The Grand Old Book

When heavy my burden and steep the way,
And powers of darkness their rage display—
Whenever the skies have an angry look,
I find what I need in the grand old Book.

When trouble or sorrow assails my heart,
When called from my loved ones in tears to part,
I open my Bible and there I find
A promise of hope with my grief entwined.

I find what I need in the grand old Book—
So also could you, if you would but look;
In sorrow or joy naught can annoy;
I find what I need in the grand old Book.

Abreast of the Times

Germany, Poland, Hungary Unite for War

"Gomer (Germany), and all his bands."—Ezek. 38:6.

BERLIN, Germany, Sept. 26.—A conference, in which Germany, Poland, and Hungary are represented, convened here today at the invitation of Germany, who proposes that the three nations create a great union air fleet with a base in Hungary, to be held in readiness to repel any attack that might be made by Soviet Russia. According to Associated Press dispatches, Hungary has no air fleet to speak of, and her friends, Poland and Germany, are anxious to help her develop one and create air fields that could be used for real bases should "Russia try to march toward the West."

It is reported that Rumania and Russia are reaching an agreement (the report denied by Rumanian authorities) by which Russian forces would be permitted to transport troops through Rumanian territory in case Germany attacks Czechoslovakia.

Death Strikes From the Sky

"There followed hail and fire mingled with blood, and they were cast upon the earth."—Rev. 8:7.

NEW YORK, Sept. 28.—The unfortunate results of the recent aerial war games in Austria, in which a number of persons lost their lives and many were injured, has again directed public attention to the dire possibilities that may be anticipated from the use of modern machines of destruction in case of actual war. Commenting on the danger of air raids in future wars, the Catholic magazine America declares that "death will not march into Paris, London, Vienna, or Berlin in the next war. Death will come from the sky, with gasses that sear and suffocate. Often less merciful than a deadly serpent, he will give no warning of his approach. Like a thief in the night, he will enter unnoted, and, once he has entered, no one will be able to prevail against him."

European nations are making feverish preparations to protect the inhabitants of their great cities from possible attacks from the air, especially from such attacks as may be accompanied by gas-spreading bombs. In Rome, according to The Literary Digest, ancient wine cellars of kings and popes are being converted into shelters for thousands; and children throughout the land are drilled in proper methods of procedure in case of attacks. In Czechoslovakia and Finland, contractors are compelled to provide bomb-proof shelters in all new buildings. England has organized and trained a volunteer corps of nurses to aid in caring for those who may suffer from poison gas dropped from the sky.

Mussolini Defies the World

"Ethiopia . . . and the men of the land that is in league, shall fall with them by the sword."—Ezekiel.

ROME, Italy, Sept. 28.—The long awaited official declaration by the Italian Government with regard to its action in case the League of Nations attempts to enforce penalties against it for making war on Ethiopia was announced today. Premier Mussolini, with the concurrence of his Cabinet, informed the world at large that if such action is taken by the League Italy will withdraw from it and will also look upon the efforts of any nation to enforce the orders of the League as a declaration of war. If this statement "represents Il Duce's last word," says a competent observer, "then war in Ethiopia and with Great Britain is inevitable."

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia, Sept. 29.—Two million men await Ethiopia's call to arms, and Emperor Haile Selassie sent a special message to Geneva yesterday warning the League of Nations of his intention to immediately mobilize the entire forces of his country to repel Italian invasion. "Everyone is convinced," he said, "that war is inevitable and that mobilization is necessary." The message was intended to prepare world opinion for the inevitable and give the League another chance to act to prevent war.

LONDON, Sept. 29.—Great Britain has very definitely pledged her military and naval power to the support of any mandatory action the League of Nations may take with regard to the Italo-Ethiopian situation. It is generally acknowledged here that the security of the British Empire demands that the highway to India, Australia, New Zealand, and the Far East must remain under British control. With Italy possessed of Ethiopia and the lands bordering on the Red Sea the freedom of this important artery of communication would be threatened.

BAPTISM

By S. J. Lindsay

IN the 4th chapter of Romans we learn that after Abraham exercised faith toward God, he was given the sign of circumcision which was a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had before he was circumcised. It will be necessary for the student to read this chapter carefully before proceeding further. The same chapter tells us that we must walk in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham. What were the items of faith which Abraham believed?

First, according to the promise of God, Abraham looked for an everlasting possession in the earth (Gen. 17:7, 8). Second, he looked for a son and heir in whom all the families of the earth should be blessed. Paul says that the heir (seed) was Christ (Gal. 3:16). It was upon exercising faith in these things that God gave Abraham the seal of circumcision whereby he sealed his covenant with God in blood.

Inasmuch as we are to walk in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham, and inasmuch as Christian fellowship requires a seal, it is necessary for us to see what that seal is. Before we are ready for the seal, we must exercise the necessary faith—the faith which Abraham had. In Colossians 2:10-12, we read, "And ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power: in whom also ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ: buried with him in baptism, wherein ye also are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead."

Then burial in baptism is Christian circumcision. It is in baptism that we take the blood seal. Christ shed His blood in death and burial, and by symbolizing death, burial, and resurrection we take upon us His blood and arise to walk the new life. As Abraham was required to believe God in what God promised, before he was circumcised, so we must believe what God promised before we can be properly baptized. Simply dipping a person in water does not necessarily constitute baptism.

We find this principle of truth exercised in the Great Commission and in the teaching and practice of the apostles to whom the commission was given. The commission was, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."—Mark 16:15, 16.

First, the candidate must hear and believe the gospel. Having heard and exercised faith in what he has heard, upon repentance he is ready to take the seal. By an examination of the Acts, it will be found that the apostles followed this order of things. Peter preached the gospel on the day of Pentecost. That gospel contained the promise of God's kingdom with Christ sitting upon David's throne, a Christ risen from the dead. Expressing belief in these things, the hearers were exhorted to repent and to be baptized for the remission of sins.

Philip preached to the people of Samaria and when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized both men and women. They were not ready for baptism until they had heard and believed. The eunuch said to Philip, after Philip had taught him, "See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized?" Philip conditioned his readiness to baptize him only upon his expression of belief in the things which he had heard. In every instance recorded it will be found that the knowledge of and belief in the gospel preceded baptism.

Some questions then. Will dipping in water a little child or any person who knows nothing about the gospel have any saving effect on such person?

Will it help matters any to dip any person in water who believes something for gospel other than that which Christ and the apostles preached?

Does it not stand to reason that before we can legally seal a covenant or contract, we must know what the contract is? Should we not enter in upon the subject of baptism with a great deal of care?

He who does away with Christian baptism in his system of religion does away with the means God has given by which the covenant with God may be legalized. The children of Israel exercised the same blood mark in leaving Egypt. Had they left the blood off their door posts, it would have meant severe loss to them even though they had fulfilled every other requirement God made of them.

We now call your attention to the record in Acts 10. Here we find a man whose moral qualities would entitle him to (Please turn to Page Nine)

The Word of God

Thy Word is like a garden, Lord,
With flowers bright and fair;
And everyone who seeks may pluck
A lovely cluster there.
Thy Word is like a deep, deep mine;
And jewels rich and rare
Are hidden in its mighty depths
For ev'ry searcher there.

Thy Word is like a starry host:
A thousand rays of light
Are seen to guide the traveler,
And make his pathway bright.
Thy Word is like an armory,
Where soldiers may repair;
And find, for life's long battle-day,
All needful weapons there.

O may I love Thy precious Word,
May I explore the mine,
May I its fragrant flowers glean,
May light upon me shine!
O may I find my armor there!
Thy Word my trusty sword,
I'll learn to fight with ev'ry foe
The battle of the Lord.

To Addis Ababa and Beyond

JUST a month ago today we sailed out from Aden after four days' delightful fellowship with the Danish missionaries there, in the place reputed to be the hottest place on earth. Jibuti also is a rival in that claim. We sailed on a steamer said to be owned by a rich Parsee who will do nothing for the cleanliness of the boat or the comfort of the passengers. A recent writer has described her experience in trying to occupy one of the filthy cabins, and the cockroaches that disputed her right of occupancy. The ladies of our party surrendered to their claim after less than an hour's effort at sleep, and made a hasty exit to the Captain's bridge, the only habitable place on the boat. Fortunately what proved to be a rather rough voyage is only of fifteen hours' duration. Jibuti came into sight just before noon, and on the first boat to approach we saw the welcome face of Dr. Lambie. What a wonderful effect the face of a friend has when landing on strange shores. Our Lord knew that when He advised those who had earthly possessions to "make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, that when it shall fail (as it will fail its every possessor at death), they may receive you to the eternal tabernacles."

What a friend Dr. Lambie was that day, in that port of a babel of voices which we did not understand; in getting our baggage through French Customs, in securing Ethiopian visas of passports; in seeing us to our lodgings. A Christian Greek has recently opened a home for missionaries at this port. We had a two days' wait before, on Sunday morning, we took the train for our three days' ride to the capital of Ethiopia. The first day carried us across the border of French Somaliland and our first night we stopped inside Ethiopia at a large town called Deridawa. All passengers have to leave the train and go to one of the hotels overnight. Here Mrs. Lambie met us, as she had come down to a lower altitude for a few days' needed rest with her husband. We had a happy evening of fellowship together as the friendly hotel keeper placed a separate little dining room at the disposal of our party, and Dr. and Mrs. Pollock, of the United Presbyterian Mission, joined us.

The other two days of train riding were uneventful, being through one of the most dreary parts of this land, and all were glad of the last few hours' steady climb of some thousands of feet that brought us up to the real Ethiopia. The new party of six were all keen to catch their first glimpse of the capital. But we all had a surprise when at last we steamed into Addis Ababa to find that Dr. Lambie had brought in a great group of our missionaries for a few days' conference. There they were down at the depot. Among the first faces to be seen were Dr. and Mrs. Hooper.

As Ethiopia girds itself to battle, this letter from a missionary of the Evangelical Publishers, written early in 1934, becomes of unusual interest. It presents a vivid picture of the work being conducted by those who, for their own protection, have been ordered out of the ancient empire of the King of Kings.

What introductions and exclamations as old and new friends met! Others were there from the United Presbyterian and Danish Missions, and Mr. Bevan, of the Bible Society. In the midst of this hilarity of greeting there was the great baggage scramble, and once more we had to face the man at the receipt of customs! What a help our brethren who had been through all this before were in that process, inevitable in every land, and as varied in its forms and methods as its peoples.

Then the missionaries took us "home." Four years ago we had only rented quarters. With what interest we made our way out to that beautiful spot, with its wonderful outlook, and there saw the splendid building that makes home for our ever-increasing force of missionaries coming and going. This "Nissley Memorial Building" has been again and again filled to capacity. Together with the home of our field director, which is at the other end of our lot, they were able to comfortably care for the thirty-five missionaries that were present on our arrival. In addition to the initial cost, which was a memorial gift, our missionaries have contributed months of labor to bring it to its present condition. As time goes by we are sure that others will add the additional utilities and facilities that will make every succeeding incoming group of missionaries increasingly thankful for this work of faith and labor of love. . . .

The great question calling for decision with us was whether to proceed immediately on our visitation of all the stations, or whether to give precedence to the challenge of the great North of Abyssinia, from which during the past year an urgent invitation has come from one of its most powerful governors. With Dr. Lambie we felt led to the latter course first. It was an entirely new country to him and his missionary confreres.

There was some delay in securing the necessary official permits without which one cannot travel in any direction in Ethiopia. But there were distinct providences in connection with this which we may narrate at some future time. Sufficient here to say that we entered upon this journey with the written authorization of one of the most powerful governors to open up work in the center of his domain, he himself contributing the site for our first station there. . . .

And now, as we write, we have been nearly a week on this journey. It has been a strenuous week, commencing with our one and only day in a motor, in which we had to climb from 8,000 feet altitude at Addis over the mountain rim that surrounds it at an altitude of 10,050 feet. The road, which was enough to daunt any man at the wheel, was followed by an equally difficult descent to the mean of 9,000 feet. After dark, when we had well nigh despaired of finding our mule train which we had dispatched four days ahead, we came to our first encampment to find our tents all pitched, ready for tired occupants.

Now we have joined the pilgrims again, camping every night, and pulling down our tents at daybreak. February days were desperately trying, when we had first to climb down the rocky, zigzag trail, 4,000 feet, then rise 2,000, then drop 2,000 again to the water level, and the same day scale the heights another 4,000 feet to bring us back to our 9,000 altitude. The scenery rivaled the Grand Canyon of Arizona, but it was no Angel Trail, as they call the wonderful mule path there: except that at times one needed the angel guard. Sometimes we climbed down paths where we could not trust our nimble-footed mules, and in the ascent for long stretches we hadn't the heart to sit in the saddle, even if they were able to rise with us on their backs over the rocks. Climbing at this altitude is good or bad for weak hearts. Do I enjoy it? I have eyes that take in God's handiwork to the full, and even though we all come to our camp every day thoroughly tired, every day has its pleasures. I see God's hand around me everywhere in His creations, and I know also the greater glories of His redemption. We are a little party of ambassadors of the King of kings inspired with the prospect of taking part in the evangelistic program which is to usher in for this land the prophetic word of the Psalmist, who, looking down through the ages, forefold the time when "Ethiopia shall suddenly stretch out her hands to God." Who wouldn't enjoy and endure for such a goal? As I sit in my tent door and write, the glories of a beautiful sunset are before my eyes, reminding one of that day when for this old world's woes the Sun of Righteousness shall arise with healing in His wings. Our work here in Abyssinia is to give the gospel to this people, to fulfill our Lord's command, and so hasten the coming of that day of days.—R. V. Bingham, D. D., in The Evangelical Christian.

The Face of Christ

By Lottie E. Young

WHAT an important place pictures have in our life today, the camera being a hard-worked instrument on every occasion. We may never have been in Rome or London, but when we see a picture of huge St. Peter's Church, or the Houses of Parliament, we know where they belong, while photography has made so familiar the public men of the world that if we were to see them in the street we would instantly say, "There goes President Roosevelt!" or perhaps it might be Lloyd George or Benito Mussolini.

There were likely artists thousands of years ago, but no authentic pictures of Bible characters have come down to us. We may have an idea of Samson's strong body and broad back as he carried off the gates of Gaza, while we can almost see David's handsome son when the book of Chronicles tells us, "Now in all Israel there was none to be so much praised as Absalom for his beauty." We are told David himself was "ruddy" and "withal of fair countenance," and the size of his enemy, great Goliath, is so accurately described we can picture him as he strode toward his small antagonist.

Every conceivable type of mankind has been imagined as possibly representing Jesus Christ. Scandinavian painters have made Him with blue eyes and flaxen locks, while Spanish masters have given Him the blackest of eyes and hair. Tradition may tell of His having a Greek nose and golden tresses, but all is imagination as far as personal appearance goes. The inspired words of the 53rd chapter of Isaiah (written seven hundred years before the advent of the Savior) tell us "He hath no form nor comeliness, and when we see him there is no beauty that we should desire him." I feel sure there was a purpose in all of this, but I believe He must have had a strong body to carry Him the long journeys He took through Palestine, the sleepless nights which He spent in communion with His Father, the hunger from which He must have suffered, and other hardships He endured while on earth. There must have been power in the eyes whose gaze comforted those in trouble, and puzzled His enemies as to the source of the authority He possessed, and beauty in the mouth which could say, "Suffer the little children to come unto me," or command the winds and waves of Galilee to be quiet.

Perhaps it is immaterial just how Jesus looked, but the real man came out in the expression of His face. Luke 9:28 tells of the wondrous vision, known as the transfiguration, on Mt. Hermon, where, "as he was praying, the fashion of his countenance" was so gloriously changed that when the three apostles who were with Him looked they were awestruck, Peter exclaiming, "Master, it is good to be here." A Transfigured Countenance.

Again, Luke 9:51 says, "And it came to pass, when the time was come that he should be received up, he stedfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem." Can you see the earnest purpose upon the Master's face? He knew He had a mission to perform, and though Peter might say, "Not so, Lord," when he was told it meant suffering and death, that did not hinder our great Sacrifice in His purpose to accomplish the work for which He had come—to save mankind. Here we see A Steadfast Countenance.

Deception in the Last Days

I AM not aware that the subject of deception as it relates to the last days of this age has been given particular consideration by any writer on prophetic subjects. My own opinion is that, in unintentionally failing to give the prominence to the subject of deception which the New Testament assigns to it, we have been somewhat taken by surprise by some of the things that we behold occurring in our world today. In fact, I wonder if perhaps the word "deception" is not a key to more contemporary activities and more currents of thought in our modern world than any other single word in the New Testament. Out of the ninety-one occurrences in the New Testament of words meaning "to deceive," "to go astray," etc., twenty-two of them belong definitely to passages dealing with prophetic matters. If these were to be arranged in the order of their fulfillment, I think perhaps the order would be as follows: (1) the deceptions of the Roman Catholic Church during the Middle Ages, as revealed in the letter to Thyatira (Rev. 2:20); of course these deceptions here spoken of are still true of the Roman Church. (2) The deceptions of false teachers and seducing spirits (1 Tim. 4:1; 2 Peter 2:1-18). (3) The deception of false Christs and false prophets (Matt. 24:4, 5, 11, 24; Mark 13:5, 6, 22; Luke 21:8). (4) The deceptions of the Antichrist. These deceptions fall under three different headings, and are somewhat different one from another. There is the deception of Antichrist that Jesus is not the Christ of God (1 John 2:18-26; 4:1-6; 2 John 7); the deceptions of the Lawless One, the specific nature of which is not given (2 Thess. 2:8-11); finally, the deception practiced by the Beast out of the earth (Rev. 13:14; 19:20). (5) The deception of the city of Babylon (Rev. 18:23). (6) Satan's last deception, in his war against the beloved city Jerusalem (Rev. 20:7-10; cf. Rev. 12:9; 20:3).

It is not necessary for us, at this time, to speak of the deceptions of the Roman Catholic Church. That is a subject of itself, and one which deserves more space than can here be given. We proceed at once to the prediction of the Apostle Paul in writing his First Epistle to Timothy. "But the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils."—1 Tim. 4:1. The Apostle Peter, in his Second Epistle, refers to this same group when he says: "There arose false prophets also among the people, as among you also there shall be false teachers, who shall privily bring in destructive heresies, denying even the Master that bought them, bringing upon themselves swift destruction. And many shall follow their lascivious doings; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of. And in covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you" (2 Peter 2:1-3). The word here translated "false teachers" is pseudodidaskalos, and, as everyone knows, is made up of two words—pseudo, meaning "false," and the latter part of the word meaning, "a teacher." It is the only place in the New Testament where this Greek word occurs. With this should be compared the word in the very next sentence of Paul's, "that speak lies," which in the Greek is the word pseudologos, meaning, literally, "false word," as the Lord Jesus Christ is the true logos, or the true Word.

Here is the astonishing thing—that men who teach lies are prophesied as appearing with greatest power and frequency in the very days, the last days of this age, when scientific and historical knowledge has advanced so greatly. We speak today of our time as a time of investigation, of research, when the truth about nature is being discovered, when historians are claiming to give us a more accurate understanding of the ages that have gone before us than ever before, when we are investigating the moods and inner secrets of men's souls in the study of psychology; and when, in every other realm of knowledge, truth is being sought. Here is the astonishing thing—that, in an age when we pride ourselves on having been delivered from dogma, and from the verdicts of the past, as well as from superstitions and partial knowledge; in that very day when men are boasting of following the truth, then will men who teach lies appear among the great mass of unbelieving humanity and deceive them. Remember these are not ignorant teachers, nor dull teachers, but false teachers.

I do not know that there is any more terrible verse in the New Testament than the one we have quoted from Paul's First Epistle to Timothy, telling us that these men are actually under the power of seducing spirits and will be teaching the doctrines advanced by demons themselves. It is a terrible thing to say, but it is according to the Word of God, that men who teach falsely concerning the Lord Jesus Christ, who pervert the truths of the New Testament, who deny God's revelation concerning His Son, who repudiate the cardinal doctrines of the Christian faith, these men, however learned, however polished, however suave, however powerful of speech, are men under the control of seducing spirits and demons. It is not necessary to mention names, but it is necessary to recognize the truth of this verse.

Let us also notice in the context of the verse that we have quoted from the Apostle Peter's second letter, the deceitfulness of these men. They bring in their destructive heresies privily. This is the only place in the New Testament where the word here translated "privily" occurs. It means "creeping along under some sort of cover" (Prof. Charles Bigg). How many false teachings have come into the church in this way—a man, unsound himself, graduating from a sound seminary, and yet creeping into the church; a vicious book being commended in a book review in a magazine which we have learned to trust; a sermon preached, garbed in the vocabulary of orthodoxy, and yet, in its inner core, the blackest heresy. These teachers are skillful in the use of feigned words.

Here is another word only found this once in the Greek New Testament, meaning "molded, formed as from clay, wax, stone." These heretical teachers are able to express themselves in the language of culture. Some of the most dangerous enemies of Christianity in America today are speaking to thousands every week in language so beautiful and powerful that many of us can almost envy them their use of words. Finally, these men are said to entice those who come under their spell. The word here translated "entice," meaning "to bait, to catch by a bait; to beguile by blandishments, allure, deceive" (J. H. Thayer), is a word found only in these two places, and in James 1:14. Cf. Jude 16.

We turn now to some words from the lips of our Lord Himself in His remarkable Olivet discourse, concerning these latter days and the deceptions that will mark them. "Take heed that no man lead you astray. For many shall come in my name, saying, I am the Christ; and shall lead many astray. . . . Then, if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is the Christ, or there; believe it not. For there shall arise false Christs and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; so as to lead astray, if possible, even the elect." (Matt. 24:4, 5, 23, 24.) Whether one chooses to believe that probably the false prophets and false Christs, at least in their greatest prominence, will appear simultaneously with, or after the era of false teachers, it is not necessary and perhaps impossible for us to determine. As there have been various false teachers in different ages of the church, and also, at different times, false prophets and false Christs arising, perhaps these three groups of men will be more or less contemporaneous.

There is a very distinct difference, and this should be carefully observed, between a false prophet and a false Christ. A false prophet might be one in the very midst of the Christian church, pretending to speak for God, self-deceived and deceiving others. A false prophet could be orthodox in many things and still be false. Such was the great preacher a century ago, Edward Irving. Such also was, in the generation preceding us, John Alexander Dowie. There are others. These men actually preached Christ, but they mixed with their preaching errors that deceived their followers, and, in many cases, shattered their faith. They were not true to the Word of God. Then, of course, there have been other false prophets, deliberately antagonistic to the Christian faith, such as Mary Baker Eddy, and Madame Besant, and her protegee, Krishnamurti, and, the greatest of all, Mohammed himself.

A false Christ, however, is a far more serious matter. "Christ" is the Greek word for "Messiah," and "Messiah" has come to mean, as the Oxford English Dictionary expresses it, "an expected liberator or savior of an oppressed people or country." The Jews, at the time of our Lord, expected the Christ, and the question which they asked was: "Art thou the Christ?" Is it not significant that the New Testament does not say there will be a false Plato, or a false Seneca, or a false Buddha, or a false Confucius, or even a false John, but a false Christ? What does this mean, but that, after all, the human race is not satisfied today? It is not liberated. It longs to be. It acknowledges its bondage and slavery, whatever its beliefs. It looks for a Redeemer—granted that it is for redemption economically, intellectually, socially, governmentally, nevertheless this is what men want—deliverance, and that is why a false Christ is possible. If men already were persuaded that they were enjoying perfect liberty, there would be no need to look for a Messiah.

That false prophets can arise, assumes at once that the world recognizes the need of some one speaking with authority, that the last word has not been said, that men are bewildered and in darkness on so many things, and they need something to believe. Just the other day, that great writer of our country, Sherwood Anderson, published his very interesting book, Puzzled America, in which he says, "After going up and down the country, I find this is the expression and cry of the hearts of the great mass of our people: 'If I could believe. I want belief.' It is a kind of cry going up out of the American people. I think it is the absolute net of what I have been able to find out about America in these last few years of traveling about, in all this looking at people and talking about them. 'I want belief, some ground to stand upon. I do not want government to go on just being a meaningless thing. I do not want to be so stupid, silly.'"

My, how easy it will be in these latter days, when the faith of men has been destroyed, and yet when the crying need of men's hearts is for a Savior, how easy it will be for false prophets and false Christs to arise and deceive great masses of humanity! When the false teachers have done their work and destroyed men's faith in Jesus Christ as the Son of God, then you can depend upon it that, having rejected Him, men will accept another. Just the other day, Mrs. James H. R. Cromwell, returning from India, where she had a conference with Gandhi, is reported in Time as saying: "I felt in meeting this world-famous advocate of peace and non-violence, that I had talked to a messiah comparable to Confucius, Buddha, Christ, or Mohammed. There seemed an amazing paradox in this Hindu messiah's opposition to what he felt to be the opposition of Great Britain, one of the most powerful nations which practices the precepts of Jesus Christ." Here is a woman, an American woman, in this age of grace, who can speak of Gandhi as a messiah, when this very man has publicly said, not only that he does not disbelieve in idol worship; but that "the worship of the cow is the Hindu's unique contribution to the evolution of humanitarianism. It is a perfect application of the belief in the oneness and therefore the sacredness of all life."

Even the very day when this article is being prepared for the printer, our literary journals are carrying extensive reviews of a new book by "The Unofficial Observer" with the very significant title, American Messiahs, a study of some of the outstanding personalities in the contemporary American political and social scheme.—Wilbur M. Smith in Revelation.

SILENCE

By D. G. Harvey

"Be silent, O all flesh, before the Lord."—Zechariah 2:13.

SILENCE is golden, the poet says. Have you ever spent hours alone in a deep forest, where every step seems to rend the stillness like a thunder clap? As we sit by a little stream, the noise and tumult of the world are for the moment forgotten. Here in perfect peace and quiet what a spirit of reverence comes over us. As we gaze upon the wonders of nature, we, like David, are moved to wonder, "What is man, that thou art mindful of him?" And as we sit and meditate we remember the words, "Be silent, O all flesh, before the Lord."

But how few of our Creator's commands mankind obeys. Here in this peaceful spot all nature condemns the human race, for nature obeys. "Let all the earth keep silence before him."—Hab. 2:20. Not so with man. Man desires some outlet for emotion, as it were to let off steam. He must create noise and confusion in his worship, yet "God is not the author of confusion" (1 Cor. 14:33).

In the class we call "the world" man runs to and fro to seek pleasure, every form of amusement is just another pop-valve to let off steam. Noise and commotion are everywhere, in the street, in the factory, in the store, in the office, and in the home. "Be silent, O all flesh, before the Lord."

In the church, perhaps there are in a sense peace and quiet. But how about the daily life of the church member? Does the Sunday peace and quiet prevail throughout the week? Or do not the noise and tumult come to the front? Strife and greed prevail. Perhaps the minister spoke of the fate of all liars in his Sunday evening sermon, and Deacon A gives a lusty "Amen." But Monday, the Sunday service forgotten, this same man trades a windbroken, balky horse to some stranger within his gate and swears it to be "sound and a good worker." Perhaps a Sunday school teacher will teach her class on the duty of bearing one another's burdens, and then rush over to help Sr. So-and-so bear the burden of the latest scandal. Should such things be?

God by His Prophet commands, "These are the things that ye shall do; Speak ye every man the truth to his neighbour; execute the judgment of truth and peace in your gates: and let none of you imagine evil in your hearts against his neighbour; and love no false oath: for all these are things that I hate, saith the Lord."—Zech. 8:16, 17.

Paul warns us in these words: "And withal they learn to be idle, wandering about from house to house; and not only idle, but tattlers also and busybodies, speaking things which they ought not."—1 Tim. 5:13. Peter says, "Let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evildoer, or as a busybody in other men's matters."—1 Peter 4:15. And he gives us the reason in 1 Peter 2:20: "For what glory is it, if, when ye be buffeted for your own faults, ye shall take it patiently." Then we must understand that tattlers, meddlers, or busybodies are at fault and should be corrected.

Very few church members today would care to class busybodies, meddlers, tattlers, or gossips with thieves and murderers. But you will notice Peter did. Why? If we take from one his good name by the repeating of scandal, we steal. If we thereby cause another to stumble and lose eternal life, we kill.

The greater amount of strife and trouble in the church and the world as well is caused by the "talebearer." Very often but a slight hint of scandal grows with the telling until a great rent appears. Churches are divided, old friendships broken, and often homes wrecked by "talebearers." Solomon the wise tells us, "Where no wood is, there the fire goeth out: so where there is no talebearer (margin, "whisperer"), the strife ceaseth."—Prov. 26:20.

Often the minister is somewhat to blame for this condition. Perhaps he speaks to his flock in flattering words, but not always to their benefit; rather his own. It pays better. "But after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears."—2 Tim. 4:3. It is well known that such flattery tickles the ear. Very few ministers today would have the courage to deliver such a sermon as our great Example did, as recorded in Matthew 23. Read it again and then estimate how long such a minister would hold his post. But the minister is responsible as was the Prophet. "The prophet that hath a dream, let him tell a dream; and he that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully. What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord."—Jer. 23:28. Flattery is but chaff. It never sustains the spirit of the church, and can never in any sense be compared to the wheat, the bread of life. Let us go on.

"Behold, I am against the prophets, saith the Lord, that use their tongues (margin, "smooth their tongues"), and say, He saith."—Jer. 23:31. Here is a warning to all ministers. Be sure you speak the truth when you say, "Thus saith the Lord." Church members everywhere should heed this command—"Thus shalt thou say to the prophet, What hath the Lord answered thee? and, What hath the Lord spoken?"—Jer. 23:37. If your minister is a true servant of God, he will know that "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets (by dreams and visions), hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son" (Heb. 1:1, 2). He will then read to you the teaching of that Son, for he will remember John said, "But these are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God."—John 20:31.

We are reminded of an old colored Baptist preacher we heard at one time. He was no mean Bible student, and as he pleaded for a study of God's Word, he cried, "Preacher, shet yo' mouth; let the Book speak." "Be silent, O all flesh, before the Lord."

We all talk too much. Solomon again: "In the multitude of words there wanteth not sin: but he that refraineth his lips is wise."—Prov. 10:19.

Please read and study the 3rd chapter of James, which closes with these words: "But the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be intreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality (margin, "wrangling"), and without hypocrisy. And the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace."

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

Jesus suffered and died for sins that He never committed; but, oh! how we howl sometimes when we have to suffer justly for a few of the little wrongs we do.

—Harvey Krogh, Jr.

MY HEART IS FIXED

I traverse far and wide this mystic shore,
 Sadly beset by storm gusts o'er and o'er;
 Meanwhile with calms I rise refreshed and strong
 The next to brave, and thus I pass along.

The sapling oak set out on yonder hill
 Would stand a dwarf if all around was still;
 But when rude winds from every quarter blow,
 Its roots reach wide, grow firm, and strike below.

These thus extended deep and all around
 Draw life and power from the unselfish ground;
 Now let the storm-king dash with loosened rein,
 The unfolding oak more steadfast doth remain.

So I have learned in every storm that blows
 My faith in God more firmly to repose,
 To draw from His abundance new supplies
 To meet the threatening clouds that o'er me rise.

Or, as the vessel tossed upon the tide,
 With anchor fixed doth each rough blast outride;
 And though the winds increase with wail on wail,
 Her anchor sinks in earth to match the gale.

So my sad soul far from the peaceful port,
 Of treach'rous storms awhile the idle sport,
 Hath cast her heaven-born hopes within the vail,
 And I am held, though struck with gale on gale.

Or, watch the climbing vine upon the wall,
 Firmly each tendril elings to save a fall;
 And when the whistling tempest whirls along,
 It shakes, but stands; its clasplings hold it strong.

THE FACE OF CHRIST

was more marred than any of the sons of men" with the agony He is enduring in the cruelest of deaths when the sins of mankind are piled upon Him, and even the face of the Father is withheld. The earth shakes and the rocks are rent, until, with the last cry, "It is finished," His earthly life closes. A Face at Peace in spite of the bruises, the spitting, the crown of thorns which had been meted out to Him by sinful men.

A fourth Face appears in the 1st chapter of Revelation—that of the Glorified One. John says, "His countenance was as the sun shining in his strength," and, "His eyes as a flame of fire," overpowering this faithful disciple so that he adds, "I fell at his feet as one dead," but was reassured by the words, "Fear not; I am the first and the last: I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, and have the keys of the grave and death." There is a hymn which says, "I shall know Him by the marks in His hands"; but I am sure when the King of kings is revealed He will be all-glorious, without any marks of man's brutality on His body. Not buffeted, scorned, thorn-crowned, bleeding out His life under the mad scoffs and scorn of a jeering mob, but One on whose head are many crowns, and whose voice is as the sound of many waters. Of this matchless King some of the dwellers on earth will call to the mountains and rocks to "fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb"; while those who have been faithful will hear the words, "I will give thee a crown of life which fadeth not away." Trials are the portion of all now, but with this glorious picture of the future before us, let us press on to the prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus.

entrance in among the best of people. The description given him would entitle him to church membership in most of the popular churches of the day and no questions asked. Here is what is said of him: he was devout; one that feared God; gave much alms to the people; prayed to God always; was a man of good report among the nation of the Jews.

Here was a good man; but his moral goodness alone could not save him, for he was in an unsaved condition. By referring to Peter's language in the 11th chapter we learn as much, for we read in the 13th and 14th verses as follows: "And he shewed us how he had seen an angel in his house, which stood and said unto him, Send men to Joppa, and call for Simon, whose surname is Peter; who shall tell thee words, whereby thou and all thy house shall be saved." Going back we find, according to Peter's speech to Cornelius as recorded in the 10th chapter, that Cornelius knew the gospel. While they were talking, that Peter might understand that God accepted Gentiles as well as Jews, the Holy Spirit fell upon them in baptismal power, and then it was that Cornelius was baptized. The only difference we can see between Cornelius before and after meeting him is that difference which took place in baptism.

If moral goodness alone could save one, then Cornelius was entitled to salvation. The question may arise, Why should not salvation be based upon the terms of moral goodness? There are many good reasons why it should not be so. First, as Paul argues in Romans 4, if we could earn salvation by good works, God would owe us salvation and we would have nothing to thank Him for. Salvation is a gift based on the works of faith; it is a gift of God. Were salvation based upon good works, men would be led away from humility and would become puffed up with the consciousness of their own good qualities. The practice of faith toward God leads us ever into that realm of humility in which alone the human being can find that perfection which can make him to enjoy himself to the greatest degree. Regarding Lydia's conversion to Christianity we have the same facts standing out (Acts 16). In the 14th verse it is recorded that she was a religious woman. She was a worshiper of God and every evidence goes to show that she was sincere and devoted in her faith as much as many are today who worship God. If her sincerity and devotion could work out for her salvation, why was it necessary for Paul to come along to disturb her quiet, peaceful way? Being a God-fearing woman and one who worshiped God, why was it necessary for her to be baptized? And yet we find the text expressly stating that she was baptized.

All are familiar with the statement made by Peter (1 Peter 3:19), wherein he shows that as the ark was the means of saving eight souls by water, even so in a figure, baptism doth also now save us. Then Paul shows conclusively that baptism into Christ is necessary if we would become heirs according to the promise made to Abraham.

"For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. . . . And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."—Gal. 3:27, 29.

The only scriptural water baptism is by immersion. John baptized where there was "much water" (John 3:23). Could there be any excuse for this statement if sprinkling or pouring, either of which would not require "much water," were authorized or practiced? If either of the latter-named actions were practiced, would it not be much more likely that where many were to be baptized it would be easier to bring the necessary water to them rather than to take so many to the water? Baptism is called a "burial," a "planting" (Rom. 6), and it is spoken of as "going down into the water and coming up out of it again" (Acts 8:38, 39).

Furthermore, in the word "baptism" we have a Greek word transcribed and not translated. Elsewhere this same Greek word is properly translated "dip," where it has no relation to water baptism. In Luke 16, in the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, the rich man is made to say, "Send Lazarus that he may dip the tip of his finger," etc. Again Christ said to those who asked Him who it was that should betray Him, "It is he that dippeth with me," etc. Again we read of one whose "vesture is dipped in blood." In each instance the word "dip" is translated from some form of the Greek baptizo.

We have at hand a German Bible. In it we find the 1st verse of Matthew 3, the following: Zu der Zeit kam Johannes, der Täufer, etc. The English of this is, "In those days, came John the Baptist." Ask any German to give you the meaning of Täufer, and see what he will tell you. I asked one once upon a time what it meant when he didn't know what my design was in asking it, and he said, "Id means dat you get soaked."

In type this idea of immersion is sustained. The children of Israel were buried in a watery grave in their passage through the Red Sea. Paul refers to this as a national baptism unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea (Rom. 10). The Israelites were entirely hidden from the Egyptians under water, for a cloud covered them and hid them. Baptism is also given as a figure of burial. As Christ was buried and arose, so we are buried in baptism with Him to arise to walk in a newness of life.

What purpose can people have in wishing to discuss the subject out of the Bible? Why do they seek to change God's plans and purposes? Do they not know this is a dangerous proceeding? Saul tried it only a little, for while the commandment had gone out to destroy everything, yet Saul kept back only a little alive, and that only for an apparently good purpose if we are to believe his story; yet it cost him a kingdom. The Prophet was told to eat nothing while in the land of the enemy. Yet with good purpose, so he thought, he ate and lost his life. How dare people be so careless about the ordinances of God? Is it because vanity takes hold and molds their actions? We need to flee vanity. It is as poison to us. Let us seek rather a state of deep humility, for in its atmosphere alone can we develop best that character which God purposes for us.

As against baptism it is urged that the winters of our latitude make the thought of being immersed in the extremely cold water of our winter time out of the question. We know of instances where candidates applying for immersion in the winter time have been told by the "shepherds" to wait until warmed weather. Recently when the water was full of slush ice, we were called upon to baptize a sister whose health was far from rugged. She went through the ordeal without a fear and came out of the water knowing that she had been obedient to that form of doctrine which had been delivered her. We have never heard of a case where severity of the weather ever brought harm to the willingly obedient. Let us not seek excuses to avoid what God commands, but rather let us seek excuses to do His will, knowing that He will ask nothing of us in the performance of which He will not protect us.

More About Dancing

When it comes right down to facts, I wonder if the person that dances can truly be called a Christian? Is dancing any part of the church; has it any part in church worship; or do you think that it could be in any way connected with church? Do you think that a church would sponsor a dance? I doubt it. And if dancing isn't a part of the church, has no part in church worship, then it must be a part of the world, is it not? And if dancing is of the world, have we, as Christians, any part in it? We are told to "come out from among them, and be ye separate" (2 Cor. 6:17). Can we be a separate people if we insist on doing, acting, being as the world? We are a "chosen generation, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that (we) should shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light" (1 Peter 2:9). Are we justified in calling ourselves a chosen generation, a holy nation, a peculiar people, if we go on doing as the rest of the world? What is to distinguish us from the world if we are as the world? Are we showing forth the praises of Him who hath called us out of darkness if we insist on remaining in the world or in darkness? Are we showing forth His praises by doing as we are doing? Again, I doubt it. "Be not conformed to this world."—Rom. 12:2. Be not in harmony with this world. Are we not in harmony with the world if we do as the world is doing?

I cannot but find that in every way the so-called Christian that dances is disobeying the Word of God every time he or she enters any place in which dancing is going on. If they were truly followers of Christ, they would be doing all in their power to combat dancing as one of the big evils of the present day, instead of signifying their approval by attending. Ask yourself this question in all honesty: "Can I picture Christ out on a dance floor dancing?" If you can, you have a better imagination than I have. If you cannot, what makes you think that you can dance and still be a follower of Christ? Do you honestly think that as a Christian, a follower of Christ, you can get out and dance if you think that Jesus would not do so? Are you a true follower of Christ if you go on doing the things that you do not think that Christ would do? I just wonder what you would do if some evening, on a dance floor, surrounded perhaps with persons in all stages of intoxication, with the air poisoned with tobacco smoke—what would be your reaction if you were to meet your Savior face to face? Do you think you could face Him with a clear conscience, secure in your mind that you were clean in heart and mind? I wonder. I am afraid that I would hang my head in shame like a dog that has been caught in mischief and knows that he is going to be punished for it.

We are told in Matthew 6:24 that "no man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Isn't that what every dancing Christian is trying to do? I think there is no doubt in anyone's mind that Jesus would not dance; yet, while confessing to be followers of Him, they leave Him for the pleasures of the world, try to serve both Christ and mammon. I find that these same ones are the ones who cannot be depended upon to help out at services, are too tired to teach classes on Sundays, cannot find time to prepare for and lead young people's meetings; and yet they call themselves followers of Christ.—Vivian Kirkpatrick.

Passing of the Years

"This is a notable year in Bible publishing. Four hundred years ago on October 4, 1535, was printed the first English Bible, translated by Miles Coverdale."

So a recent letter sent to all retail book dealers by the National Association of Book Publishers begins its appeal for an increased sale of Bibles, an increase which is particularly desirable in view of the fact that nearly all book sales except those of Bibles have grown enormously during the past year.

The passage of the years has built the Bible publishing business to one of the world's great industries. The Oxford University Press alone sells more than a million Bibles a year, and it is closely rivaled by the American and English Bible Societies. Other leading American publishers do a rushing trade in lines of Bibles when other book sales channels are almost closed.

These facts give clear illustration to the statement that Christianity has made civilization. The first European printing press resulted from one man's desire to equip the world with Bibles, not with lectures on sociology and Marxism. And from the printing press has arisen the great dailies, magazines, books, and incidentals without which modern business would come abruptly to a standstill.

The Bible today is available in more than six hundred languages, and in a multiplicity of dialects. It can be had in a dozen systems for the blind. It has had more books written around it than any other group of works in all the world. The library of the Harvard Theological School alone has more than two thousand volumes concerning nothing but the life and letters of the Apostle Paul, not including a large assortment of commentaries, dictionaries, and histories which include comments on his work. God's Word, target for abuse, blasphemy, skepticism, ridicule, is still a vital force in world affairs.

"Be not afraid . . . for I am with thee."—Jeremiah 1:8.

GOD CALLS ANOTHER WORKER TO HELP HIM

A BOY KING sat on the throne of Judah in the city of Jerusalem. And in a little village about three miles to the northeast lived another boy named Jeremiah. With our "mind's eye" we can see Jeremiah often climbing to the top of a hill near his home and looking toward the higher hills surrounding the city of the boy king.

Little did Jeremiah think that one day he would be called to go and help his king. But that is exactly what happened to him. For God chose him to be a watchman and a messenger.

Now Jeremiah thought that he was altogether too young to do anything so important. And he told God so. But God told him that He would be with him and even put the words in his mouth that He wanted him to say.

The boy king, Josiah, worshiped the one true God, and he was glad to have Jeremiah come and help him. But the kings that came after Josiah died were wicked kings, and they were not kind to Jeremiah. They tried every way to get rid of him.

While Josiah sat on the throne it wasn't so hard for Jeremiah. But you can imagine yourself how hard it would be to stick to a thing that the king was opposed to. And Jeremiah had his courage and his faith in God tried many, many times.

You see, the rulers didn't want to hear God's messages because they knew they were true. They knew they were wicked men and should be punished, but they didn't want anyone telling them about it. People are just that way today, aren't they?

In the country of Judah are many almond trees. They are very beautiful, for they are the first to blossom in the early spring. They are covered with white blossoms almost before winter is over.

Well, God told Jeremiah that every time he saw a blossoming almond tree he should remember that God would always be with him. So Jeremiah watched for the almond blossoms every spring and came to call the almond his "watcher tree."

No matter what the rulers tried to do to him, no matter how hard his life was, Jeremiah always remembered God's promise and knew that God's love was always over him. I wonder if we couldn't find something in our lives that would always remind us of God's care for us? Many things, I'm sure, if we'd just look about us.

Jeremiah told the people that if they did not leave their idols and return to God their temple would be destroyed, their homes be burned, and themselves taken captive. But if they would repent none of this evil would come upon them.

They wouldn't listen to Jeremiah at all. They were furious because they thought their beautiful city couldn't be destroyed. And they seized Jeremiah and would have killed him right there but for God's protection.

That didn't stop Jeremiah from doing God's work. He kept right on speaking God's words even though he was put down in a dungeon and left to die. Next week we'll find out how he was saved.

FOR YOUR BIBLE SCRAPBOOK

At the top of the page write, "Lesson 2, October 13." Then the verse at the top of this page; next, the subject, "God Calls Another Worker to Help Him."

Now write the story of Jeremiah, telling how he was called to help God when he was only a young man, what his work was, and how he had the courage to do it. Tell some of the terrible things that happened to Jeremiah. You will find them in Jeremiah 20:2; 26:8; 32:2; 38:28; 40:1.

If you are not old enough to write a story you may draw pictures to represent it. Draw a boy looking toward the hills. On the other side of the hills draw another boy sitting on a throne. Print underneath, "Be not afraid."

After you have finished the story, draw, or cut from paper and paste on your page, a shield. Across it print, "Faith in God." Next, draw an almond tree. You can find pictures of one in an encyclopedia or perhaps in your nature study book. Under it write, "Jeremiah's Watcher Tree."

Now copy these lines, filling in the blanks:

The people of Judah turned from _____ to worship _____.

God called _____ to help Him.

Jeremiah's work was to call the people back to _____.

He was afraid, but _____ gave him courage.

God said, "Be not _____, for I am with thee."

The people would _____ listen to Jeremiah.

They grew angry because they knew Jeremiah was speaking the _____.

They tried to kill him, but _____ took care of him.

At the end write a little prayer asking God to give you the courage always to speak the truth.

THE STORY OF JEREMIAH

Jeremiah 1:1-10; 6:10, 11; 8:18; 26:1-24; chapters 36, 37, 38.

GOLDEN TEXT

“Thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee, and whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak.”—Jeremiah 1:7.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: The Story of Jeremiah.

Aim: Disobedience to God brings unhappiness, but He is always ready to forgive those who truly repent and return to Him in faith.

Class Discussion: Compare religious and political conditions today with the time of Jeremiah. Why men in positions of authority resent the reproof and correction administered by the Bible and by true servants of God.

I. Jeremiah Called and Qualified for Service. (Jer. 1:1-10.) The period when Jeremiah was called to the prophetic office was one of transition in Israel. During the long reign of Manasseh, during which the country was under Assyrian control, heathen forms had been introduced into the temple worship. When Josiah came to the throne (637 B. C.) he instituted religious reforms, which while they brought the people back to the observance of the Mosaic ritualism, gave them no true spiritual insight into the meaning of their religion. Jeremiah was called and qualified by the gift of prophecy to warn them of the results of their evil conduct and to plead with them to return to a purer form of worship.

II. Jeremiah Repulsed by Priests and False Prophets. (Jer. 26:1-11.) The Prophet was commanded “in the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim” to stand in the temple when the people came to worship and warn them to return whole-heartedly to the observance of the law of God. In case they failed to do so, both the city of Jerusalem and the temple of the Lord would become desolate and forsaken. As was so often the case when the nation was reprovved for its sin, the leaders bitterly resented the warning and denied its authority. The weight of Jeremiah's criticism fell most heavily upon the priests and pseudo-prophets, and they immediately demanded the death of the Prophet on the grounds of misrepresentation. The same attitude is manifested today by those in authority when their evil actions are pointed out.

III. Jeremiah Faces Death for His Faithfulness to God. (Vv. 12-15.) Jeremiah made the simple defense that he could do no less than to deliver the message God had put in his lips. Regardless of consequences to himself he must give voice to the warning the Lord had commanded him to issue. This was the attitude of Paul with regard to his preaching the gospel. “Necessity is laid upon me; yea, woe is me, if I preach not the gospel!”—1 Cor. 9:16.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Jeremiah

- had no fear, for God was with him;
- spoke the words God put in his mouth;
- urged all to obey the voice of God;
- was true to God in the face of martyrdom.

A God-Given Message. Jeremiah received his message, not from man, but direct from God. It was a God-given message, and being such, required its complete deliverance if Jeremiah was to be true to the trust assigned him. When God speaks man should listen. We oftentimes speak frivolously, but God's words are full of meaning and for a serious purpose. God spoke to the Levites and told them how the sacrifices should be made, but Nadab and Abihu failed to heed the voice of God and offered strange fire on the altar and they were immediately destroyed. Saul was commissioned to destroy all the Amalekites. He carried out all of God's Word save that he spared Agag the King and some of the best of the flocks and herds. But God wants complete obedience to His Word and because Saul failed to completely obey he lost his throne and kingdom. In our day God is speaking unto us by His Son, and if we fail to hear the Son, it is a rejection of the Father also. For the person that will not hear this Prophet shall be cut off from among the people. Study these examples which vividly set forth the need of heeding the Word of God regardless of its requirements: Lev. 10:1, 2; 1 Sam. 15; Acts 3:22, 23.

A Courageous Prophet. Jeremiah's task was not an easy one. It demanded implicit faith in his message and in the One who had given that message to him. This message wasn't what the people wanted, it was what they needed. It is an easy thing to tell the people what they like and want to hear, but to point out the sins in their lives and get them to amend their ways and obey the voice of God requires courage and necessitates that the deliverer of the message keep himself in full contact with the Father.—C. E. R.

GOLDEN TEXT

God knew Jeremiah not only from birth, but He knew him before his birth and sanctified him and ordained him to be a prophet unto the nations. With such a start as this, Jeremiah was well qualified for the work before him. We notice that at different times the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah and he always faithfully delivered the message to the proper ones.

This is a fitting example for Christians. When a work is to be done it should be cheerfully and faithfully performed in the way that will be pleasing to the Father. Let us do our work as fearlessly and carefully as Jeremiah did his. He worked for the Lord; so should we. Our salvation depends on the Father and we should endeavor to please Him.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

Morality. The term “morality” is not a biblical one. Find out its meaning in some good dictionary. Today's lesson largely concerns morals. The topic for this department is “Attacking Entrenched Evils.”

Setting. In what circumstances was Judah at the time these events occurred? Gain a general idea of the setting from some history of the period. Study the life of Jeremiah (see the Encyclopedia Britannica, Popular & Critical Bible Encyclopedia, or some such work). Would it have been easy to fight actively against idolatry in those days? What is idolatry? What forms does it take now? What forms did it take then? Which forms are more dangerous?

Application. What sins are most prevalent today? Why? Study 2 Tim. 3:1-6. Are the methods of Carrie Nation the best way to combat evil? Is it Christian to ignore specific sins for the sake of not hurting some one's feelings? What did Jesus do? (If possible, read in connection with this lesson Robert Hardy's famous book, “In His Steps.”) What is the result of frequent association with worldly people? Can anyone avoid feeling some effects? Why? Is it possible for a Christian to “have fun”? How? What makes any pleasure evil? What is sin? Is conscience a safe guide? Why? Can an act be sin in one place and not sin in another? Why? Does God so differentiate?—A. M.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

Taking a Stand for God

About seventy years after Isaiah's death came another great prophet of God—Jeremiah, whose name means “Appointed by Jehovah.” His parentage is given in verse 1 of his book, the kings under whom he prophesied in verses 2, 3. During all the troublous times when Babylon was invading the land of Israel, Jeremiah continued to urge the people to return to God ere His punishment fell on them. The rulers persecuted him cruelly. But he saw the doom he had foretold fall on Jerusalem, the people carried captive, and the city destroyed. He wrote the book of Lamentations over the ruined city in a shelter he had found in a cave. Jeremiah lived at the same time as Daniel and began his work when only a young man.

Was it as easy for Jeremiah to remain faithful in delivering God's message as it was for Isaiah? The latter had the friendship of the king to support him during a part of his public work. Jeremiah had to face the bitterest opposition except for a brief time under Josiah. Notice some of the sufferings he endured: 20:2; 26:15; 32:2; 37:21; 38:5, 6. Suppose Jeremiah had weakened under such great trials and had ceased to bring the people God's warnings. Would the punishments of God have come upon the people just the same? Why, then, was it in God's purpose for Jeremiah to continue to warn them, though they turned deaf ears? Discuss in class whether Jeremiah was right in putting the commands of God above patriotism. Was he a true patriot?

Remember: The manner in which you meet the little tests of every day reveals whether you are true to God.—M. G.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

RALLY DAY AT OREGON, ILLINOIS

Next Sunday will be Homecoming and Rally Day at "The Church of the Open Bible." Invitations are being sent to the widely scattered out-of-town membership, to the members of the Home Department of the Sunday school who reside not only in Oregon but in many other localities and some even outside of Illinois, and to former attendants of both Sunday school and church who have been absent for some time, to meet in another great gathering of the congregation.

Following the morning services, dinner will be served in the basement of the church, providing an opportunity for the renewal of acquaintanceship and the exchange of spiritual ideas between those present. Each family is requested to bring sandwiches and a dish to pass, with dishes for the family.

In connection with the Sunday school period, which begins at 9:45, a short program will be presented, after which the usual Sunday morning "Hour With God" will be observed, with the pastor taking as his theme the prayer of the Psalmist, "That our sons may be as plants grown up in their youth; that our daughters may be as corner stones, polished after the similitude of a palace" (Psa. 144:12). The sermon will deal with the present and the future of our young people, and how their lives may be affected by the help that is rendered by the Church of God.

At 6:30 in the evening the Bereans will hold a service, following which the day's activities will be brought to a close with a sermon entitled "Home, Sweet Home." The sermon will conclude with a beautiful pageant to be presented by Miss Betty Jean Lindsay, assisted by Mrs. Leila Mae Doeden, soloist.

SPECIAL EVANGELISTIC SERVICES AT KOKOMO, INDIANA

Our special evangelistic services close the evening of September 22 with Elder A. E. Hoskins of Burr Oak, Ind., speaking on the topic, "The Fork in the Road." This has been a series of great interest and benefit to the local church.

There were two additions by baptism. We rejoice to introduce Bro. and Sr. Elmer Hand, who reside southeast of Kokomo, who were baptized into the Lord Jesus Saturday afternoon (Sept. 21) by Elder O. J. Parker.

Bro. Hoskins has given us much food for thought during the past week and we feel strengthened to go forward in the work.

Interest and attendance were very good. Bro. and Sr. Hatten and daughter of Culver, Ind., drove over Sunday morning, bringing with them Sr. Hoskins and daughter, to attend our Rally Day and Homecoming. We are always glad to welcome visiting brethren. Come again, Burr Oak.

We hope to meet with Bro. Hoskins again in the near future. Such association with the brethren strengthens the tie that binds.

D. G. Harvey.

SERVICES TO BE HELD AT NORTH PLATTE, NEBRASKA

Bro. E. E. Giesler, pastor of the Church of God at Moorefield, Neb., will conduct a series of evangelistic meetings in a country schoolhouse near here (North Platte, Neb.) for me. These meetings will be every evening at 8 o'clock beginning Sunday, Oct. 6, and ending October 13. Bro. and Sr. Giesler will stay with me on my farm during the meetings.

The schoolhouse is large and has a platform and an organ; so consequently it will be an ideal place for the meeting. It is thirteen miles from town. Not one Christian have I found in this district. Also there is considerable prejudice against religion. If these meetings prove to be successful, I will hold services here every Sunday evening. This will complete my schedule, as I hold Sunday morning services in a schoolhouse of another community. They have a union Sunday school there.

Pray for us and the meeting that the gospel may be carried on and others saved.

Wilsie J. McKnight.

BURR OAK, INDIANA

We finished a week's meeting with the church at Kokomo, Ind., Sunday night, the 22nd. This day was their homecoming and a very enjoyable occasion. I preached nine sermons. Bro. and Sr. E. H. Hand were baptized into Christ by Bro. Parker. I am told the attendance was good. I know the interest was excellent.

This was our first visit to this church and we enjoyed their hospitality. We are proud of this group for their enthusiastic effort under the able leadership of Bro. Parker and Bro. Harvey. They have a good building located in the industrial section of the city.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

"Why don't you let your readers have the benefit of your Sunday night sermons?" asks Sr. Jessie M. B. Kauffman of California in a personal letter to the editor. Many other similar requests having reached us, we are now engaged in preparing a series of articles based on the historical-prophetic sermons now being given in the Oregon church.

Various congregations of Minnesota, Illinois, Missouri, and other midwestern states are planning special meetings of an evangelistic nature for the near future. Never in the history of the denomination has the outlook been more promising for widespread evangelism than it is at the present time. World conditions indicate that the Lord's coming is near, and thousands of people are wondering what the outcome of the present turmoil is to be. Let's give them the Bible answer!

Bibles, maps, histories—you need them all, as never before for the study of prophecy in relation to the past and present. We are prepared to supply anything you require in this line,

Like most cities, Kokomo has suffered on account of unemployment. The work has been difficult and yet they have accomplished a great deal. Their orchestra is an asset under the splendid direction of Robert Harvey. We value this fine talent and they helped in a large way toward the meetings. Sr. Hunt's two violin solos gripped our hearts, as well as did the vocal and other instrumental music.

We are joyous to report this work of our brethren, for they apparently believe in a workable faith.

The Sunday we were absent from our pulpit at Burr Oak was cared for by the Gospel Seekers' Class and the evening service cancelled.

Our folks are working and looking forward to our Rally Day on Sunday, Oct. 6, when we hope that every member will not fail to be present and that a real stirring-up will be had. This will be an all-day service beginning at 10 o'clock, continuing with dinner at noon and until the evening service. An invitation is extended to all who will meet with us on that day.

Sr. Wilma Osborn, the wife of Bro. Gerald Osborn, was taken to the Rochester hospital Friday the 13th for an operation, and is reported recovering nicely, and we hope by this time is home again. The funeral of Sr. Henry Chapman of Argos was held Thursday, the 19th.

A. E. Hoskins, Pastor.

RIPLEY, ILLINOIS

On Sunday, Sept. 22, after Sunday school, 36 of our members went to the home of Sr. Harold Allen and family near Adair, Ill. A very enjoyable day was spent there and we are thankful for the opportunity of visiting them.

Bro. J. W. Cooper assisted Lynn Mallory in baptism, September 23. Bro. Mallory's home is in Los Angeles, Calif. We trust his life

Bro. and Sr. S. J. Lindsay left Monday morning for their home in Tempe, Ariz. Sunday morning Bro. Lindsay spoke to the Oregon congregation on "Pentecostal Preaching." He declared that Peter's discourse on the day of Pentecost did not consist of an emotional outburst, but in the presentation of facts, some of which were extremely obnoxious to his hearers, concerning the gospel and its requirements.

A comedy of errors resulted in our publishing under the caption "To Our Evangelists and Pastors" in our last issue the statement, "Our general headquarters would appreciate it very much if the evangelists and pastors of the Church of God would emphasize the fundamental truths . . ." It should have read "who emphasize the fundamental truths."

It is not too early now to begin thinking about the Christmas program. Why not order some samples of services from the National Bible Institution and make your selections from them. The only charge will be the return postage on the services not purchased, and you will write one letter, not a dozen to as many different publishers.

may be one of service to the Master.

A farewell social for Bro. and Sr. C. E. Lapp was held at the home of Bro. and Sr. William Densmore Tuesday evening. We pray that the Father's blessing may be upon them as they part from us and that they may ever be guided by His will.

Our next year's work will begin October 1, with Bro. and Sr. Harvey Krogh, Jr. Rally Day is the second Sunday in October. A program is being planned.

Ednah Cooper, Secretary.

NORTHWEST CONFERENCE

The Northwest Conference of the Church of God opened its quarterly meeting the weekend of August 30. After a welcome from Sr. Emma C. Railsback, Bro. Norman John MacLeod spoke on "The Mysteries of God" (Eph. 3:1; 1 Cor. 15:35, 51; Col. 1:25).

At 10 a.m. Saturday morning, Pres. Minnie Rogers gave a lecture on "Tithing" (Gen. 14:18-20; Heb. 5:1-10). She brought out that we cannot say that tithing as a part of the Old Covenant is binding unless we believe that the covenant itself is in force. However, Abraham saw fit to pay tithes to Melchizedec, King of Salem, and Christ is a priest forever after that order, so we should continue to pay our tithes to our high priest.

Bro. Darby spoke at 11 a.m. on "Present-Day Conditions," the sermon centering on the impending Italo-Ethiopian conflict.

Business meeting was called to order by Pres. Rogers. Motions carried included "reduction of the number of conferences from four to three, automatically eliminating the March meeting at Corvallis and placing the December meeting at Felida at a later date." The Board of Management voted unanimously to hire Sr. Railsback for another period of six months. Too much cannot be said in praise of the evangelistic work which has been conducted by Sr. Railsback. We feel that there is a growing need for more work of this type by all of our churches. The ministerial report will appear in a future issue.

"The Land Brought Back From the Sword" was Bro. MacLeod's subject for the evening service. This dealt with history and present day fulfillment of Ezekiel 38:8.

Sunday school was held at 10 o'clock, followed by Bro. MacLeod's sermon on "The Davidic Covenant." Picnic lunch was served at the city park.

At 2 o'clock Sr. Jessie M. B. Kauffman of Riverside, Calif., spoke on "The Benefits of Berean and Bible School Work." This was a particularly interesting talk, as the subject is one which is gradually being taken up in the Northwest. It is possible that Bible school with classes for all ages will precede the annual conference. This will provide an excellent school for the younger members and prospective members. Following this talk, Bro. MacLeod conducted the Communion service.

Social meeting was conducted by Sr. Railsback. Bro. L. G. Jaegar of Tacoma gave a splendid talk, followed by Bros. Darby and Railsback.

At 8 o'clock Bro. MacLeod's subject was "The Glories of the Kingdom." It was a fine sermon, bringing to our memories the wonderful promises to the overcomer.

On behalf of the Northwest Conference and the Corvallis church I wish to thank the following who contributed so much to the success of our meetings: Srs. Leta MacLeod and Thelma Moore, organist and vocalist; Sr. Hazel Burk, accordionist; Bros. MacLeod, Darby, and Jaegar and Srs. Railsback, Kauffman, and Rogers for their words of truth and wisdom.

To our heavenly Father we give the honor and praise for the "great things he hath done," and for the precious promises, not least among which is that the Gentiles should be fellow heirs. Gladys Barber, Secretary.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

Our group regrets to lose from its association Mr. and Mrs. Carl Mixer and daughter, who are this week moving to Detroit. Mrs. Mixer is a daughter of Bro. and Sr. Skeels.

A death of interest to our church, school, and community occurred on September 23, with the passing of Ralph Andre. He was neither a member nor an attendant of church, but a quiet, gentle, kind business man and member of the School Board. Something of the love and respect in which he was held is evidenced by the fact that the entire school system was dismissed the afternoon of the burial and business houses closed. Funeral services were in charge of our church staff and were conducted in the spacious school gymnasium.

The mind of the church is now centered upon the coming of Bro. Patrick and the meetings scheduled for October 13-26. Pray for God's blessing to attend this work.

Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Duval of Chicago are spending a few days visiting relatives and the church folks here, Mrs. Duval being a sister of the pastor's wife.

The men's room, which was a separate building 14 x 24, has been moved and is being connected to the annex. This will furnish convenient space for a good kitchen, and when we get the basement under it finished at a later time it will provide an extra classroom.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

HARRY STROH

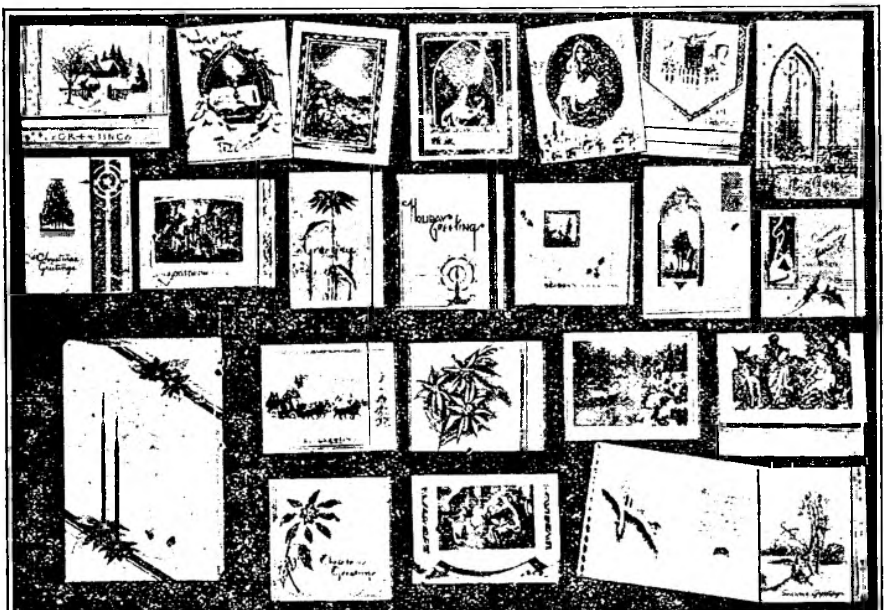

On Wednesday, Sept. 18, 1935, we were called upon to lay away in his last resting place an old-time friend, Harry Stroh, of Oregon, Ill. When the church in Oregon was young, Harry and his wife became members of our youthful organization through confession of faith and baptism. Sr. Stroh passed away about 31 years ago. Since that time Harry has spent his time with his children, all of whom are now living in Oregon. Harry had passed his 69th milestone and had been in no very rugged health for some time. We laid him beside her who meant so much to him while she lived. There they both sleep awaiting the will of our Father in heaven.

S. J. Lindsay.

THE SUNLIGHT OF PROPHECY

Another series of lessons in envelope-size tract form has been prepared by J. H. Anderson, Indiana state evangelist for the Church of God, and published at 10 cents the copy. The tract covers sixteen pages, and may be obtained from either the author, Michigantown, Ind., or Mrs. Mabel Edney, Dana, N. C.

The twelve lessons of the tract are devoted to prophecy, with particular attention given to the Antichrist. In fact, the subtitle of the pamphlet is "Who Is the Antichrist?" The author's argument is based entirely upon his interpretation of the biblical passages enumerated in the text of the tract.

Perhaps You Have Wanted to Help— Now Your Opportunity Is Here

This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come.

—Matthew 24:14.

By order of the General Conference, an evangelistic fund to provide for carrying the gospel to new and isolated localities under the auspices of the National Bible Institution has been established. It was, however, understood by the Conference that no contributions to this fund were to be taken as replacing those made to the running expenses of the Institution, but were to be an addition to the usual donations to the general cause of the church.

Here is the opportunity for which many have been waiting, an opportunity to help in telling the world about the coming kingdom and all it represents. Work will be started as soon as a sufficient fund is in reserve to cover operating costs. It is your chance, and it is your responsibility.

Remember, however, that the National Bible Institution needs funds for its present work. To carry on the paper, the Sunday school quarterly, and tract publication requires money. Send a donation toward current expenses at the same time you contribute to the evangelistic campaign. The paper reaches five thousand people every week through one thousand subscribers. No one evangelist can do that. Write us a letter or use the coupon below.

OREGON, ILLINOIS, OCTOBER 8, 1935

Report of 1935 Ministerial Conference

THE conference held by our ministers in connection with the 1935 General Conference was in many ways the most interesting and most profitable gathering ever held by them. The results should be felt throughout the nation during the months and years to come.

President Randall had prepared a daily program ahead, and various ministers who have had years of experience in certain lines were prepared to give talks and direct discussions along those lines. The result was most inspiring and encouraging.

The first session was held on the opening day of conference, July 30. All the ministers had not yet arrived that morning, but a very interesting session was held. On Wednesday morning, July 31, fifteen ministers were present at 8 o'clock. The chairman urged promptness and cooperation with the outlined program so as to get the most possible value out of the gatherings. He then presented a paper deploring the lack of life, growth, and development of the church and urging a revival of life. This paper was so splendidly prepared and contained so much of vital truth that decision was made to have it later read before the General Conference, and still later published in THE RESTITUTION HERALD.

President Randall then appointed three committees. The first was on evangelism, and consisted of G. E. Marsh, C. E. Lapp, and M. W. Lyon. The second was on church finance, and the members were James A. Patrick, F. E. Siple, and Earl Thayer. The third on our messages for the year was composed of F. L. Austin, S. J. Lindsay, and L. E. Conner.

When the meeting was thrown open for general discussion at 8:25, remarks were made by several on the matters the church should stand for, and the type of messages the pastors should present throughout the year. After some discussion of study courses and collateral reading for ministers a motion was carried to have a committee consider the matter and report back. The committee appointed was Arlen Marsh, M. W. Lyon, and F. E. Siple.

L. E. Conner, president of the General Conference, offered to allow the Ministerial Association to use some of the afternoon General Conference time for a few days for additional ministerial gatherings. This offer was accepted and the morning session adjourned at 9:05.

At 2:30 p. m. the chairman again called the meeting to order. M. W. Lyon made request for discussion of the personality of Satan. After extended discussion as to the advisability of such a question Bro. Lyon moved "that this group take up the study of the personality of evil and that a committee of ministers be appointed to prepare the two sides of this subject in manuscript form to be presented at the 1936 Ministerial Conference." This was seconded by James A. Patrick and carried. The chairman appointed as a committee on the side of the non-personality of Satan L. E. Conner and F. E. Siple, and on the opposite side James A. Patrick and C. E. Randall.

Bro. Lapp then raised the question of what constitutes adequate preparation for the ministry. Remarks were made by many as to kinds of study that are valuable, and the session should have brought real help, especially to our younger ministers.

At 4:20 p. m. Bro. Patrick presented the subject "Financing a Church." This was a thoughtful presentation by one who has had years of experience and observation, and the speaker stressed the point that if the members of a church would follow God's plan and turn a tithe of their income to the work there would be no difficulty in financing the church. Bro. Patrick's presentation of the subject received such hearty approval that he was asked to deliver the matter as a sermon before the whole conference. This was done later, and the effect upon the hearers was splendid. (The sermon, abridged, appeared in the August 27 issue of this paper.—Ed.)

On Thursday, Aug. 1, the ministers again convened at 8 a. m. After the opening remarks the chairman turned the meeting over to S. J. Lindsay, who explained a questionnaire he had sent out to a limited number. The results from this were so good that he recommended a general questionnaire to all ministers. A motion was then passed that a committee be appointed to work out plans. The ones appointed to that committee were S. J. Lindsay, James A. Patrick, and Arlen Marsh. (Please turn to Page Nine)

Abreast of the Times

Italian-Ethiopian War Opens

"The mountains shall be melted with their blood."—Isaiah 34:3.

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia, Oct. 3.—Italy's long-anticipated advance into Ethiopia for the military occupation of the country is in full swing. Nearly two thousand casualties have already resulted from the aerial bombing of the thickly populated city of Adowa which is situated some 350 miles north of the capital. This region was the scene of the crushing defeat of the Italian army under Gen. Baratieri on March 1, 1896, which Mussolini is now determined to avenge. At that time it was the capital of Ethiopia, but was razed during the fighting.

The Italian minister was handed his passport a few hours after the report of the attack upon Adowa was received, and a formal declaration of war has been made by Mussolini against Ethiopia.

Owing to the lack of telegraph lines and other means of direct communication news of the advance of the Black Shirts is meager and biased by the opinions of the belligerent sources through which it comes.

GENEVA, Oct. 3.—With the outbreak of hostilities in Ethiopia the League of Nations Council is faced with the most serious problem it has been called upon to meet since its establishment at the close of the World War. The action it now takes will in all probability determine whether or not all Europe and perhaps the entire world will be drawn into the conflict. One official said: "This is the clearest case in the whole history of the League. It is a real test of League sincerity, for if the League cannot decide clearly now it can never hope to know its own mind in any later crisis." It is evident that if the League fails now to exert its authority to prevent the continuance of the war it will write its own death warrant.

Lutherans Seek Unity

"Every one of you saith, I am of Paul; and I of Apolos; and I of Cephas; and I of Christ."—1 Cor. 1:12.

NEW YORK, Oct. 1.—"All the followers of Jesus Christ, Lutherans and Protestants, Roman and Greek Catholics, should be one," declared Rev. George C. Koenig, pastor of St. Paul's Lutheran Church of this city in an address before the annual ministerial conference of the Missouri Synod, now in session here. "But, before going so far afield," he continued, "our own Lutheran house must be set in order. The world is treated to the sorry spectacle of church bodies bearing the same name and professing adherence to the same confessions of faith actively, and, at the same time, even acridly opposed to one another. . . . In one community there may be from one to a dozen Lutheran congregations, each proclaiming its own brand of Lutheranism. There is no clear-cut issue to account for the various Lutheran groupings. No major theological battle between Lutheran synods has been fought during the last decade or so. But sharpshooters are on the alert and let anybody expose himself, and he will soon rue it. . . . Children of God take keen delight in mauling each other. But," the speaker concluded, "Lutheran unity is the will of God."

Aside from various independent bodies of our own denomination, there are at least four separate national organizations taking the name "Church of God," the major tenets of which are practically identical with our own. Three general conferences are maintained by Church of God believers, two by the Seventh Day Church of God and one by our own, while an affiliated group of churches taking the same name and advocating practically the same teaching stretches from Iowa and Minnesota in the Middle West to Washington on the Pacific Coast.

President Stands Firmly for Neutrality

"Put up again thy sword into his place."—Jesus.

SAN DIEGO, Cal., Oct. 1.—President Roosevelt left no doubt in the mind of his hearers as to his determination to keep the United States out of the present threatening situation in Europe and East Africa, or, in fact, anywhere else in the world. In his speech delivered before a vast audience assembled at the California Exposition the President reiterated the advice of George Washington that this nation should by all honorable means in its power "avoid entangling alliances" with the nations of the Old World.

This declaration of the President was in line with the law passed in the closing days of the last Congress, which made the maintenance of the strict neutrality of the United States mandatory on the Chief Executive for a period of six months, ending in February, 1936.

Hints and Helps to Teachers

By Norman John MacLeod

IN TEACHING, enthusiasm covers a multitude of sins. If you are enthusiastic it will cover up many of the faults of your teaching. That is true of many lines, but in no line is it quite so true as in teaching. Enthusiasm is usually the difference between the methodical teacher and the inspirational teacher. If you are one of those people who dote upon methods of teaching, you will probably be horrified at the teaching of the inspirational teacher. The latter does not do many things according to method, but will use methods which are covered up by the veneer of enthusiasm.

Perhaps the first requisite of inspirational teaching is that of thorough knowledge of the subject. You cannot be enthusiastic about something that is almost an unknown thing in your life. If religion does not mean anything to you, how are you going to lend enough enthusiasm to it to inspire others? Verily it cannot be done. Everybody should have a great cause to which he can tie his whole life: that cause should be a religious one. Every teacher should be filled with not only biblical knowledge, but also knowledge of everything else that he can learn. If you are reading just one jump ahead of your class, you will never be alert enough to be a good teacher. A good teacher must be able to throw away his whole outlined subject and compose a completely new outline in the midst of his teaching if necessary. In other words he must know his subject so well that in case something comes in that was not anticipated he can divert his whole line of thought into a slightly different channel related to the original plan.

Always plan more work to take up in a period than you can possibly cram into it. Then if one thing fails you will have more things to discuss with your class. Above all things plan it.

Do not teach too slowly. Your teaching will be deadening if you drag things out in a lazy fashion. Your class will go to sleep. I have found that in my class in Los Angeles I have some hotel workers who are up early and late: they will go to sleep in a minute if I teach slowly. Keep your eyes on your class and do not let them go to sleep on you.

Do not teach too rapidly. Remember that not all the members of your class are as far advanced as you are. They will not grasp things by one hurried glance at the subject. Repetition is the first law of learning. Teaching in too rapid a fashion will be confusing. A certain amount of confusion is good, it will cause the student to attempt to work his way out of that confusion, and so he will study.

Avoid undue criticism. Do not raise the issue of things too sharply. Cast the burden of proof onto the other person: do not give your own opinion or view of the thing until everybody else has stated theirs. Make the class demand of you what you think; and even then oftentimes it is better not to tell them.

If a teacher in a public school made no better attempt to assign lessons than does a Sunday school teacher he would be fired immediately. A clear, definite, easily understood assignment is the most important part of a lesson. Some dynamic personalities if given the Bible or any other textbook will delve into it, understand it, and absorb its lessons. But not most people. If most people are asked to study up on a specific question from any book, they will not be able to do it. They need to be told what to look for, where to find it, and what to do with the ideas after they have found them.

When beginning a series of lessons preview the whole group. That is, for instance in one group of lessons the following will be noted:

1. They are not exhaustive of the subjects that they cover. They had their inception in the fact that I was teaching a class only every other week. To undergo an exhaustive study of the various topics would be out of the realm of possibility. Certain lines of thought were, therefore, suggested with outlines of how to attack the subject.

2. They cover the principal methods of learning about the Bible based upon the fundamental doctrines of the church. To approach a subject from a new point of view is often valuable even if you do not present a single new idea. It adds a new zest to it. "The Kingdom," for instance, has lost a good deal of its freshness to most of our students. When I took up that subject, however, in these lessons the students were so enthusiastic they were utterly astonished to find that 9 o'clock had arrived. With unanimous appeal they asked for more.

3. The studying idea behind these lessons should if properly carried out help the teacher and the student to delve further into the methods of teaching without being hindered by lack of a technical education.

After the whole series of lessons has been previewed thus, then turn to the immediate lesson before you and do the same with it. If you do this with the first of the series, then you are always several jumps ahead of the students in the class. The review of the last week's lesson then is all that needs to be considered in regard to the previous lesson. That should take but a few moments when you are ready to attack the next unit of work in preview and assignment. The lecture method when used to preview your work and assign it thus becomes something of intelligence. Otherwise it becomes the "funnel" method. The question and answer method is used to stimulate interest. If it fails to do so, it is because you (Please turn to Page Eight)

Doing While Watching

“AND what I say unto you I say unto all, Watch.”—Mark 13:37. Jesus was sounding a word of warning to His followers concerning the time of His second coming. We may ask ourselves, Are we true watchmen of Israel? If we read in Ezekiel 33:7 we find in the words of that prophet two things which were essential in a man of God to constitute him such a watchman. The first was that he should hear the word at God’s mouth, and second, that he should use that word to warn the people from God, make it clear to them what God required of them, and what God was planning to do.

Now God has had His watchmen during all ages, those who have believed implicitly in the various revelations which have been given from time to time, and have proclaimed them, even when their own lives have had to pay the penalty for their so doing.

The word of the Lord came to Ezekiel (chap. 33:4), “Then whosoever heareth the sound of the trumpet, and taketh not warning; if the sword come, and take him away, his blood shall be upon his own head.” What thoughts does this verse suggest? It seems to remind me of a saying of Jesus. He had been on the mountain with the great multitude round about Him, anxious to be with Him, and to listen to His words of hope, and to see the wonderful miracles that He performed. For a long time He had talked with them, showing them how they should live; how they should treat their enemies as well as their friends; how they should humble themselves, striving to gain perfection; how they should seek for the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and so on.

These things He had taught, and His life among them had been a shining example of the path which He desired them to follow. And then He concluded with this parable, “Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock: and the rains descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock. And every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell: and great was the fall of it.”—Matt. 7:24-27.

Jesus was the greatest of the watchmen of Israel. He had heard the words of God. Listen to these quotations from His sayings, showing the source of His wisdom and knowledge. “My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me.”—John 7:16. “For I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak. And I know that his commandment is life everlasting: whatsoever I speak therefore, even as the Father said unto me, so I speak.”—John 12:49, 50. In John 14:10 Jesus emphatically discloses the source of His knowledge, “The words that I speak unto you I speak not of myself: but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works.”

So we see that Jesus was a true watchman in that His message had its source at the very fountain of all truth, that is, with God. Now what did He do with that truth? As a watchman His business was to proclaim the message of the everlasting gospel and to warn the people that they might flee from the wrath to come, and in order that they might prepare themselves for that glorious day which God has ordained for this earth.

Even when He was only twelve years old, He had, at least in a measure, realized His mission to the world. He had come to the temple of God at Jerusalem with His parents, and after the feast was over and they were looking for Him, Mary and Joseph had found Him in the temple discoursing with the learned doctors, and confounding them with His learning and wisdom. And there it was that He countered His mother’s question with one of his own, “Wist ye not that I must be about my Father’s business?”—Luke 2:49. And what was that business which even then commanded His attention? Part of it, certainly, was a work of preaching and teaching the messages of His Father. On one occasion He read out of the Scriptures concerning Himself. “The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord.”—Luke 4:18, 19. And as He continued, He declared, “This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears.”

This brings to mind the fact that as far as we ourselves are concerned, right now is the acceptable year of the Lord. Paul says (2 Cor. 6:2), “Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation.” We do not know how long our individual period of probation may last, and therefore it behooves us to take heed to the warnings of Jesus and Paul, that we build our house upon a rock, and that we earnestly strive for those things which will have lasting value in the day when man’s rule will be but a thing of history.

Christ had compared the man who built his house upon a rock to a wise man. So when we today build our spiritual house on the rock of truth as it exists in Jesus Christ, we too shall be wise, and as such shall be among that group of fortunate ones who shall rule as the stars forever and ever in God’s kingdom. What a glorious future that will be! But such a prospect implies preparation. Are we anxious to gain that gift of God, eternal life, to such a degree that we are willing to devote our time and energy and thought to the service of others now, to the study of God’s Word now, so that the knowledge and love of God and Christ will be first in our plans? Remember Jesus’ own words, “Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness." Not second, but first. If we do not put those things first now, a time will surely come when Jesus will call us before His judgment seat, and when we are weighed in the balance of justice, we shall be found wanting.

Now so far I have been talking about watchfulness in the abstract. Just what can we do to fulfill the requirements of faithful stewardship? Let us see what the Scriptures say. In other words, what are the commandments of Christ? In Luke 12:32-40 we read, "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom. Sell that ye have, and give alms; provide yourselves bags which wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that fail-eth not, where no thief approacheth, neither moth corrupteth. For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also. Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning; and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their lord, when he will return from the wedding; that when he cometh and knocketh, they may open unto him immediately. Blessed are those servants, whom the Lord when he cometh shall find watching."

There is a commandment of Christ which tells us to be Christ to enter this room while we are sitting here? Is there anything that would loom up before your mind as some act which you should not have done? Would you feel that you had done anything worthy of His approval? Have you given the cup of water in His name or spoken the

Sonship and Heirship

By C. E. Randall

PAUL in writing to the Hebrews states that God "hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things." Jesus Christ's heirship came through His sonship. Because He was an obedient Son, He became heir of all things. This heirship was received under the new creation of which He was Head. This headship to the new creation came to Him when He was raised from the dead and became the "firstborn from the dead" (Col. 1:18). He then was the "beginning of the creation of God" (Rev. 3:14). Not the old creation, for Adam was the beginning of that order, but He was the beginning of the new creation under which all the children of God receive their heirship.

Like Christ, we receive our heirship through sonship. "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God: and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ."—Rom. 8:16, 17. Heirship according to Paul is conditioned on sonship. If children, then heirs. All are the offspring of God under the old creation (Acts 17:28, 29). But heirship under the old creation or first dominion was lost through disobedience and we became bondmen, instead of freemen. If we are to become heirs of God, it must be under the new creation.

Now let us notice how the Head of this new creation came into possession of His heirship. Receiving His heirship as Head of the new creation, which He headed after resurrection, it is logical to say that He died to the old creation under which He was born and was made alive by resurrection to the new creation to die no more and became the Author of eternal salvation. He came into this new creation by death and resurrection. He was the firstborn from the dead to immortality.

Now let us notice how the Head of this new creation came through a death state before we can become heirs of God under the new creation. We first become sons of God by sonship based upon faith in Christ Jesus. If our sonship by faith proves true as Jesus' sonship by birth did, then we like Him will become sons of God by resurrection birth to a new creation. It is Christ's death and resurrection that spans the gap between the old creation and the new. The old creation is not acceptable to God. Adam was the firstborn of all, but through disobedience lost his birthright, which was purchased by the second Adam, Jesus Christ. Ishmael was the firstborn of Abraham, but being a child of bondage was set aside and Isaac accepted, for "in Isaac shall thy seed be called." Esau was the firstborn of Isaac, but sold his birthright to Jacob, the younger, for a mess of pottage.

The natural man or firstborn has never been acceptable to God. The old creation is one of bondage. The new creation is one of promise and heritage. Now if we believe that Jesus became Head of this new creation through His death and resurrection, then we will manifest our faith in that operation by being buried by baptism in the likeness of His death (Col. 2:12). Our faith based upon evidence of our work brings us into the death of Christ. "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life."—Rom. 6:3, 4. This makes us a new creature in Christ (Col. 5:17), not by creation, but through faith in His death evidenced by works, for faith without works is dead (James 2:17, 18). Our faith-sonship will end in creation-sonship with full heirship with God and Christ when we are raised in resurrection likeness (Phil. 2:20, 21).—Church of God Messenger.

Church and State

THE church people of the United States will find a good deal of matter for their serious reflection in the ordeal German churches have been and are still enduring under the Nazi dictatorship. Where the State, the Government, has legal relations with the church there cannot be, even under the most favorable conditions, that freedom of conscience and of worship which has been the jealously guarded and great good fortune of the American people under the Constitution. We have seen the British Parliament determining matters of ritual by vote of members of denominations having no part in the communion affected. The days of religious intolerance and persecution have long passed, we assume, in Britain, but as long as the political organization known as government has any authority or responsibility in the affairs of religion there is interference and the ever living seed of persecution.

Where the perils and misfortunes from which no nation is immune bring about autocratic political rule the church will not escape. It is too influential an agency for any dictatorship to ignore. . . .

We do not apologize for repeating these truisms, so often demonstrated in human history, because nothing in the recent history of our own country has been or is more significant than the fact that many of our clergymen and laymen are showing that they have forgotten them. There are groups of ministers and laymen who are determined to make the churches, as churches, formidable agencies in political action. As committees on social welfare they draw up pronouncements on economic and political policies which read like party platforms. In national organizations, such as the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, they lobby in Congress against measures of national defense recommended by men who give their lives to its problems and will be expected to make it effectual in war. Political clericalism has publications edited by ministers and ex-ministers which, purporting to express religious opinion and to speak for church organization, are constantly propagandizing in politics, for or against legislation, like any political lay organ. There is hardly any field of government which, under the American principle of separation of church and State, is assigned to the latter that preacher-politicians and their followers are not invading.

It is significant that this invasion of the political field has a common economic and political intent and philosophy. All its pronouncements derive from socialism and doctrinaire pacifism. It attacks not merely the excesses of the individual under capitalism but the capitalist system. It favors the extension of the control of government over the individual and private enterprise. It favors the growth of bureaucracy through multiplying federal bureaus. It is, in short, a force for the deterioration of American individualist democracy and for the building of an all-powerful central government.

The unconscious irony of this movement is or ought to be obvious. Of course, its leaders expect to find places of power in the omnipotent government they are seeking to substitute for the limited government of the Constitution. But there is no experience to support their hopes and ambitions. As individuals some of them may profit by the change, but the church as an institution will have lost its liberty and the socialist political state will direct if not destroy the church. If the church people of America follow these leaders they will find when their work is done that their religious liberty has gone with other liberties which they now enjoy and which too many of us take for granted as forever secure. Religion cannot be free under a regime which has banished political freedom.

We would warn, therefore, the church people of America that these political preachers who are using their clerical influence to put the churches into politics are preparing the end of religious liberty. Of course this invasion seeks to justify its activity as necessary to make conscience and righteousness prevail in public affairs. The theory is a fallacy. It is cherished by impatient and opinionated theorists who ignore human nature and human experience and expect from their pet measures transformations which cannot be forced by laws and will come only through the enlightenment and inspiration of the human conscience. The vital and essential function of the church is to labor for this enlightenment and this inspiration in its own way, which is the direct way. Its guide is clear and will not betray. But when the ministers of religion enter the field of political government, pass upon political and economic measures, and try to bring the great influence of the church to the aid of their own economic, social, and political doctrines and measures, they are perverting their high office, lowering its prestige, and not, in the long run, increasing its influence and power for righteousness in public action. Politicians, of course, will seek their aid, as is conspicuously illustrated by Mr. Roosevelt's ingratiating invitation on the threshold of his campaign for reelection. But when the churches enter politics they are preparing the suicide of religious freedom in America. Every minister of religion and every church member is a citizen, endowed, so long as the system which the preacher-politicians are trying to undermine endures, with the full rights of American citizenship. But it is as a citizen that he belongs in politics and not as representative of a religious organization seeking to impose its will in the affairs of political government.

It is fortunate for religious freedom and true religious influence that the movement to put the churches into politics, to say nothing of committing them to doctrines and policies which the majority of ministers and laymen do not approve, is being increasingly challenged. But there is still too much reluctance to face the situation and deal with it.—The Chicago Tribune.

“What if They Had Quit?”

“A Dream”

I BEHELD in my dream, and five men—Peter, Andrew, Matthew, John, and Paul—sat on a hillside, looking out over the Sea of Galilee. It was twenty years after the day of Pentecost, and they had met by appointment to talk over a crisis in the lives and programs of three of their number.

The work was going hard with them. Paul had suffered the loss of all things; Peter had left all to follow Christ and was finding it hard to support his family; and Matthew had just had an attractive proposition at a large income to return to his old place in the customs house.

Peter, as usual, opened the discussion. He said, “Simon the tanner has inherited the estate of his brother, who was a fisherman and an old friend of mine in Bethsaida, and he has offered to give me a complete fishing outfit—boats, nets, and tackle—with an established trade in Capernaum. It looks like a providential leading, especially as my wife’s mother has opened a boarding house in Capernaum and it will cost us almost nothing to live with her while we are getting started again. I can make a good living, and a little more, by fishing five days a week, and I will have all my Sundays for evangelistic work in the cities around the lake. I am getting along in years and am afraid I can’t stand the pace at which I have been working. And, too, I need the money.”

Paul said, “Aquila and Priscilla have been greatly prospered in the tentmaking business in Ephesus and have offered me a position at a good salary to open a branch at Philippi, and from there to develop and supervise their interests in the principal cities of Macedonia. I can do this work; it will not be any harder for me than the care of all the churches, and I will have abundant opportunity for Christian work and can lay by a little something for the rainy day which I can see is coming.”

Matthew said, “My story of the life of Christ is having a large sale and is bringing me in enough to pay my expenses, but my business experience tells me that I ought to have a larger margin. Persecution may come and sales would fall off. I have a chance now to take my old position, and I know that I can make enough out of it not only to support myself and family, but to take care of the rest of you if you should get into trouble. And then, too, I will have more leisure for writing and can probably help the cause more in this way than by traveling about the country.”

Andrew said, “Peter, do you remember the day when you thought that you had lost your wife’s mother? Do you see that sand beach over there? That is where we beached our boat after the miraculous haul of fish, and where we quit the fishing business, and where the Master said, ‘Fear not, from henceforth thou shalt catch men.’ How long a time is ‘henceforth’? Do you see that hillside over there?

That is where the Master fed the five thousand, and I can see the very spot where the lad stood when I asked him to give up his lunch for the Lord to multiply. Don’t you remember the look of compassion and longing on the Master’s face when He looked out over the multitude and asked us to pray that laborers might be thrust into His harvest? If we are going to continue to pray that other men may rise up, leave all, and follow Him, can we do less?”

John, who was leaning against Peter, felt a big tear fall on his hand, and, looking over to Paul, he saw his jaw set, the old fire come back into his eye and the old war-horse look into his face, and he quietly said, “Men, I don’t think we need to talk about this any more; let us pray.” And as they prayed, the things of time and sense receded; a light breeze rustled in the near by treetop, reminding them of that “rushing mighty wind” of the day of Pentecost, and of the marvelous power with which Peter had preached the gospel on that day; they seemed also to see the Master Himself standing on the shore, just a few rods away, and to hear Him saying to them, “Launch out into the deep and let down your nets for a draught,” and, “Fear not, from henceforth thou shalt catch men.”

They looked, and the evening caravan for Tyre was just swinging into sight. “Good-bye,” said Paul. “I must catch the next boat for Ephesus, and I will get Aquila to put up the money for a campaign in that old city that will shake the whole of Asia.”

“Good-bye,” said Peter. “Andrew and I will just say good-bye to the folks and we will have time to join the midnight caravan for Babylon and may keep on east as far as the land of Sinim.”

“Good-bye,” said Matthew. “There is a group of publicans down in Jerusalem who were going in with me on this tax-gathering proposition, but I will get them to join me in financing a five years’ campaign in Egypt and up the Nile as far as Ethiopia. I have heard from the Ethiopian treasurer that practically the whole country is open to us, and he believes that all Ethiopia will soon stretch out its hands unto God.”

“Good-bye,” said John, and he sat there alone till the stars came out, and the waves on the beach, impelled by the rising wind, sounded like the voice of many waters, and he said to Him that stood by, “Lord, do not charge this thing against them. I have felt that way myself at times, as Thou knowest, and I would have left this work but for the fact that Thou didst prevent and strengthen me. They, too, are ready to live and to die for Thee, as I am.

“I thank Thee for Andrew, for his deep life and steady faith. If it please Thee, let him stay and work with Peter, and then the one who can chase a thousand shall put ten thousand to flight.

"And now, Lord, let us see Thee ever before us, ever hear Thy voice, and walk and work with Thee, and we will not fear what men can do unto us."

A sudden storm broke over the lake, and I awoke, and as I thought upon the dream I heard the voice of a modern John calling to me out of his rich experience:

"Go, labor on, spend and be spent,
Thy joy to do the Father's will;
It is the way the Master went,
Should not the servant tread it still?"

word of comfort when you could, or refrained from doing or saying that which would work ill to one's neighbor?

Let us consider a few more of the commandments. First we are to love the Lord our God with all our heart and soul and strength and mind (Matt. 22:37). What an all-inclusive thought that is, and what far-reaching result its universal application would bring about. Pray to God always, and faint not. Such is the theme of one of Jesus' parables (Luke 18:1). "Have faith in God."—Mark 11:22. Cast your care upon Him. Trust in the Lord and do good (Psalm 37:3). "Therefore I say unto you, Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment? Behold the fowls of the air: for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they?"—Matt. 6:25, 26. God knows our needs, and if we trust in Him and are striving to attain righteousness, He will provide. David says in the 37th Psalm, "I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread."—Verse 25. And David also gives one of the main characteristics of such an individual: "The law of his God is in his heart." Is God's law in our hearts continually so that it becomes a daily guide to our thoughts and actions? Again, David reminds us that the "law of the Lord is perfect, converting (or restoring) the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple" (Psalm 19:7).

In Matthew 6:24 we read Christ's own words, "No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon." We must recognize this fact, recognize that a house divided against itself cannot stand. We must choose the world or choose God, and when the choice is made, give service to that choice without reserve. God gave His only begotten Son as a propitiation for sins; Christ gave His all for His friends. Are we worthy of a place in the kingdom when He comes, unless we are willing to give our all to Him now?

In Ephesians 5:20 Paul exhorts the brethren to give "thanks always for all things unto God and the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ." In Colossians 3:15, 16 he says, "And let the peace of God rule in your hearts, to the which also ye are called in one body; and be ye thankful. Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord." In 1 Thessalonians 5:18 he writes, "In every thing give thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ concerning you . . . Abstain from all appearance of evil." God is pleased with us when we are thankful for His blessings, and when we manifest that thankfulness by an active willingness to learn and to keep His commandments.—Frank Henderson in The Faith.

HINTS AND HELPS TO TEACHERS

are trying to pump water out of a dry well. It thus becomes the "pump" method. The question and answer is legitimately used to force the student to reconsider his point of view. One lecturer whom I heard recently put it this way: If Johnny, during vacation, puts a stone through the window of the schoolhouse that is because his point of view is wrong. He looks upon the school as his enemy. How are you going about changing that point of view: by punishment? That will only make him more vengeful. A few judicious questions will get him to see that he must reorganize his point of view. Be friendly in your teaching. Questions and answers are often ridiculous because they have not definite aim. Force the one questioned into a defense of his point of view and he will then revise it oftentimes. He must needs reexamine his point of view to defend it, or else cast it aside. A reexamination is most desirable even if no alterations are made in convictions.

Outline of an hour's period:

Rapid review of the lesson assigned, either oral or written if your group is suitable	10 min.
Assignment of the next lesson	20 min.
Explanations of the lesson assigned	30 min.

This outline is ideal. You will seldom if ever follow it, but have it in mind as an ideal. It does not fit in so well as other types of lessons in a religious group. But it will, if modified, fit in. The review of the previously assigned lesson should work so well into the assignment of the next lesson that a definite break will not be evident in the teaching.

Relate facts to one another. Otherwise they are just dead facts. It is a fact that Abraham was born. But how important a part did it play in the Bible history? The day on which he achieved faith in God that could light the centuries is more important than the day of his birth. Only in the case of such individuals as Jesus is the every little event in life filled with significance. Fill your mind full of illustrative material in the form of historical parallelisms, anecdotes, comparisons, similitudes, and the like. They always add zest to an otherwise dead class.

"The preacher of this church is working under a commission from the Most High God and not from man. Under this commission he is an ambassador, not a diplomat; an evangelist, not an entertainer; a deliverer, not a quiverer. His supreme business is to preach revelation, not revelation; redemption, not reformation; regeneration, not renovation; resurrection, not resuscitation; Christ, not culture; conversion, not civilization; theocracy, not democracy; salvation through the new birth, not through better birth; sanctification through Spirit, not through merit; the coming kingdom of God, not the coming kingdom of man. By the grace of God, we propose to stick to our commission."—Recopied from The King's Business.

A PROGRAM FOR SERVICE

"... The ideal Christian worker will be one with a positive message. Why should you preach if you have no authoritative word? What right have you to stand behind the sacred desk in a building that has been built by the sacrifices and tears and prayers of people who believe in God, who believe in His Word, if you do not have a message from that Word to deliver? Man is by nature and practice a sinner. . . . Do not forget, young people, as you go out to preach, that men and women are lost. Do not forget that men and women need Christ, and that He is the only answer, the only panacea, the only cure for the problems of the human heart."—*Dr. Paul W. REPORT OF 1935 MINISTERIAL CONFERENCE

At 8:30 the meeting was thrown open to discussion of the paper which President Randall had presented on Tuesday and of which copies had been prepared and given to each minister. Facing frankly our weaknesses and needs helps us many times to get started in the proper way to make improvements. The text of Bro. Randall's paper appears in THE RESTITUTION HERALD of September 17, 1935.

At the Thursday afternoon session a motion was passed "that a committee be appointed to draw up a resolution to be presented to the General Conference recommending the issuance of certificates to qualified ministers by that body." The committee consisted of L. E. Conner, Paul C. Johnson, and M. W. Lyon. The remainder of this session was utilized by various questions and answers on matters of interest to the different workers.

The first matter taken up on Friday morning was the death of Sr. M. A. Woodward the previous night. It was unanimously agreed to send a floral offering from the Ministerial Association, and Bros. Conner and Patrick were appointed to draw up a resolution of condolence to send to the family and to publish same in THE RESTITUTION HERALD.

Next on the program came the subject of "Ministerial Strategy" or "Diplomacy" presented by L. E. Conner. This subject was well presented by one whose experience shows him to understand his subject.

At the afternoon session the committee on uniform messages for the year reported that they could make no recommendations. The committee on church finance then presented the following report:

"To the Ministerial Association:

"We, your committee on finance, recommend that our ministers and church leaders shall teach their congregations and converts that all our possessions belong to God and that one tenth of a Christian's income should be turned into religious work as the part required of God, and that gifts should be made from the other nine tenths.

"We further recommend that this teaching shall be done by printed literature as much as possible.

"(Signed) James A. Patriek

"V. Earl Thayer

"F. E. Siple."

The meeting was then opened to a discussion of ministerial diplomacy, Bro. Conner answering many questions.

On Saturday morning, August 3, the president, with others, being absent to attend Sr. Woodward's funeral in Chicago, the meeting was called to order by the secretary. Further discussion of ministerial diplomacy occupied the session.

Monday, August 5, the chairman called the meeting at 8 a. m. A paper by F. E. Siple on Sunday school was presented and many questions and much discussion followed.

The first subject for consideration on Tuesday was the problem of divorce and remarriage. The fact that unscriptural attitude toward this matter is bringing serious injury to the church was plainly brought out.

Election of officers followed at 8:30 and resulted as follows: president, C. E. Randall, Fonthill, Ontario; vice president, Paul C. Johnson, Oregon, Illinois; secretary-treasurer, F. E. Siple, 135 Pennell Road, S. E., Grand Rapids, Michigan.

In order to meet expenses of postage, paper, mimeographing, etc., throughout the year dues of 50 cents per member were decided upon, urging any who could to contribute more. This money should be mailed to the secretary-treasurer, whose address is given above.

On Wednesday, August 7, the president, after opening the meeting, gave the floor to Bro. S. E. Magaw, who presented his subject of "Dealing With Young People." Bro. Magaw has done some very admirable work with young people, and gave valuable pointers upon this important subject.

The secretary had to return home on Thursday, missing the last three sessions.

Nineteen ministers were present at these gatherings, and all felt greatly benefited by the opportunity of thus conferring together. The ministers present were: C. E. Lapp; Gerald Cooper; Harry Goekler; G. E. Marsh; Paul C. Johnson; Harvey Krogh, Jr.; L. E. Conner; Arlen Marsh; Paul Hatch; Earl Thayer; F. E. Siple; F. L. Austin; C. A. Smead; M. W. Lyon; James A. Patrick; S. E. Magaw; C. E. Randall; Lucille Le Crone; S. J. Lindsay.

The following report is taken from the minutes submitted to the secretary by V. Earl Thayer, who was appointed secretary pro tem. for the three closing sessions.

On Thursday, August 8, sixteen members gathered to confer.

Bro. C. E. Lapp presented the report of the committee on "Evangelism" or field work. Discussion of the opportunities in the evangelistic field followed. Bros. Patrick, Smead, Krogh, and Conner particularly participated in this discussion. President Randall then commented on the remarks and the meeting was adjourned.

At the Friday session Bro. Austin expressed deepest and sincerest thanks to the Ministerial Association for their interest and appreciation of Sr. Woodward. Bro. Austin then expressed regrets that ministers think they should stay in a pastorate where some are opposed to their being retained. Open discussion followed, in which the different matters to be considered in such situations were pointed out and considered.

Bro. Lyon then presented report from committee on ministerial recognition. The committee recommended that the General Conference continue its past policy of not issuing ministerial certificates. After much deliberation and discussion the following resolution was adopted:

"For the purpose of protecting the standards of our ministry and promoting uniformity and good order among our churches, we, the ministers of the Church of God in conference assembled, do hereby recommend to our churches and state conferences everywhere that the following qualifications be required of everyone who henceforth shall be granted a ministerial certificate:

"1. That his faith and teaching be in accord with the commonly recognized doctrines of the Church of God, as set forth in the working rules of the General Conference.

"2. That he be known as a faithful and consistent Christian.

"3. That he shall have been actively engaged in pastoral or evangelistic work for at least one year.

"4. That he bear the approval and recommendation of some organized church."

It was also moved and carried that this resolution be presented to the General Conference in business session.

The closing session of the ministers' series of gatherings was held on Saturday, August 10. Some workers representing the Advent Christian denomination were present. Ways in which their people and ours might be able to be of mutual helpfulness were discussed at much length. A motion was passed that a kindlier feeling of cooperation and fellowship be engendered among the brethren, especially in regard to Golden Rule Home and Aurora College being recommended as desirable institutions for members of both organizations who wish to avail themselves of the privileges of these institutions.

Elder Hewitt of Aurora extended an invitation to the ministry of the Church of God to attend the ministerial conference of the Advent Christian ministers to be held at Aurora this coming midwinter. A motion was passed to accept this invitation and urge all our ministers to attend who can so arrange.

Bro. Patrick reported for the committee on a resolution of condolence to the family of Sr. Woodward. The resolution was approved.

Bro. Conner moved that Bros. Austin and Marsh act as a committee to attend the Advent Christian ministerial conference. Seconded by Harvey Krogh and carried.

The committee on courses of study, consisting of Arlen Marsh, M. W. Lyon, and F. E. Siple, then reported. After some discussion and amending, a resolution on outlining specific courses of study was adopted.

Motion was then passed that the resolution for closer association as regarding Aurora College and Golden Rule Home be presented to the General Conference by its president, L. E. Conner.

Thus came to a close the most interesting and most profitable series of gatherings ever held by the present generation of our ministers, and all felt inspired to go forward into a year of service, hoping to meet together again next August.

F. E. Siple, Secretary.

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

If we always paid our debts to God first, our other debts would not be so hard to pay and many of us would have no other debts.—Harvey Krogh, Jr.

The Decimation Starts

To the tune of bugles blown in Addis Ababa (pronounced, if one is careful to be correct, Ab-dis Ab-wa-wa, with the accent on each first syllable) calling the modern sons of an ancient empire to the defense of their colors, Haile Selassie, Lion of Judah, has issued his general mobilization decree, covering men, women, and children throughout his entire kingdom.

Italy has plunged to the attack. With a fanfare of diplomatic lies and evasions, Mussolini's army has bombed defenseless Ethiopian villages and spread terror through regions untouched by national fear for twenty centuries. Long-range guns have hammered on the huts of villages close to the Eritrean frontier, have ripped huge chunks of drying mud from the world's oldest unconquered soil, and have wasted their shells on untenanted wilderness.

Unconfirmed reports from Addis Ababa, issued by the Emperor himself, record the initiating of the courageous Italian campaign by the bombing of a Red Cross hospital in an Ethiopian border town. Confirmed reports indicate that the first day's air raid on two villages left 1,700 men, women, and children dead or injured in the streets.

Europe teeters on the edge of a cataclysm more horrible than anything the world has ever known. Britain and France, solidly aligned, threaten immediate sanctions against Italy for Il Duce's dreams of empire. And sanctions, economic or military, is Mussolini's fiat, mean war.

The tale of Mussolini and his Ethiopian aspirations, however, is not ended with the possibility of the conquest, for the first time in history, of the oldest kingdom in the world. For Japan, as Boake Carter, wise commentator of the Philco hour on the air, observes, sits calmly by and laughs to see the Indo-European races hastening their own destruction. Let Europe embroil itself in war; let England, France, and Russia hurl their armies against Italy; let Australia, Canada, and New Zealand prepare themselves for battle; let even the United States stick its finger in the pie—and still Japan would laugh, and surreptitiously prepare; for the Mongolian hope of domination of the world would be that much nearer its fulfillment.

Now is the time for the true pacifist to face the facts. Theories are very good as theories, but the practice often fails. While Mars rides the winds, the Christian who has conscientious scruples about going to war must endure not merely ribald criticism, but possible active persecution.

The President, inspired by political desires, has assured the public in his Los Angeles address that the United States will not become embroiled in any African or European trouble. With Lowell Thomas, however, we wonder how long a time will pass before pressure from the commercial and industrial centers will force a change of attitude on the part of the Administration. We had assurances from Wilson; and assurances can be forgotten now as readily as yesterday.

There is, consequently, a vital problem facing the Christian church today. It will be interesting to learn how quickly its position in regard to pacifism will change. At present, it is committed to a policy both of non-aggression and of non-defense—but no sooner had war been declared by Congress in 1917 than the church's pulpits were filled with men who demanded that their congregations volunteer for service.

Another facet presents itself, moreover, in regard to the present situation. The outcome cannot, of course, be foretold with certainty. Results of wars extend not over years, but decades and, ultimately, centuries; and should Britain decide the Italian threat in Ethiopia would, as many statesmen say, spell the disintegration of her empire, Europe would become a holocaust. National and racial bankruptcy would follow as an inevitable consequence, and civilization itself would totter and, perhaps, collapse. On the other hand, if the British should prefer keeping to themselves after the usual display of naval force, the eventual results would take entirely different form.

One thing, at least, is certain. The Italian invasion of Ethiopia has a strong prophetic significance. Somehow it has an important place in the eternal plans of God. However one may interpret the references to Armageddon, to Libya, to Egypt, to Ethiopia, to the Power of the North, the fact is obvious that an important link in the chain of God's purposes is being forged today.

In any event, the parade has started. Il Duce's noble son-in-law has started it by leading a fleet of planes to the bombardment of two hitherto unknown villages in a hitherto unknown part of the Dark Continent. Where Menelik, predecessor of Haile Selassie, once annihilated fifty thousand Italian troops, Mussolini today is hurling the might of his army against a foe that not even Caesar Augustus could conquer. Whatever the future may reveal, whatever upheavals in the economics of the world may occur, whatever military measures may be sought, he is wise who watches the march of events with a never-dimming interest. The hour which Bible students have long awaited is approaching, the hour for the return of Jesus Christ; and he is a poor Christian who does not prepare for its inception.

"Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper . . . and this is his name whereby he shall be called, The Lord Our Righteousness."

JEREMIAH SPEAKS GOD'S WORDS

HOW many of you have ever carried a message to another for some one? Perhaps it was a written message, a note you must deliver. Perhaps it was a spoken message. It's nice to carry a happy message, isn't it? We all love to spread happiness.

But we cannot always carry messages that will bring joy. And we dread to be the one to take sad news to another. Perhaps we say, "Let some one else do it. I can't bear to."

Do you know, Jeremiah had to carry sad news? The One he was working for told him some very bad things were coming on the people of Judah. He must warn them so they could escape if they believed that he spoke the truth.

I don't imagine Jeremiah enjoyed telling all this sad news, do you? That's why he was called "The Weeping Prophet." But he kept right on because God had asked him to, and he determined to be true to God.

We learned last week of some of the awful things that happened to Jeremiah. The people were furious because he told them they would all lose their homes and be taken captive. They put him in stocks; they put him in prison; they put him in a dungeon.

Jeremiah's task was a hard one. One day God told him to stand in the gate of the temple and watch when the people went in to worship. He was to tell them that if they didn't leave their wicked ways and return to God, their temple would be destroyed.

Oh, yes, they worshiped; that is, they went through the form of it. But all of the time their hearts were on their idols, on their wicked ways. You can't worship God in truth with your mind filled with evil. We all know that.

Some of them laughed. Their beautiful temple couldn't be destroyed. Some grew angry. They said Jeremiah should be shut up so he couldn't say such things. They didn't like to be reminded of their sins, you see.

And now we must find out how Jeremiah got out of that dungeon. Look in chapter 38, verses 6-13. It must have been deep, and down in the bottom was nothing but darkness and deep mire. Jeremiah sank into the mire and was left there in that dreadful place.

Alone? Oh, no, not alone. God was with him, watching over him, even if Jeremiah couldn't see Him. And God put it in the heart of a servant in the king's household to rescue him. He told the king that Jeremiah was "like to die," and they ought to get him out at once.

Look in verse 10, and see how many men it took to get Jeremiah out. Why do you suppose it took so many? Now read verse 12, and see how they drew him out.

They had to be very, very careful or else they might have injured Jeremiah so that he would die. The old rags were to keep the rope from bruising his arms, you know.

The message Jeremiah had to carry was not all sad, however. The verse at the top of the page gives a hint of joy for the people of Judah. And I'm sure all of you can tell me who this King is and whether He has already reigned over them.

God is going to forgive them for worshiping idols, for they will turn back to Him. Then they will live in their homeland again and be happy and prosperous because they will be true to God.

FOR YOUR BIBLE SCRAPBOOK

Proceed as in lesson 2, writing the date, the subject, and the verse at the top. Younger children need only write, "A King Shall Reign," instead of the long verse. Then tell about the message Jeremiah had to carry, tell about its sad part and its happy part. Tell how Jeremiah never stopped speaking God's words no matter how much he had to suffer.

Look in chapter 40, verses 4-6, and see what happened to Jeremiah at the end, when the enemy had gone through the land and taken all they wanted. God didn't forget His faithful worker, did He? Put this in your story in your own words. Get all the help you need, but do as much of it yourself as you can.

Now draw a picture of an open Bible. On one side print, "Read"; on the other, "Obey." Underneath write, "Thy word is a lamp to my feet, and a light to my path."

Next draw a picture of a city with the houses all torn down or burned, with no people in it, and the temple in ruins. Next draw one with a beautiful temple and nice homes. Cut out little figures of people from a catalog and paste them going into the temple. Add anything else you think of to beautify your picture.

LESSON 3. — October 20, 1935

THE MESSAGE OF JEREMIAH

Jeremiah 7:1-26

Devotional Reading: Psalm 96:7-13

GOLDEN TEXT

"Obey my voice, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people."—Jer. 7:23.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: The Message of Jeremiah.

Aim: "To obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams."—1 Sam. 15:22.

Class Discussion: What is the value of religious forms like baptism and the Lord's Supper? Why is disobedience of railroad operators dangerous? Is not disobedience to God equally so?

I. Jeremiah Calls to Repentance. (Jer. 7:1-3.) By constant association with it men may become unconscious of the evil that prevails around them, but God always sees and eventually will call the nation to account for its iniquity. The nation is composed of individual citizens and each of those citizens must be held personally to account for the moral condition of the country of which he is a part. That is, to the full extent of his own influence and power the state of the nation depends upon the individual. This is especially true in a republic, where "every man is a king." Jeremiah did not call upon the nation as a whole to repent, but each man and woman in Judah was asked to thoroughly amend his or her ways.

I. Jeremiah Makes Conditional Promises. (Vv. 4-11.) As is always the case, the denunciations which God directed against the people for their sins, were accompanied with gracious promises of forgiveness and blessing. These promises, however, were made conditionally. "If ye thoroughly amend your ways and your doings," God said, He would cause them to dwell safely in the land He had given to their fathers. If they failed to repent, the promise would not be kept.

III. Jeremiah Places Obedience Above All Else. (Vv. 21-23.) Strict and unquestioning obedience to God is the fruitage of implicit faith in Him. Both faith and obedience are demanded of those who would serve Him because God has a great and comprehensive plan to carry out, and to accomplish His purpose every worker must do the work assigned to him in the way God wants it done, or else confusion and failure would result. It is for man's good and God's glory that men should obey God in all things. The splendor of the new heavens and new earth state will result from the fact that all things will be maintained in harmony with God's will.

GOLDEN TEXT

God has always wanted His people to obey Him and do the things that He commanded. Many generations before Jeremiah's time, God through Moses pleaded with His people to obey Him. A reward was always promised if they would obey. In Exodus 19:5 the Israelites were promised to be a peculiar treasure above all people. Did they appreciate that promise and stay close to the Father? They did not.

Again He pleads through Jeremiah to this same people, only several generations younger. Neither do they hearken now, but do as they like and are cast off. The call still comes to obey the voice of the Lord and do His will that we may call Him Father and be His children. Those who hearken and obey are the favored ones.—L. A. R.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Jeremiah's Message

- was a condemnation of Judah's sins;
- was not inferential, but direct;
- was for the people and time in which he preached;
- appealed to Judah to repent;
- was not hearkened to by the people.

A Needed Message. The message of Jeremiah was a direct hit at the sins of Judah. They were in a serious condition. A radical change needed to be brought about, else the favor of God would be withdrawn, and when this happens to a people calamity automatically follows. The terribleness of their sins was plainly pointed out and the dire consequences that were sure to follow if they continued living in an unrepentant way were vividly described. Full responsibility was placed where it rightfully belonged, on the doers of the sins. They would not receive correction, and truth had perished out of their mind. The following history of this people plainly confirms the predictions of the Prophet. What the world needs today is a message that will point the error of their way. Human nature is quite largely the same today as in Jeremiah's time and in all probability the response of the people would be similar, "This is a nation that obeyeth not the voice of the Lord their God."

Deliverance or Bondage. In substance, the decision of the people would determine which it would be. If they decided to obey the voice of God—deliverance. If, on the contrary, they decided to disobey the voice of God—bondage. Giving and withholding of blessings, to a large extent, has been governed by man's attitude toward the Father (Matt. 6:33). That the present chaotic condition is entirely due to man's disobedience of the Word of God is almost unquestioned. The depressing and apostate elements in the modern church can be traced to the same cause. Man cannot live by bread alone, but by "every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Improvement can only come through repentance and giving heed to the Word of God.—C. E. R.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

Doing What God Commands

The people of Judah from all parts of the little kingdom were hastening to the temple in Jerusalem to offer sacrifices to God, to appease

Him, as they thought, because of their great sin of idolatry and because they knew punishment was coming upon them at the hands of their enemies. Jeremiah's duty, given him by God, was to stand in the gate and tell the people that what God wanted was their lives and their hearts in worship, not their sacrifices. They had hoped to buy God's favor when they were suddenly faced with danger. They hurried to the temple and went through a form of worship on certain feast days and on every other day broke all of God's commandments. Name the commandments referred to in verse 9. Do we ever hear of anyone today calling on God in time of danger who otherwise does not honor Him? Why is that not treating God fairly?

The capital of the little kingdom of Judah had been safe from invasion at the hands of its enemies, the mighty kingdoms of Egypt and Assyria, until Jeremiah's day. How do you account for that fact? What position, geographically, does Palestine occupy with reference to the above mentioned territories? Every great empire of the past that has gone down in ruin, regardless of its glory, has done so because God's laws have not been obeyed. Does the same general rule apply to individuals?

Remember: Before telling others of their shortcomings one's own life must be free from blame.—M. G.

JUNIOR CLASS

Text: Jer. 7:1-11, 21-23. Topic: Jeremiah Delivers God's Message. Memory Verse: "Obey my voice, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people: and walk ye in all the ways that I have commanded you, that it may be well unto you."—Jer. 7:23.

Review. Tell how God called Jeremiah and about the message he carried to the people. How did they accept his message?

Presentation of Lesson. Jeremiah is speaking to the people as they come to worship in God's house. His message is one of promise to the people. What does God ask the people to do first, and what promise does He make to them (v. 3)? In verses 5 and 6 what does He ask of them? Then in verse 7 what promise is repeated? In verses 8-11 what wickedness does He ask them to cease doing? If God had made such promises to you, what would you have said? Has God made any promises to you? Read Matt. 5:5, 8; John 3:16; 1 John 3:2.

Memory Verse. In our memory verse we find what God asked the people to do, and then what He promised them. Learn verse.

Notebook. Divide your page into four parts. In the first column write what God asked the people of Judah to do. In the second column write what He promised them. In the third column write what God asks us to do. In the last one write what God promises us.—V. C. T.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

A GROWING NECESSITY

The advertisement that has been carried for the past three issues on the back page is not a joke. It is not intended for an essay. It is an appeal for funds that are sorely needed.

The National Bible Institution each week provides a 16-page paper, each quarter a 64-page Sunday school quarterly. It carries constantly on hand a large stock of tracts and books. None of these are published at a profit, but all of them are published at a considerable loss.

Now, in addition to these services, the Institution undertakes to do evangelism. For this and for its current expenses it needs funds. An income of $85.00 a day barely covers operating expenses, exclusive of interest and tax charges, paper bills, and other periodical bills.

The advertisement on the back page is directed to you and you and you. We ask that you read it carefully, then act on its suggestion. A paper bill of $130 for The Restitution Herald and the quarterly will soon be due; to meet it, we must build up a good cash reserve. We need your help, not only a year in the future, but right now. You have aided us in the past with the highest type of cooperation; we seek the same thing now.

CONFERENCE AND LOCAL SECRETARIES

The secretaries of state conferences are requested to submit lists of the ministers and evangelists whom they recognize as in good standing in their several states. Please give name and exact address in each instance.

Local congregations which are not affiliated with any state conference are also asked to send in the name and address of their pastor, and the names and addresses of any other ministers of the Church of God, retired or active, who are located in their communities and who are recognized as being in good standing among them.

The official list will be published early in November, so please get your lists in as early as possible.

G. E. Marsh, General Secretary.

NORTHWEST CONFERENCE

"It will be six months September 1 since I left Los Angeles to begin work for the Northwest Conference. The work has been very pleasant. Since the annual conference in June I have visited approximately 50 homes, have traveled 2,200 miles, given approximately 35 lessons and sermons, performed 5 baptisms, conducted 1 funeral, sent The Restitution Herald into 12 homes, established a Berean Bible study class at Felida. I have kept no record of correspondence but have written many letters and cards to which the response has been very gratifying. Emma C. Railsback."

We cannot begin to tell of the benefits of the evangelistic work carried on by Sr. Railsback. The number of miles traveled does not tell of the almost impassable roads, the stormy weather, and long, strenuous trips (not that Oregon does not have a wonderful climate and sunshine most of the year).

We hope, with the support of every member of the churches in Oregon and Washington, to have the best annual conference and Bible school ever held in the Northwest at Corvallis next summer.

Gladys Barber, Secretary.

RALLY DAY AT ROCKFORD

Rally Day at Rockford, Ill., will be held on Sunday, Oct. 13.

Sunday school will open at 9:45 in the usual meeting place, the W. C. T. U. Hall on N. Main St. A preaching service, L. E. Conner, speaker, will follow at 11:00, and Communion will be observed at noon. A second sermon will be delivered at 7:30 in the evening.

Everyone is welcomed.

BURR OAK, INDIANA

Our Bible school under its superintendent, Bro. Ferris Zechiel, is holding the fort. The attendance keeps well above a year ago.

The Morning Star Class, whose teacher is Sr. Mary Hatten, had their class meeting September 20, with election of officers. Dale Davis was elected class president.

The Gospel Seekers' Class enjoyed their meeting at the home of the Weavers. This gathering was a watermelon party by the moonlight.

Sr. Zechiel is busy as can be with the little tots getting them ready for their promotion.

Three quilts are in the hands of the ladies' society to be quilted. With their hands they are laboring to help in the Lord's work.

Sr. Herman Young is back in her class, and we are glad, as she had a siege of throat difficulty. Sr. Wilma Osborn is convalescing rapidly. Allen Weaver had a mishap while playing ball, injuring his shoulder, but is back at school again.

With ups and downs, pestilences, sorrows, "we remain steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord."

A. E. Hoskins, Pastor.

PENNELWOOD CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

The Pennellwood Church opened the doors of the new location, 28 Allen Road, S. W., for services on September 1.

The Sunday school attendance, like many others throughout the country, is increasing as the vacation season draws to a close.

A Berean society has been organized under the leadership of Sr. Ada Simpson. Much interest is shown in this new department.

Our pastor, Bro. F. L. Austin, may be addressed or called at 131 Rose St., S. W. Phone 51051.

Richard Townsend, although still wearing his plaster collar, was very glad to be able to start his senior year at Godwin High, with his class.

Lois Jean is the name of the new daughter who arrived on September 18 at the home of Bro. and Sr. Harvey Hotchkiss.

Mrs. L. F. Slocum, Secretary.

MARSHALL, ILLINOIS

The work is progressing nicely here, with good interest and attendance being manifested at all services.

We are planning Rally Day for next Sunday, Oct. 13, and invite everyone within driving distance to come and spend the day with us. There will be Sunday school and preaching services in the morning, followed by a basket dinner at noon. A good program is being arranged for the afternoon service, and a sermon in the evening will conclude the day's activities.

Harry Goekler, Pastor.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

The Sunday school superintendent of Golden Rule Church of God, Cleveland, Ohio, Bro. W. J. Halls, recently made the following appeal to his teachers: "May we as teachers plan our lessons so that they may be more effective and constructive in shaping and influencing the lives of those we teach." That is a target at which any Sunday school teacher would do well to aim.

The following note from Bro. S. J. Lindsay will indicate the warm reception he received on his arrival in Tempe, Ariz., last Wednesday morning. "Arrived here yesterday on time, only to find it 95 in the shade. They told us we were not obliged to hunt the shade unless we cared to. We cared to!" Bro. Lindsay has promised us a series of articles on the covenants for publication in The Herald in the near future. The articles will follow the general outline he observed in his Bible school lessons this summer. Watch for them.

The Saturday Evening Post, observes Writer's Review, costs 22 cents a copy to produce, yet sells for only a nickel. But the magazine makes a large profit each year—from its advertising. Little wonder, then, that The Herald, which carries almost no advertising, must constantly appeal for funds to give it longer life.

Sunday evening services have been resumed at the Golden Rule Church in Cleveland, Ohio, after the summer vacation period, and a full program is again in full swing under the leadership of Pastor M. W. Lyon.

Several pastors and evangelists have signified their readiness to assist local congregations or isolated communities in putting on special campaigns this fall and winter. Write us concerning your plans and we will be glad to put you in touch with the men whom you can secure for such services the most advantageously to all concerned.

Last Saturday Sr. Harriet Smith, daughter of Sr. Anna Smith of Forreston, Ill., became the bride of Mr. Paul Opal. They were married in Detroit, Mich., where they will make their home.

Rally Day and Homecoming Sunday was observed at Oregon, Ill., last Sunday. Among those present from a distance were Bros. Edward and Frank Moran and the latter's wife, Sr. Moran, of Clinton, Iowa. The Rockford, Ill., church was well represented in the afternoon and evening. Sr. Martha Walls of that city, just recovered from prolonged and serious illness, was able to accompany the Rockford party.

NINE BAPTISMS IN TEXAS

A letter from Owen Jones, Driggs, Ark., records his baptism of five men and four women, all of Commerce, Texas, after a series of meetings in East Texas during September.

The newly baptized are: James Click, Hubert Pope, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Clayton, Mr. and Mrs. William Smith, Mrs. Arra Nourland, and Mr. and Mrs. Sam Scally.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

The choir presented its first anthem of the season on September 29, and is getting off to a good start in its work.

The men have been busy with the work in connection with moving and arranging the new kitchen, also in enlarging the classroom used by the young people's Berean class. This class has completely outgrown its former room.

All eyes are focused upon our special meetings, October 13-26. We eagerly await Bro. Patrick's arrival, and the spiritual inspiration of this opportunity of working together.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

CALIFORNIA OPINION

Ever since I received the Analytical Bible, I have been wanting to tell you how much I am enjoying it and what a wonderful Bible it is; and I cannot see how those men ever wrote all those chapters and history of the various events and people without learning the real truth. Do you happen to know if such is the case? Those who have read it wonder how they ever got along without it in the past. You should have a great many orders, and I hope the churches will take it up and try and have the brethren order them for their daily reading.

It was such a pleasure attending the conference at Corvallis, Ore., meeting the brethren in the North country.

We are planning our quarterly conference for October 6, and hope for a goodly number.

It frightens me to read, "Our church is dying of dry rot," which proves there is a falling away right in the household. Bro. Anderson used to call the ones who failed to do their part and be interested in the church as a whole "dead branches." We know the meaning of "dead," so there isn't any life in such members, and if very many are like that soon the church is dead.

Why cannot we convert our pocketbooks and trust the Lord to take care of us? The Lord is coming some of these days, and some of us will be out of oil; so I am hoping Bro. Randall's article will make us realize the danger that is creeping into our churches. The Advent Christian Church here in Riverside (Calif.) have around a thousand members, and they are all tithing, and that is one of the reasons they do such a fine piece of work. We need more such articles, and I hope all you writers will keep the paper full of warnings.

Do you not think it is the place of the minister to influence the flock to plan to do all in their power to help in the evangelistic work and lay aside a little besides the regular church budget? If everyone would do this, what a lot of good could be accomplished. It is the widow's mite that masters the heart, and you know we give in most cases in proportion to the love we have in our hearts for the Lord and His work.

TITHING BULLETINS OFFERED AT A SAVING

At least $5 a week can be saved by any church that customarily uses a four-page bulletin each week. The Layman Company, 730 Rush St., Chicago, offers this saving when using their four-page bulletin. Two pages are printed with a stewardship message, and two pages are left blank for local announcements. The company suggests that churches conduct a five weeks' or ten weeks' course of tithe education by using its bulletins, which are offered at a nominal sum. It offers a sample set containing 32 different tithing tracts at 20 cents. Please mention The Restitution Herald; also give your denomination.

Perhaps You Have Wanted to Help— Now Your Opportunity Is Here

This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come.

By order of the General Conference, an evangelistic fund to provide for carrying the gospel to new and isolated localities under the auspices of the National Bible Institution has been established. It was, however, understood by the Conference that no contributions to this fund were to be taken as replacing those made to the running expenses of the Institution, but were to be an addition to the usual donations to the general cause of the church.

Here is the opportunity for which many have been waiting, an opportunity to help in telling the world about the coming kingdom and all it represents. Work will be started as soon as a sufficient fund is in reserve to cover operating costs. It is your chance, and it is your responsibility.

Remember, however, that the National Bible Institution needs funds for its present work. To carry on the paper, the Sunday school quarterly, and tract publication requires money. Send a donation toward current expenses at the same time you contribute to the evangelistic campaign. The paper reaches five thousand people every week through one thousand subscribers. No one evangelist can do that. Write us a letter or use the coupon below.

The Greatest Thing in the World

By Arlen Marsh

IT IS the fourth century since the manufacture of the first printed edition of the English Bible. Churches, publishers, Bible societies, missionary organizations, and women's clubs are uniting in a celebration of the greatest event in the history of the Anglo-Saxon nations.

The England of the period prior to 1535 was not altogether a pleasant place in which to live. The barbaric tortures of the Middle Ages, the deep-rooted ignorance that accompanies centuries of lack of general education, the almost ineradicable superstition which is the inseparable companion of ignorance, and the wide differences in social standings among the people combined to make of the British Isles, as they made of every other "civilized" country, a hotbed of immorality, petty wars, political intrigue, and economic upheaval.

Christianity then, as now, was little more than a figure of speech. Bibles were almost unknown. The tedious process of hand illumination made the few available scripts of Bible books both expensive and inaccurate. Men who had spent their lives in copying from one manuscript to another unconsciously committed errors which men less familiar with the task might not have made. The power to read and write was confined largely to the clergy, and it was not uncommon for members of the higher nobility to be entirely illiterate.

Religion, however, is a potent force. Deeply set in the minds of the more faithful of the scribes and monks was the desire to see the people know more of the Book which they purportedly believed. To this end, one man succeeded in securing a printing press from the Continent, and thereafter the task of presenting the Bible to the populace was comparatively easy. On October 4, 1535, the first Bible to be printed in the English language was completed.

During the centuries that have elapsed since that day, the Bible has grown to represent not merely the church but one of the world's more important industries. Aside from the American Bible Society, there exist in the United States alone eight major publishing houses which specialize in the printing and publishing of Bibles: Oxford University Press (which advertises an annual sale of more than a million Bibles), Thomas Nelson and Sons, A. J. Holman Company, William Collins Sons and Company, The Macmillan Company (Cambridge Bibles), Harper and Brothers (Bagster and Polk Bibles), John C. Winston Company (International Bibles), and National Publishing Company. Besides these leaders in the field, numbers of firms issue specialized editions of the Bible like the New Analytical Bible (Dickson), An American Translation (Chicago University), the Emphasized Bible (Standard), the Indexed Bible (Dickson), the New Testament in Modern Speech (Pilgrim Press), and others of ever-increasing variety.

These publishers, who have made a commercial success on a large scale from the selling of the Bible, have Christianity and its foundation alone to thank for their profits. Thousands of men and women are now dependent upon the manufacture, wholesaling, and retailing of the Word of God; and should the industry ever cease to function, the country would be faced with a vastly augmented unemployment problem.

These conclusions do not take into consideration the importance of the subsidiary printing and publishing business which has grown out of the Bible directly. Concordances, commentaries, general reference works, story books (of which the most important undoubtedly is Ben Hur), and dictionary-encyclopedias have poured in profusion from the nation's presses. Those who are supported from the manufacture and sale of all of these books may trace their livelihood directly to the Bible. The cartage, mailing, and express on Bibles every year totals an enormous sum; and through the transportation agencies the Bible gives income to thousands more. Billing (Please turn to Page Ten)

Abreast of the Times

Italy Outlawed by League

"They shall not cleave one to another, even as iron is not mixed with clay."—Daniel 2:43.

GENEVA, Switzerland, Oct. 10.—Fifty nations, including all but three or four of those which constitute the League, voted in the Assembly today to punish Italy for her violation of the League of Nations Covenant. Just what course the imposition of penalties will take has not been decided, but a "general staff" has been named which will formulate a plan and direct its execution. Austria and Hungary declined to support the action of the League, preferring to retain friendship and commercial intercourse with Italy.

Italy

The declaration of the League makes Italy an "outlaw" nation, and proscribes all commercial relations with her. The announcement recently made by the President of the United States, warning American manufacturers and shippers that commerce with Italy and Ethiopia must be carried on without the support of this Government, brings this country into line with the purpose of the League to isolate Italy commercially from the rest of the world. Already, however, "big business" is protesting vigorously against the proclamation of the President, and the effect of the protest cannot be foretold at this time.

The Italian Government has warned the League that an attempt to place Italy under a naval blockade would "mean war." Mussolini expects to secure oil and other necessary military supplies through Austria and Germany, the latter nation officially withdrawing from the League on October 21. The Powers believe, however, that pressure can be brought to bear upon these two Governments to prevent the transportation of goods to Italy through their territories.

The final defense of Italy's attack on Ethiopia was expressed by one spokesman as follows:

"Why will the world not recognize that Italy is stifling to death and needs to find an outlet? Why doesn't it realize it must remove the causes of war and give Italy some great open spaces where Italians may breathe?"

Some years ago the editor of THE RESTITUTION HERALD fell into conversation with an Italian army officer while traveling by train through Canada. The officer was returning from a tour of the world and had just passed through the vast sparsely settled region of the western part of the United States. In answer to the editor's question as to his impression of the country, the officer said in substance: "It would be wise for the United States and Canada to realize, with regard to the vast unoccupied territories they control, that Italy and other over-populated nations of the world will not long permit their own people to starve without making a strong effort to find them a place to live and expand, even at the expense of a war of conquest." These words become especially significant in the light of Italy's present aggressive action in Ethiopia.

GENEVA, Oct. 11.—All restrictions against the importation of arms into Ethiopia were lifted by the League of Nations today, and Great Britain immediately began preparations to put the edict into effect.

Greece Restores Monarchy

"And (there) shall arise . . . another third kingdom of brass."—Daniel 2:39.

ATHENS, Greece, Oct. 10.—According to Associated Press reports, it was amid scenes of wild rejoicing that the announcement was made tonight by the National Assembly of its approval of the restoration of the monarchy to Greece, which was overthrown April 13, 1924, as the result of a plebiscite. Following the establishment of the republic the country has been controlled largely by dictators who have experienced varying degrees of success in the maintenance of order and prosperity, but none have earned for themselves unqualified popular support.

Not a gun was fired, not even a bugle blown, in the dramatic transfer of the government from the control of the nominal republican authorities to the new royalist administrators. A temporary dictatorship has been proclaimed by former Minister of War Kondylis, who has named himself President of the Council and Minister of Finance, and who has appointed royalists to all other posts in the Cabinet. In the meantime, King George II, the heir of the Greek throne, awaits in London with a great show of patience his recall to Athens to head the new Government.

The King is decidedly pro-British in sympathy, which will undoubtedly have a decided effect upon the attitude of Greece in the Italo-Ethiopian crisis. Developments in the "kingdom of brass" should be watched with care.

Worth While Ways of Reading the Bible

THE BIBLE is all in all mankind's greatest treasure. A few men may have crowns, and a few may have fortunes; fewer still can enjoy either. But everyone may have the Bible, and everyone who will may enjoy it with a great happiness.

But, of course, no one can enjoy it if it stands dusty on the shelf or dusted on the living room table! It must be read. That is not only the first thing to do; it is almost the only essential thing to do. Read it.

To be sure, men have read it idly, and suddenly their spirits have been "stabbed broad awake," as they have found it speaking right straight to them. But that is no reason for reading it idly. Read it with attention.

Nevertheless, you need not make hard work of reading it. If you come to it as a task, it will likely be a task. Come to it with the spirit of Mary, who sat at Jesus' feet and drank in His words; not in the spirit of Martha, who felt that a piece of work just had to be done. Read as if you were listening to the deep melodies of a great organ, and after a bit you will find your own heart singing a nobler tune. Read it as if you were looking at a great landscape of hills and valleys and plains, of mountains and snow-capped summits, with the great luminous sky over all. Soon you will begin to see the landscape of human life and destiny in truer perspective, and know what hills you must climb, and into what valleys you must descend, before reaching the heights.

READING FOR THE FIRST TIME

If the Bible is new to you, or if you have read it only casually, there are many places at which to start. Probably the best is the Gospel of St. Luke and the book of the Acts. Here are the events and the Person that mark the turning point of human history. Throughout all generations since then they have set countless men and women and youths free from fear and shame and sin, and brought them to a radiant and abundant life. To the light from these chapters the rest of the Bible contributes, and in their light it and all life are illumined. Whatever ground you traverse, this will be the peak from which you will get your bearings.

Follow with the other Gospels and some of the shorter letters of St. Paul. Then extend your acquaintance—search out the riches of the Psalms, read the early chapters of Genesis, the story of David, the pithy wisdom of Proverbs, some of the ringing messages of the prophets, and more of the New Testament. By this time you can find your way about in this library of sixty-six books. But do not try too soon to master the whole of it; in reading the Bible, you are not cramming for an examination, but living with a friend.

THE BEST OPEN TO ALL

As you read, imagine as well as you can the scene or the setting. Re-reading will often bring this out. The Bible is a book of life; we best understand it when we enter into the living experiences it records.

Do not be disturbed if there are passages that you do not understand. You live on God's glorious earth, but He doesn't expect you to know every valley of the Himalayas or every port in the seven seas. There is nothing in the Bible essential to life's deepest joys and greatest growth, that is not open to a true and earnest heart. Come to your reading with an open mind and give the Bible its chance to speak to you. It is not simply a record; it is a message.

WAYS OF READING

When you have thus gotten the lay of the land and some insight into what the Bible is about, you will find different ways of reading rewarding. Here are some among many:

(1) Take one book or one group of chapters and read and re-read it scores of times. "By repeated re-reading in the face of our practical problems, a book begins to live in the mind like a magnetic current. To get the benefit of the Bible, one needs not a snapshot, but a time exposure." Creative power comes, not from collecting every new idea, but from being laid hold on by great vital and enduring truths.

(2) Read it, especially the Gospels, and from the Psalms and Epistles, for light on personal problems—purpose in life, friendships, anxiety over loved ones, financial perplexities, the guilt of sin, when tempted to do wrong. It can be marvelously helpful.

(3) Read it to find the person most like yourself, and study his experience with God and life. A brilliant woman, who became acquainted with Christ only in her mature years, compared her experience with the like experiences of men and women in the New Testament.

(4) Read the Gospels and the Acts, and, as you study each scene, think where you—caring for the things you care for—would have been in that scene, had you lived then.

(5) Read to understand thoroughly a single character—what his motive and his hope, what his ambitions, what battles he lost and won. The Bible holds life before us so that you can see into it.

(6) Take a great word or phrase—"faith," "patience," "grace," "the glory of God"—and trace its meaning through the Bible. Or take some great theme—the creative power of God, what God expects of us, what help God gives us, the meaning of courage, prayer. Perchance prayer, that may seem "unreal" to you now, will become alive.

(7) Read the Bible for light on some one of the problems of the world's life—individual rights, freedom and law, the duties of nations, the qualities of public leaders, the foundations of peace. (Please turn to Page Nine)

The Kingdom of God

THE kingdom of God! What a wonderful and far-reaching subject for our thought. How many people have their hope set on having a part in it. Some look for it to gradually grow up in this age, making the world to gradually get better. Others look for it in heaven, believing that when Christ comes again He will take the saints there. And many of us believe that this kingdom will be set up in the earth. After all, it is not so important to understand all about where or what it will be, as to make sure of a place in it. But as we go on with this little study, we may see that a better understanding of it will help us in attaining the goal.

“Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem: behold, thy King cometh unto thee: he is just, and having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt the foal of an ass.” These wonderful words found in Zechariah 9:9 introduce us to a king—not a great exalted king, but one who is lowly. Isaiah tells us of one who would be born who would have the “government . . . upon his shoulder, and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to . . . establish it.” Both of these are prophecies of a coming king and kingdom—at Jerusalem and upon David’s throne.

Leaving these prophecies for the time being, let us go to the New Testament and read a few of the many texts which speak of the kingdom. Most of Jesus’ teachings regarding it were given in parables. Several of these are found in the 13th chapter of Matthew. In the 24th verse He likens it to a man that sowed good seed in his field. An enemy sowed tares, or weeds. Both were allowed to grow together until the harvest, when the separation took place. Beginning with verse 44 and on, the kingdom is likened to the treasure hid in the field and then to a rich man who sold all to obtain one precious pearl. It is compared also to the net which when cast into the sea brought up many fish, both bad and good. And so from these we learn that there is and will be a king and kingdom.

What is a kingdom? If we had lived in the Old World several hundred years ago, we would not need to ask such a question. Everyone lived under an earthly king. But in our modern world we find very few kings. And those who still have the name, do not have the power. The King of Yugoslavia not long ago attempted to be a real king and rule. As a result he was assassinated. People do not want to be ruled by a king. And in fact, no king has a right to rule. Men are created equal in the eyes of God, no one is better than anyone else. A king is one who is above the subjects and rules them. And the only one who can be such, is the Lord. He is the only one who is above all.

And so there is one and only one king. But what about the kingdom? There is also only one, but it has three great parts or phases. Let us notice what these phases are. Going again to Matthew 13:47, Jesus compares the kingdom to a net. The net and all within it represent one phase of the kingdom. It is made up of all who profess to be followers of Christ. And as such it includes all the so-called Christian world. In this kingdom, there are both good and bad. But no one on earth is to judge which are in each class. “Man looketh on the outward appearance, but God looketh on the heart.” And again, “The Lord knoweth them that are his.” The same kingdom, or phase of the kingdom, is described in the parable of the field. It is the Lord’s field. But there are both good grain and weeds in it. Not until the harvest will the complete separation take place.

Now is the time for each one to determine his own position. Am I really one whom the Lord counts as a child of the kingdom? Am I really a member of the great and true church of God? Am I living up to and believing in all the light and knowledge which the Lord has given me? These are some of the questions which help to determine our place in the kingdom.

Usually when we think of the kingdom of Christ, we think of the great and glorious kingdom which He will establish when He comes again. But that is the third phase of the kingdom. What then is the second? The Jews and their leaders, the scribes and Pharisees, also were always interested in the glorious kingdom. They could not see very much about this kingdom, either in Christ Himself or in His parables about it. “And being asked by the Pharisees, when the kingdom of God cometh, He answered them and said, The kingdom of God cometh not with observation; neither shall they say, Lo here, or Lo there! for lo, the kingdom of God is within you.”—Luke 17:20, 21. And in these words Jesus told the second and all-important phase of the kingdom.

The Pharisees wanted to know about the kingdom, not that they might be of service. They did not want to hear about giving to the poor and taking the lowest place. They felt that because they were the teachers of the law, and because they were so careful to carry out the details of that law, they deserved a prominent place in the kingdom. Their thought was, “When will we receive our honored place in the great kingdom?” How puzzled they must have been at Jesus’ answer. Many today are like the Pharisees in thinking that they deserve a place with Christ when He comes. Oh, how important it is that all who are interested only in a kingdom of glory, in the future, understand these words of Christ. Before any will ever be privileged to see or be in the kingdom, he must first get the kingdom within!

It is this phase of the kingdom which Jesus is talking about when He compares it to a pearl. The man sold all that he had and bought the pearl. We cannot buy a place in the future kingdom. But before we can get the present kingdom within us, we must give up something for something else. We exchange value for value. And we must be willing to give up all, if necessary, for the kingdom. There may be some who have all the truth on every subject. They keep every commandment perfectly. They may even be great preachers. But if they have not found Christ in the heart—if the great principles of love and humility and charity are not ruling there—they will have no place in the glorious kingdom. And in this thought we find the meaning of surrendering to Christ. "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock."—Rev. 3:20. He is ready and He de-

Message of the Empty Pew

By Richard Le Crone

"I GUESS I won't go to church today. The church can get along just as well without me and there may not be many more such fine days for a hike. I won't be missed anyway."

Thus are many well meaning Christians wont to quiet troublesome consciences when churchgoing and pleasure-seeking conflict. Their apparent meekness and humbleness in thinking themselves unimportant to the church would be commendable, were it not so utterly misplaced. True, they are warned "not to think of themselves more highly than they ought to think" (Rom. 12:3). But if we read on, we must conclude that the Apostle was stressing, not the unimportance of the individual, but rather the importance of his thinking of himself not as an independent, irresponsible being, but as a part of the body of Christ, and therefore responsible to and for every other part of the body. "So we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another."—Rom. 12:5.

The important question then becomes not, Will it harm me to stay away? but, What effect will it have upon the group as a whole?

For the sake of discussion we are going to assume (though it is highly improbable) that the person in question will not be missed at church by his friends nor his decision to seek pleasure rather than God noted and commented upon by his enemies. His absence from church still has a definite and telling effect on the whole body. It is the message of the empty pew.

When David was planning an escape from the clutches of Saul, his friend Jonathan warned him in the following words, "To morrow is the new moon: and thou shalt be missed, because thy seat will be empty."—1 Sam. 20:18. Jonathan's logic is as good today as it was then. No matter how inconspicuous and unimportant we may consider ourselves, there is our empty pew, prominent as a sore thumb, proclaiming our absence to all present.

The message of the empty pew is so bold as to be scarcely missed by any. Of the absent one it declares, "Worship of and obedience to God are secondary in his life. Some other interest comes first."

To the weak member who is in need of support and encouragement it whispers insidiously, "See, some one else has yielded to temptation. Why don't you go visiting next Sunday, too? When an old, well established member does it, what can be expected of you who are weak?"

To the stranger who is seeking a church home it says warningly, "Better wait awhile. This church doesn't seem to be able to hold the interest and loyalty of its members."

To the officers of the church it says, "There is something wrong somewhere in the organization. Better investigate."

To the pastor the empty pew is a taunting, victorious enemy. "See," it shouts at him, "people may pat you on the back and tell you how well they like your sermons, but actually you are a failure. The hours of study spent upon sermons and miles traveled in calling are all wasted effort. Your work is neither effective nor appreciated. Why don't you give it all up and go into a profession where your talents will be recognized and appreciated?"

And thus we might go on indefinitely. To every person who sees it the empty pew delivers its subtle, discouraging message. We may not even recognize it with our conscious minds. Nevertheless its influence is just as positive and just as far-reaching.

Surely the Apostle had good and sufficient reasons when he exhorted us to "consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works: not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching" (Heb. 10:24, 25). For had not his years of experience taught him that "the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee: nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you. Nay, much more those members of the body which seem to be more feeble, are necessary" (1 Cor. 12:21, 22)?

Is it important that you and I attend every church service possible? We will agree that there is no salvation in church attendance as such, yet every fair-minded and thinking Christian must conclude that it is an indispensable part of his Christian life.

In any church, the empty pew is a liability and a weight. The filled pew is an asset and a wing. May God help each Christian to see that his is never empty.

Antichrist's Deception

HERETOFORE we have been considering men alone as the agencies of deception. We now must look for a moment at a supernatural being, deliberately energized of Satan, whose fundamental task will be to deceive humanity, namely, Antichrist himself. He is called by the Apostle John a liar (1 John 2:22); the deceiver (2 John 7); the Antichrist (1 John 2:18; 4:3; 2 John 7). As a liar, he is against the truth; as a deceiver, he is against us and our welfare; as the Antichrist, he is against the Christ of God. John tells us that his great denial will be that Jesus is not the Christ, that Jesus Christ is not come in the flesh. He will not deny that there was such a person on earth as Jesus, and he will not deny the idea of a Christ; but he will deny that Jesus of Nazareth was the Christ of God. He may even confess that he is, as Dr. Robert S. Candlish has very vividly said, "the model man, or something more even, in some sense, one partaking of the divine nature, but, to what he is himself personally, he differs in no material or essential respect from other men. Born like them, like them he dies. Not only has he all in common with them, but he has nothing in him nor about him, but what is common." Is not this, after all, what many are teaching today, not denying Jesus and all of His beautiful characteristics, but denying that Jesus is the Christ of God?

The Apostle Paul calls this same person "the lawless one," who is also characterized as a powerful agent of Satan in deceiving men. What an awful statement that is—is there anything sadder in the Bible?—"And for this cause God sendeth them a working of error, that they should believe a lie: that they all might be judged who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness."—2 Thess. 2:11, 12. This is the same person that the Apostle John refers to in the last part of the 13th chapter of Revelation as the beast out of the sea. He is a blasphemer. He blasphemes God, the name of God, the tabernacle of God, the saints of God in heaven. He is able to perform miracles, and actually to give life to the constructed image of the beast out of the sea. It is this person who is responsible for the economic boycott of the last days. His work is succinctly summarized by William Kelly: "He endeavors to make men think that the beast is God, and takes advantage, I suppose, of the prophecies in Scripture, to make them believe that the predicted good time is arrived, that God is come back to the world, that men have nothing to do but to enjoy all the blessings of the earth, and of the day spoken of when God was to scatter His enemies. Satan seeks that men should antedate this under himself and without God. He will endeavor to turn to account the very promises of God for cheating the world into belief that these times of chiefest evil are the days of heaven and earth." Mr. Kelly wrote these words fifty years ago, but they certainly seem to be a mirror held up to those of us who are living at this later time.

Is it not quite significant that the very name "Antichrist" is coming back again into the vocabulary of contemporary writers? In 1934, there was published in Germany, by one of her most powerful young writers, Joseph Roth, a book which has just been published in New York, with the significant title, Antichrist. Now Roth is not a Christian, apparently, and is not interpreting Antichrist as the New Testament reveals him, but he does express his idea of this being in very remarkable words. We quote one paragraph: "Antichrist has come; in a guise that we who have been expecting him for years fail to recognize. He already dwells in our midst—within us. The heavy shadow of his infamous wings is pressing down upon us. We are even now smoldering in the icy glow of his baleful eyes. His strangling hands are stretching out toward our unsuspecting throats. The blasphemous flames of his tongue are licking at our world. He is lifting his fiery feet that he may stamp them down upon the frail and inflammable roofs of our dwellings. Long has he been pouring venom into the innocent souls of our children. But we know it not. For we have been struck with the blindness of which it is written that it will come upon us before the end of time." I personally made a count of some of the words in this brief book, and I discover that there are at least sixty-four occurrences in the volume of such words as "blind," "lie," "seduce," "deceive," "defraud," "falsify," "beguile," "hoodwink," etc. These are the very words used by the New Testament.

We need only give one more illustration. In the New York Times Current History for June of this year, Dr. Charles Sarvolea, for many years Professor of French Literature in the University of Edinburgh, has an article on Alfred Rosenberg, whose book, The Myth of the Twentieth Century, has almost become a textbook of the Nazi regime, and Dr. Sarvolea gives his article the title, "The German Antichrist."

We hear a great deal about the "apostasy" of our day; the "spirit of unbelief," which rests so heavily upon our modern world; the skeptical attitude of so many professors in our great universities; the agnostic position which many of our most influential writers stubbornly hold to today. Men are abandoning the ancient and solid foundations of moral integrity. The grossest sins of the flesh are paraded as virtues, as the "natural" experiences of life in its fullness. How is it that mankind is everywhere so manifestly yielding itself to the domination of such destructive sovereignties? I believe that it is deception, human and superhuman, spiritual and satanic, that is the secret of these strange modern phenomena.

With the deceptions of the city of Babylon (Rev. 18:23), we need not tarry. We refer briefly to the last great deception that will ever occur on this earth—that referred to in the 20th chapter of the book of Revelation. Is it not very significant that, while the deceptions of the latter days are promoted in the beginning by false teachers and false prophets, then by men who actually claim to be false Christs, and then, by a supernatural being, Antichrist, the last effort to deceive men will be made by no less than the devil himself? This will occur, astonishing as it may seem, after the millennium. As the Student's Commentary on the Holy Scriptures remarks: "The Creation Sabbath witnessed the first seduction, and the Millennium Sabbath will witness the last. So incurably diseased is the natural heart that a thousand years of perfect happiness and absolutely just government, together with exemption from all forms of suffering, will fail to win man's heart to God, and, he will, at the close, choose the depthless miseries of his government, rather than Emmanuel and righteousness." Satan gathers together what will probably be the greatest armed force ever seen on earth, from the four quarters of our globe, as numerous as "the sand of the sea." He will lead them up to the camp of the saints, to the beloved city, which is the earthly Jerusalem; but, before his attack is launched; apparently, we believe before a single saint is even wounded, fire comes down from God out of heaven and destroys the entire wicked force. It is significant that the first time we find the word "fire" in the Bible is in Genesis 19:24, 25, when fire also came down from heaven destroying the wicked cities of Sodom and Gomorrah (cf. 2 Thess. 1:8; 2:8). Thus ends forever this awful enemy of man—deception—and seals the eternal doom of all those who have made it their business, in opposing God and denying His Son, to lead the souls of men astray. We are living in these very days when the evidences of deception are on every hand.

Wherein is the secret of our victory? In the Word of God alone. The Lord Jesus Himself said: "Ye do err (go astray) not knowing the word of God."—Matt. 22:29; Mark 12:24. "But ye, beloved, building up yourselves on your most holy faith, praying in the Holy Spirit, keep yourselves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life."—Jude 20, 21.—Wilbur M. Smith in Revelation.

"Thy Will Be Done"

By Elsie M. Bradley

"Nevertheless not my will, but thine, be done."—Luke 22:42.

ALL down through the ages we find that the greater number of the human family wanted to have their own way about things, no matter whether it be according to God's way or not. The Prophet Isaiah said we must forsake our wicked way and accept the higher way. "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man ("the man of iniquity," margin) his thoughts: and let him return unto the Lord." Why? "For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord." What is the difference in the ways? "As the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts."—Isa. 55:7-9. There are only a few who will submit to the higher way and do the Father's will.

Let us notice whether Christ did His own will or the will of His Father. Christ's words: "I seek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent me."—John 5:30; 6:38. Even in His greatest trial whose will did He say be done? He prayed, saying, "Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me: nevertheless not my will, but thine, be done."—Luke 22:42. He did what pleased the Father all the time. "He that sent me is with me: the Father hath not left me alone; for I do always those things that please him."—John 8:29. "Jesus saith unto them, My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work."—John 4:34. And He finished the work that God gave Him to do (John 17:4).

Now we have seen by Jesus' own words that He did not His own will, but the will of His Father, and did always what was pleasing unto God. He did not do just a part of the work that His Father gave Him to do, but finished all the work given Him. This was pleasing to His Father, for God said, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."—Matt. 3:17; 17:5.

We may wonder how He knew what the Father's will was. Jesus said, "When ye have lifted up the Son of man, then shall ye know that I am he, and that I do nothing of myself; but as my Father hath taught me, I speak these things."—John 8:28.

Remember He was about His Father's business when He was a youth of twelve years, and He astonished all that heard Him with His understanding and answers. He was quite young, some one might say, to be sitting in the midst of the doctors and asking them questions. But this was how He increased in wisdom and in favor with God and man (Luke 2:42-52). He remembered His Creator in the days of His youth (Eccl. 12:1).

Christ taught His disciples to pray for His Father's will to be done in earth as it is in heaven (Matt. 6:10). And Christ is our great example and has suffered for us, leaving us an example that we should follow His steps. He did no sin, neither was guile found in His mouth; and when He was reviled, He reviled not again; when He suffered, He threatened not, but committed Himself to Him that judgeth righteously (1 Peter 2:21-24). Paul said, "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ."—Phil. 2:5-11. "Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ."—1 Cor. 11:1.

In taking Christ for our example and imitating Him we must seek and study to know our Father's will as He did and have submissive hearts to do always those things that please Him (John 8:29). We may have to suffer for doing the Father's will as Christ did, but if so we can rejoice inasmuch as we are partakers of Christ's suffering, that when His glory shall be revealed we may be glad with exceeding joy. If we suffer we shall also reign with Him. 1 Peter 4:13; 2 Tim. 2:12. "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us."—Rom. 8:18.

So may we submit our hearts to the Father's will and say as Christ did, "Nevertheless not my will, but thine, be done."

THE FEW AND THE MANY

By Conrad Dickel

JESUS was once asked, "Lord, are there few that be saved?" and His reply indicated that such would be the case (Luke 13:23). In Matthew 7:14 He declared, "Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." He further states that "many are called, but few are chosen" (Matt. 22:14).

In contradistinction to the "few" of the strait and narrow way, we have reliable testimony that Jesus gave Himself a ransom for all mankind. In 1 John 2:2 it is stated even more explicitly that "he is the propitiation for our sins: and not for our's only, but also for the sins of the whole world."

In the face of these apparent contradictions we shall seek to identify the "few" and the "many," and then see if the discrepancies still stand.

A strong identification of the "few" is found in 1 Peter 2:9, "But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should shew forth the virtues of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light." Another identification is found in Galatians 3:29: "If ye are Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." God's promise to Abraham was that "in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed."

So we have definite identification of the "few" with that "seed" who shall be instrumental in blessing all the families of the earth at the appointed time. David sings that "a seed shall serve him; it shall be accounted to the Lord for a generation. They shall come, and shall declare his righteousness unto a people that shall be born, that he hath done this" (Psalm 22:30).

There is an indication as to the number of the "few" in Revelation 7:4. "And I heard the number of them which were sealed: . . . an hundred and forty and four thousand of all the tribes of the children of Israel." And in Revelation 14:1, "A Lamb stood on the mount Sion, and with him an hundred forty and four thousand, having his Father's name written in their foreheads. . . . These were redeemed from among men (the Gentiles), being the first-fruits unto God and to the Lamb." These two companies total 288,000 which, when compared to the millions of the rest of mankind, is indeed a "few." Jesus refers to a "little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom" (Luke 12:32).

In contrast to these "few," we see in Revelation 7:9 "a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands. . . . These are they that came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes in the blood of the Lamb." These must be that great multitude of mankind, inclusive from Adam's time (when mankind's tribulation began) and down through the ages, who are to be under the administration of the "few," or "little flock," in the kingdom, whose glorious service will be to rule and judge, under the guidance of King Jesus. The judgments are for the purpose, primarily, of reconciliation of the "many" to the Father of us all, for "when thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness" (Isa. 26:9).

"O let the nations be glad and sing for joy; for thou shalt judge the people righteously, and govern the nations upon earth."—Psalm 67:4.

THE BIBLE

We search the world for truth, we cull
The good, the pure, the beautiful
From graven stone and written scroll,
From the old flower fields of the soul;
And, weary seekers of the best,
We come back laden from our quest,
To find that all the sages said
Is in the book our mothers read.

—Whittier.

THE Bible contains 3,566,480 letters; 810,697 words; 31,175 verses; 1,189 chapters; and 66 books. The longest chapter is the 119th Psalm, the shortest and middle chapter the 117th Psalm. The middle verse is the 8th of the 118th Psalm. The longest name is in the 8th chapter of Isaiah. The word "and" occurs 46,627 times, the word "Lord" 8,000 times. The 37th chapter of Isaiah and the 19th chapter of 2 Kings are alike. The longest verse is the 9th of the 8th chapter of Esther; the shortest verse is the 35th of the 11th chapter of John. WORTH WHILE WAYS OF READING THE BIBLE

(8) Sometime you will want to read the Bible all the way through—for what it will do for you, not for the sake of having done it. One of the busiest editors of a metropolitan newspaper remarked lately that he was reading it all the way through for the fifth time, a few verses each day. It will enrich your life as it has his.

SOME GUIDEPOSTS

When is there time to read it? Ay—there's the rub! Many find an early morning half hour best; others the quiet of the evening. The most productive reading requires a definite, regular time. But every day there are intervals which can be seized: on the trolley or train to or from work, in a bit of rest from household chores, waiting for a delayed appointment. A handy copy of a single Gospel or of other separate books or a small Testament in the purse or pocket can pack many spare moments with satisfaction.

For not a little of the Bible commentaries, Bible dictionaries, and other "helps" are of value in explaining the background. But do not let them get between you and the Bible. Use them as you would a dictionary. Note also that chapter and verse divisions, which were not part of the original text, sometimes separate what should be united.

Store up the fruits of your reading. A record of it by date and passage, perhaps with comment, will prove worth making. Summarize what you discover. Memorize great passages that help you. Why keep in the storehouse of your mind only the Ten Commandments, the Beatitudes, the Twenty-third Psalm, learned perhaps when you were only 6 or 8? Add Job 38; Psalms 19, 24, 46, 91, 103, and 104; 1 Corinthians 13; the parables of the lost sheep, the last judgment, the good Samaritan, the prodigal son; and St. John's Gospel, chapters 14, 18, 19, 20. There are no finer riches for the mind.

Read the Bible surely by yourself; but also seek companionship in reading. In the family, with a friend or a group of friends, in a class, new discoveries will be made that only such reading can bring. The richest experiences of life must be shared.

When you are in sorrow, in anxiety, in fear, go to the Bible. It can bring marvelous help in life's emergencies. But it is not primarily a shelf of medicines; it is daily food for daily needs. So used it will help all the more when emergencies come, and will deepen every one of life's joys.

For, in God's providence, this is your book. Men have labored incessant hours, spent all they had, gone footsore and weary to an exile's rest, died in agony a martyr's death, that you might have it.

You will understand why when you have made it your own.

Read it. Share it.—National Commemoration Committee pamphlet.

sires to be King in our lives. We must be willing to surrender all of our own selfish desires and ways and allow Him and His kingdom to be in us. The principles of the kingdom must be a part of us.

And so we find that the first phase of the kingdom, like the net, includes all who have the influence of Christ and have called themselves Christians. Within this great group are to be found the true children of the kingdom—those who have the kingdom within, ruling their lives. And they are the ones who will have a part in the third great part of the kingdom—the final goal. "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory."—Matt. 25:31. And when will this glorious King come? Perhaps we can find our best answer in the book of Daniel.

In the 2nd chapter of Daniel we are told of a dream which the King of Babylon had. He had forgotten the dream and the wise men of Babylon were not able to tell it to him. But God revealed the dream to Daniel and he told both the dream and the interpretation to the King. Beginning with verse 31 of Daniel 2, we read, "Thou, O king, sawest, and behold a great image. . . . This image's head was of fine gold, his breast and his arms of silver, his belly and his thighs of brass, his legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay. Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon its feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together and became like the chaff of the summer threshingfloors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them: and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth." This was the dream and Daniel then went on to give the interpretation. This prophecy is explained more completely than any other symbolic prophecy and it is therefore a great help in understanding these prophecies. The King was told that the head of gold represented himself and the golden kingdom of Babylon. And that after him an inferior kingdom would arise and have rule over all the world, and then still another and different kingdom would rule the world. The fourth kingdom would be strong as iron, as represented by the legs of iron. And following this iron kingdom, the world would be divided. Never again was there to be a universal kingdom ruled by men. Strong nations and weaker ones would mingle together, like the iron and clay. But they would never be able to fuse into a world empire. They are not even able to form a league of nations which has any power or is able to hold together. We need have absolutely no fear of a world dictator. God's prophecy is true.

But what will follow this divided and troubled state of the world? "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed."—Verse 44. The kingdom will be "set up" and it will come while the earth is in this divided state or "in the days of these kings." And the stone representing the kingdom filled the whole earth. The kingdom will be on the earth. And will people then dig up remains of the former kingdoms and consider them? No, because the image is so broken that it becomes like chaff and is blown away in the wind. The great everlasting kingdom of Christ will completely take the place of all existing governments and "the former things shall not be remembered."

"Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness." What kingdom are you seeking? Are we like the Pharisees, thinking only of coming glory, or are we seeking and finding the Kingdom of Righteousness now in our hearts? Are we only a part of that kingdom which calls itself Christian, or are we truly Christians or Christlike in our thoughts and actions? If we make sure that we are not only a part of the first phase of the kingdom, but have the kingdom in our hearts, then we will be among that number who will rejoice when the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ and He shall reign forever and ever (Rev. 11:15).—Stanley J. Kauer in The Bible Advocate.

and bookkeeping, office stationery and forms, stamps and general supply printing, all likewise play a part in the huge circle created in the industrial world by the Bible.

Materialism, however, is not the best way by which to judge the effect the Bible has had, either on this country or on any other. It was Christianity, growing out of its biblical basis, that gave culture a tremendous impetus during the darkness that was the Middle Ages. The Renaissance grew out of the effects Christianity gradually assumed on the selfishness of the political leaders, and which it always had had on the inspired genius of the world's great artists and writers. A series of Messiahs came into being on canvas, and took the form of German, Italian, English, Spanish, Greek, but never Jew. Cathedrals grew out of architects' ideals in the desire to create new places for the worship of God. The architecture of the world developed new forms and brought into existence buildings of a quality which never since has been duplicated.

Education, as it is known today, traces its origin to the Bible and its works. The printing of the English Bible four centuries ago brought into being the desire on the part of the people to read this book which they had been taught to revere, and which was now easily available. Consequently, pressure of public opinion gradually forced the rulers to grant a constantly widening system of education, until today the English-speaking races can boast schools second to none.

The effect of the Bible on the inhuman cruelty of the Dark Ages (the inheritance of millenniums of pagan philosophy) was, perhaps, the outstanding result of the printing of the Book. Gradually, in England, the stringent laws which required torturous death and unconscionable prison sentences were repealed in favor of laws which treated the criminal, the debtor, and the unfortunate as human beings, possibly misled and self-willed human beings, but nevertheless human beings. Witches still were burned at the stake in the name of religion as late as the eighteenth century, both in England and in the American Colonies; but the persistent effect of widespread biblical reading and necessarily increased comprehension of the Bible could not be denied, and finally even this remnant of barbaric superstition was denied satisfaction by acts of the legislatures.

As a natural consequence of the education for which the Bible was responsible, the world advanced rapidly in the way of science. It is notable that the past two hundred years have seen more changes in the working methods of the people than the previous two thousand years had seen. As a matter of comparison, although the fallacy of non sequitur or insufficient connection must always be avoided, it is also notable that this change has occurred entirely since the reading and distribution of the Bible became general.

The Bibles which come from the presses of the world today are not infrequently works of art, published at prices so low as to seem almost inconceivable in view of the high cost of color plates and the great quantity of paper, type-setting, and presswork required in the manufacture of each book.

For example, there is a children's Bible issued by William Collins Sons and Company which retails for $1.75. The book contains forty-seven illustrations, most of them executed for the publishing house by special order, and drawn by Hardy, one of the greatest artists in the world. It has blackface type of medium size and is bound in an imitation leather of such quality as to be more lasting than genuine leather and quite as beautiful. The color work in the Bible is one of the finest examples of the printer's art that has been issued.

And there is the special wedding gift Bible published by the A. J. Holman Company at $5.00, with a special marriage certificate and a thorough family record, and having in addition voluminous helps and a concordance. Bound in limp leather, without overlapping covers, and with the paper edged in gold; printed in large, readable type; containing marginal references and illustrations, the Bible is a book of which any publisher justly could be proud—or of which any donor could be proud as a gift at any time.

Books like these have lifted the standards of the printing and publishing business throughout the world. From the days that the first edition of the English Bible came from a British press to these times when color presses turn out thousands of copies of almost perfect books, dedicated as much to the worship of Jehovah as to the great god Mammon, is a far cry; but progress has come and is still visible, despite the current cry of retrogression and decay in the ranks of Christendom.

Berean Department

ARLEN MARSH, EDITOR

Borrowing an Idea

It is the custom of many Sunday schools of other denominations to give their scholars Bibles when the scholars reach a specified department, generally the intermediate but not infrequently the junior. The custom is one which can have value far greater than that represented by the dollars and cents expended in buying the gifts.

The Sunday school is a place to teach the Bible. Each Sunday school pupil should have a copy of it. But, in many instances, families are large and purses small, and a Bible for each member of each family cannot be secured without cooperation from others.

Here it is the Sunday school plays its part. By giving each student as he moves upward from the primary or the junior department a copy of the Book which the school uses as a text, the Sunday school puts into the hands of children something of which they are and should be proud, something which will be of incalculable value during years to come.

There is no reason, however, why this idea should be restricted to the Sunday school. Young people's societies in some parts have taken up the thought with marked success. Where one Bible had appeared in class before, a dozen were brought to every session when the societies began to give their students the one Book that they must have.

For some reason, the Church of God and its cooperative organizations, the Sunday school and the Berean society, have never adopted the plan. As cheaply as Bibles can now be secured, the initial cash outlay, which requires the buying of rarely more than ten Bibles at one time and generally a smaller number, is inconsiderable, particularly in proportion to the returns derived from it.

It would certainly do no harm and might indeed do a considerable amount of good to borrow an idea from other churches and to celebrate the fourth centennial of the printed English Bible by inaugurating a system among Berean societies, churches, and Sunday schools whereby students receive the Book they are supposed to study. Doubt arises as to the efficacy of buying quartèrlies, Berean lesson books, and other supplies, but failing to furnish pupils with the Book which the supplies concern.

The Ideal

"Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."—Matt. 5:48.

We are commanded of God to be perfect. There is, therefore, a sense in which we can and ought to be perfect. I know many kick against it, and say they never saw any perfect ones or that those who profess perfection are usually found suffering of an inferiority complex; this kind of reasoning is an evasion and not to the point, however. If God has commanded us to be perfect, it is certainly our duty to be perfect. If it is our duty, we certainly have the ability to be so, for God is not so inconsistent as to command what we cannot perform. Let us, therefore, try to understand in what sense we may be perfect.

1. Certainly not in knowledge. For we mortal creatures cannot know, as God knows, all things.

2. Surely not in power can we assume to be perfect as God, the Almighty, for we cannot even cause one hair to be black or white.

3. But evidently, in love, are we requested to be perfect. And why stumble at this? Was it not said in olden times, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy might," and again, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself"? "A new commandment give I unto you, that ye love one another, as I have loved you, that ye also love one another." Here our Savior requires us to love each other as He has loved us. And this also accords with the prayer of our Lord (John 17:23) "that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me." Then the story is told. To be perfect is to love God as He has loved us, and to love our neighbor as ourself.

But who is our neighbor? Jesus answers this question by presenting a case of two natural enemies, a Jew and a Samaritan, who had no dealings with each other. The Samaritan was kind to the Jew who hated him. Now of this Samaritan Jesus said, "Go do thou likewise." Likewise how? Be kind to your enemies, count them as neighbors, love them as God has loved us. To what would such love lead? To doing them good to the utmost of our ability. God loved when we loved Him not. God so loved the world that He gave up His own Son to die. We, also, can love with all our power or capacity as God did. A pint cup will not hold as much as a gallon, but both may be filled, and we may say of both that they are full.

So we may easily see that love is the fulfilling of the gospel, as well as the law.—Bradley Crundwell.

Rally at Oregon

A new lease on life has been given the Oregon, Illinois, Berean Society with a drive for higher attendance records which has sent the average roll call from 5 to 10. The increase has been due solely to attendance by the older married people. Rally Day mustered a total of 18. No other corresponding organization in the town has been able to function at all.

"Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good."

WHAT HAPPENED IN THE MIDST OF A FEAST

DO YOU remember that young boy Daniel who was taken from his home in Judah and placed in the King's palace in Babylon? When you hear his name what is the first thing you think of? Bravery, isn't it? And faith in God!

We ought to think of the second thing first because the first was true on account of the second. That is, Daniel displayed real courage because he had faith in his God. Then we think of the boy who refused to drink the King's wine, but asked for only pure water to drink.

Well, this same Daniel was at the time of our lesson an old man. He was still living at Babylon. And all those years he had kept true to God, and God had protected him through every danger.

He had many things to do for God during his lifetime, things that called for real courage. For there he was among people who didn't worship the God he loved, people, in fact, who tried to kill him because of his religion. And people who loved sinful pleasures above everything else.

Just at this time King Belshazzar made a great banquet, and he invited one thousand of his princes, their wives, and friends, to attend. While they were in the midst of their revelry and drunkenness, suddenly the King turned pale as death. His hand shook, his eyes stared, and his whole body showed the most terrible fear.

His guests, looking to see what was the cause, beheld a fearful sight. A hand, without head, or body, or even arm, wrote upon the wall. And no one could read the writing the hand wrote upon the wall.

If you will look in verse 7 of Daniel 5, you will see what the King promised the one who could read the fearful words. Not a one of the wisest men of all Babylon knew what it was all about.

The Queen, hearing all the confusion, came in and told the King about Daniel who, no doubt, had been forgotten by these wicked men. Daniel was at once sent for, and when he came the King made the same offer to him that he made to the wise men.

Look in verse 17, and see the dignified words in which Daniel answered him. Daniel wasn't a bit greedy, was he? "Let thy gifts be to thyself" must have made the King a little ashamed of his love of pomp and show.

And then before Daniel told the King what he wanted to know he gave him a good lecture. He was a brave man to speak up to the King that way. Daniel reminded the King of the fate of Nebuchadnezzar, who was removed from his lofty seat because he had been so proud and thought he was Ruler of the Universe. A voice from heaven spoke to him.

Verse 21 will tell you just what happened to Nebuchadnezzar. Isn't it terrible? But that's what often happens to men who forget God. Now look back in chapter 4, verse 37, and see what Nebuchadnezzar said when he came to himself again. Be sure and read that verse. It shows that the King had learned his lesson and at a great cost.

Daniel said to Belshazzar, "Thou hast not humbled thine heart, though thou knewest all this." Besides all his pride, the King had committed a grievous sin in using for his feast the golden cups that Nebuchadnezzar had taken from the temple in Jerusalem.

At the end of the lesson you will find the words that the hand wrote upon the wall, and their meaning. Belshazzar's time had come; he had spent his life for his own pleasure and his own glory. And now it was to end.

That very night the enemy entered the city in one of two ways. They marched under the strong walls by changing the course of the river which flowed under them and using the riverbed for a road. Or else some one on the inside opened the great gates and let the soldiers in while the King and his party were feasting and drinking.

FOR YOUR BIBLE SCRAPBOOK:

Write the date, the verse found at the top of page, and the subject of the story. Then write the story of the hand that wrote upon the wall. This is such an interesting story I wish I could read all of yours.

If you are not old enough to write the story, draw pictures or cut out pictures from a magazine or catalog to represent the story. You can all draw a hand writing upon a wall. If you can, print the words that the hand wrote. You will have to watch closely because they are not words from our language.

Now draw a scale tipped to one side. In the lower side print "good," in the upper side print "evil." Next draw a glass, and color it red. Underneath print "Touch not, taste not, handle not."

Copy this:

"God will help us to be true,
Bravely all His will to do;
Harm we never need to fear,
For our Lord is always near."

BELSHAZZAR'S FEAST

Daniel 5:1-31

GOLDEN TEXT

"Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging: and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise."—Proverbs 20:1.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Belshazzar's Feast.

Aim: Disregard for morality, sobriety, and religious obligations brings destruction upon both men and nations eventually.

Class Discussion: What effect does the use of liquor have upon one's attitude toward spiritual things? Effect of drinking on the home life. Its effect on the student. Railway authorities do not permit their employees to drink while on duty. Why?

I. Daniel Recalls the Humiliation of Nebuchadnezzar. (Dan. 5:17-21.) Daniel, facing a king who was possessed of absolute power, recalled to his attention the most humiliating experience of his predecessor before he gave him an answer to the question the King had asked him to solve. He further suggested that the power Belshazzar exercised was his only by the will of the God whose sacred vessels he had profaned. Daniel's courage was born of his faith in God and of the conviction that His will must be done regardless of any danger the Prophet might encounter in carrying it out.

II. Daniel Points Out Belshazzar's Sin. (Vv. 22-24.) Daniel was an old man at this time and his broad experience had given him positive knowledge of the danger that lay in angering a monarch. Yet he did not hesitate to denounce Belshazzar for his pride, his arrogance, his idolatry, and his blasphemy. It is easy to stand for what one knows is right when surrounded by friends, but it is a much more difficult thing to remain firm in one's adherence to principle under the lash of sensual popular opinion. It is an indication of great strength of character in these days for a young man or woman to refuse liquor and cigarettes when so many others use them.

III. Daniel Interprets the Mystic Inscription. (Vv. 25-28.) Because of his own faithfulness to God Daniel was given the power to interpret the meaning of the fateful words written upon the wall. Only those who live close to God and who are diligent students of His Word can rightly understand the dangers that surround them, and thus be enabled to warn others less enlightened than themselves of the tragic results that are sure to follow compliance with the demands of the world. The use of liquor is undoubtedly one of the most prolific causes of sorrow men may meet.

GOLDEN TEXT

"Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging: and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise."—Prov. 20:1.

"At the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder."—Prov. 23:32. One needs but to walk down the street of almost any large city and see the number of places where liquors are dispensed and notice the blurred eyes and red faces of those who partake of such liquors to realize how deceived people are who indulge in this kind of habits.

The wise and prudent will never be deceived by imbibing in strong drink, for they will never touch it, knowing the harmful effects thereof. Notice the results of Belshazzar's drinking in today's lesson and steer clear of such a dilemma as the King experienced. Be wise, look to God for assistance, and have will power sufficient to never let a single glass touch your lips. Be wise; God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap.—L. A. R.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Belshazzar

—and his mighty ones were powerless against the judgments of God;

—insulted God by a profane use of the temple vessels;

—saw, but could not understand God's Word.

Intemperance. Intemperance always leads to excess and excess brings judgment. The measure of judgment may and does vary, but it is certain. In our particular lesson today the proverbial straw that added too much weight to the excessive sin of the Babylonians was the profane use of the vessels of the temple, which had been dedicated to the sacred service of the eternal God. It is a sin of great moment to wrongfully use that which has been dedicated to or belongs to the heavenly Father. A profane use of the house of God must be just as offensive to God today as was the unclean and unholy use of the temple vessels. It seems quite apparent that desecration of the places of worship will incur the displeasure of the Father and bring judgments in consequence. While the houses of worship are dedicated to the worship and service of God, yet the real temples are our bodies. A desecration of these is far worse than a profane use of earthen vessels (1 Cor. 3:16, 17). How may these temples be profaned? Will intemperate uses of our bodies bring a corresponding measure of judgment?

Judgment Strikes. Judgment came to the Babylonians unexpectedly and it hit with such suddenness that even the girdles of the King's loins were loosened and his knees smote one against another. All biblical accounts of the principal judgments poured out on a disobedient and gainsaying people indicate that warning was given at some previous time, but when the judgment came it came with certainty and suddenness. Time to flee the evils of judgment is before the time of judgment, for when it strikes, it is too late. We have many examples before us of the follies of intemperance and excesses in riotous living that have brought an abrupt termination to what could, otherwise, have been fruitful lives.—C. E. R.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

What Drink Leads to

About seventy years more elapsed; Jeremiah's prophecies of disaster had come true.

Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon, at whose hands ruin had come to Judah, was dead. His son Belshazzar ruled, but without good results to his country, for he lived a sinful and wasteful life. A new power was arising in the East, that of the Medes and Persians, which finally was to conquer the Babylonian Empire. History repeating itself—a kingdom arises; gains territory and power; becomes proud, oppressive, and disobedient to God; goes down to ruin and oblivion.

The teacher may assign previously to several pupils the telling of this story. Belshazzar and his lords in drunken revelry using the cups from the temple; the sudden alarm on the King's face; the fear that swept over the hushed revelers; the shadowy fingers of a hand without a body writing upon the wall of the palace; the meaning of the words revealed by God through Daniel.

Did indulgence in wine that night make Belshazzar and his men braver to face the enemy that was even then entering the strongly fortified city? Is the statement true or false that the stimulating effect of drink is a good one in circumstances calling for endurance? Show that one's moral judgment is affected by drink; one's sense of decency and self-restraint.

Remember: Never allow the gates of your honor to become unguarded by the use of strong drink.—M. G.

JUNIOR CLASS

Text: Dan. 5:17-28. Topic: Daniel Interprets a Vision. Memory Verse: "And they have brought the vessels of his house before thee, and thou, and thy lords, thy wives, and thy concubines, have drunk wine in them."—Dan. 5:23.

Review. Select some child from the class to play the part of Jeremiah. Let him deliver the message to the class that Jeremiah gave the people.

Presentation of Lesson. In this lesson a very wicked king has had a vision. Verse 23 tells what things he had done. Verses 17-23 tell of this King's grandfather, Nebuchadnezzar. What had happened to him? Read Daniel 5:5 to get a picture of what Belshazzar the King saw. What was written below the hand (v. 25)? What did Daniel tell Belshazzar these words meant (vv. 26-28)? Read the rest of the chapter to see that Daniel had told the meaning correctly. Why did Belshazzar see this vision? Read Daniel 1:17 and then tell why Daniel was able to interpret the vision.

Memory Verse. Our memory verse tells why Belshazzar lost his kingdom. Read it and then repeat together.

Notebook. Draw a picture of Belshazzar's vision. Write the words, with their meanings, below the picture. Paste a picture of Daniel in your book. Under it write Daniel 1:17.

ANNUAL FALL MEETINGS AT BRUSH CREEK, OHIO

We are glad to announce that Bro. M. W. Lyon, pastor of the Golden Rule Church of God in Cleveland and former pastor of the Brush Creek Church, will be our speaker for the annual fall meetings November 3-17.

Any who can come from a distance to attend these meetings are whole-heartedly invited. Just drop us a card at 243 N. 2nd St., Tippicanoe City, Ohio, a day or two in advance and accommodations will be arranged.

Plan now for these meetings. They will soon be here—November 3-17.

S. E. Magaw, Pastor.

Our hearty congratulations are extended to Pastor J. R. Le Crone and his wife on the arrival in their home at Eden Valley, Minn., of a little daughter, Alice Faith, on October 5, 1935. We bid the young lady welcome and wish for her and her parents long, happy, and successful lives of Christian service.

GOLDEN RULE HOME

A farewell gathering was held at Golden Rule Home Monday night to extend the best wishes of the Home Family and the Oregon church community to Mr. and Mrs. Levi Mick, who, after more than three years of faithful and kindly service to those under their care, are leaving for their former home in Indiana. Sr. Mick's tender ministrations will be missed by those to whose comfort she has contributed so much. It is to be doubted that a more efficient man could be found to carry on the work of the Home farm and gardens than Mr. Mick has proven himself to be throughout the period of his management. The prayers and good wishes of the National Bible Institution go with our retiring matron and her husband.

An announcement concerning successors to Mr. and Mrs. Mick will be made in the near future.

CONFERENCE AND LOCAL SECRETARIES

The secretaries of state conferences are requested to submit lists of the ministers and evangelists whom they recognize as in good standing in their several states. Please give name and exact address in each instance.

Local congregations which are not affiliated with any state conference are also asked to send in the name and address of their pastor, and the names and addresses of any other ministers of the Church of God, retired or active, who are located in their communities and who are recognized as being in good standing among them.

The official list will be published early in November, so please get your lists in as early as possible.

G. E. Marsh, General Secretary.

SERIES AT LOCKWOOD

On Friday evening, Sept. 27, Bro. J. H. Anderson of Indiana began a special meeting at the Cedarville Church, about twelve miles north of Lockwood, Mo. The weather was ideal and large crowds were always present. During all of the services the best of attention was given to those wonderful messages of truth, which Bro. Anderson can so well deliver. All eyes were on the speaker and everyone seemed eagerly listening to those interesting, clear messages of the Bible. One sermon was delivered each evening during the week, but on Sunday there were services both morning and evening.

Bro. Anderson was accompanied by a daughter. There were also visiting sisters from Springfield, Mo. What a great pleasure it is for us to have others of like precious faith visiting in our homes.

Two previous meetings were held at this place by Bro. Anderson and each time there were good interest and large crowds. There were ten young people of this community baptized by him in the summer of 1934. We feel that his interesting sermons are a blessing bestowed upon the community, a blessing whereby many others may have an opportunity to hear God's Word and enter into the straight and narrow way that leads to life everlasting. Each and every one of those sermons are of the very best, of which one never tires hearing, sermons that lift one's mind from the cares and sorrows of this life and clearly point out the way through faith that leads to a glorious resurrection.

During the meeting it seemed that time was fleeing by too swiftly, for the week's meeting came to a close the evening of October 3, and Bro. Anderson left us the following morning. In saying good-bye to them it was with the hope that God would see fit for their return later on.

At this writing we are having a nice rain, of which we were badly in need.

Ethel Fyfe, Secretary.

BURR OAK, INDIANA

Rally Day is history in our church. Services began at 10 a. m. and continued throughout the day, with basket dinner.

There were features, promotion exercises, special music, and sermons by the writer. The sermon subjects were as follows: "A Great Revival," "The Kingdom at Hand," and "Prophet, Priest, and King." We had good audiences.

We are happy to introduce to the faith one whom we baptized, Beverly June Hardy, age 12, of Grovertown, Ind. Beverly is the daughter of Bro. and Sr. Hardy and granddaughter of Sr. Alice Maxey. Lord bless Beverly in her new walk of life, is our prayer.

The seven of our school who have received their gold button for perfect attendance during the past year are Marjorie Hatten, Marybelle Osborn, Carl Heiser, Ferris Zechiel, Leona Zechiel, Marguerite Zechiel, and Albert Overmyer. We congratulate these, and hope to see every one of them make it another year.

We hope to have in this community a real old-fashioned Church of God revival. Pray for us in our work here.

A. E. Hoskins, Pastor.

ARKANSAS CITY RALLY DAY AND DEDICATION A SUCCESS

Rally Day and the dedication of our church (Arkansas City, Kan.) October 6 were indeed a real homecoming. Our pastor, Sr. Le Crone, with the assistance of others, was untiring in her efforts to make the day a joyous, happy day for all. The church was beautifully decorated with palms, ferns, and flowers. The Monerief Greenhouse furnished the palms and ferns, and also gave a large basket of dahlias. Others brought flowers, and all added to the atmosphere of welcome.

At 10 a. m. Sunday school was held. At this time, before and after the lesson, a program by the school was given consisting of special numbers by the choir and Girls' Class. There was a solo by Betty Mary Chaplin, also a guitar solo by our young Bro. Firman Reed of Attiea, Kan. These numbers were all appreciated. Bro. Reed's guitar solo, "In the Garden," touched every heart. At the close of Sunday school the pastor gave a sermon, "Why Are We a Church?" After the sermon, all assembled in the basement for the basket dinner and a fellowship meeting. There were over 100 present, and we certainly were glad to meet again so many of like precious faith.

At 2 p. m. we again assembled in the auditorium for the dedication services. The pastor was assisted by Bros. John Fiske of Milan, Kan., and George Waters of Newkirk, Okla. Bro. Fiske's subject was "What This Church Means to the Isolated Members," Bro. Waters', "What the Church Means to Us." The pastor's sermon followed: "The Temple." At its close all bowed while the dedication prayer was given. Before closing the services an invitation was extended to those who might desire to dedicate themselves to the Lord. One lady came forward for baptism and was baptized by Bro. Waters. We pray she may continue steadfast to the end.

I neglected to mention a nice reading given by Miss Georgia Long which was enjoyed by all.

Sunday evening service was held at 7:30, and consisted of a Communion service and a short sermon by the pastor.

So ended a day long to be remembered by our church. Sr. Le Crone, our faithful evangelist, is a worker, and our church people here are all cooperating with her. They have organized a Dorcas Society, have quilted one quilt, and have other work on hand to do. They meet on Wednesday afternoons. Choir practice is held each Thursday night.

Mrs. A. J. Chaplin.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

As these lines appear in print we expect to be in the midst of our fall meetings. Bro. James A. Patrick of Ashland, Ohio, the visiting speaker for the occasion, was the first pastor of South Lawn Church. He has many friends in this community who are glad for this opportunity to see him again and hear the gospel message as he proclaims it. A prayer service is being conducted in the church basement each night immediately preceding the sermon hour upstairs. We ask also for the prayers of the brotherhood that God may richly bless this effort.

October 27 is to be Sunday school Rally Day, as well as the ninth anniversary of the church. The various classes have been doing splendid work.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

MICHIGAN FALL CONFERENCE

The Michigan Fall Conference came through with colors flying to give much spiritual uplift to the Blanchard Church of God. The fellowship of those of faith who were present from a distance gave much encouragement to us all. We pray that all who were present might have received a blessing from the Lord. Bro. Sydney Magaw's sermons were well put and inspiring. As fruit of the meetings the Lord added four young ladies to the church. We introduce to the household of God, as sisters in Christ, the Misses Hesper Egbert, Opal Bush, Edith Smith, and Faye Marston, all of Blanchard. They went into the waters of baptism on Sunday afternoon, Oct. 6, administered by their pastor. Brethren, pray that their faith may remain until the day that Christ shall change them in the likeness of His glorious change. C. A. Smead, Pastor.

From October 1-6 it was our pleasure to again work with Bro. Smead in the Michigan Fall Conference assembled at Blanchard. Those who accompanied us were Bros. Rufus Curtis, Howard Pearson, Ralph Brown, and Srs. Eunice Pearson and the wife, Mrs. Magaw. All enjoyed the conference, and will ever remember the hospitality of the Blanchard brethren.

It was a pleasure to again meet a number of the Grand Rapids brethren at the conference, and the Hatten family of Culver, Ind. Elders F. L. Austin and F. E. Siple were present a part of the time.

Bro. Smead is doing a good work at Blanchard as pastor of the church, and we pray him and the congregation a continuance of God's favor. S. E. Magaw.

FROM SISTER E. C. RAILSBACK

To the Household of Faith:
After an absence of over six months, it seemed good to get back to the "roaring old town" again, if only for a short but very busy period. Especially did we enjoy the gathering of the brethren in this part of the Master's vineyard and also the reception in the home of the Bro. Nokes family on Berean night. After the banquet a very enjoyable program was presented.

We found Sr. Calkins, who had recently passed the 89th milestone in her life's journey, still a regular attendant at the Sunday morning services. Her zeal for the truth and steadfastness in the promotion of the work, are an example that others would do well to follow. I wish to mention, too, the faithfulness of the Bleasdale family during the time of our absence. Those who feel the responsibility of holding up the truth in these precarious times, sometimes have reason to feel disheartened because of the apparent indifference of some who seemingly should feel the same responsibility. Let us not be too eager to class them with the lukewarm of this Laodicean age, for we know that many have burdens that they are hiding from the church and the world.

We truly were disappointed, however, in not seeing more of the local as well as isolated brethren in attendance at the annual conference October 6. Sr. Jessie Reid of Pasadena is confined to her bed with rheumatism. Bro. and Sr. Hatch of Santa Ana were present, and we rejoiced to see them looking so well. Sr. Jessie M. B. Kauffman always lends enthusiasm to a meeting, and she thinks the isolated should make plans to attend all these conferences and spend the day together in communing with one another concerning the promises and planning for the furtherance of the Lord's work. We were glad also to greet Bro. Will Reed of Riverside.

Our plans for the future are to leave Los Angeles November 9, stopping at Tulare and going on north the 10th, accompanied by Bro. Wayne and Sr. Georgia Thompson, to the home of Sr. Mary White of near Fresno, where Bro. E. E. Groat and I will conduct both a morning and afternoon service with brethren in that vicinity. Besides the Thompsons of Tulare and the Groats of Hanford, there are Sr. Mariah Truesdell and daughter, Sr. Myrtle Paul, and Sr. Bernice Roberson in Fresno; then Sr. Mattie Vineyard, Sr. Mary White, Bro. and Sr. Gordon McIrvin and three daughters in the rural district near Fresno; Bro. Marion Calder of Oleander; and Sr. Eva Page and son of Los Banos, all of whom we hope to see at this meeting.

On the 11th we plan to be with Bro. Renner of near Wheatland; Red Bluff the 12th; Medford the 13th; arriving in Corvallis the 14th if the conference board decides to have me spend the first period there instead of Felida.

If there ever was a time when the Christian should be zealous in the cause of truth and righteousness, that time is the present. May we strive to make our calling and election sure. May we grow in grace and in knowledge and come off victors in the race for eternal life. I have had several requests for short articles for the columns of The Restitution Herald and I hope to find time to comply with this need in the near future.

In His service,
Emma C. Railsback.

Perhaps You Have Wanted to Help— Now Your Opportunity Is Here

This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come.

By order of the General Conference, an evangelistic fund to provide for carrying the gospel to new and isolated localities under the auspices of the National Bible Institution has been established. It was, however, understood by the Conference that no contributions to this fund were to be taken as replacing those made to the running expenses of the Institution, but were to be an addition to the usual donations to the general cause of the church.

Here is the opportunity for which many have been waiting, an opportunity to help in telling the world about the coming kingdom and all it represents. Work will be started as soon as a sufficient fund is in reserve to cover operating costs. It is your chance, and it is your responsibility.

Remember, however, that the National Bible Institution needs funds for its present work. To carry on the paper, the Sunday school quarterly, and tract publication requires money. Send a donation toward current expenses at the same time you contribute to the evangelistic campaign. The paper reaches five thousand people every week through one thousand subscribers. No one evangelist can do that. Write us a letter or use the coupon below.

The Concision

By Norman John MacLeod

"Beware of dogs, beware of evil workers, beware of the concision. For we are the circumcision, which worship God in the spirit and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh."—Phil. 3:2, 3.

BEWARE of the concision." How many people would know what was meant by such a warning? What is the concision? In order to beware of such a group we would have to know what they are!

God made a covenant with Noah after the flood; concerning that covenant we read: "And God said, This is the token of the covenant which I have between me and you and every living creature that is with you for perpetual generations: I do set my bow in the cloud, and it shall be for a token of a covenant between me and the earth."—Gen. 9:12, 13. The bow should appear in the clouds as a token of God's word through Noah. The token bore a symbolic relationship: the sun shining through the storm makes the rainbow.

Many centuries before the time of Christ circumcision had been given to Abraham as a token of the covenant that God made with him: "This is my covenant, which ye shall keep, between me and you and thy seed after thee; Every man child among you shall be circumcised . . . and it shall be a token of the covenant betwixt me and you."—Gen. 17:10, 11. In like manner each of the more important covenants of the Bible had some sort of a token of recognition connected with it.

Circumcision was taken over as the token of the Mosaic Covenant. Through the course of the centuries of the sojourn of the children of Israel in their land, their captivity, and consequent return, the rite of circumcision had become an empty form, until in the days of the Apostle Paul it was a degraded institution. He, therefore, derided it as a degenerate custom and called it the "concision"; and added that we are really the circumcision "which worship God in the spirit and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh." Circumcision in the flesh made with hands was not the real circumcision but "circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter; whose praise is not of men, but of God" (Rom. 2:29). "Circumcise therefore the foreskin of your heart, and be no more stiffnecked" (Deut. 10:16) was in the vein of thought which Moses directed to the attention of the children of Israel. And again, this time prophetically: "And the Lord thy God will circumcise thine heart, and the heart of thy seed, to love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, that thou mayest live."—Deut. 30:6. The attitude of the heart was fully as important as the rite of circumcision in order that it might be effective. But that did not make the rite unnecessary because the heart was right. The Apostle Paul shows that the faith of Abraham came first, then circumcision as a seal of that faith. The circumcision came afterward. But the token of the new covenant is baptism in Christ.

Baptism was an old Jewish rite that had been practiced for centuries as a religious ceremony of purification. John the Baptist used it as a token of repentance in preparation for the ministry of Jesus. John's baptism served for that period. But following the resurrection of Jesus, the rite of baptism became a token of the New Covenant.

When it became my pleasure to instruct aliens in the institutions of our government that they might become American citizens, I found a peculiar situation. I was not allowed to give information to individual students as to their status before the law in naturalization. No law shall be retroactive: a prospective citizen remains under the jurisdiction of the naturalization laws that were in effect when he first applied for citizenship. That is somewhat the situation under the various covenants with God. Only with this difference: a token which is effective during one period becomes ineffective during another period for the same person.

Apollos was a mighty preacher among the Jews. He had faith; he had zeal; he had undergone repentance; and apparently he lived a consecrated life: but he did not understand the way of Christ quite fully. He did not understand the force and significance of Jesus' death, burial, and resurrection: the baptism (Please turn to Page Nine)

Abreast of the Times

President for Spiritual Mobilization

"I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal."—1 Corinthians 3:1.

NEW YORK, Oct. 12.—President Franklin D. Roosevelt is taking an active interest in the efforts the National Committee for Religious and Welfare Recovery is putting forth to bring about a nation-wide spiritual revival in America. In a recent letter addressed to Mr. Walter W. Head, chairman of the Committee, the President said:

"America was established with a firm reliance on the protection of divine providence and throughout its history has acknowledged its obligation to almighty God. As we seek the abundant life for our people, we must realize in the last analysis that this can come only as there is a deeper realization of moral and spiritual values."

The National Committee for Religious and Welfare Recovery is composed of three hundred leaders of Christian and Jewish religious bodies. Among other persons of note who have manifested an interest in the campaign for "spiritual mobilization" are former Governor Alfred E. Smith; Mayor La Guardia; Solomon M. Stroock, president of the American Jewish Committee; Dr. John H. Finley of The New York Times; and Governor Herbert Lehman.

December is to be known as "Stewardship Month," during which an "Every Member Canvass" will be made by the various churches and synagogues to urge every communicant to attend religious services. "Golden Rule Week" will be celebrated December 8-15.

However much we may be inclined to applaud any effort to bring about a religious revival in this country, we are not over-sanguine as to the prospects of success. Something that reaches much deeper than a man-made "drive" is needed to arouse the spiritually dead among both Jews and Christians. When the Lord comes there will be a genuine spiritual awakening among all nations, but until that happy event takes place we may expect nothing better on the part of the public than a growing indifference toward all religious appeals.

Drive Jews From Business

"No man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark."—Revelation 13:17.

BERLIN, Germany, Oct. 15.—The last hope of the Jewish business men of Germany for the right to carry on commercially was shattered by a speech recently delivered by Wilhelm Frick, Minister of the Interior in the Nazi Government, in which he announced the passage of new laws limiting the economic activity of the Jews. Herr Frick declared the purpose of the new laws was to obtain "a clean separation" between Jews and Germans in the business life of the nation. The spokesman for the Government hailed the fact that the Nuremberg laws recently passed had ended the 150 years of Jewish emancipation inspired by the French Revolution.

"These laws serve the community of the German people," Frick said. "We do not want to exterminate the Jews by violence. We merely want a clean separation. We say," he continued, "Germany for Germans, but not for Jews. That is the beginning of a tolerable peace. The Jewish question cannot be solved by broken window panes and other acts of violence, and I want to warn all racial comrades against pursuing a Jewish policy of their own. The State has assumed absolute leadership. Laws will have to be passed for the limitation of Jewish business activities, to eliminate all ground for individual action through boycott measures, the posting of pickets before a Jewish concern, or the pasting of placards on Jewish display windows." The address was greeted, according to the German press, with "roaring applause and jubilant acclaim."

British Fortify Palestine Port

"Neither did Asher drive out the inhabitants of Accho (modern Acre)."—Judges 1:31.

ACRE, Palestine, Oct. 19.—This ancient port, the authentic history of which goes back to the time of the Egyptian conquerors (1500 B. C.) who named Acre, or Accho, among the cities they subdued, is now being fortified by the British in anticipation of possible war with Italy. The city has been closely associated in the records of the past with Tyre and Sidon and has experienced many sieges in the progress of the centuries, having passed successively through the hands of the Egyptians, Grecians, Romans, Arabians, Crusaders, Turks, and British.

Preparation for Sorrow

By Lyman Booth

THERE are none who may read these lines but have, at one time or another, felt the pangs of sorrow. All have passed under the discipline of sorrow. Hearts have felt its heavy stroke, eyes dimmed, and cheeks moistened by the overflowing flood of tears. People have sought consolation in various ways. To those who have felt the lighter afflictions of life, the consolation herein offered may appear insufficient; but I hope that those upon whom the heavier stroke has fallen may find relief from sorrow and tears through the power and comfort of Christian endurance.

We should not be unmindful for the numerous blessings which we receive daily from God's gracious bounty, nor should we complain of the trials we meet. We should be thankful for the blessings, and endure the trials with patience. Though we may realize the reasonableness of this attitude we cannot help feeling that life is oftentimes a severe discipline of sorrow. We are reminded by the Scriptures to remember the days of darkness which will surely come, and that they will be many. Not only should we remember this solemn fact, but we should also make daily preparations to meet them—the sad days of adversity, suffering, disappointment, and bereavement. They are common to all men, and when we feel the best fortified against them they may be nearest. We need not boast of our security and strength within ourselves. If we do, we are leaning upon a broken staff. If we reach the point where we think we need no defense against those things that mar our pleasure and happiness, sorrow and affliction may be at the door and find us unprepared for their visit.

It is, therefore, a matter of prudence and wisdom that we be prepared to meet them, let them come when they may. Whether we be actively engaged in our daily duties, or when we retire to the fireside when the chill of winter is around us, we should, with foresight, look to the preparation for temporal and spiritual needs. We should not only provide stores of light and heat, but for pleasant thoughts and sweet memories—for affections, childlike faith, for hope in God, for resignation to His will, for a will and energy to do and a firm resolution to endure whatever trial may be given as our part in life to bear. With these thoughts in mind let us look for some of the sources of comfort where we may find light in the days of darkness, which may be many. When we shall have learned from our experience or that of others what are the consolations which give permanent strength, hope, and peace, then we shall see more clearly the necessary preparation to be made.

It sometimes occurs that well intended comfort is offered by those who do not fully understand the depths of sorrow to which the heart may go, and the sorrow is increased by the efforts to console.

There are three sources from which permanent comfort may be derived. They become more effective and render more perfect peace in proportion to the severity of the calamity under which one suffers. The first is a clear conscience; second, the Christian faith; third, the performance of duty. A clear conscience in this connection is one that is void of offense toward God and man. One of perfection which few ever attain, and which is a boastful claim on the part of some to make. A clear conscience is the result of a life well spent and the knowledge of a feeling of self-respect before men, and of a confiding hope before God to which we are entitled by an orderly life. By it we have the consciousness of inward strength and steadfast purpose which no other agency can bestow. It makes us realize that no calamity comes as a punishment, but rather as a discipline. By it we are fortified against the stings of misfortune, and assured that though we may feel disappointed we are not destroyed. In proportion as we brood over wrongs in our dealings we are made weaker under the burden of sorrow, and in proportion as we feel that we have not deserved God's blessings their withdrawals cause the greater distress of mind. Though we may not accuse ourselves of guilt, yet if we are conscious of negligence, and that we have wasted our time and talent, that we have been interested mainly in worldly pursuits, that God has been left out of our

God's Purpose

God is working His purpose out
As year succeeds to year;
God is working His purpose out,
And the time is drawing near.
Nearer and nearer draws the time,
The time that shall surely be,
When the earth shall be filled
With the glory of God
As the waters cover the sea.

From utmost east to utmost west,
Where're man's foot hath trod,
By the mouth of many messengers,
Goes forth the voice of God,
"Give ear to Me, ye continents;
Ye isles, give ear to Me,
That the earth may be filled
With the glory of God
As the waters cover the sea."

What can we do to work God's work,
To prosper and increase
The brotherhood of all mankind,
The reign of the Prince of Peace?
What can we do to hasten the time,
The time that shall surely be,
When the earth shall be filled
With the glory of God
As the waters cover the sea?

A Study in Punctuation Marks

By Robert G. Huggins

"Verily I say unto thee, To day shalt thou be with me in paradise."—Luke 23:43.

OUR present system of punctuation came gradually into use after the invention of printing. Aldus Manutius, an Italian printer in Venice, invented punctuation marks and italic type, which is named after him Aldine. He was born in 1447, and died in 1515.

The importance of punctuation marks may be easily and clearly presented in story form:

"Oh, dear!" sighed Warren, as he came in from school one day. "I wish we didn't have to learn so much about periods and commas and semicolons and such things. I hate them!"

Mamma laid down her sewing and said: "Why do you hate them, Warren?"

"Why, it's so hard to remember to use them; and besides, I don't think they are of much use. I don't see why we couldn't write sentences without putting in any punctuation marks."

Mamma smiled, and then, rising from her chair, she went over to the desk and got out a piece of paper and a pencil. Then she wrote: "The little turkey strutted about the yard and ate corn half an hour after his head was cut off."

"Why, Mumsie, how funny!" exclaimed Warren, when he read it. "How could a turkey walk around eating corn without any head?"

"He couldn't," replied Mamma, "and yet I have written just what I intended to write. I have, however, left out all punctuation marks."

Then she bent down and punctuated the sentence. It then read: "The little turkey strutted about the yard and ate corn; half an hour after, his head was cut off."

"Oh, I see!" cried Warren. And then and there he resolved to learn all he could about punctuation marks.

USE AND MISUSE OF PUNCTUATION

Punctuation marks were invented to help interpret the meaning of the writer. When correctly used they are immensely important. They clarify the meaning of sentences; but like all other good things, they may be misused and perverted. Our text reads in the Common Version: "Verily I say unto thee, To day shalt thou be with me in paradise." "To day" is an adverb of time, and may qualify either the preceding "I say," as, "Verily I say unto thee to day," or the following verb "shalt be," as, "To day shalt thou be with me in paradise." Punctuated either way, the sentence is grammatical.

A sentence, however, may be grammatical, and punctuated so it will be clear in thought, and still the declaration may not be true. Because a statement is expressed grammatically, it does not follow that what it declares is so. The rules of grammar cannot answer this question: Since Luke 23:43 may be grammatically translated and punctuated, "Verily I say unto thee, To day shalt thou be with me in paradise"; or "Verily I say unto thee to day, Thou shalt be with me in paradise": how are we to determine which of these two renderings is correct? Let an illustration answer the question.

CORRECT PUNCTUATION DETERMINED BY TRUTH

The Catholic Bible, translated from the Latin Vulgate, usually called the Douay Version, translates and punctuates Hebrews 10:12 as follows: "But this man offering one sacrifice for sins, for ever sitteth on the right hand of God." Our version of the text reads: "But this man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins for ever, sat down on the right hand of God." The difference, as you will notice, is only a comma. The Catholic Version puts it after "sins"; ours, after "for ever."

Now why does the Catholic put the comma after "sins"? To make the "for ever" relate to Christ sitting at God's right hand. He "for ever sitteth"! Were he to put it after "for ever," he would read: "But this man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sins for ever"—and his "sacrifice of the mass" would go up in smoke. He could not add to the "One Sacrifice" of Christ, millions of sacrifices of the mass Sunday after Sunday. By changing the comma he makes "for ever" qualify the present position of Christ at God's right: "For ever sitteth on the right hand of God"! The sentence is grammatical enough; but we know that the statement is absolutely false. For Stephen saw Christ after His ascension "standing on the right hand of God" (Acts 7:56); a posture He could not assume if He "for ever sitteth" there.

PUNCTUATION OF LUKE 23:43 ERRONEOUS

Let me remind you again how the sentence in Luke 23:43 reads: "Verily I say unto thee, To day shalt thou be with me in paradise." Do you ask how we know the punctuation is wrong? We answer frankly: So read and so understood, it reduces the rich promise of Christ to abject poverty. It makes the promise both irrelevant and parsimonious. Irrelevant because it ignores the coming kingdom of which the dying suppliant speaks; niggardly because it promises but a few hours of fellowship with Christ. It not only beggars the promise; it contradicts the word of God outright. If we ask, Where was Christ in the interval between His death and resurrection? inspired men, infallible angels, and the Lord Himself answer in unison. Paul says:

"He also descended first into the lower parts of the earth. He that descended is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens."—Eph. 4:9, 10. The angels say: "Ye seek Jesus, which was crucified. He is not here: for he is risen, as he said. Come, see the place where the Lord lay."—Matt. 28:5, 6. Weigh the words of the Lord Himself: "As Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly; so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth."—Matt. 17:40. He added to these words of prediction the following after His resurrection: "Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father"; and went on to say, "I ascend unto my Father, and your Father" (John 20:17). To the three days and nights when He was

Spiritual Values

By C. E. Randall

THE Church of God ministry are awakening to their responsibilities as leaders in no uncertain way. Recognition and appreciation of this stewardship are bound to and will find a reaction in the labors of these servants of God. Much of their ability and strength has been lying dormant because there has been no fountainhead to challenge the exercise of these powers and encourage them in the use of these latent values. Our last General Conference did more to arouse our slumbering spirits than anything that has happened in the past decade. The ministers present during this spiritual retreat left for their fields of labor fired with a new zeal and passion for the proclamation of the gospel of the kingdom. A new determination has gripped their hearts. An optimism born of adversity is beckoning them forward. A spiritual renaissance is on the threshold of the Church of God. We are marching forward to victory for the Lord.

There is only one force that can deter and prevent the ministers from injecting this renewed vision of service into the blood stream of the church life, and that force is the membership. It is to this group that I am directing my appeal in this particular article. Nothing will cool the spirits, discourage the hopes, and stifle this newborn desire for service any quicker than an unresponsive, unsympathetic, and indifferent laity. Our ministers are offering themselves as living sacrifices for the spiritual and eternal welfare of those with whom they are laboring. Their service is for you in the name of and for the glory of God. Viewing with amazement and with fear the present trend toward apostasy of their membership, they are grooming themselves in spiritual and material values that through a higher perfection of these they may be able to fan the flames of love and obedience to the Christ in the face of world-wide deflection from Christianity and in preparation for the sure return of Christ, which we know to be imminent. As shepherds of the flock we are responsible to the Father for your welfare. Your Christian standing is a matter of grave concern to us, and our oversight of your spiritual life should be recognized with sobriety and meditative consideration. Ministerial efforts to meet the crisis in the spiritual organism of our body should receive the heartiest cooperation of every faithful member. Principles for the development of spirituality in personalities are of more prime importance than the trivial affairs relating to church organization. Therefore, let me urge upon all members of the Church of God to give heed to the weightier matters which the ministers are placing special emphasis upon, such as spirituality, evangelism, and intimate communion with the Father; not that they are beside themselves and should be held down, but do as Israel of old did with Moses on the mount—hold up their hands, and victory will be yours to enjoy. Don't dampen, but fan their spiritual enthusiasm into a flame that will envelope every member of the Church of God and make them a burning bush that cannot be consumed by the flood of apostasy that is sweeping over the world.

In a recent issue of THE HERALD under the caption, "The Cause and Cure of Hard Times," appears this statement: "At the present time, however, men are turning away from God. There is a noticeable lack of interest in spiritual things. Attendance on religious services has fallen off; there is little or no response to evangelistic appeals, and men are indifferent, if not antagonistic, to spiritual efforts of every kind." The whole article was very timely and should be read by every member of the church. The Church of God is not free from this depression apostasy. Evangelism has lost considerable hold on us as a people. To change the thinking of our people on such a vital subject is no small task. If we can revive the evangelistic spirit that once permeated us, we will again witness new fields being opened and larger numbers accepting the distinctive message of the Church of God. An evangelistic crusade of national scope cannot be successfully promoted unless the sympathy and support of the laity is given the ministers. Sincere cooperation between the ministers and the lay members in an intensive evangelistic effort would swing wide the gates of blessing upon our church work. If our men are willing to preach the message, give them opportunity. If we have a distinct message unknown to the major portion of Christendom, which we have, let pew and pulpit unite with solemn purpose to extend this message into undeveloped fields. Brethren, bring up your forces and flank the minister on every side in his evangelistic efforts.

The Basis of Prayer

THERE are always smiles where there is a family of small children. Some of the heartiest of these smiles come out of the common, everyday occurrences of life. We had spent some time teaching the children that they were not to ask for what they wanted at the table, but were to wait quietly until they were served. Parents often have to tell their children a hundred times over exactly what is to be done. A hundred times, simply because ninety-nine times is not sufficient. Then we have hopes that the lesson is beginning to be learned.

Some months passed and, one day, we were reading the 11th chapter of Luke at our family worship. We came to the 9th verse, where I read these words of Christ, "And I say unto you, Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you."

I do not believe that I was able to finish the entire verse. A little maiden, then aged 6, turned wide eyes toward me, and interrupting the reading, said, "O no, Daddy. It is not, 'Ask, and it shall be given you'; it is, 'Don't ask, and it shall be given you.'"

In order to satisfy her I had to explain, carefully, the difference between family discipline and God's orders concerning prayer.

Yet, today, there are many thousands of people who have an entirely wrong idea about prayer. The little girl may mix her table manners with the thought of approach to God, but what is far more tragic, men of the world mix a thousand false ideas of the ordinary life of man in with their ideas of what prayer approach to God should be.

Once more we are forced to turn to the revelation of God, where we find His thoughts high above ours, even as the heavens are higher than the earth. And we ask a question that draws at our very hearts as hunger gnaws the vitals. For there are myriads of unsaved people who have false ideas about prayer and myriads of Christians who are leading prayerless, careless lives, missing the marvelous fellowship which God has for those who are willing to recognize the principles of prayer which He has laid down in His Word, clear and plain, for all who will read to see.

We will spend but a brief moment in reminding you of the definite teaching of God's Word, that He does not hear the prayers of everybody. Unbelievers cry their desires to the heavens, but while Satan may bring about some response to some of their petitions, there are the moments of great deception, and the Almighty seems to turn a deaf ear to their cry.

In fact, if we turn to the words of Christ, we have a statement so definite, so formal, that it is a wonder that men have not understood the barrier that God has put between Himself and some men. Christ said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me."—John 14:6. Repeat it. No man cometh unto the Father, but by Me.

Now, do not quarrel with the preacher who brings this message. That would be as foolish as quarreling with a telegraph messenger who brings bad news in a telegram. If you do not like what I am about to say, your quarrel is with the Lord Jesus Christ. It was He who said that no man could ever come to the Father, except through Himself, Jesus Christ. There are two ways in which men can seek to approach God. They can seek Him in salvation. Here the Word is definite. There is no salvation except through Jesus Christ. This, of course, is the very heart of Christianity.

There is another phase of this truth, however, which has not been understood in its full significance. There are many men who seek to approach God in prayer. Christ says that no man can come unto the Father, except by Himself, Jesus Christ. There it is, plainly and definitely stated. If your prayer is not made through Jesus Christ, it is not a prayer that will go to God.

During the war, clergymen on both sides of the great conflict lifted up their voices in national prayers, made to the God of forces. But our God, the God and Father of the Lord Jesus Christ, did not receive those prayers. Every week there are men who meet in legislative chambers, lodges, and other meetings where, for some reason or other, there is the offering of a prayer. More often than not, the name of Jesus Christ is left out in order to avoid hurting the feelings of any who might be susceptible. Do not quarrel with the preacher for saying it; it is Jesus Christ who says that those prayers do not go to God.

Every day, the world over, there are people who pray in the midst of their religious form and ceremony. Some pray to one or another of a group of mediators that have been authorized by a church organization. Christ says that these prayers are not received by God. Think, then, the next time you go to pray. Say to yourself, "Is this prayer I am about to make a prayer that goes to God or to one of Satan's minions? Is this prayer in keeping with the declaration of our Lord, that no man cometh unto the Father, except by Him?"

But now, I want to take Christians, who pray in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, into a study of the Word of God that will show us why many prayers, prayers made in the name of Jesus Christ, are hindered, or unanswered.

In the book of Isaiah we have a great principle of prayer stated in one of the latter chapters of the prophecy. "Behold, the Lord's hand is not shortened, that it cannot save; neither his ear heavy, that it cannot hear: but your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear."—Isa. 59:1, 2. Here, perhaps, lies the chief explanation for the fruitlessness of much Christian praying. In the first flush of a joyful Christian life there have been attention to the Word of God, zeal for prayer, and earnestness in seeking God's will. Then sin has been allowed to enter the life. The prayer life is hindered. The Christian grows cold. His prayers become mere form. He no longer knows the penetrating power that will take Him through to the very throne of God with that piercing insistence, based upon the promises of the Word, that will not let go until the blessing has been received.

The next time that your prayer seems to be unanswered, do not conclude, hastily, that the object of your prayer was not according to God's will, and that, therefore, you are not to receive it. Conclude rather that there is something wrong with your heart life. In the 84th Psalm, David said, "The Lord God is a sun and shield: the Lord will give grace and glory: no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly." If you pray and do not receive that for which you pray, there are two possible conclusions. The one is that you are not praying for that which God would consider for your good. The other conclusion is that you are not walking uprightly.

Examine yourself in your praying. Your own prayer life has become powerless? Do not put the blame off on God and think that He is unkind and unloving. Do not think that His list of good things is a narrowly restricted list. Think, rather, that you are not walking uprightly. Think that your iniquity has separated you and your God. Think that it is your sins which have hid His face from you, that He will not hear.

In one of the old hymns of the church,

"Sun of my soul! Thou Savior dear,
It is not night when Thou be near. . . ."

there is a couplet which expresses this great truth in a way that will bring it to our hearts with force. The poet says,

"O may no earth-born cloud arise
To hide Thee from Thy servant's eyes."

The clouds that hide the sun from our eyes are not our creation; but the clouds which hide our God from us are always clouds of our own making. It is impossible for our Lord to be hidden from us, except it be by some mist which arises from our own hearts.

But let us be more specific. Sin is a short word, but it has many different meanings. What are the sins, mentioned in the Word of God, which arise with such a clamor about the throne of God that He refuses to listen to our cries until we are willing to have these sins covered with the sacrifice of Christ and fellowship restored through His forgiving grace? One of the characteristic sins which hinders prayer, is the sin of unbelief. We read in the revised translation of the Epistle of James, "If any of you lacketh wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all liberally and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing doubting: for he that doubteth is like the surge of the sea driven by the wind and tossed. For let not that man think that he shall receive anything of the Lord."—James 1:5-7. This refers, of course, to the claiming of promises which are made in the Word of God. It does not mean that there will never be doubt concerning the will of God in something we are making a matter of prayer.

But in all those hundreds of cases where prayer should follow the Word of God there must not be the sin of unbelief. For to doubt the Word of God is to make God a liar. He has said so Himself in no uncertain terms (1 John 5:10). We have a list of about fifty definite promises where God has told us to pray for certain things in connection with our relationship with Him, our growth in His Word and work, and also, concerning material blessings which He desires to give us. The sin of unbelief in any of these cases can destroy our prayer power and hinder the coming of the answer to us.

A second sin that is mentioned, specifically, as a hindrance to answered prayer, is the sin of the unforgiving spirit. It is in the Gospel according to Mark that we read these words of Christ, "When ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have ought against any; that your Father also which is in heaven may forgive you your trespasses. But if ye do not forgive, neither will your Father which is in heaven forgive your trespasses."—Mark 11:25, 26. To those who have not accepted Christ as Savior we must give warning that this, or any other specification, does not apply in their case. For the unbeliever there is but one hindrance—the lack of new life in Christ through being born again. But to the Christian, to the one who has been given the right to become a child of God (John 1:12), this word may reveal the center of your difficulty. Do you hold a grudge against some believer? Have you bitterness in your heart toward some one that you have not been willing to let God remove? That is the reason why the heavens seem as brass above you. Answered prayer is on the basis of our fellowship with Christ, and there cannot be true fellowship with Him if we have an unforgiving spirit. We have little sympathy with that kind of condescension which promises to forgive, but says that it will not forget. Where there is the true love of Christ there is the fruit of that love. We must not forget that love "beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. Love never faileth" (1 Cor. 13:7).

Job received very bad treatment from his counselors who called themselves his friends, but who were not. In the closing chapter of that stupendous epic we find that "the Lord turned the captivity of Job, when he prayed for his friends: also the Lord gave Job twice as much as he had before" (Job 42:10). It was when Job's heart was cleansed from rancor toward those three kill-joys who have become known, ironically, as Job's comforters, that God broke through and performed miracles on his behalf.

Still another sin that God says is a cause of unanswered prayer is the sin of family discord. This may surprise some, but God has revealed it to us through the writings of Peter. We read, "Even as Sara obeyed Abraham, calling him lord: whose daughters ye are, as long as ye do well, and are not afraid with any amazement. Likewise, ye husbands, dwell with them according to knowledge, giving honour unto the wife, as unto the weaker vessel, and as being heirs together of the grace of life; that your prayers be not hindered."—1 Peter 3:6, 7. This word is addressed, primarily, to the husbands. There is, undoubtedly, the analogy which belongs to the wife also. But the literal teaching of this verse is that husbands' prayers are hindered because they do not have that consideration for their wives which is due them.

Ministers and doctors soon learn to know the real reasons that are behind the excuses of "incompatibility" which are given to the courts as ground for divorce. Few people realize, perhaps, the total of bestiality which exists in the relationships that should be fine and heavenly. This cheapness may be understandable in those who make no claim to spiritual life in Christ. But for those who are Christ's, there is no excuse. The body of the believer becomes the temple of the Holy Spirit and Christ's tenderness must possess us in all of life. If we do not yield to the life of the Spirit within, God tells us that this is a hindrance to our prayers. It may be that God can use this hint at this moment to bring warmth and love back into Christian homes where coldness has come, and that the prayer power of husbands and wives can be restored to full communion with God.

Then, further, we find that the Word of God tells us that our prayers are hindered because they are offered with selfish motives. We read in the Epistle of James, "Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may spend it in your pleasures."—James 4:3, R. V. In the Old Testament there is a verse which seems opposed to this, but which really teaches the same thing. We read in the Psalms, "Delight thyself also in the Lord; and he shall give thee the desires of thine heart."—Psalm 37:4.

Here is the promise of the very desires of our hearts. Yet the New Testament lesson tells us that we do not receive the things which we ask, because we ask from selfish motives, that the answer may be consumed upon our own pleasures. The solution to the difficulty lies in the very nature of God. If people understood God there would be no difficulties at all. What is the basis of prayer? When God answers prayer is it that He is handing something to a child to keep it quiet? Is it a question of divine whim or fantasy? Of course not. The understanding of the nature of God would remove all these difficulties. We would then see that God is a God of love and grace, and that He desires, indeed, to give us all blessings. No father and mother ever wanted to give gifts to their own children as much as God desires to bless to overflowing all of His creatures. But there are multitudes who will not come in by the door which He has opened in Christ Jesus. The holiness of God will not allow men to come in by any other way. The justice, the holiness, the righteousness of God must be satisfied. It is only the death of the Lord Jesus Christ that performs this work. But among those who have believed in Him there are still multitudes who do not realize that prayer is not merely a nice way to get something for nothing. Every gift you received cost somebody something. Salvation is a gift, yet it cost God the death of Christ. Every movement of power from God on our behalf is by virtue of what He has accomplished on the cross, so that all that we have and are comes from God's grace. Whenever we pray and are answered, the answer comes to us as a purchase of the blood of Jesus Christ. This is the meaning of "in Jesus' name." To use the name of Jesus in a prayer other than this way, is as bad as forging some one's name to a check.

It is when we delight ourselves in the God of the Lord Jesus Christ that we shall receive the desires of our hearts. For when we delight ourselves in Him we shall not have any desires that are apart from His will. Realizing that anything I receive from God must be given to me because of the sufferings of my Lord, will I go to Him and ask for something that will not be in accordance with His will? Will I ask for that which is merely a selfish desire? Where there is surrender to the will of God, there is delight in the person of God. Where there is delight in God, there is understanding of God, and a desire to please Him. Where there is a desire to please Him, there is a harmony with His will that brings us into the fullness of prayer power. For it is He Himself who tells us through John that "this is the confidence that we have in him, that, if we ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us: and if we know that he hear us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him" (1 John 5:14, 15). This is a major part of the great secret of answered and unanswered prayer. It is when we really delight ourselves in the Father and ask those things that are well pleasing unto Him that we shall receive exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think. But it is when we are asking amiss, in order that we may consume it upon our own desires, that He will not heed. It is of His kindness and love that He does not give us all for which we ask. . . . The believer who is taught in the Word of God would never dare to pray for the slightest object without adding, "If it be Thy will." For it would be tragedy did we receive all that we desired.

There is one last hindrance which I wish to consider with you. In the book of the Prophet Ezekiel we read these words of God to the Prophet, "Son of man, these men have taken their idols into their heart, and put the stumbling block of their iniquity before their face: should I be inquired of at all by them?"—Ezek. 14:3, R. V. Idols in the heart! There are two ways in which this verse may be taken. It may be used of unbelievers who have some idol in their hearts and who refuse to tear it from the throne in order that Christ may enter. But there is a sense, and it is in that way we take it here, in which a believer may have idols in his heart. Anything, yes, anything, which is loved more than the will of God becomes an idol which will be so loved that the lordship of Christ is no more a fact within our beings. Then it is that fellowship is destroyed. Anything which destroys fellowship will at the same time destroy the basis of prayer, for every answer to prayer comes on the ground of fellowship between a Father and His child. "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you."—John 15:7. If we are abiding in Him we shall not have the throne of our hearts occupied by idols. We shall not ask amiss for our own pleasures. We shall be in the will of God and shall know what it is to have a life of prayer power.—David Grey Barnhouse, radio address, WIP and WMCA, quoted in Revelation.

in "the heart of the earth," we must add the forty days of His sojourn on earth after His resurrection, making a total of forty-three days before He ascended to heaven (Acts 1:3, 9-11).

THE THIEF'S PRAYER; CHRIST'S RESPONSE

When we read the petition of the thief and Christ's response to it consecutively, we find the connection of thought requires the adverb "to day" be joined with "I say." The prayer is, "Lord, remember me when thou comest in (not eis but en) thy kingdom." The thing asked must be the thing granted, if granted at all: the time intimated when the blessing asked for will be bestowed, must be the time when it is given, if given at all. "Remember me" is the prayer; "when thou comest in thy kingdom" is the time of its realization. Christ's response exactly matches the prayer when correctly punctuated: "Verily I say unto thee to day, Thou shalt be with me in paradise." The thief did not ask Christ to remember him when he died, or when he went to heaven. No; he had a "coming" in his eye, not a going; a kingdom, and not a heaven. When correctly punctuated, "Verily I say unto thee to day, Thou shalt be with me in paradise," the prayer and its answer agree.* The absurdity of the thief asking for one thing, and Christ granting him another, is obviated. Then again, this translation and punctuation put the word "thou" before "shalt," as it is in the Greek. "Thou shalt" is a declarative phrase; but the King James translation has "shalt thou," which is in the interrogative form. So it represents the thief as asking for one thing, and Christ grants him another; as making a statement of one particular time, and Christ speaks of another; and finally, the interrogative form merely asks a question, and grants nothing.

We conclude by pointing to biblical usage where "this day" qualifies the preceding verb. "I command thee this day to love" (Deut. 30:16); "I testify against you this day that ye shall surely perish" (Deut. 8:19); "I command thee this thing to day" (Deut. 15:15); "I would to God, that . . . all that hear me this day, were as I am" (Acts 26:29).—The Faith.

* In proposing the translation and punctuation of the text as above, the writer does not act from caprice. On the contrary, he clothes himself with the coverture of creditable authorities, as witness the following renderings: William Bowyer: "I say this day to you." J. B. Rotherham: "Verily I say unto thee this day: With me shalt thou be in Paradise." The Cottage Bible: "Verily I say unto thee today, that when I come in my Kingdom, then shalt thou be with me in paradise." The Curetonian Syriac: "Verily I say to thee today, that with me shalt thou be in the Eden's Garden."

which he performed did not have the same effect as did those who understood. When he had been instructed more fully by Aquilla and Priscilla, then he was fitted for his new position as instructor in the gospel (Acts 18:24ff). Those whom Apollos had baptized were rebaptized because they did not understand the resurrection of Christ fully (Acts 19:5).

The case of Cornelius the centurion is quite significant on another point: he had knowledge; he had consecration; he had even received recognition of a godly life in vision from God Himself. And as further recognition of that faithful attitude toward God, he and his immediate followers received the baptism of the Holy Spirit. Certainly if any were justified here was one. But still they needed baptism. When the Apostle Peter saw that the Holy Spirit had descended upon those who were present, he immediately thought of baptism by water to set the seal on their faith: "Then answered Peter, Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we?"—Acts 10:46, 47. Could anything be more to the point in establishing the value of the act of baptism?

Let us notice another case in point. A certain Simon believed and was baptized. But when he saw the miracles that were performed he became covetous of that power: he offered the apostles money for the power. Apparently Simon was like many another Christian: his name was on the "church books"; he "belonged to the church"; undoubtedly he was one who would be a "pillar of the church" in the modern world. Peter's statement to him was most significant: "Thou hast neither part nor lot in this matter: for thy heart is not right in the sight of God."—Acts 8:21. Simon was like those Pharisees whom Jesus condemned for their beliefs and practices: do what the Pharisees say, but do not follow after their example. Simon had believed the things that he had been taught; he had apparently repented, and was baptized. But, like many another nominal Christian, he had not consecrated his life to the work of God.

The three cases cited demonstrate three phases to the Christian rite of baptism: repentance, baptism, and consecration. Apollos had baptism and consecration: but he needed the more perfect understanding which precedes the act of repentance. His was not a complete repentance, for it was not based upon a complete understanding. Cornelius had repentance and consecration, but he needed the performance of the act of baptism. Simon, commonly known as the Sorcerer, had repentance and baptism, but he was in need of that true consecration that completes the act. These three elements are found in the Christian token of baptism. Without any one of the three the act of baptism becomes an empty form. It becomes like the concision: something of which to beware.

Oftentimes the humility that it takes to perform these rites is lacking: explicit obedience is necessary. If anybody were told to bury a dead body, he would bury it in a sufficient depth of earth to comply with the reasonableness of the case. If a child were given the dead body of a pet and told to bury it, he would know enough to do a good job. He would not let the body lie out on the top of the ground and say that it was enough to have faith in its burial. Or he would not sprinkle a little dust or sand over the body. The child would realize that the body had not been really buried; so would everybody else. Imagination without the performance of the deed would not suffice. But when we are told to perform the rite of burial in symbol, many will say that faith is all that is necessary or that sprinkling is just as good! Could we bury a dead body by belief? Not even the "wildest-eyed" philosopher among the "ideologues" believes that that would constitute burial. Could we bury a body with a few grains of dust or sand? None would believe it. But when it comes to a symbolism of burial, faith or a few drops of water are assumed to be sufficient by many. Faith is necessary: just as it was necessary to Noah when he saved his household in the ark, and as it was necessary for Moses to lead the children of Israel into the Red Sea. But faith is not all. The seal of that faith is needed.

When an alien appears before the court to have his citizenship changed, not a drop of his blood is altered, but he is not a citizen until the court so decrees. That court decree may cover treachery of the worst kind, but still it is necessary in order to make a citizen. It cannot of itself make a good citizen. The citizen must believe in the benefits of his new citizenship, must forswear allegiance to his old country, must swear allegiance to his new nation, and must live in accordance with good citizenship in the new nation before he can be said to be a citizen. But even with all that, if he were not declared a citizen by the court, he could not function as a citizen no matter what his attitude was. So with Christian citizenship. Were those who went into the Red Sea with Moses devoted enough to live that life of consecration that was acceptable in God's sight? If so, how do we explain the fact that all over 20 perished save Caleb and Joshua before the entrance into the Holy Land was made? Not even patient Moses was vouchsafed that privilege!

Even when in the letter to the Colossians Paul spoke of faith as being the prime requisite of baptism, he did not forget that it is a figure of death, burial, and resurrection. "In whom also ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ (faith): buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead."—Col. 2:11, 12. In that operation baptism became the threefold token of the New Covenant. It points back across the centuries to the death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus Christ; it serves as a token of renewal day by day; and it points forward to that greater resurrection day when we shall come forth to that real newness of life. Our faith operated to bring us to implicit obedience in going into the waters of baptism, because Christ through faith was the great Savior of mankind. His death, burial, and resurrection are a constant reminder of our own Christian walk. Then when we come from the symbolic grave of baptism we are to walk a new life now, here, at this present time. Our life immediately takes a new alignment, for we have shown to the world that we are a member of the body of Christ by that act. Everything that we do or think or say will be measured in that new relationship regardless of how we perform it. And hope brings ever to our view the things that are so surely believed among us that Christ is coming to wake the sleeping dead to have part in the great new life that will exist beyond the grave.

Certainly no real Christian could deny the effectiveness of the symbol of baptism; no argument could exist as to its form or its nature, for they are written across the face of the rite, and the elements in point which we have cited. But an element is overlooked by those who instruct our newer believers: it is a token of the New Covenant!

Many people will ask the minister what should be understood and believed before the rite of baptism is performed. Many and various answers will be given. That we should understand the nature of man, the sacrifice of Christ, should believe that Christ is the Son of God, that He is coming again, that we should discard this and that belief. All these things are appropriate perhaps. But there is one thing that so many of them leave out: baptism is the token of the New Covenant. When the candidate comes to the minister for baptism does he understand that he is entering an obligation by assuming covenant relationship with God? Does he understand that he is making an agreement to live the godly life? Does he understand that he is coming forth to a life of consecration to the cause of Christ? Does he understand that baptism is a seal of the faith that he has in the promises of God through Abraham? Does he realize that the things which were promised before in Abraham were fulfilled in Christ, and that he becomes a part of that covenant with Abraham which is irrefutable because it was sealed by an oath on God's part? (Galatians 3:17 shows that the New and Abrahamic Covenants are the same; see also Hebrews 6:13-20.) Does the candidate understand that these obligations come to him to carry the message further to those who have not heard it? These things I feel should be more carefully taught among us! If they were, we would be a more lively church, built upon the living stone, Jesus, who is the heir to the promises made by God to Abraham. Half-heartedness would necessarily fade out, for we would then understand the importance of giving our lives to God in complete consecration. Then would the church become the true "circumcision not made with hands," and not the "concision" of which we are to beware. Then will baptism be more than an empty form to us, but a token of the new covenant between God and the human race.

It's About Time We Did Some Thinking

A certain reaction noticeable at the last General Conference of the Church of God, directed against the gradual trend away from the basic dogmatic teaching of the church, gives rise to the uninspiring thought that it would be well for us to clean our own linen before criticizing the neighbors' laundry for fattletale gray.

As a denomination, we have not infrequently made it our business to aim fiery darts at those church groups which today are allowing themselves to fall into what Grover Cleveland chose to call innocuous desuetude—harmless disuse. Consequently, in the ardor of the crusader, we have neglected to a considerable extent to fortify our own boundaries for defense, and this neglect has been followed by a slow drift away from our primary purpose to attempts to teach moralism as a substitute for Christianity.

Sermons and lessons on practical, everyday living, with reference to such ideas as those contained in Life Begins at Forty and Why We Behave Like Human Beings, are, to be sure, valuable; but they can under no circumstances be correctly considered to be the foundational teaching of Christian principles.

It long has been the custom among young people's organizations of other churches to treat their class meetings as studies in sociology, economics, politics, humanism, and to ignore as far as possible any positive argument over dogmatic creeds. As time has passed, the Church of God has not been immune from this influence, and now the cry for lesson books for Berean societies is not an appeal for studies in basic Bible doctrines, but for outlines which may be used for teaching about social problems: dancing, playing cards, theater-going, reading, divorce.

Let it be said, and said in truth, that the older Berean lesson books are no longer interesting; that attention during class sessions in which they are used wanes; that attendance diminishes on account of their use as leaves fall off the trees in October. It is convenient to be able to accuse the books; it is eminently satisfactory to the ego of the teachers and the leaders who have watched their societies disintegrate.

Modern methods must be used under modern conditions to teach modern students; but this does not signify the necessity for ignoring the original elements to be taught. Schools today teach science with up-to-date equipment and abandon soporific texts for experiment and lecture, but they do not discard the maxim that matter can neither be created nor destroyed.

The older Berean lesson books made it their business to teach what the church at that time believed were facts essential to the future salvation of men—and by salvation the church did not mean equal distribution of wealth, solution of the divorce problem, and international brotherhood; it meant the securing of eternal life under perfect conditions in an earthly kingdom ruled by the Son of God. These ideas, if the urgings of an influential group be followed, are to be relegated to the background, presumably for a time but actually for eternity, in favor of the more interesting lesson outlines on practical problems.

In all justice, it must be conceded that the apparent separation of the Berean organization from its intrinsic purpose is due more to unconscious indifference than to definite distaste for the one-time dogmatic teaching of the Church of God. It is, however, certain that, should the Publishing Committee of the National Berean Society follow the dictates of the opponents of the old system in their entirety, the Berean organizations of the country would shortly find themselves in a still worse state than that in which they are today.

Young people, like their seniors, no longer rank religion among the more important things of life. This is the difficulty which the Berean leaders have to meet, not faulty subject matter and treatment in the lesson texts. The problem which looms largest on the front of Christian work among the young is not to teach them how to live, but what to know, and why.

Granted, indeed, that lessons on the mortality of man, the divinity of the Messiah, the kingdom of God, the return of the Jews to Palestine, the unity and omnipotence of Jehovah, tithing, and the free moral agency of man become monotonous with frequent repetition; but these are the theme song of the Bible, and from them spring all other Christian teachings. The lesson books have centered their attention on these things; the people have learned to regard them as more or less subordinate to methods of right living; ergo, runs the plea that the old Berean books must be discarded, and a new system with new subject matter be created. That the apostles spent their lives, twenty, thirty, even sixty years, in teaching these dogmatic facts and almost nothing else, the modern voices begging for new things conveniently ignore.

Monotony comes from lack of thought. Thousands had seen steam lift the lids of teakettles; but Stephenson, exercising thought, saw the steam engine. For years the space above the windows of street cars had been blank; when Collier saw that space, he invented street car advertising. We have had enough of excuses for our lack of ingenuity and toil; the time has come that demands sufficient thought to make the facts of Scripture interesting without a major appeal to the sophistry of moralism.

thoughts, and His blessings enjoyed without rendering thanks, the weight of adversity becomes heavier. If the memory of some special fault is revived with feelings of shame, then the sorrow under which we strive becomes doubly severe.

The commission of sin is a wrong done to oneself primarily, and to others secondarily, and its effects may extend far beyond our conceptions at the time when committed. It lowers our grade of existence, it subjects us to a baser influence, it spoils our temper, and we look to outward circumstances for inward peace. It separates us from God and estranges us from Jesus and from the fellowship of the good and pure. Every wrong done makes it more difficult to trust in God, or to resign to His will. It disturbs our thoughts and feelings through which we see Him as He is, for it is only the pure in heart who see Him. In the enjoyment of God's blessings the pure in heart can rejoice in His love, and when the days of gloom spread their mantle round them, the light which shines from God's Word shines more brilliantly.

The second preparation for the dark days in a Christian experience is faith. We consider it in that light, for if we wait for it till some misfortune overtakes us we are like the foolish virgins whose lamps gave no light for lack of oil. Those things which inspire faith must be familiar to our minds or it will be an imperfect source of comfort. If we have to clear objections away and persuade ourselves of the truth when the mind should be at rest and waiting to hear the comforting words, "Peace, be still," our condition will be sad if not hopeless.

Adversity sometimes has the effect of arousing men to the necessity of unwavering faith. The position of those who have understood the necessity of preparation to meet trials before they come is far better than those who are unprepared. Those of faith may be likened to an army of men, who, though expecting the enemy, sleep in their uniforms with their weapons of defense at hand. We can say to our captain when we awake, "We are still with Thee." We refer to the faith that is held in common by all who truly believe in Christ. It is to believe in the Father's love, that while we were yet sinners Christ died that we might live. To believe that the earth is our place of discipline, where joy and sorrow are proofs of God's goodness, and that whom He loveth, He chasteneth. Jesus said, "Come unto me, all ye that labour, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Faith raises us above the world while living in it, so that the clouds that cast shadows, for a moment, across our path cannot obscure the visions of future glory and the beautiful mansions Jesus has gone to prepare. Faith confirms us amidst our doubts; it allays our fears. It speaks of pardon for sinners, and of blessings for those who mourn. Among all the realities of the Christian life let faith be the chief. Thus if we have our walk, in faith, with God when we come to the dark valley of sorrow and the shadow of death, His rod and His staff will comfort us. Remember we have no sorrow which faith in Jesus cannot console.

There is another source of acquiring strength and comfort in the hour of adversity and sorrow. It is in the faithful performance of duty. That which will bring the earliest relief and comfort may be found in the injunction, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." Idleness and thoughtless repining only add to grief. Hearty and cheerful words of friends may relieve us from despondency, and encourage us to renewed activity. Folded hands cannot bring composure to troubled minds, nor perform daily tasks. Life's daily duties must be performed faithfully and cheerfully, however difficult they may be. The sooner, the better. It may seem a hardship at first, but the necessity for work will prove a blessing. It has been said, "Idleness is the mother of mischief and many crimes." No one ever gains any good by shirking his duty, however distasteful it may seem. Peace of mind and serenity of spirit come to us only with the knowledge of having done our full duty. One thing well done helps in performing another, and will bring us that much nearer perfection. To sit down and weep is not the divine will, even if we say, "Thy will be done," but it is to rise up in the strength of faith and earnestness, and go forward to the completion of every duty. This may be a difficult lesson to learn, but necessity for salvation demands it must be learned. We cannot well endure the trials of life until we learn it. If we meet with some great misfortune or heavy loss for which earth seems to have no cure, we must not give up in dismay. Remember that the road which leads to the haven of peace is the path of duty, and if we wish to receive the crown of life that fadeth not away we must also bear the cross. If we be found doing our duty faithfully God will sustain and strengthen us and He will come "like rain upon the mown grass," "like dew upon the plant which perisheth," for as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pities those who fear Him. If we obey Him perfectly, putting our trust in God through His Son, living in the performance of every Christian duty as unto the Lord, we shall be prepared for every emergency that may arise, and we may hear the "still small voice" saying, "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you"; "Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." The conclusion of the whole matter is, "Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man" (Ecc. 12:13).

JUDAH TAKEN CAPTIVE

2 Kings 24:1 to 25:21; Jeremiah 39:1-18

GOLDEN TEXT

"Righteousness exalteth a nation: but sin is a reproach to any people."—
Proverbs 14:34.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Judah Taken Captive.

Aim: The kingdom of Israel and of Judah was the kingdom of God. It was overturned because of sin. It will be restored by Christ when He comes.

Class Discussion: To what extent are the rulers of a nation responsible for the morals of the people? Does President Roosevelt reflect the composite character of the American people or does the character of the people reflect that of their rulers? How may we influence our own nation for good?

I. The Penalty for Believing a Lie. (2 Kings 25:1, 2.) Adam and Eve believed the serpent's lie, "Ye shall not surely die" (Gen. 3:4), and brought suffering and death not only upon themselves, but upon the entire human race (Rom. 5:12). The rulers and priests of Judah believed the optimistic predictions of the false prophets who declared that the Chaldeans would not take the city. As a result of their belief of that lie they brought much unnecessary distress to the people and destruction to the nation itself?

II. The Results of National Sin. (Vv. 3-7.) All sin, regardless of its nature and whether it is immediately directed against God or man, is sin against God, for "sin is the transgression of the law" (1 John 3:4), God's law! Zedekiah and his advisers believed the prophets who spoke favorably of the plans of the king, and they disbelieved Jeremiah, the true prophet of God. To disbelieve God is the greatest of sins because it leads to all others. Disbelief in the truth of prophecy is shown in this lesson to result in national as well as in individual ruin.

III. The Kingdom of God Suspended. (Vv. 8-12.) This lesson is closely associated with "the gospel of the kingdom of God" (Mark 1:14) which Jesus and the apostles preached (Acts 1:3; 8:12; 28:23, 30, 31), for the gospel has to do with the restoration of this same kingdom when Jesus comes. With the overthrow of Zedekiah God's kingdom on the earth was suspended "until he come whose right it is" (Ezek. 21:27), even Jesus (Luke 1:30-33) to whom God will give not only the kingdom of Israel, but the whole earth (Psalm 2:6-8; 72:8; Dan. 2:44; 7:13, 14, 27), for an eternal possession.

GOLDEN TEXT

A righteous nation or person is one who does the things that are right and lives by the Word of God. Living near to God exalts any person or nation not only in the sight of men, but of God. Regardless of how low one is in sin he usually has respect for the true Christian, that is, the righteous or godly person. As with a person, so with the nation.

Sin always drags down. The greater the sin and the oftener it is committed the lower one sinks in degradation, and the farther he gets away from God. As with a person, so with any people. Right living brings one near to God, sin takes one away from God. Read Deuteronomy 28 for blessings of obedience and curses for disobedience. It is God that exalteth the righteous.—L. A. R.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Sin

- is sin, whether found in the people of God or the world;
- brought the overthrow of David's throne;
- in people closes the door of God's protection;
- always blinds one to his duty to God.

Sin alienates. Sin alienates the sinner from the Father and many of His attendant blessings and protection. How noticeably true is this in the life of Israel and Judah. Our lesson today brings to a close a kingdom that had long been the recipient of heaven's choicest blessings. Not only were peace and liberty in their own land removed from them, but religious liberty as well, and a period of long bondage followed. Gentile domination over them has continued all these centuries. Notwithstanding all their sufferings during these millenniums, they have not as yet learned obedience. On the other hand, Gentiles with favor and grace immersed in love have not responded to the Father's call to obey His voice. Sin has so obliterated man's moral sense of obligation and appreciation of heaven's benefactions that it can be truthfully said that men's hearts are "hardened through the deceitfulness of sin." As sin increases this condition will be more pronounced. To avoid being overcome by this state of things, we must give all diligence to make our calling and election sure and exhort one another daily "lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin" (Heb. 3:13).

Sin Blinds to Duty. Duty calls, but man is unresponsive. His ears are dulled by sin so that he cannot hear. His eyes are dimmed by transgression and he cannot see the Master beckoning. His conscience is seared as with a hot iron and he does not feel the love appeal of "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Mentally many take hold of the gospel, but few permit the gospel to actually take hold of them and transform their lives.—C. E. R.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

Results of Doing Wrong

Our lesson for today is the story of what happened previous to the events of last week's lesson. It is the story of the fall of Jerusalem at the hands of Nebuchadnezzar. Zedekiah was the last king to sit on the throne in Judah—David's throne. Can you find the verse that says that God overturned the throne and it will remain so until the rightful Ruler comes? Who is that rightful Ruler? The siege of Jerusalem lasted eighteen months, only once temporarily lifted. All supplies were cut off and famine followed, the people dying of starvation. The battering rams of the enemy finally tore down the walls, the king turned coward and fled, but was captured and punished. Jeremiah, knowing the situation to be hopeless, had advised the king to surrender, but his advice was scoffed at and he himself cast into a dungeon, left to die, but later rescued by a servant.

Zedekiah, most wicked king of Judah, had come to his end because of his sin. He had broken his pledge to Nebuchadnezzar to be his ally (2 Chron. 36:11-13). He had brought untold suffering upon his people as well as himself. Jeremiah was practically the only one to escape. He was given freedom to choose where he would live, and he chose to remain with the poor who were left to till the soil. Everyone else was taken captive, their homes burned, their estates confiscated.

Remember: The only cure for wrongdoing is following God and obeying His commands.
—M. G.

JUNIOR CLASS

Text: 2 Kings 25:1-12. Topic: The Result of Disobedience. Memory Verse: "And he (Zedekiah) did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord."—2 Kings 24:19a.

Review: Why not play last Sunday's lesson? Some one may be Belshazzar, and some one Daniel.

Presentation of Lesson. Zedekiah was king of Judah. He was very wicked. God had warned them to turn away from evil, but they would not listen. Today we find what happened to them. Tell the story in this order: (1) Nebuchadnezzar tries to capture Jerusalem; (2) famine in the city; (3) people with king try to flee; (4) capture of king; (5) his punishment; (6) what they did to the buildings in Jerusalem; (7) what happened to the people. Then give a written list of questions to each child to answer. Example: (1) Who was king of Judah at the time of our lesson? (2) What kind of a king was he? When all have finished, see that each child's paper is corrected and he has right answers in mind.

Memory Verse. The memory verse tells us what kind of king Zedekiah was. Read it and then tell about him. Now repeat the verse together.

Notebook. Divide your sheet of paper into two parts. In the top half draw a picture of the walls of Jerusalem with tops of buildings showing behind the walls. On the bottom part draw the picture with broken down walls and buildings being burned. Below the first picture write 2 Kings 24:19; under the second one, 2 Kings 25:9.—V. C. T.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

THE PRESENT NEED

Furnaces will wear out. The one used in The Restitution Herald building did. Consequently, a new heating plant has had to be installed at a cost of approximately $300. In addition to this, a paper bill will soon be due which amounts to about $125.

These bills must be met with cash. The National Bible Institution is in need of funds for paying them. Although current expenses have been slashed deeply, repairs and paper bills cannot be avoided. Approximately $425 is needed within the next sixty days. Contributions are almost the sole source of income for making payment on these accounts. We ask that you remember us as generously in defraying this expense as you have remembered us in financial difficulties of the past.

SPIRITUAL VALUES

Particular attention is called to the article which appears on page 5 of this issue under the above title. This is the first of a series promised us by C. E. Randall, president of the Ministerial Association of the Church of God. Bro. Randall calls attention to the powerful influence the lay members of the church can exert over the ministry in stimulating them to greater zeal and faithfulness in presenting the positive truths for which the church has stood in the past and for which it stands today. The articles are well worth your thoughtful attention.

Everyone needs book ends. Why not buy a pair made of sheet steel, with the picture of Christ the Shepherd or Christ in Gethsemane stamped on the outside in soft colors? Your choice at 50 cents a pair, postpaid, from the National Bible Institution.

BRUSH CREEK, OHIO

The church rejoiced Sunday evening, Oct. 13, to witness Earl Wheelock make public confession of Christ. For many years he has been in touch with our people and has attended services of the Church of God. We are indeed glad to have him in our ranks. Baptism was made in Brush Creek on his own farm near the church. May the Lord's blessing be his both now and in the kingdom to come.

Again, we blow the trumpet for our fall series of meetings—all are invited; we hope as many will come as are able. Bro. M. W. Lyon, pastor of the Golden Rule Church of God in Cleveland, will be our speaker. The dates are November 3-17, Bro. Lyon arriving on November 4, Monday, and continuing with us throughout the meeting. Some of his sermon subjects are: "The Riddle of the Universe," "Beyond the Veil of Death," "A Round Trip Ticket to Hell," "The World of Tomorrow," "The Coming of the King," "Earth's Final Harvest," "From Tadpoles to Archangels," and "What It Costs Not to Be a Christian."

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI

On September 9 an election of officers was held for the Sunday school and Bible class. The following officers were elected: Sunday school superintendent, Claude Graham; secretary, Ada Graham; treasurer, Leota Hanson; teacher, Walter Waggoner; president of Bible class, Earl Logan; music leader, Rosa McPheeters. Ada Graham, Secretary.

J. W. WILLIAMS WITHDRAWS

The following letter addressed to the Secretary of the General Conference of the Church of God and of the National Bible Institution was received from Bro. J. W. Williams. In a second communication under the date of October 17, 1935, Bro. Williams concurs in the suggestion that the publication of his letter will accomplish his "purpose better than to remove (his) name from the list." The original letter follows:

Gladbrook, Iowa, Oct. 2, 1935.

G. E. Marsh, Secretary,
N. B. I. and General Conference,
Oregon, Ill.

Dear Bro. Marsh:

When the two organizations of which you are secretary were formed, blanks were sent out for signatures of those who approved "the spirit and aim" of them, and because of being prominently concerned in the effort and thus having reason to think I understood the spirit and aim, I signed one of the blanks, but as the spirit and aim are not now what I saw in them then, my signature causes me to state a present untruth, so I am calling upon you to remove my name from the list.

Sincerely yours,

(Signed) J. W. Williams.

RALLY DAY AT MARSHALL, ILLINOIS

Rally Day was observed by our church Sunday, Oct. 13, and from every standpoint was the best ever held by this church.

Aided by beautiful weather and good roads, the attendance and interest were indeed very gratifying. Eighty-five were present for the morning services and 140 for the program in the afternoon.

It is indeed a pleasure to work with a group so willing to help and cooperate in any way. Especial attention should be made of the young people, 35 of them being in the choir to help with the singing. We sincerely hope that the fine interest displayed on Rally Day will continue to be manifested throughout the coming year.

Harry Goekler, Pastor.

NORTHWEST IOWA

On September 22 we journeyed to Eagle Grove to meet at the A. M. Jones house. Some of the Stanhope people were there, and we enjoyed meeting a group of Baptist friends, also. Bro. Jones took charge of the morning service and Bro. J. Arthur Johnson of the afternoon session.

On October 6 we met at the Carl Bjorklund home, where a large number gathered to hear two very good sermons rendered by Bro. Jones; and on October 20 we hope to meet at the Guy Selleck home.

We also have very interesting Sunday school at all meetings.

Mrs. Anna Boyanovsky.

CALIFORNIA QUARTERLY CONFERENCE

The California Quarterly Conference met October 6. Sunday school was held at the usual hour, with a special vocal solo by Duncan MacLeod. The church service was opened with a beautiful piano number by Bradley Crundwell. Srs. MacLeod and Rahn favored us also with a duet.

A sermon full of timely helps was given by Sr. Railsback. "The Essential Things for Salvation." She pointed out that there is only one way to life, but many ways to death. Other high lights were that God is a unity and a personality, not a principle. There are three steps to life, or for eligibility for the kingdom: hearing, believing, and obeying. Baptism is adoption through Christ that ends in immortality at the resurrection. The Communion service followed in charge of Bro. MacLeod. The usual picnic dinner was held in South Park.

At 2 o'clock the Bereans took charge. The program was as follows: Prayer, Bro. Brady, Berean president; duet, Srs. Rahn and Charlotte Rahn; reading, Elseleone Nokes; zither solo, Bro. Brady. Bro. Brady announced that he had had a record made of his solo, which he sent to his parents in London. At the same time he was playing here in the little church, they played the record over in England. Bro. Brady read a poem which reminded us to be thankful for the coming day and the chance it gives to show our worth. A Berean talk was given by Elseleone Nokes which stressed the need of Scripture memorizing to tell others of the gospel, and the necessity of a knowledge of Bible facts as a background for Bible study. Sr. Railsback added some fine thoughts.

The following were elected at the business meeting which followed: president, Norman MacLeod; vice president, J. E. Adamson; secretary, Elseleone Nokes; treasurer, Sr. Gould. The board members are Willis Calkins, John Saylor, Leonard Brady, and Sr. Gillespie.

The afternoon service was opened by a special selection from the Pomona quartet. Bro. MacLeod then gave one of his excellent sermons on the Levitical Covenants. The Levites were given in service to the Lord in place of the firstborn of all Israel, as a type of Christ. The blessings and curses promised for obedience and disobedience to God's laws can be seen in Israel even today, for these people are still under the law, not having accepted Christ as the only Redeemer from sin.

Thus closed a very enjoyable and profitable day for everyone.

Elseleone Nokes, Secretary.

"To whom was God talking when He said, 'Let us make man in our image, after our likeness' (Gen. 1:26)?" asks Sr. I. E. Brown of Tacoma, Wash. Sr. Brown would like to have the question answered through The Restitution Herald. May we venture to refer the matter especially to Bro. R. H. Judd of Toronto, Canada, who has given this subject very thorough study?

A clerical error resulted in the publication in a recent issue of The Herald the notice that the National Bible Institution requires $85 a day to meet running expenses. The actual average is about $35, including interest and tax charges, but not including principal obligations as they fall due.

BURR OAK, INDIANA

The Bereans have changed their night of study to Thursday. Three classes meet, with attendance averaging about 16. Sr. Hatten teaches the little tots, Sr. Mabel Overmyer the young people, and the adults change from time to time their teachers.

Sr. Mattix, who has been very ill, is now up and around again.

Marjorie Hatten was hostess to her class last week in their monthly class meeting. Attending were 25. Carl Heiser led the devotional. Allen Weaver read the Scripture. We commend the boys and their class for their splendid work. The class voted to purchase a blackboard to be presented to the Bible school.

Bro. Frank Cochenour and sister of Eagle Creek attended Sunday evening services.

Sr. A. J. Thayer, mother of Bro. Earl Thayer, and also Sr. Boyd are very ill. They live on the old farm near Plymouth. May we lift our voices in prayer for these dear ones in trouble.

Mr. and Mrs. Forest La Munion have a baby girl, born September 15. Also, Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Hawkins (the latter the daughter of the Burr Oak pastor), St. Cloud, Minn., have a daughter named Janice Marie, born October 9.

Sunday morning, Oct. 13, the writer spoke on the subject, "What Seest Thou?" a study from the 1st chapter of Jeremiah. The evening service topic was "Between Two Posts."

The pastor has received a call to be with the Kokomo, Ind., church Sunday the 27th for the day.

A. E. Hoskins, Pastor.

RIPLEY, ILLINOIS

Bro. and Sr. Harvey U. Krogh, Jr., are located in their new home in the village and the work here is progressing nicely.

Our Rally Day services were well attended. There were 94 at Sunday school. A short program by the children and a few musical selections by the adults were given. Bro. Krogh gave us an inspiring sermon based on the difference between a life lived apart from God and a life lived for God. It was a sermon of hope and courage.

A special collection was taken for paint for our church building. We received some $20 for this purpose and the work has started.

Prayer meeting is held each Thursday evening at 7:30. Preaching services every Sunday at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m.

May we be blessed in the coming year's work is our prayer.

Ednah Cooper, Secretary.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

The fall meetings which were begun here on October 13 with Bro. James A. Patrick as visiting speaker are progressing well, and much beneficial result is already evident. The ten minutes of devotion held in the basement preceding the evening sermon do much to bring us closer to God and put us in tune for the message.

The Dorcas ladies served a sumptuous meal to about 100 on Thursday night, the 17th. They plan to repeat the process the 24th. This was the first real tryout of the new kitchen, and everyone was much pleased with the improvement. The ninth anniversary dinner will be enjoyed in this building, also, on the 27th, and we anticipate a happy occasion. On the 28th the pastor and wife plan to leave for three weeks of meetings in Louisiana.

Many old-time friends of Bro. Patrick are enjoying the privilege of seeing and hearing him again. Some have driven many miles for this privilege. We pray that God may richly bless the effort now being put forth.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

MICHIGAN FALL CONFERENCE

The Michigan Fall Conference convened at Blanchard October 1-6, with Bro. Sydney Magaw of the Brush Creek Church, Ohio, as guest speaker.

Among those who accompanied Bro. Magaw from Ohio were Sr. Magaw and Bro. Rufus Curtis, whose articles have appeared many times in The Restitution Herald.

The evening services as well as the Sunday services were well attended.

Bro. Magaw's sermons were very instructive as well as interesting. We are more than glad to see another young minister coming to the front, who cannot give a lecture on "The Dead Sea and Palestine" without the Word of God in his hand and making many references to same.

In the early afternoon Sunday, Bro. Smead, the local pastor, assisted four young ladies to take the name of Jesus in baptism. The Michigan Conference wishes to present to the brotherhood the four new sisters: Misses Fay Marston, Hester Egbert, Edith Smith, and Opal Bush, all of Blanchard.

The Conference in business session, for her good work and many years of service, gave a rising vote of thanks to the memory of one of its oldest and dearly loved members, Sr. Mary Woodward, who now rests in deep sleep waiting for the call of the Master.

All who met with the brethren of like precious faith and listened to the words of exhortation by Bro. Magaw were much encouraged and carried home with them more zeal to spread the glad tidings in their own community.

Mrs. L. F. Slocum, Secretary.

MRS. DAVID BECK

Anna B. Best was born in Enon, Ohio, September 2, 1873. In 1896 she was united in marriage to David Beck of Springfield, Ohio, to which happy union one son, Karl, was born. With her husband she accepted the faith of the Church of God and was baptized by Elder Howell, to which faith she was most devoted until death.

Death claimed her on Sunday morning, Oct. 6, 1935. Besides her husband she leaves to mourn her death her son, Karl of Springfield, two grandchildren, and one brother.

Funeral services were conducted by her pastor assisted by a former pastor, Bro. James A. Patrick of Ashland, Ohio, on Tuesday, Oct. 8, at 2 p. m. in her home, after which burial was made in the Springfield cemetery. We spoke of the coming of the Lord and the resurrection as based upon the Jubilee in comfort to the bereaved, and as typical of her faith. Hebrews 9:28 was given as a central text of the sermon. We hope to meet this loyal Christian on the morning of the resurrection.

S. E. Magaw.

Ira E. Bever, Nevada, Mo., writes as follows: "I received the sample copies of The Restitution Herald you sent me. Thank you very much. I have been looking for that kind of a magazine for years." Will our friends help us to increase the circulation of this prophetic weekly by recommending it to others? Sample copies will be gladly furnished free of charge.

The Coming Crisis

By James R. Kaye, Ph.D., LL.D.

The state of the world as a whole in which we are now living stands alone in human history. Every thoughtful man is asking, "What does it mean? To what is it all pointing?" These questions are answered in the most intelligent manner by The Coming Crisis.

The scholarship of this book is sufficiently assured by the fact that its author is the compiler of the New Analytical Bible and other biblical works.

THE END OF THE AGE

Prophecies relating to the coming of Christ and its bearing on present world conditions are considered from a strictly scriptural viewpoint. The book is probably the sanest, soundest, most exhaustive treatment of this subject now in print. It is invaluable to anyone interested in the future of humanity and the return of the Messiah.

Perhaps You Have Wanted to Help— Now Your Opportunity Is Here

This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come.

By order of the General Conference, an evangelistic fund to provide for carrying the gospel to new and isolated localities under the auspices of the National Bible Institution has been established. It was, however, understood by the Conference that no contributions to this fund were to be taken as replacing those made to the running expenses of the Institution, but were to be an addition to the usual donations to the general cause of the church.

Here is the opportunity for which many have been waiting, an opportunity to help in telling the world about the coming kingdom and all it represents. Work will be started as soon as a sufficient fund is in reserve to cover operating costs. It is your chance, and it is your responsibility.

Remember, however, that the National Bible Institution needs funds for its present work. To carry on the paper, the Sunday school quarterly, and tract publication requires money. Send a donation toward current expenses at the same time you contribute to the evangelistic campaign. The paper reaches five thousand people every week through one thousand subscribers. No one evangelist can do that. Write us a letter or use the coupon below.

God's Covenant With Abraham

By S. J. Lindsay

OUR visit among the brethren of the Middle West this summer convinced us that this subject is being neglected by too many. In the earlier days of our church, we were known as The Churches of God of the Faith of Abraham. The church at Oregon, Illinois, organized some thirty-five years ago, was so named and the record is on file in the State archives. As a body of believers, we stand or fall on that faith. Without faith in that covenant, we have no excuse for existence. With Brother Marsh's consent, we have agreed to give a series of studies on the subject through the columns of THE RESTITUTION HERALD. We will strive to be brief in the studies so that each point may be carefully weighed.

A covenant is a contract or agreement between two or more parties.

Through transgression, man was found in sin and devoid of lasting life. He had forfeited his life through sin. He had only to face a return to the ground from which he had been taken. This was his lot. But God had a desire to the work of His hands (Job 14:15). He sought out a faithful man through whom to begin a work of redemption of man from the death into which he had plunged himself. In Abraham he found this man. God gives a reason for selecting him. "And the Lord said, Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do; seeing that Abraham shall surely become a great and mighty nation, and all the nations of the earth shall be blessed in him? For I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment; that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of him."—Gen. 18:17-19.

WHAT IS THE COVENANT?

Briefly it is recorded in Genesis 17:7, 8: "And I will establish my covenant between me and thee and thy seed after thee in their generations for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee. And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession; and I will be their God."

This covenant has been confirmed repeatedly since, as we read: "He is the Lord our God; his judgments are in all the earth. Be ye mindful always of his covenant; the word which he commanded to a thousand generations; even of the covenant which he made with Abraham, and of his oath unto Isaac; and hath confirmed the same to Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant, saying, Unto you will I give the land of Canaan, the lot of your inheritance; when ye were but a few, even a few, and strangers in it."—1 Chron. 16:14-19.

No other everlasting covenant has been given to man. All promises to man point to the earth as his everlasting home. Christ is linked up with this covenant in the language which follows: "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ."—Gal. 3:16.

In Christ the inheritance seems to have expanded still further: "For the promise, that he should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith."—Rom. 4:13.

Fallen man may become partaker of this inheritance by observing certain things to do them. He must become an heir to the inheritance promised to Abraham through Christ: "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."—Gal. 3:27-29.

The earth, then, renewed and cleansed from sin, is to be righteous man's everlasting home. So far as heaven's being man's final abiding place is concerned, we have but to read the language of Jesus: "And no man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven."—John 3:13. And Peter, speaking of David, has this to say: "For David is not ascended into the heavens: but he saith himself, The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, until I make thy foes thy footstool."—Acts 2:34, 35.

Abreast of the Times

Church Liquor Lobby in Washington

"Give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine. . . . Give thyself wholly to them."—Paul.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 26.—According to reports circulating here, combined forces of the W. C. T. U., the Anti-Saloon League, Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., Sunday School Association, the Society of Friends, and others are beginning a drive for the strict enforcement of existing liquor laws in the capital and the eventual restoration of prohibition. The program is said to include the establishment and maintenance of a new prohibition lobby in Washington.

Commenting on this development, Admiral William H. Standley, Chief of Naval Operations, declared that "radical interests" are using churches, schools, the Y. M. C. A., and Y. W. C. A. to spread pacifist propaganda and undermine national defense.

"These influences," asserted the Admiral, "are highly organized and manifest their strength through clubs of various kinds, through the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A., through church people of nearly every denomination, in public and private schools, and through various individuals. . . . Misinformation or lack of full information" enables radical organizations to involve churches and similar organizations in their campaigns against naval preparedness, according to the Chief of Naval Operations.

Throughout the country churches and other religious organizations are unconsciously giving "comfort and support" to Christianity's arch enemy, Communism. Everywhere Socialism or Communism has obtained control of the political government, liberty of conscience, freedom of the press, and religious tolerance have been entirely abolished or sharply restricted. The Christian who lends encouragement to radicalism is hastening his own bitter and relentless persecution.

Not only this, but when the church establishes political lobbies and devotes its attention to the passage and enforcement of law, no matter how apparently beneficial and necessary such measures may be, it is debasing the lofty purpose to which it was divinely appointed, and subordinating the spiritual and the eternal to the carnal and the temporal.

Townsend Plan Advocates Convene

"Spend your money . . ."—Isaiah 55:2, Moffatt.

CHICAGO, Oct. 25.—According to the advocates of the "Townsend Plan," who are now holding their first national convention in this city, in the near future the question of Isaiah, "Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread?" will give way to a widespread demand to do that very thing. For, assert some 5,000 delegates and attendants at the convention, when each of the 8,000,000 persons in the United States who are over 60 years of age receive $200 every month which must be spent within 30 days of the time they get their checks start out to spend their money, they will find that they must cast frugality to the winds and buy much that is not bread.

The keynote address of the convention was delivered by Dr. Clinton Wunder of New York, who declared it to be his conviction that with "21,000,000 voters" backing the demand for the enactment into law of the Townsend Plan, success was sure. "We believe God is on our side," he said, "and with God all things are possible."

New Presbyterian Paper

"Suppose ye that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell you, Nay; but rather division."—Luke 12:51.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 27.—A new Fundamentalist semi-monthly independent journal, The Presbyterian Guardian, has made its initial appearance. It will be under the supervision of Dr. J. Gresham Machen, around whom so much discord has raged during the past two years. The last page of the paper will be open to controversy.

Arabs Strike Against Jews

"Esau hated Jacob . . . and said in his heart, . . . I will slay my brother Jacob."—Genesis 27:41.

JERUSALEM, Oct. 26.—The jealousy which has been smoldering between the Jews and Arabs in Palestine since the Balfour Declaration was put into effect, creating a refuge for persecuted Jews in this country, burst into open flame again this week, when a general strike was called by the Arabs against alleged gun running by the Jews. The walkout of 900,000 Arabs, which was but partly effective, took place when customs officials announced that barrels labeled "cement" brought to Jaffa in a Belgian ship really contained arms and ammunition. The Arabs contend that the Jews are arming to deprive the Arabians of their land by force.

TRIALS

By Lyman Booth

"TRIAL" is defined as the act of testing or proving.

This definition is applicable to mechanical devices, and to mental, moral, and religious attributes of men. A machine is tested or proven good by making it do more than would be required of it in regular and customary usage. The mental faculties are tested in various ways. The moral and religious are tested or proven by a life which is molded according to some moral or religious code of principles.

Many people usually associate some unpleasant reproach or accident or loss of property or kin with a trial. Some even dare to charge these things to "the act of Providence," which charge I believe to be a great error. It is true they may have a bad effect upon the worldly-minded; but to the Christian or person plagued as Job was they might be considered casually and passed by with "the Lord giveth, and the Lord taketh away," or as "light afflictions." Few look upon life as the most precious blessing; others view it with little concern. From some points of view they seem to see nothing but trouble, a weary journey of pain and disappointments and losses, besides many sins and the retributions because of sins.

There is so much suffering from various causes, over which people have little or no control, that it fills the heart with sorrow and causes one to feel as if he were treading a gloomy path which grows darker as he approaches the end of life's way. Infancy has its little hurts and tears, childhood its disappointments, youth its mistakes, manhood its wrongs and worries, old age its weariness, its gray hair, and tottering limbs, bringing us in sorrow to the tomb.

We notice first the bodily diseases and pains to which flesh is heir, which may be lessened by temperance and careful attention to the laws of health. None can expect to escape them entirely. They who grow old may experience many in which they can say, "We have no pleasure in them. In the morning we cry out, Would God, that it were evening, and when night comes, Would God, that it were morning." They experience little peace night or day. In some form or another trials and grief come to every family. How many at this very moment are languishing upon their beds to whom neither day nor night brings relief!

The very recent years are especially noted for their disappointments and losses, both in financial matters and moral and religious standards. Many wealthy people have been reduced to want. Poverty is not the worst evil to overtake one. It is true that when a man's daily toil fails to bring sufficient means to feed and clothe and educate his children, when the anxiety for their future welfare is pressed upon him, he loses faith, and his hope grows dim. The poverty which is confronting all nations, and which statesmen and rulers are endeavoring to avert, and which they are daily called upon to relieve, is an evil of the greatest magnitude. According to the trend of events and divine prophecy it is destined to increase to disastrous results. Famine with all its dread, its misery, suffering, and death, will walk with merciless tread over many lands. Although we may not suffer from it, its presence is knocking at the doors of many American homes, in the land that has boasted of its wealth and abundance of the necessary means for the comfort and sustenance of its citizens. To know that there are so many within the borders of our country who are destitute and beyond our aid is a sad thought. To live in the midst of so much suffering is to share in the suffering ourselves. Human sympathy cannot avoid it.

Losses and reverses reduce the prosperous to penury and absolute want. The large and best secured fortunes may be lost in a day and the owner who once lived in luxury and ease may have to look for means of support. Their cherished plans are changed, their social position is not the same. They must begin the struggle of life anew. It is thus they learn the lesson that "riches take to themselves wings, and fly away." No business is free from the danger of total loss. It is not only the loss, but the mortification incident to the loss, the unjust reproaches, the humiliating regrets for those whom we sought to provide for and who are also made to suffer. The life which is subjected to such severe changes is not one of enjoyment.

The loss of temporal blessings may be overcome by future industry and frugality; but what are they when compared to the loss of friends and kindred to whom our lives were given, and with whom (Please turn to Page Nine)

Divine Grace

"My grace is sufficient for you":
Which word is to be stressed?
The reply's like an inspiration—
Why! God is giving you rest.

Again I consider the promise:
The source of the blessing to know:
They come not from self nor from merit,
But from My free grace they flow.

But still I ponder inquiring:
How long will the boon be given?
He replies: "It is all-sufficient,"
Like the stream from the rock that's riven.

So on through life's fiercest struggle,
Whatever the task I may do,
There comes that new inspiration,
God's grace is sufficient for you.

Spiritual Values

By C. E. Randall

TRUBLE usually causes the one or group undergoing such experience to reflect upon the more enduring things of life. It has often been said, "Extremity is God's opportunity." While the preponderance of evidence in past years seemed to amply justify the statement, yet in recent months a great change has been noted in the thinking of people and their attitude toward spiritual values. Instead of upheaved conditions in the economic and political spheres creating a repentant mind toward God, they have had an opposite effect. In the midst of these heavings there has been a violent revulsion in the thinking of people in regard to spiritual matters and their attitude toward God. This reflex has been caused largely by the same conditions that formerly induced national repentance. This abnormal situation, unlike any that we have previously experienced, is undoubtedly the factor in causing Brother L. E. Conner, president of our General Conference, to say, "There is a question in my mind as to the advisability of pushing evangelistic work until the people at large feel differently. There is at present a great slump in church work, and until public sentiment toward it is changed, our efforts will be wasted." This unusual condition requires an unusual approach to its solution.

Roger Babson said: "Our trouble is not economic, but spiritual." As a people, we have maintained from the beginning of the present economic catastrophe that the cause lay in people forsaking God. Yea, long before the eruption took place our students of the prophetic message foretold its coming. If our economic crisis is spiritual, then what spiritual readjustment is needed to right our system of economics? Of course, it must be borne in mind that no action or change that is brought about by man, even though it is inspired of God, will bring about the utopia of dreams and the kingdom of Scripture. Such an era when there is "on earth peace, good will toward men" will be a reality only when the Prince of Peace rules and reigns on David's throne. There can come a marvelous improvement through a return to certain fundamentals of spiritual value. Such a blessing is not dependent upon the people as a body obeying these fundamental and basic laws, but individuals can conform to the requirements and receive the blessings.

The first spiritual value to which we direct your attention and which is the basic principle of economic security and individual independence is recognition of the source of material blessings. It is written: "Thou shalt remember the Lord thy God: for it is he that giveth thee power to get wealth."—Deut. 8:18. The nation, group, or individual that forgets this axiom of truth is destined to suffer impoverishment sooner or later. The history of Israel is evidence to the fact. This impoverishment may not come in material things, but it is certain to come with devastating force in the field of spiritual things. That is, it will destroy spirituality.

As a people, we have neglected to emphasize this great truth, that it is God that giveth power to get wealth. Many have placed trust and hope for power to get wealth in embargoes, crop control, processing taxes, rotation of crops, unions, group banking, chain merchandising, and political machinations, rather than in Him from whom all blessings flow. "The blessing of the Lord, it maketh rich, and he addeth no sorrow with it."—Prov. 10:22. Recognition of God as the Source of our individual security and prosperity is the way of peace and plenty.

The Church of God is not dependent upon the political party in power for its sustenance. It has the divine right of owning God as the Giver of "every good gift" and with obedient voice claims the blessing, but this blessing must not be selfishly expended upon individual desires coming out of lust to the exclusion of spiritual obligations. This, however, is just what has happened to the Church of God as well as other denominations. The blessings of God have been spent almost entirely upon material things, while spiritual values were left to be operated upon a basis of "faith without works."

To illustrate the condition: people have bought cars, radios, homes, etc., and upon these have expended all of God's material blessings, and God's houses and work go begging. There is absolutely nothing wrong in owning cars and radios and other material things if properly used. The great wrong is to be found in the neglect of spiritual things, and when a people neglect God they are going to suffer materially. God has given us an amazing example of such unbalanced service. Read the 1st chapter of Haggai for full description. God's house was in desolation, the people that should have worshiped there were living in ciled houses—nice homes. God requested them to consider their ways. Now listen to these words of God: "Ye have sown much, and bring in little; ye eat, but ye have not enough; ye drink, but ye are not filled with drink; ye clothe you, but there is none warm; and he that earneth wages earneth wages to put it into a bag with holes. Thus saith the Lord of hosts; Consider your ways. . . . Ye looked for much, and, lo, it came to little; and when ye brought it home, I did blow upon it. Why? saith the Lord of hosts. Because of mine house that is waste, and ye run every man unto his own house. Therefore the heaven over you is stayed from dew, and the earth is stayed from her fruit."—Hag. 1:6, 7, 9, 10. Israel was squandering all of God's blessings upon material values until God called a halt. In substance God said, "If you are not going to care for My work and My house, then I will withhold My blessings." Can you see any similarity between Israel's experience and our plight? To the writer there appears a great likeness and it is this conviction that impels us to urge our people to consider their ways.

The second spiritual value to which we call attention is a material interest in spiritual things. There can be no experiencing of deep spiritual power in tasting that the Lord is good and gracious until we have recognized our material blessings as springing from the Father and give a portion of these material blessings to the Father in appreciation and as thank offerings. These material favors are given us by God to be used of us for the expanding of spiritual values. Spiritual values come in a large measure through the righteous use of material blessings. Less attention must be given to the "cares, riches, and pleasures of this life" if we are to enjoy an awakened spiritual life. It is disheartening to behold the cares of the world choking out the Word of God among Church of God members.

Just yesterday we received a letter from one of our lay preaching brethren in which he stated that in the last twenty-five years in that state there has been only one new church organized, and this was the outcome of a Sunday school started by a couple of families for their own children. Do we need to emphasize spiritual values!

Why is there such a deplorable lack of spiritual effort within our ranks? It is because there is not a recognition of the fact that it is God that giveth power to get wealth and that the purpose for which He gives us wealth is that we might use the same in the development of spiritual values. The feet and hands of our spiritual workers are virtually bound because of the lack of material things being consecrated to spiritual values. May we as a people lift up our heads to the enduring substances, even spiritual values.

Is God Pleased?

By D. G. Harvey

"That ye might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God."—Col 1:10. "When a man's ways please the Lord, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him."—Proverbs 16:7.

WHAT a question! How can we mere mortals know the answer? God, whose name we have taken, has by His Son commanded us, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."—Mark 16:15. Have we obeyed?

Remember: "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come."—Matt. 24:14. Yes, we pray, "Thy kingdom come," and do not obey the one command that must be obeyed before that blessed event can occur. How can we obey this command? "Go ye into all the world" needs no further comment. The statement is clear to even a child. But we reason, "The people will not heed the message." Does that relieve us of the responsibility? "We are doing all we can." Are you sure?

We have a mere handful of churches located in small towns or at crossroads where two or three families have banded together to hold services. What excuse can we give for keeping the good news of God's kingdom from millions? Can we be true followers of Christ and hide the message? We seem to take the Lord's words, "Fear not, little flock," as a mark of distinction and as an excuse. We must remain a little flock.

The responsibility rests with you. No matter what your position in the church may be, minister or lay member, evangelist or janitor, the command is, "Go," perhaps not into a far country, but, "Go, carry the good news to others."

Let us consider the State of Indiana, for example, one of the old strongholds of our church. What growth has there been in the past twenty-five years? What new fields opened to workers? Nine or ten churches are located in small towns and in the country, with perhaps a total membership of 400 to 500. Think of it, in a state of 2,930,390 population! Think of the thousands, yes, millions, in Indiana who have never heard of the kingdom of God. Can you feel God is pleased with such lukewarm obedience to the Great Commission?

Are we not losing our young people every day? Why? Lack of interest among their elders. Think of it. In some of our churches there are but ten to twelve sermons a year, no Sunday school, no Berean classes. Why? "The great falling away." Then where do we stand? The church is to watch for signs, not be signs.

Let every member of the Church of God stop, look, and listen. Examine yourself; examine your work; ask yourself, Is God pleased with my work? Let every minister, whether evangelist or pastor, offer his services to the work in new fields, backed by every elder and deacon, every Bible teacher, and every lay member. Build up Berean classes, evangelistic meetings. Bring the good news to those who have not heard.

What is true in Indiana is true in every State in the Union. In some localities the condition is even more grave.

Brethren, awake. This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached. If we of the Church of God fail to obey, another will do the work and receive the reward.

Palestine Today

AT THE beginning of 1935 there were 307,312 Jews in Palestine, forming 26 per cent of the population. This more than doubles the Jewish population 10 years ago, when the Jews numbered 146,994, representing 19½ per cent of the population. It is thought possible that in 1935 there will be a legal immigration of 60,000, which is 7 times as many as returned from Babylon under the decree of Cyrus B. C. 536.

The slogan of the Zionists, which reads in the ancient Hebrew tongue: "Eretz Israel l'Am Israel," meaning: "The Land of Israel for the People of Israel," seems to hasten towards its fulfillment. Twenty-five years ago, only 5 per cent of the tillable land in Palestine belonged to the Jews, whereas at present they possess fully 25 per cent of the same. The Jews also employ many of the Arab population, thus creating wealth among the backward Arabs. At 1,044 orange plantations, there are employed 6,800 Jewish and 4,548 Arabian laborers.

Many Jews are being driven out of their European homes because of the anti-Semitic waves flooding Europe at present. The Palestinian Government does not permit as many Jews to enter the land as the Zionists would like, but the number admitted seems too large to the Arabs. Thus the Government attempts to keep the middle way between the clamoring of the Jews for "more Jews" and that of the Arabs for "as few Jews as possible."

THE DEAD SEA

From time immemorial the Dead Sea has been a synonym for all that was useless and unproductive, and the expression, "Dead Sea fruit," had denoted bitter disappointment, while travelers' tales had made it out to be a spot where the climate was unbearable and deadly, and where it was impossible for human beings to live.

Now we know that the Dead Sea represents hope and hope fulfilled. The Dead Sea is, in fact, a thing of life, and today is pulsating with health and conferring benefits on thousands of human beings.

The Dead Sea is, indeed, becoming a health resort beyond compare. The air contains more oxygen than elsewhere. The sun heats without scorching. No germ can live in the water of the Dead Sea, and to bathe therein is health-restoring, youth-renewing, life-giving.

Approximately one third larger than the lake of Geneva, its waters of a maximum depth of 1,300 feet, the Dead Sea has an ever-increasing mineral content, which is deposited by the inflowing Jordan and various streams and springs along its banks. The salts of the Dead Sea which are only now being made available for the world's use, are, beside common salt, magnesium chloride, calcium chloride, potassium chloride. Easily and cheaply obtained by water pumping and sun evaporation, the salts are transported by road and rail, via Jerusalem to the port of Haifa, in a manner simple and speedy. The monetary value of the vast quantities—thousands of millions of tons—of these salts contained in the small area of 47 by 10 miles, makes the Dead Sea easily the most valuable spot in the world.

This Dead Sea wealth, because so vast in amount and so easily obtained, is destined to play an ever more important role in the world's economics, as well as in the world's politics. In the world's militarism, it may even be! War calls for potash in particular, and potash exists in the Dead Sea in such quantity that if no other potash from any other source were used, the quantity existing in the Dead Sea would last the world (for normal needs) for over two thousand years.

LAND-HUNGRY ISRAEL

The Lord High Commissioner of Palestine has approved the purchase by the Jewish Agency of the Lake Huleh land concession, a tract of about 50,000 acres, which had been granted to an Arab group in 1914. After drainage and the building of an irrigation system, it is believed the land will be the most fertile in Palestine and worth far more than the reported price of $1,000,000.

As the entrance of the serpent ruined the Garden of Eden so human selfishness threatens to mar the land that has been redeemed from barrenness. It is reported that the Tel Aviv municipality has established a bureau to collect and distribute information concerning land sales, in order to fight speculation. The work is being carried on in collaboration with the Jewish National Fund and the Zionist Executive.

The Chicago Tribune quotes the following statement: "At present Jewish farmers are employing two Arab farm hands for every Jew, and while it is true that the Arabs are better and cheaper workers, still in case some conflict arises the position of the Jewish farmers surrounded by Arab workers will be perilous. There is also a serious housing shortage in Palestine. Palestine now has a building boom which will continue for some years. Building laborers are also needed. Jewish immigrants have invested approximately $70,000,000 in Palestine and many new industries have been created. Palestine's towns are becoming more prosperous."

The city "watchmen" of ancient Israel have given way to their modern counterpart, the "policemen." We read in the Jewish Chronicle that "the Tel Aviv municipality has issued an appeal to Jewish youths urging them to enter the police force. A resolution was adopted calling on the Government to increase the number of Jewish policemen in the city to two hundred, and to raise salaries in order to make it possible for Jews to enter the service."

LABOR SHORTAGE IN PALESTINE

According to a news dispatch, the executive of the Jewish Agency for Palestine reported a great need for thousands of workers, and a crisis in agricultural and industrial enterprises. The announcement was made after a survey of the Palestine labor market. The orange plantation owners are unable to obtain enough workers to remove the rich crop. The shortage is particularly acute, it was said, in the groves of the Judean, Sharon, and Samaritan colonies. Thousands are needed there. The survey showed a great need for iron workers, tinsmiths, locksmiths, plasterers, and garage mechanics.

This land of prosperity will be considered "a great spoil" by the nations of Northern Europe, and who knows how soon we shall see the great conflict described in Ezekiel, chapters 38 and 39?

According to the Jewish Chronicle regular fortnightly sailings between Palestine ports and Trieste will be inaugurated on February 22 by the Palestine Shipping Company, when the S. S. Tel Aviv returns from a Mediterranean cruise to set sail almost immediately for Trieste. The vessel, which is of 10,000 tons, has a Palestine registration and will be flying the Palestine flag. It has accommodation for 400 passengers, and will be operated as a single class boat. A large proportion of the crew are Jews, and there will be a ship's school, in which from 15 to 20 men will be trained for sea service while serving as apprentices. Stewards, engineers, and others who were formerly employed by large German shipping lines are included in the ship's personnel.

The export crop of oranges from Palestine is estimated at 5,500,000 cases of fruit of 70 pounds each. Grapes, almonds, bananas, melons, cereals, linseed, sugar cane, nuts, and vegetables of different kinds are being cultivated for export purposes in Palestine. Palestine is becoming so attractive that the Jews "not wanted" in other countries are longing to return to their own land. And thus God is fulfilling His promise, "I will . . . gather you out of the countries wherein ye are scattered."—Ezek. 20:34.

A Jewish master mariner who has been at sea for thirty-five years is the captain of the new liner Mount Zion, which was formally commissioned for the Roumania-Palestine route at a ceremony recently held at Haifa.

He is Captain Erich Hirschfeld, formerly an officer on the S. S. Leviathan, and he holds life-saving medals from English, American, and German humane societies.

Hirschfeld has a crew of 41 men. The ship, which is 5,300 tons, has only first and second-class accommodation and belongs to the Palestine Maritime Lloyd: Its cuisine will be kosher in the full sense of the word, because the company is Jewish.

PRODUCING PRACTICALLY EVERYTHING

The remarkable increase in the number of industrial undertakings, which now number 3,132, and the sharp rise in exports of Jewish products are the best indices of the healthy growth of Jewish industry in Palestine. The recent Tel Aviv Fair demonstrated vividly that Palestine is becoming an outstanding factor in the commerce of the Near East, producing practically everything that was formerly sold by Western nations. Whether it be wine, cement, stockings, envelopes, iron, or cotton goods, all are found on the list of export. It is on the basis of such prosaic facts that a country's growth is assured. The Dead Sea enterprise, now in its third year, is already shipping 10,000 tons of potash products, in addition to other by-products.

The Jewish Missionary Magazine reports that even Chinese Jews—first discovered in the seventeenth century by Riccia, a Roman priest, and rediscovered in Honan by Dr. W. A. P. Martin—are returning to Palestine. "Behold, these shall come from far: . . . and these from the land of Sinim (China)."—Isa. 49:12.

Writes Pastor Charles O. Benham, "A 620-mile pipe line now reaches Haifa from Iraq. Britain now plans a large naval base at Haifa, and abundance of oil is now made available at low cost for Palestinian consumption. Five thousand years ago Moses said: 'They shall suck . . . of the treasures hid in the sand.'"

ABUNDANT WATER FOR JERUSALEM

"I will even make a way in the wilderness, and rivers in the desert."—Isa. 43:19.

"One day the story of Palestine's adventure with water will become one of the most moving threads running through the great epic of Zionist achievement," says New Palestine.

The lack of water was considered, until a few years ago, a natural and inevitable failing of Palestine. However, the new methods of well drilling have been so perfected that it is now safe to conclude that the water problem will be solved for every village—every colony in Palestine.

The present state of the work now being carried out by the Department of Public Works on the construction of the new water supply for Jerusalem from Rasel Ein, says an official communique, is briefly as follows:

The delivery of pipes, valves, and fittings for the pipe line and their transport to the site are nearly completed. Excavation for the pipe line trench is proceeding over a length of about 12 kilometers, and work on further lengths will be started shortly. Contracts for the construction of the pumping station, buildings, reservoirs, and permanent staff quarters will also be issued next month. Most of the engines, gearings, and pumps have been completed and tested in England, and will be ready for delivery shortly.

"I give waters in the wilderness, and rivers in the desert, to give drink to my people, my chosen."—Isa. 43:20.

IS GOD PLEASED?

Remember, we of the church, if faithful in all things, will be caught up to meet the Lord in the air. Enoch, that faithful servant of God who by his translation prefigures the glorious event soon to occur, had this testimony: "that he pleased God" (Heb. 11:5).

Let each examine himself. Is God pleased?

THE RESURRECTION

THE members of the Corinthian church gave Paul much anxiety at times. One way in which they troubled him was their doubting the resurrection. In his first letter to them, he makes clear some wonderful truths about this great event. He endeavors to establish them in the faith in this respect. Already in his preaching at Athens, Jerusalem, Antioch in Pisidia, and before Felix as well as Agrippa he had spoken of the rising from the dead (book of Acts). To Timothy, Paul writes that Jesus has "abolished death" (2 Tim. 1:10), "and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." He, Paul, also mentions this subject in writing to the Romans, the Thessalonians, and the Philippians.

Paul declares that Jesus rose on "the third day according to the scriptures." He cites witnesses to the fact. The apostles, "Cephas," James, "above five hundred," and he himself had seen the risen Christ. The three latter references do not appear in other writings. Having shown the fact to be irrefutable, for more than 250 witnesses are still living, he goes on to explain the mode of resurrection of Christians, for, Christ having risen, they, too, shall rise.

He discusses the kind of body the believer is to have in the future life. It is to be "the selfsame body," yet not the same matter. The wheat which we gather is not the same which we have planted, yet in some ways it is the same. It has not changed into some other kind of plant. It is still wheat. The body is sown in corruption, in dishonor, in weakness—a natural body—it is raised in incorruption, in glory, in power—a spiritual body. This spiritual body is not to be that of a fish or of a man. It is to have the glory of the celestial and to move through space with celestial beings. "Then we that are alive that are left, shall together with them be caught up in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so we shall ever be with the Lord."—1 Thess. 4:17. "For our citizenship is in heaven; whence also we wait for a Saviour; the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall fashion anew the body of our humiliation, that it may be conformed to the body of his glory, according to the working whereby he is able even to subject all things unto himself."—Phil. 3:20, 21.

We shall not be ghosts. Our bodies are to be real. We shall not then suffer pain and the second death will have no power over us. We shall be immortal. Death shall be "swallowed up in victory." This change is to take place in an instant: "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye. . . ."—1 Cor. 15:51, 52.

This wondrous change comes to us through the power of Christ. "If the dead are not raised, neither hath Christ been raised: and if Christ hath not been raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins."—1 Cor. 15:16, 17. "But thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."—1 Cor. 15:57.

To the biblical illustration of the change in the planted wheat we might add that of the caterpillar becoming a butterfly, the mosquito larva changing into a flying insect which lives in the air instead of water, and the egg from which comes the chicken. These and many other wonders—by the power of God.—Finley McC. Grissett in The Presbyterian.

CASTING ALL THY CARE UPON HIM

Burdened with a weight of care?
 Cast it all upon the Lord;
 He will all thy sorrows bear.
 Listen to His gracious word:
 "I will never thee forsake,
 Never leave thee," are His words;
 Wait upon Him, trust and wait
 Faith will have its sure reward.
 Hath no little dying sparrow
 Yet escaped thy Father's eye.
 Will He then forget His children?
 Ye would many sparrows buy;
 He the loving, tender shepherd;
 He the man of grief and woe
 Surely in His sad earth journey
 "Marked the path His people go."
 Wandering homeless without shelter,
 Scorned by those He came to save;
 Hungering oft and often weary,
 Weeping at a loved one's grave;
 Tempted like as we are tempted,
 Who could feel our needs but He;
 Hear His tender words of welcome,
 "Weary ones, come unto Me.
 Come to Me with all your burdens;
 Sickness, sorrow, pain, and loss;
 Come to Me and I will lead you,
 I will give you gold for dross;
 I will give you joy for sorrow,
 Sweetest rest for all thy pain.
 Night will pass and on that morrow,
 Thou shalt count thy loss as gain."
 Let us never fear to trust Him,
 In the dark as in the light;
 Knowing well He ever watcheth,
 And will lead our steps aright,
 Though the shadows seem to thicken,
 To our fainting, trembling sight;
 Never fear, beyond the darkness,
 There is everlasting light;
 And to Him who guards our footsteps,
 There is never any night.

what is the promised inheritance, may be found in the following quotations: "For evildoers shall be cut off: but those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth. . . . But the meek shall inherit the earth; and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace. . . . For such as be blessed of him shall inherit the earth; and they that be cursed of him shall be cut off. . . . The righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein for ever. . . . Wait on the Lord, and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land; when the wicked are cut off, thou shalt see it."—Psalm 37:9, 11, 22, 29, 34. "The righteous shall never be removed: but the wicked shall not inhabit the earth."—Prov. 10:30. "For the upright shall dwell in the land, and the perfect shall remain in it. But the wicked shall be cut off from the earth, and the transgressors shall be rooted out of it."—Prov. 2:21, 22. "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth."—Matt. 5:5. "And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth."—Rev. 5:9, 10.

Faith in God's promises is made the standard of righteousness. It is by these promises that we become partakers of the divine nature. Belief in something else will not do, neither may we lay belief aside and trust in our good works: "For if Abraham were justified by works, he hath whereof to glory; but not before God. For what saith the scripture? Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness. Now to him that worketh is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt. But to him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness."—Rom. 4:2-5. "Simon Peter, a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ, to them that have obtained like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God and our Saviour Jesus Christ: Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord, according as his divine power hath given to us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue: whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust."—2 Peter 1:1-4.

This language is clear and plain. It covers the ground of God's promise to Abraham, and to us through Jesus Christ. We have given only a small part of the scriptures bearing upon the subject. It stands to reason that if another everlasting promise is given in the Bible indicating an eternal inheritance elsewhere, then none of the promises can be sure. A clear understanding of this matter is very necessary, since salvation is made to depend upon faith in these promises. Study this line of thought carefully, and if you find something about it that you cannot understand, please make inquiry of us by mail, and we will do our best to make it plain to you.

our love is buried? Lonely is the home where death has entered and bereavement has come. Heavy are the hearts and dreary the path to those who have witnessed the stroke of the enemy, death, and who have stood by the open grave. Though they are deeply grieved, they complain not. "Rachel weeping for her children, and refused to be comforted, because they are not." None can escape the pains of bereavement: the feeling cannot be wisely entertained. If it were possible for us to protect ourselves from pain, if we could keep that visitor, which comes to rich and poor alike, from entering our homes, we would feel composed; yet our own lives would continue only from day to day. We are only tenants at will and may be removed without a minute's notice. "This night shall thy soul (life) be required of thee, and then whose shall all these things be?" "The windows of the house are darkened, the wheel is broken at the cistern, the pitcher is broken at the fountain, the mourners go about the streets for a few days, remembering us, and then the place which knew us shall know us no more."

The fact that we may die at any moment is sufficient warning to cause us to be ready for the event at all times by living blameless lives. If we entertained the thought continually, then happiness would be impossible. For this reason God has wisely ordained that we should remember it only under certain conditions, when it is a matter of personal concern. Hence, we live on and on with little thought of security, though we truly know that we are not secure in the present existence. We plan for many years of health and happiness, knowing that we ought not to count on a single day. This is a merciful provision of Providence. Without it none could be happy. If the uncertainty of life were ever present with us we would be miserable. We should remember that we are never prepared for death till we are prepared to live. If we could foresee the perils which continually surround us, the lurking dangers and hidden snares among which we continually move, life would be a burden and the hope of happiness a myth. Our prayer would be that death might quickly release us from the terrible fear. We are apparently unconscious of this fact, and it is a wise and merciful provision whereby God has made it possible for us to enjoy a moderate degree of happiness, even in this state of unconsciousness.

When we think of the cares, the anxieties, burdens, vexations, weariness, pains, conflicts, defeats, disappointments, losses, estrangement of friends, the betrayals of confidence, and when we think of the joy that has been turned to grief and sadness, we must either give up in despair or rise up with renewed energy and a resolute will to live above the world while living in it.

Thus far we have been looking upon the gloomy side of life. As rational beings we cannot afford to confine ourselves alone to what reason and experience declare; but as seekers after truth we may enter into the counsel of God and learn from Him the true purpose of life, what the reality of life is, what its real meaning is amid its illusions, what will be the final result of all its changes. The key by which all these things are made plain, which otherwise would remain mysterious, is given us through a knowledge of God's purpose concerning our final destiny.

The uncertainties and perplexities become burdensome only when our will is in opposition to His. When we fully learn that the enjoyments of life, however rich and numerous they may be, are not all the full purpose of life, we begin to understand that the hand that bestows His blessings can take them away. When we understand God's purpose concerning us we shall know more fully the mysteries of life. If we can bend our will to meet His purpose we shall avoid much worry. Then we can smile at our losses and endure with patience our griefs. Then we will learn to serve Him by waiting on Him, and gain strength through suffering. Amidst the severest storms of life we will secure peace and contentment. Then this mortal life with all its adversities will prove a blessing, and we will then perceive that God doeth all things well, that He is very pitiful and of tender mercy.

We are so constituted that we seek to shun every affliction that comes upon us. If men could have every wish granted they never would be found treading the rugged path of affliction. Their aim is to fortify themselves against trials, or to lessen their severity. We forget there is a discipline in trials which God has thought necessary for our benefit, and which in mercy He sends regardless of our opposition. For this reason He is represented as selecting His people "out of the furnace of affliction." In this fiery process the dross of sin is melted and removed. The saints of early centuries, whose names we love to honor, and upon whom we look as examples for our conduct, were refined as silver by trials which, to us, seem too severe for mortal flesh to endure. Even God's Son, "the captain of our salvation," was declared to be "made perfect through suffering." "Wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat." This wide way is often strewn with flowers. "Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." Though it leads to "pleasures for evermore," at Jesus' right hand, it is an uphill path that runs through much tribulation. While this may seem mysterious, we should remember that He is wise as He is infinitely good, even under the dark clouds that hover over our path as we journey toward the haven of eternal rest. It is His right to appoint the discipline best suited to prepare us for a life that will never end. Why should we be slow in joyfully accepting the appointments of a loving Father, who is qualifying us for that rest which He holds in store for all who meekly submit to His behests?

God orders all events for man's good, but so few believe His promises. We are being tested and educated, but few are swift to learn. This life is given us to prepare for what we should be instead of remaining what we are. The army that is led to battle has been prepared by "enduring hardness." Thus every Christian must be fitted by the discipline of sorrow if he would expect to "gain the victory," and "receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away."

John the Revelator said he "saw a great multitude in heaven which stood before the throne of God, and before the Lamb, clothed in white robes, and palms in their hands; and cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb." The scene was so superbly grand that he asked the question, "What are these which are arrayed in white robes, and whence came they?" Listen to the reply. "These are they which come up out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." How beautiful the heavenly picture! "They have come up out of great tribulation." Over a rough and perilous road, through distressing trials which they endured for Christ's sake, for the truth of the gospel, for His kingdom and glory. May it be the privilege of readers and writer to share in His glory!

HALLOWEEN IS "DEVIL WORSHIP"

WHEN you are preparing for that elaborate Halloween ball or are making a striking costume to wear you will likely ask yourself or some one else: Why do we celebrate Halloween? What is the origin of this hilarious festival? From now until that eventful night of October 31 and for days afterwards people in all walks of life will be discussing this "alle halowene tyd" or "all hallows tide."

Like most Christian festivals this celebration is associated with ancient pagan rites and customs. Celebrated as Halloween or All Saints Day, it is now chiefly known as the eve of the Christian festival. But this holiday had a far from saintly founding. Halloween long antedates Christianity and history shows that the ancient Druids, devil worshippers and believers in human sacrifice that they were, made this night an occasion for carrying on the wildest orgies of their cult. The superstition still believed in by many that this is the one night in the year during which ghosts and witches are most likely to wander abroad, was largely based on the old Druidical rites. These pre-Roman priests of Britain would gather their clans on Halloween and with mystic symbols call forth the wicked souls of the departed. Their principal god was Saman, Lord of Death.

Halloween as observed in modern times also appears to have been derived partly from the festival of Pomona celebrated in old Rome at the harvest season. This undoubtedly accounts for the popular association of pumpkins, fruits, nuts, etc., of autumn with Halloween (All Saints' Day or Hallowmas). Furthermore, it likely explains why the various "spirits" or "hobgoblins" associated with the celebration are now impersonated by pumpkin and other lanterns, disguised figures, etc.—Pathfinder.

The World Moves On

The high purpose of the church today is precisely what it was two thousand years ago: the selection and training of human beings for rulership and priesthood in the kingdom of God on earth. Nothing must be allowed to change our recognition of that fact. It is an immutable law, set down by God before the world was formed.

It is possible, however, to say the same thing in different ways; and to this very fact is due much of the failure of many sincere teachers of religion. The old ways are not the best ways for the present, even though the old ideas and the old dogmas are the best ideas and the best dogmas still.

The world moves on. Compulsory education has created a huge army of unthinking skeptics. Compulsory education has succeeded in driving certain facts into the heads of students, but the ability and willingness to think can be inculcated in no brain. A superficial polish, a coating of culture, a breath of scholarship has been given to the majority of young people; but the young people, internally, remain the same—careless, thoughtless, selfish, egocentric.

But the superficial polish, however superficial it may be, must be met by the Christian teacher if he is to accomplish his great object. Rome was the most ardent advocate of the forms of legal justice in the days of its degeneracy; and today, as the world decays, men have become sticklers for the forms of education and refinement.

The Bible must, of course, forever be the mainstay of the Christian worker. Without the Bible, and without the doctrines fostered by the Bible, no man can properly be called a Christian. But now something more than the bare word of the Bible is required to hammer the idea contained within it into the thick skulls of the modern young Brain Trust.

Books carry the message of civilization into every section of the world. Your book dealer, if you but realized the fact, could be one of your most effective allies in carrying the gospel you teach into the untouched families of earth—your book dealer and the public librarian.

There is no value, however, in reading a book once, except for sheer entertainment. Who could read the Rubaiyat once and assimilate it all? Who could skip nonchalantly over the pages of Papini's Life of Christ, of Coburn's New Archeological Discoveries, of Ruskin's essays, and really know that which he read? These books go deep into the lives of men; they are worth reading, not once, nor twice, but scores of times. Cicero believed that "to add a library to a house is to give that house a soul." A private library is permanent; it is not something that one borrows for today and forgets tomorrow.

To build a really effective library at a minimum expense requires knowledge. It really is surprising for how small a cost books on prophecy, on how to teach, on the way that people think, on history, on races, on the Bible as a book, can be obtained. Bought slowly, one copy now, another in three months, six months, a year, the library grows and grows, becomes a living, sentient thing in the existence of the Christian.

"There is," said Lamb, "more reason for saying grace before a new book than before a dinner." Why not? The book contains mental, spiritual, blessings, cultivates the mind; the dinner is altogether a satisfaction of material appetite. Yet the majority thank God for the dinner and regard the book as an unnecessary evil.

The Christian worker's library should be versatile. It should include a bit of prophecy, a bit of dogmatism, something of literature, a little essayist's theology, some history and biography, a piece of economics, and not a small portion of psychology and fiction. Let the Christian teacher or student cultivate his library, and he will find himself able to speak, to write, to live, to teach, with a force he had hitherto dreamed impossible. More, he will find this new force leading to greater force, and in the meantime the practical results of his labors and example will be tremendously augmented.

"If a book is worth reading, it is worth buying." That was Ruskin's idea of the value of choice reading, and Ruskin was one of the greatest philosophers of the modern era. Ben Hur is far more interesting on the third reading than on the first; its historical, geographical, and biblical accuracy cannot possibly be appreciated by the perfunctory reading that most people grant it. And it is the revelation, as the Life of Christ is a revelation, of a man who convinced himself against his will, by the writing of the book, that the Bible is the inspired Word of God and that Jesus is God's Son.

These are the embellishments of a Christian career, these books. They are not the foundation of religion; they are not even essential to one's own salvation; but, as the world moves on, they do serve to keep one in touch with its movement and to make him more fit for his task of teaching by word and example the great doctrines of Jesus Christ.

Any Berean societies or individuals having copies of senior Berean book series 1921-23 which they are willing to dispose of are asked to communicate with Harry Goekler, 406 Spruce Street, Marshall Illinois.

Although it is primarily intended for entertainment, for pacifists there's a mighty truth as well in Channing Pollock's "Thou Shalt Not Kill" (Liberty, Oct. 19).

PREPARED BY MARY A. GESIN

"As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about his people."

GOD GIVES HIS PEOPLE A WATCHMAN

IN SOME of our towns and cities the most dependable boys and girls are chosen to act as safety patrols. Each one is given certain hours on certain days to stand guard at the crossings as the school children pass. Have any of you ever been chosen to do that? If you have, then you are "watchmen."

If you were assigned to be a safety patrol every Monday morning from 8:30 to 9 o'clock at the corner near your school, you would be there promptly. You would follow the orders given you and hold the traffic up at just the right time so the little ones could cross safely. You wouldn't think of talking and laughing with a group of your friends while you were on duty. You would attend strictly to business because you had been chosen for that work.

Now the school officers choose these safety patrols because they are anxious for each child to reach school and return home safely. They are concerned for the welfare of all. It is a very wise and kind act and one that helps avert many accidents.

Long, long ago God set a "watchman" over His people who had been taken captive to Babylon. Ezekiel was this watchman's name, and it means, "God will strengthen." Isn't that a good name?

Because God loved these people so far away from their homeland, He was anxious that they be warned of danger and be guarded and shielded. No, not danger from recklessly driven automobiles as they crossed the streets. But a greater danger than that!

God's people had been wicked and had bowed themselves down to idols and done many other sinful things. And so God had to punish them. But after the punishment God wanted them to know that there was opportunity to repent and do what was right. For fear they did not know this, God set Ezekiel over them to be their "safety patrol."

Now these sad and homesick captives, no doubt, thought that because God had punished them He did not love them. And they didn't have courage to begin life aright as they sat down by the riverside in their strange new home.

That was Ezekiel's task—to show them a new and better way of life. So that if they followed God's way they might look forward to a life after resurrection which would not be filled with sorrow and heartache and loneliness.

God told Ezekiel to tell His people that He did not delight in the death of the wicked. But what He did delight in was their changing from wicked ways to righteous ways. And if they did that they would "surely live."

Ezekiel was to be a faithful watchman, too. He was to listen carefully to the instructions he got from God and then carry them out carefully. If he failed and harm came to any of them because he wasn't watching, he would be to blame. Just as the safety patrol would be to blame if he didn't watch the traffic and a little child should be injured.

Because Ezekiel was a faithful watchman, many of the homesick captives turned their hearts once more to the one, true God who loved them. They taught their children the songs of Zion, as we learn from some of the Psalms.

No doubt they often turned their eyes in the direction of their beloved home and thought of the mountains that are round about Jerusalem. And so God came to seem to them like the everlasting hills—always guarding His people wherever they are, even you and me.

FOR YOUR BIBLE SCRAPBOOK

Lesson 6, November 10, "God Gives His People a Watchman." Copy the verse at the top of the page. Then tell all you can about Ezekiel and what the work was that God gave him to do. Show how the people needed just such a person at that time.

Next copy these lines, filling in the blanks:

God chose Ezekiel to be a _____.

Ezekiel was to watch over the people of _____.

The people of Judah were living in a _____ land.

They had been taken there because they _____.

These captives were sad and _____.

God wanted them to start a _____ life.

Ezekiel's work was to tell them how to _____.

If they kept on in their sin they would surely _____.

If they turned back to God they would surely _____.

Once more they began to _____ God.

Now for the part that I imagine most of you like best, the pictures. If you can find a picture of a man with a lantern in his hand, paste it in your book, writing below it, "Ezekiel, God's Watchman." Next draw a river and paste several little people sitting along the bank and one standing up talking to them.

For your next picture draw the mountains around Jerusalem. Write underneath the words of Psalm 125:1.

LESSON 6. — November 10, 1935

EZEKIEL TEACHES PERSONAL RESPONSIBILITY

Ezekiel 18:1-32; 33:1-20

GOLDEN TEXT

"So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God."—Romans 14:12.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Ezekiel Teaches Personal Responsibility.

Aim: Our own actions determine our present and future destiny.

Class Discussion: Which influences one's life the more, heredity or environment? To what extent are we responsible for the morals of those with whom we associate? How can we most effectively encourage others to right living?

I. Ezekiel's Responsibility. (Ezek. 33:7-9.) Every man and woman, young and old, who has learned that to live contrary to God's will brings suffering and death, is morally and spiritually bound to warn as many as he or she can influence of the danger that threatens all who continue in sin. And each one who possesses the knowledge that "the wages of sin is death," God will hold to account for the use he makes of it. The layman, as well as the minister, must not neglect to teach the natural mortality of man and our complete dependence upon Christ for life. God will hold us to account for any failure on our part to warn others.

II. Individual Responsibility. (Vv. 10-16.) Ezekiel teaches plainly the mortality of man, saying in many places and in various ways that "The soul that sinneth, it shall die" (Ezek. 18:4, 20; 33:8-16). He places the responsibility for obtaining or forfeiting everlasting life upon the action of each individual just as Jesus and the apostles did (John 11:25; Rom. 2:6, 7). The final destiny of both the wicked and of the righteous is most clearly and positively stated: "I say unto the wicked, Thou shalt surely die," and to the one who has "done that which is lawful and right; he shall surely live" (vv. 14, 16). Life and death have always been set the one against the other as the rewards of righteousness and sin (Deut. 30:15, 19; Psa. 37:8-11, 18, 20, 28; Mal. 4:1-3; John 6:40; Rom. 8:11; 1 Thess. 4:13-18). Faith in the gospel Jesus preached; obedience in baptism, which symbolizes one's faith in the reality and efficacy of Christ's death and one's recognition of the reality of the death that eventually must come to him, from which Christ will deliver him when He comes; followed by a life of faithful service, are the steps that lead to immortality in the kingdom of God.

GOLDEN TEXT

"So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God."—Rom. 14:12.

In the lesson text the warning had to be heeded to be of any avail. The responsibility rested on the watchman that received God's word to warn the people of their wickedness. If he failed to do his duty he was the one that suffered for it.

As in olden times, so today so far as responsibility is concerned. We find God's word and His will on the printed pages of the Bible. It is there for us to read and learn what is required of us. If we fail to do this we are responsible for the results caused by the failure. It is ourselves for which we must give account, not our neighbor nor kinsman. We need not judge our brother, but so live that our own page is white and clean; then the account of ourselves to God will be satisfactory to all concerned.—L. A. R.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Responsibility

- to God does not cease with our own welfare;
- shirked or shifted does not release us;
- grows as age and knowledge increase;
- is divinely imposed;
- can be misused if selfishly carried out.

Responsibility. We cannot get out from under responsibility by neglect of duty or by shifting it to the shoulders of some one else. Scripture is clear in its teaching of personal responsibility. First, in regard to our own standing with the Father, and in the second instance, in bringing others into covenant relationship with Him. "Every man shall bear his own burden" is the way God looks at our individual responsibility (Gal. 6:5). Another cannot live our Christian life for us or discharge our duty to God. Our actions and words are charged to our personal account (Matt. 12:37). The more knowledge we possess, the more required at our hands. James nicely illustrates responsibility to others in a few words as related in his Epistle (2:15, 16). Illustrations of attempts by various Bible characters to shift blame for individual conduct may be found by referring to the following examples: Adam blamed Eve for his disobedience and Eve in turn accused the serpent (Gen. 3:12, 13). Sarai charged Abraham with her own mistake (Gen. 16:5 with v. 2). Aaron tried to sidestep personal blame by accusing the people (Ex. 32:22-24). Saul sought to vindicate his own disobedience by indicting his people (1 Sam. 15:20, 21).

Abusing Our Responsibility. This sin is oftentimes committed, especially among leaders. Peter admonishes against such abuse, when he addresses the elders to refrain from "being lords over God's heritage" (1 Pet. 5:2, 3). Lay members oftentimes abuse their privilege of voice in the affairs of the church by overexercising their responsibilities in a rule-or-ruin role. Judas turned his responsibility to the Master to the priests for lucrative gain.—C. E. R.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

Does God Care What I Do?

This lesson centers around the Hebrews who were taken captive about ten years before the fall of Jerusalem. Forced to leave their homes, they had made the long, wearisome journey of almost a thousand miles to Babylon, where they were to spend the rest of their days gathered together in little villages. Ezekiel was one of these exiles, living in a little settlement on the River Chebar. God, who is always concerned about His people regardless of their attitude toward Him, appointed Ezekiel to advise them. Many of them, no doubt, felt that God had ceased to care and had turned away from them. They knew their punishment was the result of their sins, but they did not recognize God's loving hand in it. It was Ezekiel's duty to show them that God desired them to turn from their evil ways and give their lives to Him. It would not restore to them their homes which they had lost, but it was the only thing that would bring them happiness in their exile. God had dealt with them as a nation; now He was dealing with them as individuals. Many lessons were learned by the exiles, chief among them being that God takes "no pleasure in the death of the wicked," but desires all men to turn to Him.

Remember: God's willingness to forgive, if we truly repent, proves that He cares for us.—M. G.

JUNIOR CLASS

Text: Ezek. 33:7-16. Topic: Ezekiel the Watchman of Israel. Memory Verse: "I have set thee a watchman unto the house of Israel; therefore thou shalt hear the word at my mouth, and warn them from me."—Ezek. 33:7.

Review. Read the questions given in last Sunday's lesson and see if all can answer them orally.

Presentation of Lesson. Discuss duties of a watchman. Ask such questions as these: If there were a watchman at a railroad crossing whose duty was to keep all cars from crossing the track when a train was coming, and if he failed to do his duty and some people were killed, who would be to blame? Our lesson today is about another kind of watchman. God called Ezekiel to be a watchman over Israel. He was to tell them what was right or wrong for them to do. He was to tell them the right way; then if they failed to listen, Ezekiel had done his part. But if he did not go and tell them, God said Ezekiel would be to blame. In what way is our minister our watchman?

Memory Verse. The words of our memory verse are what God said to Ezekiel when He called Him to be a watchman. Learn it.

Notebook. At the top of the page write the word "Watchman." At one side and below it write "Ezekiel" and copy verse 7 of lesson. Across from it write what Ezekiel was to do as a watchman. Below this paste a picture of a boy or girl to represent yourself. At one side and below it write Matthew 5:16. At the other side write what you can do to let your light shine.—V. C. T.

MEETINGS AT ELDORADO, ILLINOIS

Next Sunday a protracted evangelistic meeting will begin at Eldorado, Ill., which is located in the mining district in the southern part of the State. For several years Bro. C. E. Lapp has been visiting the church at this place once a month and Sunday school has been carried on regularly under the superintendency of Bro. H. J. Edmister.

The meetings will be in charge of G. E. Marsh, editor of The Restitution Herald, who will be assisted by James McLain as song leader. The effort is being put on by the local church and not under the auspices of the Evangelistic Fund of the General Conference.

THE COVENANTS

The series of articles by Bro. S. J. Lindsay, founder and first editor of The Restitution Herald, on the covenants, concerning which a brief announcement was made some time ago, begins in this issue and will continue each week until completed. "The covenant which God made with our fathers, saying unto Abraham, And in thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed" (Acts 3:25), forms the basis upon which all of God's subsequent dealings with Jews and Gentiles alike rest. If you have a friend whom you wish to interest in these vitally important truths we suggest that you follow the example of others, and send in a subscription to The Herald covering the issues containing these articles. The three numbers will be sent to any address for 15 cents.

GOLDEN RULE HOME

Last Friday night Bro. and Sr. Lewis D. Romine arrived in Oregon from the former home in South Bend, Ind., to take over the duties of matron and caretaker of Golden Rule Home. They succeed Bro. and Sr. Levi Mick, who recently resigned the position which they had held for the past three and a half years. Bro. and Sr. Romine were accompanied by their daughters, Jeanette and Joanne. Jeanette will enter the Oregon high school and Joanne will be a student in the sixth grade.

Bro. Romine was taken ill on the night of his arrival and was confined to his bed over Sunday, but is now able to inspect the domain over which he will rule, while Sr. Romine is being introduced to her new duties by Mrs. Glasgow, who has carried on the work efficiently during the absence of Mrs. Mick for the past six weeks.

A card received from the Curtis Publishing Company brings the welcome news that Mr. H. L. Stockdale has entered the name of Golden Rule Home on the subscription list of "Country Gentleman" for a period of two years. The Home family will appreciate Mr. Stockdale's thoughtfulness and generosity, we are sure.

HERALD RECEIPTS

WHEN NECESSITY PRESSES

The cost of the new heating plant installed in the building occupied by The Restitution Herald is about $325. This expense has been absolutely necessary, as the old furnace could not possibly be used.

Merle E. Bell, Harvey, Ill., has started contributions toward payment for the plant with a donation of $4.00. Each week hereafter, when the number of names justifies, we shall include in these columns a list of contributors toward the cost of the new heating plant.

The goal for the effort is $325. Will you help us?

One of the finest examples of a mimeographed church bulletin we have ever seen comes in the form of the Church of God Messenger for October 18. The four-page paper is published by C. E. Randall, pastor of the Niagara Falls, N. Y., and Fonthill, Ontario, Churches of God, and one of the busiest men in the denomination. The bulletin is issuing biblical questions in each edition, to be answered in the next, with a view to stimulating study.

BURR OAK, INDIANA

Sunday, Oct. 20, our Bible school, like a thermometer on a hot day, pushed up to the height of 58. Encouragement in the work becomes such by earnest efforts on the part of all.

Bro. and Sr. Ernest Wisely and daughter of Argos attended the morning service. Bro. Wisely taught the men's class. We appreciate his help. Come again.

Sunday noon after services the Gospel Seeker's Class surprised Margaret Weaver (one of their members) by gathering at her home and enjoying her eighteenth milepost.

I preached Sunday morning, the 20th, at the Eagle Creek Church. They have a splendid Bible school, but no regular preaching. I found in their old record that the work began in 1891. The first preacher was Bro. Carter, and then came Bro. Wince, with many others afterward. We hope to be able to resurrect the old faith. The only members left are Bro. Frank Cochenour and his sister Nora. Pray, please, for us, and that other old landmarks of the church will be revived.

Sunday, the 27th, we will be with the church at Kokomo for another meeting.

We are looking forward to the time when Bro. Austin will be with us, bringing his pictures of the pyramids. The dates possibly will be November 25-28. This subject is in able hands, and we expect to fill the church. All are invited.

A. E. Hoskins, Pastor.

GOLDEN RULE HOME FOR AGED

In the action taken at the annual business meeting of our Mission Society and our Church of God brethren, our region now has a home for its aged people at Oregon, Ill. Our people are to be admitted on the same condition as those of their own body. This is near the center of our field. Golden Rule Home is located in the heart of the Rock River Valley in northern Illinois, one of the most delightful sections of the great Midwest. Here nature contributes of her best to increase health and prolong life. "A haven of contentment, security, and comfort for those who appreciate beautiful surroundings and tender care in the twilight period of their lives."

Golden Rule Home is a beautiful brick building, with nice large rooms and all modern conveniences. Nice living room, library, and sun room surely did look good to us as Bro. L. E. Conner, an officer of the organization, showed us through the home. The large lawn, with its beautiful, stately trees, beautiful flowers, and shrubbery gave a delightful appearance and pleasing surroundings.

Golden Rule Home was dedicated on December 31, 1922. In addition to the grounds where the home is located they have a 7-acre garden plot and a 160-acre farm. During all these years no one has ever left the Home. Only one has been removed and this was because of the mental state. A splendid record.

It is estimated that in addition to the fruits and vegetables grown in the Home gardens it will require $175 a year per member to provide food, warmth, clothing, light, and other necessities of like nature. To assure the maintenance of each individual during his life who enters the Home, it is our understanding that the State of Illinois requires that a sum of $1,600 be kept in a reserve fund. This has been faithfully observed and a nice reserve fund has been built up. It is expected of each member that he shall pay at least this sum. There are many other expenses in maintaining the Home, as general upkeep and hired help, which are paid by their denomination. By their reserve fund their National Bible Institution is able to guarantee life maintenance, nurse, and medical care in sickness and burial. Of course where the applicant has sufficient funds he may be asked to pay as high as $3,000 for his life maintenance.

This settles a very difficult problem for our region. Our aged ones can now be cared for within easy reach of their friends, where living conditions are maintained on a level with the standards of life of the people of our area.

Thank God for the Golden Rule Home opportunities.—Advent Christian Mission Bulletin.

If any churches or Berean societies have on hand copies of the senior Berean lesson book dated 1921-23 with which they are willing to part, please communicate with Harry Goekler, 406 Spruce St., Marshall, Ill.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

As these lines are written final preparations are being made for Rally Day and Anniversary Sunday. Our meetings with Bro. Patrick are drawing toward a close, and many encouraging results are already evident.

The pastor and wife expect to be en route to the Southland when this is published. Bro. Patrick is remaining to carry on the work here for the first part of the period.

HOW ONE MAN DOES IT

A letter dated October 21 from Norman John Macleod, pastor of the Los Angeles, Calif., Church of God, to the Berean editor points to what can be accomplished by a minister who regards his position as something more than a pulpit-and-study job, and who is willing to take advantage of the opportunities his place in society affords.

"I have been," said Mr. Macleod, "so busy lecturing on Ethiopia at various service clubs and the like that I have had almost no time to attend to my work. . . . I have averaged about five lectures a week for the last two or three weeks. That demands quite a bit of my time in keeping up with the latest trends. But the contacts have been most pleasurable and have taken me away from my home town on occasion, as far as Whittier. What is more, I still have a return engagement at that place to speak before the brotherhood of the Congregational Church.

"I have spoken to the Legion and the Legion Auxiliary here in Pomona; . . . spoken to the Rotary and the 20-30 Club in Pomona; spoken to the Legion in Whittier; to say nothing of the Women's Community Club, etc. For the last three weeks I have been out every night until late.

"Then I, with members of the family and others, have been in the process of picking ten acres of walnuts, taking care of my grove here, and teaching night school, plus other things. Needless to say, many things have been only half done, and other things have been left undone altogether."

The Macleod letter was drawn forth by an inquiry regarding copy he had sent the National Berean Society for use in a new series of Berean lesson books.

EDWARD W. RUDACILLE

Edward W. Rudacille was born February 29, 1892, to S. J. and Cavilla Rudacille. He departed this life October 19, 1935.

Mr. Rudacille was born in the vicinity of Browntown, Va., and has been a resident of this locality all his life, excepting about fourteen years which were spent in the city of Baltimore, Md.

In 1911 he was united in marriage to Charlotte Updike, who remains to mourn this great loss. To this family three children were born: Mrs. Augusta Marlowe, Browntown, Va., and Edith and Myrtle, who both reside at home. Besides his wife and three daughters he is survived by his father and mother, three brothers and two sisters, and two grandchildren. Mr. Rudacille has been a good neighbor and friend, and he will be greatly missed in the community where he resided.

For the last few years our brother has been in declining health, which he bore bravely and patiently. Last Easter Sunday he was baptized in the all-saving name of our Master Jesus Christ, and has remained true to his convictions until the time of his death. In his parting the Church of God loses a valuable and highly respected member.

He sleeps in hope of the soon return of the Savior, who will give life more abundantly to those who have served and obeyed Him.

Two pages are printed with a stewardship message, and two pages are left blank for local announcements. The company suggests that churches conduct a five weeks' or ten weeks' course of tithe education by using its bulletins, which are offered at a nominal sum. The Coming Crisis

By James R. Kaye, Ph.D., LL.D.

The state of the world as a whole in which we are now living stands alone in human history. Every thoughtful man is asking, "What does it mean? To what is it all pointing?" These questions are answered in the most intelligent manner by The Coming Crisis.

The scholarship of this book is sufficiently assured by the fact that its author is the compiler of the New Analytical Bible and other biblical works.

THE END OF THE AGE

Prophecies relating to the coming of Christ and its bearing on present world conditions are considered from a strictly scriptural viewpoint. The book is probably the sanest, soundest, most exhaustive treatment of this subject now in print. It is invaluable to anyone interested in the future of humanity and the return of the Messiah.

Publisher's Gossip

By Arlen Marsh

WHY NOT TRY GOD?

It's a short book (25 minutes' reading time), and it could be a best seller on its own merits as well as on the reputation of its author. As a matter of fact, after reading Charlie Chaplin's articles in Woman's Home Companion I had reached the conclusion that no star in Hollywood could write, unaided by a ghost. Mary Pickford shattered the idea.

Why Not Try God? has gone through six printings in a year, or fifty thousand copies. That's quite a record for a religious book. But it has a verve, a humor, and an easy informality that are usually lacking in writings about God and His works.

One may differ with the basic philosophy expressed by Miss Pickford; but after all's said and done, the book sets down in an entertaining style thoughts about spirituality and the Deity which, although important, no one would have read unless a motion picture star had written them. Miss Pickford's chief error appears to be the adoption of an attribute for a person. There's no quarrel, however, with her hypothesis that something like this is necessary if humankind is to be made happy: "God became not only my Big Boss, but my unseen Good Companion, my Silent Partner, my Counselor." And there's certainly no quarrel with the idea that thought is the power that governs all action.

H. C. Kinsey & Company (New York) published the book in 1934; $1.00 is the price.

THE COMING CRISIS

Here's a book to cheer about. James R. Kaye, of Analytical Bible and Teacher's Guide fame, has done himself proud in the writing of it. In 128 pages, he encompasses a very fair study of past, present, and future conditions in relation to the return of Christ.

What endeared me immediately to the book was the remark on page 7: "We believe that every intelligent student of the Bible regards with disfavor all 'date setting' tendencies." And then the author goes on to shatter with history and Bible the wild theories of the date lovers of the past. It's all very delightful.

After a brief introduction, Dr. Kaye begins with definitions and works on to the climax, concluding with a chapter on the earthly kingdom of God and the rulership of Christ. The whole is liberally sprinkled with Bible texts, making it easily possible for one who disagrees to check up on how mistaken the poor doctor is.

Dr. Kaye believes in a general resurrection. (He also happens to believe in the Trinity, but he doesn't mention that in The Coming Crisis.) He takes up the cudgels with the Modernists by talking about the divine sonship of Jesus. And he makes the Jews the backbone of the entire book.

Although Why Not Try God? talks about affairs which are frequently neglected by the church, and although it comes from a much more popular writer than Dr. Kaye, The Coming Crisis probably will supersede it in volume of sales among prophetic students—and rightly so, perhaps. The Coming Crisis is provocative of increased knowledge, and is apparently quite accurate biblically. Why Not Try God? is provocative of meditative thought, and a bit over the line of fact now and then.

Buxton-Westerman Company (Chicago) are responsible for The Coming Crisis: $1.25.

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT

For the sake of that ancient human trait of liking to talk over the old familiar things, why not review a book most of the readers of these columns already know? Particularly since—but here's the letter from the publishers (Watch Tower Bible & Tract Society, Brooklyn):

"Our supply of The Emphatic Diaglott is getting low and we do not know whether there will be another edition of it later or not."

The book, of course, is a sort of dual translation of the New Testament, by Benjamin H. Wilson. In one column of the page (which is in very readable type, by the way) is the original Greek text—or the Greek text, if one accepts the thought that the Gospels were first written in Aramaic—of the Testament, together with an exceedingly accurate interlinear word-for-word translation of said text. In the parallel column is the author's own idea of what the English translation should be, and this column is ornamented with all kinds of type frills to indicate the emphasis Mr. Wilson believed the Greek contained.

In addition to the double translation, there is an excellent Bible dictionary in the back of the book and a complete explanation of the queer-looking Greek alphabet in the front of it, along with an introduction to the author's ideas of emphasis.

For anyone who likes Greek as little as this reviewer, the Diaglott is nothing for casual reading; but it must be admitted that the book is almost invaluable to anyone who seeks a thorough, accurate understanding of what the apostles meant when they wrote. The author's own translation is an enlightening one, although he does appear to strain a point here and there in order to establish the non-personality of Satan. However, it's well worth $2.50.

Jesus Christ, the Only Begotten Son of God

By R. H. Judd

PERSONAL correspondence on what some call "controversial subjects" is often deemed fruitless, and not only devoid of good, but a cause of engendering a harsh spirit and hard feeling between the contestants. That such is often true there can be very little doubt, especially so when one or both of the parties concerned are unwilling to be convinced of error. On the other hand, when it is recognized that others may differ from us because of conviction, then we are ourselves in a right spirit to learn.

Sometimes the very way an opponent presents his side of the question brings up a new phase that really confirms our view, instead of bringing us to see things as he sees them. Perhaps, too, when cordial relations are maintained, there is no better method of drawing out the best that can be produced on either side than personal debate, thus giving both contestants and their readers unique opportunity to calmly compare results.

Another advantage is that if the argument is in a right spirit, one is driven to "search and see." In other words, he goes afresh to the Word of God, and this is probably the most important feature that can be desired. In doing this he finds help along the lines of the subject discussed, and many avenues of thought that bring new light and beauty to topics already studied are incidentally opened up.

The writer has for many years had experience along these lines, and has generally sought to converse with acknowledged leaders. He has thus had the benefit of their experience and point of view, and has gained an insight into their wider reading which his own limited means and opportunities have not permitted.

In a recent discussion concerning the Deity of Jesus Christ a correspondent says (emphasis his own), "You do not believe the primal law, 'everything after its kind'; if you did you could not reject the Deity of Jesus Christ. The Word who took flesh from Mary is as much true and living God as is His Father. He could not be anything else. There are some things God cannot do, and one is to beget a Son who would not be partaker of His own nature, life, and substance. That is a fact, you are free to reject it if you please, but rejecting does not destroy the fact."

Our correspondent has stated his case well and forcibly. There is no mistaking his position.

PRIMAL FACT

I believe many in our churches, and other churches, have felt the difficulty in John 3:16 and elsewhere of the statement that Jesus Christ is the "only begotten Son" of God; but the delicacy of the question has prevented frank investigation of a subject so vitally affecting fundamental truth. Readers of THE RESTITUTION HERALD are well aware of my belief that any discussion is more than half won if proved fact is made its pivotal center.

Knowing well in my own heart that I did believe the Scripture truth everything "after its kind," and knowing also that God's Word distinctly declares that "God is one," that He is "the only true God," that "beside him there is no God," I felt certain there must be an error in our friend's presentation and support of the trinitarian doctrine. Turning to the passage in Genesis 1 on which the whole weight of his argument is based, what do I find? First, that the law has reference to terrestrial life. Second, that the means adopted is by what many deem to be the crowning masterpiece of God's creation, viz., seed, the law and the means being the same in the vegetable and the animal kingdom, including man. In every instance but one, in the more than one hundred that occur in Scripture, the seed of the man is the determining factor in giving birth to new life. The one exception referred to is the "seed of the woman." Its application to the birth of Christ is accepted by every believer in the Word of God. Never in all Scripture is Christ connected with any other than human seed. Our correspondent's argument should be regarded with horror by every true Christian as suggestive evidence that God had Himself by personal act departed from His own law of the mingling of species. As if to anticipate any such thought and give it flat denial, the Word tells us that Christ was born of a virgin.

Further, it cannot be denied that any such union would result in the break-up of the very law it is so strongly de-

Abreast of the Times

Court Upholds Bible Reading in Schools

"From a child thou hast known the holy scriptures."

NEW YORK, Oct. 30.—The Bible, which formerly was read in practically all of the public schools in America, but which, through the opposition of atheists and Roman Catholics, during recent years has been barred from the schoolroom by law, seems to be winning its way back under decisions of the higher courts. In an opinion handed down by Supreme Court Justice William T. Collins, of the New York Supreme Court, a motion made by Joseph Lewis, president of the Free Thinkers Society of America, to restrain the Board of Education from permitting the reading of the Bible and the holding of religious services in the public school buildings, was denied. The decision affirmed that the reading of the Bible in the public schools did not violate the Federal and State Constitutions, but tended toward general cultural or moral improvement, and hence was permissible.

Britain would reciprocate by removing a large part of her naval vessels from the Mediterranean, Italy withdrew one entire army corps from Lybia. Contrary to such roseate anticipations, however, the British have sent additional gunboats to patrol the northern African coast, the Suez Canal, the ports of Palestine, and the east coast of Africa covering the landing places of Italian troops and munitions for Ethiopia. In addition to all this naval activity, more British troops arrived yesterday to strengthen the defenses at Suez. Altogether the outlook for peace is gloomy.

With the shutting off of credit and supplies from nearly fifty nations of the world, Italy will soon find itself in an exceedingly embarrassing position for lack of raw materials with which to manufacture munitions and for food and clothing with which to supply her vast army.

A glance into the future from a biblical standpoint reveals the absurdity of the entire situation. No matter what success may attend the efforts of the nations involved in the impending struggle to achieve commercial and territorial advancement, no matter which nation or group of nations may win temporarily the objective toward which they aim, all will eventually lose when they are called into judgment at the bar of the King of kings!

Italy Prepares for European War

"Yet he had no wages, nor his army, . . . for the service that he had served."—Ezekiel 29:18.

ROME, Italy, Oct. 30.—In spite of conflicting rumors of approaching peace in Ethiopia, more definite and believable evidences that the present war may soon develop into a general European conflict are observable among all the nations involved. Premier Mussolini today issued two exceedingly significant decrees that indicate clearly that Il Duce recognizes that most of the conferences that have been held with England and France are little more than meaningless gestures designed to quiet the public while preparations for war on a vast scale go feverishly on.

In the first of these decrees Mussolini ordered the drafting of Italy's womanhood to fight the sanctions of the League of Nations, which it is believed may result in much privation and suffering in the country. The women will be asked to economize on food, clothing, and other household necessities, that the resources of the nation may be devoted to the support of the armies now in the field and which may soon be required for service in Europe.

The Premier's second decree directs that a census of the mercantile marine be undertaken at once to determine the strength of the naval reserve. In the expectation that

When the Earth Shivers

"Thou shalt be visited of the Lord of hosts with thunder, and with earthquake."—Isaiah 29:6.

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—Savants of Harvard University today predicted that recurring earthquakes, similar to that which early this morning jarred the entire northeastern United States, will be felt throughout wide sections of eastern North America.

It is supposed that the quake which rocked residences and hospitals originated in the Laurentian fault, north of the St. Lawrence River, and that it may be traced to readjustments due to the last Ice Age.

Four deaths have occurred in Helena, Montana, as a result of days of frequent shocks.

God's Covenant With Abraham

By S. J. Lindsay

THE last question in the accompanying quotation from Genesis at first seems to be a strange one in the light of the fact that Abram had been so faithful in believing God. God had promised Abram the possession. Why could he not accept it with the same assurance with which he received the other promises? It is not so strange after all when we come to consider that this inheritance was made an everlasting inheritance. Naturally the question that arose in Abram's mind was, How can I accept or receive an everlasting inheritance while I myself am not everlasting? To answer this, God shows Abram by a vision that it is not to come in this life. The only conclusion, then, is that Abram, believing God, must conclude that he was to rise from the dead. Stephen says in Acts 7 that Abraham never received so much as to set his foot on. Later on, by other evidence, God fully assured Abram of a resurrection, by the manner in which He kept His word with him to give him a son out of his own loins. At this time Abraham was a hundred years old and Sarah was well stricken in years. She also had been barren through life. Respecting this matter, Paul says: "And being not weak in faith, he considered not his own body now dead, when he was about an hundred years old, neither yet the deadness of Sarah's womb: he staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God; and being fully persuaded that, what he had promised, he was able also to perform. And therefore it was imputed to him for righteousness."

Abraham was to be put to the test to see if his faith was strong enough to yield obedience to God's commandments. When the lad, Isaac, was about fourteen years of age, God gave commandment (Gen. 22) that Abraham take that son to the mountain to offer him in sacrifice. Abraham yielded immediate obedience to the will of God. Many careless remarks as to Abraham's sanity have been made by skeptics and infidels with regard to his obedience in this matter. Abraham knew something these did not know. We are told about it in Hebrews 11:17-19: "By faith Abraham, when he was tried, offered up Isaac: and he that had received the promises offered up his only begotten son, of whom it was said, That in Isaac shall thy seed be called; accounting that God was able to raise him up, even from the dead; from whence also he received him in a figure."

Abraham's reasoning was of the best sort. God had given him evidence of His power to do what He said He would do. Abraham believed it, and when the test came, was ready to perform the part of faith. He knew that God, who could give him a son out of the dead condition of their bodies, could also return that son to him even though he be taken in death as a sacrifice. Abraham's question, How shall I know that I shall receive it? gives no hint that he thought he would be more alive than ever when dead, as popular teaching now advocates. He knew that there would be no chance for him to possess an everlasting inheritance when he was dead. He also sought assurance from God that some means would be provided for life out of death that he might enter into the inheritance. He received the assurance that God is able to raise up the dead. And Abraham became possessed of the faith that even though death strikes down, yet God is able to raise up the dead to the inheritance promised. This is the gospel, or good news, the glad tidings. So we read in Galatians 3:8: "And the scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed."

Paul tells us: "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek."—Rom. 1:16.

We now wish to turn our attention to the sealing of this covenant. When this covenant was made and accepted, then came the sealing: "For when God made promise to Abraham, because he could swear by no greater, he sware by himself, saying, Surely blessing I will bless thee, and multiplying I will multiply thee."—Heb. 6:13, 14.

And on Abraham's part we read: "And he (Abraham) received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had yet being uncircumcised: that he might be the father of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised."—Rom. 4:11.

It is with this seal that we now wish to deal. This contract was between God and (Please turn to Page Ten)

A PROMISE

"After these things the word of the Lord came unto Abram in a vision, saying, Fear not, Abram: I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward. And Abram said, Lord God, What wilt thou give me, seeing I go childless, and the steward of my house is this Eliezer of Damascus? And Abram said, Behold, to me thou hast given no seed: and, lo, one born in mine house is mine heir. And, behold, the word of the Lord came unto him, saying, This shall not be thine heir; but he that shall come forth out of thine own bowels shall be thine heir. And he brought him forth abroad, and said, Look now toward heaven, and tell the stars, if thou be able to number them: and he said unto him, So shall thy seed be. And he believed in the Lord; and he counted it to him for righteousness. And he said unto him, I am the Lord that brought thee out of Ur of the Chaldees, to give thee this land to inherit it. And he said, Lord God, whereby shall I know that I shall inherit it?"—Genesis 15:1-8.

Liquidating a World

KNOWLEDGE of nature means power; and power in the hands of evil men implies dangers fully as great as any benefits which this knowledge may give to good men. We must never forget that submarines and depth bombs, machine guns and TNT and mustard gas, are just as indicative of scientific progress as are airplanes and the radio. If the Creator is to foster a knowledge of nature in such a way as to allow the desirable discoveries, how in common fairness to all concerned is He to keep designing men from making use of this increased knowledge in such a way as to make many millions of people utterly miserable, and put many more millions in their graves?

So both aspects of our modern increased power over nature need to be considered. And both sides of this matter would need to be taken into consideration, when the Creator decides at what stage of human history this advanced knowledge of nature is to be promoted or permitted. The prophecy of old said that in the time of the end many would run to and fro, and knowledge would be increased (Dan. 12:4). But if all our modern discoveries had been mastered by the Greeks and Romans of two thousand years ago, it is a question whether the race would not long ere this have been practically wiped off the face of the earth, or if the majority of men and women would not need to be shut up in insane asylums.

It would seem that the chief reason, perhaps the only one, for God's allowing a greatly increased knowledge of nature to develop in modern times, is as a preparation for the closing out of the cosmic experiment of sin. As has been remarked, it would seem necessary to provide for some simple, universal test to be brought before all the race of mankind, preliminary to the close of human probation. This would seem to require the outward unification of the race, so that mankind would become like one big community, where all are acquainted with everything that goes on. Under such conditions, the laws of mob psychology come into play, the mob in this case being the entire world, even though there is the danger that the instantaneous communication of the telegraph and the radio may sometime whip up this mob into a wild hysteria, as is common with all unified masses of human beings.

That some such condition now confronts the world few will venture to deny. The world of mankind has become one community; every part is in direct communication with every other part; and already we have seen a partial illustration of how this whole mob may be expected to behave when stimulated by some hypnotic suggestion which acts on the passions of the great majority. Under the abnormal conditions of mob psychology we have often seen people lose their individuality and common sense, and have seen them hurried into wild behavior which individuals in their calm senses would never indulge in. But just such a paroxysm of fear or hatred may now take possession of the world; for all the machinery of mob action has now been set for the world as a whole.

It is in this way that the majority may become a terrible persecuting power, wreaking indignant punishment on any small minority who presume to stand out against the decrees of the crowd. And in the final world crisis, when God, the Creator, is bringing up all the world for a final decision between right and wrong, the great majority will almost certainly take the wrong side. Such has invariably been the case in the past. And then, because of the intolerant spirit of an excited crowd, that majority may easily seek to crush out all dissent, all expression of any contrary opinion or contrary action.

It is thus that the entire world may be brought to make a final decision over some simple, clear issue which the Creator has chosen as the final test of the loyalty of mankind. And the modern mechanical inventions, which tend to bring all mankind into one vast community, are rapidly preparing for just such a cosmic showdown, where the people who are resolved to be loyal to the Creator will be on one side, but, because of the mob spirit of intolerance, this small minority may become objects of hatred and oppression. And the onlooking Creator, seeing the situation, may decide that it is about time to close out the whole controversy, since His loyal people are again being treated in the very same way in which (our Lord) was treated, when He failed to conform to the prejudices and the fanatical religiousness of the Jewish authorities of His day.

It remains for us to consider briefly the final stage, when the universe has at last become what God intended it to be from the first. For the present it is only a transition stage. A good God did not make a bad world. True, we find the world bad now; sin and suffering and death are now triumphant. But it was not always thus; nor will these sad conditions always prevail. There must come a time when sin and suffering and death will all be but memories of the past—mere ancient horrors which the universe has finally overcome and forever outgrown.

ETERNAL TORMENT

Certainly we can see nothing fair or just about a plan to make human beings remain alive in suffering and misery throughout an endless eternity. It is true that many millions of human beings stubbornly and completely refuse to be cured of their sin and rebellion. But it would be manifestly unfair for God to keep these rebellious ones alive in some cosmic pesthouse or torture chamber for all eternity. They were not asked about being brought into existence. They had no choice about their becoming alive. If they have abused their freedom, if they have shamefully misused their opportunities, they might reasonably be consigned to oblivion. They might justly be "liquidated," if they do not prove fit to live with the rest of the universe. But how would it be fair to consign them to some cosmic torture chamber for all future ages, world without end? Is it conceivable that the Creator, in giving them life in the first place, started something that He could not stop, and that these poor, misguided beings, with their frustrated and misshapen characters, must continue to live eternally because they lived once?

Some theologians have tried to minimize the horrors of an eternally burning "hell," by saying that in reality it is a very small place, a very limited locality, so far as the rest of the universe is concerned. But no theological quibbling has ever succeeded in reconciling such a condition of never-ending misery with the goodness and innate benevolence of a wise Creator. Every chamber of horrors that I have visited in the Old World—and I have seen several—might be called a small place; but I do not think that this fact tended to minimize the impression made on the mind of every visitor that the men who planned and ran such places were nothing short of tyrants and fiends. And all our reason and sense of fair play would have to pronounce the same opinion of the Creator, if He from all eternity planned a universe in which even a small and obscure compartment would be devoted to housing millions on millions of beings whom their Creator could not mercifully put out of existence.

No; nothing of the kind will survive to mar the peace and joy of the redeemed. No moral pesthouse or cosmic prison will remain as a hang-over from that horrible incident in the history of the universe which we now know as the experience of sin.

Even now it must be the case that the Creator can view the ultimate outcome with composure and joy. Seeing the end from the beginning, He can look upon the present welter of sin and misery without one pang of sorrow for having created man. Instead, He sees the possibilities to which man may attain. It was because of all this that He (gave His Son) at such infinite cost to bring about the redemption of mankind.

THIS LIFE A PRELUDE

In the larger, the truer, view of life and its meaning, we see that the present is but a prelude to the life hereafter. What are fifty, or seventy, or even a hundred years of this earthly life as compared with the endless vistas of uncounted millions of ages that will stretch out before us in the future state? In this respect, the present life may justly be regarded as merely the embryonic form of the real life of human beings, their real existence beginning at the resurrection. As the skilled embryologist, with the aid of the right kind of instruments, might be supposed to be capable of telling from an examination of the human embryo or fetus the physical characteristics of the individual into which it would have developed, so the Creator, with a perfect knowledge of all that He has created, must know accurately from the present or embryonic form shown in this world just what sort of character it will ultimately develop into in the future state. To Him the physical form is immaterial; He is concerned with ethics, with character. And He will decide the destiny of every individual according to the bent of the character developed in this embryonic, or prenatal, state which we term the present probationary life on earth.

The highest graces of oratory and of poetry have been requisitioned to portray the beauties and the delights of the future state. These are good and useful in their proper place. It will be more appropriate for us, however, to set down in sober, unadorned language of fact, what we have been assured about this future life, or what we have a right to expect from reasoning upon the data at our disposal.

1. The future will be just as real and as matter-of-fact as is the present. The present stage of trial or probation will then be past; the entrance, or matriculation, test will be over; and out before us will stretch the rich and varied occupations of the heavenly school. Our field of study will be the limitless universe; our teacher, the Creator Himself. The Eden life of our first parents was a kindergarten department, which was interrupted by the tragedy of sin. But when the human race has at last graduated out of its period of probation, the larger education will be resumed in the deathless Eden of the hereafter.

But there are important differences. Not only has death been left behind, but there will be no haunting fear of mistakes, no wayward impulses to wrong, no possibility of remorse or of fear. All who are there have developed a perfect immunity to evil in all its forms; and thus the acquisition of knowledge and the development of mind, the acquirement of skill and experience in all worthy employments, may be carried forward without any of the handicaps which have marred our progress here.

2. Without doubt, our senses of sight and of hearing will be vastly increased and perfected. We may not even need such crutches as microscopes and telescopes, but may without these mechanical assistants study that world of beauty among the minute forms of life, or that other far-flung glory of the sidereal heavens. From all these the blight due to sin has been removed; there are no confusing elements of evil in earth, or sea, or sky; nothing to perplex us with the suggestion that it is not quite what the Creator intended it to be. The music of nature's sublime oratorios will not be marred by minor chords of lament or sorrow; but the infinite possibilities of joy and delight will be developed, with nothing to remind us of the discords and jangles of this world with its disappointments and frustrations.

3. Even in this life the student of history may gain some understanding of the causes behind the vast complications of human events. But his own vision is clouded, and his sources of information are scrappy, partial, and lopsided; so that he cannot read aright even those events which lie directly under his own observation.

In the future life all these obstacles will be removed. All his innate tendencies to bias or prejudice have been outgrown. The infinite archives supply him with sources unmarred by the blunders of human passion or pride. The entire scope of human history is available for his study. He can trace the various ways in which the prince of evil sought to counteract the plans and work of God for the children of men, only to meet with ultimate defeat at every turn—and this in spite of the fact that Lucifer could employ tricks and methods of falsehood which the Eternal could not use. These crooked methods of the prince of darkness were often highly successful for long periods of time; it often seemed as if truth and equity had been effectually banished from the life of man. But in the end the ways of the Eternal always triumphed; and the plans and policies of evil were ultimately shown to be without excuse or defense. And all these historical epics will be made available to the cosmic student, to become the source of instruction and of rejoicing throughout the future of the universe.

4. Each of the redeemed ones will be able to gain untainted information by personal acquaintance with the angels. Especially will it be a privilege for one to hold open conversation with his own guardian angel, the one who watched over him from his earliest moments, and guided and protected him from a thousand perils and mistakes; who was by his side in death, and was the first to greet him in the resurrection morning. What a transcendent joy will it be to have these angels recount to us all the varied providences of our lives, and to lead us to realize the divine care for us from beginning to end.

5. We shall not cease to be human, even when we have discarded mortality and have become partakers of the divine nature.—The loves and sympathies of our souls have been implanted by God; and they will find their highest and fullest exercise through our personal fellowship with the unfallen angels and with the loyal followers of God gathered from all ages and all conditions of earthly life.

6. Without the handicap of weariness, without the discouragement of frustrated purposes and disappointed hopes, we shall all become enthusiastic students of the wonders of God's created works, and of every other worthwhile form of study and research. In this life we find joy in carrying out projects, and by the doing of them we attain experience and development; there is every reason to believe that these same laws of growth and attainment will continue throughout the future life, with no limiting bar-

Worship in Spirit and in Truth

By Lois Dismukes

IN JOHN 4:24 we read: "God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." Let us notice this reading carefully. Christ puts equal emphasis upon those two requisites—spirit and truth. None can acceptably worship the Father in spirit alone, nor can he worship in truth alone, but he must worship both in spirit and in truth. Since Christ has said that they who worship the Father must so worship, it behooves us to know what is meant by worshiping in spirit and in truth. In order to know such a meaning we must know what is "spirit" and what is "truth" as here used, or else how shall we know that we are worshiping as designated?

Let us first consider "worship in spirit." Turning to Philippians 3:3 Paul states, "For we are the circumcision, which worship God in the spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh"; again he says in Romans 1:9, "For God is my witness, whom I serve with my spirit in the gospel of his Son." Thus we have evidence that Paul worshiped in spirit; but let us look for further light on Paul's manner of worship. In Romans 7:25 we find Paul saying, "So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God." After having thus read Paul, do we not understand that when he served or worshiped in spirit, he served or worshiped in mind?

Now with what mind or spirit are we to serve? In Romans 8:9 we read, "Now if any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Paul, speaking of disciples, explains in 1 Corinthians 2:16, "But we have the mind of Christ." Why must we have the mind or spirit of Christ. "Because the carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." "For they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the Spirit the things of the Spirit."—Rom. 8:7, 5. "But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law. And they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with the affections and lusts."—Gal. 5:22-24.

Let us now consider the thought, "worship in truth." What is truth? Jesus answers (John 14:6), "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me." Then to worship in truth is to worship in Christ. The question then follows, how is one to get in Christ? Galatians 3:27 explains: "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." If you have put on Christ, are you not in Christ? Remember, that if any man have not the spirit (mind) of Christ he is none of His. Where would we expect to find the spirit or mind of Christ except in the body of Christ? "So we, being many, are one body in Christ."

Having found that to worship in spirit is to worship in mind, and to worship in truth is to worship in Christ, we understand our text to teach that because God is a spirit, mind, or intellect, He requires us to worship Him in mind or intellect according to His will, in Christ Jesus, who is the Truth.

If Christ Never Returns, What?

THE importance of the question we have been asked to discuss must be apparent to even the casual observer of religious trend of the days in which we live. As I write, there lies before me a book by a noted writer on The Second Coming of Christ, in which the author labors ardently to show that Christ never intended to convey to immediate followers, or anyone else, that He would return in person to this planet. The writer even goes so far as to say "that the early disciples came to change their view, touching the nature of Christ's second advent." The writer includes Paul in the list and says, "Instead of expecting to be caught up to meet the Lord in the air, he sought to meet Him in his soul." Continuing, he says, "Very naturally the tense waiting which had continued with the disciples until Pentecost, then came to an end. Confident that the Lord was with them, what they henceforth longed for and prayed for was a clearer manifestation of His presence."

This brand of teaching is quite delectable to the many who have been "spoiled through philosophy and vain deceit, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ." But let us turn aside from the teaching of these who have been "turned unto fables," and address ourselves to the question assigned to us: If Christ never returns, what?

First, if Christ never returns, as literally, personally, and tangibly, as He went away, our Bible is a compilation of deceptive statements. Some few years ago while giving a series of Bible studies in Pasadena, Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, D.D., was handed this question: "Do you believe in the second coming of Christ?" He answered: "If Christ does not return to this earth as literally, personally, and tangibly as He went away, your New Testament is a lie." Coming from one of the greatest Bible scholars of the world, and one whose genius in Bible exegesis has no peer, these words should arrest the attention of all thinking minds. To my mind the Bible was intended by Jehovah to be understandable to all classes of peoples, which is impossible unless these hundreds of passages in which the clean-cut statement, "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven," mean exactly what they state. To me the New Testament would be one of the most gigantic frauds of all time, with an empty parade of meaningless words, unless Christ returns to our world.

Secondly, if Christ does not return, sin will continue its damnable work for all time. There are two theories offered the world touching the expulsion of sin. "Under the power of the gospel of Christ, the world will gradually improve until righteousness prevails throughout the entire inhabited globe." This all sounds very well, but up to this time there is no evidence that the gospel of Christ is reducing the number of sinners in the world, or improving moral conditions in any country. If this theory could be demonstrated in any country, this Christian (?) nation should be able to make the demonstration. But what are the facts? On March 20, 1929, Lieutenant-Governor Buron Fitts told the Commonwealth Club of San Francisco some things about the crime situation of our own United States. He said: "Compared with other civilized countries, the United States is the most lawless civilized nation on earth." Crime is not the aftermath of the World War. Since 1890, there has been a continuous, deepening tide of lawlessness in this country. In 1924, crime cost more than $10,000,000,000 in America—nearly $2,000,000,000 more than the World War cost. In 1925, the crime cost in California alone was approximately $71,000,000. These figures will bear investigation, and what is true of America as to crime is just as true touching the morals of our country. In Chicago there are 200,000 men who are untrue to their marriage vows. And there are 50,000 women walking in the same path of unfaithfulness.

The fact is, Christ never taught that His gospel would convert the entire world. Neither did He teach that His gospel would bring universal peace, in this age. Put these two passages with the above. "But evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving, and being deceived."—2 Tim. 3:13. "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword."—Matt. 10:34.

The other theory is: Sin will continue its awful scourge until our Lord returns. In fact the above text clinches the argument, proving the ever-increasing tide of crime even "as it was in the days of Noe, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man" (Luke 17:26). Jesus tells us that the tares represent wicked people and that they will continue until the end of the world, and will be burned up in the fires of the great and final judgment (Matt. 13:38-42). The confines of this article will not allow us to discuss this subject to greater length, but a study of James, 5th chapter, with all of the great lines of prophecy, pictures nothing but the onward flow of sin unless it is brought to an end by the return of our Lord.

Thirdly, if Christ does not return we shall never see Him. The teaching that man goes to Christ at death finds no foundation in Scripture. And Christ seems to have foreseen the danger of such teaching, and in language plain and understandable to all declared that "no man hath ascended up to heaven" (John 3:13); "And where I am, thither ye cannot come" (John 7:34); "And as I said unto the Jews, Whither I go ye cannot come; so now I say to you" (John 13:33). The only way the longing church can ever look into the face of Christ, who bore our sins in His body on the tree, and who promised His disciples He would see them again, is by His return to bring release to earth's groaning millions.

"By doubts and sorrows inly pressed,
By foes beleaguered and oppressed,
Hear the strong cry of world unrest!

"Hopes of the sacramental host:
Their only glory, joy, and boast,
Without Thy advent all is lost—
Lord Jesus, quickly come."

—John Temple Graves.

Fourthly, if Christ never returns, the earth will remain one vast graveyard. Death puts man right back where he was before God built him. The separation of the spirit from the body brings death. The body goes back to the dust, the spirit returns to the place from which God took it at the time He created man. The elements from which God made man knew nothing before the man was formed, and common sense and the Bible tell us they know no more when the man is unmade. Psalm 146:4 tells us that at death the thoughts of man perish, while Ecclesiastes 9:5 declares that the dead know not anything. The resurrection of the dead is always associated with the return of our Lord. 1 Thessalonians 4:16 makes this fact as clear as inspiration can state anything. Even Job in the dark ages of the far-away past caught a glorious view of this comforting truth. He saw his Redeemer as He returned to the earth; saw the hosts of the dead brought to life, and with new bodies, as literal as the old ones, launched on their voyage of eternal sickness, painless, deathless glory. The Father wants His Son to return (Acts 3:20). Christ wants to return (John 14:3; Heb. 10:13). Throughout the ages the cry of the church has been, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."—Rev. 22:20.

"Lo, Thy fair church with garments torn,
Of her celestial radiance shorn,
Upturns her face with watching worn;
Her trickling tears, her piteous cries,
Her struggles, fears, and agonies
Appeal to Thy deep sympathies—
Lord Jesus, quickly come."

—John Temple Graves.

The sin-cursed, war-wrecked, sorrowing, and suffering world needs Him. May the day soon dawn is our prayer. To the unsaved who may read this article, let me say: "Some future time you plan to become a Christian. You do not intend to be lost when the kingdom of our Lord is established under the whole heaven. But let me urge you to take the stand now, while you have mental power to intelligently take the most important step in the world. Let Christ have your God-given powers to use in His service."—William G. Knowlton in The Messiah's Advocate.

ALL THE WAY

By Mary A. Gesin

If you meet God in the morning,
He will keep you through the day;
If you seek His guidance early,
He'll go with you all the way;
If you find Him in life's dawning,
When the world lies at your feet,
Should the stress of life o'ertake you,
You will find His presence sweet.

When the way is hard and rugged,
And your feet, perverse, would stray
From the pathway He has chosen
For His child along the way—
Pause for just a moment often,
Ask from Him the strength to stand;
He will never fail His children
Who reach out a trusting hand.

He will shelter and protect you
When the sun shines o'er your head,
Tho' the way be steep and weary,
Hope within your heart be dead;
If you turn to Him and trust Him
In the noontime of your life,
He'll go with you through the shadows
In the midst of cares and strife.

In the quiet of the evening,
Toward the close of life's long day,
Lift your heart to God in praises
For His presence all the way;
Give yourself into His keeping
Through the night that comes to all,
He will answer your confiding
With His resurrection call.

"PUMP JUST A LITTLE MORE THAN YOU NEED"

By Mary Hatten

THE story is told of a widow who had six children and three cows. The children were all small and the cows drank a large quantity of water. There was a very good well in the pasture and many a passer-by stopped for a drink. The widow put a sign over the well that read like this, "Pump just a little more than you need." After that the cows always had plenty to drink.

How many professed Christians pump just enough for themselves, little thinking that some wayfarer may be passing the well, too weak to pump for himself. They at one time have tasted of the spiritual water, but the things of this world were too great a temptation for them.

Then there are those who have had such heavy burdens to bear, endured trials and persecutions, suffered grief and heartaches, until they have become discouraged. Rather than pump, they go without a refreshing drink. Then again there are those that have never tasted of that water and would only be too eager to pump if only some one would pump a little more than he needed.

"But whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst."—John 4:14.

The world today is dying for lack of that water. How much we need to pump just a little more than we need.

riers and with no closed doors to shut us out from any legitimate form of enterprise. It is also obvious that in mental attainments, as in character, we shall begin the future life where we left off here. Hence, in every phase of true education we shall take with us all the worth while knowledge and skills which we have gathered in this life. Happy will he be who does not find himself saved "as by fire," with much useless mental equipment which he must discard or unlearn, and only a scanty store that he can make use of in the studies and enterprises of the immortal state.

7. It is reasonable to suppose that all the resources of the universe will be open to the examination and first-hand study of the children of this earth. What will it be to visit other worlds, and to share in the accumulated wisdom of other beings who have never fallen into sin, and who have been studying the wonders of God's universe for ages, with none of the handicaps and limitations of earth's poor mortal lot! Throughout the limitless vistas of sidereal space we may journey without haste, without the need of rest, or of a renewal of supplies; and throughout the entire universe we shall admire the wisdom of one mind, the effectiveness and power of one will, the faithfulness and love of one Father of all.

Sin and sinners have disappeared. The entire universe is clean and beautiful and happy. The Creator is universally recognized not only as the original source of all objective beings and entities, but as the never-ceasing, the never-wearied fountain of all energy, all life, all joy; and with one voice will all His creatures declare that God's plans of wisdom and mercy for the universe have been well worth while.—George McCready Price in Signs of the Times.

sired to maintain, for the outcome would be hybrid. Under such conditions it would be impossible for Christ to be "as much true and living God as His Father." Orthodoxy unconsciously recognizes this by calling Christ "the God-man," and this action our correspondent unhesitatingly supports. It is noteworthy that Scripture never makes use of such a term, and that should itself safeguard the believer from accepting any doctrine that cannot be expressed by Scripture language. The Bible definitely and distinctly informs us that "God is not a man," and it further declares that "there is one mediator between God and men, himself man, Christ Jesus" (1 Tim. 2:5, R. V.).

Christ never once claimed to be God, but He did claim to be man (John 8:40). We thus see that the Bible truth, "after its kind," instead of being an argument for the Deity of Christ, is in reality a strong argument against it, and against the doctrine of the Trinity. Further, if the Holy Spirit is a person, then undeniably He must be the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and not the One whom Scripture calls "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ."

In what sense then is Jesus Christ "the only begotten Son of God"? Luke, the beloved physician, is authority for the statement that Adam was a "son of" God (Luke 3:38), using the same expression made use of over seventy times in his genealogy of Jesus Christ. How then was Adam God's son? Not by begetting, but by creation. He was "made" (see Genesis 1:26; 1 Cor. 15:45). How was Jesus Christ God's Son? He was "made" and "begotten" (Gal. 4:4; Luke 1:35). He was begotten in Mary through the power of the Highest, viz., through the Holy Spirit. Being thus begotten, He could rightly "be called the Son of God" (Luke 1:35). Being the only Son so begotten, he becomes "the only begotten Son of God."

THE LIVING WORD

The Globe (Toronto daily) takes up another line of thought in an endeavor to prove the preexistent Deity of Jesus Christ. In its regular Wednesday editorial on religious subjects a recent issue had an article, "The Living Word." Like our previously mentioned correspondent, and "orthodox" authorities in general, it assumes without any precedent that logos is an actual person, in proof of which we quote the following: "One thing is certain, the Word of God is a Person. The majestic opening of John's Gospel makes this plain. 'In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God,' and then lest we should think the mysterious Word a mere concept or philosophical abstraction John goes on to declare 'the Word was made flesh.'"

So evidently does he see the possibility, nay, the probability, that logos may correctly be regarded as a synonym for "speech" or "promise" (for the Hebrew words for "word" and "promise" are the same) that he hastens to attribute a motive to John of which he has no proof. The "mystery" is his own, and not inherent in the Scripture statement. The language employed in either the Greek or the English, in its primary sense, and its general sense as used in Scripture, clearly has reference to events recorded in Genesis 1. The oft-repeated phrase "and God said" makes this abundantly clear. Further, both Paul and Peter declare the same truth in agreement with John, and the words of Peter in 2 Peter 3:5 are practically parallel to the words of John: "By the word of God the heavens were of old." David, in Psalm 33:6, says, "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth." Indeed it is worthy of note that Peter uses the identical Greek word (logos) that was used by John. Not until he comes to the statement "the Word was made flesh" can the writer of The Globe editorial extract personality from the language of John. But no true Christian disputes the fact that personality then came to be.

The next point in his argument is that "though John the Baptist was older than the man Jesus, speaking of Jesus he said, 'He was before me.'" From these words he draws the conclusion that John teaches the personal pre-existence of Christ in some other form than man. His emphasis on the word man in the foregoing quotation is intended to imply this. We admit the truth of the statement that "John was older than the man Jesus." But it is equally true that it was of the man Jesus John spoke when he said, "He was before me." What then did John mean? He could not have meant that Jesus Christ existed in the sense of personality, for the reasons and facts already stated. Again we ask, What did he mean? How was Jesus Christ before John? Surely it is clear that He existed in type and symbol as no other man ever existed, or will exist. He was woven by the prophetic Word into the very fabric of the national life. As He said to the Jews, "If ye believe not that I am he (the one of whom all Scripture speaks), ye shall die in your sins." Truly John was unworthy to unloose the shoes of such a man, but it never (we think) entered into his thoughts that he would thereby unloose the shoes of God.

Now briefly with reference to a remark in the same article that "Jesus Christ is Himself God": Some Bible statements are so emphatic, so clear and precise, that one meaning and only one can be deduced from them. Others admit of more than one interpretation. Among the former class are such positive statements as "God is one," that He is "the only true God," and that "there is none other God but one." On these emphatic statements of God's Word we may stand as upon a rock, in the full assurance that every other scripture can, without violence, be brought into harmony with them. To say, as some do, that the words "one" and "only" are set against the "gods many and lords many" of the heathen does not exonerate the wrong of stating one, were more than one an actual fact. It is true there "are some things God cannot do": "he cannot lie." I think also we may reverently add that He cannot alter numerical values, else nothing in the whole universe could be computed.

One of the most serious points in connection with this and kindred subjects is the sad fact that many more sponsors of the doctrine of the Trinity are compelled to use language alien to the Scriptures, and statements that are, to say the least, incorrect. Dr. R. A. Torrey in his Fundamentals of the Christian Faith says the Hebrew word for "one" (echad) "denotes compound unity, not simple unity." That statement has been widely repeated in Christian journals by Prof. Angell and others. What are the facts which anyone with the help of Young's Concordance may readily ascertain? Time and time again it is used for simple unity, and one cannot but feel that these men knew it. Strictly speaking, from a numerical standpoint (and that is the issue here), there can be no such thing as compound unity. The doctor gives as illustrations a bunch of grapes and a bundle of sticks. Clearly the numeral has reference to the bunch. It is one bunch of grapes, as against two or more bunches; one bundle of sticks, as against two or more bundles. It is the bundle that is counted, not the things in the bundle. The Bible truth that God is one, in the strictest sense that word conveys, stands on sure foundation, as I think we have abundantly demonstrated. Let us believe Scripture when it says: "There is one God, and one mediator between God and men, himself man, Christ Jesus."

Abraham, and when the contract, or covenant, was made, then came the sealing. Abraham exercised faith in the content of the contract before he signed, or sealed, it, for circumcision sealed a faith already expressed before the circumcision took place. In everyday business circles men do not seal or sign articles until they understand their content. Paul especially emphasizes this fact in Romans 4. To our way of thinking, this is a very important matter to take into consideration. The covenant between God and Abraham is the same covenant under which we stand. It was entered into between them after an understanding of the terms of the contract. When this understanding was evidenced on Abraham's part, he was then required to sign it in his own blood by the rite of circumcision. He was circumcised after exercising faith in the covenant. The sealing made the contract legal between them, so to speak. It then became binding. God is under oath to Abraham by swearing by His own name because He could swear by no greater, and Abraham by the rite of circumcision. In circumcision the filth of the flesh was done away in figure. Circumcision is a figure of death and resurrection, for it signifies the shedding of blood and doing away with the filth of the flesh. This will actually take place with us in resurrection if we remain faithful and are found worthy at the coming of our Lord.

And Now This

The farmers have had their poll, and the die is cast. The AAA, favorite son of the alphabetical family of the New Deal, is to move on in its destructive ways with the gentle force of a Roosevelt behind an automobile wheel.

The essence of the AAA lies in the theoretical control of crop and hog production. Averages are taken, and from those averages are determined the amounts due each farmer participating in the program for the crops and hogs he does not raise, as compared with the crops and hogs he did raise each year in the past.

Somebody has to pay the bill. Lard, for instance, has risen something over 325% in many cities during the past year, thanks to the hog's share in the AAA's reduction program. Bread has gone up a cent and more a loaf within recent weeks after having rejoiced in a 2-cent increase in price about a year ago. This was due to the wheat reduction program, plus the drought. The consumer—meaning you and you and you, and particularly the city man who must buy everything he eats—finds vacancy in pockets where formerly dollars grew.

Wholly aside from the constitutionality of the whole program—and it is pretty apparent that the program is unconstitutional—there stands the moral angle of the affair. At a time when millions are in poverty, when other millions are actually starving, the Government increases costs of those who cannot possibly eat without buying, by the destruction of thousands of pigs and hundreds of thousands of acres of crops. This is neither just nor fair purely from the human point of view, for one class is being favored as another is being impoverished.

God's ways are not men's ways. In years of plenty, God had Joseph hold surplus crops for years of famine. In years of plenty, man, represented by the Brain Trust, has destroyed surplus crops in order to raise prices to insanely high levels in years of famine.

God's laws are immutable. No real surplus of anything ever has existed. Although mismanagement on man's part has resulted in faulty distribution, crops and manufactured products have always had a sufficient potential market for their consumption. The natural forces through which God does His work have governed the growth and quantity of everything from little pigs to human beings with an iron hand. Droughts have done away with the danger of excessive supplies of foodstuffs; floods have destroyed excess populations; disease has annihilated animals and men who threatened to stand in the way of progress. Only when men have tampered with the regulations of the universe has vast disaster come upon them.

God, moreover, does not favor one class more than another from the industrial standpoint. Men, on the other hand, for selfish reasons, devote themselves to favoritism. God sends rain on the unjust as well as on the just; man would have rain fall only on those who can help him individually.

Manufacturers, when the demand for their products decreases, shut down their plants. The Government pays them nothing for this operation. But the farmer, faced with low prices, grows more crops to increase his lowered earnings, and consequently the earnings fall lower still. Therefore, the Government pays him for not growing certain things, pays him for the destruction of produce when millions of men are dying because they do not possess it.

Only when the kingdom of God is established, with an eternal, omnipotent, and omniscient Ruler, will the problems of distribution and production be settled satisfactorily.

Ant or Grasshopper

* * * *

By Vivian Kirkpatrick

"Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways, and be wise: which having no guide, overseer, or ruler, provideth her meat in the summer, and gathereth her food in the harvest."—Proverbs 6:6-8.

Remember when we were back in the grades at school, when we studied about the grasshopper who fiddled and sang the day away, and about the ant that spent all her time laying up stores for the winter, and how when winter did come she was ready for it while the grasshopper was out in the cold with nothing to eat. Using our own lives as a comparison, are we grasshoppers or ants?

Are we like the grasshopper, going along from day to day with no thought of the future in our minds, letting the pleasures of the day be sufficient for our needs? Are we thinking only of the pleasures to be derived from the things that are going on around us? If we are, we are nothing more than grasshoppers.

Are we like the ant Solomon writes of above? Are we forgetting or ignoring the pleasures of the world while we work to lay up treasures for the future, knowing that the pleasures of this world are of but short duration, but that if you ignore them now and prepare for the future the pleasures there will far outshine the pleasures of the present?

Are we working for the pleasures that may be secured from day to day or are we laying up treasures for ourselves where moth and rust do not corrupt and thieves do not break through and steal, knowing that Jesus said that where our treasure is, there would our hearts be also?

Are you a grasshopper or an ant?

GOD'S PEOPLE GO BACK HOME

HAVE any of you boys and girls who read this page ever been homesick? Not a few of you, most likely. It's a terrible feeling, isn't it? Quite the worst kind of sickness there is. At least, that is what we think when we feel that way.

Then right in the midst of it, when you are feeling that all the sunshine and happiness has gone out of the world, something wonderful happens. Some one comes along and says you are going home.

You begin to skip and jump. Immediately the sun comes out. You begin to sing, and everybody around you looks happy. They all help you get ready to go home.

Something almost like that happened to the people of Judah about whom we have been studying. They had been away from home more than sixty years. Just think! If you left home now, in sixty years you would be old, old ladies and old, old men.

You remember, these people had been taken away from their homes to a strange land almost a thousand miles away because they had been wicked. They had turned away from the worship of the one, true God to worshiping idols. And being sent away from their homes was their punishment.

During these long, lonely years in that far-off strange land they had plenty of time to think. They realized how wicked they had been to forget the God who had been so good to them. For that God had given them their home in Palestine—the Promised Land, they called it—and many other good things besides.

And so, under the prophets whom God had sent them because He still loved them, they turned away from their hideous idols back to their loving God again. We learned last week how Ezekiel helped them see their mistakes and set them on the right path once more.

Then, in the midst of their new way of living, the very finest news came to them. The King of that strange land said all those who wanted to could go back home. Don't you believe God was the one who put it in the King's heart to say that? I do; I'm sure God hadn't forgotten His people, and He saw their efforts to do right.

King Cyrus told all those who didn't want to go back, to help those who did. And so they gathered together enough food, animals, clothing, gold, to make the long journey.

They were to go back for a very special purpose, God said, and you can find out what that was in the second verse. Yes, build a temple again, so that they could worship God.

And Cyrus also gave them something very valuable to take on their journey. It was something they had lost, that is, it had been stolen from them by the Babylonian king, Nebuchadnezzar. Look in your Bibles, verses 7 and 8 of Ezra 1, if you do not know what it was.

Now, you remember, Belshazzar was using them for his great feast, using something that had been consecrated to God. Wasn't it fine of King Cyrus to return them? How happy the people of Judah must have been to be able to put them back in their temple once more.

FOR YOUR BIBLE SCRAPBOOK:

Those of you who have been carefully making your Scrapbooks have noticed there was a lesson missing in the paper of October 22. There isn't room here to write the story of King Zedekiah's downfall, but if you will read the lesson for the Junior Class on page 29 of Truth Seekers' Quarterly you will be able to write this page in your Scrapbook. Then draw a king's chair that has been overturned; over it, write, "Zedekiah." Then draw a beautiful throne standing upright; over it, write, "Jesus." Last of all, draw a picture of people sitting under trees. Draw some nice houses and some streets. Paste little boys and girls playing games. Under it, write the words of Zechariah 8:5. We know Jerusalem will be like that when King Jesus rules.

Now for your Scrapbook for today's lesson:

Copy the date, the golden text, and the topic. Then write the story of the homesick people of Judah and their return to their beloved land. Those of you who are musical, try to write a little song using the words found in Psalm 126:3-6. Imagine the wanderers singing this song on their journey home.

Now draw a long road and on it paste figures representing the people going home, camels loaded with provisions, animals, people, boys and girls running along the side. At the left side draw people waving good-bye to them. Last of all, draw a new temple and people getting ready to go into it, carrying the golden dishes that King Cyrus had given back to them. Underneath write, "The Lord hath done great things for us; whereof we are glad."

THE RETURN FROM CAPTIVITY

Jeremiah 29:4-14; Ezra 1:1-11; Psalm 126:1-6

Devotional Reading: Psalm 124

GOLDEN TEXT

"The Lord hath done great things for us; whereof we are glad."—Psalm 126:3.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: The Return From Captivity.

Aim: God works with nations as well as with individuals.

Class Discussion: The influence of the Jews in world affairs. God is forcing them back to Palestine by permitting persecution. Recent developments in Palestine. The return of the Jews to relieve the world of an economic problem and a troublesome foreign element.

I. The Return of the Jews Under Ezra an Evidence of the Inspiration of the Bible. (Ezra 1:1-4.) Jeremiah predicted the return from Babylon at the end of seventy years' captivity (Jer. 29:4-14), and Babylonian inscriptions testify to its accomplishment. Daniel was counting the years as they passed and when the time for the return drew near he searched the Scriptures still more attentively, he prayed earnestly, and he pleaded for forgiveness that he might be ready for it (Dan. 9:2). That should be our attitude as we wait and watch and pray for the coming of Christ who is to regather Israel for the last time.

II. Future Return of the Jews to Mark a Spiritual Awakening. (Vv. 5, 6.) The one purpose for which Cyrus granted the Jews the privilege of returning to Palestine was to rebuild the temple and restore the worship of Jehovah. When the Lord comes as the Shiloh or gatherer of Israel and assembles the twelve tribes in their own land once more, its chief purpose likewise will be that the true worship of God may be restored to Israel and extended to all races. "And it shall come to pass, that every one that is left of all the nations . . . shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts."—Zech. 14:16.

III. Future Return to Signify the Reestablishment of the Kingdom of God. (Psalm 126:1-6.) Although God's first purpose in the final restoration of Israel is religious, it also has its political object as well, for it signifies the reestablishment of the kingdom of God on earth, when, because of Jesus' righteous reign over all nations (Isa. 11:4; Dan. 7:14), the world will enjoy freedom from war (Isa. 2:4), universal prosperity (Isa. 65:21-25), lasting health (Isa. 33:24), and deathlessness (Rev. 21:4). This happy condition will fill the world with rejoicing for evermore (Psa. 72:17-19).

GOLDEN TEXT

"The Lord hath done great things for us; whereof we are glad."—Psalm 126:3.

After the Israelites had been in captivity for a number of years the Lord put it into the heart of Cyrus, King of Persia, to let the Israelites return to Jerusalem, their native home. Realizing this decree was from the Father and recognizing His goodness to them, how truly they could say, "The Lord hath done great things for us." They had reason to be glad, for they seemed to appreciate the opportunity to return home.

The Father, the Lord God, has been very good to us also. He gave His Son to die that we might live. That seems a greater thing to me than returning to Jerusalem for them. But that was home to them and meant everything so far as this life is concerned. We look for eternal life and hope to receive it, because God is good to us and always has been. We, too, will have a home.—L. A. R.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

The Captivity

- taught Judah their need of God;
- was a time of weeping and sorrowing;
- ended with great rejoicing in the Lord;
- was the price of disobedience;
- ended at the appointed time.

Deliverance. Judah went into captivity a disobedient people. Their afflictions during the seventy years of captivity brought them to repentance. See Heb. 12:11. The seventy years' chastening served the purpose of bringing Judah back to an appreciation of and service to God. Assurance is given that the "Lord will maintain the cause of the afflicted." When the children of Judah feared God, God pitied them as a Father pitieth his children (Psa. 103:13). Their joy at deliverance was real. A new day lay open before them. New opportunities where ambitions could be striven for, and in the midst of all the striving, liberty, the blessing of God, could be enjoyed. It is for a greater deliverance that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together, waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God. The afflictions which we endure now will work for us an exceeding and more eternal weight of glory when the day of redemption arrives and the trumpet sounds announcing jubilee. Rom. 8:19-22; 2 Cor. 4:17.

An Appointed Time. The deliverance of Judah from Babylonian captivity came at the appointed time, which was also a promised time. God has times and seasons for all His works. When the appointed time arrived, God sent His Son into the world (Gal. 4:4). When the appointed time arrives for the end of the age, and it is an appointed time, God will send His Son the second time without sin unto salvation to everyone that believes (Dan. 11:27; Heb. 9:28). Like many in Judah, there will be some who will be watching and waiting for this great deliverance at the second advent.—C. E. R.

Making a Fresh Start

Two or three weeks ago we learned of the new empire, Persia, that arose and that was in turn to conquer Babylonia. Cyrus, King of Persia, during the first year of his rule over Babylonia, allowed some of the Hebrew exiles to return to their homeland to rebuild the temple at Jerusalem. Our prophet, Jeremiah, by God's help, predicted this very thing (25:12; 29:10). Thus Cyrus cemented the distant parts of his empire by the loyalty and gratitude of those to whom he had been kind. All who desired might go, and those who remained behind were urged to assist the expedition with money and equipment. As you read that part of the lesson taken from the Psalms, imagine yourself an exile from home, forced to live among people of a foreign tongue, suddenly allowed to return to your homeland. It would truly seem like a dream. God, in His unvarying goodness, had given these happy wanderers a new start in life.

Notice the expression "as the streams in the south" (v. 4). The streams in southern Palestine are dried up during most of the year, being only a tiny trickle. This first return of the captives the Psalmist compares to this condition of the streams. But in the rainy season they become full-flowing rivers. In what sense will the Hebrew nation again be similar (Jer. 33)?

Remember: With God's help and the aid of kind friends anyone can make a fresh start in life.—M. G.

JUNIOR CLASS

Text: Ezra 1:1-11. Topic: Returning Home. Memory Verse: "The Lord hath done great things for us; whereof we are glad."—Psa. 126:3.

Review. Have some child tell briefly the story of Ezekiel as a watchman. Ask this question, "Were you a watchman this past week; if so, how?"

Presentation of Lesson. Ask if any child has ever been homesick; if so, have him tell just how he felt. Then ask if they remember how Nebuchadnezzar carried off the people as captives. Then discuss what became of him. Today we have a story about the new king, Cyrus. Tell the story as follows: (1) the decision of Cyrus to rebuild the Lord's house at Jerusalem; (2) he calls for the people who wish to return home; (3) how they are to receive help for this return; (4) the people plan to return; (5) what Cyrus gives them to take along. Unless this story is told in such a way as to make the children really feel the joy that these people must have had, the value of the lesson will be lost.

Memory Verse. Psalm 126:3 tells us how these people felt. This is our memory verse. Let's read and then repeat it together, trying to feel just as they must have felt.

Notebook. Draw again your picture of the burning of Jerusalem as in lesson 5. Copy Kings 25:9 under it as before. Now draw a picture of the Lord's house. Under it copy Ezra 1:3. Give blanks for this lesson. Example: _____ was the King. He wanted to build the _____ at _____.—V. C. T.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

POMONA, CALIFORNIA

The Williams Street Chapel, Williams St. west of White Ave., is announcing a new schedule for worship during this fall and winter. Sunday school will open at 9:30, church at 10:30 with Communion at 11:15.

Bro. J. E. Adamson will conduct a series of talks on "The Parables" during the month of November.
Mrs. Grace Adamson.

THANKSGIVING

Thanksgiving Day is about three weeks off and it would be a fine thing if our churches were to remember the goodness of God to them by taking a special offering on behalf of the Evangelistic Fund, the purpose of which is to help to bring the glad tidings of the kingdom of God to those who do not know them. The Evangelistic Fund, which was provided for by the last General Conference, is perhaps the most forward-looking movement the church has inaugurated for several years and should have the hearty support of the entire brotherhood. The world is ready to receive the truth of God and we should not be neglectful of the favorable opportunity presented at this time.

May we depend upon you to help the missionary work of the church forward immediately? Plans are now being formulated for engaging evangelists and carrying on efforts in various localities, but everything depends upon the response the brotherhood at large makes to this appeal, so please indicate your willingness to aid in this vital matter as soon as possible.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

On Sunday, Oct. 27, our two weeks' series of meetings with Bro. Patrick as visiting speaker came to a close. The day was a beautiful one, and the first thing on the program was the Sunday school rally at 9:45. The attendance was 252.

This being the ninth anniversary of the church, the anniversary sermon was given by Bro. Patrick at 11 a. m. This was felt to be very appropriate since Bro. Patrick was present for the dedication nine years ago, and became the first pastor of the church.

At noon the tables were spread and the capacity of our dining room and kitchen was taxed to the limit. The afternoon sermon was given by the pastor at 2:30, and the Communion observed. Then at night our visiting speaker gave the closing address of the day.

This is written from southern Louisiana, where the pastor is now engaged in a series of meetings at Happy Woods Church near Ham-

To Our Brotherhood

We have just installed a water heating plant in our publishing plant building, and I am making this appeal to you to increase your contributions to the N. B. I. that we may be able to discharge this obligation at the earliest possible moment. This was an expense that was absolutely necessary, as the furnace gave out entirely, and something had to be done without delay.

We now have a very efficient plant that will serve for many years, and tests, so far as we have been able to make them, are very satisfactory.

It is not a pleasure for me to come to you from time to time with these appeals for funds, but you understand our situation. We all feel that our work must be done, and we are holding our expenses to the minimum.

I well know that, with our people, money is not plentiful, and sacrifices must be made if we are to carry on our work, and I feel that it is my duty to inform you of the situation and our needs. We have been gradually reducing our indebtedness, and at the same time improving our property.

More subscriptions for our publications and more residents for Golden Rule Home will help very much, as the necessary expenses—heat, light, water rents, taxes, insurance, machinery operation, editorial and proofreading work, and other overhead expenses are approximately the same as they would be if our subscriptions, sales, and Home residents were quadrupled.

And just here I want to say a word relative to Golden Rule Home. Some reports have come to me intimating that taking residence in Golden Rule Home and putting one's property in as payment might be taking an unwarranted risk of losing the property and the failure of the Home organization and consequently the loss of its benefits. The facts are that the financial condition of Golden Rule Home is the best it has been in the history of the institution. Under the law and rules established for the protection of the residents of this home we are under obligations to have at all times available property, cash, or good securities to the amount of $1,600 for each resident therein; and today if we were to convert the properties and good securities we hold in trust for the benefit of the residents of Golden Rule Home into cash at conservative valuations, we could pay $1,600 to each resident therein and have that much more left, plus the large and well equipped home residence which they now occupy.

The above statement may seem, to some, to be an exaggeration. If so, I have only to ask you to come to Oregon and I will undertake to prove my statements to be true, allowing your eyes and judgment to be your guide.

mond, the scene of the old "Pine Woods Bible Class." The meetings have started off beautifully, and we are praying not only for God's guidance upon the work here, but upon the church and workers at home. During the three weeks of our absence Bro. Patrick was to take care of one week, Bro. Cecil Smead the second Sunday, and Bro. Owen Barney the third.

Speaking in behalf of the home church, we

We have our difficulties, of course, as we are unable to dispose of properties at present to secure cash, nor is the cash income from the properties sufficient to meet our needs. But we are getting by, and are placing no encumbrances upon our properties, and if we can just have the confidence and cooperation of our people, with their counsel, prayers, and goodwill and support, in the near future the National Bible Institution with its publishing plant and Golden Rule Home will be one of which we all may be justly proud.

But to attain this, work must still be done and sacrifices must continue to be made. If some unfavorable reports should come to you, don't be surprised, but investigate. Go to the root of the matter. These are things in which you are interested, and you are entitled to know the facts in the case, and should have them before you form conclusions that are dependable.

We received a letter some time ago in which a good sister stated that a report came to her to the effect that the Golden Rule Home was a terrible place for folks desiring a home to go to. Others, perhaps, may have received similar reports. I do not know who would start such reports nor why they should do so, but sometimes those who may not get just what they want, or think they ought to have, or are disappointed in some way, or suffer some twist of the mind, and which cannot be explained, thoughtlessly, and without due consideration as to the injustice in the case, will say something that will serve as grounds for such reports. Anyway, in reply to this letter I proposed that the one to whom the report came should come to Oregon, where Golden Rule Home is located, and make personal investigation in the Home, with the Oregon church, and the citizens outside the church and N. B. I. organization; and if she should find that there were just grounds for such report I would pay all necessary expenses of her trip, and I am here making such proposition to any others to whom such reports may come.

We are ignorant and weak and make many mistakes, and need and must have your assistance and counsel, and criticism is invited, but again I ask you to ascertain the facts and then give us and others who may be interested your conclusions. This, I think, is just and fair to all parties concerned.

I trust that in adding these long paragraphs I have not covered up the principal purpose of this call, which is: We are in need of some $525.00 which we have been compelled to obligate ourselves and are asking your assistance in discharging it and thanking you for such assistance.

wish to express our appreciation to Bro. Patrick for his sweet spirit and service during our fall meetings. Many people in the community as well as the church have known and loved him for years, and they enjoyed very much having him there again. Our thanks and best wishes go with Bro. Patrick as he returns to his Ohio home.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

BURR OAK, INDIANA

Our Ladies' Society, which meets every week and all day, with a potluck dinner, have finished a quilt. They have begun another. You know Paul and Dorcas worked with their hands for others. These tireless efforts are a blessing to any church, and appreciated.

A Halloween party in the Currens Hall will be held by the Morning Stars, Tuesday, the 29th.

Sr. Guge's class of ladies invited their husbands to meet with them at their first class meeting. Twenty-three of them gathered in the home of Sr. Heizers. An enjoyable time of fellowship was evident.

Last Thursday (Oct. 24) the Berean classes climbed another step, with 19 in attendance. We have three classes. The adults have begun a study of the Bible, its origin and divisions, eventually taking up the books in their respective order. The writer teaches this class.

Sr. Norman La Munion will occupy the pulpit Sunday, the 27th, while the writer preaches at Kokomo.

This coming Sunday's subject will be at the evening service, "The Liberty Bell" (Luke 4:18). Those living in near by towns and communities are invited to attend.

A. E. Hoskins, Pastor.

FIT FOR A QUEEN

It's a Bible—a Bible that one scarcely would believe possible unless one saw it. It's in a genuine leather binding, limp, without overlapping edges, and suitable for bookcase use. It has red under gold edges. It has large blackface self-pronouncing type. It has marginal references. It has 491 pages of helps: concordance, dictionary, cyclopedia, articles on ancient Oriental customs and traditions, 4,000 questions and answers on the Bible, 12 maps and an index. It is printed on fine Bible paper. The page size is only 8¼ x 6 inches, and the book is 2¼ inches thick. But one of its stellar features is the special marriage certificate and family record, ready for signatures of minister and witnesses. And in addition to all this, there are numerous black-and-white and full-color plates scattered through the book. A Bible like that at $5.00 would make the gift of a lifetime for a bride-to-be, for the newly married, or for any Christian worker. Order Bible No. 4914 from the National Bible Institution. It's available in other bindings, too.

JOHN WILLIAM BRAMMELL

John William Brammell passed away at the family home on North St., Frankfort, Ind., October 29, after an illness of several days.

He was born near Boyleston, Ind., January 18, 1856. In 1879 he was united in marriage to Sarah Stewart, who preceded him in death a few months ago.

To mourn his passing are 3 daughters: Mrs. Naomi Hampton, Mrs. Elsie Finney of Frankfort; Mrs. Gurtha Williams of Gladbrook, Iowa; 1 sister, Mrs. John Palmer of Hillisburg, Ind.; 2 half-sisters, Mrs. John Higginbottom of Indianapolis, Ind., and Mrs. Elmer Strawn of Frankfort; 1 brother, Oliver, and 1 half-brother, Albert Brammell, both of East St. Louis, Ill.; 23 grandchildren; 13 great-grandchildren.

Except for five years he lived in Clinton County, Ind. He was a true believer in the Abrahamic faith. His membership was in the Church of God near Hillisburg.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer October 30 at the Church of God. We laid Bro. Brammell to rest in the Plummer Cemetery to await the call of the great King.

THE SUNLIGHT OF PROPHECY

Another series of lessons in envelope-size tract form has been prepared by J. H. Anderson, Indiana state evangelist for the Church of God, and published at 10 cents the copy. The tract covers sixteen pages, and may be obtained from either the author, Michigantown, Ind., or Mrs. Mabel Edney, Dana, N. C.

The twelve lessons of the tract are devoted to prophecy, with particular attention given to the Antichrist. In fact, the subtitle of the pamphlet is "Who Is the Antichrist?" The author's argument is based entirely upon his interpretation of the biblical passages enumerated in the text of the tract.

Bible No. 04443: Oxford edition, regular Bible paper, 100,000 marginal references, 324-page concordance-encyclopedia, 18 maps and index, large blackface type, French Morocco binding, divinity circuit, gold edges. $5.25, postpaid for cash; National Bible Institution.

TITHING BULLETINS OFFERED AT A SAVING

At least $5 a week can be saved by any church that customarily uses a four-page bulletin each week. The Layman Company, 730 Rush St., Chicago, offers this saving when using their four-page bulletin. Two pages are printed with a stewardship message, and two pages are left blank for local announcements. The company suggests that churches conduct a five weeks' or ten weeks' course of tithe education by using its bulletins, which are offered at a nominal sum. It offers a sample set containing 32 different tithing tracts at 20 cents. Please mention The Restitution Herald; also give your denomination.

The Coming Crisis

By James R. Kaye, Ph.D., LL.D.

The state of the world as a whole in which we are now living stands alone in human history. Every thoughtful man is asking, "What does it mean? To what is it all pointing?" These questions are answered in the most intelligent manner by The Coming Crisis.

The scholarship of this book is sufficiently assured by the fact that its author is the compiler of the New Analytical Bible and other biblical works.

THE END OF THE AGE

Prophecies relating to the coming of Christ and its bearing on present world conditions are considered from a strictly scriptural viewpoint. The book is probably the sanest, soundest, most exhaustive treatment of this subject now in print. It is invaluable to anyone interested in the future of humanity and the return of the Messiah.

OF COURSE THIS CHANGES THINGS

"It is the subject of drinking among youth on which we'd comment. . . . It seems pretty outmoded behavior for this young group which prides itself on being up-to-date, if nothing else. They wouldn't be found dead, for instance, in a pre-'29 car. They scorn a good many of the old-fashioned mannerisms and behaviorisms. Yet, in party gatherings, one will find an element of young folks who conduct themselves in a drinking manner as out-of-date as the slang that was used a quarter of a century ago, by which they'd soon 'date' an oldster using it.

"Quite aside from the moral angle, young people, you and your heavy drinking simply mark you as away behind the times."—Doris Blake in The Chicago Tribune.

"Until you mean something to yourself, you can't be important to anyone else."—Grace Moore in Reader's Digest, October, 1935.

PRECIOUS THINGS—

"Few people have learned the art of collecting happy memories; they collect old china and prints and books—all good and pleasant but fragile and perishable. But happy memories are indestructible possessions which nothing can take from us."—Isabel B. Rose in Red Blossoms.

"At no time in history has pacifist sentiment been so widespread and articulate. And yet, despite speeches, warnings, and impassioned harangues, we are impotent to check the headlong march of preparation in materials and—more important—in attitudes, which leads straight to another cataclysm. The moral is that war has a profound psychological attraction for man. . . .

"This does not imply that man's perversity is the cause of war. Anyone who has studied the origins of recent wars knows that other issues are very much at stake. . . . No picture of war is complete without the unholy trinity of history: Profits, Personalities, and Prejudices. But all this does not deny the axiom: Men like war. . . .

"To the pacifist war may signify horror, to the economist folly, to the philosopher barbarism; but to the mass of men it means many precious things: romance to the miserable, action to the inhibited, power to the impotent, reward to the unnoticed.

". . . That is the challenge which scientists and social engineers, perhaps of some future society, must meet if Western civilization is to be stopped in its march to a final holocaust."—Leo C. Rosten in Harper's Magazine, October, 1935.

AN IMAGE BEARER

By C. E. Randall

PAUL in his letter to the Hebrews says Jesus was the express image of God's person. This means that He was the exact impress of God's substance. He was in the image or likeness of God. He looked like God, but He wasn't God. If Jesus was an exact similitude of God's person or substance, then there is only one conclusion that we can arrive at, and that is that God is a person, that is, He is a personal God (Heb. 1:3).

A popular creed in speaking of God says: "God is without body, parts, or passion." The Bible plainly affirms that God has a person—a body composed of parts. If God's Word is true, then the creed is wrong. On the other hand, if the creed is true, then the Word is wrong. Which do you think is true? "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isa. 8:20.

Moses saw God's back parts. If God has back parts, which the Word claims, then He has front parts, for there could be no back parts unless there were front parts. If we accept the record of Moses in Exodus 33:19-33 then we must discard the creedal teaching. God was and is just as real as the One who was His exact or express image.

In Genesis 5:3 it is said that Adam had a son after his likeness and image. Now just what does it mean by saying that Seth was in the image and likeness of his father? In Genesis 5:1 it uses the same language by saying that Adam was created in "the likeness of God." Do the words mean the same thing? Why shouldn't they? Adam, the first son of God, was made in the image and likeness of God. Christ, the second Son of God, was made in the image and likeness of God. During the ages man through sin has greatly marred and disfigured the image and likeness, but Christ, who knew no sin, was the exact imprint or image of God's person. He didn't mar the similitude through sin. Therefore, He could say, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." Not that He was the Father, but He looked like the Father, was the exact impress of God's person.—Church of God Messenger.

The Bible is our Watchman;
It tells us what to do
If we would live like Jesus
And follow Him so true.

It warns us of the dangers
That wait on every hand;
It guides our steps so surely
Through all this troubled land.

We'll heed this faithful Watchman,
And all its precepts do;
Then God will give us a glorious crown
Of life in the earth made new.—M. G.

GODLY SORROW

By Lyman Booth

BRIEFLY, godly sorrow worketh salvation, and worldly sorrow worketh death. One is the opposite to the other, both in their results and causes. The cause which prompted Paul to write the above words was the sin which had been committed by a member of the church at Corinth who had been accused of living in adultery with his father's wife. Paul had written a former letter to the church recommending that the guilty party should be chastised immediately. This was one of the ancient vices which some of the early converts still pursued, a relic of idolatrous worship. From Paul's letter we learn that great immorality still existed among some of the Corinthian brethren, and was even considered a matter to boast of. But Paul gave them to understand he who had done wrong had identified himself with the wrong, and therefore was an object of merited indignation.

This spirit of moral laxity is very noticeable today in some circles of professedly religious societies, who are given to using words of shady meaning concerning crime, which is condoned with the remark, "He has mistaken the way of rectitude." Many look upon sin as a misunderstanding and something to be expected, and not upon its harmful results. The Corinthians (some of them) looked at it in that light, and felt no indignation, no shame, while others bitterly opposed the practice; and when it was made known to Paul it overwhelmed him with sorrow and indignation, and immediately he instructed the brethren not to keep company with any man who was called a brother, who was a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner. "Your glorying (or boasting) is not good. Know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump?" As much as to say that a minor offense, if permitted to pass unnoticed or unrebuked, may lead to greater ones, which may result with ruinous effect upon the whole membership in that particular locality.

To continue as they had been doing would ruin the

"Now I rejoice, not that ye were made sorry, but that ye sorrowed to repentance: for ye were made sorry after a godly manner, that ye might receive damage by us in nothing. For godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation not to be repented of: but the sorrow of the world worketh death."

church; therefore, he ordered the church to deliver the guilty party unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit might be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus (1 Cor. 5:5). I do not understand, from this language, that the guilty one should be subjected to bodily punishment, but that he should be thoroughly instructed as to Christian conduct and the ruin to which his guilt was leading him, that his crime was of the flesh and not of the Spirit. Paul's method of reclaiming the erring member was not with harsh words nor temporal punishment, but rather with mild words of correction, in the spirit of love. Therefore, he directed the church "when they come together to deliver the offending party to Satan, for the destruction of the flesh." Not that the man should be destroyed, but that his fleshly and evil propensities should be corrected and brought under the control of the Spirit.

The word "Satan" in this instance has the same meaning that it did when Jesus said to Peter, "Get thee behind me, Satan." Jesus had told His apostles He intended going to Jerusalem, but Peter opposed His going, lest He might receive bodily injury. Peter stood as an adversary to Jesus' intention. Likewise the church occupied the position of an adversary to the guilty man. This, I believe, was Paul's thought. Because the trouble was disposed of within the church and no outside agency had any voice in the settlement; at least we have no record of it. No! It meant no personal devil.

There might be instances in which Paul's system of discipline might not be effective, and in such an event the excision of the guilty member would be necessary.

Before the introduction of Christianity the Greeks and Romans had little or no knowledge of what the Scriptures call sin, so that the offenders against the Bible code of morals were exceedingly numerous, and Paul was fearful lest that unholy leaven would (Please turn to Page Nine)

Abreast of the Times

Mystery of the Sea

"They shall fly as the eagle that hasteth to eat."

SINGAPORE, Nov. 8.—Sir Charles Kingsford-Smith and his companion, Tom Pethybridge, are missing today somewhere over the Bay of Bengal or its surrounding coastal jungles, between India and Burma.

Kingsford-Smith, Australian aviator who probably has made more long-distance hops than any other living pilot, was flying from England to Australia. C. James Melrose, also flying from England to Australia, reported he had flown above the Kingsford-Smith plane over the Bay of Bengal, and that at that time the ship seemed to be having engine trouble. Exchange Telegraph dispatches to London announced that the missing pilots were battling a monsoon, and were last sighted by Melrose about 150 miles from shore at an altitude of 200 feet.

Orient Moves Toward War

"In the last days perilous times shall come."

SHANGHAI, Nov. 10.—Associated Press dispatches today reported the evacuation of Chapel, native Chinese quarter of this city. Most of the Chinese fled to the international settlement, guarded by the marine forces of a number of European countries and the United States.

Although denying the truth of the rumor that had caused the exodus from Chapel—that a strong military action was to be instituted by Japan in retribution for the recent killing of Hideo Nakayama, a Japanese Marine, in the native quarter—the Empire of the Mikado maintained a force of two thousand marines in the demilitarized Chinese zone.

A spokesman for the Japanese naval attache declared that "we deplore the mass exodus. Aside from asking the fullest cooperation of Chinese authorities for apprehension of the culprit, we have made no demands whatsoever."

The fifth Chinese Kuomintang (military) Congress scheduled for November 12 probably now will be postponed owing to the embarrassment arising from present conditions.

And So Another Circuit

"Riches certainly make themselves wings; they fly away as an eagle toward heaven."—Proverbs 23:5.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 8.—(CBS radio).—Speculation as to the effect of the decision made by a Baltimore Federal Court judge yesterday was rife today. The decision, by which the entire Securities Act was declared unconstitutional on at least four grounds, had its immediate result in a wild buying orgy in utilities shares on the New York Stock Exchange.

It is not improbable that a second wave of false prosperity, brought about by unsound credit conditions resulting from stock market speculating, will sweep the country as the indirect aftermath of the judge's decision. British and French financiers are watching the metropolitan exchanges in anticipation of such an event.

The possibility of a second economic debacle similar to that of six years ago is enhanced by the fact that credit in New York City is today more free than it was in 1929.

German War Flag Hoisted

"A great company with bucklers and shields, all of them handling swords: . . . Gomer, and all his bands."

BERLIN, Nov. 7.—Under the new German war flag, unfurled today for the first time in all garrison centers, Reichsfuehrer Hitler's recently conscripted army took a personal oath of loyalty to the dictator.

"I swear by God this holy oath that I will give unconditional obedience to Adolf Hitler, Fuehrer of the German Reich and people, and that as a brave soldier I will always be ready to sacrifice my life for this oath," ran the chant of each recruit.

The flag has two stripes, one black and one white, with a red background which bears a large white circled swastika in the center. In the upper left corner is a small iron cross.

Flanking the flagpole at Berlin on which the new banner was raised were symbols of Germany's revived military power—a field gun, an anti-tank gun, light and heavy machine guns, a trench mortar, and a tank. The revivification of the Teutonic army and navy has been in direct defiance to the Treaty of Versailles, but has taken place with the tacit consent of Great Britain.

The war flag, with other Nazi emblems, was flown everywhere in the country, while warships in ports and on the high seas raised it in special ceremonies.

God's Covenant With Abraham

By S. J. Lindsay

BEGINNING where we left off in our last article, we continue a discussion of the seal of faith. Abraham's faith in the covenant was sealed by circumcision. We have shown that our faith must be in keeping with that of Abraham, and we now quote Bible evidence to make this statement good: "And he received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had yet being uncircumcised: that he might be the father of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised; that righteousness might be imputed unto them also: and the father of circumcision to them who are not of the circumcision only, but who also walk in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham, which he had being yet uncircumcised. For the promise, that he should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith."—Rom. 4:11-13.

Here we learn that we must walk in the steps of that faith which Abraham exercised. The question may be asked, Have Christians, or those who would become Christians, any seal by which to seal this covenant before God? Our answer is, Yes. For we read, "As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him: rooted and built up in him, and stablished in the faith, as ye have been taught, abounding therein with thanksgiving. Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ. For in him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. And ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power: in whom also ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ; buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead."—Col. 2:6-12.

Read the foregoing carefully to see that baptism holds the same relation to the covenant with us that circumcision held with Abraham. This will lead you to see the importance of baptism in connection with Christian faith. The question is often asked, "Do you think baptism is essential to salvation?" We ask, "Do you think circumcision was essential in Abraham's case?" Again we ask, "Would Abraham's circumcision have amounted to anything if it had been done before he knew the terms of the covenant God was about to propose to him?" Does baptism applied to them who know not the gospel of Christ, the covenant made with Abraham, do them any good?

As to the saving quality of baptism, let us read: "Which sometime were disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water. The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us . . . by the resurrection of Jesus Christ."—1 Peter 3:20, 21.

And again: "And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."—Mark 16:15, 16.

We believe that this is sufficient evidence to any who have a desire to obey God's revealed plan.

Peter preached the first gospel sermon under this great commission on the day of Pentecost. Let us see if this line of thought was followed by him. In Acts 2, beginning at the 22nd verse, we find this sermon running throughout the chapter. What did he preach? That Jesus was crucified and that He arose again from the dead to sit upon David's throne. He reasoned with the multitude of Jews that their thought that David was to be the Messiah was not sound, and turning to the Psalms he allowed David to convince them of their error. To tell them this message seems to have ended Peter's responsibility to them. He had preached the gospel to them and there his work came to a close; but they, being convinced, asked what they must do about it. Then he told them to repent and be baptized for the remission of their sins. Just a point we would like to emphasize, and that is that we have too many who are so anxious to get people into the waters of baptism, that they coax and tease and urge them to go before they have the proper understanding, thus bringing many into the body who are not prepared for the responsibilities of the Christian life. When the preacher has told them the gospel message and shown the responsibility resting upon them, if this message doesn't do the work, no man should attempt to supplant the Word with his personality. One trouble with us is that too many of our own people fail to see the worth of faith in (Please turn to Page Ten)

Via Crucis

I always thought my cross would be
A plain dark thing that I could see
And know; and knowing, bravely lift
And carry like a sacred gift.

All of these years, now and again,
My soul has felt an aching strain;
My brow has borne, without relief,
Prick upon prick of unseen grief.

Now only, when the day is done,
And life's swift sands are nearly run,
The lengthening sun-rays on the road
Project the shadow of my load.

Ah, how more bravely had I borne
Each prick, had I but seen the thorn!
How nobly shouldered grief and loss
Could I have recognized the Cross!

Translating the Scriptures, 1535 and 1935

AS ONE looks back to the tremendous odds against which the English Bible came into being, let him not think that the struggles of translators are over! Almost every one of the difficulties that were faced by the great translators of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, whether in English or in other languages, are faced by translators today dealing with the multitude of languages in which the Scriptures, in whole or in part, have not yet appeared.

Even actual physical perils from government opposition still exist. Just as William Tyndale found no place in all England in which he could safely make his translation of the New Testament, so today in other lands, wisest not to mention, translation work must be concealed for the protection of the translator.

Still must go on that long and alert drudgery necessary to find the right words—the words that convey most clearly, and warmly, the meaning of the text. In English the way had been partly prepared; through the influence of the church and the mystery and miracle plays and the earnest work of the earlier missionaries before the invention of printing, the people had come to be familiar with many Bible stories and many phrases. But, even then, some words have puzzled all English translators. Such, for example, is an adequate rendering of agape. Tyndale had used “love”; for, he said, “charity had lost its true meaning.” Matthew’s and the Geneva Bibles, the Great Bible, and the revisions of 1881 and 1901, followed Tyndale; and the King James used “charity” under the influence of the Latin caritas. In the successive editions of Tyndale’s New Testament, as prepared by him, there is abundant evidence of the persistent care with which he studied word after word, and revised and improved the text with more accurate choices of words and phrases. Just as then a translator today on the mission field must be sure of the full connotation of abstract terms. Sometimes he can take a heathen term and give it rebirth in Christian significance. . . . On the other hand, the missionary translators often have to find a phrase for an unheard of institution; as when the missionaries in the island of Ponape found no word for “father,” because there was no such institution as marriage or idea of fatherhood.

Again, the question of orthography still persists. Perhaps it would be fair to say that the translators of the sixteenth century were not troubled by the need for standardized spelling, as is evidenced by this single quotation from Coverdale’s Bible—“My flesh and my herte fayleth, but God is the strength of my hert.” But, undoubtedly, as newer editions came out, the editors and printers had to struggle with growing standardization of spelling. Even today our King James Version shows, in some words, a difference between the spelling that is now standard and that which was permissible when it was first printed; as this from the 1611 edition—“And hee commanded the multitude to sit downe on the grasse.” These struggles with orthography have come in modern times to be more scientific problems. English orthography developed with little consistent sound orthographic basis. The missionary reducing a language to writing for the first time and producing the first printed literature hopes to establish a spelling that shall be easy to read; that reproduces the sounds of the language accurately, and that is practical for writing and printing. How shall the various vowel sounds and peculiar consonants be represented? The Pecks, at work on a translation of the Mam language in Guatemala, have been perplexed with three sounds for the letter “k,” one of which is classified as an “uvular glottalized stop,” and by a “straight blade sh.” In solving these problems, they have had the advantage of consultation with a specialist in these matters who was on the field, and have made records of actual speech by electrical transcription, so that they may study separate sounds.

The work of the Pecks illustrates another problem sometimes set before modern translators, which was not so explicit in the sixteenth century, but which was not wholly lacking. There are a dozen or more dialects of Mam—six of importance. From these must be chosen and enriched that dialect or combination of dialects that will provide the most worthy permanent basis for the language, and yet be quickly understandable to all. William Tyndale would be quite amazed, could he be faced with such procedure; and yet, while it may be truly said that he did not select the general dialect of English speech which his basic translation reproduces, it is nevertheless true that in his mind and blood was the heritage of all the language currents that had flowed through Gloucestershire, where he grew up—Celtic, Roman, Anglo-Saxon, Danish, Norman. Moreover, the early sixteenth century was a time of expansion in geography as well as in economics, politics, and religion, which was reflected in the language. The resulting vitality, one could say, was personified in the vigorous nature of Tyndale. His rich vocabulary was suited to his task, and his translation not only preserved for us the language of his period, but went far, through the later revisions based upon it, to exert a strong influence on the formation of our language.

The best of these early translations were made direct from texts in original Greek and Hebrew languages by earnest men well studied in the Scriptures. While the initial impetus was often given by one man of vigorous conviction and steadfast purpose, the final text was the work of several minds. This situation is repeated time after time in modern missionary translations. The Japanese Bible now published by the Society was begun by J. C. Hepburn, but completed and revised by several American and Japanese scholars, one of the latter enriching it particularly by his feeling for poetry. Again, the revisers who produced the King James Version were men of differing religious thought and opinion, but their version has had the approval not only of most denominations, but became "the greatest English classic." The most satisfactory modern missionary versions are produced by such groups today: so the Japanese Bible just mentioned, the Union Mandarin or Kuoyu Bible in China, and others. As the Authorized Version combined the advantages of the Geneva Bible, dropping its explanatory and hortatory comment, with the best of the unannotated Bishops' Bible, so notes are omitted in the Bible Society's Scriptures, that one text may be used by all.

To be sure, some of the great difficulties involved in printing have been removed. It is no longer necessary to print only four pages or eight at a time. The great modern presses facilitate rapid and inexpensive production. Yet, even now, in parts of Africa small presses running off eight pages or less at a time prepare tentative editions; and whole Gospels, occasionally even a complete New Testament, are run off by multigraph or mimeograph for provisional circulation. Indeed, there are languages in which today it is not possible to set type at all, the Scriptures having to be produced by photography from handwritten copy painstakingly prepared. This was the case with the Tai Lu New Testament recently published by the Society in Siam, there being no type for the peculiar characters used by these people.

We are accustomed to think only of the great influence of the English translators' work upon the English-speaking peoples, but, looking beyond them, we see a host of peoples speaking hundreds of different languages who also owe their possession of the Scriptures in their tongue to the seed sown by Tyndale and Coverdale and their associates. For no others have done, and are still doing, so much to bring the Scriptures to the peoples of the world as the scores of translators and thousands of missionaries and Bible Society supporters, who themselves are daily blessed by the English Bible.—Eric M. North in Bible Society Record.

IMMORTALITY

By Emma C. Railsback

"Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honour and glory for ever and ever. Amen."—1 Tim. 1:17. "Keep this commandment without spot, unrebukeable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ: which in his times he shall shew, who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords; who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto; whom no man hath seen, nor can see: to whom be honour and power everlasting. Amen."—1 Tim. 6:14-16.

WHAT is immortality? Not mortal, not liable to death. Endowed with life which will never end. In the above texts we learn that God is eternal, immortal, invisible, and the only wise God; but why did the Apostle say, "Who only hath immortality"? Had not Christ been given immortality and had He not ascended to the right hand of the Father at the time this was written? And are not the angels in heaven immortal? Then why the statement, "Who only"? We say He is the only source of immortality, and this is truth; but is this answer altogether satisfactory? No. The Apostle is speaking of "gods," and there are gods many and lords many, he tells us in 1 Corinthians 8:5, many false gods, but they all shall perish; therefore, the only wise God, the only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords, the only God with supreme authority and power, is the one "who only hath immortality," and He has endowed His only begotten Son with immortality, as Christ Himself has said, "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, and have the keys of death and the grave." Also, the Apostle Paul in Romans 6:9 states, "Knowing that Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him," and also in Hebrews 7, "He is made a priest for ever, after the power of an endless life."

Thus we see that Jehovah is the only immortal God and that He has bestowed immortality upon His only begotten Son; but how about His created sons, the heavenly angels? We will let Jesus answer. "And Jesus answering said unto them, The children of this world marry, and are given in marriage: but they which . . . obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage: neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."—Luke 20:34-36. We must conclude then that God's ministering spirits, sent forth to minister to those who shall be heirs of salvation (Heb. 1:14), that excel in strength, that do His commandments, hearkening to the voice of His word (Psa. 103:20), also possess immortality, eternal life.

Turning now to 2 Peter 2:4 and Jude 6, we learn that there are angels that sinned, that kept not their principality (margin) and were therefore cast down to hell (the grave) and are reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day. An immortal being cannot sin and cannot die, therefore cannot be held in the darkness of the grave awaiting the resurrection to judgment. Therefore, we conclude that the angels referred to in these

World Chaos and It's Remedy

I HAVE elected to speak to you on the World Chaos and Its Cure. It is evident to the most casual observer that we are living in a world of chaos. It has been called "a topsy-turvy world." Caught in an "economic blizzard," the world is struggling to reach the sunshine of prosperity.

The children of Issachar were men having an understanding of the times, who knew what Israel ought to do. And surely, it behooves us to emulate their wisdom, and seek after the God-inspired understanding of the seriousness of our times, so that we, too, may know what to do.

THE WORLD IN WHICH WE LIVE

We are living in a world of collapse. Baffling problems confound the wisest of men. Thrones, governments, and systems are being overthrown with startling rapidity; the bottom is falling out of things. The nations are looking for the advent of some super-dictator, with power to restore the equilibrium of our tottering civilized nations.

We also live in a world of contradictions. Waste and want, luxury and scarcity, plenty and poverty, go hand in hand. Mankind is starving in a world of plenty. People are crying out for food. God has given it, but man is destroying it. Millions die of starvation while we destroy grain, flesh, and fruit by millions of tons.

There is a general shortage of money. Multitudes are being slowly driven to the verge of despair, yet our banks are bursting with gold. Everything is being cornered by men who are greedy for gain. Science, machinery, and power of organization are not only enemies of man, under God they can become servants. It is when they are exploited selfishly for personal enrichment that they are evil. Further, essential industries are in a state of chaos, depression is rampant in every trade except luxury trades. If it is true that a man is known by the company he keeps, it is equally true that he is known by the way he spends his money, and what is true of individual life is also true of national life.

In this case Britain does not show up very well. Last year in my country we spent $600,000,000 on tobacco; $300,000,000 on beauty parlors; $1,500,000,000 on sweets; $1,125,000,000 on drink; $215,000,000 on cinemas.

Implements of war cost 61 countries $4,000,000,000. Such waste would be ridiculous if not inexpressively tragic. What else can we expect but poverty, individually and nationally, when there is such a sinful waste of money?

Again, do we not live in a world of false values? We readily recognize that the man with brains, gifts, and initiative, who benefits mankind thereby, should receive an adequate remuneration for the same. But are we not suffering from a terrible inequality and false estimate of value? A film star whose life is not always commendable, may receive thousands of dollars a week, where a few paltry cents in comparison are paid out to the miner who drenches the coal with his life's blood.

The same wretched inequality characterizes the majority of churchgoers; anything from 25 to 50 cents will be paid weekly for a picture show or theater, where for 5 cents on Sunday the same people expect the best of sermons, and an angel of a preacher to instruct them. Think of it! A comfortable pew, a sermon costing hours of preparation, and the services of a choir and pipe organ, all for 5 cents.

PRESENT AND IMPENDING CRISES

Coming more definitely to an understanding of our times, all of us must be impressed by the dark forces operating on every hand. Let us enumerate a few.

There is the problem of universal trade depression. Markets are dislocated. The introduction of mechanical and automatic machinery is blamed for such. Man has outdone himself. His inventions have superseded him.

And then, there is the specter of widespread unemployment. The pressure of millions of unemployed is a gigantic problem no man can solve. What men need is work, and national prosperity can only come from one source, namely, God. And of this we are convinced, that if every church would institute a prayer bureau, in which definite and earnest intercession was offered about this matter, America and Britain would soon find a way out of the maze. Our Lord refers to the distress of nations with perplexity as one of the end signs. The word "perplexity" is allied with our English word "emporium," meaning a place of trade. Thus a free translation of the passage is: distress of nations, their lack of trade.

Then take the shadow of growing revolution. There is an alarming increase of lawlessness in almost every land, all of which is being fostered by Soviet emissaries. Hunger provides raw material for revolution. Poverty drives men not only to despair but desperation. Russia, seizing upon such a condition of things, has her well-paid agents to stir up trouble among the working classes. Although we can find a few extremists here and there among the ranks of the unemployed, the vast majority of them are loyal to the Constitution. They realize that their problems are not going to be solved by marching over a blood-red way with a godless Moscow as its end.

WAR SCARE

There is also the breath of war. We are spending thousands of dollars arguing for peace, and yet we were never nearer war than we are today. The League of Nations has some perilous corners to turn. Nothing short of a miracle can avert a breakdown in the present discussion for peace and disarmament. And not only so, but while statesmen talk peace, scientists are producing some of the most devilish inventions for the next war.

The Manchester Guardian recently drew attention to one of these terrible weapons of destruction now being prepared. It is called Lewisite gas.

This Lewisite is a burning gas like mustard, but far more powerful. It spreads slowly, unlike phosgene, which on that account is more favorable in ordinary bombing from the air, for wind rapidly carries phosgene far and wide, suffocating all. But Lewisite could be sprayed upon cities, or with hose from aircraft. It has an effect in burning clothes, skin, and flesh of all, citizens and soldiers indifferently. It is believed to penetrate any mask, and passes through the flesh or down the lungs, burning the victim inside and out. How horrible! And yet this hellish gas is being made in vast quantities at Porton, near Salisbury. Russia is manufacturing it in sixty-five of her factories.

In the next place, take the rapid spread of crime. We are witnessing an alarming increase of violence, robbery, and crime. The late Justice McCardie told us that the serious crime of Britain is greater today than at any time during the last sixty years. There has been an increase of over two thousand cases of house-breaking and shop burglaries in one year. Murders and suicides are claiming a huge toll. The diabolical and atrocious deeds of men, even of young lads, are enough to turn one's blood cold. Such facts are tragically true of America, especially so since prohibition was expelled from the country.

MATERIALISTIC ATHEISM

There is also the presence of gross materialism. Britain is too earth-bound! Gain, selfishness, pleasure, seem to dominate the thoughts and life of multitudes. Risking their chance in the next world, they mean to have a good time in this. Sordid earthiness is gradually killing all that is beautiful and sacrificial in life. The trend of present-day philosophy is that God is a sort of necessity to the evolution of humanity, but that we are outgrowing such a need, as we do our clothes. Ultimately we shall come to find that the One we call "God" is really man himself: that his slow and toilsome evolution has been the evolution of God. Men like Julian Huxley would have us believe that the universe is "a mud pie made by two blind children, matter and force."

And then, what of the menace of atheism? The atheism of the French Revolution failed because no one took the place of the God who was dethroned. It was a mere negation. The new atheism, however, which is beginning to sweep the earth, will undoubtedly succeed, seeing that the Antichrist is to sit in the place of the true God. Antichrist is to be the personification and full manifestation of all anti-God and antichristian forces. Think for a moment of Russia's five blows at God.

The Duchess of Atholl, at a luncheon on October 12, disclosed the details of Russia's Five Year Plan for exterminating religion. As reported by the Daily Telegraph, October 13, 1932, she said that the plan was embodied in a decree issued by the Council of People's Commissaries on May 15, 1932. It was composed of 118 articles, and was divided into 5 parts, each dealing with a year.

"During the first year, in which we are now, all religious schools are to be closed and preliminary measures taken for the closing of churches in the capital.

"During the second year, all religious-minded persons are to be expelled from State undertakings and offices. All religious literature will be prohibited, and there will be made 150 anti-religious films, to be shown throughout the Soviet Union, principally in the schools.

"The third year will be devoted to the 'activization of the godless cells,' and it is proposed to expel from the Soviet Union all clergymen, of whatever religion, who refuse to abandon their clerical orders.

"In the fourth year, all churches, chapels, and synagogues are to be surrendered to the local Soviet in order that they may be used as cinemas, clubs, and other places of 'intelligent pastime.'

"The last year is to be devoted to strengthening the gains along the front of the fight against religion. It is intended by May 1, 1937, not to leave a single house of worship in territory of the U.S.S.R., and to extinguish in the minds of the people the very notion of God."

In the near future, added the Duchess, a large and powerful wireless station is to be erected near Moscow to broadcast Communist and anti-religious propaganda, making our homes more of a prey to these influences than before. Dr. Thomas Cochrane affirms that 25,000,000 young Russians have never known anything but atheism.

Further, in many parts of America, atheism is spreading its pernicious influence through an incorporated movement known as the Four A's—that is, the American Association for the Advancement of Atheism. It is not strange to learn that the lawyer of the association, who attended to the papers of the incorporation, is the legal representative of the Soviet Government in America. The ambition of this association is to conquer the continent for atheism. Agents and money are flowing out of this godless movement. Teachers are imbibing the doctrines of the A. A. A., and then spreading them among the young.

Similar atheistic tendencies are at work in our own land. Clever and cultured people have thrown God over. Evolution has done away with the idea of God. "One science after another," to quote from one atheistic report, "has been conquered by materialism, until only the science of life is left. Evolution is atheism. It substitutes mechanical law for supernatural intelligence, banishing God for biology." The tragedy is that such teaching as this is permeating this beloved land of ours in many subtle ways.

RELIGIOUS BANKRUPTCY

Last of all we mention the bankruptcy of organized religion. We pause to think of this crisis, not because it is last or the least of all the crises we have referred to. It is a matter of supreme importance. It is the church's impoverished condition that has made possible many of our present problems. If she had been "as terrible as an army with banners," the last great war would not have happened, and in averting such the church would have saved the world from such a terrible aftermath as it is at present experiencing. Let us think of a few facts.

We never had as many churches in the world as today, and, sad to say, never so many unevangelized heathen. It is reckoned that there are 200,000,000 more heathen in the world than there were 100 years ago. This does not reflect great credit upon the church's obedience to the Master's commission to go into all the world with His redemptive message.

Churches there are of all sorts—faithful and fancy and false; and yet we never had such Sabbath desecration and paganism and appalling ignorance of the Bible, even in so-called Christian England. Organized churchianity faces a world of need and chaos, absolutely inadequate to stem the growing tide of anxiety and despair. At home and abroad, the church is being forced to retrench. Opportunities for advancing the interests of Christ's kingdom in all parts of the earth were never so magnificent and manifold, but somehow her feet are embedded in the mud of indifference. Upon the churchless masses little or no influence is exerted. Gambling and kindred vices are rife, and the church is impotent to stop them. Vital life is lacking! She is a well-dressed corpse, instead of a living body. Damned with pride and respectability, the great outer world is left to the Devil—and to the Devil it is giving.

If the Laodicean church represents the present phase of church history and experience, then such must be nauseating to Him who said: "I will spue thee out of my mouth." Of this, however, we are persuaded, that the organism, both within and without the organization (and more without than within), was never more active than it is today. Organized religion may be a dead force, but the Holy Ghost which brought the church to birth is by no means dead, and in various ways is moving apart altogether from official and recognized channels.

Perhaps you think that the picture painted of the world's need is a very somber and pessimistic one. Would to God I could depict the crises of the hour as they really are! A question of paramount importance discussed in many circles today is, Is the world getting better? Out of the womb of international chaos is a new civilization to be born? There is only one answer to this pressing question. No! Things will grow worse and worse. Peace cannot come to the earth until the Prince of Peace Himself returns. Without a vision of the divine program of the ages, the present state of things would drive us mad. The only way we keep our balance amid such chaos and collapse is by looking to Him who is on His way to clear up the mess for which we ourselves are responsible.—H. Lockyer in The Moody Monthly.

What Does the Future Hold?

THE times in which we live invest the above question with special significance. Business men, noting the long way we have already come into the bewildering changes of this period of world upheaval, are prone to raise the question. Prophetic students, familiar with the unfolding history of the past, but caught in a maze of surprise over the new situations, forces, and trends of our time, are asking the question with eager interest. To answer the question with dogmatic certainty would be rash for the business man, and perhaps not less so for the student. At least there has been enough of unwise certainty in the past to warn prophetic students of our time against turning prophets in the field of last things.

Of course the main reliance of prophetic students in seeking to forecast the future is the testimony of the Old and New Testaments, the past fulfillments of prophecy. While in general the contention of Adventists as to last-day world conditions has had a remarkable fulfillment, some positions once held as vital are no longer emphasized, and surely all efforts to determine the time of Christ's return have ended in failure, and those failures have marked and marred our history through almost or quite a hundred years.

Turning to the question we are considering, as to what probably lies in the future, we have this to suggest: There may be a fuller measure of fulfillment for some features than we have reckoned on. Take for instance the preaching of the gospel in all the world, "as a witness to all nations, and then shall the end come." It has been many times announced among us that this has been accomplished. There are two points of uncertainty here. No one can be certain as to how broadly missionaries must travel in "all the world" to fill the measure, or how much preaching and teaching may make up the measure "as a witness." The end has not come, and it is more than an inference that the work is still unfinished. A further filling up of this New Testament prophecy may still lie in the future, and in part may account for the Master's delay.

In still another department we may find a similar contingency, and with a like lesson. We refer to the tide of evil that marks the last-day period. It has been common in some periods of shocking crime, or in new outbreaks of evil, to feel that the crisis of the age has come, and this has often been a dominant note in Adventual preaching. But crime and evil, as "sign" testimony, while holding a large place, is cumulative rather than sudden and spectacular. However shocking evil may appear, no one can say that the tide has risen to its height, and that the prophetic measure is full.

As relating to the question we are considering, evil will surely be one of the great problems of the future. Will it be a rising or a falling tide? Are law and the moral urge of righteousness strong enough to hold the forces of evil in restraint and control? The experiences of the past decade hardly encourage our faith in such an outcome. Rather are we left in a great fear that with crime and "organized evil" so strongly entrenched, theirs will be a rising tide in the future. For some years we have had a growing conviction that the Christian church may have more trying experiences before the consummation.

In considering trends of the future from the viewpoint of the Christian church, there is much to awaken apprehension. There is developing a widespread hostility to the church and to Christian teaching. This is shown in various types of Socialism, in Communism, in multiplying clubs of atheists, and with a new intensity in powerful Governments abroad, as in Russia, Germany, and Italy. This particular phase of present conditions in Europe and elsewhere, where Governments controlling half of Europe are using every agency to weaken and destroy the church, hangs as a dark cloud on the horizon of the future.

If we add to all this the new order of dictators with almost unlimited powers, and realize that these super-rulers embody, represent, and enforce the bitterest antichristian movement confronting the church, we cannot wonder that many are taking Antichrist out of the past and putting it in the future. We are not dogmatic on the question of Antichrist, but it seems as if the present array of dictators, and an organized spirit of Antichrist, might give rise to a "man of sin" who would come far nearer the New Testament Antichrist than does the Church or the Pope of Rome.

To many this may seem like heresy, because it might seem like enlarging the program of the future. We have too long been dominated in our wish and teaching by the thought that nothing should be suggested as intervening between us and our Lord's return, lest we be saying, "My lord delayeth his coming." This good passage has its place, but it should not bar a rational interpretation of prophecy. Many times the intense desire for Christ's return has led to impatience over possibly intervening events. Our proper attitude is one of readiness. The divine program will be carried out, and we shall be wise while rejoicing in a "blessed hope" to leave "times and seasons" with the Father.—F. L. Piper in The World's Crisis.

texts were mortal, earthly messengers. Examining the original words we find the Hebrew word malak is translated "angel" 111 times and "messenger" 98 times. Examples of the former are found in Gen. 16:7; 19:1, 15; 31:11; Judg. 6:11-22; 13:3-21; Isa. 63:9. Examples of the latter are Hag. 1:13; Mal. 2:7; 2 Sam. 5:11; Gen. 32:3-6. Then again the word in the New Testament for "angel" is the Greek word aggelso, which is rendered "angel" 171 times and "messenger" 7 times. Examples of the former are Matt. 1:20, 24; 2:13, 19; 28:2-5; Luke 1:11-38; Acts 5:19; Heb. 1:4, 5; 2:16; of the latter, are Luke 7:24; 9:52; and James 2:25.

When the Apostle Paul said in 1 Corinthians 6:3, "Know ye not that we shall judge angels?" he referred to earthly messengers who will need to be judged and not to immortal, sinless beings. A careful examination and comparison with Numbers 14 will reveal who the messengers were to whom Jude refers as having received special temporary judgment and as reserved in the darkness of the grave until the judgment of the great day.

A correct understanding of the subject of immortality will clear up much of the mystery that attaches to two other subjects, viz., the personal devil and the preexistence of our Lord Jesus Christ. How indispensable is a good analytical concordance in arriving at the truth of this, perhaps the most fundamental of all scriptural doctrines.

corrupt the whole church. It was with the thought of reforming them that he decided to visit Corinth. With a heavy and sad heart he went and found that the state of things had been worse than he expected.

Paul had sent Titus to Corinth, and he had been heartily welcomed. Paul had written them his first letter, in which he expressed his sorrow because of the evil which they had done so little to remove. True, they had subjected the man to a rigid discipline, and he had repented, and they had forgiven him. When Paul received this information his confidence in them was revived, and he said, "I rejoice that I made you sorry, though it was but for a time." When Paul explained the consequences of the sin, it caused them sorrow, and their sorrow resulted in repentance on the part of the wrongdoer. Not only did Paul see the sin as God sees it, but he caused them to see it in the same light. So godly sorrow is to see sin as God sees it, and this is sorrow to repentance, and repentance is a change of mind or purpose, a turning from sin, and this is a repentance that need not to be repented of, because it is that which gives peace and rest in Christ.

To realize that one has been forgiven by his fellows and also by his Lord is to feel a happiness that is enduring; but a repentance arising from emotions will endure only as long as the emotions last. One's zeal will lose its power when emotions cease. True zeal begotten by the love for truth never falters, never dies. It will love the sinner, and hate the sin; it will speak the truth against the world, speak it in love; it will frown upon wrong, but will strive to do good to the transgressor. This is the spirit of Christianity.

No other system of religion gives such testimony against sin, and such bright promises for righteousness. It lifts up the fallen, strengthens the weak, banishes sorrow, dries the tears from weeping eyes, and makes warm friends out of bitter enemies. It took the man at Corinth after he had so sadly disgraced himself and brought reproach to the church and restored him to his former position to be a blessing and to be blessed.

Jesus said He came to call sinners to repentance, not those who were just. He came to heal the lame, not those who were whole. He came to cure the sick, not those who were well; to give sight to the blind, not to those who could see. So He is the Great Physician, and His church is His hospital where sin can be removed, where the impure can be made pure, where the ungodly can become godly, where the unholy can be made holy, where sorrow and tears can be turned to joy and gladness, where the homeless and way-faring stranger can find a home and friends, where the poor can find shelter and a title to an eternal abiding place which Jesus has gone to prepare for all who truly love and faithfully serve Him.

the things which God has declared and conclude that after all maybe it makes little difference what we believe, just so we try to live right. This is a sad mistake.

In Acts, chapter 8, we read of the work of Philip with the eunuch. Read the story carefully. Note the eagerness of the eunuch to learn the gospel. He asked Philip to instruct him, which he did. Philip must have done the work thoroughly, for the eunuch was led to ask, "See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized?" "If thou believest, thou mayest," came the answer. Then he confessed that he believed that Jesus was the Christ referred to in that which he had been reading. When he made this confession, Philip baptized him. Read all other references to the ministry of the preachers whose work is recorded in the Acts and you will find this principle to apply in every case.

Being baptized thus into Christ makes us heirs, as we learn in Galatians 3:27-29. In Romans 8:16, 17 we find that we become not only heirs of God, but joint heirs with Christ, if so be we suffer with Him.

It is to the promises God made to Abraham that we must add the seven virtues named in 2 Peter 3. We are told here that these exceeding great and precious promises are able to give us the divine nature. Question: Can we become partakers of the divine nature without a knowledge of these promises? Besides receiving the divine nature from this source, we are informed that suffering with Christ will cause us to be glorified with Him. Christ has uttered several promises to us by way of glory to be revealed to us in His kingdom. We are to sit with Him on His throne even as He also overcame and is set down with His Father on His throne. The saints are to be given power over the nations. They are to reign as kings and priests with Him in the earth. With these glorious promises added to the promise of eternal life in the earth cleansed from sin and to be made a place where there is no more sorrow, nor crying, nor pain, nor death, there should be incentive enough for anyone to do his very best.

WE NEED THE BIBLE

MEN need life. Therefore men need the Bible. It is the only book this world has ever had that brings spiritual and eternal life to men; and it is the only book that is itself living—alive. "For the word of God is living, and active." "The word of God . . . liveth and abideth for ever."

Men need a book like this, and they could not write it for themselves; so God provided it, and "holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."

Men today are working busily at reorganizing the world, readjusting human society, doing everything in their power for the recovery of normal and prosperous economic conditions. It is right that they should; and all hearts are hoping for a lifting of the heavy burdens that are bearing humanity down. But, in the midst of these earnest and sincere efforts, let us remember that we have a book that shows the way of deliverance.

In fear and distress, men have been asking, "What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed?" These questions are not new; the Lord Jesus quoted them from men in the Sermon on the Mount. And He gave the answer. "Your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things," He said; and He continued: "But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."

The Bible is the only book that tells us just how we may seek first God's kingdom and His righteousness. It is the all-sufficient way—the sure and infallible way. Everyone who reads the Bible with open heart and mind can say, as did a man who lived some three thousand years ago, "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path."

It shows the only way of salvation; the only way of life; the only way of safe guidance; the only way of real strength; the only way of true comfort.

It reveals what men could never discover for themselves.

It is written, that "ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name."—Charles G. Trumbull, Litt.D.; American Bible Society tract.

THE COUNTRY FAITH

Here in the country's heart, where the grass is green, Life is the same sweet life as it e'er hath been.

Trust in God still lives, and the bell at morn
Floats with a thought of God o'er the rising corn.

God comes down with the rain and the crop grows tall—
This is the country faith, and best of all!

Berean Department

ARLEN MARSH, EDITOR

Letter to the Editor

From Evelyn Phillips

It is true, as you say, that the trouble is not with the books provided for our Berean studies. The trouble is that we have not many teachers who are born of the Spirit. I find that the things that interest and inspire me come only from people who have this Spirit of power and humility from my Lord dwelling in them richly, men who obey the words of our Lord as well as teach them. They are few in number, and they are found scattered throughout the whole flock of God. All our present light emanates from them, though they are often without honor in the church; not all, however, but many. I cannot point them out to you. I only feel their power without worshiping the temple through whom God's grace comes. You will know them, also, whenever your feet are on the same plane as theirs. We only know the Lord thoroughly as we become like Him.

I find that new ways of presenting old, well-loved truths come not from man, but from our divine Lord, in whom all the wisdom of the Father dwells. The Spirit is not bound or limited. There are multitudes of operations, but all from the same Spirit. Jesus led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. The Spirit was the greatest gift of all because it produced all the other gifts. Without it we can do nothing. Only those who are filled with it can make the Word of God live and glow as it does for me today. Every line is fraught with increasingly greater heights and depths of thought. There is no monotony in its varying themes and tones and changes. It is as unchanging and as full of infinite variety as the eternal God Himself, who treasures His word above His name.

When we are indeed filled with the Spirit we shall cease to need Berean books of any kind, for we shall all be taught of God from the least unto the greatest. Have we stressed the importance of the new birth enough? Present results would indicate "no." I think therein lies our whole weakness, our whole message to our body. "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God"—nor teach it.

Harvest Time

By Vivian Kirkpatrick

"The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth labourers into his harvest."

As we look around us today we can sorrowfully say, like Jesus long ago, "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few." Are we doing anything about it?

I want to praise one group especially for their work in the harvest field: the humble, unknown members of the correspondence committees. Each one, in his own way, according to his particular gift, is laboring in the field. The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers few; and the laborers are handicapped at times by the very ones that should be laboring with them. The harvest is plenteous, but there are too many fields yet untouched, and not through any fault of the laborers.

Newly baptized persons, the ripe field of the correspondence committees, often never reach THE HERALD, and too often when they do no address is given. Ripe fields no laborers can glean.

We have so many other fields to glean. Look around you, see the hundreds that have never been within the doors of a Sunday school, the thousands that but briefly attended and left. The harvest truly is plenteous, but where are the laborers?

Pray the Lord of the harvest that He will give us strength and courage and endurance so that we may labor long and faint not. Pray that He will allow us to work a double shift or lengthen the time of harvest so that some of the many ripe fields may be reached.

So many fruitful fields are waiting, but where are the laborers? Are they asleep unaware that the time of harvest is nearly over?

We need laborers who will give of their best, forgetting everything but the ripe fields before them. Earnest workers, willing workers, strong and enduring for the work that waits for them.

"The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth labourers into his harvest."—Matt. 9:37, 38.

The Bible Problem

In spite of the fact that an average of 20,000,000 Bibles a year are pouring from the presses, the need for providing Bibles for Sunday school and Bible class scholars seems yet to be met. Quarterlies and lesson books, teachers' magazines, cut-out figures for the children, and special offering envelopes can all be furnished; but the Book which is the backbone of these subsidiary helps is for some reason ignored.

Complete Bibles, with maps, can be had for as little as 75 cents apiece—less, if all quality is to be sacrificed. Good Bibles, with excellent self-pronouncing type and helps, can be had for a dollar. Yet still, for Sunday after Sunday, "Bible" students attend their classes without the Book they are supposed to study. When this situation is remedied—if necessary, by providing pew Bibles—much of the teachers' problem will be solved.

PREPARED BY MARY A. GESIN

"Serve the Lord with gladness: come before his presence with singing."

BUILDING THE LORD'S HOUSE

WE LEFT the homesick people of Judah, last week, on their way back to Jerusalem, singing songs and rejoicing because they would once more see their homeland. Among these people, of course you realize, there were many children and young people who had never seen the Promised Land of their fathers. For it was seventy years before that that the enemy had taken their fathers and mothers and grandfathers and grandmothers, carrying them captive to a strange land.

But the children and young folks had heard, we are certain, many, many stories of Israel and Judah and their homeland which had been given to them by God. The very same stories you love to hear your grandfathers and grandmothers and fathers and mothers tell!

Doesn't that seem strange, and yet thrilling? To think of those little children so far, far away and so long, long ago listening to the stories of Abraham, of Isaac, of Jacob, of Joseph! And oh, you could name many, many more. The beautiful Rebekah and her pitcher of water, Rachel and Jacob's working fourteen years for her, Hannah and the little son she prayed for and then gave to the Lord.

But when they got there their happiness was dimmed at first because everything was destroyed. Their beautiful temple was in ruins, their homes were in ashes. They hardly knew their homeland.

Soon, however, their hopes were renewed, their courage restored. Hadn't God helped them to return? Hadn't He promised to help them always? Surely, He would help them rebuild their temple and their homes.

And so they started to work. The first thing they did was to build an altar where they could worship God. There they gathered each morning and evening and offered their sacrifices. Some of them went to their native villages near Jerusalem, but they could see the smoke from the sacrifices.

They had been living in the tents they had brought with them on their journey. But soon it would be too cold and rainy to stay in the tents, and so they began to build houses. And they built some very nice ones, too.

Early in the following year they began again to think of rebuilding their temple. Far to the north in the Lebanon Mountains grew tall, strong cedar trees. These they cut down, floated them on great rafts down the sea to Joppa, and then carried them across the mountains to Jerusalem. It was hard work.

They hired carpenters and masons, cleared away the rubbish, and laid the foundation. But some neighboring tribes began to make trouble for them. And then a new king came to the throne in far-off Persia who told them to stop building their temple.

For sixteen years not a saw or hammer was used, not a stone laid. Perhaps God wanted to find out just how much they wanted a temple, just how much faith they had in His promise to help them. Don't you think sometimes He allows obstacles to arise in our pathway so that we will work harder and ask Him for more help? I do.

God sent them two prophets about this time who had very difficult names—Haggai and Zechariah. These messengers for God told the people that they ought to be ashamed to live in such comfortable houses themselves and have no house for God. You know, God ought to have as fine a house as the finest in our neighborhood, at least.

The two prophets told them they spent their money foolishly, just like putting it into a bag full of holes. It wouldn't last long that way, would it? They had been living only for themselves and had missed the best part of life by not living for God.

It didn't take the two prophets with the hard names very long to get the people started once more at the temple. They are like our preachers today, aren't they? They have to keep after some of us all the time, or we forget about God's goodness to us.

But it took a long, long time before the temple was finally finished. Many difficulties and hindrances arose to delay the work. And we are sure the people learned to trust more and more in God as they saw His promise to help them fulfilled. The temple they finally erected lasted for about five hundred years.

FOR YOUR BIBLE SCRAPBOOK

Proceed as you always do by writing the date, the subject, and the verse at the top of this page. Then write in your own words the story of the rebuilding of the temple. Tell the first thing the returned wanderers did; the next thing. Why did it take them so long to get their temple finished? When was their faith in God stronger, at the beginning or at the end?

Then write a little story of your own church and how it was built. If it is a very old church you may have to ask your grandpa about it. Last draw a picture of it. If you have no church of your own, draw one that you wish you had.

THE MESSAGE OF HAGGAI AND ZECHARIAH

Ezra 3:1 to 6:22; Psalm 84:1-12; Haggai, chapters 1, 2; Zechariah 4:1-10

GOLDEN TEXT

"I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord."—Psalm 122:1.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: The Message of Haggai and Zechariah.

Aim: Lasting world peace can only come when God is worshiped and served by all.

Class Discussion: What are some of the causes of world unrest? The value of the church in the community. The place and power of the church in world affairs.

I. The Church More Important Than the Home. (Haggai 1:1-8.) The Jews protested that they were living in "hard times" and had no money with which to build the temple, although its rebuilding was the one reason why they had been permitted to return to Jerusalem from their seventy years' captivity in Babylon. But God called attention to the rich homes they had built for themselves while the house of the Lord remained a heap of ruins. How many congregations have made the same contention with regard to building churches, and while they were doing so they were living in comfortable homes of their own. God points out in this lesson that a church in the community is of far greater importance and value than rich homes for a people who have no adequate place of worship.

II. Misappropriation of Funds. (2:8, 9.) "The silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith the Lord of hosts." All we have with which to build belongs to God. Hence His work should come first. And it must come first if we are to have the blessing of the Lord resting upon us, and if we are to hope for a place in His kingdom when Christ comes. To use the money God has given us for our own personal welfare alone is a misappropriation of funds which the heavenly Father has placed in our hands.

III. Temple of World Peace. (Zech. 4:6-10.) The Jews were sent back to Jerusalem under Cyrus to rebuild the temple of the Lord of hosts and to reestablish His worship. The accomplishment of this purpose was an indication that Jehovah had sent Zechariah to His people. When King Jesus comes the return of the Jews, and eventually of all Israel to Palestine; the building of a temple more glorious than any that has gone before it; and the establishment of the kingdom of God; prosperity and peace will convince the Jew that Jesus is the true Messiah and that He has been sent unto them by the Lord.

GOLDEN TEXT

When the captives returned to Jerusalem, almost the first thing was to start building a temple for the worship of the true God. Although it was delayed for some time it was finally finished and was dedicated with much pomp and rejoicing. They set the priests and the Levites in their order so that when the fourteenth day of the month came they kept the Passover as in olden times.

How happy they must have been to have their worship restored! I feel sure that each one could well say the golden text. However, our text is David's words, but it seems to me that each and every one now as well as David and the returned captives ought to be glad to say, "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord."—L. A. R.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Haggai

- said God's house was more important than man's;
- condemned Judah for allowing God's house to become waste;
- claimed Judah's poverty was due to neglect of the temple;
- told the people that support of God's work would bring material blessings.

God's House. Our lesson today clearly reveals the place God's house of worship occupies in the life of a people. The people were always saying they were too poor to rebuild the temple. God's reply was, in effect, You are poor because you haven't built the temple. When people are able to have their own homes and furnish them luxuriously, there can be no legitimate reason for not having a place where they can meet and worship God. Oftentimes, we see groups of people who are very ardent and manifest a great deal of pride in maintaining their homes in beautiful condition, yet exhibit no particular interest in keeping the house of God in respectable shape. Such should heed the words of Haggai, "Consider your ways." The places of worship which God gave instruction for were beautiful places. Solomon's temple is described by Isaiah in these words, "Our holy and our beautiful house."

Material Blessings. We should never lose sight of the fact that it is God that giveth power to get wealth (Deut. 8:18). When His blessing is withdrawn, then we sow much and bring in little. The droughts that came upon Judah were sent by God because of His house that was waste. Do you think that it is probable that many of the drought and other excesses in nature are permitted and caused by the Father because the people have forsaken His houses of worship and gone after their own lusts? Would more normal conditions prevail if the people would whole-heartedly turn unto the Lord and bring their tithes into God's storehouse?—C. E. R.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

Building God's House

The expedition which last week we read of starting out so happily found many obstacles. The first work of the returned exiles was to rebuild their ruined homes. In the fall of the same year they gathered at Jerusalem, cleared away the site of the old temple, and built an altar there. Once more they could offer their thanksgiving to God in sacrifices. Early the next year the foundations for the new temple were laid. Great timbers had been brought by sea and overland from the Lebanon Mountains, far to the north. The remaining ruins had been cleared away, and the work was begun with high hopes. But the people to the north tried in every way to hinder operations. Also a new king had come to the throne of Persia who was not favorable to their efforts. Have you ever noticed how, when you start some good work, obstacles seem to arise on every hand? These are for our good if they cause us to stick all the more firmly to the task.

For more than fifteen years the work was laid aside. Then Darius came to the throne, and the leaders among the returned Jews were encouraged to resume building. Two prophets, the aged Haggai and the young and vigorous Zechariah, pointed out their duty (vv. 4, 8). The little they had earned had been spent foolishly, and everything had gone wrong. The work was completed under Zerubbabel, a Jewish prince, leader of the returned captives and governor of Judah under the Persian King.

Remember: Though you may not have a great amount to contribute to God's work many "littles" make "much."—M. G.

JUNIOR CLASS

Text: Hag. 1:2-8; 2:8, 9; Zech. 4:6-10.
Topic: The People of Judah Asked to Build God's House. Memory Verse: "Go up to the mountain, and bring wood, and build the house; and I will take pleasure in it, and I will be glorified, saith the Lord."—Hag. 1:8.

Review. Let some child imagine he was one of the people taken captive and let him tell the class the story of last Sunday's lesson and get the class to see how happy they all must have been.

Presentation of Lesson. In today's lesson we find two prophets who were sent to talk to the people of Judah who had been taken captive. You remember in last Sunday's lesson where Cyrus the King had told the people they might return to their homeland to build the house of the Lord. Now God was anxious that they do this, so He sent two prophets to urge them to build this house. It seems from the text that they had built their own homes but had neglected God's house. In Zechariah 4:6-10 we find that the people obeyed. Also Haggai 1:14, 15. Why do you think God wanted this house built?

Memory Verse. Our memory verse is what God asked Haggai to tell the people. Repeat the verse.

Notebook. Draw the picture that the memory verse brings to your mind. Below it copy the memory verse. Read Haggai 1:14 and draw the picture that this brings to your mind. Write this verse under your picture.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

BLANCHARD, MICHIGAN

We are very pleased to announce that Bro. F. L. Austin will be here November 18, 19, and 20, with his stereopticon lectures on the Great Pyramid of Egypt. "That sealed mountain of masonry," says Bro. Austin, "with but one known 'mark' in its structure, holds unmistakable truth-corollaries that cannot be refuted by man or the devil. It is the most convincing volume ever written. Its accuracies to the minuteness of a minute are startling. Its messages pertaining to our immediate future are more exciting than any other paragraphs I have ever read. It is all as true to the Bible as is the shadow to the image."

Cecil A. Smead, Pastor.

RIPLEY, ILLINOIS

We are sorry to announce the death of Sr. J. W. Cooper, whose funeral services were conducted at the Ripley Church of God by the pastor. Sr. Cooper had many friends, and we shall all miss her very much. The Training Class will long cherish memories of a year at the conference hall when Sr. Cooper was our housekeeper.

Our church work has been progressing nicely in spite of the damp weather of the past couple of weeks. The church orchestra has reorganized under the able leadership of Bro. James McLain and has been practicing twice each week in the hope of soon being used regularly in place of a choir.

The church has a very bright appearance since it received two coats of white paint.

Harvey Krogh, Jr.

BURR OAK, INDIANA

In my absence Sunday the 27th, Sr. Louise La Munion occupied the pulpit, and we hear splendid reports on her message.

Services by the writer at Kokomo Sunday the 27th were well attended. Bible school had 50 at its hour of study. The afternoon service was conducted at the CCC camp. Bro. Parker preached a splendid sermon on "Obedience." The writer led the music, assisted by part of the orchestra. We will meet with these folk one Sunday each month. Our next trip will be November 17. The Berean contest ended by the young people's winning, so the adults treated them in a Halloween gathering.

The adult class of our Burr Oak Bereans are studying under the leadership of the writer. This week we search on two points of interest: the reasons we believe the Bible to be the Word of God, and the reasons we believe Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God.

Bro. F. L. Austin of Grand Rapids, Mich., will be with the Burr Oak church beginning November 25 and ending November 29. He will give us a series of lectures (with pictures and charts) on the Great Pyramid, its mathematical and geometrical revelations. This one of the Seven Wonders of the world stands as a sentinel. The subject is in able hands. Bro. Austin can deal with the subject to one's delight and assurance. We invite any, both near and far, to meet with us during his stay. If you plan to come from a distance, write Sr. Ferris Zechiel or Sr. Albert Overmyer, Culver, Ind., and arrangements for your convenience will be made. Plan to come the first day with your Bibles, pencils, and note paper, and stay throughout the week. You will never regret it.

A. E. Hoskins, Pastor.

ANNUAL FALL MEETING HELD AT NIAGARA FALLS, NEW YORK

Last Sunday we had opportunity to taste that the Lord was good and gracious unto all that call upon Him. The occasion was the Fall Meeting of the Niagara Falls, N. Y., church. Surely the "unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" was in evidence. Everyone seemed to find his or her place, and with eagerness of purpose entered into the spirit and service of the day. The singing was not only enjoyed, but was enlivened in spirit, and contributed immensely to the success of our all-day worship. The writer spoke at all three services. Subjects used were: morning, "Distracting Influences"; afternoon, "Resurrection"; evening, "David's Throne Restored."

Those attending the meeting from a distance were Mrs. Lillian Greiner, Lyndonville, N. Y.; Mrs. R. V. Gardiner and daughters, Madeline, Charlotte, and Dorothy, Lancaster, N. Y.; Miss Janet Nicholson, Lancaster; J. Davis and niece of Buffalo, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Charles Yates, Norwich, Ont.

C. E. Randall.

PENNELWOOD CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

The Friday evening study of Revelation which is sponsored by the Comrade Class of Junior adults, and taught by Bro. Austin, is growing in attendance and interest each week.

The membership met for a social evening, October 15, at the home of Bro. and Sr. C. H. Simpson, to bid them adieu. Bro. and Sr. Simpson left October 28 to spend the winter months in the shade of the tropical palms of Florida.

We are glad to report that Richard Townsend has discarded his cast for the bonton collar and tie. Apparently he will suffer no lasting effects of his accident.

On the evening of November 1, the membership and friends met at the church to help Bro. and Sr. Paxson celebrate their silver wedding anniversary.

November 3, Bro. Austin gave the first of his Sunday evening series of illustrated talks on the "Great Pyramid of Egypt Corroborating the Scriptures." This certainly is a very interesting subject and is very ably handled by a speaker who has made a study of it for many months. Although a heavy rain was falling, a goodly number were present.

Mrs. L. F. Slocum, Secretary.

FROM DIXIE LAND

Our drive from Grand Rapids, Mich., to Hammond, La., was uneventful except for the first night en route. This we had the privilege of spending with friends at Eldorado, Ill., where we used to go often to conduct meetings. It having been noised about that we would be there for the night, a good-sized crowd of the church folks gathered at the church building. In spite of having made a trip of more than 500 miles that day (more than half of it in the rain), we still enjoyed the privilege of looking these dear ones in the face again and giving them a short sermon.

The meetings at Hammond are progressing well at this writing. The group has been very faithful and loyal in attendance. In a few days we shall close here and begin a week of work at the Blood River Church some fifteen miles southwest. And then we shall be heading back to Grand Rapids and good old South Lawn Church. Reports from there indicate that the brethren are keeping "the home fires burning," but they are a faithful, loyal group and can be depended upon for that.

F. E. Siple.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

It was my happy privilege to spend three weeks with this church beginning October 13. The special services closed on Rally Day and Anniversary Day, Oct. 27. This was indeed a wonderful day. The attendance was good at all the services. The Sunday school attendance was 254, only 6 less than a year ago.

There were no visible results from the special services, but as Bro. Siple said in his last report, there were many encouraging results evident. A number were on the point of yielding to Christ, but did not. No doubt they will do so later. The attention and interest were the very best all through. The last Sunday I was there, Nov. 3, there was a splendid morning audience and the Sunday school attendance was 180, if I remember correctly, and it was pouring down rain. The evening audience was good considering the fact that it was still raining very hard.

Bro. Siple is doing a good work, and many spoke to me of the good influence the church was having over that community. Bro. Siple has the love of the entire church, and the respect and esteem of the community.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Word has reached the office from Sr. Nancy B. Robison of the serious illness of Sr. William Hadicke, 201 N. C St., Arkansas City, Kan., who now has been bedfast for more than a year, and is no longer able to read her Restitution Herald. Mrs. Hadicke, like Mrs. Robison, long has been a liberal supporter of the work at Arkansas City.

A telegram and a special delivery letter from S. E. Magaw, pastor of the Brush Creek, Ohio, Church of God, announce the cancellation of a series of meetings to be held there this month by M. W. Lyon, who is slowly recovering from an attack of pneumonia.

F. L. Piper's "What Does the Future Hold?" (taken from The World's Crisis) is an apt indication of the gradual change of thought on the part of the Advent Christian Church in regard to prophecy and its fulfillment. Mr. Piper is frequently editor of the month for The Crisis.

During the absence of the editor, who is holding a series of meetings at Eldorado, Ill., the Abreast of the Times department will be in charge of the office staff. The local Oregon pulpit is to be filled in the mornings by Paul C. Johnson and in the evenings by Arlen Marsh.

ELDORADO, ILLINOIS, HOLDS SPECIAL MEETINGS

Reports from the editor, who is engaged in holding a three weeks' series of meetings at Eldorado, Ill., indicate that average audiences, despite a competitive revival in a near by church, are holding up well for the district. The weather thus far has been favorable, although cold.

A sermon is delivered each evening by the editor, with singing in charge of James McLain, Ripley, Ill. "He has introduced a chorus which he calls our 'Pep Song' with which he opens every service."

The series opened Sunday, Nov. 3, and is to continue for approximately three weeks.

KOKOMO, INDIANA

The Church of God at Kokomo, Ind., is very fortunate to have made arrangements for Bro. A. E. Hoskins of Burr Oak, Ind., to be with us one Sunday of each month.

Bro. Hoskins will be in Kokomo Sunday, Nov. 17, for both the morning and evening services. All who live near are invited to meet with us and hear these inspiring sermons. Remember the date, November 17.

The writer will be the speaker Sunday, Nov. 10. The evening topic (D. V.) will be "Two Goats" (Lev. 16). Bro. O. J. Parker will be in charge of the services Sunday, Nov. 24.

Kokomo invites you to worship with us. Sunday school each Sunday at 9:45 a. m. Senior Bereans meet Sunday at the church at 6 p. m. Evening sermon each Sunday at 7:30 p. m. Adult Bereans meet at the church each Monday at 7:30 p. m. You are always welcome at the Kokomo Church of God.

D. G. Harvey.

JOHNSON - SAVAGE

A most beautiful wedding ceremony took place on October 20 at 3:00 p. m. in the Church of God at St. Cloud, Minn., when Miss Bernice Johnson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Teischer of Clearwater, Minn., and John Savage of Waite Park, Minn., were united in the holy bonds of matrimony. Both these young people have been active members of the church here for many years.

Attending the couple were Miss Irene Sheldon and Harry Savage, a brother of the bridegroom.

Mrs. T. M. Savage, Jr., sang "I Love You Truly" and "O Promise Me," accompanied by Mrs. George Savage, who also played the wedding march.

About a table decorated in yellow and white with a beautiful wedding cake as centerpiece the immediate relatives of both families gathered for the wedding dinner.

The address of Mr. and Mrs. John Savage is 1017 31st Ave. N., St. Cloud, Minn.

May God's richest blessings rest upon them, that they may remain steadfast in His love, active in His service, ready at His coming.

John L. Denchfield.

MYRTILLA O'NEAL COOPER

Myrtilla O'Neal, youngest daughter of Daniel and Josephine O'Neal, was born near Ripley, Ill., on May 10, 1878, and died at her home in Ripley November 5, 1935. She was united in marriage to J. W. Cooper on November 4, 1896. Four children came to bless this home, Mary, wife of Loren Burnett, living near Ripley; Ednah, Gerald, and Margaret, at home. Besides these, she leaves one brother, Elza O'Neal; and five grandchildren; as well as many friends and other relatives.

In March, 1902, she became a member of the Church of God, she and her husband being baptized at the same time by Bro. L. E. Conner of Dixon, Ill. Throughout her life, she remained faithful to the teaching of the Master.

Possessed of an unusually sweet voice, she willingly gave of her time and talents to comfort those in time of sorrow. During a long and tedious illness she manifested a spirit of patience. Being cheerful and optimistic, she was an inspiration to her family and friends.

She fell asleep in the hope of a resurrection to life at the coming of Christ, and we laid her to rest with the knowledge that she will be among those chosen by Him at that time.

BACK TO THE LAND

PALESTINE today is the wonder spot of the world. The aim of the Jews is not for personal gain, but to build up their national homeland, Palestine. Everywhere in this land we see the strong Jewish workers, with iron-like muscles, using the hammers, chisels, spades, picks, etc., building up the waste places of Jerusalem, Haifa, and the new towns of Palestine, with thousands of new homes.

Many Gentiles here who have witnessed the atrocities committed upon the Jews in Russia and Poland are very happy to see how the Jews are building up their national home, having at last a place to live in like other peoples.

It happened on November 2, 1917, while the world was still in war, and Palestine was still in the hands of the Turks, and while the Jews were still fighting for the countries in which they lived, when their people were massacred at their homes, a message to the Jews and to the world went forth from the British people, the promise of His Majesty's Government to facilitate the return of the Jews to Palestine. It is the liberation of the most persecuted of all races when Palestine is returned to the Jews; the restoration of a home to the homeless, as well as land to landless people. The whole Jewish race were overjoyed in receiving this wonderful message, and poured forth their praise for the undertaking to provide for them a territorial basis.

"Break forth into joy, sing together, ye waste places of Jerusalem: for the Lord hath comforted his people, he hath redeemed Israel."—Isaiah 52:9.

Each month more Jews are streaming into Palestine. The more Jews coming, the more prosperous the country is getting. While other countries, greater and richer, are still struggling, seventeen years after the end of the war, with problems of unemployment and colossal debts, the inhabitants of Palestine have the advantage, not only of a very satisfactory budget balance, but also a reserve of nearly double a year's total Government expenditure. The Government derives from the customs enough to pay its entire expenditures, and the duties on some of the necessities of life, such as sugar, etc., are reduced.

Thousands of new Jewish capitalists are arriving from all over the globe, establishing large factories. These recently established factories are doing well. The home market is taking more and more of the products produced, causing the exports of these industries to fall in equal numbers, so there remains more room for additional factories to be established to produce for the home market and for export. The principal products are stone, and cement, after which comes machinery, metals, wood products, chemicals, clothing, and leather goods. The increase in industrial exports has been particularly marked in chemical products. The Palestine Potash Company is exploiting the minerals of the Dead Sea, and is rapidly increasing its business, and is sending to England and other parts of the British Empire nearly the whole of its production of bromide and the larger part of the potash extracted from the heavily laden waters of the sea.

Through the prosperity here, thousands of capitalists from abroad are drawn here to transact business with the Jews. The Jews are holding every two years the Levant Fair, started in 1925. In these past eight years this fair acquired recognition of the world's greatest gathering for the furtherance of international commerce. The success of this fair may be gauged from the following figures. In 1925 the fair occupied an area of 26,000 square meters (1 meter equals 39.37 inches—Ed.); in 1929 it doubled itself; in 1929, 121 foreign firms exhibited; in 1932, the firms had increased to 821, representatives of 24 different countries, with their official pavilions arranged by the Governments.

The fifth Levant Fair is now established in its permanent quarters at the mouth of the River Yarkon, north of Tel Aviv. A number of permanent buildings have been erected to house the various pavilions. A thousand Jewish workmen have been engaged in the building of the fair conveniences and buildings. It now has an area of 100,000 square meters. In this area, whose scope is being constantly enlarged, 20 different countries had their own pavilions in 1934, while the number of those making exhibitions was over 2,900, and from 30 different countries in 74 pavilions. Poland alone exhibited over 200 firms in 3 separate pavilions, covering an area of 1,100 square meters, and is the largest exhibit that Poland ever arranged in any international fair to date. All the countries who brought in their goods for sale did well. The sixth Levant Fair is now being arranged for, and will be held next spring.

"She is the mart of the nations.

"They are all gathered together and come to thee."

"The wealth of the nations shall come to thee."

"The caravan of camels shall cover thee."

RESURRECTION

RESURRECTION is our hope, not death. It has always been the church's hope—the hope of patriarchs and kings and prophets. Martha only uttered the confession of the church universal when she said, "I know that he shall rise again." Israel knew resurrection well; and the Old Testament assumes the truth of it.

It is not the putting off this vile body (or this "body of our humiliation"), but the putting on of the immortal and incorruptible that is our hope; not our going to Christ, but His coming to us; not merely our victory over sin and its spiritual consequences, but victory over death and the grave. This hope grew brighter as the ages went on, till it was fully revealed in Him who is the resurrection and the life. But still more was needed; and it was reserved for Paul and John fully to unfold the hope.—Horatius Bonar.

Ethiopia and the Munitions Dynasty

By Norman John Macleod

A PATRIOTIC ORGANIZATION in England wished to secure a gun to place in front of its hall of meeting which had been captured from the Germans during the war. After a time they secured the gun, and, after it was emplaced, they found that it was manufactured in England! The munitions dynasty had sold a gun to Germany of English manufacture to be trained upon Englishmen by German gunners. The munitions manufacturers of Germany sold arms to France through the medium of Switzerland and vice versa. The Riffs of Northern Africa secured guns and ammunition from French manufacturers in order to carry on their war against France and Spain in the period following the World War. And now the most strange results are being found in the development of the Ethiopian crisis. Like most diplomatic situations, various angles must be kept in mind in order to understand the developments.

The United States is not a member of the League of Nations, and yet has a hand in all its deliberations. At a recent gathering to which I spoke concerning the diplomatic situation I mentioned the fact that since the World War American capitalists had invested in numerous enterprises in various parts of the world to an extent never before known, that the houses of the great banking institutions of the world had purchased controlling interests in railways, automobile manufacturing, and other lines. A man who had been raised in Switzerland was present and mentioned some things in corroboration: he said that everything that was introduced into the Council or Assembly of the League was first approved by two Americans sitting as "unofficial" observers for this nation. Every item that passes through the hands of that organization then is the work of this American "committee." The sanctions voted against Italy so become an American thing. The boycott is an American institution, but does not directly affect American products and trade. Then in his neutrality proclamation and the embargo lists which President Roosevelt made up under it, certain raw materials from which war materials could be readily manufactured were not banned for shipment. The shipments of American concerns to Italy quadrupled during the last six months over what they were some months ago. The "member" nations of the League (under American influence) voted to discontinue trade to Italy. What a lucrative trade could be developed by the United States under such circumstances. During the World War we were astonished to note how many large shells there were that exploded out in the midst of vacant fields where they hurt nobody nor anything. The great majority of bombs dropped merely plow the fields. The World War, as has been shown many times, was the safest of all wars fought. Munitions were wasted wholesale! And now Ethiopia receives her share of wasted munitions. Tons of bombs are wasted on the wilderness of Ethiopia, and on the unimportant villages where harmless natives live. Other very silly situations are seen in the diplomatic entanglements, which would be funny were they not so tragic.

France and Italy made an alliance about the time of the Saar Plebiscite in January of this year. Laval of France is anxious that that allegiance be continued so as to give France security in a powerful ally against Germany. On the other hand, she wishes to keep the friendship of Great Britain. How can both be done? Simple! Every time Great Britain asks France to vote in her support Laval consults Mussolini! The very ridiculous situation, therefore, develops of Italy approving the sanctions that shall be voted against her by the League. Great Britain is satisfied on the one hand, and Italy is placated on the other. But one thing has developed out of the whole thing: the weakening of the bands of the British Empire. The World War changed the entire organization of the British Empire, so that it no longer has the power and prestige with which it entered that war. The Dominions have a voice in the government of the whole empire that they never had before. The Prime Minister, or the foreign minister, cannot decree that the whole empire go to (Please turn to Page Nine)

Egyptians Object to England

"The sword shall come upon Egypt, and great pain shall be in Ethiopia."—Ezekiel 30:4.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 14 (CBS radio).—Rioting among the students in several Egyptian cities today reached such proportions that one was dead and more than a hundred injured. Special details of Egyptian police were called out to quell the uprising, although British troops were not mobilized.

The center of the disturbance is Cairo, where thousands of nationalistic Egyptian students have rioted for two days in demonstrations against English authority and in demands for complete independence from British domination, which for the past ten years has been confined largely to Egypt's finances.

Such riots, coming at a time when 400,000 tons of English warships are anchored off Egyptian ports, are forcing the moguls of the London Downing Street offices to work day and night. In connection with the tense situation between Italy and England and the national elections taking place today in Britain, Egypt is presenting diplomats with a serious problem.

Sharp notes of protest already have passed from London to Rome objecting to the anti-English propaganda being fostered in Egypt by Italian emissaries. It is, however, obvious that if the British can be kept occupied with domestic and colonial troubles, they will have no time for interfering with Italian plans for Ethiopia; and consequently the sole reply from Il Duce has taken the form of a polite recognition of the receipt of the London protests.

Heaven for the Lazy

"Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways, and be wise."—Proverbs 6:6.

NEW YORK, Nov. 9.—If there is a method to make present relief clients work when jobs are open to them, and if there is a method by which jobs can be opened to them, carry the news to the President. Although industrial production is 90 per cent of what it was five years ago, only 82 per cent as many people are employed, and are earning only 74 per cent as much money.

Siding with the findings of the American Magazine staff writer, who recently concluded, after a thorough investigation throughout the nation, that men on relief who really want to work are rare as the dodo, the New York Herald Tribune observed, "The individualistic American workman would be a fool to surrender all this (light work and long hours of free time) for an uncertain private job paying not much more money for harder work."

Harvest fields in the Middle West were hard put to it during the past summer to find sufficient help to do the necessary work, despite the fact that thousands of men were offered jobs as farm hands in order to life the enormous burden from the public relief rolls. In the majority of instances, Government relief, free from the tedium of toil, was frankly preferred to labor in the fields.

Noonday Night Over Chicago

"And the sun and the air were darkened."—Rev. 9:2.

ROCKFORD, Ill., Nov. 14 (radio).—Chicago was today reported by the news agencies to be experiencing a day so black as to require the use of street and transportation lights in many sections of the city.

Weather Bureau experts pronounced the darkness to be due to an accumulation of causes: a large percentage of smoke in the atmosphere; light winds from Lake Michigan; and the normal lack of sunshine accompanying fall skies. They predicted the phenomenon would have an early end.

Cupid Goes Modern

"Her smoke rose up for ever."—Rev. 19:3.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Nov. 12.—Mournfully Guy Hendrix is taking a survey of the Missing Persons Bureau in the hope of discovering his fiancee, Miss Virginia Whitaker. He's had enough trouble, and he's in love. Miss Whitaker can smoke when she pleases.

It started down in McAlester, Oklahoma, where the couple had been sweethearts for two years. Mr. Hendrix, however, came to object to Miss Whitaker's yen for cigarettes. Miss Whitaker, consequently, in a fury, shook the dust of McAlester from her feet and departed for Kansas City.

The home furnishings are paid for, and everything but the bride is ready for the wedding.

"I'm going," said Mr. Hendrix out of his dejection, "to marry her right on the spot when I find her, and she can smoke a pipe at the ceremony if she wants to."

BURNING IT IN!

THE first money I ever earned was 70 cents which my grandfather paid me for dropping corn. When he put the seven silver dimes into my hand he said, "Don't spend all of this on the train for candy; keep some of it for church and Sunday school." One of the first verses my mother drilled into my memory was: "Honour the Lord with thy substance, and with the firstfruits of all thine increase: so shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine." Such teaching prepared the soil for the stewardship seed, which later was sown.

THE SEED SOWN

That seed was cast into the soil when I was about seventeen years of age. I was a high school pupil, earning my way by taking care of the Second Presbyterian Church, Bloomington, Illinois. One Saturday my pastor, Dr. John W. Dinsmore, gave me a package of leaflets on the subject of tithing.

"Put them in the pews, Billy, and keep them there two or three Sundays," he said; and I did so. As the people came in they picked them up, glanced over them and a few put them in their pockets or Bibles to take home, but the majority dropped them on the seat and sat down on them. Every Sunday for four weeks Dr. Dinsmore called attention to those still in the pews. Finally, he said, "Well, Billy, they are not going to take any more of them; gather them up and chuck them in the furnace." They filled a half-bushel basket. As I stood in front of the furnace, ready to "chuck them," I said to myself (or was it the Spirit that spoke to me?), "Why, you are a member of this church and have handled these leaflets for weeks and said hard things at them because they littered up the pews, and you haven't read one of them yourself."

So then and there I read one clear through, the Scripture teaching on the subject of giving a tenth, the arguments in favor of it and the testimonies to its blessings from many who had tried it. It gripped my conscience, which said, "You ought to become a steward."

THE BATTLE WON

But at once, I began to protest, "How can I afford it? I am earning only $16 a month in the summer and $20 in the winter, and I need it all to support myself in school." I stood there in the dingy basement and wrestled with conscience a good while. Finally, I went upstairs into the cold auditorium and, kneeling down in our family pew, prayed about it. It was not long until I surrendered and resolved to become a steward.

As a second fruit of that resolve, I decided not to burn those tithing leaflets. So I began to find ways to set them at work. Many were handed to young friends with a request to read; many were put into the hands of pupils in Sunday school and thus got into the homes at last; some were carried to a sister church and distributed by a friend. The convictions implanted in me in that experience remained with me when I became a pastor. I felt it a conscientious duty to make the best use possible of printed matter, paid for with Christian money to promote some branch of Christ's work.

KEEPING BOOKS WITH GOD

Having made the resolve to set apart the tithe of my income to the Lord's work, I saw that I had to keep account of that income and of that separated portion, so the first thing I did was to buy a little account book in which I set down income, tithe, and gifts, or rather, investments of the Lord's portion. Naturally I began to keep an itemized account of my own expenses. This bookkeeping proved most interesting and revealing. I discovered that my income was larger than I had realized. Extra jobs, gifts, and many miscellaneous receipts amounted to more than I had thought.

I also discovered that I had not been giving nearly as much as I had thought I had; and also that it had been very scattering and largely the giving of impulse. When this new method was introduced my giving became more thoughtful and prayerful. I began to study causes and say to myself, "This is the Lord's money you are investing, where will it do the most good?" Thus I began to have a broader knowledge and deeper interest in the work of the church, the boards, and all Christian causes.

There was certainly a new pleasure in giving. I felt that I was in greater harmony with the divine (Please turn to Page Ten)

ANSWER THESE QUESTIONS

One of the most interesting letters we have received from our subscribers in recent months brought the following queries in regard to the important problem of tithing, together with the request that they be referred to our readers for open discussion through the paper.

1. Are we to spend all the tithe on ministers who are preaching the gospel?
2. Can a portion go to the upkeep of the building of The Restitution Herald, such as payments on the new furnace?
3. Can it be used for seats in a church?
4. Can it be used for purchasing Bibles or for sending The Herald to people who do not belong to the faith or people who cannot afford it?
5. Can it be used in purchasing needed articles for families who are in poverty, especially at Christmas time? Are we to tell them it is our tenth or send it to them without our signature?
6. Can it be used for our own subscription when there is a member in the family who does not belong to the faith who is of understanding age?

Spiritual Values

By C. E. Randall

"Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honour, especially they who labour in the word and doctrine."

THE MINISTRY is a divine calling. The work of a minister was purposed and planned by God. It isn't the man so much as it is the office which he occupies. But the elder who administers the duties of his office well is scripturally entitled to double honor. Not only must the minister understand the sacredness and grandeur of his office and work, but the people with whom and for whom he labors must share in this recognition if the minister is to be of fullest service to God in behalf of the people over whom he has been placed as overseer. It is up to the minister to impress upon his people his divine right of leadership. This idea is not the revival of "divine right of kings," but inasmuch as God has delegated to His ministers their work and has assigned to them the duty of "watching for your souls" their work is thus seen to be one of divine ordering. It is not the minister that is divine, but his work.

MINISTRY SANCTIFIED OR SET APART

God has always sanctified or set apart certain ones for the administration of the worship of individuals and the presentation of their gifts to the Father. When the furniture and vessels of the tabernacle were sanctified for use in the tabernacle, only those who were holy or set apart for that work could touch or use those instruments of worship (Ex. 30:26-38). God in giving His Word to mankind selected certain ones who were set apart by the Spirit of God as the medium through whom the message should be given. "For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy (set apart) men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."—2 Peter 1:21. God has never spoken through the masses, but to the masses through set apart individuals. All true prophets, priests, and ministers in the past that have been "good stewards of the manifold grace of God" were such through the "ability which God giveth" (1 Peter 4:10, 11).

DELEGATED LEADERSHIP

The minister is the delegated earthly leader of the people of God. As such, God holds him responsible for the proper feeding of the flock. Paul in his final charge to the elders at Ephesus says, "Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood."—Acts 20:28. The feeding is done by the minister and the food is the sincere milk of the Word and strong meat (1 Peter 2:2; Heb. 5:12-14). It befalls the minister to know what kind of food his flock need, whether milk or strong meat or both. The flock need to recognize the right of the minister to lead them. "Obey them that have the rule over you, and submit yourselves: for they watch for your souls, as they that must give account, that they may do it with joy, and not with grief: for that is unprofitable for you."—Heb. 13:17. If the people will not submit to the leadership of God's delegated leaders, who must give account for them, then their accounting will bring grief in the day of reckoning to those who will not submit to "them that have the rule over you." Of course, there are safeguards needed to prevent the leaders from being "lords over God's heritage." There are ample of these, but they in no way reflect on true Christian leadership invested in the ministry.

RESPONSIBILITY

Along with invested leadership goes responsibility. Whenever God assigns a duty, it is always accompanied with responsibility. This responsibility involves both minister and laity. The first responsibility to which we wish to refer has to do with the proclamation of the Word and acceptance of its requirements. The ministry is sanctified that it may become a medium in God's hand to sanctify or set apart a peculiar people zealous of good works. The people are set apart through "thy truth: thy word is truth"; therefore, the responsibility rests upon the set apart ministry to "preach the word . . . in season, out of season" (2 Tim. 4:2-4). Those who gladly receive the Word and obey its requirements become a set apart people (Acts 2:41).

The proclaiming of the Word carries with it a responsibility of condemning the wrong as well as extolling the good. It requires little courage to deliver the latter, but exceedingly great faith to set forth the former, especially when it exists in the ranks of the influential and main financial backers of the church. Well did the Prophet say, "They hate him that rebuketh in the gate, and they abhor him that speaketh uprightly."—Amos 5:10. When Amos was prophesying the forthcoming captivity of Israel, they said, "Go and tell that to Judah." Read the account in Amos 7:10-17. When Micaiah was called upon to give divine information to Jehoshaphat regarding his cooperation with Ahab, Ahab said, "I hate him; for he doth not prophesy good concerning me, but evil."—1 Kings 22:1-36.

Pointing out existing evils within the body is more essential than railing against the deplorable sins of the people of the world. The duty of the watchman upon the wall is to point out the danger and sound alarm to those within the walls, rather than give warning to those on the outside (Ezek. 33:1-6). According to the Word of the Lord, if the watchman fails to warn those within the wall of approaching danger, their blood will be required at the watchman's hand; but on the contrary, if the watchman warn the people and they fail to heed his warning and obey his word, then they must die in their own blood. Undoubtedly many ministers have seen dangers lurking within the body, but lack of conviction and courage has kept them from speaking God's condemnation against those sins. This apparent easier method will not absolve them from the responsibility divinely imposed of speaking the Word of the Lord.

The flock will accept ministerial leadership if the ministers will exhibit a fearless and courageous oversight, rooted and grounded in the solid Word of truth, standing for the right and against the wrong. The Church of God needs a virile ministry that is not afraid to point out evil.

Some months ago we were called to conduct a funeral where there were six ministers of other denominations taking part. After we had completed the sermon on the resurrection and coming of Christ, and the dismissal had taken place, one of the ministers patted us on the shoulder and said, "Brother Randall, you don't know how glad I am that you spoke about the coming of Christ. I believe it with all my heart, but I can't preach it to my people." Why couldn't he? He didn't have the courage. What a weakling! No man has a right to stand behind the sacred desk as a minister of God and shun to declare truth, truth that he knows his people need, but fears to give it because of what some may think, say, or do. There are many who think it sinful and exceedingly wrong to dance, but dare not preach against dancing because some of their members dance; others abhor tobacco, considering it a filthiness of the flesh and stifling to spirituality, but would nearly die of heart failure if they had to come out against it in their sermons. I know of some ministers who think tithing is the biblical method of church finance, but are scared, yes, scared, to preach on it, as some of their members don't think it the proper method. Such camouflage is detrimental to both pulpit and pew and does not release from responsibility either the minister for preaching the Word in season or the people from trying "the spirits whether they are of God" (1 John 4:1). The need of the church is for leaders who will declare the Word in kindness and love, but without fear or favor, scattering the seed, letting it fall where it will.

What We Believe

By L. D. Buro

WE BELIEVE in one God, Creator of all things; and in Jesus Christ His only begotten Son, who came into the world "to seek and to save that which was lost"; and in the Holy Spirit, that divine Agent employed by the Father and the Son in the regeneration, sanctification, and guidance of all believers; and in the Bible, as an inspired Revelation from God, reasonable and reliable in all of its practical, doctrinal, and prophetic utterances. We believe that in the Bible are to be found clear and conclusive statements of all the necessary facts of human redemption, and that when these facts are arranged in consecutive order they warrant the following conclusions:

1. That man was created a mortal and moral being; that he was placed under divine law for the development of character; that he disobeyed, became a transgressor of the law, and thereby forfeited his right to immortality and to moral perfection. Man was created in the "image of God" (Gen. 1:26, 27); of the "dust of the ground" (Gen. 2:7). Because of Adam's disobedience he (and his posterity) was placed under the sentence of death, and driven from the garden and denied the right to the "tree of life," continued access to which would have made him an immortal sinner. See Gen. 3:22-24.

2. That the penalty for sin is death, and that the probable reason for the delay of Adam's and Eve's execution is explained in their slain animal substitutes (Gen. 3:21). Thus the race would be perpetuated, and man's deliverance from sin and death provided for by the Lord. In this provision may be seen the hope that eternal life and moral excellence of character would be offered to mankind through the mercy and grace of God (Gen. 3:15; Titus 1:2).

3. About four hundred years after the last prophets of Israel and Judah had recorded their predictions of a coming Redeemer, Jesus was born into our world as man's Savior, Priest, and coming King. See Matt. 1:21; 2:2; Heb. 5:5-10; Luke 1:31-33.

4. That the public ministry of Jesus was marked by the highest standard of moral conduct, and that His teaching and preaching have since then become supreme in matters of faith and ethics among His true followers. See Heb. 7:26, 27; Matt. 28:20; 1 Peter 2:21, 22.

5. That the purpose of Christ's death on the cross was to make an all-sufficient and permanent atonement for sin. This final settlement of the sin question opened the way for lost men to seek and find pardon of sins, and also to be admitted as children into the family of God. See Matt. 26:28; Heb. 10:12; Eph. 2:19.

6. As a memorial of Christ's conclusive atonement on the cross, we observe the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. We also believe in the ordinance of baptism, and administer the same to penitent believers, by immersion only. See Matt. 26:20-30; Rom. 6:3-6.

7. As a day of rest and worship, we observe the first day of the week, because we believe it to be a fitting memorial of Christ's victory over death and the grave, and that it is the "Lord's day" of the New Covenant. See Acts 20:7; Mark 16:2-6; Rev. 1:10. (Please turn to Page Nine)

The Gospel, to the Dead! by the Dead!

By D. G. Harvey

"By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison."—1 Peter 3:19. "For for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead."—1 Peter 4:6.

THE above texts are ones that have caused much discussion and confusion of thought. At one time we heard a speaker boldly state on reading these words of Peter that during the three days the Lord was in the tomb "He went into a scorching hell of torment and held a protracted meeting." To us such a line of thought when brought under the light of the Scriptures is neither practical nor reasonable. Of what benefit would it have been to those in such a place? If the popular theory of such a region were true, those who would be gathered for such a series of meetings would be suffering eternal punishment from which there would be no escape. David, speaking of the dead, says, "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."—Psalm 146:4. How, then, in the light of reason, could our Lord preach while dead, or the dead benefit by such preaching? There could be no thought.

What could be the meaning of Peter's words? "By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison." The Diaglott rendering clears the point. Listen: "By which also he preached to the spirits in prison." Note the difference; there is no thought here of an after-death preaching service. A footnote comments, "'Having gone and preached' is used pleonastically for 'he preached.'" Such manner of speech is common even today in some localities. You often hear of such expressions as, "Tom went and told me," yet Tom never left his chair. With this thought in mind, perhaps we may better understand Peter's words.

If we notice the preceding verses, we notice Peter had been writing a wonderful lesson on practical Christian living. Note how he closes his lesson with the 15th verse: "But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason for the hope that is in you with meekness and fear." We hope our readers have learned this lesson and by the study of the Word can point out to all, "It is written." How much more convincing than the method so often used, "Brother So-and-so said."

As we continue this study of Peter's words, he explains why the Christian should sanctify God in his heart, and be ready by his study to give his reason. Note the 17th verse: "For it is better, if the will of God be so, that ye suffer for well doing, than for evil doing." Why? Because Christ suffered for this cause. He is our Example, "that ye should follow his steps" (1 Peter 2:21). Now let us read the 18th verse: "For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit." You are now ready for our text: "By which also (this same Spirit or power of God by which He rose from the dead) he went and preached unto the spirits in prison," or to use a sort of free translation, "By this same power of God he preached unto the spirits in prison."

But the question is, When was this work carried out? We have the testimony of Jesus Himself, when He read these words in the synagogue that day in Nazareth: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the brokenhearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord." He then closed the Book and returned it to the minister and said, "This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears."—Luke 4:18-21.

Then we understand that during His ministry He preached to those in prison, those bound in sin and under penalty of death, and not during the three days He lay dead in the tomb.

But Peter writes, also: "For for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit."—1 Peter 4:6. If we turn to Romans 6:3 we believe we can identify these "that are dead." "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? . . . For in that he died, he died unto sin once: but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God. Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Rom. 6:10, 11.

Now let us go to 1 Peter 4 again for a few verses. "Forasmuch then as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, arm yourselves likewise with the same mind: for he that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin; that he no longer should live the rest of his time in the flesh to the lusts of men, but to the will of God."—1 Peter 4:1, 2. Peter then points out the different mode of life the Christian will live, and how strange your former friends and associates will consider you, how they will ridicule you.

But there is also another surprise in store for those who do not understand now. "Who (those who are surprised now at your acts) shall give account to him that is ready (prepared) to judge the quick and the dead."—1 Peter 4:5. Oh, the joy of being dead to sin but alive unto God! "Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ."—Rom. 6:11. Yet while we live in sin, we are counted as dead by God, for we are under the sure penalty of death, for "the wages of sin is death" (Rom. 6:23). "For all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God."—Rom. 3:23.

EVOLUTION

ONE of the greatest proofs of the integrity of Holy Scripture is shown by the many attempts to prove it unreliable, not one of which during the long history of the world has ever succeeded. Any book that can stand such prolonged attacks by many of the cleverest minds is surely worth our careful consideration and confidence. Men do not waste powder and shot over dead bodies. We may well ask, Why should men want to question and disprove what it teaches? Well, along the line with which we are now dealing it declares that man is the direct creation of God (Gen 2); but that by disobedience he lost his first estate, degraded and disgraced himself, came under the sentence of death, and but for the mercy of his Creator would have been destroyed (Gen. 3).

Now all this is very humbling to man's pride—so he proposes to show that instead of man having come down from a former better state he has in reality risen from a much lower condition. Thus we are told on high authority, "Man is not a being who has fallen from an ideal state of innocence, he is an animal slowly gaining spiritual understanding, and with the gain rising far above his distant ancestors."

This man-honoring, plausible theory flatly contradicts Holy Scripture. A foreigner, who had not quite mastered our language—when speaking of the question of evolution—referred to it as the doctrine of "devel-up-ment." Well, with a slight alteration of the spelling of the first part, we get a very comprehensive labeling of all that seeks to discredit God's Word. We face a very difficult situation today. When a learned bishop—whom for many things we respect and admire—tells us that "Darwin's assertion that man has sprung from the apes has stood the test of more than half a century of critical examination," we feel very reluctant to tell him that he is among those whom St. Paul so severely handles in the 1st chapter to the Romans. Perhaps we had better reply, as the late Dean Burgon did when talking to one who held the bishop's views, "Well, it may be that your ancestors did come from the zoo; mine came from the Garden of Eden." But why should Dr. Barnes make such an assertion? Even Darwin himself said, "When we descend to details we can prove that not one species has changed," but that is precisely what the 1st chapter in the Bible declares—when nine times repeated it tells of bird, beast, plant, and fish being reproduced by "seed after his kind."

Sir William Dawson roundly declares, "The doctrine of evolution is without a shadow of proof. No new forms of life have appeared since man, while many have disappeared, and none are in process of appearing." Well may Professor G. F. Wright sum the whole delusion up as "one tenth bad science and nine tenths bad philosophy"—and Lord Kelvin exclaim, "I marvel at the undue haste of our professors and preachers who are restating truth in the terms of evolution, while evolution remains an unproved hypothesis." We do not feel quite sure whether in a spirit of mischief—or one of scientific seriousness—Sir Arthur Keith recently said that "the growth of the man is marked by the increase of the brain, that of the ape by the development of the jaw."

Behold him now—with lofty brow
A college chair adorning,
And Holy Scripture's crude account
Of his creation, scorning.

But he's a proof the Bible's true
For all his boasted schooling,
There God Almighty sums it up,
And calls it "learned fooling."

No wonder these gentlemen look askance at the Book which says "exactly so."

Now all this "learned fooling" is bad enough in the classroom, but doubly serious in the pulpit. Dr. H. V. Osborn informs us that "from the earliest ages of Greek thought man has been eager to discover some natural cause of evolution, and to abandon the idea of supernatural intervention." At an Oxford conference of clergymen in 1924, one gentleman said that "the denial of the evolution theory was a mark of intellectual suicide." Intellectual suicides are not often given posts of public responsibility and authority, yet the famous British Museum expert, Dr. Etheridge, said, "In all this great Museum there is not a particle of evidence of transmutation of species—the Museum is full of proofs of the utter falsity of such views." One calls to mind the famous jest Huxley made at the expense of Herbert Spencer, when he said, "Spencer's idea of a tragedy was that a brilliant theory should be killed by a wicked fact." Let all who handle sacred matter, when such a theory as evolution is under consideration, call to mind the caution given by divine direction in the words, "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit."—Col. 2:8.

"Hold to the good, define it well,
For fear divine philosophy
Should push beyond her mark—and be
An agent for the lords of hell."

In 1912 a great congress of some five hundred learned men met in London. The starting point of their deliberations was Darwin's theory of natural selection, which theory is said to determine apt and favored races among plants and animals but which in the case of civilized man seems to have been evaded, or superseded—for he has set himself to care for the unfit, instead of speedily destroying them. How comes it about that this doctrine has two such diametrically opposite results? Said an evolutionary enthusiastic, "The nineteenth century has given us the evolution of theology, the twentieth will give us the evolution of humanity." What about this twentieth century Tower of Babel, where in one tongue they make such contradictory assertions? In a book entitled The New Decalogue, the author says, "Evolution is a bloody business. Man has only progressed by barbarism, and civilization is the only progress by which he has declined." But what is the good of a principle with such advance and retreat?

The late Bishop Gore said, "We should concede something in favor of historical science, while maintaining that the Bible is a great literary monument." But if historical science—not merely guesswork—disproves the reliability of Holy Writ, then we are left with a book like the curate's egg, "good in parts."

In The News Chronicle issue of September 5, 1933, Robert Blatchford asked, "Would an all-knowing, all-seeing, all-powerful Creator have put into the moneron (a microscopic living jelly speck) a creative mind that would blink and probe, and wander off the track, developing into conger eels, rattlesnakes, scorpions, and saw-toothed tigers? The mind with which this moneron set out either did not see its goal, or did not know the way to it, but struggled along for millions of years, trying and discarding, and trying again, until at long last it arrived in triumph at the Soviet slave camps, American racketeers, and cockney bag-snatchers."

But why should Mr. Blatchford be so sarcastic and unbelieving? Has he never heard that Ages ago—a young Micro

Became so very jumpy
It was transmuted to a flea,
All roundy-back and humpy.

The species flea at length by jumps
Grew such a perfect topper—
It evolved into what
We know as a grasshopper.

The changing process still went on Till the one-time grasshopper
Grew arms and legs, a head, a tail,
Became a monkey—proper.

But higher still—by dint of will,
And moral aspiration,
Our friend the monkey said, "I'll be
The head of all creation."

No doubt the challenge of such a theory as evolution has helped to get rid of many untenable beliefs held by sincere, but insufficiently informed, believers in the reliability of Holy Writ. No book in the whole world has so often needed to exclaim, "Save me from my friends."

At the British Association Meeting of 1929, Professor D. M. S. Watson stated, "The theory of evolution is universally accepted, not because it can be proved—but because the only alternative, namely, SPECIAL CREATION, is clearly incredible." What an extraordinary statement. A theory which cannot be proved is not science; science is what we know. As to "special creation" being incredible, give any intelligent man, whose mind is not obsessed by theories as to the origin and order of creation, the first two chapters of Genesis, and he will for certain recognize the Creator's direct action.

Mr. Clodd, in his Story of Creation, writes, "We must make a start somewhere, we are therefore compelled to assume ('assume'!) a primordial nebulous non-luminous state. . . . Given the matter that composes the same, and the play of forces and energies of which that matter is the vehicle. . . ." But, as a reviewer observed, "Given everything, you can account for anything." Certainly the terms "nebulous and non-luminous" are an apt description of this theory. Would it not be as well if these gentlemen, instead of confusing us with "primordial" matter would simply tell us which came first, the hen or the egg? There are certain minds so hard to convince that if clearly shown that the whole order of things commenced with a "speck of living jelly," they will still ask, But where did that come from?

As for the doctrine of evolution being "universally accepted"—very far from it. To the names of weight already mentioned against it, a long list of equally celebrated men could be added, and as to those really acquainted with God's Word, of them we may say that

Zion's daughter shakes her head,
And smiles in quiet confidence,
For—certain she will ne'er be led
To call such theories—evidence.

Let us not think that this doctrine of evolution is of recent time—two thousand years before Darwin, the Greeks spoke of it as an "unproved hypothesis." "Sans Dieu Rien"—"Without God Nothing," says the French proverb. "In the beginning God," declares the first sentence of divine Revelation. It would be going much too far to say that Darwin wrote with the intent to discredit Holy Scripture—or that those that accepted the doctrine of evolution desired to do so. Let us charitably conclude that both he and they failed to see its implications—and to discern in the shadow the sinister form who first said to mankind, "Ye shall not fall" (Gen. 3), but now equally falsely says, "See how you have risen."

Man's original dignity is set forth in the words that he was made "a little lower than God" (Psalm 8, R. V.). What a reduction in our status to be told that we are "a good deal higher than the apes." Lord Bacon wrote, "God's creation of man was first material. He formed him of the dust of the earth." "He breathed into his nostrils the breath of life," the intellectual—while God's Sabbath rest from creation has meant the illumination of man by His Spirit.—Daniel Farmer in Words of Life.

"His merciful kindness is great toward us: and the truth of the Lord endureth for ever."—Psalm 117:2.

8. That the literal resurrection of Christ from the dead is God's pledge to His people that death is to be eliminated by resurrection life, and that immortality is inseparably associated with the destruction of death and the grave. See 1 Cor. 15:26, 53-55; Hosea 13:14; John 5:28, 29. The living and the dead are to be judged by Christ at "his appearing and kingdom" (2 Tim. 4:1; Acts 17:31).

9. That in the experience of death all consciousness ceases, and that it shall remain so until the voice of Christ breaks that silence at His second coming. The grave is nature's quiet resting place for the dead, the little house where the weary pilgrim must tarry for a night, that his flesh may rest in hope of that brighter and better day when he shall be transformed in a moment, and then translated into the everlasting kingdom of Jesus Christ. See Job 14:10-15; 19:25-27; Eccl. 9:5, 6; John 11:11-15; 1 Thess. 4:13, 17.

10. That immortality is not native to man, but that it may be sought and obtained as the "free gift of God through Jesus Christ our Lord." Nowhere in the Scriptures is it affirmed that the human soul is immortal or indestructible; but on the contrary, it is stated that the soul can die, perish, be destroyed. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die"; "Fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell" (Ezekiel 18:4; Matthew 10:28). John, who thought and wrote clearly on the subject of eternal life, gives us his conclusions in these words: "And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."—1 John 5:11, 12. See Rom. 2:7.

11. That Christ will return to this world visibly, personally, and gloriously. That the work to be accomplished at His second advent is not to be done by an angel, or by the Holy Spirit, or by organized Christianity, but by Christ Himself. His promise reads: "I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also"; and His declaration is: "Hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven" (John 14:3; Matt. 26:64). "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven."—1 Thess. 4:16. "Every eye shall see him."—Rev. 1:7.

12. That the earth is to be delivered from its bondage, and freed from its age-long burden of sin; after which it shall become the final and everlasting abode of the redeemed of all nations. See Isa. 65:17; 2 Peter 3:13; Rev. 21:1; Dan. 7:27; Matt. 5:5; Rom. 4:13.

13. That almost all the signs which are recorded in the Scriptures as warning signals of the approaching advent of Christ, have already appeared; therefore we believe that the "kingdoms of this world" are soon to become the "kingdom of Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever." See Matt. 24:37-39; Luke 21:25-27; 2 Thess. 2:1-4; James 5:1-8; 2 Tim. 3:1-5; Dan. 2:44; 7:27; Rev. 11:15.

war as did Lord Grey in 1914. The Dominions must be consulted. A tremendous amount of prestige has been lost to Britain by her slowness to act in the present Ethiopian crisis, especially in the Far East, where vigorous action means everything in diplomacy. Instead of Europe being divided into two hostile camps, it is divided into three camps, Italy and satellites, Germany and allies, and France and her allies. Great Britain does not wish to support either Germany or Italy for fear of strengthening one nation at the expense of the other, and thus raising a foe she cannot handle. And while she is confronted with one crisis after another in the diplomatic field Japan is biding her time and using her every advantage to push her way into the heart of Asia unmolested. While Europe is preparing to destroy herself with the help of America, Asia awaits at the door to be in on the "kill." What ominous fulfilling of Scripture!

In the prophecy of Zechariah we find that the last great war is described. The friends of the Jews apparently are to be the losers in that great struggle, for when all nations are gathered before Jerusalem "the city shall be taken . . . and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city" (Zech. 14:2). Civilization as it has been slowly built up in the Western World is tottering on the brink of destruction. Were it not for the events which succeed that great near calamity, everything would be lost. Were it not for the intervention of divine power on that occasion, the cause of the Jews, the hope of Western civilization in the British Empire and its allies, the very civilization of which we are a part, would disappear: "Then shall the Lord go forth, and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle."—Zech. 14:3. If the Lord be on our side, who shall stand against us? We are living in glorious times. Certainly we should strive to keep ourselves on the Lord's side so that we may "abide the day of his coming"; so that we may be able to lift up our heads and rejoice at the coming of the Lord, rather than be as the prophets warned Israel might be: "To what end is it for you? the day of the Lord is darkness, and not light. As if a man did flee from a lion, and a bear met him; or went into the house, and leaned his hand on the wall, and a serpent bit him."—Amos 5:18, 19.

will and word, and that was joy. Now I was giving more intelligently and there was satisfaction in that; and finally, to be a trusted steward investing the Lord's separated portion was a pleasure.

IN ALL PASSING YEARS

These happy experiences did not come at once; they did not come without many a stout struggle. The high school boy, making his own way and just beginning to step out with the young ladies, was tempted to break his tithing pledge many times. He never let it lapse, however, even for a little while, without a realization of loss which soon renewed the pledge to give at least one tenth of all that God gave him, until it became a habit and a privilege.

Not long after my conscience had burned into my soul this deep conviction concerning stewardship, the proprietor of a large grocery offered me a position at $40 a month for the summer and allowed me to retain my position as janitor of the church. Thus I earned $56 a month.

Before returning to school, I was offered a position as reporter for one of our city newspapers. My special field was church news and at least one sermon a week. It acquainted me with the working methods of many churches and pastors and increased my income.

At last it came time to enter the seminary, and I was surprised, on arrival, to be granted a scholarship and a position as assistant librarian. God was surely fulfilling all His promises.

MY FIRST CHURCH

On leaving the seminary, my first pastorate was in a church of fifty-two members, at Minonk, Illinois. One of the first things I did was to preach on systematic giving and to set up an Every Member Canvass. Gifts to current expenses and benevolences were increased, bills promptly met, and old obligations paid off. The church was revived and brought to self-support. From that day to this, it has prospered. It has a beautiful new house of worship and manse. Though small, it contributes liberally to all the benevolences; some of its members have left generous bequests to the boards; and several of its young people have gone forth into the mission field.

I was married while there. Could I ask my wife—the daughter of well-to-do parents—to live on a salary of less than $1,000 and continue to give a tenth of that? She joyfully agreed, and the practice of stewardship became one of the most delightful experiences of our married life. Our giving was mutually planned and prayed over.

MY SECOND CHURCH

My second pastorate was in Broadway Church, Rock Island, a church of 101 members. It had a building debt. The understanding was that I should make no effort to clear off that debt until the official boards gave unanimous consent. They did, however, give me liberty to organize systematic every-member-giving for benevolences. Sixteen benevolence pledges were signed the first year, and at the close of the year it was found that those sixteen had given more than all the rest. Inside of two years the congregation voluntarily suggested paying the debt and it was raised within two weeks, bringing great spiritual blessing.

Not long after the beginning of this pastorate, one of the most promising young men in the congregation, Graham Lee, came to me with the declaration that he had decided to become a foreign missionary. He had spent three years on the plains as a cowboy, and then had come home and mastered the plumber's trade. When I asked him what led to this decision, he replied, "Your preaching of missions, with the consecration of self and substance." After ten years' preparation he was sent by our board to Pyeng Yang, Korea, where he labored eighteen years in that wonderful mission. The reflex influence on the home church was equally deep. It became a missionary church. It assumed his support. Later, two young men in the congregation with their wives, friends of Mr. Lee, built the Anna Davis Academy for Girls, in Pyeng Yang, and have largely supported them for over a quarter of a century. Still later, when the Industrial School needed a superintendent, the board called a mechanic from Rock Island Arsenal, also a member of the Broadway Church, who gave up a salary of $1,800 for one of $800, and has labored there for over twenty years. This was another result of the stewardship spirit in that church.

THE FIRSTBORN

A few years after the beginning of this pastorate in Rock Island, the firstborn in the manse died. Just when we were about to erect a monument to her memory, there came a letter from Graham Lee, pleading for a little chapel and rest house in which to lodge and teach the country women who came in to study the gospel and to be trained as Bible women. It would cost about $800. The pastor and his wife decided that a Helen Marquis Memorial Chapel at Pyeng Yang would be a far better memorial to their daughter than a block of granite. So the chapel was built. When we visited Korea in 1910, we were told that more than a thousand women had found Christ in it, and many had been trained for evangelists and Bible women. Was not that a fulfilling of the Lord's promise?

Later, when it became necessary to build a Boys' Academy at Pyeng Yang, my wife and I were given the privilege of buying the land. The Korean Christian who owned it came to the Mission while we were in Pyeng Yang, saying, "The Japanese have offered me yen 1,400, but I will let you have it for yen 1,250." No money was available in the mission funds; so we bought it for them out of our Lord's portion. Later, we gave one half of the cost of building and equipping the new building. It amounted to so much that the only way we could do it was to give notes to the Foreign Board secured by life insurance policies and bonds and plan to pay them off out of the Lord's portion. It took years, but during all these years the academy was doing its good work for the boys of Korea. Every year still the results of this academy investment reach out farther and farther on earth and into eternity. (Turn to Back Page)

Shining Lights

By Vivian Kirkpatrick

"Ye are the light of the world. . . . Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."—Matt. 5:14, 16.

Christ has passed on to us, His followers, a solemn duty—that of being a Christian example, a light shining in the world to guide those of the world, a light in the world to guide the world, but not of the world.

"Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever."—1 John 2:15-17. It is so easy to love the things of the world. The pleasures those of the world enjoy look very enticing to us, but the pleasures and lusts of the flesh are of the world and the world shall pass away. By allowing the pleasures of the world to draw us, we are allowing our light to grow dim, for we cannot be a light for the world and be of the world.

Should we let in the pleasures of the world we are forgetting the Father, and our light grows dim as a lamp that has run out of oil. We are no longer shining lights for the world, but have degraded into the world.

In Jesus' prayer for His followers, of which we may be counted a part, He said, "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world."—John 17:14. We are in the world but not of the world, cannot have or take part in any of the pleasures of the world or we lose our fellowship with Christ, cannot be lights shining for Him in the world.

Too many of us listen to our desires, say to ourselves, There is no harm in it, I can still do it and be a good Christian. We try to plant one foot in the world and keep one foot in Christ, but alas, the gap is too wide and we find ourselves entirely in the world. And then perhaps we will hear a voice say, "I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot. So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth." There cannot be halfway with God; we cannot follow the pleasures of the world and expect to be shining lights for Christ. Such ones shall hear, "Verily I say unto you, I know you not," but those who ignore or overcome the temptations of the world and continue as shining lights for Christ shall hear, "Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Listen! Cannot you hear your Master pleading for you to separate yourselves from the world and to come and be shining lights for Him? He is calling every day if we would only listen to Him.

Jesus will not always plead with us. Should we continue ignoring His pleadings, His voice shall take a sterner note. We shall hear, "Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts. Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God."—James 4:3, 4. We do not, I know, wish to be the enemies of God. Therefore, we must forget the things of the world; be strangers in the world to be an example, a shining light for the world, but be not of the world.

Again I beg of you, separate yourselves from the things of the world, smoking, drinking, from pool halls, from dance halls, and from dancing, from cards, and all other pleasures of the world, and be shining lights for the world and not the enemies of God.

The Power of the Press

A recent letter to the editor calls forth the observation once again that he who superintends these columns is in no wise responsible for opinions expressed in signed articles which appear in them. A strong effort is, of course, made to see that no grossly inaccurate doctrinal teachings on the so-called fundamentals are allowed to raise their ugly heads; but in general, wide freedom is granted Berean Department writers. Their ideas, however, are their own; and the editor should be neither blamed nor praised for them.

The press is the greatest power in the world today. An uncensored article by a freelance writer in North Africa which recently appeared in Writer's Digest made the illuminating statement that the present Italo-Ethiopian affair differs in no way from any other war—it is being fought more by the typewriter than by the sword.

If religious students would only understand that their written opinions and assertions are reaching thousands—perhaps millions—and that their influence through their writing is incalculable, it might tend somewhat to improve the present inaccuracies of expression and fact which so often find a place in Christian journals. Let the truth be known, but don't let it be garbled.

Until December 25, the following reduced price schedule will apply to Jesus, the Light of the World, that beautiful little book about the life of Jesus, written by Mrs. Mary A. Gesin: single copies, 15 cents; 5 or more to one address, 12 cents each. The former price in all quantities was 25 cents. Address the National Berean Society, Oregon, Ill.

PREPARED BY MARY A. GESIN

"Ezra had prepared his heart to seek the law of the Lord, and to do it, and to teach in Israel."

HOW EZRA PREPARED FOR A JOURNEY

IN THE DAYS of long ago, the Old Testament times of which we are studying, there were no radios, no telegraph or cable lines, no telephones even. News was carried very, very slowly. News that takes only seconds to spread now, took months and years then.

After long years word finally reached Babylon that all was not well with the exiles who had left for home so joyfully. Many had died. Many had grown discouraged.

The little children about whom we talked last week were now men and women. And sad to say, some of them had forgotten about God and His commandments, and were doing as their heathen neighbors did.

We think if we had been in their place we would never forget the God who had been so good and kind, so ready to forgive their many sins, and so watchful over them. But, you know, God is just as good to us today, and we sometimes forget Him.

Whenever God needs some one to do a certain work for Him, He always has the one ready to do it. And here was Ezra, a scribe. That is, one who made copies of the first five books of our Bible for the people. For you know very, very few could write in those days.

And Ezra not only copied in writing the law of God, but he copied it in his life. He patterned his life just as God had said. Not only that, he had a great desire to teach God's Word to those about him, so that they, too, would be blessed as he was.

Ezra was the very man to go back to the homeland and show the people their wrongdoing and teach them right doing. Ezra, however, was quite an important man in Babylon, though he was a captive of war, and we wouldn't be surprised if the King had told him he couldn't go.

But God put it in the King's heart to favor Ezra's request and to assist him in the journey. As on the previous trip, those who did not go along helped with their money and their possessions. When they were ready to start they had a very valuable treasure gathered together. Some think that it amounted to nearly $5,000,000 in value!

Now they had a most dangerous country to travel through, one that was overrun by robbers. How do you think Ezra prepared to protect his great treasure? By policemen, guns, steel locks, and strong boxes?

Let's turn in our Bibles to the book of Ezra and see.

Chapter 8, verses 21-23, tells the story. They gathered on the river bank and asked God to show them the way to go so that they might arrive in safety.

Well, if they were going to do God's work, whom but God would they ask? They couldn't find anyone more powerful, we know that.

And did they arrive safely? We are sure they must have, asking God and not the King's soldiers to protect them. Look in verses 31 and 32.

Now if they had taken an army to protect them they probably would have lost their valuable treasure. The robbers would have been stronger and more daring than the soldiers, most likely. But Ezra had said that he had faith in God, and he would have been ashamed to ask for the army to guard them after that.

It took about four months to make the trip. For it was about the first of April when they started, and it was the first of July before they reached the homeland.

There were about two thousand people in all, and they had much work to do when they arrived. Among them were singers and musicians for the temple service. Don't you think the discouraged people were glad to see the new arrivals?

After Ezra showed them their sins, they said, "As thou hast said, so must we do."

FOR YOUR BIBLE SCRAPBOOK

Write the date, the golden text, and the subject. Then write the story of Ezra by answering these questions:

How were the returned exiles getting along in the homeland?

What did they need most of all?

Whom did God find to do this work for Him?

What sort of man was Ezra?

How did Ezra gather together the things he needed for the trip?

Through what sort of country did he have to travel?

How did he protect his great treasure?

Did they arrive safely?

How long did it take to make the journey?

Who were among the company?

Then write a little prayer that you think Ezra might have prayed before he started. Also write one that he might have prayed when he reached the homeland safely.

For your picture find a child with a Bible on his knee or draw one. Then another of a child kneeling beside his bed. Under your first picture write Psalm 119:16. Under your second picture write Psalm 4:8 and Psalm 5:3.

EZRA'S MISSION TO JERUSALEM

Ezra 7:1 to 8:36

Devotional Reading: Psalm 63:1-8

GOLDEN TEXT

"The hand of our God is upon all them for good that seek him."—Ezra 8:22.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Class Discussion: Why the Jews wanted to leave the prosperous land of Babylon and return to ruined Palestine. Should one venture uselessly into danger to prove God?

I. Heart Preparation Comes First. (Ezra 7:6-10.) Ezra's preparation for life began with the study of the Bible. He read much, he wrote much, he practiced much, and he prayed much. All that he learned of God's will for himself and for his people he sought to apply. Ezra "prepared his heart to seek the law of the Lord, and to do it." It is one thing to learn the will of the Lord, and quite another thing to put it into practice in our lives. To know what the Bible teaches is of but little value unless we put it to the test of practice.

II. The Meaning of Faith. (Ezra 8:21-23.) Through fasting and prayer Ezra sought the help and protection of God on the journey he and his people were about to take. But he did not pray only, he manifested his faith in the Lord by foregoing all human protection in the form of soldiers and relying entirely for his safety upon Jehovah. Furthermore, he trusted God to the extent that he placed the vast wealth he was convoying to Jerusalem in His hands alone. He took it for granted that God would protect the rich treasure that was to be used in His worship. Ezra was "ashamed" to do less than that. Any believer should be ashamed to be found trusting in man more than in God.

III. Faith in God Vindicated. (Vv. 31, 32.) After more than a century during which they and their fathers had been praying for restoration to the "glorious land" (Dan. 11:41), the company which Ezra had inspired with renewed hope and faith reached the city of their desires, Jerusalem. For three days they rested, no doubt spending much of the time in prayers of thanksgiving to God for His goodness to them, and then they deposited the vast treasure they had brought in the house of the Lord. The joy they felt on that occasion will be more than duplicated by those who find themselves in the happy company of the redeemed, in the New Jerusalem, "when the King comes in!"

GOLDEN TEXT

"The hand of our God is upon all them for good that seek him."—Ezra 8:22.

Seek ye the Lord while He may be found. Call upon His name while He is near. This is what Ezra and a group of his associates had been doing before starting back to Jerusalem. So much so had they done this that they trusted in Him for protection on their return journey. They were not disappointed, for Ezra says, "The hand of our God was upon us, and he delivered us."

God is the same yesterday, today, and forever; that means that He is just as good to those who seek Him now as He was to Ezra and his group of returning Jews. It pays to seek Him for His care in this life and for His great love that He has shown to the children of men, that He has promised eternal life.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Ezra

- put full trust in God;
- obtained the help of the king for the glory of God;
- through previous training was ready to grasp opportunity;
- led his people in fasting and prayer.

Preparing for Service. Ezra had prepared himself for service with and for God to teach to the children of Israel the statutes and judgments of the Lord. He didn't wait until there was opportunity to prepare himself, but he prepared himself for opportunity and when the time came he was ready to step into service. When a person sincerely and conscientiously prepares for the Lord's work, God will give that person opportunity to use his talents in His service. Moses trained for forty years for his work of delivering the children of Israel. The Levites had to spend their first thirty years in preparing for the priestly work. Christ was 30 before He began His public ministry. The wonderful and mighty work of the Lord requires devoted and efficient training. See 1 Pet. 3:15. Such preparedness comes through study of the Word.

Seeking Deliverance. Ezra had declared that God's hand was upon all that sought after Him and when emergency arose he proceeded by faith to prove the claim. God failed them not. Their prayers and fastings had taken hold of the power of God and through this power they were delivered from the hand of their enemies who laid in wait for them. When a people is trusting in the leadership and guidance of the Lord God, they may feel assured that that leadership will triumph over every foe.—C. E. R.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

How God Helps

Through a territory overrun with robbers and fierce desert tribes, a company of unarmed people arrived at their destination, almost a thousand miles distant, carrying treasures worth several million dollars, without losing a penny of it. Can you account for that remarkable occurrence? More than fifty years had passed since the new temple had been finished. The older ones of that period were dead; the younger ones had grown old; their children were neglecting God's commands. Ezra, the exiled scribe, was anxious for their welfare. (The teacher should explain the duties of the scribe.) He obtained favor with the King, who aided him in securing funds, specially trained workers, and singers for the temple service, and they started on their journey. Discuss verse 22 in class. Does verse 10 have any bearing on it? Was God more ready to protect them because of Ezra's faithfulness? Notice three words in verse 10—seek, do, and teach. First, Ezra learned thoroughly what God's will was; next, he himself practiced what he learned; third, he taught those about him. The entire chapters, 7 and 8, should be read for a thorough understanding of the lesson. Notice in chapter 8 that Ezra detailed certain men to be responsible for the treasure and kept a minute record to be checked on their arrival. How do you reconcile such carefulness with his complete dependence upon God for protection? How does that show real faith in God? Notice, God made the heart of the King favorable to the effort; He strengthened Ezra's determination to go to the help of his people; He guided the travelers on their journey.

Remember: God will assist in all worthy undertakings if we seek to follow His will for us.—M. G.

JUNIOR CLASS

Text: Ezra 7:6-10; 8:21-23, 31, 32. Topic: Ezra Goes to Jerusalem to Teach. Memory Verse: "For Ezra had prepared his heart to seek the law of the Lord, and to do it, and to teach in Israel statutes and judgments."—Ezra 7:10.

Review. See if children are familiar with captivity and return of people and for what purpose they returned.

Presentation of Lesson. Using the review as a foundation for this story, tell how the people returned and how they built the house of God. It would be good to tell how the people kept the Passover after the house was built. Then the lesson for today can be introduced: (1) how Ezra went from Babylon to Jerusalem; (2) his mission to teach the people; (3) the King's readiness to assist Ezra; (4) read all of chapters 7 and 8 and tell how Ezra called people together and what they were taking to Jerusalem; (5) they decide to hold a fast and make an entreaty for God's protection; (6) their prayers are answered. When the teacher has told the story, the child should see that it was God working through Ezra and thus teaching the people.

Memory Verse. Read the memory verse. Did Ezra do as this verse says? If so, tell how. Repeat the verse.

Notebook. At the top of your page write, "These helped to rebuild God's house." In the middle of the page draw the picture. From it draw lines. At the end of each line write the name of one who helped. Do not forget the prophets who urged the people to go. Nor the king who made it possible. But first of all should be God.—V. C. T.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

WHERE IT WILL GO

Believing our constituency will wish to know the exact purposes for which our present drive for contributions is being made, the following itemization of bills now outstanding or which must be consummated in the next 30 days is submitted. All of these bills must be met with cash.

Heating Plant, Herald building	$325.00
Paper for Herald & Quarterly	135.00
Accounts Payable by December 1	275.00
Taxes	55.00

The "taxes" listed above comprise bills already paid in full, but which necessitate raising an equal amount for maintaining an adequate bank balance. The "accounts payable by December 1" include accounts for merchandise, and interest and principal charges which positively must be met on that date or before.

ARKANSAS CITY, KANSAS

A letter from Miss Lucille Le Crone, pastor of the Arkansas City, Kan., Church of God, records that the total membership of the local congregation is only 33, although the Sunday morning audiences average 40 to 45 and the evening audiences about 20.

"This week (Nov. 3-9) we expect to start a midweek study class and prayer meeting. We have started our plans for a Thanksgiving service."

BURR OAK, INDIANA

Sr. Mabel Overmyer's class of Bereans are having a great feast of good things in their study of the types. The children with their efficient teacher, Sr. Hatten, hope to have more in attendance. And the adults have only scratched the surface in the study of "Why We Believe Jesus the Christ is the Son of God."

With the aid of charts and map and stereopticon, Bro. F. L. Austin of Grand Rapids, Mich., and former pastor of this church, will address the public, beginning Monday, Nov. 25, continuing until Thursday the 28th inclusive. Those living near or at a distance are all invited to enjoy with us this treat. His subjects are on "God's Pyramid," used in the light of prophecy. Turn to Isaiah 19:19, 20. Meditate, and ask yourself, "Is not this the pyramid?"

Kenneth Berlyn and family of Kokomo were visitors with their father and sister, Chris Emigh and the Walkers.

Sr. Mattix is still confined to her bed. Let us pray for her.

Sunday the 17th will find the writer and wife in service at the Kokomo church.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

Again we are saying Godspeed to Sr. Railsback as she leaves for her work in the Northwest this week. This time she will be accompanied by Bro. Railsback. As we listened to the sermon with which she favored us last Sunday (Nov. 3) we could understand easily why those whom she had been teaching were so anxious for her to return.

Her subject was "The Word Made Flesh." First, she gave the most common passages in support of the preexistence of Christ—Heb. 1:2; Col. 1:16; John 1:1-3. Then she followed with those references which emphasize that God alone created all things—Gen. 1:1; 2 Chron. 2:12; Neh. 9:6; Isa. 40:28; 44:24; 45:18; 46:9, 10; Acts 14:15. After that she explained the fallacies in the translations of the first passages which she gave, by means of the Diaglott, and with proofs that often things future were spoken as past. The past tense was a common way of giving emphasis and insuring that the word of God is unchangeable. Finally she concluded that Christ was from above (John 3:31) and "every good gift and every perfect gift is from above" (James 1:17).

Sr. Railsback's sermons are forceful and to the point. They leave no doubt for the listener as to what message she is giving. Her own remarks are used only to correlate the Scriptures. She effaces herself, and brings forward, "Thus saith the Lord."

The Berean meeting (Nov. 6) was given over to a social hour, and we, who are left to carry on, tried to make merry, so that those who are leaving would have the courage to say good-bye, and would not be saddened by our desperate feeling. A tree pruned too often of its principal branches sometimes dies, especially if no new branches are grafted in. We have hardly recovered from the loss of the Rahn family a year ago; now Bro. and Sr. Saylor are leaving us for good to make their home in Arizona. Three families who have been with the Los Angeles church since its early years are now gone. Let it not be said of us with whom the fate of the church jointly rests, "I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot."

CLEVELAND, OHIO

The last issue of Golden Rule News, published for the Golden Rule Church of God at Cleveland (M. W. Lyon, pastor), contains the information that the church is scheduling special services for Thanksgiving Day, at 9 a. m.

Berean attendance has dropped somewhat below the earlier fall high marks, although interest has held up well. Bruce Thompson has created an attendance graph upon which the records of the entire society and of each of the five classes will be shown.

A buzzer system for notifying classes of the end of each period has been installed in the church by the Bereans. In October, a complete new heating plant was set up.

Miss Adele Hicks and Ellis Onderdonk were given a pre-wedding shower of miscellaneous gifts on October 21.

FROM DIXIE LAND

Our meetings at the Happy Woods Church near Hammond, La., came to a close on Sunday night, Nov. 10. It had been a real pleasure to work with these dear ones again, and we pray that God will guide them and sustain their zeal for the truth.

The following two days were spent in Baton Rouge and New Orleans and then on Tuesday night we began a few days of meetings with the brethren of the Blood River Church. These brethren are adding to the comforts of their log church building each year. They have added a piano and installed new glass windows since we were here last January. These meetings here are to conclude on the 17th, and on the following day we plan to begin the trip homeward. We plan to return by Citronelle, Ala., taking home with us Sr. Jeanne Lyon. We hope to be at Berean with South Lawn Church on Thursday night the 21st.

ORA A. HUFFER

Mrs. Ora A. Huffer, a lifelong resident of eastern Clinton County, Ind., was born February 18, 1872, near Forest, being the daughter of Harrison and Ellen Vencil Johnson, and the eldest of eleven children.

She was united in marriage to William M. Huffer August 25, 1892. To this union three children were born, Mrs. Murl Maish of Hillisburg; Mrs. Houston Dunn of Greentown; and Dan Huffer of Hillisburg, all of whom survive.

She heard the gospel, yielded her obedience in baptism, and united with the Hillisburg Church of God. Realizing the weakness of her flesh, she leaned upon the strength of her Savior with that full confidence, trust, and hope born of spiritual understanding of the things of God. She fell asleep in Jesus in full confidence of the coming of Christ to establish His kingdom of peace and righteousness upon the earth.

When her ill health made it imperative, the couple retired from farm life to Michigantown, where she attended the Christian Church as a member of the Loyal Women's Class.

Besides her husband and children she is survived by eleven grandchildren. One brother, Glen, preceded her in death. She is also survived by seven brothers and two sisters: Melvin, Det, Orval, and Harry of Kempton, Frank of Frankfort, Oral of Mulberry, and Lon of Melbourne, Fla.; Mrs. Effie Holly of Kempton and Mrs. Faye Mott of Middleberry; and by a host of other relatives and friends.

Her death terminated an illness of many years, which she bore with patience and fortitude. Funeral services were held in the Christian Church in Michigantown by J. W. Williams of Gladbrook, Iowa, a long-time friend of the family, assisted by the local Holiness minister, J. Sieberial; and she was laid to rest in St. Paul Cemetery to await the Master's call.
Otto Dick.

SARAH DASHWOOD

On Wednesday afternoon, Oct. 30, the writer was called to Dunnville, Ont., to conduct the funeral of Sarah Dashwood. While certain vital statistics are not obtainable, yet there are a few interesting events in connection with her life. Perhaps the most outstanding item of interest relates to her conversion to the particular doctrines of the Church of God. A stray copy of The Restitution Herald came into her possession and upon reading it, she became interested in the truths presented. Pursuing this new-found faith in search of more gems, she contacted with some of the early defenders of the gospel at Fonthill, and like the three thousand who were pricked in their hearts on hearing Peter's soul-winning sermon on the day of Pentecost, she gladly received the Word and was baptized.

Although isolated a goodly portion of her life following, yet the hold of truth kept her earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, and when death claimed her, faith was aglow and truth was burning bright.

The funeral audience were largely strangers to us, and the gospel of resurrection which will follow the glorious appearing of our Lord seemed as strange to them as we endeavored to unfold its biblical foundation and picture its hope and beauty. Following the sermon, she was taken to her silent home in Riverside Cemetery and placed in nature's bosom where she awaits the call of the Son of God.

SALLY ANN BRAMMELL

Mrs. Sally Ann Stuart, wife of J. W. Brammell, a resident of Clinton County, Ind., since 1878, died at the family home on the Jefferson road August 4, 1935, following a long illness, having been bedfast for the last three weeks.

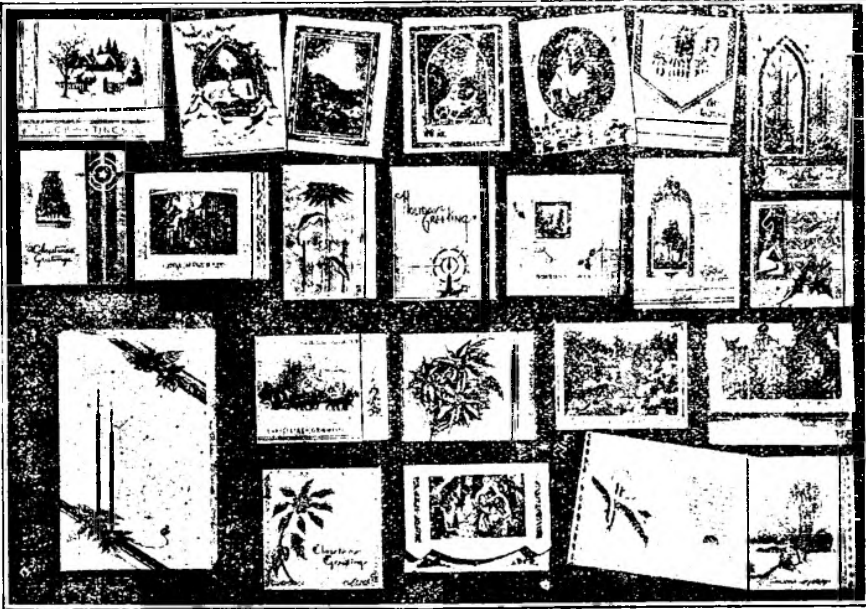

She was born in Rush County, Ind., October 13, 1848, a daughter of William and Sarah Stuart. She was married to John W. Brammell in 1878. A member of the Church of God, she took an active part in church affairs until her recent illness. She was a very devoted and kind Christian woman and a loving and patient wife and mother, and was highly respected by all who knew her. She lived near Boyleston and Hillisburg for many years, moving west of Frankfort about four years ago, the couple having retired from farming about six years ago.

In addition to her husband she is survived by 3 daughters: Mrs. John Hampton and Mrs. Albert Finney of Frankfort, and Mrs. J. W. Williams of Gladbrook, Iowa; by 22 grandchildren and 11 great-grandchildren. One daughter, Mrs. Lily Finney, preceded her in death; also an infant son.

Funeral services were held at the Hillisburg Church of God, William M. Huffer officiating, and burial was made at the Plummer Cemetery.—Adapted from the Frankfort Morning Times by Otto Dick.

COMMEMORATION PROGRAM

IN 1535, on October 4, from an unknown press probably in Switzerland, came the first printed English Bible, translated by Miles Coverdale. Previously the New Testament and other parts of the Bible had been printed, but in 1535, for the first time, the complete Old and New Testaments were printed together.

In the four centuries since 1535 the English Bible, in successive translations, has molded the very life and thought of English-speaking people as no other book. With the New Testament and the Gospels it has far surpassed in circulation any other book in the world. Its words and cadences are in our very speech. Its themes have inspired great achievements in English literature and English art. It has shaped for righteousness the inner character of public institutions. It has been the indispensable friend of millions of persons in every degree and walk of life.

The character of a new era in America's life will be determined by the movement of men's minds in the next ten years. Now, as never before, the American people need the Bible's priceless contribution to self-discipline, its searching of motives and standards, its capacity to release great moral and spiritual power. This commemoration, greatly used, can exercise great influence on these decisive years.

In order that the celebration may have its full value three objectives are sought: first, to direct nation-wide attention to this invaluable spiritual treasure and its influence on the life of the English-speaking people through four hundred years; second, to encourage a fresh practice of reading and studying the Bible; third, to determine that as far as possible those without it—and especially every American home—shall have an opportunity to possess it.

In order that the aims of the celebration may be realized, it is suggested that public observances of the celebration be held early in the commemorative period between October 4 and Universal Bible Sunday, December 8. During this period at least one general meeting of nation-wide importance will be held, while in metropolitan areas, cities, and towns, local groups will be encouraged to plan suitable public meetings to stimulate thoughtful and permanently valuable ways to study and use the Bible, and to employ suitable measures toward making it possible to see that the multitudes without the Bible become possessors of it. The celebration will conclude on Bible Sunday when the churches, according to their individual customs, may properly relate their services to the theme, "Four Centuries of the English Bible."

It will be apparent that no single committee or institution can be responsible either for promoting local celebrations or for providing the unreached with Bibles. Denominational units, ministerial associations, church groups, and pastors will follow convenient plans and processes suitable to local situations. Gratitude for four centuries of the possession and influence of the English Bible, together with an opportunity to care for many homes just now without this treasure, will be incentives in formulating the best local procedure.

Under the auspices of the National Committee helpful material and suggestions for realizing the aims of the celebration will be issued. Efforts will be made to stimulate the formation of local committees and assist in other ways.

No financial campaign is attached to the celebration. The moderate expenses of local activity, including supply of Scriptures, must be met locally.

The Commemoration Committee heartily urges churches and pastors to plan for a worthy commemoration of this anniversary, that the people of America may realize more than ever the significance of the wide availability and use of the supreme book of mankind both during the past four hundred years and in the year immediately before us. The Committee should be addressed at Box 36, Station D, New York City.

NOW I AM OLD

It has been my desire, in my old age, to provide some endowment for the upkeep and operation of the chapel and academy in Pyeng Yang. I have prayed for this, and in recent months two entirely unexpected sums of money have been put into my hands and invested in this way. Most encouraging of all, my children have volunteered to assist in the endowment of these memorials for their sister.

And this is only a small portion of the results of sixty years of stewardship in one life and home. There is a home mission story, involving the building of at least three chapels which have developed into strong churches, and another story of help given to Christian education, and another as almoner to many of Christ's worthy causes and needy ones, which should be recorded to show how fully and graciously God has fulfilled Malachi 3:10. I plead with every Christian, and especially with young Christians, to become Christian stewards and enter into the joy of this partnership with our faithful God.

Some will not adopt tithing, believing that it is a return to the legalism of the Old Testament. My experience and observation are, that one who begins with the tithe and gives it cheerfully, will find such pleasure and blessing in it that he will gladly enlarge the measure of his giving until he grows up into the New Testament standard and liberty. In this, as in everything else, the Old Testament economy is a schoolmaster to lead us to Christ.

Let us testify to this also: Booking the tithe so that we could see just what it amounted to, then budgeting it to local church, home causes, and foreign missions, enabled us to share more widely and in large things which we at first never dreamed we would be able to do. The Lord did "open the windows of heaven" to us and made these things possible.—William S. Marquis, D. D.; Stewardship Tract Presbyterian Church in U.S.A.

A Proclamation

WHEREAS it is the duty of all nations to acknowledge the providence of Almighty God, to obey His will, to be grateful for His benefits, and humbly to implore His protection and favor; and

Whereas both Houses of Congress have, by their joint committee, requested me "to recommend to the people of the United States a day of public thanksgiving and prayer, to be observed by acknowledging with grateful hearts the many and signal favors of Almighty God, especially by affording them an opportunity peaceably to establish a form of government for their safety and happiness:"

Now, therefore, I do recommend and assign Thursday, the 26th day of November next, to be devoted by the people of these States to the service of that great and glorious Being who is the beneficent author of all the good that was, that is, or that will be; that we may then all unite in rendering unto Him our sincere and humble thanks for His kind care and protection of the people of this country previous to their becoming a nation; for the signal and manifold mercies and the favorable interpositions of His providence in the course and conclusion of the late war; for the great degree of tranquillity, union, and plenty which we have since enjoyed; for the peaceable and rational manner in which we have been enabled to establish constitutions of government for our safety and happiness, and particularly the national one now lately instituted; for the civil and religious liberty with which we are blessed, and the means we have of acquiring and diffusing useful knowledge. . . .

And also that we may then unite in most humbly offering our prayers and supplications to the great Lord and Ruler of Nations, and beseech Him to pardon our national and other transgressions; to enable us all, whether in public or private stations, to perform our several and relative duties properly and punctually; to render our National Government a blessing to all the people by constantly being a Government of wise, just, and constitutional laws, discreetly and faithfully executed and obeyed; to protect and guide all sovereigns and nations (especially such as have shown kindness to us), and to bless them with good governments, peace, and concord; to promote the knowledge and practice of true religion and virtue, and the increase of science among them and us; and, generally, to grant unto all mankind such a degree of temporal prosperity as He alone knows to be best.

Given under my hand, at the city of New York, the 3d day of October, A. D. 1879.

Money Dictates to the Church

"Some have so hankered after money that they have gone astray from the faith."—1 Tim. 6:10, Weymouth.

NEW YORK, Nov. 23.—"Money talks" with increasing power in the reputed temple of the most high God! It determines its missionary policy—it dictates the nature and the method of its teaching! It arranges the curriculum of its theological seminaries! As it provides the means for carrying on its vast world-wide endeavors, so does it also prescribe the direction and the extent of its activities! All this is becoming ever more apparent as the years go by.

Last week John D. Rockefeller, Jr., who, like his father, John D., Sr., has been a lifelong Baptist, announced that he would no longer contribute money for sectarian purposes. "In three non-consecutive years, picked at random," says The Literary Digest, Mr. Rockefeller "gave to the Northern and Southern Baptist churches and their domestic and foreign missions $20,874,000." And this, continues The Digest, "is only a small part of what he has given to the church of his faith."

Hereafter he declared that his donations to religious work will be restricted to "specific projects, chiefly inter-denominational or non-denominational in character." He further states in explaining his change of policy that his interest and faith are "increasingly centered on the principles of Christ's life and teaching as set forth in the four Gospels."

So-called religious "liberals" defend Mr. Rockefeller's attitude toward denominationalism, asserting that his action "gives a strong accent on a notable trend in Protestant denominations," to quote the comment of the editor of the Episcopalian Churchman. All of which reminds us of the prediction made by Dr. Charles W. Eliot, then president of Harvard University, that the religion of the future will have nothing to say of rewards or punishments in a life to come, but will devote its attention entirely to the present, endeavoring to develop within the individual moral and intellectual qualities that will fit him to live a richer and fuller life today. Such a religion would hold out no compensations for the sufferings and the sacrifices we now endure, and would place above every grave the awful words, "All hope abandon, ye who enter here!"

Communism Discontinued

"They had all things common."—Acts 4:32.

CEDAR RAPIDS, Iowa, Nov. 22.—Three years ago the religious community known as the Amana Society, whose eight villages are located a few miles southwest of this city, discontinued the communistic organization under which it had been maintained for more than ninety years and formed a corporation which took over its farms, shops, stores, and other properties, which were worth about $1,500,000, to continue them as a capitalistic enterprise. Each of the 1,400 members of the community was given stock in the new company. According to Capper's Weekly, "This year, up to September, the . . . stockholder employees earned in wages $140,000, about $30,000 more than . . . in the same period last year, and 100 per cent more than was earned in a similar period during the long years of existence of the communistic colony."

For a very limited time the early church at Jerusalem was maintained on a voluntary communistic basis, but after the martyrdom of Stephen and the scattering of the disciples that followed that event, the system came to an end and was never resumed so far as we are able to determine from biblical or profane history. There is no evidence that communism was observed by the early church elsewhere. In fact, quite the reverse is true, for we find different churches and individuals contributing freely to funds for the relief of needy brethren in various localities from their own personal resources.

Await Resurrection of Cult Member

"Deceiving, and being deceived."—2 Timothy 3:13.

BLANDING, Utah, Nov. 22.—The resurrection of Mrs. Edith Pashal, who died ten months ago, is being awaited with unwavering faith by her fellow members of a strange cult that is located on the arid slopes of southeastern Utah. Since her death the woman's body has been daily bathed in salt water as a religious rite. "I cannot tell just when she will come back," said Mrs. Marie M. Ogden, leader of the group. "That is in the future, just like the coming of the Master. Her return to full life must be gradual, as was her disintegration." Bible students would do well to take the prophetic warning of Jesus recorded in Mark 13:21-23 into thoughtful consideration.

Thankful Ellis

SLOWLY the sun crept over the wheatfield, tracking a broad, black shadow-veil across the billows of green falling before the wind's swift passage, and rising again as the sun sent long, quivering gleams through the bright, restless blades.

Beyond the wheatfield, just across the creek, Deacon Ellis was plowing his corn. His hearty "chirrup," whenever old Moll turned into a new furrow, could be heard away down to the big road. And between furrows the good deacon whiled away the time by singing the old, familiar meetinghouse hymn:

"Come, thou fount of every blessing."

He had sung it so constantly that the neighbors called it "Deacon Ellis' hymn." And indeed the song had become his own much more entirely than had the cornfield, with its heavy mortgage, which the deacon was working day and night to pay off.

He had one striking characteristic—Deacon Ellis had; "a peculiarity," the neighbors called it, but it was more properly a characteristic: he never found matters so bad but that they might be worse. This characteristic naturally showed him the brighter side of life's pictures. Though the gossipy neighbors said these same pictures were dark, only the deacon viewed them through peculiar spectacles.

His was no Sunday religion; his voice rang out as cheery and trustful in the cornfield as when in the village church, each Sabbath morning, he led the praises of Jehovah. He carried it with him at all times, and under all circumstances. Sometimes the neighbors laughed at him, and called him "Thankful Ellis."

It happened that while the deacon was singing in the cornfield, Farmer Foster and his wife were driving to town in their new Jersey. They were crossing the creek at the turn of the big road, and stopped a moment to give the mare a drink just as the deacon's song rose to its highest pitch:

"Here I'll raise mine Ebenezer,
Hither by Thy help I'm come.
And I hope by Thy good pleasure,
Safely to arrive at home."

The farmer's wife laughed as she pushed back her sunbonnet to listen.

"The deacon's singing, 'Zekiel,'" she said, "same's if his only cow didn't fall in the ditch yistiddy an' break her leg, an' have to be knocked in the head."

The farmer tapped his whip at a fly on the back of his mare.

"An' the same," he said, "as if his biggest heifer wasn't down with the pink eye. Nothin' can't stop him a-thankin' of the Lord, Nancy. Rain or shine, summer 'n' winter, hit's all the same to Deacon Ellis. There's allus somethin' not quite as bad as it might 'a' been. I've a good mind to drive by, an' ax after the heifer, Nancy."

"Do, 'Zekiel! Hit'll look kinder neighborly," said the farmer's wife, and the Jersey wagon turned out of the big road into the red lane running past the deacon's cornfield. The deacon saw them coming, and called old Moll to a halt, while he went over to the worm fence and exchanged "how-d'ye-do's" with his neighbors. Greetings being over, Farmer Foster inquired after the deacon's wife.

"Well, she's ailin' some, to be sure," was the answer. "She's ailin' some, but the Lord be praised for it, she's up an' about again!"

"An' how's the heifer, deacon?"

"Poo'ly, mighty poo'ly; but 'taint the only one we've got, an' I'm a-thankin' of the Lord for that."

He was always thanking Him for something, good old Deacon Ellis was; though some who were evil-minded hinted that there was hypocrisy in the old man's gratitude, and that "should real trouble come upon him, they would see that Deacon Ellis could grumble as loud as the balance of them." But so far their predictions were without foundation. Out of the misfortune that had come upon him he always found something, either in the evil or by comparison with it, to be grateful for.

The year before, the corn crop had been a failure, and while his neighbors were bewailing their loss, Deacon Ellis was congratulating himself that "the turnips were good anyhow, an' the carrot patch fitten for a king."

Farmer Foster took up his lines; it was no easy matter to condole with his neighbor Ellis.

"Well, deacon," he said, "we druv by to tell you as we felt pow'ful cut up 'bout that fine cow o' yours as broke her leg yistiddy, but seems you don't need no help to bear your bad luck."

Deacon Ellis pulled a cedar splinter from the fence rail before he answered.

"Weel," he said slowly, "my ole 'oman set a sight o' store by that cow, an' my little gal cried for milk last night, to be sure. We'll miss old Spot, there ain't no denyin' o' that. But we (Please turn to Page Eight)

Gratitude

My God, how endless is Thy love!
Thy gifts are every evening new;
And morning mercies from above,
Gently distill like early dew.

Thou spread'st the curtains of the night,
Great Guardian of my sleeping hours;
Thy sovereign word restores the light,
And quickens all my drowsy powers.

I yield my powers to Thy command;
To thee I consecrate my days;
Perpetual blessings from Thine hand
Demand perpetual songs of praise.

Song of Thanksgiving

"In every thing give thanks; for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you."—1 Thess. 5:18

"BUT thank you cannot be drawn." Thus wrote Anne Morrow Lindbergh when, because of forbidding weather, she and her famous husband had found kindness in a far northern fisherman's hut. Not understanding the language of their host, Colonel Lindbergh had drawn a picture of a fish and then had pointed to his mouth to represent hunger. Then, for food and many courtesies they would have said, "Thank you," but, not knowing the language, "thank you" cannot, like the outline of the fish, be drawn. Pencils or brushes, and paper, or canvas are all too exterior, too superficial, to express that heart-offering called thanksgiving. We can say it, we can live it, but we never can quite tell it. The tongue may try but the heart knows.

There is a company of singers mentioned in Revelation (15:3) and they say in their song, "Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; . . . thy judgments are made manifest." Out of a future suffering on earth never before known, these victors will sing, as if only saying it would be too fractional, too unfeelingful; they sing of the works of God while the Beast opposes, and declare how evident is the righteousness of God's doings even when tribulation has become the Great Tribulation. Here is something the pencil cannot sketch. A hundred details of the effect of the wrath poured out might be pictured, but what could ever picture the adoration, the humble heart tribute, the glorying of those godly ones seeking to represent in the song of Moses and the Lamb the righteous acts of God?

And today mere lip "thank you" or written "thank you" cannot be acceptable to God, since He values and reads the heart. Is not this just the real reason why thanksgiving cannot be mapped? Who could draw a diagram of a pure motive? Who could make a sketch of a heart's overflow in praise? Pictures of either tears or singing might be employed, but they could not show the why, the prompting at the roots, the outgoing from the depths.

Real thanksgiving! Find its opposite. Is it complaining? No, for that is an outward exhibit and not a real motive. The opposite to thanksgiving is covetousness. Thanksgiving says, "I offer." Covetousness says, "Give me." Thanksgiving says, "This must go"; covetousness says, "That must come." Thanksgiving outgoes; covetousness indraws. The one is a fountain, the other a vortex. Give covetousness rein, either in government or in individuals, and it will run off with thanksgiving and spill it into abandonment. Give thanksgiving full rein and when it really starts covetousness dies. While covetousness is saying, "That thing for me"; thanksgiving is saying, "So much I already have." Covetousness is idolatry. Thanksgiving responds to the living, personal God.

And at that, thanksgiving starts, not with "I have from God what I do not deserve"; but with "I deserve from God deprivation instead of provision. I deserve the very opposite of His goodness to me." Those who have not tasted this fact cannot know heartfelt obedience to the words, "In every thing give thanks." The very admonition must be a paradox to the person who thinks God owes him something. Ah, "when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful." There it is. When men forsook God, gratitude forsook them. And forsaking God may, in our day, be so secret as to be undetected. For, how can one thank laws? How can one thank electrons and electrodes? How can one thank an it? True thanksgiving must, positively must, have a personal God. It is when men will not glorify God as God, that thanksgiving cannot be. False gods cannot produce it. "This," says our scripture, "is the will of God"; so it must be a living, personal God who has a will. His reason for creating us makes life valued; His way of creating us makes life sacred; that He created us should prompt gratitude. All that cheapens life opposes all these truths about creation or disregards them. Here, no room for the superficial can be found. "Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou formed me thus?"

In that statement of our Lord Jesus, "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hidden these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes," we see no hint of man's possibility of bringing to the fore his own effort as even a very small item in his note of thanksgiving. Babes do not produce. Babes are not marchers, much less soldiers. To babes can be revealed what will produce real thanksgiving. The wise and prudent, in their own estimation, forgetting who gave them life, are deprived of thankfulness. So also, God, sending rain and sunshine upon the evil and unjust, does not prompt real gratitude in them. God, who He is, and His attributes, must be recognized as at the very base in gratitude. It reminds one of the lovely daughter who said to her sweet mother that she could wish she had known her longer, and met her earlier. It is the person!

It is this that opens the way for thanksgiving because of providences. Food and clothing and shelter and conveniences prompt thanksgiving because back of them, to the Christian, is God. The difficulty in seeing why the Christian can thank God for apparent adversity vanishes on account of the fact that, back of all, his gratitude is prompted by this fact—God. The whole question of providences in behalf of the Christian is lifted from the realm of mere observation, which, at best, must be faulty, into the heights of the will of God. The Christian lives there.

"I worship Thee, sweet will of God."

God has undertaken the case. God has eternal values involved for the saved one. God sets the curriculum and the Christian learns the lessons. The Christian cannot do both, and it is equally true that he does not know how to set the lessons. So, for providences which seem favorable and for those which seem adverse he is in everything to give thanks. Nothing is to kill the song unto God in his heart. Alone in the forest or surrounded by the throng, in prosperity or adversity, the song must not die. It is also a spiritual lubricator to the machinery of eternal motion. It is needed.

There are, however, in providences some facts which we know, we positively know are benefits. There is the Book,

Thanksgiving for Personal Contacts

By R. H. Judd

"Whom when Paul saw, he thanked God, and took courage."—Acts 28:15.

IT IS the humanity of Scripture that is its appealing force. It was written for men. "Unto you, O men, I call; and my voice is to the sons of men."—Prov. 8:4, R. V. There is not a characteristic of man's nature but what Scripture has given it vivid portrayal in the lives of men and women who lived, and who still live their lives over and over again in the men and women of today. Men in every walk in life are thrilled, hushed, and awed by the wonderful Bible sketches of human biography. So true to nature, so transparent in their sincerity, they have come to be recognized as the acme of appeal to every instinct with which our wonderful human personality is endowed.

James tells us that Elijah was a man of like passions with ourselves, and we cannot read the Epistles of Paul without being touched by this very thought, viz., that he exemplified in a marked degree the prominent traits of human character, and each one seems to be intensified by his contact with Jesus Christ. Take that of courage mentioned in the scripture quoted above. That Paul was a man of eminent courage he proved by the very successes he achieved before he became a convert to Jesus Christ. Great as these successes were, they owed much of their success to inherited character from a long list of predecessors, and the support and sympathy of those immediately interested in him. It was the "current of events" that carried him forward. Coming into contact with Jesus Christ intensified his courage, making him capable of standing alone, as he had not done before, as a witness for God among the rough mariners on the voyage to Rome.

Only those who through the intensity of their convictions have sought to stand for truth single-handed can realize the mental and spiritual strain Paul must have passed through in those days and nights upon the deep, in which probably the solitude of the night was the harder to bear.

The scripture does not state that Paul lost courage. Probably outwardly he did not; but reading between the lines of our text we are reasonably certain that, like Elijah, his counterpart in the Old Testament, he was on the verge of collapse. What was it then that revived Paul and gave him new courage and fresh hope? Some brethren, when they heard of Paul's coming, went to meet him—"whom when Paul saw, he thanked God, and took courage."

Looking back over Elijah's history, we find that God gave to each of these two giants of courage a similar answer in their moments of distress, viz., the knowledge that there were others who were true to Him. They each thought that they alone in the sphere in which they lived were witnesses for God. Is it not remarkable that Paul in his Epistle to the Romans should call to mind this very fact in Elijah's history? Again and again in his Epistles Paul speaks with warm-hearted thankfulness of the faith of others, and his keen appreciation of personal contact with them (2 Thess. 1:3).

Preeminently, Thanksgiving Day has come to be regarded as a day of personal contact, of relative with relative, of friend with friend, and through such there may be much blessing. We believe that God often uses this method of bringing blessing. It was so in the case of Elisabeth and Mary, of Naomi and Ruth, of David and Jonathan, and Paul and Titus. David says, "Let the righteous be glad, let them rejoice before God, yea, let them exceedingly rejoice." Why? Because "he setteth the solitary in families, and bringeth out them that are bound in chains." Paul, with all his courage, could never have carried the gospel into places where Christ was not named, had not God given him, from time to time, the joy of fellowship and personal contact with those of like faith.

Many earnest workers of the Church of God live in comparative isolation. In the very midst of religious activity in which they are unable to join, their loneliness becomes intensified, and never can any servant of the Lord who has not been like placed realize the intensity of the loneliness that at times almost overwhelms them.

The practice of the Church of God to send a line of personal greeting and comfort to those on beds of sickness or pain is much to be commended, and it does, as the writer has himself experienced, bring real comfort and blessing. It is the next best thing to personal contact. But why limit the ministration? "As cold waters to a weary (R. V.) soul, so is good news from a far country."—Prov. 25:25. One of the things we need to learn is "how to speak a word in season to him that is weary" (Isa. 50:4).

Tomorrow

ALL BIBLE students who are familiar with the geography of the Holy Land know that north of the Sea of Galilee, and above the line of sea level, are the Waters of Merom. In the maps found in the back of the Scofield Reference Bible there is one of Galilee which shows not only the location of this beautiful mountain lake, but also gives the conventional geographical signs indicating that the whole valley to the north is swamp land. During the last few weeks this whole valley has come into the possession of the Jews.

Twenty-one years ago, just before the war, the Turkish Government presented this valley which the Jews today call the Huleh Valley to two wealthy Arab landowners of Beirut. They undertook to reclaim the area and to place ten thousand dunams—about twenty-five hundred acres—at the disposal of the peasants who occupied the territory. They failed, however, to fulfill their obligation. In 1920 these concessionaires applied to the British Government for a prolongation of their concession. The Government agreed, but added certain conditions to the terms of the concession. In spite of repeated failures to fulfill the terms of their undertaking, the Arab concession was renewed several times. On several occasions the Arabs offered it to the Jews at an exorbitant price and the land was allowed to stand idle. After the calamity which befell German Jewry, the question again came to the fore. Dr. Chaim Weizmann and other Jews entered into negotiations and the Government agreed to transfer the concession to the Palestine Land Development Company upon the payment of almost $1,000,000. The official Zionist publication speaks of the acquisition in the following terms: "This achievement marks the turning of a new page in the history of our national colonization. Huleh not only offers the opportunity for the absorption on the land of tens of thousands of Jewish workers and gives them the possibility of adopting a normal, free mode of life in their national home, but it marks a further milestone in the upbuilding of Palestine.

"Huleh is situated in upper Galilee. It is a valley extending northward from Lake Merom. It presents a dismaying appearance of desolation and ruin. The valley bed is covered with a surface of green, not the wealthy green of flourishing fields, but the moldy exerescence of swamp land. The Bedouins who are to be found in the vicinity are sickly and emaciated in countenance. In ancient times Huleh was one of the most fertile and productive areas in the country. Jacob pronounced this blessing on Asher who occupied this region: 'The bread of Asher shall be full-fed, and he shall provide the choice food of the king.'" (This is the Jewish translation of Genesis 49:20). "'Blessed among the children of Israel is Asher; he shall be favored above his brethren; his foot shall be dipped in oil,' was the benediction repeated by Moses" (Jewish translation of Deuteronomy 33:24). "These blessings were fulfilled. It is frequently mentioned in the Talmud that the Huleh Valley possessed an abundance of olive trees and oil. In the time of Josephus it was one of the most popular settlements in Palestine. It is now an unexploited treasure trove, covered over with a surface of bogs and slime, from which the cultivators must once more extract its wealth in full measure."

The area of the enlarged concession is about 15,000 acres. The lake covers over 4,000 acres and the marsh land about 5,500 acres. The reclamation commission envisage the draining and reclaiming not only of the swamps, but of half of Lake Merom. Two thousand families, many of them German refugees, will be settled on the land. Some are already there beginning the reclamation of the marsh lands, and together with the others who will go in as tradesmen, artisans, and other non-agricultural workers, it is estimated that in Huleh alone thirty thousand souls will be able to subsist. It is no wonder that the figures for immigration for the month of March, 1935, officially published on the very day we write this article in Jerusalem, show the largest number of immigrants in any one month since the war: 7,077 Jews, 36 Arabs, and 83 of other nationalities. Compare this with the fact that only 5,249 Jews came to Palestine in the year 1929, 4,944 in 1930, 4,075 in 1931, 9,553 in 1932, and 30,327 in 1933. This shows then that the immigration for the single month of March, 1935, was almost as much as the two entire years of 1930 and 1931.

We now return to the treatment of other phases of development in the land of Israel. The Jewish residents in Palestine at the time of the last official census in 1922 composed about one tenth of the population. By all estimates it formed one fifth of the population at the beginning of 1935. The Government has segregated its tax lists and it is possible to know that though the Jews are but one in five of the population, they contributed about 43 per cent of the taxes collected by the Government last year. No income tax is levied by the Palestine Government, but the budget has been fully met; in fact, there has been a Government balance each year. The Government at present is contemplating the introduction of an income tax in order to develop further the resources of the land. The Government of Palestine has paid to the British Government the cost of the maintenance of troops in the country, and further, it paid the sum of 1,000,000 pounds for the railways and roads which were built by the army during the campaign. The importance of this lies in the fact that no other mandated territory in the world has been required to make a similar payment toward the expense of deliverance.

The main item of expenditure, after the police, is the Public Works Department, the most important constructive activity of the Government. It is responsible for the construction and upkeep of the main roads, which, up to the last few years, were for the most part cart tracks usually to be avoided, and are now asphalted highways equal to those of Western countries. This governmental department is also building fine public buildings for administrative departments and post offices. It is also occupied with public water supplies and drainage schemes, the conservation of ancient monuments, and the inspection and control of electrical enterprises.

The Government has also undertaken a most important survey in minutest detail of the whole of the land. The new registry, when completed, will form as it were the Domesday Book of the country, and transfers of land will be recorded simply and certainly. When it is remembered that under the worthless rule of the Turkish Government the land registry department was foremost in corruption, the completion of this cadastral survey is most important for the peace and development of the land. The occupants of the land now have a security of title which was completely lacking previously.

A hydrographical survey has also been undertaken to explore all possibilities of irrigation development. Engineers are surveying the various sites for irrigation dams, the most important of which and probably the first that will be constructed will raise the water level of the whole Sea of Galilee about six feet. Each winter the surface of this great lake thirteen miles long and seven miles wide rises more than six feet, and the construction of this dam will hold the winter flood waters, will generate a great amount of electrical power, and will flow down evenly in the dry season to irrigate the valley below.

The bulk of the Jewish population are still resident in towns. Jerusalem has now passed the hundred thousand mark, and more than sixty-five thousand of these are Jews. The most amazing growth, however, has been that of Tel Aviv, the miracle city of Palestine. Just north of Jaffa, where a few years ago there was nothing but beach, a few Jews started a settlement in the nature of an ocean resort. Let us describe it, however, in the words of Professor Norman Bentwich of the Hebrew University. "Its Hebrew name means 'the hill of the spring' and it represents more glaringly than anything else in the country the hopefulness and determination of the Return. It started, in 1909, as a small suburb built, characteristically, round a secondary school. At the outbreak of the war it had some 2,000 inhabitants. Today (Professor Bentwich wrote in 1933) it is a township of 60,000." (The Hitler persecutions have sent the greatest number of refugees to this city, which is now larger than Jerusalem, with about 120,000 population, according to the official Zionist estimate for February, 1935.) "The riots in Jaffa of 1921 induced an exodus of the Jews of the town to the growing suburb; and the great expansion of the years 1925-6 produced an extraordinary and an almost excessive growth. That was followed by a slump of a few years; but the wave of hopefulness, which has beaten on the shores of Palestine in the last years, has again brought remarkable expansion to the town. The economic foundation for this growth is to be found principally in the remarkable development of the agricultural hinterland of Tel Aviv, the plantations that cover the plain of Sharon. Moreover, the cheap electrical power which is brought from the hydro-electric station of the Jordan has caused some three hundred small industries and a few larger industries to be established. It is a city of concrete and brick, because the stone which is so abundant in Jerusalem and elsewhere in the land is lacking in the plain of Sharon. The town, therefore, does not appear to grow naturally from the soil, like the Greater Jerusalem, or the new Haifa. But it does spring naturally from the Return."

Till 1921 Tel Aviv was a part of Jaffa, but at that time it became a separate municipality. The township raised a loan in America for public purposes and borrowed money for housing schemes from the banks. It maintains its police force, entirely Jewish, with its own commissioned officers. Its school system, founded upon European models, is one of the finest in the world, and today the municipal budget is about a million dollars a year.

Professor Bentwich further describes its activities: "The population of the town bursting with energy forms a main center of Jewish intellectual and artistic life. Most of the poets and writers, the actors and musicians, the painters and sculptors live there. It has an art gallery and a public library. It boasts, too, a large athletic stadium by the banks of the River Yarkon, which was built for a gathering in 1932 of the Maccabee, a Jewish world organization for sport. Every two years an exhibition and fair, which has already some international importance, is held and a new and vaster exhibition ground has now been acquired." There are about 500 non-Jews in this city of 120,000 Jews. We drove through the streets teeming with people, the center of the city already possessing great traffic problems. The shops are undoubtedly the finest in Palestine, and everywhere there seemed a great air of prosperity. As the day came to its close, thousands of people went to the shore of the Mediterranean on which the town lies, and a mile or two along the coast the scene was as animated as that at one of our summer resorts on a Fourth of July afternoon. There was, however, the absence of the holiday spirit. It was clear that these were local citizens relaxing at the close of their day's work.

The Palestine Electric Corporation, an entirely Jewish organization, now supplies electric power for almost all of Palestine outside of Jerusalem. The latest figures available are for the year 1933, and show that about 22,000 consumers were linked to the production plants of the upper Jordan Valley. Industry consumed about 7,000,000 kilowatts; irrigation accounted for 9,000,000; house water supply for 1,500,000; and lighting more than 3,000,000.

The traveler through Palestine is again and again confronted with signs and advertisements that bring forth a smile. The reality of modern civilization in this ancient land is soon borne in upon one. "Slow Down—Nazareth" is the sign passed by the motorist on the road from Galilee. If this is not enough to convince the traveler that he is in a new century in an old land, he has but to be offered Gilead ice cream, or to read some of the advertisements in any publication: "Judæa Dairies treat milk and milk products after the most modern American methods"; "Tiberias Hot Springs, famous in antiquity as the imperial Roman baths"; "Motor Boat Excursion by the twin-screw Kalliohoe on the Dead Sea"; "Sharon Beauty Parlor."

Walking down the street in Jerusalem, I passed by a large house set back in a garden. A brass plate on the stone wall near the gate informed the passer-by that this was the headquarters for Bezaleel Arts and Crafts. This society has been organized for the promotion of Jewish handicrafts, but why Bezaleel? The book of Exodus gives the answer: "Moses said unto the children of Israel, See, the Lord hath called by name Bezaleel the son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah; and he hath filled him with the Spirit of God, in wisdom, in understanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanship; and to devise curious works, to work in gold, and in silver, and in brass, and in the cutting of stones, to set them, and in carving of wood, to make any manner of cunning work. And he hath put in his heart that he may teach, both he, and Aholiab, the son of Ahisamach, of the tribe of Dan. Them hath he filled with wisdom of heart, to work all manner of work, of the engraver, and of the cunning workman, and of the embroiderer, in blue, and in purple, in scarlet, and in fine linen, and of the weaver, even of them that do any work, and of those that devise cunning work."

Not quite so appropriate perhaps is the brass sign at the offices of the Palestine Copper Company, Ltd. Their Hebrew name is given as "Nehustan." I smiled when I saw this, for I remembered that Hezekiah, when he came to the throne of Judah and began the revival that made his reign so blessed, found that the children of Israel were still carrying around the brass serpent which Moses had made and lifted up in the wilderness. Not only did they have it in their possession as a sacred relic, but they were burning incense to it. Hezekiah took it and broke it to pieces. We can almost hear his scornful wrath as he upbraided the people for their folly. What is this thing you have been worshipping? It is nehustan (nehustan—2 Kings 18:4)—nothing but a piece of brass.

So the face of the land is changing, from the swamps of Merom near Dan to the borders of the desert at Beersheba. The land itself, at every glimpse, is showing the signs of a rugged growth as determined men are bringing it back from the desolation it has known through the years and are bringing the ancient language into very modern use.—Donald Grey Barnhouse in Revelation.

got a sight o' nice beef off'n her, an' that's somethin' to be thankful for."

"An' the heifer's down, sure enough?"

Clearly Mrs. Foster didn't find much cause for thanksgiving.

"One's down," said the deacon, "but t'other one's lively as a cricket. We'll have another cow in no time, an' that's worth thankin' the Lord for."

"See here, deacon." Mrs. Foster would hear of no further thanksgiving in the midst of such dire misfortune. She understood exactly what the loss of the cow meant to the invalid wife and sickly daughter of the man who was straining every point in order to pay off the mortgage upon the few acres he called his farm. "See here, deacon," she said, "you send David over to my house every evenin' an' get a quart o' milk for that little gal o' yours. 'Taint no manner o' count to us, an' David can cut across lots an' come for it in no time."

The deacon thanked her and said he would, and in his heart he thanked the Lord for the unexpected good, and that night He thanked Him aloud, upon his knees, for the gift of neighbors and friends. And the next morning at breakfast, when a blessing had been asked upon the humble meal and Mrs. Ellis set a mug of Farmer Foster's nice, new milk before the sick child, who clapped her hands joyfully at sight of it, the deacon bowed his gray head again, and thanked the Master of mercies a second time "for all His many blessings."

The next Sunday he was in his accustomed place at the village church, and when he knelt to pray few would have suspected as he poured forth his prayer of praise and thanksgiving that his only cow had broken her leg in the ditch and his best heifer had died with the pink eye only the week before, and that his last and only hope of a cow had been stricken down with the same disease.

"Streams of merey never ceasing
Call for songs of loudest praise."

Higher and fuller the sweet song rose, as if the singer's life had been one continual round of peace, and his pathway one of roses and perpetual summer. The good man shut his eyes to visible things, and closed his heart to worldly cares; and neither the dead heifer nor the unfortunate cow could shake the foundation of thankfulness in his heart.

Spring ripened into summer, the corn in the deacon's field looked healthy. But the wheat—alas! the sun creeping across the waving billows found rust among the ripening heads. And when it was cut and waiting the deacon's turn for the thresher, the rain set in and the grain sprouted.

The loss of his wheat was a blow to the embarrassed farmer, and he received but little sympathy from his neighbors who had urged him to follow their example, and shock and cap his wheat on the Sabbath as the only possible means of saving it. But with the consistency for which he was noted, he refused to desecrate the Lord's Day, but chose rather to keep that holy, and trust the result to Him who controls the weather.

"Here I'll raise mine Ebenezer."

Farmer Foster riding down the big road heard the deacon's voice, and following the sound found the old man in the ruined field singing among the stubble. Not a break in the grand old hymn to tell of doubt, or discouragement, or distrust. In the midst of wreck and ruin the altar had been erected and reconsecrated to Him who sends both sun to soften and rain to destroy.

"It's bad, mighty bad, a-comin' on me just now, there ain't no denyin' o' that," he told neighbor Foster. "But the cornfield's left, an' that's a good deal to be thankful for."

"So 'tis, so 'tis," replied the farmer, and he went home feeling that somehow Deacon Ellis' affairs were as bad as they could be, but might be worse if the deacon had a mind to look on the dark side.

"Well," said Mrs. Foster, when her good man rode into the back yard, "is Deacon Ellis a-thankin' of the Lord because the wheat's all sp'iled, 'Zekiel?'"

"No, Nancy," replied Farmer Foster, "the deacon ain't such a fool as to do that. He's some cut up about the wheat, but he's jubilein' pow'ful over the corn."

"Well, when the corn's gone he'll mirate over the ground being left. An' when that's tuk there'll sholy be nothin' left for Deacon Ellis to be grorifyin' over. An' it'll be tuk, mark what I tell you, 'Zekiel.'"

It was not long after this that the deacon's little girl died. This was the heaviest blow that had fallen upon him, but so deeply engrossed was he in the effort to comfort his stricken wife that he forgot his own sorrow, and failed also to notice that the drought had ripened the corn before its time, so that where he had hoped to find the full, ripe ear, only premature nubbins were hidden away under the crisp, yellow shucks.

"Well," the deacon drew his wife's head to his bosom, "we have got each other, Mary, an' that's a heap to thank the Lord for."

But even that solace was denied him very long. Always, as the deacon said, "one of the ailin' ones," the strain upon mind and heart was too great for the frail body, and Mrs. Ellis was laid to rest by the side of her little girl under the cedars beyond the wheatfield.

The deacon's cross was growing heavy indeed. The neighbors began to call him Job, and, although his voice still led the old hymn on Sabbath mornings in the village church, there was a quiver in it that told how heavily the tried heart was leaning upon the "Goodness and Mercy" which he declared had followed him "all the days of his life."

Yet he still sang in the cornfield when the skimpy nubbins had been stored, and there was nothing to do but to gather the fodder:

"Oh, to Grace how great a debtor Daily I'm constrained to be."

The poor heart felt a revival of the long-tried trust as the crisp, golden blades rustled to his touch. "It's something to be thankful for," he said to his hired boy, David, pulling the last armful from the stunted stalks.

Then the harvesting was finished; except the gathering of the pippins and the winesaps, and, as the crop had been a short one, the gathering of it in was a small matter.

"We've got enough to eat, anyhow," he told the neighbors, "an' that's something to be thankful for."

Finally the fruit was stored and Deacon Ellis entered into his well-earned winter rest.

"The Lord will let Job alone now," Farmer Foster's wife said, "an' sholy it is time."

But the deacon's troubles were not yet ended; there was still one more calamity in store for him—the fire that burned his barns and destroyed his last faint hope of paying off the mortgage upon his land. It was nearly the final stroke. The old man had buried his wife and child, for whom he worked and saved—now the means of his own livelihood were vanishing.

His neighbors were appalled. The good old deacon had no enemies; and now even those who had found something to laugh at in his strong faith in the face of calamity were shocked.

The Sunday following the burning of the barns the neighbors met early at the church and discussed the matter among themselves. It was finally decided that among themselves they would raise enough money to pay off the mortgage on the farm, and from their own full granaries furnish seed for the next year's crop.

"I want to hear him bless the Lord once more," said Farmer Foster, with a big tear in either eye.

"An' have somethin' to bless Him for," added his wife, as she brushed off a crystal drop that had trickled to the tip of her nose.

Then some one whispered that the deacon was at the door and the congregation settled down to its accustomed quiet and decorum as the old man entered. He was aging, Deacon Ellis was; he leaned heavily upon his staff, and the neighbors noticed, for the first time, how the silver in his hair had given place to snow.

Farmer Foster's tears no longer stood in his eyes, but followed each other in quick succession down his sun-browned cheeks. He felt, as did many others of the congregation, that at last Deacon Ellis stood face to face with that moment in his life when there was nothing left for gratitude.

For the first Sunday since the little church had heard his prayers there would be no thanksgiving. Then the sympathetic farmer thought of the mortgage, already as good as lifted, and he felt a strong impulse to rise up in his place and tell him; to cry out: "Thank the Lord if you wish; go on thanking Him."

So excited did he become that Mrs. Foster touched him on the arm and said, in a whisper: "'Zekiel, kneel down."

The deacon had begun his prayer; broken and quivering the accents, soft and slow the petition. The rod had fallen so heavily! There was a pleading cry for strength, a grasp at faith, a full surrender to the will of Him who doeth all things well; and then, as the voice gathered strength and the heart returned to its old-time trust, the chief characteristic of his religion exerted itself, and Deacon Ellis thanked the Lord that she whom He had given to be to him a helpmate and a solace had been gathered into rest before his calamities had overtaken him.

Then, as the grand old voice rose again in the sweet, familiar hymn:

"Here I'll raise mine Ebenezer,"

the people listening felt indeed the sublimity of Faith erecting its altar upon the ashes of Despair.—Will Allen Dromgoole in Youth's Companion, 189—.

the Word of God. We can have some sense of the reason for being thankful for this. Its exceeding great and precious promises become prayer assets. It is here, too, that we know about our Lord Jesus Christ. This truth is like a great clearing away of shrubs and brush for the saved, that a vision of the real ground of thankfulness may be made quite plain. One can see this in the contrast between the law and grace.

Under the law thanksgiving had much to do with the questions—Did the flocks increase? Did the fruits yield? Were the enemies conquered? And the frosts held back? But in Christ, these lower earthly facts are hardly considered. Here it is Himself. It is what He has done; what He is to the believer; what He assures to the saved one. It is, "Thanks be unto God for His unspeakable Gift."

We are so prone to talk of frail human governments, of depressions and markets, that the word of rebuke must reach us. If we are Christ's people, then His precious blood is so much more to us than silver or gold, or food, or shelter, that these things could have but the smallest effect upon our song of gratitude.

Why, are not all the Christian's acts to be done in thanksgiving? Are they rememberings of the poor? Are things disposed of in charity? Well then, does the saint sing praise because he can trade his good deed at the judgment seat of Christ for reward? Has he established a sinking fund of doings upon which to draw for credit there? Is the Christian an everlasting trafficker? Oh, no, no, no! Rewarded he will be, but his deeds are done in gratitude. One song lasts throughout; it is, "Thanks be unto God for His unspeakable Gift." Gratitude for "the blood of the cross" and for the enabling of the Holy Spirit within; these are the hands that reach out in charity; these, and not earnings of the flesh.

Now, let us get the key to the song in the words of our scripture, "This is the will of God in Christ Jesus," and may we never, never lose it.

"O, could I speak the matchless worth,
O, could I sound the glories forth,
That in my Savior shine!"

Redemption outranks and dominates and rewards all circumstances. That ever we should have met Him, that He should have assured us of salvation and eternal safety, and that He is all to us, this is the key to the song of thanksgiving. Go back to the title the Prophet Isaiah gives Him (the first in the list), "Wonderful," and learn that gratitude cannot be either without wonder. It is when we wonder at the devotion of a friend we want to thank him, or when we wonder at the beauty of the flower we are appreciating it, and not before. So here, when we wonder at the living God, creating and sustaining, redeeming and keeping, then it is that thanksgiving pours forth. And it is irrespective of mere circumstance. It is "in every thing."

And it is in Christ Jesus. There it is where the will of God places it, and there alone can it thrive.

Thus our comforts and conveniences might get in the way. If they come between us and Him ever so little, then, by so much, the fountain of thanksgiving overflows less. If they are actually subservient to Him, then "in every thing" we can, deep below all picturing, have Him read our thanks.

It is not that we may look upon the little and declare that others may have it worse, and consequently we should be thankful. It is, rather, that we have God in Christ, and there we have everything for our good and forever. Real Christian thanksgiving and real bankruptcy cannot be in the same life. "He that spared not his own Son, but freely gave him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?" But, the things are not apart from Himself.—Henry Ostrom in Revelation.

THANK GOD

Thank God for life!
E'en though it bring much bitterness and strife,
And all our fairest hopes be wrecked and lost,
E'en though there be more ill than good in life,
We cling to life and reckon not the cost.
Thank God for life.

Thank God for love!
For though sometimes grief follows in its wake,
Still we forget love's sorrow in love's joy,
And cherish tears with smiles for love's dear sake;
Only in heaven is bliss without alloy.
Thank God for love.

Thank God for pain!
No tear hath ever yet been shed in vain,
And in the end each sorrowing heart shall find
No curse, but blessings in the hand of pain;
E'en when He smiteth, then is God most kind.
Thank God for pain.

Thank God for death!
Who touches anguished lips and stills their breath
And giveth peace unto each troubled breast;
Grief flies before thy touch, O blessed death;
God's sweetest gift; thy name in heaven is Rest.
Thank God for death.

Why Thanksgiving?

At a time when the nations of earth are on the verge of war, when an unprecedented economic depression is just beginning to burn itself out, when ten million men in the United States alone are unemployed, when free countries are being absorbed by imperialistic Powers, the President's recent proclamation of a day of thanksgiving for November 28 seems sadly out of place.

Couched in language which smacks of all the hoary vapors of the past, the proclamation summons the nation to a festival of rejoicing when, in many families, there is neither material for a festival nor apparent cause for rejoicing.

On the whole, it would seem that the President has overstepped himself, and has gone beyond the bounds of reason, accomplishing little more than the perpetuation of an old tradition and the creation of cynical smiles among the poverty-ridden and the thinking members of those classes which are better off.

By the alchemy of the brain, apparently it would be well were men to convert the reference of Eliphaz from Job to God Himself: "Thou hast not given water to the weary to drink, and thou hast withholden bread from the hungry."

It was in a Psalm that David said, "I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread."

There is, indeed, something for which to thank God because of the financial and social panic of the past six years. In times of prosperity men today, like Israel of yesterday, forsake God and His religion, making gods of wood and steel and stone and gold. But as the depths of the deep depression in the economic graph were reached, men came to seek God, and to plead with Him to alleviate their suffering.

If nothing else than this has been accomplished by the troubles of the last half decade, the panic has served a splendid purpose. Men, some of them, have come to realize that riches are not everything, that coins and paper representing coins do not mean happiness, that life is fuller, richer, far more valuable when God is taken from the closets of the mind and, dusted off, placed in a prominent position.

The righteous have never been forsaken. Miracles may not have been utilized for their salvation, but in other ways God has protected His people with a love that cannot fail. The difficulty confronting the world today is in the definition of that word "righteous."

Too many are too likely to consider themselves as being good. The Pharisees were of that many. And in language that drew upon the most insulting epithets, Jesus the Christ flayed the Pharisees with an excoriating venom which, thanks to the inspired Matthew, will be immortal.

One's own opinions of his righteousness are not what matter in the sight of God. One's own opinions are colored by education, inheritance, mental power, environment, self-love, and prejudice. God's thoughts, decisions, are based upon true knowledge of the deeps of character. His treatment of mankind is founded upon the knowledge that He has.

What has befallen man is not the fault of God. Man should be thankful that God has not permitted conditions to be worse. What has befallen man, he has brought upon himself, even as execution or a life in prison is the natural aftermath of murder.

Let the world return to God, and then it will have reason to complain if circumstances continue as they are. But this will never be. The world will not return to God. The world will sneer at religion and its "superstitious" faith. The world will preach its might, and look to the accomplishment of miracles itself. And while this deification of mankind goes on, the social condition of the world can never be improved without the intervention of some external force.

For this we can be thankful: that God has not permitted man to encompass his own complete destruction; that God has given man the promise of salvation, if man is willing to accept His terms; that, finally, God has ignored the rebellions of humanity and has not yet visited upon it the penalties which so justly are its due. Thus, and not because of shallow mouthings originating in the minds of men, can we be thankful.

Give Thanks

For sweet hopes born and for sorrows dead;
For true songs sung and for fond words said;
For the ready cup, for the daily bread;

For the race that the faithful feet have run;
For the bitter strife, for the battle won;
For brave deeds planned, and for brave deeds done;

For the truth that liveth for evermore;
For mercy's graciously open door;
For the light that shines from the other shore—

Give thanks, give thanks. Lo, the Spirit saith,
Let everything that hath voice or breath
Give thanks for life—for life and death.

BUILDERS WITH GOD

LAST week we left Ezra teaching the returned exiles the way to live so as to please God. After a long and dangerous journey, you remember, Ezra, with a large number of people and a great treasure, had safely reached the homeland. Ezra's most important task was to show his brethren their mistakes and how to correct them.

There was much more work to accomplish also, but the first thing for all of them to learn was God's way of living. The walls about Jerusalem had not been repaired since the enemy had gone in more than a hundred years before this. And walls were more necessary to a city in that day than paved streets are today.

When God sees that His people are trying to follow Him, He always sees that they are protected as well. And so He put in another man's heart a great desire to return to the homeland and help the returned exiles. This man was named Nehemiah.

You recall that Ezra was a scribe who copied the law of God. What position did this new man, Nehemiah, occupy? Look at the last six words in the 1st chapter of his book, and you will see. The King was fond of Nehemiah.

He must have been a good servant to the King, because we read that when the King found out what Nehemiah wanted to do, he asked him how long he would be gone. Then the King helped Nehemiah all he could to get ready for the journey.

After Nehemiah had been in Jerusalem three days he took a moonlight ride about the city one night to see just how great a work was before him. Then he called together the head men of the city and talked his plans over with them. He also told them how God had helped him and that he always asked God just how to proceed in everything.

By now they knew just what sort of person Nehemiah was, and they must have had confidence in him at once. For they said, "Let us rise up and build," at the end of Nehemiah's speech. They had a mind to work.

Nehemiah showed further what a wise man he was by the way he divided the work. He gave everyone who was willing a certain portion of the work to do. And the best part of it was, everyone was willing.

But they could not have accomplished the great task without their great Partner. And who was that? Yes, God was the Builder who helped them and protected them when the enemy came in to put a stop to their work.

The workers had to carry their swords right with them every day. Part of the time one half the men had to guard the other half while they worked. Do you think only the men helped build the wall? Look in chapter 3, verse 12. Some of you girls, I'm sure, could help your brothers build a fence.

The enemy were very tricky, you know. They tried every way to hinder things. They tried to get Nehemiah away from his position so that they could rush in and surprise the workers. But Nehemiah was too wise for them. He said, "I cannot come down," when they pretended they wanted to consult with him.

How long do you think it took to finish this great work of repairing the walls and making new gates? Look in chapter 6, verse 15, and you will see. That's easy to remember; just as many days as weeks in a year. In all that time Nehemiah and his servants never took off their clothes, only to change them for clean ones.

But for all their watchfulness, do not forget that they could never have succeeded had not God been on their side. Nehemiah kept their courage up by telling them that very often. "Our God shall fight for us," was their watchword.

FOR YOUR BIBLE SCRAPBOOK:

This is lesson 10, and I am wondering how many of you are working on your Scrapbooks each week. If you will write and tell me, your name will appear on this Page. You know, even the older ones who read this Page like to see the names of the girls and boys who work on the lessons each week. Tell us what Sunday school you go to and who is your teacher, if you go.

Now write the story of Nehemiah and the work he did in Jerusalem. Tell about the difficulties they had while they were building and who helped them. Remember, all the time Ezra was there, too, teaching the people God's way of living. And we'll find out more about Ezra next week.

For your picture draw a part of a wall and two people working on it, while two people guard the workers. Draw another man blowing a trumpet to warn them that the enemy is near. Last copy this verse:

"My master was a worker
With daily work to do;
And he who would be like Him
Must be a worker, too.
Then welcome honest labor
And honest labor's fare,
For where there is a worker
The Master's man is there."

NEHEMIAH REBUILDING THE WALL OF JERUSALEM

Nehemiah 2:1 to 7:4

GOLDEN TEXT

"The people had a mind to work."—Nehemiah 4:6.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Nehemiah Rebuilding the Wall of Jerusalem.

Aim: God expects us to use our own judgment and strength to overcome difficulties and to ask Him to do for us what we cannot do for ourselves.

Class Discussion: Ways in which men oppose God's work today. Putting our intellectual powers at the disposal of the church. What talent do I have that God could use? Prayer a protection against discouragement.

I. United Effort. (Neh. 4:6.) The great task was done. The two parts of the wall were joined together at last. Under the most trying conditions the work went on without interruption to a successful termination because "the people had a mind to work." When men and women are engaged in a common cause, unity of purpose and willingness to work hard and long are almost certain to result in success.

II. Prayer and Work. (Vv. 7-9.) The same God who promises to hear and grant the prayers of His people in every time of need has placed upon His children certain obligations in proportion to the physical and intellectual powers He has given them. While He stands ready to respond to "the prayer of faith" on every occasion, at the same time He expects each one to exercise his own intelligence and to utilize his own strength in the accomplishment of the purpose for which he prays. God will augment our lack of wisdom, and He will add to our puny force all that is required to accomplish the work He has assigned to us, but, like Nehemiah, we must do our part.

III. Zeal in the Lord's Service. (Vv. 15-21.) God has use for every faculty man possesses. He used the military genius of Moses and of Nehemiah, the education of Paul, the judicial ability of Solomon, as He used the spiritual insight of the Apostle John. In His service we present our entire beings for His use. The returned Jews labored from sunrise till dark in the hardest kind of toil, under the most discouraging and threatening conditions, that the building of the wall might go on. God expects no less from us today. The best that we have and are is but our "reasonable service" to Him (Rom. 12:1). Giving less than our all marks us as indifferent and unprofitable servants.

GOLDEN TEXT

"The people had a mind to work."—Neh. 4:6.

The wall of Jerusalem was built because the people had a mind to work. In other words the people were interested in getting the wall completed for protection; therefore they went to work with a will and accomplished the task against all opposition. But little is accomplished when one works in a half-hearted way, but when these people built they went at it wholeheartedly and soon something was done.

It is just as true in Christian work as it is in material work, that we must put our whole being into the task at hand and work with a will and have a mind to do it if we would expect to succeed in the Christian life. In a way the Christian life protects one as did the wall of Jerusalem protect them who dwelt inside. Have in mind to work and work with a will to build up a wall of defense for the Christian.

—L. A. R.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Nehemiah

- took his troubles to the Lord in prayer;
- instilled in the people a mind to work;
- set watches against those who would destroy the work;
- kept the people working in harmony;
- inspired the people not to fear, for the Lord was on their side.

When Right, Go Ahead. The work of rebuilding the walls of Jerusalem was not an easy task. The enemies of the Jews were mocking them and conspiring against them. A league of several of the nations was formed to come against Jerusalem. Nehemiah knew he was right. Further, he knew that the Lord was on his side and was not afraid what his enemies could do to them. He went right ahead with the work assigned him by the Lord. With one hand they worked and with the other they carried their weapons. It was an uphill job with such a handicap, but where there is a will there is a way. We should always be sure that we are right, and when we have fully ascertained this fact, then apply ourselves with determination and courage. How necessary this is in Christian work! Especially in regard to teaching the truth. The early Christians were convinced of the truth of their messages, and with unbounded zeal and fervor they preached it everywhere. These convictions concerning truth brought persecution and martyrdom, but they were certain of their messages, so they went straight ahead in face of all opposition.

A Mind to Work. The people had a mind to work. They were interested in their work. How necessary this is, if a person is to give his best. A half-hearted attempt is never successful and productive of what it is possible to accomplish when one really applies himself. The Sunday school or church worker that has a mind to work and is given opportunity to give expression to his willingness is worth several half-hearted workers.—C. E. R.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

Teamwork

Less than fifteen years elapsed between last week's lesson and this. The first returned captives had restored their homes and rebuilt the temple, but the walls about Jerusalem still lay in ruins. The Samaritans to the north and roving desert tribes from the south worried and robbed the returned exiles. News of this distress reached Nehemiah, who was cup-bearer to the Persian King. Himself an exile, he must first gain the King's consent to return to his homeland. God again softened a ruler's heart toward His people, and not only consent was given, but orders for material to be used in the wall and a personal bodyguard for Nehemiah. The teacher may assign to different pupils the following: Nehemiah's first action upon reaching Jerusalem; assembling the leaders and outlining his plan; how his enthusiasm spread so that each family volunteered to aid; his wise division of the work; his method of protection from enemies for the workers. Were the men and boys the only ones to do actual work on the wall (3:12)? Did Nehemiah and his helpers trust only in their own wisdom and strength (v. 9)? What sort of an overseer was Nehemiah (4:23)? How long did it take to complete this great undertaking (6:15)? What does the comparative shortness of the time reveal in regard to Nehemiah and the God he worshiped?

Remember: Nehemiah's reply to the enemy was, "I cannot come down"; apply it to your own life.—M. G.

JUNIOR CLASS

Text: Neh. 4:6-9, 15-21. Topic: A Difficult Task. Memory Verse: "Our God shall fight for us."—Neh. 4:20b.

Review. Ask, "What work did Ezra do in our lesson last Sunday?" "Describe Ezra's journey to Jerusalem." "What difficulty did they encounter and what did they do to overcome it?"

Presentation of Lesson. Today we study about the rebuilding of the walls of Jerusalem. This is a story particularly interesting to children because of their love for excitement and adventure. Present the story in such a way that it will emphasize the hardship under which they worked, and yet bring out clearly their confidence in God giving them aid. Tell story as follows: (1) how parts of the wall were built and ready to be connected; (2) the enemies hear of the rebuilding of the walls; (3) the enemies plan to fight against Jerusalem; (4) the people build the walls with a weapon in one hand and working with the other (half of the people working and other half guarding); (5) their confidence in God.

Memory Verse. "Our God shall fight for us" is the reason why the wall was successfully built at Jerusalem. Repeat it. Will God do the same for us?

Notebook. Draw picture of Jerusalem with a new wall surrounding it. Under it write Nehemiah 4:23. Give a true and false test on lesson. Example: The people were building a wall around Jerusalem (true, false).—V. C. T.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

BRUSH CREEK, OHIO

At last we are again able to announce the exact particulars of our fall meetings. Bro. C. E. Randall of Fonthill, Ont., and Niagara Falls, N. Y., will be with us from November 25 to December 8. Bro. Randall is one of our leading speakers, and his sermons will help you. Come. We want you.

S. E. Magaw, Pastor.

GOLDEN RULE HOME

The Oregon church will hold its annual Thanksgiving dinner at Golden Rule Home next Thursday night. Each family will provide a well-filled basket and spread their repast in the spacious rooms of the Home that the entire Family may join in the feast. Following the dinner a brief program, featuring the thought of Thanksgiving, will be presented.

As we go to press word reaches us that Sr. Chaffee is under the care of a physician. Her illness is not thought to be serious, and we trust that she will be fully restored to health in time to take part in the Thanksgiving festivities. Sr. Chaffee has been a resident of the Home from the time of its dedication.

The Oregon Dorcas Society recently provided the Home with hot water bottle covers, and is planning various other little items needed for the comfort and convenience of its members.

BURR OAK, INDIANA

We are back home again, with the wife and Sr. Elizabeth Zechiel, after a day's services at Kokomo. The Bible school attendance was 55; young people's Bereans, 20; and adult Bereans on Monday evening, 15. At our evening service the church occupants were 40. We feel this day was encouraging.

Sr. Jesse Zechiel rendered an appreciated service by speaking in the writer's absence at the morning worship hour.

Bro. and Sr. Dale Davis entertained the Morning Star Class in their home Wednesday the 13th. To be an energetic group doing something to benefit the work is their aim.

Our ladies are setting a pace that makes one step along to keep up with them. Another quilt is almost finished. This week they meet all day at the home of Sr. Herman Young.

An annual event took place Sunday the 17th when Bro. and Sr. Ernest Wisely, Bro. and Sr. Melvin Osborn, and Bro. and Sr. Dunn Weaver and their families gathered at the home of the Weavers in celebration of their wedding anniversaries.

Bro. and Sr. Melvin Osborn are moving from the farm into Culver. Their son Gerald and wife will remain on the farm.

In our activities, may we recognize our efforts must be toward the end of assisting others to be drawn closer in fellowship with one another and with our heavenly Father. When Jesus comes, shall we be found faithful, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord.

A. E. Hoskins, Pastor.

Have you a catalog of general Sunday school and church supplies? Catalogs will be sent free on application to the National Bible Institution. The 1935 editions have just been issued.

RIPLEY, ILLINOIS

Sr. Helen Lewis has been ill, but is somewhat better at this time.

The pastor's wife is being visited by her sister, Miss Iva Reynolds, of Oregon, Ill.

We are planning a Thanksgiving Day service to be held at 9 a. m. Everyone is to take part in this service in some manner.

Our Bible study and prayer service is held each Thursday evening. We are studying "Ways and Forms of Worship."

The work here continues to progress nicely under the leadership of Bro. Harvey U. Krogh, Jr.

May the Father's blessing be upon us at all times, as we labor in His vineyard.

Ednah Cooper, Secretary.

MEETING AT ELDORADO, ILLINOIS, CLOSES

The special meeting that had been in progress for two weeks in the Church of God at Eldorado, Ill., came to a close Sunday night, Nov. 17, with the largest attendance present that had as yet greeted the evangelist. The attendance was not large at any time, which in a measure no doubt was due to the rainy weather, bad roads, and to the fact that two or three other "revivals" were in progress at the same time in the vicinity. A satisfactory interest, however, was shown by a number outside of the church membership, and it is believed that in the near future definite results will come from the effort put forth.

Bro. James McLain as song leader in the early part of the meeting rendered splendid service and contributed much to the interest that was developed. He was called home, however, before the meetings came to a close.

The evangelist in charge was G. E. Marsh, editor of The Restitution Herald, who used a large and attractive chart of the ages to advantage in presenting the outstanding truths of the gospel.

Sunday schools looking for inexpensive books for children and adults at Christmas time would do well to consult with the National Bible Institution regarding them. Gift books from 10 cents up, with or without illustrations; book marks 3 cents up; full-color pictures 3 cents up; Bibles 75 cents up; special translations 60 cents up.

The pastor and his wife of the Ripley, Ill., congregation, Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Krogh, Jr., were called to Oregon on November 24 as a result of the accidental death of Mrs. Krogh's eldest sister, Ethel Reynolds. Miss Reynolds was riding in a car which crashed into an unlighted train at Davis Junction, Ill., on the evening of November 23.

The Abreast of the Times department is, beginning with this issue, again under the supervision of the editor, G. E. Marsh, who returned on November 12 from a series of meetings held at Eldorado, Ill.

BACK TO SOUTH LAWN

Our six days of meetings with the brethren at Blood River Church in Louisiana closed Sunday night, Nov. 17, with the little log church crowded to capacity, some standing, and some seated on the floor. We have a very devoted and faithful group in this community, and the seed of truth is being sown and cultivated so that some real results may be looked for in the near future.

Monday night was spent at the home of Bro. and Sr. Lyon in Citronelle, Ala., and these lines are written as we make the last lap of our long trip back to the loyal workers at good old South Lawn Church in Grand Rapids. Word to us has indicated that the different ministers have rendered very acceptable service during our absence, and it is a real comfort to know that there are capable persons to take care of the various departments of the church work.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

IT'S REQUESTED AGAIN

From Mrs. Nora Johnson, Briggsdale, Colo., comes the following comment and appeal:

"I surely do appreciate the weekly visits of The Herald, always filled with inspiring, comforting spiritual food. I always read every article printed.

"I'm much interested in many of the sermon topics often mentioned from our various churches and often wish we might have a brief synopsis of some of them in our paper, for those who are isolated hear very little truth from other sources."

GEORGE ALVA BOYER

George Alva Boyer, son of William and Regina Boyer, was born in Powell's Fort Valley, Shenandoah County, Va., December 5, 1844, and passed from this life November 16, 1935.

He was united in marriage to Mary Susan Saum by Elder William Peters on February 15, 1877. To this union were born five children. Virginia Kathrine, Clarence Lee, and two infants (twins) preceded the father in death. One son, George W. Boyer, one brother, Samuel E. Boyer, four grandchildren, and the widow survive.

Shortly after the beginning of the War between the States, he enlisted in the Confederate Army in the cavalry, and served in White's battalion, Rosser's brigade, being considered one of the bravest of its famed members.

Throughout life he stood firmly for the principles which he considered right, according to his honest convictions. He united with the Church of God over seventy years ago and was a very devoted and ardent member until his death. Funeral services were conducted from his home on November 18 by his pastor. Words of comfort were based upon portions of Scripture selected from the 15th chapter of 1 Corinthians, the Psalms, and the book of Job. He was laid to peaceful rest in Massanutten Cemetery, Woodstock, Va., to await the return of the Lord and Master.

CRUSADERS

By Lucille Le Crone

MANY thousands of dollars were spent in the filming of the motion picture, The Crusades. It is heralded as a mighty spectacle, magnificent in splendor, and will no doubt be viewed by millions of people. It will go down in motion picture history as among the greatest of pictures, along with Ben Hur, The King of Kings, and The Ten Commandments.

Many people will know much more about the crusades than they ever would have known had not this picture been made. But how many of them will learn anything from the picture that will benefit them in their own lives?

All who have named the name of Jesus are Crusaders, fighting, not to see the cross where Jesus died and the sepulcher where He was buried, but to see Him who died upon the cross and who arose the third day from the sepulcher. Hard is the fight and many are the enemies, and who can expect to be victorious unless he manifests as great zeal and enthusiasm as the Crusaders? They were willing to leave homes, mothers, wives, and children behind them to start on a long journey, fraught with many hardships and dangers, to fight that they might rescue from the hands of the Mohammedans the holy places of Palestine. Jesus said, "Who-soever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple," and, "Every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive an hundredfold, and shall receive everlasting life."

Paul tells us that "no man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life." The affairs of this life are the greatest foes we have to fight, for our warfare is not against flesh and blood, but against the foes of spirituality. Pleasure, business, home, whatever it may be that causes us to become indifferent or lukewarm to the cause of Christ and to absent ourselves from the house of worship is the foe we must fight.

No army can win a battle unless they are trained and prepared to fight. No man can fight a good fight unless he is properly trained and equipped for fighting. He must have armor to protect himself from the attacks of the enemy and he must have weapons with which to attack the enemy. Paul exhorts us to put on the whole armor of God that we may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. The complete armor consists of the girdle of truth, the breastplate of righteousness, the shield of faith, the helmet of hope, the sword of the Spirit, and "your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace."

The girdle was used to brace the armor tight to the body and covered the two parts of the breastplate where they joined.

The breastplate was made of metal and covered the entire upper part of the body. We are to put on the breastplate of righteousness, not our own righteousness, for that is as filthy rags, and filthy rags would be little protection from the sword of the enemy. We are to have "even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe."

That breastplate of righteousness must be bound closely to us with the girdle of truth. Righteousness alone will not save a man, but must be accompanied by truth. "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." "That they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness."

The shield of faith is not to keep trials, troubles, and temptations from us, but to help us overcome them. "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." Then the greater our faith, the greater will be our chances for victory. Much has been written about faith, but too much cannot be said, for "without faith it is impossible to please him."

We complete our protective armor by donning the helmet of hope "of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world began," and by having our feet well shod with the gospel of peace. Few are well shod, for few understand the gospel of peace. (Turn to Page Ten)

Abreast of the Times

Italy Will Fight Oil Embargo

"And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oil."—Matthew 25:8.

ROME, Italy, Nov. 28.—The proposal by Canada to the League of Nations that oil be included in the sanctions brought against Italy has called forth a strong protest from Il Duce. Like the foolish virgins of Jesus' parable Italy's oil supply is being rapidly exhausted and the mechanized warfare now going on in Ethiopia cannot long be continued unless a constant supply of this essential is assured. According to the latest advices from reliable authorities, should the League adopt an oil restrictive policy toward Italy the Government will at once withdraw its ambassadors from all countries supporting the oil sanctions and probably make an immediate attack by airplanes upon the British fleet in the Mediterranean.

This latest threat against the peace of the world is especially interesting to the United States, which is using the influence of the Administration to prevent the shipment of oil to Italy. What Italy's action toward this country would be if it should declare war against the League nations because of the oil sanction, is difficult to determine. This, however, is evident: Such an action on the part of Il Duce would bring the United States directly and unavoidably into the picture.

Doctrinal Dispute Goes to Court

"Are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters?"—1 Corinthians 6:2.

MOUNT CARROLL, Ill., Nov. 26.—The bitter controversy, which centered largely in the proper mode of baptism, which has been agitating the Christian Church at Thomson, Ill., near here, for several months, came to a head today when it was brought into Circuit Court for a hearing. The church is an independent body having no connection with any nationally organized denomination and hence possesses no general body before which the matter under dispute can be brought for adjudication; therefore, it finally found its way into the court of Judge Albert Manus.

The petitioners, numbering 22 and comprising a minority of the congregation, accused Rev. David E. Todd, pastor, of preaching that some of the New Testament miracles were "myths" and that immersion was not the only proper form of baptism.

The church throughout its local history has been an immersionist body and fervently "fundamental" in its teaching. Since the present pastor assumed charge of the congregation three years ago, it is contended by his opposers, he has disregarded these basic principles of teaching and introduced Modernism into the pulpit, and therefore should not be permitted to preach longer in the church.

After listening to lengthy arguments on both sides, the judge refused to grant an injunction forbidding Rev. Todd to continue as the leader of the church and dismissed the case.

European War Again Imminent

"Wars and rumours of wars."—Matthew 24:6.

LONDON, Dec. 2.—Again the threat of a general war in Europe has arisen. Premier Laval of France, who has been conducting negotiations with Italy in an effort to postpone the enforcement of an oil embargo against that nation, has been sternly repulsed by Mussolini, and "hope for a peaceful settlement of the Ethiopian war has dropped to a new low ebb," declares a correspondent of the Associated Press.

While Italy scoffs at "peace talk," Great Britain appears to be making every effort to prepare to meet any possible development of the next few weeks. The entire situation has been further confused by the action of Canada, which now has asserted her refusal to concur in the League's proposed oil sanctions against Italy, a proposal which was originally introduced by Canada herself.

Bagdad-Jerusalem Telephone Line Opened

"Instruction comes from Sion, and from Jerusalem the Eternal's word."—Isaiah 2:3, Moffatt.

JERUSALEM, Nov. 28.—A new telephone line extending across the Arabian Desert from Jerusalem to Bagdad was officially opened yesterday when John Hathorn Hall, Deputy High Commissioner of Palestine, had conversation with Yahsin Pasha Al Hashimi, Premier of Iraq (ancient Babylon). It required 108 days for the Jews under Ezra to traverse the 900 miles from Babylon to Jerusalem. Communication between the two regions is now practically instantaneous.

A Question Answered

By R. H. Judd

POPULAR theology without any evidence assumes that God was speaking to two other members of the Trinity, each equally with Himself, God; and it points to the word "us" as proof of its trinitarian doctrine, even though there is not a hint anywhere in the Old Testament as to how many persons—few or many—are represented by the pronoun.

Were it an established fact that no other intelligent life existed with whom God might communicate, then we should be shut up to the idea that God was speaking to Himself; for, if as claimed, God is a trinity in unity, that would be the only conclusion that could be arrived at with any show of reason.

While it is probably true that every exponent of the trinitarian doctrine is well aware that other beings did exist prior to the advent of man, they evidence no desire that reference should ever be made to that fact, preferring to gain what they can in this connection by silence on the subject. Perhaps the futility of their argument can be forcibly shown by an illustration. The year 1934 was Toronto's Centennial Year. The then Mayor of Toronto, Mayor Stewart, said: "Let us have a centennial." Does his remark give any possible ground for supposing that by "us" in the sentence just quoted our mayor gave proof that two other mayors existed besides himself, and that his words were addressed to them, or is it more reasonable to conclude that his message was addressed to the 850,000 citizens of whom he was the acknowledged leader? There is no need to apply the parallel, for the youngest reader of these pages will have no difficulty in arriving at the truth.

That the angels were created before man is conclusively proved by such passages as Psalm 8:4 and 5 and Hebrews 2:7, where it is said, "What is man, that thou art mindful of him . . . ? Thou madest him a little lower than the angels . . ."; for nothing can be lower if the comparison by which it is measured does not exist. Still further proof, and perhaps more direct, is given in Job 38, where Job is asked the searching question: "Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth . . . when the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy?" Surely in such a passage we have abundant proof that God had communication with and entered into the joy of His creatures (Rev. 4:11) long before man came into being, for as all will acknowledge, man did not exist until long after the foundations of the earth were laid, and it was then that the sons of God shouted for joy.

Further evidence may be had if the reader desires it. Let him get his concordance and he will be amazed to see "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth."—Genesis 1:26.

how literally hundreds of times God is spoken of as "the Lord of hosts," "the Lord God of hosts." As to how some of these hosts appeared during past ages of earth's history the Scriptures are resplendent with illustration from Genesis to Revelation. Some of them appeared to Jacob at Mahanaim (Gen. 32). King David speaks of them in Psalm 103:20, 21 as excelling in strength, and calls upon them to "bless the Lord, all ye his hosts; ye ministers of his, that do his pleasure." A multitude of the heavenly hosts appeared to the shepherds at Bethlehem, praising God, and saying, "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, good will toward men." That they were in the form of men is evidenced by the fact that in their appearances they were mistaken for men. If man was made, as the Scriptures assert (Gen. 1:26; 5:1; 9:6; 1 Cor. 11:7), in the image of God, and also in that of the angels, how appropriate is the word, "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness." When the Scriptures abound with occasions when the angels joyfully listen to His Word and obey His commands, what more natural than to accept Genesis 1:26 as one of the numerous recorded instances? That man was "made a little lower than the angels" we have already called attention to, but in Hebrews 2:6 Paul tells us something more. He says (see margin, R. V.), "For a little while lower than the angels"; and in 1 Corinthians 15:49 that "we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." These facts are borne witness to by Jesus Christ, for He declared that in the resurrection they shall be "equal unto the angels."

There is much in the Scriptures concerning the angels. Their different ranks and the names they bear are sometimes made known, but those points in which we shall share their likeness are the most emphasized. And what are they? Perhaps the joyousness and happy service of these holy beings stand out most prominently. "Hearkening unto the voice of His Word; doing His commandments" are indeed the very features mentioned in Genesis 1:26, and are repeated throughout all Bible history.

In Isaiah 45:12-18 and other scriptures we might mention, we are told that it was "God himself" who created the earth and man—an idea quite contrary to that of the Trinity. Thus Gen. 1:26 becomes to the writer a wonderful foretaste of revelations yet to come. It reveals that God is not the lonely God depicted by current theology, and held in scorn by atheism. It reveals the glorious fact that God has surrounding Him a mighty host of "elohim" singing His praises, "hearkening unto the voice of his word," and ready at all times "to do (Please turn to Page Nine)

Strong Religious Conviction

WE ARE living in an age which pays scant respect to strong convictions. In fact, strong convictions are almost universally regarded today as evidence of a closed mind. What a contrast this is with past generations! Our forefathers prided themselves on the fact that they believed certain things and held certain convictions with such implicit faith that nothing, it seemed, could move them.

Now, my personal conviction is, and I must say it is a conviction which deepens with the passing years, that when people give up strong convictions they give up the best thing in life. A mind closed against any possible modification of belief is, of course, a very dangerous and terrible thing. But there is a certain so-called open-mindedness today that encourages people never to arrive at any lasting decision about anything. Some one has said that the trouble about the open-mindedness of modern man is that his mind is open at both ends. He welcomes truth and then never holds it long enough to allow it to resolve itself into any kind of stabilizing conviction.

GOD IN HUMAN LIFE

We are all of us today intrigued by the prevailing custom of trying to explain everything. We have been trying to explain our religion during the past century or two, as we have been trying to explain scientific matters. I think that on the whole this has been a very good thing. Every time we make religion more intelligible we make it more appealing. I do not want to convey the impression that one should keep his mental processes in one compartment and his religion in another; but some years ago I began to be impressed by the age-long contention of our faith that the Bible is a revelation, that the gospel is a revelation, that everything in fact in connection with our faith is in reality the coming over into human life of the purpose and power of God's unseen world. That is a very simple conception and one that the church has emphasized for centuries. There has grown up in my mind the conviction that in the gospel of Jesus Christ, in the Person of Jesus Christ, and in the entire message of the Bible, we have the reaching down of God into human life in order to accomplish something very definite in the soul of man. Religion as man's seeking after God seemed quite plausible at one time; but it no longer seems plausible to me today. The religion of Jesus Christ is not man seeking after God, but God seeking after man and finding him when man in faith accepts Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior. The value of religion depends upon the extent to which we regard it as a supernatural thing. If Christianity is not supernatural, if it does not make a difference upon man's soul because of the action of unseen powers that we only in the slightest possible measure understand, then the religion of Jesus Christ is merely a system of ethics.

I want to testify that when I came to see that the religion of Jesus Christ is revelation, when my mind came under the domination of the conviction that the value of our religion arises from the fact that it is a supernatural thing, then I began to experience an inward peace of mind and a growing sense of power that make discipleship a joyful and significant thing. Strong conviction is the most precious possession the disciple of Jesus Christ can ever have, and that strong conviction must be held with reference to this great truth—that round about us day by day there is an order of reality much more significant than our own, that these supernatural powers become available to us when we have faith in Jesus Christ, and that when supernatural powers are brought to bear upon our lives, we begin living on a new level, we begin having satisfactions we knew nothing about before, and life is no longer in bondage to circumstances that are seen but to powers that are unseen.

RELIGIOUS CONVICTIONS A JOY AND POWER

When one has strong religious convictions, he has the greatest source of joy and power that this universe can confer. St. Paul, writing in his old age to his friend and associate Timothy, expressed just such a conviction. He begins by saying, "I know." Recall that this man, Paul, was one of the best educated men of his day, fully acquainted, not only with the culture and learning of the Jews, but with the culture and learning of the Gentiles. If any man of his day would have been tempted in the interest of open-mindedness to modify his belief, Paul would have been that man. But the glory of his life is primarily due to the fact that beginning with his conversion on the road to Damascus and going through to the last moment of his life, Paul had strong, unwavering convictions about the supernatural power of the religion of Jesus Christ which never for a moment wavered or changed. . . . I think it is an inspiring thing to see this greatest of all apostles standing at the end of his life and saying that he knows something; not apologizing and stammering and quibbling and amending his remarks, but saying, at the end of a lifetime during which he had been buffeted about pretty strenuously by the events of the world, that he knows certain things and that those certain things have to do with God's relationship to the world through Christ and man's relationship to God through Christ. "I know," said Paul, "whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day."

WHAT BEING A CHRISTIAN MEANS

Many people believe that being a Christian means living a certain kind of life. Well, it does; but it means living that kind of life because of the faith one has in Christ. A man may live the most upright life conceivable and not be a Christian. Now, I suppose that may seem to many people a statement that is completely lacking in a sense of ethical values. Do you mean to tell me that a life of high moral purpose does not of itself constitute the Christian life? Yes, I mean to say just exactly that; for Jesus Christ came into the world to lead men to live their lives as children of God on the basis of faith. Now, faith, that is real faith, of course, results in upright living; but a man who has just accepted Jesus Christ, who is struggling with temptations, who is stumbling and falling every day, but nevertheless pressing on in his endeavor to do the will of God, is more acceptable in God's sight than a man of perfect morality and complete self-control would be who was doing it on the basis of his own will. What God every day wants to achieve in this world is to start men living the kind of life that can be transplanted over into eternity and lived everlastingly according to His purpose. In the day of

Opinion on the Tithe

By A. E. Hoskins

"Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse."—Mal. 3:10. "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me."—Mal. 3:8.

ROBGING GOD is robbing Him of the tithe, which is without a question the Lord's. The "storehouse" in this instance means the "treasury." Then we can read, "Bring ye all the tithes into the treasury" (storehouse). Therefore, after a thoughtful consideration, we find that the tithe is the Lord's, and must be returned to the Lord from our increase. I like an illustration of a brother in Minnesota, who said that if we failed to pay our house rent, we must move out. Why? Because the rent money belongs to the landlord. If we do not pay our obligation (tithe) to the Lord (His storehouse or treasury), I'm thinking, we will find ourselves out.

Perhaps, then, the tithe should not be given to individuals, but to the storehouse (church treasury), "that there may be meat in mine house" (Mal. 3:10).

Then the treasurer of the Lord will care for the needs of the church, which include salaries, rent, light, fuel, state and national organizations, etc. The church should budget to the state and national work. Here is where the isolated members can find a way to support the work, by either sending their tithes to some church or to state and national centers.

Each individual and church using the tithe will find the Lord's promise is true. God never fails, but my, oh, my, how many times have we failed our Lord in performing our obligations. The blessings will be such that there will not be room enough to hold all our loving God will pour out, through our giving as a good steward in putting to use these talents God has entrusted into our hands. Can we conceive of these blessings of the Lord: "that there shall not be room enough to receive it"? Again, "Honour the Lord with thy substance, and with the firstfruits of all thine increase: so shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine."—Prov. 3:9, 10.

The real cause of not being blessed and prosperous lies in the fact that "ye have robbed me . . . in tithes and offerings."

Do not feel worried; the poor preacher will be taken care of. What we need to do is our part in paying the debt we owe to the Lord. However, there is another thought that may help out the situation: purchasing equipment for the church, THE HERALD's heating plant,, needed articles for poverty-stricken families, sending some one THE HERALD, may be done not only by paying the tithe, but by giving our offerings. In Malachi 3:10, nothing is said about the offerings; so it appears that the offerings are our gift. It appears that one can, however, send the tithe to a church, indicating by request that it should be used for the minister. The minister will receive plenty if you will budget your household by placing in one column under the heading "tithe" your apportionment for your church storehouse (treasurer). Personal gifts to individuals should be from your "offerings," and not from the tithe.

May I add this thought: Abraham, we find in Genesis 14:20, paid tithes to Melchizedek, priest of the most high God. One did arise in the similitude of Melchizedek, who is Jesus Christ, to be forever a priest. We were adopted into the Abrahamic family through our High Priest; thus it becomes proper to do as Abraham did, if we are of that faith, by paying tithes into the Lord's treasury. If we fail to do this, are we in the faith?

Let it not be said of us, "Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation."—Mal. 3:9. Instead may it be said as in the 10th verse.

I pray this will start us into a deep consideration on how to care for all needs, such as are found in the local churches, our National Bible Institution, and evangelism. God has a business-like method whereby the cry for funds will be eliminated, if we will listen to Him through His Word. Every church, in fact, through the Lord's plan can overflow the storehouse (treasury) enough to care for national as well as state needs.

The joy and the blessings will be ours by doing the will of God. May you with an open heart of willingness freely "honour the Lord with thy substance."

The Bible and Civil Life

THE BIBLE is a book. In it are recounted the beginnings of sin, disobedience, and pain, the origins of the rainbow, of languages, and of the races of men. There are the stirring stories of the patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Joseph. There is the history of a little nation whose contribution to the world is unequalled by any of the mighty empires of antiquity. There are Psalms sung by the sweet singers of Israel, and Proverbs which contain the cool, distilled wisdom of the race. There are the impassioned utterances of the great prophets who stand like a Himalayan range against Israel's skyline, and who were the social and religious conscience of Israel. There is the imperishable good news contained in the Gospels which tell of the life, and repeat the matchless teachings of the greatest soul who ever made his abode among men. There are letters written to churches and to individuals by one of whom the historian John Lord could say: "After Jesus the most colossal figure of the ages." And at the close there is the book of Revelation which gives us a picture of a multitude no man can number, singing and praising God, the glorious vision of John who saw the Holy City coming down out of heaven.

This is no mere book; it is a great literature. It is the literature in which God has spoken, and through which men have been lifted out of the littleness of self to become a part of the imperishable and the eternal. I should think everyone would want to know about the Bible, and would want to tell others about this jewel which has been entrusted to human hands.

The influence of the Bible upon civil life has been exerted in the largest degree through its influence upon the thoughts and aspirations of public leaders and as it has molded the thinking of multitudes. Only at rare intervals have men sought to make it directly the guide in the formation or direction of a state or to derive directly from it the underlying principles of social organization. Its primary influence has been indirect, but nevertheless powerful.

On April 10, 1606, the first charter of Virginia was granted by King James I. In the instructions issued by the authority of the King it was enjoined to use all proper means to draw the natives to the true knowledge and love of God. And before the expedition bound for Virginia left England, an ordinance was passed under the sign manual of the King and the privy seal, which contained this declaration: "That the said presidents, councils, and the ministers should provide that the Word and service of God be preached, planted, and used, not only in the said colonies, but also, as much as might be, among the savages bordering among them, according to the rights and doctrines of the Church of England."

The origins of the Massachusetts Bay Company are to be found in the Dorchester Adventurers, founded in 1623, of which Thomas Dudley wrote: "About the year 1627 a number of friends in Lincolnshire 'fell into discourse about New England and the planting of the Gospel there' . . . and 'we' procured a patent in 1629 . . ."

Coupled with the desire to enter upon a favorable commercial venture, there was a desire to have the Scriptures preached in America.

The Fundamental Orders of Connecticut (1638) state in part: "And well knowing where a people are gathered together the Word of God requires that to maintain the peace and trust of such a people there should be an orderly and decent government established according to God . . . do therefore associate and conjoin ourselves to me as one Public State or Commonwealth and . . . enter into a combination and confederation together, to maintain and preserve the liberty and purity of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ whom we now profess, . . ."

Roger Williams, in founding his colony in Providence, Rhode Island, first incorporated the idea of religious toleration into government. No one can read of his determination to follow the mandates of Christ in the formation of his colony without being conscious of the depth of his devotion to the Scriptures. One of his letters to Governor Endicott reflects both his convictions and his knowledge of the Scriptures. "Oh remember it is a dangerous Combat for the potsheards of the Earth to fight with their dreadfull Potter: It is a dismall Battle for poore naked feete to kick against the Pricks; It is a dreadful voyce from the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, Endicott, Endicott, why huntest thou me? Why imprisonest thou me? Why finest, why so bloudily whippest, why wouldest thou (did I not hould thy bloudie hands) hang and burne me? Yea, Sir, I beseech you remember that it is a dangerous thing to put this to the maybe, to the venture or hazzard, to the possibilitie."

Still later in our history, Benjamin Franklin appealed to the 127th Psalm and to the New Testament in speaking in 1787 before the convention assembled to form the Constitution of the United States: "In the beginning of the contest with Britain, when we were sensible of danger, we had daily prayers in this room for the Divine protection. Our prayers, Sir, were heard, and they were graciously answered. All of us who were engaged in the struggle must have observed frequent instances of a superintending Providence. To that kind Providence we owe this opportunity of consulting in peace on the means of establishing our future national felicity. And have we now forgotten this powerful friend? or do we imagine that we no longer need His assistance? I have lived for a long time (81 years), and the longer I live the more convincing proof I see of this truth, that God governs in the affairs of men. And if a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without His notice, is it probable that an empire can rise without His aid? We have been assured, Sir, in the sacred writings, that 'Except the Lord build the house, they labour in vain that build it.' I firmly believe this, and I also believe that without His concurring aid we shall proceed in this political building no better than the builders of Babel. I therefore beg leave to move that, henceforth, prayers, imploring the assistance of Heaven and its blessing on our deliberations, be held in this assembly every morning before we proceed to business, and that one or more of the clergy of this city be requested to officiate in that service."

Upon the Liberty Bell itself are cast the words: "Proclaim liberty throughout the land to all the inhabitants thereof."

When we come to the influence of the Bible upon the lives of British and American leaders and statesmen, we find that it has a distinguished and commanding place, giving them inspiration, direction, and courage.

We may begin with Alfred the Great. Though we cannot give credit to the tradition that he was a translator of the Scriptures, there is no reason to doubt that he was zealous for the spread of their knowledge among his people. So impressed was King Alfred with much of Hebrew legislation that he prefixed to his body of laws a translation of the Ten Commandments called "Alfred's Dooms," with abridged portions of the three following chapters of Exodus.

Like all of his Puritan brethren, Oliver Cromwell lived by the Word of God in the Bible. He was "saturated with Bible thought and Bible phrase . . . His life was molded by God's Book." When the time came to raise up an army against the political oppression of Charles I, Cromwell gathered about himself a trusted band of Puritans, fierce and unrelenting soldiers. They were the most strict Puritans, fighting, and praying, and believing in God with all the zeal and faith of the Old Testament Israelites. The army was made up chiefly of men of religion. Hard drinking was prohibited; oaths were fined. Cromwell led his men into the battle of Dunbar with the stirring words from "Let God arise, let his enemies be scattered." Among his troops there circulated a small pamphlet of extracts from the Bible entitled "A Soldier's Pocket Bible." Some 25,000 copies of a reprint of this were distributed over two centuries later among the soldiers during the American Civil War.

A biographer of Cromwell comments: "Cromwell was not only a religious man, he was a man to whom his religion was everything." During his last illness he called for his Bible and read the passage, "I have learned in whatsoever state I am therewith to be content . . . I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." And he continued, "This scripture did once save my life, when my eldest son Robert died."

William Gladstone (1809-1898) ranks easily as one of England's greatest statesmen. One of his biographers states: "Above all, he (Gladstone) was a Christian gentleman, for religion goes with the name of Gladstone as poetry with the name of Burns or Browning, as war with Wellington or Washington." Lord Salisbury has said that Mr. Gladstone will be remembered less for his political achievements than for his Christian ideals in politics. His whole career was devoted to the attempt to reconcile politics to the Sermon on the Mount. "His earliest passion and his latest enthusiasm was the passion and enthusiasm for the character and teachings of Jesus Christ. An indefatigable student of Homer, Dante, and Shakespeare, the literature of which he was most fond was the Bible." Speaking of the Book, he said: "If asked the remedy for the heart's deepest sorrows, I must point to 'the old, old story,' told in an old, old book, and taught with an old, old teaching, which is the greatest and best gift ever given to mankind." Who can doubt that the Scriptures influenced the reforms which he led and the bills which he sponsored?

The inventor and diplomat Benjamin Franklin, in giving counsel to a young man, said: "Young man, my advice to you is that you cultivate an acquaintance with, and a firm belief in, the Holy Scriptures. This is your certain interest."

George Washington, the father of our country, had a high regard for the Scriptures and expressed it thus: ". . . Above all, the pure and benign light of Revelation has had a meliorating influence on mankind, and increased the blessings of society." A section of Washington's Valedictory Message to the Governors of the States, June 8, 1783, is saturated with biblical phrases and allusions: "I now make it my earnest prayer that God . . . would incline the hearts of the citizens to cultivate a spirit of subordination and obedience to government; to entertain a brotherly affection and love for one another . . . that He would most graciously be pleased to dispose us all to do justice, to love mercy, and to demean ourselves with that charity, humility, and pacific temper of mind which are the characteristics of the divine author of our blessed religion, and without a humble imitation of whose example in these things we can never hope to be a happy nation."

All of us know Thomas Jefferson as the author of the Declaration of Independence and as a President of the United States, but not so many know of Jefferson's Bible. The so-called Jefferson Bible is more accurately The Life and Morals of Jesus of Nazareth. This work is extracted textually from the Gospels in Greek, Latin, French, and English. It was Jefferson's original purpose to prepare a book on the life and teachings of Jesus, told in simple excerpts, for the Indians. He abandoned this plan, however, and the book which he did prepare on the life and teachings of Jesus was for his own use. He made use of the four languages so that he might have the texts in them side by side, so that they would be convenient for comparison. In this book Jefferson pasted a map of the ancient world and the Holy Land, from which he gained assistance as he studied the New Testament. Jefferson wrote a letter to Edward Dowse on April 19, 1803, in which he paid tribute to the Scriptures: "I always have said, and always will say, that the studious perusal of the sacred volume will make better citizens, better fathers, and better husbands."

John Quincy Adams speaks emphatically of the Scriptures: "The first and almost the only book deserving of universal attention is the Bible. I speak as a man of the world . . . , and I say to you, 'Search the Scriptures.'"

Andrew Jackson in his rugged way put the matter very pointedly: "It (the Bible) is the rock on which our Republic rests." Daniel Webster rises to real eloquence when he speaks of the Bible: "If we abide by the principles taught in the Bible, our country will go on prospering and to prosper; but if we and our posterity neglect its instructions and authority, no man can tell how sudden a catastrophe may overwhelm us and bury our glory in profound obscurity."

Zachary Taylor has gathered up in one sentence the conviction that motivated the Pilgrims in coming to our shores: "It was for the love of the truths of this great and good book that our fathers abandoned their native shores for the wilderness."

Ulysses S. Grant knows of no book which has guided the affairs of men equal to the Bible. "Hold fast to the Bible as the sheet anchor of your liberties; write its precepts on your hearts and practice them in your lives. To the influence of this book we are indebted for the progress made, and to this we must look as our guide in the future."

Robert E. Lee was not only a great soldier, but an able educator of renown. He sums up his dependence on the Scriptures in this sentence: "The Bible is a book in comparison with which all others in my eyes are of minor importance, and which in all my perplexities and distresses has never failed to give me light and strength."

William McKinley while a youth joined the Methodist Episcopal Church and was a member of the Bible class. He would have men study the Scriptures, so that they might become better citizens. "The more profoundly we study this wonderful book, and the more closely we observe its divine precepts, the better citizens we will become, and the higher will be our destiny as a nation."

It is extremely interesting to note how the Bible appealed to two men of such widely different temperaments as Woodrow Wilson and Theodore Roosevelt. Woodrow Wilson on May 7, 1911, while governor of New Jersey spoke these words regarding the Bible: "For this is a book which reveals every man to himself as a distinct moral agent, responsible not to men, not even to those men whom he has put over him in authority, but responsible through his own conscience to his Lord and Maker. Whenever a man sees this vision, he stands up a free man, whatever may be the circumstances of his life." A few days before his inauguration to the Presidency, Wilson made this statement in an address at Trenton, New Jersey: "The opinion of the Bible bred in me, not only by the teaching of my home when I was a boy, but also every turn and experience of my life and every step of study, is that it is the one supreme source of revelation, the revelation of the meaning of life, the nature of God, and the spiritual nature and need of men. It is the only guide of life which really leads the spirit in the way of peace and salvation."

The name of Theodore Roosevelt brings up a picture of action, and in a directness characteristic of him he says: "If a man is not familiar with the Bible, he has suffered a loss which he had better make all possible haste to correct."

At the time of his African trip, the first book chosen for the "pigskin" library, a gift by his sister Mrs. Robinson, was the Bible. She says: "He could not do without that book. He counted it a literary masterpiece. He also read it for inspiration and consolation." It was a firm conviction of Mr. Roosevelt's that a study of the Scriptures would make for better social living. That sentiment is expressed in the following exhortation which he made: "If we read the Bible aright, we read a book which teaches us to go forth and do the work of the Lord; to do the work of the Lord in the world as we find it; to try to make things better in this world, even if only a little better because we have lived in it . . . we plead for a closer and wider and deeper study of the Bible, so that our people may be in fact as well as in theory, 'doers of the word, and not hearers only.'"

Calvin Coolidge regarded our national foundations as being quarried from the Scriptures. "The foundations of our society and of our Government rest so much on the teachings of the Bible, that it would be difficult to support them, if faith in these teachings should cease to be practically universal in our country."

King George V promised his mother, Queen Alexandra, that he would read from the Bible each day and continue that practice. Some years ago he declared: "It is my confident hope that my subjects may never cease to cherish their noble inheritance in the English Bible, which, in a secular aspect, is the first of national treasures and is, in its spiritual significance, the most valuable thing that this world affords."

The relation of religion to law and government is acknowledged when, in the midst of the solemn and impressive ceremony in which the President of the United States is inaugurated, he places his hand on this Book of the Ages and takes an oath of fidelity. This is also the custom in induction of appointees into many other civil offices.

One could ask no better word for America in these confusing days than that said by Woodrow Wilson in an address in 1911:

"America was born a Christian nation. America was born to exemplify that devotion to the elements of righteousness which are derived from the revelations of Holy Scripture.

"I have a very simple thing to ask of you. I ask of every man and woman in this audience that from this night on they will realize that part of the destiny of America lies in their daily perusal of this great book of revelations—that if they would see America free and pure, they will make their own spirits free and pure by this baptism of the Holy Scripture."

EVANGELISTIC WORK

By T. A. Drinkard

"And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."—Mark 16:15.

THE writer is indeed glad to see a deep interest being manifested in evangelism. It was a great mistake when such effort was partly abandoned years ago in favor of other plans. It has been my policy through the years to earnestly plead for evangelistic work, for when we fail to do according to God's plan regret and sorrow will be the result.

We have no authority to build except according to the Bible plan. Say what we may, this rule must be followed. We are often asked, What is the gospel? And such a question comes from those who profess that they know all about it. Of all questions over which difficulties arise, there is less excuse for not understanding what the gospel is than not knowing all others if we will follow the Bible teaching.

Fundamental truths? Yes. What an expression! We all need them. We claim to have grown up with them, but how far afield we go when we try to tell what they are and why.

We preach what we think they are, and when we are challenged to defend our claims we feel like compromising and saying, "Now, I may be wrong—yes, yes; sure, there are Christians in all denominations." Did you ever read of one instance where Christ gave a command to make excuses for the truth, so it would make it easier for people to accept and obey it? If not, why teach such a command either by example or by command?

What is fundamental truth? For instance, what are hope and faith, and the difference? By Hebrews 11:1 faith is shown to be that upon which hope is built or fundamentally established.

The gospel is fundamental in its nature. It is the foundation upon which all truth rests. How necessary! By 1 Corinthians 15:1-4 we are taught the fundamental truth. The gospel had been preached. The people heard it, they received it, they stood in it, they were saved by it. What a blessing! There need be no quibbling about it. What more do we need?

Can men and women be saved without it? If so, why teach it? Can we believe it so strongly that we can say we know we are right? When we do this we will be called narrow-minded and such names that go therewith. But truth is more sacred to me than human ties and friendship. I shall always be true to my faith regardless of criticism. I have seen so much failure result from compromise.

God has called the church for a purpose, and commissioned her to teach the truth, never once commanding her to compromise it or its author. Evangelize! We are still under the commission. It takes faith, courage, and determination to go forward. But the happy reward justifies faithful service.

The writer is willing and ready to meet all opposition and do everything possible in evangelistic work. God has ordained that those that preach the gospel shall live of the gospel. To me this teaches that the church should financially stand behind those who are out teaching the gospel. For some years I have prayed that an evangelistic fund would be started through THE RESTITUTION HERALD. Has the day arrived? I am willing and ready, like some others, but how can we go without support?

There is no need for a large salary for evangelists. They should be willing to share poverty, trials, and troubles with the brethren; but they should receive enough to cover necessary home expenses. Keep going, brethren; you are coming to see what I have seen for years. When you seek to carry out God's plan, you will find Him blessing you far more than you expected. Contribute to the fund to be used in sending qualified men to teach the gospel. The signs seem to indicate that Jesus is soon coming. Happy day! Your money will do you no good then. Won't you please use it now to support those of us who are in manual work, to carry the gospel to the world? God expects you to do His will, not yours. May I plead that you surrender to Him in all things? To will is but to do, and doing pays in the end.

FROM IO VICTIS

I sing the hymn of the conquered, who fell in the Battle of Life,—
The hymn of the wounded, the beaten, who died overwhelmed in the strife . . .
The hymn of the low and the humble, the weary, the broken in heart,
Who strove and who failed, acting bravely a silent and desperate part.

—William Wetmore Story.

A QUESTION ANSWERED

his commandments." It reveals that in form they are like unto us, and we like unto them, and when linked to the words of the Lord Jesus and His servant Paul, it reveals to us that we shall be like them, and like Him who is not ashamed to call us brethren (Rom. 8:29), not only in form, but in character and activities also. It reveals also that this period of sin and sorrow shall pass away, and that we shall join with the heavenly hosts, each in our own sphere, in praising God and having fellowship and communion with Him. It reveals the truth that, like them, we shall run and not be weary, we shall walk and not faint, for like them we shall "excel in strength," going on from "strength to strength," and the last enemy, death, shall be no more.

The writer could say much more on this wonderful theme, but space and time forbid. If this little study is half the pleasure to the reader that it has been to the writer, he will feel well and abundantly repaid.

judgment, the righteous man will receive the righteous man's reward but that will not be eternal life. Eternal life is reserved for those who have made the venture of faith, who have staked everything on the conviction that God is working in the world through Jesus Christ to accomplish a great end. What Paul believed was a Person. He did not just believe certain things about Jesus Christ, he believed Jesus Christ. He had been born into sonship under the sovereignty of God when he met Christ on the Damascus road and that religion was not just a creed for him; it was not just this belief or that; it was personal relationship with a personal Savior, it was walking every day in the light of His glory, it was meeting life's hard circumstances and triumphing over them as an heir of God and a joint heir with Jesus Christ. "And am persuaded," he said, "that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him."

When Paul said he knew whom he believed, he was thinking of that day when he had seen Christ in a vision and realized for the first time that here was God's supernatural, power-laden Son whom High Heaven had ordained to lead men into eternal life. When Paul said, "I know whom I have believed," his mind went back to that definite day when his conversion occurred. But when he said, furthermore, "I am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him," he was thinking about all the years that had intervened between the day of his conversion and the day upon which he dictated his second Epistle to his friend Timothy. The thing Paul had committed to Christ was his whole life. He just took it, as it were, with all its imperfections, with all its sins, with all its incompleteness, and put it in the hands of Christ. "Here is my life, Lord," he said, "do with it as You think best." Now the Lord had been doing something to that life of Paul's for thirty years, and what Paul says in this verse is, in effect, that he never regretted for a single moment the complete and unreserved commitment of his life that he had made. . . .

I ask you about the joy of strong convictions, whether you feel that your life is so guarded and sustained by Jesus Christ that no matter what the circumstances of life do to the outside of you they can do nothing to the inside of you. If trouble and sorrow and disappointment have not already come upon you, they will, in some measure, be your lot before your span of life is ended. Can the circumstances of life hurt the real you? Yes, they can destroy the real you. They can decimate and pillage until within and without your life will be a desolate charnel house. But if by the simple act of faith you lift that part of you which alone is real and eternal out of the reach of life's circumstances by putting it into the hands of God, then no circumstances of life, no matter how bitter and devastating they may be, will ever overcome and destroy you.

Against what day? Against that day when the silver cord be loosed or the golden bowl be broken; when the pitcher is broken at the fountain, and the wheel broken at the cistern; when the body shall return to the dust from whence it came, and the spirit return to God who gave it; when a great multitude shall cry out with a voice of many waters, "Alleluia, the Lord our God, the Omnipotent reigneth," and when the angels shall fall down before the throne of God and worship Him, saying, "Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honour, and power, and might be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen."—Earl L. Douglass, D. D., in The Presbyterian.

For offensive armor we take up the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God. It was that sword Jesus used when He was taken into the desert, into a high mountain, and on a pinnacle of a temple, to be tempted. It is that sword which is "quick, and powerful, and sharper than any twoedged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow."

The sword was carried in a position where it was easily accessible, but had to be unsheathed before it could be used. We may fill our minds full of the Word of God; but unless we understand, apply, and use that Word, it is as valueless as the sheathed sword.

Having put on the whole armor of God, there is yet one thing necessary to fight a winning battle. That thing is strength, and is achieved through prayer. A daily prayer for strength from on high is essential if we would live a victorious life.

Jesus is our leader, the captain of our salvation, who was made perfect through sufferings. If we will but follow where He leads, victory will be certain.

"In pastures green? not always; sometimes He Who knoweth best, in kindness leadeth me
In weary ways, where heavy shadows be,
Out of sunshine into darkest night."

He will not ask me to go where He has not first gone, and will not leave me to go alone.

There is no neutral ground in this warfare. We are either on the side of right or on the side of wrong. Jesus said, "He that is not with me is against me." Reader, on which side are you? If you have not enlisted in the service of the Captain of salvation, do so now. Don't wait to be drafted, for the day is coming when every knee shall bow before Him and every tongue confess that He is Lord. He offers you an everlasting crown of life if you will serve and obey Him.

If you have already enlisted, make sure that your armor is complete, lacking in nothing. Keep in training by attending church services regularly. No soldier trains one day and rests a month. To keep fit and build up endurance he drills every day. Every good soldier of Jesus Christ will be found in the Lord's house at every service. Be obedient unto Him in all things, and great will be your reward.

ARLEN MARSH, EDITOR

Books, and Books, and Books

A good deal of furor has been raised during recent months about the use of books other than the Bible by the speakers, teachers, and writers for Christianity. In connection with the furor, there has appeared a considerable modicum of nonsense.

In the first place, books—books in general, that is—are neither the answer to humanity's prayer nor the work of the devil. Propaganda which has been conceived by both sides of the argument raging about the product of the printing press would have us believe that one of these two extremes is true. The medium, like the medium in time of war, seems not to have been struck.

However, it does seem necessary to question, and to question seriously, the idea being fostered by some elements that to own a library that encompasses a wide variety of subjects in a large number of titles is a waste of time and money, as well as conducive to gradually increasing neglect of the Bible. And it also seems necessary to question the idea being fostered by the opposite element which would point to secular and general religious reading as the salvation of the church.

The argument that a library of, say, five thousand volumes, could not possibly be assimilated in a lifetime is fallacious on the surface. The mere fact that five thousand books are on one's shelves does not necessitate that every one of the five thousand be read through slowly and meditatively. On the contrary, the five thousand volumes are for reference purposes and for recreation.

One may purchase, for example, an encyclopedia. He does not immediately set himself down to the perusal of every article in every volume of the set. When he requires the content of the encyclopedia, he uses it; when he does not, he ignores it. So with the large library. It is a mighty reserve of fact, illustration, and new thoughts; and it should not be deemed necessary to read each book through from cover to cover with a view to remembering every fact within it.

It is, furthermore, a poor reader who cannot read the average book through within three to five hours. To state that it requires a full month to read a book with an eye to discovering the major part of its contents and implanting it deeply in one's thinking processes is exaggeration to the *n*th degree; the book could almost be memorized in that length of time. The editor speaks from practical experience in making these assertions: for the past eleven years his schooling or his job has required the reading of an average of three books a fortnight or their equivalent in newspapers and magazines, entirely exclusive of reading done solely for amusement. And a good proportion of that reading stays by him still.

The other side of the question presents different fallacies. Books are not intended for inspired truth. They are not infallible. They are the product of some one's thinking, and that thinking should be taken merely as a guide to the thinking of the reader. Yet the preachment goes the rounds that broadening the field of Christian reading will revivify the church. Broadening the field of Christian reading will never revivify the church. Only the inauguration of thought among Christian people will accomplish that.

The medium which should be obtained is this: Study of the Bible involves study of every science under heaven. Study of the Bible requires knowledge of history, anthropology, languages, astronomy, theology, mythology, debating, oratory, archeology. Consciously or unconsciously, these things must enter in to the comprehension of what the Bible teaches.

For example: Who would know but what the higher critics of the nineteenth century who derided the Bible as untrue to historic fact and a compilation of unproved traditions were right, if he were not aware of the fact that Marston and Cobern have set forth in their books the findings of the archeological expeditions which have established the veracity of the Bible above that of every critic? Who could prove that the resurrection of Jesus Christ actually occurred without the application of sound logic by such men as Morison to the uncorrelated biblical accounts of the first Easter? Who could deny, other than by an unsupported hope, the truth of Darwin's theory of the origin of species if he were not familiar with the discoveries and opinions of Burbank, Clayton, and others of their ilk?

These questions—these questions of the Bible's truth—are answered within the Book itself; but who would know that fact had not science been applied to it? Who could prove that the Bible declaration that the soul is mortal, that it will die, is true, were it not for the miracles of modern surgery which have brought dead men back to life? Who could prove that nothing but a divinely ruled kingdom can solve the problems now facing men, unless he knew the trials and errors of the past millenniums?

These are the reasons for which one should read books—or a portion of the reasons. To find evidence to confound those who do not at first believe the Bible, and so lead them to belief; to find the full beauty of the Bible, hidden from the ignorant—here is the purpose of wide reading. Let the extremes be forgotten, and the medium accepted.

EZRA HOLDS AN OUTDOOR BIBLE CLASS

JUST THINK! there was only one Bible in the whole land of Judah. And that was written on parchment and rolled up like a scroll. It wasn't nearly as large as our Bible, for it had only the first five books of the Old Testament. It belonged to Ezra.

How many of you boys and girls who read this page have your own Bibles? I hope all of you do. There is something very dear and precious about one's own little Bible. Don't you think so? We think more of it and it means more to us than any of our other books. And it is right that it should.

How many of you know how many books there are in our Bibles today? How many in the Old and how many in the New Testament? Who wrote the first five books that Ezra had? No doubt many of you know more facts about the Bible if we had space enough to ask them.

Well, here were the people of Judah with their temple rebuilt, their wall repaired, their homes made comfortable. Their thoughts turned to the God who had helped them do all these things. They wanted to know more about Him. They wanted to learn just what He wanted them to do.

Remember, most of these people had never seen or heard the law of God. It was long, long years after Moses' death, and he it was who had received the law from God and taught it to the people. Books, such as we have, were unknown, and the fathers had to teach their children, and the children their children, just by word. And if some of the parents failed to teach God's words, you can see how they would soon be forgotten.

Now they asked Ezra to read the law to them. How many of you know how long he read? Ezra's Bible class didn't last only one hour, did it? Ezra had studied so much and the people had so much respect and love for him that he made a good teacher. There were many children there, too.

They had built an outdoor pulpit for Ezra to stand on, and the people were all seated on the ground before him. When he started to read they all stood up. Something as we do when the band plays our national anthem. It was a sign of respect that the people showed for God's words.

Now all of you, please, find the place in Deuteronomy where God tells His people that they should teach their children His words every day. It's in the 6th chapter, verses 5-9. When Ezra came to these words, the people must have felt very, very guilty. For they had not done it. No wonder they wept!

But Ezra told them to hush their crying and dry their tears. For this was the time to be happy. They knew now what God wanted them to do, and the thing to do was to go ahead gladly and cheerfully. Ezra was right there to explain anything they didn't understand and to teach them more about God.

At noontime Ezra told them all to go home and prepare a feast and divide it with those who perhaps didn't have very much. No one was to be hungry or lonely or sad that day.

You know, reading the Bible and trying to do as it tells us to do, does make us happy. The other day I read a story of a little Chinese boy who lived in California. He had been taught to love Jesus by some people who held a Sunday school. His parents were both dead, and he lived with his uncle.

Now Lin (that was his name) was always kind and respectful to Uncle Ting, even when he abused him. For often Lin had to dodge blows from Uncle Ting, who didn't want him to go to the Christian Sunday school.

Lin, however, went whenever he could slip away. He often sang the Bible songs he learned, too, as he went about his daily tasks. And Uncle Ting listened in spite of himself.

At last he could stand it no longer. He wanted to find out what there was about the God Lin worshiped that could make him so happy and so kind in spite of rough treatment. He followed Lin one day and slipped into the back seat and listened!

He went often after that, and soon he was asking the teacher about the God Lin lived. He wanted to be kind and loving, too. They taught Uncle Ting and prayed for him, and soon Lin's home was happy, you may be sure.

FOR YOUR BIBLE SCRAPBOOK:

You will be able to write a very good story, I'm sure, for this week's page, because it is such a happy one and so interesting. Write the story of Ezra and the outdoor Bible class, how the people felt about the words of God Ezra read to them, what Ezra told them to do. Tell what they did after the class was over. Don't forget to tell how long it lasted. Then make up a little story of your own about a boy or girl who found a Bible on Christmas, or some other story about a Bible. For your picture draw a pulpit with Ezra reading the Bible and the people standing listening. Or paste pictures to represent this scene.

LESSON 11. — December 15, 1935

EZRA TEACHING THE LAW OF GOD

Ezra 7:10; Nehemiah, chapter 8

GOLDEN TEXT

"Thy word have I hid in mine heart."—Psalm 119:11.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: Ezra Teaches the Law of God.

Aim: Knowledge of the Word of God is the foundation of Christian character.

Class Discussion: Comparative value of different methods of Bible study: textual; chapter; books; subjects; historical; prophetic; literary; etc. The value of the Bible to us.

I. The Teacher's Preparation. (Ezra 7:10.) "Ezra had directed his heart to inquire in the law of the Lord, and to do it, and to teach in Israel statutes and ordinances."—Leeser. The first step to successful religious leadership is heart-regeneration. One's deepest emotions, the principles upon which his entire life is based, must be consciously dedicated to God's service. By prayer, meditation, Bible study, and by putting into practice in his own life the things he has learned, one becomes qualified for the responsible office of a teacher of the things of God.

II. The Art of Teaching the Bible. (Neh. 8:1-3.) Ezra was an "expounder of the law" as well as an exponent of it. By patient study of the Word, by comparing, analyzing, and applying the law of God to different circumstances in his own life, Ezra was able to make its meaning clear to others. "All the people . . . were attentive" to his exposition of the Scriptures because of his obvious familiarity with them. Attendance at church services, Berean meetings, or Sunday school cannot be increased and maintained by leaders who prepare themselves indifferently for their task of teaching. Above all else religious teachers must know their Bibles, and show in their own lives its practical value.

III. Encouraging the Spirit of Worship. (Vv. 5-12.) "Ezra opened the book in the sight of all the people; . . . and . . . all the people stood up." His manner of handling the sacred volume indicated his respect for it. The people instinctively arose and stood with reverently bowed heads as the law was read in their hearing. It was God's Book Ezra held in his hand! It was God's Book from which he read! God was speaking to them through the lips of Ezra His servant! How could they do less than stand in the evident presence of the Almighty! We stand when a man speaks to God in prayer for us. How much deeper should be our sense of reverence when God speaks to us through His Word!

GOLDEN TEXT

David, the author of our text, hid God's Word in his heart so that he might not sin against Him. The people in our lesson today were learning God's Word so that they might better serve and worship Him. Speaking of the righteous in Psalm 37:31 we find, "The law of his God is in his heart; none of his steps shall slide." Notice the benefits of knowing God's Word, or as it has been expressed, of having God's Word in one's heart.

In 2 Timothy 2:15 Paul admonishes Timothy to "study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." Rightly dividing the Word of God is another benefit derived from knowing His Word. Let us learn God's Word so well that we may worship in sincerity and live in a way that will be pleasing in His sight.—L. A. R.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Ezra

- turned the people's hearts to God through reading of the law;
- expounded the meaning of the law to the people;
- knew obedience to God must come through understanding of the Word;
- believed worshippers of God should rejoice rather than weep;
- turned his early training to the salvation of his people.

The Word of God. Well did the Apostle say, "The word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any twoedged sword."—Heb. 4:12. Much sin is committed because of lack of knowledge of the Word. Jesus said: "Ye do err, not knowing the scriptures and the power of God." The power of the Word to touch men's hearts is graphically illustrated in a story that has recently reached this country from China. One evening a certain town was visited by a large band of Chinese brigands. Upon entrance into the town, they began to kill the children and many of the older ones on the streets to intimidate the people. The villagers were ordered to stay in their houses and hand out all their valuables. It was just a short time before the hour of the mission service. When the hour of service arrived the missionary felt he should go and hold a service. He and his wife went to the place of meeting and started the service with songs and prayer, and shortly a large band of robbers came rushing into the house of God. The missionary didn't know what to say or do, but finally turned and read the account of Jesus' trial and crucifixion without comment and closed the meeting with the bare announcement if they would come back the next night he would read the same story. The next night they were back and came back for six nights to hear this simple story read without comment. At last an invitation was given to accept this Christ and they all came forward and gave themselves to the Lord Jesus. The Word of God was powerful enough to melt the hearts of these murderers.—C. E. R.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

Studying the Bible Together

Associated together in a great work in today's lesson are Ezra, the scribe, and Nehemiah. You remember, Ezra's great desire was to learn God's will, to live it himself, and to teach it to those about him. He had to wait until Nehemiah had completed the wall before he could accomplish much teaching. Immediately he began by calling a great meeting and reading to the people assembled "the book of the law of Moses," the first five books in our Old Testament. How long did he read? What was the people's response? What other provision did he make so that the words of God might be understood (vv. 7, 8)? Why did the people weep? A brief report may be given by the teacher on the method of writing in those days, the manner of making a book, the peculiarities of the Hebrew language, such as the use of only consonants, the vowels being supplied by the reader, the reading from right to left, etc.

Discuss fully in class ways in which the Bible is different from other books. What difference does it make whether we study the Bible carelessly and as a matter of form, or eagerly, reverently, and intelligently? We like to study an "Official Guide" when we are interested in a certain game.

Remember: The Bible is the "Official Guide" for your life; study it well.—M. G.

JUNIOR CLASS

Text: Neh. 8:1-12. Topic: A Happy Gathering. Memory Verse: "And Ezra blessed the Lord, the great God . . . and they (the people) bowed their heads, and worshipped the Lord with their faces to the ground."—Neh. 8:6.

Review. Select three children from the class to represent the enemies who tried to capture Jerusalem, the worker who worked on the wall, and one who watched. Have each one tell what part he played in last Sunday's lesson.

Presentation of Lesson. Review lesson 9. Again we return to Ezra teaching the people. Present this word picture to the class: Ezra standing on high pulpit, others beside him. He is holding the part of the Bible known to us as parts of Old Testament, or Law of Moses. The people all gathered around to hear him read. Emphasize verse 3 to show how interested the people were. Also verse 6 to show how glad they were to hear God's Word being read to them. How the Word was explained to the people. The people weep. Nehemiah and Ezra exhort them to be cheerful. Their rejoicing. This lesson should develop a reverence and love for God's Word.

Memory Verse. Children close their eyes as teacher reads memory verse. Children tell what they could see in their mind as verse was read. Repeat in unison.

Notebook. Ask, "What picture could you see in your mind as we studied this lesson?" Write a short story of the lesson describing this mind picture. Illustrate, if time permits.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

SIGNS OF THE TIMES

World events of startling significance continue to pile up rumors, facts, threats, and counter-threats in a confusing but always lurid and ominous kinoscopic vision that appalls the watcher and fills his heart with dread. Germany has taken the initial steps toward the restoration of the Holy Roman Empire of the Middle Ages. Italy continues to threaten the peace of all Europe, if not of the entire world, with her dreams of conquest. Greece restores the monarchy. Great Britain prepares to defend her far-flung empire against possible attempts to dissolve it. Surely these are times for the student of prophecy to watch and pray with unusual diligence. Help us put The Herald into a thousand new homes this next year to keep men and women informed of the serious import of these changing conditions!

REPORT FOR NOVEMBER

Sermons: Dana, N. C., 5; Guthrie Grove, S. C., 12; Brumfield, Ky., 1; Hillisburg, Ind., 2; Plymouth, 1; North Salem, 1; Pleasant View, 4. Funerals, 1. Baptisms, 3. Money received in Indiana: Hillisburg, $20.83; Plymouth, $15.00; North Salem, $6.50; Conference board, $9.34. Expense, $10.00.

We are happy to introduce those who were baptized into Christ to the church. Their names are Paran Guthrie, Jr., Clarence Guthrie, and Guy Rogers, all of the Guthrie Grove, S. C., church. I do not know their post office. At present we are holding a special meeting in the Pleasant View Church, Hedrick, Ind.

J. H. Anderson, Ind. Evangelist.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

It was a pleasure upon the return from our Southern trip to find our church family well for the most part and the work proceeding splendidly. We regretted a delay en route which kept us from getting home in time for Berean the 21st. There were 95 present that night, and Sr. Brauer's class had prepared a special treat, expecting we would be there to help enjoy it.

All meetings on the 24th were well attended, and it was a real pleasure to greet the members of our church family again.

On the night of the 25th the church parlors were filled with the church members and friends who had gathered to surprise the pastor in honor of his birthday. In addition to their cheerful selves they brought armloads of things for a miscellaneous shower. Only those who have gone through such experiences can know what it means to have such faithful, loyal friends. The material gifts which they brought are the eloquent voices speaking the heart of the people. Do you wonder that this is to us indeed a thankful Thanksgiving?

And now the committee is busy with plans for the birthday of our King.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

HERALD RECEIPTS

Earl C. Canfield; H. H. Hawkins; Otto Dick; Lois Hunt; Nellie M. Blakely; William Platts; Mrs. F. M. Hoskins; Mrs. William Scott; R. H. Judd; Harriet E. Boice; Ida Jeffrey; Teresa E. Martindale; Mrs. A. M. Seroggs; Almeda Wertz; L. G. Jaegar; Mary McRae; Fred Williams; Mrs. Claude Graham; James A. Patrick (for others); Jennie Baker.

BURR OAK, INDIANA

These words find us in four days of meetings with Bro. Austin. The first night the church was filled almost to its capacity. The Great Pyramid indeed is a marvelous work, and the subject is in the hands of one who can convincingly present its geometrical and astronomical revelations.

Sunday last our Bible school attendance was 1 above last year, having 52. Sr. Hatten and Sr. Zechiel are busy with the Christmas program, a pageant, "The Heart of Christmas."

There was splendid attendance at both Sunday services. Subjects used were "Why We Call Ourselves the Abrahamic Faith" and "Conditional Immortality."

Our choir has two new members, Bro. Allen Weaver and Bro. Joe Geise, and the music presented is splendid. Sr. Elizabeth Zechiel, pianist, has had our choruses printed and placed in the back of the song books.

Thanksgiving morning at 9:30, our church and the United Brethren Church will have a thanks and praise service. This ought to be truly a thanks service, for the blessings to all people this last year have been exceptional. The work in most of our churches has pushed forward. Let us go on doing more than ever for the spreading of the gospel. The Psalmist says, "Blessed be the name of the Lord from this time forth and for ever."

A. E. Hoskins, Pastor.

FROM EMMA C. RAILSBACK

Dear Coworkers:

Knowing that the Los Angeles church is suffering at the present time because of removals of families who have helped bear the responsibilities of the work for years, our good-bys were mingled with regrets on the evening of November 6, when a good representation of the church assembled on Berean night in the home of the Bro. Harold Nokes family to enjoy a social evening in honor of Bro. and Sr. John Saylor, who were leaving for Arizona about the same time we left for Oregon. Bro. A. Leonard Brady, the Berean president, conducted a very appropriate program, followed by refreshments served by members of the class.

While we know that the situation in Los Angeles is somewhat discouraging, we know, too, that many other localities have just as serious and even worse discouragements to meet, and there are still many staunch defenders of the truth there who will continue to hold up the light of God's Word by accepting responsibilities that others have had to relinquish. "Hold fast till I come," said the Master, "that no man take thy crown."

On our way north, as previously announced, a meeting was held on November 10 in the home of Sr. Mary White of near Fresno, beginning at 11 a. m. Besides the Thompsons of Tulare, three of the Groat family of Hanford, and others we had met on the way south in

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

In the mail of November 27 was this brief note from Miss Ruchie Alexander, Hammond, La.: "Enclosed find check for $25 from the Happy Woods Sunday School, a contribution to the paper bill. We like the quarterlies and would regret very much to be without them, and it would be strange indeed not to have the paper coming every week." Such support from our Sunday schools and churches is very much appreciated—and remember it benefits them as much as it does us.

Again we wish to express our appreciation of the act of the Maurertown, Va., Sunday school in once each month taking up a collection for the exclusive use of the National Bible Institution. Cooperation between local and national work is sorely needed.

Between forty and fifty attended the 6 o'clock dinner at Golden Rule Home on Thanksgiving Day. In the course of the brief program that followed the dinner Bro. and Sr. Romine were extended a hearty welcome to the community by the local church.

The editor, who recently visited the church at Eldorado, Ill., brought back a splendid report of the work of Bro. C. E. Lapp, who labored in that community for several years. Bro. Lapp's faithful service is still bearing fruit.

The pastor of the Oregon, Ill., church spoke to a large audience in the Methodist Church in that place on the morning of Thanksgiving Day. The service was participated in by the four Protestant churches of the city.

With funds furnished from the Reserve for Evangelism, V. Earl Thayer, pastor of the Churches of God in Virginia, has been holding a series of meetings at Skelton, W. Va. Early attendance averaged about 50. This is entirely new territory to the Church of God. The meetings are being held at the request of Clarence Poland, subscriber to The Herald and a resident of Skelton.

Bro. Richard E. Powell, formerly of Eureka, Calif., has been ordered to the St. George's Reef Light Station by the Government. Since the station is bachelor, his family remains at Eureka.

The interest is increasing in the meetings now being conducted at Brush Creek, Ohio, and Evangelist C. E. Randall is "giving us meat in due season," writes Pastor S. E. Magaw.

Next Sunday evening the pastor of the Church of God at Oregon, Ill., begins a pre-Christmas series of studies with a sermon entitled "Heaven Rejoices—Earth Sorrows and Sleeps."

Renewing her subscription to The Herald, Sr. Claude Graham of St. Louis comments as follows on recent articles: "We especially enjoyed those by Bro. Lindsay (on the covenants), and Bro. Vivian Kirkpatrick."

The editor is grateful to Bro. H. W. Patterson of El Cajon, Calif., for some interesting material just received which will soon find a place in the paper.

September, there were a number of new faces in attendance at this meeting, making an assembly of around 25. The morning subject covered some of the fundamentals of the faith, particularly immortality, by whom possessed and how obtained. At the close of this discourse Gordon Page, son of Sr. Eva Page of Los Banos, applied for baptism, and Bro. E. E. Groat conveyed a group of those present to the Baptist Church of Fowler, where after a brief interval he performed the sacred ordinance which is the beginning of a new life for this young brother. Returning to Sr. White's home, we found a long table stretched to the limit and loaded to capacity, from which we refreshed the natural man. After this we reassembled to enjoy a fine practical sermon by Bro. Groat on Christian fortitude, followed by the Communion service. It was indeed good to be there and an invitation was extended for us to plan to stop on our return trip to California.

We enjoyed the hospitality of Sr. Bernice Roberson of Fresno that night, after which we journeyed on to Red Bluff, stopping en route to make brief calls at Maderia, Stockton, and Wheatland. Our visit with the three Chamberlain sisters in Medford was very pleasant, and we were happy to get better acquainted with the daughter of Bro. Hiel Hathaway and her family. Only a short time could be spent at the Bro. and Sr. Scroggs home, as the weather and road promised to be very annoying to travelers, and it fulfilled the promise to the letter. We found them all in usual health.

Arriving in Corvallis sometime after dark, we found that Sr. Barber had made ample provision for hungry travelers, and then later we found, too, that the local congregation had heard somehow that two candidates for the kingdom of God had traveled 44 more or less stormy years together, and we were very much surprised when after the morning service a bountiful repast was spread, the chief attraction of which was a large pyramid cake beautifully decorated with roses, festoons, and 44 candles. This was an honor unforeseen and unmerited.

According to plans of the Conference board, we will continue our efforts here in Corvallis and vicinity until January 15, when we will go to Felida to remain approximately three months. We trust that a full cooperation of all isolated as well as local members may be had and that the weak may be strengthened and encouraged and our hearts drawn together, with a more fervent love of the truth and of the brotherhood in these perilous last days of Gentile times. We will be glad to get the addresses of any isolated and suggestions concerning visits or any matter in which good may be accomplished.

CLEVELAND, OHIO

It was my happy privilege to officiate at a very pretty church wedding in the Golden Rule Church of God at Cleveland, Ohio, October 22, when Sr. Adelle Hicks and Bro. Ellis Onderdonk were united in marriage. Both these young people are members of the Golden Rule Church. We pray that God's blessing will attend them and that they will continue faithful in His service in the future as they have in the past. The only thing that marred the pleasure of the occasion was that Bro. Lyon was sick and unable to officiate at the wedding. Bro. Lyon baptized both these young people, and it would have been very fitting if he could have performed the marriage ceremony.

I filled the pulpit for Bro. Lyon the 10th, 17th, and 24th of November because he was unable to take his usual place at the services. I may have to go back again the 1st of Deember. Bro. Lyon had a siege of pneumonia, and it is taking him some time to get back to his usual health, although he is making steady progress.

It was fortunate for Bro. Lyon that his sister, Mrs. Margaret Duval, a trained nurse, could be with him and take care of him. Those who know Sr. Duval know that he got the best of care.

EMMA JANE OAKS

Emma Jane Allard, daughter of Greenleaf P. and Melissa Allard, was born July 12, 1883, on the Allard homestead, two miles south of Gladbrook, Iowa, and died November 20, 1935.

She was married to John W. Oaks on October 28, 1902, and they resided on the Oaks homestead for thirty years, from which they moved to Gladbrook only about a year and a half ago.

To this union were born five children: Lora, now Mrs. Earl Reinhard; George, Floyd, John, and Mac, all of whom, with her husband, survive her. She also leaves her mother; three sisters, Mrs. Pearl Engel, Mrs. Leta Stauffer, and Mrs. Edna Wiese; two brothers, Wallace H. and Ray C. Allard; two half-brothers, O. J. and W. G. Allard; and two grandchildren, Lynn and Leroy Reinhard.

She was a member of the Church of God, in which she has been a very active worker, both in the local and in the state organization. As a neighbor she was always interested in the welfare of others, and all who had the privilege of knowing her were her friends. Her loss will be keenly felt, not only by her immediate family, but also by the entire community.

Funeral services were held in her home church in Gladbrook, which was filled to overflowing by relatives and friends, and a great bank of flowers showed the esteem and sympathy of those who loved her. The home pastor, J. W. Williams, gave a sermon on the Shunammite woman's reply to the question of the prophet in her bereavement, "It is well," and she was buried in the Badger Hill Cemetery to await the call to life in the morning soon to come.

Mrs. Florence M. Allard.

Munitions of War and the Jews

By Norman John Macleod

MUCH confusion exists regarding the topic of the return of Israel. Most people see in it only one movement, whereas there are at least two distinct phases to that development. In the first place the return from Babylon is confused many times with the regathering that is now gaining momentum, and will include that other thing known as the "restoration" of Israel. In order to understand the latter subject, something must be said in regard to the return from Babylon; one subject enlightens the other.

The return from Babylon with the consequent inhabiting of the Holy Land was only a temporary affair. From the time that Zerubbabel set out across the desert with a small group of exiles, until the day when Titus "sowed salt" around the city in token of perpetual desolation, no peace existed for those returned exiles. From the very nature of things it was seen that that return was to be a temporary thing. When Jesus was coming out of the temple of Herod (the third one to be built in the city of Jerusalem) He told His apostles: "See ye not all these things? verily I say unto you, There shall not be left here one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down." That happened in the days of the invasion of the Roman general, Titus. The great regathering of Israel shall be a permanent thing, as it is told in the words of the prophets that they shall not be "rooted up again." Often these two regatherings are spoken of in the same breath by the Old Testament writers and are, therefore, quite generally confused.

The regathering in the days of the Persian Empire consisted only of Jews. The term "Jew" is also one that is confused. Commonly today we say "Jew" when we mean any descendant of Jacob. Then again we use it to mean only the descendants of the tribe of Judah. The Bible writers usually make a point of distinguishing when they mean the twelve tribes of the children of Israel by using such terms as "Jacob," or "the whole house of Israel," or as is said in Romans 11:26: "And so all Israel shall be saved." That passage does not mean that every individual Jew will be saved, but that all twelve tribes are to be considered.

Let us follow the history of the dispersion and regathering of the children of Israel. The northern kingdom of Israel (approximately ten tribes) fell away and were led captive to the Assyrians long before the two tribes (composing the kingdom of Judah) were captured. Then when the nation of Judah was overrun it was not deported bodily to Babylon.

There were several captivities. First the region outside of Jerusalem was captured about the time of Josiah's death at Megiddo. The kings of Judah remained upon the throne but were subject to the Babylonians. The outlying regions outside Jerusalem were captured and the inhabitants deported except enough of them to take care of the soil. Later the city was made subject and many of the princes and others were taken, of which Daniel was one. Then when Zedekiah raised rebellion, the city of Jerusalem was captured, destroyed, and the inhabitants deported. After seventy years' exile, as predicted by Jeremiah, Cyrus of Persia made a decree allowing and assisting the Jews to return to their land. He and the leaders of those who set out were much disappointed at the small number who took advantage of that decree. Many of the Jews found that they could make more money in the city of Babylon than they could by returning to Palestine. Members of only three tribes returned under the command of Zerubbabel: Judah, Benjamin, and Levi, with the possible inclusion of some members of the tribe of Manasseh. The people came to be known as Jews. Later, under the leadership of Ezra and Nehemiah, others returned to the homeland. But as prophesied in Ezekiel 37 the great regathering will include all twelve tribes of the children of Israel, not merely Jews. The movement is, therefore, still in its infancy. Many remarkable things will be accomplished, but there are other things that will follow of necessity.

The group that were gathered in Palestine rejected their King when He came to them. At least the city dwellers did. The people of (Please turn to Page Nine)

Liquor Consumption Increases

"Thou shalt be filled with drunkenness and sorrow, with the cup of astonishment and desolation."—Ezek. 23:33.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 4.—Contrary to the predictions of the advocates of repeal, the eve of the second anniversary of the legal sale of liquor in the United States found the consumption of intoxicants on an upward swing. Treasury figures showed an increase in the use of both domestic and foreign liquors during the past year. The effect of the education provided by the Eighteenth Amendment is still felt, however, for consumption is still less than 70 per cent of what it was in 1917, the high point of pre-prohibition drinking. Consumption in September of this year was about 64 per cent of the record for 1917, the last year of open saloons. How proud the advocates of repeal must be that through their selfish and immoral efforts thousands of young people who had had no opportunity to acquire the drinking habit are now being educated in the joys (?) of intoxication and drunken debauch!

(In the near future an article on this subject will appear from the pen of John O. Conrad in our columns. Watch for it.—Editor.)

Anti-Semitism in Poland

"Thou makest us a reproach to our neighbours."—Psalm 44:13.

WARSAW, Poland, Dec. 1.—Fleeing toward the city of Radom in an effort to escape a savage anti-Semitic outbreak which was directed against the entire Jewish population of the township of Klwow, ten Jews were injured, one fatally, in an attack that was made upon them. They had undertaken the journey after all the Jews in another town of the Radom district made a mass migration as a result of anti-Semitic excesses.

German Church Deprived of Rights

"The God of our Lord Jesus Christ . . . gave him to be the head over all things to the church."—Eph. 1:17, 22.

BERLIN, Germany, Dec. 2.—"It is not your function to concern yourselves with the life hereafter. That is God's task. The message Jesus gave us, as all His parables show, is concerned with this life. Our task in this can, in the last analysis, be determined for us only by Der Fuehrer (Hitler)."

Such was the astonishing declaration of Hans Kerrl,

Minister for Church Affairs, in his first ultimatum issued last Thursday to the Protestant churches of Germany. The authority of the church, the nature and scope of its teaching, as well as its program of labor, are to be determined and defined, not by Jesus Christ, but by the political dictator of Germany!

"One organ alone can govern the church and give it spiritual (?) leadership," said Herr Kerrl. "That organ is the Reich's (Government's) church committee with its state and provincial committees."

How appreciative we of free America should be of the religious liberty that is guaranteed to us under our Constitution! And how loyal we should be to the Government that assures us this freedom of conscience and of worship! The time may come when we, too, will be deprived of the blessed opportunity we now have to advance the truth of God. Let us make the best of the time that is now available to preach the gospel in its purity.

The Red Advance

"Behold a great red dragon."—Revelation 12:3.

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil, Dec. 7, 1935.—The Communist outbreak, which for a time threatened the overturn of the Brazilian Government and the establishment of a Soviet system in its place, has been apparently defeated by the energetic efforts of President Vargas and his military supporters. The termination of the rebellion came only after several days of savage fighting during which time hundreds of bombs were dropped upon the Communists' positions in both the northern states, where the outbreak began, and in the capital far to the south.

The most dangerous menace facing religion at this time is the advancement being made by the advocates of Communism and Socialism. Fascism and Naziism also possess very dangerous elements, as does any other form of dictatorship, but the latter two political systems are more limited in the territorial scope they cover, while the former systems cover the entire world.

When the Bible Marches

By Arlen Marsh

FOUNDED upon a high type of dogmatism, a positive though fluctuating belief in the cardinal facts of the Bible, Christianity swept the world during the first millennium after Christ as fire sweeps the dry timber of California forests in the fall. It was then an inspired faith, a faith having for its basis neither an enervating reformatory movement nor a hypothetical, moralistic philosophy. The faith that carried Christianity across the Mediterranean and into the gardens of the Roman nobility, the faith that sent barbarians into battle dreaming of angelic generals, had its genesis in something far deeper than reform and humanism have ever gone. It had, in short, its genesis in a strict regard for the exact veracity of the Bible and the absolute necessity of holding to that regard.

There was, to be sure, wide variation in interpretation of the Scriptures before the first three centuries after Christ had passed. This was to be expected. No religion can anticipate enfolding atheists and idolaters, monotheists and animists, philosophers and superstitious, without also anticipating an adulteration of its original concepts. Christianity was no exception. The progress of the centuries could result in nothing except the slow acquisition of some pagan rites and theories, the gradual disintegration of the faith of the early fathers, and a general diminishing of the quality of the conviction which held its devotees.

Christianity, however, struck deeper than the idolatry of the pagan hordes; it offered more than the cynical skepticism of the Greek and Roman philosophers; it gave an anthropomorphic conception of the Deity in the place of the vaguely defined Cause or Spirit of the animists and pantheists. And it did, therefore, continue to maintain its hold on the popular imagination long after its one-time fervor had expended itself on the martial selfishness of such men as Diocletian and Constantine.

As an immediate result of the spread of the Christian faith and practice throughout the known world, commerce and industry received a mighty impetus. This was, it is true, secondary to the primary result, which was the desire to inculcate in the minds of the benighted heathen the knowledge of Jesus as the Son of God and Savior of mankind. The missionary ideal, if not the ideal of the Golden Rule, was fully developed and in active operation long before Charlemagne assumed the office of Holy Roman Emperor.

In consequence of the wish to Christianize the world, trade was given ample opportunity to follow the missions, whose leaders made the more savage spots of earth safe for faint-hearted retailers and industrialists. Christopher Columbus, erroneously supposed to have been the discoverer of America, made his first voyage, according to his own journal, more for the sake of taking Christianity to the infidel hosts of India than for the sake of uncovering a Northwest Passage for the ships of commerce.

The Renaissance, of course, was a direct outgrowth of dissension in the ranks of Christendom. Luther and Calvin and others of like ilk turned their backs on the Pope at Rome and hewed for themselves new churches. In England, the King, irritated by the refusal of the Roman Prelate to grant him a divorce, severed his connection from the Church of Rome and so brought into being the Church of England. Respect for the enormous temporal power formerly wielded by the papal throne waned rapidly, and it was not long before the sole authority vested in the Pope was religious.

The bickering of the various elements in the heretical order gave rise to a demand on the part of the people that the Bible be furnished them in their own language. This need partially had been met by Tyndall and others early in the second millennium of the Christian era, but lack of convenient and rapid reproducing facilities kept their translations of the Greek texts and Latin Vulgate from falling into the hands of the majority. It became necessary, consequently, to invent the printing press; and about fifteen hundred years after the ignorant Chinese had discovered the art of printing, the first press to be seen in Europe was constructed.

No better method of obeying to the letter the Great Commission left by Christ could have been devised than that represented by the invention of the printing press by a European. Where a missionary had once been able to reach a thousand through his oratory, he was now able to reach a hundred times that number through his writing. Into places where an active Christian worker could not go, portions of the printed Bible and comments on them went undetected, if suspected. The influence of the press was beginning to make itself felt.

Hard on the heels of the printing press followed its corollaries—the development of inks, papers, type faces, linotypes, monotypes, teletypesetters (which, from a master keyboard located in the . . . (Please turn to Page Eight)).

A Little Child Shall Lead Them

By Evelyn Phillips

YESTERDAY evening, my little daughter was browsing through my private collection of books trying to decide on something for me to read to her. "Is The Making of an American good?" she would say. "Is Freckles good? Is The Rosary good?" So she went on from book to book. Invariably, I answered, "Yes, that is a very good book, but too old for you and Junior yet." She and Brother are 8 and 6 respectively. Finally she asked about that Printer of Udell's, which she had already started to read laboriously by herself, but hadn't gotten far because the mountain brogue was too difficult for her childish tongue. I began to plead the merits of Little Men, but Sister was deaf to my well-meant suggestion and insisted that she liked that book and no other would do. Junior pleaded hard for Little Men also, but I finally persuaded him to give up his way, for the time being, in order to check Sister's tears of disappointment. Then for two hours we all sat spellbound, and I was amazed at the play of good and desirable emotion that the book called forth from those two tender minds.

That set me thinking back over the road we have all come. When I was a child, I gained my whole education out of these same books. True, I went through high school and acquired a smattering of Latin, algebra, history; but these things did not play upon my emotional life as a rule. I should still have been a dead thing, yet unborn, had I not managed to cram four, five, six, seven, or eight books every two weeks into those spare, precious moments between cake stirrings, stocking darning, sweeping, and school routine. I aggravated my mother almost to the point of fury, at times, because I vanished into my book world the minute a task was done. Mother did not understand the value of the tried and true friends I was making. So many of us don't understand, when we try to change the course of nature or dam a crystal stream with rocks and rubbish. Jesus' prayer on the cross shows that He understood us perfectly, with all our ignorance. Ignorance is responsible for all the sins of the world.

Of late years, I discovered that other books kept me away from the Book of books. So I long ago gave them all up and relegated them to the moths and to the dust, so great was my appreciation of the One Treasure the Lord had given me. I also determined to concentrate my children's attention upon the treasure I loved most of all. So I have discouraged them repeatedly from asking me to read other things. Life seemed too full for both business and pleasure. But a difficulty has met me there. I cannot always arouse in their hearts the same emotions I feel as I read that Book. Last night's experience taught me the reason. Their emotional life is largely undeveloped. School almost entirely, or largely, developed their reasoning faculties. To bring only our reasoning faculties to our contemplation of the Book is to lose the best treasures stored therein. Mental digging will not show us the heart of God in the face of Jesus Christ. As God has expressed it, the world by wisdom cannot know God. He is spiritually known or discerned. Mentally? No! Felt with the heart? Yes! "That they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him. . . . For we are also his offspring."—Acts 17:27, 28.

When we eliminate feeling (emotion) from our contemplation or worship of God, we have cut ourselves off from our source of power. These book friends, as I have shown, develop this emotional life in a child or a grown person, and give him something to bring to the contemplation of God through His Word, that only they, or our own experience, could give. A child has no experience-life to draw from, so he must develop his emotional understanding through the experiences of others. That is, his experiences do not interpret themselves until later. God is our interpreter, through His Spirit, and we can't expect to understand life until the Interpreter or Spirit is a part of our lives. Then we are taught of God, and true wisdom is our everlasting portion. Hence, Jesus says, "Ye must be born again" before you can enter into kingdom joys or kingdom understanding. Then comes to pass the saying that is written, "They shall all be taught of God."

Expecting power of a church whose emotional nature is undeveloped or unborn is about as hopeless as expecting fruits of the Spirit or fervent love of a dead corpse. "They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise: therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish." "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living."

That flame that lighted upon the heads of the apostles so long ago has been defined by one lover of the Lord as "divine fire." Then the Spirit of God is manifested to us as emotional responsiveness to the goodness and righteousness of Jesus Christ, whether within our Head or within the members of His body. Let us not despise the humble means by which we are led up to the full measure of perfect love. Let us not forget the good things from God that lighted up our childish way until we cast them aside for something better, for the wisdom out of which those lesser things grew. "First that which is natural, then that which is spiritual." If we appreciate not the natural things, how shall we appreciate the spiritual things? For of Him, and by Him, and for Him are all things.

"Every good and every perfect gift . . . cometh down from the Father of lights," whether it be a story, a song, a truth, a gift of any sort that can express our love. When Christ ascended up on high, He led captivity captive and gave gifts unto men. Let us praise Him for them all and make use of them, not for ourselves, but for Him and the glory of His kingdom and the happiness of His people. For we are all His offspring and He has a desire concerning the work of His hands. God is not willing that any should perish, but desires that all should come to a knowledge of all truth. Jesus said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life."

What Makes Your Face Look the Way It Does?

By D. G. Harvey

"My confusion is continually before me, and the shame of my face hath covered me."—Psalm 44:15.

OUR question may seem to the reader an unusual and foolish one. But bear with me. It is not as foolish as it may seem. We are not considering the features we look upon in the mirror. We do not intend to sing praises of the beauty or ridicule the more homely features, but to call attention to the change that has come to our faces as the years roll by.

I would call to your notice an innocent little child. Notice how clear the wide open eyes, which speak the great faith and the joys of childhood, the hope of the future.

That degraded man in the gutter, that bloated face and weak, bloodshot eyes, that drink-crazed brain, from whom you turn in disgust, was once like that little lad at your knee. That lewd woman of the street, with that hard expression, yet an expression of fear, once was like your innocent little daughter. What has brought the change?

Before you and I condemn them (for we cannot know their trials or their weaknesses), let us examine our own face.

Have we the same bright, hopeful expression of the child?

Not one of us. Why the change? What has caused the pain, the anguish, the shame, that hopeless expression, in Mother's eyes? The cares of life. Why the worry, the anxiety, the shame, in Father's face? What has caused this change? Why the deep lines? Why the tight-drawn lips? There is but one answer, Sin.

What, my mother, my father, a sinner? That, my friends, is not a question for me to answer. But sin has left its mark on us all. How true, the iniquity of the fathers is visited upon the children (Ex. 20:5). But equally true are the words of Solomon: "A foolish son is the heaviness of his mother." And hear Paul: "For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself."—Rom. 14:7.

"Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned," sums up the matter. Sin, disobedience to God, brought death, and with death every pain, every sorrow, and all shame. Sin and death are universal.

But there is joy in the promise of God that when His Son is come to execute judgment in the earth there will be no sin. Our most cherished hope of today will be realized: life, health, peace, and plenty.

"Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power."—Rev. 20:6.

"And the inhabitant shall not say, I am sick."—Isa. 33:24.

"In his days shall the righteous flourish; and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth."—Psalm 72:7.

"And the tree of the field shall yield her fruit, and the earth shall yield her increase."—Ezek. 34:27.

These promises are yet future, it is true. But hope and peace can be restored even in this life, for our Lord has promised, "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you."—John 14:27. Says Paul, "The peace . . . which passeth all understanding."—Phil. 4:7. A peace that is hard to understand, peace of mind, joy even in times of trouble.

The true Christian has this peace of Christ, that perfect love which casteth out fear. 1 John 4:18: "There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear: because fear hath torment. He that feareth is not made perfect in love."

"But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law."—Gal. 5:22, 23. Listen to Paul again: "Put on therefore, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, longsuffering; forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any: even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye. And above all these things put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness. And let the peace of God rule in your hearts, to the which also ye are called in one body; and be ye thankful. Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom; teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord. And whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him."—Col. 3:12-17. "Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ: by whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God. And not only so, but we glory in tribulations also: knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and pa-

Diabolus the Antigod

By J. G. Haupt

I SHALL not attempt to write upon any phase of the bad works of diabolus or any of its agents. The physical portions of this unholy work—murder, theft, etc.—are handled by the civil and criminal courts of the world. The one church of the Bible does not stand alone in opposing the doings of the agents of crime.

I must limit my attention to those misdeeds of diabolus that affect the vital truths that God Himself and Jesus Christ, His only begotten Son, through the apostles and other holy missionaries, have given for our instruction and guidance. If the pure words of truth have been falsified since they were written, or if they have been falsely translated into our language, it becomes our bounden duty to correct the errors, if we can find them.

The Holy Pneuma of God gave voice to His holy will on the great day of Pentecost, upon which the one church, Christ's own, God's own, was founded. There was and is, thus, but the one church built upon one doctrine, one faith, one hope, one love. The omnipotence, the omniscience, the oneness of the one God stand first. Our God is unchangeable.

The evangelist Luke gives us the first New Testament truth regarding the Messiah, the Christ. The angel Gabriel had been sent by God to Mary, as he had been sent a few months earlier to Zacharias.

To Mary was promised that she should be the mother of God's only begotten Son, this Son to be begotten by the Holy Breath of God. God breathed upon her His Holy Breath. The King James translators called this breath of God, His out-breathing, a ghost. This misleading translation, here and wherever used, as in the day of Pentecost, has led to incalculable harm.

We may well in prayer ask our heavenly Father to breathe upon us His Holy Breath. We may not know, we can probably but weakly conceive of, this Holy Breath of God, but we know that it proceeds from Him, and is an expression of His will, His desire, His love.

In Matthew 12:31, 32, we have very strong language. Blasphemy as to the Son of man, speaking ill of Jesus the Christ, may be forgiven—of course upon true repentance and faith—but a sin as to the Holy Breath, the Holy Pneuma, can never be forgiven. This Pneuma of God involves His very being, His effulgence, His omnipotence. Even this "never" might possibly, through great change of heart and mind, be forgiven by God.

We know of at least two expressions in the matter of this blasphemy. One is the total denial of God's existence—atheism, infidelity. Another is that of blaspheming God, in accusing Him of the ghastly, horrible torment that God is often accused of having in store for unrepentant sinners in the day of judgment. The Bible doom of these sinners, the second death, preceded by such symptoms of punishment as wailing and gnashing of teeth, seems sufficiently severe to meet God's idea of justice.

There is no Holy Ghost, but the Holy Pneuma, the Holy Breath, in Matthew 12:31, 32. This Pneuma of God is a true comforter to every believer.

Every distinct departure from the one faith apparently makes a sect. It has been claimed that almost all these sects are equally opposed to vice and consequently considered equally good. But God speaks strongly through Paul in Galatians 1:8: "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." This curse is repeated in the next verse.

The thought in Revelation 22:18, 19 may apply only to that book, but its force cannot be limited. We read there, "For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book: and if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book."

It is plainly taught that baptism follows repentance and faith. Aside from the departure from the faith at Corinth in regard to the resurrection, as reported to Paul, who had founded the church of God at that place, as recorded in 1 Corinthians 15:12, there was apparently no schism in the Bible period. It seems to have been several centuries after John had finished the book of Revelation that falsehoods began to be taught in the churches, the first appearing to have been in the line of three Gods, one being Jesus, the Son of God, the Holy Pneuma, called by them "Ghost."

The Bible leaves no doubt. Galatians 3:27 states the most intimate relationship between Christ and the Christian. It reads, "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." Acts 8:16; 10:48; 19:5; 2:38; Romans 6:3—all show that baptism was into the name of Jesus Christ.

This should have been continued until the present day. It was eminently proper inasmuch as Jesus is the Head of the church, the Head of its corner, its chief Corner Stone. Jesus has ascended into heaven as the great High Priest of the church.

We have here six witnesses that testify that baptism was in the one name of Jesus. Witnesses could be multiplied by counting the number of baptisms during the next several centuries, as in reading the works of the early fathers we find no change in this practice for a long period.

Let us turn to Matthew 28:19, where a very suspicious participial phrase has been inserted. These six witnesses that we have given ought to be sufficient to prove that the insertion of this phrase was a fraud. We find three more witnesses in the fact that Mark, Luke, and John knew nothing of this matter when they wrote upon the same topics that are contained in Matthew 28. Before the crucifixion, baptism was not into a particular name or names. On and after Pentecost, all baptism was into the name of Christ.

It seems that a great change, from the one God of the Old Testament into a trinity of Gods, would have received special mention at the beginning of each of the four Gospels. The real student of truth will not fail to be assured of the falsity of this phrase, which was doubtless inserted in a copy of Matthew, after the first great schism of the third and fourth centuries.

Turn with me to 1 John 5:7. Here a trinity of Gods is introduced, without any reference to baptism. The whole verse is suspicious. All of the five chapters of this first Epistle of John, except this verse 7, were evidently written by John himself and are found in the same uncial text in which John wrote the Gospel and all the three Epistles. This one false verse is found only in cursive texts, which are much more modern. The fraud in Matthew was probably perpetrated before 700 or 800 A. D., this one in first John probably not earlier than 1000 or 1100 A. D.

There are not a few passages mistranslated by the King James translators that collectively give very wrong impressions to the English reader, unless he is familiar with the truth and can read between the lines.

The Principle of Shame

By Conrad Dickel

IT WAS revealed to Daniel, the man greatly beloved of God, that "many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to age-lasting life, and some to shame and age-lasting contempt" (Dan. 12:2).

This principle of shame is worthy of our serious consideration. David, the man after God's own heart, invoked shame on his enemies, evidently considering it as severe punishment as was possible of being inflicted. "Let all mine enemies be ashamed and sore vexed: let them return and be ashamed suddenly."—Psalm 6:10. He also besought God that he himself should not be made ashamed. "In thee, O Lord, do I put my trust; let me never be ashamed: deliver me in thy righteousness."—Psalm 31:1.

John, the beloved disciple, admonished the brethren to "abide in him (Jesus); that, when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming" (1 John 2:28).

Paul instructs Timothy to "study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth" (2 Tim. 2:15).

The ability to experience shame is, as it were, a by-product of the knowledge of good and evil, which knowledge was acquired through an act of gainsaying, or disobedience. It is evidently the purpose of the Almighty to have mankind experience to the fullest extent the terrible effects of disobedience.

The gainsaying and disobedient must come to a realization of the errors of their ways, and this realization will bring with it shame, an element of that "spirit of judgment, and . . . the spirit of burning" spoken of in Isaiah 4:4. It is also said that "they also that erred in spirit shall come to understanding, and they that murmured shall learn doctrine" (Isa. 29:24).

It might be asked, "Why should mankind have to experience disobedience and its attendant train of evils, and ultimately the fiery torment of shame? Why did not God preserve man in his original state of innocence, so that he would not have all this suffering to endure?"

The answer is that man in his original state of innocence was incomplete, insomuch that he shared with the lower animals their ignorance of the difference between right and wrong, good and evil. In God's design, man will ultimately be complete, having gained through much suffering this divine knowledge, as even the Captain of our salvation, the Lord Jesus, was made perfect through suffering (Heb. 2:10).

Enoch, the seventh from Adam, is a type of the complete man. The number 7 denotes completeness; moreover, it is recorded that Enoch "walked with God," that is, he was in complete harmony with God, and "he had this testimony, that he pleased God."

Before mankind reaches the full stature of the man of God, sin must give way to righteousness, pride must give way to humility, falsity must give way to truth. A large element in accomplishing this will be the element of shame.

When man at last sees the futility of his own efforts, and acquires a chastened and a contrite spirit, and realizes that obedience is better than sacrifice, then will he be in a position to come into complete accord with God. When this accord is reached, the vista of glory is boundless; then will the angels' song come into fruition, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." Then shall that supreme law be actually observed, "Love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, . . . and thy neighbour as thyself."

The eventual realization of the wisdom of God's purposes is bound to cause an overwhelming love and adoration of the great Author, by all men, and when this love is in effect, what glorious possibilities are seen in those inspired words, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him."—1 Cor. 2:9.

offices of the great news agencies, set type for newspapers throughout the nation by remote electrical control), folding machines, and all the machinery for manufacturing these offspring of the original press. To the early desire of the people to learn more about the Bible, a desire directly traceable to the positive dogmatism of such groups as the Calvinists and Separatists, are due the livelihood, ease, and education of millions of citizens of the modern world.

Even before the printing press was conceived in Europe, Christianity was exercising a mighty power over the destinies of commerce and industry. Architecture took new forms under the hands of the men who built the great cathedrals, who reared flying buttresses and spires and domes and arches for the worship of Jehovah. Old forms were renovated, new ones created; men became original, and the building trades, always important, took on a more vivid life. Out of the ideas for the construction of the great towers and spires of mediæval churches came the skyscraper. As interest in a credal faith waned, so waned originality in architecture, which today is almost altogether copied from the work of ancient and mediæval masters.

A rise in culture was coincident with the wish to know more of the Bible, and improvement in industry coincident with the rise in culture. Painting rose to a fine art from the crudities of ancient attempts, and the greatest of the painting was dedicated to the service of God, woven about such doctrinal ideas as the Communion, the divinity of Christ, the resurrection, the ascension of Jesus to heaven, the crucifixion, the birth in the Bethlehem manger, the miracles of healing. Music, too, leaped to a peak never since equaled; and the work of such masters as Beethoven, Wagner, and Handel put in eternal melody the stories of the Bible. From the interest in culture generated by the thought of worshipping God there sprang another incentive for increase in trade: music must be sold; art could be copied and photographed; and both things were done in profusion.

Nor could the sciences stand still if industry and culture were to march under the banner of strange design, Excelsior! The alleviation of pain became an active motive in the work of many doctors; alchemy was discarded for the idea of either proving or disproving the statements of the Bible; the awakening of a conscience in the selfish, egocentric nature of humanity brought with it humanitarian ideals. S. P. C. A's., and S. P. C. C's. Bubonic plague was run to earth; diseases which had decimated Europe were swept out of existence or controlled; leprosy lost much of its dreadful aspect; the lame were made to walk and the blind to see, while electrical devices and surgery gave hearing to the deaf. What once had concerned men little, came, under the beneficent guidance of Christianity, to be vitally important.

Manufacturing developed into a science and an art, not simply a process of making something. As the late aftermath of what Christianity had caused, electricity began to be used for measuring, and cameras were produced that could take pictures with exposures of not more than one two-millionth of one second; cameras were developed that, by electrical control, could photograph the interior of the stomach from all angles at once. Airplane engines were built with parts measured and ground to an accuracy of one ten-thousandth of an inch; a cooling system was installed in Boulder Dam which cooled in ninety days a mass of concrete and steel which, in the normal processes of nature, would have required three hundred years to cool. Railway trains raced across the continent at average speeds of seventy miles an hour and more, including stops; giant airplanes soared over oceans, their four engines lifting more than forty tons of dead weight over a mile into the air. It all was the aftermath of what Christianity had inspired.

In medicine, men perfected X-rays, radium treatments, fluoroscopes, violet rays, and inoculation against disease; they learned to keep parts of the human body alive indefinitely—forever, if need be—long after the original owner of the body had died. Doctors and surgeons transferred parts of an animal's eye to a human eye, and a man blind for two decades came to see. Bacteriology isolated the causes of the diseases which for millenniums had whipped mankind with a scourge more deadly and more painful than any whip of a slave driver. And all this, too, was the aftermath of what Christianity had caused.

Men, however, were a selfish lot and an egotistic lot. They preferred to believe, for their own satisfaction, that they were responsible for the things created, and that nothing greater than they existed. Like the lady frog in Aesop's fable, they puffed themselves up in their own conceit until they literally exploded. Their civilization, misused and misunderstood, came crashing down about their ears. The Bible had marched and been forgotten; it had been ridiculed; it had been despised; it had been taunted and rejected. And, as the things for which men strove had been built upon a foundation of credal religion, a foundation of positive faith in well delineated doctrines, so those things began to perish as the foundation was undermined. The great falling away had come to men, not only religiously, but culturally, commercially, and industrially, as the inevitable consequence of continuous neglect of Christian principles and doctrines.

"So mightily grew the word of God and prevailed."—Acts 19:20.

"THE OLD RUGGED CROSS"

By Emma C. Railsback

IS IT idolatry to sing praises to the cross? The song by the above title is set to very pretty music, and the sentiment would seem to be of a devotional nature. We hear it at funerals, over the radio, at gatherings which are religious in nature, and others which are not.

We look to the Scriptures for enlightenment. "Thou shalt have no other gods before me. Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the waters under the earth."

We learn from Revelation 19:10 and 22:8, 9, also Colossians 2:18, that man is forbidden to worship angels, God's heavenly messengers; from Acts 10:25, 26 and 14:12-15, that he is forbidden to worship men, God's earthly messengers. In 2 Kings 18:4 we find that the Israelites had taken the serpent of brass that God commanded Moses to make (a type of Christ) and had been worshiping it by burning incense to it for a long period of time, and it was classed with other forms of idolatry; therefore, King Hezekiah destroyed it. In Judges 8:27 we find that Israel practiced idolatry by worshiping the golden ephod that Gideon had made, and the thing became a snare to Gideon and his house then, too.

I recall reading something in the Apocrypha about Jeremiah hiding the ark of the covenant in the mountains lest Israel take to worshiping it, and it become a snare to them. No man knows of Moses' sepulcher, probably for the same reason. Israel was very much inclined to want some likeness of something to worship.

In Catholicism the cross is made an object of worship; yes, and in Protestantism, too. The Apostle John said, "Little children, keep yourselves from idols."

In a semi-religious meeting I attended recently no prayer was offered to God, but "The Old Rugged Cross" was sung in a devotional manner and highly praised.

The late Charles Gardner, author of a translation of the Gospel by Matthew, said, "A fiction of the brain may become as real an idol as the veriest stick or stone, and much more subtle in its influence."

We are exhorted to sing with the understanding as well as with the spirit. Let us not worship the cross by singing its praises and thereby fall into a form of idolatry, and also know covetousness, which is idolatry, too, according to the Apostle Paul.

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

A minister speaking on "the love of money is the root of all evil" said, "If you fear that you are guilty of loving money too well, just give some of it away to the church."

MUNITIONS OF WAR AND THE JEWS

despised Galilee, especially from despised Nazareth, accepted the King, and "the common people heard him gladly." But the blase, sophisticated city dwellers were the ones that turned the tables upon Him. Nothing good could come out of such a despised community as Nazareth! So the city people thought. When, therefore, the King came as predicted in Zechariah 9:9 the city of Jerusalem cried out, "We will have no king but Cæsar"; "Crucify him! Crucify him!" When the King comes again He will be received (Zech. 13).

Several elements in the present situation are comparable to the first return from Babylon. When the Jews came back from Babylon it was to turmoil, confusion, and civil war. When the neighbors of the Jewish colony were not bothering them, they were fighting one another, or were suffering from invasion from one or more of the powerful nations of the world. A three-cornered civil war raged in the later days of that period between the Pharisees, the Sadducees, and the Herodians. At one time there was a Sadducee for high priest going through the elaborate ritual of the offering of the firstfruits. At a certain point he poured a libation upon the ground instead of upon the altar. The Pharisees who looked on began throwing the firstfruits and vegetables; the Sadducees brought in their soldiers and before the day ended it seemed doubtful if there would be any Pharisees left.

Barabbas, who was released instead of Jesus, was a man who had led a rebellion against the Herodian party supported by Rome. Even when the city was being besieged by Titus the parties within the city were killing one another because they each blamed the other for bringing in the Romans. So disgusted did the Romans become at the interminable civil wars and conflicts within the Jewish State that they finally sent the army to destroy Jerusalem and to scatter the Jews throughout the world.

The present return is not one of internal warfare, but has elements that are going to lead to trouble. Isaiah 11:13, 14 sets up a situation that is being fulfilled at the present time, I believe. Judah and Ephraim are not going to bother each other, but they are going to fly upon the shoulders of all their neighbors. Already are the Jewish colonists talking expansion. Already are the Jewish colonists taking things into their own hands. Speculation has driven the pioneering Zionist into neighboring lands to the northeast and south. The League of Nations is hearing one request after another to set up the Jewish homeland as an autonomous Government. But the League of Nations is Great Britain. No success will come of that movement until the Jews are in possession of the bargaining power that is essential to diplomatic success. But will they not possess that very bargaining power?

During the World War Dr. Weizmann went from Government to Government bargaining for a Zionist homeland for a munitions secret that was in his possession. The nation that could purchase that secret would win the war. The Germans could not promise the Jews a portion of the territory of one of their allies as the "fruits of victory." But Lord Balfour promised the Jews the thing they were after and in return the British secured the munitions secret.

What is the present situation? Running across northern Palestine through the Valley of Esdraelon is the pipe line that conveys oil from the Mosul oil field. Oil is one of the most precious munitions of war that can be in anyone's possession. The other pipe line is in Syria to the north of Palestine: if the predictions of Mr. Rothenberg (head of the Zionist Movement in America) are true the Jews will have that one in their possession, also. For the Jews hope to own the land from the Nile north to the Euphrates where the River Chebar empties into it at the ancient site of Carchemish. That is in accord with the boundaries of the land set down by the prophecy contained in Genesis 15:18: "Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates."

Then in the Dead Sea region lies the richest potash deposit in the world. What a spoil is there! Untold, incalculable wealth is at the very door of the Jews. Would not the nations of the world seek such wealth? Would not the Jew be in his old position to bargain? To be able to say to the nation or group of nations: We will give you the products of these fields if you will recognize the colony of Palestine as an independent nation!

Already is Zion quite largely restored commercially (they have their own ships) and economically; socially they are a new, vigorous group; now they are seeking political and religious independence. Those things must wait until the Jew is in a position to bargain diplomatically. Those things must wait until that time when nationhood will be restored to that colony, and that must wait until the completion of the movement of regathering and restoration. The munitions of war are not only giving prestige to the Jews in Palestine, but are gathering all nations down there to battle when the city shall be captured as recorded in the 14th of Zechariah. The time of peace promised to the children of Israel is beyond that time of strife which now seems to be developing in the "land brought back from the sword."

tience, experience; and experience, hope: and hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us."

Why should the true Christian not be bold? Should he not rejoice in hope? Why this fear? "So that we may boldly say, The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me."—Heb. 13:6.

THE LITTLE LAME PRINCE AND THE MAGI

Gaspar: "How did you learn of His coming? Have you noticed His star?"

Josiah: "Yes, it is the star has led me to seek Him. All our line has believed faithfully He would one day come to redeem Israel."

Melchior: "From whom is your line descended, friend?"

Josiah, speaking proudly: "From that good King Josiah, for whom I am named. We once were a proud family, but our house has fallen on evil times. Our property has all been seized by Rome, and we suffer cruelly from Herod and his craven servitors."

Balthazar: "Come with us, little lame prince, forget your sorrows for one night while we lay our gifts at Messiah's feet—Messiah who will one day rule righteously."

Josiah: "But I have no gift to give Him."

Balthazar: "You have yourself, your heart of love and faith in Him. Perchance He will find that enough."

Josiah: "Could I only live until He is grown, I know He would heal me, for the scroll says that the lame man shall leap as an hart. Then I could enlist in His cause."

Melchior: "Balthazar, last night I dreamed a dream. It has bothered me all day."

Balthazar: "What was your dream?"

Melchior: "An angel appeared to me and told me we must not return and tell Herod when we have found the newborn King, for He will kill Him."

Gaspar: "It seemed he spoke falsely when he said he would also worship before Him."

Balthazar: "We will return home the northern route, and that sly fox shall not learn the King's whereabouts from us." (All leave; music back stage, "O Little Town of Bethlehem." End Act 3.)

Act 4, late at night, simple home, Mary humming a lullaby, seated before cradle. Joseph enters and stands behind her chair.

Joseph: "The boy thrives, Mary."

Mary: "Yes, my husband, already He seems to smile and know us."

Joseph, hearing knocking: "Hark, who comes?" (Joseph opens door and bids visitors enter. Enter Josiah and Wise Men.)

Joseph: "Good friends, what brings you to our humble home?"

Balthazar: "We seek the Messiah, the One sent by God to be King of the Jews."

Melchior: "Over mountains and through desert wastes a star has led us to your door."

Gaspar: "This Babe! He must be the Messiah, the Christ of God!" (Wise Men kneel offering gifts. Josiah, kneeling behind them, looks up beseechingly to Mary.)

Josiah: "I have no gift but myself to lay at His feet."

Mary: "It is enough." (Music back stage, "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name.")

Worldliness

By Hanna Barber

I have been reading Brother Vivian Kirkpatrick's articles on separation from the world. I would like to see more articles along this line. We need them.

He gives the thought that we must not do anything Jesus would not do, if we are trying to follow Him. If He should come to gather His jewels, do you think He would go to the theater or dance hall to get them? Do you think jewels would be found in such places? Would there be shining lights in there, looking at gross pictures which many theaters have?

The reason I am dwelling on this is that I think more of our people go to theaters for entertainment than anywhere else, and I think some of them do not realize how wrong it is.

Another way of going out in the world is to marry out of the faith. I think it is just as wrong as it used to be to take strange companions. I never see anything said against this, and I wonder if the parents of our young people in the church teach them that this is wrong. So many are marrying out of the faith. I have known of good workers in the church who, when marrying in the world, pass into oblivion as far as church work is concerned. This weakens the church, and we need the young people to take the places of those who will soon have to give up their faithful services on account of age.

I knew a young lady in the faith a few years ago who became acquainted with a young man out of the faith. They were good friends, but when he wanted to call on her regularly she told him that she could not go with him any longer, as he was not of her faith. He said, "Perhaps you may be right. I will investigate and see." He did so, and after studying he learned the truth, and became an ardent worker in the church. He admired her for being so firm in the faith, and told her after he learned the truth that he was so glad that he found the true faith.

Let us be firm in the faith, be shining lights that may win some others for Christ.

To the Prejudiced!

There is a certain bigotry which has ever been connected with religious faith of any kind, a bigotry almost universal, yet which should be avoided as the plague.

It has, furthermore, a great variety of forms and pseudonyms. In one instance, it will be known as dogmatism; in another, as conservatism; in another, as radicalism; in a fourth, simply as living one's religion. Its ramifications are endless, and its results are dire.

To be concrete, for example, there is the man who is vociferous in his denunciations of any efforts to lift the intellectual level of the church. "The gospel," he growls, "has not been supported by men of letters." To be sure, Paul talked with the best educated group of his century as one of their social and mental peers; Luke was a well educated physician; Aquila was a wealthy and cultured man; Crispus was a man of learning; but nevertheless the gospel has not been supported by men of letters, and consequently no effort should be made to attract such men to the church.

And there is the Carrie Nation type of individual who battles with a violent pen and with wild gestures against the onrushing tide of wickedness among our young people, whose feet shall certainly slide in due time if they have not slidden already. Youth, under the kindly ministrations of this type of human fungus, carries the Scarlet Letter, the Brand of Cain, and the Mark of the Beast. Youth naturally, highly flattered by these attentions, rushes madly to the church to cleanse itself from sin under the guiding hand of the Reformer.

Which leads, of course, to a consideration of that peculiar specimen who believes that practically everything is evil and that the only safe thing to do is to read the Bible. (This variety generally drouses through the sermon and complains about the minister.) The Apostle may have said that nothing in itself was evil, that he could eat, drink, and be merry as long as he did not cause a fellow man to stumble from the path of righteousness, that he even could satisfy his hunger with meat offered to idols; but that was and is beside the point. Nothing in or of the world is good, including amusements, books, magazines, newspapers, people, bathing suits, and hamburgers.

In general, the sole consequence of this excessive stiffness is the heaping of ridicule upon the church. Like the extraordinary theories which have set the date for the coming of the Christ for nearly every day since the Crusades, the strictness of the bigots, which usually is unsupported by sufficient biblical evidence, is preposterous. Christianity is not obstinate opinion; it is scriptural fact.

New Class at South Bend

A junior Berean class has recently been organized for children whose ages vary from 8 to 12 years of age. It is held at the home of Mr. Lynn Leighty from 6:30 to 7:30 o'clock with Mr. Leighty as our teacher. The officers elected were: president, Miss Alverta Leighty; secretary, Mr. Donald Stilson. We are studying some general principles of the Bible at present.

THE LITTLE LAME PRINCE AND THE MAGI

A Christmas Play for Intermediates and Juniors, Eleven Boys and One Girl, Chorus of Girls Singing Behind Scenes

WRITTEN in simple form, calling for inexpensive costumes and scenery, this play is designed for use on a small stage. Space forbids detailed description of the dress of the period, which may be found in any good Bible reference work. Act One, outside Jerusalem, late afternoon, dark curtains for background, a large gate, palms along roadside, a large star, dimmed, whose light may be turned on. Enter two workmen, Jonadab and Zechariah, and Josiah, who walks with a crutch, all poorly dressed.

Zechariah: "The air grows chill. Let us hasten homeward, Jonadab."

Jonadab (turning to Josiah, in rear): "Come, Josiah, for I am weary with my labors. You have not earned much today. Your father will be disappointed."

Josiah: "No, Jonadab, he did not want me to go. I will hurry as fast as I can."

(They move across stage, and the Wise Men, Gaspar, Melchior, and Balthazar, enter, all richly clad. They address the laborers, who turn at their entrance.)

Balthazar: "Have you heard aught of the Messiah, the One born to be a King?"

Gaspar: "Yes, born to be King over all the land, to release Israel from Rome's cruelty!"

Melchior: "Can you tell us where to find the Messiah? We come from our homes in distant Persia to worship Him."

Zechariah: "I have never even heard that One was to be born to be King in Herod's stead. Have you, Jonadab?"

Jonadab: "I know nothing of such vain hopes, but all our people stand in dire need. Josiah, have you heard of it? Your father reads his scroll day and night."

Josiah: "Yes, both my father and my grandfather often speak of Messiah. All my life I have wished to see Him. See, yonder bright star! What does it mean?" (Star's light is turned on.)

Balthazar: "We have followed it all the way here. It has shown us our directions when we thought surely we would be lost."

Gaspar: "We have spent many years reading the prophets and studying the heavens."

Melchior: "We know the time is ripe for Messiah's coming. If only we can find Him!"

Josiah: "I know only He is to be born in Bethlehem. Perhaps the star will lead you again." (Laborers and Josiah leave, followed by Wise Men. Music back stage, "The Bethlehem Star." End of Act 1.)

Act 2, the next day, Herod's throne room, bright curtains; Herod, gorgeously dressed, seated in large chair, speaks in harsh tones to a servant, bowing before him.

Herod: "Call in Shaphan, the scribe, and Hilkiah, the priest, at once."

Servant: "Yes, your Majesty, it is done." Servant leaves, entering at once with Shaphan, carrying scroll, and Hilkiah, carrying rod.)

Herod: "All the city has gone mad, babbling of One Christ to be King. Tell me, where is He?"

Shaphan repeats Matthew 2:5, 6, beginning, "In Bethlehem, etc."

Hilkiah: "Do not be alarmed, your Majesty, 'tis false. Israel needs not a Messiah."

Herod: "Shaphan, find Him and bring me word. Hilkiah, go, quiet the multitudes, as I have given you orders." (S. and H. leave with downcast heads.)

Herod, addressing servant: "Find the Wise Men of whom Hamath speaks. Bring them before me."

Servant: "Yes, your Majesty, it is done." (Enters a minute or two later with them.)

Herod, in smooth, deceptive tones: "Hamath, my general, tells me you were guided to our country by a star of great magnitude. Tell me the purpose of your visit."

Balthazar: "Your Majesty, we have been students of the heavens for many years, and we find in accordance with Holy Writ that Messiah's day has come. It is His star that has led us here."

Melchior: "He is born to be King over all the world, as well as Israel, and we would worship before Him."

Gaspar: "All our lives have been spent for but this one event. We desire only to find Him and lay our wealth at His feet."

Herod speaks the words of Matthew 2:8, beginning, "Go, etc."

(Wise men leave; music back stage, "Crown Him King," Herod frowning and muttering, "Treason." End of Act 2.)

Act 3, evening of the same day, outside Jerusalem again, bright star lighted. Josiah, walking painfully along road, is overtaken by Wise Men.

Balthazar: "Good evening, friend, our paths cross once more. Where do your footsteps lead?"

Josiah: "To Bethlehem to find the newborn King, if God grants me that great blessing."

LESSON 12. — December 22, 1935

CHRISTMAS LESSON

Matthew 2:1-12

GOLDEN TEXT

"Thou shalt call his name JESUS: for he shall save his people from their sins."—Matthew 1:21.

A STUDY OF THE SUBJECT

Topic: The Coming of the King.

Aim: To encourage watchfulness for Jesus' second coming, and to stimulate desire for it.

Class Discussion: The practical value of astronomy. Compare the first and second coming of the Lord: prophecies literally fulfilled at His first coming; prophecies to be fulfilled at His second coming. What Jesus is coming for.

I. The King's Coming Promised. (Matt. 2:1-8.) For generations the Jews had been expecting the coming of one who would "turn away ungodliness from Jacob" and restore the nation to the favor of God. The prophecies that were the basis of these hopes were fulfilled insofar as they related to Messiah's first coming in every detail. The prophecies which foretell His second coming are quite as definite as those that pertained to His first appearance, and will be fulfilled with equal fidelity.

II. The Sign of the King's Coming. (Vv. 9, 10.) It is interesting to observe that it was to Balaam, a Gentile prophet, that the intimation came that "there shall come a Star out of Jacob, and a Sceptre shall rise out of Israel" (Num. 24:17), and that it was to Gentile prophets ("wise men from the east") that the star appeared. The Messiah came the first time as the Lamb of God, to be made a sacrifice for the sins of the whole world (1 John 2:2). The result of His coming and sacrifice was the breaking down of the wall that separated Jews and Gentiles and granting equality before God (Eph. 2:11-22). What more fitting, then, that the sign of His coming should be revealed to Gentiles? The signs that mark the second appearing of the Lord as just at hand are being remarked much more generally by Gentiles than by Jews.

III. The King Revealed. (Vv. 11, 12.) The wise men, known by tradition as the "Three Kings of the East," with their gifts of gold and frankincense and myrrh, provide striking types of "the kings of Tarshish and of the isles (who) shall bring presents: (and) the kings of Sheba and Seba (who) shall offer gifts" when Jesus comes again to be "King of all the earth" (Psa. 47:7), ruling over the nations in His Father's name. The gifts kings will then bring to lay at Jesus' feet will consist in part of scattered Israel, whom they assist in the return to Palestine (Isa. 66:18-20).

GOLDEN TEXT

"Thou shalt call his name JESUS: for he shall save his people from their sins."—Matt. 1:21.

These words were spoken by the angel, Gabriel, to the virgin Mary before the birth of Christ. Many names have meanings. The name "Abraham" means "father of a multitude," "Jacob" means "supplanter," "David" means "well beloved." So with the name "Jesus." It means "Savior." That is the reason for the Christ child being named Jesus. Our text also tells us, "Call his name JESUS: for he shall save his people from their sins."

And what a wonderful Savior we have in the man Christ Jesus! Christ died to redeem us from our sins. He gave His life freely that even you and I might live, if we do God's will, but His death will be in vain so far as we are concerned unless we accept Him as our personal Savior, and live a life acceptable to the Father. Make your choice today and live for Him.—L. A. R.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Jesus

- was born at the appointed time;
- was literally, as predicted, the "seed of the woman";
- was born to be Governor of Israel;
- as the Son of God, brought hope to mankind.

Surety of God's Word. God's Word is sure! When Herod inquired of the priests and scribes where Jesus would be born they promptly told him the place as set forth in prophecy. The time of His birth had been decreed and when the fullness of time came, He was born of woman. God's Word is sure! God had warned Judah that unless they turned from their evil ways, they would go into captivity for seventy years. They failed to give heed to the warning and were taken captive. When the seventy years were up, they were delivered. God's Word is sure! God told Abraham that his seed would be a stranger in a land that was not theirs for four hundred years and afterward should come out with great substance. The record reveals that they came out in that selfsame day. God's Word is sure! There are manifold evidences of the surety of the Word of God.

Man's Schemes Defeated. There have been many attempts to frustrate the purpose and work of God. But every effort man has put forth to defeat the plan of God has served to defeat his own aims. Haman, an avowed enemy of the Jews, plotted the death of Mordecai. The gallows which he made for Mordecai was the one upon which he was hanged. Pharaoh decreed that all the male children of Israel should be killed. The decree was not fully carried out, one boy was saved, and Pharaoh was forced to feed, clothe, and educate this boy, who in time delivered the people of God from the hand of this same king. Man's opposition to God always ends in defeat for man.—C. E. R.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

Why We Observe Christmas

We have been studying the lives of some of the great leaders of Hebrew history, and we come now to the greatest Leader of all time—Jesus our Savior. The entire history of the Hebrew nation points toward the coming of the One who was to save them from their sins.

A long space of time exists between last week's lesson and this—400 years. Jerusalem's walls were torn down and must be rebuilt more than once. The condition of the people became gradually worse until at the birth of Christ the Romans ruled over Judea with a terribly cruel governor, Herod. The several miraculous events surrounding the birth of Jesus may be given by different pupils. With the shining of the guiding star of Bethlehem a new "star" had arisen for all people—a star of hope, of promise, of life. Discuss how Jesus fills all these needs, every need of our lives.

The teacher may ask two pupils to report on the words "observe" and "celebrate," bringing out the distinction. Can we celebrate a certain day without observing the reason for its celebration? Do we often do that? Would you enjoy a celebration of your birthday which left you out of it entirely? Determine to simplify as far as you are able the celebration of Christmas in your home so that the Savior's birthday may be observed.

Remember: The One who came once as our Savior is coming again as our King; let us be ready to welcome Him.—M. G.

JUNIOR CLASS

Text: Matt. 2:1-12. Topic: The Star Tells a Story to the Wise Men. Memory Verse: "When they saw the star, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy."—Matt. 2:10.

Review. Test the class on their previous knowledge of the birth of Jesus.

Presentation of Lesson. As most children already know this story, plan to dramatize this lesson. Select some child to be the king. Have the wise men come to the king and ask the question found in verse 2. If your class is large have the king send for several chief priests and scribes and ask them if they know about the birth of this baby. Have them answer in unison verse 5. The king calls the wise men and tells them to go as found in verse 8. The wise men depart. The manger scene could be given next, with wise men there (v. 11). Then verse 12 could be given by having wise men asleep and next morning telling their dream. If possible have the wise men talking often about the star.

Memory Verse. Ask, "Why were the wise men glad to see the star?" Child should answer, "Because they knew Baby Jesus had been born." Repeat memory verse.

Notebook. Teacher should have a pattern of a star and wise men to draw around as most children would find it difficult to draw this picture freehand, and yet they love to make it. Under the picture write the memory verse.

(Suggestion: If children can play the story well, the children should be asked to give it before general assembly of Sunday school.)

AMONG THE CHURCHES

FIRSTFRUITS OF OUR NEW EVANGELISTIC PROGRAM

West Virginia, an entirely new field to the Church of God, is the first State to be reached through assistance of the Evangelistic Fund which was established at our last General Conference. The splendid report, found elsewhere in these columns, brings vividly before us the great need that exists for such work and the rich results that may be obtained by it.

An inquiry having reached our office some months ago from a brother living at Skelton, W. Va., concerning the possibility of securing an evangelist for a little special work in that community, we referred him to Bro. V. Earl Thayer, pastor of the church at Maurertown, Va. Following negotiations with Bro. Thayer, as indicated in his report, a meeting was arranged for and carried to a successful conclusion with ten baptisms.

Feeling that the effort was worthy of the support of the General Conference, the Executive Board voluntarily appropriated $15.00 from the Evangelistic Fund to help in meeting the expenses of the meeting. The local community responded generously to the further financial need for the work, and the consequence is that many new members have been added to the body of Christ, a new and promising field opened up for further labor, the local membership of the Maurertown church increased, and the general work of the church strengthened.

Who will contribute further to the missionary effort of the Church of God through the Evangelistic Fund, and thus have a part in the blessed work of spreading the gospel of the kingdom of God in new localities?

G. E. Marsh, Secretary.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

Sr. Martha Doan's Berean class of girls gave a very impressive pantomime on December 5. Some of the girls acted out the story of Abraham and Isaac while another read the account, and then they showed how this was a type of Christ.

On December 7 the church held its annual business meeting and election of officers. A wonderful expression of confidence in the board which has served during the past year was given when the ballots overwhelmingly returned almost all of the officers to their places. The past year has been a very successful one in many ways. In spite of depression the church has made many improvements and advancements and paid itself almost completely out of debt.

Many forward steps are now being planned. Among others a young people's choir to sing at the Sunday night church services will be in charge of Sr. Palmer.

The Christmas dramatic cantata to be given at the school gymnasium on Sunday night, Dec. 22, is making splendid progress.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

Sr. Jessie M. B. Kauffman of Riverside, Calif., while renewing another's subscription to The Herald, comments on an interesting sermon to which she listened in Los Angeles, in which Norman John Macleod pointed out some of the startling events now transpiring and their prophetic significance. Prophecy keeps us awake to the nearness of our Lord's return.

VIRGINIA — WEST VIRGINIA

On November 19 it was our privilege to start a series of meetings at Skelton, W. Va., which proved to be very profitable as well as pleasant. At this particular place, which is in reality a coal mining camp, we found four isolated people who were members of our faith. These people were hungry for the gospel and made a contact with us through our national headquarters. After some delay a meeting was arranged, which continued for ten days.

Twelve sermons were given at the community church building, and ten people presented themselves for baptism during this effort. The candidates for baptism were all married people with families. All the children of these families number 27.

We are very happy to introduce to the household of faith through these columns Mrs. Ellen E. Toney, Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Poland, Mr. and Mrs. Roy R. Capps, Skelton, W. Va.; Mrs. Lonzo Capps, Sprague, W. Va.; Mrs. Clarence Poland, Mrs. Blondell Bressler, Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Capps, Skelton, W. Va. These newly baptized members, with the other four, who have been isolated for so long, wish to be registered with our Maurertown, Va., congregation. The Maurertown church gladly welcomes these brethren to share with them a church home. This number added to our Virginia churches brings our list of new members in this section to 22 plus the names of these four above mentioned, who were not listed on any church roll. Yes, we are encouraged, since accomplishing this much in the first year and a half of our sojourn here.

V. Earl Thayer.

In the near future the series of articles on the covenants by Bro. S. J. Lindsay, which have appeared recently in this paper, will be published in booklet form. These articles are far too valuable not to be put in more permanent form.

BURR OAK, INDIANA

Four nights of eventful messages by Bro. F. L. Austin are now history. A lasting impression will ever be upon us. Many came each night for miles to attend, coming from Argos, Plymouth, Knox, South Bend, Lakeville, Eagle Creek, and North Salem, with perhaps others we know not of. Each night the house was nearly filled, and each lecture was filled with interesting things coming from the Word of God and seeing in picture that silent sentinel, the Great Pyramid of Egypt. Not a word it speaks, yet truly it is an altar and truly witnesses unto the Lord.

We feel very thankful to have had these lectures. Our thanks are to God for bringing into our midst Bro. Austin and using him in this very wonderful way. We pray that all of our churches will have him come and impart these marvelous truths in the various communities. You will never regret it.

The words of Jesus came to the writer as we observed these pictures and heard the lectures, "But as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be"; also the words of 2 Peter 3:3, 4, "Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation."

Thanksgiving morning at 9:30 we enjoyed a union service with the United Brethren Church. Bro. Austin gave a splendid address, having for his thought "Victory." Scripture reading, prayer, and testimonies by the congregation made the day a better thanks and praise day. This service seemed to draw us closer together and with God, whom we thank.

Sunday's services were inspiring to us and we feel that God was glorified. Bible school attendance was 55. The sermon was "Found Blameless."

The committee is working hard on the Christmas pageant, "The Heart of Christmas," by Verna Whinery, a very beautiful presentation.

ANDREW JACKSON GRUBBS

Andrew Jackson Grubbs, son of John and Deborah Grubbs, was born March 9, 1867, in Clark County, Ill., where he lived for 43 years. When a young man he united with the Restitution Church of God near Casey, Ill., to which church and its principles he remained true the remainder of his life.

On January 1, 1889, he was united in marriage with Millie Stogsdall, to which union five children were born. His wife, Millie, died March 9, 1909. On December 23, 1917, he was united in marriage with Mrs. Julia Rapp, of Mattoon, Ill.

He died November 27, 1935, in his home in Blue Mound, Ill., where he had lived a number of years, leaving surviving, of his immediate family, his wife, Julia; two sons, Allen and Cleo; and one daughter, Allie; one son, Arthur, and one daughter, Elsie, having preceded him in death. He also leaves one sister, Mrs. Dora Conner of Charleston, Ill.

I have known Bro. Grubbs for many years. He was strong in his convictions of what he believed to be truth, and a hard-working, upright man. He had selected the scriptures upon which he desired his funeral sermon to be based, and his wishes were carried out accordingly in the church of his youth; and we laid him in the Partlow Cemetery to rest and await the call of his Master.

THE RESTITUTION HERALD

The RESTITUTION HERALD advocates: the near return of Christ, Acts 1:11, and life only through Him, Col. 3:3; the literal resurrection of the dead, John 5:28; the immortalization of those in Christ, 1 Cor. 15:53, 54; the final restoration of Israel as the kingdom of God under the kingship of Christ, Luke 1:32, the church to be joint heirs with Him, Rom. 8:17, and Israel to be made head over Gentile nations, Isa. 60:13; the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began", Acts 3:21. It also firmly advocates repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, Acts 2:38, and a consecrated life as essential to salvation.

Next Sunday evening the pastor of the church at Oregon, Ill., will speak on "Santa Claus or Christ." The birthday of our Lord should not be associated with pagan myths.

The Birth of Jesus

AND it came to pass in those days, that there went out a decree from Cæsar Augustus, that all the world should be taxed. (And this taxing was first made when Cyrenius was governor of Syria.) And all went to be taxed, every one into his own city. And Joseph also went up from Galilee, out of the city of Nazareth, into Judæa, unto the city of David, which is called Bethlehem; (because he was of the house and lineage of David:) to be taxed with Mary his espoused wife, being great with child. And so it was, that, while they were there, the days were accomplished that she should be delivered. And she brought forth her firstborn son, and wrapped him in swaddling clothes, and laid him in a manger; because there was no room for them in the inn. And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night. And, lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them: and they were sore afraid. And the angel said unto them, Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord. And this shall be a sign unto you: Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger. And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men. And it came to pass, as the angels were gone away from them into heaven, the shepherds said one to another, Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us. And they came with haste, and found Mary, and Joseph, and the babe lying in a manger. And when they had seen it, they made known abroad the saying which was told them concerning this child. And all they that heard it wondered at those things which were told them by the shepherds. But Mary kept all these things, and pondered them in her heart. And the shepherds returned, glorifying and praising God for all the things that they had heard and seen, as it was told unto them.—Luke 2:1-20.

Abreast of the Times

Japan Would Christianize America

"Behold, there came wise men from the east."

KOBE, Japan, Dec. 14.—"Under the belief that he has a word of divine revelation intended for the Christian intent on achieving a Christian world—a world of brothers relieved of brutal obsession with the insensate pursuit of private gain," Toyohiko Kagawa, the "Wesley of Japan," will arrive in San Francisco on December 18 to make "the tide of Christian thought flow back across the Pacific." to put the matter in the language of the Christian Century.

For some time Mr. Kagawa studied in Princeton University, and is well qualified to meet American audiences from the American standpoint. He once described this country as being "Heaven America" and "Hell America." He is author of fifty books that have had wide popularity and has written hundreds of magazine and newspaper articles on behalf of the "down and outers" of his own land.

Speaking of the religion of Japan, he says, "My father was devout, according to the Japanese conception of devoutness, but morally he was impossible. In Japanese religions and religious devotion, piety and personal morals are wholly unrelated."

How strange it is that Japan, a "heathen" land to which America sent missionaries nearly a hundred years ago, and to which they are still being sent from here, should now be sending a missionary to us! And yet can we deny the need of real missionary work in so-called Christian America in these days of greed and skepticism?

In this connection it is interesting to recall that some two years ago the Japanese Christians were asked to express their opinion on the subject of Modernism, and in a most positive manner declared themselves for the inspiration of the Bible, belief in the miracles, and expressed themselves as determined to stand for the historic interpretation of the Christian message as really a revelation of the eternal God. However misled they may have been regarding many important truths of the Bible, it is refreshing to find a modern group of former idol worshipers defending the integrity and inspiration of the Word of God.

Scientist Seeks Life Mystery

"Thy youth is renewed like the eagle's."—Psa. 103:5.

NEW YORK, Dec. 12.—"The Utopias of today are sometimes the realities of tomorrow," Dr. Alexis Carrel of Rockefeller Institute reminded his hearers as he foretold the scientific possibility of greatly prolonging human life and of maintaining human beings in a state of suspended animation for hundreds of years. While admitting these possibilities were now purely theoretical, there was one question upon which the eminent scientist spoke with positive assurance: "There is no hope," he said, "of conquering senescence (the process of growing old) and death." But we rejoice to know that "the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God" (1 Cor. 3:19), and that "the creeping palsy of old age" will at last give way to the wonder of perpetual youth and vigor!

Anti-Jewish Riots Continue in Poland

"Ho, ho, come forth, and flee from the land of the north, saith the Lord."—Zechariah 2:6.

WARSAW, Poland, Dec. 10.—Inability of the Polish Government to cope with the rising tide of anti-Semitism has developed a panicky atmosphere among Poland's four million Jewish citizens. The Polish Cabinet last night held a secret session to discuss the best means of combating the anti-Jewish excesses, which have already resulted in the death of fifteen Jews and the injury of five hundred or more since last November.

To further complicate and aggravate the situation, the Foreign Office has been informed of the intention of a delegation of Polish Jews residing in Germany to petition Col. Josef Beck, Polish Foreign Minister, to take more energetic measures in Berlin to protect the rights of the 350,000 Polish Jews in that country whose business permits have been annulled by the Hitler Government. Members of the delegation already have informed Jewish leaders of Warsaw that they face the alternative of starvation or emigration, and since the doors of western nations are barred, they intend to return to Poland.

The largest Jewish paper in Warsaw, the Naze Przegląd, frankly reported that Polish Jews opposed the return of these emigrants to Poland where pogroms have got beyond the control of the Government and the position of Jews already is grave.

Gradually but irresistibly more pressure is being brought to bear by the nations of the world to force the despised brethren of the apostles and prophets to leave their shores, and there remain but few places whither they may flee, with the exception of the land of their fathers!

Date of the Magi Visit

By J. S. Lyon

JAMIESON, Fausset, and Brown's comment on this is: "It is perhaps best to leave this in the obscurity in which we find it as the result of two independent, though, if we knew all, easily reconcilable narratives."

Matthew records the flight into Egypt immediately after the visit of the Magi.

Luke states nothing regarding the wise men, but says that the holy family retired to Nazareth in Galilee immediately after the presentation in the temple.

These two statements contradict one another apparently, and make necessary the assumption of details not recorded in order to bring about any harmony.

Matthew 2:12 reads, "And being apprised in a trance not to go back again to Herod, they retire through another way into their country." This is spoken of the Magi. Verse 13 reads, "Now at their retiring into their country, the Lord's messenger is appearing to Joseph, saying, 'Rouse, take along the little Boy and His mother and flee into Egypt.'"

The second "now at their retiring into their own country" might possibly refer to the holy family, but it would be a considerably forced rendition; but if that were true, we would have a worse dilemma in explaining why it then would be necessary to leave Galilee to escape a massacre in Bethlehem of Judea.

The second difficulty in dating the visit of the Magi at the Nativity is in the two-year-olds' slaying. Is it reasonable to believe that the star in the east appeared long before the Nativity, so that the visit of the wise men was timed to bring them to Bethlehem for that event? Lange, who did believe it, says that the wise men were mistaken in believing that the star announced the birth of the expected King, and that Herod in turn was thereby deceived as to the date of birth, and so issued his decree that to insure success should destroy the male children up to two years of age. Possibly Lange is more mistaken than the Magi, for they were divinely guided, and divinely warned not to go back to Herod. If they gave information to Herod that made him think the star announced the Nativity some fifteen months previously, it undoubtedly was truth from their lips, not a mistake.

When Herod heard from the chief priests and scribes that the advent was scheduled to occur at Bethlehem, He gave the wise men no intimation of his evil purpose that would put them on their guard. They even would have returned to tell where the Child was, had not the Lord changed their purpose by a warning vision. There is no question but that the words in the texts imply that Herod depended upon learning exactly when the star appeared to the wise men, to ascertain the time of the Savior's birth.

In the difference between Matthew's record and Luke's record, wherein they refer to these events, we must note that Matthew sums up the story of the conception and birth in a short seven verses, while Luke, saying nothing about the Magi, does record in some fifty-two verses many incidents that must be scattered in among Matthew's seven. These comprise the annunciation, the visit to Elisabeth, the registration decree of Augustus, the journey to Jerusalem, the birth in the manger, the angelic anthem, the adoration of the shepherds, the circumcision, the presentation in the temple, and return to Nazareth.

Since Matthew skipped so many of these events, we have every reason for confidence that there should be a break in his narrative, so far as time is concerned, between the last verse of chapter 1 and the first verse of chapter 2. So evident is it there should be a break there, that all versions divide the chapters there. Any student of harmony of the Gospels must be impressed with the frequency with which it occurs that one writer will relate two incidents as adjoining in time, when the other synoptists will insert one or more incidents that separate the first narrative by considerable time. To illustrate: Between the 19th and 20th verses of chapter 17 of Matthew's Gospel we have to insert Luke 7:36 to 8:3 and John 7:2 to 10:21 with a time elapsed of about two months, even in the close array of events in a one year ministry.

We therefore can be satisfied to accept Luke's statement that the holy family returned to Nazareth after the Nativity events. It remains to determine how to place them back in Bethlehem at some date to coincide with the visit of the Magi.

Two alternatives are offered. It was the custom, and a compulsory one, that attendance be made in Jerusalem at the feasts of Passover, Pentecost, and Tabernacles. As Bethlehem was the home of his fathers, it is quite possible that during these feasts, Joseph and his family made this their domicile most of the period. It was impossible for Jerusalem to accommodate with lodgings the million or more who were in those days accustomed to assemble at these occasions according to the (Turn to Page Nine)

Growth of the Kingdom

By A. J. Eychaner

THIS text in many respects is a remarkable one. It is the outline in parable of the kingdom of God, in the varied and successive stages of its development.

Let us draw an outline here upon the blackboard, that the eye may aid the ear, and that we may get a clearer conception of the Master's teaching; thus:

1. The Sowing Time.
2. The first appearance of the Blade.
3. The development of the Ear.
4. The Full, or Ripe Corn in the ear.
5. The Harvest.

What is this illustration intended to represent? The text says, "So is the kingdom of God." It is the kingdom, then, that Jesus is illustrating. It does not refer to any condition of men in their relation to salvation, but to the kingdom to be set up among men.

The illustration is from nature and is easily understood. The successive stages in the figure are clearly marked, and we are not left to guess at its meaning, for we are told that Jesus is discoursing on the coming kingdom.

The divine government that God is establishing among men is a successive work, and marked by distinct stages in its growth. I said, "Is establishing," I mean by that, that the work has already begun, by the sowing of the word of the kingdom. We are yet in the sowing time.

You will not be startled then when I say that these stages in the growth of the wheat represent ages in the work of redemption. God's purpose is to redeem the world by means of the kingdom. But before He will set up the kingdom He must prepare a people, who shall be the teachers and rulers, and who are prepared to administer the divine government in righteousness. Hence the sowing time or an age of preparation.

From the nature of the figure it is evident that the blade age is after the sowing age is past. And the blade stage is followed by an age which shows signs of fruitage: spoken of as the "ear." This is followed by an age when the principles of that divine kingdom will have reached all the world—the age of "full corn." After this an age of "harvest," or the age of the world's ingathering.

The kingdom of God in its administration of blessing the world will cover three ages of growth besides this present age of sowing. The "leaven" of another parable was put into three measures of meal. This is only another way of teaching the same great truth.

We think that we interpret correctly, when we apply

"And he said, So is the kingdom of God, as if a man should cast seed into the ground; and should sleep, and rise night and day, and the seed should spring and grow up, he knoweth not how. For the earth bringeth forth fruit of herself; first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear. But when the fruit is brought forth, immediately he putteth in the sickle, because the harvest is come."—Mark 4: 26-29.

the sowing time to the present age. We should also bear in mind that the sowing time referred to in these parables has especial reference to the publication of the gospel of the kingdom, which we know began in Galilee (Mark 1:14). "The sower soweth the word."—Mark 4: 14. This "word" is the word of the kingdom (Matt. 13:19).

This is the same word or gospel which Jesus commissioned His disciples to preach in all the world (Mark 16:15). And the prophecy of the Savior is that this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness to all nations (Matt. 24:14).

The kingdom of God is to be a government of God for the people, through His chosen instrumentalities. The earth is yet to be filled with a knowledge of God. Mankind are to be schooled and disciplined, until their actions shall conform to the divine law.

Let us consider attentively these distinct phases of the kingdom's growth as introduced by the Great Teacher.

The formative or elementary state of the kingdom, spoken of as the appearance of the blade, aptly represents the kingdom when it first appears, after this age of sowing. It will be after the second appearing of the Christ and the dawn of a new age in the world's history that the kingdom will first appear (2 Tim. 4:1; Dan. 7:13, 14). It will be like the tiny shoot of the wheat when it first comes up through the soil—so small that Jesus in another parable likens the kingdom at this point to a grain of mustard seed, or the smallest of all seeds, but capable of the most marvelous growth (Mark 4:30-33).

At this stage of its growth, Daniel compares it to a stone, which in its wonderful growth becomes so great that it ultimately fills the whole earth (Dan. 2:35, 45).

Before this blade state can make its appearance to begin this work, the elements which go to make up a kingdom, in its organized state, must all have been developed and brought together. The territory, subjects, laws, central place of government, and rulers, each and all are necessary, and will receive their proper share of preparation in the divine plan. After these have all been made ready the kingdom in organized form will begin its work (Dan. 2:44).

The kingdoms of this world are given to the Christ when He comes (Dan. 7:14; Rev. 11:15-18). The resurrection of the righteous dead and change of the living will take place before the kingdom is organized, for they reign with Jesus (Rev. 5:10; Dan. 7:22, 27; 2 Tim. 5:12).

This reign with the Christ will begin with His coming.

The first age will be one of conquest, the antitype of the conquest of Canaan by Joshua. The judgments of God will be abroad in the earth (Psa. 149:1-9; Isa. 26:9; Acts 17:31). This age of conquest and judgment will be followed by the millennium or the thousand years of Revelation 20.

There will also be a resurrection at the beginning of the second age (Rev. 20:4). Those who come up in this resurrection are the martyrs who were beheaded under the power of the Beast during the first age of the kingdom.

After the close of the millennium there will be an open rebellion of the forces of sin, which will be followed by severe judgments (Rev. 20:7-9). This will be followed by a general resurrection of all the dead, at the beginning of the third and last age before the harvest.

This will be the final age of probation. That there will be probation for those who never have had an opportunity in this life, there can be no doubt:

First, because Christ tasted death for every man; and because He is the true Light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world (Heb. 2:9; John 1:9). Second, because the books are then opened. We always open books at the beginning of business, and when business is over we close them by settling the account. The dead are raised and the books are opened, that in them their works may be written; for they are judged by the things written in them.

After the books are opened, they will remain open until the close of the age, when the dead will be judged out of the things that were written in them; and we are told that whosoever was not written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire, or the second death.

Then the harvest of the earth is ripe. The time has come for reaping. The angels will gather out of His kingdom all things that offend and they who do wickedly, and shall cast them into a furnace of fire (Matt. 13:41). Paul says that Christ must reign until He has put down all His enemies, when the kingdom will be given up to the Father, and God will be all in all. The wheat has been gathered into the garner. The righteous shine as the sun in the kingdom of the Father.

The Stone has become a great mountain and fills the whole earth. The three measures or ages have been leavened. Blade, Ear, and Full Corn have been rounded out, the Harvest over, and the New Heavens and New Earth come in view.

The Star of Hope

By E. O. Stewart

"For we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him."—Matt. 2:2.

FOR many centuries a few faithful men in Israel had looked for the fulfillment of Numbers 24:17, which reads thus: "There shall come a Star out of Jacob, and a Sceptre shall rise out of Israel."

For four centuries, since the days of Malachi, a death-like prophetic silence had enveloped Israel's once fair and God-favored land. Prophetic dreams of inspired seers had become a matter of mere history. These four centuries devoid of heaven-born visions had lulled the hopes of that once favored nation who alone could boast of having received the oracles of God.

Israel's kings had come and gone, and the once mighty kingdom had fallen into ruin, with the positive declaration of God that "it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him" (Ezek. 21:27).

At the close of the fourth century of prophetic silence the stillness was broken by a heavenly messenger announcing the soon coming of Israel's ruler. "He shall save his people from their sins" was the emphatic declaration.

One evening as the lights were turned on in the blue canopy of the eastern heavens, wise men discovered that a newly born star had appeared among the myriads of heavenly lights overhead. They soon discovered that this star was not stationary as the other stars seem to be, but began to move toward the west.

Soon angelic voices break forth in praise and song. The stillness of the night is broken when the heaven-born message of "peace on earth" falls upon the ears of shepherd boys who watch their flocks by night. The wise men follow the star till it stands still over the little town of Bethlehem. This star announces the fact that the long looked for King of Israel is born. The Star, the hope of Jacob, is arising out of the dim twilight ages of prophetic dream-land.

Jesus is the root and offspring of David, the bright and the morning star (Rev. 22).

He is now seated at the right hand of God, and is soon coming to brighten the earth with His glory.

Until that good day His promise shines as a light in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the Day Star arise in our hearts.

"The Star that rose in Israel
Now shines at God's right hand,
He'll soon appear in splendor
To shine through all the land.

"Our Star of hope is Jesus
He'll brighten up the way,
If we are true and faithful
We'll shine with Him for aye."

Wonderful Names of Our Wonderful Lord

Ephesians 5:1-20

GOD named His only Son with jealous care. According to the Bible record, we find names of our Savior covering a thousand years in the process. God was naming His Son in the book of Isaiah, and a thousand years later in the book of Revelation. There are still other sidelights on His character through His name. Some of these names are very familiar, such as "thou shalt call his name JESUS: for he shall save his people from their sins," and again, "His name shall be called Immanuel," which, being interpreted, is, "God with us." There are many others with similar familiarity.

But, on the other hand, there are some that are little known and are like precious ore that lies buried. These are sprinkled through the Scripture, and it will be our meditation to discover them. The first of these unfamiliar names of Jesus is in the Scripture lesson—Ephesians 5 and 2.

"And walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet-smelling savour." This is a chapter about the believer's walk—how he should conduct himself, a walk that has to be patterned on the love of Christ, who loved us unto death and offered Himself as an offering that was to God a sweet fragrance, because it was an offering of love.

It is not the first time that the expression occurs. If you would read the story of Noah, you would learn that when judgment was passed upon the earth and after the flood, everything was new even as a new creation. We read: "God smelled a sweet savour and said, I will not again bring a curse upon the earth." Now, Paul is borrowing the figure and saying, "Even as our judgment was passed in Christ and we are in Him a new creation, and as He is a delight to the Father, so we in Him are a sweet savour to God."

He is truly the Rose of Sharon, the Lily of the Valley, and the most prominent characteristic of both the rose and the lily. It is not its beauty, but its fragrance, even as is recorded in the beautiful old hymn: "I've found a friend in Jesus, He's everything to me; He's the fairest of ten thousand to my soul; the Lily of the Valley in Him alone I see, all I need to cleanse and make me fully whole. In sorrow He's my comfort, in trouble He's my stay; He tells me every care on Him to roll. He's the Lily of the Valley, the bright and morning Star; He's the fairest of ten thousand to my soul."

Luke 1:78—"The dayspring from on high hath visited us." This is a verse which fell from the lips of Zacharias, the father of John the Baptist, and who was filled with the Holy Spirit at the birth of John. To him was given great revelation, and he prophesied aloud, and among other great messages came this.

The word "dayspring" is an old English word which is not used any more. It was used three hundred years ago to speak of the sunrise or the dispelling of the gloom.

To Zacharias and Elisabeth the long night of prophecy and expectation had ended, and their son was to be the bright and morning star, heralding the approach of the glorious Son of righteousness. So they used the appropriate term for the Son of God—"Sunrise."

Jesus is the Sunrise in all of life's perplexities. Friends may fail us, and they do. We see the weakness of those upon whom we lean, but Jesus never fails, and His presence dispels the darkness of every night. The Old Testament writer exclaimed: "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." Sometimes the darkness is greater just before the dawn. If you feel that darkness today, let Him come in, for He brings warmth and gladness.

When the disciples had toiled all night and caught nothing, we read the significant words: "In the morning Jesus stood upon the shore." No child of God ever is utterly abandoned, but He waits. Yet I think we have to do our part. If we claim the privilege of sons, we should bear the responsibilities of sons, and those responsibilities bring us into His very presence.

THE ENSIGN OF THE PEOPLE

This is a beautiful expression. It is the name given to our Savior in Isaiah 11:10—"In that day he shall be the ensign of the people, and his rest shall be glorious."

An ensign is a symbol of pride and patriotism. "The Son of God goes forth to war His kingly crown to gain; His blood-red banner streams afar; who follows in His train?" Yet to the Israelite who wrote this text, there was no ensign and little patriotism. As captives, the Israelites lived in a foreign land, and none seemed to rescue them. Their present was not very hopeful, and even as they looked back into the past, their history was a checkered history. Times of closeness to their Father were mingled with times of distance because of their own wandering. So they found a sweet peace in looking forward to the coming of One who would raise their standard high, whose ensign would be the ensign of the people, and whose rest would be glorious.

The Lord Jesus Christ is the Ensign of the people today. The Socialist will tell us that the church represents the capitalist, but the church is the church of the people, for He is the Savior of the people. Out of Russia comes anarchy. Millions lie in wait to tear from our standard the Stars and Stripes, and substitute the red flag, and only the power of Christ will keep this Red menace in its place.

Christ again and again has called the common people to Him with His words, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

Revelation 1:8—"I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord." The Son of God is the Source of all life. He is needed at the beginning and at the ending of every life.

In Colossians 1:16, we read: "For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions,

"I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."—Romans 12:1.

NOW when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judæa, in the days of Herod the king, behold, there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem. . . . And when they were come into the house, they saw the young child with Mary his mother, and fell down, and worshipped him: and when they had opened their treasures, they presented unto him gifts; gold, and frankincense, and myrrh."—Matt. 2:1, 11.

The birthday of our Savior will soon be with us, and brings again, to the mind of the writer, the question of "gifts." In the record we learn of God's precious gift of eternal life through Christ. "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—John 3:16.

About 1,935 years ago, in a dirty old stable, within the city of Bethlehem of Judea, there was celebrated the birthday of the world's greatest son, Jesus Christ, the Savior of the world. There was not an elaborate party with many guests, to pass the time of day, tell jokes, be served with refreshments, and present a number of meager gifts, "just because they had been invited to the party." No! There were no costly engraven invitations to this party. The shepherds, near by, had seen and worshiped the newborn babe. Others, no doubt, out of curiosity, had gazed upon the wee boy; but from afar there came wise men to worship Him.

The wise men of old were considered as the spiritual masters to direct the actions of the kings. Here were Knowledge and Wealth to bow before Innocence and Poverty. The wise men knelt in submission to their newborn King, offering first themselves, their service, and then their gifts, of gold, frankincense, and myrrh; all precious gifts, given because of an overwhelming desire within the wise men to love, worship, and serve this new Master of the kingdoms to come. This was the first real Christmas celebration.

The years have passed, and many Christmas celebrations, but the true significance of Christ's birth, the fact that through Him the nations were to receive eternal life, has become obscured. Few people even pause to think what the word "Christmas" means. To the majority it has become the season of exchanging gifts, a season when gay, colored lights; evergreen trees; candy; nuts; gifts wrapped in tissue, tied with tinsel, all mean empty joy. By "empty" we mean the gift is given, a polite "thank you" spoken or written, and another gift given to repay, in a way, the first giver. There is no love of Christ in the heart as a rule, because the giving of gifts now is merely a threadbare custom.

Now, friends, if we give gifts only to be thanked by men, then we have our reward, but if each gift is given as to Him, not that we expect to "exchange" with our fellow men, then "verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me" (Matt. 25:40). "But when thou doest alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth: that thine alms may be in secret: and thy Father which seeth in secret himself shall reward thee openly."—Matt. 6:3, 4.

This heavenly reward is worth everything in life. When the soul of man comes in contact with God, he receives the power to cause a hundred lights to burn in the darkness with a glow incomparable. "Ye are the light of the world. . . . Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."—Matt. 5:14, 16. Not only the illumination of lights, shining to reflect the great mercies of the Giver of all light, but as the hand clasps the hand of the most high Personality, there comes to that mortal soul the warmth as of a fire glowing within, which must then emanate from that individual for the sole purpose of assisting others to know God.

"I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot; I would thou wert cold or hot. So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth."—Rev. 3:15, 16. As a light can be seen from afar, so the godly warmth can be known, even as the electric radiant sends out its contribution to mankind. Christ's powerful love animates life and assists in directing marvelous achievements.

Today we can offer ourselves to Christ even as the wise men offered themselves to Him. It is our privilege to worship Him. We can bring as gifts golden speech of praise; for frankincense, that holy incense—we can offer our good deeds on the sacrificial altar to go up as a sweet-smelling incense before God; and may the myrrh we bring by our service preserve Him, the Anointed One. "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."—Rom. 12:1.

THE ANGEL CHORUS

By Mary A. Gesin

'Tis night in old Judea; the stars shine softly down,
And deeply azure silence enfolds the little town
Of Bethlehem, David's city, of prophet bards' renown.

Out on yon rugged hillside shepherds their vigils keep;
There in the lonely darkness they silently guard the sheep,
While o'er their weary forms chill winds of winter sweep.

"What meaneth yonder brilliance?" a startled watcher cries,

As to his wondering vision appears in midnight skies
A light, so bright and glorious all other starlight dies.

Stark fear engulfs the shepherds, for an angel from the Lord

Announces this strange message—a new and hopeful word—
"Fear not, great joy I bring you," are the tidings that they heard.

Suddenly a chorus of heavenly voices sings;
"In the highest glory," the angel music rings,
"Peace on earth and gladness." Joy to their hearts it brings.

In haste they leave the hillside, forgotten all their cares,
With only heavenly music resounding in their ears;
Banished by the angels are all their foolish fears.

The Christ in David's city was born that very day,
And shepherds found Him lying upon a bed of hay—
The Christ who o'er men's hearts shall one day hold full sway.

For on another midnight, at daybreak, or at noon,
Will sound an angel chorus; O may we hear it soon,
And for its music ever we'll keep our hearts attune.

And when we hear the tidings from angel's lips so sweet,
While to the waiting earth God's message they repeat,
"He comes, your Lord and King," we'll worship at His feet.

—o—

A little stream had lost its way
Amid the grass and fern;
A passing stranger scooped a well
Where weary men might turn;
He walled it in, and hung with care
A ladle at the brink;
He thought not of the deed he did,
But judged that all might drink.
He passed again, and lo! the well,
By summer never dried,
Had cooled ten thousand parching tongues,
And saved a life beside.

THE DESTINY OF THE CHURCH

By Emma C. Railsback

GOD called Abraham from among the idolaters in Ur of the Chaldees because Abraham was a man of faith. He entered into a covenant with him and made a sevenfold promise, and Abraham believed God and He counted it unto him for righteousness.

Most important of all these promises was the one which foretold a seed (the Christ) through whom all the nations of the earth should be blessed. God reiterated these promises to Isaac, Jacob, Joseph, and Moses. He called the natural seed of Abraham out of Egyptian bondage through Moses and covenanted with them to make of them a kingdom of priests, a holy nation, if they would obey His voice and keep His commandments. In other words, this seed was promised the rulership in the future kingdom of God.

The gospel was preached unto them in many ways. Every sacrifice offered under this Old Covenant law pointed to the great sacrifice that taketh away the sin of the world; but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it. However, not all were lacking in faith, for the great Apostle to the Gentiles enumerates many who had obtained a good report through faith, going back to Abel, Enoch, and Noah, who believed in the promise of God to bring in the seed of the woman who was to bruise the serpent's head.

When the fullness of the time was come, God brought forth His Son, the promised seed, made of a woman, made under the law. He came unto His own, and His own received Him not, but to as many as received Him, to them gave He the power or privilege to become the sons of God.

The outpouring of the Holy Spirit on Pentecost resulted in giving the gospel message to the vast multitude assembled at that time and three thousand Jews believed and were baptized. As a people, however, they rejected the message and said, "We will not have this man to rule over us." Christ had warned them that the kingdom would be taken from them and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof. The message went to the Jew first, however, even after the conversion of the Apostle Paul; but they put it from them and judged themselves unworthy of everlasting life, and then God turned to the Gentiles to take out of them a people for His name. God's purpose in that respect is being accomplished in this present gospel age.

When the fullness of the Gentiles is come in, He who is at the right hand of the Father, officiating as Mediator, High Priest, or Advocate for those who are Abraham's seed through faith in Christ, will return to sit upon the throne of David and reign over the house of Jacob forever. Then will the blessing of the nations begin. This is in accord with the promise of the angel Gabriel to Mary. All who have obtained a good report through faith will be made perfect when the Lord Jesus Christ shall descend from heaven and the dead shall be raised and the living changed.

The highest of all callings ever made known to mortal man is the great salvation, the high calling of God in Christ Jesus, offered to the church. Christ loved the church and gave Himself for it, that He might present it to Himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle. Paul said he had espoused them to one husband that he might present them as a chaste virgin to Christ. Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God. The children of God are heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall we also appear with Him in glory. If we suffer with Him, we shall also reign with Him. They will be equal unto the angels; neither shall they die any more. They will execute judgments on the heathen. They will be kings and priests of God and of Christ and shall reign with Him a thousand years. The church then will become the chosen generation, the royal priesthood, the holy Nation. She will have obtained the divine nature and be associated with Christ in the government and blessing of the nations, in fulfillment of the promises made to Abraham.

"He shall save his people from their sins."

laws laid down by Moses. The Sabbath day journey was at these times extended to two miles, in order that those camped around the city and domiciled in the towns of the environment might be able to reach the temple on holy days. Though Bethlehem was five miles from the city, this would not be too far to take the Passover lamb that Joseph must slay in the temple some time after three o'clock on the preparation day and reach Bethlehem with it by sundown.

The second alternative is the assumption that soon after the Nativity Joseph removed his place of domicile to Bethlehem. This is based on the words of Matthew 2:21-23: "And he arose, and took the young child and his mother, and came into the land of Israel. But when he heard that Archelaus did reign in Judæa in the room of his father Herod, he was afraid to go thither: notwithstanding, being warned of God . . . , he turned aside into the parts of Galilee: and he came and dwelt in a city called Nazareth." It would seem from these words that Joseph had intended to go into the proximity of Jerusalem, to Bethlehem, possibly. It also seems that it had not been his intention to go to Nazareth till God warned him to do so. Edersheim says, "The first intention of Joseph seems to have been to settle in Bethlehem, where he had lived since the birth of Jesus." But he offers no proof other than may be found in the words of Matthew above quoted.

One of these assumptions must be adopted if the visit of the Magi did not occur at the Nativity.

It would be possible, if it fitted, to insert Matthew's story of the Magi and the flight to Egypt into Luke's narrative some time preceding the presentation in the temple, but this seems to be impossible due to Luke's expression of verse 39, chapter 2: "And when they had performed all things according to the law of the Lord, they returned into Galilee."

In Matthew, it is stated that the wise men entered into the house where they found the little Boy and His mother. In Luke's narrative of the Nativity the occurrences were at a public inn and in the manger of the outlying sheds. Some have suggested that after the first night, room was made inside the inn for the mother and Child, and it was there the wise men found them. It is plausible, were it not for the two great difficulties in the matter of the return to Nazareth, and in the two years of time computed by Herod.

If we place the visit of the Magi at Passover in the spring of 3 B. C., it would be too short a time, three months after the Nativity, to be in entire harmony with every statement. But if we place it fifteen months after the Nativity at Passover in 2 B. C., it will satisfy all requirements. It would be fitted to Herod's decree, for he would be sure to add a few months to make sure of covering the age of the Child. It would precede the death of Herod by seven or eight months. Herod died November 7, 2 B. C.

The only weak point that appears to the writer in this presentation is the assumption that Mary and Jesus were at Bethlehem at this time. It is no assumption to say that they were in the neighborhood of Jerusalem at the time, for we have that evidence from Luke 2:41: "Now his parents went to Jerusalem every year at the feast of the passover."

It seems better to the writer to believe this possibility, rather than to think that Matthew and Luke are contradictory.

The question one may ask in good reason is, Why did it take so long for the wise men to reach Bethlehem? Of the character of these particular men we know little, other than the term "Magi," applied to Eastern philosophers in general. Daniel, at the court of Babylon, had been the president of an order of Magi. When the star appeared, it perhaps was the cause of study on the part of these men to learn something of its portent. The idea was not confined to Palestine that the time was ripe for the coming of Messiah. The Babylonian exile had brought Eastern savants knowledge of the Hebrew Scriptures. That they were men who were approved highly by God must be admitted from the circumstances of His leading directions. Having determined that a King was being born in Judea who was to become great, their determination to pay tribute to Him does not necessarily require us to expect that they set out without delay. If the Child was to become King, there would be no need for haste, and it would be natural for them to time their preparations and visit to correspond with the great festival which was attended by so many from far and near.

The books and pages are voluminous that have been written by many authors of varying viewpoint relative to this incident, but in these few paragraphs the author hopes to have pointed out the difficulties and the possible solutions.

WONDERFUL NAMES OF OUR WONDERFUL LORD

or principalities, or powers; all things were created by him, and for him." Not only the human race, but the very earth itself and all creation wait in longing for the fullness of His salvation. Paul said that the very creation groaneth and travaileth in pain until His final redemption from a curse which hath fallen upon the earth. It has twisted our human nature beyond all recognition, and we wait for this blessed Son to bring peace. . . .

"I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord." But He is not only these two extreme letters of the alphabet, I believe He is the central letters as well, and I believe that He is needed not only in infancy and in old age, but His presence is very precious in youth and in middle life, when the heat of the battle presses to the gates and when we need a power greater than ourselves to carry us through.

There are those, perhaps, who put off their acceptance of Christ in the strength of manhood, hoping possibly that when they come to the last final stage of the alphabet, the Omega stage, they will find Him. But this is doubly a mistake. In the first place, they will find they do not want Him then as they might want Him now. Christ does not appeal to old age where He has been definitely scorned all through life, and it is very, very seldom we hear of one who comes to Christ at the extreme end of his life. But the other mistaken notion is that which we have tried to suggest—that we miss so much by keeping Him from the central part of the alphabet, for He is not only Alpha and Omega, but He runs through the other letters and He plays marvelous melody upon each one. And thus we come to the last of these wonderful names.

A NAIL FASTENED IN A SURE PLACE

The chapter in Isaiah from which this reference is taken (Isa. 22:23) is a chapter of substitution. The Prophet is lamenting the invasion of Jewry by the Persians. It is a chapter wherein the children of Israel are driven from place to place because of their worldly contacts until finally Isaiah stands forth and says: "The key of the house of David will I lay upon his shoulder; so he shall open, and none shall shut; and he shall shut, and none shall open. And I will fasten him as a nail in a sure place; and he shall be for a glorious throne to his Father's house." Elsewhere he says that "he is the one who shutteth and none openeth, and openeth and none shutteth," and now we have this reference speaking also of the solidity of His background. He has set before us an open door and none can shut it. Through that door we go to victory and peace.

He is the firm background as well as the fastened nail. . . . He is the nail fastened in a sure place because He is the Rock of Ages, and thus we sing, "The Lord is our Rock; in Him we hide, a Shelter in the time of storm; secure whatever betide, a Shelter in the time of storm. Jesus is a Rock in a weary land, a weary land, a weary land; Jesus is a Rock in a weary land, a Shelter in the time of storm."

And so we are acceptable to God because our Savior is a sweet-smelling Savor unto God. We have the promise of His blessing, for He is the Dayspring from on high. We have the promise of His victory, for He is the Ensign of the people. He fills our entire life because He is the Alpha and Omega, and upon Him we can rest and depend, for He is a Nail fastened in a sure place.—Stanley H. Bailes, D. D., in The Presbyterian.

This is the month, and this the happy morn,
Wherein the Son of Heaven's eternal King,
Of wedded Maid and Virgin Mother born,
Our great redemption from above did bring;
For so the holy sages once did sing,
That He our deadly forfeit should release,
And with His Father work us a perpetual peace.

them. And the music that came from their lips was so beautiful, Ben-Levi knew it came from heaven.

"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men," was the song Levi and Ben-Levi heard. Never would they forget it. It could mean only one thing. Levi's hopes were at last to be fulfilled. The Messiah for whom he had waited so long was here.

"Come, Father," said the boy, "come, let us go to Bethlehem and see if God has at last sent us Messiah. Hurry, Father, I must see Him with my own eyes."

Thanking and praising God, scarcely realizing what he was doing, Levi stumbled over the rough fields after the boy in the direction of near by Bethlehem. On the outskirts of the village was an abandoned building which they knew had once served as a shelter for cattle. A sort of cave it was and always warm inside. Perhaps this held the manger the angel meant.

Entering, they found, even as the angel told them, a babe lying on a bed of hay, a young woman hovering over the little one, and a man standing watch over both.

"Is this the Messiah of Israel, this little babe?" Ben-Levi asked the man in hushed tones.

"This is the Son of God, the Savior of the world," said Joseph, for he it was.

Levi and Ben-Levi knelt at the manger, thanking God for His great Gift to the needy world. Something very like a stone melted in Ben-Levi's heart as he knelt there. He knew now he would not go on the morrow to Rome to learn how to conquer the enemies of all Judah. He would learn from the lips of Messiah. For if one of God's promises came true, all the others would also.

"And the shepherds returned, glorifying and praising God for all the things that they had heard and seen."

Exit, God; Enter, Commerce

It is a far cry from the significance originally placed upon Christmas to the modern conception of Santa Claus, tinsel, and phony gold. Founded upon a high ideal, the day has degenerated until its original purpose has been almost forgotten.

True, there still are numbers who flock to the church services held as a part of the Christmas celebration ("we do so like to see little Jimmy speak his pieces!"); but a large proportion of these numbers, if not a decided majority, is composed of those who favor the church with their presence only at Christmas and Easter.

Commerce, however, and industry and transportation have much to make them thankful for such holidays. Men exchange gifts, business has a seasonable upward swing, employment increases, and profits make pleasant jingling noises in the cash register. That God and His Son are, in reality, the center of the day is pretty well ignored, except as pictures of the manger, the shepherds, and the Magi can be sold.

It is not, in view of the trend toward consistent commercialization of every Christian festival, surprising that the church complains of a slow but steady dissolution. When commerce enters as protagonist, God necessarily is put offstage.

Your Attention, Please

The 1st of January is the time for payment of dues to the state and national treasurer. Where there is no state society, the local society sends one half of its dues to the national treasurer (provided such dues are 10 cents or less than 10 cents a month per member), while organized state societies send one half of their state dues to the national organization. The national treasurer is Mrs. Esta Starbuck, 624 Rockton Avenue, Rockford, Illinois.

The new Berean book is in process of development, and as chairman of the Publishing Committee I urge every state and local president, or anyone else who may be interested, to write the Publishing Committee his criticisms of past Berean books and to offer any suggestions as to the types of lessons best suited for his particular society. Send your suggestions and criticisms to the writer, Marshall, Illinois.—Harry Goekler, President, National Berean Society.

Why Not?

It is, after all, a rather pertinent question that Mary Pickford asks in the title of her book, Why Not Try God? What if her conclusions are flavored with a dash of somewhat questionable mental philosophy? The fact still remains that the world has done very well in its effort to place the onus of failure or success upon its own bowed shoulders.

Almost everything possible has been tried. And almost everything possible has failed. New Deals and Noble Experiments and Utopias and Transcendentalisms and Technocracies and Townsend Plans have been poured in profusion upon the human race, but society clings to its problems with an affection unparalleled in men's annals.

Perhaps, therefore, it might be wise to try God, and see what He can do. Possibly the trying would not result in the precise attainment of Miss Pickford's delightful dreams, but at least it would serve to impress men with a more complete appreciation of their own colossal blunders. When faced with apparently insurmountable difficulties, men will go to almost any lengths to accomplish their ends; so why not an appeal to God rather than to politics?

Nations Shall Come to Thy Light

Thou who in a manger
Once hast lowly lain,
Who dost now in glory
O'er all kingdoms reign,
Gather in the people,
Who in lands afar
Ne'er have seen the brightness
Of Thy guiding star.

Onward through the darkness
Of the lonely night,
Shining still before them,
With Thy kindly light,
Guide them, Jew and Gentile,
Homeward from afar,
Young and old together,
By Thy guiding star.

Until every nation,
Whether bond or free,
'Neath Thy starlit banner,
Jesus, follows Thee
O'er the distant mountains
To that perfect home,
Where no sin nor sorrow
Evermore shall come.

"Unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord."

THE YOUNG SHEPHERD BOY

FATHER, don't you ever get tired of reading that old scroll?" young Ben-Levi asked crossly, turning away with impatience.

"No, son," replied his father. "Listen to these wonderful words from Isaiah, 'Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder.'"

"You may believe it, Father," said the boy, "but I don't! It will never happen in our lifetime."

"Every year seems to me to bring nearer the time of Messiah's birth. Our people could not possibly be in worse circumstances, cruel and oppressive as Rome is. And Herod—who could carry out Rome's orders with more deceit and treachery than he?"

"Let me go, Father," urged Ben-Levi. "Let me go to Rome where I can find opportunities that are not to be had here. I will become a wealthy merchant long before I am as old as you are, and then come back for you and Mother and the little ones."

"We will see, son, we will see. I can't bear the thought of your competing with those hard masters. You yourself will grow as hard as they."

"I am inwardly, Father. How can anyone look upon their deeds of violence and not grow hard? The only way to conquer such enemies is by watching their deeds and outwitting them."

"Say not so, son," begged the father, as the tears gathered in his eyes. "The Prince of Peace, who will come ere long, will conquer them, but in His own way, and it will be the way of love."

"Always the Messiah! You speak of no one else. In the meantime must we allow Rome to take the bread from the mouths of Mother and the little ones?"

"Moses tells us, son, that man doth not live by bread only, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord doth man live," quoted Levi, as he arose, put away the beloved scroll, and prepared to go to his work.

"Come, Ben-Levi, it is time for us to go to the flocks to watch. See, already it grows dark. Samuel and Ben-Samuel will think we are not coming," said the father as they went out into the gathering dusk.

"I go with you tonight, Father, but this is the last time. Tomorrow I start for Rome where I will show those cowardly heathen what sharp wits the Jewish 'dogs' have," said the boy as they trudged over the rough fields to their waiting comrades.

The father's lips seemed to move, but no words came. He was praying God to melt the boy's heart, which had been hardened by the sufferings they had endured (and small wonder, he thought) and give him a heart of faith in the coming of the One for whom he had waited these many years.

Before long they reached the watching shepherds and the flocks, and Samuel and his son, whose places they took, were ready to turn homeward for their evening meal and night of rest. The father seated himself on the ground, but Ben-Levi tramped back and forth, back and forth! Anything but peace was in his heart, though his father spoke so often to him of the Prince of Peace.

God must have forgotten His promise of sending One to sit on David's throne and rule righteously, if indeed He ever meant it. So reasoned the lad, as he pictured himself going to the distant city of Rome where he had been told gold could be picked up in the streets and men handled it as carelessly as the dust under their feet. Ah, one day he would return and show them that not all the power lay with Herod and his deceitful followers!

Thus the night hours wore on. The father, growing chill, arose and walked among the sheep, calling now this one, now that one, by name. One could easily see they knew him and trusted him. But the boy was entirely unaware of his surroundings. His eyes were on the heavens in the direction of the distant city of his dreams.

"Father, see yonder brilliant light!" The boy came running toward him, pointing to a light the like of which he had never seen. "It seems to move and come nearer to us. It is —."

The words halted on the boy's lips. Fear froze every feature, as from the center of the brightness a being not of earth spoke to them. His face was more glorious and his garments whiter than their imagination had ever pictured. And these were the words he said:

"Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord. And this shall be a sign unto you; Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger."

Suddenly, before father or son could recover from fright, a chorus of angels joined the angel who spoke to

REVIEW: SIGNIFICANCE OF THE EXILE AND THE RESTORATION

GOLDEN TEXT

“The mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him, and his righteousness unto children’s children.”—Psalm 103:17.

GOLDEN TEXT

“The mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him, and his righteousness unto children’s children.”—Psalm 103:17.

At times the Israelites, God’s peculiar people, lived near to Him and feared Him greatly. At other times they left the worship of the true God and worshiped idols like the other nations about them. “Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth” was very true with the nation of Israel. Sending them into captivity was a chastisement, and “no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby.”

Through God’s great love and mercy that constantly endures, He brought the ones in captivity back to their homeland to again take up the worship of the true God. God’s mercy extends also to the Christian in these days. If it did not, many failures would be made for lack of living close to Him at all times.

—L. A. R.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

1. Jesus Christ carried the sorrows of the world unesteemed.
2. Jeremiah told the people what they needed, not what they wanted.
3. Jeremiah’s message was a direct condemnation of Judah’s sins.
4. Belshazzar and his lords were powerless against the judgments of God.
5. Sin in people closes the door of God’s protection and blinds one to his duty to God.
6. Responsibility to God does not cease with our own welfare.
7. The captivity was a time of weeping, but ended with great rejoicing.
8. Haggai told the people that support of God’s work would bring material blessings.
9. Ezra sought the Lord for deliverance from wayside enemies.
10. Nehemiah set watches against those who would destroy the work of God.
11. Ezra knew that obedience to God must come through understanding of the Word.
12. Jesus was born to be Governor of Israel.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

Quarter’s Purpose. The aim of the quarter’s lessons has been to find events and teachings in the lives and books of the later Old Testament prophets which will be of value as examples in modern living. What were the generally similar characteristics of the men studied? What sort of courage did they possess? Have we today as much reason to have faith in God as they had then? How did they display their human attitudes toward fellow men? Did God ever discourage these attitudes? Why? Were these prophets influenced by the same thoughts that move us?

History. As a method of review, recall the history of the Jews from about the time of Jeremiah to the time of Ezra and Nehemiah. What caused the captivity? Give both biblical and secular reasons for your answer. To what was the rebuilding of Jerusalem due? Did Cyrus know that God had stirred up his heart to give comparative freedom to the captive Jews? How does God work among men usually: by miracle, by direct inspiration, or through ordinary circumstances and common thought processes? Why can we not trust the so-called “inspiration” of people today?

Prophecies. What prophecies were uttered in the quarter’s lessons in regard to the Christ? To whom were they primarily directed? Why were they given?—A. M.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

Learning From Great Men

The period of Hebrew history studied in lessons 2 to 11 was the darkest period revealed in the pages of our Old Testament. Lessons 1 and 12 center around the only enduring bright spot; the former showing the manner in which Jesus brought salvation to His people and the world in general; the latter giving the incidents surrounding His coming into the world. God always provides a leader for every emergency, the greatest Leader for the greatest emergency—Jesus, who alone can save people from their sins.

There are several ways in which to make a review lesson interesting. Assign a lesson to each of twelve pupils, asking them to give briefly the most outstanding facts of the lesson and the most important truth for their own lives. Or questions may be given out previously, such as, Which prophet accomplished most for his people? Who was the greater, Jeremiah or Nehemiah? Ezra or Ezekiel? Another profitable feature is giving quotations and asking the author’s name, as, Who said, “I cannot come down,” and under what circumstances? What happened when “the people had a mind to work”? Or the teacher herself may briefly review the quarter, showing some of the lessons learned by the captives—the sin of idolatry, God’s constant care over them, the value of discipline and suffering, courage to make a fresh start—making the application for today. The future of the Hebrew nation should also be mentioned.

Remember: Today God watches over nations; He watches over individuals; He watches over you.—M. G.

JUNIOR CLASS

Memory Verse: “And that from a child thou hast known the holy scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus.”—2 Tim. 3:15.

Tell the story of Timothy, how he was taught from a child by his mother and grandmother. Show how this helped him in later life. Then say, “Now we’ll see what we learned this quarter that will help us. In the center of a page in our notebook we’ll paste a picture of a child. (Teacher should provide pictures). From this child we will draw thirteen lines which represent our thirteen lessons. Above these lines write the name of the lesson. Below it write what we have learned that will help us now and in later life. Example:

‘Isaiah Portrays a Suffering Servant.’

‘Jesus was kind and patient. We should be also.’”

Go through each lesson carefully and bring out the thoughts that will emphasize the aim of this quarter’s lessons as found in lesson 1 under the topic, “Introducing This Quarter’s Lessons.”

My love goes out to all the boys and girls in the Sunday schools everywhere. Be there each Sunday ready to learn something from the best book of all, the Bible.—V. C. T.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

MEDICAL TREATMENT NEEDED

A drive has been started to raise money to pay for medical service for Bro. Almus Adams, which is necessary at once. Each member is contributing $1.00 or more. All that might be interested, please send your contributions to Miss Mattie Gow, 4408 N. 28th St., Omaha, Neb., as soon as possible.

Clara Krogh, Cor. Sec.

GOLDEN RULE CHURCH OF GOD

We are very glad to announce that Bro. M. W. Lyon, pastor of the Golden Rule Church of God of Cleveland, Ohio, was able to resume his pastoral service on Sunday, Dec. 8, after his recent illness.

We were fortunate in having Bro. James A. Patrick of Ashland, Ohio, to supply, in the four weeks of his absence, which was greatly appreciated.

We are deeply grateful for all prayers in behalf of his recovery.

John O. Conrad, Clerk.

BRUSH CREEK, OHIO

Elder C. E. Randall of Fonthill, Ont., has just recently completed a series of very helpful sermons. From November 24 to December 8 it was our privilege to have Bro. Randall work with us for the first time in a series of such meetings. Notwithstanding unavoidable handicaps, a good interest was held in the work, with an average attendance of about 100. At several meetings we had capacity attendance.

On the closing Sunday Rebecca Macy was baptized in Brush Creek on the farm of Bro. Charles Doll. We pray her a successful Christian life. Her address is RFD, Casstown, Ohio. By no means is this the only fruitage of the meetings. Bro. Randall's work with us will be long remembered, and we anticipate for him success wherever he goes.

S. E. Magaw, Pastor.

KOKOMO, INDIANA

The Kokomo church is enjoying the new heating plant, a used Holland furnace donated by Mr. Ward Cooper, one of the county officials, who installed a new heating system in his home. The piping for this furnace was donated by Mr. J. R. Lawrence, 2958 N. Hillside Ave., Indianapolis, Ind. Neither of these friends in need has any connection with this church, but on hearing of our needs acted at once. This heating plant has caused us to lower the floor of our basement, the work being done by unemployed brethren and friends. We plan to set aside a room there for our welfare department, which is just starting our third winter of assisting those in need in this section of the city.

Bro. William Huffer of the Hillisburg church spoke for us Sunday morning, Dec. 8, giving us a wonderful talk on "The Spirit." Bro. A. E. Hoskins will be with us (D. V.) December 22. We hope he will be able to remain with us for our Christmas entertainment. The program committee and the children are working hard at this time to do their best. Interest in all activities is good.

Anyone living near Kokomo is invited to meet with us.

O. J. Parker and D. G. Harvey, Co-Pastors.

To Our Brotherhood

I am coming to you once more to present our situation, financially, presenting the facts in detail for your consideration, and, not only asking for further financial assistance, but your suggestions and counsel as well.

First: I want to express my sincere thanks to those who have been so generous in their contributions in response to my call of a few weeks ago for funds to meet the extra expense of installing the heating plant, and these cannot be expected to respond so generously each time these calls are made. The burden should be spread over our entire brotherhood, according to our ability. If this could be done, we would have no difficulty in carrying the load. I presume, however, that this ideal can never be reached in this life, and the few, comparatively, must continue to carry most of the load.

No doubt a number will say, when they glance at this, I do wish that this embarrassing matter could rest for a little while, until we can get our breath and rest a few weeks, or something to that effect. I fully sympathize with you in this feeling, as I dare say, it embarrasses me more to write it than it does you to read it, for the reason that whatever criticism may be offered will eventually center upon me. However that may be, the rule is, that those who are most voluminous in their criticisms usually offer little except criticisms.

But, generally, and as the Christmas spirit is supposed to have us under its control at this time, I can confidently expect you to consider this matter sympathetically with me. It will be necessary, in order that we may have the situation in its several aspects in mind, for me to repeat some things to which I have heretofore called attention in these "Brotherhood" letters.

The liberal contributions that have been received during the last few weeks have been absorbed in meeting the emergency expenses of the heating plant, except contributions made for special purposes, such as evangelistic fund, etc.

No doubt many persons who see the list of contributions that appear in The Herald each week wonder where all that money goes. Let me suggest that you compute these amounts and keep a list of them for several months and compare the amounts with the list of expenses I am going to give. It is hardly possible for one to understand and realize the many avenues of expenditures in connection with an institution of this character unless he has had experience in handling such matters or is in very close proximity with it and can see its workings.

As we have stated repeatedly, such publications as we issue have never been published except at heavy loss, unless the quantity be multiplied. The same principle applies with Golden Rule Home, which, under present conditions, is a heavy liability to the N. B. I. instead of an asset. This needs further explanation. I stated in my letter of some weeks ago, that we have sufficient property in trust for Golden Rule Home, and by which, if sold at very conservative appraised valuation, we could repay to those now in the Home all that we would be required to do and still have more than that amount left. But we don't want to do that. Like the publishing plant, the cost of caring for the few that we have in the Home is nearly as much as it would be if we had twice or three times the number, and the income from the property is not nearly sufficient to meet the expenses. Here is the way it works, as all must realize. Taxes, insurance, repairs, heat, light, matron, and other expenses we cannot itemize are just as heavy as they would be if we had three times the number in the Home as we now have. As everyone who has property knows, the income from property is very light, above taxes, insurance, and upkeep, and as compared with some years ago. Furthermore, there is practically no sale for property of any kind, and we are endeavoring to go through the depression without losing any of our property and without encumbering it in any way, and when the demand for property comes back we will be able to dispose of some of it without such extraordinary sacrifice.

And although Golden Rule Home is the "homiest" Home of its kind, and one of the best furnished I have ever seen, and is ideally situated, etc., it seems that our folks who are in need of such accommodations and comforts as Golden Rule Home furnishes and offers to others, prefer to patronize other similar institutions or private homes. I can understand this, and have no fault to find, as many prefer remaining near as they can to their old neighborhoods. Then again, many homes have large endowments, which some feel secure them against any possible loss of the funds they put into the institution. All of which makes it more difficult for Golden Rule Home to secure patronage. The plain facts are that Golden Rule Home is one of the safest in the country. The safety of such institutions depends upon the care and management in conducting them, rather than the amount in the endowment to be used through careless or extravagant management. But to the list of expenditures in conducting the business of the National Bible Institution.

There are, at the present time, seven employees in the N. B. I. service, including office, publication of literature, and conducting Golden Rule Home, and, on occasion, an extra must be taken on for a few days. The combined salaries of these employees amount to $394.00 per month approximately, an average of $56.30 each. I have considered this item of expenses repeatedly, with the idea of distributing the work of one of these among the others and discharging one, and have been unable to do this, unless the responsibilities of the manager can be placed upon another member of the force. These duties, of course, cannot be distributed. Nor can I ask these employees to make further reductions in their salaries.

Our bills for paper used in the print shop will average approximately $35.00 per month. Other supplies, repairs, etc. will add another $15.00 per month. Add to these amounts taxes, insurance, heat, light, water, and other incidental expenses, and we have another $75.00 to $100.00 per month.

I have given these items, which are approximations, that you may be able to make comparisons. We are making no debts and putting no encumbrances on any of our properties to pay operating expenses. Our system has been to continue to reduce our old indebtedness. We have encountered difficulties, but have succeeded in doing this thus far, and hope to be able to continue to do this, and it is to this end that I continue to call your attention to these things. But to do this, a hearty cooperation and financial assistance are absolutely necessary. If we could have a half dozen more residents in Golden Rule Home, entering upon the regular terms, the situation would be greatly relieved; and if the list of Restitution Herald and Truth Seekers' Quarterlies could be doubled the whole institution would be out of the red, so far as operating expenses are concerned.

I trust you may consider this matter seriously and sympathetically, and if you have suggestions to offer, or assistance to give, either or both will be much appreciated.

ARKANSAS CITY, KANSAS

The Church of God at Arkansas City, Kan., is progressing very nicely under the leadership of Sr. Le Crone. She is untiring in her effort to give meat in due season, and her sermons are interesting and inspiring. Both Sunday school and church services are well attended, and some new faces are seen at services frequently.

On Thanksgiving a 9 o'clock service was conducted in the church. Twenty-five were in attendance. A program in keeping with the day was given, followed by a devotional period and a sermon by Sr. Le Crone. A thank offering of $21.00 was given by the group.

The Doreas Society have been busy quilting. They meet on Thursday afternoon every two weeks. From their different activities, they have in their treasury since starting $81.00 toward the seats for the church, for which they feel grateful to the heavenly Father.

The Junior Doreas Society are trying to earn money to buy a pulpit chair, and Saturday, Dec. 14, they will hold a bazaar at Sr. Reed's to sell their work which little hands have made, consisting of tea towels, clothespin bags, holders, aprons, etc.

Once a month a social is given in the church basement to promote fellowship and good will. Sr. Le Crone was leader for the first social. After the opening service, consisting of devotional and singing of a number of hymns, she proceeded to have a questionnaire. Fifty Bible questions were asked the group. It caused a lot of thinking to get the correct answers, and all found a very interesting and profitable time finding out how little they really remembered of what they so often had read and heard. After the questionnaire, a spelling match of Bible names and places was had, and a merry time indulged in. Then a refreshment service of sandwiches and coffee followed which ended the social hour.

We have installed a floor furnace in the church which we hope will be an improvement over the two gas stoves we had on approval. We have choir practice and business meeting each Thursday night at 7. So we have a busy time each week, and with it all we feel God is with us and is our helper in all we do in His name and for His cause.

Sr. Bernice Brown, who is living with her mother, Mrs. A. J. Chaplin, has been very ill, and is still not able to be up. Remember us in your prayers. Sr. Hadickie is also afflicted and practically helpless, and has been so for over a year.

Mrs. A. J. Chaplin, Secretary.

BURR OAK, INDIANA

This week is a busy time, and we will be busy until Christmas. Rehearsals and class meetings are making an enjoyable time of fellowship and preparation.

The Morning Star Class taught by Sr. Hatten and the Gospel Seekers taught by Sr. Overmyer had their meetings on Wednesday.

The adult class of the Bereans are enjoying study in Bible characters. This week we take up the study of Noah. Splendid attendance at this meeting.

A four-by-five-foot blackboard on legs was presented to the school by the Gospel Seekers' Class. The superintendent, Bro. Zechiel, accepted the board in behalf of the school with many thanks.

The Christmas pageant, "The Heart of Christmas," presented by the school, will be given Christmas Eve. All are invited to attend this beautiful scene. Sr. Zechiel is preparing the little tots for their part in the program.

The several departments of the church are making their nominations of their officers to be presented at our annual meeting of election, January 3. We are praying for God's will to be done and not ours in this important meeting.

A. E. Hoskins, Pastor.

WHAT IS YOUR EXPLANATION?

The following letter suggests an interesting and profitable question for biblical discussion. We suggest that our students, both ministerial and lay, take the matter up for careful investigation and give our readers the benefit of their conclusions. The letter follows.

"In Proverbs 19:9, we have these words: 'A false witness shall not be unpunished, and he that speaketh lies shall perish.' In Proverbs 6:16, 17: 'These six things doth the Lord hate: yea, seven are an abomination unto him: a proud look, a lying tongue, and hands that shed innocent blood.' Proverbs 12:22: 'Lying lips are abomination to the Lord; but they that deal truly are his delight.'

"There are many similar references to lying in the Word of God. (In the light of these texts) will some one please explain why Jacob and Rahab were blessed for the lies they told? There are other instances of the same kind in the Bible. Are there different kinds of lies? Or is a lie a LIE? I am not asking for argument. I really wish the matter settled in my mind in a way that I can explain it satisfactorily to others. I know God's Word does not contradict itself and I know it is all divinely inspired, therefore there is something wrong with my understanding of it. Can some one explain what it is? Yours in His name,"

Mrs. E. C. Olmstead.

VALUABLE HELP FOR STEWARDSHIP COMMITTEES

The Layman Company, which cooperates with all denominations, will send for $1.00, to any committee or individual, a package containing over 500 pages of pamphlets, bulletins, and tabloids, including three playlets, "The Scriptural Basis for the Tithe," and an account book; also a proposal for ten weeks of tithe education at so low a price that distribution to an entire church through ten weeks costs only 3½ cents per family.

We will also include enough copies of our pamphlet "Winning Financial Freedom" to supply one copy to each official of the church.

When you write please mention The Restitution Herald and give your denomination.

WOOD - ANDERSON

Miss Nora Wood and Mr. Lonnie Anderson were united in marriage Monday morning, Dec. 9, at 10 o'clock. The bridegroom's father, J. H. Anderson, performed the ceremony at the home of the bridegroom's sister, Mrs. Orville Clark.

They will make their home in South Bend, Ind., where the groom is employed by the Northern Indiana Railway Company.

JESSE HARROLD

Jesse Harrold, son of Byram and Martha Johnson Harrold, was born in Madison County, Ind., February 24, 1846, and died at his home in Blythedale, Mo., June 6, 1935.

He was one of a family of eight children, his brother Thomas being the only one who survives. The brothers, Jesse and Thomas, were always inseparable companions and in the autumn of life their relationship became closer because of the latter's blindness.

The family came to Missouri in 1860 soon after the mother's death. At the beginning of the Civil War the subject of this sketch, at the age of 16, enlisted in Company G of the 6th Missouri State Cavalry. At the close of the war he reenlisted in the United States Army, this time in Company C of the 13th Missouri Veteran's Volunteer Cavalry. He received his honorable discharge and was mustered out of service at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., May 12, 1866.

Tired of war and fanfare, the young soldier took as his bride Miss Sarah C. Preston, his boyhood sweetheart, and with her settled down in Harrison County to roam no more.

Mr. and Mrs. Harrold were the parents of nine children. A happy wedded life of 62 years was broken when the wife and mother died November 18, 1928. Billie, Dee, Maude, Ada, and Belle also preceded their father in death. The surviving children are Mrs. Henry Allen and Thomas Harrold of Ridgeway and Fred and Bert Harrold of Blythedale. Twenty-one grandchildren and 24 great-grandchildren, with other relatives and a host of friends, mourn the loss of this loving father, brother, and friend.

Mr. and Mrs. Harrold were both baptized by Bro. W. J. Orem of the Abrahamic faith on May 26, 1889. Mr. Harrold loved his God and was a great student of the Bible, a firm believer in the truth of the scripture which says, "Man dieth, his breath goeth forth; in that very day his thoughts perish."

Funeral services were conducted at Blythedale by Bro. J. C. Wilson, and he was laid to rest by the side of his wife to await the resurrection morning and the coming of our Lord.

The White Stone

By Lyman Booth

"To him that overcometh will I give . . . a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it."—Revelation 2:17.

THIERE was a custom among some ancient people whereby friends provided ways and means of personal identification. One which was beyond question was the white stone. For instance, if two friends were to separate and one intended to be away for a great length of time, they would divide a round white stone in halves. Each would inscribe his name on one piece and exchange pieces. These pieces were kept in secret and guarded with jealous care. In case many years should intervene before their meeting, if they should not recognize each other and had any doubt of their former relations, these white stones would settle the matter at once.

It was carefully and privately kept so that no one might claim the privilege besides the person for whom intended. Matthew Henry said, "This white stone means absolution from the guilt of sin." It alludes to the ancient custom of giving a white stone to those acquitted on trial, and a black stone to those condemned. The new name is the name of adoption. Adopted persons took the name of the family into which they were adopted. No one was permitted to read the evidence of a man's adoption but himself.

The secret of the Lord is with them that fear (serve) Him. To each of His servants He gives "a white stone," and in the stone a "new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it." He that overcometh by faith in the long and patient trials of life shall have the secret satisfaction springing up in his heart, known only to himself and his Lord. The white stone is the emblem of pure and undying friendship.

Friendship is that relation between men that because of mutual esteem, admiration, and attachment, rather than from regard to worldly interest, causes each to desire the welfare of the other and delight to be in his company; and therefore each is ever ready to fulfill the requests of the other and to make sacrifices for his pleasure. It is nowhere so pure and holy as when it exists between persons who have been ennobled by the spirit of God's love. Then it is like a fountain that flows from that heavenly friend. The twelve, the seventy, the holy women who accompanied Him, the thousands less distinguished disciples, all occupied the relation of friends to Him. It was not merely the beloved John, or James and Peter, who shared His more sacred retirement, or Lazarus whom He loved, or Mary and Martha who ministered to Him, but all listened to His words and sought His company.

When He spoke of dying for friends, He, no doubt, had a vision of the scenes which were to appear before Him in the next few hours. He saw Gethsemane, the agony, the blood-like sweat, the assault of the mob, His betrayal and arrest, His hurried march from one tribunal to another, the lashing cords, the scourging, the robe of scorn, the insults of the mob, the exposure, the ignominy, the blasphemy, and the crown of thorns. He saw the cross, the nails, the spear, the desertion, the suffering, and the dying. He knew it was all for others, His friends, for those who would forsake and deny Him, and also for millions who were as yet His enemies. Seeing all this, He said, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

The white stone is an emblem of forgiveness. The guilty, wayward child of sin has the assurance of pardon. The white stone has written upon its face the joyous message of acquittal. He who overcomes shall have the white stone. What a badge of friendship, love, and pardon; and above all else, a new name is written thereon.

White has ever been esteemed as a symbol of purity, peace, and victory. In the sacred rites of heathen nations, in the symbolism of societies, and in the Apocalypse, this emblem ever represents that which is pure, holy, and victorious. Under it we find much that is loyal and true. The white stone, the white raiment, the white clouds, the white horses, angels in robes of white, the bride in white, and the great white throne.

The white robe applies to those who have become heirs of eternal life as an emblem of that character which will be approved by the Judge of all. The blood of Christ is said to be the element by which the robe is made white. The fine linen, clean and white, which the bride wears is said to be the righteousness of the saints.

The white cloud reveals the Son of Man with the sickle and the time of harvest. The world has been guilty and proud, the kings of earth have been cruel and oppressive and wicked, but there comes the day of battle. The Son of Man is seen riding upon the white cloud. An angel hastens from the temple with the awful words: "Thrust in thy sickle and reap!" Sin shall meet its doom. The harvest has come. From the winepress of God's valley of death blood freely flows. The purple robe once worn on Calvary is exchanged for the white robe on which is written, "King of kings and Lord of lords."

Next there appears the great white throne. The dark valley of death is passed. The Great King reigns in majesty and power, and the earth is hallowed by His presence. The white throne brings us to the final victory and to the unfading crown. The old world gives place for the new and the marriage of the Lamb has come. Happy, thrice happy is he who shall be found wearing the white robe and carrying the white stone bearing the new name, and to be called to the marriage supper of the Lamb.

Toward Armageddon

By Arlen Marsh

TWO years ago, Ethiopia was almost an unknown land. Today, the question is being seriously asked in capitals throughout the world, Will Ethiopia be the cause of the disintegration of the British Empire? Roaring from the lion has been accompanied by little enthusiasm from the cubs, and the possibility of Canada's supporting the mother country in the event of military action against Italy has been definitely removed by Prime Minister Richard B. Bennett's recent pronouncement. There has, indeed, been no encouragement of the British program from any of the Dominions with the exception of New Zealand. Riots in Egypt have reached sinister (and deadly) proportions in protest against English domination; British troops have barely finished a punitive expedition against rebellious natives to the north of India, an expedition which involved the use of five thousand Tommies and a tank corps. Trouble with Japan over the Nipponese seizure of Manchuria and North China and an impasse at the naval conference over respective ratios in sea power have left grave doubts as to Britain's continued strong influence in the Far East. And meanwhile, of course, the Italian thrust into Ethiopia directs a dagger at the essential communication system of the Empire—the Suez Canal and the Red Sea.

Inspired by the harrowing thought that war in Europe would spell almost certain dissolution of the far-flung British realm, the London Government, after gaining reelection on a vote of confidence in its policy of imposing sanctions on Italy as an aggressor nation, entered into collaboration with Paris and evolved a plan for peace which rocked the world. Ethiopia, baldly, was to be sliced up with the same savoir faire that marked the parceling out of Poland among Russia, Austria, and Germany. Something approximating two thirds of the ancient kingdom was to be given to Italy as a token of esteem and undying affection, and in return

*We seemed to see our flag unfurled
Our champion waiting in his place
For the last battle of the world,
The Armageddon of the race.*

—Whittier.

for this generosity Ethiopia was to be ceded the right to a port in Italian Somaliland.

No sooner had the details of this brilliant piece of diplomacy been made public than the English people stormed the gates of Parliament with a demand for (a) the removal of Foreign Secretary Hoare from office and (b) the immediate and complete repudiation of the plan. Pressure in France upon Laval was somewhat less severe, and by means of great oratory he succeeded in forcing through the French legislature a resolution of confidence which notably failed to mention the Ethiopian affair. Lesser Powers in Europe sent howls of protest ringing against the vaulted roof of the League chambers. This, they cried, was putting a premium upon aggression, and who were they to feel that England and France had not sold them out to any imperialistic Government. The Ethiopian representative was dignified and sarcastic and bitter and horrified; but he was also positive in his refusal to countenance the suggestion of the English and the French that the Lion of Judah, Haile Selassie, should give his consent to the carving of his empire at the whim of European statesmen.

So in London, on December 18, 1935, Foreign Secretary Hoare resigned, and the Baldwin Government, thus provided with a scapegoat, was denied the happy privilege of having a scathing vote of censure directed against it by an enraged House of Commons.

From the days of the French-supported American Revolution, the power of England over its outlying possessions has been slowly on the wane. New islands and territories have been added to the lands over which the sun never sets, but the rigid control formerly exercised by the King and his cohorts has gradually disappeared. The Dominions today are practically and theoretically independent; they declare war at will; they send ambassadors to foreign countries; they maintain their own forms of government; they owe no allegiance but that (Please turn to Back Page)

Abreast of the Times

Confusion Reigns in Europe

"Upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity."

LONDON, Dec. 19.—The latest plan proposed by France and Great Britain to assure the peace of Europe by granting Italy a large territory in Ethiopia not only has failed before the bitter attacks of the smaller nations of the League but threatened the overturning of both the French and British Governments. The entire matter of sanctions against Italy must again be brought before the League of Nations and much perplexity prevails as to what may result.

Potential Physical Immortality

"This mortal must put on immortality."—1 Cor. 15:53.

NEW YORK, Dec. 14.—That physical immortality is not only possible, but that it is positively demonstrable, was the startling declaration made recently by Dr. Alexis Carrel of Rockefeller Institute to a gathering of New York physicians. In his address Dr. Carrel elaborated on the statement he had previously made (see "Abreast of the Times" of last week) regarding the possibility of prolonging life. Basing his assertion on certain new scientific data, the eminent physicist called attention to the experiments that have been carried on for some years by the Institute for the preservation of life in individual cells removed from living organisms, the success of which led to the conclusion that these cells "are potentially immortal."

"Two important facts were brought to light by these experiments," he declared. "First, removal of waste products and proper food prevent, in a colony of tissue cells, the occurrence of death."

This statement is perhaps the most suggestive to the Bible student who believes that human personality is inseparably associated with the body, that it is "this mortal" that "must put on immortality" when the Lord comes. The scientist's conclusion gives ample support to the inspired prediction "that what is mortal may be swallowed up of life" (2 Cor. 5:4, A. R. V.). Of course "that what is mortal" can be nothing else but our "bodily frame" (see margin, A. R. V.). Hence Dr. Carrel's conclusion is scriptural as well as scientific, and it is this present fleshly body that will develop death-resisting qualities in the age to come.

A second result of the experiment in maintaining life for long periods of time in isolated cells is the discovery that "the cells that build up the body are capable of unlimited multiplication. They are potentially immortal." This cellular "immortality" is accomplished by placing the living tissue "in an apparatus recently invented by C. A. Lindbergh, where it is completely protected from bacterial infection," the scientist asserted.

This, too, is exceedingly significant. In the final development predicted of the kingdom of God on the earth, "the inhabitant shall not say, I am sick" (Isa. 33:24), because the curse occasioned by sin will have been removed (Rev. 22:3), and the food, water, and air purified of the contaminating "bacterial infections" which disobedience to God introduced and cultivated.

Seventh Day Adventists Show Gains

"And he (Abram) gave him tithes of all."—Gen. 14:20.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 14.—A report made recently by the statistical secretary of the Seventh Day Adventist Church, H. E. Rogers, from the headquarters of the denomination in this city, indicated that great gains had been made both in this country and in foreign lands. For example, the report showed an increase in membership of 119,216 since 1929, and that the 7,818 congregations now organized have an enrollment of 404,509. In addition to this great increase in membership, the church is carrying on work in 325 countries and islands by 23,753 evangelists, missionaries, and institutional workers, who are using 539 languages and dialects. Denominational literature is now being produced in 169 languages, one copy for each form published costing $2,087.

The cost of this vast work is met by two methods, tithing and freewill offerings, while the possibility of continuing it is assured by the zeal and earnestness of the individuals who make up the membership of the church. As Sr. Zoe (Adams) Spence, who supplied this interesting information, says, "This report seems almost phenomenal, and one cannot help but draw comparisons between this and what our own church has done in practically the same length of time." Real evangelistic or missionary work in new places is being undertaken for the first time under the auspices of the General Conference of the Church of God this year. To increase its effectiveness it must have the united support, both moral and financial, of the entire church. Watch for further announcements concerning the publication of literature and the spreading of the truth by evangelists to be sent out by the means you provide for such purposes.

The Birth of Christ

By R. H. Judd

"I am a king. . . . To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness to the truth."

IT IS almost impossible to look back on history and not come to the conclusion that some individuals were born for a distinctive purpose. The outstanding characters in the world's history seem to be strong evidence that such has at different periods actually been the case.

This thought may be carried further, for it would seem to be indisputably true where strong religious influence has a leading part in the drama to be enacted. And this is precisely what might be expected, for God, who alone can shape the ultimate destinies of mankind, would inevitably stamp both the men and their mission with the impress and character of His nature.

A glance at the really worth while names of history will show them to be those raised up by God for blessing to their fellow men, and not for their destruction. What names in history can compare with Abraham, Moses, David, Noah, Daniel, and Job? The names of secular history are almost forgotten. The period of their remembrance is but a brief span in comparison with those we have named.

There is still another remarkable fact concerning them (and which we hope to show later our text brings out in reference to Christ), and that is that though their influence and memory are still forceful, they are destined to come once more into active partnership in world affairs, while those of secular history will remain in eternal oblivion.

The common saying that "all men are born equal" cannot be substantiated, nor can it, we think, be true that God is Himself directly or indirectly responsible for the birth and existence of every individual; otherwise the words of our Lord in Matthew 26:24, "It were good for that man if he had not been born," would be a direct reflection on the wisdom of His heavenly Father.

"There was a man sent from God whose name was John," has been true times without number, but this very fact is itself proof that all men have not been so sent (John 1:6; 3:34; 17:3; Acts 7:35). Viewed in this light the marvelous love of God to "whosoever" shines out in a world overrun with the progeny of evil-doing. Full of intense interest as these opening suggestive thoughts are, we must now consider more directly the remarkable comments of Jesus Christ with reference to His birth.

Perhaps the first, the most fundamental, thought is the acknowledgment of His own nature. Like the instance which He Himself referred to above, birth was to Him the commencement of His own individual existence. His personality was not separated from His birth, but was a consequent result inseparably linked to it. Next is the suggestive thought that He was born for a purpose, for a specific end in view. Another, with whom that thought originated, must have preceded Him. Thus the doctrine of His eternal existence is inferentially and circumstantially ruled out.

The statement of Jesus Christ that He is a king, and that He was born to that end, so wonderfully corresponds with the first use of Scripture of that word "born" in reference to Him that we feel compelled to call attention to it. "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given." Notice the words that immediately follow—"The government shall be upon his shoulder," and still further—"His name shall be called Wonderful counsellor" (R. V. margin), which according to the concordance is the primary office of a king. Thus the two leading statements in a single prophecy make definite allusion to His kingship. Our Lord's familiarity with the Scriptures has often led us to remark that they were the source of His knowledge concerning Himself. He knew well Isaiah's prophecy that "a king shall reign in righteousness . . . and a man shall be an hiding place from the wind" (Isa. 30:1). He knew, too, that Jeremiah had said, "A king shall reign and prosper." He knew also of the prophecies of Hosea and

Christmas

By H. J. Prosser

'Tis Christmas time, and where is now the manger
In which the Christ Child lay?
Where are the kings that saw the newborn Stranger?
On that first Christmas Day?

All are no more, and vanished is the glory
That dazed the shepherds then,
But still we have the same angelic story
Of peace on earth to men.

Oh, Thou who rulest and art never weary,
Give us this peace of Thine.
We need it when our paths are dark and dreary
To make us more divine.

And send Thy Son, not as when Mary kneeling Looked on His baby face;
Not as He taught, and wept, and gave, while healing,
His lifeblood for our race.

But send Him as a mighty one supernal
With matchless power and worth
Bringing unending peace and life eternal
To those He loves on earth.

The Support of the Ministry

"Honour the Lord with thy substance, and with the firstfruits of all thine increase: so shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine."—Proverbs 3:9, 10.

THE LORD calls upon every one of His people to give of His means for the support of the work of gospel preaching and in consideration of such support, God promises success and prosperity.

God could very well support His own work on the earth, independent of what man can do, and the only reason why He wants us to give, is to make our hearts tender, and give us such lively interest in the work that we may realize it is our work, and that we may appreciate the fact that we are stewards of the most high God, workers together with Him and partakers with Him in the salvation of those who walk in darkness.

God wants us ever to remember that every good and perfect gift comes from above and that in Him we live, and move, and have our being.

Life, health, substance, and all we possess come to us through His bountiful hands, and He wants us to show our appreciation of what He is doing for us. The Bible says: "Do not err, my beloved brethren. Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning."—James 1:16, 17.

The usual methods employed for the support of the gospel ministers are not only wrong, but many of them are sinful before God. God does not want His servants to be beggars, dependent on the capricious, changeable, and whimsical notions and favors of men; lest they become mere man-servers, tools, or jumping-jacks in the hands of those who are able to pay liberally, and who, in consideration of their support of the ministry, might expect special favors. All of this is an abomination to the Lord. The methods employed by some, of raising the minister's salary by sociables, ice cream festivals, and other questionable amusement affairs, are nauseating in the extreme and are not so much as even to be mentioned in the same breath with anything pertaining to the Lord's great work in the earth. God will surely hold those who engage in these questionable enterprises for the support of the preacher, or the church, to a very strict accountability, at last, in the great and final judgment.

The Bible teaches systematic giving, and a recognition of God's ownership, in the tithing system, which is taught all through the Scriptures, in the New as well as in the Old Testament.

God laid down this principle to our first parents, in the Garden of Eden, when He forbade them to eat of the tree of knowledge of good and evil. This prohibition was not, as some suppose, to place a temptation before Adam and Eve, nor to display merely an arbitrary rule over them. God wanted them to ever remember that He is the Creator.

He wanted to establish in their minds their entire dependence upon Him and the recognition of His ownership, by virtue of His creative power. Hence He gave them all things, except that one tree, and He reserved the tree, so that they might ever remember Him and know that He owns all, that He had created, and had a right to say what they should or should not touch, because all was His. That tree, to Adam and Eve, was to be a mark of God's ownership as the Creator; and as long as they remembered this, they were in no danger of going astray. God, in this, was pledged to protect and keep them; but when they put forth their hands and took of that fruit, they yielded to Satan and denied God's ownership, hence the long night of sin and the curse.

God established the tithing system for the same purpose. He wants us to remember always that everything belongs to Him and that even our support, our health, and our lives are His. He gave us all we have and then says, "All the tithe . . . is the Lord's: it is holy unto the Lord."

MEANING OF "TITHE"

The word "tithe" means a tenth part and refers to a tenth part of our increase, which God claims as His, for the support of the gospel ministry. There should be no quibbling about this, for God claims it as His property.

As we would not give but one hour or two hours of the Sabbath, the whole of which He demands as His, neither can we pay a quarter, a half dollar, or a dollar, or any fixed sum per week, to the ministry and think that we are obeying God; for He asks for His tenth part of our increase.

When we use the tithe for any other purpose than God ordained, we are as surely as guilty as were Adam and Eve when they partook of the forbidden fruit. We question God's ownership, and virtually say: "This is my money; I can do as I wish with what belongs to me." But it is not our money. God claims the tenth as His ("the tithe is the Lord's"): and how dare we use as we please that which God claims as His? Let us be true to God.

Godly men, in all ages, have recognized this principle and those who look upon the tithing system as belonging only to the Jewish age know little of God's plans and are very superficial readers of Holy Writ.

At least four hundred years before the tithing system was introduced in Israel, Abraham paid tithes, and in doing so recognized God's ownership. Just a few minutes' reading will show how faithful Abraham was in this matter.

When Abraham returned from the slaughter of the kings, who had taken Lot, his brother's son, and all he had, it is written: "And Melchizedek king of Salem brought forth bread and wine: and he was the priest of the most high God. And he blessed him, and said, Blessed be Abram of the most high God, possessor of heaven and earth: and blessed be the most high God, which hath delivered thine enemies into thy hand. And he gave him tithes of all."—Gen. 14:18-20.

It should be noted here that Abraham paid tithes because he recognized God's ownership ("possessor of heaven and earth"); and that the tithe did not belong to him. Abraham was honest with God and God greatly prospered him. It should be remembered here that this incident occurred at least four hundred years before there ever was a Jew or an Israelite, so then tithing is not of the Jews or Israelites, but of God, as a mark of His ownership.

Jacob, the father of the whole house of Israel, was also a tithe-payer—see Genesis 28:20-22; and there can be no doubt that he taught it to his children. The only reason that can be assigned for the renewal of the instructions to the Israelites, after the captivity in Egypt, is the same that is assigned for all of their laws and ordinances, viz.; During their servitude in Egypt they forgot God and His laws and commandments, and went into the idolatry of the Egyptians. That this was the case is quite evident from what we read in Joshua's last instructions to Israel. He said: "Put away the gods which your fathers served on the other side of the flood and in Egypt; and serve ye the Lord."—Joshua 24:14.

When God gave them the law of tithing, it was simply to instruct them in His ways and bring them back to Himself, and to the ways He had led their fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

Every law that God ever gave was for the wellbeing of man; and the tithing was no exception. In the law, this fact is set forth in these words: "And now, Israel, what doth the Lord thy God require of thee, but to fear the Lord thy God, to walk in all his ways, and to love him, and to serve the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul, to keep the commandments of the Lord, and his statutes, which I command thee this day for thy good."—Deut. 10:12, 13.

When we recognize God's ownership, we also accept Him as our God, and in this we lay hold of His keeping power and show our utter dependence upon Him. This is just what He wants us to do; so that He can be a very present help to us in every time of need, hence His laws are all for our good.

God wants us to understand that the earth and everything in it belong to Him; and over and over again He reminds us of this fact. Through the Prophet Jeremiah, He says: "I have made the earth, the man and the beast that are upon the ground, by my great power and by my outstretched arm, and have given it unto whom it seemed meet unto me."—Jer. 27:5.

The Psalmist goes still further, when speaking as the mouthpiece of God, and says: "For every beast of the forest is mine, and the cattle upon a thousand hills. I know all the fowls of the mountains: and the wild beasts of the field are mine. If I were hungry, I would not tell thee: for the world is mine, and the fulness thereof."—Psalm 50:10-12.

When God rebuked Israel for going into idolatry, He censured them for offering to their idols that which belonged to Him; for He said: "Thou hast also taken thy fair jewels of my gold and of my silver, which I had given thee, and madest to thyself images of men, and didst commit whoredom with them, and tookest thy brodered garments, and coveredst them: and thou hast set mine oil and mine incense before them. My meat also which I gave thee, fine flour, and oil, and honey, wherewith I fed thee."—Ezek. 16:17-19.

And again, hear the word of the Lord: "The silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith the Lord of hosts."—Hag. 2:8.

From the foregoing, we can readily see that God claims everything: the earth, the cattle, the flour, the oil, the wine, and all the gold and silver. It is all His, and we are His. When we understand this, everything God asks us to do will be very easy; and we can only recognize God's ownership by giving what He requires of us, which is a tithe, of our increase. . . . When we understand that God allows us to use for ourselves, nine tenths of our increase, and that He demands one tenth from us, we will also understand, that to use the tenth which is the Lord's, for our own use, is—well, what shall we call it? Shall we say stealing? If God claims the tenth as His, and we take it for our own use, it is just that and nothing less than that. God makes it so plain that no one can take offense without becoming offended with God; for He says: "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."—Mal. 3:8-10.

Here is a precious promise of blessing and prosperity. We can appropriate these promises only on condition that we pay a faithful tithe to the Lord, and therein recognize God's ownership.

Those who say that these things are not necessary in this dispensation, and that Christians are not obliged to pay tithes, are sadly in need of light.

The Jews were very strict tithe-payers when Christ was on earth, but they refused to accept Him, and in all other matters they were a backslidden people. Christ rebuked their lack of spirituality and their unbelief, but at the same time He approved of their paying tithes, even on the little things. He said: "Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye pay tithe of mint and anise and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone."—Matt. 23:23.

The Twentieth Century New Testament, a literal translation into our modern idiomatic English, renders this text: "Alas for you, Rabbis and Pharisees, hypocrites that you are!—you pay tithes on mint, fennel, and carraway-seed, and have neglected the weightier matters of the Law—justice, mercy, and good faith. These last you ought to have put into practice, without neglecting the first.”

The Emphatic Diaglott renders the last part of this verse thus: “These things you ought to practise and not to omit those.”

No man can fail to see what Jesus meant here. The language is too plain to mistake its meaning. “You ought not to neglect or omit paying tithes, but you should also practice justice, mercy, and good faith.” Here, then, is Christ’s approval of tithe-paying, and by no manner of reasoning can any person get anything else out of this.

Paul goes even further than this and positively shows that the gospel ministers should be supported by the tithe, just as were the priests under the Mosaic law. He says: “Do ye not know that they which minister about holy

Romans Twelve

IN READING this chapter four words seem to stand out as a description of God’s men and women as they should be in this world, in verses 1, 2, 11, and 18.

First, “living.” The heathen offer many sacrifices, even human beings. But then, they are dead and worthless. God wants a living sacrifice, something which is worth something. Sometimes we see those who become Christians, then seem to faint away. I have seen people who were so good, they were good for almost nothing. God wants action on our part, as well as submission to Him. You cannot use a rope as a walking stick; there must be some backbone. Earth and all of God’s universe are filled with action, from the smallest molecule to the largest galaxy of stars.

Second, “transformed.” We are all human and subject to mistakes even when our intentions are of the best. The only people who never make a mistake are in the cemetery. But having yielded ourselves to God, living, alert, willing, and waiting His tasks, then we need transformation, to be changed from human frailty to Spirit-directed wisdom. Transformed by the renewing of the mind means much more than we sometimes realize. In heathen lands, when natives are converted they clean up, are dressed modestly instead of in savage nakedness, and desire to go to school. The contrast is not so noticeable where Christian civilization has impressed many of its standards upon even the unsaved. Nevertheless, it is true that real salvation puts a desire for better ways in the heart. The Spirit leads to changes of habit, to study of the Word. A strange notion has come to a few that ignorance is an accompaniment of spirituality. Just because not many of the worldly wise hear the call of God, does not mean that knowledge and wisdom are to be despised. God made this world, hence scientific study of its multitude of wonders is a fit pursuit for man. God gave man a mind to appreciate literature, music, and art. But “the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, and the knowledge of the holy is understanding” (Prov. 9:10). Men have left God out, and tried to accept only His works. Putting God first, His works are meant for our delight. We should let all possible of the highest and best of knowledge enter our minds, so that as our souls go out to God in worship, and as we work for the salvation of our fellows, we shall be able to live the fullest lives possible in all respects. Our influence is thus enlarged with men, and our own lives enriched. Sanctified intelligence is needed everywhere on earth. Speaking here concerning the transforming of our minds, Paul is concerned primarily in a spiritual sense. But since God created the entire being of man, would He not want us to develop that being as fully as possible? It has been said, “If you educate or develop a man’s body alone you have a marvelous beast, if you educate his mind alone you have a keen agnostic, if you educate his soul alone you have a disturbing fanatic. But if you educate all three, his entire being, you have God’s noblest work of creation—a true man.” The more our natural abilities are developed the wider can be our usefulness for God, if we will let Him have full control of them. Therefore, we need minds constantly renewed and transformed by every effort we can make, and above all by letting God rule in our lives; until all laziness, sordidness, meanness, and selfishness is displaced by helpfulness, nobleness, while we strive to make the lives of everyone we contact happier here and now, as well as pointing them to the future. The vision of the standard of real Christian living is very high.

Third, “fervent.” The Christian life is not a “wishy-washy,” effortless drifting. There can be sins of omission as well as sins of commission. He “that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin.”—James 4:17. God wants servants who do fervently with their might, what head and heart and hands find to do.

Fourth, “peaceable.” We can be so busy striving to better ourselves in some lines that we become one-sided. We can be so zealous to reform the world that we become a nuisance; thus, we turn men against that to which we would win them. When we become so ardent in advocating peace, that we fight for it, we no longer have peace.

Let us become alive in God: fervent for God; and so transformed in soul, mind, and body, that the image of God is restored in our entire being. Then with peace, and joy, and love, radiating from our personalities we can, by the power of His Spirit, represent God upon this earth in a way that will tell.—Janette B. Schuster in The Bible Advocate.

Did Jesus Preexist?

By A. H. Zilmer

WE ARE directed to Colossians 1:15, 16, as containing irrefragible proof of the preexistence of Jesus. Here we read of Jesus as the "image of the invisible God, the firstborn of every creature: for by him (Greek, "in him") were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him: and he is before all things, and by him all things consist. And he is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead; that in all things he might have the preeminence."

Every passage cited to establish a doctrine not true contains terms, words, and phrases that unmistakably show the intent of the author, and the doctrine he wished to set forth. The same is true of Colossians 1:15, 16. Here we see Jesus as the "firstborn of every creature." Two things at once strike the reader: first, that Jesus was born; and second, that He was born first, before every creature. At verse 18 He is again presented as the "firstborn," this time "from the dead." In Revelation 1:5 He is said to be "the firstbegotten from the dead." In either case He was prototokos, the first one produced, or brought forth from the dead. This idea was also expressed by the Apostle Paul in his notable address before King Agrippa: "That Christ should suffer, and that he should be the first that should rise from the dead, and should shew light unto the people, and to the Gentiles."—Acts 26:23.

Now it is not literally true that Christ was the first, or before all others, to rise from the dead, for others were raised from the dead before He was, but He was the first to rise upon the basis of an unsullied life under the stipulations of the new covenant, of which He was afterwards made the mediator. When it is said that He was to be "the firstborn among many brethren" (Rom. 8:29), it must be borne in mind that Jesus was "the beginning of the creation of God" (Rev. 3:14), which, however, is not the old or material creation, but the new one. "Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new."—2 Cor. 5:17. It was the Father who created the material universe. Jesus did not claim the honor of being the Creator of that. In conversation with some Jews He said, "Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning made them male and female?"—Matt. 19:4. Mark puts the matter in this way: "But from the beginning of the creation God made them male and female."—Mark 10:6. It was God who created all things belonging to the material universe, and Jesus honored Him as the Creator. He did not arrogate to Himself the honor which belonged to God alone.

We have in the Apocalypse two songs, or ascriptions of praise—one to the Lord God as the Occupant of a throne in heaven (Rev. 4:11), and the other to the Lamb which had been slain (chap. 5:9, 10). The One on the throne was the Creator of all things; the other was the Redeemer who had wrought redemption for men by His own blood.

The thrones, principalities, dominions, and powers mentioned in Colossians 1:16 pertain to the new order of things. Jesus is the head of the body, the church. He declared He would build His church (Matt. 16:18), and He built it. He is its supreme Head, and the Administrator of its affairs. In all things He has the preeminence. Whatever the honors which accrue to the church and its officials, these are subject to His jurisdiction, and amenable to His judgment. This, it seems to us, is the truth as touching Colossians 1:15, 16.

We have reserved until now one passage which speaks of Jesus as having been sent by the Father to be the Savior of the world. The beloved John wrote to the little children, the young men, and the fathers in the church, "And we have seen and do testify that the Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world."—1 John 4:14. Let us note:

1. "The Father" was God.
2. Jesus was "the Son."
3. The Father "sent" the Son.
4. The sending had for its object that the Son should be "the Saviour of the world."
5. The apostles had "seen" the sending of the Son for the purpose stated.
6. Having seen the sending of the Son, the writer, with other witnesses, was competent to bear witness in the case.

Having seen the Father send the Son, they were present when the sending took place. Now as a matter of fact, the apostles had never been in heaven to have seen the Father send the Son from thence. However, they were present upon various occasions when the evidences of the sending of Jesus were given. Thus we have the comprehensive testimony of the Apostle Peter on the day of Pentecost: "Ye men of Israel, hear these words; Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you by miracles and wonders and signs, which God did by him in the midst of you, as ye yourselves also know."—Acts 2:22.

The speaker openly declared before a vast assemblage of Jews that Jesus of Nazareth was a "man"; that God had "approved" of the Man, and that the evidences of such approval were the "miracles and wonders and signs, which God did by him." If Jesus preexisted as a person before He was born, there is no intimation in the account of the Apostle's preaching that such had been the case; and if the belief of it was important or necessary for salvation, then either the Apostle neglected an important duty, or else the historian failed to take note of it. It does not appear in the account of the "beginning at Jerusalem" (Luke 24:47), and is absent from the entire record of the activities of the apostles in the fulfillment of their mission to the world of Jews and Gentiles. It does not appear in any clear and recognizable form in any of the writings of the apostles either to churches or individuals. It is not true, and therefore unnecessary even as a matter of private personal belief, to say nothing of being a doctrine upon which hangs the salvation of a single soul. Then why trouble anyone else or oneself with it? Why not believe the simple, clear, lucid, and comprehensible testimony which says that Jesus was "begotten," "conceived," "born," "brought forth," and that at a certain time He was of such an "age"?

We would revert to the statement made by the Apostle Peter at the house of Cornelius: "How God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with Holy Spirit and with power: who went about doing good, and healing all who were oppressed of the devil; for God was with him."—Acts 10:38. As we examine this passage we discover the following clearly defined items:

1. That God anointed Jesus of Nazareth.
2. That the anointing was with Holy Spirit.
3. That power was communicated to Jesus of Nazareth.
4. That as the result of the reception of such power

Jesus went about doing good.

5. The doing of good consisted in part in healing such as were oppressed of the devil.
6. That God was with Jesus of Nazareth.

We have here, God, Jesus of Nazareth, and Holy Spirit accompanied by power. The power was in God, and was communicated from Him to Jesus by means of the Holy Spirit. It is perfectly clear that before such anointing Jesus of Nazareth was without power. Of the three, God, Jesus, and Holy Spirit, but one was God, that is, the One who anointed Jesus with Holy Spirit. All this was clear in the mind of the speaker, and was clearly communicated by him to the minds of his hearers.

Let us notice with care that this was at the first visit to the Gentiles to take out of them a people for God's name. Any necessary doctrine not clearly stated might have far-reaching and hurtful effects upon those hearers. Hence the need of extreme caution in the presentation of words which had for their object the salvation of the hearers. Peter well knew his message, faithfully delivered it, and left it with his hearers to accept it. One God at Cæsarea, and Jesus of Nazareth His Agent through the power of the Holy Spirit.

Next we notice the language addressed by Jesus to one of the churches in Asia Minor: "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out: and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is new Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God: and I will write upon him my new name."—Rev. 3:12.

Four times in this passage did Jesus use the term "my God." This was a good many years after Jesus had ascended to the right hand of the Father. Still He spoke of another as "my God," acknowledging that one's superiority over Himself, and recognizing in Him an object of worship. If Jesus was personally in heaven before He was born of His mother, and afterwards returned to where He had been before, was either His status or His relation to God changed when He returned to the Father? If He was God before He was born as a human being, did He cease to be God on being born, and resume His Godhead upon returning to the Father? If so, why speak of another, who was but His equal, as "my God"? Let the Apostle Paul answer. At Athens he taught the Epicurean and Stoic philosophers that God has "appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead" (Acts 17:31). Here we have "God" and a "man" in striking contrast, God having declared His purpose to judge the world by the Man. From this we see that Jesus will still be the Man when He shall judge the world.

Once more: "There is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus."—1 Tim. 2:5. He is the Man Christ Jesus now while performing His functions as mediator between God and men in heaven. Of course, He is the Man changed into the divine nature so as to live forever, the same as God does.—The Faith.

THE BIRTH OF JESUS

Zechariah, not to mention those of David bearing witness to the same fact. Indeed His entry into Jerusalem on "the colt the foal of an ass" was a bold and definite claim to be the king predicted by Zechariah. Strange indeed, is it not, that present-day Christianity should fasten the claim of Deity upon Him which He did not make, and neglect, almost to denial, His literal claim to the throne of David which the Scriptures prophesied concerning Him?

Reading our text carefully, it will be seen to fall into two natural divisions—"I am a king; to this end was I born," being the first. It was a statement of fact which no circumstances in life could alter. He was of the house and lineage of David, and was the only living descendant who could rightfully claim the throne should the opportunity present. Had His claim to kingship been merely that of lineal and mortal heritage to the house of David, it would doubtless have met with wide acceptance had the circumstances permitted, for no nation felt so keenly the bonds of alien domination as did the Jews. He knew, however, that it embraced more, much more. So much more, that He actually linked Himself with that great king of whom all the prophets spoke, by His method of entry into Jerusalem. With a view to this, the second half of His statement is a declaration that His coming (at this time) was for the purpose of bearing witness to this truth. The full force of the reality that He did so witness is not realized by the casual reader of the Gospels, but when attention is called to the remarkable fact that the Gospels alone in recording the testimony of Christ in every city and town which He visited make mention of the kingdom considerably over one hundred times, the truth of His statement stands out in midday light. It was the central theme in the record of His birth, and also that of His dying moments in His answer to the thief on the cross. While Zechariah 9:9 links up with other testimonies relative to His kingship, His choice of that passage was remarkable, for it limits its testimony to events of His first advent, and reminds us of the wonderful discrimination He displayed, when on another occasion "he closed the book, and gave it back to the attendant."

In view of the fact that Christ was a dying man when He last mentioned the subject of the kingdom, how was the kingdom to be realized? That it was the actual kingdom of the throne of David the message of the angel makes it certain, and the remark following, by Mary, leaves no possible room for doubt that she so regarded it. The question by the thief on the cross about Christ coming into His kingdom is corroborative evidence that he also expected the kingdom to be in the very land in which they were both dying men.

Christ's own words furnish the answer in part—"Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God," and one of those sublime passages concerning the king, to which we have already referred, helps to a fuller understanding of what Christ meant. In Psalm 21 we read: "He (the King) asked life of thee, and thou gavest it to him, even length of days for ever and ever." No man who things live of the things of the temple? and they which wait at the altar are partakers with the altar? Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel."—1 Cor. 9:13, 14.

The Twentieth Century New Testament renders the last part of this text (v. 14) thus: "So, too, the Master has appointed for those who tell the Good News that they should have a livelihood from the Good News."

If anything is or can be made plain, it is that the gospel minister should receive his living just as the priests did, and they received theirs from the tithe. If "even so" means anything, it means "in like manner," and this is said to have been ordained or decreed by the Master. No kind of dodging or twisting can change these plain texts of Holy Writ; and it is straight up to us to bring our practices into harmony with what the Lord says. Will we do it? . . .

In the 7th chapter of Hebrews, the priesthood of Christ is contrasted with the Levitical priesthood and Christ is said to be a "priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec." Paul, in this chapter, goes on to prove that Melchisedec received tithes from Abraham before the Levitical priesthood was instituted. He says: "But he (Melchisedec) whose descent is not counted from them (the Levites) received tithes of Abraham, and blessed him that had the promises."—Heb. 7:6.

Paul said what appears in this verse to show that tithing was established before the Levitical or Jewish priesthood, and also that Christ, being a priest after the order of Melchisedec, in this dispensation demands that His people pay tithes to Him; as it is written: "And here men that die receive tithes; but there he receiveth them, of whom it is witnessed that he liveth."—Heb. 7:8.

If we want to know how to reckon the tithe, it is only necessary to refer to God's instructions to Israel as found in Leviticus 27:30, 33, and there we will see that everything, whether great or small, of whatever character, is to be tithed, and that this one tenth is not to be used by us, and if we do use it, God demands that we shall add thereto, as the following verse tells us: "And if a man will at all redeem ought of his tithes, he shall add thereto the fifth part thereof."—Lev. 27:31.

This shows how particular God is to have us pay our tithe as soon as we get it, that the temptation to use it for other purposes may not lead us to do wrong.

It may be asked, How shall the church be supported, if all the tithes go to the support of the minister? God's answer to that question is found in a text already quoted from Malachi 3:8, where "offerings," as well as tithes, are called for; and this same principle is also brought to view in the New Testament. We ought to feel it a great privilege, not only to pay what the Lord claims as His, but to give of our own free will to the extent of our ability, to carry on the legitimate expenses of the Church of God.

Tithing is one of the duties that the Master calls upon us to perform; and in presenting it we think far less of our own interests in this matter and far less of the money or material things than we do of your salvation.

Tithing is a positive command of God, reaffirmed by Christ in the New Testament, and the curse is pronounced upon those who refuse to obey. We have before quoted the text, but lest we forget, we will quote again: "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."—Mal. 3:8-10.

We are living very near the day of God. The writer of this article could never feel free to face the God of heaven if he did not make this subject clear to God's people. We sink our own interests and forget ourselves entirely in the knowledge of the fact that like Paul we can say: "I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God."

And now for your sakes, and because God has commanded it, let everyone who names the name of Christ and who expects to be saved at His appearing, pay an honest tithe, for "the tithe is the Lord's"; and see to it that we do not omit the weightier matters of the law, justice, mercy, and faith.—A. A. Moore in The Bible Advocate.

“DAY AND HOUR”

By C. E. Randall

THE MASTER is here answering the questions asked Him by the disciples in verses 1 and 2. They relate to the destruction of the temple, the end of the age, and the time of Christ's coming. Of His coming Christ said, “Of that day and hour knoweth no man,” and yet in the face of this simple, plain, and easy to be understood statement of the Master, presumptuous men in every year for the past century have been setting the day and hour for the Lord's coming and have turned many disciples after them, and when the set time arrived and nothing happened, the deluded souls not only lost confidence in the “conjurer of time,” but many lost confidence in the Word and the coming of Christ.

Each period of depression seems to carry with it a swarm of emotional folk who go off on sprees of liberalism contrary to all sound verities of economic, social, and religious realities. In 1844, the Millerites anticipated the return of the Lord. He didn't appear! To cover up their mistake, this time was then made as the beginning of the cleansing of the sanctuary. Pastor Russell, while a good Bible student and an ardent advocate of considerable truth, came to the point of his studies where he figured that he could out-figure anyone else that had figured on the time of the Lord's coming, and being convinced that he could figure, he accepted the Great Pyramid as a basis for his figuring. Of course, he hadn't been inside and measured the galleries and rooms, so he figured on the figurings of one Professor Smyth. Here are some of the sum totals of Russell's figurings: A. D. 1881 was set as the time of completion for the high calling, that is, the church was completed at that time. At this time began restitution, and the jubilee trumpet was sounded, according to the figurer. However, he figured that “the harvest or end of this age was due to begin in October, 1874.” Then he figured that the time of trouble would begin in 1914.

Well, the tragic part of the whole business, which was contrary to Scripture, was that when it didn't pan out as figured, then they had to do some other figuring to ease the consciences of those injured by the errors of their first computations, and so the first figurer having died and therefore being unable to figure any longer, a new figurer came on the scene of action, Judge Rutherford, and he figured that Russell had figured wrong and in his figurings the coming of Christ was set for 1914.

An Advent figurer in Toronto has figured the date of Christ's coming and has led off disciples after him, thereby causing a division. Some folks in Welland (Ontario) set a date for this glorious event and wouldn't let their children go to school; the Lord didn't come, the children went back to school, and the truth of Christ's soon return was made the subject of jest and ridicule.

We only wish we had sufficient space to treat this subject fully, for it is too bad to have over-zealous believers in the soon return of Christ bring such shame upon the truth and lead so many into disgust of the doctrine through their guesses.

Listen to this: “And if our supposition be well founded, 3,826 years before A. D. 1881 some notable event must have occurred. And as we search the historic records of God's Word to see if any notable event occurred at that time, we find a remarkable confirmation of our supposition.” Just think of a man supposing something, then trying to find Scripture to confirm it. Let us build our faith on something besides guesses, suppositions, or figurings, and let that something be the Word of God!—Church of God Messenger.

BEGINNING AGAIN

IT WAS at Bethel that God revealed Himself to Jacob, and it was at Bethel that Jacob pledged his allegiance to God. In the years that followed Jacob wandered far from God, and apparently the night on the moorland, the ladder reaching from heaven to earth, the words of Jehovah, and the solemn vow were all forgotten. Thirty years of selfishness and sin pass. The law of the harvest operates. Trouble and sorrow and fear overwhelm Jacob. He seeks escape through all kinds of human expedients, but the darkness grows blacker. At last he decides to go back to Bethel, and there again seek the face of God.

But Jacob knew that to go back to Bethel was no easy task. He knew that there would be no God at Bethel to meet him unless false gods and idols and all uncleanness were put away forever, and unless his will were surrendered absolutely to God's will. Humble in heart and resolute in purpose, and living over again that night in which he saw the ladder and the angels, he journeyed to Bethel. There God, true to His promises and true to His character, met him, forgave him, blessed him, transformed him, empowered him, and changed his name from Jacob to Israel.

There are multitudes of people about us who have had Jacob's earlier Bethel experience, who once felt themselves to be members of the household of God, but who are now living in a far country and feeding on husks. They have wandered from the churches, but deep down in their souls they hate the life they are now living. God is yearning over them with infinite tenderness, and watching at Bethel to meet them again. Let them put away their idols, cleanse themselves, and give God the first place in their lives. Why should it not be the Christlike thing for the churches this year to seek out the backsliders and persuade them to go “back to Bethel”? . . .

We are giving particular emphasis in our day, and rightly so, to evangelism, but do not let us neglect this great multitude of backsliders in the churches and outside the churches.—Watchman-Examiner.

Just Around the Corner

With the approach of the new year, it becomes increasingly evident that at least four things are just around the corner: bigger and better business, an unprecedented national debt, war, and a fading interest in religion.

Prosperity always carries with it the stigma of disinterest in religious faith and work. Men who can support themselves and their families in a fair degree of comfort discover themselves to be in no apparent need of God and too busy at work and play to pay any attention to Him even if they do need Him. Such a discovery has been the result of economic well-being through all the ages, a fact well established by the experience of Israel.

Three years ago, two years ago, even one year ago to a lesser degree, churches which had large audiences were not unusual. Today, services are being discontinued in wholesale lots; and what church work is being maintained is both poorly attended and poorly supported.

One reason for this, perhaps, lies not altogether in the normal improvement of business as financial panics wing their way into history; it lies instead in the failure of the church to measure up to the standards expected of it by those who sought its solace in the dark days of '33 and '34.

There is no particular appeal in sitting through a church service when one hears rehashed in a somewhat somber form the very things that he reads in magazines and daily papers. One can have his morals uplifted in the public schools, by reading Pollyanna, and by listening to politicians save the world by radio addresses. It is far more interesting to play golf, tennis, or draw poker than to hear the platitudes of everyday repeated at dreary length on Sunday morning.

The church was expected, during the great debacle, to furnish something more than suppers, bazaars, collection plates, and special offerings. It was expected to furnish something more than what the schools and colleges could furnish. It was expected to furnish sanctuary for souls weary unto death of politics, society, taxes, and the Planned Economy.

And the church failed in its mission. For months the congregations, augmented by the flow of people who had nothing else to do and nowhere else to go, sat through service after service which urged them to enfold the Townsend Plan, to fight for the return of prohibition, to sign petitions to their Congressmen, to contribute to the holy cause of censorship of movies. The congregations ultimately tired, and hid themselves away.

Except in the smallest of small towns, there no longer is either business or social advantage in belonging to the church. The lodge can provide contact with men of like interests, and the theater, the road, and the links can furnish entertainment. Rotarians can preach for better business methods; the Anti-Saloon League can militate for prohibition; and the Carnegie Foundation can spend vast sums in pursuit of the will-o'-wisp of peace. The church is only another source of unnecessary expense.

Add to the failure of the church to provide what it should have provided the fact that people now have money who have not had it before, and the accumulation points to a dark prospect for Christianity. Thanks to the delightfully naive idealism of the majority of church leaders, the religion of Jesus Christ has been nearly annihilated and with it the necessity for maintaining Christian ceremonies. Until the church is willing to devote itself almost exclusively to teaching about man's salvation in the kingdom of God, a kingdom to be ruled by the Christ Himself and not established by the perfected government of men, it must set itself for a prolonged absence of its members from the services it sponsors; for until teaching of the basic biblical doctrines has been allowed to gain control, the church has nothing more to offer a hungry world than Mother Hubbard had to give her dog.

Don't Do That

Since long before the Pilgrims emigrated to America on a platform of "don'ts," Christians have been rather sharply divided into two categories: one, the indifferent; two, the conscientious objectors. The territory in between these two classifications is more uninhabited than No Man's Land.

What Jesus originally taught in regard to personal conduct has largely been forgotten. Today, one either is uninterested in knowing what He taught or is so very interested that one is positively fanatic. And neither disinterest nor fanaticism is a good thing for Christianity.

There are, for instance, many things definitely denominated as sin by many earnest Christians simply because their fathers have taught them that those things are sin. Pinned down to a detailed reply, they are unable to furnish biblical evidence of any but the most hazardous kind to support their habit-bound opinions.

In view of the fact left by the Christ that men are to be judged as they judge others, it might be well to soften the theories of evil that cannot positively be founded upon scriptural statements. Even the Apostle Paul indicated that it was possible for one man to perform an act without sin which would be sin for another. When men are capable of discerning the motives that govern their fellows, acting as judge and jury may be right; but until that time is reached, self-judgment only is the better course.

MARY, A HAPPY MOTHER

WITH the first Sunday in January we begin a new study. Our lessons for the first six months of 1936 will be very interesting and helpful, I hope. They ought to be, because they are about Jesus. And if we can find some new thoughts about our Savior in these lessons we will be very happy.

You know, one of the very best things about this dear old Book that we are studying is that it is always new. Every time we read it we find a new truth that has always been there, but we just hadn't seen it. So perhaps during the first half of this new year we will learn some of these new truths.

Let's play we have been told there is gold hidden away, and we are going to dig for it. Only the "gold" will be Jesus. He is the "treasure" we are looking for and hoping to find. Remember, the one who digs only a little bit now and then can't expect to find the gold hidden down deep. It's the one who digs every spare moment who finds the treasure.

Christmas Day, the day we keep in memory of the birthday of our Savior, is over. New Year's Day is just ahead of you. This is perhaps the happiest time of the whole year, from December 25 to January 1.

Most of you are having vacation and find time to enjoy the nice gifts you received. Those of you who have only a few gifts, I think, are really happier than those who receive many. Each gift means more to you, because you haven't become dissatisfied or bored by having everything you desire.

Do you know how you can best show your appreciation for those gifts? Just by being happy! Sounds easy, doesn't it? But you know if you are really happy, you are cheerful. You are pleasant to everyone. You do what you are asked to do quickly and quietly. You make everyone happy around you.

And our first lesson for the new year is about a happy mother. Yes, the mother of the baby Jesus. Did you ever stop to think that Mary was a happy person? Well, that's the first nugget of gold we have found in our digging—the first of the hidden treasure.

What sort of little boy do you suppose Jesus was to make His mother so happy? There is very little told us about Him as a boy. But there are two things I want you to remember. They are found in Luke 2:51, 52. Find them in your little Bible and read them, or have Mother read them to you.

You see the words "was subject unto them." You and Mother talk that over and find out just what they mean. Wouldn't that make any mother happy?

Next, you see there were four ways in which Jesus grew. "In wisdom." Yes, all little boys (and girls, too) grow in wisdom, if they are cared for properly by their mothers and fathers. Jesus, we think, made faster progress than other little boys, for His Father was God.

He grew in "stature," in body, taller and heavier. All little boys and girls grow that way, too, if they eat the proper food and get enough exercise and rest.

But Jesus grew in two other ways that not all little boys and girls do—"in favour with God and man." People loved Him; they liked to have Him around; and God loved Him, too.

No wonder Jesus' mother was a happy mother! Nothing could make a mother any happier than to see her son or daughter grow up as Jesus did.

Now, you and Mother talk over some of the things Jesus must have done when He was a little boy to be the kind of boy that everyone loved and God loved, too. You know, Joseph, Mary's husband, had a carpenter shop. And Jesus, no doubt, often played there and helped Joseph when He grew older and could handle a hammer or a saw. Can't you see Him picking up blocks and chips and running with them to His mother so she could cook their dinner?

As Jesus looked up to heaven to thank His Father for everything, for all the beautiful things about Him, Mary must have been very happy, knowing her Son was happy. He was learning about God, learning His Father's "business."

O yes, there were sad days, too. Just as we all have our sad days. But that is what makes the happy days seem all the brighter. The angel told Mary that her Son was to be the Savior of the world, and she didn't know just how that could be. But she "kept all these sayings in her heart" and wondered what was ahead of her Son.

Mary, you know, read her Bible a great deal. It wasn't as big as ours, but she knew the Old Testament very well. We can tell that from the song she sang when she knew Jesus was to be her own little boy. She knew God was sending a great blessing to Israel and to the whole world.

And if you have a mother who loves her Bible and reads it to you, you have something better than silver or gold. You and Mother together may dig and find the "treasure."

A MOTHER'S SONG

Luke 1

GOLDEN TEXT

"My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour."—Luke 1:46, 47.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

Topic: A Mother's Vision and Influence.

I. Zacharias and Elisabeth. (Luke 1:5-25, 36-45, 57-80.) Our lesson today presents pictures of two godly homes, that of Zacharias and Elisabeth, and that of Joseph and Mary. Zacharias was both a priest and a prophet and his life was wholly consecrated to the service of God. With his wife Elisabeth, he longed for children of their own. He realized that the greatest and most lasting influence that a man and woman can exert for good comes through the children they bring into the world and in whom they plant their own best qualities of heart and life. God revealed to Zacharias that their mutual desire for a son would be granted even though both husband and wife had long since passed the age when children might normally be expected.

Both parents recognized that their child was a gift from God, a special favor bestowed upon them, and, consequently, must be brought up "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord."

II. Joseph and Mary. (Matt. 1:18-25; Luke 1:26-36, 46-56; 2:51.) As was the case with Abraham and Sarah, and Zacharias and Elisabeth, Joseph and Mary were assured of the coming of a son far in advance of His arrival. In all three instances the name of the child was chosen and revealed by the Lord to the parents, and they were further informed as to the nature of the service he was to render to Jehovah. This complete information was given to the parents, no doubt, that they might be better prepared to direct the development of their child in harmony with the plans of God.

III. A Mother's Vision of Her Son's Future. (Luke 1:31-33, 46-55.) The song of Mary is a prophetic psalm foretelling the successes of her Son when He assumes His rightful place upon the throne of His father David. The sons of Sarah, Elisabeth, and Mary are closely associated in the plans of God. From the line of Sarah the Messianic Seed was developed (Gen. 21:12); from Elisabeth, the forerunner of Christ came (Luke 1:76); and of Mary the promised King of kings was born.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Motherhood. One of the great callings of God is motherhood. The purpose of God with the children of men is being worked out through the medium of motherhood. It was the seed of the woman that was to bruise the serpent's head. Thus the great mystery of iniquity is to be destroyed through the offspring of mother. He was manifested to destroy him that has the power over death, that is, the devil (Heb. 2:12). Motherhood was forever glorified with the angel's pronouncement, "Hail, thou that art highly favoured, the Lord is with thee: blessed art thou among women."—Luke 1:28. Is the birth control movement of today in keeping with the spirit and purpose of God's plan regarding women?

Mother's Influence. Motherhood carries with it a corresponding responsibility and influence. It is only a foolish man that despiseth the counsel and influence of his mother (Prov. 15:20). A son who resists the tears of his mother is not a friend to be desired. Lincoln said: "All that I am, or hope to be, I owe to my angel mother." A good example of a mother's influence is found in Paul's comment on Timothy's faithfulness (2 Tim. 2:5). Originally with the polygamous family, each mother and her children dwelt in separate tents (Gen. 31:33), and the management was in the hands of the mother. Hence the early training and teaching were largely done by the mothers, and it should be borne in mind that it was incumbent upon the parents in Israel to instruct their children in the history of God's dealings with them and in the law which He had given them (Ex. 12:21-27; Deut. 4:9; 6:7, 20-25). Tracing the life of this nation, it will be seen that their national ups and downs were governed by the diligence or slothfulness with which the parents carried out their duty in teaching the children in the way of the Lord. There has been a distinct let-down in the "religious training at Mother's knee" in the United States, and the downward trend is most noticeable.—C. E. R.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

What Our Mothers Have Done for Us

For the first six months of the year our study will center around Jesus our Lord. We will learn of the many ways in which He showed His love for all while He was here on earth. How He forgave their sins; how He relieved their distresses; how He showed them the way to eternal life. But not only that. We will also discover how He helps us just as much today, though He no longer lives among men in the flesh. And in learning how He helps us, we will learn, too, how we may, in return, help others. For we serve Him best by serving others.

Our first lesson is about Jesus' mother. A very interesting and profitable feature would be to read and report on the Jewish girls of that period. What sort of girl the highest type of Jewess was; how she spent her time; something of her appearance, etc. A good Bible dictionary or history of the Hebrews will give you this. Though so little is given in the Bible concerning her, we know Mary must have been of the very finest type of young womanhood. God would choose nothing less to become the mother of His Son. The golden text tells us she was a sincere worshiper of God. The verses that follow it show that she must have been an earnest student of the Old Testament, her Bible. For she knew

God had promised great things to her nation, even though at that time it was in bondage to Rome. And best of all, she believed! If your mother is that sort of person, you are more fortunate than is the son or daughter of a millionaire.

How truly Whittier spoke when he told us that "all the sages said is in the book our mothers read."—M. G.

JUNIOR CLASS

Introduction. Last quarter we studied the lives of some of the prophets of the Old Testament. In each lesson we tried to see what we could find in their works and words that would help us. Now, here we go to the New Testament. And oh! how you are going to like these lessons. They are all about Jesus. Some of them tell us about His life, others about His works, and others lessons which He wanted us to learn. Example: "How to be a good neighbor." And He tells us the best stories to illustrate these lessons. So here we go to learn all we can about Jesus.

Lesson Story. As I tell you this story, see if you can see what is happening. Long, long ago there lived a young lady named Mary. She had promised to marry a man named Joseph.

One day an angel appeared before Mary. How surprised she must have been! The angel said, "Fear not, Mary, you have been chosen by God to be the mother of His Son. Soon you will have a little baby boy, which will be God's Son."

Now Mary was more surprised than ever. The angel even told Mary what she was to name the baby. He said, "Thou shalt call his name JESUS."

See now if you can tell me what you saw in your mind as I told this story.

Memory Verse. Who can tell me, in just the same words, what the angel said to Mary about the baby's name? Yes, that's it, "Thou shalt call his name JESUS." Let's all repeat it just as the angel said it.

Notebook. (a) The picture. On one side of your notebook page draw Mary. Draw an angel talking to her. Or if you can find a picture of this lesson paste it on the picture page. On the opposite page give the following "true-false" test. (1) An angel appeared to Mary. TRUE-FALSE. (2) The angel told Mary she was to have a little daughter. TRUE-FALSE. (3) This baby was the Son of God. TRUE-FALSE. (4) Mary was to call the Baby John. TRUE-FALSE. (5) Mary was to call the Baby Jesus. TRUE-FALSE. (6) Mary was very much surprised to learn that she was to have a baby which would be God's Son. TRUE-FALSE.

(An excellent set of pictures on the "Life of Christ" for coloring and suitable for these lessons may be purchased from the National Bible Institution, Oregon, Illinois.)—V. C. T.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

C. E. RANDALL RECOVERING

A severe cold necessitating a doctor's attention confined Bro. C. E. Randall to his bed for some days following the conclusion of the series of meetings in which he recently participated at the Brush Creek Church of God near Tippecanoe City, Ohio. He now is recovering.

Owing to his illness, Bro. Randall was unable to complete any but the first six parts of the "Practical Applications" section of the Truth Seekers' Sunday School Quarterly for the first quarter of 1936. The last seven lessons will, therefore, have the "Practical Applications" edited by Sr. Grace M. Marsh.

There has been some delay in publishing the quarterly, but we anticipate having it in the hands of subscribers before the first Sunday of January.

THANK YOU

A letter from Wilsie J. McKnight, one of our younger ministers, whose address is North Platte, Neb., commented thus on the service recently rendered him by the National Bible Institution:

"When I received my Bible some time ago from you, I was pleased beyond all expectations. I would heartily recommend that anybody that didn't know where to get a Bible to fit his particular taste or needs, or had never seen one like it, should write to you to pick one for him to his description."

To him and to the others who have placed a flood of book and Bible orders with us in the last few months we wish to express gratitude both for their business and for their generous expressions of appreciation for prompt and accurate service.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI

"We are expecting Bro. J. H. Anderson to preach for us as he goes through to Blush, Mo., for their regular fifth Sunday meetings.

"Mrs. Maude Graham and son Edwin of Fredericktown have moved to this city and are attending our classes regularly. Sr. Graham's father, Uncle Frank Manken, is with her for the winter, and though more than eighty years of age attends the Bible classes when the weather is good."

The above information reaches us by letter from Sr. Claude Graham.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

Our church group feels a weight of sorrow over the tragic death of two of our Sunday school children. Just after dusk on December 10 three children in a street were struck by a car and killed. Two of them were Gordon and Patricia England, ages 10 and 8, brother and sister, and only children of their parents. Being members of our Sunday school, the sorrow was brought close home to all of us. The double funeral was conducted from a local funeral chapel Friday, Dec. 13, by the pastor, and burial made at Hersey, Mich.

Among the encouraging things observed among the departments of our church work is the sustained interest in Berean work. The present attendance is running more than 100 each Thursday night. About one third of these are young people.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

BURR OAK, INDIANA

Our annual meeting will take place Friday evening, Jan. 3. At this time reports of every department will be given, and election of officers held.

Sunday the 22nd the writer will be in Kokomo, leaving the Burr Oak morning service in charge of our superintendent, at which time treats will be given and the gifts by the classes exchanged.

The Ladies' Society have discontinued their meetings until after the holidays. The Bereans maintain interest, with a last report of 27 present. Bible school attendance shows an increase, with new members added.

We expect a good attendance at our Christmas pageant, "The Heart of Christmas," which will be given Christmas Eve.

The interest and support give us joy, and we can safely say with David, in Psalm 133:1, "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

We pray God's blessing upon all of the faith, that the work will grow everywhere.

A. E. Hoskins, Pastor.

BERNARD LEE FRICK

Bernard Lee Frick, son of Horace and Grace Frick, was born in Kokomo, Ind., August 5, 1917, and fell asleep in death December 12, 1935.

He united with the Church of God of the Abrahamic Faith May 15, 1932, being baptized by Bro. O. J. Parker, remaining faithful unto the end. We laid him to rest beside his mother, who preceded him in death five years ago. Surviving are his father; one sister, Juanita; grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Grant Cook and Mr. Lee Frick; and a host of other relatives and friends.

Services were conducted by Bro. O. J. Parker, assisted by the writer. We commit our young brother and friend to the care of Him who doeth all things well. May his resurrection be unto greater freedom and fullness of action, which will unfold greater blessings to him and us, in that perfect newness of life forever.

D. G. Harvey.

THE GOSPEL OF LUKE

The Gospel According to Luke, from which our lessons are to be drawn for the next six months, is acknowledged to be one of the finest pieces of literature in the world. Renan has described it as "the most beautiful book ever written, the hosanna of the little ones and the humble." And when we add to its literary merit the implications of inspiration which are to be found in its depths of spiritual power, its vivid descriptions, and its richness of detail, the "beloved physician" provides us with the most intimate and revealing biography of our Savior which we possess.

This Gospel, although comprising a complete history of Jesus' life and ministry, might well be called, "A Letter to a Friend," for such indeed it is. Its greatest value lies in the personal nature of its appeal. One is constantly impressed with the conviction that Luke is not addressing his friend Theophilus alone, but is seeking to reveal Jesus Christ to the reader himself.

A most attractive hand-drawn and hand-lettered Christmas greeting has come to us from Bro. Hoskins of Burr Oak, Ind.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Mr. and Mrs. Bert C. Thompson are planning to celebrate their Golden Wedding Anniversary New Year's Eve. On New Year's Day they will hold "open house" at their home, 1111 Blaine Ave., South Bend, Ind. They were married near Plymouth, Ind., by Elder S. A. Chaplin.

We regret that the article by R. H. Judd and the poem by H. J. Prosser appearing on page 3 of this issue reached us too late for insertion in our regular Christmas edition.

It is unfortunate that a number of orders for boxes of Christmas cards and for the annual, "Christmas," could not be filled as advertised; but they arrived after the publishers' stocks as well as our own were exhausted. Ample time always should be allowed for meeting orders during the holiday season.

Owing to the pressure of work at the holiday season we are closing our news forms on Saturday rather than on Monday. News omitted from this issue will appear in our next.

BUILDING

We are building every day
In a good or evil way,
And the structure as it grows
Will our inmost self disclose,
Till in every arch and line
All our faults and failings shine;
It may grow a castle grand
Or a wreck upon the sand.
Build it well whate'er you do,
Build it straight and strong and true.
Build it clean and high and broad,
Build it for the eye of God.

LUKE, THE BELOVED PHYSICIAN

Little is known with certainty regarding the early life of Luke, the writer of the third Gospel and also of the book of Acts. It is generally supposed, however, that he was of Gentile parentage and probably a proselyte of the Jewish faith when he came into contact with Paul in Antioch, where it is thought he was engaged in the practice of his profession, which was that of a physician.

Following his conversion to Christianity, he became for a time the close companion of Paul in the latter's missionary journeys. It may have been that Luke accompanied Paul as his medical attendant, as some have supposed, the Apostle referring to him tenderly as "Luke, the beloved physician" (Col. 4:14).

The fact that the language in which he wrote was not the somewhat crude dialect spoken by the common people, but the purest literary Greek of the period, indicates the cultural advantages Luke had evidently enjoyed, while the medical terms he employed freely attest his learning as a physician.

The early "church fathers" recognized the authenticity and authority of Luke's writings, affirming that Luke recorded the gospel as preached by Paul. Irenaeus, for example, says, "Luke, the companion of Paul; put down in a book the gospel preached by him. . . . He was not only a companion, but also a fellow laborer of the apostles, especially of Paul." While not an apostle, he was highly regarded by the disciples throughout the Roman world.

The RESTITUTION HERALD advocates: the near return of Christ, Acts 1:11, and life only through Him, Col. 3:3; the literal resurrection of the dead, John 5:28; the immortalization of those in Christ, 1 Cor. 15:53, 54; the final restoration of Israel as the kingdom of God under the kingship of Christ, Luke 1:32, the church to be joint heirs with Him, Rom. 8:17, and Israel to be made head over Gentile nations, Isa. 60:13; the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began", Acts 3:21. It also firmly advocates repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, Acts 2:38, and a consecrated life as essential to salvation.

The Coming Crisis

By James R. Kaye, Ph.D., LL.D.

The state of the world as a whole in which we are now living stands alone in human history. Every thoughtful man is asking, "What does it mean? To what is it all pointing?" These questions are answered in the most intelligent manner by The Coming Crisis.

The scholarship of this book is sufficiently assured by the fact that its author is the compiler of the New Analytical Bible and other biblical works.

THE END OF THE AGE

Prophecies relating to the coming of Christ and its bearing on present world conditions are considered from a strictly scriptural viewpoint. The book is probably the sanest, soundest, most exhaustive treatment of this subject now in print. It is invaluable to anyone interested in the future of humanity and the return of the Messiah.

of expediency and sentiment to the British flag.

The matter of expediency, however, is a big one. None of the Dominions has a navy worthy of the name; none of the Dominions is suitably equipped for coastal and internal defense; but all of the Dominions possess definite commercial and territorial advantages which would make Powers of greater strength survey them longingly. They must, consequently, rely upon the power of British arms for their protection; and in return for the security given them by the English, they permit free trade among the several divisions of the Empire. Without the Dominions, England would starve; without England, the Dominions would perish. It is quite as necessary for one as for the other that the might of Britain be not broken.

House of Parliament

In spite of this fact, the consensus of opinion among the Dominions has been that expressed by Prime Minister Bennett's declaration for Canada to the effect that "he is opposed to sending our young men to die in a foreign quarrel where no Canadian interest is at stake." Support for the policy of League sanctions against Italy has not been fervent on the part of the Dominions.

More far-seeing than this theory, however, is the opinion expressed by the New Zealand Auckland Weekly News: "There could be no neutrality for the Dominion in a British war. Even if she declared herself neutral, and Britain approved her attitude, no enemy could be persuaded to forbear from hostile action against New Zealand territory, trade, or shipping, any more than an enemy would cease operations against Kent or Cornwall, if those Counties tried to assert their neutrality in an English war." An empire bound together by commerce, industry, and sentiment would suffer in all its parts were its heart to be attacked.

It was the realization that war with Italy could well mean the doom of the Empire of Britain by severing the connection among England and the Colonies and Dominions that impelled Secretary Hoare to advance his preposterous plan for the delivering of Ethiopia into the hands of the enemy. Laval, inspired by the perpetual fear of Germany which seizes all Frenchmen as soon as they have become diplomats, also looked to his own salvation in lending his support to the idea. Italy could too easily unite under pressure with Germany, and France, despite the $300,000,000 steel-and-concrete wall along its eastern frontier, was open to invasion from at least two directions. Something must be sacrificed to keep Europe out of war, and better Ethiopia than France or England, ran the Hoare-Laval plea. Something of the same spirit inspired one of Lincoln's advisers to suggest that the United States declare war on a Central or South American country in order to avoid rebellion and civil war within the Union.

It is commonly believed and fairly well established that the biblical "Tarshish" is Great Britain; and it is, in this connection, also interesting to recall the fact that the lion for centuries has been the embodiment of the cartoonist's dream of England. The statement by Ezekiel, therefore, that "the merchants of Tarshish, with all the young lions thereof, shall say unto thee, Art thou come to take a spoil?" the reference being to the predicted future (and exceedingly literal) battle of Armageddon, to occur on the field of Megiddo close by Jerusalem, would point to the fact that the British Empire, despite Italian hopes and European fears to the contrary, will not immediately be dissolved; for Armageddon has yet to be fought. This conclusion is further substantiated by other biblical prophecies recording the control of Palestine by England at the time of the return of the Christ.

It is, moreover, rather inconceivable that the Dominions, from a purely practical point of view, would be sufficiently short-sighted to permit England to be shorn of its power by either active or secretly subversive influences. Nor is it reasonable to suppose that the rich sentimentality which leads Canadians, New Zealanders, and Australians to sing "God Save the King" at the moment that South Africans, Scotch, Welsh, and English are singing the same thing can be so easily broken. Regardless of the immediate results of Sir Hoare's resignation and regardless of the superficial attitude of present Dominion Administrations, both the Bible and common sense indicate that there's life in the old boy yet.

THE BIRTH OF CHRIST

dies, not even Christ, can "live again" except he first be "born again." How and when did Christ "ask life" from God, and when did God give to Him the everlasting life for which He asked?

The answers to these two momentous questions are unique and specific—the whole of Christ's life was, as He said, a witness to the truth concerning the kingdom yet to come of which He Himself was to be king, and virtually amounted in itself to a living request to be given another life (free from mortality) that the prophecies of God's Word might be fulfilled. It was for this purpose that "God raised him from the dead" to die no more. It was then that He was "born (again) from the dead," "the firstborn among many brethren," "the firstfruits of them that sleep." Because of this fact Paul could say of Christ (1 Cor. 13:4), "He liveth (now) by the power of God." It was owing to this fact that Christ could be called "a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec." And what was that? Melchisedec was not only king of Salem, he was also priest of the most high God. To this end was Christ born (twice born), that He might be king of Salem (Jerusalem) and priest of the most high God, after the pattern of an endless life.

Let's Get Busy!

An Editorial

WE HAVE lagged and dragged and dreamed long enough! Let's get busy! Because so many other churches are dying in the shell spiritually is no reason why we should allow the creeping palsy of indifference and lethargy to hold us any longer in a state of pretense and inactivity. Let's get going again with all the vigor, enthusiasm, and zeal for the truth which the Church of God once knew! There never has been a time when the need for progressive, aggressive, and decisive evangelism was greater than it is today. While the attention of other denominations is being almost wholly absorbed by matters that pertain to this present life—the present social and economic order—and scarcely a voice is being raised to arouse the world to a sense of the imminence of the Lord's coming and the certainty of the judgment that is to follow, it surely becomes mandatory upon us who profess to believe that the only hope of the world lies in the personal return of Christ and the establishment of His kingdom upon the earth to gird our loins for battle, organize our forces for conflict, and bring to bear every ounce of our individual and collective strength upon the one great task of preaching the gospel, dogmatically, positively, insistently, and continuously throughout the world!

This must be done! God will hold us to account for our failure to render this service to Himself and to the world. It is not time for wishy-washy methods. We must hit hard and fast at the ramparts of error and not permit our attention to be drawn aside for a moment from our one objective by the pleas of well-minded but unscripturally inspired men who seek deliverance for humanity in social and political revolution. We have no time for politics, no time for attempting social reform! Such efforts are predestined to failure anyway. The Lord is coming! He is coming soon! And when that supremely important event takes place all of the labor which such well-intentioned but illy-advised reformers have attempted will perish forever—overthrown and submerged by world-shaking transformations which are to follow the establishment of the eternal kingdom of almighty God upon the earth!

Let us give our attention, our strength, and our united energy to the one great task Jesus has committed to us—the publication and promulgation of the gospel!

Earthquake Rocks China

"The mount . . . shall cleave in the midst thereof toward the east and toward the west."—Zech. 14:4.

CHENGTU, China, Dec. 25.—Reports are trickling in of a terrific earthquake that occurred on December 18, shattering many villages and resulting in the death of hundreds if not thousands of people. The region affected is an almost inaccessible mountainous district and consequently but meager reports have thus far been received. It has been ascertained, however, that villages which clung to the mountain sides have been dislodged and hurled into the valleys far below, burying their inhabitants in masses of rock and debris.

Strange landscape distortions followed the convulsion. In one case a mountain was split wide open for a distance of a mile or more, forming "a very great valley" probably much after the order of the one that will be produced when the Lord comes and "the mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof toward the east and toward the west."

It may be recalled that a similar earthquake shook the far interior of China a few years ago in which 600,000 lives were lost. That disaster was said to have been one of the most terrible the world had ever known, although, owing to the remote district in which it occurred, reports of its happening did not reach the outside world for many months.

It was stated recently that some of the most populous cities of the United States, including Chicago and New York, are within the earthquake belt of this hemisphere. What devastation such a convulsion, should one take place in the area of those great cities, would produce! The very thought is appalling. And yet such a happening is quite within the bounds of possibility, and may well be expected during the closing period of the present dispensation. Blessed are those who shall be "accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man" (Luke 21:36).

Seeing the Invisible

"He endured, as seeing him who is invisible."—Heb. 11:27.

BERLIN, Germany, Dec. 28.—Through the aid of recently perfected instruments a German scientist, Dr. Erich Dinner of Berlin, has succeeded in a measure in "tricking the invisible into visibility," as The Literary Digest expresses it. Dr. Dinner has photographed sound waves, heat, and various gasses that under ordinary conditions are wholly invisible to the human eye. From the standpoint of a Bible student the discovery is of interest in that it serves to emphasize the material nature of everything in the universe, and suggests the natural possibilities of such miracles recorded in the Bible as that of the appearance of the angel to the ass of Balaam (Num. 22:23), and the appearance and disappearance of Jesus after His resurrection (Luke 24:31; Mark 16:12, 14; John 20:26).

Woman Martyr to Science

"Greater love hath no man than this."—Jesus.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 26.—The sixth name to be inscribed on the special honor roll of the Public Health Service Bureau during the past ten years was that of Anna Pabst, 39 years of age, who died Christmas night from spinal meningitis. Miss Pabst was injecting the meningitis serum into an animal for experimental purposes, seeking a positive cure for the dreaded disease, when the animal moved suddenly causing the culture to be spattered into her eye. The accident occurred on December 17, and in spite of prompt cleansing, the disease could not be stayed.

The young woman scientist, like so many others before her, was endangering her life continually in behalf of all future generations who might be attacked by the disease, and died a martyr to her devotion to her fellow men.

Only He who created us and who knows our constitutions perfectly will be able to eradicate disease entirely from the earth. But in the meantime all respect and honor is due to these noble men and women who strive in the face of constant mortal danger to themselves to relieve in a measure the suffering of humanity.

Uruguay Breaks With Red Russia

"They shall not cleave one to another."—Dan. 2:43.

MONTEVIDEO, Uruguay, Dec. 28.—The Soviet Minister has been handed his passports and diplomatic relations have been broken off between this country and Russia, due to the charge that the embassy of the U.S.S.R. was being made the headquarters for Communistic propaganda in South America.

"The Royal Game of Bluff"

By Norman John Macleod

PLAYING at the royal game of bluff in a poker game may be great sport for the winner and the master player, but it is sure to breed disaster for somebody. Europe is playing at its old diplomatic game. Wars and rumors of wars are the stock in trade of the skilled diplomatist. Let us compare the present situation to that of Europe before 1914. Irvin Cobb is sure in his prognostications that there "won't be any world war." The candid reader of the history of such events is not so positive.

The war of 1914 did not come at once: it came unannounced to the world at large, but was brewing for many years. In 1902 the British Government made arrangements with the Belgian Government for the landing of British troops in Belgium in case Germany should invade that "buffer" State. The same year Britain sought and found an ally in Japan, to protect her Far Eastern interests against possible German aggression. From 1904 to 1906 the Russians were rated as enemies of the British because they were fighting Britain's ally. But in 1907 the British and the Japanese made alliance with the Russians against possible German aggressions. During the Middle Ages France fought for one hundred years against British domination. From 1689 to 1815 Britain and France were almost constantly at war with each other with only small periods of peace intervening. All during the nineteenth century there was carried on between those two nations a constant colonial conflict with such highlights as British non-interference in the Franco-German War of 1870, and the clashes in colonial interests in Siam, Northern and Eastern Africa, and other outlying parts of the world. But in 1904 after almost coming to war at Fashoda in Africa the two erstwhile enemies became firm allies. They have remained allied to the present writing because of the menace of Germany! From 1907 on, the crises in European affairs came thick and fast. During the Russo-Japanese War the first crisis came when the Kaiser forced the French to back down in Algeceras in Northern Africa. An African crisis followed close on the heels of a Far Eastern crisis. In 1908 came the Near Eastern crisis accompanying the Turkish Revolution which almost blew up a general conflict, for Bulgaria chose the occasion to become independent, and Austria seized Bosnia and Herzegovina. In 1911 came the Turkish-Italian War in which Italy seized Tripoli and named it Lybia. 1912 and 1913 saw the two Balkan wars which were preludes to the World War in 1914. In each of these cases mentioned above

"Do you ever recall finer weather for bluffing than they've had over in Europe these past few days?"—Irvin S. Cobb, in the Los Angeles Times. ¶ "And ye shall hear of wars and rumours of wars: see that ye be not troubled: for all these things must come to pass, but the end is not yet. For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places. All these are the beginning of sorrows."—Matt. 24:6-8.

there was played the "royal game of bluff." And the Kaiser remarked that "he stood beside his ally (Austria) in shining armor" and France backed down. But in 1914 nobody was willing to back down. Each nation was trying to force the situation in regard to the other. 1913 was marked by a general increase of armaments throughout the world.

Since 1918 there has been almost a constant play of crises: during the peace conferences themselves there were conflicts going on in different parts of the world where especial sore spots have existed for years. While the allied and associated Powers were trying to make peace, Mustafa Kemal Pasha had reorganized his army and drove the Greeks out of Asia Minor and restored Turkish rule to parts of Europe surrounding the Dardenelles. That was so far back as 1921. Almost constant warfare has been carried on in Austria in the three-cornered struggle to dominate that unhappy country by Italy, Germany, and France, with Yugoslavia playing a strong part in the conflict. That warfare has been variously called by the title of "strikes" or "riots" but can be called nothing else but undeclared war. France and Germany, and Italy and Yugoslavia, have each tried to out-manuever the other in the valley of the Danube. Ibn Saud of Arabia has carried on unmitigating warfare against the British in Iraq and various other parts of the Near East because of the great value of the Mosul oil field and the mineral deposits of the Dead Sea, both of which the Arabs helped to win from the Turks. The Riffian struggle in Northern Africa of 1921-23 was further complicated by constant Italian troubles in Lybia and Tunisia in more recent years. Undeclared war against Chinese "bandits" has been carried on for several years by the Japanese. The papers hardly have missed an issue (daily) in telling of some new step to be taken by the Japanese in Manchuria and northern China. Depressions in most parts of the world have given Japan the golden opportunity she has longed for. But the year 1935 holds analogies to 1913 that are really alarming.

1913 witnessed the increase in armaments of almost every nation of the world; even the peaceful United States joined that increase. 1935 has seen an increase to greater strength of armed forces than ever before. The naval crisis of 1935 which was precipitated by the renunciation on the part of Japan of the Washington Conference treaty was scarcely over until the situation was intensified by the Saar Plebiscite and the alliance (Please turn to Back Page)

GRAVESTONES

By the Editor

IF WE could but believe the epitaphs that are engraved on the tombstones that mark the silent resting places of the dead, how comforting it would be! But at the same time it would be so confusing and bewildering! We would find comfort in the assurance of the worthiness of all the dead and in the eternal well-being of the vast majority of them. But we would be confused and bewildered by the contradictions that so often appear upon the stones above them.

We have read such inscriptions in cemeteries in many different parts of the United States and Canada and have found them both interesting and instructive. What serious contemplations they arouse! What warnings they convey! How eloquently they tell the story of human frailty and mortality! How vividly these silent spokesmen for the dead record the vanity of man's pride and ambition!

Under the somber shadows cast by these monuments rest the rich and poor alike. The king and peasant lie side by side in death, "to native dust returned." All are equal in the grave, for "all go to one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again" (Ecl. 3:20).

These graven stones emphasize the warning of the Bible that "it is appointed unto man once to die, but after that the judgment" (Heb. 9:27). But we should not forget that the Judge on that day will not determine the final destiny of those who appear before Him by the words that were inscribed upon their tombstones!

It was Job who desired that the words of truth that animated his heart with hope might be "graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock for ever!" (Job 19:24). The Scriptures tell of many memorials which men caused to be erected that their posterity might not forget the goodness and mercy with which God had surrounded them during the days of their pilgrimage here. Among such none is more interesting than the one raised by Samuel the Prophet on the occasion when the Lord delivered His people from their most dreaded enemies, the Philistines, of which we read in 1 Samuel the 7th chapter and 12th verse, "Then Samuel took a stone, and set it between Mizpeh and Shen, and called the name of it Ebenezer, saying, Hitherto hath the Lord helped us."

What a splendid inscription that would be to place upon the gravestone of any man of God! And how true it would be! "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us."

The words assert the truth of Paul's great confession, "By the grace of God I am what I am" (1 Cor. 15:10), and which he further expressed with such positive assurance in the 8th chapter of Romans and the 28th verse: "We know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose."

Yes, those words of Samuel would make a wonderful inscription for the tombstone of a godly man. It would be a final acknowledgment of the faithfulness of Jesus, who had promised, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."—Matt. 28:20. But we seldom if ever saw such a confession of faith inscribed on a stone.

Facing the entrance to a beautiful cemetery in Niagara Falls, New York, stands a lofty shaft marking the spot where Elder R. V. Lyon, one of the most powerful advocates of the gospel the Church of God has produced, has rested since July 24, 1891. Long before his death occurred, Bro. Lyon had the monument erected and selected the texts he wished to have inscribed upon it. And to this day the visitor to that cemetery is confronted upon his entrance into the city of the dead with an inspiring biblical declaration of hope concerning those who sleep in Jesus awaiting His return.

In an attractive little country cemetery in southern Illinois, not far from Eldorado, we recently saw stones bearing Paul's submissive words: "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith."—2 Tim. 4:6, 7.

This deathbed confession of the Apostle reminds us of the words which were found written in the Bible of Sir Walter Raleigh following his execution:

"Even such is time, that takes in trust
Our youth, our joys, our all we have,
And pays us but with age and dust;
Who in the dark and silent grave,
When we have wandered all our ways,
Shuts up the story of our days.
But from this earth, this grave, this dust,
My God shall raise me up, I trust!"

Like Paul, this famous man trusted in the coming of the Life-Giver who would call him forth from the silence and darkness of the tomb. This hope, so bright, so joyous, so altogether satisfying to the sorrowing hearts of men and women facing the mystery of death, was voiced long ago by David in a prayer found in the 17th Psalm and the 15th verse: "As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness."

How much more comforting and biblical was the hope of Sir Walter and of David than that suggested on an old tombstone which still stands in a Massachusetts graveyard:

"Under this stone and under these trees,
Lieth the body of Solomon Pease;
Pease is not here, but only his pod,
He shucked out his soul and it went up to God."

We are sure that Paul would not have chosen words so frivolous or so unscriptural to have placed over his last earthly bed, but something more in keeping with the glorious hope he expressed in Colossians the 3rd chapter and the 4th verse: "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Paul's hope lay in the resurrection from the dead at the Lord's return.

Another inscription we read on a stone in the little cemetery in southern Illinois previously mentioned was very much in keeping with the hope held out in the Scriptures. It read as follows:

"Go home, my friends, dry up your tears,
I must lie here till Christ appears;
When Christ appears then I'll arise
And see Him with immortal eyes."

How comforting the positive faith expressed in those words is! The one who caused them to be written evidently had no fear for the future. His hope was in the coming of his Lord.

Far less consoling and not at all in harmony with the teaching of Christ and the apostles were the words we found written over a tiny grave in the same cemetery. This particular inscription, while it expresses the idea of many people concerning the one who is responsible for the sorrow that enters our homes when a little blossom of love is taken from us by death, is so contrary to the truth as it is revealed in Jesus, and casts such a dreadful reflection upon the name of our merciful heavenly Father, that it struck me as almost blasphemous.

"Dearest child, thou hast left us,
And thy loss we deeply feel;
'Tis the Lord that hath bereft us,
Of one we loved so well."

As we read that awful accusation which some sorrowing parent had brought against God, we thought of Paul's great sermon on the resurrection of the dead where he said:

The Cleansing Word and Human Need

"Seek the Lord, and his strength: seek his face evermore."—Psalm 105:4.

THIS PSALM is a sustained recollection of the loving-kindnesses of God to Israel; it wells up from the heart of the singer, and pours itself forth in a flood of music:

"O give thanks unto the Lord; call upon his name:
Make known his deeds among his people.
Sing unto him, sing psalms unto him;
Talk ye of all his wondrous works.
Glory ye in his holy name:
Let the heart of them rejoice that seek the Lord."

The invitation to "seek the Lord" is found frequently in the Psalter, and the expression is rich in significance. It implies first an effort of approach to draw near to Him; from this it takes the meaning of inquire or request; and it gains its full force in the exhortation to follow after—to seek unto God.

I

The Psalmist invites the widely separated tribes of Israel to come to Zion, that they may worship the Lord in His holy house: "Seek the Lord, and his strength: seek his face evermore."

In early times God revealed His holiness in a special manner in the temple in Jerusalem: on stated occasions the people of the covenant journeyed thither, saying and singing: "One thing have I desired of the Lord, that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to inquire in his temple."

As the festival season draws near, the pilgrim bands assemble. Those who are preparing to leave their homes commend to Jehovah's keeping the loved ones to be left behind.

Then they go forth in the name of the Lord. The little company grows greater at every stage—"they go from strength to strength"—each mountain village pours its contingent into the main stream of progress, until the roads are alive with a varied throng of worshipers, clothed in white, a palm-bearing band. To the sound of flute and harp they chant "the songs of the going up," and press forward with rejoicing expectation to the city of their solemnities, the place which Jehovah has set apart for the disclosure of His great name.

Religion is spirit, but it wears a material vesture. We cultivate habits of prayer, we secure seasons of retirement, we look earnestly into the mirror of the Word, we exercise ourselves unto godliness. And as of old the silver trumpets rang out the piercing call, "Prepare to meet thy God, O Israel," so this ancient summons comes to us with equal insistence, even though it may utter itself in new tones: "Seek the Lord, and his strength: seek his face evermore."

(a) Let us be careful, morning by morning, to bathe our spirits in the cleansing fountain of God's Holy Word. "Now ye are clean," said our Master, "through the word which I have spoken unto you." St. Paul, too, reminds the Ephesian Christians how Christ gave Himself for the church, "that he might sanctify it, having cleansed it by the washing of water with the word." And a psalmist, whose soul was lit up with a flame of love to the law of his God, asks the ever-insistent question: "Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way?" making answer in like manner: "By taking heed thereto according to thy word."

We are, at times, immersed in worldly thoughts; we open the Book, and read: "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God." In the pursuits of business we may have been tempted to covetousness; we turn the leaf, and these words look upon us: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness." We are tempted to follow some ambitious design, but the Scriptures disclose the master-rule of our Savior's life: "I do always those things that please him." We are in danger of being overtaken in unhallowed anger, but a gracious word of St. Paul's stills our spirit's turmoil: "Be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God in Christ forgave you."

(b) Let us be mindful, always, without fail, to set apart some good portion of the day to be a time of fellowship with God, a quiet hour of waiting upon Him. In reading the Scriptures we listen to the voice of God, but in prayer we respond to the Word which He has spoken: "The companions hearken unto thy voice," He says; "cause me to hear it." Frequently, as we kneel in prayer, we discover that the line of communication has been severed. Our words seem to go out into space; there is none to answer, none who regards. Something has gone wrong, and God is waiting to put it right. We say: "Lord, show me wherefore thou contendest with me," and again: "Search me, O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts: and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting." And as we pray, the silence is dissolved, and the voice of God is heard.

Now this reminds us that there must be a continual effort to do the things that are pleasing to our heavenly Father; for, if we regard iniquity in our heart, the Lord will not hear us.

In order that obedience may be entire, we must extricate ourselves from every circumstance that inclines to evil, and frame our lives in uprightness. As trees of the Lord's planting we must be rooted and grounded in His love. As the temple of His indwelling we must conform to the architectural design revealed in the foundation. As the body of Christ we must have full control of every member, so that the will of the Head may be swiftly and perfectly fulfilled. We must enter into and abide in right relations with God. One sometimes sees a plant whose native home is the tropics struggling to preserve a starved existence in our colder clime: its leaves are narrow, its growth stunted, its flower sickly. But restore it to its true habitat, and soon it will unfold its gorgeous blossoms and return to its natural luxuriance. If our life is to be joyous and fruitful there must be a deliberate and sustained effort to hold ourselves in the grace and love of Jesus Christ.

II

The pilgrims reach the temple of God. They have come to "inquire" of Him: such is the purpose of their journey to Zion.

To inquire involves these two things—to learn and to receive.

(a) The worshiping companies present themselves before the Lord in His holy house, that they may behold His beauty, that they may learn to know His gracious and holy character. God is fairer than the morning, lovelier than light. He is above all virtue and praise. He rises immeasurably beyond the loftiest conceptions that the mind of man can entertain, even as the white ranges tower above the foothills which cluster at their base. And the thought of God disengages the mind from everything that is stained with human imperfection or impeded by earthly desire. I will lift up mine eyes to the hills; I will seek unto God.

They come to the house of the Lord also that they may learn His will for them. In every work of art there is an unseen plan. It was never traced on canvas or carved in stone; it existed only in the mind of the artist, but it determined the character of the work. The Master of life has a plan for everyone. We come to inquire of Him, to ask what His holy and acceptable will for each one of us is: "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" How many rank ambitions would sicken and die, how the tumult of our passions would be stilled, how our feverish activities would compose themselves, if once we knew, and rested in, God's perfect purpose for our personal life. "Be silent to God," says another psalmist, "and let God fashion thee."

(b) But to inquire in God's temple implies also our making request. We know now what it is that Jehovah holds in prospect for us. How shall we win that prize, how shall we gain that goal? Lord, undertake for me.

We ask Him first for present help. Iniquities prevail against us; as for our transgressions, Thou shalt purge them away. The snare of the fowler holds our feet, the net of the flatterer has enmeshed us, the oppression of the enemy has brought us low, an ambushed temptation has overtaken us. But Thou, O Lord, art my Helper; be not far from me; Thou art my Hope in the day of evil.

We ask Him not less earnestly for help in all future time. It is not a single day's march from the City of Destruction to the Celestial Gate, but a life journey. And if our life is to be without rebuke, with no flawed surface, no twisted lines, no broken pillars, no arrested progress, we need grace to help in every hour—the supply of the Spirit flowing unchecked, without intermission, into these otherwise arid lives of ours. For this we entreat His favor and supplicate His compassion. "The name of the Lord is a strong tower, the righteous runneth into it, and is safe."

III

The pilgrims have seen God, have gazed with love and longing upon His face; so their life has been renewed. Now they return to their homes, new men restored to familiar surroundings. No life can be quite the same after such an experience. Having looked upon God, one's eyes grow dim to the glare of earthly splendors. Sin has forfeited its skill to charm, self-love its power to tempt. One may say with the Danish sculptor, though with a different suggestion: "I have gazed upon the face of Christ, and cannot look on idols now." All things have become new: life henceforth must be a prolongation of the vision beatific.

What vision was it that came to us when our feet first trod the floor of the sanctuary? Was it not the face of Christ? And shall not our lives grow radiant in the light

Evolutionary Philosophy

WELL-INFORMED evolutionists of today no longer include the nebular hypothesis as a part of the general evolution hypothesis, for they know that it is an egregious error. The nebular hypothesis was put forth by Swedenborg and Kant, and later shaped into somewhat of a scientific form by Laplace. It supposed that at one time our solar system was a rotating fiery nebula which in the course of time cooled and contracted, thus causing an increase of angular momentum or speed of rotation. A time came when at the equator of this cooling nebula the centrifugal force exceeded the force of gravity, and masses of material were thrown off in tenuous rings, and each "ring" upon further cooling, developed into one of our present planetary bodies. The sun in its present form is supposed to be the parent nebula around which its "offspring" planets swing.

Our readers may not have had the privilege of taking time to keep up to date with the more recent scientific work shedding light upon the nebular hypothesis; therefore we give the following from the Textbook of Astronomy by Doctors Russell, Dugan, and Stewart of the Princeton University Observatory, volume 1, page 463.

"This theory accounts for many facts, and can be modified to explain more, but it meets with two fatal difficulties. First, it can be proved that an extended tenuous ring would not condense into a single body, but into many bodies like the asteroids on the rings of Saturn. Second, almost all the angular momentum of the solar system—98 per cent of the total—is at present associated with the orbital motions of the major planets. The sun's rotation provides almost all of the rest, the four terrestrial planets contributing less than 0.1 per cent of the whole. The total angular momentum cannot be altered by internal changes within the system, and no process has ever been imagined by which 98 per cent of it could have been segregated in less than 1-700 of the total mass. Furthermore it has been proved that if the outer parts of the nebula had had so much angular momentum, they could not have condensed at all even into asteroids.

WHAT STARTED THE SYSTEM?

"It appears, indeed, that no orderly process of evolution under the action of internal forces could have produced the existing distribution of angular momentum, and it follows that the angular momentum of the planets must have been put into the system from outside. Here, therefore, it seems necessary, for once, to abandon the 'uniformitarian' hypothesis of gradual evolution and to adopt a 'catastrophic hypothesis of sudden change.'"

Darwin and his supporters have pointed out analogies and similarities, but such analogies can never in themselves be proof for the conclusions hypothesized from them.

By failing to emphasize equally the differences as well as the analogies, the enthusiastic followers of evolution set up a hypothesis which has proved inadequate to meet the claims so ardently made for it.

The real nature and true purpose of the alleged similarities between man and other vertebrate forms were not in many cases carefully ascertained. Consider, for example, the nature and purpose of the pineal and thyroid glands of the appendix, carelessly claimed to be vestiges or "left-overs" from a previous lower vertebral state.

It is admitted that some relationship between different biological forms does exist.

An imperfect analogy has been made by evolutionists, and we find that their analogy has led to too great an extension of their hypothesis. The organic evolution hypothesis has crept into the metaphysical thinking of the world in general, and usurped a place not worthy of it. People seemed not aware that they were mentally switching a limited hypothesis over to a position of a universal truth, scientifically accredited and capable of accounting for everything in the universe. The appeal of evolution to their imagination produced a mental quirk resulting in an unscientific attitude.

A specific illustration will serve to make this more apparent. The organic evolution hypothesis has been applied to the origin of the cosmos as a whole. It is believed that our stars and planets, grouped or individually, have developed by an evolutionary process. The evolution hypothesis, however, has as a cardinal necessity and premise a more or less stable environment which interacts with whatever is supposed to be evolving; and so we ask, What constitutes the environment which must be present for the evolution of the stars? Is it space? Can nothing interplay with something in its "evolution"?

WIDE USE OF "EVOLUTION"

There is certainly an unwarranted extension of the organic evolution hypothesis here; and, moreover, if a strict comparison of the use of the word "evolution" as used in the biological field is made with its use in the astronomical or cosmological field, it will be perceived that its meaning is not the same in both instances, but that an unuttered and mental redefining of the term has been made.

That such a course has been carelessly pursued is recognized by many outstanding thinkers. The hypothesis lacking in even one piece of indisputable evidence for its verification in its own field, biology, cannot possibly be intelligently assumed to be the sesame for ethics, physical science, religion, human relations, et cetera. As Frederick Soddy, Professor of Physical Chemistry in Oxford University and Nobel Laureate in Chemistry in 1921, says in his essay in the symposium, Evolution in the Light of Modern Knowledge, page 401, "the world of physics and chemistry is fundamentally the non-living, or inanimate, external world, and the student of it must always be on his guard against anthropomorphic notions and the too literal acceptance of mere analogies or supposed analogies that invade it from the world of life. The doctrine of evolution has been derived from our knowledge (?) of living organisms and as such can apply strictly only to the world of life."

INTERPRETING TOO MUCH

Dr. William McDougall (while Professor of Psychology in Harvard University) in speaking of neo-Darwinian evolution by selection as attempting to interpret too much, said: "It finds itself at the conclusion of its attempt with mind upon its hands as an enormous remainder or surd which cannot be intelligibly brought into the scheme and yet which cannot be ignored, save at the cost of absurdity of the whole scheme."—Evolution in the Light of Modern Knowledge, page 352.

After these many years the compared phenomena of evolution's analogies have not led to a vindicated common cause; hence this indicates that most of its analogies have been false ones.

Since a true analogy must respond to observation and experiment (let it be remembered that the latter of these is the more scientific and dependable critique) and since the analogies of the evolution hypothesis have only slightly responded to observation and not at all to experiment, it seems to follow that most of evolution's analogies are false.

That the evolutionary hypothesis was suggested by some facts is not questioned.

The evolutionary hypothesis may have been in harmony (?) with known laws, truths, and facts when first set forth by Darwin and his contemporaries, but it quickly became obvious that it violated new truths discovered after its postulation; for example, Mendel's laws and geological facts.

In these three respects the evolution hypothesis has utterly and ignominiously failed, as we have pointed out already. Crucial and exacting criteria have demonstrated its falsity.

We feel that it will now be agreed that the backbone of modern philosophy has been broken; and more than this, that it never really was a "backbone" at all, but just the evolutionists' "wishbone." The evolutionary hypothesis has been divested of its halo by those of its advocates recognized as leading experimenters, who are so devoted in their search for truth that they will not pervert facts even for a pet theory. The highest type of scientific mind operates with just such fidelity to, and integrity for, truth. It is willing to sacrifice long-held opinions and favorite ideas to the onward march of experimental science and for the advancement of true knowledge. Minds of this caliber have as a motto, "Truth at any price."

Modern philosophy's failure is due to its inherent falsity. It is no wonder, then, that modern philosophy is incapable of coping with such problems of everyday concern as war, peace, economics, politics, trade, tariffs, boundaries, and unbalanced industry, and with such hourly perplexities as suicide, insanity, murder, theft, divorce, death, and starvation. Helpless to give help, it fails most miserably to give even a ray of substantial hope for these dark hours. And when a philosophy fails to meet the needs of a sorely troubled world, and of nations, communities, and individuals, and fails to ever so slightly solace the inner soul-agony of millions of our fellow men, then it is most certainly a forlorn philosophy—a barren hope. The world has looked for fruit, but has found only thistles. Modern philosophy is but a ship of despair grounding on the rocks of modern truth, being pounded to pieces by the waves of destiny and time. We must look beyond, to God and to the revelation He has given men, to find consolation and truth.

GENESIS TEN

By Henry Fuehrer

THE biblical account of the history of mankind takes cognizance of three chief eras in man's history: 1. The creation of man. 2. The Cain era. 3. The Noah era.

The Deluge was brought about for the purpose of eradication of the brood of Cain. Seth's offspring alone was to be preserved, and that happened by the preservation of the Noah family. That family was the nucleus of the human family down through the generations.

The history of that human family is epitomized in the 10th chapter of Genesis. There the revealed Word of Truth derives all of the human inhabitants of the earth from the three sons of Noah: Shem, Ham, and Japheth.

The Bible gives us no reason for the names of Shem and Ham. But these are two Hebrew names, Shem meaning "name," implying fame, celebrity, reputation, or illustriousness; while Ham means "heat," "fervor," or "zeal." Japheth, in Hebrew, means "the expanded one," or the one to whom an opening was made. The Hebrew derivation of that name is explained in Genesis 9:27, first clause of the Hebrew text.

The genealogy of mankind begins with the progeny of Japheth. The progeny of Ham occupies a middle place between that of Japheth and Shem. The genealogy of Shem is placed last, because the histories of Japheth and Ham are considered merely secondary to the genealogy of Shem, who was the progenitor of Abraham, who, through the line of Isaac and Jacob, was to be the patriarch of the Son of God, Jesus the Messiah.

Japheth had seven sons: Gomer, Magog, Madai, Javan, Meshech, Tubal, and Tiras. To the progeny of Gomer, the following modern nations are considered to belong: the French, the German, the Swiss, the Spanish, the Italian, the Portuguese, the Armenian, the Roumanian, and Austrian nations. Gomer had three sons: Ashkenaz, Riphath, and Togarmah. From the progeny of Ashkenaz and Riphath, all those modern nations are proven to be derived, those who are known to be the descendants of the Cimmerians, mentioned in the history of Herodotus, an ancient Greek historian, a contemporary of Xerxes, the Ahasuerus of the book of Esther.

In the last part of the first century B. C., Julius Caesar conquered the greatest branch of that ancient nation, known as Gauls. We know them today as the Celtic nations. The French, Belgians, Dutch, and the Germans speaking Swiss are, to a large extent, of Celtic origin. Many millions of Germans in Germany are, to some extent, of Celtic origin. The ancient Britons were almost all Celts. The English of today are a mixture of the Angles, Saxons, Jutes, Scandinavians, French, Romans, and Britons, so they have quite a percentage of Celtic blood. The Scotch are derived from the ancient Picts, Scots, and other Celtic tribes. The Irish, the Welch, and the Manx are about 75 per cent Celtic.

The root of the name Gomer is preserved in the Greek name for Cimmerians: Kimmerioi. The k, m, and r remind us of the g, m, and r in Gomer, only that the g was changed into k. Many Swiss to this day call themselves "Cimbro," and the Welch call themselves, in their own language, "Cymric." These are modern enunciations of the word "Cimmerians" or epigon of Gomer.

The Doctrine of Conditional Immortality

THE HEBREW word for "soul" is nephesh, one definition of which is "anything that breathes." It is translated into more than forty English words in our Authorized Version. Among them are: any, appetite, beast, body, breath, creature, dead, deadly, desire, discontented, greedy, he, heart, hearty, hath life, jeopardy of life, life, lust, man, and others. These may be summed up under three heads, viz., a living creature, the life of the creature, and the attribute of that creature, as thought, feeling, and sensation.

The expression "living soul," which is found in Genesis 2:7, is found four times in the Hebrew Scriptures, and applied to the beasts before it is once applied to man. This fact does not appear in our version. Mr. Constable, late Prebendary of Cork, Ireland, a Conditionalist writer, says that our translators, holding as they did in the majority of cases the natural immortality of the soul, felt that it would be somewhat damaging to their soul, being the exclusive possession of man, if they translated nephesh "soul" in these cases where it evidently applied to the animal creation, so they translated it "creature," "life." Mr. Constable further remarks concerning the conduct of the translators in this case: "They thought it dangerous to give that uniformity in a translation that Moses did not think dangerous to give in the original." The corresponding Greek word for "soul" is psyche, which is translated in six or seven ways, such as heart, mind, life, soul.

The question of immortality is sometimes stated in terms of soul and spirit interchangeably, that is, where "spirit" is connected with the human being it is concluded to be immortal, and "soul" also when thus connected. "Soul" and "spirit" are, in this use of them, assumed to be one and the same thing. But "soul" and "spirit" are translated from different words, both in Hebrew and Greek—ruach being the Hebrew, and pneuma the Greek, for "spirit." Instead of "soul" and "spirit" being one and the same, we find both declared to be human possessions. Paul speaks of the whole body, soul, and spirit being preserved to the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. He speaks again of the dividing asunder of soul and spirit.

We find that man is a tripartite instead of a dual creature. We cannot in this case regard "soul" and "spirit" as synonyms, else the Apostle is guilty of tautology. Are we to regard soul and spirit as separate entities, both of which are immortal? If so, then when we predicate immortality of the soul, we cannot declare it of the spirit, else we shall have to hold to two immortal entities in the same person. Should we, on the other hand, speak of the spirit as immortal, then we cannot say the same of the soul, else we are again up to the necessity of holding to two immortal entities in the same person. In fact, when we make the question of personal immortality center around the word "soul," we are involved in an endless swirl of absurdities, and a quagmire of mere philosophical deductions which are groundless as foundation truths.

Our philosophical measuring rods are too short to fathom this great question. We need the telescope of faith to discern the star of hope amid the darkness of the spiritual firmament. It is not a question of the immortality of the soul; it is not a question of the immortality of the spirit; it is not a question of the immortality of the body; it is the question of the immortality of man.

The Bible declarations concerning future life cluster around the resurrection. Much teaching concerning the life to come that comes from Christian pulpits adopts the language of Plato rather than Paul. That Apostle argues conclusively in 1 Corinthians 15 that future life depends upon the resurrection, and declares that if there be no resurrection, then may we say of the pious dead the same that the Bible elsewhere declares of the wicked in their final condition, that is, they have perished.

Of the relative mention of the resurrection in apostolic and modern times, Dr. Adam Clark observes: "One remark I cannot help making; the doctrine of the resurrection seems to have been thought of much more consequence among the primitive Christians than it is now. How is this? The apostles were continually insisting upon it, and exciting the followers of God to diligence, obedience, and cheerfulness through it, and their successors seldom mention it. So apostles preached, so primitive Christians believed, so we preach, and so our hearers believe. There is not a doctrine in the gospel upon which more stress is laid, and there is not a doctrine in the present system which is treated with more neglect."

Possibly some light may be shed upon the cause of this neglect by a quotation from J. H. Pettingell: "Not a word or hint of the natural immortality of men, which occupies so prominent a place in the writings of the Post-Nicene Fathers, can be found in any of the earlier Fathers' writings. They always and uniformly speak of immortality and eternal life as the gift of God to the redeemed, and the peculiar portion of believers, and of the wicked as doomed to everlasting destruction. It is not till after Platonism has been engrafted upon the teachings of Christ and His apostles, that we find any other doctrine."

The true and logical results of such an amalgamation may be readily seen from the following argument used by William Tyndale, the reformer, in his controversy with Thomas More, the papal legate: "And ye papists, in putting souls in heaven, hell, and purgatory, destroy the arguments wherewith Jesus and Paul prove the resurrection. If souls be in heaven, tell me why they be not in as good case as the angels be, and then what need of the resurrection? What God doth with them, that shall we know when we come to them. The true faith putteth the resurrection which we be warned to look for every hour. The heathen philosophy denying that did put that souls did ever live."

We have introduced these quotations to show that a different emphasis has obtained in modern from apostolic times, a change for which an adequate cause must exist, and that adequate cause we deem to be the introduction of the doctrine of natural immortality, and that immortality pertains to merely one part and does not extend, when realized, to the whole man. John Milton, the poet, says: "The immortality revealed in the Scriptures is therefore, not the continued existence of the soul in an immaterial condition immediately after death, but a miraculous revival of the whole man, soul and body together, at the resurrection after an intermediate sleep."

The terms used by Platonic philosophy to denote the soul's tenure of life are the same as are employed, only in the opposite way. Edward White says of the terms used in Plato's Phaedo: "They are precisely the terms generally used in the New Testament to denote the punishment of the wicked, with this difference, that Plato says the soul will not suffer thanatos apolesa oethros phtora, that it is not destined apolesthia kataphtheiresthai apothneskein, while New Testament writers declare that the wicked shall suffer what is denoted in these terms." In Plato's dialogue these words stand for extinction of life, and for that idea only, and in the strangest possible contrast to the idea of a perpetuation of being. "Our argument," Mr. White continues, "is that in the New Testament they signify the same doom, the final and absolute extinction of life in the case of the wicked."—A. H. Kearney in The Messiah's Advocate.

THE ROYAL WAY OF THE CROSS

"We may spread our couch with roses
And sleep through the summer day;
But the soul that in sloth reposes
Is not in the narrow way.
If we follow the chart that's giv'n
We need not be at a loss;
For the only way to the kingdom
Is the royal way of the cross.
To the soul that's reared in splendor,
The cross is a heavy load;
And feet that are soft and tender
Will shrink from the thorny road.
The chains of the soul must be riv'n,
And wealth must become as dross;
For the only way to the kingdom
Is the royal way of the cross.
We say we will walk tomorrow
The path we refuse today,
But still in our lukewarm sorrow
We shrink from the narrow way.
What cared the chosen eleven
How fortunes of life might toss,
As they followed on to the kingdom
By the royal way of the cross.
There are crowns for the faithful few
Who toil through the stormy day.
There are ills for the idle crew
Who reject the narrow way.
To them a day will surely come
When they'll know and feel their loss,
As the few press into the kingdom,
By the royal way of the cross."

THE CLEANSING WORD AND HUMAN NEED

of His presence, until we see Him as He is? In one of the towns of the Continent there is a bridge with a number of statues of Christ in different phases of His earthly manifestation. The schoolboy pauses before the image of the young Child; the artisan turns to look on the village Carpenter; the invalid, creeping along the bridge, rests awhile beneath the outstretched hand of the divine Healer; one who carries a nameless burden lingers before the representation of the Sufferer of Golgotha . . . And so, as life unfolds itself to us, new features of the character of the Redeemer come into view, new reaches of glories reinforcing our weak spirits call us to fresh endeavor after holiness. It doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is.—D. M. McIntyre in The Evangelical Christian.

ARLEN MARSH, EDITOR

Minnesota Berean Conference

The young people of the Church of God in Minnesota gathered December 7 and 8 from various points of the State, at Eden Valley. They held a two-day conference, the program consisting of Bible study, songs, devotional, and sermonettes, which proved instructive and inspirational. An exceptionally interesting feature was when each locality represented gave a surprise number. Social times consisting of games and refreshments gave a variety to the program.

Vivian Kirkpatrick of Cass Lake led in various class discussions, and other able teachers were also listed on the program. Carleton Hoskins of St. Cloud led the song services. The chorus group of St. Cloud was also active with new and old choruses.

We feel that the conference was a great success and beneficial to all, and now we are looking forward with anticipation to our next conference, to be held in St. Cloud next April.—Irene Sheldon, Reporter.

Youth in the Church

The report from Minnesota given on this page is an apt indicator of the possibilities latent in work among young people. The Minnesota State Berean Society is not old—in fact, it is the youngest of the several state organizations—but it has in a comparatively short space of time accomplished much that older societies have not been able or willing to do.

The exact position of young people in any church group must of necessity be regulated largely by local conditions and attitudes. It would be absurd to preach that the young should have leadership when they lack both ability and experience. It would be equally absurd to preach that the young should never, regardless of education, native talent, and experience, have part in church leadership. The conditions existing in each local organization or group must be allowed to determine the status of both young and old.

The Minnesota young people—for the Minnesota Bereans are almost exclusively from the youth of the church in that State—have not permitted a certain lack of experience to deter them from labor. Experience comes only from work, and leadership is developed only by practice. In Minnesota, by dint of correspondence and conferences, the young people of the Church of God have managed to create both an active Berean society and a desire for greater knowledge of the Bible. The satisfaction of the latter should, if it is not, be their end; the formation of the former, merely the means to the end.

The conference reported by Miss Sheldon was in no way connected with the usual Minnesota State Conference. It was simply an assembly for the sake of improving teaching methods, Bible study, and organizational system for the Bereans themselves. The young people were sufficiently interested in their work to travel a good many miles for a two days' conference.

Minnesota presents an odd contrast to the experience of other state Berean organizations. The Illinois State Berean Society, placed in the hands of its younger members, was a miserable failure, although its earlier years under the guiding hands of such workers as Anna Drew, Mrs. Evelyn Austin, and Leila E. Whitehead had been remarkably successful. The rocky history of the Indiana Bereans under the jurisdiction of their young people was improved only by amalgamation with the older elements among them.

Comment on the condition of Berean activity would be incomplete were mention not made of the fact that, although the societies of the Great Lakes area have degenerated, organized work among children and young people has spread to places heretofore untouched along the Eastern seaboard and the Pacific Coast. It is notable that in each of these instances the birth of Berean work has been due to the labor, not of the young people themselves in the localities affected, but of those who have been Bereans for a good many years. Minnesota, therefore, presents a sufficiently different situation to be worth watching with greater interest than usually has been granted the efforts of the young.

Pictures With Lessons

The use of pictures with Bible lessons for children has long been known to be one of the best interest-provokers available to teachers. To illustrate the places, events, and people which are being discussed fixes them firmly in the mind and relieves the tedium of abstract thought.

One of the finest groups of pictures on the life of Jesus that has yet come to our attention is that contained in the four parts of The Life of Jesus, issued by the W. A. Wilde Company at 25 cents the part. Each section of the series consists of thirteen pictures, reproductions of famous paintings, accompanied on an opposite page by a suitable Bible text. The four parts, in order, carry one through the childhood, the boyhood and early manhood, the familiar parables and miracles, and the death and ascension of the Christ. For illustrating Sunday school, Berean, and general Bible lessons they have few peers. All four parts, or any one of them, may be secured from the National Bible Institution, Oregon, Illinois.

A LIGHT TO LIGHTEN THE WORLD

WE ARE digging for treasure, you remember, girls and boys. And the treasure is not something that will rust or tarnish or grow old with time. That is the way things generally do that we work so hard for in this world.

But this treasure will last forever. It will grow more beautiful as time goes on, and it will be more valuable to us the longer we possess it. For this treasure is Jesus and all the truth we can find about Him.

Today we will dig in the second chapter of the third book in the New Testament. I'm sure all of you know the name of that book.

The one who wrote this book and by whose name it is called was a doctor. He spent much time with Jesus, all the time he could spare from his work. So, you see, he would know what he was talking about, wouldn't he? He found the treasure, we are sure.

There are three or four beautiful stories in that chapter. You have just been hearing during the Christmas season the story of the shepherds and the angel chorus. One never grows tired of that wonderful story.

The second story in that chapter is the one around which our lesson centers. It is the story of an old, old man, a young mother, and a tiny baby. Now let's begin to dig.

See who can find the name of the old, old man. It's in verse 25. Now see who can find what he was waiting for. That's harder, but it's in the same verse. Mother will have to explain that to you.

God told this old, old man that he was going to see the baby Jesus before he died. And God whispered to him to go into the temple one day. Just behind him came Mary, carrying her little son, our Savior.

Now here is the first nugget of gold we will find in our digging today. The old, old man knew the baby Jesus and His mother as soon as he saw them. And he had never seen them before, and none of the people present told him, either.

Who do you think told him that was the baby he was waiting to see? Of course, it was God! And that was the greatest day of his life, no doubt, although by then he was an old, old man.

Mary let him hold the baby Jesus in his arms, and he said some strange things about such a tiny child. Even the baby's mother and Joseph didn't know that all those things were true. They were surprised that Mary's Son was so important.

In verse 32, the old, old man calls the baby "a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel." Now, you know, we are the "Gentiles," and Jesus is a "light" to us.

We all love light and dislike darkness. We always go toward a light at night, if we are out alone. We like to have a light right with us to show us the way.

Jesus is just like that. He is the light God has sent into the world to call people out of darkness. John the Baptist's father said that very thing about Him in Luke 1.

Now the next story is about an old, old lady, and her name is easy. See if you can find it in verse 36. She came in just after Mary and Jesus. And she said about the same thing that the old, old man did.

Here is our second nugget of gold. The old, old lady knew the baby Jesus at once, also. And she thanked God for letting her see Him before she died, just as the old, old man did.

After that Joseph and Mary and the baby Jesus went home, back to Nazareth, their own city. And the words at the top of the page were written about Jesus as He grew up. A little boy playing around the carpenter shop and often standing at Mary's knee, listening to the stories she told Him about His Father, God.

Don't you wish you could have seen Him?

"Do not longer walk in darkness;
You may have the light of life;
Light of God is brightly beaming on your way;
Leave the path within the shadows,
Come from darkness to the light,
There is sunshine all along the way.

"There is hope for you in Jesus,
Since for all the world He came;
And His light will lighten up your path today;
Come to Him, accept His leading,
Gladly all His will obey,
For there's sunshine all along the way.

"Praise Him now for all His goodness
And His mercy unto you;
Praise Him for the love and light you have today;
Walk no more in paths of darkness,
But keep walking in the light;
There is sunshine all along the way."

A PROPHETIC VISION

Luke 2

GOLDEN TEXT

"Mine eyes have seen thy salvation, which thou hast prepared before the face of all people."—Luke 2:30, 31.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

Topic: Jesus, the Hope of All Nations.

Aim: To show that Jesus is the only one who can bring everlasting life, peace, and prosperity to the world.

Class Discussion: The influence of Christ on civilization. What the world needs that men have been unable to supply. What effect will the reign of Christ have on social, political, and economic conditions? What is the place of young people in world reformation?

I. A Glorious Hope in a Hopeless World. (Vv. 25, 26.) From a moral, spiritual, and economic standpoint the world at the time of Jesus' birth had reached what was perhaps the lowest point it had ever experienced. No ethical standard worthy of the name existed: religion found expression in the most sensual practices; and 90 per cent of the people had been reduced to virtual slavery and were constantly on the verge of starvation. Yet in the midst of so much degradation and misery hope burned brightly in the hearts of a few faithful Jews, like Simeon and Anna the prophetess (vv. 36-38), who still trusted in the God of Israel and looked forward confidently for the fulfillment of His promises. Such men and women realized that their only hope was in the Lord and in the coming of the Messiah and Deliverer He had promised through the prophets.

II. The Glorious Hope Realized. (Vv. 27-32.) Simeon's lifelong hope was realized and he was content to die when he had clasped the infant Jesus to his breast and looked into the face of his Redeemer and King! Nothing more was needed to make his cup of joy overflow, for he saw in that little form, not only the hope of Israel, but the hope of the entire world! In his heart he no doubt looked into the future and echoed the words of David as he gazed upon Mary's Son in his arms: "All nations shall call him blessed!"—Psa. 72:17.

A still more glorious hope sheds its light across our pathway today, for "the Lord's Christ," for whose first coming Simeon waited and prayed, is coming again to fulfill the promises made concerning Him so long ago. Then we, too, shall "see the king in his beauty: (we) shall behold the land that is (now) very far off" (Isa. 33:17), and be granted the honor of sharing the throne of the King of kings throughout His reign of a thousand years. Rev. 3:21; 20:4-6; Dan. 7:27.

III. Jesus, the Hope of the World. (Vv. 33-40.) Jesus was to be the cause of the "fall and rising again of many in Israel." "He shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness."—Mal. 3:3-6. He is also appointed to judge the entire "world in righteousness" (Acts 17:31), that all nations may rejoice in "the knowledge of the glory of the Lord" (Hab. 2:14) for evermore!

GOLDEN TEXT

"Mine eyes have seen thy salvation, which thou hast prepared before the face of all people."—Luke 2:30, 31.

People were expecting a Savior. The Holy Ghost had revealed to Simeon that he would live to see the Christ, or in other words, Christ would come during the lifetime of Simeon. When Jesus was brought into the temple by Joseph and Mary, Simeon recognized immediately that He was the Savior. Simeon realized that through this child God would bring salvation to those who believed.

God, through His prophets, had made known unto the people that a Savior would come, and in that way had prepared Him before the face of all people. We, too, are expecting the Savior. If He should come in our lifetime, will we be prepared to recognize Him and be accepted by Him? Think on these things.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Jesus, a Light. "A light to lighten the Gentiles." In these words Simeon describes the Christ and His work. Light and darkness are opposites. The two cannot exist in the same place at the same time. Jesus is a Light that lighteth every man that cometh unto Him. In Him is no darkness at all. As long as Jesus walks and lives in the works and life of an individual, that person is in the "light of life." Jesus said: "As long as I am in the world, I am the light of the world."—John 9:5. So it is with the individual. As long as Jesus dwells in that person, he is a child of light. Paul in writing to the Thessalonians said, "Ye are all the children of the light, and the children of the day." If Jesus is such an illuminating Light, why are there so many in darkness? Is the answer to be found in John 3:19? "And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil." How may we know that the light of Jesus is shed abroad in our hearts and lives? Will others know that we are in the light, even as He is in the light? "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works."—Matt. 5:14, 16; Phil. 2:15.

Mental Growth. The great Exemplar of our faith and Founder of the church surely set a good example for all His followers in His mental growth. "Jesus increased in wisdom." His development was progressive, both in wisdom and in favor with God. Stagnation results where there is no growth. The Hebrew Christians addressed in the Epistle to the Hebrews were scripturally stunted. Little progress had been made by them in growing in the knowledge and grace of Jesus Christ (2 Pet. 3:18). They needed some one to teach them the first principles of the oracles of God, when they should have been teaching others (Heb. 5: 12-14). Have you been making progress since coming to the knowledge of the truth? The path of the just is as a shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day (Prov. 4:18). The farther we press forward, the greater the light. Paul's prayer for the Philippians was that they in love might abound more and more in knowledge (Phil. 1:6, 9). His desire for the Colossians was that they might increase in the knowledge of God (Col. 1:10). Take inventory and see what your growth has been!—C. E. R.

JUNIOR CLASS

Topic: Simeon Thanks God for Jesus. Text: Luke 2:25-32. Memory Verse: "Mine eyes have seen thy salvation."—Luke 2:30.

Lesson Story. Did you ever have anyone promise to take you somewhere, or show you something, or perhaps that he was going to give you something? Oh! how we wait and wait for that promise to come true.

Today I want to tell you about a man who waited for a promise to come true. Long ago there lived in Jerusalem a man named Simeon. He lived at the time that Baby Jesus was born. He was an old, old man and this was what had been promised to him. God had promised that he would see Baby Jesus before he died.

One day Simeon came to the temple. While he was there, who should come by but Joseph and Mary with Baby Jesus.

Then what do you think Simeon did? He took Baby Jesus in his arms and thanked God that he had lived to see this darling little Baby.

Simeon said, "I am now ready to die." He knew how great a man Jesus would be when He grew to be a man. He knew that Jesus would be the one who would raise the dead, heal the sick, and save us from sin.

He said, "Mine eyes have seen thy salvation."

Mary and Joseph seemed surprised to hear that Jesus would become so great.

Memory Verse. Repeat what Simeon said about Jesus: "Mine eyes have seen thy salvation."

Notebook. Paste in your notebook a picture of Simeon holding Baby Jesus. If you cannot find one cut out a silhouette picture from paper and paste that in your book.

Fill the blanks with the following words: arms, Jerusalem, die, temple, Simeon, Mary, God, Jesus, surprised.

Long ago there lived a man named _____. He lived in _____. _____ had promised him that before he died he would see _____.

One day he went to the _____. _____ and Joseph brought Baby Jesus there. Simeon took Baby Jesus in his _____.

He said, "Now I am ready to _____. Mary and Joseph were very much _____ to hear what Simeon said about Jesus.—V. C. T.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

NORTHWESTERN CONFERENCE ANNOUNCED

The Northwestern Conference of Oregon and Washington will hold its quarterly meeting January 31 and February 1 and 2, 1936, at Felida, Wash.

All members are urgently requested to attend and to tell others about the meetings. This is a time of the year that people are not quite so busy and we expect excellent attendance.

Gladys Barber, Secretary.

BURR OAK, INDIANA

The year of 1935 is almost gone. We look back to ascertain our standing, then with past experiences we face the New Year with anticipation. We extend to our N. B. I., every minister, church, and individual a New Year filled with happiness and a closer walk with God.

Services at Kokomo Sunday the 22nd were satisfactory. Attendance at Bible school was 61. Their splendid program was well attended. The church is faithfully laboring, doing considerable relief work, working with other city agencies. Each day a supply of bakery goods is distributed from the home of Bro. and Sr. Parker. This contact is a good one, and they need our prayers for strength to carry on.

Our home church pageant was given Christmas Eve, beautifully presented and with attendance excellent. Sr. Hatten and Sr. Zechiel as well as those taking part are to be commended for their hard task of rehearsals. Sunday previous the Bible school attendance was 66.

Thanks to all for their greetings in cards, gifts of food, the splendid radio, etc. We pray that all may find a greater joy in service to the one born in the city of David. May we be faithful to Him, "Our Hope of Salvation."

Word has been received that Sr. Alice Maxey of Grovertown, Ind., is again stricken with paralysis. We call upon you for prayer; and you who know her especially, drop her a word of cheer.

A. E. Hoskins, Pastor.

NIAGARA FALLS AND FONTHILL

A very pleasant time was had with the Niagara Falls, N. Y., and Fonthill, Ont., congregations a short time ago. The pleasure was marred, however, by the necessity that called me there—the funeral of Bro. Emmett Seburn—and this was made necessary by the illness of Bro. Randall.

I also spoke at Niagara Falls on Sunday morning and at Fonthill in the evening. It was a great pleasure to meet with these dear brothers and sisters again after having served them for nearly six months as-supply pastor.

Rally Day was held December 8 at the local chapel with a record attendance.

Following Sunday school, Sr. Railsback spoke on "The True Gospel Compared With a Perverted Gospel."

A large birthday cake with the dates 1851-1935 was presented to Bros. Hiel Hathaway and A. N. Harlan at the basket luncheon.

"Obedience" was Sr. Railsback's subject in the afternoon, followed by the Communion service.

"Led by the Spirit" proved a very interesting subject for the evening service.

We were very glad to have with us for the first time in several months Bro. A. N. Harlan, who has been confined to his home; also Mr. and Mrs. Raphael Skeels of Monmouth.

May God bless the work and we will give Him the glory and honor.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

As these notes are written the dramatic Christmas cantata "Goodwill to Men" is ready to be presented. It represents one of the finest pieces of work from a musical standpoint that our church has ever attempted. Much credit is due Miss Evelyn Barr, who is general chairman and director of music, and also to Mrs. Clyde Thomas, who has so faithfully worked with the dramatic group.

The church group is happy to have Robert Barr home from Olivet College for a three weeks' vacation. He is accompanying the choir for the Christmas music.

Our ladies' class is taking charge of "White Gifts" on a large scale. Many are bringing packages wrapped in white. No name is attached, but each package is marked as to contents, and they are placed accordingly.

A beautiful Christmas spirit is felt, which brings joy to all hearts.

CLIFFORD J. FLETCHER

Clifford J. Fletcher was born at Blair, Neb., May 9, 1880, and died December 16, 1935.

He was united in marriage to Minnie Patton of Holbrook, Neb., June 7, 1905. To this union were born three daughters, Mrs. T. P. Lee, Mrs. J. M. Hawkins, Miss Mildred Fletcher, all of Omaha. They and two sisters, Mrs. William Gould and Mrs. William Watson, both of Long Beach, Calif.; two brothers, Omar Fletcher in Oregon and E. Fletcher of Homer, Neb.; and five grandchildren are left to mourn his loss. Bro. Fletcher's friends were all that knew him.

He united with the Church of God and was baptized by the writer August 24, 1913, and it can be truthfully said that but few have exemplified the life of Him whom he served better than he.

Bro. Fletcher was very modest in his ways, not a man of words but of deeds. He left the greatest heritage anyone can leave to his posterity, an untarnished name. No one ever spoke ill of him, but how often have we heard it said when his name was mentioned, "That is one good man."

The funeral took place from the Crosby Mortuary, which was filled to almost capacity, which with the floral offerings gave silent testimony to the esteem in which he was held. We laid him to rest in the Hillcrest Cemetery to await the call of Him he served so well.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

On January 7, Bro. S. G. Elton, Box 101, Ventura, Calif., will reach the eightieth milestone in the long journey of his life. For the past 63 years Bro. Elton has been an active defender of the gospel of the kingdom of God. The Herald extends its hearty congratulations to him, and prays that he may remain to welcome the Lord's glorious return. Bro. and Sr. Elton are living at Pierpont Bay, overlooking the Pacific, at this writing. An article drawn from the treasure house of his years of Bible study will appear shortly in our columns.

Among the many beautiful greeting cards that have reached us this season, one of the most interesting ones bears a reproduction of a pen-and-ink sketch of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, located at Natchitoches, La. This building is perhaps the oldest religious edifice in the Mississippi Valley. The original drawing was made at the request of the American Association of University Women by a daughter of our beloved aged brother, J. G. Haupt, and is a most artistic production.

"Will 1936 be the eventful year?" asks an able student in the West. Many others are now asking that same question. An even more important query which we all should ask ourselves is this: "If 1936 should be the year that is to bring our blessed Lord back to the earth, are we ready for His coming?"

Remember to file away your green-covered Truth Seekers' Sunday School Quarterly for future reference. The new one carries a blue cover that you may distinguish it more readily from the old.

The genealogical compilation contained in "Genesis Ten," written by Henry Fuehrer, is from the pen of a converted Jew, a former rabbi, who has passed through Catholicism to Protestantism (Baptist), on to the conducting of a class in Greek and Hebrew for a movement known as the Crusaders, and finally, thanks to Elder John F. Green, to membership in the Kansas City, Mo., Church of God.

AN INTERESTING SUGGESTION

The suggestion made in the following letter is being taken under consideration by the editor. Bro. Lindsay's communication was written from Tempe, Ariz., Dec. 24.

"Sr. Olmstead's questions (see these columns of December 17, 1935) are timely. . . . I think a question and answer column in The Herald might prove helpful. . . . I also have a question along the same line as that of Sr. Olmstead. Peter not only lied when he was accused of being of Jesus' company, but when pressed, he swore to his lie. He became the well-known apostle of our Lord afterward. Later on it was he who pronounced the doom of Ananias and Sapphira for apparently no greater sin than he had previously committed. They stated a falsehood that may be found in business circles daily. Why?"

"S. J. Lindsay."

We again invite our contributors to send us brief explanations of these problems. Later, if arrangements can be made, a question box may be made a regular feature of The Herald.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

Many comments of appreciation have been heard throughout the community concerning the Christmas program which was given to a large audience in the Godwin school building Dec. 22.

Installation of officers to carry the work during 1936 will take place at the morning service January 5.

An old-fashioned prayer and social service is being held on New Year's Eve, the group remaining to see the old year out.

Bro. M. W. Lyon of Cleveland spent the Christmas week with the pastor's family. All motored to Chicago to spend Christmas Day with the Duvals and Marjorie Siple, thus enjoying a large family group.

A bright blue star shining from atop the steeple of our church building this past week has aroused much interest.

Superintendent Stevens of our Sunday school is rearranging some of the classes for 1936. We anticipate some valuable results.

Miss Ethel is one of the young women members of the South Bend church and the groom, although not a member, is an interested attendant of the young people's Berean class.

The well-wishes of the pastor and church attend them as they begin life's travel together.

May they succeed in all good things, and let love be the watchword of their home.

The Coming Crisis

By James R. Kaye, Ph.D., LL.D.

The state of the world as a whole in which we are now living stands alone in human history. Every thoughtful man is asking, "What does it mean? To what is it all pointing?" These questions are answered in the most intelligent manner by The Coming Crisis.

The scholarship of this book is sufficiently assured by the fact that its author is the compiler of the New Analytical Bible and other biblical works.

THE END OF THE AGE

Prophecies relating to the coming of Christ and its bearing on present world conditions are considered from a strictly scriptural viewpoint. The book is probably the sanest, soundest, most exhaustive treatment of this subject now in print. It is invaluable to anyone interested in the future of humanity and the return of the Messiah.

“THE ROYAL GAME OF BLUFF”

of France and Italy. In the meantime the Ethiopian crisis was growing apace (it first appeared in the newspapers in November, 1934). Having completed her conquest of Manchuria, and portions of Inner Mongolia in 1933, Japan took time to reorganize her forces and wait for the next opportunity to strike. The Ethiopian crisis has given her her opportunity to start her “autonomy movement” in northern China. Italy and Great Britain have been playing at the “royal game of bluff” without any question, with France playing the intermediary role. But what else is taking place?

Britain has found herself in a particularly difficult situation. Diplomatically she is having her face saved by Canada and the United States. Suddenly without warning the Prime Minister of Canada repudiated the initiative of her representative at the League of Nations by refusing to approve the oil embargo sanctions against Italy. Suddenly in the wake of that statement comes the statement of Ickes that he was merely stating a principle when he said that American oil companies were not to sell oil to Italy. The Standard Oil Company of New Jersey we read in the same paper has agreed to furnish petroleum products to Italy through its subsidiary in that country in return for a thirty-year monopoly of the Italian oil market! Surely the hand of high finance is behind the munitions of war. Great Britain suddenly finds that she can negotiate with Italy. Mussolini has won an undoubted diplomatic victory. Strange to say Haile Selassie suddenly finds that he would also like to have peace and seeks the Italian ear through the Coptic Church. Does Great Britain fear the menace of Japan to such an extent that she is willing to come to terms with Italy? Does Great Britain find that Italy is such a menace to her interests in Egypt, Palestine, and Mesopotamia that she must yield so as to be able to deal with Japan? In the meantime the power of Hitler is enhanced to such a point that he can ask for the return of Germany's former possessions in Africa, and can meddle in the affairs of the Balkan countries. All these movements are punctuated by revolution and counter-revolution in Greece, and by a running controversy over Memel between Germany and Lithuania. Is 1935 a preliminary to another 1914? Surely the nations are playing at the “royal game of bluff,” but the constant tension is increased by the wonder of the world at large as to when both sides are going to refuse to be bluffed as in 1914.

The Bible student can be sure of some few things: the power of the British Empire is to be weakened to such an extent that her enemies will take Jerusalem (Zech. 14:2); the power of Japan will increase and be united with that of most of Asia and parts of Europe in its effort to reach the oil fields and precious mineral deposits of Central and Western Asia (Rev. 16:12); and the oil pipes leading across northern Palestine plus the mineral deposits of the Dead Sea are going to draw the nations of the world to covet that land in northern Palestine which has been developed by the Jews in their return (Zech. 14:1-3; Joel 3:1-16; Rev. 16:12-16; Matt. 25:31-46; Ezek. 38).

“The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death.”—1 Cor. 15:26. May you and I never entertain such an awful thought of God, that it is He who takes our loved ones from us! That it is our heavenly Father that wrenches our heart-strings with sorrow!

The Apostle of Hope seeks to forever disabuse our minds of such a conclusion: that is, that God is the ravager of our homes, when he declares that “by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned” (Rom. 5:12).

Man, and not God, is the cause of death. Sin, and not love, brought death into the world. Let us never accuse our loving and merciful Father in heaven of so base an action. God finds no satisfaction in witnessing the death of His people, declaring in unmistakable terms that “I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord God: wherefore turn yourselves, and live ye” (Ezek. 18:32).

The reason why God finds no pleasure in the death of anyone is because death is at once the wages (Rom. 6:23) and the symbol of sin. And sin in all its forms is wholly and always repugnant to God. God has never taken even a righteous man, “a man after (his) own heart” (Acts 13:22), to heaven (Acts 2:29, 34), for “no man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven” (John 3:13). Then we surely cannot believe that sin, the cause of all death, has been a messenger of the Lord to carry anyone to glory!

How much more in keeping with the loving nature of the heavenly Father would be this tender farewell inscribed upon the tombstone of a darling little one who sleeps in death:

“Sleep on, dear child, and take thy rest,
Safe sheltered on the Shepherd's breast.
Until He comes, as morning light,
We softly say, ‘Beloved, good night.’”

To you and to me who watch and wait and pray for the dear Lord's return to give everlasting life to those who sleep in Him, how much more fitting would be these simple words, placed upon the stone above our silent forms, “At Rest!” Such inscription to be followed perhaps by the words of Job: “I know that my Redeemer liveth” (Job 19:23-27), and the blessed assurance that some day we shall see Him as He is. Or perhaps the words of Paul: “I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day.”—2 Tim. 1:12.

NUMBER 15

IN CHRIST

By M. W. Perrine

THE APOSTLE PAUL has frequently made use of this expression in his Epistles. What does he mean by "being in Christ"? He tells us in the Hebrew letter (Heb. 11:6) that without faith it is impossible to please God, "for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."

That being true, then the first thing that would be necessary would be to believe in Him, have faith in Him. Paul's mission in the world was to preach the gospel, to save all them that believed it. For he said, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek."

To believe in Christ means to have implicit faith that He is the promised seed of the woman that was to crush the serpent's head (Gen. 3:15) and that He was the "Lamb of God" that was to take away the sin of the world (John 1:29). This was John the Baptist's testimony, and Peter testified (Matt. 16:16), "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

This identifies Him as God's only begotten Son, whom God sent into the world because of His great love for the world, "that whosoever believeth in him might not perish, but have everlasting life."

Paul says (2 Cor. 5:17), "Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new." Then he adds this testimony (Rom. 8:1): "There is therefore now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death."

If to be in Christ makes of a man a new creature, frees him from condemnation and from the law of sin and death, it performs a wonderful work toward fitting and preparing him for his part in his service as a king or priest in the glorious work of the blessing of all the families of the earth as he is associated with God and Christ in that delightful task, as well as performing his part in the destruction of sin and "him that hath the power of death, that is, the devil"; for those that are the called out ones are to be fitted and prepared to be kings and priests unto God and Christ and to have the glorious honor of reigning with Christ on the earth.

If being in Christ brings such wonderful benefits in the way of preparation, it becomes very important to find the steps to be taken to bring us into Christ.

Paul says (Gal. 3:26-29), "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."

Then Peter said to the Jews on the day of Pentecost, after convicting them of murdering their Messiah (Acts 2:38), "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." So we see that it was necessary that they repent before being baptized into Christ and justified.

By being baptized into Jesus Christ we take upon us that precious name: in Him we are safe, even as Noah was safe when he entered into the ark and God shut him in; and Peter says (1 Peter 3:21), "The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience toward God,) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ."

Then the Apostle Paul suggests (Phil. 2:1-11), "If there be therefore any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any bowels and mercies, fulfil ye my joy, that ye be likeminded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind. Let nothing be done through strife or vainglory; but in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves. Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others. Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: who being (Please turn to Page Ten)

Jews' Return to Palestine Shows 50 Per Cent Increase

"Ye shall be gathered one by one, O ye children of Israel."—Isaiah 27:12.

JERUSALEM, Jan. 1.—According to statistics made available tonight, Jewish immigration into Palestine in 1935 exceeded that of any past year in the history of the country. The total number entering during the past twelve months was 61,541, or an increase of nearly 50 per cent over that of 1934, which showed a peak figure up to that time of 42,359 Jewish immigrants. In 1935 4,525 entrants were listed as of the "capitalist" class as compared with 3,564 admitted in 1934 under the same category.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 4.—The monuments and pyramids of Egypt have aroused the interest of scholars for thousands of years. It is now being learned that similar structures found buried in the jungles of the New World present features equally fascinating as those suggested by the ancient works of the opposite hemisphere. For instance, Karl Ruppert, of the Carnegie Institution in Washington, has just published his report of the restoration of the Caracol, the only structure of its kind so far discovered in the Yucatan jungles, according to The Literary Digest.

Duplicated in America?

As nearly as can be determined this strange structure was built toward the close of the twelfth century of our era, and was part of the remarkable Mayan City of Chichen Itza, which represented a high civilization that had passed away long before the Spaniards subdued Central and South America. The Spaniards called the structure the Caracol, from escalera de caracol, meaning "winding staircase."

One important object of the Carnegie Institution in devoting ten years to the restoration and study of the building has been to discover what the Mayas used it for. Its shape, which was round and tower-like, suggested that it might have been used as an observatory, as the Mayas were experienced astronomers.

Among other evidences that such was the purpose for which it was erected is the fact that at the tower's top was a small chamber, through which ran a stone-lined passage looking due west to the horizon line. "The Carnegie scientists, observing carefully in successive years, found that the diagonal from the inner right jamb to the outer left jamb is the line on which the sun sets on March 21 and September 23, the dates of the spring and autumn equinoxes. Another diagonal, from the inner left to the outer right jamb, is within five degrees of the line on which the sun sets on June 22, the date of the summer solstice, or the time when the sun reaches its most northerly position each year."

"The erection of the jambs in such a position as to secure these observations could hardly have been by chance," concludes Mr. Rupert in his report. "More than likely," he continued, "it was planned and carefully thought out as the result of long observation of solar phenomena."

Mother Love a "Secretion of Prolactin"

He "bringeth his mother to shame."—Proverbs 29:15.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Jan. 1.—Speaking before the section of zoology of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, Dr. Oscar Riddle, of the Carnegie Institution of Washington and vice president of the Association, called attention to the "discovery that the fundamental mother instinct in animals is created by a secretion of prolactin, a hormone from the anterior pituitary gland." Animals may be fully equipped to carry on life's processes, he is reported to have said, but a new element of consciousness not previously evident is created by this substance.

The eminent scientist was almost vehement in his attitude toward religion, asserting that "the present restrictive influence of organized religion on the teaching of the best in biology is intolerable. The tongues of the traditionalists are heard not merely from the pulpits, but they echo also within our schools—the only possible home of science—and there they curb or tie the tongues of biologic truth."

It is a little encouraging to the believer in the integrity of the Bible to be told by so able an exponent of scientific theories that confidence in the truth of the Scriptures has not altogether perished from the earth.

Christ and the Antichrist

SCRIPTURES have much to say of the coming again of Christ, and yet people do not know much about it because it is not taught as it should be. The Scripture has a good deal to say, also, about the coming of another one called the Antichrist, and most Christians know nothing at all about that. It is unfortunate that we do not have the Scriptures expounded to us as they should be so that we could be posted and not be taken unawares by the things that are going on on the earth.

Let us start with the 1st Psalm, which speaks of the Blessed man and the Ungodly man: It is written as though it speaks of blessed ones and ungodly ones in general, but really it points to a particular blessed man and a particular ungodly man, Christ and Antichrist. "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful." Blessed is the man who walks not in the way of the ungodly—that man is Christ.

"The ungodly are not so," so here we have two men, the Blessed man and the Ungodly man. Many blessed people are following the Blessed man and there are many ungodly people following the Ungodly man. The book of Psalms has much to say about these two men.

There are about thirteen places in the Psalms where the ungodly is mentioned in the singular number, referring to a coming individual. Turn now to Isaiah the 11th chapter, and it tells of the coming King and His kingdom. The first part tells of the coming of the King who is to reign over the earth, and the latter part speaks of the kingdom and its condition. The 4th verse says: "And he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked." Not wicked people, but a wicked individual. Before Christ can set up His kingdom over the earth, He has to smite the lawless one who will be living on the earth when He comes. The King shall come in person and the first thing He does shall be to smite with the breath of His lips the lawless one. Christ may be reigning spiritually in the hearts of a few people now but the real kingdom will not come until the King comes in person.

Now turn to chapter 7 of Daniel and in this chapter the Prophet Daniel sees a vision of certain wild beasts, and these beasts represent certain world powers, nations, empires that rule on earth. One is like a lion, another a bear, the third like a leopard, and the fourth like a terrible nondescript beast with ten horns, and then we notice in the story that while the Prophet was looking at the ten horns, there came up among them another little horn and took possession, first of the three and later of all. We read in the 8th verse: "I considered the horns, and, behold, there came up among them another little horn, before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots: and, behold, in this horn were eyes like the eyes of man, and a mouth speaking great things." A man that is coming down at the end of this age, for this little horn does not appear until the time of the end of the Gentiles' rule, and we are living in this period now, rather near to the end of it. The little horn represents an individual with a mouth speaking great things, having eyes like the eyes of a man. This little horn is the same as the lawless one of Isaiah and the ungodly man of the Psalms.

In the 8th chapter of Daniel we have some domestic creatures in view. The Prophet saw a ram, and then he saw a goat, and the goat dashed at the ram and smashed it all to pieces. The angel says that the ram represents the Medo-Persian Empire, and the goat represents Grecia, and "the ram had a horn between his eyes and the horn was broken off." That horn was the first King of Grecia, Alexander the Great, and he was cut off in his youth, thirty years of age, and four of his generals divided the empire. In the place of the broken horn four other horns came up and represented the four generals who took the empire at Alexander's death. Then another little horn came out of one of these four and, "in the latter time of their kingdom, when the transgressors are come to the full, a king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences shall stand up, and his power shall be mighty, but not by his own power; and he shall destroy wonderfully, and shall prosper and practice and shall destroy the mighty and the holy people." He will have delegated power. His power shall be mighty, but not by his own power. He will prosper and practice and destroy the holy people, Daniel's people, who will be back in Palestine, but he shall be broken without hand. This is the same

"In That Day"

We are waiting, blessed Savior,
We are watching for the hour
When in majesty descending,
Thou shalt come in mighty power;
Then the shadows will be lifted,
And the darkness rolled away,
And our eyes behold the splendor
Of the glorious crowning day.

We are waiting, blessed Savior,
We are watching not in vain
For the cloud that bore Thee upward,
And will bring Thee back again;
Then, among Thy ransomed people,
We shall tread the shining way,
And our eyes behold the splendor
Of the glorious crowning day.

We are waiting, blessed Savior,
For a union, heart to heart,
With our dear ones o'er the river,
Where we nevermore shall part;
Then our sorrows in a moment,
Like a dream will pass away
When our eyes behold the splendor
Of the glorious crowning day.

What the Bible Can Do for Us Today

WE ARE living in a confusion of tongues; many men are offering many contradictory solutions of the world's ills. We need to hear God speak. And the Bible gives us God's voice, in His own words, with His own divine and infallible solution for the world's ills as no other book ever possessed by men.

The Bible gives us divinely revealed origins and endings, showing us, as no human wisdom could, whence came man, society, creation; what is God's goal for the human race; and what is the ultimate fate of the saved and the lost. It is a Source Book of vital information, without which mankind is hopelessly in the fog.

It shows us God. Men could never find God by their own searching for Him. The Bible brings us the comforting message that God, therefore, has not left man to a hopeless search, but Himself seeks out man for his blessing and salvation. Only in the Bible do we learn that "the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." Because "no man hath seen God at any time," therefore the Son of God "hath declared him."

The Bible shows us ourselves. It is the only dependable mirror in which we can see ourselves as God sees us. It tells us the truth about ourselves; it does not flatter, but it discloses our desperate need of that which only God can give; and then it declares God's abundant provision for all our needs.

It shows us Jesus Christ, who came that the lost world might be saved. The greatest thing the Bible can do for us—and it does it in its sixty-six books, written by different men, living centuries apart—is to reveal Christ to us. He is the central theme of the entire Book; He is the only hope of a lost race and a lost world; He is the unique incarnation of God, the Wisdom and Righteousness of God, fully revealed and freely offered to all men by the Bible.

This Book tells us how to be saved. It brings us good advice; but it brings us something better and greater than good advice: good news. The gospel of Jesus Christ is God's "good news" for the whole world, and this is the message of the Bible; strength for the weak, hope for the hopeless, courage for the discouraged, light for those in the dark, salvation for the lost, life for the dead.

II

The Bible teaches moral standards. Mental development without moral standards is dangerous. The Bible stimulates the conscience, and defines principles of right and wrong. It has regulated conduct among men, and law among nations. No other document throughout the ages has so created and constituted human justice, freedom, and character.

It informs us as to the past. No one is thoroughly educated who is not familiar with God's dealings with humanity as recorded in the Bible. From the patriarchs to the early church the record is given of man's successes or failures as he followed or evaded the precepts of divine Revelation.

It strengthens the will. One of our contemporary essayists has well said, "To educate the mind without training the will is a menace to society." The Bible unconsciously trains and stimulates the will, and thus forms character.

It stimulates devotion. Man needs his times of quietness and reflection. The instinct to devotion is a natural trait of humanity. The onrush of the world and selfishness destroy this tendency. The Bible refills and refreshes the mind, and arouses the soul. The man who can say, "Oh, how love I thy law," will grow spiritually.

It stimulates brotherly love. Peace is not an outward condition, it is an inward state. When men and nations love one another and seek the good interests of others as well as their own, war and strife will cease. The Bible stimulates such feeling and awakens unselfish cooperation. The Prince of Peace is shown in all His loveliness and strength.

III

The Bible can set our human life in its right relations to God and to His government and save us from the futility and waste of trying to live life as it cannot be rightly and richly lived.

The Bible can acquaint us with the movement and meaning of human history which shows what courses of action and what attitudes on the part of individuals and nations end in disaster and what brings security and true success.

The Bible can introduce us to the springs of power in personality and of joy and strength in life.

The Bible is the great book of duty and it reveals the right and eternal principles of action and association.

The Bible is the only book which records the life and teaching and deeds of the Supreme Personality of history, Jesus Christ.

The Bible is the great book of origins and of destiny. It alone deals authoritatively with the two supreme questions—Whence and Whither.

IV

In an age of defeatism and frustration the Bible can restore our confidence in the integrity of the universe and of the moral order by which it is governed.

In an age of machines and machine-made civilization it can restore to us belief in spiritual causation and faith in the ultimate values, truth, beauty, and goodness.

In an age of restlessness and feverish haste it can restore to us peace and serenity of spirit.

In an age of laxity and of lowered moral standards it

Autobiography

This is one of those things that made me want to kick the back out of my desk to relieve my feelings. It goes by the title My First Two Thousand Years, with an explanatory subtitle: The Autobiography of the Wandering Jew. The catalogs give it beautiful descriptions, and it has sold some 200,000 copies. Which is sure proof that the public taste is not what it used to be.

Strictly as fine writing, the book has its points. Its descriptions are superb, its characterizations better than that. But its morals are rotten to the core, and its history the worst conglomeration of errors these eyes have seen in many moons.

To read the advertising given the book, one would think it was a combination of the better portions of Ben Hur, The Ten Commandments, and The King of Kings, with a bit of Pilgrim's Progress thrown in for good measure. As a matter of fact, unless one can read simply for the sake of appreciating literature and with no tinge of offended conscience, the thing is a blot on civilization. The two authors, George Sylvester Viereck and Paul Eldridge, practically dare the censors in the concluding chapter to shut the book out of the mails.

Its gist is an erotic interpretation of the Christian era, based on the philosophy of Freud and the misapplication of the remark, "Tarry thou till I come," erroneously attributed to Jesus. The book is uselessly cynical and hopelessly unhistorical.

The Macaulay Company publishes it at $1.00, nearly 600 pages of it; and the only reason it is mentioned in these columns is to save some one the possible embarrassment of buying or borrowing it in good faith.

Cokesbury Party Book

Here is undoubtedly one of the best of the many books on recreation for churches, young people's groups, and Sunday schools. Edited by a minister of wide experience both in the pulpit and in contact with people, the 404 pages of the book offer a wide variety of suitable programs for every social occasion.

There are, in all, 600 games and stunts listed, classified as to season, and indexed as to names. There is no great amount of space devoted to the impossible type of thing: expensive scenery and costumes, unusual equipment, and so on. The compiler is Arthur M. Depew.

From the Cokesbury Press: $1.50.

Supplementary Bible

This book is as large as most abridged dictionaries, measuring a bit over 7 x 8½ inches and filling 610 pages.

The main idea behind it is to furnish religious teachers, speakers, and writers with a book of quotable poetry and prose that is strictly religious. Every piece in it was selected by a minister who had found that piece to be of unusual value to him in his work. A board of editors whose names read like a Who's Who Among American Churches compiled the volume.

As might be expected, there is a considerable quantity of poems which play strongly on the orthodox ideas of heaven and hell as the respective abodes of righteous and wicked; but no book of quotations for general use, either for secular or religious purposes, could be secured that did not have such errors. And the quality of the usable pieces atones for all the scriptural errors that may be found.

John A. Dickson Publishing Company issues the book in two styles; Style B, levant grain cloth, antique design, embossed in gold and colors, $6.50; Style C, burnished gold, Florentine design, de luxe edition, gold edges, (this style is pictured), $7.50.

A New Translation

The Gospels probably have been translated more times than any other portion of the Bible. George M. Lamsa's translation from the Aramaic is, perhaps, the best rendering of the four books that yet has appeared.

Mr. Lamsa, who is a Syrian and thoroughly familiar with the Aramaic in which he believes the Gospels originally were written, has accomplished the clarification of many of the difficult passages of the King James Version. Frequently his language is far more reasonable and certainly more authentic than that of any other version now in print. Although a Trinitarian himself, his idea of the first five verses of John 1 would effectually shatter the power of an argument using them as a basis to prove the Trinity.

A. J. Holman Company publishes the translation in a number of bindings, varying from $2.50 to $5.00 a copy.

These books (except My First Two Thousand Years) are maintained in stock by the National Bible Institution.

Immortality at Jesus' Coming

TO THE Apostle Paul the second coming of our Lord was cherished as "that blessed hope" (Titus 2:13). To this truth-instructed apostle the future was entirely blank and hopeless except through His "glorious appearing." He saw no grounds for hoping to be with Christ, or for reward for service, or for immortality, apart from the second coming of Christ. He did not believe that death would bring to him the realization of any of these promises. When the time came for him to die, he anticipated no immediate rewards of any kind. He died with his mind and hopes fixed exclusively upon Christ's appearing. He said, "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."—2 Tim. 4:6-8.

It was "at that day," the day of Christ's appearing, that the "crown of righteousness" was to be awarded to Paul. In the meantime that crown was to be "laid up" awaiting "that day." So if "that day," the day of "his appearing," never takes place, then that crown and the crowns of all others will never be worn! Crownless must ever remain the heads of all the saints, unless Jesus comes the second time! For future life, with glorified bodies, depends upon "his appearing." No wonder Paul was silent about anything that would come to him at death, for his hopes were based entirely upon the second coming!

THE PROMISE OF REWARDS

Rewards are promised to the persecuted (Matt. 5:12), and to the laborer in the Lord's vineyard (1 Tim. 5:18), as well as to all the faithful. But these rewards will never be given unless the Lord returns the second time. We shall quote two verses of Scripture to prove this. One is found in Matthew 16:27: "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works." The other verse is found in Revelation 22:12, and says, "Behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." Futile is the anticipation of any rewards which is not based on the second coming! For it is then, and not at death, that the Scriptures teach the rewards will be given. So if the second coming never takes place, there will never be any rewards, and all Christian hopes are groundless.

We now come to the greatest of all hopes—the hope of immortality. The longing for immortality—a life that is immune to death, and endless—has burned in the hearts of the human race from Adam until now. And while it is generally taught that man is inherently immortal, the Scriptures are opposed to this claim. The Bible says that apart from the second coming of Christ there is no provision for immortality. In Romans 2:7 we are told that by "patient continuance in well doing" we are to "seek for glory and honour and immortality." We could not consistently be enjoined to seek for that which we already possess. But the time is coming when "this mortal" will "put on immortality" and "then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory" (1 Cor. 15:54).

But when will the saints "put on immortality"? Is it at death? Paul informs us that this hope of immortality can come to us only through the second coming of Christ. So if the second coming never takes place, there will never be any immortality. We quote from him on this point as follows: "The trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality."—1 Cor. 15:52, 53. But if that trumpet never sounds, the dead will sleep on and on; and vain are the hopes of immortality! But our hopes are not in vain. "The trumpet shall sound," and "the dead shall be raised," at the Lord's return. Apart from this return there is no immortality!

Unless the second coming of Christ takes place, the celebration of the Lord's Supper is meaningless. "For," says the Apostle Paul, "as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do shew the Lord's death till he come."—1 Cor. 11:26. The atonement and the shedding of blood mean nothing to the human race unless Jesus comes again. All the seed sowing of the ages, the preaching of the gospel in harmony with the Great Commission, has only been wasted time and energy, and there will never be any harvest, unless the Lord comes again. We are told that "the harvest is the end of the world" (Matt. 13:39), and when the harvest is reaped "then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." But the harvester is none other than Christ Himself, and the harvest will not be reaped unless He comes again.

In Revelation 14:14-16, Christ is again pictured to us as the great harvester when He comes the second time. We read, "I looked, and behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat like unto the Son of man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle. . . . And He that sat on the cloud thrust in his sickle on the earth; and the earth was reaped." It is at this time that the wheat will be "gathered into the garner." But unless there is an appearing of the Harvester in the clouds of heaven "with power and great glory," men have sowed and hoped in vain, and there will be no harvest of souls at the end of the age!

IMPORTANCE OF THE ADVENT

If the second coming of Christ never takes place, there will be empty mansions throughout all eternity; the disciples and all others who saw Him have seen the Lord for the last time; there will never be any being with Christ; the dead sleep an eternal sleep, and will never awaken; there will be no future life; immortality is a vain hope; crowns "laid up" will never be worn; the Lord's Supper and the atonement mean nothing, for there is no hope of any future, apart from the second coming of Christ. Surely to all Christians this great event should indeed be cherished as "that blessed hope."—Allen Walker in Signs of the Times.

PROHIBITION

By John O. Conrad

"Thou shalt not kill."—Exodus 20:13.

DOES the Bible teach prohibition? Having recently been asked this question, I will let the Bible answer. As we search the Scriptures daily, I feel that it would be well to turn the spotlight of our attention upon it and see what it reveals. The question, however, is by no means new, for "King Alcohol" has long had his enemies who have contended that his rule is intolerable and that he should be banished, while his friends plead for "temperance," meaning toleration and moderation: being based on such claims as, "Jesus drank wine," and Paul advised Timothy to use "a little wine on account of thy stomach and thy frequent weaknesses" (1 Tim. 5:23, Diag.). It is not my purpose to discuss the medical value of alcohol, but only its use as a beverage.

The frequent use of "King" serves to emphasize the power which he exerts over humanity. Just how long he may have been enthroned is quite speculative. In Genesis 9:20, 21, a knowledge is evident on the part of Noah of grape culture and the making of wine before the flood. In Genesis 6:5 we read, "And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." It was for this reason that He decreed the destruction of the world, and it is not unreasonable to suppose that wine had a part in the evil deeds of men. In Matthew 24:37, 38, we read, "They were eating and drinking, . . . until the day that Noe entered into the ark." It is evident that the things which they ate and drank were attractive, diverting their interest from God. Certainly the drinking of water or milk would not have developed such an exclusive interest.

It may seem hard to harmonize such a suggestion with the statement in Genesis 7:1 when God said to Noah, "For thee have I seen righteous before me in this generation," but in this instance the word "righteous" in its root meaning indicates that he had been obedient to God in building the ark as directed. But, suppose that the making of wine was an invention by Noah, and getting drunk a new experience. Examine the reign of this new "King."

Genesis 9:20-27 is the first record of the results of intoxication. People often ask, If God desired righteousness to be restored upon the earth, why was not the flood more effective? This question is somewhat presumptuous. We read in Genesis 8:21, "For the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth." Perhaps the fact (Gen. 9:20) that "Noah began to be an husbandman, and he planted a vineyard," is an evidence that he remembered some of the imaginations which existed before the flood. He was willing to serve God outwardly, even as many today desire to serve Him, but do not sense the need of an inward service which requires that bad habits be discontinued.

The 28th chapter of Exodus is an account of Aaron and his four sons being sanctified and consecrated to the priestly office. The 10th chapter of Leviticus tells how his two oldest sons were slain of the Lord for having "offered strange fire before the Lord, which he commanded them not" (Lev. 10:1). The root meaning of the word "strange" would rather indicate that they "offered strangely fire before the Lord," being intoxicated; because of the prohibitive command of the Lord to Aaron in verses 8, 9: "And the Lord spake unto Aaron, saying, Do not drink wine nor strong drink, thou, nor thy sons with thee, when ye go into the tabernacle of the congregation, lest ye die: it shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations." Verses 10 and 11 tell why.

The conditions which separated man from the presence of God were quite the same before and after the flood, namely, eating and drinking. Eating had separated Adam and Eve from God. The things which were eatable had been the separation of Cain and Abel, and Cain from his father's family and God. Before the flood we find eating and drinking separating the people from God. After the flood drinking continued to effect a certain separation in the lives of men; in all, "death" is the final result. It is difficult to arrive at a logical conclusion of Noah's drunkenness and his curse upon Ham, but the principle of separation is being continued. Literally, Ham's curse was in being lowered from a position of respectability and honor to one of servitude and dishonor. While not as tragic in its immediate effect as the curse on Cain and Abel, it was ultimately to be even more so in a national sense.

Referring to the subtitle, "Thou shalt not kill," I classify it as a form of prohibition; and the causes which lead to killing are as important as the act of killing. We call killing "murder," but when the cause is remote and the responsibility uncertain, we do not call it "murder."

In a recent issue of the Cleveland Railway Company's weekly newspaper, All Aboard, was the opinion of a prominent doctor who was frank enough to call the death toll of automobiles, which, for the last three years, has averaged around 35,000 annually in the United States, plain "highway murder." In addition to this there are about 100,000 persons injured annually, many of them permanently. The whole having been caused, in the majority of cases, by "King Alcohol."

A recent edition of The Pathfinder quoted a report from a leading city in Wisconsin which gave 60 per cent of auto accidents in which alcohol was the cause, and 75 per cent of all other accidents from the same cause.

It has been popular for some time to warn motorists not to try to mix alcohol and gas. Mr. Morris Ackerman, editor of Fish and Game News in The Cleveland Press, feels it his duty to warn hunters, "Don't try to mix whiskey and gunpowder. It just can't be done." These are typical of expressions of intelligent opinion.

Proverbs 20:1 (R. V.) reads, "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is a brawler; and whosoever erreth thereby is not wise." In chapter 3:18 Solomon advises his son, referring to wisdom, "She is a tree of life to them that lay hold upon her: and happy is every one that retaineth her." In verses 21-24 he said, "My son, let not them (wisdom and knowledge) depart from thine eyes: keep sound wisdom and discretion: so shall they be life unto thy soul, and grace to thy neck. Then shalt thou walk in thy way safely, and thy foot shall not stumble. When thou liest down, thou shalt not be afraid: yea, thou shalt lie down, and thy sleep shall be sweet." Let us consider the picture.

When is there "sound wisdom and discretion" in the eyes of a drunken person, especially when driving a car? And the original of "grace to thy neck" implies "vomiting." Who, more than a "drunk," is unable to walk safely without his foot stumbling? Whose sleep is more fearful and lacking sweetness? Is there any reason to suppose that Ham would have been any different from his brothers if Noah had maintained "sound wisdom and discretion" in his eyes?

A recent report from Washington, D. C., printed in The Cleveland Press on October 24 states, "Seven cents of dollar spent on liquor. Total alcohol bill set at $3,500,000,000 yearly." This is about three fourths of the amount which the Government has appropriated for relief purposes.

The Cleveland Press published the picture of a dog, whose master was operating an illegal still. The dog became tipsy, the headline was, "Alkie the Rum Hound Betrays His Master Into Hands of G-Men in Raid on Still." The next day another picture showed the G-Man's daughters adopting "Alkie the Rum Hound," which he had bought from the owner. I venture there would be an improvement in public safety if our Government was more interested in adopting "Rum Hounds."

Does "King Alcohol" kill? Who is responsible for his killing? Hear the Prophet Jeremiah calling, "Why will ye die, thou and thy people?"

The Bible says, "Thou shalt not steal."—Ex. 20:15. Let us examine further the record of this bloody "King."

One usually thinks of stealing in connection with personal property. Shakespeare declared that the theft of a person's "good name" was an act of stealing. In the account of Lot's life in Genesis we feel a certain pity for him when he chose to pitch his tent toward Sodom. Being wealthy, he enjoyed a good reputation among his friends and neighbors. When he was forced to flee from Sodom, his friends, property, and wife were soon to become a sad memory. When he was forced to live in a desert country with his two daughters, they thought that a hope of honorable marriage was impossible, and dared to violate moral law, thinking that "King Alcohol" would cover a father's shame. How many such crimes the centuries hide!

Is there an adult person living today in our modern civilization (?) who does not know of some one's children whose health, happiness, education, opportunity, religion, and even life itself, have been lost through the greed of "King Alcohol"?

The Federal Bureau of Investigation report states that the 1935 crime cost the United States Government $15,000,000,000, the per capita cost of crime being $125 for the year. Just form your own estimate of the appalling cost of this vast amount which may be attributed to alcohol, and see how much the "Master Robber" is exacting from society. Our Government has deliberately encouraged the evil in order to derive revenue, and in turn spends it in a vain attempt to suppress the crime caused by drink.

Now a reference in the New Testament (1 Tim. 3:2, 3), quoting from the original Greek text in the Emphatic Diaglott: "The overseer (bishop or elder) then must be irreproachable, a husband of one wife, vigilant, sedate, orderly, hospitable, fit (apt) to teach, not a wine drinker, no striker, but gentle, not quarrelsome, not a lover of money."

The Bible teaches the principle of "prohibition"; it also teaches "exhibition" as equally as important and binding. Solomon's admonition in Proverbs 22:6 is very vital and to the point. He said, "Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it." This deserves emphasis in view of the fact that our Government has not been able to enforce national prohibition. I suggest that "prohibition" will be accomplished through individual "inhibition" by "exposition"; wherein each person wills to refrain from doing wrong by choice, rather than by being compelled by law. Theodore Roosevelt once said, "The man who obeys the law because of the law, is a dangerous man." Exposition would require a thorough and consecutive teaching from youth into maturity. Children have been taught the harmful effects of alcohol to the body; but they have not been taught the far-reaching effects upon the mind, by which the success of home, society, business, and religion is determined.

Paul's standard of living in 1 Corinthians 8:13 is excellent. He said, "Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend (stumble), I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend." If he was writing again today, no doubt he would change his text to read "alcohol" instead of "meat." What offense could equal the taking of all that people cherish, especially life? Why not spend some of the billions of "crime money" for education?

"There is more loss in gilded pelf,
Than love, in poverty, that lives;
Who steals at all, robs most himself;
Who shares, will gain more than he gives."

CHRIST AND THE ANTICHRIST

as the little horn in the 7th chapter.

In Daniel, chapter 9, we have another vision, looking on to the same time. We read of a prince in the Roman Empire who shall make a covenant with many of Daniel's people for one week. This is an old Hebrew word meaning a week of years, not days. Many Jews are now returning to Palestine; their rest is being disturbed all over the world, and many more will return. This prince will enter into a covenant with the Jews for one week, seven years, and in the middle of the week he shall break his covenant.

In chapter 11 of Daniel, looking down to the end of time again, Daniel describes a coming king beginning at verse 36, as follows:

And a king shall do according to his will; he shall speak marvelous things against the God of gods, and shall prosper until the indignation be accomplished, for that that is determined shall be done.

This king is willful and exalts himself; a king who hates God and denies God. He will plant the tabernacle of his palace between two seas, Mediterranean and Dead Sea (and the Holy Land lies between the two seas) and there in the end he shall come to his end and no one shall help him. The ungodly one of the Psalms, the lawless one of Isaiah, the little horn of Daniel 7, the other horn of Daniel 8, the Roman prince of Daniel 9, the willful king of Daniel 11, are all one. These are just Bible pictures of one great character that is to appear in the end of this age.

Turn now to the 11th chapter of Zechariah. Here the Prophet is called to impersonate two shepherds, one the Good Shepherd, Jesus Christ, who was sold for thirty pieces of silver, and the money was used for the potter's field; the other a wicked shepherd. "And the Lord said unto me, Take unto thee yet the instruments of a foolish shepherd. For, lo, I will raise up a shepherd in the land, which shall not visit those that be cut off, neither shall seek the young one, nor heal that that is broken, nor feed that that standeth still: but he shall eat the flesh of the fat, and tear their claws in pieces. Woe to the idol shepherd that leaveth the flock! the sword shall be upon his arm, and upon his right eye; his arm shall be clean dried up, and his right eye shall be utterly darkened."

This is a mysterious passage. Many think that this is another prophecy of Antichrist, and that he will have two stages of existence on this earth—live first as a man, and be killed in some place with a sword thrust in his right eye, and that he will be brought back in a supernatural way, and spend a little while at the end. Wherever you have the great truths of God, you have an imitation of the Devil. Many think that Antichrist will be born of a woman, but have no earthly father—a counterfeit of the Christ. Jesus was born of a woman but had no earthly father. Satan will bring his man on the scene born of some woman, but have no earthly father. A. C. Dixon, able man of God in the Baptist pulpit when in Boston, about the time of Mary Baker Eddy, head of the Christian Science, was there, said she made a statement to this effect: "That the time had come when women could bear children to the Holy Ghost, like Mary did." Sounds blasphemous, and yet there might be something in it. You would not cast that aside lightly as something that could not be if you knew the strange things on earth today, and stranger things are pending. When some great thing is agitating the world, people are apt to become prophets. There were hundreds of people trying to prove that the Kaiser of Germany was the Antichrist because he has one withered arm. Others say that the Pope of Rome is the one and some say Mussolini, and thus bring total confusion. I do not know about this passage, but it may be an allusion to the man that in time is coming.

Now let us read John 5:43, "I am come in my Father's name, and ye receive me not, if another shall come in his own name, him ye will receive." This He spoke in talking to the Jews that despised Him. Jesus came to His own and His own received Him not. They said, "Away with Him; we will not have Him to reign over us," but He says another shall come in his own name and him they shall receive. A great many Jews now returning to the land of promise will receive this deceiver and this Antichrist and perhaps think he is their long looked for Messiah.

Next we will read 2 Thessalonians 2, beginning at verse 1: "Now we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him."

The church is going to be gathered unto Him.

"We beseech you, . . . that ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand." It seems that a forged letter had been sent to the saints teaching them that the day of the Messiah had already set in, and in his first epistle he told them about the resurrection of their dead and the changing of those who would be alive at Christ's coming, and hence they were puzzled. "Do not be deceived," he says, "by letter as from us, that the day has already come. That day shall not come except there come the falling away first and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition, who as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God. Remember ye not, that, when I was yet with you, I told you these things?" The Apostle Paul told them about the man of sin and about the coming of Christ. The Scriptures say there shall be a falling away first. There is a definite article here in the Greek, "the falling away." There is apostasy in the professing church already here, but there will come a time when people generally will abandon all the light from God they have and turn away from God. The church is as worldly as the world and men stand in the pulpits and deny the virgin birth of Christ . . . and are paid by Christians to promulgate false doctrines.

Many do not give the simple truths to us. They give us messages that do not ring clear on the fundamentals of the faith. You have to give an account at the judgment seat of Christ for the money you give. You cannot drop it in the plate and forget about it; find out where it is going.

Long ago there came the man of God, but here we have another man, the Son of Perdition. Only one other is called the Son of Perdition, Judas Iscariot. The Lord called Judas the Son of Perdition. Some think that Judas will come up out of the pit and be incarnated again.—R. V. Miller in The Evangelical Christian.

can restore to us serious views of the meaning of life and conviction of moral accountability.

In an age in which exaggerated nationalism threatens to become a new idolatry it can restore to us belief in human brotherhood.

In an age in which belief in man has led to bankruptcy it can bring us back to what alone gives strength and purpose, direction to human effort, and hope for humanity's future: belief in God.

V

The Bible is the book of Jesus, of the tallest figure in human history, of the most dynamic personality among the myriads of men who have moved across the pages of history.

Asked to name the six men who have most powerfully influenced the history of the world, a noted historian replied: "There are not six, there are only three, indeed there is but one. His name is Jesus of Nazareth."

It is not the theology of the Bible, nor its philosophy, nor its literature, nor its history, nor its morals, that constitute its supreme value. It is its religion. It is not merely its religion; it is its Christian religion.

He has not discovered the Bible who has stopped with the text. There is something in it that was never written by man; a supernatural quality which gives to those who experience it, the life everlasting. It is this which makes it "the Word of God."

VI

The Bible can re-create the sense of historic values. The age in which we live is strangely indifferent to historic conceptions of life. It is enamored of the contemporaneous. And yet the present cannot be understood without a careful analysis of its relation to the past. The Bible is the keenest analysis of the motives and spiritual movements which have swept humanity in other days. We need it today to make us sensitive to ageless truths.

The Bible can portray the basic weaknesses of humanity. The sins and foibles of our generation bear striking similarity to those of ancient times. The story of the Garden of Eden is amazingly modern. The weaknesses to which human nature is victim are analyzed, brilliantly described, and courageously followed through in the words of the Scriptures.

The Bible can portray the glories of triumphant human character. The Bible not only records the temptations before which men fell, but the faith by which they conquered. No more thrilling story can be found in human history than the triumphs of the cross, a world revolution wrought by the sheer power of contagious goodness.

The Bible can point the pathway to the discovery of God. Our generation stands pitifully in need of a fresh experience of God. But it can never find it along the ways of humanism and egoistic self-satisfaction. The old paths are the surest and best. The road that leads through repentance, faith, and acceptance, and high endeavor is still the road that leads into the knowledge of the divine.—National Commemoration Committee Pamphlet No. 5.

in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: but made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name: that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father."

Then Peter said (Acts 4:11, 12), "This is the stone which was set at nought of you builders, which is become the head of the corner. Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved."

Psalm 72:17-19: "His name shall endure for ever: his name shall be continued as long as the sun: and men shall be blessed in him: all nations shall call him blessed. Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel, who only doeth wondrous things. And blessed be his glorious name for ever: and let the whole earth be filled with his glory; Amen, and Amen."

1 John 2:28: "And now, little children, abide in him; that, when he shall appear, we may have confidence and not be ashamed before him at his coming."

ARLEN MARSH, EDITOR

Dear Young Folks:

I have just been thinking of the misery and fear and hopelessness and loneliness that exist in all the world about us because the church is not sharing Jesus and herself with the world.

Did you know that the world needs Jesus and yourself more than it needs money, more than it needs jobs or food or clothing or good homes? The world is thirsty for a Jesus that can help them today, and is dying for lack of Him, too. We could supply all of these temporal needs and still the world would be lonely, still it would be homesick and hopeless and helpless because we had failed to give it Jesus and love and ourselves, along with our gifts. There are many who have everything else they need but friendship and brotherly love.

I know a man with a large family who has lost the fingers on one hand, so he can't do much for his little ones. He has loved his Bible for a long while, and this is all he has at present to fall back upon. Most people avoid them; the neighbors most pointedly. A church is within a block of their door, but to my knowledge no one from there has ever gone to them. The church they once attended faithfully is far off and the distance almost prohibitive in the dead of winter. So neither father nor mother nor children are cheered and comforted by church worship and fellowship. Those folks are having a famine in their home, but it is not a famine of bread. Can we comfort our children by feeding them bread or can we feed their souls upon the things they wear? Jesus put it this way: "If a child ask for bread, will a parent give him a stone?"

Jesus is called the friend of sinners, the brother of the lost. Sometimes we don't know where these most needy folks are, but we don't have to hunt very long, for they are all about us. I have always more of these hungry folks upon my heart than I can possibly do justice to single-handed. So I long to share them with others who may reach them more often than I can, or who can water and warm the seed I have already sown. We must not think that one visit is going to accomplish a great deal for the Lord and that we can then dismiss the matter from our minds. Suppose the Lord had come to us just one day and had gone away then, never to return. We would have felt just about as a lonely friend of mine did when she exclaimed, "You were so long in coming that I thought you had scratched me off your list of love." You see that is our mission in the world, young folks in Christ Jesus: to love folks just as Jesus loved us and gave Himself for us.

I imagine that one of the twelve or one of the seventy or one of the five hundred who went out as witnesses of the risen Christ found some of the lepers and some of the blind who forgot to thank the Lord for their blessings, and reminded them that they, too, were witnesses of His power and that they had a debt they never could pay. So a scattering church can confirm the seed sown by another. God scattered the church members because they would not scatter themselves all along the way. We are too firmly anchored to our own homes and altars and have forgotten that we are pilgrims and sojourners. God forbid that persecution should be necessary to pry us loose.

Our purpose is not to fill church buildings, but to fill the Lord's table at His coming, to make His foes His footstool that He can come speedily and finish the work in righteousness. We must finish building that temple for the Lord before He will come down and dwell among us. It would not do for Jesus to dwell in a roofless or half-finished house. Then, truly, would His locks be wet with the dew of heaven, as Solomon foresaw them. Jesus would say in that day, "Where is the house that ye were to build for Me, and where is the place of My rest?" His literal house is still in ruins in the midst of Jerusalem, but other houses are constantly going up for men to dwell in. Can we build a city and leave the Lord out of it? Just as the literal temple is still forsaken and unnoticed in our hurry to get other things done, so that spiritual house, made of living stones, is still but a gaunt skeleton, shaken by every passing breeze. Truly He has nowhere to lay His head, and still we cry, "Come, Lord Jesus."

So youth and time and treasures must be poured out like water if the work is ever to be finished. Who knows how quickly our little flame may kindle a big conflagration that will light and warm the whole earth, if we begin to build? The Lord has all the plans, and He has furnished us the blueprints. Only blueprints are of no use without a mind to understand them. Stones are of no use without workmen to sort and chisel and cement them into place with love and patience. Every stone is needed somewhere, as soon as it is the right size and shape and luster to match the rest. Our uncomely parts need beautifying. If every lighthouse became responsible for one dark house, the work would soon be cut short in righteousness, and the flag of victory fly from the housetop. Living stones are our wealth, not gold and silver. "Children are a heritage of the Lord."

Yours in hope,

Aunt Esther.

"Thou art my beloved Son; in thee I am well pleased."

THE SON OF GOD KNEW GOD'S WORD

THERE is one thing about this treasure for which we are digging that makes it different from digging for any other treasure, and it is this. Everyone who digs can find the treasure. And no matter how many find it and claim it, it never grows any less in value or amount.

We are going to dig in a different field today than the grown-ups. We are going to hunt for our treasure in the last story told in Luke 2. I think you have all heard that story many times, but let us see if we can discover a few nuggets of gold in it today.

Joseph and Mary and Jesus were returning from a trip. Not by auto or train or plane. They were probably walking, some of them. Others were riding donkeys or camels.

They had been to Jerusalem to keep a feast, and Jesus was by now a boy of 12. You boys know that a boy of 12 knows a good deal. He is able to take care of himself pretty well, unless something very, very unusual happens.

In the company returning from the temple there were, no doubt, many friends of our little family—Joseph, Mary, and Jesus. After Mary and Joseph had traveled a whole day they missed Jesus when it began to get dark.

They thought, of course, He was with some of their friends or relatives. But when they began to search for Him, He was nowhere to be found. The boy was lost! So they thought.

You can imagine how worried Mary was, as they started to retrace their way to Jerusalem. It took a whole day to do that, and they searched in Jerusalem a whole day. Mary must have been about frantic by that time.

Finally at evening time they found Him. And now, those of you who do not know where they found Him, dig down into verse 46, and discover. It's queer they didn't think of looking there at once. Don't you think so?

What was He doing there in that magnificent place? Talking to the doctors, you say? Doctors of the law, because they were the ones who were most interested in the temple. Asking and answering questions that even those learned men didn't understand.

What do you suppose they talked about as they sat there? Why, the Jewish law, of course, you say! And the old kingdom over which David had ruled. Where would they find out about that? In the Old Testament!

Ah! there is our first real nugget of gold. Jesus knew the Old Testament! And He must have known it very, very well to be able to surprise those old doctors so.

What did Mary say to Him when they found the lost boy at last? Dig down into verse 48, and see. She said, "Thy father," meaning Joseph, who wasn't His father really. He merely took the place of a father, something like a stepfather, you know.

Now let's dig for our second nugget of gold. You will find it in Jesus' answer to Mary in verse 49. He said He must be about His Father's "business." And if He was talking about the things we have mentioned, then His Father's business was the law and the kingdom.

We know God was His Father, and He had a kingdom once on earth. The throne was overturned because the people hadn't kept God's laws.

Now Jesus was finding out how the kingdom could be restored. And He was teaching those great men some things about it that they didn't know. There's our second nugget of gold. Our treasure is growing.

Dig into verse 50 and find out if Joseph and Mary understood these things about God's kingdom. No, they didn't! But Mary wondered about all of this from that time on.

It wasn't time yet for Jesus to go out and preach about His Father's kingdom. He could tend to His Father's "business" best by being a good boy and obeying Mary and Joseph until He was grown-up. And that's just what He did. Read verse 52, that tells you.

Here is part of a pretty poem by Nancy Byrd Turner that tells us what sort of a little boy Jesus was:

"When Jesus was a little lad in Nazareth of Galilee,
He listened to the wind's low song in every swaying tree.
Not any weary, wounded dove or small dog homeless in the rain,
Or frightened hare, or fluttering wren, could need His help in vain.

"His comrades loved Him; He was kind to younger children when they played;
And everybody trusted Him, so true and unafraid.
I daily pray that I shall be like Him of whom the Scriptures tell,
That gentle boy who loved so well, the little lad of Galilee."

JESUS PREPARES FOR HIS WORK

Luke 3:1 to 4:15

GOLDEN TEXT

"Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve."—
Luke 4:8.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

Topic: Finding God's Way for Life.

Aim: To show that "there hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man: but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way of escape, that ye may be able to bear it" (1 Cor. 10:13).

Class Discussion: Strength of character developed by meeting and overcoming temptation. Temptations young people find it most difficult to overcome. Temptations that assail adults especially. Should associations that lead to temptations be avoided?

I. The Baptism of Jesus. (Luke 3:21, 22.) Baptism has its divine and its human elements. The one who believes "the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12) and repents of his sins (Acts 2:38), is brought into contact with the cleansing power of the gospel in the waters of baptism. The cleansing power is the divine element in it.

II. "The Lust of the Flesh." (4:1-4.) John names three forms of temptation which challenge the resistance of every Christian. They are "the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life" (1 John 2:16). These, he declares, are "not of the Father, but of the world." Jesus "was in all points tempted like as we are" (Heb. 4:15). His first temptation pertained to appetite, hunger, the natural desire and demand of the flesh or body. To satisfy hunger He was tempted to employ the miracle working power God had given Him for a spiritual purpose for the gratification of His hunger. With the Word of God He conquered each temptation, and He later reproved the multitude for seeking only "for that meat that perisheth," rather than for that "which endureth unto everlasting life" (John 6:26, 27).

III. "The Pride of Life." (Vv. 5-8.) Pride might well have moved Jesus to accept authority over all the kingdoms of the earth at Satan's hands had it not been for the knowledge He possessed of God's will for Him as it was revealed in the Scriptures. Jesus knew that eventually all nations must submit themselves to His rulership (Dan. 7:13, 14, 27; Rev. 11:15). But He also knew that everything must be accomplished in God's way and at God's appointed time (Acts 1:6, 7), therefore He preferred to await the Father's pleasure in the matter.

IV. "The Lust of the Eyes." (Vv. 9-13.) What more natural than that Jesus, looking down from the pinnacle of the temple, should be moved to test God's protecting care over Him by throwing Himself from that lofty height? Had the time ever come when such an act was necessary for the advancement of God's work no doubt He would have made such a leap without fear, but to do so simply to "prove God" would be a sin.

GOLDEN TEXT

"Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve."—Luke 4:8.

These are Christ's words to the tempter. The tempter asked Christ to fall down and worship him, but no, Christ could not do such a thing as that. That would be forsaking God and yielding to the tempter. God has always been a jealous God and wants true and undivided service from those who fear Him.

True Christians worship God "in spirit and in truth." They, like Christ, do not yield to the tempter, but cling close to the Father and give Him their undivided service. We must worship God, not Satan, nor any worldly thing. The Lord God is our Father, and on Him we must depend for life and the very air that we breathe. Our worship and service are due Him. He is doing all for us. We should do what we can for Him.—L. A. R.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Temptation. The temptation of Jesus and His subsequent overcoming present the most amazing demonstration of the effective power of the Word of God in resisting temptation that we have anywhere recorded. The Word of God and strict adherence to its teachings constitute an impregnable Gibraltar against the wiles of the devil. In the first place, we should not think it strange concerning the fiery trials that come upon us (1 Pet. 4:12). Whatever the nature of the temptation, it is such as is common to man (1 Cor. 10:13). There is always danger in temptation due to the weakness of the flesh. "Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation: the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak."—Luke 22:40. Of course there is no temptation permitted to overtake us, but what there is a way of escape provided. But we must follow the directions of Him who knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation (2 Pet. 2:9).

Keeping Ahead. The second point of temptation which Jesus successfully met was in regard to worshipping the tempter. The reply was: "Get thee behind me, Satan." The Lord God must come first in our lives. Many allow family ties to come between them and God (Matt. 10:37, 38). Others allow commercial pursuits (Luke 14:16-23). Name other common influences that stand between people and true and faithful service to God. If we are careful and permit nothing to come between us and the Lord it will be our portion to be among that number who shall be presented unblameable and unproveable before the presence of His glory in the day when all of His precious jewels are assembled. Putting the Father's business first and seeking first the kingdom of God are the only way of keeping intervening matters, influences, or persons from separating us from the love of God that is within us. The first recorded saying of Jesus was, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" This is man's first business.—C. E. R.

JUNIOR CLASS

Topic: Jesus Says, "No," to the Tempter. Text: Luke 4:1-13. Memory Verse: "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve."—Luke 4:8b.

Lesson Story. In our last Sunday's lesson Jesus was just a very small child, or babe. Today we see He has grown to be a man, for He is now thirty years old. In order that we may see this lesson clearly let us go back and see what had happened just before this lesson. Jesus had come to John the Baptist and John had baptized Him in the River Jordan.

After His baptism Jesus went into the wilderness (a desert place). Here He spent forty days and during all that time He ate nothing.

The devil said to Him, "If you are the Son of God, command this stone to turn to bread." Now we know Jesus could have done it, and we also know that He was very, very hungry. But did He do as the devil said? No, He did not. Verse 4 in our lesson tells us what answer He gave to the devil.

Next, Jesus went up into a high mountain. This time the devil said, "Look all around. See all the kingdoms all around you. Now if you will worship me, I will give you all these kingdoms."

Did Jesus do it? No. Read verse 8 to find the answer Jesus made this time.

Once more the devil tried to tempt Jesus. This time Jesus was on the pinnacle of the temple in Jerusalem. The devil said, "If you are the Son of God, cast yourself down from here and see if the angels will guard you. The Bible says they will."

And, oh, how I like to hear Jesus' reply! I can just hear Him saying it. Will some member of the class read verse 12 to see what He said?

And then, when Jesus would not be tempted, the angels came and cared for Jesus (Matt. 4:11).

Memory Verse. Our memory verse is what Jesus said in verse 8 of our lesson.

Notebook. Find or make picture of lesson. Make a dialogue of this lesson. Scene 1. Jesus goes to desert. Devil appears. Devil: "If thou be the Son of God, command this stone that it be made bread." Jesus: "It is written, That man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God." Etc., until dialogue is finished, making three scenes. Let children play the story if possible.—V. C. T.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

NEW YEAR'S AT GOLDEN RULE HOME

The family of Golden Rule Home celebrated the coming of the new year with a devotional and consecration service in which the Oregon church participated. The meeting was held Wednesday night at the Home and was well attended. A special program had been prepared in which the following features appeared.

Following the singing of several hymns expressive of our dependence upon God, Bro. L. E. Conner read the 147th Psalm. Then followed a series of prayers asking for God's blessing and leadership in the various departments of the church. The prayer for the local church was led by B. H. Carpenter, elder of the Oregon church; that for the Sunday school, by Superintendent Paul C. Johnson; for the Bereans, Arlen Marsh; for Golden Rule Home, Mrs. Clara Chaffee of the Home family; for our homes and families, Delos Andrew, a deacon of the Oregon church; and for the general work as represented by the National Bible Institution, President L. E. Conner.

Following the prayer service, Pastor G. E. Marsh conducted a consecration service in preparation for the work of the new year. The lesson was outlined as follows:

Faith-Strengthening Assurances: Joshua 23:11, 14.

Promises Upon Which We May Depend: Heb. 13:5, 6; Matt. 11:28-30; 28:19, 20.

Our Attitude Toward Each Other: Eph. 4:31, 32.

Our Attitude Toward All Men: Matt. 5:43-45. Pray for all men: 1 Tim. 2:1-4. Love all men: Rom. 13:7-10.

Work, Watch, Pray: Matt. 24:42-46; 1 Cor. 16:13, 14; 1 Thess. 5:5, 6; 2 Tim. 4:1-5.

Individual Consecration for the New Year: This division was introduced by singing two verses of "Take My Life and Let It Be Consecrated, Lord, to Thee," followed by meditation on these passages: Rom. 12:1, 2; 1 Cor. 5:7, 8; 1 Cor. 3:16, 17.

Assurance of Reward: 1 Cor. 15:57, 58.

The impressive service was brought to a close by the gathering joining in the Golden Rule Home song, "We Praise Thee, O God, for Our Golden Rule Home," and the benediction by Bro. Conner.

The gathering served to mark the thirteenth anniversary of the founding of the Home, which was dedicated on December 31, 1922.

Sr. Clara Chaffee, who offered the prayer on behalf of the Home, was its first resident, having entered on December 29, 1922, two days before its dedication.

Guests from out of town who attended the service were Bro. and Sr. Conner, Dixon, Ill., and Sr. June Nagle, South Bend, Ind., daughter of Bro. and Sr. Romine, who have charge of the Home management.

The annual election of officers was held on the evening of December 11, 1935, with a fair number of members present. The following officers were elected: Elders—J. W. Cooper, Lawrence Howell; deacons—Wayne Laning, Herman Lewis; deaconesses—Vena Logsdon, Addie Nell; trustee for three years—W. F. Paisley; church secretary—Ednah Cooper; church treasurer, Tessa Laning; Sunday school superintendent—J. W. McLain. We pray that these church officers may be led by God's will.

Our Sunday school superintendent, Bro. McLain, called a meeting of Sunday school officers and teachers on December 29 to formulate plans for the coming year's work. Among the things we decided was to hold a training class for teachers so that some new talent might be discovered and developed. A visiting committee was also appointed to help bring others to Sunday school. We feel that much was accomplished at this meeting.

Bro. Loren L. Burnett led the prayer meeting on January 2, due to the absence of the pastor, who, together with Bro. Gerald L. Cooper, was attending a ministers' conference at Aurora College.

Pray for us in our efforts here.

Harvey Krogh, Jr., Pastor.

The Christmas program presented by the young people on Sunday evening, Dec. 22, was a credit to them, and all who attended it expressed their approval and appreciation.

The main feature of the program was a pageant, "The Sweetest Story Ever Told," in which the grandmother told the story of the Savior's birth to her grandchildren who were seated at her feet. As she told the story the shepherds, Mary and Joseph, and the wise men made their appearance.

On the first Sunday in December many of the children made a pledge that they would go to no shows, buy no candy or gum, during the time between then and Christmas, and then give what they saved to Jesus on His birthday. Our hearts were deeply touched as we witnessed them march across the rostrum and give to Him the pennies, nickels, and dimes they had saved. Mothers told stories of the real sacrifices some of them had made and we feel sure that they will be repaid a hundredfold.

After the services a group of the young people went out and sang carols for some of our shut-ins. They all expressed their appreciation and enjoyment and we surely enjoyed singing for them.

We are planning a watch night service at the church, for we feel that there could be no better way to usher in the new year than in worship and devotion. Prophecy is being so rapidly fulfilled that we feel we ought to make every minute count for Him.

Fifty-three were in Bible school last Sunday, which we feel is good, considering the sickness that prevails.

Our folks are coming together Friday evening of this week to select their New Year's leaders. The Sunday following they will be installed, with Communion service to follow.

Sr. Hatten took us to Grovertown to call on the Hardys and Sr. Alice Maxey. We found this sister not so well, but strong in the faith. In her affliction she is concerned over the church and its progress. Betty Hardy is in the hospital at Plymouth because of typhoid. May we pray for these.

By the time this reaches you, we will be entering another year. May we regard Paul's instruction, "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ."

WEAVER - REHMERT

At 8 o'clock Saturday evening, Dec. 21, it was our privilege to unite in marriage Mr. Howard Rehmer and Miss Josephine Weaver, both of near Troy, Ohio. The ceremony was held in the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Weaver. A sister and brother-in-law to the bride, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Brown, were bridesmaid and best man. This was a very unique wedding, as neither bride nor groom can hear or speak, but a special service was arranged whereby they could understand all the ceremony.

Josephine is one of our younger members at the Brush Creek Church; Howard has been attending our services for the past year or more. Greatly handicapped by being afflicted in speech and hearing as they are, we believe each will be all the more a comfort to the other. We pray for them a happy married life. For the immediate future they will make their home at Troy, R.F.D., Ohio.

HERON - WATERS

On Saturday afternoon, Dec. 21, 1935, at a very simple ceremony, Mrs. Nina Heron and Mr. George Waters were united in marriage at the home of Mrs. Harriet Reed in Arkansas City, Kan. They left immediately after for a ten-day trip into southern Texas.

Sr. Waters is new in the faith, having been baptized this fall, but is very zealous and much interested in the gospel.

Bro. Waters was the teacher of the adult class here in Arkansas City for several years, having but recently resigned to start a class at his home in Newkirk, Okla. He will be remembered by all who attended General Conference this past summer.

We pray that God will bless them in this new relationship and that they will remain true to Him unto the end.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

At the Christmas season our honorary elder, Bro. Richard Skeels, and his good wife celebrated their 55th wedding anniversary. This good couple have been almost the father and mother of our church group here, and were actively known as backers of the cause for many years before South Lawn Church was built. God has been very kind to us in preserving their lives and influence for us, and our church not only offers congratulations to Bro. and Sr. Skeels, but deepest thanks to God for them. They were happy to have their children all home. One daughter, Mrs. Irving from Oakland, Calif., is here for a month, and another, Mrs. Mixer of Detroit, has also been present. These, with their son, Rex, and daughter, Mrs. Leon Pixley, who reside here, made up the happy family reunion.

A new class of senior young people has been added to our Sunday school. This is a step in the right direction by Superintendent Stevens, and we look for some good results there.

The newly elected board took office the 1st of January. Fitting services were held Sunday morning, the 5th, and we pray God's guidance to be with each worker and the church during the year.

BAPTISM—

by S. J. Lindsay

This is a treatise on the significance, importance, and mode of baptism by one of the most able Bible teachers. The subject is presented in an interesting and logical manner, setting forth the biblical truth that baptism by immersion in water, following a definite belief in the gospel, is essential to salvation.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Adult Sunday school classes: Why not provide your teacher or pastor with a copy of "The Coming Crisis," which is for sale at this office for $1.25, postpaid? He will appreciate it, we know.

Checks, drafts, money orders, and all correspondence intended for the office should be addressed either to the National Bible Institution or The Restitution Herald, Oregon, Ill. Remittances made out to individuals are occasionally misapplied, and correspondence addressed to individuals is subject to delay in reply.

Bro. Harvey Krogh, Jr., pastor of the Ripley, Ill., Church of God, accompanied by his wife and Bro. Gerald Cooper, were visitors in Oregon last week. Bros. Krogh and Cooper were en route to Aurora, Ill., where they are to attend the annual ministerial gathering held in Aurora College.

While many denominations are discontinuing the evening services for lack of attendance, we find that those churches which are stressing the fulfillment of prophecy are not only continuing their evening services, but building up much interest in Bible study on the part of the public. The Oregon Church of God is the only one of the four Protestant churches in the community that now carries on an evening service or that maintains a midweek prayer meeting. Prayer and Bible study are essential to spiritual growth.

"The Coming World Crisis" will be the general theme of a new series of prophetic sermons by the pastor of the Oregon church. The purpose of the series will be to develop spiritual preparation for the Lord's coming. The first discourse, given last Sunday night, was entitled, "The Value of Prophecy to the Christian and to the Non-Christian." Next Sunday evening he will speak on "The Coming Crisis As Viewed by World Statesmen."

The publication of the ministerial list has been unduly delayed owing to the failure of churches, conferences, and individuals to report the names and addresses of those whom they recognize as ministers in good standing. The list of last year is included in this issue with the few changes that have been submitted.

A letter from Sr. A. J. Chaplin, Arkansas City, Kan., tells of the serious illness of her daughter, Mrs. Brown, who has been under the care of a nurse for the past eight weeks. We pray that Mrs. Brown's suffering and Sr. Chaplin's anxiety may be soon be relieved through the complete recovery of her daughter.

The Coming Crisis

By James R. Kaye, Ph.D., LL.D.

The state of the world as a whole in which we are now living stands alone in human history. Every thoughtful man is asking, "What does it mean? To what is it all pointing?" These questions are answered in the most intelligent manner by The Coming Crisis.

The scholarship of this book is sufficiently assured by the fact that its author is the compiler of the New Analytical Bible and other biblical works.

THE END OF THE AGE

Prophecies relating to the coming of Christ and its bearing on present world conditions are considered from a strictly scriptural viewpoint. The book is probably the sanest, soundest, most exhaustive treatment of this subject now in print. It is invaluable to anyone interested in the future of humanity and the return of the Messiah.

PETER VIEWS PAUL

By the Editor

WHAT PETER says about Paul tells us more about Peter than it does about Paul," declared a voice over the radio recently. And how true his statement is! Our criticisms of others, our expressions of approval or of disapproval of those around us, reveal our own inner natures far more clearly than they do the characters of those whom we attempt to describe to others.

If we are able to see much of good in our associates it is because there is much of good in us. And, conversely, if we are habitually inclined to sharp, harsh criticism of almost everybody it is positive evidence that we ourselves are subject to even more serious disapproval of our fellows. Our approvals and our disapprovals tell what we are. The inner life and the true character of a man are revealed by the view he holds of others around him.

Even our conceptions of God tell what we are ourselves. An old Arabian legend declares that if the camels had a god they would picture him as having four legs and a hump! There are those who think of the Lord as a stern and relentless Judge who weighs all the actions of men in a balance of absolute and merciless justice and who metes out punishments and rewards on the basis of such judgment. Then there are others who look upon Him much as a child looks upon an over-indulgent parent, as One who can see no wrong in His children and whose practice it is to overlook or condone all of their mistakes.

No doubt the truth concerning God's attitude may be found midway between these extremes.

God is not a stern and arbitrary Judge, One who does not take into account the mitigating circumstances of human weakness, but "like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him. For he knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are dust" (Psalm 103: 13, 14). Neither is God an over-indulgent Father. While "he remembereth that we are dust," He also remembers the

"Our beloved brother Paul also according to the wisdom given unto him hath written unto you; as also in all his epistles, speaking in them of these things; in which are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other scriptures, to their own destruction."—2 Peter 3:15, 16.

self-reliant nature He has given us and the responsibility He has placed upon each of us as servants capable of carrying on His work by our own volition.

Furthermore God recognizes His own law as having been laid down for the good of His children. That for them to break the law with impunity is for them to lose much from the joy of life and to miss something of the goodness and sweetness that otherwise they might have known.

For this reason the heavenly Father repeatedly warns us, as in Galatians 6:7, 8, to "be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting."

In order that we may avoid such losses God warns and punishes as well as forgives. He takes away as well as provides. He reproveth as well as commends. But through His reproof and through His warnings and punishments there continues to flow an endless current of divine sympathetic love and infinite kindness.

"God is love," but He is also righteousness, and His love for men will never set aside His insistence upon righteousness, for love and righteousness are combined in the character of God. They are inseparable parts of His unit character. Therefore we should school ourselves to conceive of God as being both love and righteousness, both justice and mercy. And, further, we should endeavor to cultivate these godlike qualities in ourselves.

If we overestimate God's love and mercy it may be because we are seeking to find justification for our sins. God sees no justification for sin that you and I can avoid by our own efforts. That which the believer cannot overcome owing to the weakness of the flesh is justified by the blood of Christ our Savior. But God is not deceived—He knows our strength just as He re- (Please turn to Page Ten)

Refuses Oath to Kill—Denied Citizenship

"Thou shalt not kill."—Exodus 20:13.

PEORIA, Ill., Jan. 9.—Because he refused to take an oath to bear arms "to kill" in defense of his country, Warner E. Scherier, a native of Switzerland, was refused citizenship rights in this country. Mr. Scherier, who has been a resident of this city for many years, is the father of three children and highly respected. He pleaded futilely with United States District Judge C. G. Briggie to abridge the provisions of the citizenship oath that compel citizens to "bear arms to kill" in defense of their country. His conscience, Scherier told the judge, will not permit him to take the oath without reservations.

"I would not object," he said, "to bearing arms in defense of my country, but I would not kill." Although commending Scherier for his frankness and tenacity to principle, Judge Briggie found his own position inconsistent. "No fault," he assured Mr. Scherier, "can be found with you for your belief, and I am sure you would make an excellent citizen, but I am forced to deny your petition."

How like the assertion of Pilate at the trial of Jesus was Judge Briggie's confession, "No fault can be found with you." After questioning Jesus closely Pilate said to His Jewish accusers, "I find in him no fault at all" (John 18:38). Many, no doubt, in the near future will be forced to make the same decision as that which Mr. Scherier was called upon to make, and if their decision should be the same as his it may result not in the loss of citizenship, but in the forfeiture of personal liberty and possibly of life.

Insanity Increase Doubles

"Surely oppression maketh a wise man mad."

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Jan. 1.—Addressing the convention of the American Association for the Advancement of Science here today, Dr. Edward Spencer Cowles, director of the Park Avenue Hospital, New York, and psychiatrist at the John Hopkins University, spoke of the enormous increase in insanity of the past few years. More than 65 per cent of all the cases in hospitals, clinics, and doctor's offices, he said, are in fact psychologically mental disorders, despite the fact that they are being treated and diagnosed as physical diseases.

Perhaps this is why so many successful "treatments" are accomplished by Christian Scientist practitioners and other metaphysicians. If 65 per cent of all patients who claim the attention of the doctors are suffering mainly from mental rather than from physical ailments at least that proportion of cases should respond to psychological treatment. Faith in Paul's statement in Romans 8:28 should alone bring peace of mind and comfort of body to the follower of Jesus Christ, to say nothing of the countless other assurances of God's love and tender watchcare over His people which we find in the Bible!

"A careful, searching, differential diagnosis must be made in order to remove the stress and strain from the mental as well as the physical organism," declared Dr. Cowles. "It is in the field of subjective fears and disorders known as hypochondriacal fears and hysterias that the physician is implored to consider in dealing with the cancer patient. Words carelessly used in examination of the patient may induce a pathological fear more disastrous to his health and happiness than even the cancer itself." (See Job 3:25.)

Speaking of the increase of insanity, Dr. Cowles said: "In all the years heretofore insanity has never increased more than 10 per cent in each ten years. Within the last ten years it has increased 20 per cent. This is an alarming increase. It is not due logically to the lessening vitality of the people brought about by the sense of insecurity with respect to their position and their place in life? This sense of insecurity produces sleeplessness, irritability, and a disgust for food. All of this evidence of a lessening energy in the central nervous system. This lessening of energy, with its consequent lessening of emotional control, produces distorted ideas. Once the distorted ideas begin there is established a vicious circle of emotional excitement and mental maladjustment."

The noted scientist attributes much of such mental "maladjustment" to the fact that "very few of the leaders of the nation possess character, brains, and experience sufficient to inspire and to maintain for long the confidence of the people," who consequently soon develop "a sense of insecurity" which in turn leads to insanity.

Only the King of kings will be able to establish and maintain lasting social and economic security.

GOD'S TEMPLE

By Lyman Booth

IF I WERE to ask some one to define the word "temple" I would, no doubt, be referred to Webster's dictionary where we find two definitions: first, an edifice for worship; second, a Christian edifice for public worship. Worship is courtesy or reverence; respect; reverence, adoration, or homage paid to God, a god, or a sacred object. A mild form of worship is used in addressing or referring to certain magistrates. Also in speaking to or of certain clergymen by the use of the word "Reverend" before their names.

We find many temples of various kinds among the nations. In many of them are many grotesque combinations of human and animal figures, venerated and worshiped as gods, some of them extremely hideous in the sight of those whose knowledge is fixed upon an all-wise and infinite living God. In the early days of human history men began to worship strange gods, and the practice is quite general today. The god of mammon, the demon of greed, has many devotees worshiping in temples all over the world, and it seems as if nothing, except some great misfortune or disaster, can convert them from the error of their way, which sooner or later will fall upon them, causing untold misery and ruin. For they must reap the fruit from the seed they have sown, and the harvest will be a bitter one.

In contrast with these perishable temples, what may we say of the temple of God? Out of what material is it to be constructed, and for what purpose? Who is the architect, and who the builder? How long will it endure? The word "temple" implies a building, a house of worship. We read that King David designed to build a house for the Lord, but because he had been a man of war the Lord did not permit him to build it, but told David that his son Solomon should build it. David had made great preparations, and had collected a vast amount of material for the building, all of which he gave to Solomon with instructions, as follows, "Be strong and of good courage, and do it: fear not, nor be dismayed: for the Lord God, even my God, will be with thee; he will not fail thee, nor forsake thee, until thou hast finished all the work for the service of the house of the Lord."—1 Chron. 28:20. Solomon completed the temple and then called the elders of Israel, even all the men of Israel, to a feast. The ark of the covenant was brought and placed in the room prepared for it. While the trumpets and cymbals accompanied the praise and thanksgiving to the Lord for His mercy and goodness, the entire house was filled with the glory of the Lord, which was so brilliant "that the priests could not stand to minister by reason of the cloud." See 2 Chronicles 5. But that building with all its gorgeous decorations, costly furnishings, and splendor was a type of another far richer and eternal to be erected by a master builder, the King of kings and Lord of lords.

Solomon sent thousands of laborers into the forests and quarries of other nations to select and prepare material for the building of the temple. Forty and six years were required to complete the work. This also is a type of the gathering of material and the building of another temple by the supreme master builder, "even Jesus Christ the righteous." He issued His orders to His workmen to go into all the world to prepare material for His most glorious temple by the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom. When the last timber, the last stone, the last jewel and pearl, shall have been prepared He will assemble them and erect His temple on Mount Zion.

Every Christian is not only a single stone in the edifice of God's temple, but is in himself a temple. He has to build upon the foundation of faith in Christ.

"Other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ." The faith necessary accepts a personal Savior who is the support and foundation of Christian excellence. "Therefore let every man take heed how he buildeth," after what pattern and with what material, whether wood or stubble; the motives which influence the builder; the walk and conversation; the practical habits of daily life; all that properly constitute character. This is the building which each individual Christian must erect. The material found in the church is the same as that in the single individual Christian. There are the solid and durable, the chaffy and worthless. There may be the gold and the silver, the precious stones and resplendent ornaments of virtue, or there may be the wood and hay, the straw and stubble. As it is incumbent on each workman to exercise care in relation to all others that no mistakes may (Please turn to Page Nine)

Before It Is Too Late

If you have a gray-haired father
Or a mother far away,
Sit down and write the letter
You've put off day by day.

If you have a tender message
Or a loving word to say,
Don't wait till you forget it,
But whisper it today.
Who knows what bitter memories
May haunt you if you wait?
So make your loved ones happy
Before it is too late.

The tender words unspoken,
The letter never sent,
The long forgotten messages,
The wealth of love unspent.
For these some hearts are breaking,
For these some loved ones wait—
So show them that you care for them
Before it is too late.

Jacob and Rahab

By R. J. Browning

IN THE HERALD dated December 17, a respected sister, after citing certain passages to show that "lying lips are an abomination to the Lord," makes the somewhat strange request that some one explain why Jacob and Rahab were blessed for the lies they told. The answer in my judgment is: They were not. They were blessed despite their lies and by virtue of their faith in God. It must be remembered that not all the acts of men of faith are acts of faith. It would hardly be contended that Abraham, although called "the father of the faithful," was moved by faith to deceive Abimelech regarding his real relationship to Sarah. His own explanation of this is recorded in Genesis 20:11, and are we not told that the ways and thoughts of God are as far above those of men as the heavens are above the earth?

If we consider the case of Jacob in the light of the inspired testimony the idea that he was blessed for the lies he told must certainly be ruled out. The blessings of Genesis 27:29 were, beyond a doubt, in accordance with God's purpose quite apart from the conspiracy instigated by Rebekah. Even before Esau and Jacob were born Rebekah was informed of God that "the elder shall serve the younger" (ch. 25:23). It would seem therefore that this conspiracy, which involved the telling and enactment of a lie, was the outworking of a mother's desire to accomplish in her own way, and according to her own thoughts, the purpose of God as it pertained to the lad she so dearly loved. She erred, as do many today, in making God's purpose rather than His revealed will the rule of her conduct, and as a result, Jacob was compelled to leave his home in haste and Rebekah was never again permitted to see her beloved Jacob.

As to Jacob, we know that he became an exile in a distant land. That for twenty long years he was a hireling in the house of his uncle, Laban. That he became the victim of a deception akin to that which he had practiced upon his father; and this in a matter which must have been closer to his heart than any blessing it was within the power of his father to bestow. Later, we see him covering at the feet of the brother he had so deeply wronged, and later still we find him confessing to Pharaoh: "Few and evil have the days of the years of my life been."—Gen. 47:9. But although Jacob had sinned so basely, shamefully, and treacherously, his life became purified and exalted through the discipline that followed, and as he was dying, when the question of the "elder and the younger" was again presented, we find him placing his hands upon the heads of the sons of Joseph, saying: "The angel which redeemed me from all evil, bless the lads."

Surely one of the lessons God would have us learn from the life of Jacob is that while God's gifts and callings are without repentance (change), yet a single sinful act may change the entire character of life's experiences.

When we consider the case of Rahab we find something different. Unlike Jacob, Rahab had none to teach her the "way of the Lord." Harlotry and lying are alike abominations to the Lord; but from whom could she have learned this? Apparently the only information she had of God was contained in the reports of Joshua 2:10. This, however, was so firmly believed that when the spies stood at her threshold she readily received them. Unless we can believe that the King of Jericho would have been more merciful than are the rulers of today this exposed her to imprisonment, and possibly death. From that moment her life was bound up with the lives of these men. Imagine then her consternation when after admitting the spies certain officers of the King appeared at her door and charged her with the very offense she had hoped to conceal. Notice her defense: "Two men came to me, but I knew not whence they were." And then lest they should search the house and discover that she was lying, she quickly added, "About the time of the shutting of the gate they went out; whither they went I wot not. Pursue after them quickly; for ye shall overtake them." That these lies were really essential to the safety of the spies, I cannot believe. They had previously been hidden, and even if discovered, God could in His own way have effected their deliverance. For herself, Rahab could have entertained no such hope. She could believe that God had dried up the waters of the Red Sea, and thus opened for His people a way of escape from the Egyptians (Josh. 2:10); but that He would open a way whereby she could escape the wrath of the King of Jericho, or His own impending judgments upon that city, she could at that time have had neither assurance nor hope. The truth is, that even then God was working to save her from both; not through the lies she told, but through her faith. Hence, outside of the historical record her lies are completely passed over. By faith she was moved to receive the spies, to hide them, and to send them out another way. Here we have the steps of Rahab's faith, for note Hebrews 11:31 says, "By faith the harlot Rahab perished not with them that believed not, when she had received the spies in peace." Joshua 6:25 goes further and says: "Joshua saved Rahab alive . . . because she hid the messengers." James 2:25 goes still further and says: "Was not Rahab the harlot justified by works when she . . . sent them out another way?"

Thus Rahab, through her faith, perished not with them that believed not, and later became the wife of Salmon, an ancestor of the One who according to God's purpose is destined to reign over the house of Jacob forever.

The Principle of Authority

MY SUBJECT as announced is "The Authority of the Bible." I shall not discuss the evidence for the authority, but the nature of the authority of the Scriptures.

In American church and State we are facing a conflict between the authority of constitutional principles on the one hand and the authority of "brass buttons" on the other hand. I am told that in certain parts of the world under certain systems of government the common people are trained to obey anyone whose brass buttons, or uniform, or cap, or office, or manner, seems to indicate authority. A friend of mine, wearing a Boy Scout uniform, with many badges and decorations, stepped out of his car one day on a busy thoroughfare in an eastern city. Immediately the traffic in both directions stopped. The uniform was a brilliant affair, outshining that of Oriental monarchs. Both streams of traffic waited while this scoutmaster leisurely crossed the highway. While one does not blame the American motorists on a busy highway for this confusion of thought, yet it is said to be a fact that in some countries anyone with a little show of authority can turn a whole boulevard full of people in the opposite direction from that in which they were going.

Contrasted with the authority of brass buttons is the type of authority recognized among the English-speaking peoples of the world and among certain other peoples as well. In England and in America particularly the common people have the ideal of constitutional government. American people do obey an officer with a star, but not merely because he wears the star. The star is only his badge of constitutional authority. The American people obey the law because they believe that there are certain fundamental principles of right conduct set forth in the Constitution. These principles ought to be defended and protected by all officers and civilians as well.

IDEAL ATTITUDE TOWARD CONSTITUTIONAL AUTHORITY

Our ideal attitude toward constitutional authority is set forth in the first four verses of the 13th chapter of St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans. We must remember that Paul lived under two different forms of government, the Roman and the Jewish. The Roman Government was theoretically republican, but actually imperial. Paul does not speak of any one form of government, but announces the principle of all government as ordained of God. According to this doctrine, the government must not be a terror to good works, but to evil. The government must be the minister of God for good. The government must also be a minister of God and avenger for wrath to him that doeth evil. The government must bear the sword, not in vain.

It is not merely the respect for office which Paul enjoins upon the church. Respect for office as representing the great principles of right conduct is of course the Christian attitude, but obedience to unrighteous authority is not found in Paul's precepts or practice.

If the government is a terror to good work and not a terror to evil, if the government is not a minister for good, but for evil, if the government executes wrath upon him that doeth good, rather than upon him that doeth evil, if the government beareth the sword in vain, no mere authority of uniform, or office, or brass buttons, or vested interests could lead the early Christians to disobey what they knew to be the will of God, in the interests of officialdom.

The 4th chapter of the Acts of the Apostles tells how the officials of the Jewish ecclesiastical government commanded the apostles not to speak at all nor to teach in the name of Jesus. "But Peter and John answered and said unto them, Whether it is right in the sight of God to hearken unto you rather than unto God, judge ye; for we cannot but speak the things which we saw and heard." In the 5th chapter of the Acts we find the apostles continuing their preaching in spite of imprisonment, "And the high priests asked them, saying, We strictly charged you not to teach in this name, and behold ye have filled Jerusalem with your teaching, intending to bring this man's blood upon us. But Peter and the apostles answered and said, We must obey God rather than men." On this occasion the authority in power was Sadducean, but among those in authority as a cooperating member of the council which commanded the Apostle to keep silence was Gamaliel. We wonder whether Nicodemus was not also present, with Joseph of Arimathea. It was not until after Peter made the issue perfectly clear by his great saying, "We ought to obey God rather than men," that Gamaliel protested against the unlawful and godless injunction of the majority party in officialdom. It was thus an official circle, including good men in partial cooperation with lawless and godless men, whom the apostles had to resist on these two occasions.

The American State and the American church have fallen into a situation in which the issue must be squarely faced between great fundamental principles of constitutional law, and the unconstitutional enactments of a temporary majority in officialdom.

For the Christian, the underlying source of authority is the Being of God, His nature characterized by all His perfections. "God is a Spirit, infinite, eternal, and unchangeable in His being, wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness, and truth."

THE AUTHORITY OF THE BIBLE

The second source of authority for the Christian is the revealed will of God, the Bible. We believe that the will of God expressing the nature of God has given to us the Word of God as our infallible rule of faith and life.

As Christian citizens, we believe in a third source of authority derived from the second, namely, the constitution of our Government. I do not refer to any one form of government nor to the details of governmental arrangement. Every Christian American, however, believes that God wishes us to have an orderly government and believes that our Constitution embodies the essential right principles which God would have embodied in a governmental constitution. This faith is not peculiar to America, but ought to be shared as it is by Christians in every nation where Christian influence has been felt in the molding of governmental constitution.

As Christians, we have also another source of authority, not derived from the third, but from the second. The authority of the church is not derived from the State, neither is the authority of the State derived from the church. For a Christian, all true authority in both fields comes ultimately from God and for the church as regarded by all Protestants, there is no authority but the authority of the Scriptures, the revealed will of God.

BIBLE AUTHORITY CANNOT BE DEFEATED

At this point we present one of the most important aspects of the whole question of authority. Authority based upon the Scripture is based upon the revealed will of God, the Scripture being the revealed will of God is based upon the Being of God Himself. God is characterized by every perfection and is the author of the universe and all its processes. Authority, therefore, that is based upon the Scripture has a certain strength about it which cannot ultimately be defeated. When anyone in church or State takes his stand foursquare for the principles of righteousness and truth set forth in the Scriptures, he becomes unconquerable. The authority of truth and right cannot be defeated. It is objectively valid in the world which the true and righteous God has created and in which He rules. This is the meaning of Isaiah 54:17: "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn. This is the heritage of the servants of Jehovah and their righteousness which is of me, saith Jehovah."

SKEPTICISM DENIES AUTHORITY OF SCRIPTURE

I was astonished some time ago by a question which a devout Christian young man put to me. He had been studying philosophy in one of our large universities. He had been told that the only reason Christian people believed in the authority of the Bible is that the Bible is presented to them in an authoritarian manner. This produces a psychological effect, he had been told, and, therefore, it is difficult to dislodge simple people from their conservative faith.

Now, this young man had not given up faith in the Bible, but he did not realize that the authority of the Bible is something fundamental in the constitution of the Bible itself and not the authority of pulpit manner and tone of voice. I tried to point out to him that the Bible does indeed carry its own evidence of authority when faithfully presented. I tried to help him to see that the authority is that of the truth of God.

The nature of the authority of the Bible may be compared to the nature of the value of a diamond. When young people ask why is the Bible regarded as the Word of God, while other ancient religious books are regarded as apocryphal, I sometimes reply, "Why is a diamond mounted in a gold or platinum setting while a bit of glass cut in the shape of a diamond is mounted in a very cheap and inferior way, and sells for a dime?" The answer is, of course, the diamond is a diamond, and a piece of glass is not a diamond. But why? Well, there is something about a diamond in itself which is different.

I suppose I could be deceived. I am not a diamond expert. I purchased one solitary diamond years ago. That one is still sparkling on the same finger where I put it, and I have never made any further study of other diamonds. I could be deceived by an imitation, but there is a difference; and when the difference is pointed out by one who gives careful attention to such things, I am capable of seeing the difference, because the difference is really there, objectively.

AUTHORITY OF THE BIBLE A DOCTRINE OF PROTESTANT FAITH

The authority of the Bible is not the authority of any church council or any body of men in any period of the world's history. It is an essential doctrine of our Protestant faith that the Scripture was not canonized by the church, but that the Scripture has its authority in itself from the Holy Spirit of God. The church councils have only recognized and given testimony to this divine authority.

Some time ago, Doubleday, Page, and Company advertised for sale a book, entitled The Lost Books of the Bible. The advertisement carried the suggestion that here were books which had been suppressed by ecclesiastical authority, at last brought to light by modern research. Many consider this advertising one of the greatest frauds perpetrated by any modern publisher. The fact is that the exact table of contents published under the title Lost Books of the Bible, has been in print in English for over two hundred years. It has been in the libraries of scholars and easily available to any who cared to investigate. Nothing in this table of contents had been lost or suppressed. These books were lost to the mind of the common people in the church simply because they were not worth remembering.

The best edition of New Testament Apocrypha is that edited by Montague James. In his preface, the editor says: "People may still be heard to say, After all, these apocryphal gospels and acts, as you call them, are just as interesting as the old ones. It is only by accident or caprice that they were not put into the New Testament. The best answer to such loose talk has always been, and is now, to produce the writings and let them tell their own story. It will very quickly be seen that there is no question of anyone having excluded them from the New Testament. They have done that for themselves."

Any devout reader of the literature of the ancient world reading the Bible and then reading the other religious books coming from a similar historical background, ought to be able to discern the authority of the Scripture and the lack of authority of all the other books.

If this were an address on the evidences of authority in the Bible, we should discuss a variety of subjects such as the a priori reasons for supposing that God would reveal Himself in a permanent book or record, and the fact that the Bible has all the characteristics which we could expect the revelation of the will of God to have. These things would be profitable subject matter for many hours of study. The Bible is adapted to the nature of sinful men of all races and conditions. From all the peoples of the earth those who have believed the Bible have been transformed thereby into the image of Christ. The Bible is true, and has never proved to be in error in any of its statements. The Bible contains truth which could not have been imagined by the mind of man without supernatural revelation. Bible prophecies have been fulfilled in very literal detail. A great many other valuable evidences of the divine authority of the Bible should be studied, but that is not our subject. The nature of the authority of the Bible is our point of emphasis just now.

The authority of the Bible is the authority of God Himself. Human authority in church and in State has trampled upon the Word of God, and may trample upon it again. Political and ecclesiastical majorities with all the uniforms and brass buttons of human vainglory may deny or disregard or contend against God's Word. In spite of all, the Bible is what it is. In every light, in every environment, and in spite of all opposition, it will shine forth as the infallible Word of God.—Condensed from an address by J. Oliver Buswell, D. D., President of Wheaton College.

Christ and the Antichrist

IN THE EPISTLE of 1 John, 2:18, is a reference to this present age in which we are living. He is not writing to the world at large, he is writing to the little children of God. If you are not saved and have the spirit of the Lord, all I am saying will be Greek to you. He is writing to the little children of God, "Ye have heard that antichrist shall come, even now there are many antichrists." Already in the Apostle's day, there were antichristian tendencies which would head up in the personal Antichrist at the end of this dispensation. In chapter 2, verse 22, the Antichrist denies the Father and the Son. This Antichrist will be atheistic, he will deny the Father and the Son when he comes.

Chapter 4, verse 2: "Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God: and every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God: and this is that spirit of antichrist; whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already is it in the world."

Antichrist means against Christ, and beware of every new religion that denies the incarnation of Christ. This verse is against Christian Science, for Christian Science denies that there is any flesh, says there is nothing material either in the Christ, or anybody else. They have built magnificent edifices and thousands have gone into this system. Many good and sincere people, too. They think they have a religion coming from God when they have been caught in a delusion of the devil.

"For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an antichrist." In the first Epistle the Greek word is in the past tense, but this is in the future tense. These deceivers not only deny that He has come in the flesh, but deny that He will come again in the future. It is a dangerous thing for a man to deny the personal, bodily, and visible return of Jesus to the world. It savors of the Antichrist according to this verse.

The last book of the Bible, the Revelation, refers to this great being that is just ahead of us. Terrible things are to be enacted soon. In the 13th chapter it tells of a beast coming up out of the sea. A terrible beast like a bear, a lion, a leopard; a combination of all the beasts seen in the book of Daniel. Satan, the great dragon, gives to this beast his power and his throne and great authority. And the world wondered after the beast. Who can make war against him? they say. And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies.

This is what the little horn of Daniel did, he had a mouth speaking great things, he continues. Forty-two months, three and one half years, time and times and a half time. "And he opened his mouth against God and his tabernacle and them that dwell in heaven, and he made war on the saints."

Friends, in our day, for the first time in history, Russia, a great nation, has officially declared war against God. I have received cartoons through the mails, sent by some one. One pictures a ladder resting on the earth and reaching up to the heavens and at the top of that ladder were three bewhiskered old men with long gray beards, one of them representing the Father, the other the Son, and the other the Holy Ghost. Climbing up that ladder was a man with a butcher knife in his teeth, and an expression of hate on his countenance, climbing up to get rid of God.

Another picture is a man, a scavenger, sweeping out the refuse of the street and in the dust were pictured God, Christ, and the Holy Spirit, and this man was sweeping God out with the refuse. Talk about our country recognizing that country! No telling how far men will go who know not God nor His Book.

Another beast is seen in the chapter at verse 11: "I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth"; and this second beast had power given to him to work miracles in the presence of the first beast and he caused the world to worship this first beast. This false prophet causes the world to worship Satan and the beast. He gives life to an image and causes that image to speak. He also causes fire to come down from heaven in sight of men as Elijah, the Prophet, did in his day.

Do not believe everything that looks supernatural in the religious realm. If some man should get fire to come down out of the heavens people would wonder at it. Strange things are happening today. Do not be carried away with the counterfeit.

In the end of this chapter, verse 15, "And he had power to give life unto the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak, and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed. And he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads." This is another counterfeit. In the 7th chapter God marks His people on the forehead but this man of sin marks his followers either in the right hand or on the forehead. God wants His people to come right out in the open where everybody knows you belong to God. Do not try to be a secret disciple of the Lord.

"And that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name. . . . Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast: for it is the number of a man; and his number is Six hundred threescore and six." Six is man's number, while seven is the number of spiritual perfection. The natural man is short of perfection and when he worships the Antichrist he is just worshipping himself.

Let us now turn to Revelation 19. Here we have the coming of Christ to put an end to the career on earth of the Antichrist. "And I saw heaven opened, and behold a white horse; and he that sat upon him was called Faithful and True, and in righteousness he doth judge and make war." His eyes were as a flame of fire and on his head were many crowns; and he had a name written that no man knew but himself. His name is called the Word of God. This is Christ, who is the Word of God, coming again, in judgment and in wrath, making war with His enemies. In the chapter the kings of earth and their armies are seen "gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army." What daring godlessness! Actually assembled to make war against God.

Evil spirits marshal these forces for that dreadful day. It is at Armageddon in Palestine. It is the battle of the day of the Lord Almighty, when He comes to put an end to all of this fearful confusion that is rapidly engulfing the world.

In Ezekiel 38 and 39, a large crowd is described coming down out of Russia, united with many others from different countries as their allies, sweeping down to smite the Jews who have returned to their land.

"Then shall the Lord go forth and fight against these armies," and Ezekiel says that it takes seven months to bury the dead, so many will be slain, and then after that for seven years men will find bones and skeletons and put them in the ground. God is a God that can by no means tolerate sin, and when the world makes war on God, there is nothing but swift judgment like the lightning against them.

We are told that gasses are being made now that can destroy entire cities within a few minutes. Fearful things are coming to pass, and yet people play and frolic and dance and never think seriously.

The beast was taken and the false prophet and these both alive were cast into the lake of fire burning with brimstone. They are the first to get into the place which is prepared for the Devil and his angels. God would not have any human being go there. You go over the love of God and the blood of Calvary to get there. The ungodly one of the Psalms; the lawless one of Isaiah; the little horn of Daniel 7 and 8; the Roman prince of Daniel 9; the man of sin and the son of perdition of 2 Thessalonians; the Antichrist of John's Epistles; and the beast of Revelation, are all the same: the first one to be put into the lake of fire. Christ glorifies God, Antichrist blasphemes God. Christ came in His Father's name. Antichrist will come in his own name. Christ humbled Himself; Antichrist will exalt himself. Christ was despised and rejected by men; all the world will wonder after Antichrist. Christ came to do the will of God; Antichrist will seek his own will.

We can very fitly close by quoting the stanzas of a poem written fifty years ago by a well-known Southern preacher.

Thou who from Olive's brow did'st rise,
In glorious triumph to the skies,
Before the rapt disciples' eyes—
Lord Jesus, quickly come!
For Thy appearance all things pray,
All nature sighs at Thy delay,
Thy people cry, no longer stay,
Lord Jesus, quickly come!

Hear Thou the whole creation's groan,
The burdened creatures' plaintive moan,
The cry of deserts wild and lone—
Lord Jesus, quickly come!
See signals of distress unfurled,
By states on stormy billows hurled,
Thou Polestar of a shipwrecked world,
Lord Jesus, quickly come!

Hush the fierce blast of war's alarms,
The tocsin's toll, the clash of arms,
Incarnate Love, exert Thy charms,
Lord Jesus, quickly come!
Walk once again upon the face
Of this sad earth's tempestuous seas,
And still the waves, O Prince of Peace,
Lord Jesus, quickly come!

Lo, Thy fair Bride, with garments torn,
Of her celestial radiance shorn,
Upturns her face, with watching worn—
Lord Jesus, quickly come!
Her trickling tears, her piteous cries,
Her struggles, fears, and agonies

Appeal to Thy deep sympathies—
Lord Jesus, quickly come!

Come, with Thy beauteous diadem,
Come, with embattled Cherubim,
Come, with the shout of Seraphim,
Lord Jesus, quickly come!
Come, on Thy seat of radiant cloud,
Come, with the Archangel's trumpet loud,
Come, Savior, let the heavens be bowed,
Lord Jesus, quickly come!

And when the astonished heavens shall flee,
When powers of earth and hell to thee
Shall bend their reverential knee,
In that great day of doom;
Be ours the happy lot to stand
Among the white-robed, ransomed band,
And hear Thee say, with outstretched hand,
Ye blessed children, come!

GOD'S TEMPLE

occur, so it is incumbent that each Christian should exercise great care to have just views and to teach nothing but the truth, for in the day of reckoning one man's work will abide and he receive a reward, and another's will be burnt and he suffer loss. So will it be with each Christian, according as he may be found, whether he has traded wisely, or has abused or buried his talent in the earth. When the Lord shall be revealed at the last day some will rejoice and be found of Him without spot and blameless, while others will be ashamed.

Paul said to the church at Corinth, "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?"—1 Cor: 3:16. In chapter 6:19 he repeats the same in a modified form: "What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost (Spirit) which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's." Since all Christians sustain the same relation to Christ that the Corinthians did, this statement must apply with equal force to Christians of the present day. That being true, there is another statement in this connection in 3:17 which is of vital importance to us. "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are."

If the Spirit of God dwells in us it must be a permanent resident. It is not merely a passing visit, nor is it an emotional power fitfully given and then suddenly withdrawn; for we read, "I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people." We all need strong motives for the resistance of evil. Among these there is none more serviceable than the motive which appeals to the responsibility that is implied in the inward presence of God's Spirit, given to us through His Word, which is spirit and life. Since His Word is spirit, the greater knowledge of His holy Word we can acquire the more are we filled with His Spirit, and the greater and more intense will our love become for His truth, the more earnest will be our desire to walk with Him and to glorify His name.

A sublime truth is here set forth. The body of every saint is a temple of God more real and of greater worth than Solomon's temple. More glorious, for the shechina was but a symbol of the divine presence, but the spirit that abideth continually is far above a symbol. Golden domes and palaces adorned with marble and precious stones are unworthy of comparison with that house the Lord has chosen to be His temple. This house is illuminated with the light of righteousness, and its ornaments shall never fade, and shall endure hereafter in spotless beauty and eternal majesty.

Solomon's temple was one of the most beautiful buildings ever erected by the hands of men. It was costly in labor and material; but God's temple when completed will be more enduring, more beautiful, and more glorious. It has been "bought with a price." The price paid measures God's estimate of our value when purified. He does not pay a spotless life so dear to Him for those who will not obey Him. He paid the gold of His affections when He gave His Son for the world. His holy word begat us, Calvary bought us. Our creation in Him was painless, but our salvation a torture. Go stand at the foot of the cross, and there behold how God shows you and the angels His estimate of His creatures that He might win them back. Yes, He paid the price, therefore we are not our own. A man is not his own until God has bought him and that ownership is solemnly acknowledged. Before this he is a slave to his baser nature, sold under sin; but being bought with a great price, he becomes the bond servant of another master, yet free in Christ Jesus, and therefore under sacred obligations to serve Him to the extent of his ability.

His redeeming grace places us under a new and endearing obligation to serve Him. Nothing can appear more just and equitable than that He who has bought us should possess us and receive the benefits of our labors; therefore the ransomed should be entirely devoted to their Redeemer. He who lives continually with God in Christ may well be called God's free man. The whole being, whether developed or undeveloped, all that lies within, is God's. He claims it all. We are free only when we come into His possession. Slaves till then, free ever afterward. We lose self in God. He gains a creature and we gain a Creator. He found a stranger and has given him a home, the stranger has found a redeeming Savior and an eternal Friend and Father, whom to serve is to adore.

Solomon's temple is so strikingly beautiful that a stranger could easily distinguish it from all other buildings. None on entering the city need to inquire where it could be found, for it could be seen from a distance, outside the wall of Jerusalem. Likewise God's completed temple may be seen from afar. Its glory will outshine the sun. Though all the timbers, the stones that are designed for that holiest of all temples, are scattered throughout the world, in all lands, and though they lie among the dust and rubbish of past ages, they are waiting to be gathered and transported to the New Jerusalem, to that city that shall know no decay, there to be joined and fitted together in that temple where the saints build up its fabric and Christ is its corner stone.

The temple of God is so vast it is beyond the human comprehension, and it is still increasing. All they who, before Christ, confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth, and who died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, are all numbered for the temple—all the redeemed, the fruit of the centuries since our Lord was received up into heaven. Imagine this mighty host. Imagine one God, one Savior, one Spirit, and one temple. Imagine the great number of glorified human forms which will compose that living temple. Imagine every heart overflowing with the vehemence of love, and every tongue burdened with songs of praise.

“Shall I its fair portals see?
Shall I with the ransomed be?
I have the hope within me,
To comfort and to bless.
Shall I win the prize itself?
O tell me, please tell me yes.”

PETER VIEWS PAUL

members our weakness—and He takes both into account in judging each individual case, each thought, and each action.

Our judgment of others is always more or less affected by the “glasses” we wear. Too many of us look upon those around us through “bifocals,” double lenses of our own making. With the upper part of our glasses we see the good qualities of others dimly, imperfectly, and lacking in detail, as we would glance indifferently at the faint outlines of a far-away range of hills, and but little impression is made upon our minds by what we thus observe. But through the lower lens we see their bad qualities very clearly and more or less magnified as to detail, and the impression made upon us is both vivid and lasting.

Another difficulty with us lies in the fact that our glasses are not ground altogether “true.” They either enlarge or else they reduce the image, to say nothing of taking it out of its correct perspective. God, however, sees both the good and the bad within us all through the faultless lens of truth.

Peter views Paul, and Paul observes Peter, through the eyes of their own inner natures. And we see each other through the shadows cast by our own characters.

Jesus seems to have had this thought in mind when He said, to quote the vivid rendering of Goodspeed’s translation, “Pass no more judgments upon other people, so that you may not have judgment passed upon you. For you will be judged by the standard you judge by, and men will pay you back with the same measure you have used with them. Why do you keep looking at the speck in your brother’s eye, and pay no attention to the beam that is in your own? How can you say to your brother, ‘Just let me get that speck out of your eye,’ when all the time there is a beam in your own? You hypocrite! First get the beam out of your own eye, and then you can see to get the speck out of your brother’s eye” (Matthew 7:1-5).

That is very practical advice. In the 1st verse as we have it in the King James Version, the word “judge” is evidently used in the sense of condemn or criticize. How true it is that the one who is constantly criticizing others is himself the most frequently criticized. And this is natural and to be expected. Criticism leaves the critic himself open to criticism. If he criticizes others he cannot deny others the right to criticize him. The physician must take his own medicine. This seems to be a compensating law of nature as well as of God. The critic places himself in a glass case and invites the world to scrutinize his deficiencies and mistakes. Always calling attention to the shortcomings of others, he actually invites them in turn to direct the spotlight of public inspection upon his own life. And few critics there are who can bear unflinchingly such thorough analysis of their lives and conduct.

When we find ourselves seeking for and pointing out the good in those around us, rather than their faults and failings, we may rest assured that we are making spiritual progress. Such an attitude on our part will indicate that God has been developing within us more of good than we have developed of evil. In short, we may conclude that we are becoming a little more Christlike in our inner natures.

On Sharon’s plains still blooms the fragrant rose,
Thy lily bright still on the mountain grows,
With verdure clad the hills in spring appear,
Their stately heads aloft, the palm trees rear.
E’en in its desolation, Judah’s land now tells
Of fairer times, when o’er its heights and dells,
Nature outpoured costliest gifts, and spread
Her sheaves of plenty: and her beauties shed.
The gleams of light which gild the hallowed land,
The flowers that bloom e’en on the parched sand,
The plains that wave with harvest’s golden store,
The streams that gush from hill to rocky shore:
These are the pledges of returning grace,
These are the smilings of the Father’s face;
They speak a language which midst Israel’s griefs
Tells of a time of happiness and peace.
The day shall dawn for thee, thou land of bliss,
Fruitful and fair shall be thy wilderness,
And Israel’s tribes from utmost earth shall come,
To dwell forever in their ancient home.

The Modern Literature

Recent trends in religious literature, both among books and among papers, indicate a swing in popular opinion toward opposite extremes. Against the militantly fundamentalist writers, whose work is generally marked by a fanaticism which gives regard to neither fact nor theory, are set the advocates of the new innocuousness, whose work represents the highest in idealism and the lowest in practicality.

One journal, for example, has obtained a wide circulation by treating religion with the same fervor that is used by the tabloids in treating common happenings. The Jews, shrieks the journal, are responsible for the depression, for the drought, for the crime wave, and for modern atheism. The Jews are the epitome of all that is evil. The Protocols of Zion are waved to the public as a red flag to a bull. Every editorial in the magazine on the Protocols has approximated criminal libel, and not one has been founded upon fact. Inspired by the thought that the Nazi Government would cheerfully tell him the truth about the Jewish situation, the editor made a trip to Germany, whence he reported through his columns the Hitler-fostered propaganda that the Jews were suffering almost nothing. Unfortunately, the paper in question is one of wide influence, and, indeed, has even tinged the views of some members of the Church of God with its pernicious falsity.

On the other extreme are the Sunday school papers, which neither help nor harm. Like them, the majority of religious periodicals march toward peace propaganda, political reform, and social equality. Religion is not vital; it is simply a system of morals which presents an organization for efficient lobbying in the headquarters of the politicians. The creeds once held as essential by the churches which support these journals are ignored as so much trash. The basis upon which denominationalism and, in fact, Christianity itself is forgotten.

If a paper is to carry on under the banner of Christianity, it should be Christian. It should gird itself to battle in defense of Bible teachings; it should stage a strong offensive against the modern indifference; it should be more than sweet and cloying, it should be bitter and caustic. The religious paper is a useless expenditure of time, labor, and money unless it offers more than is offered by guest editorials in The American and political arguments in Today.

Positive dogmatic articles, articles poured from a pen dipped in the blood of martyrs and driven by an uncontrollable urge to convince and to convict, are difficult to secure. Examination of THE RESTITUTION HERALD for the past six months will reveal that nearly 80 per cent of the articles in the paper which concern the mortality of man, the future kingdom of God on earth, baptism, the Trinity, and kindred subjects have been selected by the editors or have been re-copied from old tracts. The Berean page, a department presumably dedicated to the rigid advocacy of essential Bible doctrines, has been peculiarly lacking in articles on those doctrines.

Such subjects have no place, except in rare instances, in editorials. The editor's job is to point with pride and to view with alarm. It is the task of the essayist and the author of articles to preach dogmatism in its separate forms. And it is the job of both editor and writer to avoid either the misapplication of facts or the riding of unnecessary hobbies. Scandal, and particularly false scandal, has no place in a religious paper. Neither has libel. Neither has a general theory of moralism without a Bible background.

Summa Cum Laude

There are three possible honors to be tacked to the sheepskin upon graduation from many universities: cum laude, magna cum laude, and summa cum laude—which mean, respectively, with honor, with high honor, and with highest honor. These three notations are made in addition to the simple statement that the owner of the sheepskin has satisfactorily completed the prescribed course of study.

Other schools have adopted the system of grading in only two ways: failing and passing. This latter system has the advantage of abolishing the feeling of inferiority among average students, but it has the disadvantage of also doing away with the spirit of competition, that essential element without which nothing in this world can long endure.

God grades upon the second basis, but with an inducement to high effort. There is no middle ground in God's sight. One either passes or fails. If he passes, he receives eternal life in a perfect earthly kingdom; if he fails, he becomes dust. The grade for passing, however, is put sufficiently high that nothing but the most intense struggle will attain to the set standard. Grades are not scaled in accordance with general ability, as in the poorer high schools; one stands on his own merits only, and those merits must be exceedingly good.

The results, moreover, of meeting the requirements of God are such as to excel any summa cum laude degree ever granted by a university. God's school passes one, not in a blaze of transient glory, but in a glory that will endure through all eternity, an eternity unmarked by economic depressions which result in emoluments incompatible with one's education and native ability. And the injustices of human conceptions of intelligence and talent will mean nothing toward the granting of a diploma. Mental capacity will be no criterion; judgment will be founded upon belief in easily understood principles and persistent adherence to them.

"I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also: for therefore am I sent."

JESUS STARTS OUT ON HIS FATHER'S BUSINESS

WHILE we were digging for hidden treasure last week we discovered what Jesus' Father's "business" was. It was showing the people what they must do so that God would give them a King and a kingdom again.

We all know that a father is pleased when his son follows in his business. And we know God must have been pleased when His Son, Jesus, took up His "business." Our lesson for this week tells us how Jesus started out on His work.

To find our first nugget of gold we'll dig in the first verse of the lesson, verse 16. And it's found in four short words—"as his custom was." We would say, "He was in the habit of going to church."

Doesn't that nugget glitter brightly? It shines very clearly even in the darkness. Because that's such a good habit to form—going to church. If Jesus felt it the right thing and the necessary thing to do, surely we should.

Now Jesus was accustomed to reading in the synagogue service. And this time He read from the book of Isaiah—Esaias, they called it. Verses 18 and 19 tell you what He read. And we can find them in Isaiah 61. Doesn't it seem wonderful that Jesus read the very same words that we do?

Let's look at these words. "To preach the gospel . . . to heal the brokenhearted . . . and recovering of sight to the blind." Why! He was reading about Himself, wasn't He?

Yes, those were the very words that Isaiah foretold about Jesus more than seven hundred years before Jesus was born. Only God could have put them in Isaiah's mind. We are sure of that. If Isaiah had guessed at it, it would not have come true so exactly.

And do you think Jesus knew that He was reading all about Himself? Dig down into verse 21, and you will see. What do you say? If you don't understand those words, ask Mother to explain them to you.

Now the sad part of it was that not all the people believed Jesus when He began to preach. Not all people believe even yet today, do they? And they tried to harm Him, too. Read what they did in verse 29.

Did they finish what they started out to do to Him? Why do you think they couldn't harm Him that day? All that happened in Nazareth, His own home city.

When He went down to Capernaum, not so very many miles away from there, the people were surprised at His wonderful preaching, and they believed Him. And the whole countryside was soon talking about this wonderful Preacher, too.

Now dig into verse 38, and discover one of the first things He did after He started to follow His Father's "business," that is, preach. He healed the mother of Simon, whom we call Peter, one of the twelve apostles.

When the people heard how Jesus healed such a very, very sick person, they brought all their loved ones who were ill to Him to heal. By sunset the yard and the house where He stayed were crowded with people. He healed every one, we read in verse 40.

But I thought we said Jesus was sent to preach the kingdom of God. The words at the top of the page tell us that, too. Well, in healing the sick, He was preaching the kingdom of God. For there will be no sick people in God's kingdom. Now do you see?

That's the second nugget of gold we have found in our digging for hidden treasure this week. We will soon be rich, won't we? Rich in treasure that no one can take away from us, and that will mean more and more to us the older we grow.

"More about Jesus would I know,
More of His grace to others show;
More of His saving fullness see,
More of his love who died for me.

"More about Jesus let me learn,
More of His holy will discern;
Spirit of God, my teacher be,
Showing the things of Christ to me.

"More about Jesus in God's Word,
Holding communion with my Lord;
Hearing His voice in every line,
Making each faithful saying mine.

"More about Jesus on His throne,
Riches in glory all His own;
More of His kingdom's sure increase,
More of His coming, Prince of Peace."

"Religion is (a) a life, not a creed; (b) the science that teaches us if a man ought to do a thing, he can do it; (c) a thing which will never get heaven high unless it goes pocket deep."—Quoted from J. G. Pollard in A Connotary.

LESSON 4. — January 26, 1936

JESUS DECLARES HIS PURPOSE

Luke 4:16-44

GOLDEN TEXT

“The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord.”—Luke 4:18, 19.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

Topic: What Jesus Came to Do.

I. Jesus Rightly Divided the Word of Truth. (Vv. 16-19.) Jesus, the Master teacher of the ages, was a constant student of the Scriptures. One of the distinguishing characteristics of His ministry was the facility He showed in applying them to every needful situation. He met each temptation in the wilderness with a suitable appeal to the Word of God. He knew at once how to “find the place” where any required passage was written.

II. Jesus Studied Human Nature. (Vv. 20-27.) “Know then thyself, . . . the proper study of mankind is man,” declared Pope. Jesus was the greatest student of human nature the world has ever known. His ability to follow accurately the thought processes of others and to anticipate their final conclusions before they had been expressed in words, gave to His utterances an impressiveness they could not otherwise have possessed. “Never man spake like this man” (John 7:46), for all that He uttered was based upon definite authoritative knowledge which He had directly from God by inspiration, from the Bible through His own searching of its pages, and through the profound understanding He possessed of human nature. A study of human nature is of incalculable value in one's preparation for his life's work.

III. What Jesus Came to Do. (Vv. 28-30.) “Then said I, Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me,) to do thy will, O God.”—Heb. 10:7. Perhaps no other scripture expresses so fully and so accurately the true nature and unity of the purpose of Jesus Christ in the world than this, which is quoted in part from Psalm 40:7, 8. Jesus emphasized the same thought when He said just before His crucifixion, “I have glorified thee on the earth: I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do.”—John 17:4. More specifically, Jesus came to preach the glad news of God's coming kingdom, and to assure all who believed in Him and in His message, of the forgiveness of their sins and of the opportunity of reigning with Him in that kingdom throughout the ages.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

A Worshiper. Jesus knew the full meaning of the Psalmist's words, “We took sweet counsel together, and walked unto the house of God in company.” God has always desired the worship of His creation. Cain and Abel presented their offerings before the Lord. Enoch walked with God. Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord, and Abraham became the heir of the world and father of the righteous through his faith in and worship of the God of gods. To come near the heavenly Father, one must not only believe in Him, but be a faithful and regular worshiper of Him. The question often arises, Must an individual go to church in order to worship God in spirit and in truth? Well, God has always designated certain places for His children to appear for worship. When the children of Israel were in the wilderness, God commanded Moses to build Him a sanctuary where He might dwell among Israel. It was in this dwelling place (Ex. 25:8) that Israel offered their sacrifices, received yearly atonement for their sins, and were informed of the will of God. Jesus found the temple a place of praise, prayer, thankfulness, and inspiration. There is no excuse for a person well in body neglecting to assemble in the house of God for worship. This assembling should become more often as we approach the day of Christ's appearing (Heb. 10:25).

True Worship. One would naturally think that all who assemble for worship of God would do so in spirit and in truth. But such is far from being the case. It is quite possible and in the majority of cases most probable that the worshipers are merely drawing nigh God with their lips, but their hearts are far from Him (Isa. 29:13). There is such a thing as regularly coming before the Lord with our sacrifices and having them looked upon by the Lord as “vain oblations” (Isa. 1:9-14). It is only those with clean hands and pure hearts that can ascend into the hill of the Lord and have their sacrifices received (Psa. 24:3, 4). Unless we can enter into His courts of praise without condemnation, it is better far to leave our gift at the altar (Matt. 5:23, 24), and be reconciled, and then come and offer our gift. For what shall it advantage a man if he merely offer his sacrifices and receive no blessing in return (Matt. 7:21-23)?—C. E. R.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

Jesus' life on earth was for a very definite purpose. His was a most important mission. It is stated very simply, but quite clearly, in His own words in Luke 4:43, “I must preach the kingdom of God . . . for therefore am I sent.” In these words He explained what that gospel or good news was that is mentioned in our golden text. He demonstrated the conditions which will prevail in His Father's kingdom by healing the broken-hearted, delivering captives, opening blind eyes, and setting at liberty those who suffered. The kingdom of God was His message. The miracles were His evidence of authority, the means by which He established faith in His message. To bring blessing to all who believed His message was His life purpose.

A knowledge of the conditions under which the Jewish people lived at the time of Jesus' life on earth is most necessary for a complete understanding of these lessons. This should be supplied by the teacher. Show that the heart of every true Jew longed for the coming of One who would release his people from the tyranny of Rome. Prove that the kingdom of God, which was the theme of Jesus' preaching, was an earthly kingdom, with rulers and subjects (1 Chron. 29:11, 23). Isaiah 60 gives us a very clear picture of God's kingdom, not as it was in Jesus' time, nor even in Solomon's time, but as it will be when the King, once rejected, shall be acknowledged and honored by all. Do you want a part in it?

“All kings shall fall down before him: all nations shall serve him.”—M. G.

JUNIOR CLASS

Lesson Story. When you get very, very sick what do your parents do? Why, of course, they send for the doctor. Now how would it make you feel to know that when the doctor got there he could make you well at once, make you feel as if you had never been sick? Jesus could do that very thing, as we will find out in our lesson today.

In the days when Jesus was here on earth some of the people believed that if you were crazy or afflicted with some disease that it was the devil in you. Once when Jesus was teaching in Galilee, some such person came to Him. They said he had the spirit of an unclean devil. But whatever it was, Jesus made the man well.

From there Jesus went to Simon's house. Simon's mother-in-law was very, very ill at his home. She had some kind of a dreadful fever. When Jesus saw how very sick she was, He went over to her bedside and made her well at once. She got up out of bed and commenced working at once.

How happy these people must have been! Will there ever be a time on the earth again when these things will happen? Oh! yes, when Jesus comes again.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

PENNELWOOD CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

Pennellwood wishes the staff and readers of The Herald a very happy and prosperous year 1936, and our prayer is that we may all be found ready if Christ should call His own during the coming year.

Our remodeled chapel was ready for the Christmas services on December 22.

The new year finds Pennellwood without illness, for which we are very thankful.

Desiring to devote a period of time to evangelistic effort and lectures on "The Great Pyramid of Egypt Corroborating the Scriptures," Bro. F. L. Austin has been granted a six weeks' leave of absence from his pastoral miss him very much, but our loss will be the gain of others.

Mrs. L. F. Slocum, Secretary.

BURR OAK, INDIANA

Our annual meeting brought splendid reports of the past year's work. The Ladies' Society worked with their hands to assist in keeping up the building, and are to be commended. The Bereans, showing an average attendance of 14, received offerings monthly to assist locally as well as assist our National Berean Society. In fact, all have been doing a great deal to help.

Sr. Alice Maxey of Grovertown, an early member of the faith, passed away into death Tuesday morning, Jan. 7.

In the evening of January 5 our message was "The Church Moves On." Let us join with our editor of The Herald, "giving our strength and our united energy to the one great task Jesus has committed to us." It can be done by training more ministers and organizing and developing more churches. New fields must be opened. We must move forward.

A. E. Hoskins, Pastor.

The annual business meeting was held Friday evening, Jan. 3, 1936. The various reports showed that the work had been progressing in all departments. The Sunday school especially is worthy of note. On January 1, 1935, the enrollment was 39, and on January 1, 1936, it was 68.

The following officers were elected: elders—M. J. Osborn, D. Hatten; deacons—Albert Overmyer, Gerald Osborn; deaconesses—Leona Zechiel, Louise La Munion; secretary—Nettie Guge; treasurer—Mary Hatten; trustee—Norman La Munion; music director—Mary Hatten; pianist—Elizabeth Zechiel; Sunday school superintendent—Ferris Zechiel; Berean president—Mrs. A. E. Hoskins; Ladies' Aid president—Pearl Zechiel.

Installation services for the above officers were conducted by Bro. Hoskins Sunday morning, Jan. 5. Undoubtedly everyone who heard this beautiful but impressive service will be inspired to rededicate his life to God, and to press forward with renewed energy toward the mark of the high calling in Christ Jesus. Communion services were held as a part of or in unison with the installation service.

The evening service was well attended and the inspiring sermon, "The Church Moves On," impressed upon our minds the necessity of being ready and of inspiring others to accept the Savior while it is yet day, for unquestionably the coming of the Lord draws nigh.

Nettie Guge, Secretary.

FROM GRAHAM, TEXAS

A granddaughter from Tulsa, Okla., Billie Chandler, and I attended the week's meeting at Arkansas City, Kan., conducted by S. J. Lindsay and others. It had long been my desire to meet Bro. Lindsay. I had long known him through correspondence.

We counted the time well spent.

Later on, while visiting in Asbury, Mo., I met Sr. Alice Baine, also Sr. E. L. Burr of 725 Murphy St., Joplin, Mo. Her husband, Bradley Burr, along with Sr. Baine, was taught and baptized by Elder John Foore, or Uncle John, as he was known. Sr. Burr is now a widow. She tells me she hasn't heard a sermon of our faith for over forty years, but she is true to her conviction of the truth and the hope of life at the resurrection. If one of our ministers near could call or write her at the address given, she would appreciate it.

I certainly was well paid for time spent with one I had known over fifty years. She is in the eighties. Only the isolated can fully realize what we miss.

Mrs. Mittie Chandler.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

The junior choir began its rehearsals the first part of January and is now prepared to help the Sunday night meetings in a musical way. Mrs. Raymond Palmer is directing this group of young people.

The senior choir began work upon an operetta which it plans to present to the public on February 21. This is a very beautiful piece of work and we look for good results in more than one way. Miss Evelyn Barr is in charge.

A business meeting of the church membership is called for January 17 to consider and make plans for the future. The church hopes to be able to make proper use of the larger opportunities which are presenting themselves.

Sunday school superintendent Lloyd Stevens held a very enthusiastic meeting of his officers and teachers at his home on January 10.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

LECTURES ON THE GREAT PYRAMID

A series of prophetic lectures to be presented at Oregon, Ill., by Bro. F. L. Austin, former pastor of the church at that place, will begin on the night of January 21 and continue over the following Sunday. The subjects discussed will center about the prophetic and scientific significance of the Great Pyramid of Gizeh, one of the seven wonders of the world. The lectures will be amply illustrated with charts and stereopticon pictures. All who are within reach of Oregon are urged to attend this remarkable series of Bible and scientific studies.

BRADLEY - LONG

On Thanksgiving Day, Nov. 28, 1935, Vaughn Long of Hartford City, Ind., and Miss Elsie Bradley of Brumfield, Ky., were united in marriage in the home of the bride's father, J. C. Bradley. Bro. Cantwell Drabestott of Hartford City was the officiating minister. Bride and groom are both members of the Church of God.

Those present at the wedding were Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bradley and two children; J. C. Bradley; Misses Hazel and Mildred Roney; J. F. Carpenter; and the writer. The couple are making their home with the bride's father and may be addressed at Brumfield, Ky.

Miss Quincy Carpenter.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Lyman Booth, whose article, "God's Temple," starts on page 3 of this issue, was born April 22, 1849. A frequent contributor to The Herald, he has long been an active member of the Church of God. Despite his 87 years, his penmanship is still the best we receive, and his mind moves on with unimpaired capacity. His present address is 1124 N. Massasoit Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Mrs. Faye Brown, one of the younger married members of the Niagara Falls, N. Y., Church of God, underwent a major operation at Memorial Hospital in her home city Sunday, Dec. 29. She was preparing to go to Sunday school when she was suddenly taken ill. She is doing well considering the seriousness of the operation. Her address is 519 Eleventh St., Niagara Falls.

A de luxe edition of the King James Version for only $4.75! Excellent blackface self-pronouncing type; genuine Morocco binding; India paper; marginal references; thorough cyclopedic concordance in large clear type; 17 colored maps and index; specially boxed. Order No. 81 from the National Bible Institution, Oregon, Ill.

At the annual meeting of the Truth Seekers' Class (Fonthill, Ont.) held December 27 these officers were elected: president, Marion McClellan; vice president, Clarke Gilbey; secretary, Margaret Bell; treasurer, Margaret Shute; pianist, David Elliott. A luncheon was enjoyed at the close of the business session.

The report given by the Sunday school secretary of the Oregon, Ill., church listed an enrollment of 141 and an average attendance for 1935 of 117, or 90 per cent of the total membership of the school. Of the enrollment, about 60 per cent comes from homes outside the Church of God.

A letter from D. G. Harvey, one of the pastors of the Kokomo, Ind., Church of God, reports that during the past year heart trouble has prevented him from doing much of his regular work. He hopes "to be in a condition to send in a few short articles before the conference season."

Bro. T. A. Weldon, of the Fonthill, Ont. congregation, is recovering from an attack of rheumatism that confined him to his bed for several weeks. His 82nd birthday was January 1, 1936. He lives at Thorold, Ont.

CHRIST WILL COME

EVERY promise that God has made to man with reference to the future is dependent upon the second coming of Christ. Let us look into some of these promises, and see how every one of them depends on the second coming.

Before Jesus left, He told the disciples, "In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also."—John 14:1-3. We see from this that these mansions will not be inhabited by the saints as soon as they die. The promise is, "I will come again, and receive you unto myself." So if Jesus never comes again, these mansions are being prepared in vain. We can scripturally go further and say, If Jesus never comes again, these mansions will always remain empty and unoccupied. So it is vain for us to expect to inhabit these mansions unless Jesus comes the second time.

Unless Jesus comes the second time, His people will never see Him nor be with Him again. On the night of His betrayal Jesus prayed, "Father, I will that they also, whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am."—John 17:24. But this prayer will never be answered and the saints will never be with Jesus again unless He comes the second time. This is so because on the same night Jesus said, "If I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." So this opportunity of being with Him again depends on the promise, "I will come again." This same truth is repeated in 1 Thessalonians 4:17: "Then (at His coming) we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord." Thus we see the promise to "be with the Lord" depends on the second coming, when the sleeping and living saints shall "be caught up together . . . to meet the Lord in the air." There will never be any such meeting, nor opportunity to be with the Lord again, unless He comes the second time.

The dead sleep an eternal sleep unless Jesus comes again. His promise is, "I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live."—John 11:25. Another promise is, "The dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live."—John 5:25. But if the second coming of Christ never takes place, the voice of the Son of God will never be heard again, and the dead will sleep perpetually. To prove this we go again to 1 Thessalonians 4:16: "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first." This makes it sure that the hearing of His voice and the resurrection of the dead depend on the second coming of our Lord. So if He never comes, the dead will never live again.

I ask the man who believes that death does not interrupt life, who believes that he is with the Lord immediately after death, What disadvantage would it be to him if there never should be a second coming of Christ? This is a hard and embarrassing question to answer. To one who believes that the dead do not die but go immediately to be with the Lord, there is really no importance to the second coming of Christ, so far as his future is concerned. When I once pressed the question, "How would you be disadvantaged if Christ should never come?" the reply was, "We would always have to live without a body; the only reason Christ is coming the second time is to invest the saints with a body!"

We can only say that if this be true, then according to the teachings of Paul it must be a very undesirable thing to be with Christ without a body. In fact, if Paul believed that, he also believed that if that body was never going to be given to the saints, it would be better to get what we can out of this life and be no more, than to live always with Christ without a body. That such was his conviction appears from 1 Corinthians 15:32, "If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantage it me, if the dead rise not? let us eat and drink; for to morrow we die." If the resurrection to Paul meant only the providing of a body for him to live in, then being with Christ without this body never meant much, for he said if the resurrection never occurred it would be better to "eat and drink; for to morrow we die."

All of which proves that Paul's only hope of life beyond the grave was a resurrection; and if the second coming of Christ never took place, there would never be any future life, and the dead would sleep an eternal sleep.

In view of this fact we can readily see why those who teach that death transports the saints into the inheritance of all the promises of the future do not place much importance upon the second coming of our Lord. Surely there is no inhabiting of the mansions Christ has gone to prepare; there is no being with Christ again; there is no resurrection from the dead; there is no future life—unless the Lord comes the second time.—Allen B. Walker in Signs of the Times.

Brain or Soul?

"As he thinketh in his heart, so is he."—Prov. 23:7.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 12.—By a mild application of heat to a small section of his brain, surgeons of the medical school of Stanford University have stopped the congenital muscular twitchings of a youth who had suffered from the trouble for nineteen years. If the "soul" is the "thinking part" of man, and controls the actions of the body, how was the soul affected by the work of the surgeons?

FULFILLING A PURPOSE

By Alta King

SISTER E. C. OLMSTEAD, in THE HERALD for December 17, asks why Jacob and Rahab were blessed for the lies they told, since God hates a lying tongue.

The answer is not difficult. Jacob and Rahab were not blessed for the lies they told. They were blessed because they helped to fulfill one of God's purposes. We know the story of Jacob. He was greatly blessed because he was a man chosen by God to fulfill a divine purpose, and that purpose required that he be blessed. Hebrews 11:31 says, "By faith the harlot Rahab perished not with them that believed not, when she had received the spies with peace." It was God's purpose that the spies should spy out the land of Jericho. Rahab, through reports, became convinced of the God of Israel's purpose and of His power to carry it out (Josh. 2:8-11), and she aided that purpose. Though she was prompted by an unworthy fear for the safety of herself and family and lack of patriotism, and though she saved the spies through lies, she nevertheless aided God's purpose, and she and her family were saved by God through the Israelites.

The real question which these two situations bring to mind is, Why does God sometimes make use of liars and their lies to fulfill His purposes? Why does He make those things He condemns instruments of service?

It is difficult for human reasoning to see the "why" of much that God does. His wisdom and His power are far beyond human wisdom and power, and to the degree that His wisdom and power exceed human wisdom and power, just to that degree do the things He does through that wisdom and power exceed human understanding. Hence much that He does humans must merely accept, and accept it as right, as Sister Olmstead does.

Nevertheless there is spiritual growth in reasoning concerning the "why" of these things, provided the reasoning is not prompted by a questioning of the rightness of the thing done. The rightness of things not understood must be accepted on the basis of the fact of God's supreme wisdom and power guided and overshadowed by the supremacy of His love. Denying the rightness of something God does is denying this fact, and denying this fact is denying God Himself, destroying Him in the denier's consciousness.

This ray of light has come to one reasoner concerning what God does. Man is by nature selfish. Out of this selfishness comes all the evil in the world. Much that God does He of necessity does through man, since what He does is done to develop man. He of necessity, therefore, uses man as he is, and using man as he is He uses selfishness and sin that come out of selfishness. But He never blesses man because of that selfishness and sin. He blesses him because of the development of His purpose. Furthermore, when God is through using a man for the development of whatever purpose He has in mind, the man is not the same man he was at the beginning. God uses a man as he is, but He does not leave the man the same as he was when He began using him. God accomplished one of His purposes through Jacob's life, but Jacob suffered for that lie, and when God was through dealing with him, Jacob was no longer a scheming liar. We do not have the story of God's finished dealing with Rahab, but we are sure that when that dealing was finished Rahab was no longer a liar.

The use of evil is the prerogative of a supreme God which humans have no right to question or to imitate. And it is a prerogative justified by the fact that supreme wisdom and power directed by supreme love use evil only to man's final good and upbuilding.

"Silence the voice of Christianity, and the world is well-nigh dumb, for gone is that sweet music which kept in order the rulers of the people, which cheers the poor widow in her lonely toil, and comes like light through the windows of morning, in men who sit stooping and feeble, with failing eyes and a hungering heart. It is gone, all gone; only the cold, bleak world left before them."—Parker.

NINETEEN THIRTY-SIX

By C. E. Randall

THE year 1935 is sealed in its eternal tomb. The opportunities to do good that were open before us, but which we neglected to avail ourselves of, will diminish from the sum total of our reward when the same is portioned out in the day of recompense. Not only will our reward be affected, but our ability to grasp future opportunities will be limited proportionately. The mistakes and neglects of the past need not and should not be repeated during 1936.

We know not what the present year will bring forth. That it will be a year filled with events of great portent, seems to be an accepted fact throughout the world. The exact nature and content of these events is known only to Providence. To individuals in whom Christ richly dwells and who are looking for that blessed hope, unusual events, dire and calamitous happenings, need not cause consternation and amazement; but these should, however, cause a girding of our armor and quickening of our spirit. Having reached a close proximity to the border line of man's day, there should be no delay in "redeeming the time" and taking every precaution to make our calling and election sure. Time is too far spent to waste on trivialities and non-essentials. The majority of New Year's vows and resolutions are broken before the thoughts are filed in the chamber of memories, and perhaps some are better broken than kept, for so it is with bad resolutions. There is one resolution we all should make and keep, and that is that in 1936 we shall endeavor to utilize every opportunity to glorify the Lord.—Church of God Messenger.

It Couldn't Be Helped!

An Editorial

FOR a number of years by far the greater part of our time at headquarters and during General Conference sessions has been devoted to financial matters. It Couldn't Be Helped! The depression caught us so deeply in debt that we could do nothing else but battle with all our mind and strength to keep our craft afloat through the storm. But, thank God, we have survived! And now that the waves are beginning to subside a little and the winds of adversity are lessening, our little vessel seems more ready to respond to its helm and we can set our course along constructive, evangelistic, spiritual lines again.

And how glad we are to do this! Never has the need for definite biblical teaching been so great as it is now. And never has the opportunity for successful work along these lines been brighter and more promising than is the case today. And so, Let's Get Busy!

First, we must have a definite forward-looking program ready to present at the next General Conference. Such a program should not be a "one man affair," but the product of the most judicious and spiritual minds of the entire Church of God in the United States and Canada. To appoint a committee to formulate such a program would not be sufficient. We must have the united heart and mind of the whole body cooperating in this matter. The laity as well as the ministry must be drafted into the general service of the church. We must have the prayers, the advice, and the suggestions of every man and woman who is zealously interested in advancing the vital truths for which we stand.

Therefore we invite our brethren everywhere to send us their answers to the questions with which this editorial concludes. We do not plan to publish the answers received in full, but to summarize them, and out of such a summary to build a real plan of campaign for next year's General Conference work. Answers should be as brief as possible, and given in the order named.

1. How may we find and open up favorable new fields for evangelistic work?
2. How may the General Conference assist and encourage evangelistic work among established local churches and state conferences?
3. How may we provide attractive, appealing, readable literature and distribute it effectively and economically in the widest possible manner?
4. How may we increase the circulation of THE RESTITUTION HERALD outside our own membership as a missionary enterprise? (Please turn to Page Eight)

Mass Exodus of German Jews To Palestine Proposed

"And to this agree the words of the prophets."

LONDON, Jan. 18.—Three leading Zionists of England, Sir Herbert Samuel, former High Commissioner to Palestine; Viscount Bearsted, head of the Shell oil interests; and Simon Marks, British chain store magnate, are proposing to their fellow Jews in America the mass expatriation of from 100,000 to 250,000 Jews from Germany to Palestine.

In response to the request of The Literary Digest, Dr. Nahum Sokolow, ex-president of the World Zionist Federation, made the following comments on the proposal:

"The agony of German Jewry has reached such a degree and the emergency become such a complex international problem that something great and substantial must immediately be undertaken, not only by world Jewry, but by all humanity."

"If Governments with impunity may treat a section of their citizens with any and every injustice, the guaranty for moral security for human life is destroyed," declared Rabbi Israel Mattuck, of the Liberal Jewish Synagogue of London.

Economic problems of vast proportions must be solved, however, before the long-suffering Jews can escape from the avaricious hand of the Hitler Government. For Germany will permit the Jews, who own an enormous amount of valuable property in various forms, to remove their capital from the country only in the form of German products. To do this, would, as expressed in a wireless dispatch to The New York Times, swamp the world "with German industrial products sold necessarily at dumping prices," which would demoralize the markets.

But however great the problems may be that stand in the way of Jewish return to Palestine, every barrier will at last be broken down or overcome by force of circumstances and the millions of Israel shall return to the Homeland and never again be removed from it.

Bishop Waldorf Criticizes Ministers for Pacifist Affiliation

"They have made them crooked paths."—Isaiah 59:8.

CHICAGO, Ill., Jan. 17.—Bishop E. L. Waldorf of this city was quoted in a radio news flash today as declaring that certain Methodist ministers who have affiliated themselves with pacifist organizations have done so contrary to the established policy of the denomination. Claims which it is said some such ministers have made to the effect that affiliation with such pacifist bodies was sanctioned by the Methodist Episcopal Church, were wholly without foundation. The purpose of the church, the Bishop is quoted as declaring, is to "Christianize the social order." He promised that at his next cabinet meeting he would determine what action should be taken with regard to the unauthorized action of the ministers in question.

The present situation is a continuation of the condition in the Methodist Episcopal Church to which attention was drawn some months ago in these columns, when it was stated that a gathering of Methodist laymen was held in Chicago to protest against the anti-capitalist political activity of a group of ministers in the denomination.

Politics, whether it pertains to local, national, or international questions, except as such political situations may indicate the fulfillment of prophecy or give point to a spiritual illustration, have no legitimate place in the pulpit. This is true even when the matter at issue is a moral one. The God-given purpose of the church is not to enact or enforce law, but to bring about the transformation of sinful hearts through the power of the gospel. The social order of today can never be "Christianized." It is doomed to destruction, and that destruction is to be accomplished, not by law devised and enforced by men, but by the extension of the rulership of Jesus Christ when He returns and establishes His kingdom of righteousness.

King George V Seriously Ill

"And all the people shouted, and said, God save the king."—1 Samuel 10:24.

SANDRINGHAM, England, Jan. 20.—The beloved King of England and ruler of one fourth of the population of the earth, is reported this morning to be in an almost hopeless condition, and it is feared he may not survive the day. King George is probably the only monarch now occupying a throne who has the complete love and confidence of his subjects. Should he die, his eldest son, the popular and democratic Prince of Wales, will be his successor.

LIGHT

By Lyman Booth

LIGHT and darkness are common figures used in Scripture to represent knowledge and ignorance of spiritual things, also for the state or condition of which they are necessary incidents, as a state of holiness or a state of sin. Light is used as the agent or means which enables us to comprehend or to acquire a knowledge of a fact or truth, which may be presented to our minds, to distinguish between a true and false statement. Darkness is a relative term, meaning the lack of knowledge of a certain truth, yet having a clear vision or perfect knowledge of other subjects.

Paul was highly educated, having been taught by Gamaliel, the most efficient teacher of his day. Paul was a very devout and zealous Pharisee and still ignorant of the gospel of Christ. After the eyes of his understanding were opened he could see the beauty of the gospel. His bitter enmity gave way to fervent love. He became a bright and shining light and the beams of his light have circled the globe and entered into the homes and hearts of millions of earnest seekers after God's favors.

Paul received his light from the fountain of light, Jesus Christ, who said, "I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life" (John 8:12). The idea is, He is the light that leadeth to life eternal.

Though He applied the same title to His apostles, they were only "lights in the Lord," and though He spoke of John the Baptist as "the burning and shining light" (or lamp of life), yet John was not that light of which the prophets wrote and which they desired to see; but was "sent to bear witness of that light." Under this title Messiah was mentioned by the Prophet (Isa. 42:6, 7). "I the Lord have called thee in righteousness, and will hold thine hand, and will keep thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles; to open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that sit in darkness."

When Jesus was urged by the Jews to announce Himself as the Messiah and to restore to them the kingdom of Israel, He turned aside from their wish, and told them of a deeper and universal truth, that He was the light, the life, and the living water, and that He was sent by the Father. They were looking for a Messiah for their nation only; but He wanted them to look upon Him as the Redeemer of the world, the Savior of mankind. He desired that they should consider Him in relation to all men as a teacher to a pupil, as a master to a servant, as a guide to a traveler, as a captain to a soldier, as a shepherd to the sheep.

The light that Jesus gives is independent of time or place because it is eternal. He that has that light shall have light and peace within. He shall have light shining round him continually, guiding him all the while on his journey through mortal life, and he will reflect that light in his conduct and conversation.

Light is the nourishing element of life through all the realms of animated nature, and to all species of vegetation. The chemistry of the sun, in a mysterious way, transmits matter into everything that lives and moves, causing growth and increase. It distills the dew, vitalizes the myriad tribes of insects, lends color and beauty to the rose, develops the red blood cells which give strength to the body and thought to the mind, and cheers the sick; in fact, the continuance of the physical well-being depends upon the word of God, "Let there be light." "All this suggests the analogy of the spiritual light, that in bringing light to us upon whatever may concern our future destiny, brings to us a quickening—the Great in the earth, as in the ethereal frame;

Warms in the sun, refreshes in the breeze,
Glowes in the stars, and blossoms in the trees,
Lives through all life, extends through all extent,
Spreads undivided, operates unspent;

light of life eternal.

In John 9:5 Jesus said to the man born blind, "As long as I am in the world, I am the light of the world." He employed this opportunity to teach him and those present a twofold lesson, that He was the giver of both physical and spiritual sight. He drew out the blind man's faith by applying His healing power in a very simple manner, and then to test his faith sent him on a journey as Elijah did Naaman. He did as he was bidden, and came seeing. Who can imagine the joy that thrilled his whole being when the clay fell from his eyes, and the light of day invaded his eyes, and the blackness of darkness was gone? He was a type of all men, for all are born blind to the will of their Creator. The black darkness of sin covers all from birth until they are given a vision of God's purpose and scheme of salvation through His beloved Son.

The Bible Confronts the World

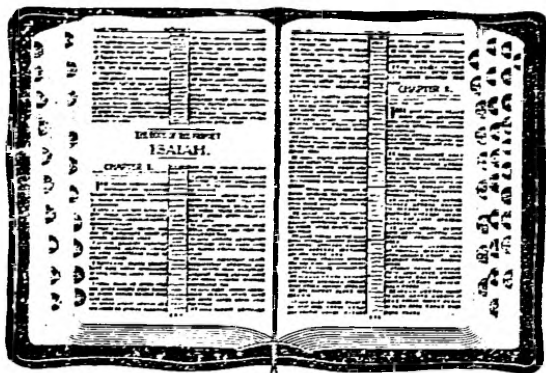

THAT the Bible consists of many documents written by many different persons, in many different centuries, in many different situations, we all know. And this knowledge, fascinating and important as it is, tells us precisely nothing as to the Bible's secret. However we explain it, the really decisive matter is this: the Bible is in some sort an intellectual and moral and spiritual organism. All its varied elements together express one message, and it is this message which transforms individuals and creates civilization.

The tragedy of biblical study lies in the fact that it is possible to say about the Bible so many things which are true, but irrelevant to the main contention. And the main contention is this: the Bible is the record of God's revelation of Himself to men; it is not the record of man's painful quest for God.

No doubt that revelation has been conditioned by no end of psychological features. No doubt it has been characterized by no end of patient adjustments to man's slowly growing capacity. But for all that it is not the record of man's trying to find God. It is the record of God's word to men. And that record, beginning with words, ends in a person, beginning with "thus saith the Lord," ends with the Word made flesh. The Bible is the record of God's great adventure in making Himself known to men, first in the luminous speech of the prophets, and at last in the person and work of Jesus.

Once this is realized we understand that we do not judge the Bible. The Bible judges us. We do not test its message. The message tests us. It is by its power of moral and spiritual judgment that the Bible has made its place all through these centuries. It is only by a perpetual re-assertion of that power of moral and spiritual judgment that it can maintain its place in the centuries to come.

Every failure of men's interesting formulas for the integration of life drives men back to that central message of moral authority and suffering love which masters the intelligence, captures the conscience, and dominates the will of responsive men. Once settle this central matter and a thousand delightful results follow. The many-sided life of man is interpreted by the many-sided literature of the Bible. The poetic spirit confronts supreme poetry. The artistic sensibility confronts exquisite artistry. Social passion confronts social vision. Nothing is foreign to this volume of flashing and exhaustless insights. But all this is a by-product of the central matter! God has spoken in human words! God has become articulate in human life in the Word made flesh! In a fresh perception of these things will be found a renaissance of the power of the Bible in the world.

II

The Bible is to the intelligent Christian what the chemistry manual is to the college student. It shows people how to reproduce for and in themselves the great religious discoveries of Christians. St. Francis and his experimentation with Matthew, chapter 10, is an example. (Probably a reference to Francis of Sales' zeal for proselytizing.—Editor.)

The Bible is the place to discover how a trust in God as He is revealed in Jesus Christ brings about an unmistakable change in the personality of the individual. He thinks and acts in terms of the needs of others. He uses his money for the welfare and not for the hurt of men. He uses his power over men for the common good and not for his own selfish ends. This is brilliantly brought out in the explanation of repentance by John the Baptist in Luke 3:1-14.

The Bible is the place to discover how the ongoing of righteousness in the race is dependent upon the cooperation of changed people with the creative God. This changed man becomes like the creative God. Then the creative God and the creative man become cooperators in creating and in conserving moral values. This is seen most clearly in the Old Testament prophets.

The book of Genesis is the place to look for four great fundamental ideas which ought and must be at the basis of all clear human thinking:

1. Back of all creation is a personal and purposive God.
2. The crowning piece of His creation is man.
3. This man is free—he can say no to his Creator.
4. This creative God is friendly and stands by man in his use of his freedom and enables him to become a creator cooperating with God in building the society beautiful.

The Bible is the perennial corrective for the thinking of people. Especially is this true touching the various interpretations of history which are current today. The Bible insists that man is more than an economic animal. It insists that history is not the exhibition of ever recurring cycles of the birth, growth, maturity, and decay of nations. It insists that history is not the "inevitable flowering out of the infinite." It insists that the race is not certainly bound to develop involuntarily into the good, the true, the beautiful. The Bible teaches from Genesis to Revelation that God, in cooperation with changed men, is busy building in and for the race the kingdom of God on earth.

The Bible enables men to see that man is capable of the most disastrous behavior. It discovers that this is due to man's unwillingness to live in accordance with the moral law. Unless man is willing to acknowledge himself a willing breaker of the moral law, there is no hope that he can himself become beautiful in character nor that he can build safe and constructive institutions. Once man confesses his sins, there comes from God to man a sense of forgiveness and an enabling power which revolutionizes man's character and sets him to work with power and enthusiasm in building personal character and wholesome institutions. It is the consciousness that God is love which stimulates man to effect this change.

III

The following are some of the innumerable values that the Bible has for our day, if it is read and studied according to some progressive, thoughtful, reverent plan and in a teachable, obedient spirit—

Such reading will restore to us the timeless elements in our thinking. We need, in every generation, to get away from purely modern conception of truth and to see life sub specie aeternitatis (freely, "in eternal form"). Bible study will give invaluable help at this point.

Such reading will show us how God has spoken to men across the centuries by widely varied means and through some very strange and curious persons. This should help us to be alert to hear Him speak in our time—usually in the quiet voice.

The Bible gives us the record of great lives—lives that have without disguising their faults and shortcomings won out in life's battle. We can see here why men fail as well as succeed—in the light of eternity.

In the New Testament we find the one original source of the interpretation of the life and teachings of Jesus by the disciples who lived and talked with Him in the flesh. Here, too, exclusively, we find the light which Paul, whom many consider the greatest interpreter of our Lord, focuses upon the direct teachings of our Lord and their implications for daily life. In the Bible alone we can find the record of the one life that fully expressed God in human terms. It will bring to us not only His clear teachings, but will paint an adequately clear picture of His living person.

There is no source of encouragement and stimulus to heroic patience like reading the records of men and women in the Old and New Testaments. Here one discovers not only life's chief end, but also how that goal is achieved.

IV

Constant and reverent reading of the Bible will make for nobility of sentiment and expression. The cheap, the vulgar, and the flippant will become more and more distasteful.

The student of the Bible who is concerned with the present-day problems will find in the biblical history situations parallel with those of today. From the attitudes of men of the past and from the outcome of such situations he may derive wisdom to deal with like problems.

Points of view found in the Bible and arguments for those views, statements of principles, ethical and spiritual truths, never better formulated, have their value for today.

The Bible reader cannot help taking a long view of history. He will not expect immediate vindications of the right. He will be patient with men and with evolution. He will view all events sub specie aeternitatis.

Righteousness will take a more and more prominent place in his thought. He will find it more important than success. He will seek for rightness both in end and in means.

The Christian reader of the Bible will be constantly challenged by the comparison between prevailing standards and the ideals of Jesus.

V

The Bible is the sole source of historical material with which every educated person ought to be acquainted. It matters not what one's attitude toward Christianity and Judaism may be, these movements have figured so prominently in the history of the world that no one can justly claim to have a liberal education who does not know the main facts recorded in the Old and New Testaments. Not to know the Bible is to be ignorant of two great forces in the modern world.

The Bible contains literature of a high order—literature that has a universal appeal. The book of Job is by common consent one of the world's great literary masterpieces. Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, and the Psalms have also a unique literary value. Then, too, there are stories in the historical books, utterances of the prophets, the parables of Jesus, and passages in the Epistles that are literary gems.

The English Bible is one of the great English classics. Merely as an example of simple, pure, dignified English it is worthy of careful study. Many of the masters of English have confessed their profound indebtedness to the English of the Bible.

The Bible teaches us the language of devotion as does no other book. We are all to some extent religious people. At least, we have our devotional moments, and in the Bible we have the classic expression of these moments or moods. No one in a Christian land can express satisfactorily his religious needs and aspirations without drawing on the language of Scripture.

The Bible is an unparalleled source of moral inspiration. To illustrate this fact one need but recall the prophets, apostles, and other heroes of biblical history, especially the life and death of Jesus of Nazareth. The Bible proclaims to us the Word of God.

Here we have a value that transcends all historical, literary, and ethical values. In the Bible God speaks to us as He does nowhere else. He unveils His face to us, so that in the light of His countenance our own life is transfigured, and duty and destiny come to have a meaning they never had before. The Bible is "the lamp that hangs from the arched roof of the sanctuary to give light to those who are seeking God."

VI

There is today an ebb tide in the spiritual life of the world. The lack of its strong currents is widely recognized.

Even the politicians are using the phrase "the more abundant life" as the goal of their "many devices." Our deepest need is to discover anew and to appropriate our supreme resource, the power of the Spirit of God in the hearts of men.

From the record of Genesis—the Spirit moving upon the face of the waters, to create a new world—to Revelation with its appeal to men to "hear what the Spirit saith," the Bible, and the Bible alone, urges this lesson. The ministry of Jesus began with the words. "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me." Only when the promise of Jesus, "Ye shall receive power, when the Holy Spirit shall come upon you," was fulfilled, could the message of His kingdom give new life to the world. Only as men realize their necessity of possessing "the mind of the Spirit," which is "life and peace," can they find solution for the problems of daily living. Only as the Spirit of God comes upon the face of the troubled waters of our social, industrial, national, international life, can the new world appear out of our present chaos.

We need not only programs, new deals, new methods—for "the life is more than meat"—but a new recognition of the fact of a life in the Spirit, so constantly taught in the Word of God, and a seeking for that life for ourselves and our world. Let us turn the pages of the Bible with that intent. Let us "search" the words of Jesus, which are not merely beautiful phrases, but essential truth of profoundly practical import for today. So shall His promise be fulfilled to us, "The Holy Spirit shall teach you all things."

Only so will the ebb tide of our life turn—the fresh currents of spiritual power sweep into the little, stagnant pools of our personal lives—and lift the ships of our endeavor forward on their voyage of "recovery." Until that day men will indeed say, "The struggle nought availeth." Only so can we attain "the life more abundant," which is "the life of God in the soul of man."

"For while the tired waves, vainly breaking,
Seem here no painful inch to gain,
Far back, through creeks and inlets making,
Come silent, flooding in, the main."

VII

The Bible can give us the wholesome pleasure of reading good literature. In simpler form than modern literature, but with all the qualities that make writing great in any age or language, the stories and poems and letters and sermons of the Bible make interesting reading. The fact that they come from a distant country and a bygone time gives them at times something of the character of the Arabian Nights; other parts are more like Homer's epics, while still others preserve the simple conversation and correspondence of everyday life.

The Bible can help us to understand human nature in ourselves and in others. Its frank, clear pictures of character and inner motives show human nature as it is. The very distance in time and space between us and the ancient Hebrews and early Christians only brings out the fundamental unity of man's thinking, feeling, and behavior. In Jacob, David, Paul, Esther, or Ruth we can see ourselves and our fellows, or what we should aspire to be, or what we must beware of becoming.

The Bible can help us to understand many practices and ideals of our present social order by showing us their roots and how they came to be. Our civilization is largely based upon the Bible. Many of our customs and conceptions, to be sure, are very different from those of the Hebrews, but others, which have been handed down to us without our knowing why, owe their existence, indirectly or directly, to the fact that the Bible has been the sacred Book of our ancestors for many centuries.

The Bible can correct and elevate our ideals and our faith by its strong and noble expression of the noblest faith and ideals ever given to man. When life becomes almost too much for us, and our faith and hope grow weak or we are tempted to lower our ideals and be conformed to this world, the high, clear challenge of the Bible helps us to be transformed by the renewing of our minds. The Spirit within bears witness, and our consciences respond, "Yes, after all, that must be so!"

The Bible can help us to live worthily through the inspiration of the great examples it sets before us. Confronting the heroes and heroines of the faith, and most of all the Son, who was well pleasing to the Father and who was tempted in all points as we are, yet without sin, we are ashamed of our unworthiness and encouraged to press on toward the goal for the prize of our high calling in Christ Jesus.

James Denny, of Glasgow, once said that the New Testament was the most astonishing outburst of intellectual and spiritual energy the world has ever known. If that is true, and it certainly is, then contact with the New Testament and with the great writings that prepared for it, vitalizes the mind. Said Jesus, "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life." "Did not our hearts burn within us," said the disciples, "while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the scriptures?" They meant two things by that. First, their emotions were aroused; and second, a swarm of new ideas and suggestions rose up in their minds.

The Bible, if persistently studied, gives us a healthy emotional tone. Cigarettes, liquor, and exciting picture shows are all of them attempts of people in depressed emotional conditions to put a little thrill into life. The Bible, beyond all question of doubt, if persistently used, gives a man an inward glow. "The statutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart." No one who has lived with spiritually-minded Bible students and has noted the light in their eyes after a time with the Holy Scriptures, can doubt this for a moment. The Psalmist was not using forced rhetoric when he said, "Thy words are sweeter than honey, yea and the honey comb."

We do not half realize the therapeutic value of the Psalms. A Christian nurse recently said to the writer, "I find the Psalms which I have in memory wonderfully effective." Let a person master—in addition to the 23rd

Psalm that everyone knows—such Psalms as the 27th, “The Lord is my light and my salvation, whom shall I fear?” and the 46th, the earthquake Psalm, “God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble; therefore will we not fear, though the earth be removed, and the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea”; and the 91st,

“He that dwelleth in the secret place of the most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty.” Let a man fill his memory with these Psalms, so that they come to him without effort. Let him get into the habit of spraying his mind in every morbid or depressed mood with these great

1936 or Never

By Richard Le Crone

SHOULD an incurable invalid, suffering constant pain and begging for a quicker, easier death be granted that mercy?”

“Should a hopeless idiot, lunatic, or helpless parietic be laboriously kept alive?”

“What is the ‘sanctity of human life’? Why is it sacred? When is it sacred?”

The foregoing are a few of the questions that have been repeatedly confronting us in every newspaper and magazine for the past few weeks. The question basically amounts to this. Do we have the right to keep suffering and incurable people alive, when death would be not only welcome to the patient, but a kindness on the part of the physician or other authorized person who either deliberately permitted it by withholding help or brought it about by more direct methods? Many and heated have been the debates concerning this question. However, we do not intend to discuss it at length here.

There is, however, one common thought running through the whole movement that should be called to our attention. They all assume that if the doctors pronounce a patient incurable, he is of necessity doomed never to recover, a position which God in His might has repeatedly proven to be wrong. The wisdom of man is foolishness with God.

Whether or not we would approve of a physician permitting the death of an incurable patient, I think that we will be unanimous in our judgment of one who indifferently allowed a person to die, while he held the cure in his hand. We would say that he was unworthy of his calling and should have his license to practice revoked. Our hearts would have room for nothing but loathing for one who was so carelessly indifferent to human life. Yet in penning these words I keep hearing in my conscience the words that Nathan used with David after having obtained his conviction of an imaginary wrongdoer. I wonder if any of my readers might hear it too as regards the case of the negligent doctor? “Thou art the man!”

Every day of our lives we come in contact with people who are sick and in grave danger of losing their lives. In our hands we hold that which will not only cure them for the time being, but will assure them that they need never lose their lives. What are we doing about it?

Sin has gained such a hold upon many of them that they do not even know that they are ill. Others realize that there is something wrong but know neither what the trouble is nor what to do about it. Unless help is forthcoming they will surely perish.

“The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.” That, dear Christian brother and sister, is where you enter the picture. They are dying for want of the gospel that it is in our power to bring to them. That neighbor of yours needs the gospel of Jesus Christ and of the coming kingdom. You have what he needs. “What are you going to do about it?”

All too often we ease our consciences by assuring ourselves that all of the sinners that we know have progressed so far that they have become incurable cases. How simply God removes our complacency if we but listen to Him. He says plainly, “There are no incurable cases.” “Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord: though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool” (Isa. 1:18). He has left us no loophole by means of which we can escape our responsibility toward that sin-sick neighbor. If he terminates his existence upon this earth without having been told of the glorious salvation that is his for the asking, ours is the responsibility. We are the physician who has indifferently let the patient die while he held a sure cure in his hand.

We are now beginning to write our records upon the clean pages of a new year. Many of us believe that it is altogether possible if not highly probable that Christ will return to this earth during 1936 and end forever our opportunity for bringing salvation to the sinner. Be that as it may, experience has taught us that lives are constantly being snuffed out by sickness and accident. As we look about us we are brought up short by the realization that by the time 1937 rolls around, many who now seem very much alive will be sleeping in the grave. Are they ready to meet their Maker? How do you know? Have you spoken to them about it?

God help us to live up to “the high calling wherein we are called.” Many there are who unless brought to Christ in 1936 will be forever lost. Whose responsibility is it? Strong and clear comes the answer: “Thou art the man.” It is 1936 or never.

accepting the truth or rejecting it. He can come to the light or stay away. If he loves light he will come. If he loves darkness he will not come. Of course if his deeds are evil he will love darkness; he will not come to the light lest his deeds make his life seem odious. On the other hand, if he comes to the true light (which is Jesus) and lives up to the convictions of Jesus' word, men will see that his works are manifestly wrought in God.

In John 1:4 we read, "The life was the light of men." The light of the sun is clear and bright. It shines, and by its light we learn many things regarding natural laws. In Scripture the true light is the constant image of God, who is Spirit, love, and truth. He is holy and makes holy. He is the ever-living one and radiates light. He is true and leads to truth. "With thee is the fountain of life, in thy light shall we see light." In Christ is the light of life: out of Christ is the night of despair.

Life, love, and light are divine attributes and are inseparably connected. God is the ever-living one; He is love and He is light, and He has given life to His Son that He might have life in Himself, and empowered Him to give life (immortal) to whomsoever He will. Jesus is the true light and through Him life, love, and light might be transmitted to those who sit in darkness that they might receive sight and rejoice in the hope of a glorious immortality.

It is stated in 1 John 1:5, "God is light, and in him is no darkness at all." Light is clear and open. It is pure. It may take cognizance of evil, foulness, corruption, without being soiled. It receives no stain. It shines on what is base and remains undefiled. If a person becomes polluted with evil and remains so, he has no fellowship with God. The Apostle contemplates the church members as sanctified, walking together in the radiance of a common light, which comes from the presence of God. He sees them worshipping in holy fear, and still in hope, enjoying blessed fellowship one with another: co-heirs with Jesus, they know their brotherhood, and they walk in that light that comes from God. They feel it theirs alone and worship in love and peace.

The Prophet Isaiah was given a view of "the light" when he wrote, "Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people: but the Lord shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee. And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising" (Isa. 60:1-3).

In 2 Timothy 1:11 we learn that Paul was appointed by our Lord to three very important offices, "a preacher, and an apostle, and a teacher to the Gentiles." He felt that each office placed great responsibility upon him. In speaking of God's purpose and grace he said that it was "made manifest by the appearing of our Saviour Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel" (see vv. 9, 10). With respect to the words "brought to light," it does not mean "to make known as a new thing," but "to illustrate, to make clear, to present in a clear light." It assumes that "life and immortality" were but dimly understood previously, but now it is presented in its fuller manifestation. With this idea in mind the text would amount to this. Previous to the coming of Christ the idea of immortal life stood before the Hebrew mind like a vast object in the twilight, partially described but imperfectly understood, but through Christ's teaching every means for attaining immortality was clearly and definitely stated. They who earnestly and diligently seek for it may easily find it.

Jesus' teaching and work were to many like the rising of the sun on the natural world, whose power, light, and splendor symbolized His glory as related in prophetic story. To those who received Him and in whose minds He kindled the hope of immortality He became "the light of the world," "the sun of righteousness." The King of Terrors when seen in this light was discovered to have no aspect that could terrify; because God's light will shine more brilliantly beyond the tomb, and the glorified, with immortal vision, will behold him in his true light.

Peter's description of the office and limit of God's Word was "a light shining in a dark place until the day dawn," that day of which the day-star has not yet risen. But if we look toward the east where we expect to see signs of coming day we may also see signs of a brighter and better day than the world has ever known. Already the political heavens are streaked with the golden rays of the "sun of righteousness" which will usher in a day that will flood the world with a light more brilliant than the noonday sun, the day wherein Christ comes to make His eternal abode with the believing and loving ones, that day to which the eyes of the faithful should ever look with fondest hope, when the Christian shall behold with complete satisfaction its glory. Until that day shall dawn, let us study, let us labor in love, let us live by the light of God's Word. Let us find this saying true, "Thy word is a lantern unto my feet, and a lamp to my step." "Thy testimonies are wonderful: therefore doth my soul keep them."

assurances, and he is vaccinated against many a form of mental disease. The president of a large college said that 33 per cent of his students had some kind of neurosis. How wonderful it would be if in their moods of adolescent depression they by previous training could have had these splendid remedies at hand! This is a form of autosuggestion that has a solid basis in reality, for in addition to auto-suggestion which their use surely is, they are also divine suggestions. They suggest to us ultimate and eternal reality.

But, of course, the supreme use of the Bible is to give us anchorage amid the moral besetments and asphyxiation that ficacious in putting my nervous and troubled patients to we breathe in, in this irreligious and godless age. The Psalms are a gas mask against immoral standards that prevail. But again in order to be useful we must not merely have ready the Scriptures, but have domesticated them. It will not do to have the Bible as a kind of fire plug which we are supposed to use in emergencies, but to which we never go for a drink of water or to wash our hands. At the crisis we are apt not to have the wrench that opens the fire plug. This means that children ought to be constantly familiarized with the Bible by having it read daily in the home and especially expounded on the Lord's Day.

The purpose of the Bible is not to straitjacket us, but set us free. "If ye continue in my word," said Jesus, "then are ye my disciples indeed, and ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." The Bible is a book which does two things apparently contradictory. It enfranchises the mind and delivers us from the slavery of religious convention and etiquette, and iron-bound form, but at the same time vaccinates us against trying experiments that all through the ages fools have ventured on to their destruction. It is the deposit of the religious experiments of millenniums and tells us what we must assume as the basis for future explorations. It, at the same moment, seems to say, "Hold to the old paths" and "explore the unknown."

Finally, the Bible is wholly free from any disposition to sweep religious difficulties under the lounge. It puts none of its skeletons into the closet, but sets them on the mantel piece and bids us take a long look at them. The Bible is unafraid of the most critical thing that can be said against it. Indeed it expresses for us doubts in the most vivid possible fashion. We shall never be able to express the objections to the fundamental position of the Bible with the vigor with which the Bible itself phrases them. Look at the Psalms: "O Lord, how long wilt thou forget me for ever? why hidest thou thyself in times of trouble? for what vanity hast thou created all the children of men?"

IX

The Bible illuminates and vitalizes one of the great cultural heritages of our modern world. As a literature of classic proportions, it reflects the genius and greatness of our Hebrew-Christian heritage as no other literature. It steers us into one of the great streams of which we are still inevitably a part.

The Bible can give men fortitude and steadiness of vision and faith in a time when traditional cultural categories are shifting and dissolving. To a rootless generation it speaks of the eternal and permanent. It is concerned throughout with the same dominant problems which face life wherever it is seriously lived in our own day. The unit of divine interest is almost everywhere a society, and this society gains its solidarity by its radical relationship to God. In Hebrew prophecy, God is everywhere the source of authority for prophetic criticism of the injustice of the social order. Justice, good will, and love are not merely desirable social attitudes. They are the commands of God by which man's life is defined.

The Bible is unexcelled as a literature for the teaching of religion. It raises in extremely illuminating historical contexts many of the major questions of the thoughtful religious student. The dominant questions of religion emerge inevitably out of social and historical contexts. Religious values are won in the Bible as they are always won in life, through patience and conflict and suffering. The records of Moses and Elijah and Hosea and Isaiah and Jeremiah all reflect this dynamic character of religious discovery.

The Bible more than any other literature which I know reflects the tremendous vitality of religion by always relating itself to the sphere of actual history. The Old Testament preeminently is a literature born out of the exigencies and crises of national and international life. The prophetic interest in the Old Testament, which is its most magnificent feature, develops throughout a period of national decline and disintegration. The interplay of ethical and religious values with the values of culture and civilization constitutes one of the challenging interests for our time.

The greatness of the Bible for us today is clearly apparent when one considers the purity of its religious interest. This is reflected in the tremendous sense of the reality of God which pervades it from beginning to end. One cannot define it satisfactorily in terms of our habitual categories of experience, mysticism, etc. All life is quickened by its relationship to God.

In personal religious living, the Bible can today speak to us as clearly and inspiringly as it has ever done. Its imperatives break in upon the lives of all of its great figures from beginning to end. Men are everywhere placed under the urgency of God's command, and throughout the history of the Bible, where men have taken it seriously as Scripture, they have so come under the influence of this persuasive characteristic that their own lives have been challenged and constrained by it. I do not believe that the specific cultural forms in which the records of the Bible are couched prevent it from continuing to be a source of power in the lives of all men who will go to it seriously, above all, to those of us in the modern world who are heirs of its great heritage.—National Commemoration Committee Pamphlet No. 5.

PETER, ANANIAS, SAPPHIRA

By R. J. Browning

THE question submitted by Brother Lindsay in the issue of December 31 bears evidence of having been presented in behalf of others, rather than himself. He knows that to solve a problem that is based upon an assumption the inquiry must be directed to the assumption itself and evidently wished this to be done by others.

That Peter, who had committed a grievous sin, should later have pronounced the doom of Ananias and Sapphira, can be regarded as strange only by assuming that a lie to the Holy Spirit is "no greater sin" than the lie told by Peter to a maid. May not Peter have had his own sin in mind when in pronouncing the doom of Ananias he said, "Thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God."

Whether Peter, when he cursed and swore, invoked the name of God we do not know; we do know, however, that even as judged by human standards the sin of Ananias and Sapphira was the greater. Peter, beyond a doubt, was under great strain, great excitement, and the temptation was sudden. It might have been less sudden had he heeded the warning of his Master: "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation" (Matt. 26:41). Peter was no sinner at heart. He loved and was beloved by the Lord. Neither was he a coward at heart: it was Peter's sword which, gleaming in the light of the lanterns, smote off the ear of the servant of the high priest in the Master's defense. Moreover, it was not until he was bidden to put up his sword and had seen the Lord calmly submit to His arrest that he, with the others, "forsook him and fled." Even his presence in the outer court may be regarded as evidence of his devotion insofar as such devotion could be of any real service.

Moreover, it must be remembered that Peter's fall and recovery were foretold: "Behold, Satan has asked for you that he may sift thee as wheat; but I made supplication for thee that thy faith fail not: and do thou when once thou hast turned again, establish thy brethren" (Luke 22:31, 32; A. R. V.). We are reminded here that centuries before this Satan made a similar request for the removal of God's protection from His servant Job; and here again Satan's power was restricted.

Turning to Acts 5, we find that the sin of Ananias and Sapphira was deliberate. It was the outworking of a carefully prepared plan conceived by those whose hearts were "filled by Satan," and agreed to by both as a means of retaining a part of the price of the land by representing the remainder as the whole. By this plan they evidently hoped to be received in the company of those who, being "filled with the Spirit," had given their all (4:31). Their swift punishment was indicative of God's displeasure.

"Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights."—James 1:17.

"BORN AGAIN"

I read within my Bible
Words our Lord commanded men:
He said to Nicodemus
That we "must be born again."

I knelt in rev'rent worship
At the altar of my Lord,
And heard the Spirit whisper
Sweetly, "Son, obey the Word."

'Twas there from o'er that altar
That my God spake peace to me,
And from my self so carnal
He in love did set me free.

'Twas there the lusts and wishes
Of my carnal self were laid,
Accompanied by my failures
That a life of sin had made.

A life of sin was ended,
And a new life had begun;
A race was just beginning
For a crown that must be won.

A life of shameful weakness
God transformed to one of power;
His Spirit now abiding
Keeps me safe, each day, each hour.

All praise must go to Jesus,
Who delivers from all sin,
And gives the faithful power
For a crown of life to win.

The Lord for you is waiting
His enfolding love to share:
Entreat Him for salvation,
Kneeling humbly now in prayer.

He'll live a life that's holy,
In your body made of clay:
To Him, dear one, surrender:
Give to God your heart today.

No need to wait for better;
Yes, the place and time are now:
An altar is before you:
God is waiting: humbly bow.

Opportunities Unfold

* * * *

By H. G. Pierce

We have been passing through a very unrestful period in the history of the world, and the past few years have brought before the public eye many new leaders, with new ideas and cures for the distressful conditions throughout the world. The political situation of the world is not the only thing that is in a state of chaos, but we also find the church is in one of the most distressing periods in its history.

We who are living in the United States of America should be truly thankful to God that we are fortunate enough to have grafted into the Constitution of our Government the right to worship and speak freely without fear of punishment or persecution, and yet this very liberty has brought about, in the church, an attitude of spiritual indifference, a state of morbid drowsiness, from which the leaders find it almost impossible to arouse the members. Many of the leaders themselves display an attitude of defeat. Too many members in the church have lost their consciousness of God, their reverence for the reading of the Bible, their separation from the world, and their habit of praying.

Yes, the church is in a weakened condition, and at the very time when we have the greatest opportunity to preach the gospel we lack a sufficient number of leaders. We who pride ourselves in our knowledge of the Word of God and yet seem to be spiritually cold, why do we not accomplish what could be done with the opportunity afforded us by our freedom of worship? Brethren, "it is high time to awake out of sleep: for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed" (Rom. 13:11). If we do not wake up and take advantage of this opportunity to be about the Master's business, perhaps we will find ourselves without this liberty which we now enjoy. Would you want your church under government regulation, such as Germany is now having?

I, like many others, was brought up in the Church of God, and seldom, if ever, attended other denominations. I have seen the Berean society in the days when it was successful, and in its present condition when it is almost humanly impossible to operate successfully; yet I was satisfied to let things continue as they were. It was only recently that I have begun to realize that there is something wrong with our church, and it began to dawn upon me after visiting a local church. They had a great song service of the old-fashioned hymns, and during the address by their pastor many of them used their Bibles and took notes. Their programs for the week were full of opportunities for service and from all indications were well attended. Why is it that so many of our church groups have no prayer meetings, no choir practices, and no Berean classes? Do we do our daily work, earning our living, with the same energy and zeal that we do our work for the Lord? Do we manage our church with the same care and interest that we would our own business; have we system, or are we careless with the Lord's work? Do you have anything invested in the Lord's work? "For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also" (Luke 12:34).

We are living under the dispensation of grace and under grace everything belongs to God. You were bought with a price, which was the blood of Jesus Christ. You cannot limit your support of the church in terms of tenths. Let us profit by the parable of the stewards and put to work that which the Master has given us.

Let all of the churches rally now while there is yet time. Let us have a revival in the heart as well as doctrine. We must sell ourselves before we can sell others. A praying church is a growing church, so let us revive the old-fashioned prayer meeting and Communion service, where we can "confess our faults one to another and pray one for another" (James 5:16).

Let us work together for the edification of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, all working toward one goal and cooperating to the full extent of our ability, putting aside all personal ill feelings toward the brethren and squabblings over minor points of doctrine.

"To those who believe in the second coming of Christ the new year brings added aspiration and expectation. This year may hold for the Lord's the crown and consummation of their hearts' longing. Some even now catch the sound of the chariot wheels of the coming King."

Prepare ye the way of the Lord (Matt. 3:3).

Analysis

It is not often that the editor of this department is privileged to publish as accurate a treatment of the prevailing condition of the church as that written by Mr. Pierce, who comes from South Bend, Indiana.

People of all types are prone to swing to extremes in whatever views they may hold dear. For a good many decades, the Church of God was so thoroughly indoctrinated (pet phrase which in the ultimate analysis means nothing) that the devotional side of Christianity was almost forgotten. As the reaction came, it came with such fervor that the foundational teaching of the church dropped out of sight.

Belief in answered prayer is as much essential doctrine as belief that Jesus is the Son of God. Practice of prayer is as necessary to rounding out the Christian life as practice of the Golden Rule. Devotional thought and factual knowledge must always be combined.

JESUS CALLS FOR HELPERS IN HIS FATHER'S BUSINESS

IF A BUSINESS is very large it needs many workers. The larger it is, the more workers are needed. God's "business," telling people about His kingdom, is a very large and important business. Jesus was the first one to work at that business. He called workers to help Him soon after He began.

Now I wonder if you know why God's "business" is of so much importance to everybody. Do you see that it concerns things that we cannot touch or handle or feel? God's "business" is not in houses or farms or offices. It is in people's lives.

That is, God is the One who tells us how to live, what to do so that we can be in His kingdom. That's what His "business" is.

Jesus, His Son, was His first and best Helper. In Luke 5, there are several stories of how Jesus helped God. But you say, He was helping people. Yes, He was, and that way He was helping God. For God wants nothing so much as to have people healed.

Why, Jesus even helped Simon Peter and the others that worked with him to catch more fish! There is a nice little story about it in Luke 5:4-6. Jesus knew everything, it seems, even where the fish were hiding. How many did they catch?

After that great catch of fish, Simon Peter left following his father's business of fishing, and he began following Jesus' Father's "business" of preaching the kingdom of God. That's what Jesus meant when He said Simon would henceforth "catch men." Ask Mother to dig down for that treasure with you so that you can see it better.

The next thing Jesus did was to heal a man who had leprosy, the most dreaded of all diseases. Jesus was surely a very, very busy man. No wonder He called helpers.

How do you think Jesus had the strength to do all this work? How could He keep going? Dig down into verse 16, and you will see.

Ah, He prayed to His Father for strength. And surely, since Jesus was doing His Father's work, He would send Him the needed strength. That's our first nugget of gold.

Now the next story is of the man they let down through the roof. I'm sure all of you can tell that story. Our second nugget of gold is found in this story. Look in verse 20, the first six words. What does it mean to have faith? You and Mother examine that nugget together and see how it glitters. Or perhaps it is Father who is reading with you.

When Jesus healed people, did it take them a long time to get well? Just a little better each day until at last they were completely cured? As the doctors do for us?

Oh, no! Not at all. Jesus healed them immediately. They jumped up and praised and glorified God. No wonder the people standing around said, "We have seen strange things to day."

If Jesus should come right now, He'd find just as much work to do (and perhaps more) as He found in those days so long ago. He was called The Great Physician, and truly He was great because He never failed.

When Jesus was healing all these sick people, He was calling to them to leave their old ways of sin and start a new way of righteousness. Jesus forgave their sins, and He was the only one, except God, who could do that.

Sometimes instead of saying, "Be healed," He said, "Thy sins are forgiven thee." And then they were healed. It was the same thing.

Oftentimes we get sick from something wrong we have done, such as exposing ourselves to cold or dampness, or overeating, or overworking, or even worrying. If we had perfect faith in God we wouldn't worry at all, would we?

And when we think of Jesus going about all Galilee doing good, healing the sick, opening deaf ears and blind eyes, it makes us wish for the time to come when He will be here again. Then not only a few in Galilee will be healed, but all who have faith in Him.

He will need helpers then, too, and we can be among His helpers, if we believe in Him now and try to live as He wants us to live. We can help Jesus in His Father's "business" when He comes again.

How many of you know the names of Jesus' twelve helpers He had when He was here on earth? Here is an easy way to learn them:

"Jesus had disciples twelve,
And the Bible tells their names;
First the fishers four He called—
Peter, Andrew, John, and James.
Philip and Bartholomew,
Thomas, Matthew, James the Less;
Simon, too, and Thaddeus,
Judas, then, so traitorous."

JESUS ENLISTS HELPERS

Luke 5

Devotional Reading: Isaiah 62:6-12

GOLDEN TEXT

"They forsook all, and followed him."—Luke 5:11.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

Topic: Our Call to Serve With Christ.

Aim: To show that Christ asks us to help Him in carrying the gospel into all the world.

Class Discussion: What qualifications should be sought when selecting religious leaders? What constitutes a call to the ministry? Should all Sunday school and church officers be chosen with as much care as is exercised in the selection of a pastor? How may a young person prepare for Christian service in his own community?

I. Jesus, Teacher of Teachers. (Vv. 1-3.) Throughout His public ministry Jesus was conscious of the dual purpose of His work as a teacher: He must preach the gospel of the kingdom of God by word and by miracle to all whom He could induce to listen, and while He was doing this He must also prepare others to carry on His work after His departure to the Father. To accomplish both purposes at the same time He called twelve men to accompany Him on His journeys, to hear everything He said, and to witness all that He did, that they at a later time might be His representatives and advocates. If we expect to receive a call to God's service in the future we should associate now as closely as we can with Jesus Christ in thought and word and action, that we may be able to express in our own lives and in our own words the great truths of saving faith.

II. Jesus Illustrates the Call to Service. (Vv. 4-9.) It is significant that Jesus took occasion to perform the miracle of the miraculous draught of fishes at a time when those whom He chose to witness it were hopelessly cast down by their own lack of success with their nets. Our Lord wished to show these future apostles that their success as fishers of men would be assured by His presence among them. The miracle He wrought on this occasion also served to strengthen their faith in Him greatly. And faith was to be the most necessary element in their education. They must not doubt the Lord's ability to carry them through any difficulty, however great it might be, while they were engaged in His service.

III. Jesus Calls Four Laboring Men and a Rich Official Into His Service. (Vv. 10, 11, 27, 28). Our Lord has a place in His service for any man or woman, young or old, who is willing to place himself or herself unreservedly under His leadership. Four of those whom Jesus called in this lesson were from the humbler walks of life and one was a man of wealth and social position, but Jesus had a place—an equal place—for each of them among His workers. No matter what one's qualifications may be there is always a place where he may labor successfully for the Master. A recognition of the need of the world for the gospel and a willingness to place oneself wholly at the disposal of Christ are all the "call" one needs to the ministry of Jesus.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

A United Ministry. When Jesus said, "Follow me," we have the beginning of the Christian ministry in its great work of preaching the gospel of the kingdom to all nations. Those that He selected were not the mighty and great in the eyes of the world, but those who were willing and who would really follow Him. Jesus was selecting men to whom He could impart wisdom and grace. His Word was in their hearts as a burning fire shut up in their bones. Like Jeremiah, they were weary in forbearing, they could not stay, they must follow. The Lord gave the Word, they went forth sowing beside many waters. Their work was well done. A fire was kindled that time and opposition cannot quench. They were set apart by the Word and became a savor of life to some and a savor of death to others. Their great power came through their unity in the One that had called them.

Obedying the Word. Peter, along with his companions, had been fishing all night without success. Jesus commanded them to cast out their net and Peter answered the Lord by saying, "We have toiled all night, and have taken nothing: nevertheless at thy word I will let down the net." This is the type and kind of obedience to the Word that is needed today! No questioning, no doubting, simply obeying and believing. Hearing the Word is not enough, we must be doers of the Word (Jas. 1:22, 23). Jesus said, "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." When we obey the voice of the Lord, it is well with us and happy days are in store for us. Obeying from the heart that form of sound doctrine delivered unto us by the true ministers of God will give cause for thanksgiving in the future (Rom. 6:17). Rejecting the Word will bring sorrow and judgment upon ourselves. Examples may be noted in Saul, Jonah, and Agrippa. Rejecting God's Word is rejecting the Lord (John 12:48). We have read after writers who, if they had taken half the effort to find the true meaning of the Word as they did to prove that it meant something else or was spurious, would have more greatly edified both the readers and themselves.—C. E. R.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

Jesus' message of the kingdom of God was so important, His task so great, the time so short, that He called workers to help Him. Notice from what occupations they were called; their unquestioned acceptance of their new Leader. Faith is a very necessary thing in every undertaking, faith in one's leader and faith in one's work. "They forsook all, and followed him." A oneness of purpose and effort in both Leader and helpers! What rewards did Jesus promise the twelve for leaving all and following Him (Matt. 19:27, 28)? Again a promise of an earthly kingdom, surrounded by glory and of an enduring nature.

Does Jesus still need helpers to spread His gospel of the kingdom of God? As long as the one next to you does not know that gospel, helpers are needed. How can you qualify for a place among His helpers? By faith in the Leader and in His message, just as Peter and Andrew and Levi and the others did. Faith in the message involves, naturally, obedience to it. How can you obey unless you learn what the message is? Two important phases of that message were revealed by Christ in His parting words before His ascension to heaven—"repentance and remission of sins" (Luke 24:47).

"He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved."—M. G.

JUNIOR CLASS

Topic: Jesus Asks for Helpers. Text: Luke 5:1-11. Memory Verse: "Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men."—Mark 1:17b.

Lesson Story. Today we are going on a journey. We are going to try to imagine ourselves away across the ocean in the land of Palestine. We must also imagine the time to be when Jesus was here on earth many years ago. Here we are gathered on the shore of a little sea. What's that we see? It's two boats. They have been pulled up to shore, and there are some men. See, they have been fishing and are now washing their nets. But we do not see any fish. No, they didn't catch any this time.

But who's that man standing near and why are all the people crowding around Him? Why, that's Jesus and the people are trying to catch every word He says. There He goes, into the boat.

Now He has finished, and is talking to Simon, in whose boat He has been sitting. He says, "Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets."

Simon answers, "We have fished all night and have not caught one fish; but if You wish we will do so."

Away they go; down into the sea go the nets. Oh! look, see the fish! Why, their net's breaking! The other boat is coming to help them. They have two boatloads of fish.

When they come to shore Jesus says, "From henceforth thou shalt be fishers of men."

Notebook. Have or make picture for booklet, as boats on sea, etc. Put a line under the word "Yes" or "No" after these questions. (1) Was there a crowd of people gathered here? YES. No. (2) Was it the Sea of Galilee? YES. No. (3) Did the people want to watch the fishermen? YES. No. (4) Were the fishermen washing their nets? YES. No. (5) Was Jesus there? YES. No. (6) Did He talk to the people while standing on the shore? YES. No. (7) Had the fishermen caught any fish? YES. No. (8) Did they catch any fish the second time? YES. No. (9) Did they leave their fish-

AMONG THE CHURCHES

“WHAT DIFFERENCE DOES IT MAKE?”

What difference does it make what one believes as to doctrine just so that he is sincere and is instructed in the principles of moral conduct generally accepted as essential to the building of a wholesome character? This is a question which Sr. Mary A. Gesin rightly contends is being asked increasingly especially by younger people.

To meet this question in a logical as well as a scriptural way, Sr. Gesin has prepared a series of four articles, the first of which will appear in our next issue. Be sure and read them and then pass them on to others who may be asking this same question. You will find them exceedingly profitable, and we even venture to suggest that the minister who is anxious to advance the doctrinal teaching of the Church of God effectively may also be helped by them.

GOLDEN RULE HOME

The Golden Rule Home family is indebted to Mrs. A. P. Cunningham for a year's subscription to The Ladies' Home Journal. Not having her address, we take this way of saying, "Thank you, Mrs. Cunningham, for your gift. We shall enjoy it very much."

We also wish to thank others who remembered members of the family with gifts and greetings. It means so much to know folks are thinking of you. It was a most joyous holiday and we are grateful to our heavenly Father for His care.

We are always glad to hear from any who may be interested in the Home in any way and will be glad to answer any questions you may wish to ask.

If any of your family or friends are thinking of entering the Home, urge them to pay us a visit. We shall be glad to welcome them.

A HUSBAND'S MEMORIAL TO A FAITHFUL WIFE

In a touching letter from Bro. H. S. Lasher, whose permanent residence is Burlington Flats, N. Y., but who has been spending some time in Deerfield, Fla., from which latter place he writes, we gather the sad news of Sr. Lasher's death. Some months ago, it may be recalled, Bro. Lasher asked for the prayers of the brotherhood on behalf of his wife, who was suffering from cancer. She was apparently showing signs of recovery from this disease when sugar diabetes attacked her weakened body and resulted in her death on January 7, 1936. Her husband had placed her in a hospital at Prospect, Ohio, for treatment and she was there when the final summons came.

Those who attended her assured Bro. Lasher that she expressed her willingness to go and that she died in a satisfying hope of a glorious resurrection when the Lord comes. A memorial service was conducted on her behalf in Deerfield, Fla., by Dr. J. W. Nicholson, an old friend of the family. Burial was at Prospect, Ohio.

As a final testimony to her faithfulness during the long period of their life together, Bro. Lasher composed a poem of four beautiful verses, but which we must omit because of lack of space. May God comfort our brother and bring him soon into the presence of his dear one at the Lord's return.

GOLDEN RULE CHURCH OF GOD

"Golden Rule News," published by M. W. Lyon, pastor of the Golden Rule Church of God, Cleveland, Ohio, with its January issue introduces a new and helpful feature in this very excellent local bulletin. The first page is devoted exclusively to helpful religious instruction presented in attractive form which the casual reader would be inclined to glance over thoughtfully. We expect to pass some of this material on to you in the near future, feeling sure that Bro. Lyon will not object.

An incomplete Sunday school honor roll (one class not having as yet reported its attendance) gives a list of 48 names of those who are entitled to such distinction for the last quarter of 1935.

On Tuesday, Jan. 28, the choir will provide an evening of entertainment to which everyone is invited. A freewill offering will be received to be applied to two worthy causes, the needs of the choir itself and the welfare fund.

The Berean society meets on Friday evening from 7:30 to 8:30, and classes and subjects suitable for all ages are provided. "Come and bring the whole family."

About fifteen are enrolled in the special class in the Sunday school which is devoted to the teaching of the Fundamentals of Christian Faith. Mrs. Halls is the teacher.

Speaking of the new year, the pastor urges: "Let us all be 100 per cent for the cause of Christ!"

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

Bro. Oscar Hopkins, one of our deacons, submitted to a minor operation at St. Mary's Hospital January 16.

A very faithful group has been helping this past week to take a church census of the community in which the church is located. A thing that is always amazing to the writer is the number of boys and girls who do not attend Sunday school anywhere, as well as the adults who do not attend church. We hope to be able to help in at least some of these cases.

Sr. Jeanne Lyon had the honor on January 14 of winning an amateur entertainment contest in Grand Rapids by playing her saw.

Suggestions for a slogan appropriate to our church are being received. A committee has been appointed to consider these suggestions and make recommendation to the church board.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Have you read the editorial on the front page?

A letter from Mrs. Joe Chapman, Route 1, Hampton, Ont., a member of the Canadian Church of God, reports that she has for some time been confined to a hospital as a result of an automobile collision. She comments that it "caused a lot of suffering and expense, but we are thankful it was no worse and that our lives were spared."

The Herald will welcome brief reports of the past year's work from local churches, and suggests that special attention be given to additions that have been made during the year. Annual report blanks are now being mailed out for local secretaries to prepare to submit to the General Conference next August.

Bro. T. A. Drinkard of Texas, an evangelist almost as well known in the North as he is in the South, writes to correct a mistake in address which appeared in the Ministerial List we published recently. Bro. Drinkard's present address is Handley, Texas, Box 344. Interested ones will please make a note of this correction.

An automobile collision, occurring shortly after the first of the year, resulted in broken ribs and bruises for Mr. and Mrs. Glyn L. Starbuck and Mrs. Anderson of the Rockford, Ill., Church of God.

As this paper goes into the mails, January 21, 1936, Bro. S. J. Lindsay, first editor of The Restitution Herald, is passing a very important milestone in the journey of life. Dare we tell what one? You might find the answer in the first part of the 10th verse of the 90th Psalm.

Tonight Bro. F. L. Austin, for many years editor of The Herald and executive secretary of the National Bible Institution, begins a series of prophetic lectures on the Great Pyramid of Egypt at Oregon, Ill. A large attendance is anticipated.

A distinctive, durable Bible (No. 201) for $5.00: excellent type, self-pronouncing; red letter edition; thumb indexed; thorough concordance and some general helps; 17 maps in colors; bound in kid leather which will never scuff and will last indefinitely. The only Bible of its kind. Normally sells for $7.50. Order from the National Bible Institution, Oregon, Ill.

"I appreciate your editorial recently, 'Let's Get Going!'" writes Bro. Drinkard. "This is the thing I've prayed for for many years, that money could be used to preach the GOSPEL, instead of other things to 'be like other people.' I am ready to preach THE gospel!" We believe the time is ripe for a revival of plain gospel preaching that is based on the positive teaching of Christ and the apostles. "Let's Get Going!"

BURR OAK, INDIANA

Two classes held their monthly meetings last Wednesday. The Gospel Seekers met at the home of Marybelle Osborn. After election of officers and games, a delicious lunch was served. The Morning Stars met at the home of Bro. and Sr. Gerald Osborn. Bro. Osborn conducted the devotional by reading the 3rd chapter of James, with splendid comments. A fellowship time was had, and the usual good things to eat.

Our hearts go out to the children and others in their sad hours of bereavement over the loss of their dear mother, Sr. Alice Maxey. This sister lived a beautiful life that we shall not forget. Her concern was to unceasingly pray for her church. God comfort "them that mourn."

Superintendent Ferris Zechiel received a challenge from the Kokomo school by Superintendent Marooney. This week at the workers' meeting it will have consideration.

The Bereans at the last meeting enjoyed the study of the noble character, Joseph. Sr. Laura Heiser gave us a splendid story of his life, including the types.

The writer experienced the joy of speaking to over 200 Culver High School students at their chapel service last Thursday morning. We would like to see more schools have such services, instead of encouraging bridge parties, dances, etc.

We feel that the church is challenged this year to enter definitely into a stirring-up program of evangelism. May every member be in his place at all services, supporting it in every way possible. Why not set a day of prayer over this land of ours for this effort? "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much" (James 5:16).

A. E. Hoskins, Pastor.

PENNIES TO HELP JESUS

The following letter from Sr. Mamie L. Kauffman of Springfield, Ohio, is inspiring with the simple faith of little children. If all we older ones would feel the urge to "send a few pennies to help Jesus" the gospel of the kingdom would be sent ringing round the earth! The letter follows:

"My little class of Sunday school children from the Lawrenceville (Ohio) church wished to send a few of their pennies to help Jesus. So we are sending $1.00 to help along The Herald. . . . All of us from the Lawrenceville church send greetings. We are strong in the one faith, and waiting and hoping for the soon coming Lord."

W. L. ROBBINS

W. L. Robbins, pioneer citizen of Riviera, Texas, passed away at his home January 2, after several months' illness. He was survived by his wife, Mrs. Carrie Robbins, and eight children (all of whom were at his bedside when he expired): C. A. Robbins, R. F. Robbins, Lawrence Robbins, Mrs. C. T. Kutschke of Riviera, L. O. Robbins and Jesse Robbins of Raymondville, Miss Opal Robbins of Harlingen, and Miss Dollie Mae Robbins of Hebronville; and a sister, Mrs. D. H. Bond of Arizona. This was the first break in a family of ten members.

Mr. Robbins came to Riviera in June, 1909, with his family, and had spent most of the time here from then on, was well known, and had many friends here. He was a faithful member of the Church of God. He was a farmer all his active life.

The funeral service was held at the Methodist Church at 4 p. m., January 2, Rev. Marshall, pastor of the Kingsville Methodist Church, preaching and Mr. Benard Kenedy of Kingsville in charge of arrangements. The body was laid to rest in the Riviera Cemetery. A large crowd showed their last respects.

GILBERT VALENTINE MISNER

Gilbert Valentine Misner was born May 9, 1852, and died January 7, 1936. During his boyhood he lived with his parents north of Arapahoe, Neb. When a very young man he moved to that community where he was employed in a general store; later he was associated with Mr. Allen in the furniture and undertaking establishment.

He was united in marriage in 1879 to India Prime. To this union were born four children, Nora, Desta, Eva, and Tina, the youngest, who passed away at the age of nineteen months.

Several years later Mr. Misner and family moved to a farm west of Edison, Neb., where they resided until they moved into town. Mr. Misner was engaged in the mercantile business in Edison for thirteen years. To those who were associated with him in the routine of business he was an inspiration. No man from boyhood to the evening of life ever strove more conscientiously to do what he believed to be his duty.

In the year 1888 Mr. Misner became a member of the Church of God and has been associated with this organization until death. He lived many years beyond his threescore and ten and was always of a cheerful disposition and sociable manner. He was a kind and affectionate father and was adored by his family. He leaves to mourn his departure his aged wife; three daughters, Mrs. Nora Lee of San Jose, Calif., Mrs. Desta Smith of Edison, Neb., and Mrs. Eva Smith of Turlock, Calif.; ten grandchildren; four great-grandchildren; and one brother, Charley Misner of Marrisonville, Mo.; besides a host of friends.

"In Memoriam" by a friend.

"To live in the hearts we leave behind us is not to die."

Everyone who knew Mr. Misner was impressed by his broad-minded tolerance and his unflinching kindness. He had high ideals as a man and was ever mindful of his responsibility to others. Kindness was a sacred duty with Mr. Misner in dealing with people and with the problems of life. The spirit of fairness characterized his relations with all who came in contact with him. He will be missed and remembered by all who knew him as a noble character and as one of the finest of men.

Funeral services were held in the Christian Church at Edison January 10, conducted by Elder Grover Gordon, who was assisted by the pastor of the church. Burial was in the Arapahoe cemetery to await the sound of the trumpet and the voice of the archangel.

"If a man die, shall he live again? all the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come. Thou shalt call, and I will answer thee: thou wilt have a desire to the work of thine hands" (Job 14:14,15). "For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them" (Eph. 2:10).

Grover Gordon.

ARE WE READY FOR THE AGE TO COME?

By Mary A. Woodward

The following spiritual and touching appeal comes to us as the voice of one who speaks from the silent tomb. Our beloved sister, Mary A. Woodward, in public and private life a faithful witness to her Lord, fell asleep in Jesus August 1, 1935, at the age of eighty-six years. Her son, Elder F. L. Austin, appended the following words to the unfinished manuscript and notes from which this article is drawn: "This is the last known penmanship of Mary A. Woodward. About April 1 to 6, 1935."—Editor.

HOW beautifully Paul brings the thoughts of the "ages to come" into the 2nd chapter of Ephesians! As I read the chapter down to the 10th verse, my whole being was thrilled with the thoughts the Apostle brings to us, and I quickly asked myself, "Am I ready to be admitted into those blessed ages?"

Just open your Bibles and read carefully Ephesians 2: 1-10. "For we are his workmanship," or inheritance. Think what these words may mean to each of us! The Apostle is speaking of the "ages to come." If we are a part of His workmanship we must belong to the promised inheritance. Then how ought we to use the time given us?

I presume the answer will be, "Use it as we honestly believe Christ would desire His workers should."

Living with Christ, as one explained it, is a beautiful adventure, and he adds, "It does not take much of a man to be a true Christian, but it takes all there is of him." But then we get all there is of Him, and, O how much that means, to live the true life our profession requires of us! It asks us to flee from what we are, to what we really want to be.

A Hindu searching for truth said to one who had realized the joy of believing God, "You have found God." He knew by the earnest joy of the Christian and said, "By your energy and happiness you show it."

How true it is that we often show the joy of our lives in our faces. How many of us show Christ in our conversation and our life? I often ask myself if I am living just all my life as a Christian should. Are we as a people really vertical Christians? For there is a difference between horizontal and vertical conversion. There is no such thing as being converted unless it brings us nearer to God. And the nearer we get to that Divine Power the more truly are we converted to God. Luther said: "A man is never a Christian, he is always becoming one." And this is true, for it means so much to be "a new creature in Christ Jesus," for we are never converted unless we are new creatures in Him, our living Head.

Is it a fact that we as a people are not living up to the real light we have? Are we vertical Christians, looking up, searching after more truth, being—increasing weakness that terminated in her death. But from rough notes she left we glean the conclusion that follows.—Editor.)

We are never new creatures in Him unless we are truly converted. Then we may become fitly framed together and grow into a holy temple in the Lord; for conversion means growth. It is a creative power, having the power to create in another that solid happiness in which human life is transformed; and we gaze upward and look into the face of our Helper, for by this help we find sin, worry, and defeat dropping from our lives; and, as another has said, we feel the birth of a new dominant affection by which we feel that God becomes our all in all.

MARCHING ON

By N. H. Geiselman

On the mountain top of vision
What a glory we behold
As we see the coming kingdom
Which the prophets long foretold,
When His glorious reign will banish
Every vestige of the old;
For our God is marching on.

In behalf of wretched mortals
Jesus died beyond the sea,
And has wrought a great salvation
Which delivered you and me;
And if we will but accept it
His good truth will make us free,
For His truth is marching on.

From the cabin in the forest
To the vaulted city dome,
O'er the dark and briny ocean
Where our brother sailors roam,
The great glory of our Savior
Will encircle every home,
For our Savior's leading on.

We have passed the coast of Bab'lon
And the Medo-Persian peers,
We've been sailing down the Roman
Coast for nineteen hundred years.
And the battling of the nations
Is proclaiming in our ears
That Jubilee soon will come.

And when the war is over,
With the saints for evermore,
We will join the plane of glory
With the Savior gone before;
And in His glorious presence
We shall dwell for evermore,
For Jesus bids us come.

(May be sung to the tune of "John Brown's Body.")

“The King Is Dead— Long Live the King!”

An Editorial

THE KING IS DEAD! The world's greatest empire, covering nearly one fourth of the earth's habitable surface and occupied by more than one fourth of its population, has been deprived of its beloved and worthy Sovereign. King George V lies in state in the historic Westminster Hall, which was originally built by Edward the Confessor on the site of the present House of Parliament pictured on the following page.

His regal form, clothed in the habiliments of an Admiral of the Royal Navy, has been viewed this past week by millions of his weeping subjects. It is to be doubted that there is a monarch in all the world today who has won and held the love and loyalty of his people so completely as had this King who rests at last from his labor and responsibility.

Despite the fact that he possessed in his lifetime less political power than does the President of the United States, the moral influence he exerted over the more than 444,000,000 people of his realm far exceeded that of any other ruler of today.

Now that his reign of a quarter of a century has come to a close, and his eldest son, the former Prince of Wales, has taken his place, speculation is rife concerning the future of both the Empire and the Throne. Edward VIII, known throughout the world as “the best salesman of the British Empire,” and favorably regarded for his democratic attitude, is quite a different person from the dignified man who preceded him in the lofty place he is henceforth to occupy among the nations of the world.

Will the new King continue to follow the customs that have endeared him to the democratic Dominions that compose the modern British Empire? Will he, as did his father and his grandfather, take a neutral position in the political questions of his country and of the world, or will he attempt to bring to bear strong personal influences upon the plans and purposes of the Empire?

These are questions of vast importance, not alone to Britain, but to all the world, for the British Empire, firmly welded together by an intense loyalty to the Crown, exerts today what is practically a con- (Please turn to Page Ten)

Burial of the King

"There is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel."—2 Samuel 3:38.

WINDSOR, England, Jan. 23.—Elaborate plans are in process of accomplishment for the burial of King George

House of Parliament

V in the historic chapel of St. George at Windsor Castle. The final rites, which are to be observed Tuesday, January 28, will be attended by at least five reigning monarchs, those of Norway, Denmark, Rumania, Belgium, and Great Britain. During the colorful service, which will be conducted by the Archbishop of Canterbury, King Edward VIII and other royal mourners will stand behind the coffin. As the service draws to a close the purple and gold bier will be lowered ten feet through the floor of the chapel to a passageway leading to the royal vaults where it will be placed beside the bodies of the late King's parents, Edward VII and Queen Alexandra, and his brother, the Duke of Clarence.

According to an analysis made some years ago by Elder G. M. Myers, who accepted the Anglo-Israel idea of the so-called "Ten Lost Tribes," the present reigning house of Great Britain is lineally descended from David, king of Israel, and "thus Judah still wields the scepter over I-saxsons and will till Jesus returns."

Whether or not one takes the Anglo-Israel view of the origin of the British royal family, so important is the position occupied by the empire over which it rules in the world today that any change of monarch is of momentous interest to all nations and also to the student of prophecy.

Accelerating War Machinery

"Every man his weapons of war."—Deuteronomy 1:11.

LONDON, England, Jan. 25.—Under the sardonic and appropriate gaze of "Gog" and "Magog," the two wooden giants of the famous old Common Council Room of London's Guildhall, the delegates to London Naval Conference sat down to what may prove to be the last banquet in which all of the delegates will take part. It is now quite apparent that the Conference cannot reach an agreement in regard to a limitation of navies in which Japan will concur. The Japanese delegation, headed by Admiral Osamu Nagano, withdrew from the parley officially when the demand of the "Sunrise Kingdom" for full equality in naval preparations with the United States and Great Britain was bluntly denied by President Roosevelt's Ambassador-at-large, Norman H. Davis. The failure of what one observer termed

"the only important attempt at arms limitation" since the World War, is probably correctly summarized by the Japanese newspaper Nichi Nichi, as to result, when it declares that "some sort of arms race is inevitable under this abnormal situation."

Moscow, U. S. S. R., Jan. 15.—Mikhail N. Tukhechev, Commissar of Defense, declared in an address before the Central Executive Committee today that "the fighting strength of our army is greater than that of any other in the world." Reviewing the possibility of aggressive action against Russia by Germany or Japan, he asserted that "Germany is an armed camp, and has increased her air forces (see following item) so much that Britain and France have been compelled to build theirs accordingly. Germany's fleet is growing, and the frequent so-called congresses are rehearsals for military mobilization. Japanese military authorities have been saying that Japanese soldiers must accustom themselves to eating Siberian food. The Poles are arming, and the Finns, who are very friendly to Germany, have more airdromes than they can possibly use. You can draw your own conclusions."

The Central Executive Committee yesterday unanimously approved an increase of 57 per cent in the military budget.

BERLIN, Germany, Jan. 25.—On January 30 the Government will mark the third anniversary of Hitler's rise to power by presenting to the Third Reich a military air fleet estimated as being close to 3,000 planes. According to The Literary Digest, "so swiftly is Germany pushing her air construction, said Edmund T. Allen, consulting aeronautical engineer, that 'the actual production of airplanes is going into plants which, even a year ago, had nothing to do with aircraft.'" Unconsciously all nations are preparing to respond with vast armaments to Jehovah's call to the last great military struggle (Joel 3:9-12).

Gold by Moonlight

FOR us to climb—who are we that we should hope to climb? What is man, “this weed which a sunbeam withers”? And yet he must climb or perish. He could stay in the hut within sight of the peak, walk in the path with the mountain in view, sit on the rocks on the bank and gaze at ease at that up-soaring beautiful thing, and enjoy it without stirring a yard, without an ache, or a strain, or a dazed, parched minute. But that would not be life. To grovel is not to live. “The whitest, purest, holiest heights of the spirit” call us, and will not be refused. We are deaf adders indeed, if we do not hear that call.

After Everest and the giants of the earth, the Matterhorn may look small, but that mountain is no hillock, and many a man has seen it as a finger pointing steadfastly upward. Little ends and low imaginations cannot live in the presence of that white pyramid.

For “love will be above, not detained with any low things”; her prayer is always to be set free from every detaining desire, and reluctance; and she sees in each new day “the day of the grace of God that brings for us the discipline of renunciation,” the renunciation of the runner who lays aside every weight, stripping from himself all that would hinder his race.

This discipline appears in many forms.

The scholar had hoped to add a few grains to the precious heap of the world's knowledge, but the demands of life leave no time for that. The loving heart had hoped to lighten many burdens, but illness or poverty sweeps that hope away. Still more private hopes had been cherished; these must be laid aside, and now it has nothing to give but love. It often happens that the Christian is asked to renounce the things that were his meat and marrow. And he is not told why. “The lover lost a jewel which he greatly prized, and was sorely distressed, until his Beloved put to him this question: ‘Which profiteth thee more, the jewel that thou hadst or thy patience in all the acts of thy Beloved?’”

And there is for some a discipline of renunciation of natural desires in the daily acceptance of deprivations of various kinds, and in peacefulness in crippled conditions, limitations, and frustrations, such as St. Paul's when he was the Lord's bondman. And there is that inner renunciation of the will in very little things which no eye sees but God's.

It is to this discipline of renunciation that we are called, if indeed our hearts are set on the heights; and there must be no complaining in our streets. The word is always Unto all patience, and longsuffering with joyfulness—there we see the shining summit clear against the sky. “For if there had been anything better or more profitable to man than to suffer, Christ would verily have showed it by word and example. Drink the chalice of our Lord affectionately, if thou desire to be His friend and to have part with Him. Consolations commit to God; do He therewith as it pleaseth Him.”

There comes a time when the personal falls from us and we cease from the weariness of being “entangled and encumbered in ourselves,” and do with all our hearts desire to be perpetually lifted up in spirit above ourselves; but the trouble of a loved one can throw us into a fever of agitation. And yet to lose our peace is to lose our power to help. The energies which might have been turned to power are wasted in effectless grieving. Our very thoughts by their teasing reiteration, like low, eager voices that will not stop talking, tire us out.

“Were half the breath thus vainly spent,
To heaven in supplication sent,
Thy thankful cry would oftener be,
See what the Lord hath done for me.”

The simple words of the Olney hymn cling to memory when greater are forgotten.

If we are to pray we must turn from fear and turmoil. Job could do nothing for his friends until his own heart was at rest. In one sense there can be no peace while anything on earth is sinful, or suffers:

Earth, heaven shall pass away
Ere for your passionless peace we pray,
Are ye deaf to the trumpets that call us today?
Blind to the blazing swords?

But there is a peace that must be ours if we are to prevail. “Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid.” The peace of our Lord Jesus was never a passionless peace.

II

Before that peace can be ours—the peace that truly passeth all understanding, for who can understand how it can be at all?—there must be a renunciation of faithless anxiety. To ask for that seems to be asking for the impossible. The father of the family is ill. He thinks of wife and children; his whole being is keyed to one intense desire to be well, to be with them. The mother is ill; her heart cries out to fly to her children and gather them under her wings. The bread-earner, caring for widowed mother and sisters, is disabled; would he not be heartless if he were at peace? The son or daughter pledged to the Master's business in a distant land has letters telling of need at home, and is crushed and torn. The child all but saved, is swept off by a dark wave. Prayer is agony then. How can there be any peace? The convert is sucked back into the pit, and the heart that loved, is broken. But life will suggest only too many illustrations of griefs which can come down like an avalanche over the soul and bury it in debris. It is far then from its mountain peak.

I do not know of any way of escape from that debris so swift and so certain as to ask oneself the question the angel

Uriel asked the prophet Esdras, "Lovest thou that people better than He that made them?" That question sounds the depths. There is a melting tenderness in it too that prepares us for the beautiful words that follow when the messenger seems to lose himself in his message so that we hear a Greater than angels speak: (Please turn to Page Nine)

What Difference Does It Make?

By Mary A. Gesin

YEAR by year an increasingly larger number of the Christian leaders of the world falls in line with the prevalent theory that what our young people need in order to combat the onslaughts of evil is not knowledge of specific truth, but of the way to live right. Countless times has the ardor of a Bible teacher been dampened by the complacent remark that "after all, it doesn't make so much difference what you believe, just so you live right." Among our own organization the theory has gained so much ground that our ablest leaders are being aroused to the insidious peril of our position.

A sentence or two in a letter to me from one who for years has been of our denomination arrested my attention and caused me to ponder deeply: Does it make any difference what you believe? And after thoughtful and prayerful study, the truth is still most outstanding that it makes all the difference in the world what you believe.

These are the words in the letter to which I refer: "The temptations we must meet and the situations we must face are more to our children than a carefully worked-out summary of God's future plans." We presume the writer means that possession of strength to meet daily temptation is more important than a knowledge of God's future plans. Let us see.

In all honesty and open-mindedness let us approach this overwhelmingly important problem, praying for guidance and wisdom from the Father of all light. Those of us who maintain that it makes all the difference in the world what we believe will grant those who agree with my correspondent just as fair consideration as we hope to receive ourselves. In no other way will the blessing of truth eventually enrich our living.

What causes you and me to act as we do under given circumstances? What causes you, for example, to do the right thing in moments of great stress? You answer, "My conviction of right and wrong; what I believe."

No one but will concede that what I believe, what I think, affects my action. And the sum of my actions is my character. How, then, can I live right unless I believe right? How can I meet daily temptation victoriously unless I am protected by an invincible armor of truth?

More and more the great desire of the older ones of us is that our young people may be spared committing the errors of life so flagrantly spread before them. That they may find joy in the high, ennobling avenues of life. That they may finally achieve that which all men, consciously or unconsciously, seek, true happiness. That their efforts may eventually be rewarded with the blessing of life everlasting.

How is all this to be attained? What incentive is there in life to choose the good and refuse the evil? Just the rewards of being good? mere morality? the wholesome pleasure that attends self-respect? Are these sufficient?

You need but to look about you to see the folly of that sort of reasoning. How frequently a hitherto irreproachable character crumbles in the stress of great temptation! How often you ask yourself, "What's the use! Why not join the majority which seems to get the most pleasure out of the moment?"

What is there that can be counted on in times of need? From whence is the ability to make right choices? What is the power that saves?

We go to the good old Book of all wisdom and find a direct answer to our questions. The great Apostle tells us that "the gospel of Christ . . . is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth" (Rom. 1:16). And Paul, with all his education, the high social position of his family, its wealth and prestige, was not ashamed of it. Neither should we be.

If the great Apostle found the gospel taught by Christ to be the power that saves men (and we know he did in a most unique manner) then ought we not find out just exactly what that gospel is? Is it not simply good judgment to avail ourselves of such a power?

In subsequent studies let us with Bibles in hand seek to learn something about the "gospel of Christ" which Paul revered so highly. Let us discover why it holds the "power of God unto salvation." And after thoughtful study and prayer for enlightenment, we trust another, at least, may be included in "every one that believeth."

These lines are being addressed particularly to young people, not because they need instruction more, but because, having all of life before them, they can do so much more about it than can the older ones.

The Pure Life

A CERTAIN soap is advertised as 99.44 per cent pure. I sometimes think the devil does not mind a child of God being pure to that percentage, providing he can inject into him .56 per cent of that which is not wholly pure. Do you remember that wonderful statement concerning our blessed Lord, "The prince of this world cometh and hath nothing in me"? There was not a billionth part of 1 per cent of territory in Him in which Satan could sow hisistles. And surely the blessed Son of God would have us as wholly given up to God as He was. He would not have us yield 5 six-hundredths of 1 per cent of our bodies over to our enemy and His; no, not even a hundred-billionth part of 1 per cent. For if Satan can get one tiny patch in us in which he can plant a root of bitterness, not only will our whole being be defiled but hundreds of others will share in our defilement.

Did you ever realize how much God has to say about thoughts in His Word? He shows us that in great measure we are the product of our own thought life, telling us that as a man "thinketh in his heart, so is he." He shows us in Isaiah 55 that real repentance is a turning from our unrighteous thoughts as well as from our unrighteous ways, saying that His thoughts and His ways are as far above our thoughts and ways as the heavens are above the earth. A life in the Spirit is a life lived in the thoughts and ways of God. The business of the enemy of our souls is to inject "vain thoughts" into our minds. That is the tremendous danger of the radio these days. Even God's saints are listening to the trash the god of this world is causing to be broadcast and their minds are being filled with "vain thoughts." Do you remember that strong word of Psalm 119:113 where it says, "I hate vain thoughts"? Will you let the enemy inject into your mind the thing that God hates? Will He have to say to you as He did to the rebellious Israelites of old, "How long shall thy vain thoughts lodge within thee?"

Turn with me to that remarkable word of the Apostle in 2 Corinthians 10:4, 5. (Here we see there is real warfare in the heavenlies for the minds of the saints. The minds of these Corinthians were becoming "strongholds" of the enemy.) Satan knows the importance of our minds and our thought life, and if he captures these citadels he will have complete victory over us. But the ministry of the Spirit through the Apostle was to be used for the "pulling down" of these "strongholds," and for the "casting down of imaginations." Do you remember that command of the Lord in Zechariah 7:10, repeated in Zechariah 8:17, "Let none of you imagine evil in your hearts against his neighbour"? Dr. Simpson once wrote, "Let your ear fast from rumors, slander, gossip, controversy; and your tongue from detractions, murmuring, fault-finding." There was to be the casting down of the imagination and "every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God."

What was to be the result of this warfare? "The bringing into captivity of every thought to the obedience of Christ." Every thought! Just think! Repeat this to yourself over and over again. Every thought brought into captivity to the obedience of Christ! The whole territory of the mind given up to God, so that every thought is His willing captive. Turn again to Romans 12:1, 2, and you will freshly get the importance of those words, "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God." Stop, reader, just where you are, and yield your whole body to the Lord. Completely surrender to Him your mind and thought life for His divine renewing. Ask Him to cleanse away all "vain thoughts" from your mind by the efficacious and cleansing flow of the all-blotting-out blood of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Then look to Him that you may "be renewed in the spirit of your mind."

Now God has given us two special provisions to help us right here. First this, the filling of your mind with the thoughts of God. His Word expresses His thoughts. I hardly ever pick up my Bible without being almost overwhelmed with the thought that this is the Book in which He has spoken! Oh, the privilege of receiving the words of infinite wisdom given through the Spirit of God through holy men of God and through His own precious Son. Let us feast on these words. Let us eat them. Let us live in the dear old Book. "Thy words were found, and I did eat them," said Jeremiah. Job said, "I have esteemed the words of his mouth more than my necessary food." To Joshua God said, "This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth; but thou shalt meditate therein day and night . . . for then thou shalt make thy way prosperous, and then thou shalt have great success." The man who delights in the Word of God and meditates therein day and night will be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, bringing forth his fruit in his season, and "whatsoever he doeth shall prosper" (Psalm 1:2, 3).

The second provision is found in Philippians 4:6, 7. In the first provision we listened to God talking to us; in the second provision we talk to God about "every thing." I know these are days of depression and that the enemy would inject thoughts of worry into hearts, but listen to what God says, "Be careful for nothing (or don't be anxious about things); but in every thing by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God." This was one of George Mueller's favorite passages. Mueller used to go out every morning at four o'clock to have a time with God's Word. God spoke to him through it, and then he literally prayed about everything.

Did he find it practical? I should say so. He testified, "I have had tens of thousands of answers to prayer." God met his needs and those of all his orphans and all his missionaries. Pray about everything, whether it be great or small, and then don't forget the injunction "with thanksgiving." Give thanksgiving in everything that comes along. Has He not said, "In every thing give thanks"? And again, "Giving thanks always for all things." What will be the result if you do this? Listen! "And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus." Literally this means that He will put a garrison around you to keep the devil off. The Lord of Hosts has hosts of angels to garrison your mind. He has promised that He will give His angels charge over you to keep you in all your ways.

The tremendous importance of the yielded mind is seen in Romans 8: "The carnal mind is enmity against God." Oh, the tragedy of an unrenewed mentality! But on the other hand, "To be spiritually minded is life and peace." Do not let one single evil thought lodge in your heart. God wants you to have "the mind of Christ." There are no evil thoughts in the mind of Christ, and He says to you through the Spirit, "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus" (Phil. 2:5). And the Spirit says to you, "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."—Selected by Madeleine Gardiner.

The Joy of Giving

By Lottie E. Young

THREE thousand years ago David voiced the sentiments of many who have lived since—"What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits to me?" And yet there are millions today who are accepting all the loving Father has bestowed upon them so freely without returning even thanks to Him for life and daily blessings. With them it is often a case of "God bless me, my wife, my son John, his wife; we four, no more," forgetting the command—"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and thy neighbour as thyself."

Many examples are noted in the New Testament of those who loved to give to God's work, as we read in Luke 21:4 of the poor widow who gave "all the living that she had." Zaccheus (Luke 19:8) gave half of his goods, while the early disciples gave "possessions and goods" (Acts 2:45). Lydia, the first European Christian, gave Paul and Silas the use of her home (Acts 16:15) when she "constrained" them to abide in her house. Dorcas gave "good works and almsdeeds" (Acts 9:36), and Phoebe was a helper of many, including the Apostle Paul (Rom. 16:1, 2).

The great Apostle to the Gentiles gave years of missionary toil. Acts 20:33-35 tells how he coveted no man's silver or gold or apparel; that his own hands ministered to his necessities, and to those who were with him, in all things giving an example, that by so laboring he could help the weak, ever remembering the words of the Lord Jesus Christ, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

The Macedonian churches gave out of "deep poverty," "according to their power" and "beyond their power." See 2 Corinthians 8:1-3. Cannot we, the most highly favored people the world has ever known, imitate their example?

The Lord Jesus gave Himself "a ransom for all" (1 Tim. 2:6).

The infinite Father "gave his only begotten Son" (John 3:16).

How much are we giving? What are we giving? What is our motive in giving? Do we know the joy of giving? We think much, and we talk much, of the return of Christ to the earth, but when we see that majestic figure which the Apostle John saw, as described in Revelation, which caused that beloved Apostle to fall "at his feet as one dead," and hear His "I gave my life for thee, what hast thou given for me?" what will we answer? To the Jew the command to "bring in the tithes" meant that he should bring to God that which belonged to Him, and that was understood to be a tenth. But to the follower of Jesus who has been taught by his Master that all he is and all he has belongs to God, and that he holds all he has as God's steward, it means that he must faithfully care for, use, dispose of, save, and account for all he holds, not in accordance with his own will, but as God's steward in accordance with God's will.

As God has blessed and prospered us, are we giving freely and gladly to help the work of the National Bible Institution in its religious and educational endeavors, as well as caring for those of the "household of faith" who have fought the good fight for long years, and are now weary? May we not "rob God" as Israel of old did and be cursed, but let us carry out Malachi 3:10, when the "windows of heaven" will be opened and a blessing poured upon us, even as it was promised to God's ancient people. Now we are turning to everything in the universe that promises to better our material condition, but as the title to a recent book asks, "Why Not Try God?" "Freely ye have received, freely give," I believe applies to the Church of God today as much as to the Jews of old.

Tongues and Pentecost

THE church on _____ Street had a separate room dedicated to the reception of the Holy Spirit. And although this night was not a special occasion, the room was filled with people. More than two hundred were on their knees, desperately pleading for the physical bestowal of the Holy Spirit especially in the form of the gift of tongues. Some were frantically hitting themselves, others were wringing their hands, and still others were rolling on the floor. These demonstrations continued for several hours, during which time many began speaking in some alleged unknown language, broken and unintelligible. The process was startling. Many were apparently unconscious. Others seemed to have absolutely no control over their tongues, and the rapidity of their speech resembled gibberish, with repetition of meaningless words very much in evidence.

Speaking in tongues, as evidence of the descent of the Holy Spirit, is claimed by many to be the only infallible designation of the true church on earth; consequently, certain churches display this as an evidence of their acceptance with God.

We are sure that salvation depends on the reception of the Holy Spirit from God; but if such is the case, we must examine the Bible to find the difference between God's Spirit and the spirit of Satan—whether all manifestations are from the same source.

In tracing the origin of this gift, we may note that in the Old Testament the only evidence we have of "tongues" is among soothsayers, witches, and like characters. Isaiah, in speaking of them, refers to the "wizards, that chirp and that mutter" (Isa. 8:19, A. R. V.). But in the New Testament is recorded the most remarkable demonstration of the work of the Holy Spirit in the history of the world. This event is known to us as Pentecost. There are other recordings of apparent speaking in tongues, but they are so vastly different from this occurrence that this one becomes especially interesting.

WHAT WAS PENTECOST?

There are two classes of people today who look upon Pentecost in entirely different ways. One class believes this was a miracle performed to meet the emergency of a special situation, but was soon discontinued. The other class thinks it still a phenomenon of our present day, and emphasize its importance in religious development and in personal consecration.

Pentecost was the fiftieth day after the Jewish Passover. Devout Jews would make any sacrifice to attend the Passover, so at that time there were gathered at Jerusalem Jews from all parts of the known world. Multitudes of them remained over until Pentecost. Every country had its representative.

The Lord Jesus Christ had shortly before ascended to heaven, and His disciples were gathered together in a house in Jerusalem in intense supplication to God. Christ had promised His spirit, though none understood exactly the meaning of this promise, nor just how it would be fulfilled. The promises made by Christ to His followers were now to receive a supreme test. The work of proclaiming the gospel was to be launched to all the world.

God had in earlier times demonstrated His power and glory. When it became necessary to give His divine law to the world, His power was manifested in definite signs. The children of Israel heard the voice of God. They saw His presence. They heard His words. Accompanying the giving of the law were the three signs of wind, fire, and words. Later, in the dispensation of the prophets, God manifested His power to the people gathered on Mount Carmel. Then again this power was manifested at Pentecost. Thus God has demonstrated His divine power and favor in the giving of the law, in the work of the prophets, and in the proclamation of Christianity.

But at Pentecost it was the gospel that saved, not the tongues. In this day when such a gift is unnecessary, when it is possible to spread the gospel without it, God is using other means. But if it again became necessary, God would again manifest His power in the same way. At Pentecost they heard the Spirit come as with the sound "of a rushing mighty wind" (Acts 2:2). Human eyes saw cloven tongues of fire resting on the heads of the disciples. All the Jews gathered in Jerusalem heard the gospel, each in his own tongue. As at Babel there was a confounding of one tongue into many, so the antithesis of that event happened at Pentecost, when all tongues were combined into one. The gospel was preached in one tongue, and the representatives of all languages heard it in his own tongue. The great purpose of Pentecost was to preach the gospel in one hour in every language. God did it; it worked, and the news spread. Pentecost is as vastly different from the tongues of this hour as the truth of the living God is removed from the counterfeit of Satan.

UNMENTIONED BY CHRIST

John in his message did not speak in tongues. Christ did not, though He is our example. The Lord Jesus Christ never mentioned this gift in His ministry. If speaking in tongues is the only evidence of acceptance by God and receiving the Holy Spirit, then the Samaritans were neither converted nor accepted by God.

Present-day confusion lies in calling two different manifestations by the same name. Modern science claims that this state into which a man places himself is a complete loss of thought and control of the body. This condition is called "catalepsy." A leading scientific writer says, "For a modern man to permit himself to speak in what is called tongues, means that he must put himself in a psychological state where the controlling apparatus of his mind is not functioning. During excitement, thought stops and sub-conscious reactions take the form of meaningless syllables. It inevitably occurs in people of low mentality. The illiterate also, not being able to fluently talk even normally, and always having a poor expression, in excitement easily divert to meaningless syllables. Time and time again college professors, and men of reputed high mentality have conscientiously endeavored to acquire the gift of tongues, and have invariably failed."

A FRAUDULENT GIFT

Most of the churches claiming the gift of tongues also claim miraculous healing; but just as the common manifestation of speaking in tongues is a counterfeit of the genuine, so healing fails. An interesting statement concerning one of the largest "tongues and healing" churches in America comes from the pen of one of America's foremost doctors, who had investigated many of the most convincing evidences of healing this church had on record. He said:

A Question Answered

By James A. Patrick

"What and if ye shall see the Son of man ascend up where he was before?"—John 6:62.

SOME time ago a brother wrote and asked me to explain the foregoing text. I sat down and studied the last part of the 6th chapter of John again. How many times I have gone over this portion of Scripture I cannot tell, but many, many times.

This portion of Scripture is a stronghold for those that believe in the preexistence of Christ. Can they be routed from their stronghold? Let us see. They tell us that Christ said that He was the living bread that came down from heaven and ask if that doesn't prove their contention. Let us read the 51st verse and see if it doesn't throw some light upon the subject. "I am the living bread which came down from heaven: if a man eat of this bread, he shall live for ever: and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world." "I am the living bread that came down from heaven." "The bread that I shall give is my flesh." Then Christ and His flesh are one and the same thing. Did His flesh literally come down from heaven? No one will contend that it did. Then did He literally come down from heaven? No more than His flesh literally came down from heaven. How, then, did He come down from heaven? In John 16:28 He said, "I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world." How did He come forth from the Father? God was literally His Father. He was the only begotten Son of God. When the angel appeared to Mary and told her that she should have a Son, she said, "How shall this be, seeing I know not a man? And the angel answered and said unto her, The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God" (Luke 1:34, 35). In verse 49 Mary said, "For he that is mighty hath done to me great things; and holy is his name." This language is very plain and precise and ought not to be misunderstood. God by the power of His Holy Spirit touched the maternal personality of Mary, and she conceived and bare a Son. This is the sense in which He came out from God and the sense in which He came down from heaven. It is said of John the Baptist that he was a man sent from God (John 1:6). Did John preexist in heaven in order to be sent from God? No, God performed a miracle in order that he might be born, and in that sense he was sent from God. God performed a miracle in order that Christ might be born, and in that sense He came out from God and came down from heaven.

But coming to verse 62, what did Christ mean when He said, "What and if ye shall see the Son of man ascend up where he was before?" It is contended that the verses just discussed prove that He was in heaven personally and came down from heaven personally and was going back in the same way, but we have shown that this was not what He was saying to His disciples. After He had told them that He was the bread from heaven which they must eat in order to live forever, some of His disciples said, "This is an hard saying; who can hear it?" Later many of His disciples turned back and followed Him no more, which He knew would happen. In the 62nd verse He is telling them of something that will convince them that He is really the bread of life and the One that can give them eternal life. Did His ascension into heaven prove anything to any of them? Certainly not. They all believed that He was what He professed to be when they saw Him ascend into heaven. His ascension into heaven proved nothing to them. What did prove to them that He was the Christ? His resurrection from the dead. In Revelation 13:1 John says he saw a beast rise up out of the sea. The Greek word translated "rise" in this verse is the same as the one translated "ascend" in John 6:62. When Christ rose up to where He was before, everyone that saw Him was convinced that He was what He professed to be. Even doubting Thomas cried, "My Lord and my God," when he saw the nail prints in His hands and the spear print in His side. The disciples were in despair from the time of His death till they knew that He had risen from the dead and was really alive again: then their whole outlook on life was changed, and they were willing to go out and preach the gospel at the cost of their lives if necessary. It was His rising from the dead that He was talking about in the 62nd verse.

"The whole system is the biggest fraud, hypocrisy, and devilry ever practiced in the name of God. And not one of the reputed cases of healing was found to be genuine."

The gift of tongues has never been invoked more persistently than today—possibly because men are looking for some miraculous demonstration of divine power from God that will convert the world and save everyone. God has indeed promised an outpouring of His Holy Spirit in the last days; therefore many men, endeavoring to work the will of God in their own way, and seeking a short cut to a religious experience, have given themselves over completely to Satan.

But God will pour out His Spirit in His own way. It seems that if God had desired perpetually to bestow speaking in tongues as the evidence of the giving of the Holy Spirit, we would have heard more of the gift during the last two thousand years. During the Dark Ages speaking in tongues would have given the work of the Reformers an impetus that would have won thousands of insincere people, who were seeking a great demonstration. But then as now the Holy Spirit is silently working on the hearts of all men, and the honest will serve Him. Christianity guided by the Holy Spirit works in a humble way, but modern demonstrations of speaking in tongues are "showy."

TONGUES AT CORINTH

Part of the Bible foundation for the speaking in tongues is found in Paul's writings to the Corinthians. The Apostle found in that church a deplorable condition. It was very low spiritually. The converted Corinthians had been accustomed to their own pagan priests and priestesses working themselves into a frenzy so that they would lose all thought and mutter words in a sort of a gibberish. This held the people as nothing else could, because somehow people enjoy being held spellbound by supernatural power; and it was demonstrated to perfection in those pagan temples. So the similar rites were eagerly carried on in the Christian church by people who desired to show to others their power with God. With the help of God the Apostle Paul desperately tried every means to put a stop to these practices. It is interesting to note that the Corinthians had demon worship—yet they spoke in tongues. They had lost sight of Christ—still they spoke in tongues. They engaged in lawsuits—but spoke in tongues. Their women had broken loose from the bands of propriety—yet they still spoke in tongues. Paul recognized in prophecy more evidence of the working of the Holy Spirit than in speaking in tongues.

There are many who say today, "You must not speak against it." But the Apostle Paul did not hesitate to condemn and to forbid it. He said, "Speak only one at a time," and "Let all things be done decently and in order." As Paul witnessed the start of this alleged manifestation of the Holy Spirit, and recognized in it the counterfeit of the genuine, so in our day we must beware.

At Pentecost every man heard his own language without the aid of an interpreter. Today interpretation is impossible. Quoting from a leading educator concerning genuine instances of the falsity of both speaking in tongues and the interpretation of tongues, we find that "a man knowing the Choctaw Indian language spoke thus in a tongues meeting purposely to test the truthfulness of it. He gave, in the Indian language, an old legend. Immediately after he spoke the 'interpreter' arose and 'translated' what the Holy Spirit had said, which was entirely foreign to the legend told."

EXCESSIVE EMOTIONALISM

In connection with a tongues meeting there is usually jumping, dancing, jerking the body, loud shouting; and after this the people speak in tongues. An observer describes the meeting thus: "During prayer, waves of ecstasy seemed to appear in the assembly. Not infrequently some member of the congregation fell to the floor unconscious." A doctor has said: "I can name the state, but that does not explain it." No, wonder the Apostle suggested that everything be done "decently and in order" (1 Cor. 14:40).

Recalling the scene I witnessed in that church on _____ Street, devoted to speaking in tongues, I cannot help thinking of that Old Testament picture, Elijah on Mount Carmel telling the priests to cry a little louder and hit themselves a little harder.

The heavenly Father does not desire of us any physical demonstration of a spiritual fact. God's Holy Spirit can come simply by praying to God in secret, and asking Him in a quiet way for guidance. But a continual repetition of meaningless words never designates acceptance of God, "for God is not the author of confusion, but of peace" (1 Cor. 14:33).—Alger H. Johns in Signs of the Times.

GOLD BY MOONLIGHT

"Number Me them that are not yet come, gather Me together the drops that are scattered abroad, make Me the flowers green again that are withered, open Me the chambers that are closed, and bring Me forth the winds that in them are shut up, or shew Me the image of a voice: and then I will declare to thee the travail that thou seekest to see. . . . Like as thou canst do none of these things that I have spoken of even so canst thou not find out My judgment, or the end of the love that I have promised unto My people. . . . In the beginning, when the earth was made, before the outgoings of the world were fixed . . . then did I consider these things, and they all were made through Me alone, and through none other: as by Me also they shall be ended, and by none other."

This is not Holy Scripture, but it is wisdom whose price is above rubies. Lovest thou thy beloved better than He that made them? Trust My love for thy beloved.

III

The hills of southern India drop steeply toward the Indian Ocean. From the high rocks where the ibex find safe foothold, you can see the waves that continually wash up in vast quantities two kinds of precious sand. One, monazite, is magnetic. It is composed largely of thorium (the name looks back to the Scandinavian Thor), and is used in making incandescent gas mantles. Monazite glistens, but is of a dull color. The other, ilmenite, is even more magnetic. The pure thorium oxide is extracted and used as the finest pigment in white paint and enamel. The valuable sand is separated from the other sand first by magnet, and finally by vibrating tables down which it is run.

The process of water-grinding in the sea (by which the particles of ore are detached from the original rock), friction of grain upon grain in the rough and tumble of the waves, the influence of a force which we name and use but cannot explain, the tedious, tiny agitations of the vibrating tables which call into effective cooperation the mighty pull of the earth—all these processes work together to bring forth from a black sand, whiteness, and from a dull-colored sand a substance which helps toward illumination.

And the first of these is the breaking up of the rock in the bed of the sea; the discipline of renunciation. It is a figure of the true. First the severance: that which is death to the old order of being, then many a blow that we call blinding, little unexplained constraints, tedious minutes of shifting circumstance—that out of mere dust of the sea something good may be prepared.

And all this is part of the preparation for the spiritual climb.

It is true that "for a man never to feel trouble, nor suffer no heaviness in body nor in soul, is not the state of this world, but the state of everlasting quiet," and yet it is possible to cast all our care on our Lord or we should not be told to do so. And sometimes the cares are so many and so heavy that if we did not cast them we could not bear up at all. The one way, then, is the old way—casting all your care upon Him, for He careth for you.

He who asks us to do this knew what it was to be taunted about a burden. In that old book of close packed riches, William Kay's The Psalms With Notes, Psalm 22:8 is translated Roll it on the Lord (as the Revised Version margin, "He rolled himself on the Lord"). "They taunt the Sufferer with a phrase He had been in the habit of using. (Psalms 37:5 and 55:22. Roll it on the Lord. Cast thy burden.) He has at last, they mean, an opportunity of testing His maxim." There may be some faint shadow of this that He endured appointed for us. We may be with those who do not understand. If so it will only draw us closer to our Lord who was not understood.

And now, roll the burden of cares of thy life's way upon the Lord. That great snowball that thou canst not lift; roll it, cast it, cause it to go. A push will do it. Cast thy care, hurl it with a forceful act of will. It is not enough to think of doing it. Do it. The three verbs seem to be chosen to bring home to us that this committal is a definite act. We do not glide into it. We never do glide into any act of faith. And the marginal reading which Young adopts, "Cast on Jehovah that which he hath given thee," carries us still further. The burden has not come of itself. It is a gift, a trust. If we deal with it as we are told we may, we shall find rest unto our souls.

In that rest we shall climb. The unrestful cannot climb. They are too busy adjusting and readjusting their burdens to have breath or strength to spare for such ascents.—Amy Carmichael in Revelation.

Palestine Fears War

"I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle."—Zechariah 14:2.

JERUSALEM, Jan. 23.—Widespread rumors to the effect that war was imminent in the Holy Land were strengthened today when the Government issued gas masks to harbor officials of Haifa and Jaffa. Arab newspapers especially have been circulating the information that war between Great Britain and Italy was coming and that the former Government was making extensive defensive preparations. The papers persistently reported that troops were being secretly stationed in strategic positions, munitions were being imported in vast quantities, and that a British submarine had arrived in the harbor.

It is known definitely that fifty-six big guns have been mounted in and around Haifa to protect this, the most important port in Palestine.

trolling voice in international affairs. Will the new monarch use his great power of influence to further the cause of world peace and general prosperity, or will he determine upon a more selfish course of action in behalf of his own people exclusively? Time alone will tell.

Such a state of uncertainty and anxiety always follows a change in political administration. No one knows what the future holds shrouded within its impenetrable mists. The death of George V and the ascension of Edward VIII may result in changes that will shake the modern world to its very foundations. It may bring with it the breaking up of the British Empire, for which Mussolini has so ardently hoped, or it may increase the prestige of the crosses of St. George and St. Andrew beyond anything that has as yet been known. None can foresee which, if either, of these eventualities will come to pass.

One day the uncertainty, the perplexity, and the fears that come when a throne or other seat of rulership undergoes a change of occupant, will never again be felt by the inhabitants of the globe! For "behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. . . . And this is his name whereby he shall be called, THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS" (Jer. 23:5, 6); and "his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed" (Dan. 7:14).

ARLEN MARSH, EDITOR

Influence of the Ages

The comment that men of letters—the educated, the wealthy, and the cultured—have not been the ones to support the gospel of God has been made so frequently during the past two years that the editor was moved to investigate the histories of the various leaders of Christendom with a view to discovering what type of individual has been the most influential in furthering the work of Jehovah.

This investigation, summarized, points to these facts: with certain rare exceptions, the Bible, the most influential of all Christian writings and the basis of Christian teaching, was largely written by the afore-mentioned men of letters; the creeds of the orthodox churches were established by men of letters; the important Christian writings came from educated pens; and the various revolutions within the established denominations have almost all been led and originated by the learned.

An analysis of the Bible, for example, discloses the following list of authors: Moses (the Pentateuch, five books), educated as an Egyptian noble in all forms of literature, mathematics, astrology, and in many languages; Joshua, trained as a prince of Israel in military science; Samuel (possibly three books, and certainly two), thoroughly educated as a priest, accustomed to association with court representatives; David, man of wealth and taught as a king; Solomon, born to the purple and educated accordingly; Isaiah, a noble, wealthy, and highly educated; Jeremiah, some evidence of education (certainly a priestly one, as he was the son and heir of a priest of Anathoth); Ezekiel, educated as a member of the priestly family; Daniel, a Hebrew noble, accustomed to court procedure, trained in astrology, mathematics, history, and languages, a member of the Magi; Zechariah, a priest and educated as such; Matthew, a publican and consequently exceedingly wealthy; Mark, also wealthy, and certainly fairly well educated; Luke, a physician, educated in the known sciences; Paul, a Roman citizen, educated in the best schools of his period, probably well-to-do, thoroughly familiar with literature, conversant with Roman and Hebrew society of the highest class.

It will be noted from this list that, of the sixty-six books in the Bible, at least (and this points to an absolute minimum) forty are the product of the cultivated, the wealthy, and the "upper class." Of the remaining twenty-six books, it is certain that a considerable number were written by men well qualified to write as judged from the technical standpoint of rhetoric. It can safely be said that at least three fourths of the Bible came from the hands of the "men of letters" to whom little or no place is given in the church by a number of recent speakers and writers.

It was, furthermore, men of the stamp of Cardinal Hugo, John Wyclif, William Tyndale, John Lightfoot, and Thomas a Kempis who gave us lasting expositions of the Scriptures. These men were thoroughly educated, familiar with several languages, and capable of using a considerable degree of intelligence. Persecuted they may have been, but not because of their brain power, their social position, or their culture.

The earlier years of the church, therefore, would point to the fact that a considerable majority of the Christian leaders have been numbered among the despised "men of letters," whose work of late has come to be considered too highbrow for general use. Attempts to elevate the intellectual and educational level of the church have met, in many instances, and particularly within the Church of God, with objections founded upon baseless prejudices.

These conclusions do not signify that there is no place for the less educated, the less experienced, and the ones who are not numbered among the elite. John and Peter and James were not socially superior to the majority of their fellows, but they were accepted by the Christ as on a par with Paul and Matthew, and their influence on the Christian world has been exceeded only by the Apostle to the Gentiles (not including, of course, Jesus Himself).

It is obvious that the theory prevalent in certain quarters that writing, speaking, and general atmosphere calculated to appeal to the well read has no place in church work is a rather thin excuse to cover mental stagnation. Not all church work should be aimed at the class to which Isaiah and Moses belonged; but certainly that class should not be ignored as undeserving of attention.

Study of Geography

One of the most interesting of the many sidelights connected with most Bible lessons is that presented by the geography of the places concerned. Yet beyond a simple mention of the fact that this town is here—see, where this dot is?—and that town is there—close to the Jordan, just above Jericho—little is done about it.

A knowledge of the territory through which the Israelites passed on their way from Egypt to Palestine; of the past and present condition of such cities as Tyre, Jerusalem, Nineveh, and Babylon; and of the customs of the people inhabiting certain Bible lands, clarifies many of the problems which confront the student. Further, are not such characters as David, Solomon, and Sheba transformed from statistics to human beings by reference to how they reacted to the places they saw?

Let the places come to life through knowledge, and the lessons about them will gain proportionate interest.

THE CHILDREN'S PAGE

PREPARED BY MARY A. GESIN

"As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise."

THE KIND OF PEOPLE GOD WANTS IN HIS KINGDOM

YOU remember that Jesus started out as soon as He was grown up to tell people about His Father's kingdom. He was following His Father's "business," which was to preach the kingdom of God.

God had a kingdom once on earth, as you all know. You can even tell where the capital was and who some of the kings were, I'm sure. But because the people in the kingdom forgot God and followed their own wicked ways, God put an end to His kingdom for a time.

But He is going to set up his kingdom again on earth some day, and we hope, soon. He has His King all chosen, His own obedient Son Jesus. And that King will not make mistakes, nor lead the people in the wrong way. He will be a perfect Ruler, one who will govern with love and justice.

All sin, sickness, sorrow, and pain will be taken out of the earth when King Jesus rules. And when He has the kingdom all ready to turn over to God it will be perfect. Not a thing left in the earth to mar it! Beautiful as the Garden of Eden! When we think of it we can hardly wait for the time to come, can we?

King Jesus is going to need helpers to do all the work there will be to do then. He had to have helpers when He was on earth the first time. We studied about them last week. And He will need more than just twelve when He comes the second time.

I wonder whom He will call to help Him then? It will be people who have prepared themselves now, don't you think? When the President has an office to fill he chooses some one who has the ability and training to fill it. And it will be the same way with King Jesus.

He will choose people who are qualified. And He tells us in this very chapter, Luke 6, what sort of people they will be. Verse 27 is a good place to begin digging to discover the treasure.

The first nugget of gold for today is found in three words, "Love your enemies." Now, of course, not many of you boys and girls have real enemies. But anyone who seems to want to harm you or treat you badly is your enemy.

"Love them?" you say. Why it wouldn't do any good to love such people! They would only laugh at you and call you "Softy."

You just try it once. There is nothing that will cause mean people to turn kind more than love will. Doing them a good turn every time for a bad one. That's what verse 29 means. At least it will make them ashamed of themselves.

Doing good to our friends, loving them, is easy and natural. That's just what we want to do. Verses 32-34 tell us just that. There is no reward for us in doing that, because the pleasure we get from it is its own reward.

But loving our enemies. Ah! that is different. Verse 35 says God will give us a great reward for that. Perhaps helping King Jesus will be one of our rewards for that.

These verses remind you of the verses in the Sermon on the Mount in Matthew 5, 6, 7, don't they? Well, they are the same, only here they are as Luke, the doctor, tells them. And they are the words of our own beloved Jesus. So we know they are important and true.

There is something about "treasure" in verse 45, and that is what we have been digging for, you know. As you and Mother read over the lesson and the Page, talk over with each other what that verse means. It will help you to look always for good "treasure."

Jesus doesn't want us to call Him, "Lord, Lord," and then never do what He tells us. You know Father and Mother would be disappointed if you always said, "Father says this," or "Mother says that," and then you never did any of it. It isn't so much what we say that counts, but what we do.

Now when you get all through with the lesson take a sheet of paper and a pencil, and draw two pictures. The pictures are of two houses, and they are described in the last two verses of the chapter.

There are storms in both pictures, but in the first one the house stands up through all the storm. In the second one the house is ruined.

Those who read about Jesus and the things He wants us to do and then go away and forget all about them are like the house in the second picture. They come to trouble at last.

But those who read about Jesus and the things He wants us to do and then go ahead and do their best to do them are like the house in the first picture. Nothing can really harm them. And they are the ones God wants in His kingdom.

I wish I could look over your shoulders as you draw your pictures.

JESUS INSISTS ON RIGHTEOUSNESS

Luke 6

Devotional Reading: Proverbs 3:13-18

GOLDEN TEXT

"Why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say."—Luke 6:46.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

Topic: The Test of Our Religion.

Class Discussion: The practical value of sincerity. Name some modern blind religious guides. Discuss the danger that comes from such leadership. Wrong thinking leads to wrong actions. The lasting influence of the teacher. Difference between nominal and genuine Christianity.

I. Blind Leaders and Critics. (Vv. 39-42.) This part of our lesson suggests the danger of being led by two kinds of blind guides: blind teachers, and blind critics. The first lead into errors of thinking; the second, into errors of doing. The leader, the teacher, and the critic is supposed to possess a background of knowledge and experience which those whom he leads, instructs, and criticizes do not have. Unless he does possess such a background he is not only unfitted for the task to which he aspires, but because of the influence he exerts he is exceedingly dangerous. The minister who sees nothing more in Christianity than a standard of morals is a blind leader and will guide his followers into deeper obscurity. The critic who sets himself up as a judge of others without first having scrutinized his own heart and life carefully and corrected his own faults is a hypocrite who will do far more harm than good in his criticism of others.

II. Good Trees and Good Men. (Vv. 43-45.) "Every tree is known by his own fruit," not by the fruit of the trees around it. It may be of a nominally good variety and growing in an orchard of excellent trees, but unless the fruit it bears is of high quality it will be cut down and burned. So it is with men. They may come of good families, enjoy good social positions, and have good educations, but unless their inner and outward lives reflect the good qualities of their origin and environment they themselves are unworthy. This principle also holds good of doctrines and of institutions. The test of both is the fruitage they bear. A good man, a good doctrine, a good institution, produces good fruit.

III. Hearers and Doers. (Vv. 46-49.) Two young men pass through the same educational course together. One succeeds in his profession in after life, the other fails. The reason for the difference between them is generally found in this: the first put into immediate practice that which he learned, while the second made little or no effort to use it. Many hear the gospel as it was preached by Jesus and the apostles and seem to grasp its beauty and meaning, but they fail to act upon it. They do not build its principles into their lives, and when temptation comes they "fall from their own steadfastness" (2 Pet. 3:17). The one who applies the truth of the gospel to his own life, who "practices what he preaches," stands firm in the midst of all trials that may come upon him. He has built upon the Rock, Jesus Christ!

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Conversation. Conversation seems to be the source of most of our troubles. The tongue is described as being "an unruly evil, full of deadly poison." It is a little matter that kindleth a great fire. One must continually guard against this "world of iniquity." If scriptural enjoiners are followed many heartaches will be prevented and friends maintained. "Let your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt." Again, "Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth." Jesus said: "That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment." Yes, we must be careful of our conversation. We may be able to get by with corrupt language now, but some day reckoning will be the order and all of the offensive and cutting remarks that may have delighted our ears, but wounded some heart, must be atoned for.

Slandering Remarks

separate chief friends (Prov. 16:28; 17:9); sow discord among brethren (Prov. 6:19).

Fruit. Jesus in our today's lesson likens people to fruit-producing trees. The kind He desires is the kind that produces good fruit. The kingdom was taken from a nation and given to another because they didn't bring forth fruit (Matt. 21:43). Trees that are barren must be taken out of the way. They are hewed down and cast into the fire (Matt. 7:16-20). The fruit which is pleasing to the Master is mentioned in Galatians 5:22, 23. It is called the "fruit of the Spirit." If our fruit-bearing tree is diseased, it is better to have it pruned of the diseased member, in order that the rest of the tree may be made productive, rather than have the whole tree destroyed (John 15:1-6). It is not difficult to tell what kind of fruit we are bringing forth. While we are not to sit in judgment over other people, yet it is said, "Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them."—Matt. 7:19, 20.—C. E. R.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

Overcoming Our Faults

In our last lesson we learned that Jesus desires everyone to repent, to change from former ways to a new way of life, to have the past canceled, forgiven, remitted. What is the means by which one's sins are forgiven (Col. 2:12, 13; 1 Pet. 3:20, 21; and many more)? Jesus, though without sin of His own, set the example for us by being baptized Himself. In a figure we pass through death and resurrection, as He did, and we arise to a new life. (This should be clearly explained by the teacher.) The first four verses of Colossians 3 follow nicely: risen with Christ (through baptism), we seek higher things, the way of life taught and lived by Christ. For our connection with this world has been severed (we are dead); our interest is centered in obtaining that future life, which is eternal and which Christ will give us on His return. We have risen with Him, in a figure, not yet possessing life eternal.

Jesus gave some definite instructions on living the new life in Luke 6:20-45, the counterpart of the Sermon on the Mount as given in Matthew. Choose the verse which seems to point out your most stubborn fault and strive to overcome it with Jesus' help. For that very purpose He was born with the same nature as ours, that He might understand our weaknesses and help us to overcome them (Heb. 4:14-16; 5:8, 9). If we want to have a part in that eternal kingdom of God which will be established on the earth we must be overcomers (1 Cor. 6:9, 10; Jas. 1:12; Rev. 3:21; 21:7).

"I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."—M. G.

JUNIOR CLASS

Topic: Jesus Teaches Us to Obey. Text: Luke 6:43-49. Memory Verse: "Why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?"—Luke 6:46.

Lesson Story. Why does a farmer plant a fine big field of corn or wheat? Why does he have large apple orchards or orange groves? Why doesn't he plant thorn trees instead of apples? Why doesn't he let the thistles and weeds grow in his field?

If that farmer had a fine big orchard, but found that he had one or two trees which never had any fruit, or suppose what fruit it did have was not good, what would he do with those trees? Cut them down is right.

Jesus tells us two very interesting little stories today. One is about a tree. He says a good tree will have good fruit on it. You wouldn't expect to find bad fruit on a good healthy tree. Neither would we expect to find good fruit on a poor, little, half-dead tree.

Then Jesus goes on to say that the same thing is true of people. Yes, even boys and girls. We don't expect to see good Christian people doing the things a gangster would do. Neither do we expect to see a very wicked person doing the things Jesus wants him to do.

Now what is the difference between the two? One will do what Jesus wants him to do. The other will not. Read verse 48 of text and see which man this would mean. Then read verse 49 and see which this would be.

Notebook. Draw picture illustrating the two houses. On the opposite page make two columns. At the top of first column draw a small house as described in verse 48. Make a list of things that people do which would make them like the man described in this verse. At the top of the other column draw the house described in verse 49. In this column make a list of things that we can do that would make us like this man. Which would you prefer to be?—V. C. T.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

PYRAMID LECTURE COURSE CONCLUDES

The series of lectures on the historic, scientific, and prophetic significance of the Great Pyramid of Egypt which has been in progress at Oregon, Ill., during the past week was brought to a close Sunday night. While this community was experiencing the most severe sub-zero weather it has known since 1899, nevertheless an interested audience was present every evening to hear these scholarly addresses. Among those who attended regularly were business men and "honorable women" who have been studying the pyramid but who were not members of the church. It was apparent to all that Bro. Austin had gone much more deeply into this subject both from a scientific and from a biblical standpoint than anyone who had ever presented the matter in this vicinity. Whether one agrees fully with the deductions and conclusions he has reached or not, it is certain that this series of lectures prepared and delivered by Bro. Austin has a decided tendency to arouse in the hearer a profounder interest in the study of the Bible and a realization that God is ever working among the nations for the forwarding of His own eternal plans.

SATISFIED AND COMFORTED

Sr. E. O. Olmstead of International Falls, Minn., writes appreciatively of the last answers to her question which have appeared in The Herald ("Jacob and Rahab," by R. J. Browning, and "Fulfilling a Purpose," by Alta King, both in the issue of January 14). Sr. Olmstead writes in part as follows:

"The last two articles that were put in The Restitution Herald in answer to my question put my mind and heart at rest along the lines I needed help. Surely God answers prayer and fills our every need if we seek in faith believing. May God richly bless all who have been led by Him to answer this question."

Sr. Olmstead asks for further information concerning the meaning of the word "fool" as it occurs in Isaiah 35:8. What does the word mean and to whom does it refer in this place?

What does "thinketh" mean in 1 Corinthians 10:12? Should we not "know" instead of "think"? Sr. Olmstead asks.

Brief answers to these interesting questions will be welcomed by the editor.

DIXON, ILLINOIS

January 12 the annual Sunday school election of officers was held. The usual procedure of nomination and voting was followed.

The officers for 1936 are: superintendent, Bro. William Ford; assistant superintendent, Bro. William Eckert; treasurer, Sr. Lena Duval; secretary, Sr. Glea Rutherford.

Let us all cooperate and make this year one that will accomplish much.

Glea Rutherford, S. S. Secretary.

Miss Rosalie Carpenter, one of the most active younger members in the work of the church at Oregon, Ill., has entered a hospital in San Diego, Calif., where she will take up training for nursing. Sr. Carpenter's address is 2624 San Marcos, San Diego. She will be greatly missed as one of the primary teachers at Oregon, and we commend her heartily to the church on the Pacific Coast.

MARSHALL, ILLINOIS

Church activities here have been slowed up considerably during the past month, due to bad weather and roads. However, our Sunday school has been kept going by the faithful attendance of the young people and with such cooperation on their part the work will continue to forge ahead.

Our Berean class continues to maintain good interest and attendance and here again the loyalty and faithfulness of the young people are manifested each week. I might add, however, that were it not for the willingness of some of the parents to come and bring their families the attendance would not be so large. It is indeed gratifying to see the older folks doing their utmost to see that the younger members secure a biblical education as well as secular. Again we wish to emphasize the splendid cooperation manifested by both young and old in the various activities of our church work, and trust that this same spirit and interest will continue to be shown throughout the coming year.

Harry Goeckler, Pastor.

PYRAMID LECTURES AT RIPLEY

The scientific, historic, and prophetic significance of the Great Pyramid of Egypt will be presented in a series of illustrated lectures by Bro. F. L. Austin in the Church of God at Ripley, Ill., beginning Tuesday night, Jan. 28, and continuing over Sunday, Feb. 2. None within driving distance should miss this opportunity to hear Bro. Austin's scholarly expositions of this remarkable structure that has come down to us from greatest antiquity. The lectures show with astonishing clarity the scientific knowledge of the builders of this splendid monument to divine wisdom, for such it certainly appears to be.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

Sr. Clyde (Eva) Thomas submitted to a serious operation on Monday, Jan. 27. The whole church joins in prayer for her welfare. Bro. Hopkins has returned from the hospital and will soon be able to resume his duties as deacon.

The senior Berean class is following a series of lessons on the books of the Bible—one lesson to each book. On this brief glance the author is considered, the time, purpose, style, and other circumstances. This is interesting and instructive to all of us. Last week we had reached the book of Ruth.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

RIPLEY, ILLINOIS

As these lines are read by most of the readers, we hope (D. V.) to be in the midst of a series of lectures by Bro. F. L. Austin on "The Great Pyramid." We expect these lectures to be of great benefit to the church and community.

In spite of the sub-zero cold on Sunday, Jan. 19, 1936, forty-eight people attended Sunday school and morning worship. In the evening a fair crowd listened to an interesting discourse on "The Zodiac," by our pastor, Harvey U. Krogh, Jr.

Although we may be a bit late acknowledging it, the church people enjoyed having Bro. and Sr. C. E. Lapp of Central Bible Institute, Springfield, Mo., spend their vacation with them. Bro. Lapp preached one sermon for us.

Our Tuesday evening teachers' training class meeting is proving to be very popular and instructive. In addition to an exhaustive study of the Sunday school lesson, problems of different teachers and classes are discussed. We feel that this is a great step in the progress of our church and Sunday school.

Bro. Wayne Laning and Sr. Helen Lewis have both been hospital patients of late. Sr. Lewis expects to return to Blessing Hospital at Quincy, Ill., in the near future. The prayers of the brotherhood are asked for these and others who are ill.

In addition to his timely sermons on the kingdom of God and our conduct while preparing for that kingdom, Bro. Krogh has been giving us some food for thought on "Worship Through the Ages." Just now we are in the midst of the tabernacle services.

Ednah O. Cooper, Secretary.

FROM A MOTHER'S HOPEFUL HEART

From the depths of a mother's grieving yet hopeful heart flows this little poem. Its author, Mrs. A. M. Lobell of Hammond, La., is the teacher of a class of little folks in the Blood River Church of God. The poem has reference, Sr. Lobell says, to "the dear child who was my constant companion for twelve years and who two short years ago departed this life, leaving my heart very sore." The poem follows.

Black-eyed Susan, you I mean,
With your cup of golden sheen,
And a heart of deepest hue—
I'm in love, sweet flower, with you.

My mind is nourished with the sight
Of your dazzling golden light.
Child of sunshine and of rain,
You bring me joy and lull my pain—

The pain a mother's heart must know
Who saw a precious loved one go.
When death reached forth a ruthless hand,
And claimed him for the enemy's land.

Your life here, like his, must be Short, and from all evil free;
Sporting in your golden gleam
As a happy glorious dream.

And like you when winter reigns,
He in darkness must remain.
As in springtime you'll rejoice,
So he'll hear the Master's voice.

In that glad and happy day,
When death's power has passed away,
Comes the time for which we yearn—
The glorious day of Christ's return.

FONTHILL - NIAGARA FALLS

The following information regarding the Fonthill, Ont., and Niagara Falls, N. Y., Churches of God is gleaned from the Church of God Messenger, published monthly in the interests of the two churches by their pastor, C. E. Randall of Fonthill.

The Fonthill Sunday school held its annual meeting in the basement auditorium on Friday night, Jan. 3, with a goodly number present. Following the reading of reports, these officers were elected: William Holland, superintendent; Peter Standing, assistant superintendent; Rena Fletcher, secretary-treasurer. A social committee to arrange for the social activities for the coming year was selected. The committee is composed of Arthur Gilbey, Marion McClellan, and Melvin Haines.

The annual church business meeting of the Fonthill congregation was held Friday night, Jan. 17. Supper was served at 6:30, and the business meeting followed closely after.

The usual routine of business was cared for. An amendment to the constitution was adopted whereby the annual meeting is to be held the third Friday night of January instead of the second Wednesday afternoon. The following officers were elected: secretary, Arthur Gilbey; treasurer, Irvin Barnhart; trustee, David Elliot; deacons, Fred Jones, Peter Standing, Joseph Fletcher, Jr., Maurice Anger; deaconesses, Thelma Barnhart, Ethel Standing; choir director, Blanche Page; organists, Blanche Page, Margaret Shute; auditors, Fred Jones, Melvin Haines; property committee, Addie Haines, Marion McClellan, William Anger, Maurice Anger. Forty-five attended the meeting.

Induction of officers of both Fonthill and Niagara Falls took place on Sunday, Jan. 26, at the usual hour of service of each church.

The annual church business meeting of the Niagara Falls church was held on Thursday night, Jan. 9. Officers elected were: William Moore, George Rennard, elders; Dr. J. W. Lent, Arthur Bruce, deacons; Mrs. Henrietta Moreland, Mrs. Carrie Ogden, deaconesses; Ellison Shea, head usher; Mrs. Grace Lent, choir director; James Engle, pianist; Mrs. Elsie Moore, secretary; Elgin Culp, treasurer.

Bros. William Moore, George Rennard, and Elgin Culp can well be termed the "trinity of faithfulness." For over a quarter of a century these three have been in attendance at each annual meeting of the Niagara Falls church.

Supplies have been ordered for the new Sunday school in Welland, Ont., which will start work as soon as the material arrives. Pray for this new adventure in gospel effort.

Mrs. Faye Brown of Niagara Falls, whose recent serious operation has already been recorded, is favorably convalescing.

The RESTITUTION HERALD advocates: the near return of Christ, Acts 1:11, and life only through Him, Col. 3:3; the literal resurrection of the dead, John 5:28; the immortalization of those in Christ, 1 Cor. 15:53, 54; the final restoration of Israel as the kingdom of God under the kingship of Christ, Luke 1:32, the church to be joint heirs with Him, Rom. 8:17, and Israel to be made head over Gentile nations, Isa. 60:13; the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began", Acts 3:21. It also firmly advocates repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, Acts 2:38, and a consecrated life as essential to salvation.

EMMET SEBURN

The death of Bro. Seburn came as a relief from a long period of suffering reaching back almost ten years. During this time there were intermittent spells when he was quite comfortable and free from pain, but he continuously bore the marks of previous strokes.

He was born in Thorold Township, Ont., on February 24, 1870. He spent his entire life in the immediate vicinity of his birth. On April 27, 1898, he was married and his wife, who survives him, proved to be true to her marital vows to the last. On May 21, 1924, he was baptized into Christ by his pastor, Bro. G. E. Marsh, at Niagara Falls, N. Y.

Due to illness of pastor C. E. Randall, Bro. James Patrick, Ashland, Ohio, was called to Fonthill to conduct the services. The main service was held in the Fonthill church, after which he was laid to rest in the Fonthill cemetery to await the coming of Christ, which the signs indicate is near at hand. Bro. Seburn was a firm believer in the imminent, personal, and visible return of Christ. Bro. Patrick delivered a very fitting and comforting message. Bro. Seburn sleeps in hope and in this hope awaits resurrection.

THE COLUMBIA ENCYCLOPEDIA

This one volume condensation of the world's knowledge was published October 15, 1935, by the Columbia University editorial staff, the avowed object being "to create . . . the finest work of universal reference obtainable in a single volume." The staff undeniably has succeeded in its object.

Every word of the book was newly written by an authority in his field. Writer's Digest, leader in the field of writers' and editors' trade journals, calls the book "the most authoritative encyclopedia published in this country." It is the only encyclopedia in English to list every proper noun in the King James Version of the Bible.

The 3,500,000 words of the book occupy 1,049 pages. Exhaustive cross references and bibliographies assure thorough treatment of all subjects. Condensation has eliminated most conjecture, and leaves the bare bones of fact. The size of the volume (9 x 12 inches) makes it peculiarly adapted to easy handling in small space.

Issued by the Columbia University Press: $17.50.

KEY TO THE BIBLE

The mechanical details of this book follow: pages, 447; illustrations, over 500; compiled by Charles Higgins, editor of the American edition of the Encyclopedia Britannica; type, large and readable; page size, $7\frac{1}{2} \times 9\frac{3}{4}$ inches; color work, nothing notable.

The volume is a condensed Bible encyclopedia calculated for both adults and children, and is entirely suitable for Sunday school teachers, ministers, class workers, and Bible students in general who require nothing exhaustive. It treats a large variety of subjects, giving special attention to places, things, and people; but it avoids themes which lead to doctrinal dissension. The Trinity is not mentioned, nor is the immortal soul; and the Bible is considered as authoritative. The subtitle describes it exactly: "An Encyclopedia, Concordance, and Dictionary of Persons, Places, and Things Mentioned in the Sacred Scriptures." The language is simple, and not marked by technical expressions.

National Publishing Company: $1.25.

EXHAUSTIVE CONCORDANCE

What is by far the most complete Bible concordance ever to be put in print is Strong's Exhaustive Concordance, the product of twenty-eight years of difficult labor by Dr. James Strong, author of many books and co-editor of several important religious encyclopedias.

Unlike Young's, Cruden's, and all others, Strong's includes mention of every occurrence of every word in the Bible, comprising in its scope such words as "and," "the," "but," and "for." Further, the book is far more accurate than either Young's or Cruden's. It combines the features of Young's analytical treatment of the original Greek, Aramaic, and Hebrew words with a rather thorough dictionary of Greek and Hebrew, and adds to this a comparative concordance of the Authorized and Revised Versions. It is older than Young's by a number of years, but has for some reason not become so widely known. There is no feature included within the other concordances which is not incorporated, in one way or another, within Strong's; and it completes itself by the addition of exactness and comprehensiveness unequaled elsewhere.

Statistics: 9 x 12 inches; thin Bible paper; small but readable type (no large concordance can be had in anything except small type); 1,808 pages.-

Methodist Book Concern: buckram bound, $7.50; half Persian Morocco, $12.50; full limp Morocco, $19.00; transportation additional in each case.

AN AMERICAN TRANSLATION

This is the complete Bible translated into modern English by two University of Chicago professors, Messrs. Goodspeed and Smith, the former alone responsible for the New Testament and the latter supervisor of the staff that handled the Old Testament.

The work has been called, somewhat unjustly, I think, more of a commentary than a translation. The same charge could easily be made, for the same reason, against the King James translation. On the whole, the translation is by far the best modern version that has yet reached my attention, although there are something over twenty English versions of the Bible now available.

The poetry of the Hebrew becomes poetry in English; the beauty of the Psalms in the original is re-created as nearly as translation can allow; many of the difficult passages in both Testaments are clarified with a simple modern idiom. It makes a truly worth while addition to any library which involves religious fields.

University of Chicago Press: issued complete and in separate Testaments, in various bindings from $2.00 (complete Popular Edition) up.

Any of the above books may be secured at the quoted prices from the National Bible Institution, Oregon, Illinois. Most of them are constantly in stock. All other books in print may also be secured, frequently at liberal discounts, from the Institution; write for information.

It is of greatest concernment in the church and commonwealth to have a vigilant eye how books demean themselves, as well as men, and therefore to confine, imprison, and do sharpest justice on them as malefactors.—Milton

ETHIOPIA

By C. E. Randall

THE eyes and minds of the people of the world are focused on Ethiopia because of the present crisis between that country and Italy. Not that they are particularly interested in these two countries, but due to the potentialities of a wider conflict resulting, a close watch is kept. The imminence of another world-wide war is so pregnant with reality that inquiring minds are watching all the movements of the nations around the land of promise, where prophecy predicts the last great battle of the age of man shall be fought. The omens indicate the brewing of the winds of the great battle of the "day of God almighty." "Death's head" is to be seen on the time vane of international maneuverings. Gentile proclamations to "prepare war" have passed from secret and muffled orderings to loud-voiced and reverberatory commands (Joel 3:9, 10). With this view of the nations taking long and deep draughts from the wine cup of God's wrath, let us turn more directly to the land of the Shemites.

ETHIOPIA, A PART OF THE LAND OF PROMISE

To Bible students, especially those of the "Abrahamic faith," the mention of Ethiopia brings forth from the chamber of sacred promises, one that is dear to the hearts of the members of the Church of God—the promise made to Abraham. "In the same day the Lord made a covenant with Abram, saying, Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates" (Gen. 15:18). The river-bounded promised land includes Ethiopia. It lies between the two great rivers mentioned. Of the boundary river on the East, no difficulty is encountered. But in respect to the river of Egypt, there is diversity of opinion. On many maps showing Palestine, a portion of the southwest boundary is noted by the wady called "river of Egypt," and many consider this the boundary mentioned in the Abrahamic promise. This is a broad valley which is dry most of the year, except during the rainy season, when it becomes quite a torrent. The real name of this stream is "Wady-el-'Arish." The Hebrew name is Nahal Mizraim, which means "where no river is," i. e., no continuous stream. The river of Egypt in Genesis 15:18 is called in the Hebrew "Nahar Mizraim," and according to Smith's Bible Dictionary, Fausset's Bible Cyclopaedia, Bible Dictionary by American Tract Society, Hasting's Dictionary of the Bible, Bullinger, and others, the term means the River Nile. There is no warrant in Scripture for applying the western boundary of this great promise to a little wady, which Young defines as "a dividing brook in a valley." The promise that the Chosen People of God should possess this land is as yet unfulfilled. But our God is a covenant-keeping God and in due time will perform His oath which He swore unto our Father Abraham.

—James Beattie.

The term "Ethiopia" in Scripture seems to be quite flexible. At times it appears to apply to the territory now engaged in militant struggle, and in other instances to refer to more northerly and northwesterly areas and perhaps a locality in Arabia. Our studies led us to this conclusion some months ago, but we hesitated putting it in print until we had some scientific data besides our own conclusions. Just recently we were presented with a copy of The New Archeological Discoveries by Camden Cobern. Having an earlier edition by this famous author, we highly prized this new book, and perusing its contents we ran across an article in the supplement on "Ethiopia" in which this great explorer of buried truth claims that discoveries indicate that kush, probably pronounced "koosh," but translated "Ethiopia," refers to "three different regions." With this background to confirm us, we no longer hesitated in putting this paragraph in print. For clarity's sake, we shall limit the use of the term to two groups of people—the Hamitic and the Shemitic races, the Hamitic people as the descendants of Ham and Cush, and the Shemitic people as the descendants of Shem. Methodist Laymen Demand Action Against Radical Church Officials

*"Many shall follow their pernicious ways; but reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of."—

CHICAGO, Ill., Jan. 29.—One of the difficult problems facing the Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church in its opening session today is the framing of a satisfactory answer to a letter from the Layman's Conference of the church in which the Board of Education is asked to take drastic action against "certain of its secretaries." The letter, which is signed by the secretary of the Layman's Conference, refers to action taken by the Methodist Federation for Social Service at Evanston, Illinois, earlier in the month, which, it is said, would link the Methodist Church with the Communistic "Red Front" against war and Fascism.

Several of the Board of Education secretaries, according to the letter of Wilbur Helm, secretary of the laymen's organization, are leaders in the social service group which is accused by the laymen as being Communistic. The Board of Education has complete charge of the educational program and literature of the church and is international in scope, and consequently of wide influence in the denomination.

Warfare and oppression are repugnant to every tenet of Christianity. The attitude of Christ toward war is clearly expressed in the words He addressed to Peter on the night of His betrayal: "Put up again thy sword into his place: for all they that take the sword shall perish by the sword" (Matt. 26:52). And yet He said that the result of His coming so far as the present age is concerned would be just the reverse of peaceful. "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword" (Matt. 10:34). The time when Jesus is to justify His prophetic title, "The Prince of Peace" (Isa. 9:6), is still in the future, when He shall come "with power and great glory" (Luke 21:27), to reign "until he hath put all enemies under his feet" (1 Cor. 15:25). This is not the age of conquest, but the age of conversion through the power of the gospel of the kingdom of God.

Power of Emotional Appeal

"The greatest of these is love."—Paul.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Jan. 30.—That the masses are moved more quickly and more deeply by emotion than by reason is the conclusion reached by Prof. George W. Hartman, psychologist of Pennsylvania State College, according to a report which he recently submitted to the New York Academy of Science. It has always been evident that though the minds of men might be led to accept a given fact as true, few were moved to act upon the truth they believed until aroused by an emotional appeal.

In the test made by the college named, two political pamphlets were prepared and distributed in two precincts of a city during a recent campaign. "One was written with a rational appeal: a series of suggestions for social and economic change. The other was a sentimental letter to voters that wrung the hearts of parents." The Literary Digest reports the result as follows:

"In certain wards, 5,000 copies of the rational pamphlet were handed personally to voters. In other wards, the same number of emotional pamphlets were given out. The remaining wards received neither pamphlet. When the votes were counted, the party ballots were compared with a previous year's return. By far the greatest increase was in the wards where the emotional appeal was used. The emotional appeal was twice as effective as the rational one.

"Doing the job thoroughly, the psychologists went back for a check-up of voters two weeks later. Three times as many people recalled the emotional leaflet as remembered the factual one."

Emotion may be aroused either by a statement of truth or of error, for emotional reactions are not produced by facts acquired, but by the incitement of the feelings regardless of the cause of such incitement.

This is an unchangeable psychological principle that should be remembered by every teacher of religion: To get an ordinary individual to act upon a truth of the Bible, that truth must be presented not merely as a cold fact to be received, but given in such a way as to touch the deeper emotions of the human heart—his love, fear, hope, sense of duty, and willingness to sacrifice. A factual religion, that is, a religion that is solely doctrinal, however true it may be, if devoid of emotional appeal will prove to be a religion without heart and without power to transform lives.

What Difference Does It Make?

By Mary A. Gesin

IN A PREVIOUS study we arrived at the conclusion that we all need an incentive to choose the good and refuse the evil. That there is a power that aids us in making right choices, a power that saves. And this power is not within ourselves, but is found in the gospel as taught by Christ. Our effort now is to discover what that "gospel" is.

In approaching this problem the uppermost question that presents itself is concerning the fact that we do not possess in ourselves the power we seek. If within us is an immortal entity that cannot be destroyed, then, naturally, a life of good deeds will be crowned with happiness for that undying spark of divine life. We have no need of a higher power, no need of a Savior, a Redeemer. By living right we can save ourselves.

That is the "gospel" that is preached widespread today. But is that the true gospel, the "gospel of Christ"? Let us proceed carefully and prayerfully, with Bibles in hand, and God will shed the beneficent light of truth upon our pathway.

To determine our real natures we must go back to the record of the creation of the first man after whom we are patterned. Turn with me to Genesis 2:7, old familiar words to most of you. Clearly, the first man was formed of dust, and the breath God breathed into him was the thing that made him "go." He, the completed man, became a living soul—a person, in other words. If an immortal soul had been placed in him, surely it would have been significant enough to have been mentioned here. Read the words again.

Ah! you say God's breath is that immortal soul. No, you are twisting words to say that. You may call God's breath man's spirit, for that is what it is. See Gen. 7:22; Job 27:3; Isa. 42:5. But the completed man was a soul, not that a soul was placed in him.

Granted then that the breath God breathed into man is his spirit, what becomes of it when he dies? The Psalmist tells us that "his breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." No evidence there of a soul that survives after death, nor of anything except the air he breathes surviving after death, not even man's thoughts (Psa. 146:4)!

There are many more references clearly stating our nature and our position apart from the One who came to save us. Truly, of ourselves we are helpless! When death claims us, we have "no preeminence above a beast," says the wisest of men. And even that "breath" given to man by God is the same breath as that given to the animal creation. Read Solomon's instruction in the matter in Ecclesiastes 5:19. Teaches us humility of the deepest kind, doesn't it?

Lest you say we have chosen only a text here and there to prove our point, let us scan that dramatic portrayal of one brought back from the dead. Surely that will tell us what we seek to know. Turn with me to John 11.

If the good go to heaven at death certainly that was the abode of Lazarus when this scene opens. Lazarus, the kindly, the one in whose home Jesus found sanctuary when He was beset by begging multitudes, rebuffed by disbelieving Jews, harassed by harping critics. Always beneath the roof of Lazarus He found loyalty, faith, and comfort—home. Here the beloved Lord came often, receiving and giving material and spiritual blessings.

Re-reading the beautiful story, we find that the bereaved sisters realized that in Jesus alone lay the power to save their dying brother, if only He were there! And that even after death had come to him, "whatsoever" Jesus should ask of God, God would grant.

"Where have ye laid him?" the Master asks, and the sisters lead Him to the spot. Read carefully verses 41-44. Jesus lifts His eyes to God, thanking His Father for always hearing and granting His requests and praying that He grant this one also.

Does Jesus then say, "Send Lazarus back to these sorrowing sisters"? No! He calls him forth from the grave, and "he that was dead came forth, bound hand and foot with graveclothes."

Was this the real Lazarus? Had he been the one sleeping in the grave, deaf to the tears of his bereft sisters and even of his sorrowing Lord? Reason compels us to admit honestly that it was he, the brother on whom Mary and Martha depended, the real Lazarus.

The record teaches us not only the abode of the dead, but the entire dependence of the dead upon a higher power—even our Redeemer and Lord. Without His call to come forth, Lazarus would (Please turn to Back Page)

The Savior

Majestic sweetness sits enthroned
Upon the Savior's brow;
His head with radiant glories crowned,
His lips with grace o'erflow.

No mortal can with Him compare
Among the sons of men;
Fairer is He than all the fair
That fill the heavenly train.

He saw me plunged in deep distress,
He flew to my relief;
For me He bore the shameful cross,
And carried all my grief.

To Him I owe my life and breath,
And all the joys I have;
He makes me triumph over death
He saves me from the grave.

Since from His bounty I receive
Such proofs of love divine,
Had I a thousand hearts to give,
Lord, they should all be Thine.

Our Glorious Hope

By Harry Goekler

WHEN we think that over 360 times the writers of the Bible have written regarding the second coming of Jesus and that Paul spoke of it 52 times, we see the importance of the doctrine before us. However, there has never been a day when it was so essential that it be brought before the minds of the people as it is at the present time. Because as students of the Bible and of the times, we know very well the world is passing through a great change, and the change has constantly been developing, until, politically speaking, we are getting into the fog deeper and deeper. We have gotten in so far we can't even see out; about all we can do is to look up, and believe the sky is above us. That looks like a black prospect, but it is not; it is simply the unfolding of the great plan of God as revealed in the Bible.

Certain things stand out very plainly in the Scriptures in regard to the coming of Jesus, and it is our purpose to examine briefly these teachings.

First, let us take up as briefly as we may the certainty of our Lord's coming.

"Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also" (John 14:1-3).

These are the words of Jesus. A great many funeral orations have been given from these words; however, it has nothing to do with death at all. Death was not in the mind of Christ at this time; what was in the mind of Jesus was His going away to prepare a mansion for His bride, and having prepared it, He will return to receive His people. That is His promise. When He uttered these words they were prophetic, but part of them have become history. First, "If I go" was prophetic then, but now is history; and second, "I will come" was also prophetic, and is still to be fulfilled. History is prophecy fulfilled, while prophecy is history pre-written.

Now for the record of His going away, turn to Acts 1. His disciples went with Him out of Jerusalem, up on the Mount of Olives. Jesus had told His disciples that He was going away, and He had comforted their hearts with the promise of His return. We see them making their way slowly, nevertheless surely, up the Mount of Olives. When they reached the summit, Peter asked this question: "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" (Acts 1:6).

The Jews expected the restoring of the Davidic kingdom by their Messiah, and naturally Peter's question was along this line. Notice the answer of Jesus: "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power."

It was not for them to know, not even the angels, but the Father only, the time of His coming again. While they stood talking to their Master, He began to ascend in the air and disappeared in a cloud. They stood gazing into heaven, hoping to see Him again, but He was gone. By and by, when their gaze came back to earth again, behold, there stood two men, dressed in white. These men came without observation, they had one message to deliver, that was to confirm His promise of returning.

"Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven" (Acts 1:11).

And the "two men" went away as they had come. They left just one testimony confirming the second coming of Christ. Can we believe the angels? Yes. And if we believe them, three things are settled forever for us:

First, Jesus will come again, He will return to earth—that is settled in heaven; and second, the returning will be the same Jesus that went away. Such was the promise of the angels.

Some think the coming of Jesus is at death. This, however, could not be true, else death would be our friend. Jesus said that the last enemy to be destroyed was death. So the coming of Jesus is not death.

Third, Jesus will come just as He went away. If we can know how He went, we will know how He is coming. How did He go away? With His natural, physical body, and He is coming with His natural, physical body. Some will say that He arose with a glorified body. True, but do you not remember that at one time He appeared to Thomas, who was of a doubting nature, and that He had said previously that Thomas would not believe except he be permitted to thrust his hand in the rent in His side and put his finger in the nail prints in His hands; but you remember, the disciples were together in a room, with closed doors, and suddenly in their midst stood Jesus, and immediately He said to Thomas, "Reach forth thy hand, and thrust it in the rend in my side, and put thy finger in the prints of the nails: be not faithless, but believing." Again, on another occasion He got them a good meal when they were fishing, and when they came to shore Jesus had a meal of fried fish waiting for them, and they thought it looked like Jesus, but it might be a spirit. Jesus told them to handle Him and see, for a spirit did not have flesh and bones as they saw Him have. When He went away He had a body of flesh and bones, not flesh and blood, for flesh and blood cannot enter the kingdom of God. When Jesus returns, He will return with a body of flesh and bones, and our bodies will be made like unto His glorious body. Believing the angel's testimony to be trustworthy settles these three things concerning our Lord's return. This was the belief of the early church. Peter, preaching after Pentecost, gives us this forceful statement: "And he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you: whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began" (Acts 3:20, 21).

Now notice here in the 20th verse, Peter presents these cardinal doctrines: First, Jesus has been on earth, and through His blood we have remission of sin. He died, that we might be redeemed from sin. That is what we should believe; Peter believed it; and so did the disciples. Second, Jesus has ascended to heaven, and is now seated on the right hand of the Father, our Advocate. Heaven must receive and retain Him until the "times of restitution of all things." He is there, and must remain there until a certain time; and at that certain, given time, God will send Him to the earth again. That was the angels' message. That was the teaching of the Savior. It was the hope and belief of the apostles and early church fathers. It was promised by God, and God, who cannot lie, will in due time fulfill His promise.

The great Apostle Paul presents this hope of Christ's coming very vividly to us in Titus 2:13. "Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ." May you and I be worthy to meet Him when He comes.

INFLUENCE

By Lottie E. Young

PERHAPS everybody has thrown a stone into a pond and watched the ripples ever widening until they stretched unto the shores of the pond in every direction. And did you ever think how each day we are dropping words and deeds into the lives of others? We may not see the ripple of influence they cause, but rest assured they will be felt further than we imagine. We are told in the Bible, "No man liveth unto himself," and no matter how much we may boast of our independence of friend or neighbor, this statement has no bottom on which to stand, as each one of us is very dependent on many other people. The Apostle Paul tells us we are "living epistles known and read of all men," and if we listen to the talk of those about us we will soon realize how much attention is paid to what others say and do. Our daily lives are read much more thoroughly than the Bible is nowadays, more the pity.

I was reading recently of a case of the influence of a Sunday school teacher over his scholars which should cheer the one who is striving to sow good seed that "an hundred-fold" harvest may result. Forty years ago in Scotland a quiet, hard-working man, to whom the world paid little attention, had a class of seventy-five boys, and so well did he teach and live that at the present time half of those boys are scattered in many parts of the world telling the story of a Savior who died that men might have everlasting life. That Scotchman sleeps without knowing that the words and deeds dropped into the lives of those ordinary boys have brought such a harvest, and who can say where his influence will end? It seems to me that there can be no greater joy (whether known now or hereafter) than to have some one say, "He (or she) has been the greatest influence for good in my life that I have ever known." There are many powerful forces in the universe, but the greatest is influence.

There are two men in the Bible of whom I would like to speak. The first is Saul, that splendid looking, tall young man, who had seemingly many good qualities when chosen to be the first king of Israel. But he evidently thought more of his own judgment than of the wisdom of God, and so, instead of heeding the command of Jehovah and becoming a power for good, influencing his people in the right direction, he has come down in history as one of its most lamentable failures. A misguided ruler for forty years, leading his people away from the worship of God, and ending a suicide! He had the highest office in the nation, the largest income, the greatest reputation in the kingdom, but of an uplifting influence he left none at all, but the reverse.

Now we will look in the New Testament at Acts 18:7, 8, which tells of a certain man named Justus who worshiped God and "whose house joined hard by the synagogue. And Crispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue, believed on the Lord with all his house." This Justus is not mentioned again; he was evidently no speaker or writer, but he was such a good neighbor that the chief ruler of the synagogue observed how he acted, and evidently thought there must be something worth while in the Christian religion which could make a man live as Justus did, and so the record is he not only believed on the Lord, but also his whole family. The Apostle Paul may have planted the seed, and we know God gave the increase, but do you not think the influence of Justus counted for a good deal? Are you one whom your neighbors want to pattern after, or are you exerting an influence for evil? In an old New England churchyard I once saw this epitaph on a tombstone—"She was so pleasant"—and thought how her life must have helped many another.

When we look at Saul and Justus we can see that the great are not always those whose influence on others is for good, but each one, no matter how quiet a life he may lead, can exert a power for good in the lives of all with whom he comes in contact, and many more, even as the stone thrown into the pond sends its widening circles to its farthest shores.

Modern Fulfillment of Prophecies

"Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy . . . to stand before the Son of man."

MORE than four thousand years ago Job foretold "dividing the water courses," damming up our streams which course through our country, for electric power, as well as for irrigation purposes (Job 38:23-25).

Also, how telephone and radio messages would be sent and received through the clouds, by electricity; though hundreds of miles away, the human voice can be heard as if in the room "and say here we are" (Job 38:34, 35).

Speeding cars and automobiles "rage in the streets, (and) jostle one against another in the broad ways: they shall seem like torches, they shall run like the lightnings" (Nahum 2:4). They now exceed 301 miles per hour.

The flying machines "fly as a cloud, and as doves to their windows" (Isa. 60:3), "fly as the eagle that hasteth to eat" (Hab. 1:8), "They shall come all for violence" (Hab. 1:9). They drop bombs and explosives to destroy strong fortifications. "They shall deride every strong hold; for they shall heap dust, and take it" (Hab. 1:10).

The war tank was foretold, and described by Job with its armor plate. He says, "I will not conceal his parts, nor his power, nor his comely proportion. Who can discover the face of his garment? or who can come to him with his double bridle? Who can open the doors of his face? his teeth are terrible round about. His scales are his pride, shut up together as with a close seal. One is so near to another, that no air can come between them. They are joined one to another, they stick together, that they cannot be sundered" (Job 41:12-17). The war tank's armor plate of steel is so riveted together, and truly is its pride here graphically described. The gunner inside is thereby protected from the rifle fire of the enemy while he returns the rapid fire through a small porthole, described as follows: "Out of his mouth go burning lamps, and sparks of fire leap out" (v. 19). "The sword of him that layeth at him cannot hold: the spear, the dart, nor the habergeon. He esteemeth iron as straw, and brass as rotten wood. The arrow cannot make him flee: slingstones are turned with him into stubble. Darts are counted as stubble: he laugheth at the shaking of a spear. Sharp stones are under him: he spreadeth sharp pointed things upon the mire" (vv. 26-30). This caterpillar track laid down and picked up enables a tank to cross over miry or marshy places, as Job here describes the war tank, which he calls "leviathan." Habakkuk calls them "creeping things, that have no ruler over them" (Hab. 1:14).

Diving masks and submarines with nets, and sea bomb drags were also foretold by the Prophet Habakkuk, and first used in our late war. "And makest men as the fishes of the sea, as the creeping things, that have no ruler over them? They take up all of them with the angle, they catch them in their net, and gather them in their drag" (Hab. 1:14, 15).

The great harvest combine which cuts grain, threshes it, scatters the straw, and turns it under was spoken of by Amos: "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that the plowman shall overtake the reaper."

The World Court and League of Nations as a warrant of universal peace, and their futility, are shown by the Prophet Isaiah: "Associate yourselves, O ye people, and ye shall be broken in pieces; and give ear, all ye of far countries: gird yourselves, and ye shall be broken in pieces. Take counsel together, and it shall come to nought; speak the word, and it shall not stand" (Isa. 8:9, 10).

The prophecies concerning the scattering of Israel among all nations were not fulfilled in modern times, but their regathering is modern since 1917. "For I will take you from among the heathen, and gather you out of all countries, and will bring you into your own land" (Ezek. 36:24). "And I will bring again the captivity of my people of Israel, and they shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof; they shall also make gardens, and eat the fruit of them. And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God" (Amos 9:14, 15).

Prophecy was fulfilled in the recapture of Jerusalem without destruction, and after flying machines were invented: "As birds flying, so will the Lord of hosts defend Jerusalem; defending also he will deliver it; and passing over he will preserve it" (Isa. 31:5).

The rich men have heaped treasure together for the last days. Their riches are corrupted. Their gold and silver are cankered; and the rust thereof shall be a witness against them. They have lived in pleasure, killed and condemned the just without resistance. The hire of laborers who reaped down their fields is kept back by fraud (James 5:1-7). This prophecy has met its complete fulfillment, which in verses 7 and 8 is declared to be the last days, and brethren are exhorted to patience till the Lord comes. Some think that the coming of Jesus with just judgments ushers in the time for the rich to weep and howl, mentioned in verse 1, "Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you," but we wonder if "your miseries" mentioned here refers to abstract misery brought on by kidnapers and carnal warfare, before Christ comes, which will try the believers' patience: for then the mark of the beast will be enforced by law.

"And upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming upon the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory" (Luke 21:25-27). The rich men of Russia did weep and howl when their wealth and many lives were taken. Now the world is staggering under a similar collapse.

"This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God" (2 Tim. 3:1-4). All of the foregoing are condemned by the moral law of the Ten Commandments. Devils who make no profession of Christianity may be guilty of all the foregoing. So now the hypocrite gets his rebuke, "Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away. For of this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts, ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth" (vv. 5-7). — J. T. Williamson in The Bible Advocate.

The New Paganism

THAT we of today are witnessing a revival of paganism is an assertion that has been made by sober Christian leaders who are aware of the dangers of hasty generalization and who have not spoken without careful thought.

The evidences of this neo-pagan tendency are numerous. The crass materialism of our age, the widespread indifference to religion and spirituality, the utter irreligion of the masses form an appropriate background for this picture. The filth our populace revels in, in the pornographic novel and sex-laden movie, are also prominent features. Nudist colonies are aping the immodest customs of the old Greek world. Our divorce statistics almost rival those of Rome in its most decadent days.

Perhaps the greatest evidence of the new paganism is the so-called breakdown of Christian morality. We are told in circles that pass for intelligent and Christian, as well as among the ruder sort, that the Ten Commandments are the outworn and discarded "mores" of a vanished age, that moral standards are always shifting, that each generation must decide for itself what are the features of the good life. Waiving for the moment the validity of these claims, there can be no doubt that they represent a very popular contemporary philosophy of morals. We hear on every side—and see it practiced—that people no longer recognize the authority, or even the desirability, of Christian moral standards.

A definite movement advocating a return to the worship of the old pagan gods is said to be gaining ground in Germany. Indeed, it is a bit of an anomaly under Hitler to keep on worshipping a Jewish God and trusting in a Jewish Redeemer. So back to Thor and Woden (especially Woden)? Russia also is honeycombed with a spirit that is definitely irreligious and materialistic.

In several respects, it would seem, the twentieth century is moving back toward the paganism of the first. Have we as a people a prophetic voice to raise in such a situation? We are untrue to our mission if we have not.

There are three things we should do. First, we should point out that this condition is a fulfillment of prophecy. "Mark this, there are hard times coming in the last days. For men will be selfish, fond of money, boastful, haughty, abusive, disobedient to their parents, ungrateful, irreverent, callous, relentless, scurrilous, dissolute, and savage; they will hate goodness, they will be treacherous, reckless and conceited, preferring pleasure to God—for though they keep up a form of religion, they will have nothing to do with it as a force" (2 Tim. 3:1-4, Moffatt). This is not only a vivid picture of today; it is also a depiction of character that Paul saw in his own pagan environment.

To show that a prediction is being fulfilled is not the full measure of prophetic preaching. We must contend earnestly for the fact that Christian standards have not broken down. They are widely disregarded, it is true. But that does not alter the fact that they still stand; divinely revealed, authoritative standards, binding upon all who would be followers of Jesus, which cannot be rejected with impunity. The time has come when Christian apologetics should concern itself less with Jonah and the whale and more with the defense of Christians' morals. Pastors and leaders of youth should inform themselves with regard to the "new morality" and how to meet its spurious claims. The pulpit may well give the doctrine of future retribution in all the power of its scriptural emphasis.

We should do everything possible to help the young to cultivate such strong Christian faith and character that they will be able to stand against the prevailing social pressures. We should indoctrinate them more thoroughly, not only in basic Bible truths but in standards of conduct as well. We should quietly urge fathers and mothers to give more careful instruction in the home. We should endeavor prayerfully and intelligently to lead our youth into an experience of sound conversion.

What we twentieth century Christians need is more iron in our souls. We need a revival of that martyr spirit with which the first century fought and overcame the pagan world. Any means whereby such a spirit can be born again in modern Christians and modern Christian youth is to be adopted, whether it be more careful training in the home, better Christian education, a greater care to bring people to genuine experiences of conversion, or a more thrilling and compelling pulpit message.—C. H. Hewitt in The World's Crisis.

The Loss of "And"

THERE is a little Greek word spelled kai, meaning "and," which has been lost by the world and which causes no end of trouble. Just on account of this loss, and for no other reason, eight million men laid down their lives upon the battlefields of Europe, and many millions more were crippled for life. Because of the blotting out of this "and," the flower of what we call, for the sake of euphony, "civilization," seems about to wither, and that, too, when men were boasting that it was just about to blossom into a marvelous perfection and beauty, as the crown of our "wonderful twentieth century!"

Our Johns Hopkins University, in Baltimore, Maryland, lost its kai deliberately back in her cradle. In 1876 she took for her life motto the words, Veritas Vos Liberabit, "The truth shall make you free"—a sad little triplet dislocated from the Bible (John 8:32).

On a visit to the University of Virginia, some twenty years ago, while walking on the campus with Professor Kent, I observed the big motto in Greek on the Science Hall, at the far end, "And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." I commented on the "and" and its implications, and congratulated the university; Professor Kent told me it had long been a matter of special note and interest to him, too.

The entire biblical passage reads: "Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed, and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

Knowing the truth and freedom are made dependent upon abiding in Christ's word and being His disciples. Experience teaches that truth apart from Christ and His word, the Gift accepted and the Giver forgotten, enslaves and degrades. Germany long ago threw the "and" away, produced Nietzsche, glorified the doctrine that the state, being impersonal, might commit crime and do no wrong, and adopted the policy, "Might Makes Right."

Just now the yet more insidious disease which I lament, and which is corrupting the world, is the abandonment of the Word of God by so many churches and their overseers, and the widespread adoption by men of "Science" of a universe regulated at all times by its inherent resident forces without intelligent guidance or "interference"; an ordered world and a universe—the products of mere chance, and nothing more! All these evils come from the loss of that "and."

They first forgot the "if," and then they naturally missed the "and"; the consequence is that this conception of brute nature, with God our Father left out, is wrecking the world. For "as (a man) thinketh in his heart, so is he."

Alas, that my indictment should apply not alone to the field of science, but even in greater degree to our Christian people—ministers and laity. There is today an agitated discussion going on as to whether evolution shall be taught in the schools and as to the great harm that will come of such teaching. The trouble, I opine, is far more with the universal lack of home training, and home study of God's Word, and the lack of daily prayers in the family circle, with the want of fathers whose hearts are turned to their children. If our children were grounded in God's Word before leaving home, and knew Christ, they then would have nothing to fear from evolution, or from Christian Science, or any other ism. They would be able to defend themselves, and would become aggressive for righteousness.

There is just one weapon that is always effective in defense and offense against our Adversary, and that is the "Sword of the Spirit," which is the Word of God. The church is today on the defensive, and yielding ground, because she attempts to snatch Satan's own weapons from his hands and use them against him. "They overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony."

I want our Christian ministers and people to be so assured of the truth of God's Word that when any apparent discrepancies arise between the Word and the theories of "Science" (I enclose "Science" in quotation marks in such references, because it is a false use of the word, for "the fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge," and where He is forgotten there is no true knowledge, but foolishness), they must rest perfectly assured that in our Father's good time His faithful children will understand one or both better, and then exclaim, "How simple! Why did I not see it before?"

Christian ministers and Christian men and women, put back the "and"! Be assured that you can know nothing apart from Him who made all things, who upholds all things by the power of His Word, and in whom all things consist! I repeat Christ's prayer, "Father, sanctify them through thy truth. Thy word is truth."—Howard A. Kelly.

The Mosaic Star of Promise

THE promise of the blessing of all the families of the earth "in thee and in thy seed," was given to Abraham. Thus the search for the deliverer was narrowed down to the one line of descent.

Neither Abraham, Isaac, nor Jacob proved to be the seed of promise, because through none of them were all nations blessed. They all died in faith, believing that the coming of a Deliverer was the definite promise of the living God. Their faith was encouraged during their lifetime by God's acceptance of their worship, by divine direction of their affairs, and by information on events to intervene.

One great event to intervene was told in the vision to Abraham with repetition of the promise of the land. It showed him that his children would be sojourners in the land, and then for four hundred years they would be in bondage to another nation, after which they would be brought back to Canaan, the land of promise (Gen. 15: 12-21).

From one star of promise to the next there were long periods of waiting, and during these times God's people went through many trials of faith and patience.

The children of Israel dwelt in the land of Egypt and waited four hundred years for their deliverer (Acts 7:6). Part of the time they were held in abject slavery, their lives being made bitter by hard bondage under taskmasters.

MOSES THE DELIVERER AND GO-BETWEEN

God heard their groanings and He remembered His covenant with their fathers, and sent Moses, who, through divine providence, was preserved from being destroyed with other Hebrew children, to be their deliverer and to lead them back to the promised land (Ex. 6:1-8).

At Mount Horeb the Lord appeared unto Moses out of the midst of the burning bush, telling him that He had heard the cry of His people, and He would deliver them and bring them into a land flowing with milk and honey. "Come now therefore, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring forth my people the children of Israel out of Egypt" (Ex. 3:1-10).

The Lord promised to be with Moses, and when he appeared before Pharaoh to ask for the deliverance of the children of Israel God gave Moses signs to perform before the King—thus witnessing that God had sent him to deliver His people.

In Exodus, chapters 3 to 14, we are told of various experiences of the children of Israel under Moses' leadership. How, at first, Pharaoh would not let them depart from Egypt, how the plagues were sent, finally Pharaoh letting them go, but afterwards repenting and following them to the Red Sea. How the Red Sea was divided to let them pass safely through on dry land, while the Egyptians were destroyed by the waters meeting again.

NEGOTIATIONS FOR A COVENANT

The children of Israel journeyed in the wilderness and came to Mount Sinai, and at this mount what a wonderful demonstration of divine power and majesty the people witnessed—"The Lord said unto Moses, Lo, I come unto thee in a thick cloud, that the people may hear when I speak with thee, and believe thee for ever. . . . The third day the Lord will come down in the sight of all the people upon mount Sinai" (Ex. 19:9, 11).

Moses instructed the people as the Lord commanded him to do, and brought them out of the camp before the presence of God in the mount. "And mount Sinai was altogether on a smoke, because the Lord descended upon it in fire: and the smoke thereof ascended as the smoke of a furnace, and the whole mount quaked greatly" (Ex. 19:18).

MOSES AS MEDIATOR

When the people saw the wonderful demonstration of divine power, and the way Moses received the law, they were terrified, and removed, and stood afar off. "And they said unto Moses, Speak thou with us, and we will hear: but let not God speak with us, lest we die" (Ex. 20:19).

Thus they themselves asked for a mediator and requested Moses to serve.

It is worthy of note at this point that from the call at Mount Horeb Moses was acting between God on the one side and the people on the other side. By doing this he demonstrated that he was their mediator or go-between, even though the word "mediator" was not used by them.

This position as mediator formed part of his office as deliverer, to which he was appointed by God. Moses the mediator, as part of his office of deliverer, carried messages back and forth between God and the people; but at Sinai by God's appointment he became the mediator of the covenant there entered into.

MOSES AS MEDIATOR AND INTERCESSOR

Moses as their mediator also interceded on behalf of the people. He pleaded for forgiveness of their sins when they sinned a great sin against God by worshipping and offering sacrifices to the golden calf they had made while Moses was absent in the mount receiving the various laws and commandments from God. Intercession is thus indicated as part of the work of a mediator, particularly the mediator of a covenant requiring the people to observe certain laws which they were continually breaking.

After the law was ratified, as described in Exodus 24, the children of Israel were bound under the law. But God had foreseen that they would be unable to keep it perfectly, and had appointed that they should continually offer up sacrifices to God for the forgiveness of their sins. For neither Moses nor the law could free them from sin or preserve them from the curse of the law, which was death; for all have died. A greater deliverer than Moses was needed for that deliverance, but the power of God exhibited through Moses gave hope for the future.

SACRIFICES FOR SIN

A prominent feature of the law covenant was the arrangement for the regular offering of sacrifices for the sins of the people of Israel, both nationally and individually. On account of these offerings, with confession and repentance, God was pleased to forgive their sins in so far as the limitations of the law permitted. But at best the law was unsatisfactory—not because of defects in the law, but because of the weakness and imperfection of the people. The law itself was “holy, and just, and good” (Lev. 1 to 7, 16; Romans 7:12; 8:3).

A SHADOW OF GOOD THINGS

The Apostle Paul explains that the law had “a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things”; that the sacrifices of animals could not make the comers thereunto perfect. For if the sacrifices had accomplished all that was required they would have ceased to be offered. Because the worshipers, once purged, would have had no more conscience of sins. But in those sacrifices there was a remembrance of sins, for it is not possible for the blood of bulls and of goats to take away sins (Heb. 10:1-8).

But to Israel, who received the law at Sinai, the law was not a shadow. It “had” a shadow. To Israel the law was a very real thing, to be bound on their foreheads and cherished in their hearts. It was the will of God for them, and they were bound to keep it (Deut. 6:1-9, 24, 25). And part of Moses’ duty as the lawgiver was to see to the carrying out of those laws and the punishment of the transgressors (Heb. 2:2).

PROMISE OF A GREAT PROPHET

So far we have seen the activities of Moses as deliverer, leader, lawgiver, and mediator over the children of Israel. He was a man of faith, and greatly honored by God. But he was not the deliverer previously foretold who should bruise the serpent’s head, or the blessing foretold who should bless all mankind.

There was a greater One to come who would fulfill all these promises.

In the meantime another star shone out, the star of promise given to Moses. The light of this star revealed that God would send them a great Prophet. “The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a Prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him ye shall hearken. . . . I will raise them up a Prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and will put my words in his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him.”—Deut. 18:15, 18.

Four distinguishing marks are here given for the recognition of the great Deliverer—A Prophet; of their brethren; like unto Moses; speak all that God commands.

This star of promise further defines the qualities and work of the great Deliverer. Many false prophets troubled Israel, even in the time of Moses, of which the people were warned. A prophet was one who spoke under inspiration. The holy prophets spoke and wrote as they were moved by the Holy Spirit. A prophet was also a teacher, expounding and explaining the meaning of the inspired prophecies; and an exhorter to urge the people to obey God and walk in His ways.

Moses was such a prophet. God gave him the words to say, and he repeated them to the people. The whole of the Mosaic Law was a writing inspired by divine wisdom, and not the work of Moses. The Prophet to come, though greater than Moses, likewise would be the Mouthpiece of God. Him they should hear in whatsoever He would say unto them. This would be unsafe in the case of the words of a false prophet.

Hence the need to keep in mind the other description “like unto Moses”—before accepting the claims of any prophet. Given when Moses had for years exercised his various offices, this identification sign was well and publicly known. Every Jew knew that Moses had been raised up by God Himself to be their deliverer; that he was their leader out of bondage and through the wilderness; that as mediator he stood between God and the people, administering the law given by divine authority, with the power of life and death in his hands. Though often pleading for mercy on behalf of transgressors, Moses never applied for change or modification of the law of God. Always he upheld the law and sought mercy on other grounds, such as the honor and fame of God Himself.

This light concerning the great Deliverer to come was indeed a wonderful star of promise. Furthermore, the promise of another Prophet to succeed Moses in his official capacities was a hint that the law itself might not be God’s last word to the children of Israel.

As time passed, as all the stars of promise were studied in faith, as the law was kept to the best of their ability, the obedient of the children of Israel would realize more and more their inability to keep that law perfectly. This would lead them to place more and more reliance upon the stars of promise and on the hope inspired by them, concerning the One who should bruise the serpent’s head, bless all the families of the earth, and guide them (as Moses had done) to a new Canaan and haven of rest.

And in due time the great Deliverer and Mediator, Lawgiver and Intercessor did come, and could say, “Moses wrote of me.” Not one of God’s promises has ever failed.

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

The key to the sinless life of our Savior lies in His close and constant communion with His Father. How often do you have a heart-to-heart talk with God?

ARLEN MARSH, EDITOR

This Changing World

Nothing is ever static. Everything is undergoing constant change. From the tiniest measurement known to science—the Rutherford unit—to the immeasurable reaches of the greater cosmos, Change reigns as a mighty god.

Not the least of his subjects is public opinion. Few concrete objects endure changes (without experiencing complete disintegration) such as those experienced by the ever-swinging pendulum which governs world thought. And the religious philosophy of earth is the most subject of all thought-phases to the enervating influence of Change.

Until a few months ago, for example, the Ladies' Home Journal, under the expert blue pencil of Loring A. Schuler, carried in each issue an editorial dedicated to the religion of the nation, an editorial calculated not merely to be uplifting, but to hold up Christianity as a means of salvation from every ill that afflicts mankind. The passage of time, however, wrought changes; and Bruce Gould and Beatrice Blackmar, husband and wife despite the names, took over the literary administration of the Journal. And with the change came a shift in editorial policy which removed all editorials—including all favorable mention of Christianity—from the magazine.

This same situation has been experienced by more than one of the great house organs of this country and abroad. It was not without reason that Albert Payson Terhune, whose dog stories have given pleasure—yes, and education—to millions, wrote in 1933 that a renaissance of Christianity in our major magazines was necessary to keep them from becoming totally unfit for general consumption in normal family life. Vulgarity and outright filth, he remarked, have become the undertow which is slowly but steadily throttling the old decency of the general magazines.

To those who are familiar with the big magazines as the normal reader is familiar with them, Mr. Terhune's ideas may seem as exaggerated as an Oriental's account of the first airplane he saw. But to those whose business it is to fill the pages of these magazines the ideas are not exaggeration; they are simple facts.

Mr. Terhune hopes for a return to Christian principle. This is almost too much to expect. To be sure, the hi-de-ho of the late twenties has largely disappeared; but it has been replaced by a less raucous, but more influential, sophistication which has settled into a habit.

Wholly aside from biblical predictions on the matter, it is apparent that the idealism which preaches that education will renovate the world is avoidance of plain fact. The magazines mirror the world, even better than the books; for the magazines must make their appeal to the greatest class of readers that any printed matter besides a newspaper can reach. It is a liberal education in the thought processes of the nation to read—casually or studiously—any of the recent editions of the Big Four (Ladies' Home Journal, McCall's, Woman's Home Companion, Delineator) or the Big Three (Saturday Evening Post, Collier's, Liberty).

Thought, without outside inspiration, does not grow cleaner and cleaner, however much the power of auto-suggestion may be applied to it. The discarding of Christianity as a moving force has abolished the external inspiration. It may, therefore, as has been said, wholly aside from biblical implications, be expected that the great god Change will reign in the human mind only to destructive ends.

Antichristian Politics

Going far beyond the question of petty party politics is the unquestionable fact that government in all its phases is more and more becoming definitely antichristian, whether consciously or unconsciously.

It has not been long since the Federal Government announced the building of an "experimental" town in West Virginia in which provision for everything, including a town hall, a dance hall, a theater, business houses, and residences, was made—except provision for a church. Secretary of the Interior Ickes, when queried, declared that the new community would not be wealthy enough to support a church; and that unless any church which would be started were held to a non-denominational level, the Government would discourage all efforts to establish one in the town.

The President has taken Sunday for his radio messages to the nation, messages essentially political.

Government subsidization of the merchant marine, farming, and railroads has reached an all-time peak. A strong movement is afoot to tax church properties for the first time in the country's history.

Efforts to close saloons, theaters, dance halls, billiard parlors, and dives on Sunday have met either with indifference or with jeers. Frank announcements from the Government indicate that the nation's youth must be educated to the use of hard liquor in order to increase the revenue from taxes on alcoholic beverages.

State colleges and universities require science courses which necessitate the student's subscribing to the principles of evolution. Conscientious objections to military service are ignored by university R. O. T. C. authorities.

It is a hard time for the optimists who hold that the world is becoming constantly better.

Naturalization is refused prospective citizens, regardless of their intrinsic worth, if the applicants will not swear to bear arms to kill in defense of their country.

PREPARED BY MARY A. GESIN

"Jesus said unto him, If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth."

JESUS PROVES HE IS GOD'S SON

IT JUST doesn't seem possible, does it, boys and girls, that anyone could doubt that Jesus was the Son of God. When you think of the wonderful things He did for everybody every day, you feel as though they ought to know that surely. Yet there were some who didn't.

Why, even poor old John the Baptist wasn't perfectly sure! But then we can see how that could be. You see, John was in prison, and he didn't hear about all the miracles Jesus performed.

He had been the one, you remember, who had gone before Jesus and announced His coming. John, the Forerunner, he was sometimes called. He had prepared the people to receive Jesus, by baptizing them.

But the cruel Herod had cast him into prison, and as he was kept in his cell day after day, he began to wonder if perhaps all his work had been in vain. Perhaps all he had suffered had been for nothing.

So he sent two of the disciples who had been to see him to ask Jesus about it. Look in verse 20 of Luke 7, and see what they said to Jesus when they found Him.

That was a good message Jesus gave the disciples to take to John. Don't you think so? Read it in verse 22. Count the things that are named in that verse.

Now look at each one of them carefully. Which is the greatest blessing that Jesus could give to anyone? Sight? Healing? Cleansing? Hearing? Life? Or the gospel? Think hard now!

If you needed any of the first five things which would you think would be the greatest blessing to receive? Why, the one you needed, of course, whichever it was! Some one else would need another thing.

But take the sixth one—the gospel—everyone needs that, don't they? No one can be saved unless he believes and obeys the gospel. And that means more to anyone than anything else you can name. It means more to have eternal life than it does to have the very best kind of a life here and now.

So the sixth one is the very best of all! And that is our first nugget of gold in the treasure we are digging for today. Believing and obeying the gospel is the very best thing that can happen to anyone. Don't forget it!

I imagine John the Baptist felt a lot happier in his prison cell after he got Jesus' answer, don't you? Why, he could even die willingly now since he knew that Jesus was the Son of God and all his work had been rewarded. And that's just what happened to him not long after that. Herod had him killed.

Now read some of the other stories in this same chapter. They are happier stories than the one about John the Baptist.

There is the story about the poor widow's only son being brought to life by Jesus. The mother and her friends were on their way to the cemetery when Jesus met them and turned their tears into joy.

Don't you suppose the mother was wondering who would take care of her now that her son was dead? But here comes Jesus, telling her to dry her tears and hush her crying.

What does He do next? Read verse 14 and see. And what did happen as Jesus said, "Arise"?

Then there is another story in the first ten verses of the chapter. Here was a man who did not doubt. He believed so firmly in Jesus that he told Jesus He needn't come to his house. If He would only speak the word, he knew his servant would be healed.

That must have made Jesus very happy. When He thought that so many of His own people didn't believe in Him, and here was a Roman, a captain over one hundred soldiers, who had that much faith!

Jesus said to him, "I have not found such great faith, no, not in Israel."

And there is our second nugget of gold to add to our treasure. Nothing makes Jesus more happy and there is nothing He wants more than that we should have faith in Him. Believe in Him and obey Him!

And, of course, you haven't forgotten what the gospel is, the gospel that Jesus told the disciples to tell John He was preaching. You remember when we began to dig for treasure we discovered some nuggets of gold about the gospel.

It is a shortened word, shortened from two words, "good spell." Now, you know, what a "good spell" would be. It would be a time that would bring happiness and health to everyone. And that is just what the gospel does.

But it not only brings those two things. It brings something that nothing else can—eternal life to all who believe it. And when Jesus went about telling the people all about His Father's kingdom that will be set up on earth again some day, He was preaching about a "good spell" or the gospel. No wonder we said it was the very best thing that could happen to anyone to believe and obey the gospel!

JESUS HELPS A DOUBTER

Luke 7

GOLDEN TEXT

"I believe; help thou mine unbelief."—Mark 9:24.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

Class Discussion: Should our doubts be ignored or should we seek an answer to them? Doubting stimulates study and investigation. Doubts caused by one's lack of full understanding. How doubt has encouraged discovery and invention. How best to meet religious doubt.

I. Jesus Answers a Doubter's Question. (Vv. 19-23.) As so often happens when one gets away from the person in whom his faith is centered, in his prison cell, separated by stone walls from the One whom he had twice named "the Lamb of God," John began to doubt a little as to whether or not Jesus could be the Messiah. If He were the promised One which was to come, would He permit His forerunner to languish in prison? There was just one way in which John could learn the truth of the matter. He would send to Jesus and ask Him plainly if He was the Messiah. The manner in which Jesus answered the question was far more impressive and satisfactory than any verbal argument could have been. His manner of life, His preaching the gospel to the poor, the miracles He did in fulfillment of the prophecies concerning the Messiah, these would establish the truth of His messiahship much more strongly than anything He could say in defense of His claim. So it is with us as Christians today. The strongest argument we can produce to remove the doubts of others concerning the saving power of Jesus Christ is to see that our own lives are a constant and a consistent testimony to the righteousness of the Master whom we profess to serve. "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed" (John 8:31), Jesus declared.

II. Jesus Testifies to John's Greatness. (Vv. 24-28.) The fact that John permitted a doubt to intrude itself in his mind concerning Jesus did not change the attitude of the Lord toward him in the least. John was an honest doubter, and Jesus recognized him as such and very willingly met every question and answered every doubt. The result was that John's doubting led to a stronger and more satisfying faith. So far as our own doubts are concerned, the best answer to them all will be found in Bible study, especially the study of fulfilled and fulfilling prophecy, prayer, and experience. As time goes by, and we are able to look back over the years and see clearly that the hand of God was really working beneficently for us on occasions when it seemed to us as we passed through them that life was a hopeless, meaningless muddle, then, indeed, our fears and doubts will be miraculously transformed into glorious confidence and abounding faith.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Since history began, men have questioned things beyond their comprehension. It is a characteristic of the finite mind which our infinite God has always recognized, and toward which He has been long-suffering. Nor has He branded honest doubt as a sin. Had Adam and Eve questioned the serpent more closely in the garden they might have been able to distinguish the true from the false and shaped their conduct accordingly. Abram and Sarai questioned the angels, Moses doubted his ability as a leader of his nation, Gideon wondered if it were really Jehovah who was directing him in the salvation of his people. Through the mouth of Malachi God answered the unspoken questions of Israel and then pleaded, "Prove me now herewith, . . . if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing." Both Paul (1 Thess. 5:21) and John (1 John 4:1) exhort us to prove the good as opposed to the evil. John the Baptist was looking for Messiah, but he was not sure whether Jesus was that one because there were certain things in the life of the Savior which John did not yet comprehend. Therefore his honest quest for information.

There is abroad in the land a multitude of religious beliefs. It will be far better for our ultimate reward if we trace these doctrines to their source and learn whether they be of God or man. An unprejudiced mind searching for the truths of God has been promised results.

There are also questions of conduct that arise from day to day that are most easily solved by honest questioning. Trace desires to their source. Ask yourself:

Will this build character?

Will it improve my mind or body?

Will it cause people to recognize me as a Christian?

Do I wish to do it because I am too weak to take criticism?

Do those who habitually do this thing grow more, or less, like Christ?

Is it a Christian virtue, or worldly impulse, that prompts me?

Will it require time that could be directly used in God's service?

An honest answer to these questions may lead to self-condemnation. But unless we have the courage to confess the truth, we are untrue to our trust.—G. M. M.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

Meeting Doubts With Facts

We learned in our lesson of January 26 that Jesus' message was the kingdom of God, and He demonstrated that message by bringing about conditions as they will be in God's kingdom, performing miracles of healing on those who came to Him. John the Baptist, you remember, was also given a great message and a great life purpose. Review his life as given in Luke 1:5-17; Matt. 3; Mark 1:1-9, 14; Matt. 14:1-12, in the order named.

John had proclaimed Jesus as the Messiah for whom all Israel waited. As he languished in prison, small wonder that John asked himself, "Was He really the One?" Not hearing the message of God's kingdom as preached by Jesus and not seeing with his own eyes the miracles He performed, John sent two of the disciples who visited him in prison, to ask Jesus the question. John knew that Jesus' answer would forever settle all doubt in his mind. John's life's work would be accomplished, his death, even, justified. Notice particularly verse 22. Compare it with Luke 4:18, 19. Had Jesus faithfully performed the things John, His forerunner, had proclaimed He would? John could now go to his death with his mind at peace. Truly, John faithfully filled a most important place in God's plan. But what does Jesus say of the one who qualifies for a position in the kingdom of God, as compared to John, who qualified for so important a position in this life (v. 28)?

JUNIOR CLASS

Topic: Jesus Helps a Poor Widow. Text: Luke 7:11-17. Memory Verse: "And he said, Young man, I say unto thee, Arise."—Luke 7:14b.

Lesson Story. One day Jesus decided to visit a city called Nain. His disciples and many other people went with Him. As they came near to the gate that opened into the city, they saw something very sad. A dead man was being carried out of the city to be buried.

When they came nearer they found out that it was the only son of a widow. This made it seem much sadder to Jesus and His company of people. This would leave the poor woman all alone.

Jesus walked up to the dead man, and those that were carrying him stopped. He said to the lady, "Weep not."

Then what do you think Jesus did? He said, "Young man, I say unto thee, Arise." Did the young man do it? Why, I thought he was dead! Yes, but Jesus had brought life back to him, and our lesson says that the young man sat and talked. Then Jesus said he could go back with his mother. Now see if you can tell me a list of words that would describe how the young man and his mother must have felt. Then make another list describing how the people who were watching must have felt.

Notebook. Find a picture (or illustrate by drawing) to represent this lesson. Fill the blanks with words from the lesson text.

One day _____ with a company of people went to the city of _____. When they came to the _____ of the city, they saw a _____ who had _____. His mother was very _____, for it was her only _____. Jesus felt very _____ for her. So He walked up to the dead man and said, "_____,"

AMONG THE CHURCHES

BROTHER L. E. CONNER CELEBRATES TWO IMPORTANT ANNIVERSARIES

Next Sunday, Feb. 9, marks the passing of two important milestones in the life of Bro. L. E. Conner, president and manager of the National Bible Institution—his 75th birthday and his 50th year in the ministry of the Church of God.

Of course the brethren of northern Illinois could not permit two such events to pass without indicating in some way their appreciation of Bro. Conner's long years of service and of leadership, and so the church at Rockford, Ill., of which he is pastor, has arranged a special service for next Sunday afternoon in which the brethren of Dixon, Oregon, and the surrounding territory have been invited to participate. Following a pot-luck dinner to be served in Rockford an appropriate program will be given. It is expected that groups from various places in northern Illinois will be present to congratulate Bro. Conner on the happy occasion and to pray that God's blessing may attend him for many years in the future.

Besides the afternoon gathering there will be the regular services of Sunday school followed by the morning service at 11 o'clock. In the evening on his anniversary Sunday Bro. Conner usually gives his first sermon over again, somewhat changed perhaps by experience from the one of 50 years ago.

The Rockford Church of God meets at 1924 N. Main St.

EDEN VALLEY, MINNESOTA

The church work at Eden Valley is almost at a standstill, due to the heavy snows and intense cold that have prevailed throughout the Northwest for the past few weeks. Nearly all country roads have been blocked, and the temperature has been below zero most of the time. At one time it dipped to 40 below and for the past week has averaged about 15 below.

A Sunday school training class, however, under the leadership of the pastor meets every Thursday night. Those who find it impossible to attend keep up their work at home so as to be on an equal footing with the rest of the class when the weather once more permits their attendance.

Except for one exceptionally bad Sunday the Sunday school and church services have been regular, but the attendance has been small.

The time is not being wasted, however. We are taking advantage of our forced stay indoors to plan an intensive program of Sunday school and church evangelistic work to begin as soon as weather permits.

The pastor is studying evangelism by correspondence in the hope of making his evangelistic efforts more successful.

Richard Le Crone, Pastor.

REPORT FOR JANUARY

Sermons: Pleasant View, 2; Rensselaer, 2; Hillisburg, 2; Plymouth, 1; North Salem, 1. Funerals, 1. Money received: Pleasant View, $27.00; Rensselaer, $20.00; Hillisburg, $20.83; Plymouth, $15.00; North Salem, $6.50; conference board, $9.00.

Because of cold weather the meeting in South Bend was postponed until a later date.

J. H. Anderson, Indiana Evangelist.

BURR OAK, INDIANA

We hear good reports of Bro. Gerald Osborn's message last Sunday while the writer was in Kokomo. His subject was timely, being "Faith." A great need today.

Attendance dropped on account of the cold weather and sickness. It will return to normal as soon as the weather moderates.

At Kokomo, the cold was bitter, but we had services in face of it all. These faithful ones are doing an unusual work in relief of the needy. Since December 19 they have given out over 600 loaves of bread, over 180 dozen rolls, and doughnuts. At Christmas they gave 20 baskets of food. They are to be commended, and we believe God will prosper them.

Sr. Mattix, who has been very ill, is sinking rapidly. She sent word to the writer to come and bring some one, and have a little service. Bro. and Sr. LaMunion took us down, and after we read some Scripture, Sr. LaMunion sang for her; then prayer. We left her in the hands of God, who giveth the strength. Pray for her comfort.

Bro. Jesse Zecheil's father is on the sick list, and much concern has been felt over him.

Betty Hardy, who is in the Parkview Hospital at Plymouth, is gaining but must remain quiet for some time. Betty is 15; send her a card of encouragement.

The contest between this school and Kokomo will begin February 2. Their aim is to interest a better average attendance, and increase their memberships. The contest will last until Easter.

Bro. and Sr. Albert Overmyer have moved into their new home. Bro. Overmyer is one of our good deacons and also a trustee.

A. E. Hoskins, Pastor.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

The newly organized advanced young people's class is making rapid progress. It includes those beyond high school to approximately thirty years of age. They are one month old now, and held their first monthly meeting on Wednesday night of last week, at which time officers were chosen for the year, and plans laid out for their work.

The recently taken church census has furnished lots of material to work upon, both for the pastor and for the various teachers. Results are already observed.

Sr. Thomas, who was operated upon last week, is making satisfactory recovery, and Bro. Hopkins is up and around again. Mr. Charles Barr, who has spent most of the winter in bed with a broken leg, is now getting around with crutches.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

NEWMAN - MACKIE

It was the writer's privilege, on the evening of January 23, to unite in marriage Mr. Hershel Mackie and Miss Irene Newman, both of Martinsville, Ill. Mr. Floyd Hamilton, friend of the groom, and Miss Louise Newman, the bride's sister, attended them.

The young married couple have lived practically all their lives in this community and have won for themselves many friends. The bride is a member of our Salem Church here, while the groom, although not a member, has been a regular attendant at our Sunday school, Berean, and church services. We pray that much joy and happiness will be theirs in the years to come and that the blessing of God may attend them in all their activities.

Harry Gockler.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

A note from Bro. S. J. Lindsay, Tempe, Ariz., brings the following appreciated comments: "I enjoyed 'Peter Views Paul' (Jan. 14, 1936) very much. It was true and to the point. Alta King and R. J. Browning have good articles, too. Our people need much of that kind of food. Thank you for it."

The office is deeply indebted to Mrs. Jessie W. Donaldson, 10 Oakmere Drive, Brooklyn, N. Y., for "The Words of Life," a splendid monthly published in England which advocates conditional immortality. Sr. Donaldson has provided us with this paper for years and we have found it very helpful.

While full reports of the pyramid lectures given by Bro. F. L. Austin at Ripley, Ill., during the past week have not as yet reached us, brief news filtering into the office indicates that in spite of the exceedingly cold weather prevailing at the time, good attendance and splendid interest were manifested.

The report of the June, 1935, conference of the Minnesota Church of God omitted mention of the baptism of Miss Lois Ruhn, 10, Litchfield, Minn., and Donald Kirkpatrick, 13, Cass Lake, Minn.

Word from N. H. Geiselman, Tampa, Fla., indicates that he has been speaking to excellent audiences that manifest great interest. This work has been carried on at St. Petersburg, Fla. Anyone interested is urged to call on J. R. White, 151 15th St., St. Petersburg. Services also are conducted by Bro. Geiselman at Tampa and Lynn, Fla.

Always state for what purpose money is to be used when sending remittances to the National Bible Institution. Several payments have reached us during the past month unaccompanied by a note or return address.

Have you read of the action taken by the church at Moorefield, Neb., as reported in this issue? The brethren there, realizing that their duty and responsibility extend beyond the borders of their own community, have decided to set apart the offering taken by the church on the first Sunday of each quarter for the work of the National Bible Institution to be used in the spreading of the gospel in other localities. This action is worthy of widespread emulation.

Instructions from Nebraska ask that the name of Earl Cowles, Moorefield, be dropped from the list of recognized ministers of that State.

MOOREFIELD, NEBRASKA

Business meeting last Sunday resulted in the election of officers as follows: elders, A. L. Schultz and C. T. Stedman; deacons, D. T. Stedman, Vern Todd, and Roy Welch; deaconesses, Gladys Stedman, May Todd, and Annie Welch; secretary-treasurer, Mrs. May Todd; trustees, Wesley Stephenson, Jim Fox, John Stedman, Dick Ealy, Mr. Todd; ushers, Dave Bender and Donald Stedman.

The church voted to give the offering on the first Sunday of each quarter to the National Bible Institution. May God bless the general work. The truth is marching on here.

E. E. Giesler, Pastor.

A. L. CORBALEY WRITES

On Tuesday, Dec. 31, my wife and I left Puyallup, Wash., for a visiting trip to the brethren east of the Cascade Mountains. We went by motor car with our son Glenn and his three boys. We arrived at the home of our oldest son, Paul, the same evening. His home is near the town of Thorp in Kittitas County.

The following Saturday Paul drove with his family and my wife and me to the home of our son George, who lives in the Wenatchee Valley. George is in the employ of the Centennial Milling Company of Wenatchee, and each day he makes a trip to some distant point, driving a large truck loaded with 15,000 pounds of flour and feed. In the winter months the roads are often dangerous on account of steep grades, where the highways are icy, and many accidents occur.

I went with him on one of these trips as far as Twisp, about 100 miles from Wenatchee. Near there I stopped for a short time to visit with Sr. Myrtle Hayes, whose husband, Clarence, died very suddenly a few months ago. Her hope and consolation are in the soon coming of the great Life-Giver, to give life and immortality to His chosen ones.

There are quite a number of isolated members of the Church of God scattered here and there in the valleys of the Columbia and tributary rivers, who have no opportunity of hearing a gospel sermon. They are always delighted to be visited by a minister of the faith of Jesus Christ, and to have the privilege of asking questions concerning the signs of the times and other Bible questions.

We were with the brethren in Cashmere and Wenatchee for almost a week, and we surely enjoyed the privilege we had of conversing with many of them on the theme which was nearest to our hearts, the soon coming of the Lord. All were agreed that it was very near, even at the door. It brought to mind very vividly Malachi 3:16-18.

Bro. Lyle Rankin has been elected pastor of the Cashmere church for the ensuing year. The members all speak highly of the excellent work he is doing among them. This is his first pastorate, and he gives promise of being a very able defender of the faith.

On Thursday, Dec. 9, my wife and I went with Bros. Rankin and Mont Chadbourne to Spokane, Wash., and from there we drove to the home of Bro. and Sr. Watts.

The object of our visit was to meet a gentleman who had designed and artistically pictured out a chart of the ages, beginning at the creation of the world, and sweeping down through the centuries, accurately portraying the leading events of the past as foretold by the prophets; then coming down to our day, the chart describes the world's greatest war (of 1914-18), and also the final conflict of the nations, which ends in the battle of Armageddon, as described in the 8th, 9th, and 16th chapters of Revelation. Then Jesus is shown reigning on the throne of David restored. This is followed by the second resurrection and the judgment day, and by the lake of fire and destruction of the wicked. Finally the chart depicts the "new heavens and earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." The chart also describes the signs of the Lord's second coming, the dark day of May 19, 1780, the falling of the stars of Revelation 6:13, then the distress of nations of Luke 21:25-33.

The name of the artist was Cecil Sater, and his home is near Clayton, Wash. His wife is teaching school three miles from their home, and I am sure you will be vitally interested in these talented people when you read the balance of the story. Mr. Sater was to deliver ten lectures in the city of Deer Park in the Baptist meetinghouse. He sent Bro. Watts a card inviting them to attend the lectures, in which he used the chart in describing the plan of the ages. Although the roads were almost impassable on account of snow and ice, yet Bro. Watts and his wife and daughter, Mildred, attended eight of the ten lectures. They were so impressed with what they heard and saw that he wrote to Bro. Rankin to come out and talk with the man. I was then in Wenatchee, so Bro. Rankin invited my wife and me to accompany him upon the trip, which we did.

Wild Rose Prairie, where Bro. Watts lives, is more than 200 miles from Wenatchee. We arrived there late in the evening, and the next morning went to the home of Mr. Sater, but there was no one at home. We drove on to Clayton, where we found him engaged in his chosen work of making artistic models and patterns from clay and plaster of paris for the Clayton Manufacturing Company. At noon we went with him to his home, where we remained till 4 p. m.

The next day was Saturday, and his wife was also at home. Our conversation commenced at 10 a. m. and lasted until 10 p. m. Mr. Sater had been a member of the Advent Christian Church, while his wife had belonged to the Baptist denomination. However, by his study of the Scriptures he had become convinced of the thousand year reign of Christ and the restoration of Israel, so they were attached to no denomination, but were earnestly seeking for an organization who believed the Bible as they did that they might unite with it. At the end of our study of Bible subjects we were perfectly united in faith on every point we had examined.

There was no place near where baptism could be performed, but there was a small creek running through the farm, so we took flashlights and a lantern and went down over an icy trail to the creek, built a dam across it till the water was of the proper depth for immersion, then by the light of the lantern and flashlights they became members of the body of Christ and were adopted into the family of God by baptism. Afterward we returned to the house and celebrated the ordinances of the Lord's Supper and the washing of the saints' feet. We then extended to them the right hand of fellowship; so now we introduce to the members of the Church of God, Bro. and Sr. Sater. They are both well informed in the Scriptures and abundantly able to instruct others. So the churches of Cashmere and Puyallup are sending Bro. Sater a ministerial certificate, giving him the right to represent them as a minister of the gospel.

My wife and I returned to our home a few days later, much pleased with our sojourn among the brethren.

ELSIE GAY DINGMAN

Mrs. Henry Dingman, nee Elsie Gay, daughter of Laura and Valney Gay, was born near Glencoe, Minn., on January 27, 1866. She died at her home near Fort Ripley, Minn., on Sunday evening, Jan. 12, 1936.

On November 3, 1883, she became united in marriage with Henry A. Dingman. Mr. and Mrs. Dingman were well-known and loved as pioneer workers of the Church of God in Minnesota. Mr. Dingman was ordained as a minister of the church on February 13, 1893, and lived in active service to the day of his passing, about seven years ago. Mrs. Dingman was baptized at Kimball, Minn., during the summer of 1896 and with her husband has "kept the faith."

Of their seven children three remain to mourn her passing. They are: Harry of St. Cloud, Minn.; Herbert of Fort Ripley, Minn.; and Fern (Mrs. Ernst Bachelder) of Minneapolis, Minn.

Jesus would say, "She is not dead, but sleepeth," at the side of her husband awaiting the call to arise at "the voice of the archangel and the trump of God."

May we, following their example, "be caught up together with them to meet the Lord in the air."

ETHIOPIA

ETHIOPIANS SHEMITIC

The Ethiopians or Abyssinians are of Shemitic origin, that is, they are descendants of Shem. The people to the north and northwest are descendants of Ham and Cush. This is not saying that the line of issue has been kept pure, but is merely a general classification. To the casual student this may not appear to be of much importance, but it is of outstanding significance. In the first place, God promised to dwell in the tents of Shem.

"God shall enlarge Japheth, and he shall dwell in the tents of Shem" (Gen. 9:27). The Ethiopian kingdom is the oldest in the world and people have marveled that it has remained unconquered all these centuries, while other kingdoms have risen, flourished, and gone into decay—but Ethiopia lives on. The secret is to be found in the promise of God, "I will dwell in the tents of Shem."

The language of the Ethiopians is Shemitic or Semitic. According to ethnographers the living languages of the Shemitic peoples are: Hebraic, Arabic, Neo-Syriac, Amharic. The last mentioned is the tongue of the Ethiopians. The roots of these languages are quite alike. One characteristic of both Hebraic and Amharic is that with both languages you read from right to left, the opposite of the English language. This similarity is not of mere coincidence.

Another remarkable evidence that God has kept His promise to dwell in the tents of Shem is that most of our important manuscripts and translations have come from this race of people. Much of the language of Jesus was spoken in the Aramaic, which is strictly Shemitic. We have several untranslated sayings in our present version. Attention is directed to two or three. "Eli, Eli, lama, sabachthani" (Matt. 27:46). "Talitha cumi" (Mark 5:41). These sayings are Aramaic. The whole Old Testament is Hebraic and Chaldaic, which is one of the dead tongues of the Neo-Syriac. One of the great New Testament versions is the Peshitto Syriac. It is largely through the Shemitic peoples that the Word of God has come to the world and it has been through them that it has been preserved.

Ethiopia, as we know it today, has long been closely associated with the Israel of God and their worship. It was an Ethiopian girl that Moses married. Aaron and Miriam raised objection, and the latter was smitten with leprosy (Num. 12:1-12). It might have been well if Mussolini had considered Miriam's experience before sending his legions into the promised land. Our thinking naturally requires armies to surround Jerusalem in order to be in the promised land, but war is now going on in the land of Abraham's promise. The story of Philip and the eunuch gives a clue to the religious fervor of the ruling household of Ethiopia. The eunuch was a man of great authority under Candace, Queen of the Ethiopians, and had made the long and tedious journey to Jerusalem to worship. His desire to come into close fellowship with the true God was realized in his return trek. It has been definitely discovered of late that the gold mine of Ophir, from which Solomon secured the gold for the temple, is in Ethiopia. Recent press reports credit Haile Selassie with reopening this famous old mine. Thus it is seen that the history of Ethiopia is filled with biblical lore, and their acts are not only sympathetic but close akin to those of Israel.

DELIVERANCE FROM GENTILES

The territory within the confines of the old, but reliable, Abrahamic promise is to be delivered from Gentile domination at the termination of the "times of the Gentiles." For the past few years we have seen a gradual and yet most remarkable transformation occurring in this spiritless and stagnated land of promise between the two great rivers. The lifeless fig trees have been shooting forth new and verdant leaves. The emblems of Gentile supremacy are being hauled down and the flag pointing to Israel's future freedom is being drawn to the masthead as it unfolds its long-trussed furls. The land of promise is being delivered, and any subjugation or suppression cannot long triumph, for God is returning to the tents of Shem a new consciousness of divine need.

There are some scriptures such as Ezekiel 38:5 and Daniel 11:43 that seem to teach that the Ethiopians shall be joined to the forces that come against Jerusalem. Our convictions are that these scriptures apply to the Hamitic family rather than the Shemitic group. But, be that as it may, the land of promise between the Nile and the Euphrates is due for a rejuvenation. This regenerative work may be retarded, but it cannot be long delayed by the efforts of nations bent on lucrative gain and expanding rule.

These are days when the eyes of those of the Abrahamic faith should brighten with a heavenly gleam as they see the last barrier that separates the promised possession from everlasting inheritance. Oh, for a thousand tongues to sing of the coming glory when Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob shall rise from their dusty beds where they have silently slumbered through one dispensation after another and shall greet the multitudes that come from the far-flung regions of the earth to their new home, their Eden home, the paradise of God between the two great rivers.

In our next study let us learn further of this power that saves. If apart from Christ we are helpless, how do we become a part of Him? Is there anything we must do to avail ourselves of His salvation? And as we proceed in our study we pray the "gospel of Christ" will indeed become good news to you, glad tidings to your ears.

We Must Know Where We Stand

An Editorial

YOU are going to receive a letter before long from a friend. You don't need to have some one read the leaves in your teacup to learn this—we're telling you right now! And there is no reason why we should suggest that the letter will prove to be an important one—we would not predict its coming if such were not to be the case. The letter will treat of certain matters that are of the greatest significance to you personally. We believe it will "stir up your pure minds by putting you in remembrance" of a debt you owe, payment on which is long overdue. We do not refer to notes payable in "current funds" acceptable at the bank, but to pledges you have made and agreements you have signed and sealed under the most solemn auspices.

While you await the appearance of the letter you would do well to prepare your mind for its startling contents by seriously asking yourself this question:

"What have I done personally since I was baptized and pledged my entire life with all of its powers of mind and body to the service of Christ—what have I done myself to bring the gospel of the kingdom of God to the knowledge and understanding of others?"

That is the principal question, but others of an equally searching nature grow out of it, as, for example, these:

"How many people have I asked to come to church to hear the gospel of the kingdom preached? How many have I talked to with regard to the Lord's coming and our complete dependence upon Him for eternal life? How many tracts, teaching the conditions of salvation as they are laid down in the Bible, have I distributed? How many people have I tried to get to subscribe to THE RESTITUTION HERALD? In short, what have I done individually to further the message of salvation since I came into Christ and pledged my all to His service?"

You have gone to preaching service once a month—twice a month—every Sunday when you were able. You have listened attentively to Brothers Magaw, Macleod, Randall, Austin, Lyon, Siple, Lindsay, Krogh, Hoskins, Le Crone, Giesler, Drinkard, and many other able men and women who have given of their mental, spiritual, and physical strength to bring the truth to you—perhaps you've paid a dollar or two or three into the church (Please turn to Page Ten)

Abreast of the Times

British Warships Arrive at Haifa

"The ships of Tarshish first, to bring thy sons from far, their silver and their gold with them."—Isa. 60:9.

HAIFA, Palestine, Feb. 1.—Five British cruisers, five destroyers, and one submarine arrived here today from the western Mediterranean. Increasing her land forces in Egypt, the Sudan, and in Palestine, Great Britain indicates in action what she does not seem disposed to acknowledge in words, that the prestige of the Empire is threatened by the Italo-Ethiopian war in Africa. To lose control of Gibraltar, the Mediterranean Sea, Palestine (mandate over which Italy asked of the League of Nations some years ago), the Suez Canal, and the Red Sea ports she now occupies, would not only seriously impede her most important line of communication with her dominions in the Pacific, but would actually threaten the continuance of the whole British Empire. It is evidently in furtherance of a protective policy in that region that these additional ships have been sent to Palestine.

We believe that God has a great work for Britain to accomplish in the last days of this dispensation, and that He will not permit the Empire to be broken up nor its power dissipated until that purpose is achieved.

Greek Monarchy Restored

"Lo, the prince of Grecia shall come."—Dan. 10:20.

ATHENS, Greece, Feb. 8.—One by one the ancient kingdoms and empires occupying the Bible lands are assuming the place and form of government assigned them in prophecy. Babylon, officially reborn and rechristened "Irak" or "Iraq" by the League of Nations on October 3, 1932, is now free from the British mandate under which it was governed after the War. Persia, the inheritor of Medo-Persian traditions, has taken on new life within its historic boundaries. Egypt, although never again to have a ruling prince of its own race upon the throne (Ezek. 30:13), and which will probably remain officially under British control until the Lord comes, is showing many indications of national consciousness and irritation at foreign restraint. Rome is struggling to regain its ancient prestige and reestablish its dominating place in the world. Ethiopia, the oldest monarchy with an unbroken history, is making its name renowned throughout the earth.

Greece, the successor of the Macedonian Empire, is once more in the forefront of the prophetic picture. With the bloodless and popular revolution of last October, by which the republic was overthrown and the monarchy restored, our attention has been drawn toward the land of Alexander the Great. King George II has been recalled to the throne and events of the past few weeks, including the death of Marshal George Kondylis, the "Little Thunderbolt," have greatly strengthened the personal position of the King and made him virtually the predominating influence in Grecian affairs. Thus under the encouragement of Great Britain, and in opposition to the will of Italy, the ancient monarchist form of government has been reestablished firmly.

Nazis Return to Palestine

"From all your filthiness . . . will I cleanse you."—Ezekiel 36:25.

JERUSALEM, Feb. 4.—Strange as it may seem, a delegation of eighty Nazis who live in Palestine returned today from a visit to Germany bringing with them three large swastika flags, which they declared they had received from the Reichsfuerer himself. The banners were unfurled by Nazi units at Jerusalem, Haifa, and Daron. In this peculiar situation we have evidence of the presence in Palestine of antagonistic elements which will be rooted out when the Lord shall cleanse the land as well as the Jewish people from their sin.

Five-Power Pact Negotiated

"Peace be unto thee, be strong."—Daniel 10:19.

PARIS, Feb. 9.—A treaty uniting Rumania, Yugo-Slavia, Hungary, and Czechoslovakia in a guarantee of military aid for Austria in case of a German attack on the last nation has just been submitted to France for approval. The pact calls for economic as well as military union in an effort to free the Balkan countries from dependence upon larger Powers. The Balkan Entente—meaning Turkey and Greece in addition to Yugo-Slavia and Rumania—may be asked to join the new bloc if it proves feasible.

What Difference Does It Make?

By Mary A. Gesin

A PART from Christ we possess no power to live after death. Of ourselves we are helpless. In death thought, memory, purpose—everything—ceases. The silent tomb is our resting place. These are some of the facts we discovered in previous studies.

Our problem in the present study is to find out how to avail ourselves of the power that lies in Christ. Is it open to all? Is it showered upon all, regardless of their desire for that blessing? If, as we established in our first study, we cannot save ourselves by good works, what does save us? A significant question, surely, and one that interests mankind in general! The erroneous answers given to seeking humans and upon which they blindly rely would make the very stones cry out for pity. Questions more important than any other questions in the universe, yet answered by those who should know without apparent knowledge or quest for truth.

Let us proceed as in previous studies, not with haughty egotism, but with prayer on our lips for guidance from above and Bibles in hand. And let us repeat, in no other way will the light of God's truth be shed upon our effort. Writer and reader together, let us ask for wisdom from God.

How do we become part of Christ so that we may realize the salvation He offers? By baptism into His name. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved" (Mark 16:15, 16).

"As many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ" (Galatians 3:27).

The likeness to the salvation received within the ark in the days of the flood is carried out by Peter in his first letter (3:20, 21). Turn to it and read it thoughtfully. "The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us."

This baptism must be a burial, typical of our Lord's death and burial. Paul describes it in Colossians 2:10-13, "Buried with him in baptism." The rising from the waters of baptism typifies Christ's resurrection, and the miracle of forgiveness of all past sin is accomplished. But there must be "much water" (John 3:23; Acts 8:38).

Could anything be simpler or more far-reaching in its effect? Surely, it is not too much that God asks of us in return for the blessings poured out upon us! Many willingly submit to ridiculous proceedings to become part of human organizations. Does God ask something too hard for you to perform?

If we follow the apostles as they preached the gospel of Christ we learn that "when they believed they were baptized." For example, read of Philip and the eunuch (Acts 8); Peter on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2); Cornelius and Lydia, both of whom were persons of good works. But when they heard the gospel they realized baptism was necessary. If moral goodness in itself could save, these two, at least, would not have needed baptism. And Jesus, the sinless, spotless One, set the example.

Many more references could be cited showing the need for baptism in order to belong to Christ and inherit with Him the blessings in store for those who believe. Read carefully Romans 6, and the blessing of obedience will be so apparent to you, you will exclaim, "What doth hinder me?"

The beauty of the new life following baptism opens up vistas hitherto unknown. As once we were slaves to sin, we are now alive "unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord." He is now the ruling power in our lives. Through Him daily we come to God; He is our Mediator, our Helper, when temptations beset and doubts arise.

The "works" of which James speaks so explicitly now follow naturally. We cannot help but do them, though they are not the means of our salvation. They are only as "filthy rags" in comparison to Christ's righteousness which is ours because of our faith. The "faith" accomplishes our salvation and produces the "works."

In our next study let us further examine this "gospel of Christ" which saves men, and learn what the rewards are for faith and obedience. For they are, after all, the incentives to service. Often a child's good behavior must be insured by reward. Are not men and women but children grown tall?

If you agree with us in our Bible investigation thus far, that we possess no power in ourselves that will save us, but that we must rely on Christ, why not render obedience in baptism?

"Why tarriest thou?"

Be Merciful

Sinful, sighing to be blessed;
Bound, and longing to be free;
Weary, waiting for my rest:
God, be merciful to me.

Goodness I have none to plead,
Sinfulness in all I see,
I can only bring my need:
God, be merciful to me.

Broken heart and downcast eyes
Dare not lift themselves to Thee;
Yet Thou canst interpret sighs:
God, be merciful to me.

From this sinful heart of mine
To Thy bosom I would flee;
I am not my own, but Thine:
God, be merciful to me.

—John S. B. Monsell.

MARRIAGE

By A. H. Zilmer

THE institution of marriage implies two things, the first of which is the division of the human species into sexes, male and female. This sex distinction owes its existence to the will and creative act of God. The second of these is the divine establishment of the union of the man and the woman in the bonds of wedlock. God is the author of both the sex distinction and the married state. They were established in the beginning of the present order of things on the earth and were intended to coexist throughout mortal human history. Each requires the other. Marriage involves the sex relation, and this implies that a man and a woman live together as husband and wife, though it does not necessarily follow from this that all men and women should marry. This is the general rule.

MARRIAGE IS HONORABLE

It is written, "Marriage is honourable in all, and the bed undefiled" (Heb. 13:4). In ordinary usage the word "honor" has the meaning of consideration due or paid, as on account of worth, high character, or distinguished services. The Greek word in this passage translated "honourable" is timios, and is rendered "dear" once, "had in admiration" once, and "precious" eleven times.

Whence does marriage derive the honor here attributed to it? Not primarily from man who enters the married state, but from God, the Creator of all things, who also for wise and benevolent ends created and established the marriage relation between man and woman.

Though the man Adam, along with all other created beings, was "very good" as he came from the Creator's hand (Gen. 1:31), it was "not good" that he be "alone," or by himself. That is, it was not good for the object for which all things, including man, had been created. Hence the necessity, as well as wisdom, of making "an help meet for him" (Gen. 2:18). As the marginal reading suggests, this "help" was to be "before" him, in his presence, or about him. As a being endowed with intellect equal to the tremendous task of exercising dominion over the earth and subduing it, he must have a suitable companion about him with whom he may communicate regarding their well-being and the work entrusted to them. So the Lord God made "an help meet for him"; and this was the manner thereof:

"And the Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, and he slept: and he took one of his ribs, and closed up the flesh instead thereof; and the rib, which the Lord God had taken from man, made he a woman, and brought her unto the man" (Gen. 2:21, 22).

The first of a series of articles to be reprinted from a booklet issued in 1928 by the author. Not without reason has the marriage ceremony been held by the Roman Catholics to be one of the sacraments. The subject is one of the most intense importance, especially to young people.

"Meet" means suitable. Being bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh (Gen. 2:23), the woman was one with the man in substance. Being "meet" for him she was suited to him in intellect as well as bodily structure, so that they could enter sympathetically and with mutual helpfulness into the work committed to their hands. The woman being Adam's "help," it is clear that he could not accomplish alone the stupendous work of subduing the earth, and peopling it with beings of his kind. He must have a help—a suitable help—who can share with him his labors and his concerns, and be the mother of his children, as he is their father. Being of his bone and flesh, she is placed at his side as his help, not under his feet as his slave. Share and share alike in sorrow as well as in joy, is the rule, although the sphere of each, owing to the fact of being male and female, is in a class of its own. The one is not a lord, a tyrant, or a dictator, nor the other a cringing subject or a slave. Together they bear their burdens; together they share their successes and their joys. Mutual love is the bond that unites and holds them together. In this bond each remains the personality the Creator made, and each consecrates and dedicates that personality to the common good.

The margin at verse 7 says that God "buildd" a woman, or the woman. The Hebrew word here rendered "make" is banah, and is translated "make" 3 times, and "build" 328 times in the Old Testament, thus fully justifying the marginal reading. Hence we see that the Lord God built a woman as a help "meet" for the man. We do not know what was the exact process by which the woman was buildd, or how long time was consumed as we compute time; nor is this necessary. But we know that the relation of husband and wife as established by the Creator at the beginning was "honourable," and it was intended that marriage be held in honor by all who would enter this state. The lapse of time since then has not in the least degree lessened this honor so far as the Creator's intention is concerned. It was so when the above-cited pronouncement was made regarding the honorableness of the married state, and it is so today.

AT THE BEGINNING

Jesus referred to this beginning when answering certain questions put to Him by some captious persons of His day who sought to entrap Him. To these He said, "Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning made them male and female?" (Matt. 19:4). The "beginning" here mentioned is the creation, as we see by reference to Mark 10:6: "From the beginning of the creation God made them male and female." Again: "From the beginning it was not so."

What was done at this "beginning" of the human race unmistakably indicates the divine intent for as long as the married relation between man and woman was to continue, that is, during the entire history of man in his mortal state. That rule never having been repealed or modified, there can be no departure therefrom anywhere or at any time without doing violence to it.

THE ANTECEDENTS OF MARRIAGE

These are, in brief, courtship and mutual love. While there is, in the parlance of the world, "love at first sight," yet as a rule true conjugal love is neither an accident nor suddenly created. It requires, first, acquaintance, then mutual attraction, esteem, and those qualities of mind that unite more and more two hearts, so that in time each sees in the other his or her complement, and a companion for the rest of mortal life. True love is sentiment; but it is more than this; it is sentiment tempered by reason. It is reason, or good judgment, sweetened and sanctified by the sentiment of love, and sooner or later results in the agreement, mutually arrived at, that two lives shall henceforth be merged into one, two persons unite their destinies, found a home, and lay the foundation for a family. Yet however whole-hearted and genuine their love may be before they are married, they are not yet "joined together," and may not and must not live together as husband and wife. They must first be "married." It is by such marriage that the man "takes" the woman of his choice to be his wife; and she is "given in marriage" to the man of her choice. Underlying the marriage is the deep and abiding love of each for the other, and growing out of such love is the marriage which makes them husband and wife.

MONOGAMY

By this is meant single marriage as opposed to bigamy or polygamy. This is also according to the divine rule, and is implied in the fact that the Creator at the beginning made them, as one rendering puts the matter, "a male and a female" (Gen. 1:26, 27). It was manifestly His intention that one man and one woman should be related as husband and wife during their natural life. This appears from the mandatory words, also cited by Jesus, "For this cause shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave to his wife" (Gen. 2:24; Matt. 19:5; Mark 10:7). "Cleave" in Genesis 2:24 means to remain attached, or faithful. In the New Testament it means to be closely united. This union is to be regarded by both parties as sacred and indissoluble while life endures.

THE OBJECT OF MARRIAGE

This is indicated in the language addressed to the first pair, "Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth" (Gen. 1:28). We would not spend time in dealing with the word "replenish," but simply say that the Hebrew word male means to fill up; whether a first time or oftener does not appear. This command was repeated to Noah and his family (Gen. 9:1, 7).

Fruitfulness, or the power of reproduction, and the consequent continuance of the race with a view to filling the earth with human beings, was the object in view in the establishment of the married relation. However, we cannot believe that the mere filling of the earth with human beings is all that entered into the divine plan at the beginning. All things were made for the Creator's pleasure. We read, "Thou art worthy, O Lord our God, to receive honor, and glory, and power; for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created" (Revelation 4:11, oldest Greek text). The Most High was looking to the end when He created the first man and woman. "Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world" (Acts 15:18). A world of discord, strife, disgrace, shame, and death intervenes between the beginning and the attainment of the divine objective. But these did not deter the Creator from entering upon the task of peopling the earth with human beings.

JOINED TOGETHER

"What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder" (Matt. 19:6; Mark 10:9). Here are three terms that claim our attention, viz., "therefore," "joined together," and "put asunder."

1. The "therefore" has its basis in the fact that the man and the woman who are united as husband and wife are "no more twain, but one flesh." This involves the further fact that the man leaves father and mother, and cleaves to his wife, which in turn has its reason in the fact that they are male and female; and this is due to the divine creative will (Matt. 19:4-6).

2. The second of these terms is "joined together." Who are "joined together"? Are every man and every woman? By no means, but the "man" and the "wife" in the question asked of Jesus by the Pharisees (Matt. 19:3). It was the man who left father and mother and married a wife; and it was God who joined them together as such by the operation of the rule established at the beginning. That this union is a very close one is evident from the Greek word suzugneoo, which literally means yoked together. When or how were these two persons thus "joined" or "yoked"? Was it done in Eden? This could not be, for they did not then exist. Was it purely because they were male and female? Not so, for the reason that not every man and every woman are joined together. Though they were male and female, they were not thus joined together until a certain time after reaching maturity. Since they were joined together they are husband and wife, and for no other reason.

As it is employed in Scripture as well as common use the word "marry" means either to unite a man and a woman as husband and wife, or else to be so united. This is the sense of the Hebrew and Greek words in the Bible rendered "marry." In Deuteronomy 24:1 a man has "taken" a wife and "married" her. The Hebrew baal signifies that he became the possessor of a wife. In Nehemiah 13:27 certain Israelites are said to have committed a great trespass against God in "marrying strange wives." What did they do? They took those women, and established them in their homes as their wives.

In the New Testament the word for marry is gameo. From this are derived the words monogamy, one marriage; bigamy, two marriages at once; polygamy, many marriages. In every case the marriage unites or joins together a man and a woman as husband and wife, either lawfully or otherwise. Where this is done lawfully, that is, in keeping with the divine rule established at the beginning, it is "honourable"; where it is done contrary to the divine law it is "not lawful." Before such marriage takes place the parties are not husband and wife; they are not "joined together," and hence it would be impossible to put them asunder, as this can only apply to persons who are married.

God did not prescribe the exact age at which a man and a woman may become united as husband and wife, nor what man and what woman should be thus joined, nor the form of the ceremony by which this is to be done; but when two mature human beings of opposite sex by mutual agreement become united as husband and wife, whether by civil, ecclesiastical, or other ceremony, they become "joined together" in accordance with the intent of this term as used by Jesus in His answer to the question of the Pharisees. Various marriage ceremonies have obtained at different

A Love Letter From God

By Richard Le Crone

THE BIBLE has more practical uses than any other book in the world. There is scarcely a profession or an occupation that cannot profitably search the Scriptures for information regarding its beginnings and development. The historian turns to it as the one absolutely reliable ancient history. To the archaeologist it is a text to which he may turn for the record and location of ancient cities, now buried beneath the accumulated remains of other more recent cities. The student of literature regards the Bible as the most remarkable literary work known to man. Its pages have even been known to lead to the accumulation of wealth by pointing indirectly to deposits of oil in Egypt.

Others read it for less pleasing reasons. The chronic arguer reads it that he may debate its doctrines. The sinner sometimes attempts to justify his carelessness by its words, and the agnostic examines it for flaws that he may use in casting doubt upon its inspiration.

More commendable are the efforts of those who regard it as the Word of God and read it "for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness" (2 Tim. 3:16). For such people and for these purposes were the Scriptures given.

There is open to all, a manner of reading the Bible which yields returns far in excess of any of the other ways. Its returns are joy and peace such as can be realized in no other way. It is known as devotional reading. The devotional reader reads not for scientific, literary, or business reasons, nor yet as a duty or to learn doctrine. He reads it as a message to him from a kind and loving Father who is concerned about his well-being.

The Senior and Intermediate Teacher records the following definition of devotional reading as given by a young woman. "Yesterday morning I received a letter from one to whom I have given my heart and devoted my life. I freely confess to you that I have read that letter five times, not because I did not understand it at the first reading, nor because I expect to commend myself to the author by frequent reading of his epistle. I read it because I am devoted to the one who wrote. To read the Bible with that motive is to read it 'devotionally,' and to one who reads it in that spirit it is indeed a love letter."

To one who approaches the Bible with a deep and abiding love for God in his own heart, and an equally strong conviction of God's love for him, its pages fairly bristle with evidences of God's love and concern for mankind. "But as it is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things that God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them to us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God" (1 Cor. 2:9, 10). To read the Bible as a student may reveal to us many things, but only when we read it in a spirit of love does it reveal to us God. For "God is love."

When we read a letter from a loved one, we read it, not so much for the sake of facts stated, as for little characteristics that reveal to us the heart and mind of the writer. A letter may never mention love or devotion, yet be fairly laden with both. On the other hand we may find them completely lacking in a letter that speaks of nothing else. In the Bible we find both the verbal and spiritual assurance of God. Thus His promises to us become gifts of grace rather than earned rewards. His warnings become words of loving concern rather than threats of punishment. His gifts become prized possessions to be used in the way that will please Him most. Each draws us closer to God and helps us to know Him better.

Read devotionally, the Bible is encouragement for the disheartened, comfort for the bereaved, sympathetic understanding for the joyful, and counsel for the undecided. It is far more than a textbook of history, archaeology, literature, or even of righteous living and doctrine. It is a love letter to us from God.

The Fatherhood of God

IN THE favorite of childhood, Alice in Wonderland. Alice is told that to Humpty Dumpty words mean only what he wants them to mean at a given moment. If he wants "b-l-a-c-k" to mean "white" he simply uses that combination of letters. There is much paganism that in our day passes for Christianity. Unbelief has frequently sought to clothe itself in the garments of truth, Satan appearing like an angel of light. The use of New Testament language to disguise unchristian ideas is quite common. Especially is this true with the thought of "the Fatherhood of God" and its related idea, "the Brotherhood of Man." One meets them in books, in sermons, and even on the walls of buildings. Yet surprising as it may sound, the accepted meaning of these terms is false and unchristian. More than that, we can trace them to the philosophy of the Stoics who coined the exact phrases. It is from these men that our modern world has the thought that God is the Father of all men and that consequently all men are brothers. This dual belief is not the teaching of the Scriptures even though the phrases have a pious ring. It is true that the Bible speaks repeatedly of God as a "Father" and of men as "brethren." But we should take care that this outward similarity does not blind us to deep dissimilarities.

I

What does the Bible tell us of the Fatherhood of God? In the first pages of Genesis we meet what we may call a "Fatherhood by creation." God brought our first parents into being and God, through the media of human parents, continues to bring children into the world. In this sense we can indeed speak of God as the Father of all mankind. But we do not read far in the Bible before we learn that this relationship was totally disrupted by man. In a vain endeavor to "be as gods" man wrenched himself out of the loving hand of God. He denied his continual dependence upon God and asserted his proud independence. When Nebuchadnezzar uttered his boast, "Is not this the great Babylon, that I have made by the might of my power, and for the honour of my majesty?" (Dan. 4:30), he was only repeating that ancient sin. Man voluntarily orphaned himself, rebelling and vexing His Holy Spirit, and the old relationship to God became only a memory that makes him eternally dissatisfied until the Father-child relationship be restored.

II

There is, however, a fuller, more adequate meaning given in the New Testament to the phrase. Paul refers to this when he writes, "You have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father" (Rom. 8:15). Jesus of Nazareth is God's Son in a unique, unrepeatable sense. He alone, of all who have trodden this earth, is united with the Father from all eternity. His is Sonship in a direct sense; that of believers is indirect and derived. Our Lord took unto Himself all of our sin, our rebellion and our wilfulness. "He became sin for us" in order that He might then give to believers all that is His, His righteousness and His relationship to the Father. Through His cross He reestablishes the Father-child relation that sin had destroyed. We who were aliens and orphans become, through faith, the children of God. This is the wondrous privilege offered every man through the gospel. God, the almighty Creator and holy Judge, is the Father of all those who have accepted Christ. To enter into this relation, says our Savior, "ye must be born again."

The Bible knows also of a natural "brotherhood of man," based upon the creation. The fact that we are upon this earth with other persons implies certain limitations and obligations. There are things we cannot do and other things which we must do that would not be necessary were we alone. But this "brotherhood" implies more than fellowship and helpfulness. It speaks also of a guilt which we share with others. We cannot live isolated lives. We cannot draw our garments closely about us to avoid contact with the evil that surrounds us. We are, each of us, in some measure responsible for the sins committed by all men. The doctrine of original sin does not mean only that we are sinners by birth, but also that all humanity is saturated with rebellion against its God. It tells us that guilt is social, as well as individual. Apparently each man is separate and alone, yet in reality we are like a landslide crashing down the mountain side. The stones composing it have no apparent relation to each other. There is no visible bond uniting them, but still they are all going down. There is a common direction in their movement. The bewildering complexity of modern life tends to blot out individuals and consequently makes it difficult to see our relation to them. We do not see the men and women who grow and manufacture the articles we buy. Yet if I buy a shirt that has been made in a "sweat shop" as a "bargain," I am sharing with some unscrupulous manufacturer the guilt of forcing women to work under inhuman conditions for a miserable wage. Many of the comforts which I perhaps enjoy as a member of society are purchased, often literally, with the blood of the oppressed. The fact that I never see them does not alter this condition. We cannot, with the best will, avoid this guilt. There is literally nothing we can do about it. We are sharers in the sin of all men because of this natural "brotherhood of man."

III

There is also a brotherhood of man through redemption. It is potentially as universal as the brotherhood of sin, although only those who accept Jesus of Nazareth as their Savior from sin find admittance. It is only believers who are called "brethren" in the New Testament. They have been born again into a new family. They have God as their Father and all believers as brethren. The atonement of Christ is great enough to cover all human sin. God's love desires that all men should come unto Him. The possibility is open to all. This is the driving force behind mission work, whether we think of foreign missions or of an Andrew-like conversation with a friend (John 1:41). One who enjoys the blessed privilege of fellowship with his heavenly Father cannot but try to win others to the same joy. Critics sometimes charge that Christianity is selfish because it insists that a man must himself be reborn before he can help others. Yet it is easy to point out the weakness of this criticism. If two men, neither a good swimmer, are thrown into a cold lake, would it be selfish for the one who is near a rowboat to leave his partner for a moment, climb into the boat, and then pull aboard his unfortunate fellow? Or should he use his feeble strength to keep his friend above water while he himself struggles against sinking? The latter might seem heroic, but it would be a senseless proceeding. He would need to use a large portion of his strength to sustain himself and so have only a little left for his companion. But if he first gets into the boat he is free to use all his powers to aid his friend. Christianity simply recognizes the fact that we cannot lift another so long as our own feet are mired in quicksand. Only after we are safe on the Rock can we be of help to humanity. However, the gospel insists that everyone who has experienced its saving power shall use his energies and talents to bring others into this new life. If your Christianity does not make you a missionary, it is not the Christianity of the Bible.

The Christian brotherhood is something different from any other group. Within it all barriers of language, race, and culture vanish. There is neither slave nor free, Jew nor Gentile, Greek nor barbarian, wise nor foolish, because all are one in Christ Jesus. All differences disappear in the light of this one bond. Paul sent a runaway slave back to his master; but when he went back he was no longer a slave but, "a brother, beloved in the Lord." Within the circle of God's love in Christ exists a new, universal brotherhood, the church of the redeemed. The love each has for his Father binds the children together.

The relation to God revealed in the Scriptures as possible for "whosoever will" is something new, something altogether wonderful. It is not to be taken for granted as a mere commonplace of life. Rather it is startling and almost unbelievable. Just when I am most deeply conscious of my sin, of my unworthiness and inability to approach God, I become "a son of God." Not because I suddenly become good, for I remain always a sinner. But God because of pure grace accepts me, in spite of my sin, because of the Lord Jesus Christ. He does not turn away in disgust because my clothes are dirty and tattered, but He cleanses me and throws over my shoulders the spotless royal robes of His Son. We have become so familiar with this truth (at least in theory) that we have lost the sense of awe and mystery with which it was first received. There is a single word in the New Testament that casts light upon the correct attitude. Let us look at a few unrelated passages in which this word, idou, appears.

When Joseph discovered that his betrothed was with child and he was considering how he might quietly dispose of his disloyal (as he thought) fiancée, "behold (idou), the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a dream, saying, Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife: for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost. And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name JESUS: for he shall save his people from their sins" (Matt. 1:20, 21). Isaiah's prophecy of the virgin-born Savior recited in verse 23 begins with the same word. The next chapter of Matthew's Gospel is introduced in the same way—"Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judæa in the days of Herod the king, behold (idou), there came wise men from the east" (2:1). And after the wise men had completed their inquiry in Jerusalem, "lo (idou), the star, which they saw in the east, went before them, till it came and stood over where the young child was" (v. 9). The two angel appearances warning Joseph to flee to Egypt and telling him to return to Palestine are introduced by the same word (vv. 13, 19). But Matthew is not the only one of the biblical writers to employ this word. When, for example, Paul approaches the climax of his great treatment of the resurrection, he writes, "Behold (idou), I shew you a mystery" (1 Cor. 15:51). Immediately after the salutation which opens the Revelation of St. John, we find this word again. Here it introduces a reference to the triumphant return of the Savior. "Behold (idou), he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him: and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him" (Rev. 1:7). These instances of its use show clearly that this little word is used to indicate that some great wonder is to be related. The reader is warned to tread carefully, for he is about to touch holy ground. It is as though the writer says, "Stop a moment. Consider carefully and gratefully the great thing I have now to tell you." Appearances of angels, the promise of the Savior's birth, the fulfillment of prophecy, the public commendation of His Son by the Father (Matt. 3:16, 17, "lo"—idou)—such are the things that are introduced by this word. But why recite all these passages here? Simply to help us understand a verse written by the Apostle John after long years of experience and reflection upon the Christ and the life which He gives to believers. "Behold (idete—another form of the same word), what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God" (1 John 3:1). The same word! Here again we are led into a great mystery, as amazing as the Incarnation and the others. Behold . . . stop and consider . . . hesitate that you may realize what it means . . . what manner of love . . . We—are still the children of God! What a contrast! We, only darkness, and God, only light; we, only sin, and God, only holiness; we, only death, and God, only life! And still—we are the children of that God!

When we stop in breathless awe before that great statement we understand something of the vast love that prompts it and find within ourselves an answering love which stirs us to serve God and man. "We love him because he first loved us."

The Fatherhood of God—let us bow reverently before this great fact when we pray the Lord's Prayer, that prayer that so often is only "vain repetition." Let us understand it as did Luther when he said, "God would hereby tenderly invite us to believe that He is truly our Father and we are truly His children, so that we may ask of Him with all cheerfulness and confidence, as dear children ask of their loving father." That is what the Fatherhood of God means—a truth so great that the Apostle of love breathes reverently when he puts it on paper, so marvelous that we would not dare believe it had it not been revealed, yet so homely and simple that it can comfort us in all times of sorrow, difficulty, or bereavement, as dear children rest secure in the strong love of a father.—John Schmidt in Revelation.

Lutherans on the Lord's Coming

"Christ shall openly come again to judge the quick and the dead."—Art. III.

"At the consummation of the World, Christ shall appear for judgment, and shall raise up all the dead; He shall give to the godly and elect eternal life and everlasting joys . . . They condemn also others, who are now spreading certain Jewish opinions that, before the resurrection of the dead, the godly shall take possession of the kingdom of the world, the ungodly being everywhere suppressed (exterminated)."—Art. XVII; The Augsburg Confession of A. D. 1530, received by The Evangelical Lutheran Church in the United States.

"When men accept as a reality that the present order will come to an end, that Christ will come a second time; and when they will shape their life and conduct in harmony with what reason demands in the light of these great realities, opinions as to the time of these events, the manner of Christ's coming a second time, and the character of His reign are matters of secondary importance. Differences of view are to be allowed within the spheres of Christian liberty and charity. The associated questions of the Resurrection of the Dead, the Judgment, Eternal Life, and Eternal Death will force themselves upon the attention, demand consideration and solution, and be a determining factor in present conduct and future destiny."—Holmes Dysinger, Western Theological Seminary, Atchison, Kansas.

"One of the grandest pictures of triumph that can be imagined is the second coming of Christ. It is also a picture of greatest contrast to His first coming or humble birth in the flesh . . . to take the sinner's place and save him from eternal destruction. 'Tis true, the angels sang to a few shepherds at His coming, but when in the fullness of time He shall come again, every eye shall see Him in His state of eternal glory; the countless heavenly hosts shall accompany Him, and the dead in Christ shall rise from their graves to welcome Him. The living believers shall be changed in an instant, in the twinkling of an eye, and shall thus be caught up to meet the Lord in the air, to be with Him and like Him forever. To be one of this blessed throng should be the hope and aim of every individual.

"While the condition of the world seems to clearly indicate that we are in the last days, yet we must ever remember that the time of His coming is absolutely unknown to man, and that not even the angels know. Another fact is, that there is no time with God as we count time. To Him everything is one eternal 'now' or 'present' only. To Him a thousand years are as a day, or as a watch in the night. Be not deceived, therefore, but be ye ready. . . . The Bible is not a Book of dates—those put in the margin have been put there by man. As we cannot tell just when the 'beginning' was, when God created the heavens and the earth, neither can we tell just when Christ shall come again, with power and great glory, to judge the living and the dead.

"A popular but mistaken idea of the second coming of Christ, is that the world shall become better and better continuously, and when it is ready for the Master, He will come. Even though such ideas are widespread among certain teachers, they are contrary to the plain statements of the Scriptures.

"If we are searching for the simple truth on the subject, it seems that all must agree that the 'signs' are here and that we have really crossed the threshold and entered into 'the latter days.' But since there is no 'time,' as we reckon it, with God, we must be contented to follow the divine direction and thus 'know that the end draweth nigh'"

Speaking of the destruction of heavens and earth by fire as predicted by Peter (2 Peter 3:3-13), the author comments:

"This does not mean the annihilation or the doing away of the earth, but that it shall be cleansed and purified much like gold is refined in the furnace. Then it shall be much as it was before the fall, and like heaven itself. 'For the fashion of this world passeth away' (1 Cor. 7:31). 'And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea' (Rev. 21:1)."—Paul J. Gerberding, B. D., in When Christ Comes, copyrighted, 1920, by the Board of Publication of the United Lutheran Church; reprinted by permission.

THOUGHTS FROM MY BIBLE

By Lyman Booth

HE THAT is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city" (Prov. 16:32). Some men are always waiting for an opportunity to do some great deed and all the while committing unsavory acts that may profit them. If they would only overcome themselves what a glorious victory they would win! No hero ever achieved a greater.

"Buy the truth, and sell it not; also wisdom, and instruction, and understanding" (Prov. 23:23). Buy the truth no matter how great the cost; and sell it not though the price offered be ever so great. It is a sure guide to wisdom, and leads to perfect understanding.

"Boast not thyself of to morrow; for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth" (Prov. 27:1). "Take therefore no thought for the morrow: for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself" (Matt. 6:34). If the deeds of today are not wisely done, those of tomorrow will bring but little reward. The proper use of today is the best and only preparation for the duties of tomorrow. If you would make your life perfect, see that each hour's thoughts, words, and actions are pure and true.

The stars are said to be in heaven, and they are all around the earth in every direction; therefore, the earth is in the center of heaven. So if you wish to go to heaven, just put on your best robe and stay where you are. You may not find it any better among the stars.

If a shadow of gloom should fall across your path, just remember that there is light above or there would be no shadow.

"Beyond the shadows golden rays impinging
Upon the hilltops promise fairer hours,
And silvery fleeces e'en now the cloud is fringing
And rainbows shine amid the passing hours."

"The Lord God planted a garden eastward in Eden; and there he put the man whom he had formed. And out of the ground made the Lord God to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food" (Gen. 2:8, 9). The doctrine that environment molds men's character did not prove true in Adam's case. He had everything needful for peace and happiness. Surrounded with beautiful scenery and the society of a beautiful companion, he even communed with his Creator. In Genesis we read he was in Eden, where a beautiful river watered the land and the trees yielded their fruits abundantly, yet he sinned and was driven out. In Revelation we find him again in the garden with God in a perfect and holy life, where there was no serpent to tempt him, nor forbidden fruit to allure.

treasury "just to help the work along a little." But ask yourself that solemn question again: "What have I done myself to bring the gospel of the kingdom of God to the knowledge and understanding of others?"

Of course you are aware that it is quite as much your duty to evangelize the world as it is the duty of the preacher and evangelist. Unless you do your part in securing some one to listen to his message all the work and prayer he may put into his sermon preparation will have been in vain, so far as the conversion of men and women out of Christ is concerned.

Watch for that letter!

It is not enough merely to possess virtue, as if it were an art; it should be practiced.—Cicero.

times among different peoples, and in different countries; and while all were or are binding upon the contracting parties, the validity of the contract, and its binding effect, do not depend upon this ceremony or that, but upon the fact that a man and a woman of marriageable age and status become united as husband and wife in keeping with the intent and law of the Creator when He made them male and female. Not all men and all women are "joined together" because they are male and female, but only the two who have become united as husband and wife.

In Genesis 2:22 God brought to Adam the woman He had made for him. This was all the "ceremony" necessary in this case, as we know from the fact that when this was done Adam said, "This is now bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh: she shall be called Woman, because she was taken out of Man." Various forms of marriage and nuptial ceremonies come to view in the Scriptures, and many more such were in vogue in different parts of the world. In Deuteronomy 24:1 it is said that a man "hath taken a wife." In Ephesians 5:31 a man is "joined to his wife." In Luke 20:35 they are either "married" or "given in marriage." In none of these is there a hint as to what was the ceremony by which they were "joined" as husband and wife.

The all-wise Creator knew that in the process of subduing and filling the earth, covering thousands of years, many vicissitudes would arise which would render difficult and impractical any set form or ceremony for the union of two persons as husband and wife, and hence He left the precise form to the judgment of those directly concerned.

ARLEN MARSH, EDITOR

Prunes to Cross

Representative Cross of Texas has laid himself, unconsciously perhaps, open to the charge of wishing the abolition of free speech, free press, and free religion. At a time when the Government has created a monstrous Frankenstein in the form of a "paternalistic" bureaucracy, Representative Cross demands the passage of his obviously unconstitutional bill stripping the Supreme Court of its power to determine the constitutionality of laws passed by Congress. Fortunately, the majority of the House seem opposed to the proposed measure.

The Constitution has, since its adoption, been the sole guarantee of freedom of religion which the nation possesses. The Supreme Court has been the arbiter of constitutional questions, and has, thanks to the wisdom of the country's fathers, been uninfluenced by political squabbles, lobbies, and graft.

The Cross measure would replace a just consideration of the Constitution with a judgment tinged with the filth of party politics, the graft of minor lobbies, and the personal idiosyncrasies of Congressmen. Religion, the bulwark of the nation, would become subject to the whims of Representatives and Senators. Churches displeasing to the Congress could be closed; churches to which the Congressmen belonged could be publicly subsidized. The Statue of Liberty would be a mighty monument to a lost cause.

It is notable that Democrats, Texan and otherwise, have joined hand in hand with Republicans in a scathing denunciation of the Cross proposal. Realization of the ultimate consequences of abolishing the power of the nation's highest court could lead to no other result. Religion, above all else, must be free if the United States is to progress.

The Empty Shibboleth

A shibboleth is a party cry or watchword, and religion seems to have acquired more than its full quota. Like modern education, Christianity has become so enamored of certain pet doctrines and theories that its adherents are trained in them regardless of the proven falsity of the ideas.

Such a shibboleth is the empty cry that the famous Dark Day of May 19, 1780, when New England was blanketed by a pall so black as to make dense night from day, was an important indication of the near coming of the Christ. Seizing on the occurrence with a happy disregard for exactly similar occasions of the past, advocates of the return of the Christ made much of the day, declaring it was a sign of the early appearing of the Lord. One denomination was practically founded on the thought waves set in motion by the day.

Days equally dark and equally inexplicable to the simple minds of the majority of colonial New Englanders had come before, however. Why, for example, was not October 21, 1716, or October 19, 1762, taken to be a sign of the Lord's imminent return to earth? Each of these days was as dark as May 19, 1780, and in all three cases an entirely satisfactory explanation can be made without calling for aid upon supernatural forces.

Tibet experiences enough dark days in every year to put the believers in New England's Dark Day to permanent shame. The region affected by the darkness caused by the eruption of Katmai in June, 1912, and of Mont Pelee and La Soufriere in May, 1902, was precisely that affected by the presumably prophetic Dark Day of 1780; that is, the territory lying between 67 degrees and 87 degrees west and 40 degrees and 45 degrees north.

A combination of natural forces made days in the United States during 1934 so black that street lights had to be used at high noon. Are we to assume that each of these days, too, was a harbinger inter se of the coming of the Lord? And are we to preach that a different age was inaugurated, first, with October 21, 1716; second, with October 19, 1762; third, with May 19, 1780; fourth, with the eruption of Pelee and Soufriere; fifth, with the explosion of Katmai; and sixth, with any one of the many days during which Tibet experiences darkness intense enough to make night from day? In short, does every one of uncounted dozens of days mark the establishment of a new era?

The Christ is coming, to be sure. But His coming does not need the support of wild theories and the falsification of facts. The date setters and their ilk have done enough damage to the cause of Christianity without permitting them uselessly to do more. Let the shibboleths of Christianity be founded upon empiricism, and let the ways of transcendentalism go somewhere else to hide.

Summer Program

Although the Ides of March have yet to come, consideration of the prospective summer program is not so unseasonable as it might first appear. The problem of maintaining attendance in the face of vacations is an acute one; and adequate preparation should be made for it.

As a matter of fact, it would be far better for local societies to discontinue services altogether than to endure the discouraging experience of having not more than three or four out of a membership of twenty in attendance. Such discouragement induces no labor among leaders, and the fall pick-up generally turns out to be a genuine fiasco.

Think of the improvement if every third gossip could be plowed under!

"Fear not: believe only, and she shall be made whole."

THE GREATEST DOCTOR IN ALL THE WORLD

OUR digging field for today is the 8th chapter of Luke, and in the very first verse we are going to find gold. Remember the two things Jesus was doing:
Preaching and Showing.

And here we read that what He was preaching and showing was the glad tidings of the kingdom of God.

Aren't those happy words? Glad tidings! They were glad because they made the people glad who believed them.

It was still His Father's kingdom He was preaching and showing. Let us see how He was doing those two things in this chapter.

We thrust our spade down into verses 22-25, and what do we find? That even the winds and the waves obeyed Him!

Jesus and some of His disciples were in a boat going across Lake Galilee. Jesus, being weary, no doubt, as He must have been many, many times, at once fell asleep.

Suddenly a great storm arose, as often happened on that small lake surrounded by hills. The disciples were all so frightened they hardly knew what they were doing. But the Master slept on peacefully.

Finally they could stand it no longer. They woke Him, saying, "Master, Master, we perish."

And just as suddenly as the storm arose, a great calm came over the waves. Jesus, turning to these men who had seen Him do many miracles, said, "Where is your faith?"

If you had been in a great storm with Jesus close by your side, would you have been afraid? I can hear every one say, "No indeed." The disciples should have been ashamed.

Now if Jesus was preaching and showing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God, we are sure that this miracle was part of the showing. And so we know there will be no storms in God's kingdom, for Jesus will be close by to calm them.

That is glad tidings to all you boys and girls who are afraid of storms, I know. And there are many grown-ups who are afraid, too.

The next place we thrust our spade is in verses 41-56. Rather a wide field, that! But there is much treasure in it. So we will be well repaid for our work.

Here was a little girl of 12, the only daughter of a great man, and she was dying. Most likely her father had called in the very best doctors that money could find. Finally, when they all had failed he called in Jesus, the very greatest of them all.

As you dig you see that on His way to the little girl's home, a woman merely touched the edge of His robe. Instantly she was healed. Now, do you think there was some special quality in His robe? I do not; I think it was her faith that did it.

You see, the crowd was so great around her she couldn't get near enough to speak to Him. And she thought, "If I can only touch His robe I know I'll be healed." And she was!

Faith! Lack of faith made the disciples who had been with Jesus a long time frightened to death. And lots of faith healed a stranger who had never talked to Him. Read the nice words Jesus says to her in verse 48.

Now Jesus is ready to take up His way once more to the little girl's house. Oh, but you say, she's dead now! Why didn't He go a shorter way to avoid that crowd?

Well, that doesn't make any difference to the greatest doctor in all the world. See what He says in verse 50. Faith, again!

He went into the room where she lay, took her by the hand, and said, "Maid, arise."

Can you see that picture? That was about the gladdest tidings to that father and mother they had ever heard or ever expected to hear.

From these two wonderful acts of Jesus we know there will be no sick people or no dead in God's kingdom. For, remember, that's what Jesus was doing in all of this—preaching and showing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God.

Now let's look back at our digging and see what gold we have found. The most shiny nugget of all is faith, isn't it? And Jesus is just as anxious for us to have faith in Him today as He was so long, long ago. You and Mother talk over what it means to have faith.

What does it mean to have faith in Father and Mother? What does it mean to have faith in your playmates? And, greatest of all, what does it mean to have faith in God and His Son Jesus?

How many of you like digging for treasure this way?

"Keep on believing; Jesus is near;
Keep on believing; there's nothing to fear;
Keep on believing; this is God's way,
Faith in the night as well as the day."

PEOPLE BEFORE PROPERTY

Luke 8

GOLDEN TEXT

"No servant can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon."—Luke 16:13.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

Topic: Human Welfare Before Financial Profits.

Class Discussion: Material and spiritual values compared. The material tendencies of the present age. Material tendency of modern education. Contrast the efforts men make to acquire property with the efforts they put forth to gain everlasting life.

I. Jesus Heals a Pagan Madman. (Vv. 26-31.) The picture painted for our lesson today by the skilful hand of Luke is one of the most fascinating and vivid the Bible affords. No creature more helpless and hopeless could possibly be conceived than the poor brutalized maniac who met the Great Physician on the shore of Galilee!

As we study this lesson we should ever remember that the demoniac was a Gentile and a pagan, and that the things he said before his remarkable recovery were but the wild mouthings of a heathen madman. His every expression reflected the devil-fearing, superstitious, religious ideas of his people, and that he, like all others in that entire region (Mark 1:23-28), had heard of the wonderful Teacher and Healer of Galilee; and the memory of what he had heard lingered among the delusions of his diseased brain, and he recognized Jesus immediately upon His arrival.

How changed was his life after that experience! Mark assures us that he begged the Lord to permit him to remain with Him always, but his request was refused (Mark 5:18-20).

II. Jesus Regards Human Welfare As of Greater Value Than Material Possessions. (Vv. 32-37.) Some have questioned the actions of Jesus in permitting the swine to plunge into the sea. So far as Luke's narrative goes there seems to be little reason for us to believe that Jesus was responsible for the death of the swine. The record merely asserts that He "suffered" the demons to enter into them. The destruction of the herd was not commanded by the Lord.

This much, however, is suggested by the incident: It is evident that Jesus looked upon the loss of 2,000 swine as unworthy of being compared with the value to be found in the restoration of one human being to sanity and ease of mind and body! Paul took the same view of the matter when his influence resulted in the burning of books of magic valued at approximately $10,000 (Acts 19:19).

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

There is one outstanding characteristic of all the comforting works of Jesus as He "went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil." He never refused because of race, creed, or social position of the subject to give the needed strength, or food, or kindly word. He worked where needed, living His statement, "They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick." Always the Son of man who had no settled abiding place for Himself, had something to give to the needy. Not practical, you say. Is it not really the gist of the practical Christianity we hear talked about so glibly today, and so rarely see applied? In Christianity there can be no middle ground for us. It must be all or nothing. There is no such thing as a poor Christian. One is either a growing Christian, which means a good Christian, or a backslider.

Among Jesus' recorded deeds of love was His voluntary visit to the home of the wealthy Zacchaeus, to whom He taught the Way of Life so thoroughly that Zacchaeus happily made restitution for all wrongs he had done to others. Many individuals and churches today in their zeal to uplift the poor are forgetting that the rich have the same loves and hates, sorrows and temptations, and stand in need of the same comforting Savior.

The incurable lunatic of Gadara, the epileptic child, the lepers of various nations, the Syrophenician girl, all received equal consideration from the Lord Christ. The need nearest Him was recognized and met. What a rebuke to the physician who refuses the call because the case is contagious or will not pay; to the church member who overlooks the small deed of today for the spectacular thing he hopes to do in the future.—G. M. M.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

Hearing the Message

All intermediate scholars (and all others as well) should take their Bibles with them to Sunday school always. You wouldn't think of going to weekday school without your textbooks. If you did you'd soon be classed as an inferior student. Don't depend on finding a Bible after you get to church, either. Such a procedure in day school would be extremely foolish, you all agree. Have your own Bible, and carry it with you every time you go to church. The King's Daughters Class of seventeen members in Oregon (Ill.) Sunday school has as many Bibles present every Sunday as girls, with sometimes the exception of a visitor, or an irregular attendant.

Turn in your Bibles to Luke 8:1; read it carefully. What were the two things Jesus was doing as He journeyed from city to village? Preaching and Showing. When He was preaching the glad tidings of the kingdom of God just what was He telling those who listened? Why were they glad tidings? (The teacher should again and again make clear to the pupil these two points.) The Showing consisted of the miracles, four of which are given in this 8th chapter. For your lesson study the parable in verses 5-15, rather than the one given. Use as a companion text the devotional reading in Colossians 1:9-18. As we study the message of the kingdom, the manner in which we respond to it shows the "soil" of which our minds and hearts are composed. Notice particularly verses 13, 14; avoid that condition in your life. Strive for the one described in verse 15.

"That ye might be filled with the knowledge of his will; that ye might walk worthy of the Lord."—M. G.

JUNIOR CLASS

Topic: A Storm at Sea. Text: Luke 8:22-25. Memory Verse: "Peace, be still."—Mark 4:39b.

Lesson Story. Were you ever out on the river, lake, or ocean in a boat? Supposing a storm had come up; how would you have felt? Frightened, of course, and so would I.

One time Jesus and His disciples were together on the shore of a lake. Jesus climbed into a boat that was fastened there. His disciples followed. He said to them, "Let us go over to the other side of the lake."

So they unfastened the boat and started across. As they were going across Jesus fell asleep.

While He was sleeping a great storm came up. The wind blew and blew. The waves dashed against the boat, throwing great sheets of water into it. How frightened the men became.

They ran to Jesus and said, "Master, Master, we perish!" Meaning, of course, that they would surely all be drowned.

Jesus awoke and said, "Peace, be still." At once the wind ceased to blow. The waves stopped rolling and the sea became very calm or still.

How astonished these fishermen were. They had seen Him do many wonderful things, but never anything like this. They said one to another, "What manner of man can this be, that even the winds and the waves obey him?"

Notebook. Draw two pictures: one of the sea before Jesus said, "Peace, be still," and one of the sea after He said it. Make complete sentences by matching parts together.

- (1) Jesus and His disciples
 - (2) Jesus soon
 - (3) A great storm
 - (4) The wind blew and
 - (5) It filled the boat
 - (6) The disciples
 - (7) They awoke Jesus and said
 - (8) Jesus said to the wind and waves

AMONG THE CHURCHES

ANSWERS TO OUR QUESTIONS

Answers to the questions propounded in the editorial on the front page of our issue of January 21, are coming in encouragingly. We are tabulating them as they arrive and will soon begin the publication of the results. We are much pleased with the interest that is being shown in the effort we are making to gain the cooperation of the entire Church of God in the formulation of a real program of missionary activity in which all can have a part. Please turn to your file of The Herald and read those questions again. The editorial is headed, "It Couldn't Be Helped!" Prayerfully answer the questions asked and send the result to us for consideration and tabulation. The letters thus far received contain many helpful suggestions which will be presented, the Lord willing, for the consideration of the next General Conference.

A VOICE FROM THE CEMETERY

The following from Bro. George T. Rennard of Niagara Falls, N. Y., is of special interest owing to the fact that Bro. Rennard was intimately acquainted with Bro. R. V. Lyon, to whom reference was made in the article named. Bro. Rennard's letter follows:

"Dear Brother Editor: I wish to thank you for the splendid article you placed in The Herald of December 31, 1935, under the title, 'Gravestones.' I was much pleased when I came to that part where you mentioned the name of Bro. Lyon, who has been asleep now 44 years this coming July. As you seemingly have no record of the inscription or the testimony that marks his resting place, I will gladly furnish you with the exact words recorded on the tall shaft in the center of his cemetery plot. The inscription reads:

"ELDER RALPH VINTON LYON, Born in Southbridge, Mass., October 1, 1809. Died July 24, 1891.' The inscription on the reverse side of the stone has this to say: 'Hester Mary Hartley, Wife of Ralph Vinton Lyon, Born in Matilda, Ont., September 18, 1831. Died February 11, 1899. Died in Hope of Eternal Life when Jesus Comes.'

"On a smaller stone at the head of the grave (which is now unreadable, being made of soft sandstone and weather-beaten so long), we get this beautiful and true epitaph:

"RALPH V. LYON, a Minister of the Gospel. Here I rest in my grave, waiting until Christ shall come, who is the resurrection and the life. Then I shall live again, to enjoy everlasting life and stand with the redeemed."

"I am glad," concludes Bro. Rennard, "I went to the cemetery about twelve years ago and wrote these things in a book, because, as stated, the lettering is now obliterated on the smaller stone, although the inscription on the shaft, being in raised letters, can still be easily read."

NEWS FROM GOLDEN RULE HOME

Mrs. Olive Wood celebrated a birthday on Sunday, Feb. 2, a day ahead of time. The family at the Home, enlarged for the occasion by guests, Bro. and Sr. Marsh and son Arlen, gathered for a special dinner, followed by a birthday cake with candles. Flowers smiled from the table through it was below zero outside.

Today, Feb. 6, the Dorcas Society of the Oregon church met at the Home to piece quilt blocks. The hostess was Mrs. Lewis Lindsay. This being the birthday of Mrs. Clara Chaffee, the Dorcas group planned its refreshments with that event in mind and served a birthday cake and ice cream.

Both occasions were happy ones for all concerned, as such events should be in a real family group. It always means so much to know some one cares that you have reached another milestone and that your friends are glad you are among them in health and for service. None of us are ever too grown up to enjoy being loved and esteemed.

Many times these cold, severe winter days we have thanked our heavenly Father for His watchcare over us. We have wished that we could let others know of our comfort and happiness together here in the Home. Won't you bring the Home to the attention of some one who needs its safety and freedom from care? Spread the news for us. There are many who could accept its shelter and comfort if they but realized what it could mean to them. Sometimes people wait too long, until they get to a point in health that they cannot come or until their resources are exhausted.

Yours in sisterly consideration,
Idona Romine, Matron.

NIAGARA FALLS - FONTHILL

The Niagara Falls, N. Y., Sunday school held its annual meeting at the church on Thursday evening, Jan. 23. The reports indicated one of the most successful year's work in the history of the school. This organization has been instrumental in bringing about many improvements in the church plant. Officers elected were: superintendent, Mrs. Elsie Moore; assistant superintendent, Mrs. Jessie Shea; secretary, Miss Ethel Moreland; treasurer, James Engle; pianist, Mrs. Lida Sullivan.

The Welland, Ont., Sunday school got away to a good start last Sunday, Jan. 26, with an initial attendance of 18. Bro. Fred Jones is assisting the pastor, C. E. Randall, in getting this extra work established.

An enthusiastic social gathering of the Truth Seekers was held at Fonthill, Ont., January 24. The event was in honor of Mable Anger and Ethel Standing. They received appropriate birthday gifts.

Sr. C. E. Randall is at present in St. Catharines, Ont., taking mineral baths.

A memorial service for the late King George V was held in the Anglican Church, Fonthill, on Tuesday, Jan. 28. A large audience was in attendance. All ministers of the village participated.

January 27 was a happy day at the Rhodes home (Fonthill). A plump boy by the name of Richard (?) paid his first salaam to Mr. and Mrs. William Rhodes on this day. Mother and son are doing nicely.

CHURCH OF THE GOLDEN RULE

The pastor of the Golden Rule Church of God of Cleveland, Ohio, Elder M. W. Lyon, is now presenting a series of very profitable Sunday morning sermons on great Christian doctrines, based on John 3:16. The first of the series was given on February 2, "His Only Begotten Son." Others already presented or announced for the future are: February 9, "Who-soever Believeth"; February 16, "Them That Perish"; and on February 23, the first of a series of three discourses on "Everlasting Life."

Bro. Lyon's Sunday evening sermons have been, or are to be, as follows, beginning on February 2: "Turning Waste Into Wealth"; "Robbers in the Temple"; "The Wages of Mercy"; and "The Law of Expansion and Contraction."

Attendance at Berean meeting is running a little over 60, but the society has set its goal at 100.

A twenty minute devotional and prayer service is being held at 7:30 each Sunday evening preceding the regular service. While still in the experimental stage, the service thus far has been well attended and has aroused much interest.

"Golden Rule News," local bulletin of the Golden Rule Church of God, Cleveland, Ohio, reports the critical illness of Sr. Elizabeth Alldridge, widow of Bro. George B. Alldridge, whose very helpful articles were a regular feature of The Restitution Herald until a short time before his death. The prayers of the brotherhood will rise on her behalf.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

A seven weeks' course of lessons on fundamentals of the gospel is to be given previous to Easter. The object is to give special instruction to several who will likely be baptized at Easter and to solidify the faith of others who will care to follow these weekly lessons. Indications point to a good-sized class.

All rejoice that Sr. Thomas has sufficiently recovered to return to her home where she is now convalescing.

The young people's Berean class presented the drama "Jephtha's Daughter" as a special number on Thursday night, Feb. 7. This brought that touching story forcefully to mind.

The Dorcas Society met with Sr. Bridegam on the occasion of their last meeting, this being done because Sr. Bridegam has not been well enough to attend for some months.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

BURR OAK, INDIANA

The zero weather at this writing prevails. However, last Sunday our school attendance came back to normal. The race between Kokomo and our school should not allow weather to keep us away.

Mrs. Carol Hawkins and her baby girl, Janice Marie, arrived from St. Cloud, Minn., last Friday for a visit.

Each Sunday evening we are having a Bible study in the book of James. We hope for increased interest.

On Friday, Jan. 31, a beautiful baby boy weighing eight pounds was born to Bro. and Sr. Albert Overmyer. We introduce Master Paul Albert, Jr. Lord bless this happy family.

A. E. Hoskins, Pastor.

ARKANSAS CITY, KANSAS

Owing to the cold weather and the distance some of our church people live from the church, the attendance at Sunday school and church services during the last half of January has not been quite as good as before. But I guess we should not complain, for we have had a good Sunday school and fine sermons each Sunday morning and evening, with increasing interest.

The prayer meeting and Bible study each Thursday evening is also very much enjoyed by those who attend. The lesson topic is "Prayer." It is found both a helpful and a profitable study.

The first Sunday in the new year was one long to be remembered. After Sr. Le Crone's inspiring sermon ("Living Epistles") she asked all those who would reconsecrate themselves for a more thorough individual effort in church activities for 1936 to make it known by coming forward for prayer. A large number went forward, and I am sure all received a blessing and will work as never before.

We miss from our church services Sr. Emma Smith, who has gone to Louise, Texas, to visit her daughters and spend the remainder of the winter with them.

The Dorcas Society meet every two weeks, and are busy with different kinds of work, by which they may increase the church fund so that we can purchase some needed furnishings for the church. A very nice bulletin board has lately been installed on the outside of the church building, which has been a much needed improvement, thanks to the Dorcas Society, and Bros. Morgan and Vernon Chaplin for their assistance.

Among other things which add to the church is a pulpit chair, the gift of the junior class, who denied themselves of candy, shows, etc., and gave the money to help in furnishing the house of the Lord. Bro. Laurence Chaplin also gave a beautiful turned walnut collection plate. All these things show how interested our little church is in trying to get the needed things for it, and we hope to go on to victory, and be living examples known and read of all men.

At present Sr. Le Crone is in Nebraska visiting with the home folks. She left here January 26 expecting to return here February 7 to continue the work here.

Our beloved sister Nora Waldo met with a serious accident about a month ago. In coming down stairs she fell, sprained one ankle, and broke the small bone in the other ankle. With an invalid sister and a father very poorly, she needs your prayers. Her address is 403 W. Bridge St., Blackwell, Okla.

Mrs. A. J. Chaplin, Secretary.

BITS OF THE MAIL

"Bro. Conner has certainly put a lot of time and labor on trying to get the N. B. I. on its feet again, not to mention the anxiety it has caused him, and I am sure we all feel very thankful and hope he will long be spared to see the fruit of his good work."—E. H. M. F., Kalamazoo, Mich.

"Wish I could bundle up and experience some zero weather. We have had spring almost through the winter."—J. M. B. K., Riverside, Calif.

"I have nothing but sympathy for you in your position as editor."—J. R. L., Eden Valley, Minn.

"Our little girl enjoys the Children's Page so much she reads it every week by herself. She is just 8."—C. W. B., Versailles, Ill.

"We sure do enjoy the paper very much. Bro. Lyman Booth has extra good pieces in the paper. Oh, I do wish every family took The Herald. They do miss so much, as it has such good reading from the writers."—A. E., West Milton, Ohio.

HENLEY C. STARBUCK

Henley C. Starbuck, son of Abel and Fannie Starbuck, was born November 25, 1856, near Oscaloosa, Iowa, and passed away at his home in Rockford, Ill., February 2, 1936.

On September 10, 1888, he was united in marriage with Rose Taylor, to which union seven children were born, one dying in infancy.

Throughout his active life he was engaged in farming, having lived in Iowa and Minnesota. In 1928 he retired from the farm and moved to Rockford, where he spent the remaining years of his life. He was a kind and helpful neighbor, and an honest, upright man. During the past few years he suffered much, but always bore it with patience and cheerfulness.

He is survived by his wife, three sons, and three daughters, who mourn the passing of a kind and loving husband and father; and to whom he leaves the comforting memory and inspiration of a long and useful life well lived.

Owing to the absence of L. E. Conner, pastor of the Rockford church, the funeral service was conducted by G. E. Marsh of Oregon on February 4.

MRS. RACHEL ALICE MAXEY

Rachel Alice Barr was born to Dr. L. and Mahala Ellis Barr at Winfall, Indiana, on March 3, 1863, being the fourth of a family of six children. Her marriage to George A. Maxey, then telegrapher for the L.E.&W.R. Ry. at Argos, Ind., took place on May 16, 1880. Soon after, the Nickle Plate R.R. was completed and Bro. Maxey became the first agent for that road at Burr Oak, Ind. Here they located; and it was here that to them were born seven children, two of whom died in infancy.

It was at Burr Oak that Bro. and Sr. Maxey became charter members of the Church of God and rendered continued service in person and with purse to the Christian life which they esteemed the greatest of life's callings. Their home was always open house for Christian work and Christian workers.

Having been elected to the office of County Treasurer Bro. Maxey and family moved to Plymouth, Ind., in 1912, where they continued for four years. From there he resumed work for the Nickle Plate, but at Tippecanoe, where, on September 16, 1923, he had suffered a stroke of paralysis the previous day, Bro. Maxey died.

Following this sad breaking of the home Sr. Maxey lived at different places, but mostly with her daughter Ruth.

Sr. Maxey was a long sufferer. It was about November 25, 1929, that she suffered a stroke. From this she never recovered much strength. She continued a partial invalid through the years. Several times, by special effort of her daughter and family, she was enabled to attend services at Burr Oak, much to her joy. One of her last rejoicings thus was on the occasion of the installation of Burr Oak's present hard-working and much liked pastor, Bro. A. E. Hoskins. (Because of his own acute sickness it was impossible for Bro. Hoskins to attend her funeral.)

Early in December, last, Sr. Maxey suffered another stroke which resulted in her death on January 7, 1936.

There remain to mourn the death of this faithful and Christian parent Mrs. Laura Feehan of Port Angelus, Wash.; Maud—now Mrs. B. C. Zigler—and family, Tacoma, Wash.; Ruth—now Mrs. William Hardy—and family, Grovertown, Ind.; George Ellis and family of Seattle, Wash.; and Howard B. and family of Fort Wayne, Ind. Of these families there are ten grandchildren of the deceased. Of her people's family but one sister, Miss Ella Barr of Noblesville, Ind., survives her. Many were her neighborhood and church friends.

She was buried beside the husband of her youth—the companion of her years—in the Plymouth cemetery to await the call of Him who is the resurrection and the life. At that day may this family be reunited, in the bonds of immortality, to abide in the righteousness and presence of Him who is also Savior, King, and Son of God.

A Dream of Glory

If, like Geoffrey Chaucer, you are one of the happy people who can say, "On bokes for to reade I me delighte," here is an edition of the Song of Solomon (yes, the King James Version of it) that will send you not merely into joy, but into ecstasy.

It contains the complete Song, and is illustrated and illuminated in pure gold by Valenti Angelo. Never before in the history of book publishing has a volume so beautified been issued at so low a price. Illumination was an art of the Middle Ages, and whenever in recent years a book has been published so illuminated it has been sold at fantastically high prices.

The publisher's own catalog describes the appearance of the volume with commendable restraint: "The book is printed in a large size of Lutetia type, the size of the page being 6½ x 10 inches. Each page is printed in a rich, floriated design in yellow, blue, red, and black. The paper is a soft imported Japanese rag stock, folded in double sheets. The binding is of full red leather, stamped with an unusual pattern by the illustrator." No other edition of the Song to compare with this is sold for less than $7.50.

The Heritage Press: $5.00.

A New Idea

Hail, cross word puzzle and Bible game fans! Assemble yourselves, and come to a glorious plan for your entertainment and instruction.

Here are two books and one novelty to give delight to the soul of any seeker after wisdom, particularly if he can spell Habakkuk without using too many b's and too few k's (um-hum; I had to look it up to write it). The publishers have done young people and oldsters a distinct favor.

Liberally sprinkled with Bible references and based entirely on the King James Version, The Scriptures in Cross Word Puzzles (52 topical puzzles on the Old and New Testaments), The Bible Cross Word Puzzle Book (50 puzzles on general Bible texts), and It's in the Bible (one series on the Old Testament, one on the New; each with 6 puzzles and each puzzle with 10 work sheets, or 60 work sheets to the series) will provide enjoyment, education, and head-scratching for hours. When—if ever—you solve them all, you'll know considerably more than you do now.

For socials, class meetings, and individual use, these publications could be made everything nice. And they'll add, like little girls, sugar and spice to the usual routine of Bible study. In fact, they'll be a lot of fun.

W. A. Wilde Company: The Scriptures in Cross Word Puzzles, cloth, $1.00; The Bible Cross Word Puzzle Book, cloth, $1.00; It's in the Bible, cellophane wrapped, each series, 50¢.

Good and Cheap

The heading speaks both truthfully and in the vernacular. The books are good, cheap, and good and cheap. Grace Livingston Hill wrote the things, and they make one want to yell, "Author! Author!" like silk-hatted roués at a new play.

Each book is short, and each book is sweet. Mrs. Hill's books always are. These run to about twenty pages apiece, and every page is worth reading. There are nine books in the series, bound in various things and colors.

Take The Story of the Lost Star, for instance. It tells all about how George K. Hamilton, millionaire, stirred the populace to tears and laughter by inserting an ad in a daily paper that he had lost the star of Bethlehem. It tells how the typesetter and Mary and the bishop and the old Scotch lady were all mixed up together. And it tells how the bishop didn't find the star, and how the typesetter and Mary and the old Scotch lady did.

All the books have a similar vein, but not at all this type of story. All of them would make excellent gifts—and don't forget that charity should begin at home. There are, aside from The Story of the Lost Star, The House Across the Road and Beggarmen and Her Wedding Garment and The Strange God and Handmaid of the Lord and The Old Guard and Life Out of Death. You'll find the price printed on the paper jackets of some of them, and you'll be pleasantly surprised to pay just half of it.

J. B. Lippincott Company: each, except The Strange God, Life Out of Death, and Handmaid of the Lord, 25¢; each exception, 15¢.

Miscellany

Oxford Cyclopedia Concordance, available in the better Oxford Bibles, and the best small one published, can also be had in a separate volume ($1.00 and up). . . . Prices on all publications of the National Berean Society have been drastically reduced. . . . Lovely little bookmark-letter openers bearing various religious designs on their metal can be had for only 15¢. Assorted colors, too. . . . An American Translation available in eight editions.

Any of these books may be obtained from the National Bible Institution, Oregon, Illinois. Most of them are constantly in stock.

How to Study the Bible

GREAT multitudes of young people, from summer to summer, are attending Bible conferences and young people's conferences all over the country. They hear stirring messages; hundreds here begin their Christian life; thousands come away quickened and renewed in their spiritual experience. They hear it continually emphasized that Bible study is of paramount importance in maintaining a strong Christian life; they resolve in their own hearts that in the days to come they are going to study systematically and regularly the Word of God, and live in the power which such study communicates. They put these resolutions into practice immediately when they get home. For one reason or another, however, many of these young people do not seem to get out of their Bible study what they had expected: perhaps they do not know what to look for in their study of the Bible; or do not know how to obtain definite results from such study; or do not understand what they are reading; or other things continually interfere and interrupt such study. It is not long (though they would not confess it) before they experience a dullness in it all, and their resolutions are soon broken. Bible study then becomes intermittent, and increasingly unsatisfactory, until, perhaps three or four months after coming home from a summer Bible conference, it is entirely discontinued. The young Christian knows he has been defeated. Perhaps some sin comes into his life, and he knows that the cessation of Bible study is at the root of the whole tragedy. His testimony grows cold, his enthusiasm for the work of the Lord wanes, and he naturally becomes discouraged.

Now there is absolute deliverance from all this defeat in the study of the Bible. There is a way of approaching the Word of God, of beginning to study its inexhaustible contents, which, instead of dulling with us, will continually increase our enthusiasm for Bible study, and hold us with an even firmer grip, until the habit becomes absolutely settled in our lives, and we are finding the results so great and noticeable that not for anything would we ever give it up. This article is written particularly with young people in mind, with the hope that it might, in a very simple way, teach them some of the more profitable methods of studying the Word of God.

All that follows is written, not from a theoretical standpoint, but from a practical one. This article does not pretend so much to tell young people what they ought to do, as what they can do. It is not written for ministers, or experienced Sunday school teachers, or for those who are students at Bible institutes. There is not one person of high school age but who can employ every method of Bible study suggested in this elementary treatment of the subject. What is written here is the result of personal experience. Much that the author might have said fifteen years ago he does not dare to say now, by which he means that he today more truly realizes the limitations of time among our young people, the weakness of human flesh, and all the many, many influences which might lead a young Christian (and older ones, too) away from such a study. He simply wants to face this whole question in a very simple, and he trusts, helpful way, so that no young person can say: "I just do not know how to study the Bible. I want to do it, but I don't seem to be able to find a way for doing it."

This article is not written to tell young men and young women how to master the Bible for an examination in some college course, or how to become great teachers of the Word of God, or how to write a book about the Bible, or even how to prepare messages for young people's meetings. It is not meant to be technical in any way. What we need first of all is the Word of God nourishing our own souls. We need spiritual strength, victory over sin, joy in our daily experience, a love for souls, a passion for the Lord Jesus, and power in our testimony. As an outstanding leader of young people said at Northfield forty years ago: "How shall we study the Bible? I should like to say at the very outset that no man can answer that question for another man. He can devise a method of Bible study which he may wish to commend to others, but the only Bible study that is of any large value to a man is the Bible study that meets his own personal needs; and just as his own personal needs differ from the personal needs of every other man, the method of Bible study which will be best for him will probably be best for him alone." Continually throughout this treatment the author is thinking, not so much of an intellectual grasp of the historical and (Please turn to Page Nine)

Abreast of the Times

Egypt Prepares for the Last Days

"Declare ye in Egypt. . . Stand fast, and prepare thee: for the sword shall devour round about thee."—Jeremiah 46:14.

LONDON, England, Feb. 11.—"Never since the days of the Pharaohs has the future of Egypt been of greater importance than it is today," declared Major G. H. Reade, of the British Army recently. "Vast British interests are at stake . . . Vital French interests are also at stake, while Italian interests are of rapidly growing magnitude."

No farther back than the time of the close of the World War few dreamed that Egypt would ever again occupy a place of significant importance in world affairs. When Egypt ceased to be a part of the old Turkish Empire in 1914, Great Britain established a protectorate over it and granted the country nominal independence under a constitution. The constitution, proving unworkable, was twice suspended and then replaced by a new one in 1930. This, too, was soon set aside and Egypt was governed for two years by the so-called palace rule of decree.

Last January students, taking advantage of the "concentration of British troops in Egypt in the Italo-British crisis, forced England to restore the 1923 constitution." The purpose of the negotiations now going on between the two countries was stated by The Manchester Guardian as follows: "The British desire was that these conversations should be conducted as between potential allies, because it has always been contemplated that an alliance should replace the present reserved points."

The student of prophecy recognizes how fully this purpose agrees with the plans of God as they are revealed in the Scriptures.

CAIRO, Egypt, Feb. 13.—King Fuad today appointed a committee of thirteen, the members of which are drawn from all political parties in Egypt, to carry on negotiations with the British diplomat, Sir Miles Wedderburn Lampson, looking toward the satisfactory settlement of the British-Egyptian difficulties that have arisen as a result of the concentration of British troops in the country. It is thought that the appointment of the committee will go far to establish peace between the two countries.

Churchmen Protect Jewish Pastor

"Others had trial of . . . scourgings."—Heb. 11:36.

BERLIN, Germany, Feb. 16.—Fifty Protestant clergymen, wearing black robes, marched up the aisle of Kaiser

Wilhelm Memorial Church this afternoon in support of their colleague, the Rev. Gerhard Jacobi, a Protestant minister of one fourth Jewish blood, and listened to his sermon on, "If God be for us, who can be against us?" (Rom. 8:31). Rev. Jacobi has been repeatedly held under "house arrest" and a year ago was beaten severely by his Nazi opposers. Nazi Protestants of his own parish branded his desire to preach as "an impudent political demonstration."

"Protestant-Catholic Reunion Inevitable"

"Be ye separate, saith the Lord."—2 Cor. 6:17.

NEW YORK, Feb. 6.—A reunion of all churches in Christendom, both Catholic and Protestant, is not only needed today, but is inevitable, because separations and division are resulting in spiritual losses, declared Episcopal Bishop William T. Manning in the last of a series of Epiphany lectures given here. Discussing "The Church and What It Means to Me," Bishop Manning said:

"The reunion of the Christian church will not mean the surrender of any existing church to another. It will not mean that all Christians are to become Anglicans or Methodists or Roman Catholics. It will mean defeat for none and victory in Christ for all. In spite of all the difficulties and obstacles the doors seem even now to be opening to it. Men are seeing that a world that is one needs a world religion. Reunion will come because it is God's will. And it will come because the world needs it."

Reunion of churches does not signify union in Christ. Union with Christ depends upon hearing, understanding, believing, and obeying the teaching of Jesus. Churches may be united on a basis of worldly morality or political expediency. Such a union may come about, but the true follower of Christ will not be entangled with it.

What Difference Does It Make?

By Mary A. Gesin

AS WE ENTER upon our fourth study two verses stand out in gleaming array from among the jewels of God's precious truths. The "golden text of the Bible," John 3:16, and the "faith gem" of Hebrews 11:6. Turn with me to the former; it is so familiar one scarce needs to quote it. But its truth is more apparent if we read the words.

"For God so loved the world." Open to all, yes! "That he gave his only begotten Son." Jesus, the Christ, through whom the blessing comes! "That whosoever believeth in him should not perish." Show-ered upon all? No, only upon those who believe! "But have everlasting life." Without that belief in Christ, we perish? That's what it says! With that belief we obtain everlasting life? Then we do not already possess it. Are our conclusions correct so far?

The necessity for belief, faith, is further emphasized in our second reference, Hebrews 11:6, where we learn that it is impossible to please God without faith. But that He is not a forgetful God, for He rewards our faith. Then it is our faith that brings us the reward, not our good deeds. We have established these facts in our previous studies.

Now as to faith in Christ, we must know something of His message to have faith in Him.

If we say we have faith in our representative in Congress and do not know his principles, we are placing our faith in an unknown person and will no doubt come to grief over it sooner or later, if it means anything to us.

Faith in Christ and His message means everything to us. It cannot be compared in importance to faith in a politician in even the slightest degree. And yet how many place their dependence on just such weak props! Let us see what that great message was which Jesus proclaimed, the gospel He preached, the gospel that saves.

In a study of Jesus' life we readily conclude that the "gospel" He preached was "good news" of the kingdom of God. What "good news" it was to the suffering Jew we can easily see when we consider his condition of servitude to Rome in Christ's day. And it is just as "good news" to us today in a depressed, disillusioned, and war-weary world.

Jesus' express purpose in life was to preach the kingdom of God. Read carefully Matthew 4:23; Mark 1:14, 15; Luke 4:43. What sort of kingdom had God's kingdom been? An earthly one, with a king, territory, and subjects. See 1 Chronicles 29:11, 23.

Would Jesus preach a different sort of kingdom, think you? Especially in the light of the angel's promise to Mary in Luke 1:32, 33? David ruled over a kingdom of earth, a kingdom comprised of subjects and territory. Will not Christ also? That is logical reasoning, is it not?

The disciples, whose message resulted in baptism wherever it was believed, preached the same gospel, "the kingdom of God." See Luke 9:2, 60; 10:9-11. In healing the sick they, even as their Lord, gave concrete evidences of kingdom conditions. The miracles gave authority to the message.

Indeed, the preaching of the "gospel" went away back to Abraham. Surprise you, does it? Read Galatians 3:8, 9 carefully and prayerfully. We must refer to the life of that first man of faith to learn what the blessing to the nations consisted of and how it will be realized by those of like faith.

The promised blessing there is of an everlasting home on the earth. Gen. 12:1-3; 17:7, 8; 22:17, 18. All God's promises of future blessing and reward to man are linked up with this blessing to Abraham, through his great descendant, Christ. See Romans 4:13; Galatians 3:16, 27-29.

Here is "where we come in," how we share in the blessing. By belonging to Christ we inherit with Him. Read all of Romans 8, particularly verses 17, 18; Ephesians 3:6; Titus 3:4-7. Only a glimpse of the glory which we will share with Christ eternally for a few short years of service now!

But all these promises are to be realized here on earth. The Psalms, Isaiah, Revelation, countless texts point this out clearly. God has established the earth to stand forever. Eternal existence in a perfected (Please turn to Page 8)

Rest

When God at first made man,
Having a glass of blessings standing by,
Let us, said He, pour on him all we can:
Let the world's riches, which dispersed lie,
Contract into a span.

So strength first made a way;
Then beauty flow'd; then wisdom, honor, pleasure:
When almost all was out, God made a stay,
Percieving that alone, of all His treasure,
Rest in the bottom lay.

For if I should, said He,
Bestow this jewel also on My creature,
He would adore My gifts instead of Me,
And rest in nature, not the God of nature.
So both should losers be.

Yet let him keep the rest,
But keep them with repining restlessness;
Let him be rich and weary, that at least,
If goodness lead him not, yet weariness
May toss him to My breast.

The Permanence of Marriage

By A. H. Zilmer

IT WAS the intention of the Creator that once a man and a woman were "joined together" as "man and wife," this union should be binding and indissoluble during the life of both parties. And this was to be not merely "at the beginning," when the first man and woman were bound together as husband and wife, but for all time until the earth should be subdued and peopled with human beings. This is proven by the fact that when Jesus was questioned by the Pharisees regarding the lawfulness of divorce, His answer was an appeal to the law established "at the beginning." This law had not been abrogated or in any manner modified when this interview took place. Hence the fitness of its application to the circumstances then existing.

When it was said, "And let them have dominion" (Gen. 1:26), it is manifest that this could not be done according to the full intent of this language by the first pair, but would require thousands of years and a long succession of generations for its accomplishment. During all this long stretch of time they would continue to be male and female, and men and women would marry in keeping with the original design of the Creator. At the same time the institution of marriage would need to be surrounded with proper safeguards in order to maintain it according to its design and sanctity as established by the divine law "at the beginning."

It is said, "Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh" (Gen. 2:24). This could not apply to Adam, for the reason that he had neither father nor mother. Hence it could have application only to Adam's posterity. Here again it is clear that the marriage relation was and would continue to be subject to the divine supervision. Jesus quoted this language as having been spoken by the Creator. "And said, For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife" (Matt. 19:5). It is the "man" and "his wife" that are "joined together."

PUT ASUNDER

The third of the terms mentioned in Mark 10:9 and Matthew 19:6 is "put asunder." It can apply only to such as have been joined together as husband and wife, or are, as is said, "married." This is clear the moment we consider the conversation between Jesus and the Pharisees. The question was asked, "Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife for every cause?" (Matt. 19:3). This was the pivot upon which the entire interview turned. It was not a question whether a man had a wife, or by what ceremony he had acquired her, but having a wife, might he lawfully put her away "for every cause," or on any pretext? The terms "put away his wife" and "put asunder" are exact equivalents. They are in direct antithesis to "join together." This "man" and his "wife" were "joined together" as husband and wife under the divine law, and with the divine sanction. They are husband and wife. May they now lawfully be "put asunder" or separated by the "man" "putting away his wife" for any and every cause? This was the question. It was not a question of keeping asunder such as had never been married, but of separating such as were married and were therefore husband and wife. The Lord's answer was that God had joined them together in keeping with the original intent at the "beginning." The only consistent answer was the one that was given, namely, that it was (and is) not "lawful for a man to put away his wife," and thus put asunder that which God joined together. We shall consider the further course of this conversation later on.

"Is not marriage an open question, when it is alleged, from the beginning of the world, that such as are in the institution wish to get out, and such as are out wish to get in?"—Emerson.

Jesus was not alone in teaching that a man may not "for every cause" put away his wife, or sunder that which God has united. The Apostle Paul said in writing to such as were acquainted with law, "For the woman which hath an husband is bound by the law to her husband so long as he liveth; but if her husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband. So then if, while her husband liveth, she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress; but if her husband be dead, she is free from that law; so that she is no adulteress, though she be married to another man" (Rom. 7:1-3). The "law of her husband" here aimed at can be no other than the divine law established at the beginning, and designed to regulate the marriage relation for all time until the earth is subdued and filled with human beings.

Note: The married woman is "bound to her husband," and this for "so long as her husband liveth." What law is it that so binds her that does not bind the unmarried woman? It is the fact that she and her husband have been "joined together" while the unmarried woman is not joined to any man. The only thing that can legally release the married woman from her husband is death. Any other separation or putting asunder is illegal, being contrary to the divine marriage law established at the beginning of the creation.

Elsewhere in the apostolic writings we read, "It is good for a man not to touch a woman. Nevertheless, to avoid fornication, let every man have his own wife, and let every woman have her own husband" (1 Cor. 7:1, 2). Besides inculcating the idea of strict monogamy, this teaches that every married man or woman must "have," that is, be united and retain, the "own" husband or wife.

Further: "And unto the married I command, and yet not I, but the Lord, Let not the wife depart from her husband: but and if she depart, let her remain unmarried, or be reconciled to her husband: and let not the husband put away his wife" (vv. 10, 11). When did the Lord issue such "command"? It was "in the beginning" when He enacted the marriage law for the existence of the race of mortal human beings while they marry and are given in marriage.

Once more: "The wife is bound by the law as long as her husband liveth; but if her husband be dead, she is at liberty to be married to whom she will; only in the Lord" (v. 39). The "law" by which she is "bound" is the rule enacted by the Creator in Eden. Though man sinned, and was subjected to the disabilities announced in the divine sentence, this did not abrogate or in any manner affect the marriage relation, or the divine law relating thereto. Adam and Eve continued to be male and female after their expulsion from the Garden of Eden, and still required the Eden law enacted and put into force at their creation; and the same necessity for the divine supervision and regulation has existed to the present hour.

Jesus brought into most clear perspective the divine enactment made at the beginning, emphasized it anew to the confusion of His critics, and gave it His unqualified indorsement. Of those who would put asunder "for every cause" that which God had joined together, He asked, "Have ye not read?" (Matt. 19:4). No excuse could they plead, no palliation could they offer, for their violation of the divine law in divorcing for every cause the wives with whom they had been joined together for life according to the divine rule. Their iniquitous doings in securing divorces from their wives were due to no other cause than "hardness of heart" (Matt. 19:8; Mark 10:5). A heart not hardened, seared, or calloused, a conscience not stifled, would not have sought release from the bond or yoke which the Most High had created, and which they had of their own will assumed in taking their wives.

BIGAMY AND POLYGAMY

Lamech in the line of Cain is mentioned as the first who had two wives, and was therefore a bigamist. It is said, "And Lamech took unto him two wives": Adah and Zillah

The Holy Trinity

By S. J. Lindsay

WE HAVE been listening to some very interesting lectures on the restoration of Israel to their land and to their favor with God. But interspersed with the fine reasoning on this subject there came occasionally a reference to the Trinity and to the preexistence of Jesus, which is to us the fly in the ointment. In speaking to one of the party on the Trinity, she stated that just one proof was enough to convince her that the Holy Spirit is a person. Asked what it was, she said, "Because the personal pronoun 'he' is used in connection with him." We called attention to the fact that other matters in Scripture were spoken of in the same way. She admitted this, which to our way of thinking took all the strength from her one proof.

In Proverbs 8 both wisdom and understanding are spoken of in terms of feminine pronouns. "Doth not wisdom cry? and understanding put forth her voice? She standeth in the top of high places, by the way in the places of the paths. She crieth at the gates." In Matthew 5:13, Jesus is quoted as saying, "Ye are the salt of the earth: but if the salt have lost his savour, wherewith shall it be salted?" In various languages, even in our own, sex is only a feature of what in grammar we call gender. Masculinity is attributed to strength while femininity is attributed to comparative weakness. We speak of the sturdy oak as "he," while we refer to the vine that elings to it as "she." The sun is "he" while the moon is "she." When we refer to God, the pronoun "he" is always used, not to denote sex, but to denote His great strength.

The Trinity is spoken of as equal in its parts, but we have the word of Jesus Himself in which He says: "Ye have heard how I said unto you, I go away, and come again unto you. If ye loved me, ye would rejoice, because I said, I go unto the Father; for my Father is greater than I" (John 14:28). We observe, too, that in his salutations in his letters to the churches Paul recognizes the Father and the Son but never includes the Holy Spirit as a person. The Holy Spirit is but an influence emanating from the Father and the Son. It is manifested in many ways, but its chief work is with the Christian. The Christian is to be filled with the Spirit of God. Jesus said, "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life" (John 6:63). When Jesus went into heaven to be with the Father, the Spirit was sent to empower the apostles to give us the gospel. We have that gospel today and it contains the Spirit of God. To come in touch with the Spirit, we must come in touch with the Word. It is because so many feel the Spirit working independently of the Word that there are so many things taught for Christianity which do not belong to it. As to how far a man's thoughts independently of the Word may be concerned, read Jeremiah 17:9.—The Messenger of Truth.

The Christian Builder

WHENEVER I hear the word "builder" mentioned, my mind invariably goes back to an early day in my life when my parents removed from the chill-infested regions of a more eastern state to the western borders of what was then Oklahoma Territory. There, on the broad, limitless plains, they homesteaded and carved out of the prairie wilderness their future home. There, on the rough frontier of advancing civilization, my father built one of the first pioneer "mansions" ever erected in that part of the great plains country. And, though the hand that erected the one little room out there on the prairie sea has for many years been stilled in death, he left as a sole survivor in that early home an enfeebled mother surrounded by the silence and the memories of by-gone years. It was in those years when she was one of the many who came to seek their fortunes in a new country. But the passing of time has brought many inevitable changes that are evident to the eyes of even a casual observer.

Overnight, as it were, the country was settled. Every available homestead was occupied. People came from many states to accept the grant of land the Government was pleased to give them. Crops were cultivated and harvested. Little villages sprang up. A railroad was built and the country had the appearance of moderate prosperity and contentment. But already a change is taking place. New faces are appearing upon the land, and old faces are vanishing from view. Many of these early settlers did not remain to harvest their first crop. Within a year many more had given up the struggle and returned to their native state. And after a few short years only a few of the many who had started the pioneer life together, had proved themselves equal to the test. These few did not stop with their first efforts. Little by little they added to the improvements of their homestead. A well, or a fence, a windmill or a room to the house, a little here and a little there, until they acquired more comfortable homes. These few might well be regarded as the true builders of a great commonwealth, the cornerstone of a mighty empire.

To be sure, their lives have not been whiled away upon flowery beds of ease. They have often been beset by the blighting effects of drought. Sand storms and hail have sometimes taken heavy toll of their labors. But they have remained living examples of stalwart courage to those of more feeble strength. How vividly the words of the great Master come to our mind: "Many are called, but few are chosen." Few are chosen because only a few prove themselves worthy of the great calling.

Each man or woman who renounces the life of sin and comes to obedience of the gospel of Christ, finds himself situated upon the pioneer borders of a new experience. Here they must succeed or fail, stand or fall, largely upon their own efforts. How many will stand the test? How many will remain to make final proof on their homestead of this new experience? Far too many, we fear, will, within a few short weeks, relinquish their claims and return to a state of unrighteousness. A few months and others have dropped out of the race. And in the end only a few of the most courageous and faithful prove themselves worthy the name of Christian.

Why did the few succeed and the many fail in the great Christian race? All were given an equal opportunity for success. All had the same great spiritual storehouse of Scripture from which they might erect their Christian structures. But many failed and turned back into other ways that fall short of the glory of God. How plainly did the Savior foresee this condition of affairs is amply illustrated in His parable of the sower. Some of his seed, so the parable states, fell by the wayside, and the fowls of the air came and devoured it up. These people by the wayside are the first to take the backward step. They are those who hear the word, but are so weak as to be unable to retain it against the onslaughts of Satan. Again, some seed fell on stony ground, where it soon sprang up, but because it had no root, it could not withstand the scorching rays of the sun, and it soon withered and died. These are they who receive the word with gladness, and for a time they cannot do enough in the Master's service. But their emotion far exceeds their spiritual root system, and so as soon as affliction and persecution arise, they become offended and drop from the race. Yet again, some seed fell among thorns, and the thorns grew up and choked the word till it could not yield fruit. These are the people who hear the word and would be glad to live a Christian life, but through carelessness and neglect they permit the cares of this life and the lust of earthly things to choke out the spiritual word, and they become unfruitful, give up the struggle, and drop from the race. And lastly, there is a little remnant left, the few who have stood the test of time. These are likened to seed upon good ground. They not only hear the word and receive it, but they do something about it. They are constantly at work. Slowly, steadily, and surely doing something. Adding a little here and a little there; and they are able to bring forth much fruit, some thirty, some sixty, and some a hundredfold.

This parable sheds much light upon the conditions of the present day. We recognize the facts mentioned as being equally true in our time. Times without number have we observed the lives of those who took upon themselves the cross of Christ. Great revivals have closed with large numbers of converts, but within a short while many had fallen away. Fallen by the very reasons mentioned in the parable. They failed to add anything to their spiritual well-being.

One great truth that should be strongly impressed upon each convert, when he accepts the gospel conditions of pardon, is the fact that in spiritual life, as well as in all material things, there is positively no standstill. All things are progressing or digressing. All are going forward or backward. Each day we are gaining ground or losing ground in the battle of life. And each day we are adding something to or subtracting something from our spirituality.

The Apostle Peter had this law of nature in mind when he wrote his second Epistle. In this he gives as the one great remedy for slackness in the Christian life, a program of work. We are to become builders in the Master's cause. Jesus Christ is the foundation, the corner stone, upon which we build our hopes. Faith is the one great requisite required of everyone who would come to God. We must believe that "he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." Hence faith is not an added virtue. But faith alone is not sufficient. We must add something to our faith, if we would make ourselves secure in the Christian life. "Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness?" (Rom. 6:16). To our faith Peter says we should add virtue, to virtue knowledge, to knowledge temperance, to temperance patience, to patience godliness, to godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness charity. And he further states if these things be in us and abound, we shall never fail. We should add to our faith virtue, because virtue is strength, and strength is one of man's greatest assets. Strength is a most admirable characteristic that should be sought for by every Christian. But we should also strive to keep our strength well balanced between the physical, mental, and spiritual. If we allow either one of the three to become abnormally developed, the others usually suffer to a like degree. Hence we should strive to keep our physical qualities well proportioned in the strength each should have. Paul increased in strength and went about the country strengthening the apostles (Acts 18:23).

Is This Your Church?

ONCE had it said to me, "Brother Blank is doing the church no good. We are only paying him for tearing it down." May God forgive me; I did not defend the man, but added fuel to the flame.

Everyone knows that no one person can tear down an organization, but the very spirit of evil had entered into the hearts of many, and together, we who stood back and criticized and tore apart the work of God in this little church are all equally guilty of the sin of denying Christ, even as was Peter.

Sin reasoned thus:

1. "If he only wouldn't shout so, I could listen to his preaching." He had preached before the people before he was hired. Who was responsible for his being there? When a group of people give their support to a man long enough to install him in a position of power, should they then immediately withdraw it?

2. "I don't get anything out of his sermons." Is it not true that we get out of a thing about what we put in, and if we go into a church with a critical attitude, looking for faults in the singing, in the sermon, in the general management of it all, how can we hear the voice of God, who speaks through love?

3. "He is always preaching personal sermons." Is not the Bible a personal book, and the Word of God sharper than a two-edged sword? How can one preach a true series of sermons and never touch the guilt of some one? If we are pricked in our hearts, should we harden our necks and condemn the Word, or the pastor, rather than ourselves? Surely the Word of God was given us to measure ourselves by.

4. "He preaches tithing, and I don't believe in it." If the Word of God teaches tithing, whether as a law or merely as an act with promise of reward, will our believing it or not alter it in any way? Should we not strive to mold our minds to the Word, rather than mold the Word to our minds?

When we trust God He trusts us (Matt. 25:14), but acting so could we be trusted? We became much like the church a certain man saw in a dream.

This man dreamed he found himself in a strange city, very poorly dressed as for work, and the day was Sunday. He saw throngs of people going into a church, and being lonely he thought he would enter and enjoy the service, too.

As he walked up to the door he was met by a sexton who said, "Begone; we do not allow tramps in here."

Shocked and disappointed he turned and walked sadly away. Suddenly he saw Jesus before him, and the Lord said, "Why are you so sad?" The man told Him he had tried to go into the church near by and had been turned away. "Don't feel too badly," Jesus answered. "I've never been able to get in there, either!"

Only a dream, yes, but how possible it is that Christ often finds Himself shut out of a church, at least for a time. He is forgiving, praise God, and if those who sinned are sincerely sorry and turn from their evil way, He will come in and dwell with them again.

Let us pray for forgiveness of our past misdeeds, and be at pains to confess Christ before men in all we do that our work may glorify Him and bring others into the fold.

A praying church is a live church.

A live church is a saving church.

A saving church is Christ's church.

THE BELMONT PLAN

WHAT is the Belmont Plan, anyway? Where did it come from? What is back of it all? Why this emphasis all of a sudden on something of which we know so little?"

"We know how to run our churches. Our every member canvass is well cared for by our committee and splendidly responded to by our church. Are we being subjected to some more high pressure publicity and salesmanship in the interest of budgets, when we are perfectly capable of looking after things ourselves?"

If the Belmont Plan were some transient, catch-penny device to secure funds for the church, the General Council's Committee on United Promotion would not be advocating it for one minute. The committee is too well aware of the cheap schemes that have been proposed to the church in recent years to "raise money" for its work. It is not ignorant of commissions on grocery sales, questionable methods of securing funds locally, the attempted exploitation of organizations within the church by commercial interests, and the thousand and one other means advocated to get some money. These merely represent an attempt to finance the church of Christ on a basis other than that of loving, intelligent, proportionate, systematic, scriptural giving.

Here is a statement of the Plan which the Council's committee believes can be made the foundation of all giving in our church:

The Belmont Presbyterian Church, Roanoke, Virginia, in September, 1933, faced a serious situation, many of the members feeling that the church could not be carried on. The pastor asked the congregation to report anonymously the family incomes. It was found that 137 people out of 425 had definite incomes. Of these, 120 were dependable, and of these, 118 agreed to the pastor's suggestion that they tithe for three months. The offerings of the church had averaged $50 a week. The first offering under the new plan was $173, and the second, $228. At the end of the quarter, all bills were paid, the deficit was wiped out, and there were 2 cents in the bank to the church's credit. When the every member canvass was put on for 1934, the budget was over-subscribed $2,000.

The spiritual values obtainable from this plan are even more important than the material results. In the Belmont Church, people who said at first, "We cannot afford to tithe," stood up before the congregation to report that they had had a wonderful experience, had met their obligations more easily, and had lived better lives since they had used God's plan for their money.

At the heart of all giving there must be a principle—giving must result from something fundamental—"God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son." The early church gave as a result of a profound experience which begat a living conviction. So we must give today. And the principle that is advocated at the heart of all our giving is that of the tithe.

So the Committee on United Promotion is turning to the church this year and saying, "We are not advocating a supplementary offering. We are not issuing posters to stir up people to give just a little bit more. We are not issuing blanks, coin collectors, or other devices to bring in some extra money, all good, perhaps, in their places. What we are advocating is this: Get the church, as far as possible, to put its giving on a tithing basis, and you will solve the problem of its support. Give God that portion of the substance wherewith He has blessed you, and see what happens!"

This is the committee's suggestion this year. After all, it is the best suggestion!—Arthur H. Limouze, D. D., in The Presbyterian.

Although primarily aimed at the church of which he is a member, Dr. Limouze's analysis of the present situation is applicable to every denomination, regardless of creed. For this reason we present it, in the hope that others, individuals or church groups, will be inspired to inaugurate the biblical method for church support.

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

White stands for purity, but white lies and whited sepulchers cannot claim such virtue.—Harvey Krogh, Jr.

WHAT DIFFERENCE DOES IT MAKE?

earth—happiness, reward? Could you conceive anything greater in these days of the daily loss of homes?

When will all this be realized? is the burning question of your mind if you have studied with us thus far and accepted God at His word. Paul tells us when he expects to receive his reward in 2 Timothy 4:7, 8; Peter in 2 Peter 3:10-14; John in 1 John 3:1, 2. Not forgetting the wealth of assurance in 1 Corinthians 15:51-54; 1 Thessalonians 4:14-17; Philippians 3:20, 21; Colossians 3:4. Read them all.

Most significant are the beloved Apostle's words in 1 John 3:3. "Every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." In those fifteen brief words are found the inspiration to serve, the incentive to choose the good, the strength to meet the temptations of every day. And in the sixth word is found the summary of God's plans, the "hope" so dear to us of the coming of Christ, when life eternal will be bestowed upon those who believe and obey the truth.

There we are, right back at the beginning of our studies. Is not the possession of strength to meet daily temptation found in a knowledge of God's plans for you? Will not an unflinching faith in God's Word furnish you, young people, with the needed armor to gain the victory? Is there not a definite connection between believing right and living right?

Does it make any difference what you believe?

HOW TO STUDY THE BIBLE

geographical contents of the Word, as he is of a spiritual apprehension of the Word of God, an appropriating of its teachings in our own hearts and souls.

II

Before we give careful attention to the question of how we may study the Word of God for our spiritual enrichment, we shall perhaps do well to consider for a moment why we should make Bible study preeminent in our daily lives. Is it not true that many do not regularly and earnestly study the Word of God because they have never really become convinced that such study is indispensable? Some months ago, a very dear friend of the author's, a man about sixty years of age, was running up the steps of Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, carrying two heavy suitcases. The man weighed two hundred forty pounds. Before he got to the top of the steps, his heart almost gave out. This man is a doctor. He said instantly this thought came into his mind. "You will have to take off some of this weight." He began taking it off the next day. He has taken off forty-five pounds, and weighs less today than he has for thirty years. Of course he has no more trouble with his heart. He told me that he found the greatest battle was, not the taking off of the weight, but coming to a conclusion that that weight must come off. Once he had decided that he would take it off, the battle was over, and there was no further conflict in his mind over the matter. Now, if we could come to an hour in our lives when before God we would say that Bible study must be given a definite, paramount place in our lives, every day, because we realize that we absolutely need it, then, no matter what interruptions are experienced, or what might be our immediate reactions to such study, we would keep at it persistently, because we knew we needed it. Let us think then, for just a moment, of our absolute need for the Word of God as Christians.

For many years British journals regularly carried a large advertisement of a famous institution near London, known as the Sandow Institute, where those whose health had been broken by disease or worry could recover their strength, and return again to work and the normal duties of life. It is probable that thousands of Britishers have been actually restored to robust health by the Sandow treatment. Now the world, our own flesh, and Satan himself together work for our spiritual weakening and the breaking down of the very tissues of our souls, so that thousands of Christians live an anemic existence, spiritually speaking, without power, or joy, or vision, or fruitfulness in their lives. It is one of the great purposes of the Word of God to deliver Christians from such invalidism, to restore to them the power, the glow, and the fruitfulness that Christ intended they should possess when He redeemed them.

There were four definite steps in the Sandow treatment (and in any similar treatment)—a diagnosis of the trouble; a removal of whatever was causing the trouble, poison, the pressure of some bone upon a nerve, or whatever else it might be; a carefully prescribed diet; and, exercise. Now the Word of God does just these four things for us. First, it diagnoses our case. In Hebrews 4:12, the Word of God is spoken of as "a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart." The Greek word here translated "discerner" is the word kritikos, from which derives our English word "critic." As a professor of English literature criticizes a composition which we submit to him, that he might point out to us its errors and blemishes, so that they might be removed, and tells us wherein the manuscript might be improved, so God, in His Word, is the supreme and final critic of our lives. The Apostle Paul in his last Epistle (2 Tim. 3:16) tells us that the Holy Scriptures are profitable "for conviction," by which he means they are able to convict us of our sins, revealing the dark spots in our lives against the background of God's holiness. The Apostle James (1:23, 24) tells us that the Word of God is as a glass, a mirror into which we look, discovering the blemishes upon our countenance, the stains which the world has left there. Just as a man cannot see his own face except in a mirror, so a Christian cannot see the spiritual and moral blemishes of his life except as he looks into the Word of God. In 1 John 1:9, we are told that: "If we confess our sins, he (God) is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." The word here translated "confess" is the Greek word omologeō, consisting of two words, omo, meaning "the same, identical," and logeō, meaning "to say, to speak." Thus, the word "confess" literally means, "to say the same thing as another, to agree with, to consent to." The word gives a picture of two people talking. They are in disagreement about a certain matter, but, as they continue to discuss the matter, whatever it might be, the arguments and evidence presented by one convince the other that he is wrong. Thus they finally agree. When we confess our sins, we are saying the same thing that God says about us. God points out in His Word what sin is, and, when we confess sin to God, we admit the existence of some iniquity in our lives. We would never know sin except it were revealed to us by God, and, when we keep away persistently from the Word of God, we become callous and indifferent to the sins of our lives. In the pointed words of Izaak Walton:

"Every hour
I read you kills a sin,
Or lets a virtue in
To fight against it."

John Calvin could testify, out of a life of incessant study and profound scholarship, in his Institutes of the Christian Religion: "No human writings, however sacredly composed, are at all capable of affecting us in a similar way. Read Demosthenes or Cicero, read Plato or Aristotle, or any other of that class. You will, I admit, feel wonderfully allured, pleased, moved, enchanted; but turn from them to the reading of the Sacred Volume, and, whether or not, it will so affect you, so pierce your heart, so work its way into your very marrow, that, the comparison of the impression so produced, that of orators and philosophers, will disappear, making it manifest that in the Sacred Volume there is a truth Divine, something that makes it superior to all the gifts and graces attainable by man." Centuries later, another famous student of the Word of God, whose Reference Bible has been such a blessing to millions of Christians throughout the English world, Dr. C. I. Scofield, made the following confession: "I gave much of my earlier life to the study of Homer and Shakespeare, and, while my understanding undoubtedly profited by that study, and I found keen intellectual delight in it, these books held no rebuke for my sins, nor any power to lift me above them, but, when I came to the Bible and received Him, concerning whom, after all, the whole Book is written, I entered into peace, joy, and power. The Bible led me to Jesus and Jesus transformed my life."—W. M. Smith in Revelation.

SCANDALMONGERING

THE liveliest imagination could never begin to reckon the harm and suffering for which malicious or thoughtless gossip has been responsible. And it is one of the curiosities of moral psychology that numbers of people who would shrink from what is conventionally regarded as sinful have no compunction in turning themselves into channels of scandalmongering. This abuse of the power of speech takes many forms, and it is not least deadly when it uses silence as its vehicle. The closing of an eye, a "knowing" look, a shrug of the shoulders, can be detestably efficient broadcasters of evil report; and to say nothing may sometimes be the worst form of betrayal. The sin of scandal ranges from sheer thoughtlessness to a wantonness for which no condemnation could be too strong; but, in any case, the mischief is done and is often irreparable. How can men and women, otherwise decent enough, let themselves become such happiness-wreckers? Why cannot two young people be "seen together" without being embarrassed by gossip and innuendo before they have had time to know each other's minds? And what canon has heaven set against honorable friendship between men and women of maturer years that it should be exposed to suggestive comment? Or why should people already hard-pressed be further handicapped by ill-natured comment on their private affairs?

Without pursuing the sorry tale, we may pause to note one specially unfortunate fact. It might have been expected that at least people professing religion and belonging to churches would have nothing to do with this kind of thing. But it has to be admitted that these are often among the worst offenders; and, quite seriously, I think such people are a big factor in the slump in organized religion. Here again the worst is the corruption of the best; for when "religion" takes to scandal, it does so with malicious resourcefulness and effect. In this practical sense the church needs to cleanse its tongue, and to brand as sinful, whether in pulpit or pew, any speech that is not honest and generous and charitable.—Rev. Arthur Pringle in Bible Faith Mission Standard.

JOY THAT SATISFIES

By Elizabeth H. Morton

The perfume of the garden flowers
That makes the air like balm,
The stillness of a summer day
With all its restful calm,
Glad news from home when far away
That fills the heart with song,
The whispered words of tender love
That linger there so long.

The thought that wakens in the soul
A dream of future bliss,
The idols wrought of earthly things
That promise happiness,
Are not the sweetest things below;
The blossoms quickly fall,
The blasts of winter sweep the earth
As with a funeral pall.

And changes come with fleeting years;
The love is not for aye,
The dreams but flash across the brain,
The idols are of clay.
But list, O wanderer on life's shore,
Give ear and know this truth,
There is a joy to satisfy
Old age and buoyant youth.

The joy of Christ when here on earth,
Was in the souls set free—
Those purchased ones, His joy and crown
For evermore will be—
And we may know that rapturous bliss
And revel in the thought
Of all the wondrous, glorious things
That humble prayer hath wrought.

Then let us pray, and as we pray
Believe our prayers are heard;
There's power today, as long ago,
Through faith in God's own word;
And joy will come to satisfy,
To waken songs of praise,
And we shall see a glory shine
To brighten all our days.

Berean Department

ARLEN MARSH, EDITOR

Minnesota Conference

On December 7 and 8 the Berean Society of Minnesota held a convention at Eden Valley. The classes were large and well attended. The business meeting was devoted to planning state-wide activities for the spring. Also, the local difficulties of the various societies were analyzed and remedies suggested from the experience of others.

We feel that these conventions conducted for and by the young people are of immense value. The following enumeration of those in attendance will help show the interest manifested, especially when we remember that a sleet storm on Friday made driving very hazardous. We are thankful to report that, while there were many accidents on the highways, the Bereans were involved in none of them.

In attendance were: from Claremont, 1; from Eden Valley, 17; from Litchfield, 5; from Mora, 10; from New London, 1; from Paynesville, 4; from Lester Prairie, 1; from St. Cloud, 6; from Watkins, 3.

The next convention of this energetic group will be held during March at St. Cloud. The exact date is to be set later by the St. Cloud society.—Richard Le Crone.

Mars Marches Masterfully

Senators Lewis and Clark have hurled their bolts of inflammatory oratory into the ring of international affairs at a time when the United States is best calculated to give careful consideration to their unthinking and imperialistic demagogy.

The birthdays of Abraham Lincoln and George Washington, falling as they do closely together, bring to mind thoughts of "avoid entangling alliances" and the divine right of men to individual freedom. Senators Lewis and Clark, orating in the higher house of Congress, have forgotten these principles long enough to suggest—nay, almost to demand—that the United States plunge into war to preserve the $300,000,000 business that now hangs in the balances through Japan's interference with Chinese government.

It was not a pacifistic principle that Jesus suggested when He made the remark that "they that take the sword shall perish by the sword." It was simply common sense. War does not pay. It never has paid. It never will pay. The useless slaughter of millions of men, the decimation of entire continents, the ensuing financial debacle, the unspeakable grief and anguish that follow, can never be repaid by any victory. To the victor, it is true, go the spoils; but the spoils of war are as bitter as the apples of Sodom.

Christian nations do not debate the advisability of hurling men at one another's throats. Senators Lewis and Clark, by their infamous declarations of February 10 on the floor of the Senate, have placed the United States in the unenviable position of being represented by men who openly avow themselves worshipers at the shrine of Mars for the sake of a fallacious theory—the "open door" of China.

Let Japan, vitally concerned, racially, politically, and financially, in the affairs of the great Chinese Republic, quell the bandit uprisings and exercise imperialism. Let the United States prove itself a Christian, and a sensible, Power by maintaining strict neutrality. Japan professes nothing that prohibits the most despicable despotism; the United States at least pretends to be a Christian nation.

Stars Over America

The past two decades have seen the rise in the United States of what has become one of its greatest, and certainly one of its most profitable, industries—moving pictures. Glamor and gigantic and colossal have been overworked; new faces have climbed for a moment into the limelight and have fallen into the abyss of forgotten things; technological improvements have followed each other with remarkable rapidity. And the public has found itself a new and mighty god, and has bowed itself willingly before him.

Of the thousands of young people—and older ones, too—who are members of the churches of the country, the huge majority of them are capable of naming offhand any two dozen motion picture stars. Not a baker's dozen in a thousand can name all twelve of the apostles.

The cause for this does not lie altogether in the fact that the church is educational and the motion pictures entertainment, for motion pictures have been frequently made education—and good education. Much of it lies in the fact that motion pictures and motion picture stars have been thoroughly advertised.

A Japanese statesman, visiting this country, once observed that if the United States would spend as much in advertising Christianity as in advertising cigarettes, the entire world would today be Christian. The church has, in short, neglected its duty to advertise; it has carried its light under a bushel; it has failed to publicize itself.

Make the newspapers and magazines propaganda for the church as well as for business. Use bulletins and broadsides and display ads. Use billboards, if necessary. Report unusual sermons or lessons to the daily or weekly paper; such material is news. Use every possible legitimate means—and make the Christ the new star over America.

We should follow Paul's example by bearing the infirmities of the weak, assisting and strengthening those who are not so strong as ourselves (Rom. 15:1).

Knowledge is necessary in every branch of endeavor that is worth while in the world. The physician must acquire a knowledge of the human anatomy and medical science before he is competent to administer drugs and medicine to suffering humanity. The farmer must have a knowledge of his soils and his crops if he is to be able to feed and clothe the people of the world. The engineer must have a knowledge of steam and engines, to be competent to pilot the great locomotives that traverse the countless miles of railroads. And the Christian must have a good knowledge of things in general and of the Bible in particular to be able to successfully pilot his own life over the rough sea of tribulations and doubts and fears that sometimes arise. With knowledge we may be able to conquer worlds, without it we are doomed to defeat.

When we understand that temperance is a moderation in all things, and not merely as pertaining to alcoholic beverages, we can more fully see the necessity of adding temperance to our Christian building. Though alcoholic intemperance is one of the greatest evils of the world, intemperance in many other ways is almost as bad.

In the early spring of 1934 the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South adopted resolutions condemning liquor and cigarette advertising on billboards, in the press, and over the radio, charging "ill effects upon the women of the land." Anything that fosters and engenders intemperance in any one particular thing is certainly a detriment to moderation. These resolutions are a step in the right direction. They are good as far as they go, but any number of resolutions cannot equal temperance and moderation built into the Christian character of individuals.

Patience is described as "suffering the adverse trials of life with calmness." To calmly suffer for doing wrong is not particularly a compliment. But when we are misjudged and misrepresented in doing what is right, our calm and patience become a Christian virtue. Christ was misrepresented, harshly judged, and even condemned to death for doing what was right, yet He bore it all with perfect patience. All Christians should diligently train themselves to follow the noble example of the great Master. "Let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing." Paul admonished the Hebrew brethren that they be followers of them, who, through faith and patience, inherit the promises. How essential then, that we build this patience addition to our Christian homestead.

Godliness might well be defined as being godlike. It should be every Christian's greatest desire to daily become more godlike, more Christlike in all of his thoughts and actions. This cannot be done, however, by the watchful, waiting policy. If we would attain this beautifying quality of Christianity, we must diligently work to that end. The Christians who spend six days a week doing their own personal work, thinking of everything except Christianity, then dancing three or four hours on Saturday night and then dozing through one hour of service Sunday morning, are not, to say the least, adding much godliness to their Christian stature. "Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come" (1 Tim. 4:8).

With some people brotherly kindness has become more an outward show than sincerity. Brotherly kindness does not mean an over-emotional handshaking on Sunday, but a sane, steady, affectionate brotherly feeling for our fellow man seven days a week.

Paul instructed the Roman brethren to "be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honour preferring one another." The babe in Christ might not possess this characteristic of brotherly love. But we seriously doubt if he can long remain a Christian unless he add this Christlike trait to his spiritual possessions.

After this trait has been acquired, and has become an integral part of our being, we are instructed to build into our lives the greatest of all these Christian qualities, charity.

Concerning charity volumes might be written, with ample material remaining for other volumes to follow. Generally speaking, people are prone to think of charity as the giving of alms, or material necessities to those in need. This practice, to be sure, is of itself a trait to be highly commended. But these things occupy but a small space in the meaning of the word "charity." Paul says that though he should bestow all his goods to feed the poor and himself to be burned and have not charity, it would profit him nothing.

In its larger, primary sense, charity is something far more grand, more noble and enduring, than the mere giving of gifts and necessities. It is the disposition on our part to think and speak well of others. It is applied to universal love among men. So important is this part of our Christian character that the great Apostle to the Gentiles devotes no little space to its discussion.

Therefore, when we have crowned our building career with charity, we have made ourselves secure against spiritual famine. We have struck the death blow that defeats failure for all time to come. For we are assured, if we do these things, we shall never fail. Herein lies the secret of success or failure in the Christian life. Let us hope for more successes and fewer failures.

Perhaps if all our young converts were more minutely informed of the fact they were embarking upon a building program, and that their very lives depended upon the success of that program, many failures could be turned into successes. There would be fewer to leave the ranks of the sturdy pioneers who fight the battle of life through to a glorious victory.

Like the pioneers of old, let us go forward with a definite building program in view, each day adding, or strengthening, some useful and beneficial trait to the homestead of our Christian experience. Let us be builders in the Master's cause.—M. L. Dobson in The Messiah's Advocate.

VISION AND SERVICE

Luke 9

GOLDEN TEXT

"He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit."—John 15:5b.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

Topic: Worship and Work.

I. Jesus Keeps His Promise. (Vv. 27-31.) In order that the true purpose and meaning of the transfiguration may be appreciated, it is necessary that the lesson begin with v. 27 rather than 28, for the events starting with v. 28 are an immediate fulfillment of the promise or prediction made by Jesus in v. 27, when He said: "I tell you of a truth, there be some standing here, which shall not taste of death, till they see the kingdom of God." In the glorious vision that so shortly followed the giving of that promise, the three favored disciples were given to see the King of that kingdom glorified in the midst of His immortalized saints.

II. It Is Good to Be With Jesus. (Vv. 32-36.) After witnessing the vision of the meeting between Jesus, Moses, and Elijah, Peter was deeply impressed with the blessedness of remaining in such splendid company indefinitely. He suggested that they build tabernacles and make that glory-crowned mountain peak their permanent place of abode. How comforting it is to know that the desire of Peter will one day be realized by all of God's faithful ones, for "so shall we ever be with the Lord" (1 Thess. 4:17). Speaking of the "ancient worthies" who "died in faith" throughout the ages of the past, the writer of Hebrews declares: "These all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise: God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect."—Heb. 11:39, 40. All to be glorified together in the presence of the King!

III. Worship and Work. (Vv. 37-43.) A great crowd of needy folk waited in the valley as Jesus and His disciples came down from the mount. They pressed on every side, bringing their sorrows, their anxieties, and their pain to the only One who could provide relief. It is now our task to carry on the merciful work of our blessed Lord until He comes. "For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them" (Eph. 2:10), remembering the promise He made concerning those who serve Him faithfully: "He that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations" (Rev. 2:26).

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

Many of the most artistic and famous buildings in the world have taken decades or even centuries to complete. Often the individual whose plan was adopted did not live to see the work accomplished and yet the completed whole was a result of the vision of a far-seeing idealist. To make the vision a reality, however, required the work of many different artisans. Those who toil in the forests, those who delve in the mines are as important to the finished whole as the carvers and embroiderers. No great painting can be finished without the lowly animal, vegetable, or mineral to furnish the pigment. From the soiled rags of the beggar may be evolved the monogrammed page on which the aristocratic lady sends her message to a friend.

So it has been with God's plan. In the beginning His vision saw the final tabernacle set up with a perfect people worshiping therein. But in the long centuries between He saw the heartaches and failures of mankind as they strove to accomplish the result without first acquainting themselves with the plan. It was Jesus alone who caught the vision in all its glorious perspective, and He alone who accomplished His task even to the heartbreak of the cross.

Each individual Christian must set his ideal on the mountain top of Christ's perfection. By climbing the mountain through prayer and study we may catch a vision of the beauties of the Christian life. Often we, like Peter, long to stay on the mountain top, working only in the reflected glory of our God, not understanding more than did Peter that it is only through the daily overcoming of temptation and our outpouring of Christian service to those about us that we are to have a part in the glorious kingdom of God.

From the transporting glory of the mount of transfiguration Jesus came down to the stark and bitter needs of life. And because He had obtained vision and spiritual strength on the mountain top He could enter the valley with the will to help those about Him. It is only in our contacts with others that we are able to convey to them our belief in Christ. It is only in a never-ending service to others that we are able to develop the Christ-life within ourselves and thus far reflect the glory of the Christian faith.—G. M. M.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

With Jesus in Service

Associated with Jesus as fellow laborers were the twelve He had chosen. Before sending them out to their task, He gave them thorough instruction. Their work was also to be Preaching and Showing. Was their message a different one from that of Jesus? their means of showing it different? See Luke 9:1, 2. Here you see that the kingdom of God and miracles of healing were the theme and the method of the apostles, just as they had been of their Lord. See also verse 11. The vast nature of Jesus' work and the effort expended to meet the demands of the multitude are very apparent. Where did He receive the strength to carry on (v. 18, and many others)?

In verse 27 we read that He promised some of those nearest to Him a vision of the kingdom of God, and in the following verses we read how He kept that promise. Notice verse 35. Where else have you read almost the same words used of Jesus? What did Peter call Jesus in verse 20? (The teacher should see that all in the class understand the difference in the significance of the two names, "Jesus" and "Christ.") If God plans to establish His kingdom once more on earth, He must have a King. Who is to be that King? Give references. Great as was the work of Jesus and the twelve when the gospel, the glad tidings of the kingdom of God, was first preached, it will be a greater work when He comes to fulfill His preaching. You and I may have a share in that great work if we qualify now and do our part each day.

"The Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them."—M. G.

JUNIOR CLASS

Topic: Seeing the Glory of Jesus. Text: Luke 9:28-36. Memory Verse: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him."—Matt. 17:5.

Lesson Story. Have you ever wondered and wondered just what Jesus will look like when He comes to earth again? I have.

At one time three very dear friends of Jesus were permitted to see just how Jesus would look when He came again. This is how it happened. Jesus, with three of His disciples, Peter, James, and John, went up into a mountain to pray. While He was praying a great change came over Him. His garments became white as snow, and His face shone as brightly as the sun.

Then there appeared two men. One was Moses and the other Elias. They talked to Jesus. Peter said to Jesus, "Jesus, Master, it is good for us to be here: and let us make three tabernacles; one for Thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias."

Just then a great cloud arose and covered them. Out of the cloud came a voice, saying, "This is my beloved Son, hear him." This was God speaking of Jesus.

The cloud disappeared and there stood Jesus all alone. Now some think these men saw this as they slept, for verse 32 says they were heavy with sleep. Another place Jesus said, "Tell the vision to no man."

Notebook. Draw a mountain. Cover the top of mountain with a cloud. Write the memory verse as if coming from the cloud. Answer the following questions with words from the lesson story. (1) To what place did Jesus go one day? _____. (2) Who went with him? _____, _____, and _____. (3) What was Jesus doing there? _____. (4) What happened to Him? He was _____. AMONG THE CHURCHES

STORM REPORTS

Throughout the Middle West church and Sunday school attendance has been seriously curtailed by successive blizzards and sub-zero temperatures which have been almost unbroken since January 21. Drifts in north-western Illinois have isolated one town with snow fifty feet deep. Many churches have suspended services and a large number of schools have been closed in order to preserve fuel. Highway commissioners have announced that some state roads cannot be opened until the spring thaws.

Elder Glenn M. Birkey of the Oregon, Ill. church, a mail clerk on the Chicago & North-western Railway from Omaha, Neb., to Clinton, Iowa, has reported being marooned for seven hours near Carroll, Iowa, on his last trip. Two relief engines and 100 shovelers were required to extricate the train, a limited, from drifts.

RIPLEY, ILLINOIS

We are glad to report that the lectures on the Great Pyramid by Bro. F. L. Austin which were really excellent sermons emphasizing and proving the truth of the Bible, were very well attended considering the cold weather. There were from 40 to 75 present each evening. It is true that many more would have come had it been warmer, but we feel that the importance of the pyramid message warranted its immediate attention. We are certain that those who heard these truths were so impressed that they will carry them to those who could not attend. We feel the urgent need to beseech our people to take heed to the words of Jesus: "Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning; and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their lord" (Luke 12:35,36).

Our Sunday school and church attendance, which is usually about 45 or 50, dropped to 21. All of these except four walked and some of them came more than a mile in the zero wind. We pray that all of God's people may watch closely the fulfillment of prophecy and ever love one another.

Harvey Krogh, Jr., Pastor.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

Saturday night and Sunday, Feb. 8 and 9, proved to be a real testing time of loyalty to a cause. The worst blizzard which this part of Michigan has seen in many years was raging, but there were fifteen men out Saturday night to the monthly men's meeting. On Sunday morning 63 were at Sunday school, while a Holland church near ours had only two persons present. Of the fifteen teachers nine were present; two others tried to come but had to turn back, and one was ill. Any pastor and church board would be happy to see such loyalty.

The operetta which our choir has been working on so faithfully is to be given this week Friday night, Feb. 21, at the Godwin School.

Sr. George Witham received word of the death of her mother in Traverse City last week.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

BURR OAK, INDIANA

Another bitter cold wave hit us, and so hard that we were compelled to cancel services last Sunday, Feb. 9. Roads were blocked, and ice-covered highways made it very dangerous. Not since 1899 have we had such cold weather. Well, Paul says, in 2 Timothy 3:1, "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come."

Wednesday, Feb. 12, the "Morning Stars" will have their regular class meeting.

The contest between us and Kokomo is under way. We trust that both schools will be benefited by it. For every member attending, the school gets ten points; and for every visitor, five points.

Sr. Mattix is holding about the same. Doctors have given her up. However, she is showing some encouragement.

A. E. Hoskins, Pastor.

NORTHWEST CONFERENCE

With fifteen in attendance the Northwest Conference opened its services at Felida, Wash., January 31, with Sr. Emma C. Railsback's sermon, "The Knowledge of God" (1 Cor. 15:34).

The morning subject on Saturday was "The Earth Abideth Forever," by Sr. Railsback, following which A. W. Darby of Gresham Ore., began a series of prophetic talks on Anglo-Israel.

On Sunday morning a solo by Sr. Lena Upton preceded Sr. Railsback's sermon, "The Gospel." Basket lunch followed with 34 in attendance.

Sr. Upton conducted a social meeting on "Faithfulness," in which all responded with marked interest, closing with a paper prepared and read by Bro. Ezra Railsback on "The Crowning Day."

This was followed by a business meeting called by Vice President Amy L. Young. Sr. Railsback gave a report of her work, which included 65 visits, 35 sermons and lessons, correspondence with people in 18 Oregon and Washington towns, and 2 weekly Bible studies, one at Felida and one in Vancouver.

Favorable discussion was given the suggestion of Bible school to precede the annual conference in June.

Sr. Railsback read greetings from the president, Minnie Rogers, of Eugene, and quoted part of the chapter (1 Thess. 5) which she had requested, followed by greetings and exhortation from our absent secretary and an inspiring message from Bro. Horace Prosser of Newport, Ore. A vote of thanks was given to these absent ones because of the added encouragement and inspiration their messages contained.

At the evening service Sr. Railsback spoke on "The Three Appearings of Christ."

Those present from other sections were Sr. Amy L. Young, Seattle; Sr. Lena Upton, Sr. Arlena Prutzman and family, Vancouver; Sr. Mary Hunt and Bro. Lester Hunt, Grass Valley, Wash.; A. W. Darby, Gresham; H. B. Hathaway and Bro. and Sr. Delbert Hathaway and family, Corvallis, Ore.

While the extreme cold weather kept many from attending this meeting, those who were able to come were enthusiastic in their determination to press on in holding up the gospel message.

(From notes submitted to me.)

RICHARD A. HUMPHREYS

Richard A. Humphreys was born in Herndon, Miss., November 4, 1855, and died August 15, 1935.

He was united in marriage to Kittie C. Muncie of Bear, Ark., May 13, 1892, where she still resides. To this union were born twelve children, four sons, Daniel, David, Gabriel, and Benjamin preceding him in death. Jesse L., John R., and Miss Olive, all of Bear; Samuel J. of Lake Ozark, Mo.; Mrs. Ruth Kinsey of Meyers, Ark.; Mrs. Rachel Morris of Nederland, Texas; Mrs. Mary Kinsey of Nashville, Ark.; and Mrs. Esther H. Sprinkle of Cheyenne, Wyo.; eighteen grandchildren; one brother, G. M. Humphreys of Hot Springs, Ark.; one half-brother, James R. Ham, of Tennessee; and many friends are left to mourn his loss.

He was baptized at an early age and began preaching the gospel of the kingdom at the age of 23. He never tired of talking on the wonderful truths of the Bible and trying to get all he came in contact with to honor God. His letters to us children who are away from home will be greatly missed, as they never failed to carry an inspiring message. He lived to see the eight living children baptized into the Church of God, which rejoiced his heart.

Interment was made in the Lowe Cemetery near Bear. Bro. E. O. Stewart officiated. He made an excellent talk, pointing to the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world, and made the resurrection at the second coming of Christ seem near and real.

Esther Humphreys Sprinkle.

Services at Felida, Wash., are held at the Church of God there every Sunday at 11 a. m. Sr. E. C. Railsback is the pastor.

WHY WE BELIEVE THE BIBLE IS THE WORD OF GOD

THE BIBLE is made up of many books, 66 in all as we have it in the English Bible. These were written by different men, prophets and kings, apostles and a physician, as many as forty writers and at intervals of time 1,500 years apart. There is nothing like it in all literature, in that it is in spite of these things, one book. The more one reads and learns about it, the more this oneness or unity is impressed on us.

We see this in the history of the Bible. From Abraham's call in Genesis 12, in the story of the patriarchs, to Romans, two thousand years later where Abraham is called the father of the faithful; and in Matthew, where Jesus' genealogy is traced back to Abraham, and in Galatians, where the blessing in Jesus is called the promise to Abraham, it is one history. It is the story of the fulfillment of the promise given to Abraham in Genesis 12:1-3, which is a new and selected renewal of the first promise, in Genesis 3:15. We see God keeping His promise and active in a great connected movement which comes to a close in the gospel. The Bible history is a grand panorama of a God, mighty, patient with an erring people, faithful in keeping His promises, wise and very good, holy and righteous. Remember, Moses says to the people in his farewell messages, all the way which Jehovah thy God hath led thee. And it is worth remembering, all the history from Eden to Abraham, and all the way to Bethlehem, Calvary, and to Patmos, where God showed John the new heavens and the new earth where righteousness dwells.

And there is one moral atmosphere in all the Bible. It is true there are differences in moral practices and moral difficulties in parts of the Old Testament. As it is true, the patriarchs knew little of the life to come, compared to the fullness of the New Testament revelation: so in morals they were not on the same level as the gospel has brought us. But in spite of these things, there is no book that has had such a truly wholesome and strong moral influence on men as the Bible. Its moral difficulties may trouble younger and inexperienced souls, who know little of the frailties of the best of men even in New Testament times; who forget the truly strong and noble qualities in men whose frailties the Bible does not hide; and who do not realize the mighty influences morally that have gone out from the Bible, not excepting the accounts of harsh and cruel conduct in leaders among God's people. There is a moral oneness in the Bible.

And there is one purpose and plan in the Bible. This, of course, is seen in the history, as its content and aim. God has a work to do, to redeem a race lost in sin through the fall in Eden. And it is truly great to know He has such a purpose, and wonderful to behold the working out of His plan. In the fullness of time, we are told Jesus was born: In God's good time, He came who was the One that should come. In the Old Testament we see the gradual preparation: what a work to "bring up," to make ready a people, a people heedless, disobedient, falling into sin, and yet He brought them back, as He brought them out of Egypt, in the words of Moses, because He loved them, and would keep the oath which He swore unto their father, with a mighty hand and an outstretched arm. And in the New Testament, we see the end in Jesus Christ of the purpose and plan of God.

This unity or oneness of the Bible makes it the more precious and helpful, and strengthens us in our belief that the Bible is the Word of God.—Our Young People.

A SONG, A WORD, A PRAYER

I sung a song on the ambient air;
It sped away, and I know not where,
But I heard it again on the lips of men,
Who sung my song in a prison pen.

I wrote a poem, a simple strain,
A few short lines in a minor vein;
In a weary hour it returned to me,
Like the cooling rain on the desert sea.

I spoke a word to a sinking soul,
And then forgot, but it made him whole,
And when we twain were met again,
I found him raised to a higher plane.

And then I knelt me in silent prayer,
Where men had gathered, from here, from there;
And for Greek, and Turk, and Jew, and Pole,
I prayed, "Our Father, make all men whole."

O song, O word, O coin of gold,
I cast you out with a joy untold;
But who shall limit the power of prayer,
When it speeds away on God's pure air?

—Nellie Robinson.

POVERTY'S GIFTS TO THE CHURCH

Jeremy Taylor, the great preacher, was the son of a poor barber. Kitto, whose father was a bricklayer, laid a foundation of biblical learning upon which others have built. George Fox, whose feet have been shod with the gospel of peace, was the son of a shoemaker. John Bunyan was poverty's gift to the church of all ages. Zwingli, the fiery Swiss reformer, came from an Alpine shepherd's cabin. Luther, the "Jupiter Tonans" of the Reformation, was a son of a poor miner, and sang for his bread from door to door. Claudius Buchanan, whose "Star of the East" led Judson to Burma, was a poor boy picked up by John Newton and recommended to a rich man as worthy of an education.—Dixon.

(Gen. 4:19). Consideration of the circumstances will throw further light upon this matter. "And Cain went out from the presence of the Lord, and dwelt in the land of Nod, on the east of Eden" (Gen. 4:16). Having gone out from the presence of the Lord, or the place where His presence was manifested, Cain cast off the restraint which the consciousness of the Lord's presence and the sense of the nearness of the divine law imposed. His descendants were not sons of God, as were those of Seth (chap. 6:1, 2), but mere sons of men, and by the time we reach Lamech, the fifth down the line, we find that instead of being content with the rule of monogamy which the Creator had established at the beginning, he took two wives, and so introduced the practice of bigamy, which in time was followed by polygamy. All such plural marriages were in contravention of the divine rule, and in almost every instance many evils resulted from them, or were in one way or another connected with them.

The divine rule established at the beginning for the regulation of marriage during the process of subduing the earth not having been in any manner changed or modified, bigamy, or the state of marriage to one person when one is already married to another, is just as unlawful, and therefore just as obnoxious to God, now as ever in the history of mankind. It should be no less objectionable among believers than it is to the Most High. Yet this evil has crept into the body, and is excused, condoned, and justified upon one pretext or another as if it were a matter of small consequence. What God would not allow in Herod or Felix, but through His faithful servants condemned as unlawful, and out of keeping with justice and self-control, He surely will not tolerate in those who occupy a plane vastly higher than that held by those mentioned. It may appeal to the flesh; it may be in keeping with popular views upon the subject, to live with a "husband" or "wife" while there is another living; but it is shockingly at variance with the divine rule, and comes under the category of "adultery" for one to have two living husbands or wives; and anyone living in such a state is by the divine rule debarred from the kingdom of God (1 Cor. 6:9, 10). No amount of "fixing," either by the guilty party or others, can clear such illicit relationship of its unlawful character or deprive it of its baneful effects. But one remedy exists, and that is to relinquish such unlawful relationship.

A concubine is a woman who is kept by a man as his mistress. Concubinage was practiced as far back as Abraham (Gen. 22:24), who may have acquired it from his ancestral surroundings. It is said of his immediate ancestors, though not of Abraham himself, that they "served other gods" than Jehovah (Josh. 24:2). Such sinful practices were due in every case to departure in some way, at one time or another, from the divine rule established at the beginning. It is also said that Jacob had two concubines.

LUXURIES AND NECESSITIES

THE business world, for the sake of profits, is all the while creating artificial wants, producing by wholesale articles of which one would never even think, unless they were displayed on store counters. Where to draw the line between such of these products as are usefully to be employed, and others that are necessary, is a difficult question at times, although the state of one's pocketbook is often a determining factor in the decision. At any rate, self-denial in some form is as much a duty in this modern age as it was in the first century.

It is Christianity which more than any other religion demands the negation of selfish desires, and at the same time shows how the benefits of the world may reasonably be used. All great natures have been masters in the art of both doing and of doing without, knowing well how to discriminate between the clamorous trifles that distract from life's true purposes and the things that are needful for the body and the soul. We will have a similar success if we show the same spirit.—Bible Faith Mission Standard.

SCRIPTURE EXAMPLES OF INTERCESSION

ABRAHAM interceded for Sodom, and had ten righteous ones been found the city would have been spared.

Jacob spent a night of intercession at Jabbok and became a prevailer with God for blessing.

Moses interceded for the forgiveness and reinstatement of the Israelites when God threatened to blot them out.

Elijah prayed first for drought, then for rain, that God might be recognized by Ahab.

Hezekiah interceded for Jerusalem and 185,000 Assyrians were slain in one night by an angel of the Lord.

Daniel interceded for revelation of prophecy and the answer came after a twenty-one day fast.

Christ often rose up a great while before day to pray. He also spent nights in prayer. He prayed at Gethsemane with "strong crying and tears."

Paul wrote of himself, "Night and day praying exceedingly." Ephesians 1:15-23 gives the end for which he prayed.

When Peter was in prison "prayer was made without ceasing by the church unto God for him" and this is given as the explanation of his miraculous deliverance.

Epaphras when in prison "labored fervently in prayer continually for the church at Colosse."—Selected by Lottie E. Young.

Number 1 — The Gospel

THE command of the Savior to the apostles just before His ascension into heaven, to go "into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature," is still in force, but the great demand in these troublous times is for the interpretation of prophecy. Men want to know what present-day conditions indicate concerning the future. This is true to such an extent that the gospel message, and all that it means to those out of Christ, are almost lost sight of.

The Apostle tells us that the gospel is God's power to save all who believe it (Rom. 1:16), and this, too, was the promise given in the Great Commission. "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned" (Mark 16: 15, 16), in fact, shall continue under the condemnation brought upon the race by the "one man" (Rom. 5:12).

Then the curse pronounced upon man or an angel from heaven who dares to preach a perverted gospel, or anything different from what Paul, through the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, had preached, impresses upon our minds the great importance of searching out the true gospel message and proclaiming it to the world. That the gospel would be perverted, was foreseen by the Savior and His apostles, and it is safe to say that more than three fourths of the gospel proclaimed in the pulpits of our land today is perverted gospel.

If, then, the gospel—the true gospel message—is the power of God to save the believer, the first duty of the minister is to point out clearly and definitely just what the Savior and His apostles set forth as the message of power.

We will look first at the message proclaimed by the Christ during His ministry, after He had been baptized of John in Jordan and God had proclaimed Him to be His Son. Soon after His trials in the wilderness, He went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues and preaching the gospel of the kingdom and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people (Matt. 4:23). He exhorted them to seek first the kingdom of God (Matt. 6:33), to pray for it to come that God's will might be done in earth, as it is in heaven (Matt. 6:10). He went not only into Galilee, but about all the cities and villages teaching in their synagogues and preaching the gospel of the kingdom (Matt. 9:35). In Mark's Gospel we read, "Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God" (1:14). Luke tells us that He went throughout every city and village preaching and showing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God; and the twelve were with him (8:1). He instructed the unbelieving Jews that they would see Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets in the kingdom of God, and they themselves thrust out (Luke 13:28). He told the apostles as they partook of the emblems that were to symbolize His broken body and shed blood, that He would drink no more of the fruit of the vine until "that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom" (Matt. 26:29; Luke 22:18). Notice that Luke expresses it "until the kingdom of God shall come." To the two disciples on the way to Emmaus He said (Luke 24:26, 27), "Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into his glory? And beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things (Please turn to Page Nine)

Abreast of the Times

"Worshipping Violence— Mental Confusion"

"Upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity."

ZURICH, Switzerland, Feb. 10.—David Frankfurter, a Jewish medical student of Yugoslav nationality, determined to avenge the suffering of his compatriots in Germany by assassinating Wilhelm Gustloff, militant leader of the Swiss Nazis. His plan was carried to a successful conclusion on February 4, when he called at the home of his intended victim and shot him down without uttering a word of explanation. Frankfurter immediately surrendered to the police and calmly stated his reasons for the crime. The entire German nation was aroused, and Chancellor Hitler reaffirmed the determination of the German Government "to continue on its way without compromise in order to save the German people for all time from enslavement by supernational Judaism."

The German language Neue Zurcher Zeitung of this city pointed out editorially that "the Gustloff assassination is surely the deed of an individual fanatic, but, at the same time, it reveals the mental confusion of people in Europe today, worshipping violence, and threatening to destroy humanity."

Utopian Plans Fail

"They shall not labour in vain."—Isaiah 65:23.

EDMONTON, Alberta, Feb. 22.—Every effort thus far made to establish a government providing equal prosperity and justice for all has failed. Various schemes have been suggested, many of which have been tried out, but not one has accomplished its purpose of bringing about a condition of general material well-being for all of the citizens of the country concerned. The latest effort of this kind to be brought to the attention of the world, is that of the "Social Credit" plan of this Canadian Province. Premier William Aberhart was elected to office on a platform guaranteeing to pay a "basic dividend" of $25 a month to every adult citizen of the Province's 750,000 population.

The Premier, who before his election, was the head of a Bible institute, led the Social Credit Party to victory at the polls late last summer in which 54 of the 63 seats in the provincial legislature were won. Questioned recently by The Literary Digest, the Premier said that in spite of an empty treasury, "the members of our legislature are full-spirited and enthusiastic in the accomplishment of the application of the principles of social credit to the removal of poverty from the midst of plenty and abundance. . . . The business houses . . . admit that some method should be found of distributing the abundance that we can very easily produce."

To recognize a need for a more equitable distribution of the good things of the earth and to devise a workable method of bringing it about are two very different things in a world governed by selfishness. Collier's, commenting on the situation, asserts that up to the present time the Premier has not been able to put through a single item in his program, and he is today, "drinking the bitter tea of all messiahs" and his plan to establish a social credit system for the Province . . . is proving another "Paradise Lost."

U. S. Army Plane Increase

"Swifter than the eagles of the heaven."—Lam. 4:19.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 13.—Alarmed by the war sentiment sweeping Europe and by the inflammatory statements in the Senate regarding Japan, the House of Representatives today considered a bill to raise the Army air force to a strength of 1,000 planes at a cost, spread over a period of five years, of $70,000,000.

"The first conflict between hostile forces will be in the air," asserted Chairman John J. McSwain of the Committee on Military Affairs in presenting the bill. "Probably," he continued, "this first collision will be decisive because whoever gets control of the air certainly will control everything underneath, whether it be on land or water. The British Navy made a gesture that she was going to stop the Italian transports going through the Suez Canal to Ethiopia, but when the Italian Government announced that there were 125 pilots who had dedicated their lives to diving upon battleships with 2,000 pounds of explosives, the Mediterranean fleet scattered."

The House is expected to pass tomorrow the record peacetime appropriation of $543,000,000 for the War Department, of which some $375,000,000 will be for military expenditures.

ADULTERY

By A. H. Zilmer

THE law of Moses said, "Thou shalt not commit adultery" (Ex. 20:14; Deut. 5:18). This did not define what adultery was, which shows that what constituted adultery was well understood. The English word is from the Latin ad, to, and alter, other. To adulterate is to make impure by the admixture of other or foreign substances. Adultery consists of the introduction of another, a strange party, between such as are married.

So grievous was this sin that under the Mosaic Law those guilty of it were stoned to death. "The man that committeth adultery with another man's wife, even he that committeth adultery with his neighbour's wife, the adulterer and the adulteress shall surely be put to death" (Lev. 20:10). In His conversation with the Pharisees Jesus so clearly defined one form of adultery as to leave no room for uncertainty. "And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away his wife, except it be for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery: and whoso marrieth her which is put away doth commit adultery" (Matt. 19:9).

Jesus said, "From the beginning it was not so" (v. 8). Not how? That a man might put away his wife, or put asunder that which God had joined together. It was not intended to be "so." This is further proof of the divine intention that the union of a man and a woman as husband and wife was to be under the divine supervision and regulation for the entire mortal existence of the human race upon the earth. It was this rule that made it not "lawful" to "put away his wife for every cause." The two, the marriage relation, and the divine law regulating it, were intended to be coexistent and coextensive.

The Pharisees called the attention of Jesus to the Mosaic provision regarding divorce, "Why did Moses then command to give a writing of divorcement, and to put her away?" (v. 7). This was intended to offset the negative answer Jesus had just given from the record of the creation, that in view of the divine intent of the marriage law established at the beginning it was not "lawful to put away the wife for every cause" (vv. 3-6). Then, lest there be any misunderstanding, Jesus defined adultery in a manner most clear and convincing. Why did men in Israel put away their wives "for every cause"? It was on account of "hardness of heart," callousness, a conscience seared over, and accustomed to unlawful practices. They who by their traditions made the Word of God of no effect (Matt. 15:6) would not scruple here; and so, because Moses on account of the hardness of their hearts had given permission to write a letter of divorcement, they eagerly seized this as an excuse, in fact, as justification, of a practice which was anything but "lawful" when placed side by side with the divine rule of marriage, and required just such treatment as it received at the hands of the Just One. It was the "hardness of your hearts," that is, of the nation of Israel, that arbitrarily put asunder what God had united, and sought justification for the loose views and wicked practices that were rife in Israel at that time.

CASES OF ADULTERY

1. We mention that of Herod Antipas, son of Herod the Great, an Idumean, who was Tetrarch of Galilee and Petrea, and who married his brother Philip's wife. The following facts stand out in the record:

(a) Herod had "married" his brother Philip's wife (Mark 6:17).

(b) He "had" her as his wife while she had another husband living (Matt. 14:3; Mark 6:18).

(c) John "reproved" Herod for this, and "for all the evils which Herod had done" (Luke 3:19).

(d) John said to Herod that it was "not lawful" for him to "have" his brother's wife (Matt. 14:4; Mark 6:18).

We would specially emphasize the two last items. When it is said that John "reproved" Herod for his adultery "and all the evils which he had done," the word for reprove in the Greek text is elegcho, which means to "convict." It is so given in John 8:9. To convict anyone is to prove him guilty, as of an offense or crime; to establish guilt. As a scion of an Idumean or Edomite family Herod was neither a Jew nor a Christian. Yet the courageous Baptistizer "convicted" him of that which was "not lawful." Not lawful means contrary to law. What "law" was being violated by the wicked king? (Please turn to Page Seven)

TRUE MARRIAGE

Marriage was ordained of God in Eden, and confirmed at the wedding in Cana of Galilee, by the gracious presence and miraculous blessing of Christ. It is to unite two hearts and lives, blending all their interests and sympathies and hopes. It involves mutual compromise, double forbearance, competition in concession, loving sufferance, unwavering confidence, and happiness that is found in making each other happy. Such a linking of destinies should not be effected unadvisedly or lightly; but reverently, discreetly, advisedly, soberly, and in the fear of God.

In contrast with all other earthly compacts, entered into for mutual protection, advancement of interests, or hope of gain, marriage is the sacred, unbreakable union of one man with one woman for the establishment of a home which shall endure through all the storms and vicissitudes of life. Whether, then, the oncoming flood of years, from out the unknown future, brings joy or sorrow, health or sickness, prosperity or adversity, sunshine or shadow, hopes fulfilled or dreams shattered, husband and wife are true to each other, finding in reciprocated love life's greatest treasure and God's supremest gift.

Is Hitler's Fall Near?

IN 1932 Germany was still free. There were three main political parties in existence. The Social Democrats were in power and on either side of them were the extremes, Communism to the left, and the Fascist group under Hitler to the right, with the name of National Socialists.

In the March issue of Revelation of that year, we wrote at length of the situation in Germany. We pointed out that anti-Semitism was a fact of prophecy and that some power would one day arise in Germany to carry out the program of Hitler. On this ground we stated our belief that Hitler, or some one with his ideas, would take control of Germany.

It should be pointed out that practically every newspaper and magazine published during the major part of 1932 stated that Hitler had spent his greatest effort and that he would never come to power. During all these months, we were able to say with a knowledge of the tendencies which the Word of God describes, "Germany is pledging herself to Hitler. There can be no doubt of the fact that he will be in power within a very brief time, unless death or some other unforeseen factor intervenes. . . ." (March, 1932). "Hitler has increased his following by many millions, polling almost twelve million votes. This gives him, already, one third of Germany's voting strength . . ." (April, 1932).

Shortly after these statements were made, we were in Berlin and showed these articles to the man who was the head of the Associated Press for Central Europe. He told us that our opinion was not shared by any competent observer of European affairs. Yet when we visited him a year later, he readily confessed that there had been a great upset and that the Nazis were now firmly in control. He had not anticipated the change, but thought that the Hitler forces were now so strongly in control that nothing would be able to dislodge them. Again we expressed disagreement and told him that the regime would endure for a comparatively short time. This time he was more interested and wanted to know the biblical basis for our observation. We stated of course that no one could be sure and that we were utterly opposed to any finality in the identification of current events with Bible prophecies. All we would do was to note tendencies toward situations that are clearly pictured in the Scriptures. The Bible, of course, does announce beyond question the union of the powers of the North. Germany is to be with Russia and under the leadership of this power. Therefore, we looked for the fall of Fascist power in Germany, to be replaced by Communism or even more possibly the adulteration of Communism to the point where it would no longer be true Communism, but a form of State Socialism and the union of the German State Socialism with it.

It is not often we offer a selection which advertises so thoroughly another magazine. This, however, this is an unusually authoritative study by one whose radio work and paper are remarkably free from the taint of yellow journalism.

Time has certainly diluted Soviet doctrine and the Russia of today is no more that of Lenin than the France of the Empire was that of the Terror. On the other hand, some of the best informed observers of German affairs accept without hesitation that Hitler is now nothing more than a facade behind which other forces move.

A few months ago, we flew up from the Balkans, crossing the green fields of southern Germany and landing at Templehof. In the first days before settling down to study we moved about the streets in the central part of the city, taking cognizance of the changes that had taken place in that great city since our last visit. At that time, we had written in Revelation, "Berlin, . . . as is befitting for the capital where the new forces are in fullest view, is flag draped and Hitler-conscious to the extreme. The revolution must have helped the photographers and painters, for there must be, on a conservative estimate, a million pictures of Adolf Hitler in Berlin alone. I counted forty different poses in one store window, thirty in another, and then stopped counting when I came to a store which sells nothing but photographs, oil-paintings, busts, statues, silhouettes, medallions, and whatnot of Hitler, and with scattered pictures of Goebbels and Goering and, here and there, a von Hindenburg. In this store there must have been two hundred poses of Hitler. The man must be followed by a corps of photographers. Hitler as General, Hitler as Chancellor, Hitler in high hat, Hitler with no hat, Hitler on horseback, Hitler on foot with troops, Hitler acclaimed by the crowds. Hitler on a vacation with towering mountains for background, Hitler patting the cheek of a peasant girl. In short, as one man remarked, 'there was a picture of Hitler in everything but pyjamas'" (Nov., 1933).

To our amazement, we saw practically no swastika flags on display last summer. We went down street after street without seeing any insignia of the Nazi party or any picture of Hitler where two years before there had been literally thousands of pictures of Der Fuehrer in every possible attitude. The change was almost as striking as that which a visitor to America would have noted between the days when the Blue Eagle first made its appearance and two years later.

On the other hand, we discovered an entirely new phenomenon. On all sides, jokes were whispered against the regime. "Noch ein witz" . . . "Here's another joke," was the phrase that greeted you at every dinner, at every conversation where those present knew to whom they were speaking. A sample or two will give a great insight into the German mentality of today.

A customer of long standing went into a German restaurant for his noonday meal. Being a great lover of fish, glancing at the menu, he saw varied delicacies offered, among them being the well known Bismarck herring. Somewhat cantankerous, he roared, "I insist upon a Hitler herring!" The waiter apologized but said there was no such dish. The customer of long standing got up to leave in a great huff.

The waiter hastily appeased him by saying he would get him the required dish but it would take a few minutes. After a few minutes of exasperating waiting, the herring appeared garnished magnificently upon a large platter.

"Is this a Hitler herring?"

"Yes, sir, indeed, sir."

"Where did you get it, my dear man?"

"Oh, sir, we just took one of our Bismarck herrings, removed the brains and the backbone, and pried its mouth open, and here you have a Hitler herring!"

After the laughter has subsided, some one else will say, "Did you hear this one?" Three men died and went to heaven, and were introduced to St. Peter. In each instance an angel asked the newcomer what his name was and introduced him. The first was Goebels. St. Peter rose and bowed in recognition. The second was Goering. Again St. Peter rose and bowed. The third was Hitler. St. Peter bowed, but kept his seat. "Why don't you get up?" whispered the angel. "I am sure he would try to get my seat," was the answer.

These are not isolated instances. A publishing house in Vienna has put out a book of several hundred pages of these jokes. The Government, of course, will not permit their printing or circulation in Germany and the mere telling of them would subject one to confinement in a concentration camp. A professor told me of an incident which had taken place a few weeks before. A vaudeville entertainer in a restaurant had begun his act by drawing caricatures on a large blackboard, keeping up a running fire of wit at the same time. He said to his audience, "I will now draw the portrait of a famous German whose name begins with 'G.'" Thereupon he drew a pair of coat lapels. Everyone laughed, thinking immediately of Goering's inordinate love of uniforms. At this point, the artist said, "O I see, you are all mistaken," and completed the portrait of Goethe, thereby drawing another laugh. The restaurant was closed and the manager and the artist were put in a concentration camp for this act.

Some may say, "But I have heard so many contradictory reports out of Germany." Some people have written that the articles in the foreign press are not true. What about this? Again a story is the best light on the truth. A family of Jews in Germany wrote to relatives abroad: "Dear Cousins: You must not believe anything you read in the foreign press about Germany. Everything is lies. Here all is wonderful. Everyone is working and there is plenty to eat. We have never been treated better than at the present time." Following the signature was a postscript. "Uncle Jacob held a view contrary to that which we have expressed in this letter. We are going to his funeral tomorrow."

Some one else will say, but what about the pictures of vast companies of men parading before Hitler? There have been pictures of great parade grounds and airdromes with as many as 400,000 manifestants present. We saw with our own eyes an order laid down from superiors to a man in a certain responsible position, ordering him to be present at a certain time and place with twenty-five men for a mass demonstration. When it is to be considered that the whole fabric of business is under Government control, such orders given to school teachers, public officials, banking officials, etc., can readily raise a demonstration of tens of thousands on very short notice. Thus the point of the following: "Have you heard that there were five hundred detectives in plain clothes at the manifestation movement at Templehof on May 1? I know why they were there. They were looking for some one who had come of his own free will." If you look into the laugh that goes up when such a joke is told, you would realize how far Hitler has slipped in his control over affairs in Germany, how far his personal prestige has gone. It is considered by many that Hitler and his aides are mere window dressing today for a militaristic group which has taken full control of the Government of Germany. A German emigre who has kept in contact with the homeland, gives great support to this idea in a recent article in Harper's Magazine under the title "The Reichswehr Over Europe."

(Here follow two paragraphs from the Harper's article, by Alfred Vagts, which cannot be reproduced owing to copyright restrictions. Mr. Vagts insists that the military clique in Germany is already in full power, that Goebbels and Hitler are merely fronts for the high authorities in the Army. Nazis, according to the blunt announcement of Major H. Foertsch, Chief of the Reichswehr's Press Department, will be allowed to make no interference with the Army's control of economic, psychological, and technical mobilization of the Nation, and will be tolerated only if they "restrict themselves to the tasks assigned them."—Editor.)

Recent articles in The New York Times Magazine also point to this same fact in a startling way. Headlines such as the following could not have appeared before this year: "Party and Army Vie in the Nazi State" is one headline, while a subhead says, "Under Surface Unanimity Is Sharp Struggle Between These Potent Forces in the Hitler Regime." In still another issue of the paper we read, "Schacht Challenges the Nazi Hot-Heads: the Reichsbank President Speaks With the Authority of a Man Who Has Molded Economic Policy in Germany." Perhaps the break will not come until one item of the Nazi propaganda has been fulfilled. Hitler has always envisioned a greater Germany with racial unification of all German tribes in Central Europe and allegiance to it of all Germans everywhere. We must not forget that Ezekiel tells us that the chief ally of Russia in the last days will be Gomer, whose son was Ashkenaz (Gen. 10:3) followed by "all his bands" (Ezek. 38:6). We do not know in just (Please turn to Page Ten)

RUTH

SINCE childhood the book of Ruth has been particularly interesting, and although I have read it and re-read it many times, this short pastoral narrative told in the most simple language never grows old. It brings to us the misfortunes of an obscure family belonging to a village which was one of "the least among the thousands of Judah." We read how they were driven away from home by the stress of famine, and thought to better themselves in the land of Moab. But calamity after calamity befell them until there were but three widows left. These widows had no children, and in those days it was a disgrace to have no children, so these three were left in a hopeless condition. But in that state of utter hopelessness we see God's hand intervening in mercy, although in a hidden way, in a renewed existence of this virtually extinct family of Elimelech through which the Christ was to come. All these things were written for our learning, so let us dig for the hidden treasures in this book, for they are worthy of our consideration.

In studying the preceding book of Judges we learn that there was no king in Israel at that time, and every man did that which seemed right in his own eyes. Perhaps this was the purest state of democracy this old earth has ever experienced, but we also see that man was not able to direct his ways, and soon went into idolatry. But happily there is one family spoken of that still feared God, and it is a pleasure to see the blessings that followed this abiding faith in Israel's God.

As the story of Ruth, the stranger, is unfolded we see the plan of redemption illustrated in a manner and fullness not found elsewhere in the Bible.

There is no anticlimax in this book of Ruth. God was taking an important step in the accomplishment of His eternal purpose. He was using this family, two of whom were Gentiles and widows, to build up a line through whom should come the Redeemer Himself. The name Elimelech means "God is my king." Thus this man and family had God for their king in spite of the idolatry all around them. The name Ruth means satisfied, and we shall see that she was finally entirely satisfied as we study on. She not only found grace under the Lord God of Israel, but the honor which all mothers in Israel coveted, namely, the honor of being one of the mothers of the Christ. There is no more honorable position than that to which she was exalted in her marriage with Boaz. In the 1st chapter of Matthew we find the generations of Christ, and find that Boaz begat Obed of Ruth, and Obed begat Jesse, and Jesse begat David the king, and through this line we follow down to Christ. Perhaps this is the first place in the Bible where the Gentiles are spoken of as included in the plan of salvation. Ruth and Orpah were Moabites who married Naomi's sons while in the land of Moab.

During the ten years that this family were in Moab all three husbands died, that is, the husbands of Naomi, Ruth, and Orpah. And thus in a strange land they were left without posterity, and the family was faced with extinction. But Naomi heard that crops were again being reaped in her native country and she longed to return to the land of Israel. In planning her return she told her daughters-in-law that they could return to their mother's house, and the narrative says that Orpah kissed her mother-in-law and returned, but not so with Ruth, for she clave unto her. Ruth's purpose and character are shown in a quiet dignity that is hard to match even in the Bible. She declares her entire abandonment of her former people and their gods.

"And Ruth said, Intreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee: for whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge: thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God. Where thou diest, will I die, and there will I be buried: the Lord do so to me, and more also, if ought but death part thee and me."

What nobility of character is evinced by this statement! It is impossible not to admire this Moabitish woman as she renounced all her people and foreign gods and became a servant of the God of Israel. Orpah left her mother-in-law and went back to her people and their gods, and we hear nothing more of her after this. Is this not a good lesson for us? When we leave God it is the end with us, but when we renounce all our old life and accept Christ we are eternally in His sight and partaking of His grace. What must have been the life of this woman Naomi that this stranger was willing to give up all and follow her and her God! Can you and I say we have lived up to our responsibilities to that extent that others are willing to give up their former life and follow the one we are representing? Does not this show what precept does?

"Thy God shall be my God." There was something in the manner of life of this woman of God that so impressed her heathen daughter-in-law that she was willing, upon her example, to accept Naomi's people and God. This example should not be lost to us.

"Where thou diest, will I die." Ruth was making a lifelong choice. She did not make a trial only. In that spirit we should come to Christ. "No man having put his hand to the plow and looking back is fit for the kingdom of God."

"And there will I be buried." Ruth's consecration did not end even at death: she wished to be buried with the people of Israel. She had undoubtedly learned from Naomi of the resurrection in which she wished a part—she looked beyond death. I doubt if even Christ could have endured the cross had it not been for looking at the glory beyond. What a stimulus in our lives the fact should be that eventually, when the last great miracle is performed on this mortal body, the resurrection to immortality, we may say, "O death, where is thy sting; O grave, where is thy victory?"

It seems in this story that Boaz is introduced as a figure or shadow of Christ. In the Israelitish law a near kinsman must redeem the property of a relative. In going back to the land of Judah, the property left when they went to the land of Moab was in another's hands, and was to be redeemed, and this was calling for a near kinsman. Boaz was a near kinsman, and Ruth gleaned in his field, and was taken.

It was the law in the Word of God, of which it is said, "The word of God came unto John the son of Zacharias in the wilderness." As the result of this John "came into all the country round about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins" (Luke 3:2, 3). This is the "word of God" which "came unto John" which he faithfully preached to all who came within reach. Large crowds came to hear him. The record says that "the people" asked of John, "What shall we do then?" (v. 10). At verse 12 the publicans asked what they must do. At verse 14 the soldiers (Roman mercenaries who were on garrison duty in Palestine) asked what they must do. To each class was given its proper command what they must "do." In every case the people were required to "confess their sins" (Matt. 3:6; Mark 1:5). At the end of this record (Luke 3:18) it is said of John, "And many other things in his exhortation preached he unto the people." To exhort is to admonish to do the neglected good, or to desist from the forbidden evil. This throws further light upon the character of the Baptist's preaching.

Who else came to John? Herod, Tetrarch of Galilee (Luke 3:1), a representative of the Roman Government. Must he also be told what to "do"? Whether or not he asked the Baptist what he must do, he was told by the courageous preacher of the "baptism of repentance for the remission of sins" that it was "not lawful" for him to "have" his brother's wife. Thus was the wicked Herod "convicted" of the violation of the "law" established at the beginning which provided that during the existence of mortal man upon the earth one man shall have one living wife, and one wife one living husband; and that to do otherwise is "not lawful." To "marry" her was to enter into a relationship which was adultery, and therefore "not lawful"; and to "have" her was to continue such unlawful relationship. Each day of his life with his brother's wife was to aggravate this unlawful condition.

There was but one way in which Herod could get right before the divine law, and that was to cease to "have" the wife of another man. On the part of Herod it was necessary to "confess" this unlawful act, put away his illegitimate wife, repent of this and "all the evils he had done," and, like all the sinners who came to John, be "baptized with the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." Instead of this he "added yet this above all, that he shut up John in prison" (Luke 3:20); and later, at the instigation of Herodias, the wife he had stolen from his brother, he caused John to be put to death (Mark 6:22-28).

Reverting to the interview between Jesus and the Pharisees, let us consider another matter of importance, viz., the circumstances surrounding that interview. It occurred in the "coasts of Judæa beyond Jordan" (Matt. 19:1). Beyond Jordan was Perea, which was within Herod's jurisdiction. The Pharisees, knowing that John's protest against the unlawful marriage of the King had cost John his life, interrogated Jesus in order to "tempt" Him (v. 2). They hoped to force Jesus to commit Himself one way or the other upon the question of divorce and remarriage. "If Jesus countenanced Herod's act, this could easily be used against Him. If He condemned it, this could be used to inflame the Herodians, if not Herod himself." But Jesus proved Himself equal to the occasion, as He showed by His appeal to the law which had been enacted at the beginning. At the same time He condemned the adulterous tendency which had gained such headway among the Jews. This put the hard-hearted Jews in the same class with the adulterous alien king, and "convicted" them of the same unlawful deeds whose condemnation had cost John the Baptist his life.

2. The woman at Samaria. Jesus had considerable conversation with this woman about water, the water of life, etc., after which the story goes on: "Jesus saith unto her, Go, call thy husband, and come hither. The woman answered and said, I have no husband. Jesus said unto her, Thou hast well said, I have no husband: for thou hast had five husbands; and he whom thou now hast is not thy husband: in that saidst thou truly" (John 4:16-18).

We may not be sure from the words of Jesus alone whether the five husbands referred to had been lawful husbands, and died one after the other, or whether the woman had lived with them contrary to the divine rule; but we do know that her relation with her sixth husband was out of keeping with the divine law. She was living with a man to whom she had not been lawfully married, which was adultery. Why did Jesus create such an embarrassing situation for this woman belonging to a mixed people with whom the Jews had no dealings? (See v. 9.) It was to bring home to her the fact that her manner of life was grossly at variance with the divine rule pertaining to marriage. Evidently the woman's conscience was awakened by the suggestion to call her husband, for when she called the men of the city she said, "Come, see a man which told me all things that ever I did: is not this the Christ?" (v. 29). The words, "all things that ever I did," suggest that her relation with her present husband was not the only illicit "thing" that was against her, and it seems a fair inference that hers had been a life of shame, of living according to the lusts of the flesh, and not according to the divine rule. The manner of Jesus in dealing with this case was not severe or harsh. It was tactful but firm; gentle but well calculated to rouse to action the slumbering conscience, and rekindle the smoldering moral sentiment that had been buried deep beneath the indulgence of the flesh. Jesus said no more than was necessary; nor did He say less.

3. Felix. This man was the Roman Procurator in Palestine in the days of the Apostle Paul. His troubles, too, included those of the marital kind. He was married three times, his last marriage being with Drusilla, a Jewess, who was the wife of Azizus, King of Emessa. Josephus tells how Felix employed one Simon, a magician, to use his arts to persuade Drusilla to forsake her husband and marry Felix, promising that if she did this he would make her a happy woman. Drusilla consented to the unlawful union (Josephus, Antiquities, Book 20:7, 2).

It is related in Acts 24:24 that when Felix and his wife Drusilla came to Jerusalem, the Governor "sent for Paul, and heard him concerning the faith in Christ." It is impossible to say of what length Paul's discourse was, or to enumerate all the elements it contained, but whatever the prisoner-apostle said before Felix had to do with "the faith in Christ." We know from verse 25 that the discourse was of the "reasoning" kind. The historian mentioned three points or items in this discourse which were of special interest and importance. These were "righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come." From the effect produced upon Felix we can easily see the Apostle's line of reasoning. We know from reliable history that neither in his public nor in his private life was Felix given to the practice of righteousness. Many crimes were laid to his charge by those acquainted with his life, besides his adulterous marriage to Drusilla. He had most miserably failed in this particular, which was not unknown to the Apostle Paul, whose travels brought him into contact with many people, and gave him an insight into the lives of public men as well as private individuals. Knowing the shortcomings of Felix in relation to righteousness, or right-doing, there could be no theme more appropriate to the occasion than that chosen by the speaker, viz., righteousness, together with its companion topic, that of "temperance," or self-control. Righteousness was far removed from the adulterous marriage Felix had consummated, and the unrighteous life he was living. Felix had become enamored of the beautiful Drusilla, and instead of exercising the virtue of temperance (Greek, egkrateias, self-control, or self-mastery), he gave way to his wild passion for a bewitching woman, who was the wife of another man, and rested not until he secured her for himself, thus trampling into the mire of an adulterous life all regard for the divine rule of right.

THE JUDGMENT TO COME

There was another element that entered with the distressing directness and persistency into the reasoning of the courageous prisoner, viz., the "judgment to come." Of what possible interest, or even concern, was the judgment to come to this alien Gentile? Whether he was interested or not, or whether he cared or was unconcerned, the judgment to come was an essential part of "the faith in Christ." And Paul, who never shunned to declare all that entered into the counsel of God, boldly stated his proposition, and carefully reasoned about that in which the gay and self-indulging Governor had been so openly remiss, and its relation to the judgment to come. It was this that gave point and piquancy to the Apostle's words, and struck deep into the slumbering conscience of the wicked ruler.

Where the Authorized Version says that "Felix trembled" at the reasoning of Paul, the Greek text says, emphobos genomenos, that he "became affrighted." Why tremble? Why become affrighted? Because in alienating the affections of the wife of another man, and marrying her, he not only put asunder that which had been joined together in lawful wedlock, but was living in a state of open adultery, in direct violation of the rule of right enacted by the Creator at the beginning. No lawful excuse could be offered, no mitigation of the sin could be found, and Felix, and with him Drusilla, the perfidious wife of another man, stood convicted of an atrocious breach of the divine law which made it unlawful for one man to have the wife of another man who was living.

The fact that the Apostle's preaching produced such an effect upon Felix shows that the latter felt that the "judgment to come" was a matter which concerned him directly and personally.

As regards the judgment to come, this was an essential feature of the apostolic preaching to those without, including Felix. Peter preached the judgment at the house of the alien Gentile Cornelius, and said the apostles had been "commanded" to preach it (Acts 10:42). The Apostle Paul preached it to the alien Greeks at Athens, and in view of its certainty called upon his hearers to "repent," and seek the living God (Acts 17:31). In Hebrews 6:1, 2 the judgment is placed by the voice of inspiration among the "principles of the doctrine of Christ." It enters constitutively into the gospel teaching that "whoremongers and adulterers God will judge" (Heb. 13:4). This applies not only to those within, but also to such as are without (1 Cor. 5:13). It was teaching such as this that caused Felix to tremble.

4. We have the teaching of the Apostle Paul in - Corinthians 6:9-11. We transcribe the passage entire: "Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Be not deceived: neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God. And such were some of you: but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God." Those Corinthians were for the greater part of Gentile birth (chap. 12:2). Many of them had been addicted to the practices mentioned by the Apostle. They had been "such"; but something had taken place that had entirely changed their status. They had been "washed." To wash in the ordinary sense is to cleanse by the application of a liquid, especially water. Of what had they been washed? In this instance it meant to cleanse from sin, especially from the fornication, idolatry, adultery, effeminity, etc., they had previously practiced when they were alien Gentiles. Why wash? Because these things are defiling in their effect (Matt. 15:19), and require to be washed or cleansed. They are a blot upon the character, a stain on the reputation, and are in violation of the divine law. Besides this they cause a blot upon the conscience. "How much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?" (Heb. 9:14). It is "old sins" that are "purged" from the individual (2 Peter 1:9); "sins that are past" that are forgiven (Rom. 3:23-25); "trespasses and sins" dating from "time past" that are remitted (Eph. 1:7; 2:1-3; 4:32; Col. 1:14; 2:12, 13). "These are the things that defile a man" (Matt. 15:18-20). And it is "because of these things that the wrath of God cometh on the children of disobedience" (Eph. 5:6; Col. 3:5-7).

When those Corinthian Gentiles were "washed" from their adultery and other forms of uncleanness, what was done? If they were living in adultery by having another's husband or wife, thus doing that which John the Baptist pronounced "not lawful," and Jesus and Paul most severely condemned, did they continue in the illicit relation they had previously entered? And was it yet true that they were "washed, sanctified (separated, or set apart), and justified" so long as they continued in their adulterous relationship? Is it possible to bring adultery, contracted before conversion, into "the name of the Lord Jesus," and yet be clean? It is an incontrovertible fact that it was not only "not lawful" for the alien King Herod to "marry" his brother's wife, but also to "have" her. So long then as he "had" her, he was living in adultery. Likewise if the Corinthians practiced adultery by having unlawful marriages they could not be considered as having been "washed" until they relinquished the adulterous relationships they had previously entered contrary to the divine law enacted at the beginning.

At the time of the apostles Corinth was famous for her wealth, luxury, extravagance, and licentiousness. Outside the city the proverb was current, "I would not advise every man to visit Corinth." When Paul began his missionary activities in that city, he preached "first of all how that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures" (1 Cor. 15:1-3). According to the Apostle's statement this entered as an essential element into "the gospel." Why deal "first of all" with "our sins"? Because the moral condition at Corinth required the cleansing of the lives of its inhabitants. The list of things enumerated by the Apostle in 1 Corinthians 6:9, 10 clearly shows that the city was reeking with moral filth, and contemporary history confirms and justifies the description. Therefore "our sins," or transgressions of the divine law, "first of all." The Corinthians were among the "all men every where" whom God by the gospel "commandeth to repent" (Acts 17:30). When they did repent, this was from their "dead works" (Heb. 6:1), and its tendency was "unto life" (Acts 11:18). Here, as elsewhere, the Apostle showed "that they should repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance" (Acts 26:20). This resulted in the rectification of the practices of those who responded to the gospel command, the washing away of their sins, their sanctification, or setting apart from wicked works, and their justification from their offenses. We may be sure the apostles introduced nothing that was superfluous into their preaching to those without.

But there was a characteristic fitness about their efforts, whether in public or from house to house; and in every instance where there was outstanding wickedness, this condition received such attention as its nature demanded.

BEST SERMONS OF 1935

concerning himself."

In preaching the gospel, good news, glad tidings of the coming kingdom of God, the prophecies relating to the King and His preliminary work have an important place. When certain followers thought the kingdom of God should immediately appear He spoke a parable about the nobleman going into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom and to return and give rewards to his servants. He told Nicodemus, that conscientious member of the Jewish Sanhedrin, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God." When Pilate asked, "Art thou the King of the Jews?" (John 18:33), His reply was, "My kingdom is not of this age . . . Thou sayest that I am a king. To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world." Many other instances might be cited showing that the burden of all His teaching was the good news of the coming kingdom of God and the things concerning Himself.

Having paid the awful penalty for the sins of the world, He was raised to the power of an endless life, to die no more, being seen of the apostles for forty days and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God (Acts 1:3), until the day in which He was taken up into heaven, after which the apostles took up the kingdom message as they had been commanded and instructed (Luke 24:48, 49; Acts 1:8). That first sermon (Acts 2), on the day of Pentecost, proved that the promised seed of David had come, been approved of God, fulfilled His mission as prophet, been rejected by the Jews, condemned, crucified, as the prophets had foretold, but risen again from the dead and ascended to the right hand of God to be priest, advocate, mediator, until the times of refreshing (Acts 3:19), the regeneration (Matt. 19:28), the times of restitution (Acts 3:21), when God shall send Him to sit upon the throne of David as foretold by prophets and angels since the world began.

The apostles, being given the Comforter, the power from on high, zealously proclaimed the kingdom message wherever they went. Philip, one of the first deacons of the organized church, preached the gospel to the Samaritans. "But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women" (Acts 8:12). The household of Cornelius heard the kingdom message and believed and were baptized (Acts 10). And many of the Corinthians, hearing, believed and were baptized (Acts 18:8). When Paul arrived in Rome many came to him, to whom he expounded and testified "the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets, from morning till evening" (Acts 28:23). "And Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came in unto him, preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him" (Acts 28:30, 31).

This same apostle in his first letter to the Corinthian church (15:1-4) refers to the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ as the gospel. Without that great sacrifice there could be no kingdom, no King, no joint-heirs to suffer and reign with Him. Sin and death would continue to reign, and God's kingdom could not come and His will could not be done in earth as in heaven; and so we see why the Apostle makes that great event the heart of the gospel message.

In another Epistle of the Apostle Paul (Gal. 3:8) he tells us that the gospel was preached unto Abraham, "saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed," explaining further that Christ was the promised seed through whom God is now visiting the Gentiles to take out a people to be joint-heirs with Christ (Rom. 8:17), the seed of Abraham, through whom God will eventually bless all nations of the earth, when the kingdom of God shall have come and that age of peace and righteousness has been ushered in.

Again we read in Hebrews 4:2, "For unto us was the gospel preached, as well as unto them: but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it." The prophets looked down the stream of time by inspiration and foresaw all that would come to pass in the future ages; they saw the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow (1 Peter 1:11). Yes, every phase of the wonderful plan of redemption was revealed through the prophets, but few obtained faith and therefore were not profited thereby.

When God said to Moses (Num. 14:21), "But as truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord," He was pointing to the future kingdom. When the Passover lamb was slain, it pointed to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world (Ex. 12). When Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness (Num. 21:9), it pointed to the Son of God who was made sin for us (2 Cor. 5:21). When Solomon assembled the stones of his temple made ready before they were brought thither so that they went together without sound of hammer or ax (1 Kings 6:7), the assembling of the house of God which is the church of the living God was foreshadowed. When God speaking through the Psalmist said, "Yet have I set my king upon my holy hill of Zion" (Psalm 2:6), and "he shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth" (Psalm 72:8), the kingdom message was being proclaimed.

The prophets foresaw and foretold the virgin conception and birth, the attempt of the rulers to destroy the young King, the flight into Egypt, His life, His ministry, His rejection, His suffering, His resurrection, His mediatorship after the order of Melchizedek, and His return as the righteous Branch of David to reign and prosper and execute judgment and justice in the earth (Jer. 23:5). They said, "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, . . . to order it, and to establish it . . . for ever" (Isa. 9:7). In fact, the Old Testament prophecies containing the gospel message are innumerable. Is there, then, any excuse for men being ignorant concerning the gospel message that gives salvation? None whatever, if they take God's Word instead of man's.

Dear ones who have been following a perverted gospel, search the Scriptures daily whether these things be true, for the Apostle's reason for pronouncing a curse upon those who preach a perverted gospel is that it cannot give life.

IS HITLER'S FALL NEAR?

what order the cards will be played, but we do know who will hold the tricks at the end of the game. Whether the Germanic tribes will unite before the union with Russia or afterward remains to be seen.

Recently, we have seen the Nazi regime publicly rebuked by a leader so prominent that no one would dare speak out against him. Schacht, the commander in chief of Germany's economic forces, has been called Fuehrer No. 2. The New York Times says that he "has startled the world with his strong attack on those national forces which are guilty" of excesses. The banker's statement was so strong that the Nazi censors took out the harshest phrases, but Schacht had his statement run off in pamphlet form in the presses of the Reichsbank and distributed in Germany.

With Von Blomberg in charge of the Army in authority even over Goering and Goebbels and with Schacht absolute dictator of Germany's economic structure, Hitler is now little more than a bridge over which opposing forces can still travel.

All this has had an important bearing on the religious situation. Not many days ago, the papers carried the headlines, "Hitler Repudiates Reich Neo-Pagans, Backs Christianity." The sub-headlines were very significant; "Fuehrer to Lead the Party Along Path of a Positive Faith" and then again, "Move Urged by Schacht." German churchmen were led to believe that on orders of Hitler, twilight has set in for the Wagnerian Guards, recognized neo-pagans of the Nazi Reich. The leaders of this pagan movement were reported to have been constrained in no uncertain terms.

We who read the Word of God know in what direction all these events are moving. Waves may advance and recede, but the tide has set in. Some one will take hold of the German movement at one of its many points of weakness and will lead it either by strong paths or by weak, on into the arms of Russia. The future of that land lies not with the nations of the West, the nations of the Old Roman Empire, but with the Great Northern Confederacy.—Donald Grey Barnstone in Revelation.

Forgiveness of Sins

* * * *

By Esther Seoline

Forgiveness means pardon, or remission. Pardon means forgiveness, or an official remission of a penalty. Let us see what pardon will do for a criminal. The criminal has committed a crime and the government has placed two penalties on him, which are imprisonment for a time and death. The date of his execution has also been fixed.

The governor for some reason wishes to lift this penalty; he tells the criminal about it, that he is to be set free at some future date instead of being executed. Looking ahead to this time causes the criminal to rejoice, and after it has become a fact he is a very happy man.

Just as the criminal has been pardoned by the governor, so will we be forgiven by God. We are under two penalties for sin: suffering and death. These penalties are upon the whole human race. There is also an appointed time when we shall be free. We now rejoice by faith in the gospel or written word of God, which promises a time when we shall be resurrected to a life free from the penalties of sin.

In baptism we have a symbol of death and resurrection, resurrection to a condition free from suffering and death. Thus, baptism is a figure of forgiveness of sin.

The nation of Israel was under two penalties for its wickedness in idolatry and disobedience to God. It suffered the persecution of the sword, famine, and pestilence, and God separated it from Him by driving it into all nations of the earth. God will pardon the nation of Israel when He takes it back with a gracious return and restoration. This will be done under the figure of remarriage of Israel to God. Jeremiah 31:31-34: "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah: not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt: which my covenant they brake, although I was an husband unto them, saith the Lord: but this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more." Jeremiah 32:42: "For thus saith the Lord; Like as I have brought all this great evil upon this people, so will I bring upon them all the good that I have promised them."

The time of pardon for the criminal is the date set in writing by the governor.

For the sinner the time of pardon is indicated by Acts 3:19: "Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord."

For the nation of Israel this is the time of pardon: "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will perform that good thing which I have promised unto the house of Israel and to the house of Judah. In those days, and at that time, will I cause the Branch of righteousness to grow up unto David; and he shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land. In those days shall Judah be saved, and Jerusalem shall dwell safely: and this is the name wherewith she shall be called, The Lord our righteousness" (Jeremiah 33:14-16).

Testimony

The old-fashioned testimonial meeting is on its way out, and with no noticeable regrets on the part of most. It served its purpose—perhaps—and it passed its day; and now new things have come to replace it.

Jesus, it would seem, was in no great favor of testimonies. In fact, it was on the basis of their testimony that He hurled the bitter accusations of "whited sepulchres" and "hypocrites" at the Pharisees. They had become so enamored of testimonial meetings that their religion had turned into boasting and nothing else.

True Christianity does not require boasting to bolster it up. James, for example, declared on quite a number of occasions that works were the indication of faith, not words. The average testimonial meeting, on the other hand, usually is an extended effort to see which one of those present can produce the strongest verbal evidence of his deathless sincerity.

We have seen church workers of eminent standing in their home localities grossly insulted as visitors to other churches merely because they refused to talk publicly of their personal experiences with religion. We have seen regular church services held in abeyance for an hour while some self-made master of ceremonies harangued the audience with vicious language in an effort to get every member of it to tell the world how good a Christian he was. And we have been pretty much disgusted.

All the amens and hallelujahs in the dictionary could never make a Christian. Neither could standing up in church and retailing all the things that one has done and has had done to him as a result of Christianity. True religious conviction is too deeply seated to be described; real depths of feeling cannot, should not, be bared to the public eye.

PREPARED BY MARY A. GESIN

“Which now of these three, thinkest thou, was neighbour unto him that fell among the thieves? And he said, He that shewed mercy on him. Then said Jesus unto him, Go, and do thou likewise.”

WHAT SORT OF NEIGHBOR AM I?

AS WE study this lesson together, boys and girls, I want you to get a large piece of paper (wrapping paper will do) and a pencil. We are going to draw some pictures. Don't say you can't draw people and horses. Use just straight lines if you like.

First at the top left-hand corner we will draw some housetops, representing the city of Jerusalem. Then draw a road leading down to the right-hand corner of the paper, where Jericho is supposed to be.

We will draw seven pictures along the road, so your paper must be large. First, we draw a man walking along the road just a little way from Jerusalem. Two men dart out from behind some large rocks and wound the man, steal everything he has, and leave him dying in the road. Have you drawn that? Too hard, you say? Oh, no, try real hard! Just a few lines for the men bending over the traveler, striking him, and then running away.

Our next picture shows the man lying by the roadside and a man in flowing robes walking by and not doing a thing to help him. This is supposed to be a priest, one who ought to have helped him if anyone ought.

Next draw the wounded man again and another man, dressed not quite so grandly, doing just like the priest. This is the Levite, a helper of the priest. And he doesn't help at all, and he should have!

Now draw the poor man again, and then draw another man, riding on a horse, coming near to him. He stops, gets off his horse, and stoops down to see what is the matter. Have you drawn that? Fine! That's the Samaritan.

Now draw the Samaritan walking along beside the horse and the wounded man lying across the horse. They travel very slowly, of course, so as not to jar the one who is hurt.

Down near the corner draw an inn or a hotel. Draw the Samaritan carrying the wounded man into the inn, with the innkeeper standing by watching them.

Now draw the Samaritan giving some money to the innkeeper. We have a regular series of moving pictures made, haven't we? And you won't forget that story, I'm sure. I saw the little tots' class at Bible school at Oregon (Ill.) act out this picture last August. I'm sure not one who took part in that little play will forget the story, either.

In all of Jesus' stories, of course you know, He was teaching a lesson to those who listened. In this one, a lawyer, who was supposed to be very smart, had asked Jesus what he must do to have eternal life.

Jesus told him he must love the Lord God with all his heart, and with all his soul, and with all his strength, and with all his mind, and his neighbor as himself.

The lawyer, who thought he was just about as good as he could be, wanted to know who his neighbor was. Then Jesus told him the story you have drawn.

Now the men in the story had never seen this poor, wounded man before, so we know he didn't live next door to any of them. That isn't what a neighbor is, then, is it? No, a neighbor must be anybody that needs our help in any way. Is that right?

Now those of you who will send me your pictures of this lesson I will have your names put on this Page.

In another place we read this rule that Jesus gave, something like this: "Do unto others as you would that they should do to you." And that is loving your neighbor, surely!

Some one else has put it this way: "Do unto others as though you were the others." Pretty good, eh? You wouldn't wonder just how you ought to treat your neighbor if you put yourself in his place. You'd think how you would like to be treated, and you would treat him so.

“Even a little child may help
In the Savior's work;
And we are so glad to do our part,
We'll never want to shirk.

“Oh, there is much that we may do,
Though we are frail and small,
A deed so kind, a cheerful word,
A happy smile for all.

“Though we may do no mighty work,
Surely Jesus knows
That little deeds by little hands
A heart that's loving shows.

“Little deeds, loving deeds,
Smallest hands may do;
All our deeds are loving deeds,
If our hearts are true.”

JESUS TEACHES NEIGHBORLINESS

Luke 10

GOLDEN TEXT

"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbour as thyself."—Luke 10:27.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS

Topic: Whose Neighbor Am I?

I. A Lawyer Questions Jesus. (Vv. 25-28.) It is apparent that the lawyer's purpose in questioning Jesus was not for the sake of obtaining information but that He might get Jesus "in a corner," and lead Him to make a statement that would react against Him in the minds of the multitudes who followed Him. The lawyer's ignominious failure is indicated in what followed.

Even more important, however, than the man's disingenuousness was the implication of his first question and that of Jesus' answer to it. "What shall I do to inherit eternal life?" The lawyer, together with all students of the Hebrew Scriptures of that period, realized that he was not immortal by nature and that if he were ever to obtain eternal life it must come to him as an inheritance from God who alone possesses it now (1 Tim. 6:15, 16). 1 Pet. 1:3-5; 2 Pet. 1:2-4.

II. Jesus Describes Neighborliness. (Vv. 29-35.) Having failed to entangle Jesus with his first question, the lawyer tried again, but instead of embarrassing the Master he entangled himself beyond the possibility of extrication. In the story of the Good Samaritan, Jesus widened the scope of neighborly responsibility to include anyone who is in need, regardless of his race, character, or condition in life. No question of the suffering man's worthiness or unworthiness entered into the Lord's mind. It was only the man's obvious need for help. In this breadth of sympathy and of helpfulness our Lord expressed the thought He emphasized so strongly in the Sermon on the Mount when He said, "Love your enemies, . . . do good to them that hate you . . . that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven."—Matt. 5:43-45.

III. Whose Neighbor Am I? (Vv. 36, 37.) Jesus reversed the lawyer's question, and asked not, Who is my neighbor, but, Whose neighbor am I? And that is the question that concerns us the most. Where does our responsibility begin and where does it end? Is it possible for a child of God to limit his responsibility as a neighbor by any local, racial, or national bounds? It would not seem so from Jesus' answer to the lawyer's question. The Christian's love, like God's love and like Christ's love, is "as wide as the earth and as deep as the sea."

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS

In Romans 13 Paul briefly sums up all the law in the one short statement, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." He explains it thus: "Love worketh no ill to his neighbour: therefore love is the fulfilling of the law." But Jesus in His story of the good Samaritan goes farther. He adds the spirit to the law, which rounds out the Christian life.

In the story as related by the Master, the priest and the Levite who passed by the victim of robbers did him no actual ill. The first turned aside and gave the injured man a wide berth. The Levite stopped to look him over, possibly said, "Too bad," but failed to give the needed aid. But the Samaritan did the needful thing. He saw, he loved, he worked. His deed was undoubtedly the outgrowth of the spirit of love as there was nothing in the law that suggested a Samaritan helping a Jew. It was the spontaneous act of kindness that Jesus was accenting.

The Christian life is a doing life, a busy life, a life of loving activity. Too often we stress the "don'ts" of life, or simply fail to do anything. The housewife is too busy preparing for the family reunion to lend a sympathetic ear to the distresses of the lonely widow next door. The business man is so anxious to have a healthy profit that he overworks one helper when two are needed. The bookkeeper is so impressed with the thought that she is being treated unfairly, that she refuses to give her employer the few extra hours of work that would bring him "out of the red." The young man is so obsessed with the idea of pleasing his sweetheart that he neglects his work. His sister wishes to look well at the party, and so fails to notice the collection plate for several Sundays. The older people in the church usually have a series of "don'ts" in their religion which have been developed from experience and thought, but very often these are not offset by the everyday uncomplaining deeds of kindness when opportunity appears. The priest and the Levite were of this class. Their law told them that "love worketh no ill," but the spirit did not impel them to "do unto others."—G. M. M.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS

How to Be a Good Neighbor

In this parable, as in all of Jesus' Preaching and Showing, He was proclaiming the kingdom of God. Can you see how? Turn in your Bibles to Psalm 72:4, 12, 13, 14. Here David is speaking, by inspiration of God, concerning the time still in the future when God's kingdom shall be established on earth. Will there be any violence there? evil of any sort? Find references in Isaiah, also Habakkuk 2:14. Can you imagine any better place to live than that described in Revelation 21:1-4, 24-26; 22:1-5? Such conditions will prevail when God's kingdom shall extend over the whole earth with Christ, our risen Lord, as King of kings and Lord of lords.

But because all this is still in the future, awaiting our Lord's coming, does not excuse us from living as nearly as Jesus taught us to live now. He said that if we love God with all our hearts and our neighbors as ourselves, we will be keeping His commandments. Discuss in class the difference in the power of law and power of love. How does the latter cover every situation as Jesus said? Why is it the greater force? Name several instances where Jesus displayed the power of love. Notice He never told others to do what He was unwilling to do Himself. We can best display good neighborliness by forgiving those who harm us in any way. Indeed, we cannot expect our own sins to be forgiven unless we do.

"Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."—M. G.

JUNIOR CLASS

Topic: Showing Our Love for Others. Text: Luke 10:30-37. Memory Verse: "Thou shalt love . . . thy neighbour as thyself."—Luke 10:27.

Lesson Story. One of the most beautiful stories ever told by Jesus is the one in our lesson today. Jesus had been asked this question, "Who is my neighbor?" To answer this question Jesus told this story.

Once upon a time a man was traveling from Jerusalem to Jericho. Some thieves caught him, stripped off his clothes, wounded him, and left the poor man half dead beside the road.

As the poor fellow lay there a priest came by. Did he stop to help him? Oh, no; when he saw him, he walked by on the other side of the road.

Then a Levite passed by. When he saw him, he, too, walked on the other side of the road.

Last of all came a Samaritan riding on a donkey. When he saw the suffering man, he immediately got down from his donkey and ran to the man. He bound up the man's wounds. Then He placed him on his donkey, took him to the inn, and cared for him. When he left the next day he said to the innkeeper, "Here are two pence; take good care of the man, and if it costs more, I will pay you when I return."

Jesus asked, "Now which one was this man's neighbor?" I will let you answer.

Memory Verse. There are two very direct commandments in the New Testament found in Luke 10:27. Our memory verse is one of them. What is it?

Notebook. Draw the four pictures described in this lesson. Draw rocks beside the road in each picture. Below each picture write what is supposed to be happening in each picture. In the center of the opposite page paste a picture of a child, which represents yourself. At the top of this page write, "How I Can Be a Good Neighbor." Draw lines out from this picture and at the ends of the lines write the things you can do that will make you a good neighbor at home, at church, at school, and at play.—V. C. T.

BEST SERMONS OF 1935

Such is the general title of a series of sermons to be published in The Restitution Herald during the next few months. We have asked a number of our ministers to contribute a sermon which they delivered during the past year to be published anonymously. As the sermons appear, we request our readers to review them carefully and then write and tell us who they believe gave the sermon from the pulpit.

Our purpose in the contest may be stated as follows. First, to make it possible for some of the best sermons delivered by our ministers during the past year to gain a new and much wider audience through the columns of the paper, and thus to secure for the church at large the fruitage of the past year's most scholarly biblical efforts. Second, to encourage more careful and thoughtful attention to the subjects that are presented from the pulpits of our churches. Third, to provide our entire ministerial body with helpful material which they can use in their own work.

We will allow some time to elapse between the publication of the sermons and the revealing of the identity of the speakers, in order that our readers may have an opportunity to study each sermon carefully and to notice the personality of their favorite ministers revealed in what he has said in his discourse.

The first of the series appears on the front page of this issue under the title, "The Gospel." Who was the author of this sermon?

BITS OF THE MAIL

"On page 8 of The Restitution Herald of October 15, 1935, in note concerning counting letters, words, etc., of the Bible it is stated that all the letters of the alphabet are in Ezra 7:21. I find the letter J is omitted."—L. B., Chicago, Ill.

"I am surprised and disappointed at the article in the January 28 number of your paper entitled 'Tongues and Pentecost.' . . . The January 21 issue was a most inspiring one."—G. A. S., St. Cloud, Minn.

"Faith is the growth of a Christian, and it is developed by our works. . . . What are our works? 'Study to shew thyself approved unto God'; 'pray without ceasing'; 'not forsaking the assembling of yourselves together, as the manner of some is.'"—A. E. H., Burr Oak, Ind.

"I'm so glad The Restitution Herald teaches the truth on that question (mortality of man) and I hope that truth as well as consecrated Christian living may be spread to earnest seekers for the truth through the columns of your paper."—Mrs. E. C. O., International Falls, Minn.

"My family and I enjoy The Herald so much and are greatly helped spiritually through its pages."—M. B., Philadelphia, Pa.

"We are having very severe weather. This is the 26th consecutive day that it has been between 10 and 30 below zero, . . . but we have lots to be thankful for."—I. T., Letcher, S. D.

BURR OAK, INDIANA

Sunday services gave us courage; the attendance was good in the morning, and small in the evening. Our morning subject was "The Waters of Heaven and Earth."

The Morning Stars postponed their class meeting on account of the extreme cold weather. The Gospel Seekers are having their meeting this week.

We plan to have a revival meeting soon, calling some one from another field to assist us.

March 8, Sunday evening, we will unite with the other township churches in a meeting at the Evangelical Church, where Dr. Homrighausen of Indianapolis will speak on the subject "Discovering and Interpreting the Christ."

Thinking of the terrible cold weather, our attention is turned to Psalm 83:15: "So persecute them with thy tempest, and make them afraid with thy storm."

Lord willing, we will be with the Kokomo church this coming Sunday.

A. E. Hoskins, Pastor.

MOOREFIELD, NEBRASKA

Greetings to all of like precious faith. Here are the names of two persons that were baptized some time ago, one young man and one married lady, Dave Bender and Mrs. Gladys Peters, both of Moorefield. Letters would be appreciated by either of the two named.

Bro. Charles and Sr. Levina Stedman are shut-ins on account of Bro. Stedman's health. They would love so much to attend church, but can't; still they are strong in the faith, and love the Lord's work. Remember them in your prayers, and also a letter would cheer their hearts, and help to brighten their pathway of life.

We of Moorefield meet every Sunday for Sunday school at 10 o'clock, and worship service at 11, and after this month evening service will be held at 7:30. Bible study and prayer meeting on Wednesday evening. Sacrament the first Sunday morning of every quarter. A special offering will be taken each sacrament day for the general work.

KOSZTA, IOWA

J. M. Kiger had pneumonia last November and is still confined to the house. He would be glad to hear from any of our members. His address is Marengo, Iowa.

We have not had any church services nor Bible school for the past two months, but the Dorcas Circle carries on. For the first time since we organized in 1928, we have not had to postpone a single meeting by this time of year. At the meeting of February 7, Mrs. Fern Cronbaugh conducted a Bible lesson on "The Kingdom in Abeyance," and the rest of the time was occupied by work on a fan quilt and packing a box of groceries and linens for a worthy member. Mrs. Jennie Cronbaugh and her followers won the attendance contest held by the Circle. The losers (Mrs. Coila Cronbaugh, captain) will serve a chicken dinner to the winners. A new contest will immediately be started. Three new members have just been enrolled.

We are still planning a new church building, and also plan to sponsor a series of evangelistic meetings before conference time.

J. W. Williams and family are out of quarantine now, and all are well after a long siege of diphtheria. Mrs. J. M. Kiger.

EVANGELISM AGAINST DIFFICULTIES

To the Brotherhood:

We have been getting inquiries from southern California concerning our whereabouts and our doings in the Northwest this unusual wintry weather. The fact is that the weather has prevented much accomplishment in the line of church activities.

We preached and taught in Corvallis for two months, praying and striving earnestly to bring about a more harmonious condition of the little group there, all of whom we love dearly, and we trust that God will bless according to their devotion and needs. While there, it rained almost every day and we have since learned to think with the citizens of that section that rain is preferable to snow and ice.

On our trip to Washington we had planned to make stops at Independence, Newberg, Sherwood, and Shoals, but the rain was so very heavy that day and water so high in many places that we were compelled to abandon the idea and head directly for our destination. After spending some time in the very hospitable home of Bro. and Sr. Wallace Woolf and finding there were no vacant furnished places in Felida, we secured an apartment in Vancouver where we have since tried to keep comfortable in this very unusual wintry weather.

The quarterly conference had scarcely half the attendance that was previously promised, owing to the extreme cold and some sickness.

We have been holding a Bible class here in Vancouver at the home of Sr. Luella Caples on Wednesday evenings, and one in Felida at the home of Bro. C. M. Beall on Thursday evenings, besides the regular Sunday morning services in the church at Felida. Last week, however, the temperature went so low that we were compelled to call off the evening classes.

We have made calls on most of the local members and a few on the nearer isolated. We wish to mention the one to Hillsboro and Shoals, Ore., on February 11. The temperature had risen some the night before and we decided to make this long-promised visit to Sr. Jaquith before it began raining again. Going first to Hillsboro, we found Sr. Vivian Beach happy and contented in their pleasant little country home 3½ miles west of Hillsboro. She had recently subscribed for The Restitution Herald and told us of what a help she was finding in the Children's Page in instructing her children. We enjoyed our brief visit and lunch with her, after which we retraced our steps to Hillsboro and crossed over to Shoals, finding both Bro. and Sr. Jaquith improved in health since we last saw them. Bro. Jaquith was engaged in clearing a piece of ground for an early garden, which they tell us is often planted in this vicinity by the 1st of February. Sr. Jaquith and the little aged sister-in-law—Miss Jaquith—are as congenial and happy as one could find anywhere under similar conditions. Sr. Jaquith, in expectation of our visit, prepared a little booklet of choice verses and sayings for me which I will keep in memory of one who is patient in tribulation and which no doubt I will be able to use in my work.

It was raining some when we started for home, and soon began freezing, stalling the windshield wiper and making driving very hazardous. We were compelled to stop often to clean the windshield, and as it grew dark before we reached the downgrade into Portland the road was icy and headlights very blinding, so it was more by faith than by sight that we traveled on slowly into and through the city to our own little apartment in Vancouver. It continued to rain and freeze throughout the night, which brought on what is known in this section as a "silver thaw."

As we drove around the city two days later, we were delighted with the gorgeous spectacle which we beheld everywhere. It was a veritable fairyland. The sun shining on weeds, leafless shrubs, wire fences, with everything covered with a heavy coating of ice, transformed them into sparkling objects of beauty. In some places the shrub known as Oregon grape, having red, yellow, and green leaves, gave forth rainbow colors through the ice. Woven wire fences looked like a gorgeous piece of silver lace. It was an experience we will never forget. The continued low temperature makes the ice slow in going, and now it is snowing, so we fear there will be no garden-making in the near future.

We regret our inability to look up more of the brethren and the hindrance to Bible class work, but are trying to keep busy with writing and study.

Those who have been studying the pyramid in connection with Jewish history tell us that a great change is in store for the Jews on the date of their next New Year, September 16 and 17 of the present year. Perhaps it will be the time when breath will enter into that resurrected body and they shall become an independent national body again (Ezek. 37:8,9), when the Prince that shall come will confirm a covenant with them for one week of years (Dan. 9:26,27).

Dear ones of like faith, when one gets out among the brethren in an effort to strengthen the weak and proclaim the gospel message that gives salvation, he can see more distinctly the Laodicean condition that exists among the brethren. A few are holding on tenaciously, trying to keep together those who have started in the straight and narrow way, while the indifference and open scoffing of some would be very discouraging were it not for the fact that it has all been foretold and therefore is to be expected. The little group at Felida are faithful and realize that the signs thicken which indicate that the coming of the Savior draweth nigh. Let us not be chasing pleasure or be over-anxious about the cares of life, but may we all heed the exhortation to work, watch, and pray.

ELIZABETH P. ALLDRIDGE

It is with deepest regret that we announce the passing of our beloved Sr. Elizabeth P. Alldridge. She departed this life on February 8, 1936, at the home of her daughter, Sr. Elizabeth Hawkins, Cleveland, Ohio. Her two daughters, Sr. Hawkins and Sr. Nellie Halls, were in constant attendance during her short illness of about two weeks. Interment was in beautiful Lakeview Cemetery beside her husband, the late Bro. George B. Alldridge.

Her passing is deeply mourned by her family and many friends. Be it said to the memory of both her and her beloved husband that they lived and died with the hope which David expressed in Psalm 126:5,6—"They that sow in tears shall reap in joy. He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him."

John O. Conrad, Church Clerk.

Elizabeth Pearce Alldridge was born March 16, 1861, at Calstock, England. She was married to the late George Burt Alldridge April 4, 1887, at Plymouth, England. She came to Cleveland August 1, 1887.

Four children were born to this union: Elizabeth Hawkins, George Pearce Alldridge, Nellie Mae Halls, and the late James Burt Alldridge.

November 9, 1913, she was baptized in the Church of God at Cleveland and had since been a zealous defender of the faith.

Because of long acquaintance with both Bro. and Sr. Alldridge, the writer was requested to conduct the funeral services, assisted by Bro. M. W. Lyon.

The RESTITUTION HERALD advocates: the near return of Christ, Acts 1:11, and life only through Him, Col. 3:3; the literal resurrection of the dead, John 5:28; the immortalization of those in Christ, 1 Cor. 15:53, 54; the final restoration of Israel as the kingdom of God under the kingship of Christ, Luke 1:32, the church to be joint heirs with Him, Rom. 8:17, and Israel to be made head over Gentile nations, Isa. 60:13; the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began", Acts 3:21. It also firmly advocates repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, Acts 2:38, and a consecrated life as essential to salvation.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

After several weeks of hard work on the part of choir and dramatic cast it was a real satisfaction and relief to present the operetta "Chonita" on February 20 and 21. The first performance was to 350 of the grade children as a matinee, and the second to an adult audience in the evening. The results in every way caused us to feel that all the hard work was worth while.

And now we turn our attention to Easter and the development of proper spiritual atmosphere. Not only is the choir beginning work on Easter music, but our class on first principles begins this week, and the Sunday sermons will be planned to develop the Easter thought.

At this writing Sr. Witham is in St. Mary's Hospital with a newborn baby girl.

en into his house as a daughter, an equal, for she is called daughter, and admonished not to glean in other fields. It is just so with the Christian. When once he accepts Christ he is told not to be carried by every wind of doctrine, but to stay within the fold. God never asks anyone to a banquet unless He has bread and to spare. We notice that Naomi tells Ruth that God has not left off His kindness to the living or to the dead in that He prompted Boaz to succor her. It was therefore the prospect of redemption which presented itself to Naomi's mind. So here is perhaps the great truth presented in the book of Ruth. But let us remember that the one to redeem must be a near kinsman, as told in Leviticus 25. Man by one act of disobedience lost all, and is not able to redeem himself, and the only hope he has is that God has not left him without a near kinsman, Jesus Christ, who came in the flesh so that He could sympathize with our infirmities. "For he was tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin."

Jesus was not a near kinsman by nature, so no legal obligation rested upon Him to redeem us, but God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son to be our kinsman redeemer. It is by grace alone that He became obliged to do this for us. When a thing is purchased and paid for, is it not robbery to withhold the property—then are we not robbing God of His property when we withhold ourselves from Him after we are paid for? It is well to study this lesson of Boaz redeeming this property and connect it with the human race being lost and how Christ redeemed it. Today man is trying to restore things to the desired state by civilization, education, and science, but entirely ignores the cause, sin. If education and science were a remedy for sin, then they might accomplish something, but alas, such is not the fact. As Boaz brought this childless widow who was a foreigner into the royal line, just so does the death of Christ bring us into sonship if we will but accept. We do not inherit it, neither is anyone rich enough to buy it; it is a gift. I long to meet Ruth, and rejoice that ere long I shall have the privilege to not only meet her, but all those who live in Christ Jesus. What a meeting that will be!—A. S. Christenson in The Bible Advocate.

ABOUT ZIONISM

Here is a brilliant arraignment of those responsible for the horrible pogrom in Palestine in 1929, a cultured cry of anguish over the status of the Jewish people, a polished essay on Zionism and all its works, by a man known as one of the world's greatest scientists and who has concerned himself with the Zionist Movement quite as much as with his mathematics—Albert Einstein.

Much of the book is translated from the original German by Leon Simon, an Englishman, who preserves the flavor of the beautiful language of the author in a way marvelous to read. One must, of course, expect to find such words as "chauvinism," "exacerbate," and sacro egoismo; but they are not common, and the book on the whole is easily read.

The volume in reality is a collection of the Einstein writings and speakings from 1920 to 1931 on Zionism, its purposes and accomplishments. The introduction by Mr. Simon is in itself a liberal education in the purely rational benefits the movement has conferred upon the world.

Mr. Einstein, of course, believes in no anthropomorphic Deity; he believes in no miraculous power watching over Israel; he denies much of the history of the Bible. But nevertheless, he unconsciously outlines the fulfillment of prophecy in so vivid and so exquisitely worded a fashion that the book is well worth reading by any Bible student.

TWINKLING OF AN EYE

In the Twinkling of an Eye (Sydney Watson, author) is unique in the fiction field. It is an effort to put in story form the possible events to occur at the "rapture," much spoken of by the book.

Rather poorly done from a technical standpoint, the story offers little to the reader primarily interested in literature; but to those who like their Bible coated like a medicated pill, it presents a very worth while opportunity to learn something of the coming of the Christ.

To this end, in fact, it is liberally sprinkled with Bible references which are quoted in full.

The yarn itself hinges on a number of people, places, and things. A London editor, a blind man, the personified Antichrist, and a large number of others are yoked up to make the plot hang together, which it does somewhat precariously. The isolation of its several incidents is curiously reminiscent of Scott's Ivanhoe.

Characterization, like story, like writing, is nothing phenomenal. Further, since the book is based on a 1918 original copyright, it necessarily seems a bit old-fashioned as to science and transportation. In this regard, it smacks a good deal of the Jules Verne.

A certain pathos, for all the technical flaws, fills the book. One cannot read of the Passover scene or of the final meeting in the London church without experiencing a sense of sympathy for the characters involved. And the useless battle of the London editor through his paper points to the reason that dailies leave religion alone.

Doubtless, for one who reads little, In the Twinkling of an Eye would be both interesting and educational. For the connoisseur, however, the flaws of style are a bit too obvious to be altogether ignored.

CYCLOPEDIA OF SERMONS

The exact title of the book, a collection of the best sermons by such men as Beecher, Inge, Spurgeon, McLaren, Parker, and Brooks, and compiled by Aquilla Webb, is Cyclopedia of Sermon Outlines. It is one of the rather lengthy series of Anvil Religious Books.

Every minister at one time or another is afflicted with the insane notion that he can't speak when Sunday comes; his thoughts simply will not track. Yet every Sunday the minister must speak, and the problem of securing new subject matter for sermons is consequently an acute one.

This book partially relieves him. It does, to be sure, treat primarily—almost exclusively—with practical themes; but this makes it more valuable than a book which deals with modernistic or fundamentalist doctrine. Following the books of the Bible in order, it gives outlines for sermons on 259 subjects.

The outlines are given, not in skeleton form, but sufficiently built up to be easily understood and assimilated. They are suggestive for teachers as well as pastors, and could easily be adapted to a Bible class on social problems or practical matters. Since the book is a compilation of many different speakers, the views of no one man tinge the motif as a whole.

Harper & Brothers: $1.00.

All the above books are kept in stock by the National Bible Institution, Oregon, Illinois.

Nine books in a series of beautiful gift editions by Augsburg Publishing House: 25¢ each; strictly religious; some exclusively passages from the King James. . . . Now 92¢ books in Everyman's Library of excellent reprints: 90¢ each. . . . In His Steps has sold something over 7,500,000 copies.

Number 2 — Wonderful

“His name shall be called Wonderful” (Isaiah 9:6)

WE OFTEN hear people spoken of as wonderful, but I fear this has come to be a greatly overworked adjective. It is correctly applied to only one, of whom it was said seven hundred years before His birth, “His name shall be called Wonderful.”

Everything about Him was wonderful from His humble birth in a manger—so wonderful it was announced by an angel from heaven—to His ascent to the right hand of His Father. I should like to take the word “wonderful” and opposite each letter in that word write one of the things that was wonderful about Him.

WORDS

“Never man spake as this man,” for the words He spoke were full of power. At a word from Him the tempestuous sea became calm, the fig tree withered and died, and water became wine. He spoke and the blind received their sight, the lame were made to run and leap, and the deaf ears were unstopped.
