three visitors present.

The class decided to send The Restitution Herald to some families who show an interest in the teachings of the church, but who have never received our church paper.

Two members of the class, Miriam and Kenneth Gerhardt, have been having severe colds, and were unable to attend, but they are both improving. Another class member, J. Homer Overholser, has recently accepted a position in an airplane factory in Los Angeles, Calif., and is now located there.

The next meeting will be held April 7. Helen Overholser, Seey.

GOLDEN RULE HOME

According to previously reported plans, Mr. and Mrs. G. H. Loudenslager of Washington, D. C., are now residents of Golden Rule Home, arriving on March 14. Welcome! At this writing they have as guest Mrs. Louden-slager's sister, Mrs. T. J. Ellis of Waterloo.

Generous contributions of Florida fruits have recently been received from Mr. and Mrs. Don Swartz of Cleveland, Ohio, and from Mr. and Mrs. Loudenslager, while they were yet spending the winter in the sunny South. Sr. Romine faithful matron of the Home, appreciates these gifts, and those of several others who have contributed toward the fund for new and needed rugs and carpets. . . . May we refer you to her message in The Restitution

Herald of February 28, page 14.

As new and stronger friendships are being woven in and with Golden Rule Home, the cozy fireplace there burns with added zest.

Sr. Ellen Crabtree of Excelsior, Minn., a member of the Bergen Church of God, has fallen asleep in death. She was eighty-one years of age. Two sons, Charles and Wesley of Excelsior, and one daughter, Mrs. William Kocher of Hopkins, survive.

CLEVELAND, OHIO

Our hearts were made glad Sunday, March 5, to witness the baptism of Mr. Martin Lederer, Rt. 3, Wood Road, Willoughby, Ohio, and Mr. and Mrs. Hanford L. Smith, 18906 Nottingham Road, Cleveland. All are parents with growing families whose strength will be immediately felt in our church work. Bro. Lederer's wife has been a member for almost three years, and his obedience now unites the family in the faith, and answers prayers that have arisen from many hearts. Bro, and Sr. Smith are newer to our people, but will not so be very long. He is a nephew of Sr. Mary Elton. Both are enthusiastic about their newly found faith and have made rapid progress in their studies. Their two young daughter: Irene and Doris, witnessed the baptisms and are regular attendants at church. The Lord has blessed us in giving us three such splen did workers. May our association prove a blessing to them. All united with the church at the same service at which they were immersed. We expect that another such service will be observed in the near future, and there are several others contemplating obedience.

The church has been happy to have with us the past two weeks Bro. John Engleston o Pomona, Calif., who stopped off for a visit among us on his way back home from England. He spoke for us at the evening servi-March 5, to a good and attentive congregation. He has also generously given his assistance at other services, and his youthful enthusiasm (at the age of seventy-seven years) puts to shame many of us younger ones. His visits among the brethren we feel were greatly beneficial. He left us March 15, to resume his journey. Our best wishes and prayers to our roving ambassador for Christ, as he goes to other fields of labor. M. W. Lyon, Pastor. other fields of labor.

SAYLOR - TRIMBLE

On Saturday evening, March 4, the mar-riage of Paul A. Trimble and Miss Marcia Louise Saylor was solemnized in the Church of God at Tempe, Ariz.

Paul and Louise are two of our most active workers in the church, and now they have formed a union that will be still further helpful to us all. They have a great company of friends among whom they are surely an influence for good and truth. The service was a very simple, but beautiful one. They were accompanied by the groom's brother John, and Miss Marjorie Saylor, the bride's sister. Sr. Marjorie Miller served at the piano with the popular wedding march, and Mr. Wallace Wilson sang, "I Love You Truly." The immediate families of the contracting parties were present, besides a few intimate friends of the couple. After the ceremony, we all attended the reception at the bride's former home. We all join in wishing these young people a happy and useful journey through life.

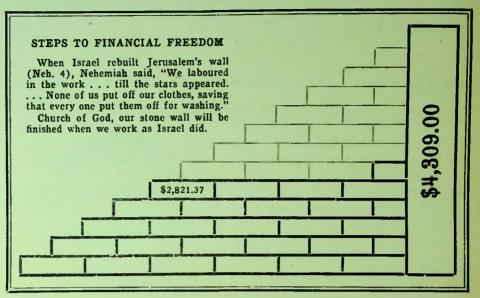

This was the first wedding to be held in the S. J. Lindsay. new church.

BRO. RANDALL STARTS SOMETHING

In sending in his subscription to The Restitution Herald, Bro. George Randall of Mora, Minn., writes, "I like The Herald very much. I read every bit of it." We are glad, Bro. Randall, that you find the paper so interesting and helpful, and thank you for your kindremarks. You started something!

How many others read The Herald from cover to cover? We are starting a check-up. Already we know of a few who qualify as members to our new "We-Read-It-All Club." They are:

Indiana Evangelist's Notes

"Where there is no vision, the people perish" (Proverbs 29:18).

J. W. McLain, State Evangelist, Burr Oak, Indiana

State Evangelistic Program

This page of THE RESTITUTION HER-ALD has been secured by the State Conference for the purpose of acquainting the people of the Indiana churches with the evangelistic aims and activities of the conference.

At the June session of conference last year, 1938, it was proposed to engage a state evangelist for half-time services in holding revival and evangelistic meetings in churches of the State.

The evangelist was to be available for special functions, home-comings, etc., either as speaker, or singer, or both. It was affirmed that the nature of this work was to be strictly evangelistic.

Work was to be done in those churches where request was made by the officers or pastor of the church.

Money sufficient to guarantee this effort was subscribed at the conference. The churches receiving benefit of this effort were to restore to the treasury in proportion to their ability to finance their own meetings.

At such times as the evangelist answered calls out of the State, an accounting of that time was to be made to the treasurer.

These proposals have been observed as carefully as possible by the evangelist.

We Urge You to Subscribe

This paper is being sent to a large list of people who are not subscribers to The Restitution Herald. This page will appear only occasionally, perhaps once a month. THE HERALD is published weekly.

THE HERALD is devoted to fair presentation of studies and viewpoints of religious subjects by both ministers and laymen. On the inside back page is news from over the nation of our churches and workers. It is hard for us to think of ourselves as being a part of the body of Christ, the great true church, and remain isolated and out of touch with the great group of those professing the same faith and practices.

In Memoriam

It is with a feeling of great loss to our work that we write of the death of Sr. Eva L. Underwood of Plymouth. She was constant in Christ-living, and faithful in passing along the Word of life to others. Surely, she was a witness for Christ.

From Kokomo

A letter from Sr. Parker recently says that the Sunday school attendance is holding up well. In an earlier letter she said that the meetings seemed to give a good boost to the work.

Kokomo has an excellent opportunity for service. The church serves a large area of laboring people who need Christ.

South Bend

The most amazing thing observed here is their enthusiasm. It will be a great impetus to their work when they get possession of their own building. If desire, energy, and enthusiasm will spread the gospel, South Bend will do it.

Burr Oak

We have just finished a three-weeks' series of meetings with F. L. Austin as speaker. The state evangelist acted as song leader and soloist.

Lucerne

Sr. Fetters reports that meetings held there by Bro. J. H. Anderson were well received. People commented very favorably on the messages.

Where There Is No Vision

Lack of exercise has been the finish of many a strong man. Lack of constant exercise has been the weakening and failure of many church organizations.

Not only must faith be exercised to make it strong, but works must be practiced to remain strong. Our church pews will not be full tomorrow unless we provide a busy church life for our children.

There will be a lack of leaders tomorrow if the youth of our congregations are not busy. Sunday school, Berean, and Bible study periods are the workshops and training schools for leadership.

THE NEW BIRTH

By James A. Patrick

"As we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly" (1 Cor. 15:49).

Some time ago I had a real discussion with a group in Springfield, Ohio, relative to this subject. They claimed that "born of the spirit" and "born from above" and "conversion" were all one and the same thing.

If we stop and consider the two—conversion and birth—we find that they are two entirely different operations.

Birth is a coming forth to life. At conversion the seed is planted and starts to germinate.

O yes, I know we are new creatures, but only in a spiritual sense. Our physical bodies are just the same as they ever were.

I have seen many people converted, and they became new creatures. They had been thinking sinful thoughts, and going after sinful things before they were converted. Afterward, they were changed beings. They thought righteous thoughts, and did righteous deeds. I have seen both those that claim they are born of the Spirit at conversion, and those that believe they are just begotten of the Spirit at that time. For the life of me, I can't see any difference between them. Yes, I know there are those that go off on a tangent, doing such wild things that they earn for themselves the sobriquet of "holy rollers," but they are aside from the question at issue.

"As we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly" (1 Cor. 15:49). How do we bear the image of the earthy? The only answer is: By natural begettal and birth. There is a period of gestation between the time of begettal and birth. If we bear the image of the heavenly in the same manner we do the earthy, can we leave out either of these two operations? Can we do away with the begettal and the period of gestation before birth? If we can, then we do not bear the image of the heavenly in the same manner as we bear the image of the earthy.

Paul told the Corinthians, "I have begotten you through the gospel" (1 Cor. 4:15), and in speaking of Onesimus, he said, "Whom I have begotten in my bonds" (Philemon 10).

Christ is our example. When was He born of the Spirit? Was He ever converted? Since He had no sin, there was no necessity for conversion in His case, but there was a necessity for a birth other than His natural birth. When did that take place? In Colossians 1:15 it is written that Christ is "the firstborn of every creature," and in verse 18 it is written that He is "the firstborn from the dead."

Well, if Christ was the firstborn of every creature, and that birth was the birth from the dead, and we know according to 1 Peter 3:18 that He was "quickened (made alive) by the Spirit," it would seem to me that we would be very much out of place to think that we were born of the Spirit in a different way than He was.

than He was.

Christ was begotten naturally and spiritually when, as the angel said to Joseph, "Fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife: for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost." Both the Common Version and the American Revision put in the margin for "conceived," "Gr., begotten." Christ's natural birth did not fulfill His being "the only begotten of the Father" (John 1:14), for He was "declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead" (Rom. 1:4).

"But," some will ask, "what about those texts that speak of being 'born of God,' which texts evidently refer to this life?" In every one of these texts the Emphatic Diaglott and the American Revision use "begotten," except in 1 Peter 1:23 the Emphatic Diaglott uses "regenerated."

Let us consider one more text, John 3:8, "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit." The subject of the first clause is "wind." The only place where "Spirit" occurs is in the second clause, (Please turn to page 11)

Life

The mystery of life in no way detracts from its glory. Life is the soil from which all blessings grow. Life is tenacious, and all creatures cling to it. More life, and of its own kind, is sought by the amœba and the whale. Competition among men, whether they are serfs or kings, is a struggle for more or better life. Life feels good, is pulsating, and warm. Life develops, and men seek its charms.

What is its price? How long does it last? For whom will you lay it down?

Death

The mystery of death in no way detracts from its sting. Death is a monster mocker of the pure white lily doomed to so soon fade and turn to dust; the lily-of-the-valley is twice named—its location prophetic of its grave. Death is a cruel wrestler who strangles Life who would better win. Death is a hound which tracks Life, and always hunts him down. Death is the night that follows day, and can no more be denied than the darkness after setting of the sun.

Opposites

Hezekiah was "sick unto death. And Isaiah the prophet the son of Amoz came unto him, and said unto him, Thus saith the Lord, Set thine house in order: for thou shalt die, and not live" (Isa. 38:1).

Regardless of so-called "ten thousand instructers in Christ" who preach "another gospel," the Word of God teaches throughout its pages that "thou shalt die, and not live."

Can a man stand and lie down at the same time? Can a living man cease to breathe, and yet continue living? Neither can a dead man be such and have any life in him.

God said, "Thou shalt surely die" (Gen. 2:17). Something else said, "Ye shall not surely die" (Gen. 3:4). Something lied!

The lie still deceives. "Thy seed and her seed" (Gen. 3:15) is just as prophetic of false teachers as it is prophetic of Jesus the Christ. Both prophecies have been fulfilled. Jesus said, "Ye are of your father the devil" (John 8:44). While I cannot actually hear and see the Christ, "her seed," I believe He lives because I can actually hear and see the Devil's seed, those who preach the false hope of him who "was a murderer from the beginning" (v. 44 again). Why should only half of the prophecy of Genesis 3:15 be true? . . . False hope proves the true. There can be no counterfeit without the real; and that there is the counterfeit one can well prove by listening to the average funeral sermon which, reduced, says, "This dead person is not really dead, but has gone to heaven." . . . What a snag!

As long as others teach the false hope, we must teach the true. And because others are strong for that which is wrong, we must be stronger for that which is right. That our work is colossal is no reason for not working, but is a challenge to put and to keep our hands to the plow.

Everlasting Life

I like to live. If there are ten chances to one that there can be no eternal life, I shall yet give up this present life—which will at any rate fade with the lily-of-the-valley—for the hope of living forever.

It appeals to me that Jesus is earth's wisest counselor, the truest prophet, the safest harbor. He does not wear out. He is "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to day, and for ever" (Heb. 13:8). Jesus tells me, "Every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day" (John 6:40). I believe Jesus. Who else has the "words of eternal life"?

Glorified Life

The life of the amœba or me is a life that loses its sweetness. The "wrestler" with cruel and deadly skill will surely strangle us at the last.

But the life that is promised, and for which I hope, is that life wherein I may be a partaker "of the divine nature" (2 Peter 1:4) "when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality" (1 Cor. 15:54), "that in the ages to come he (God) might shew the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus" (Eph. 2:7).

That saints shall but bask in the sunlight or play upon golden harps is a child's dream, and an unscriptural "Alice in Wonderland" hope. Saints "shall reign" (Rev. 22:5), and God's "servants shall serve him" (v. 3).

While "no good thing will he (God) withhold from them that walk uprightly" (Psalm 84:11), eternal glory will be found in joyful service, and "I had rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God than to dwell in the tents of wickedness" (v. 10). Immortal glory has no competitors.

The Church of the Living God

Article 2

By J. H. Anderson

COME claim that the church originated on the day of Pentecost. There is no Bible to support this theory. On the contrary, we read that on that day God "added to the church" such as should be saved, thus showing that the church already existed and on that day received more members. In Acts 2:41 we find that new believers were added to the believers who had met to keep the Feast of Pentecost. Let us remember that the church means "the called-out believers." In Genesis 12:1 and Hebrews 11:8 we find that Abraham was called out. Thus, Abraham, the man of faith, was a called-out believer, a member of the church. In Acts 7:35-39 we find that Moses was called out, and a member of the church. Reader, read these references and let God's Word decide the truth.

Church of God is the title that God has given the church, and no one has a right to change it. (Acts 20:28; 1 Cor. 15:9; 1 Tim. 3:15.) Thus she bears the one name that Christ, her head, inherited, the name through which salvation comes to the members, (John 5:43; Heb. 1:4; Acts 4:12.)

The church is an organized body with apostles, pastors, elders, and deacons. God placed these officers in the church. (1 Cor. 12:27, 28; Eph. 4:11-13.) In the election of these officers great care should be taken to select those that are qualified for the work.

The relationship that the church bears to Christ is the same that the body bears to the head. Each member is related to Christ as surely as an arm is to the head. "Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular" (1 Cor. 12:27). The head governs the body, so Christ governs the church. Hence, each member must look to Christ, his Head, for orders. "Be not ye called Rabbi: for one is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren" (Matt. 23:8).

Christ's orders are in the Bible, and in the Bible only. So if we would find His orders we must study His word. "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you" (John 15:14). Here is one of His commands that we must obey so that we may know what He wants us to do: "Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me" (John 5:39). When we search God's Word to find the Master's orders we must believe it is God's inspired Word, and that He and His Son speak to us through His Word. "For this cause also thank we God without ceasing, because, when ye received the word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but as it is in truth, the word of God, which effectually worketh also in you that believe" (1 Thess. 2:13).

In the Bible you never find any of God's people claiming that His Word had errors in it. They believed that God had given the Word by inspiration, and that He kept it pure. (Matt. 5:17, 18; John 10:35; 2 Tim. 3:15-17.) I believe this and do not believe the teachers who tell us that God's Word is full of errors. Such teachers can only lead us to doubt the Word if we believe them, but if we read in the Word that such teachers would come in the last days and lead many into infidelity then when we hear these teachers our faith in God's Word grows stronger. Reader, please get your Bible, and with the above statement in mind, read the following references: Psalm 138:2; Acts 20:28-32; 2 John 9, 10; 1 Timothy 4:1. God's preachers, placed in the body of Christ by Him, are sent to teach the Word, not to tell the people that it is full of errors. (2 Tim. 4:1, 2; Mark 16:15, 16.)

I have been a student of God's Word for fifty years, but have never found any errors in it, but have found many in myself.

"Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you" (John 15:3). "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth" (John 17:17). Thank God for such a Word that testifies of His Son, making us wise unto salvation. When I study that Word I believe God is speaking to me through the Word that He has given to me.

In a church service some time ago the preacher began his sermon in the usual way, spoke a few minutes, then, to the surprise of everyone in the congregation, he left the pulpit, went to the piano and began thumping the keys. Yes, everyone was surprised, because all knew that the minister did not know anything about music. In a short time he left the piano, went back to the pulpit, and continued his sermon with these remarks: "The piano seems to be out of tune: I guess we'll have to get another one. But I wonder why it was in tune when Sister Wplayed and out of tune when I played." Then he added, "I guess the trouble was in me, not in the piano." Finally, he explained, "When one finds discord in God's Book he should look at himself, and in himself he will find the discord, not in the Word.

"Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth" (2 Tim. 2:15). I can get a discord out of the piano, but can't get music because I do not know music. The one who has studied music finds music when she plays. Follow God's rule when you study (Please turn to page 11)

The Moral Life

By A. E. Griffiths

THE general belief of religious people is that morality is the most important factor in salvation, and as long as one lives a moral life, attends church, gives to charity, and is looked upon as a good citizen, the future is all clear and bright. But is this a Scriptural teaching?

Certain phrases are used by the different religious seets of the Protestant and Catholic creeds which are not taught in the Scriptures, "the moral life" being one of them.

The words "moral" and "morality" are not to be found in the Bible! Neither occurs even once, though of course their precepts are implied in many instances.

Another phrase of like nature is "immortal soul." This does not occur in the Bible, either. The word "soul" is used about seven hundred times in the Old Testament, and one hundred eighty times in the New Testament. The word "immortal" is used once only, in 1 Timothy 1:17, and is applied only to God. The word "immortality" occurs five times, but neither of these words is ever used in conjunction with the word "soul." These are facts worth remembering, and are a great help in Scripture study.

Let us now return to the word "moral." Webster defines it as virtuous, or to conform to right or good conduct. It is simply the obeying of certain laws laid down for men. But who makes the laws, God or men?

If we review the Decalogue, we find the first five commandments refer to men's conduct toward God, and the last five to men's conduct toward each other. This leads us to understand that our first duty is toward God, then comes our duty to each other. There is no alternative but to first obey God's laws, then to conform to man's laws, as long as they do not conflict with God's.

This "moral life" of those who are respected as good citizens, therefore, has nothing to do with God, and is not an element of salvation. We have several records of loose morals recorded in the Bible which did not interfere with personal salvation. One case in particular stands out prominently, that of David taking another man's wife and causing her husband to be killed. (2 Sam. 11.) This was a most serious offense, according to man's moral standard. Nevertheless, David was forgiven, because he believed in God's promises concerning the future. On the other hand, had he not committed this sin, but had disbelieved God's promises that he would inherit the earth through a future son (Christ), he certainly would not have been forgiven. Instead, he would have been irretrievably lost. This proves, most emphatically, that if we do not believe in God's doctrine we have no hope, and morality is no substitute for this belief. Morality, in itself is not an element of salvation. Doctrine, principles of God taught in the Bible, is absolutely necessary for salvation. Unless one reads and understands the plan of salvation that God has offered, common sense tells us that he has no hope. Paul makes this perfectly clear in Ephesians 2:12. He had just shown that the believers at that time were originally Gentiles, and that formerly they had no saving knowledge of the truth. Consequently, he said, "At that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world." This desperate condition was solely caused by not knowing God's doctrine.

This point is emphasized in Hosea 4:6, "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge: because thou hast rejected knowledge, I will also reject thee." Again, "I have written to him the great things of my law, but they were counted as a strange thing" (8:12).

Here we have definite instruction from God that unless we conform to His laws we have no hope of salvation. Our own goodness or morality is nothing in God's sight, and when we vaunt our own righteousness before Him, He abhors us.
