Everything is so unsafe and insecure. The age-old warfare between capital and labor is surely coming to a finish, slowly, but surely. Our President, when he first became the Chief Executive, saw that something had to be done, and much that he started was vetoed by the Supreme Court. And still the argument goes on, and while it does poverty and want still hold our land in their grasp, and millions are in need. And in the face of this shameful scene clergymen still preach that God has already "set up" His kingdom. There are none so blind as those who will not see.

The gospel message of the kingdom of God is a doctrinal message, and every member-elect of the church Christ is building is duty bound to preach only doctrine. Tell me if you can how you can preach spiritual truth without preaching doctrinal truth? All truth is spiritual truth, and as such it is doctrinal truth, because it comes from a spiritual source. No distinction should be made in the terms.

The signs of the times clearly show that "evil shall go forth from nation to nation, and a great whirlwind shall be raised up from the coasts of the earth" (Jer. 25:32). And "all the kingdoms of the world, which are upon the face of the earth" are going to face the wrath of God (Jer. 25:26). He has a special plan of dealing with them, and He knows just how to do it.

Not only will God's wrath be poured out upon the financial moneychangers, but the false so-called gospel ministers are going to receive a full measure of that wrath, too, as I read, "A voice of the cry of the shepherds (the clergymen?), and an howling of the principal of the flock, shall be heard: for the Lord hath spoiled their pasture" (Jer. 25:36).

"For the Lord hath spoiled their pasture"! That element to which this refers has surely lived in a fine pasture, plenty of comfort, pleasure, and wealth. But their pasture is to be spoiled, and the principal ones will howl, and soon realize that "it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God" (Heb. 10:31), "when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth" (Isa. 2:19).

The efforts of man only promise and propose temporary relief. The kingdom of God is the only hope for all. Its message of comfort and hope is the only message worth while; and may God grant us the privilege of remaining faithful to it in this age of darkness and indifference.

REASONS FOR NOT TITHING

fifty tithers in my church now, and not a fourth of them are men.

INCOME TEN DOLLARS A YEAR

Let me give you an illustration: There was a venerable woman in my church about eighty years of age, quite deaf, and confined to a rolling chair on account of a broken limb. She was a very deep Christian but very reserved. On one occasion when I was sitting by the side of her chair, talking to her, she asked me with a smile if I would excuse her for a moment. She wheeled herself to a corner of the room where she fumbled awhile among books and papers and came back presently with a beaming face and held out some money in her hand toward me. She said, "I do not have much money, but I want to give a tenth for the Lord. Will you please take this and use it for the Lord's work in the way you think best?" It was a dollar bill she handed me. I knew little of her financial circumstances, though I knew that she could not command much money. Some months afterward, it became necessary for her to be removed from the home in which she lived with relatives, because the home had to be broken up. I was consulted as to what arrangements should be made for this venerable friend. When I asked the question, what her income was, the answer came in surprise that she had no income whatever, that a friend had been giving her ten dollars every year for a number of years. This she imagined had come from property she had once owned. The ten dollars a year was the whole amount of money she possessed. It is true that she did not need very much money, for she had a shelter and food and fuel and needed but little clothing. But ten dollars a year is a very small amount for any respectable person in this country to have. If I had known the circumstances possibly I would have declined to take the dollar from her and yet I know full well it would almost have broken her heart if I had done so. No, they are not the poor who complain of tithing.

INFLUENCE OF TITHING

3. Another objection urged against tithing is that it inculcates a wrong principle; that if you tell a man that one tenth of his income is God's and nine tenths belong to him, he will not feel under any obligation to use all of his property for God. I submit again that if this is a valid objection to the tithe today, it was an equally valid objection when Moses promulgated the law. It would prove that the tithe was not suitable in any age. Again, if this is a valid objection against tithing, it is an equally valid objection against the Sabbath day, because it would teach a man that, if he gave one day in seven to the Lord, there would be no restriction at all upon the way in which he would spend the other six days of the week. This reminds one of a conversation between a minister and a member of his church. The minister had preached upon the perseverance of the saints, and one of his members, approaching him at the close of the service, remarked, "If I believed what you preached and felt sure that I could never fall from a state of grace, I would sin all I chose to." The minister replied, "How much would a Christian choose to sin?" I may ask in a similar way, "If a man devotes one tenth of his income to the Lord and one seventh of his time to the Lord, in what way would he probably wish to spend the nine tenths of his income and the six sevenths of his time?" As a matter of fact, the one tenth and one seventh are given as a token of God's ownership of it all, and the man who in this way recognizes God's ownership will spend all his time and all his money with a sense of obligation to use both for the glory of God.

IS IT WRONG TO TEACH THAT TITHING PAYS?

4. Another objection urged against tithing is that the advocates of the tithe appeal to mercenary motives by representing that if we give the tithe, we will receive material blessings as a reward. We should be very careful not to set standards for ourselves higher than those set in the Word of God, and not to assume to be more righteous than the Scriptures. Beyond all question, the Bible appeals to this very motive; for instance, this text: "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but tendeth to poverty"; or this: "Honour the Lord with thy substance, and with the firstfruits of all thine increase; so shall thy barns be filled with plenty"; or this: "Seek first the kingdom of God . . . and all these things shall be added unto you." Or take that classic quotation from the 3rd chapter of Malachi. The Jews had been greatly afflicted by drought and pestilence, by the locust and the caterpillar. They cried out in their distress and sought to know the reason for their affliction. God's answer to them through Malachi was, "Ye have robbed me," but they said, "Wherein have we robbed thee?" He replied, "In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation." Then He gives them this challenge: "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house; and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." God here challenges His people, He dares them. He says to them, "Prove Me, put Me to the test. Come back to your duty in paying tithes and see if I will not drive war and pestilence, the locust and the caterpillar from all your coasts, see if I will not open the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." Once more, our Savior said, "Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom." In this passage, there is the unmistakable promise of material blessing to those who honor the Lord with their substance. The truth is, however, that the material and spiritual blessings are so interwoven with each other that it is difficult to separate them and unnecessary to do so.

A FEW ILLUSTRATIONS

I have in my church a tithe league. We have more than one hundred fifty members in that league. One day after church, a gentleman called me aside and said, "I wish you would put my wife's name and mine on your tithe roll." When I thanked him for it, he said with some hesitation, "We don't see how we are going to be able to give one tenth, but we have come to the conclusion it is our duty to do so, and we are going to try it." He did not wear a very happy expression of countenance, for evidently he was uncertain as to what the result would be. A few months afterward, I saw him approaching me on the street and, at a distance of more than one hundred yards, I could see his face was wreathed with smiles. As he drew nearer, he began to laugh aloud and was almost in convulsions of merriment. He said, "It is perfectly ridiculous, the way that money has been coming in to me since I began tithing." "God loveth a hilarious giver," so some translate it. This gentleman was a "hilarious giver." His face became more serious then, and he said with deep earnestness, "My wife and I believe that God is rebuking us in this way for our distrust."

On another day, I met a professional gentleman, who crossed the street from his home to tell me of his experience with the tithe. He made this statement to me: "I began to tithe several months ago. I did not see at the time how it was possible with my income and with all the financial obligations that rested upon me, to give any more to the church than I was giving, but I saw that it was my duty and determined to try it. The result is that, while my income is the same and my obligations just the same, I meet those obligations just as easily as I did before, and now I am giving to the church thirty times as much as I have before."

TITHING AND THE FIFTH COMMANDMENT

I will give one more illustration: A young lady came in to see me, who was not a member of my church. Her Christian life had recently been greatly revived. She was very happy after her new experience and came to consult me about tithing. She said that she had resolved to pay one tenth of her income to the Lord, but her mother was old and unable to support herself, entirely dependent for her support upon what her children could give her from their earnings. The question that troubled her was whether she could take out of her tithe what she gave for her mother's support. I told her that I was unable to settle that question for her, that it would have to be settled between her and God, but that I could give her some facts upon both sides of her question and leave it for her to decide. On the one hand, the Israelites gave their tithe exclusively for religious uses; on the other hand, when Christ was upon earth, He told the Pharisees that Moses had commanded them to honor their father and their mother, but they claimed that, if a man's father or mother asked him for anything that they needed and he did not wish to give it, he might say, "The thing you asked me for is devoted to God; it is Corban and, therefore, I cannot give it to you." In that case, they held that the man was released from his obligations to his parents and so they made void the fifth commandment. I said to my young friend, "You take this question to God in prayer and ask Him whether you may give to your mother out of your tithe. He will not leave you without His guidance, and, if He shows you that it is your duty to give the whole tithe to religion and to contribute to your mother out of your nine tenths, He will make it possible in some way for you to do it." She sat in silence for a few moments, absorbed in thought, then her face lighted up with a bright expression and she said, "I am going to try it; I will give the whole tenth to God. That is what I want to do. I want to trust Him in that way." I was out of town for several weeks after that visit. On my return, I learned she had had a substantial increase in her salary.

Was there any connection between these two things? When God tells us, "If you do thus and so, then I will do thus and so," and we do as He commands and then the thing happens which He promised, have we any right to say that God did not do it in fulfillment of His promise, that the coincidence was accidental? God had promised to bless those who honor Him with their substance. She had honored Him, and the blessing had followed. Was it a mere coincidence, or was it an unmistakable expression of God's approval? But that which most deeply impressed me was the expression of spiritual exaltation in that young lady's face when she said, "I want to trust God that way." Again we see here the mingling of the material and the spiritual reward for tithing.

5. There is one more objection, that I must confess I cannot answer. It is the position of the man who has heard all these facts, and the Scriptures, and the arguments, and meets all by saying, "But I don't look at it in that way," without giving a fact, a scripture, or an argument in support of his position. I cannot answer that argument.—A. M. Fraser in Layman Company Pamphlet No. 26.

True Progress

"But they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; (firstly:) they shall mount up with wings as eagles; (secondly:) they shall run, and not be weary; (lastly:) they shall walk, and not faint."—Isaiah 40:31.

Perhaps you would call this a gradual descent, for flying seems more noble than running, and running than walking. But really this illustrates true spiritual progress. The experience of Paul will illuminate our contention.

Firstly, Paul flew as an eagle: "I am become a fool in glorying; ye have compelled me: for I ought to have been commended of you: for in nothing am I behind the very chiefest apostles, though I be nothing" (2 Cor. 12:11). When Paul spoke these words he had become the most daring of Christian warriors. He, chosen vessel to bear the gospel to the Gentiles, took great joy in being in the forefront of the surge of Christianity into places it had never been before. He had borne the torch of Christianity unflinchingly into the very teeth of the enemy darkness. He had suffered beatings, imprisonments, terrifying calamities, had been stoned and left for death. But awful mysteries had been revealed to him. In vision his feet had stood within Paradise itself. No mortal flesh could claim a place of more fellowship with God than he, not even the very chiefest apostles.

Secondly, Paul ran and was not weary: "Unto me who am the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ; and to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery" (Eph. 3:8, 9). Experience has mellowed his glorying. Arrested at Jerusalem, unjustly imprisoned two years at Cæsarea, shipwrecked on the way to Rome, imprisoned at Rome. But through it all the Lord was with him, and Paul wrote some of his most hopeful and comforting Epistles. Now, as the least of all saints, he came closer to the heart of the ordinary Christian who needs his help.

Lastly, Paul walked, and did not faint: "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief" (1 Tim. 1:15). What a majestic comedown! The eagle walks—the better to serve suffering humanity! Out of prison, just a little time left to plead with sinners, and then again unjust imprisonment, and at the end a cruel death awaits. He was all things to all men; that he might save some, to sinners, behold, the chiefest of sinners. He found the way to God and life. The way is open to you.

Such is the true Christian way of developing greater humility. Humility comes from doing the greatest service. All truly great men have been humble. "Whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister; and whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant; even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many" (Matt. 20:26-28).

Eagles

"As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings: so the Lord alone did lead him."—Deuteronomy 32:11, 12.

The Lord represents Himself here as the Great Eagle who coaches His children. An eagle will build her nest high on some rocky crag. When she decides her young are old enough to fly she goes about teaching them in a businesslike way. The nest is too comfortable; she stirs it up, putting the rough sticks inside. She excites the eaglets, arouses their admiration, and finally takes them on her own back to dizzy heights. She drops them off, and circles around as they flutter helplessly toward the ground. Then she swoops under each one and bears them all aloft to try again until they finally learn to fly. And so the Lord coaches us.

The Eagles Gathered Together

"Two women shall be grinding together; the one shall be taken, and the other left. Two men shall be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left. And they answered and said unto him, Where, Lord? And he said unto them, Whithersoever the body is, thither will the eagles be gathered together."—Luke 17:35-37.

One of the unforgettable scenes of my boyhood that remains as a picture in my mind is of a great number of enormous birds feasting on a dead body they had discovered in a mountain valley. There were several others circling in the sky above. And even as we watched others came in sight. How so many could gather together so quickly and from so far away was a mystery to me. My father told me it was due to their being able to see so far, which was due first to their flying so high and second to their keen vision.

Our Lord Jesus Christ is the body upon which we feast. He died for us, and we have life through His death. "Then Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day. For my flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed" (John 6:53-55).

Some day our Lord will return to earth. Every eagle eye will see Him at once. The eagles will hasten to Him, as drawn by a magnet. Then will be the glorious fulfillment of the text: "But they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength: they shall mount up with wings as eagles."

EATING BREAKFAST WITH JESUS

THE story of the resurrection of Jesus is the most beautiful story in all the Bible. Last week's lesson was one of the most sorrowful. We left Jesus dying on the cross for the sins of the world. Let us read further in John's book and see what happened.

Seven of the twelve apostles of Jesus had been fishing in the Lake of Galilee. They were weary and cold and discouraged. For they had fished all night and had not caught one tiny fish.

Some one appeared on the shore and asked them if they had caught anything. They answered that they had not, and then a strange thing happened.

"Cast the net on the right side of the ship, and ye shall find," this person called to them.

They did so, and the net became so heavy from the fish they caught that they could not draw it into the boat. One of the fishermen knew at once who the stranger was.

"It is the Lord," said that disciple whom Jesus loved. And we know that John, who was writing the story, meant himself.

Then the disciples rowed to shore, dragging the net behind the boat. On the shore Jesus had built a bonfire and was frying some fish for the hungry men.

Peter drew the net to land, and when they had counted the fish there were 153 of them. That was a big catch, wasn't it?

Jesus called them to breakfast then, and the cold, hungry men were refreshed and fed. Wasn't that just like Jesus, their loving Master, to think of building a fire and getting breakfast for them?

I wonder what the disciples were thinking. They knew that Jesus had been dead, that He had been carefully placed in the grave, and that a soldier had been set to watch.

Yet here He was, alive, caring for their comfort, the same loving Master as before! Who but the Son of God could do all these things? After that they believed in Him more strongly than ever, of that we are sure.

Now John, "that disciple whom Jesus loved," tells us exactly why he wrote down all these wonderful stories of Jesus. And you will find the reason in chapter 20, verse 31. Turn in your Bibles and read it, or ask some one to read it to you.

"These are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name," we read.

John didn't mean only the twelve disciples when he said, "that ye might believe." He meant us, also, in fact, all who will believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God.

The reward Jesus offers for believing is "life through his name." That is, eternal life, life that never ends, that has no sorrows nor troubles of any kind. Jesus has that sort of life now and will give it to all who believe in Him when He comes to earth again.

Now let's look further in John's story and see what Jesus said to Peter. You remember Peter had said, when the soldiers had taken Jesus, that he never knew Him. That was because Peter was so afraid.

Was Jesus angry at Peter for denying Him, do you think? Look in verses 15, 16, and 17, of the last chapter of John's book. He said, "Simon Peter, lovest thou me?"

The second and yet the third time Jesus asked Peter the same question. Every time Peter said, "Thou knowest that I love thee."

Then Jesus gave Peter some work to do for Him. He wanted to show Peter that He had forgiven him. Don't you think so? It must have made Peter very happy to feel himself worthy again of being counted with those who worked for Jesus.

I don't believe Peter ever was afraid after that. Do you? In fact, we learn, when we read the book of Acts, that Peter never wavered. He wasn't afraid of prisons, or suffering, or death, for the sake of the work he was doing for Jesus.

Peter became one of the greatest preachers of the gospel after that, perhaps next to the Apostle Paul. Peter had learned his lesson and learned it well.

There are other stories telling us how Jesus appeared to different ones after His resurrection. Paul tells us that more than five hundred people saw Him at the same time. So we know there is no doubt of it.

But we do not need to see Jesus personally to believe that He is alive. We believe it without seeing Him. And Jesus told Thomas that a special blessing would come to those who believed without seeing. That means you and me.

But we will see Him, nevertheless. For when He ascended to heaven, two men stood by all dressed in white, who said, "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."

And that will be part of the special blessing we will receive, if we are true to Him until He comes,

AMONG THE CHURCHES

WHAT'S THE ANSWER?

What man, whom God commended for his goodness, does the Bible say did not go to heaven when he died? Find the answer for yourself or look for it in next week's paper. Don't forget! It'll be there!

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

The weather during January and February was either extremely cold or extremely rainy and therefore interfered some with the attendance at the Sunday services. Bro. George P. Liehty of the Pomona congregation spoke for the Los Angeles church the second Sunday in January on the subject, "The Key of Knowledge." His discourse was edifying and enjoyed by all.

Bro. Cecil A. Smead of Blanchard, Mich., who was enjoying a brief honeymoon in his native State, consented to speak on the fifth Sunday, and we were glad to welcome him at that time and also at our midweek Berean service, at which time Sr. Stantial entertained the Berean class in honor of the bride and groom.

Then again a Bro. Eagleston, formerly a Christadelphian, has made a very welcome appearance among us, and we enjoyed the discourse he gave on February 14. He will speak again for the congregation in the near future.

Sr. Eva L. Stearns and party of Rapid City, S. D., spent a brief three weeks among us, and it was good to have her with us again. She gave a sermonette on "Developments in Palestine," preceding the sermon on February 28.

We have a live and active Dorcas Society, under the efficient leadership of Sr. Laura Bleasdale, holding meetings semi-monthly.

The work on the new meetinghouse has begun and the foundation will, no doubt, be completed this week. The citizens in the neighborhood seem to be rejoicing that they are to have a place where they can send their children to Sunday school, so we are hoping to be able to get results in building up a school by following the example of the churches in Cleveland and Grand Rapids in locating in a new district. The location is 230 W. 103rd St., and is on the Broadway car line. We searched for some time before being able to get a location at a reasonable price, zoned for churches, and yet with no church in the immediate neighborhood and on a good car line.

A friend, Mr. J. A. Richards, went to a great deal of pains and trouble to draft architectural plans for the new building and also to get them passed by the city Building Commission. L. D. Conner, son of our N. B. I. president, is the contractor. He has had much experience in this kind of construction, and we feel fortunate in securing him to superintend the work.

The exterior finish of the building will be stucco. Besides the main auditorium there will be two Sunday school rooms, a front vestibule, and a kitchen. The cost is going to be higher than we at first anticipated, but we are hoping and praying that the results will justify the means.

Brethren, pray for the success of this undertaking, that much good may be accomplished to the glory of God.

Emma C. Railsback.

HAPPY WOODS, LOUISIANA

With several more days before the meetings end, we are glad to report a good interest in the work. It was our happy privilege to baptize Mr. and Mrs. George Halverson on Tuesday afternoon, March 2. Both the husband and wife have for many years listened to Church of God preaching, and many hearts rejoice to see the obedience of these new members of the faith. Their address is Hammond, La., Route 3.

There is some sickness in the community, and we are very sorry to report the death of Sr. Margaret Bylsma, who fell asleep on Wednesday, March 3. The obituary will follow in a later issue of The Herald. Her death is a sudden shock to all. She had attended several of the current meetings.

Sydney E. Magaw.

BURR OAK, INDIANA

Work began last Monday on our basement improvement. There will be a room 26 x 36; also the furnace room partitioned off with cement blocks. There will be cement floor, ceiling ceiled with sheetrock, electric lights, a new entrance into the basement, also a back entrance, two double windows, and two single ones. The work will cost $526. This work when finished will give us more Sunday school space and room for other gatherings. Everyone is interested and anxious to help. The Morning Star Class has paid its pledge of $100. The Ladies' Society has within a few dollars of its quota. The class mentioned, held a bake sale in Culver last Saturday and cleared $26. The Gospel Seekers have their portion nearly raised. We cannot forget the Primary Department, for it, too, is doing its share. We thank all for their help.

The young people's class of Bereans was royally entertained last Thursday at a social gathering. Thirty were present.

Bro. Melvin Osborn, our elder, gave an interesting talk at last Sunday's morning worship hour. Bro. Osborn is a capable student.

The writer had a letter from Kokomo stating that a surprise was waiting. When we entered the church, we found that these good people had purchased one hundred seats from a local theater. It was a surprise; and they are to be commended for their energetic work. The interesting part of this is that the seats are paid for! May the Lord bless these willing workers.

Our people who have been at the Roll Church, Ind., will undoubtedly remember Sr. Mabel Alexander as one of the most faithful of our members. Many have met her and her two sons, also members of the church, at the Indiana Bible School. I was called to Roll Sunday, Feb. 28, to preach the funeral of her husband, Mr. Earl Alexander. Mr. Alexander had never united with any church, but was a fine man. Remember Sr. Alexander and family in your prayers.

Sunday, March 7, Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Wood, 611 E. 4th St., Kewanee, Ill., celebrated their golden wedding anniversary. Both Mr. and Mrs. Wood have been members of the Church of God for many years.

The Ripley, Ill., Church of God (Harvey Krogh, Jr., pastor) is planning a series of evangelistic meetings to last the final three weeks of May. The outside speaker has not yet been selected.

BEAR, ARKANSAS

We have managed to keep our Sunday school at Bear going all winter, although the weather has been very unfavorable.

We expect Bro. E. O. Stewart of Texas to be with us March 25 to begin preaching a series of sermons. All the church are anticipating his coming.

Bro. Owen Jones has been with us the past winter and has delivered some very instructive sermons. But he plans to return to his home in Logan County, Ark., to preach there this spring.

I have enjoyed Bro. Drinkard's articles on the kingdom very much. The articles by the editor are always good. Mrs. S. A. Dorris.

CHARLES B. ELTON

Charles B. Elton was born in Cleveland, Ohio, December 25, 1863, and died February 18, 1937.

In March, 1870, Bro. Elton removed with his parents to Omaha, Neb., and spent the rest of his life here.

He was united in marriage in November, 1891, to Miss Lottie Greene. To this union were born two sons, Leo J., Spirit Lake, Ida., and Herald C., Omaha. They and four grandchildren; two sisters, Mrs. George Hazzard, Irvington, Neb., and Mrs. J. Hensman of Omaha; and four brothers, Enos, Tustin, Calif., George, William, and John, Omaha, survive.

He united with the Church of God nearly forty years ago and was baptized by his uncle, George Elton of Cleveland. Being totally deaf, Bro. Elton has not attended service for several years, but he died in the full belief that the Master would soon come and call him back to life to enjoy a better condition. Bro. Elton had a clean life, and honesty was his watchword.

The writer based his remarks on Psalm 116: 15. The funeral was conducted from the Moore Funeral Home, and Bro. Elton was laid to rest in Mt. Hope Cemetery to await the call of Him who said, "I am the resurrection and the life." Almus Adams.

SARAH VELNETT LAWRENCE

Mrs. Sarah Velnett Lawrence died at her home in Gresham, Ore., February 19, 1937. She was born in Bloomington, Ill., March 13, 1848, the oldest child in a family of eight.

In 1857 she moved with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Marrs, to Burlington, Kan., and on October 15, 1864, was married to Samuel B. Lawrence. To this union eleven children were born. Accompanied by her husband and family, she came to Oregon in 1889, arriving at Scholls just 48 years and one day prior to her death.

Her husband died May 29, 1907, on their farm at Scholls. Mrs. Lawrence was a continuous resident of Washington County for more than 45 years, living at Scholls, Forest Grove, and Raleigh, before moving to Gresham two years ago.

She and her husband became members of the Church of God in 1874 in Kansas and were identified with the Scholls church of that denomination which occupied this building. She continued in that faith until her death.

Surviving her are one daughter, Mrs. David W. Fisk, Multnomah; four sons, Samuel B., Raleigh, Lou L., Oregon City, Bert F., Gresham, John W., Portland; one sister, Sue M. Black, Manhattan, Kan.; one brother, Charles Marrs, Portland; eleven grandchildren, two great-grandchildren, and one great-great-granddaughter.

Services were conducted by the writer. A. W. Darby.

THE STUDENT'S NOTEBOOK

The stone upon which Jacob pillowed his head when he dreamed of the ladder which extended from earth to heaven (Gen. 28:18) was not, as some have contended, "the so-called 'coronation stone' in London" (which forms the seat of the British throne-chair) "inasmuch as the heads of the Geological Survey of Great Britain unanimously declared that 'no stone of that kind was to be found in any part of the Holy Land, whence it traditionally comes.' Prof. Ramsay also pronounced it as being 'not known to occur in Egypt or in the rocks around Beth-el.'"—E. W. Bullinger, in Companion Bible. The same kind of stone as the "coronation" is said to be plentiful in Scotland, however.

"The Herald is getting more interesting and a real teacher of the Word of God," writes Sr. Jessie M. B. Kauffman of Riverside, Calif., She adds this timely admonition: "May the coming of our Lord find us all on the watch." The Herald echoes that hope.

Leaders

- should agree on necessary teachings for the churches (v. 4);
- need to be careful what they teach (Gal. 1:6-9);
- succeed as they yield to divine guidance (v. 10);
- who rule well are worthy of double honor (1 Tim. 5:17).

TRAINING CLASS

At the annual meeting of the General Conference the motion was made to reestablish the training class if there were a sufficient number of students desiring it to warrant such a procedure.

The training class will have to be run on an entirely different basis from the preceding classes.

No part-time work nor work of any kind can be guaranteed to the students.

Each student must be able, financially, to pay for tuition, room, board, and incidentals. The minimum tuition will be $100 a year.

According to the resolution adopted by the General Conference each student must give to the officers of the National Bible Institution assurance of his ability to meet his financial obligations.

If it is your desire to join such a Bible training class will you communicate with the committee as soon as possible. You will then be written to personally, concerning courses offered, cost of room and board, etc.

The training school will be run on a ten months basis.

Let us hear from you soon.

What Makes a Church?

THIS question was asked, in a recent conversation, of a young business man. He replied: "Why, carpenters, builders, stonemasons, etc."

In one sense he was right, and in one sense he was wrong. He was wrong in this respect, that a church is more than the building. In spite of the fact that the emphasis of today is upon cathedrals and religious atmosphere, buildings are little responsible for the life of the church. In fact, many groups were the strongest and had the finest meetings when only a hall or a schoolhouse was available. Today religious atmosphere is a very poor substitute for the presence of the living God.

But my informant was right when he suggested that it takes people to make a church. Not only carpenters and builders and stonemasons, but people from all walks of life, who reflect their religion in their occupation as they become obedient to the higher "vocation wherewith ye are called," that of being a disciple and a witness for Christ.

A church is fundamentally a group of people, but not any group of people. Peter informs us that this group is composed of individuals who are "like living stones that are being built up into a spiritual house." Living stones, once dead, but now made alive. "And you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins."

Furthermore, Paul declares that this group of people is bound together by sources of unity. 1 Corinthians 12:4-6: "Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit. And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord. And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all." Another unifying factor is a sane interpretation of the preceding.

However, all do not possess all gifts. "Are all apostles? are all prophets? . . . have all the gifts of healing? do all speak with tongues? do all interpret? But covet earnestly the best gifts."

These people have a diversity of gifts of the Spirit (1 Cor. 12:8): "For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit; to another faith by the same Spirit; to another the gifts of healing by the same Spirit"; to another the working of miracles, prophecy, discerning of spirits, kinds of tongues, interpretation of tongues. Also, 1 Corinthians 12:28: "And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues." For the body is not one member, but many. So there is need for the gifts of each individual in the church—preachers, teachers, deacons, treasurers, secretaries, janitors, etc., each contributing to the whole.

Activity does not mean profitableness. Many churches are active enough, but that does not make a church in the true sense. It is people, working together, for the salvation of others. God is not interested in a little, exclusive family; nor in an institution based upon preserving itself by a multitude of activities for the raising of the church budget; nor in providing a social life for its members. The work of the church is far nobler than that—the rescuing of those perishing. Jesus came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance. He said that the well need not a physician, but those who are sick. So the object of the church is to reach all those who need Christ, which is everyone; for there is "no other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." This means sinners and religionists who have been climbing up some other way than the way of Christ. We can never win them by isolation. If we could, the mediæval monks would have been on the right trail. Jesus mixed with the people. The marriage in Cana—woman by the well in Samaria—the feast of Zacchæus. He said: "For John came neither eating nor drinking, and they say, He hath a devil. The Son of man came eating and drinking, and they say, Behold a man gluttonous, and a winebibber, a friend of publicans and sinners." Jesus went after them. With His intimate circle there were fellowship, prayer, and teaching which resulted in going forth to "seek and to save them which are lost."

Church membership has been mistreated by both large and small churches. It has been taken lightly, almost as an end in itself, rather than a means to an end. Church membership is no guarantee of getting into the kingdom of God. Church membership means subscribing to the beliefs of that church and pledging your physical and financial resources to the work, in order that others might come to the knowledge of the life there is in Christ.

Church loyalty is something which we must learn all over again. No concentrated work can be carried on by drifters. True loyalty means being loyal even when we cannot have our own way.

Running away doesn't help a situation at all. If things do not seem to be right, then help comes from facing the situation and not running from it. If you have some truth others do not possess, share it. If an unpleasant situation has arisen, remedy it. If there is a financial obligation, meet it. The question for each of us is this, What kind of a church would this church be if every member were as I? Good member, good church. Bad member, bad church. Spiritual member, spiritual church. Running away, no church.

What makes a church? You make the church. What else is there to it? The church is a reflection of what I am. Criticism of the church is a criticism of myself. To have the kind of a church each of us wants, be that kind of a member yourself and spread your influence, like leaven, into the rest of the group. After all, this is just as much a part of the church which Jesus purchased with His blood as any other. It demands the best that you are, and the best that you have for it.—Paul E. Friedmann in The Herald of Life,

When Men Are Old We Need Them Most

By the Editor

THE man was right! Life does begin at forty—or thereabouts. To some it opens a little sooner—or a little later. But speaking of men and women in the mass, I think he's right, the man who wrote: "Life Begins at Forty."

To a few, of course, life never begins at all. It remains stationary at springtime, at playtime, at carefree, thoughtless, irresponsible time. Such people never really "grow up." They are always children, led by the hand of those who are their elders in experience and in the sensing of responsibility, although possibly younger than themselves in years.

I once knew a man who spent the major part of eight decades planning how to spend the money he was about to make out of the inventions he would perfect tomorrow! He spent his whole life playing, as a child plays with toy tools. His wife, poor tired soul! raised and educated the children! And she made real men and real women out of them, too!—while her husband played and dreamed in the sun.

At the other extreme we find a limited group composed of child-grown-ups. They were never children in reality. They began as men and women and they will end as men and women. My pity goes out to such unnatural maturity. They should have had their playtime, their fun and frolic and joyous abandonment, their irresponsible frivolity. God intended it that way. In the land of the golden future "the streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing." I like that idea. That's the way life should start out—dependent, yes! but carefree and happy always. Labor, responsibility, and the solving of knotty problems will come all too soon anyway. Let the children play and laugh and sing! That is their province, that is their right!

Between these two smaller divisions of mankind stands the mass of humanity—the bulk of the earth-family. And it is to this vast group that we should direct our studious attention if we would learn the real richness of life.

Efforts to emasculate the United States Constitution by elimination of Supreme Court Justices over 70 have directed public attention to the perennial problem first treated adequately by Dr. Walter B. Pitkin in his best-selling "Life Begins at Forty." The editor of The Restitution Herald, therefore, now takes issue with the notion that age necessarily means senile incompetence.

So dense are the rosy-hued mists that shroud the Valley of Life from the eyes of Youth, that we cannot tell either the day or the hour that marked our passing out of the perpetual sunshine of Childland into the ever-increasing cloudiness of Maturity. Yesterday we were children—today we are men and women. That's all we are sure of.

We had the idea that when our school days were over we would enter at once upon a conquering career in a world that had been impatiently waiting for us to arrive in it! There were so many things that needed righting! Everything was in a mess. We couldn't see how thinking people could have allowed matters to come to such a pass!

"But just you wait!" we said to ourselves, "we'll soon straighten all this out! What the world needs is brains, not brawn! These people who have been running things are old fogies! They are away behind the times! We'll bring the world up to date if they'll give us half a chance!"

And we entered upon our self-imposed task of world-reform with zealous enthusiasm and tireless energy.

Then we fell in love. We married. We started to build a home and to establish a family. The children came. Before we realized just what had happened our sons and daughters were coming home from college to spend their vacations. Life was slipping through our fingers with alarming rapidity. We were growing old!

No, we had not "set the world on fire" as we had planned to do. Things seemed in much the same condition as they were when we started out on our campaign to remake civilization. We had lived much as our fathers and mothers had lived. We had performed our share of the world's work, we had raised and educated our families, we had provided for our children's future and for our own security in old age so far as we were able to do, much as our parents had done before us. And that was about all we could claim for ourselves. (Please turn to page 16)

Christ's Dignity Impugned by Communism

"There was given unto him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies."—Revelation 13:5.

CHICAGO, March 11.—Addressing the fourth annual Woman Congress in its closing sessions today, Miss Mary Duffy of Newark, New Jersey, Supreme Regent of the Catholic Daughters of America, declared:

"Never in the history of the world have we seen Christ's dignity impugned as it is today. Never in the history of mankind has there been such a black tide of blasphemous rebellion against the authority of God as is sweeping the country today. The subversive already is in our midst. It is sweeping into every society. Communism affronts our civilization."

Communism, she pointed out, is diametrically opposed to all religion. It is a well-known fact, she said, that many educational institutions are filled with the forces of radicalism.

Such utterances as these, strongly defending both the dignity and the sonship of Christ, coming from Roman Catholic sources, should serve to dampen the enthusiastic contentions of those who look for the Antichrist, "who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped" (2 Thess. 2:4), to arise, or to have already arisen, in the Catholic Church. The Antichrist shall not "regard" (respect or honor) "the God of his fathers" (Dan. 11:37). The "fathers" are declared to be Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob (Acts 3:13). To disregard the "God of his fathers" would, therefore, involve disregard for the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and identify the king who "shall exalt himself, and magnify himself above every god, and shall speak marvellous things against the God of gods" (Dan. 11:36), as of the Israelites, who alone have called Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob "the fathers."

Reno Divorce Held Invalid

"Where is the bill of your mother's divorcement?"—Isaiah 50:1.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., March 11.—Again the validity of a divorce granted under the laws of Nevada has been denied. Judge E. C. Creel ruled in Jefferson (Birmingham) Circuit Court today that Alabama courts were not bound to recognize a divorce decree issued in Reno. His decision was based upon the same contention that has been made in every case in which the validity of a Reno divorce has been called in question in other states, i. e., that under the Alabama law a Reno divorce is not valid unless a person goes to the Nevada city with intentions of making that a permanent residence, and that the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution does not bind a court to recognize a divorce granted in any other State except in the State of marital domicile.

It is said by legal authorities that the decision of Judge Creel is in harmony with the decision of every other judge in all states where similar test cases have been brought up. Aside from the immoral implications involved in these decisions, the legal status of children born to parents, one or both of whom were depending on a Reno divorce for their right to remarry, is questionable. In some states children born to parents who had obtained a Nevada or a Mexican divorce have been declared to have been born out of wedlock and not entitled to inherit property as legitimate heirs.

Such confusion in the enactment and enforcement of law, which frequently brings so much suffering and shame upon innocent children, will end forever when righteousness and truth abound under the King of kings!

The answer to last week's question will be found in Acts 13:22 and Acts 2:34.

"Lie Detector" Sends Man to Chair

"He shall not judge after the sight of his eyes."

CHICAGO, March 13.—His last appeal for reprieve denied because of the testimony of the polygraph, Joseph Rappaport, condemned murderer and "dope" peddler, went to his death in the electric chair in this city. He had been reprieved four times before by Gov. Horner, but the Governor refused to extend clemency again when the so-called "lie detector" indicated that Rappaport was not telling the truth when he asserted his innocence of the murder of Max Dent, a Government informer. No such mechanical device will be required to determine the innocence or guilt of the accused in the kingdom of God.

Paul at Mars' Hill

By Elizabeth A. Reed

"For as I passed by, and beheld your devotions, I found an altar with this inscription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you."—Paul.

THE public address delivered by the Apostle at Mars' Hill is one of the most remarkable and far-reaching discourses of which we have any knowledge. It is an outline of all the fundamental doctrines of the Christian faith and lies at the foundations of all scientific knowledge. Governments are founded upon the principles enunciated by the Apostle, and man's hope of a future life is based upon the solution of the great problem here set before the philosophers of ancient Greece.

Mars' Hill was the seat of learning, the place where all the different systems of philosophy and religion were centered. It was the popular resort of the adherents of all the various systems current in Greece. Epicureans, Stoics, and Academicians, the three leading sects of Greek philosophy and mythology, here congregated. The Apostle Paul presented a solution of the problems of religion, philosophy, and politics which at once developed opposition on the part of some and faith by others.

His first statement is that he found the Athenians too religious; in other words, adhering too much to ceremonies. He says, "As I passed by, and beheld your devotions, I found an altar with this inscription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you." The whole world of religious thought had reached the one conclusion and had erected an altar expressive of its faith: "To the Unknown God." It is remarkable that this very phrase is in the original Greek the identical word which is now so popular in many minds, and is supposed to belong to scientific thought, "agnosticism"; agnoostoo. The philosophers of ancient Greece and the modern scientists of Europe and America have all adopted the same word, "agnostic." Nineteen centuries of time have passed between the religious conclusions of the Athenians and the conclusions of certain scientists of our day.

The next point made by the Apostle is that the God who is entitled to our worship is the Creator of heaven and earth. "God that made the world and all things therein, seeing that he is Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands, neither is worshipped by men's hands, as though he needed any thing, seeing he giveth to all life, and breath, and all things." This announcement is a volume in a few words. The world did not originate itself, but was created by an all-wise Intelligence, and He who created the heavens and the earth dwelleth not in temples made with hands. His existence cannot be compressed within the narrow walls built by men. The universe itself is the great temple in which dwells the eternal Spirit, and for the one sublime reason of His all-pervading existence in the great temple of the universe, the divine Spirit cannot be worshiped with man's hands. "Seeing that he giveth to all life, and breath, and all things; and hath made of one blood all the nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek after the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us."

The principles embodied in the Declaration of Independence, which is supposed to be a model of political simplicity and man's equality, are clearly stated above by the Apostle in his wonderful speech before the Athenian philosophers. In fact, the Declaration of Independence is almost word for word taken from this part of the Apostle's speech at Mars' Hill, in which is presented the sublime truth that all men are made of one blood and stand upon an equality, supported by one eternal, omnipotent Spirit, and the times of their habitation are appointed, beyond whose bounds they cannot pass.

After setting forth the great truth of human equality, and that men should realize the magnitude and splendor of the creation as manifested in the heaven and earth, the Apostle makes the sublime statement, "For in him we live, and move, and have our being." Men may talk of law, of system, and of nature, and undertake to divest the world of God, yet they must be brought back to this sublime and fundamental truth that in God we live and move and have our being. Universal consciousness, universal mind, pervade the entire temple of the infinite Spirit. Man can only act as he is acted upon by that eternal current of spirit force which animates and directs the great mass of worlds as well as it controls circumstances and enlightens man. Man is but a modified reflex of that eternal Mind which environs him and which is the Cause of his being. Indeed the whole mechanism of creation and all that pertains to natural laws are but expressions of the sublime truth that man, created in the image of God, has his existence and all his mental operations within the sphere of that eternal current of spirit force which animates and fills the universe.

"In him we live, and move, and have our being." All systems of philosophy and religion that do not embrace this truth fall short of the majesty and grandeur of our existence and of God as the Creator of all things.

The Apostle then refers to the poets who have been inspired by the same eternal truth (Please turn to page 10)

Youth and the Church

THERE is a hopelessness being voiced on every hand today by leaders of thought and action in all the nations of earth. Man has come to grave questions for which no man has produced an answer that answers. The church likewise has come to a parting of the ways. She must either go on to a declaration of the cure for earth's ills and lead the way out, or go backward to failure and oblivion. The great question which she is confronting is, "Has the professed church of Christ reached her zenith? Must she now give way to a new order in religion?"

On every hand the affairs of men point to suspicion and uncertainty. Utter chaos is staring civilization in the face, and there seems no way out so far as the planning of man is concerned. Everything is tending toward an inevitable destruction by the hand of man, whose heart is filled with hatred, rebellion, and revolt. Every institution which man has built up to combat war and bloodshed has thus far failed to accomplish its purpose. At the time of man's highest achievements in building up the machinery of world peace, the god of war laughs him and his planning to scorn, and drives him on to a new welter of blood and misery. The heights of achievement in science are turned in the hands of man to his own destruction and the destruction of his fellow men. There seems to be no stopping of the ways of greed and selfishness of man's heart. Because of this a fatalism and despair has laid hold of the hearts of men.

It is in the hands of Christian youth to bring a message of hope to the world in no uncertain tones. This is the task set before them by God Himself. The greatest challenge to Christian fortitude and reality is now breathed into the attentive ear of the forces of Christianity, and this challenge must and will be answered by the youth now stepping out upon the scene of action. Disaster is likewise stalking the church. The enemy has taken to the submarine method to destroy her. Agnosticism, skepticism, and infidelity have in this our day climbed up into the pulpits of the land, and are seeking to ruin the vitality of faith.

These disintegrating forces must be met and are being met by the stalwart Christian youth who have entered the armies of the Lord. They are in every land, and speak in nearly every tongue. They are marked by God as His own chosen soldiery for this hour.

Probably the most outstanding evidence of the working of the forces of destruction in the midst of the modern church is the late movement in many denominations to deny and deery the efficacy and need of the foreign missionary work. Christ has been crucified again in the house of His friends. Shame has been heavily laid upon Him in the face of the enemy by the traitorous abandonment of the missionary enterprise in many of the leading Protestant denominations. A cringing surrender has been made before the oncoming forces of paganism and modern criticism with respect to carrying out the great commission of Christ, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." The youth of Christ must snatch this drooping banner, and plant it anew in the very frontier posts of the world. They must see that that banner never dips again until the task of giving the gospel to the whole world in this last generation is finished.

THE SACRIFICIAL SPIRIT

Thank God, in every land today we see Christian youth doing this very thing. Arising in the strength of young manhood and womanhood, they are demonstrating that if the plans of man have broken down, the plans of God are building up a fast finishing work. No finer spirit has ever been seen than this sacrificial spirit, serving to the point of suffering in the far-flung fields of earth. Through Christ they are overcoming. They are the spiritual torchbearers of this day of darkness, trouble, and alarm.

Somehow, out of the debacle in which they see the world has fallen, these Christian youth have caught the vision of the worthlessness of amassed wealth. They spurn a career of self-seeking. As they have looked over the so-called powerful of earth, they have found nothing to charm them or entice them into a similar ruthless ignoring of the rights and feelings and safety of others. They have looked away to One who personified the love and goodness of God. They have found a more lasting satisfaction in being even a door-keeper in the house of God than to possess such fleeting fame as the world offers. They have found in the renewed hopes and the perfect salvation, which through Christ they have brought to broken and darkened lives, more to glory in than in all else besides.

God has always depended on and used the hosts of youth for every advance move of His great cause of salvation. His own dear Son was a youthful Savior, even when He came to the cross. From the time of Abel, the first young man before whom was placed the supreme test, to the present hour, God has chosen youth to do His bidding and to achieve the hard tasks for His cause. In every generation of the history of God's people, the outstanding man or woman of the hour was picked by God in his youth. Always have there been plenty of youthful lives who eschewed the pleasures and glories of this world for the more lasting glories of achievement for God.

CALLED OF GOD

As we go down through that marvelous array of the faithful recorded on the honor roll of faith, as found in the 11th chapter of Hebrews, we find that in every case these men and women were called of God in their youth, and they answered quickly to His voice. What marvelous works have they wrought! Throughout all the endless ages of eternity their faithfulness will be remembered and declared. Their names are written high in the books of God's kingdom, and there they will remain for eternity. How worthless is the fame and power of man in the light of that true fame which is held out to every believing, surrendered, consecrated child of God!

Faithfulness is the twin brother of honesty. The true Christian will be the faithful Christian. "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life," is the statement of Scripture in which God clearly reveals His estimate of this glorious virtue. Never before was faithfulness in answering God's call so important to God and man as now. One writer has said: "A foe to God was ne'er true friend to man." How true that statement is today! To be faithful even though it may cost one's life is rare in these days, as compared with the earlier days of the Christian church.

I never think of faithfulness to God's call but that I am reminded of the following story which demonstrates a purity of faithfulness for which we should yearn:

In the museum of Algiers is a cast. It shows a slight figure, a face with veins all swollen, a poor mouth closed with a patient, determined expression, hands tied, legs swollen; and the protruding ribs are broken.

About three hundred seventy years ago a martyrdom took place, long considered legendary, but which was verified in 1853. An Arab baby was taken by Spanish soldiers and brought to Oran to be sold as a slave. The good vicar-general, Juan Caro, bought him and named him Geronimo. When he was eight years of age, some Arab slaves escaped from Oran, and, thinking to do the boy a kindness, took him with them.

For years he lived with his people as a Mohammedan, but the holy faith which through Juan Caro had been planted in the boy's heart had taken firm root and could not be destroyed. For twenty-five years he remained with the Arabs and then ran away and returned to the vicar-general. "Because I wish to live henceforth in the faith of the divine Savior," he said, "I returned to you." Juan Caro was delighted. He received the young Arab as a lost child.

Soon after, the Arab entered the Spanish Guard as a soldier, and after performing many brave acts received a worthy military position. He married, and for ten years nothing but happiness shone into his young life. He won the respect and confidence of all. He was Juan Caro's right-hand man, and his wife was a daughter to his adopted father.

GERONIMO IS CAPTURED

One bright May day in 1569 news came to Oran that a small Arab encampment was a short distance away. The rumor did not seem important. A handful of Spaniards could easily manage the Arabs, at least so thought Geronimo. Taking nine soldiers, he manned a little boat and rowed out of the safe harbor, along the blue sea past the coral fishery of Mersal-Kebir. Suddenly two Moorish brigantines which had been lying in wait gave chase and ran them down. The nine soldiers escaped; but Geronimo, who was a marked man, was seized and carried to Euldij Ali, the Calabrian renegade. A great cry spread among the Arabs through Algeria that the apostate was captured. The Moors who knew his history made a solemn vow that they would restore him to his old religion.

For this they sent Marabouts to convert him with arguments and fair promises, but they returned discomfited to Euldij Ali. Another method was now tried. Geronimo was loaded with chains, treated with the utmost cruelty, and when faint from torture and scarcely able to speak, the Marabouts stood around him offering him liberty, power, honor, and riches. No offer, however, made him deny his faith, no longing for freedom made him forswear for one single moment his religion. Once with a voice so weak it could scarcely be heard, he said, "They think they will make me a Mohammedan, but that they shall never do, even if they kill me."

For four months Euldij Ali gloated over the daily tortures he was inflicting on Geronimo. At last the sameness of cruelty palled upon him. He determined to invent a new and more hideous revenge for the stubbornness of his captive. One morning the desired idea came to him. Examining the works of a fort by the gate of Babel-Oned, he saw a block of beton standing by the great stones. This block was a mold in the shape of the immense stones, filled with concrete. When the concrete was sufficiently hardened, the wall was to be built with it.

Here was the height of torture. Here was the most exquisitely painful death man might devise! The dog of a slave should be laid in a similar mold, the liquid plaster poured over him, and the renegade, built alive into the wall, should be converted into stone. Calling a mason, he said, "Michel, you see this empty mold of beton? For the present leave it; I have a mind to make beton of that dog of Osan who refuses to come back to the faith of Islam."

The poor mason finished his day's work with a sad heart. As soon as he entered the prison where Geronimo was a captive, he informed him of Euldij Ali's intention. Geronimo calmly answered: "God's holy will be done. Let not those miserable men think they will frighten me out of the faith of Christ by the idea of this cruel death. May my blessed Savior only pardon my sins and preserve my soul!"

The whole of that night the brave young Arab spent in prayer and preparation for the tortures which he knew were awaiting him. Between two and three o'clock the next morning a guard summoned him to the Pasha's presence, where stood a great multitude of Turks and Arabs in their gorgeous robes. He was then dragged to the gate of Babel-Oned, and beaten all the way. Euldij Ali addressed him slowly and clearly. He pointed out every detail of the fearful death, showed him the block of beton, and then said, "Do you still refuse to return to the faith of Islam?"

"I am a Christian, and as a Christian I will die," was Geronimo's answer. (Please turn to Page 11)

Life Insurance

By Gerald L. Cooper

A FEW days ago I bought a new fountain pen with a visible ink supply. It reminded me of the advertisements that appeared in the newspapers when the pens first began to be used generally. These advertisements showed a salesman selling his wares, just beginning to make the sale, and getting his customer to sign on "the dotted line," and the pen went dry. A very embarrassing circumstance, said the advertisement, and then proceeded to show the advisability of a pen with the visible ink supply. Now you may wonder just what this has to do with Christian living. It is just this. We are all salesmen, life insurance salesmen, not the kind of life insurance we generally think of, but the life insurance of Christ. I would like to show you, if I may, a few of the things that we must do to be good salesmen, how we can tell if our supply of "ink" and other materials is holding out, and how we can earn a bonus for ourselves.

In John 3:1-17 we are told the story of Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews. He came to Jesus by night and inquired of Him the things necessary for the performing of the miracles which Jesus had been performing, and also the requisites for life. Then Jesus launched forth on one of His great sermons, and explained to him the necessity of "being born again." Naturally, this puzzled Nicodemus even as it would puzzle you and me, and he inquired how this thing could be done. Jesus answered and said: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God." Then He explained to him how God, through His great love, had given to the world His Son, and that all who believed on Him "should not perish, but have everlasting life."

Again we find the story of a rich young man who came to Jesus and inquired whereof he could gain eternal life. The Master said that if he would enter life, to keep the commandments, and proceeded to read the commandments to him: "Thou shalt do no murder, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Honour thy father and mother, and, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." The young man replied that he had done all these things, and Jesus told him to go and sell what he had and give it to the poor. When the young man heard this, he was very much disappointed, for he was rich and hated to part with his wealth.

Now, we have been told, by the Master Himself, some of the things that we must do to gain this life insurance of which I told you. But we must be sure our "pens are filled." I will now try to give you some of the things that seem to us to be enough to gain life, but really are not sufficient for life eternal. We have already learned about the commandments, that it is possible to live up to all of them and yet not be saved, even as the rich young man. Yes, and there are other things that we do which will not gain us eternal life, unless we are "born again," and "sell all we have, and give to the poor."

Some of these are: Being a good church member. Yes, we could be good church members, and yet not be saved, according to the standards set by our Lord. Too many people have this idea, that if they just have their names on a church book that is a pass to eternal life. Again, some believe that just being baptized is sufficient. No doubt some may be shocked at my saying this, but if you will remember the words of Peter in Acts 2:11, he said repent, and be baptized. I have known many cases where people have been baptized, and have never darkened the church door again, nor assisted in any way. No, I am afraid just being baptized alone will not save anyone. Neither will our being "good moral persons" avail us anything, unless, of course, we take the name of Christ along with our good actions. Yes, and I even believe that we can pray and not gain that eternal life. The Pharisees prayed, and Jesus condemned them severely. If we pray in faith, believing that our prayer will be answered according to God's will, then that is a different proposition. So you see there are a number of things that we can do that seem good to man, that will not give to us the coveted life insurance contract of life eternal.

Now to get back to what Jesus told Nicodemus, "Ye must be born again." It is imperative that we die to our old life of sin before accepting the new life of Christ. Then in order to have life of any sort we must be reborn into that new life in Christ. We must change the character of our lives as well as our reputations.

Then if we would have the assurance of being awarded that wonderful life insurance contract of which I have been writing, we must do all the things that I have mentioned, and then have that rebirth in Christ. That is, we must keep the commandments; we must belong to a church; we must be baptized, repenting before doing so; we must do everything that we do for the good of man in the name of Christ and for Him, and not for our personal glory; we must pray to God, believing in prayer, and that it will be answered as God wills. Then we must be born again, become complete new creatures in Christ and do the things which are set forth in the Scriptures for us to do.

When Jesus had told the rich young man the things he must do to inherit eternal life, He then said that it would be very difficult for the rich to enter the kingdom of heaven. The disciples, not understanding, asked who would be saved. The Master replied that with God all things are possible! So it is with our rebirth, or the rebirth of any sinner whom we know. We think that it is almost impossible for us or some one we know to ever become as Christ commanded, but I say unto you, even as Christ said unto the rich young man, that with God all things are possible! So, my friends, are you assured within your mind that you will attain unto this great eternal life, or do you think that perhaps you need to be reborn, to come very much closer to Christ, and live for Him? Again, perhaps you have never even tried to do any of these things which I have mentioned. If that is the case you had better be getting a new "pen," and be sure of getting one with a visible ink supply, that is, join Christ and join Him right, be reborn completely, and your bonus will be a reward of one of Christ's life insurance contracts.

And even as the power of God makes new men out of old ones with His zeal and ardor, after the efforts of men have failed, so will the zeal of the Lord of Hosts bring about the great kingdom which we are so anxiously awaiting. May this great zeal work within each of us, so that we may recognize it, obey its impulse, and be ready for that great kingdom, is the prayer of this humble servant.

The Fellowship of Suffering

FELLOWSHIP, according to one dictionary definition, is "association, especially of a friendly character; comradeship; common interest, as in fraternal orders"; and according to another dictionary, "a kindred feeling—feeling or suffering shared with another—joint interest—sympathy; the estate or condition of sharing in common; intimate association."

In ecclesial circles there is a tendency to limit the application of the word "fellowship" to sharing in the ordinance of the Lord's Supper, the communion of breaking bread and drinking wine in obedience to the Lord's command. This is altogether too narrow a view, and the idea expressed in the dictionary is nearer to the idea in the minds of the biblical writers.

Because of this narrow view of the fellowship there are many brethren and sisters who think their duty is done completely if they attend regularly upon the ordinance of breaking bread and contribute a small sum regularly (or it may be occasionally) to the ecclesial funds. They do not manifest much, if any, interest in the general welfare or the particular circumstances of the other members. They do not attend other meetings than that for the breaking of bread. They do not visit their brethren and sisters in their homes. They do not take a personal interest in the sick or distressed, and are not given to hospitality.

In my wide and active acquaintance with the brotherhood on both sides of the Atlantic for half a century I have had abundant opportunity to observe all sorts and conditions of brethren and sisters, and to share in some degree in almost every kind of ecclesial activities and problems. The thoughts expressed in this article are the result of that observation and experience. As the title indicates, they will be confined mostly to fellowship in suffering, though the general principles will apply equally to fellowship in happiness and every other aspect of ecclesial activity and emotion.

The word "fellowship" occurs a number of times in the New Testament, and the general meaning may be seen readily from them. Philippians 1:5 speaks of "fellowship in the gospel." In 1 John 1:3 the Apostle says, "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us: and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ." In verse

7 he says, "If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another." Acts 2:42 says of those added to the church on the day of Pentecost that they "continued stedfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers." Here the fellowship is spoken of as distinct from the breaking of bread. In 2 Corinthians 8:4 Paul says that the churches of Macedonia prayed him to receive their gift and take upon him "the fellowship of the ministering to the saints." In Philippians 3:10 Paul says that one of the things he strove to know was "the fellowship of his (that is, Christ's) sufferings."

The same general idea of fellowship is conveyed by other words, such as "partakers," or "sharers," and "companions." In 1 Peter 4:13 the Apostle says, "Rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings." In Hebrews 2:14 the Apostle says, "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers (R. V., sharers) in flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part (R. V., "was a sharer") in the same." In Revelation 1:9 John says, "I John, who also am your brother, and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ." In Hebrews 10:32, 33 the Apostle speaks of some who "endured a great fight of afflictions; partly, whilst ye were made a gazing-stock both by reproaches and afflictions; and partly, whilst ye became companions of them that were so used." In all these instances the general idea of community of interest and activity is expressed, and in some of them the particular application of fellowship to sufferings, both those of Christ and those of the saints.

Personal sufferings may be divided into four classes: physical, mental, economic, and judicial. The physical are manifested in sickness, infirmity, and old age; the mental, in distress over the universal problem of evil and particular instances of personal grief, as, for example, the indifference or loss of friends; the economic, in the struggle to make ends meet, and the paucity of the necessities of life through lack or insufficiency of employment, or loss of home or goods; and the judicial, in coming into conflict with the law of the land. In all these kinds of suffering there is the opportunity for the manifestation of Christian fellowship, and the Lord Jesus referred to them in the parable of the sheep and the goats: "And he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left. Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: for I was an hungred, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in: naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me. Then shall the righteous answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungred, and fed thee? or thirsty, and gave thee drink? When saw we thee a stranger, and took thee in? or naked, and clothed thee? Or when saw we thee sick, or in prison, and came unto thee? And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily, I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me" (Matt. 25:33-40).

Such an attitude as the Lord commends is, of course, the right one for the brethren and sisters to manifest toward those who are in any of these kinds of suffering; but do they always do it? If they possess the right Christian spirit they should. Even a worldly poet has said, "A fellow-feeling makes us wondrous kind." The apostolic figure of the church of Christ as a body of which the individuals are members, or parts, illustrates this true Christian spirit, so that "there should be no schism in the body; but that the members should have the same care one for another. And whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; or one member be honoured, all the members rejoice with it" (1 Cor. 12:25, 26).

This sympathetic fellowship, which finds its expression in "ministering to the saints," may be undertaken personally or by organization of ecclesia or community. As regards mental suffering, it is mainly a personal matter, where one saint gives words of comfort and hope, and endeavors to remove as far as possible the grounds of the distress. In other instances it is by contribution of goods or financial aid, and is more often an ecclesial or community concern. In any case, the apostolic exhortation applies: "He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully. Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give, not grudgingly, or of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful giver" (2 Cor. 9:6, 7). It is not the amount of the contribution that makes it acceptable in the sight of God, but the spirit in which it is given, and its relation to one's ability to give. The Lord's reference to the poor widow who cast into the treasury two mites, while the rich cast in large gifts, shows that it is not the amount, but the spirit that counts: "Of a truth I say unto you, that this poor widow hath cast in more than they all: for all these have of their abundance cast in unto the offerings of God: but she of her penury hath cast in all the living that she had" (Luke 21:3, 4). The same idea is expressed in the slogan of some modern welfare drives: "Give till it hurts." And David said, "Neither will I offer burnt offerings unto the Lord my God of that which cost me nothing."

It frequently happens that those in the best circumstances are least sympathetic with those who are in any form of suffering; those who either are or have been in similar circumstances are best able to sympathize and most ready to help. I know of one English brother who, when he was threatened with the sale of his household goods, asked help of a wealthy brother who had a good business and held high office in the ecclesia to which both belonged, and he not only did not receive any help, but was greeted with the remark: "Let them sell." James refers to this kind of brother when he says: "What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? can faith save him? If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?" (James 2:14-16). I have known of others who have helped, even beyond their means, and have tried to keep the left hand from knowing what the right hand was doing.

The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews points out that it is because Jesus has passed through all forms of human experience that He is able to succor those who are in need. Some classical writers express the same thought, as, for instance, when Virgil makes Queen Dido say, "Not being unacquainted with suffering, I learn to help those who suffer."

While personal giving in case of need is to be commended, it is also well that there are ecclesial and community organizations for relief. There is, however, always a possibility of such becoming formal, mechanical, and actually unsympathetic. On the other hand, there is also the possibility of there being impostors and "chiselers." Both these evils should be guarded against. Occasionally, warnings are published in our magazines against impostors who have preyed upon, or attempted to prey upon, the brethren. I remember one worthy brother who told me that one day a man came to his home with a story that raised suspicions, and he decided to "try the spirit." He said, "Of course, you believe in the immortality of the soul?" "Oh yes," was the reply, "that is one of my cardinal points." The brother said, "Well, if you are not gone from here right away, I'll call a policeman." He was soon gone. I remember another instance in which a sister wrote to me about the terrible straits she was in, and when I suggested to a brother that it was a case for help, he told me he was sending her regularly twenty dollars a month. Yes, there are impostors and chiselers, unfortunately.

On the other hand, there is always the danger of ecclesial or community organizations becoming like some worldly welfare agencies: there is liable to be a cold, unsympathetic dispensing of relief, and the establishment of a routine investigation so humiliating that brethren and sisters would rather suffer than seek aid. Welfare organizations request from their applicants answers to very humiliating questionnaires, many of the items of which are entirely unnecessary and even irrelevant, so that persons with any self-respect will not submit to it. I have known instances of relief funds of ecclesias which have been in the hands of similar cold and unsympathetic managers. Such "charity" is not the charity agape of 1 Corinthians 13, which the Revised Version has more correctly rendered "love." The word "charity" has become a synonym for cold, unsympathetic help. I saw a sign in a drug store window one summer which read, "Lemonade, cold as charity."

There cannot be any hard and fast rule; there must be both personal and ecclesial relief; and in each case there should be first the proper Christian spirit; and secondly, a discriminating discernment of the special conditions. It may be something that can await formal consideration, or it may be an emergency that needs special and immediate attention—cases of which will perhaps be readily called to mind, when it would spell disaster to wait to submit the case to a committee; aid must then be rendered at once, trusting to investigation afterward if necessary. While there are impostors and chisellers, there are also honest brethren and sisters who may be in constant need of help, or who may at times be in special and urgent need.

In case of physical suffering, sickness at home or in hospital, it may be that financial aid is needed, but in any case there is need of comfort and sympathy—"sick and in prison, and ye visited me." This is where the brotherhood is perhaps more lacking than in ministering to material needs. Excuses are made, such as being too busy; but usually time can be found for other things that minister to personal gratification. Sometimes, however, what is thought to be neglect, is really unawareness; the sick one does not let the brethren and sisters know. I remember reading a poem about Mrs. Huff being up the Miff tree; she was sick, and her pastor had not been to see her. When he learned casually that she was sick, he went to see her, and she was angry with him. He asked her if her doctor had been to see her. Of course he had. She had let her doctor know, but not her pastor; yet she was angry with him. Similar cases have happened in the brotherhood.

In conclusion, let us be reasonable. Let us not get into a cold, formal, cut-and-dried condition. Let us act with discretion, and let our fellowship in suffering be discriminating. Though there may be need to be careful not to aid impostors, let not this possibility lead us to become so suspicious as to neglect to do what is right and just to any whom we have known as honest brethren and sisters for maybe many years.—John W. Lea in The Faith.

Resolution

WITH the caption, A Practical New Year's Resolution, the following letter has been received from Roger W. Babson, the renowned economist and economic adviser:

First, let me say that I am not interested in any church or other institution just to keep it alive. Unless it performs a real service, it—like the famous fig tree—should die. There are so many good ways in which to use our time—and of time we have but a very limited amount—that we can do only a fraction of what we would like to do. Furthermore, I do not attend church primarily to be entertained or even "inspired." An eloquent preacher, an enticing choir, or a beautiful auditorium are all to the good; but they are not essential to me. Certainly no radio nor magazine can take the place of any church with a consecrated minister, priest, or rabbi. Why, then, do I go to church?

I perhaps go to church for selfish reasons. I enjoy my church as I enjoy my daily walk. I never listened to any priest or preacher from whom I could not learn something. I even enjoy a plain service of worship from the prayer book without any sermon. Yes, I sometimes attend a Quaker meeting with only silence. But to get good from churchgoing one must make it a habit. It is the systematic daily walks that do us good—not the occasional walk. Churchgoing is like advertising in one way. We must keep constantly and incessantly at it to make it pay. Then we can be guaranteed good dividends. In fact, were I a preacher, I would offer to refund in full the annual subscription to the church of anyone who after attending 75 per cent of the Sundays, feels that he has not got his money's worth.

There is another reason why I go to some church service every Sunday. This is to encourage my children and grandchildren to acquire the habit of churchgoing. We oldsters may check out before real trouble comes to our nation. But let me tell you that the younger generations will need to have something more permanent than real estate, bank accounts, insurance, or even democracy. Unless they have a sane spiritual foundation, they are licked. We can do for them far more by setting them an example of churchgoing than by bequeathing them lands, securities, or any other property. Moreover, I am just talking hard-boiled common sense. Go to Sunday school with them. Take an active interest in the young people's work of your church. It's the biggest thing you can do for your family.

Finally, I feel that it should lengthen your life to attend some church service regularly! When I say this, my business friends laugh at me; while my ministerial friends call me worldly minded for "giving a material reason why people should acquire the churchgoing habit." However, from many years' study of church attendance statistics, I am convinced that this habit tends to prolong the lives of regular churchgoers. But do not take my word for it. Study the experience tables of your own denomination. Yes, friends, make a New Year's resolution to acquire the churchgoing habit.

Roger W. Babson.

P. S. One thing more: Use your influence to have your children and grandchildren attend a small college of high standing, one to which some church denomination contributes. Avoid big colleges, especially those "popular" colleges which have thrown religion out the window.

THE MINISTER'S WIFE

DO YOU picture the minister's wife as a person with a host of friends? Let me show you another side to that picture! She indeed has friends but not of the sort that every woman craves. She longs for some one, a person that can be her friend, to the exclusion of all others. She desires some one she can pal with, talk to, be natural to, and pour out her heart to. Greatly as this may be desired, because of the very nature of the work her husband is engaged in, the ideal minister's wife cannot have this friend. Others pour out their hearts to her. She sympathizes with them and weeps with their sorrows. She herself can safely have no such friend. Her husband tries to understand. He is only a man. He does not know. He cannot sympathize because he does not realize the yearnings of a woman's heart. If you could only see her in her loneliness you would be more careful of her feelings. You wonder why she does not befriend you. You wonder why you are kept at a distance. Not because she wants to keep you there, but because her life, as the life of her husband, must be lived with equal attention paid to all and especial attention to none. Realizing this you as a member of the parish may find ways, little thoughtful ways, to cheer this lonely person and make her life more happy. I am sure she will be deeply grateful for your attention. Don't be discouraged if she doesn't "fall all over you." She can't . . . because she must be fair. Here is an illustration.

The wife of a friend of mine was ill. For many months she was unable to attend church or go about. Two women in the church, who previously had seen no more of the minister's wife than had other women in the church, decided to call on her regularly. They did this and every week spent an afternoon with her. She was pleased and very grateful to them. It was not long, however, before other women in the church were saying, "The minister's wife seems to be quite chummy with so and so. I wonder how they got to be so thick with her?" The fact of the case was that any women in the church would have been as welcome but they did not care enough to go out of their way.

I offer to the women of our parishes this plea for a little more understanding of this woman they so little understand—the minister's wife. Remember, this woman who sits and prays while her husband stands before the people is a little lonely many times. What have you done to make her load a little easier? She has tried to understand you. She has been patient and thoughtful in many ways. She doesn't complain to anyone. You would never have known if I had not told you in this article. What are you going to do about it? You have a minister's wife in your parish. Don't take this paper to her and ask her if this is so. She has too much pride to bluntly agree with me. She rises above it. She might laugh it off. She might say that I do not know. But I do know that down deep in the heart of her is a cry for friendship and a longing to be understood. Just try and be a little kinder than usual to the minister's wife.—Alfred B. Rollins in The World's Crisis.

of the all-pervading presence of an intelligent Source of power. "As certain also of your own poets have said, For we are also his offspring. Forasmuch then as we are the offspring of God, we ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, graven by art and man's device." All systems of worship based upon material forces and dependent upon forms and ceremonies and temples for the worship of Deity are insignificant and are dwarfed before the majesty of the truth that God is Spirit and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth. The time is past when the true worshiper must worship the Father at Jerusalem or at the mountains of Samaria. Not in ancient temples of the Grecian system of mythology, not in the great cathedrals of the Dark Ages, can worship be acceptable to the divine Father. God dwells not in temples made with hands. When we contemplate the supreme and infinite intelligence of God; when we reflect upon the infinitude of His power, of His wisdom, of His goodness, and of His love; when we realize that He is Spirit and that He is life and the Source of all things, and that back of the material universe the fountainhead of our existence is the invisible, all-pervading Force, we must concede that all forms and ceremonies are inconsistent with that sublime and simple worship that receives Him into a living temple not made with hands.

God is Spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth. What sublimity is here! What grandeur of thought! What wonderful inspiration, and what effect these utterances must have had upon the minds of those philosophers who could only see God from the materialist's view through the arts and devices of man! Nay, verily! the Most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands and is not worshiped by the images of gold and silver and stone, graven by the arts of man's device. This law of faith in the true worshiper shall reach that highest and grandest system of religious truth and will be in spirit unison with the divine and eternal One as was seen in the beautiful life and mission of the Son of God.

The flesh profiteth nothing. "It is the spirit that quickeneth. . . . The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." The indwelling Word will suspend all forms and ceremonies of man and will develop that spiritual relationship between the Creator and the child of worship where he can truly say, "Not my will, but thine, be done."

The Apostle further states that "the times of this ignorance God winked at, but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent, because he hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained, whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead." The eternal Spirit has passed over all the forms of ignorance and idolatry of the heathen world, and has forgiven the struggling millions for their departure from the simplicity of ancient worship; for they did not retain God in their minds, but gave themselves up to the worship of the hosts of heaven, the sun and moon and stars, and formed unto themselves various gods expressive of their passions and of their selfish motives. All this must give way. God has passed by all this, but now He has issued the supreme command that men should reform, and pass from these dumb idols and serve the true and living God, and conform to that sublime and simple truth that God is Spirit and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth. Reformation therefore is set before us in these expressive words. "I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister unto the Gentiles, unto whom I now send thee, to open their eyes and turn them from darkness to light and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins and an inheritance among them that are sanctified by the faith that is in me." This embodies the commission of the Apostle to the Gentile world, and when this brave knight of the cross went forth with this sublime message, the results were apparent through the cities of ancient Greece and Rome. Men forsook heathen altars; they ceased to offer victims to the different deities created by man, and they became worshipers of the living and true God and accepted the blessed hope of a resurrection from the dead through Jesus the Nazarene.

The wonderful announcement that God hath appointed a day in which He will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom He hath ordained is beyond question the grandest conception in the great discourse delivered by the Apostle at Mars' Hill. The world of nations is yet to be judged by Him who has tasted death for every man, who is the Mediator between God and man and the means of reconciliation; for it is declared that God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself, not imputing unto them their trespasses, and He committed unto the apostles the word of reconciliation.

God is not imputing unto the world its sins. He has opened a way of escape from the bondage of death and the thralldom of sin, and opened the portals to eternal life in Christ our Lord. Christ's resurrection was the confirming act of the infinite Spirit. He who slept in the realms of death arose triumphant, and held within His hand the seven stars, giving us the assurance; "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore." This "for evermore" life is offered to man through Jesus the Nazarene. What more could be offered to man? What better outline can we show of Christianity than is here presented by the Apostle in his public address at Mars' Hill? Their system of religious philosophy was turned against them. Their altar was a confession of their lack of faith, and all religious truth had culminated in a marble shaft on which was written these words: "To the unknown God." The Apostle assured them that the infinite One had created the world, that in Him we live and move and have our being, that all men are created free and equal, and that the eternal Spirit dwells not in human temples made by hands, that all men must reform from idolatry and must conform to the simple truth breathed out in the past systems of nature and revealed to us in the life and message of Christ, and that He is to judge the world in righteousness and bring the final victory to humanity through the Nazarene who was dead and was raised to life and is yet to rule the world in righteousness and perfect the great plan enunciated from the beginning when God purposed in the ages the redemption of the world from the curse of sin and presented to us in promise and prophecy the complete picture of the world redeemed and man restored from death to the eternal life extended to those who walk in the paths of life and light and truth.

"As you will," replied the Pasha. Pointing to the beton, he said, "Then here shall you be buried alive."

"Do your will. Death shall not make me abandon my faith."

The Pasha raised his hand. The soldiers stepped forward and removed the chain from the prisoner's leg. His hands were bound behind his back, his legs crossed and tied together. Then lifting the poor man, they laid him face downward in the mold. A renegade Spaniard, Tamingo, desiring to show how fervent a Mohammedan he was, jumped on Geronimo's body and broke his ribs. This act so pleased Euldij Ali that others followed his example. The plaster was then poured over Geronimo, and the brave Christian was suffocated.

Three hundred years later the noble Arab's martyrdom was brought to light, and the story verified. In the museum of Algiers is the cast. He was "faithful unto death." We are not all called to such tests of faithfulness, but we are all tested in some way to manifest our endurance.

The youthful Christian believer today is to give witness of his communion with Christ by his ability to answer God's call and to do difficult things. The power of the resurrection must be proved in difficult enterprises. This is the challenging opportunity of this trouble-filled hour.

"HE WAS A CHRISTIAN!"

John Smith, the man whose sacrificial piety has left such a firm seal upon hundreds of Harrovians, was once speaking of some display of moral courage to an old pupil, who remarked: "That was very difficult. I wonder he could do it." "Difficult?" answered John Smith, "Difficult? He was a Christian!" That is the Christian and apostolic tone—that is the apostolic spirit. The apostles faced their great burdens and the changes and uncertainties of their lives in the faith that they had sufficient equipment for every encounter, and that every frowning difficulty would be only a privileged opportunity for additional conquest. This apostolic experience, however, was backed up by an apostolic consecration (Gal. 2:20).

The time has come for a new manifestation of faithfulness to God and to His call on the part of the Christian youth of the world. This is God's chosen time for the fulfillment of all His Word and the great triumph of His kingdom.—Louis K. Dickson in Signs of the Times.

Unforgettable Scenes

Without the faculty of memory you would lose your identity. If memory ceased your life would be flat and colorless, the person you are today would be unconnected with the person you were yesterday. Your deepest happinesses are bound up by your ability to remember. In the next life you might just as well be resurrected some one else if you have forgotten this life and all its crowding days. He that "inhabith eternity" remembers all. In His mind is stored up the happenings of eternity. Like begets like. We are children of God, waiting for the birth, resurrection, when we "shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption" (Rom. 8:21), and "then shall I know even as also I am known" (1 Cor. 13:12). A good memory is a God-given and godlike gift.

Like other gifts of God, memory must be carefully cultivated, and then "God giveth the increase." Facts, scenes, persons, things, that you wish to remember should be associated with other facts, scenes, persons, things. And then the impressions on your brain are deepened by repetition in your mind of what you wish to remember. The better your memory, the more you really live.

Dip into your mind and bring forth some of the wonderful experiences of your life. Would you care ever to lose the memory of those vital moments? And yet that very thing happens when you fail to cultivate the garden of your memory.

Out of Darkness

One of the unforgettable scenes stored away in my mind is the picture of the throng winding up the trail out of the depths of Carlsbad Cavern. In the lead slowly paced the Ranger. Though three dozen people, two by two, impatiently crowded his heels, there was no hurry in his deliberate, measured tread. He knew it would be a long steep climb, and though he himself, hardened to the task, could walk up easily, there were others who must not be left behind. Let us sit here on the rock by the side of the trail and watch the stragglers go by.

A patient father with a big boy in his arms, a loving mother toiling under the burden of a smaller one, a heavy-set man good-naturedly puffing and rolling along carrying his coat on his arm, an adventurous soul with a crutch under one armpit and a cane in the other hand—these all toil by. But here comes the rear guard Ranger. We must be up and going before the procession passes and the darkness closes in behind.

Who would forget the lesson of that hour? Verily, for every easy step downward into sin there must be a toiling step back up toward light.

Many Mansions

"In my Father's house are many mansions: . . . I go to prepare a place for you" (John 14:2). "Judas saith unto him, not Iscariot, Lord, how is it that thou wilt manifest thyself unto us, and not unto the world? Jesus answered [and said unto him, If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode (same word as for "mansions") with him" (vv. 22, 23). According to this, it is the Father and the Son who dwell in the mansions, not the departed spirit or soul of the Christian. But Their Holy Spirit makes a temple of our bodies (1 Cor. 6:19). Therefore, it is our bodies that are the many mansions of the above text. The house of God is the church of God (1 Tim. 3:15).

If your body is a mansion where God dwells, how neat should you the caretaker keep the premises? How loyal to the owner? How pure from sin? Why, just as neat, just as loyal, just as pure as all your diligent attention can make it so.

Absolute Trust

What makes you have such absolute confidence in God? He is almighty and capable of doing all He says, but it takes more than power to inspire utter confidence. He is all-knowing, but that isn't enough. Justice isn't enough. Immortality isn't enough. God is love. Because the great heart of God moves with the pure motive of love, we have absolute trust, utter confidence, in Him.

We cannot possibly hope to know in this mortal life all the ways God's love can express itself. The Bible speaks of punishments and rewards. Whether we suffer the destruction of the wicked or enjoy the blessedness of the immortal, our fate is determined by the love of God. His love takes in millions, yea, billions, at one sweep. That very love prohibits Him from giving eternal life to the rebellious. For a sinner must of necessity be unhappy in a world of purity. And that love impels, yea, God compels Himself to pour out the riches of eternity to the loving heart.

"Perfect love casteth out fear" (1 John 4:18). The perfect motive in rulership is expressed in Romans 13:3: "For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil. Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power? do that which is good, and thou shalt have praise of the same." So God rules the universe.

"O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!" (Rom. 11:33). That depth is plumbed only by love.

PREPARED BY GRACE M. MARSH

THE BEGINNING OF THINGS

SOMEWHERE in your home is a book you call the Bible. Really, this book is made up of several smaller books and letters written by men who were doing God's work. Some of these books were history, some of them were poems, some were letters written by one man to another. But each book tells something that God wishes you to know.

Some of the things written there are things that bad people have said or done. Some are stories of small children who were very good—and there are some tales of small children who were very naughty. There are stories of the sea and of the desert, of men and of women. Some of the most beautiful songs in all the world have been copied from the Bible. And all of those things are to help you to be the sort of boy or girl that God will like.

"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." You know that He did that, and made all the lovely fruits and vegetables that you have to eat. All the birds and flowers that you like so well came from God, too. So surely you will want to know as much as you can ever learn about Him.

The first part of this Bible is called Genesis. If you do not already know, you had better learn to spell it. It means "beginning," and that is just what it tells about—the beginning of everything but God. That is His own secret—one that He never has told anyone.

The first thing we read is that the heaven and earth were all in a mass. There were no hills nor rivers, and there was no light to see them if they had been there. As God watched over it He said, "Let there be light." As the light appeared, the darkness was set aside, and that was the first night and day that we know anything about.

Heaven was created on the second day. The land and water were separated on the third day so that mountains and rivers and plains and seas appeared. In the fine soil grass and trees and flowers began to grow. And all of them were perfect in color and form.

The sun and the moon and the beautiful stars were set in the heavens on the fourth day. And although they are so far away, God placed them there to give us light and to help us count the days and months and years.

On the fifth day all sorts of things that live in the water were created. The birds began to fly about in the air and they sang cheerfully in the tree tops and among the flowers.

The sixth day seems to have been the busiest of all. Animals of all sorts, from the tiniest thing you ever saw to the fine large ones, were created on that day. And then God said to His angels, "Let us make people now who will look after all these animals and fish and birds." So the first man was created on this day, and later on the same day God gave him a wife to help him in all his work. You have heard of those two. Their names were Adam and Eve.

You see God had a plan for all of His work before He started to do it. Just as people who build a house must know what material they will use and how the house is to look when it is finished. Then they gather their wood and stone in one place and begin their work.

Only God was greater and wiser than any workman today. The people now only use what God has placed here for us. The rocks and iron from the earth, the sand from which glass is made, the forests where we get our lumber, are here because God made them. Even the wool that makes our clothing comes from animals God created before He created a man.

Make a list of things in your home that you eat and use and wear, and think what God created that gave them to you. Then turn to the first chapter of Genesis and see on which day it was created.

Dear Boys and Girls:

Mrs. Gesin has been very ill and so I have written this page for her. She will be very glad to have a letter from you, I am sure. You will miss her work, too, until she is able to do it again. We all hope she will soon be well. Until she is, we are praying for her, aren't we?

Your friend,

Mrs. Marsh.

PSALM 48

See the Gospel Church secure
And founded on a Rock!
All her promises are sure;
Her bulwarks who can shock?
Count her every precious shrine;
Tell, to after ages tell,
Fortified by power divine,
The Church can never fail.

—Charles Wesley.

WHAT'S THE ANSWER?

Who first taught the "immortality of the soul," that is, that people do not really die, and what did Jesus say he was? Look for the answer in next week's paper. Don't forget! It'll be there!

HOW DID THE CHURCH OF GOD ORIGINATE?

We have had several requests during the past few years for information concerning the origin of the Church of God in America and regarding the men and women by which the message we represent was introduced. The editor has been gathering data along this line for many years and had hoped to have an outline of the facts at his disposal published before this, but pressure of other duties has delayed the accomplishment of the plan.

Many years ago "Auntie Wince" published a prolonged series of historical or reminiscent articles telling of the early work and workers in Ohio. If files of The Restitution, which was issued by Bro. A. R. Underwood in Plymouth, Ind., were available, they would provide this valuable historical "source book" for Ohio and Indiana. Anyone possessing reasonably complete files of The Restitution would confer a favor upon the brotherhood if he would place such files at the disposal of this office, either as a loan or as a permanent gift to the entire Church of God.

Several thoughtful brothers and sisters in various parts of the country have sent in old files which have proved to be of much interest and value. But many copies of the papers are missing, of course. Please remember, we do not need copies of The Restitution Herald—our files of this paper are complete. But we would like especially to secure very early copies of The Restitution, which was first published in Chicago, and, after the great fire, at Plymouth, Ind.

May we have your cooperation in this matter?

Owing to the illness of Mrs. Mary A. Gesin, Oregon, Ill., Mrs. Grace M. Marsh, also of Oregon, will be for the present in charge of the Children's Page. Mrs. Gesin has been suffering from a severe heart ailment, and has been ordered to bed for an indefinite period.

FAITHFUL WORKERS APPRECIATED

The following interesting paragraph is taken from a letter from Sr. George Reighard, Wauseon, Ohio. Sr. Reighard is one of the many who have requested information regarding the origin of the Church of God in America, which is mentioned elsewhere in this issue. Sr. Reighard writes:

"I think it was Bro. James Watkins who first preached our faith here. Then came J. M. Stephenson and Ephraim Miller. The latter baptized me 63 years ago this month (February). They were followed by Bro. and Sr. B. W. Woodward, Bro. and Sr. Robison, and many others. Bro. James Patrick is one of the latest to preach our faith here. He has given us some very good sermons, and in the last two or three years Bro. S. J. Lindsay has come every spring and held a week or two of meetings. He is coming again this spring."

GOLDEN RULE HOME

A social gathering was held last Friday evening at Golden Rule Home that drew brethren from Rockford, Dixon, and Oregon to the number of between fifty and sixty. A splendid program was presented under the auspices of the Dorcas Society in which persons participated whose ages ranged from five or six years old to—well, we may venture to say "maturity." It was a most enjoyable occasion.

Mr. August Kaney, a beloved member of the Home Family, is in St. Anthony's Hospital in Rockford for medical observation. While his condition is not critical at this time, it was thought advisable to have his case thoroughly studied by the best doctors available to avoid any complications that might otherwise develop.

Sr. Olive Wood, formerly of California, was in Dixon recently, where she is taking treatments for her eyes. The specialist reports that she is showing signs of steady improvement.

These are but two examples of the thoughtful, patient, and efficient care which our matron and the manager of the Home bestow constantly upon those who become members of Golden Rule Home circle.

FONTHILL - WELLAND, ONTARIO

The Welland Sunday school recently organized with the following officers being elected: Thomas McArthur, superintendent; John Spry, assistant superintendent; Pearl Brown, secretary-treasurer. A more virile spirit has gripped the Welland workers as they get behind the expanded work.

Word has been received from Bro. F. L. Austin assuring us of his readiness to be at Fonthill for our May Meeting. The time will soon arrive; only ten weeks, and it will be under way.

Every fourth week the Fonthill Bible class has question night with a social evening following. There were 36 present for the study and social the week of February 21. It required nearly two hours for the teacher to answer the questions handed in.

Church of God Messenger.

A letter from Miss Hope Haupt, Natchitoches, La., comments that her mother, Mrs. J. G. Haupt, is slowly recovering from a broken collar bone. The injury was suffered last fall, but Mrs. Haupt is still bedfast. She will be recalled as the wife of J. G. Haupt, Herald writer, who died some time ago.

OUR CLEVELAND TRIP

The writer wishes to express a word of commendation and appreciation of the faithful group constituting the Golden Rule Church of God, Cleveland, Ohio. Our recent week of labor with them caused us to realize something of their steadfast loyalty to the cause, and to admire the manner in which they carry forward the work in spite of the tremendous handicap of miles of separation.

Bro. Lyon has worked faithfully with them for ten years, and deserves a great amount of credit for the spiritual welfare of the group. May God prosper their cause in the years to come.

F. E. Siple.

HAPPY WOODS, LOUISIANA

Bro. Sydney Magaw closed a very successful series of meetings at the Happy Woods Church near Hammond, La., the evening of March 7. The attendance was not especially large, but the interest was good and the sermons were instructive and inspiring. Five put on Christ in baptism.

Two weeks ago Bro. Magaw closed a series of meetings at Blood River, twelve miles from here, where eleven took on the Savior's name, making sixteen as a result of one month's work.

Bro. Magaw was accompanied and assisted in the work by his wife and son, Malcolm, and Bro. and Sr. Howard Pearson, all of Ohio; and they made many warm friends here who will long remember them.

We have made arrangements with Bro. Harry Goekler to come here and work with the two churches and feel sure that the ones who have been added to the fold will be built up and strengthened under his leadership, and that others will be brought to a saving knowledge of the truth.

Albert Siple.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

The pastor upon his return from a very pleasant week with the Golden Rule Church of God in Cleveland found the local work moving along well. Bro. Goekler and the brethren had kept the home fires of the cause burning brightly.

We are happy to be able to report that Bro. Joseph Holland has sufficiently recovered from his serious accident so that he is now able to assume again his duties as president of the men's class. Sr. Harriet Hanson has returned from her winter with relatives in Colorado.

Plans are now being worked out for Easter. Guests from out of town will be very welcome to enjoy the services of the day with us and join in the Easter dinner at the annex.

The recently organized junior choir under the able leadership of Bro. Robert Barr is accomplishing wonders, and much interest is being manifested.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

Writing from his home in St. Catharines, Ont., Bro. Fred T. Jones tells of the interest being shown in the Niagara district. "There is a great amount of activity in the various departments of our three churches here (Fonthill and Welland, Ont., and Niagara Falls, N. Y.). And we believe our heavenly Father is blessing, as He always will, truly consecrated efforts of His people."

HERALD RECEIPTS

S. A. Dorris; L. H. Ralston; Roy Blanchard; C. E. Mills; Albert Fyfe; Mrs. Orval Shepherd; Mrs. Wallace Pearce; Edna Arthaud (for self and another); Mrs. Earl Bowen; A. L. Bonner; Myrtle J. Norris; Lyle Doan; Lloyd Stevens; Francis Van Fleet; Iva Lehman; Lydia Mathes; Leona Marsh (for others); Charles Lapp; N. S. Westfall (for another); Hope Haupt; Clara Barnum; Edith Barber; Maybelle Hanson; Mandes Reed; Fred Jones; Anna Fales.

MORA, MINNESOTA

The brethren of the Church of God of Mora were sorry to part with Bro. and Sr. Walter Randall and family, who have recently moved to Eden Valley, Minn., on a farm. The many wishes for good that were expressed to them were proof that they will be missed. We feel, however, that our loss will be Eden Valley's gain.

Sr. Ernest Randall, whom many of you met at the last General Conference, had the misfortune to fall on the icy street and break a small bone in her leg. While not extremely dangerous, yet it incapacitates her to a great extent. Sr. Randall is one of our best workers in the church, and naturally she will be missed while she is convalescing from this injury.

Practically every one of our church people has had the colds that have been prevalent this winter, but we are happy that we can report that practically all are well again and eager to push forward our summer's program.

We ask the prayers of the brethren everywhere, in our work here.

Gerald L. Cooper, Pastor.

BURR OAK, INDIANA

Eleven of our Bible school workers are taking the standard courses offered by the County Religious Education Council. They meet for ten evenings on Monday of each week.

The new basement is gradually becoming a reality, and we look forward to our all-day meeting to dedicate this accomplishment.

The church united with the United Brethren folk here last Sunday in Bible school, and also in the evening service. There were 113 present at Sunday school. A very interesting event. We were unable to use our church on account of the basement construction, for fear that it might cause the walls to cave in. We thank our neighbors for their hospitality. This was a sight for our eyes to see the two churches together in the study of the Word, the teachers of both teaching the classes, each helping in a wonderful way. "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!" (Psalm 133:1).

A. E. Hoskins, Pastor.

SHALL WE TAKE COMMUNION WITH OTHER CHURCHES?

"I wish," writes Mrs. Mandes Reed of Attica, Kan., "that some of our able writers would publish articles in The Herald on the question of taking Communion with other churches. We have no Church of God here. Therefore, we attend the Christian Church, which observes Communion every Sunday. I have been taught, and always believed, that it is wrong to partake with other churches, or with unbelievers. But I can find no Scripture to prove that I am right. I have asked different ministers of our faith about the matter. Some very strongly disapprove, others approve, and I have been unable to decide. As this is a very sacred act, I thought others might desire light on the subject, also, and I would be very thankful if some of our able ministers would help us out."

The letter is subscribed: "Your sister in the faith, seeking the truth."

A few years ago two or more articles were published in The Restitution Herald on the question of "close" or "open" Communion. Sr. Reed's letter suggests a somewhat different phase of the same question. The Herald would be glad to present two or three thoughtfully prepared articles on this disputed matter. We only ask that the subject may be written so far as possible from a positive scriptural standpoint.

FREDERICK W. CLARK

With deep sorrow we are called upon to record the death of Frederick W. Clark, a faithful member of the Park Hill Church of God, Gladbrook, Iowa, since the place of worship was built in that little city many years ago. Bro. Clark was the son of Bro. and Sr. Luther Clark. He was born in Quebec, Canada, July 30, 1865, and died in Gladbrook, Iowa, after a lingering illness, January 13, 1937. He is survived by his wife, Sr. Sadie Clark, and one son, Bro. Earl Clark.

Brought to Tama County, Iowa, by his parents when he was five years of age, he spent the larger part of his life in the vicinity where he died. When about eleven years old he was crippled and remained thereafter dependent upon crutches. In spite of his handicap, however, he engaged in active life, for ten years being a telegraph operator at Irvington, Iowa. He returned to Gladbrook in 1898, and established a photograph gallery which he continued to conduct until his retirement in 1932.

His marriage to Miss Sadie McClellan, of Irvington, Iowa, took place July 10, 1893. Three children were born to them, of whom but the one son, mentioned above, survives.

He was baptized at Gladbrook by Elder A. J. Eychaner about 38 years ago, and throughout his long association with the church in that place took an active part in the advancement of the truth. He will be remembered by those who attended the Iowa Conference in years gone by for the splendid photographs he took of the great annual gatherings on the Waterloo campground.

Funeral services were conducted at Park Hill Church in Gladbrook on Friday, Jan. 15. He rests in hope.

JOSEPH BENDER

Joseph Bender, son of Andrew and Martha Bender, was born January 3, 1862, and died in the old home March 5, 1937.

He was married on his 21st birthday to Mary E. Stockgen of Twin Lakes, later residing on the farm near Maxinkuckee Lake.

In his home a family of eleven children were reared. They will retain many remembrances of this place, which they labored so hard to establish.

Mr. Bender was the last survivor of his three brothers and three sisters. His wife Mary preceded him in death eleven years ago. Three children did, also: Bertha, 1902; Louisa Dickson, 1926; and Martha Zechiel, 1933. Those surviving are nine children; 21 grandchildren; and his wife Julia, to whom he was married August 19, 1926. The children are Jacob Bender, Covington, Va.; Belle Weaver, Grace White, William, Charles, Harry, Mary, Richard, Blanche Davis.

Bro. Bender was baptized by Elder F. L. Austin on January 11, 1903, uniting with the Church of God at Burr Oak, Ind.

Services were held in Burr Oak. Commitment was made in the McElrath Cemetery. The writer officiated. We extend to the family our sincere sympathies, admonishing them to "hold fast in the faith."

WHEN MEN ARE OLD, WE NEED THEM MOST!

Now it's time to take an inventory, a final and comprehensive inventory, of it all.

We sit back in our easy chair, brush the thin, graying hair from a time-furrowed brow and ruminates. The very fact that we do this is a sign that we are growing old. We had neither time nor inclination for such introspection when we were younger.

We are not looking into the future. We are looking into the past. That is the prerogative of age. Youth looks forward, age looks backward. This is always true.

As the pages of our mental autobiography slip through our fingers our minds are flooded with a thousand memories. The things we have seen and heard and done, yes, and the things we wanted to see and have not seen, and the things we wanted to hear and have not heard, and the things we intended to do and have not done—all these realities and unrealities with which the records of memory are stored pass before us freely.

As we look upon them we are not greatly elated as we observe again our occasional successes, nor are we over-much oppressed when we review our numerous failures. Time has wrought changes in our viewpoint that modify and equalize everything. What once was glorious sunlight coming from a cloudless sky is now, as we look back upon it, little more than mellow moonbeams trickling through shadowy leaves. And what once appeared to us as blackly rolling storm clouds, threatening our whole future with utter despair, now reveal themselves in retrospect as fleeting shadows, drifting softly across our path.

Such are the changes that years and experience bring. If the sweet is not so sweet as it used to be, neither is the bitter so bitter. These are the compensations of advancing years.

Now for our summary.

When we were children all that we had to have in order to live and grow and learn we looked to our elders to provide. We were absolutely dependent upon them. Of course, we never gave the fact a thought. When did children ever do that? When we were hungry we asked for food—and got it. For “if a son shall ask for bread of any of you that is a father, will he give him a stone? or if he ask a fish, will he for a fish give him a serpent?” When we were cold or sick or sorrowful, our elders came to our immediate relief, drawing their supplies out of their own (to us) inexhaustible storehouse of treasures.

As we grew older and felt the need of further education and of broader opportunity, it was, generally speaking, our elders who provided the “ways and means” by which our sense of need could be satisfied. In all probability the desire for an education had first been instilled within us by them, as it was later fostered and encouraged by them.

Further, all that we learned in school from books had come out of the accumulated knowledge and recorded experiences of those who had lived before us. “Old fogies” or not, we would not have progressed very far in our search for knowledge had they not furnished us freely with the facts and theories which they had gathered in the past. Just how much original research has any one of us done for himself? Have we discovered a hitherto unknown chemical element? Have we been the first to look upon an unnamed planet? Have we originated a new mathematical formula? In short, what have we really contributed to the sum total of the world's useful information that was not known before we came upon the scene?

Long before you and I started out upon the journey of life, our elders, “old fogies” though they may have been, blazed the wilderness trail before us, blasted out the rocks, filled in the hollows and paved the way with smoothest cement! They it was who learned the secrets of nature, the forces and powers of nature, and harnessed them for our use!

But that is not all that they have done, these “old fogies” whose voices reach us from out of the past.

As our elders pressed forward, fighting every inch of the way, the difficulties which they encountered and the problems they were compelled to solve for themselves covered the entire scope of possible human experience in principle—moral, social, economic.

Stored away in their minds, recorded in their books, revealed in their achievements, are the accumulated knowledge, the practical information, the painfully acquired wisdom, which they secured in the school of everyday living.

But more valuable than all else is the power of judgment they acquired, the ability to determine truth from falsehood, right from wrong. Such judgment comes only with ripened experience. It comes only to those who have passed through many years that were rich in success and failure, in joys and sorrows, and in the results garnered from multiplied and varied contacts made in life.

Without the judgment that comes with years, knowledge, ambition, and vitality are of but comparatively little value. They may even be a menace to ourselves and to civilization. The wisdom and the judgment of age act as a safety-valve on the engine of progress and serve to keep the boiling energy of youth at a proper level, so that the engine may not run too fast or the boiler explode by its own ungoverned power.

Wise, indeed, was the man to whom God gave wisdom when he said, “My son, hear the instruction of thy father.” Had his successor in the kingly office been equally wise, the nation would not have been divided, but “Rehoboam forsook the counsel of the old men” and lost the larger part of his kingdom.

Judgment based on experience is the most valuable thing in the world. Youth, filled with boundless energy, overflowing with enthusiasm, inspired with glowing dreams of future achievement, provides the driving force of progress, but the judgment of age and the wisdom born of experience are needed more than all else to direct the expenditure of that energy that it may produce good, and not evil.

The Glorious Resurrection

By Harry Goekler

IN THE revolving cycles of the Christian year, we have come once more to the eve of the resurrection morning, and the tender but bright and glorious lessons of Joseph's garden and Joseph's tomb. The truth that lies back of all these lessons and the incidents that suggest them, is the great principle of death and resurrection. It is the most important thought in the whole system of divine truth, and it runs not only through the Bible, but through the economy of nature as well.

We do not need to go far to find it. It is all about us in the beautiful spring. The bursting veins of plant and shrub, the throbbing pulses of the whole vegetable kingdom, the expanding buds and early blossoms of the spring, and the gorgeous robes of verdure that in a little while will spread over field and forest in many-tinted beauty and luxuriance, are all so many types and examples of the principle of resurrection life.

Over and over again, the miracle has happened before our eyes. We are so used to finding life where death has been that we fail to recognize in it anything miraculous. "It's nature!" We explain it glibly and let it go at that. Into the dark plowed soil we drop the dry seeds, cover them with earth, and then calmly wait. Nobody says, "How foolish! Why do you put those things there?" for everybody has faith to believe that from those dead-looking seeds will spring up plants that are alive and growing, to "minister seed to the sower and bread to the eater."

The earthly career of a great Man came to a close in a tomb, in the earth which opened to receive Him. His disciples had trusted that He would soon redeem them from the shackles of the Romans, but now they were disappointed and bewildered. In their aching hearts, so slow to understand, was no room for the message of the recurrent life around them, a parable of resurrection. The Master was dead and buried; their trust had died with Him. But even while they were speaking in this fashion, "Jesus himself drew near." Death has no power to hold Him who was Life itself. And that first Easter day held the answer to man's seemingly unanswerable question, "If a man die, shall he live again?"

The Reality of Resurrection

"But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the firstfruits of them that slept."—1 Corinthians 15:20.

NEW YORK CITY, March 19.—Writing in the April Cosmopolitan, Lloyd C. Douglas relates an experience he had with an old and much-loved friend, whom he calls "Dr. Andrews." After twenty years of self-sacrificing service to the community, the doctor was stricken with a heart ailment which his friends realized would soon result in his death. Shortly before the sad event took place, Mr. Douglas called on Dr. Andrews, bringing him a lovely rose. Receiving it with appreciation, the sick man said weakly, "Thanks. Kind of you. It's lovely. . . . Pity to cut it. It will die now. . . . However," he said after a meditative pause, "it would die anyway, when its season is over. Perhaps it's better—that way—to die while you're still wanted, rather than to hang on until the frost catches you."

Again the sick man paused and considered his friend attentively, a question in his eyes.

"I don't think we ever had any occasion to discuss it," he continued, "but, just as one man to another, and leaving all creeds out of it—do you have any ideas about immortality? I'm getting ready to die, you know."

Mr. Douglas said that he was glad than an interruption occurred at that moment which prevented him from attempting an answer to the question. He asserted that he has certain convictions on the subject of future life which he would not have hesitated to talk over freely with his friend had the doctor been in normal health. But somehow he was reluctant to speak about the subject under such conditions as those in which he found himself, seated at the side of his dying friend.

After the funeral was over he approached the minister, a mutual friend of Mr. Douglas and the doctor, and impulsively told him of the question he had been unable to answer. To his surprise the clergyman said that Dr. Andrews had asked him to talk over with him the possibility of a future life, but, said the minister, "I couldn't." "Well," I said," Mr. Douglas adds, "he knows all about it now."

What a pathetic situation this able writer paints. Not even a beloved and trusted minister was able to talk over the reality of the hope by which men are inspired at Easter time, with the friend who longed for assurance at the "gates of the grave"! How comparatively easy would it have been if Mr. Douglas and the minister had really believed in the glorious fact of a Savior who died—actually ceased to live—and then, touched by the life-giving power of God, lived again to die no more, to have pointed the dying friend to the empty tomb in the garden as indicating the certain way that leads to immortality for those who rest in hope! "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him!"

After the enemy had claimed him, the faithful doctor did not "know all about it"! But the meaning of both life and death again will be made plain to those who hear and answer the Savior's call when He comes.

The Trail of the Serpent

"Many false prophets shall rise."—Jesus.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, March 20.—Claiming divine guidance, Mrs. Marie M. Ogden gave up reputed high social position in Newark, New Jersey, to establish a religious colony of her small group of followers consisting of three women and eight men, in southeastern Utah. On the death of one of their number, Mrs. Edith Peshak, to whom attention was called in these columns two years ago, Mrs. Ogden declared that the woman would be restored to life by her power in the not distant future. The miracle has not yet taken place, but her faith and that of the other members of the little community remain strong. Commenting on the matter, Mrs. Ogden said recently:

"I'm more convinced than ever that I shall bring her back to life. Where and how this work is done we may not say until it's completed. I can say, however, that I'm in constant contact with her and hold conversation with her even now."

There is not a false religious system in the world of which we have any knowledge the roots of which are not deeply embedded in the serpent's lie. From the great religions of the East with their mystic rites and pretended miracles to the most insignificant of modern "prophets," "Elijahs," and "messiahs," "the trail of the serpent is over them all." That first and most God-dishonoring of all falsehoods has enrolled the vast majority of mankind, Christian as well as pagan, under its banner of deceit. If the leader of this Utah cult could be convinced that "the dead know not any thing" (Eccl. 9:5) she would no longer insist that she can or does hold communion with her dead follower.

Resurrection

By James A. Patrick

SOME years ago, in conversation with a man, the name of Christ was mentioned, and the man said, "Who is this Christ? I don't know Him." I think he told the truth, for I am quite sure he did not know Christ. In reply I asked, "Why do you write A. D. 1900?" He had no reply.

You see, every time an infidel makes his will, he acknowledges that Christ lived.

A young lady once said to me, "I don't know whether I believe in Christ or not. It is hard to believe that such a person ever lived."

I replied, "Don't you know there is more evidence on the pages of history to prove that Christ lived, than there is to prove that Alexander the Great lived, or that Cæsar lived, or that even Napoleon Bonaparte lived?"

"Why no," she replied, "how do you arrive at this conclusion?"

"Well," I replied, "you have to go back into the dead tomes of ancient history to find out anything about the men mentioned, but you find evidences that Christ lived wherever you turn. Why do we celebrate Christmas?"

"O well," she replied, "Christ wasn't born on the 25th of December, if He was born at all."

I replied, "That may be true. The battle of Bunker Hill wasn't fought on Bunker Hill, neither does the Bunker Hill Monument stand on Bunker Hill; but because some one made an error, that doesn't destroy the fact that the Bunker Hill Monument still stands as a monument to the fact that the battle of Bunker Hill was fought, does it?"

"No-o-o-o, I guess not," she replied.

Yes, there was something happened about nineteen hundred years ago that changed the reckoning of time. The world had been counting time differently up to that time, then there was a change, and since then the world has reckoned time differently, which is a monument of evidence to the fact that something happened that changed the whole course of the affairs of men. That event was the birth of our Lord Jesus Christ.

But what has this to do with resurrection? Let me quote to you a few sentences from "A Square Talk to Young Men" by H. L. Hastings;

"When Lepaux, a member of the French Directory, complained to Tallyrand that his new religion, 'Theophilanthropy,' made no headway among the people, the shrewd old statesman replied: 'I am not surprised at the difficulty you find in your effort. It is not easy to introduce a new religion. But there is one thing I would advise you to do, and then, perhaps, you might succeed.' 'What is it? What is it?' eagerly asked Lepaux. 'It is this,' said Tallyrand; 'go and be crucified, and then be buried, and then rise again on the third day, and then go on working miracles, raising the dead, and healing all manner of diseases, and casting out devils; and then it is possible that you may accomplish your end!' The philosopher went away silent; and no infidel has succeeded in fulfilling these conditions. But Christ has died, and has risen again, and the apostles suffered the loss of all things, and even of life itself, in proclaiming these facts; and they left their testimony on record in this Book."

Dear reader, do you believe that the poor carpenter, who walked the roads of Palestine with a few poor fishermen, would ever have been heard of afterward, if He had died as other men of His time, and been buried and stayed buried ever after? O no, it took a power that darkened the sun, and rocked the hills and valleys, and opened the graves, to make this Man's name and works live down through the ages and touch the lives of men and women and make them joyous and happy even under fierce persecution.

Did He rise? The angel said He did. After the Sabbath Mary Magdalene and the other Mary came to the sepulcher, "and, behold, there was a great earthquake: for the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sat upon it. His countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as snow: and for fear of him the keepers did shake, and became as dead men. And the angel answered and said unto the women, Fear not ye: for I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified. He is not here: for he is risen, as he said. Come, see the place where the Lord lay" (Matt. 28:2-6).

Hymn of Hope

If all our hopes and all our fears
Were prisoned in life's narrow bound,
If, travelers through this vale of tears,
We saw no better world beyond;
O what could check the rising sigh,
What earthly thing could pleasure give?
O who would venture then to die—
O who could then endure to live?

Were life a dark and desert moor,
Where mists and clouds eternal, spread
Their gloomy veil behind, before,
And tempests thunder overhead;
Where not a sunbeam breaks the gloom,
And not a floweret smiles beneath;
Who could exist in such a tomb?
Who dwell in darkness and in death?

And such were life, without the ray
From our divine religion given;
'Tis this that makes our darkness day;
'Tis this that makes our earth a heaven.
Bright is the golden sun above,
And beautiful the flowers that bloom;
And all is joy, and all is love,
Reflected from a world to come.

The Kingdom of God

By T. A. Drinkard

WHEN WILL JESUS CHRIST reign in Mount Zion? When He sits upon "the throne of his father David," which "the Lord God shall give unto him" (Luke 1:32). When will He sit upon His throne? When He "shall come in his glory" (Matt. 25:31).

Under the theocratic form of government Christ will issue the law that will govern and control the several phases of work that will come under His jurisdiction; as it is written, "Out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem" (Isa. 2:3).

May the God of heaven grant that we soon enter that day of judgment, when "the lofty looks of man shall be humbled, and the haughtiness of men shall be bowed down, and (when) the Lord alone shall be exalted" (Isa. 2:11).

A word picture of our national sin is given by the prophet of God who said, "Their land also is full of silver and gold, neither is there any end of their treasures; their land is also full of horses, neither is there any end of their chariots" (Isa. 2:7).

As a nation we have had a seat high up in the sun of prosperity; our land is full of silver and gold, no lack of treasures, plenty of horses for the farm, and chariots for war purposes. We did have plenty of cattle a few years ago, but the oversupply (?) was destroyed. And, too, we did have plenty of wheat for bread, but the surplus (?) was destroyed. And then there was plenty of cotton to furnish clothing for the poor of our land, but it was plowed under.

God made this earth for the purpose all His own, and that is to produce food and clothing for the people thereon. And He made certain laws to govern it, and when any man or set of men tamper therewith, and destroy its products, they will pay dearly for their sin, and our Nation will be no exception to the rule. It is a matter of fact that the rich element of the Nation reaped a rich reward at the expense of the producing class as the result of that wholesale destruction.

Let me call your attention to how the producing class was robbed of the hire of his labor on one element of his farm products, his oats. He was forced to sell them in Fort Worth for 10 cents per bushel, and when they were sold the next spring they brought 65 cents per bushel. Can you wonder at a depression coming?

Now let me call your attention to this: "Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the

"Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously."—Isaiah 24:23.

rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days. Behold, the hire of the labourers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth: and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of sabaoth. Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts, as in a day of slaughter" (James 5:1-5).

It has surely been a day of slaughter! Those cries have already entered into the ears of the Lord; they have been put down in the list of sins that will be met in the kingdom judgment. They are going to pay very dearly for the way they have lived and treated the poor of the earth. God has a plan already made, and He knows just how to bring them down, and His Son will be the King and will direct the execution of the judgment written.

It is written that God "will destroy in this mountain the face of the covering cast over all people, and the veil that is spread over all nations" (Isa. 25:7). Beyond question this is the same mountain of Isaiah 2:2, that "shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it."

"The Lord hath spoken it," and "he will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces; and the rebuke of his people shall he take away from off all the earth" (Isa. 25:8).

In executing upon the nations the judgment written, the activities in war preparation will cease (Psalm 149:9; Micah 4:3), and therefore the weapons used therefor will be converted into implements of peaceful industry. By this it would appear that instead of curtailing production God will cause an increase thereof, as it is written, "Then shall the earth yield her increase; and God, even our own God, shall bless us" He can safely increase production, for there will be no human scheme to thwart His purpose with that shameful excuse of overproduction.

There has never been an overproduction just so long as men, women, and children went improperly fed and clothed. What good is money except to buy those things that are needed? There has never been an overproduction of but one thing along this line, and that is moneychangers who have robbed the people.

In the kingdom there will be building of houses; vineyards will be planted; and the people of that day shall happily enjoy the work of their hands. They shall not build and others inhabit, neither will they plant and others eat; there will be no overlords to close them out (Isa. 65:21-23).

In that kingdom there seems to be untold and unexpe-rienced blessings, especially one that includes the little children: "There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days: for the child shall die an hundred years old; but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed" (Isa. 65:20).

No dying in infancy! Wouldn't that be a joy unspeakable to those dear mothers today, who have gone down into the shadow of death for their little ones, and yet who see them die? This will be in the kingdom.

Another feature that will be pleasing to all is: "The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock . . . They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord" (Isa. 65:25). The tranquillity among the animals of the earth will bring an added joy and blessing to the people of that day, as even their children may with safety associate together around them (Isa. 11:6).

Another thing that will be very interesting is that even "the wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose" (Isa. 35:1).

Just think of the vast amount of land in our own Nation that needs only the touch of water to make it blossom and bring forth in abundance.

I am supremely happy to know that the time is coming when "the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped." Not only this, but "then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing: for in the wilderness shall waters break out, and "I Am the Resurrection, and the Life"

John 11:25

By R. H. Judd

TIME and again we read in the Gospels that the people were astonished, and marveled at the words uttered by Jesus the Christ. And people are today equally astonished. They agree, in part, with the verdict of the officers who were sent to take Him, that "never man spake as this man." And because no man ever did so, they hasten to the conclusion that He was more than man, that He was God as well as man.

John's Gospel is particularly rich in these wonderful sayings of Jesus the Christ; but among them all there is not even a suggestion that He was other than man. In John 8:40 He lays claim to being man in language that cannot be misconstrued, and frequently the statements of His life confirm the statement to which He gave utterance in the verse referred to. Take, for instance, His reply to the woman of Samaria concerning the Messiah for whom she was looking. He said, "I that speak unto thee am he." Who did the speaking if it was not "the man Christ Jesus"? The question is a fair one, and the answer is unanswerable that the One who did the speaking is identical with the one who claimed to be the Christ. The same is true of the words of our text at the head of this paper. It was "this same Jesus"—the man—who said, "I am the resurrection, and the life." Through all the records of history no man had ever made such a claim. It would not only have been useless, it would have been blasphemy to the ordinary Jew. The question naturally arises—To whom then was the statement made? It was not made to the general public. A careful reading of the narrative makes that clear, and perhaps in solving that question we may find the answer to another as to its source, both of which will help us to understand it more fully.

We are all familiar with the story of the walk to Emmaus, but have we not somehow forgotten that John 11 records events of a walk to Bethany that are equally as thrilling, and certainly as full of human interest? In both of these instances the message was addressed to Jesus' own disciples, and both of them, we may rest assured, had their source in the Scriptures of "Moses and the prophets of the things concerning himself." Jesus knew that He was the Christ, and time and again, as in John 4, He brought unimpeachable proof from the Scriptures to those who were ready to listen, that He was so. The whole history of His life tallied with the predictions of His birth and all that had filled His eventful life. Among these predictions concerning Him was the well-known prophecy: "Thou wilt not leave my soul in Hades, neither wilt thou suffer thine holy one to see corruption," and in making His statement to Martha He was voicing His implicit belief in the promise just referred to. There was no claim of such power in Himself, for the cry uttered in those words was unquestionably to His Father. Twenty times and over, Scripture declares that "God (not Himself) raised him from the dead." Others had been resurrected, but they were without "the life," and returned again to corruption. He was the first who would be both "the resurrection and the life" that does not return to corruption. Hence He could truthfully say: "I (the one speaking) am the resurrection, and the life," for it was "this same Jesus" whom God glorified by raising as the firstfruits from the dead to die no more. He thus actually in His own person became "the resurrection, and the life," for He was "the beginning" of the new creation. It was, therefore, because of His confidence in His Father's promise concerning His own life that He gave the promise to Martha that not only her brother, but others who believed on Him, should rise again.

Science Versus Speculation

TO THE serious thinker the present situation in the scientific world is a cause of considerable concern. Twenty-five years ago the rapidly expanding body of scientific fact made scientists optimistic as to the ultimate triumph of human learning over the problems and secrets of the universe. It looked as if the studies being made in the fields of physics, chemistry, and biology were about to give us a mastery over nature. We seemed to be entering an era of scientific achievement that promised to be a veritable Utopia, in which the discoveries of man would free him from superstition and from the evils that had darkened his pathway heretofore.

But the present, while it is rich with intellectual achievement, now appears to be as far from the goal of ultimate conquest of nature as ever; and as far as being better and happier, man is harassed by fears that are more portentous than any he has ever faced before. The scientific world has accumulated a vast mountain of knowledge, too vast, in fact, for anyone to understand; and the student of today stands appalled at the amount of information that he must assimilate in order to forge his way to the forefront of investigation.

The worst feature of the situation is the fact that instead of clearing up the mysteries of nature, this enormous volume of knowledge that the scholars have accumulated is not a harmonious whole, but a mass of miscellaneous and heterogeneous facts, out of which it is almost impossible to bring any meaning or valid interpretation. The mills of research have been grinding out thousands of technical papers every year, but few of them have been correlated with a critical attempt to find the meaning of the facts enunciated. Fewer still are the comprehensive interpretations of the findings in terms of major principles. Modern scientific research is overloaded with facts, but dangerously light with regard to fundamental principles with which to interpret the facts. Our knowledge of detail has advanced far beyond our understanding of causes and reasons.

The reasons for the present confusion are more readily understood if we go back into history and find the origin of some of our methods of interpreting natural phenomena. Modern science began with a group of illustrious names, and in a truly inductive manner. "Science begins to dawn, but only to dawn, when Copernicus, and after him a Kepler or a Galileo, sets to work on these new materials, and sifts from them their essence. She bursts into full daylight only when a Newton extracts the quintessence. There has been as yet but one Newton; there have not been very many Keplers."

Copernicus (1473-1543) laid the foundation of modern astronomy by propounding the theory that the earth and the other planets revolve in orbits about the sun. Data to support this view were soon supplied by the great observer Tycho Brahe (1546-1601), and his efforts were supplemented by his successor Kepler (1571-1630), who formulated the famous laws of motion. Galileo (1564-1642) added many facts to the accumulating store of astronomical knowledge. In the very year that he died, Isaac Newton (1642-1727) was born. His Philosophiæ Naturalis Principia Mathematica, published in 1687, brought together all the work of his brilliant predecessors. "The new astronomy founded by Copernicus, built up by Tycho Brahe, Kepler, and Galileo, was now to be completely formulated and mathematically interpreted by Newton's crowning discovery of a single mathematical principle governing the whole."

"It was now a question of verifying the correctness of this principle (gravitation) by applying it to all measured or measurable astronomical phenomena. The investigation was gradually extended to the planets, the moons of Jupiter, the tides, and even the comets. Everywhere the law was verified."

The discoveries of Newton are recognized as the greatest ever made. In his formulation of the law of gravitation and his mathematical work on the laws of motion he opened the way for the modern development of astronomy, mechanics, and mathematical science in general. The world owes an inexpressible debt to the soundness of his methods.

The particular value of the discoveries of these great men lay in the fact that they were free from speculative hypotheses. Every theory was abundantly verified by mathematical and observed data. In 1569 a French scholar, Petrus Ramus, had expressed the wish that some one might arise to found a new astronomy on careful observation and mathematical principles that would discard all the ancient notions then prevailing. So completely did Tycho Brahe enter into this work that a friend writing of him said that he had not left a shadow of the former ideas. The "astronomy without a hypothesis" had been produced, and modern science had made a beginning in right lines.

Had the spirit of Kepler, Brahe, and Newton been the guiding star of all later scientific study, we might today be far in advance of where we are. For not only did these men hold to valid observations and mathematical conclusions, they also recognized their limitations and refrained from trying to explain all the past, present, and future of the universe. In humility they allowed God to retain His place as the ruler of the universe, while they tried to understand the ways in which His power is manifested.

The century following the death of Newton is marked by the entrance of speculative methods of science study. While "Newton and his immediate disciples used the new dynamical science to demonstrate the wisdom and goodness of an all-powerful Creator," an entirely different attitude characterized the next generation of scientists. During the latter part of the eighteenth century the ablest men of France and many in Germany and England were skeptical in matters of religion. They soon developed throughout the intellectual world a wave of heretical thought, by which the principles of interpretation followed by Newton were replaced by an attempt to explain everything by means of the new discoveries in physics and mechanics.

LAPLACE'S HYPOTHESIS

Going back to the materialistic philosophy of Kant, the great mathematician Laplace developed a system of rigid mathematical postulates by which the whole history of the universe could be described. He even conceived a system capable of forecasting all the progress of nature for all eternity, provided the masses and velocities of the heavenly bodies were known. He developed the famous nebular hypothesis. In this theory he attempted to explain the origin of the solar system from a nebulous mass of matter, which, by rotation and concentration, became separated into the planets with the sun at the center. By his work modern speculative astronomy has built up a vast system of evolutionary theory, which is so interwoven with the actual observational and mathematically demonstrable astronomy that the student finds before him a confused mass of truth and guesswork.

The ultimate result of the effort to find human interpretations for the phenomena of the heavens has led astronomy into a naturalism that in many ways is but little different from the cosmogonies of the ancient Greeks. The valid data in the system gives it a scientific appearance; yet there is a great volume of speculation involved that passes under the name of science.

What we have said concerning the science of astronomy might be repeated in virtually all the other sciences as well. While many investigators were exploring the world and accumulating data regarding plants and animals, speculations were rife, and attempts were made to establish some universal explanation for all the phenomena of natural history. Lamarck, in 1809, proposed theories of evolution by which the origin of present-day species might be explained. In the field of geology the fossils were taken as indicators of the age of the deposits in which they were found. In 1830 Sir Charles Lyell propounded the uniformitarian hypothesis of geological processes. Thus in every field of study observational methods were burdened with the fallacies of speculative and philosophical interpretation. Rejecting the Bible accounts of the creation and the flood, men turned their attention to pagan naturalism and tried to explain everything in terms of self-operating natural phenomena.

TRUE SCIENCE

We recognize fully the value of true science. In a practical way the discoveries in all lines of science have been of untold usefulness. The application of scientific knowledge in navigation, commerce, industry, medicine, invention, and a thousand activities of our modern life, is too important to be passed over lightly. Just as far as science sticks to empirical methods and confines itself to actual facts and their practical application, we have only the greatest respect for its discoveries. But when it gets into the philosophical field, grave dangers arise.

Science itself needs an interpreter, but when the human mind assumes that role, it is liable to go wrong. There is certain to be one of two errors committed—either the assumption of a proud belief in the ability of scientific investigation to solve every problem, leaving God out of the picture, or else the acceptance of a hopeless agnosticism in which the mind gives up all attempts at understanding the great truths of the universe and contents itself with following a mere routine. If science would remain in its true field, that of investigation, and accept the principle of a higher wisdom in interpreting its deeper truths, the present confusion might be avoided.

In its attempt to explain everything, natural science is looking into the wrong end of the telescope. We take the human body, for example, dissect it into its component parts, analyze it chemically, and try to find the sources of its life. Physiological chemistry tells us many truths regarding the way in which the body works, and helps us to know how to care for it properly. But when we start with the component parts and try to build up an explanation for the activities of the body and mind as a personality, we make a great mistake. It is true that the higher functions of the living organism cannot operate without the cooperation and support of the lower; but the meaning of the higher faculties is not to be found in the lower.

WIEN HYPOTHESES FAIL

The comparative psychologist tries to explain the working of the human mind by studying the reactions of amœbæ, worms, and other lower animals, overlooking the fact that the human mind possesses qualities not inherent in lower organisms. The higher intellectual and moral faculties of man find no counterpart or explanation in lower forms. The attempt to develop the complex out of the simple is a fallacy which is only a remnant of the old pagan notion of inherent power for development.

While investigation will obviously give us the details of construction of the physical universe, when we come to a formulation of laws we must ever guard against the fallacy of trying to explain the universal by the specific. Generalizations are of value only so far as they can be demonstrated. When Newton discovered the law of gravitation, he and his contemporaries demonstrated by observation and mathematical proof that it actually did work. But when Laplace invented the nebular hypothesis, he carried his reasoning into the realm of speculation where demonstration is impossible. When the psychologist finds that human beings are able to perform certain acts as the result of the action of the will, he is dealing with a demonstrable fact. But when he tries to explain the will in terms of tropisms and amœboid movements, etc., he is trying to bring a higher phenomenon out of a simple one, and is doomed to failure.

Any aggregation of simple parts must ever remain a mere collection of particles unless there is above and beyond it some intelligent directive cause which can integrate the parts into a coordinated entity and give purpose to the whole. The ultimate cause must be greater than any of the parts. Science would do well to deal with the facts and leave to the great I AM the explanation of the cause and destiny of the universe.—Harold W. Clark in Signs of the Times.

A SOUL

OVER and over, time and again, the question is asked, What is a soul? Various answers are given, most of which are mere speculation, for they are without scriptural authority. In order to properly understand this subject, a scriptural foundation must first be laid on which to base our conclusions.

The word "soul" is used interchangeably in the Scriptures. This may seem a minor point to some, but it is a very important fact to know. The major thought is, What is the prime scriptural application of the word "soul" in the concrete?

The soul is thought by some to be immortal. Yet these same people wouldn't think of teaching that any other creature other than mankind possessed immortality in any form or degree. According to the Scripture, the creatures which inhabit the sea have a soul, or are a soul the same as man. "And the second angel poured out his vial upon the sea; and it became as the blood of a dead man: and every living soul died in the sea" (Rev. 16:3). Thus we must conclude that other creatures of God's creation besides man are either a soul or have a soul.

It not only proves that they are either a soul or have a soul, but also this soul, whether signifying the whole being as used here or only a part, is subject to death. The Prophet Ezekiel confirms this statement in the following words, chapter 18, verse 4: "Behold, all souls are mine; as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is mine: the soul that sinneth, it shall die." Now, if the soul is immortal as taught by some, it could not die, for immortality means not subject to death. Thus we would have a contradiction in the Scriptures, and we know there is not one.

Now back to the spurious thought that the soul is immortal. If the soul that proceeds from God to take possession of human bodies as they come into existence is immortal, how could it be afflicted or commit sin? God is the source of every good and perfect gift. He is all goodness. God is love. From Him only are the issues of life. But remember, no sin or evil ever comes from God. How then could an immortal soul, a part of God (for God only hath immortality—1 Tim. 6:16) become afflicted or sin in any way?

Let us consider a few of the many texts of Scripture which prove that the prime application of the word "soul" in the concrete is to the being as a whole. And when applied to man exclusively it refers to him as a whole, a being, the body and the spirit, which together constitute a living soul.

"And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul" (Gen. 2:7).

The Apostle Peter tells us that during the flood eight souls were saved by water. See 1 Peter 3:20. This of course refers to the eight people who were spared when the flood of water destroyed the antediluvian world.

In Exodus 1:5 we read, "And all the souls that came out of the loins of Jacob were seventy souls: for Joseph was in Egypt already." The word "soul" as used here refers to the posterity of Jacob, the number of souls or beings who came out of his loins. Please note carefully, the Word does not say that these souls were something immortal sent from God to possess these beings at birth. But it says that these souls came out of the loins of Jacob. Hence we must conclude it has reference to and means the real being as a whole.

"All the souls of the house of Jacob, which came into Egypt, were threescore and ten" (Gen. 46:27). Here again we have the individuals, persons, or beings referred to as souls. For further proof that in the primary use of the word "soul" it had reference to the real being as a whole, we quote from Deuteronomy 10:22: "Thy fathers went down into Egypt with threescore and ten (souls) persons."

"And if any soul (person) sin through ignorance" (Num. 15:27). In Leviticus 4:27 we find almost the same words, "And if any (soul) of the common people (of the land) sin through ignorance." Thus it is clear to be seen that the principal meaning of the word "soul" has reference to the person, the real being.

Christ Himself, the real being or soul, died for the sins of the people of the world (Isa. 53:10-12). He (the soul) was placed in hell (hades, the grave, the abode of the dead) (Psalm 16:10; 49:16; Acts 2:27, 31). At the resurrection of the soul (whole being), Christ was redeemed from the power of hell (the grave), which is death.

A soul is subject to conversion. "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul" (Psalm 19:7). The Apostle James puts it in the following words, "Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him; let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins" (James 5:19, 20).

Another text sometimes referred to in support of this theory, that at death something immortal leaves the body and goes back to God, is Ecclesiastes 12:7, which reads as follows, "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was: and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." Now if the theory that this text has reference to an immortal spirit or soul which has power to think, act, suffer pain, or enjoy bliss which leaves the body at death and goes to God in heaven, be true, would it not indicate that there are wicked spirits in heaven? There is no distinction made in the text between spirits of the righteous and spirits of the wicked. All go to the same place. And another thought, Would this not make God responsible for sin, by sending evil spirits to possess human bodies at birth?

But this text does not teach any such thing. The word "spirit" as used here has reference to the breath of life which God gives us. It is also used in the same sense in Job

27:3, "All the while . . . the spirit of God is in my nostrils (signifying the breath of life)." And in Genesis 2:7 we read, "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul."

It is the breath which leaves man that causes him to die, or become a dead soul. "Thou takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust . . . His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth" (Psalm 104:29; 146:4). The breath of life is the only thing that leaves man at death, and returns to God. It is termed "spirit" many times in the Scriptures.

Now the text, "And the spirit shall return unto God who gave it," doesn't mean that the spirit or breath of life leaves the body at death and goes to heaven where God is, but rather to His care and keeping.

In a little leaflet printed by the Church of God entitled "The Spirit of Ecclesiastes 12:7," we have an illustration which brings out this truth very nicely. Suppose a man owns a piece of property in one State, and sells it to some one by contract on time payments. The owner goes to another State or country to live and in process of time the party to whom it was sold fails to meet his obligations. Thus the contract becomes null and void, and the title of the property returns to the former owner. Now we know the real estate is not moved to where the owner resides, but the title goes back to his charge, care, and keeping.

Another text a little confusing to some is found in Ecclesiastes 3:21. Here the word "spirit" is used in a different sense, meaning life. We will go back to the 18th verse of this context that we may have a clear understanding. "I said in mine heart concerning the estate of the sons of men, that God might manifest them, and that they might see that they themselves are beasts. For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no preeminence above a beast: for all is vanity. All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again. Who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth?" (Eccl. 3:18-21).

The life of every individual goes on record in heaven just as it is lived, to be accounted for in the day of judgment; but not so with the beast. No record is kept of beasts' lives, for they are not accountable to God. Therefore at death they simply cease to be; there is no resurrection for them, so their spirit goes down when they die.

But praise be to God for the wonderful plan of salvation which grants a resurrection from the dead to all humanity, and immortality to those who accept salvation through the shed blood of Jesus Christ, repenting of their sins, walking in the light, and making their peace with God. "So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? . . . But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. 15:54, 55, 57).—William Alexander in The Bible Advocate.

CHILDREN AND MONEY

TODAY children and youth have more money to spend than any other generation ever had. This spending generally is for non-essentials. The child's money goes for pleasures, or little luxuries like soda, candy, movies, and the like. Every boy and girl needs instruction in how to use money. This certainly is as essential as arithmetic and geography.

Some one has suggested that the prodigal son would not have been so wasteful if he had experienced training in stewardship. Apparently he had never been a partner in the family budget. In other words, if he had been trained in the use of the value of things as "windows through which to see God," he would have become an entirely different person. Taking care of possessions in a spiritual way was unknown to him. All that he thought of was spending for "a good time." Lacking constructive teaching, he was at the mercy of his own whims and desires—and at the mercy also of his friends.

Parents, leaders, and teachers of youth should practice stewardship themselves. Their instruction should be by habits as well as by words. It is still true that "one example is worth a thousand precepts." The boy who got up at six every morning to deliver papers had a background of thinking which came from parents who were true stewards. Their interest in the church finally came to him. He gave regularly and earned his gift, because he saw that their theory was backed by their practice. So a child may give either in service or substance, or both, to any cause which he feels is worth while.

Each child should have something to give. Stewardship, to be real, must be a share in the Lord's work, in which the giver is a partner. If this theory is supported by education in the causes to which money or service is given, it will be a very vital experience. He that is faithful in a little, is faithful also in much. Children will form this habit very early if it is actually a part of the family practice. Many children whose parents cannot supply them with money are finding ways to earn their gifts to the church.

The results of such procedures are a personal experience in giving and a developed sense of responsibility. A lad of five who wept when he was told that he could not give, because his father was out of work and had no money, felt deeply. His obligation to give was very real to him. The church could not get along without his contribution. This conception when properly developed is of the utmost importance. It is likewise very beautiful.

Giving of this sort keeps children informed about the church and its program. This is not only because of the actual instruction given, but it encourages them to discover for themselves the work that the church is doing. Through projects on missions, Christian education, or the local church program, they "learn by doing." The boys who were contributing to the mission boat, Princeton, on the Alaskan coast, built a beautiful model of it. In the process they learned more about missions than they ever discovered previously.—James F. Riggs in The Presbyterian.

THE CHALLENGE OF THE MASTER TEACHER

THE story of the wedding feast is a most revealing incident to the charm and character of Jesus. When a village girl was making up the list of her wedding guests, she turned to the young man who sat beside her and said, "I should like to have Jesus attend our wedding. He has such calm and cheerful eyes." The young man answered, "I'd like that, too. His presence lends a wholesome happiness to any occasion." Thus it happened that Jesus attended the wedding in Cana of Galilee, and just as the young man had predicted, before the feast was over, He had added to the joy of the occasion by providing good wine when the ordinary supply was exhausted. The first miracle was performed to save the girl and young man from embarrassment.

People who knew Jesus wanted to be with Him. They invited Him to be their guest; they thronged His resting places; they hung upon His words, for they were spirit and they were life; and the better they knew Him the more they loved Him. Children flocked about Him; men left all and followed Him. It is clear then that the first purpose of Christian education is to interpret Jesus Christ as the most desirable reality in human experience.

The second goal of Christian education is to secure a definite dedication of life to Jesus Christ and the beginning of an ever-growing friendship and fellowship with Him. Out of the life situation represented in the wedding feast there comes another significant fact. When the wine ran short, the mother of Jesus said to the attendant, "Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it." The new psychology and the New Testament agree that life requires an adequate center. Until the purpose of human life becomes the fulfillment of the purpose of God for that life, complete integration is impossible. Weatherhead has rendered us a great service when he insists that the first step in Christian experience must be utter surrender. H. C. Link in his recent book, The Return to Religion, stresses the other side which becomes the third goal for Christian education—Christ-directed activity in human relationships.

The waitresses were important to the wedding feast. Jesus has something for everybody to do. You can do something where you are if you would do anything anywhere. The Christian life must find its expression in human relationships. Your Christianity is not real unless you are easier to live with in your home, your office, and your church.

"Whatsoever he saith, do it." God has something to say to His children. It is the job of Christian education to interpret the Bible as the Word of God to men. The truth of the Bible will never be outworn nor outmoded, for this truth was born in the heart of God, written into life experience of men, and finally set up in type. Its truth matches life's needs, because it was born in life. Consider the 23rd Psalm, "The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want." Before the dawn of history the heart of God was like the heart of a shepherd. Hours of meditation and years of experience revealed this truth to David. Finally, he began to sing, "The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want." It was truth like the music of a great hymn, meant to be played over again.

Again, God has something to say to the listening soul in prayer. The final goal of Christian education is to lead pupils to discover the will of God through prayer. The surrendered life must develop its strength in Christian activity through the practice of a daily friendship and fellowship with God.

These are the objectives of Christian education. These are the goals to which the administration of Christian education from the individual church are called. These are the high privileges to which the Master Teacher challenges. —Dr. M. Ray McKay in Central Advent Christian Mission Bulletin.

streams in the desert" (Isa. 35:5, 6). All the conditions will be changed, and great preparation will be made to really beautify the earth, as "the parched ground shall become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water: in the habitation of dragons, where each lay, shall be grass with reeds and rushes" (Isa. 35:7).

When at the close of the day, in the silent hours of the night, you say to the Father, "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven" (Matt. 6:10), you are surely praying for all these wonderful blessings. Each one of the prophets has given us the good news of the kingdom, but has given it in his own words, and it only remains for us to search out the things of God as revealed by them. Jesus Christ is the central figure around which all those kingdom promises cluster, and He affirms that everything written concerning Him, whether in the law, prophets, or Psalms, will be fulfilled.

Jesus Christ "went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom" (Matt. 4:23). If the gospel as herein mentioned is not the gospel of Mark 16:15 and is not "the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12), which Philip was preaching, please tell me why Jesus Christ did not say to His disciples just before He died, "Now, brethren, I have been preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and so have you, but I want you to clearly understand that after My death and resurrection you are to preach another gospel."

Human reasoning reminds me of what the Master said in Matthew 23:24. Paul declares, "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord?" (Heb. 2:3), and this takes us back to Matthew 4:23, where it says Jesus Christ preached the gospel of the kingdom of God; and Paul said it was great salvation, and clearly affirms that if we neglect it there is no escape.

I solemnly affirm that Jesus Christ preached the gospel of the kingdom of God (Mark 1:14); that it was "great salvation" (Heb. 2:3); that it was the same message that Philip preached (Acts 8:5, 12); and any effort to prove otherwise is a case of deception, as Paul clearly shows (Gal. 1:6, 7).

What Matthew terms the gospel of the kingdom of God, Paul calls "great salvation," and then Peter says, "The word which God sent unto the children of Israel, preaching peace by Jesus Christ: (he is Lord of all:) that word, I say, ye know, which was published throughout all Judæe, and began from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached" (Acts 10:36, 37).

The gospel of the kingdom to be reestablished upon the earth was preached before Pentecost, and is still being preached; but the kingdom has not been established as yet. May that message, and the things that will be brought about as the result of the kingdom's being "set up" inspire our hearts to greater service for the Master.

Christ are eternal facts in the mind and purposes of God. They did not first become realities with God when Jesus hung upon the cross and died, and when He came forth from the sepulcher leaving the tomb empty behind Him. They were purposed, planned, and anticipated from eternity, so that with God the Father they were potential realities just as the finished palace is a reality to the architect who draws the plans and describes the specifications. Our Lord is the "Lamb slain from the foundation of the world" (Rev. 13:8), and since His death and resurrection always go hand in hand and side by side in Scripture, His resurrection was just as certainly an anticipated fact as was His death.

In due time, the fullness of time, the death and resurrection of Christ became historical facts as well. One day He hung upon the cross and died. One day He was taken from the cross and placed in a new-hewn sepulcher. And one day He came forth from the tomb, rising from the dead, and leaving the tomb empty as a proof of His resurrection. The empty tomb is the best attested fact of history. It is attested by historical, logical, psychological evidence. The best argument that has ever been written on the reality of Christianity was written by the invisible hand of Eternal Power on the rock of our Savior's tomb, and in the lives of His own immediate disciples to whom He appeared in bodily form after His resurrection. The resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ was not only a stupendous miracle, but it is also an indisputable and undeniable fact. When we believe in Christ's physical and bodily resurrection we do not merely believe a dogma, neither a doctrine, nor yet public sentiment, but a fact: a fact which is the solid and enduring bedrock on which alone salvation can ever be built. Observe the words of Paul in 1 Corinthians 15:16-18: "For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised: and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." Truly, the very system of Christian faith is founded upon the great and glorious truth that Christ is risen indeed.

Shortly after Christ's resurrection and ascension the little band of disciples tarried in Jerusalem until they were filled with the Holy Spirit, and on that wonderful day of Pentecost three thousand were converted in the first meeting. But soon persecution arose; they were scattered, but they went everywhere preaching the gospel. The power of the resurrection was in them and working through them. They had the proof of it written indelibly upon their hearts, their minds, and in their lives; life itself, life more abundant. There was a living hope in a living Savior. Listen to the ringing words of the Apostle Peter: "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead."

Paul, one of the great persecutors of the church and doing everything in his power to destroy this new religion, was converted under the power of the risen Christ, and we hear him exclaim, "That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death; if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead" (Phil. 3:10, 11). Paul made the resurrection the theme of his preaching and because he believed the words of Jesus, who said, "Because I live, ye shall live also," he became the greatest of all the apostles in preaching the gospel.

It means so much, the fact and glory of His resurrection. Upon it depends the whole structure of our spiritual life. If Christ were dead, we should be of all men most miserable. The atoning work of the cross would have been for nothing; it would be merely the tragic end of a short, but remarkable, life. The curse of sin would still be upon us and our preaching, and faith would be in vain. But Paul exults in these words: "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the firstfruits of them that slept." The assurance and the promise are for us, who are walking in the life in which "old things have passed away; behold, all things are become new."

Now that He is risen, He is gathering to Himself His bride; He is gathering to Himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works. Now He is getting the church ready for His coming back again. Never again will His back be smitten or His brow crowned with thorns! He suffered once, He paid the price, He bought our redemption, He died for us!

Now He is risen, and all His humiliation is forever past. When He comes again He will come without sin unto salvation. When He places His feet on Mount Olivet, He shall come as King to reign without a rival. He will come to claim His own. Then let the church put on her beautiful garments and look up and rejoice, for He is risen! When He comes in resurrection glory, the dead in Christ shall come forth from the grave; this mortal shall put on immortality; then shall we shout, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" for we shall see Him in all His beauty and reign with Him in all His glory. May you and I be worthy to have a part in that great and glorious resurrection morn.

What Love Did

By a Schoolteacher

There was a nine-year-old problem boy in our city. All his school life he had annoyed the teachers, breaking all rules, leading the other children into mischief. Finally when his teacher could stand it no longer he was transferred to our building and put in my room.

Lewis had an inferiority complex. He had always been with children who were brighter and had always been told he was dumb. I soon found that the reason he was naughty was to gain attention for himself. I asked him what he liked about school. There were two things, drawing and music. He could draw well, and had a lovely voice.

I appointed Lewis room decorator and asked him to draw certain important pictures for the room. I made him feel we were dependent on him to make our room pretty. I also let him pick out many of the songs we sang, and had him sing on special occasions. I gave him just enough work in his other studies so that he could easily get it done. I made him feel that he was a special friend of mine, that I liked him. I did like him, too.

It worked wonders. Before long he was anxious to come to school. He no longer just tolerated school. He loved it. He gave up opportunities for trips with his father because he wanted to be in school. Love had begotten love.

WHAT LACK OF LOVE DID

After four months Lewis was promoted to another grade. His next teacher was annoyed by his slowness and took it out on him by holding him up for ridicule. He soon lost his new-found love for school; it went with his self-respect and he became again a problem boy. One day he took five dollars from the teacher and passed it out among the boys of the class. This was again an effort to gain favorable attention. When the principal faced Lewis with the misdeed he excused himself by saying, "My teacher didn't like me. She said I was no good, and made fun of me."

In each case he was living up to what his teacher expected of him. I expected good and got good. The next teacher expected bad and got bad.

We feel sorry for children like Lewis. A teacher has a great responsibility.

The second teacher was going by Isaiah 26:10: "Let favour be shewed to the wicked, yet will he not learn righteousness; in the land of uprightness will he deal unjustly." She forgot, though, that the boy was a boy, not a grown-up. "Cast not your pearls before swine," is superseded by, "The goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance."

The Great Appointment

"If a man die, shall he live again? all the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come."

Job has been waiting for his appointment for about thirty-five hundred years. Abel has been waiting almost six thousand years. Abraham, Ezekiel, Jeremiah, Isaiah, Daniel, David, and all the long list of faithful men of God of all ages are waiting the great day of their appointment. As far as Abel, Job, and all the rest of the ancients are concerned, their long years of waiting seem the same to them as it does to the one we laid to rest but yesterday. It is as nothing. All are in blessed unconsciousness. All are hidden in the grave.

"Oh that thou wouldest hide me in the grave, that thou wouldest keep me secret, until thy wrath be past, that thou wouldest appoint me a set time, and remember me!"

"Thou shalt call, and I will answer thee: thou wilt have a desire for the work of thine hands" (v. 15).

The moment of that appointment is retained in the mind of God. But it surely is coming. Just as you set your alarm clock to go off at a "set time" and wake you up, so the clock of God has a "set time." Inexorably the clock ticks on.

Some day "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first" (1 Thess. 4:16).

Then shall Job's "change come." "We shall all be changed" (1 Cor. 15:51). "The Lord Jesus Christ . . . shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body" (Phil. 3:20, 21).

Personal

The great appointment is Person with person. Job said, "Appoint me a set time, and remember me." Our own individuality will not be obscured by the "multitude, which no man could number" (Rev. 7:9). "For I know that my redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another" (Job 19:25-27).

Though no man can count the number of the redeemed, Jesus Christ has infinite capabilities and can and does know each one personally. "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me" (Rev. 3:20). Hallelujah! What personal fellowship! But listen: "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne" (v. 21).

THE WRONG VOICE

CAN you recall all the nice things that our Father did as they are told in the first chapter of Genesis? And it tells us that everything He made was good.

Then He made a special place for Adam and Eve to live. All the most attractive plants were growing there. Four rivers made the garden beautiful to look at. If you look at the 8th verse of the 2nd chapter of Genesis you will find the name of this garden. It is very easy to remember, for it has only four letters in it. What is it?

Then God showed Adam and Eve this beautiful Garden of Eden, and said, "Now this shall be your home. You are to keep it looking nice. The fruit and the vegetables are yours for food. Over here in the center are two especially nice trees. One is the tree of life. You may eat from that and you will always be well, and will not die.

"Here beside it is the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. That is the only tree in the garden that you must leave alone. You must not touch the fruit on that tree. If you do, you shall die."

God left them then and they went about their work. They picked the fruit and pulled the vegetables. As they passed the tree of knowledge they thought how lovely its fruit looked. It seemed to be brighter than the rest.

"Perhaps," thought Eve, "it would be sweeter than these figs." But she remembered what God said, and she did not touch it.

One day as Eve was working in the garden a terrible enemy came to her. It was some one who wanted her to do what God had told her not to do. The Bible calls this enemy a serpent.

Eve did not at first know that he was an enemy. She had seen him before as she planted seed and tended plants. This time he said,

"Did God tell you not to eat of every tree in this garden?"

"Oh, we may eat of all except one. Our Father told us not to touch the tree of knowledge. If we do, we shall die," answered Eve.

The enemy smiled and shook his head. "That fruit won't kill you," he said. "It will just help you to know a lot of things that you do not know now." And he passed on.

Eve looked at the tree and wished she might eat. The fruit was so pretty. If it was so that it would make her wise she surely wanted it. She put out her hand and touched it. Nothing happened. She reached again and pulled off some fruit. Still nothing happened. She tasted the fruit. It was much better than anything else she had had. So she ate it all and took some to Adam.

After they had finished the fruit Eve looked at Adam and said, "I must make us some clothes. I think I shall use fig leaves. I did not know before that we should have them."

So she sewed fig leaves together and made a covering for their bodies.

As she and Adam walked together in the shade of the trees they heard the voice of God calling to them. And just as you sometimes feel like doing when you have disobeyed your father, they hid themselves. They were ashamed to have God see them, for they knew they had done wrong. But the heavenly Father called until Adam answered Him.

Then God asked, "Where are you?"

Adam answered, "I was ashamed, so I went and hid myself when I heard You calling."

Then God said, "Adam, there is only one reason why you should feel ashamed. You have disobeyed Me. Did you eat the fruit?"

You know Adam was just like you and me. He wanted to lay the blame on some one else. He said, "Eve gave it to me, and I ate it."

Then Eve said, "Well, the serpent deceived me." She was just like Adam, wasn't she?

But they both remembered that God had told them not to eat it. They wondered what the Father would do. They soon learned. He said to the enemy that had talked with Eve, "You shall be hated by every living thing, because you have done this. Men will try to kill you and your children always. You will always crawl in the dust."

To Eve, God said, "You will have many children and much sorrow. And your husband will be stronger than you, so that you must do as he says."

To Adam He said, "You have listened to some one else instead of Me. Now your work will be very hard. There will be weeds and thorns in your fields. And you will no longer have the fruit from the tree of life. You must leave the garden with your wife, and when you die you will change again to dust as you were before I created you."

So God proved His words to be true. As Adam and Eve grew old and sick they talked often of the time they listened to the wrong voice, and wished they had remembered God's words instead.

WHAT'S THE ANSWER?

What man murdered one fourth of the earth's population? Look for the answer in next week's paper. It'll be there somewhere! Don't forget!

THANK YOU

Please may I have a small space in The Herald to thank all who remembered me on my birthday? It was a very pleasant surprise, and a real shower of cards, letters, and gifts.

There were so many that it would be physically impossible for me to reply to all of them, so I take this means of thanking all of them.

ILLINOIS EVANGELISTS' NOTES

The protracted meetings at the Peoria Open Bible Church of God closed Sunday evening, March 14. The meetings were conducted with Bro. F. L. Austin's usual vivacity and forcefulness of speech. The attendance was fair, ranging from about 12 to 35 at each service.

The church group at Peoria organized on Saturday, March 13, adopting the State authorized constitution, and electing the following officers: elder—Dean Fuqua, 1019 Howett St., Peoria, Ill.; deacon—George Slagle, Dunlap, Ill.; trustee—William O. Robbins, Rt. 4, Peoria; secretary—Dolores Fuqua, 1019 Howett St., Peoria; treasurer—Mrs. Dean Fuqua, 1019 Howett St., Peoria; Sunday school superintendent—Elzie Robbins, 313 Fayette St., Peoria.

The registered membership is 9. Sunday school attendance is usually about 12 to 22. Evening services usually call forth the larger attendance of 12 to 27. This is speaking of general work aside from special meetings. Mail can be received at the church building at 713 Lincoln Ave.

On Sunday morning and evening, the writer spoke for Macomb Open Bible Church of God. The attendance was 12 in the morning and 15 in the evening. It is a great consolation to us all to witness the earnestness and zeal that are growing in this group. Bro. Harvey Krogh was to speak here Sunday morning, March 21.

There are no definite plans for meetings until after Easter.

VALUABLE HELP FOR STEWARDSHIP COMMITTEES

The Layman Company, which cooperates with all denominations, will send for $1.00, to any committee or individual, on approval a package containing over 500 pages of pamphlets, bulletins, and tabloids, including three playlets, "The Scriptural Basis for the Tithe," and an account book; also a proposal for ten weeks of tithe education at so low a price that distribution to an entire church through ten weeks costs only 3½ cents per family.

When you write please mention The Restitution Herald; also give your denomination.

The Layman Company,
730 Rush St., Chicago, Ill.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

A cordial invitation is extended to any visiting brethren to enjoy the Easter services with us and partake of the noonday dinner at the church.

Bro. Joseph Holland was able to preside at the men's meeting on Saturday night, March 14. We are thankful indeed for the preservation of his life after his car was struck by a train some weeks ago.

The writer, having served as pastor here for nearly seven years, has asked the church to make the number seven the complete number again, and to arrange for another pastor to take over the work any time between June 1 and September 1 of this year that will be convenient both to the church and to the incoming minister.

We have learned to love the church family dearly, and hope always to be associated with them in one way or another. We feel that the work here is in the healthiest condition now that it has been in for several years, and that this is the proper time for a new pastor to take up the work.

After this change has been made we hope to have the time and liberty to renew some acquaintances over the American continent and to hold some evangelistic meetings from time to time.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

"If faith produce no works, I see
That faith is not a living tree,
Thus faith and works together grow;
No separate life they e'er can know;
They're soul and body, hand and heart:
What God hath joined, let no man part."

HAPPY WOODS, LOUISIANA

On Sunday, March 7, the evangelistic services came to a happy close with the addition of five new members. Those baptized are: Mr. and Mrs. George Halverson, Rt. 3, Hammond, La.; and the Misses Dorothy Foster, Pauline Bankston, both of Ponchatoula, La., and Frances Hutchinson of Rt. 3, Hammond. May the Lord lead all in service and crown with victory in the kingdom.

A definite need and willingness toward pastoral work was aroused, and by the time this is published Bro. Harry Goekler of Marshall, Ill., will be doing pastoral work for the two Louisiana churches near Hammond. We believe Bro. Goekler will do a good work in these fields and we pray him the best of this world's favors in this new venture.

Not least among our joys was that of meeting Sr. Siple, Senior, now 85 years of age. She was present at every evening service held at the Happy Woods Church of God. Had she wished to be absent a night or two she could have better used excuses some made who were absent a part of the time than the ones who made them.

On our return home it was our pleasure to visit with Bro. and Sr. J. S. Lyon of Citronelle, far distant from others of our faith, but nevertheless with their hearts in the Lord's work.

Sydney E. Magaw.

ARKANSAS CITY, KANSAS

It has been some time since a report from our church here has been sent to The Herald, and we thought it about time to let our church people know that we are still working in the Master's service.

We haven't a minister now, but hope to have one later. But we keep up our Sunday school and have an average attendance of thirty. Because of the inclement weather, which has brought on an epidemic of colds and flu, quite a number have been on the sick list. Among those are Sr. N. B. Robison; Bro. and Sr. Andy Reed; Sr. Harriet Reed, who is 88, and Sr. Chloe Sims. Some of these are getting better and will soon be with us again, but we have been trying to carry on, and we feel we have been blessed of the Lord in so doing.

Bro. George Waters, one of our active members, has been ill for almost a year. He had to give up the mail route out of Newkirk, Okla., and he is spending this winter in Texas. He and his wife went early in the fall. We hear that he is better, and we hope to have them with us again soon.

Sr. Emma Smith is another who is spending this winter in Texas. We are hoping soon to see her again. Her place was not often vacant at the church.

The Dorcas Society have a quilt that they are working on. We have been doing some work in this line to help the building fund out, and as a result, with what our monthly dues bring in and the proceeds from the Dorcas Society work, we are having the basement of our church finished. We have a nice ceiling on and partitions set separating the kitchen from the dining room and hall. Our brethren who cannot work in the daytime come at night and put in several hours' work. They are now lathing the partition and wall, and will have it plastered as soon as the lathing is finished. Our young people are happy to know that they are soon going to have a nice clean place to worship. This was a much-needed work, and we are so glad that it is to be accomplished and that we have the money to pay for it.

Sr. Hindman, of Ponca City, is here visiting her daughter and son-in-law, Bro. and Sr. Hobart Luper. She is very poorly.

We had visitors from Attica, Kan., March 7: Evert Reed and his brother, Funian Reed, and wife. The young men are sons of Bro. and Sr. Mandes Reed. The young couple have recently been married.

The teachers are planning an Easter program to be given Easter Sunday morning.
Church Secretary.

MOTHERS AND OTHERS

Others weary of the noise,

MARGARET BYLSMA

Margaret Bylsma was born in Brunswick, Ga., and attended the elementary and high schools there. She moved to Hammond, La., with her family in 1925, where she made her home with her niece, Dolly Bylsma.

On January 12, 1932, she was baptized by Elder M. W. Lyon of Cleveland, Ohio. From then until the time of her death Sr. Bylsma was an energetic worker of the Happy Woods Church of God near Hammond, and for the past year she taught Bible classes at the Blood River Church of God. She was loyal to the faith.

Death claimed her Wednesday, March 3, 1937, following a brief illness of influenza and pneumonia.

She is survived by her father, Peter Bylsma of Napoleonville, La.; one brother, Myles Bylsma of Baton Rouge, La.; one sister, Mrs. Davis Draper of Dearborn, Mich.; and her niece, Dolly Bylsma of Hammond. Her death has brought a deep sorrow to her many church friends, but also a determination to keep up the work that she was so interested in. The securing of a pastor was in part a result of losing Margaret.

Funeral services were conducted Friday, March 5, by the writer from the home in Hammond, and she was laid to rest in Greenlawn Cemetery to await the Master's call to immortality at the resurrection.

THE BOOK OF GENESIS

"In the beginning God!" In this, the opening statement of the Bible, is found the basis of all religion. Without a recognition of the being of God there could be no true worship, "for he that cometh to God must believe that he is."

To derive any particular benefit from one's belief in God's being he must know something beyond the mere fact of His existence; he must also be convinced "that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him" (Heb. 11:6).

The book of Genesis provides the knowledge upon which belief in God's goodness rests securely. For in this book is recorded a detailed account of creation, each act of which points to beneficent intention toward man on the part of the Creator.

A BOOK OF BEGINNINGS

This is a record of beginnings. It tells of the beginning of the heaven and the earth, and of life which, in all its varied forms, flourishes upon it. It records the beginning of human history, human family life, human society, and human government. It pictures the origin of sin and the result of sin, which is death. It contains the first intimation of the coming of a Redeemer and reveals the first faint outlines of the divine plan for man's salvation. It introduces faith as a saving element, and by example and precept points out the value of worship and the efficacy of prayer. It marks the first call to Abraham and the founding of Israel, God's original kingdom upon the earth, the type of the eternal kingdom which Christ is coming to establish.

A BOOK OF COVENANTS

Genesis is above all else a book of covenants. It makes known the covenants God made with Adam, Noah, Abraham, and the other patriarchs. Without the knowledge of the covenants God has made, the New Testament would be largely a closed book to us. This is especially true of the Abrahamic covenant which Genesis introduces, describes, and emphasizes. In the promise or covenant God made with Abraham is revealed the purposes of God not alone for Israel, but for "all the families of the earth," for all are to be blessed through him.

This covenant also applies to the believer in Christ, for "if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise" (Gal. 3:29).

The visionary call to Macedonia was the first recorded divine command to carry the gospel into Europe. Prior to this time, Christianity must have had its beginnings in parts of Europe as persecution, business, and travel sent Christian Jews and Gentiles from Asia throughout the Roman world. But Paul's missionary trips through Southern Europe were the only organized effort made to convert the Continent before Nero's time. No missionary has been more successful.

Are these words of the angel true? They are in the Bible. Yes, but some people don't believe the Bible. Suppose they didn't believe history; how would we prove to them that George Washington lived? I would point them to Washington Monument. They could not deny that that monument was erected for the purpose of commemorating the life and work of George Washington.

It is Sunday evening as I write these words. All over the civilized world today people gathered together to worship. Why? What set this day aside from the other days of the week as a day of worship? "Now when Jesus was risen early the first day of the week, he appeared first to Mary Magdalene, out of whom he had cast seven devils" (Mark 16:9). Yes, today is a monument to the fact that Jesus rose from the dead.

Does resurrection mean anything to us? Yes. First it means the coming of the Lord, for there can be no resurrection till He comes. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord" (1 Thess. 4:16, 17).

Does the coming of the Lord mean anything to us? As I look out over the world, I see many things that need changing for the better. There are wars and rumors of wars, and every nation is preparing for war as never before. The munition factories are running full blast, and the managements are hoping for war. Not only are they hoping for war, but they are pulling the international strings in order to bring about war. Much money is tied up, and there can be no profits till cannon roar, and more and more arms are put into use. What matters it to them that your boys and mine must be fodder for the cannon? The shekels cannot begin to roll in until the drums roll out the martial music. But this is only a beginning of the tale of woe. Poverty, naked and unashamed, stalks over the world, and millions are starving, while other millions are on the verge of starvation.

Besides all this, we have a sin-burdened world and untold sickness and suffering resulting from the curse. And the dread enemy of mankind stalks about seeking whom he may devour. He came into our midst last year and took some that were very near and dear to us. Many hearts and homes are broken by that enemy, and, if what I heard a preacher say is true, these things will go on and on. He said that there isn't any evidence that Christ will come for millions and millions of ages. If this is true, then the things I have been talking about will go on for millions and millions of ages—not years, but ages. People will keep on sinning and suffering and dying.

Thank God that man was a false prophet. The signs are thickening around us, and the dark clouds of war and strife rise up from the horizon and are reaching almost to the zenith. What do they portend? They tell us that the end of the age is near, and that the Lord is soon coming. Does that mean anything to us? It means resurrection. What does that mean? To illustrate this, I wish to tell you what my wife's father once said. He and some of his children were standing by the grave of his wife. He said, "I would like to be standing right here when the Lord comes, so I could meet her when she comes up." You can see what his faith was. He is sleeping beside her now, and they will come up together. Does resurrection mean as much to you? Are you expecting to meet loved ones at that time? Whether you are standing by their graves or not, you will meet them if you are prepared for the coming of the Lord, and if they went down in death in the triumphs of a living faith. Or does your faith waver, and are you uncertain as to just what will happen when that time comes?

Dear readers, let me admonish you to make yourselves ready, and have on the wedding garment, or you may suffer the loss of all things.

There is, so to speak, a greater resemblance than appears on the surface between prayer meetings and peace conferences; the people who need them least attend.—Troy, N. Y., Record.

Says Religious Digest: "The editor of a Missouri weekly paper carried this notice: 'Attention subscribers. When your subscription expires come in and renew promptly if you want me to give you a good boost toward the golden gate when you expire.'"

ACCORDING to The Philadelphia Bulletin, Sam was being implored by a church committee of brethren to contribute to a special fund the church was trying to raise. But Sam was obdurate.

"Well," said one of the brothers with a clincher of an argument, "don't you all think you owes de Lawd anything?"

"Oh, Ah sure does," said Sam, "only He ain't pressin' me like mah others creditors is."

The answer to the question in last week's paper may be found in Genesis 3:4 and John 8:44.

God can grow trees, and lift mountains, and fill space with shining stars, and people the earth with bright-eyed babies, and stretch the seas from continents, and weigh the nations as dust in the balance, and fill the earth with His glory; but He has so arranged things that He needs our help in the salvation of a lost world, in comforting a broken heart, in making the desert place blossom as the rose for those out of whose lives the light has gone and into whose lives the night has come. Let us help God with His work.

What Is Man?

By T. A. Drinkard

“What is man, that thou art mindful of him?”—Psalm 8:4.

THAT is, what entered into his constitutional make-up that makes him so important, above other creatures that were created by the power of God? This question by the Prophet David has caused no little commotion in the ranks of those who believe in the inherent immortality of the soul, a mythical entity that never dies and for which no promise of eternal life is offered.

Jesus Christ tasted death for those in the death state, that passed upon all men as the result of Adam's sin (Rom. 5:12).

If man at the time of his creation (Gen. 1:27) was so made that he could not die, why pass the sentence of death upon him? But the fact that man sinned and that death resulted is proof positive that he was not so made.

You will notice that Paul reveals that death came because of sin. If Adam had not sinned, then death would not have come; but since sin came, and since death was the result of that sin, therefore Adam was not created a deathless being. The sin that brought this death upon Adam and his posterity was committed when he broke, or disobeyed, the law of God, by eating the forbidden fruit which was good for food (Gen. 3:3, 6). Read Genesis 2:8, 9; 3:1-6.

Note this: “And when the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make one wise, she took of the fruit thereof, and did eat, and gave also unto her husband with her; and he did eat” (Gen. 3:6). Here is a violation of the law of God.

Let us come to Genesis 3:17-19: “And unto Adam he said, Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree, of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it: cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life. . . . In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return.”

Because Adam (1) hearkened unto his wife (2) and ate of the forbidden fruit, the earth was cursed, thorns and thistles came, and man was sentenced to death; and he should die the day the eating took place (Gen. 2:17).

I need not consider what some may say about this being a figurative narration, and that the trees and death were not literal but some mythical something that they can't explain themselves, much less persuade others to believe, or that it was a spiritual fruit, and a spiritual death. To teach something as truth that can't be sustained by the Word of God will always lead into trouble.

With these thoughts before us, let me read: “And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness” (Gen. 1:26). Since “there was not a man to till the ground” (Gen. 2:5), and since God said, “Let us make man,” it is only reasonable and natural that we conclude that man did not exist; therefore, God had to create or make him, and He has been pleased to tell us just how He did it and what entered into his constitution. But false teachers have so perverted facts that very little truth reaches the people.

I call your attention to Genesis 2:7, and would be pleased for you to take notice just how the verse is divided and worded, as it is very beautifully arranged in three parts. Those who believe in the immortality of the soul cannot face the fundamental facts of man's nature as revealed therein. Here it is: “And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul.”

Now, (a) since man was formed of the dust of the ground, (b) since God breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life to cause him to live, (Please turn to page 12)

Thousands Starve in China

"They have belied the Lord, and said, It is not he: . . . neither shall we see sword nor famine."—Jeremiah 5:12.

HANKOW, China, March 24.—More than two thousand farmers in Szechwan Province have already perished from starvation, it is reported here. Crazy by hunger, some eight hundred men attacked rice-laden junks at Yungchway, southwest of Chungking, recently and many of them are said to have been killed. Parents have sold their children to secure food. In some cities the shade trees have been cut down, the bark and smaller roots eaten, and the wood sold for fuel, the money received going for food for the starving people. Two million persons were reported fighting for bare existence west of the Hankow-Peiping railway. The shortage of food is due to prolonged drought. Low water in the Yangtze River blocks ship traffic through gorges, holding back considerable rice from Wanhien and other regions.

China has suffered from famine for thousands of years. Sometimes food shortage is caused by prolonged drought, as in the present instance, and at other times by the flooding of the Yellow River Valley, which periodically sweeps millions of acres clean of all vegetation.

No doubt, even after our Lord's return, it will require decades to correct the physical conditions and economic wrongs which bring such sad and unnecessary conditions about in China and other lands, for we read that the generous relief of the poor by the government of King Jesus will be one of the reasons why "all nations shall call him blessed" (Psalm 72:11-14, 16, 17).

Britain and Italy Drifting Toward War

"The fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron."—Daniel.

LONDON, March 23.—European diplomats said today that the tense relations now prevailing between Great Britain and Italy were putting the worst strain on the possibility of maintaining peace that has existed since the British sent their battleships into the Mediterranean two years ago. According to reliable sources of information Italian ire is due to the belief in Italy that the British rearmament program is for the purpose of putting England in shape to curb Italian territorial expansion. On the other hand Britain is said to be uneasy owing to Mussolini's move to fortify his Ethiopian territories and particularly over his announced intention of building a great naval base in the Red Sea to challenge British control of the Indian Ocean.

Hitler Declares Truce on Protestants

"The same horn made war with the saints."—Daniel.

BERLIN, Germany, March 23.—The Nazi Government declared a truce tonight in its long quarrel with rebellious Protestants rather than engage in simultaneous conflict with both Catholics and Protestants. The Pope's communication, which was read in all Catholic churches last Sunday, charged the Hitler Government with breaking its treaties with the Vatican. Pope Pius' encyclical against Nazi religious doctrines, it is said, was smuggled into Germany by airplane. The reading of the document has aroused much feeling throughout both Catholic and Government circles. The International Bible Students (followers of Judge Rutherford and the late Pastor Russell) continue to suffer severely from the persecution directed against all organizations which do not submit to Nazi domination.

Refuse Government Money

"Be in debt to no man—apart from the debt of love one to another."—Romans 13:8, Moffatt.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 25.—Appearing in the drab and simple garb of their religious faiths, a small group of serious-minded Pennsylvania "plain people" are in Washington demanding that the Federal Court enjoin the United States Government from trying to lend them money. They represent Amish, Mennonite, and Dunkard congregations located in the East Lampeter Township district of Lancaster, Pennsylvania. Their legal spokesman, Attorney John N. Landberg of Philadelphia, asserted that the school district authorities had accepted a grant of $66,250 PWA money for erection of a consolidated school. The attorney explained that while the money had been accepted by the school board as a grant, "these people and the law call it a loan and they don't want it." The members of the three denominations named are forbidden to incur a debt to any man, nor do they want their children taken to school in busses provided by the district.

Exhaling the Fragrance of Christ

By the Editor

"When I reached Troas to preach the gospel of Christ, though I had a wide opportunity in the Lord, my spirit could not rest, because I did not find my brother Titus there; so I said good-bye and went off to Macedonia. Wherever I go, thank God, he makes my life a constant pageant of triumph in Christ, diffusing the perfume of his knowledge everywhere by me. I live for God as the fragrance of Christ breathed alike on those who are being saved and on those who are perishing, to the one a deadly fragrance that makes for death, to the other a vital fragrance that makes for life."—2 Corinthians 2:12-16, Moffatt.

IT IS hard for us to associate the thought of weakness in any form with what we know of the man who said, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me" (Phil. 4:13). And yet we find that very man of abiding faith and boundless courage in the Lord confessing himself so dependent upon the presence of a human friend and helper that he cannot go on with a certain task without him.

The passage indicates that Paul neglected a "wide opportunity" for presenting the gospel in Troas, the center of a large and promising district for missionary activity, because Titus, whom he addresses elsewhere as "mine own son after the common faith" (Titus 1:4), was not there to labor with him.

At first thought it might appear to us that Paul manifested a sentimental weakness on that occasion that was unworthy of so great a man. But as we follow the record further, we learn that God used that apparent human weakness to induce the Apostle to leave Troas, where he would have been contented to remain had Titus joined him there, and go to Macedonia and open up the whole vast territory of Europe for the gospel and to sow the seed which was destined to yield such an abundant harvest of converts in coming years.

God often gains control over those whom He desires to serve Him by playing upon the strings of their human emotions. In this case it was Paul's yearning for the companionship of Titus and his refusal to go on with his task in Troas without that true and tried friend at his side. Strange, mysterious, and inscrutable, but ever beneficent, are the ways of Providence!

"My spirit could not rest," he declared, "because I did not find my brother Titus there." He was discontented, unhappy, and incapable of effectual work because of his disappointment in not finding his friend where he had expected to meet him. "So I said good-bye and went off to Macedonia."

Just how many times you and I have been moved by the Spirit of God to act as we have on given occasions, through some appeal made to our human emotions, we cannot tell. For myself I have long been convinced that God does, in deed, "work in a mysterious way His wonders to perform," and often invokes our compliance with His desires by obstructing the accomplishment of our own particular purposes.

As I look back over the years I have spent in His fellowship, the long trails I have followed at my Father's side, I can see clearly that He has from time to time appealed to every inclination and emotion, even to my natural selfishness, my fears, my lack of faith, to lead me in the direction He saw it was best for me to take.

You, too, I am sure, would give similar testimony of our Lord's leadership. As you glance back at the road you have come, you are able now to see in many an apparent failure that brought you only bitter disappointment at the time you experienced it, the wise and tender hand of the Father was guiding, directing, restricting, and altering the course of your life for your eternal and, perhaps, temporal good.

Sometimes God wants us to venture out into the untried regions of Macedonia when we prefer to remain among the familiar scenes of Troas, surrounded by friends whom we both know and trust, associates and coworkers in whose devotion we have the utmost confidence. Because of our contentment we do not see the Heaven-sent messenger from distant places, nor do we hear his plea, "Come over into Macedonia and help us!"

But when a great disappointment comes, when we are deprived of further fellowship with the friends we loved, we no longer care where we are or what we do, then we see the pleading arms of the man from Macedonia, and willingly respond, "Lord, send me!"

Paul with his deep spiritual insight was quick to see the hand of God in every event of life. The absence of Titus from Troas he readily ascribes to an act of God. The Lord wanted him to go to Macedonia, therefore He prevented Titus from joining the Apostle at the appointed place! Paul even rejoiced that this was so.

"Wherever I go, thank God, he makes my life a constant pageant of triumph in Christ, diffusing the perfume of his knowledge everywhere by me."

The familiar words of the King James fail to convey to our modern ears the full beauty and meaning of this passage: "Now thanks be to God, which always causeth us to triumph in Christ, and maketheth (Please turn to page 16)

The Hope Set Before Us

By Harriet E. Boice

REMEMBERING the words of Paul, that though an angel from heaven should preach any other gospel than that he preached, he should be accursed, we dare not set before you any other hope than that which rests upon the immutable Word of God. There is but one true hope. Our desire, like Paul's, is "that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what is the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints, and what is the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe." It becomes our privilege as well as our duty to instruct any who desire to know the Christian's hope. Give "a reason for the hope that is in you with meekness and fear," is the instruction given us by Peter (Eph. 1:18, 19; Gal. 1:9, 10; 1 Peter 3:15).

Hope, in relation to man, consists of two elements—desire and expectation. When one or the other is absent, there is hope. Its effect upon human life is most salutary. Hope inspires enterprise and activity; it gives confidence in the future; it moderates sorrow and gives solace in distress. Hope is the desire for some good, accompanied with the belief that it is attainable.

A true hope must be based upon a promise, and that promise must come from one whose veracity is unquestionable. Hope spans the time of waiting for that which is promised. We cannot hope for that we are already in possession of, neither can we hope for that which has not been promised, because we have no ground for confident expectation. The hope in relation to God and our future destiny must be based upon the promises of God. All others are false hopes.

The Christian's hope is "the hope of salvation." It is the earnest expectation of the creature waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God. This creature does not willingly wait for what has been promised, but by reason of Him (Christ) he is subjected in hope because the creature itself is to be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. Paul knew what great promises were given concerning old mother earth and the blessings promised to earth's inhabitants in that millennial age—the kingdom era, "the day of the Lord," when "the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever." Hence he says, "The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now. And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the firstfruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to-wit, the redemption of our body. For we are saved by hope: but hope that is seen is not hope: for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for? But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it" (Rom. 8:18-26). Hence, we see how hope spans the time of waiting for that which has been promised. The Christian's hope is based upon the immutable Word of God. In relation to "the hope set before us," which was confirmed by the oath of God; those who have not come into covenant relationship with God are "aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world" (Eph. 2:12). All must become "heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ" (Rom. 8:17) in order to lay hold on the hope set before us.

"Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. . . . And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise" (Gal. 3:26-29). Having obeyed "that form of doctrine" (Rom. 6:3, 4, 18) by which we are made "free from sin," we become servants of righteousness, "children of God," by adoption into the household of God (Eph. 2:19), "heirs of God," "heirs according to the promise." When we meet the conditions by which we become "heirs of promise," and members of the one body, then we lay hold on the hope set before us. In the waters of baptism we enter into covenant relationship with God and are sealed with the holy spirit of promise which is the "earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession" (Eph. 1:13, 14).

"Hearken, my beloved brethren, Hath not God chosen the poor of this world rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?" (James 2:5). "Paul, a servant of God, and an apostle of Jesus Christ, according to the faith of God's elect, and the acknowledging of the truth which is after godliness; in hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world began; but hath in due times manifested his word through preaching, which is committed unto me according to the commandment of God our Saviour." Paul exhorts Titus also to speak the things which become "sound doctrine." "For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world; looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ" (Titus 1:1-4; 2:11-14). This testimony shows that everlasting life and the kingdom are promised them that love Him. This blessed hope we are looking for. It is the hope set before us which is an anchor to the soul. It is based on the promises of God, and we are to wait for it until the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ. "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory. . . . Then shall the King say, . . . Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: . . . the righteous into life eternal (Matt. 25:31-46).

This hope is sure and steadfast, for He is faithful that promised; it reaches to that within the veil. For Christ is entered into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us. His blood has touched the mercy seat, and blotted out all the transgressions of those who have fled for refuge to lay hold on the hope set before us. "So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin (sin offering) unto salvation" (Heb. 9:28). "Your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."

This blessed hope is our anchor in the billows of life. It inspires us to live a godly life in Christ Jesus although we should suffer and die in the fierce waves of persecution that have destroyed thousands of God's saints (2 Tim. 3:12; Heb. 11:37). It sustains us in great trials, for the trials of this life are the purifying fires through which we must pass to make us perfect through suffering. "The sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us" (1 Peter 1:7; 5:7-10; Phil. 3:8-14; Rom. 8:18). This blessed hope makes us happy in sunshine or shadows, for blessed are they whose hope is in the Lord his God (Psalm 146:5; Matt. 5:3-16). It helps us to endure temptations and trials, for we know that after we are tried, and have proved faithful, the crown of life shall be ours, when the chief Shepherd shall appear (James 1:12; 2 Tim. 4:8; 1 Peter 5:4). It makes us steadfast in overcoming self, for he that overcometh shall inherit all things (Rev. 21:7). It is our comfort when passing through the shadows of death, for we sorrow not, even as others which have no hope (1 Thess. 4:14-18). We are saved by this blessed hope, for every man that hath this hope in Him purifieth himself, even as He is pure, because we know that when He shall appear, we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is. The pure in heart shall see God (1 John 3:2, 3; Matt. 5:8). Will you not accept Jesus that you may have this blessed hope as an anchor to the soul?—The Visitor.

The Border Line of Creeds

By A. H. Zilmer

A DOCTRINE is not necessarily true because a creed affirms it; nor is it necessarily false because a creed denounces and anathematizes it. The creed, the same as its framers, must pass the scrutiny of investigation in the light of the Word of God. If the terms and phrases of its doctrines are not to be found in the Scriptures, and recourse is taken to speculation, that is, laying down premises, and drawing conclusions, this fact at once creates the presumption that it rests upon an insecure foundation.

The creed undertakes to define God, and then demands that men accept that definition. When the Scriptures directly, clearly, and positively affirm, "But to us (believers) there is but one God," and then with equal clearness say that the one God is "the Father" (1 Cor. 8:6), does this require any elaborate interpretation or explanation from man to make clear its meaning? That which God caused to be said about Himself is inspired. Is it necessary for uninspired men to make clear what God in the inspired record says concerning Himself? When the Father says that He is the one God, and His Son Jesus acknowledged, both during His life among men and since His exaltation to God's right hand, that His Father is the only true God (John 17:3; Rev. 3:12), what is man or his creed that they should attempt to make this fact more clear? One of the creeds says that "the Father is God, the Son is God, and the Holy Ghost is God. And yet they are not three Gods, but one God." This definition or interpretation contradicts the teaching of Scripture, which says there is one God, the Father, or that God is one. To obviate the difficulty that arises from the premises laid down in the creed, it is said that there are three "persons" in the Godhead of the same substance, power, and eternity, none afore or after other. However, this does not overcome the difficulty. Jesus said in language clear and unmistakable, "The Father is greater than I" (John 14:28), and that of Himself He could "do nothing" (chap. 5:19, 30). Neither did He speak of Himself, but according to the "commandment" given to Him by His Father (John 12:49). These examples will suffice to show that the creedal definitions and interpretations are in violent collision with some of the plainest declarations of Scripture. This but shows that no creed, however it may be worded, and by whomsoever composed, may be regarded as the standard of correct belief. Wherever the creeds, all of them, leave the language of Scripture, and substitute in place thereof the deductions of men not inspired, there is the best of reasons for observing the apostolic caution, "Try the spirits, whether they are of God" (1 John 4:1).

No man's deductions, nor those embodied in any creed, however precise the reasoning, may be accepted as a finality, or as necessary for salvation. What is necessary for salvation is contained in the record of the preaching of the apostles to the world. This must of very necessity be brief, simple, direct, and easily understood, and thus suited to the capacities of the hearers. While some of those hearers might be able to subscribe to the metaphysical reasonings of the logicians, there are but few of the "not many wise men, not many mighty, not many noble" reached by the gospel call (1 Cor. 1:26) who can follow the subtle abstractions of the creeds or their makers. It is a grievous wrong, if not actually a crime, to expect persons of all grades of enlightenment and scholastic attainment, and from all walks of life, to be burdened with cumbersome terms, explanations, interpretations, and definitions ad infinitum which to them are unintelligible, when the essential truth exhibited in the record of the apostolic preaching to the world is simple and understandable to all.

The one great objection against all creeds without exception is that they deal with subjects which go far beyond the purview of the apostolic preaching to those outside. What did the first century teachers place before this class concerning God? Where may we obtain reliable information upon this point? The answer is to be found in the New Testament book called the Acts of the Apostles. This work, written by a well-informed, devout, and conscientious man of learning, undertakes to inform the reader how the apostles executed their mission in "all the world." Here in the score or more discourses of greater or lesser length we may learn what were the outstanding items of doctrine, including the doctrine concerning God, which those teachers placed before their hearers for their acceptance unto salvation.

Since we are here concerned only with the doctrine respecting God, we shall bring more closely into view what we find in the apostolic teaching about God.

Before a large gathering of Jews at Jerusalem the Apostle Peter spoke of Him as "the God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, the God of our fathers" (Acts 3:13). The witness Stephen before the council quoted the words of the angel to Moses, "I am the God of thy fathers, the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob" (chap. 7:32). From this we see that the God whom the first century teachers proclaimed to their hearers was the God who had revealed Himself to the fathers of the nation of Israel, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and whom they worshiped—the God who throughout the centuries of human existence "left not himself without witness" (chap. 14:17), who so placed the "bounds of habitation" of the peoples of the earth that the knowledge of Himself might be brought to them with the object they should "seek the Lord" (chap. 17:26, 27).

At Antioch in Pisidia the Apostle Paul addressed a company of Jews, and referred to God as "the God of this people of Israel" (chap. 13:17). Stephen before the council spoke of God as "the God of glory" (chap. 7:2).

Again we hear the Apostle Paul speaking before a Gentile audience at Derbe in Asia Minor. When the priest of Jupiter was about to make offerings to Barnabas and Paul, the latter said, "Sirs, why do ye these things? We also are men of like passions with you, and preach unto you that ye should turn from these vanities unto the living God, which made heaven and earth, and the sea, and all things that are therein" (chap. 14:15). Besides being the "living God" in contradiction to the "vanities" of idol worship, the God represented by the apostles is the Creator of all things.

In that notable address delivered by the Apostle Paul on Mars' Hill at Athens, before a company of devout Greek intellectuals, there is further reference to the true God as the Creator of "the world and all things therein" (chap. 17:24).

We now pass in review a number of things spoken in this record concerning God. Both Stephen and the Apostle Paul said that God "dwelleth not in temples made with hands" (chap. 7:48; 17:24). This made against both the temple worship of the Jews at Jerusalem, and the many idol temples and shrines of the Gentiles.

The true God whom Paul preached "is not worshipped with men's hands, as though he needed any thing" (chap. 17:25). Men can neither enrich Him nor add to His happiness by material gifts.

"He giveth to all life, and breath, and all things" (v. 26). Besides having need of nothing that men can give, He dispenses to them all good things.

"He is not far from every one of us." Therefore the obligation that they "should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him" (v. 27), is not difficult to discharge.

"In him we live, and move, and have our being" (v. 28). We are never beyond the scope of His observation, or the sphere of His operations.

"We are also his offspring" (vv. 28, 29). The poet Aratus, referred to by the Apostle, flourished in Cilicia about 300 B. C., and was the author of the language here used by the Apostle. The speaker, so far from condemning the idea, cited it with approval: "Forasmuch then as we are the offspring of God," etc. The word used by the Apostle is genos, which is elsewhere translated "kindred" (chap. 4:6; 7:13), and "stock" (chap. 13:26; Phil. 3:5). Being the divine offspring, stock, or race imposes another powerful obligation upon men to serve the true and living God.

The God who is the Creator, Benefactor, and Preserver of the race, through the gospel issued a most solemn "command" to all His offspring everywhere to repent of their misdeeds, and this in view of the fact that He has appointed the day in which He is about to judge the world in righteousness by the Man whom He has ordained for this purpose, whereof He has given assurance to all men in that He raised Him from the dead (v. 30). As the Creator and Owner of mankind He has every right to give such a command, and expect compliance therewith. This command is consonant with the commission given by the Lord to Saul on the way to Damascus, when He informed him that he should be a witness to the people and the Gentiles, "to open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive the forgiveness of their sins, and an inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in me." Pursuant to this the Apostle called upon men everywhere to "repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance" (chap. 14:15; 26:17-20).

From the foregoing we see clearly that the mission of the apostles to the world, as reflected in the Acts, was not to go into a minute and detailed discussion of the Infinite One, nor to fill men's minds with elaborate theories concerning Him, but to bring about an adjustment of man's relation to God, which had been disturbed by sin. It was to direct men's attention to the fact that they had sinned without excuse or justification, thus incurring the displeasure of God,

World Peace or Armageddon?

WHEN the conflict of 1914-1918 was over, we were told, "That was the war to end war. At last mankind has learned the lesson that war does not pay, that it is a losing proposition for both the victors and the vanquished, that the millions of young lives lost, the billions of money worse than squandered, the disruption of business, the degenerative reaction in morality and spirituality—all these have shown the nations the folly of their ways; from now we will walk in the path of peace. We will beat our swords into plowshares, and our spears into hooks, we will not lift up sword against each other again, neither will we learn war any more."

But alas! Our hopes for a millennium or even for a century of peace and amity among the nations of the world have been dashed into a thousand pieces. Today we can hear the anvils of Mars ringing as plowshares are beaten into swords and pruninghooks into spears. The very ground vibrates under the rhythmic tread of millions of drilling soldiers. The rat-a-tat-tat of pneumatic hammers comes from every shipyard of the world where new and greater leviathans of the seas are being hurried to completion before "the next war" breaks. Faster and more efficient ships of the air are every day cleaving the skies as the nations prepare the winged armadas that some day shall drop their "ghastly dew" and plummet of death. Chemists are secreted in laboratories to discover lethal gases that will asphyxiate whole armies and great cities.

Why have we been thus frustrated? If we have desired reconciliation, why is hatred everywhere flaming? If we have worked so zealously for disarmament, why do we now see the entire world rearming? If we have summoned the peoples of earth to the council table of peace, why are they now rushing headlong toward the battlefields of war? Is our dream of a peaceful world only a mirage that never shall become a reality? Is mankind destined to recurring periods of war which some day may destroy man and his civilization? Or will the gradual spread of science and enlightenment, education and religion, conquer the urge to kill and thus bring everlasting peace and harmony?

Of this much we can be sure—no generation ever saw the efforts put forth to achieve world peace and equilibrium that we have witnessed since the World War. There have been more peace and disarmament conferences in the fifteen years since the war than in centuries before. More nations gathered around the tables in Washington, London and Geneva than ever met before to iron out their differences. Immediately after the war came the formation of the Peace Treaty of Versailles and the consequent establishment of the League of Nations, everywhere heralded in that day as the greatest step the world had ever taken toward the realization of peace. Less than four years after the war the major powers gathered in Washington to scale down their huge naval establishments, and to agree upon a certain ratio for their navies. Then came Locar-no with its pact that was said to be an absolute guarantee of peace.

Some years later the world was thrilled with the promulgation of the Kellogg-Briand Peace Pact to which most of the nations were signatory, and in which they solemnly pledged to "renounce war as a matter of national policy." This pact was hailed the world around as a wholesale repudiation of Mars and a whole-hearted adoption of the dove of peace.

WE HAVE TRIED, BUT IN VAIN

Two years after that pact was made, the nations gathered at London to carry out the intent of the pact, that is, to reduce their armies, navies, and air forces. A year and a half after they adjourned at London, they gathered at Geneva for "the greatest peace and disarmament conference of all time," for more than sixty nations came there to lay new and enduring timbers in the rising temple of peace. On that February day of 1932 when Geneva was thronged with peace delegates from all the world, everywhere, east and west, north and south, Christendom lifted its united voice to the Prince of Peace in heaven above, praying that the hearts of men be filled with love and that the passions that lead to war be forever abated in the human breast.

Oh, yes, we have tried. In a thousand ways we have tried to make peace, to banish war, and to insure an epoch of tranquillity. But today the League of Nations totters precariously on the brink of impotence and dissolution. The nations are in a frenzy of preparation for war. We see peace and disarmament conferences "adjourned" and on a prolonged recess. We have much talk of new naval races, greater military budgets, alliances, and "balance of power."

Why this strange dilemma wherein no one wants war and yet everyone is getting ready for it?

In the first place, the last war and the peace treaty that followed did not really settle the issues at stake. The victorious nations laid too heavy a peace on the losers. Versailles sowed a thousand dragon's teeth in Europe. France sought to secure herself against the possibility of Germany's ever menacing her again. She saw to it that Germany's future army should be only a scant minimum, that her navy should be only a toy, and that she should not be allowed chemical warfare equipment or military aircraft. In other words, France deliberately planned that Germany should never be a first-class military power again.

But "the worm always turns." Germany, deeply resentful of the implacable attitude of France, began to revive despite the restrictions the Allies had placed upon her. When Adolf Hitler came to power, Germany took new courage, walked out of the League of Nations, quit the Geneva Disarmament Conference, and announced to France and to the world that she would no longer continue in the role of a subject state, but intended to achieve her place in the sun again, and to build up a military establishment comparable to that of the nations round about her.

This audacious and belligerent attitude on the part of Germany has thoroughly frightened France. As a result, she has spent uncounted millions in fortifying her eastern border; she is increasing her already superb military force, and is keeping her great army and navy in instant preparation for any eventuality. She will agree to no appreciable disarmament, and is scornful of all efforts at achieving a peace that allows Germany power and prestige.

EUROPE'S CALDRON BOILS

To the south we have Mussolini, who frankly says that he intends to make Italy a first-class military power. Mussolini has succeeded in instilling the martial spirit into Italy's millions until that nation is one of the world's strongholds of militarism, frankly avowing that France and Germany must both be thwarted in their efforts to influence and to control Southern and Southeastern Europe and the Mediterranean area. By alliance, Mussolini binds Austria and Hungary to him to offset France and her Balkan allies.

Thus Europe's caldron boils. Some untoward incident or act of provocation can throw the entire Continent into war almost overnight. Most observers agree that Germany and France must some day settle the old score between them. Hitler feels himself unprepared to match swords just yet, but is vigorously pushing preparation for "der Tag." France is resolved to have enough nations yoked with her so that when hostilities start she and her allies can overpower Germany. Italy knows full well she will be drawn into the fray, so she is fortifying her position diplomatically and militarily.

A WORLD CONFLICT BREWS IN ASIA

When we turn our eyes to the continent of Asia, we see an equally alarming situation. There Japan and Russia angrily eye each other across the Siberian-Manchurian border with the unhappy realization that sooner or later—probably sooner—a conflict of great proportions will break out between them.

The causes of the coming struggle in the Orient are deep-seated. For more than forty years Japan has been hoping for a foothold on the continent of Asia. Her tiny island empire is fast becoming insufferably crowded with her rapidly multiplying millions. Then she needs more territory for the raising of foodstuffs, and she direly needs mineral and oil resources. Driven by these necessities, she recently took Manchuria, and has been steadily furthering her influence in the territories that border on Manchuria.

But the penetration of Japan into these sections of Asia is a direct threat to Russia. Russia believes that the taking of Manchuria by Japan is only the prelude to widespread aggression by Japan in China proper, in Mongolia, and perhaps in Siberia itself.

Therefore the die is cast. Japan, a strong industrial and military power, is ready to fight Russia any time a war is precipitated. But Russia just now is in the throes of revolutionizing her whole life in a great program of industrialization, mechanization, and militarization. She is not ready to fight, but she is zealously preparing, and if given a very few years, will be ready to meet Japan in a terrific struggle to see who shall be master in Asia.

There are many students of world affairs who hold that if Russia and Japan become embroiled other major nations will not be able to keep out of the fray. They say the United States, England, and France all have so great territorial and commercial interests in the Orient that they will be unable to remain neutral. Indeed, several renowned students of international affairs say that a world war of unprecedented magnitude is now brewing in the Far East.

After this brief survey of the outlook for peace and war, let us consider some of the Bible's prophecies concerning our day. God, who knows the end from the beginning, and who has made known to His servants the prophets things that should come to pass, has given us in His Word many forecasts of events and trends in that final generation before the consummation of the human regime and the establishment of His kingdom.

PAUL FORESAW PEACE MOVEMENTS

For example, the great peace movement of our day with its consequent failure has been boldly outlined in Bible prophecy. Paul writes, "Of the times and the seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you. For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night. For when they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape. But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief" (1 Thess. 5:1-4).

Paul foresaw the world-wide propaganda of our day for world peace and universal security and safety, but he also saw that as a result of the rivalries and antipathies among the nations these efforts would be aborted by the sudden outbreak of war more destructive than ever.

One of the most arresting prophecies is that concerning the great climactic war of Armageddon as portrayed by John the revelator in Revelation 16:12-16:

"The sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared. And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty . . . And he gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon."

Here John predicted that "the kings of the east" would some day wake up, prepare for battle; in the war they would precipitate all the kings of the world would be involved. He further predicted that that war would culminate in the second coming of Jesus Christ and the end of the present world state. See verse 15; also chapters 21 and 22.

We live in the very time that is witnessing the waking up and preparation of the Orient. Beyond a doubt, the stage is now being set in the Far East for a struggle that sometime will focus in Armageddon itself. We live in a little time of so-called peace; but before us, and not remote either, we face an era of unparalleled conflict, which happily will eventuate in Armageddon—the war that will end war. Armageddon will be followed by the glorious second advent of Jesus Christ, the Prince of Peace. After cleansing the world of sin and sinners, He will make it anew, and therein establish His everlasting kingdom, peopled by those who have loved and obeyed Him. That, in brief, is the Bible's outline of future history.

"But," you say, "won't wars decrease as man grows more civilized?"

History shouts back a loud and emphatic "No!"

Let us quote a paragraph from a recent Literary Digest:

"Does war tend to decline as nations become more civilized? Many philosophers have said so, but now two sociologists of Harvard University have turned the cold and dispassionate eye of science upon the question, and have decided that future wars, fiercer than any ever fought before, apparently can be avoided only by a miracle. Far from declining, wars increase in number and intensity as nations progress, and the worst flare-up since the dawn of history has occurred in our own century." The investigators found that "the index number of Mars rose from 2.67 in the twelfth century to 13,735.98 in the twentieth."

MORE CIVILIZED, MORE WARLIKE

The verdict of history is that the further we go along civilization's trail the more warlike and destructive we become. Sometimes, with a superiority complex, we look back on the cave man with his rude club or stone ax, and declare him the barbarian. But for bloody, wholesale destruction he was the merest tyro compared with us. When we go forth to war with the engines of destruction science has placed in our hands, we show up the Shalmanesers, the Attilas, the Tamarlanes, and the Napoleons of former centuries as only kindergartners and amateurs in the art of killing our fellow men. With all the light of modern science and education and religion shining in full splendor upon us, we are the most barbarous barbarians the world has ever seen. The war we have recently waged, and those others now on our agenda, so prove us.

Ah, yes, it is a most fortunate thing that God has promised to end it all in Armageddon, else we would keep on increasing our killing and destroying efficiency until mankind and civilization would perish from the earth. God has promised to take a hand in human affairs when man has fully proved his inability to make a good world. The forces that science has unleashed are greater than science can control, therefore divine intervention will some day be necessary. The passions of men refuse to be conquered. Human character has not developed commensurately with industry and science. New inventions have not given us new hearts.

The only way out of recurring wars and more destructive conflicts is for God to end man's rulership in this world and Himself take over the governorship of the nations. This He has promised to do, and this He will do through the imminent second coming of His Son Jesus Christ. The very existence of wars and rumors of wars in our day is a sign that His coming is near, and was so declared by Christ to His disciples nineteen hundred years ago when they came to Him, asking, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" See Matthew 24:3, 7.

Yes, world peace will come, but it will not be by man's efforts, but only when God assumes direct control. May Jesus soon come that wars may cease. May God's kingdom be soon established that love may flood the universe, and that hatred and conflict may be forever banished. God is our hope. For the soon appearing of His Son we shall daily pray.—Hope of the World.

and that forgiveness was possible. Eight times in this brief record of a little more than a thousand verses is sin mentioned by name. Seven times is remission, blotting out, forgiveness, or washing away of those sins offered to men upon the fulfillment of certain specified conditions (chap. 2:38; 3:19; 5:31; 10:43; 13:38; 22:16; 26:18). Those sins were committed against God, and to Him alone belongs the prerogative of forgiveness either directly or through an authorized agent. In one of the passages Jesus is spoken of as having been exalted to the right hand of God "to be a Prince and a Saviour, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins" (chap. 5:31). This language was addressed to a company of Jews at Jerusalem following the imprisonment and miraculous release of Peter and John. To the Gentile Cornelius and his company at Cæsarea the Apostle Peter declared some years later, "To him (Jesus of Nazareth) give all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins" (chap. 10:34-43). Thus God through Jesus graciously grants to the penitent and believing subject who is baptized into the name of Jesus the remission of his sins (chap. 2:38; 8:16; 10:48; 19:5). We know of no creed that deals in a scriptural manner with repentance and the remission of sins. All sidestep this subject for less important philosophical speculations.—The Faith.

A Moment for God

IN THE quiet hush of morning, a moment alone with God will revive and freshen the soul.

Before taking up the cares of the day, let the soul with all of its burdens be laid at the throne of grace. For how much easier it is to know that God is willing to help us bear our burdens all the way than to bear them ourselves alone and unaided!

The impression that we receive from Christ in the morning will last us throughout the day and, whenever we are tempted to sin, will bring back to our memories that early morning hour with Him, and save us from slipping into many pitfalls and delusions.

When Jesus was here on earth, it is said that He arose long before dawn to go off into a quiet place to pray. "These hours of aloneness were a necessity to Jesus. They were the supreme hours of His life. They were the hours that made His work divine. Out of these hours of retirement He issued to do many things for which they had strengthened and prepared Him."

If Jesus, the Son of God, prayed as He did for divine help, how much more ought we to seek our heavenly Father for help to prepare us to meet the day! Unless we spend a quiet moment alone with Him in the morning, He cannot speak to us or "pour new strength into our lives," "however busily we may serve" Him.

A story, told by Mr. McConkey, helps us to realize the importance of being alone with God.

"On the shores of Lake Huron, one day last summer, a little group of us were standing on the dock waiting for the arrival of the steamer. All about us was a babel of voices. Presently the young clerk said, 'Come into the fish house.' (It was a fishing village, and there was a little warehouse where the men packed their fish.) We went in with him, and he shut the door, and said, 'Listen.' As we stood there, we could plainly hear the sound of the approaching boat, the peculiar intermittent beating of the paddles of a side-wheel steamer. Then we walked out of the door to the wharf, where the people were talking; and the sound of the approaching steamer vanished. Again with a friend we went into the room, and again we heard the sound clearly and plainly. We were in the place of stillness. There were no voices about to distract, or disturb, or break the silence, and there we could distinctly hear the approaching steamer. We went out and sat down upon the wharf; and in a few minutes, the smoke from the funnels arose above the island. 'What a lesson!' we thought. When we get alone in the chamber of communion with God, we can hear the voice of God; God can reveal His mind to us as nowhere else."

We should never forget that being alone with God is our supreme privilege.

Men of great power in every age have been men of prayer. They have realized that prayer is the source of all strength.

"The men who have done the most for God in this world have been early on their knees. He who fritters away the early morning, its opportunity and freshness, in other pursuits than seeking God, will make poor headway seeking Him the rest of the day. If God is not first in our thoughts and efforts in the morning, He will be in the last place the remainder of the day." Knowing this, we should readily make it our duty to come to Him before beginning the day, rather than begin the day without His counsel, and, having failed, come to Him for help.

Throughout the day, at work in an office or a kitchen, or amid the jostle of the crowd on a busy street, just a brief moment with God will bring sweet assurance that He will be with us to guide and direct us.

"Sometime, between the dawn and dark,
Go thou, O friend, apart,
That a cool drop of heaven's dew
May fall into my heart.
Thus with a spirit soothed and cured
Of restlessness and pain,
Thou mayest, nerved with force divine,
Take up thy work again."

God is understanding and loving. He knows exactly when we are in danger, and longs to send guardian angels to protect us; but He wants us to learn to be dependent upon Him for protection and to ask Him for help. If He sees even the little sparrows fall, and cares for them, how much more does He care for us and for our welfare!

A little child seeks his father's hand and clings tightly on, through the crowded thoroughfare. He does not worry lest he find himself lost or hurt, since he knows he is holding on to father's hand. Such is the trust of a little child, but we ought also to seek out our heavenly Father, and hold tightly to His hand with all trust and confidence. When we put all our faith in Him, a feeling of peace and safety comes to us. We depend wholly upon Him for protection.

Like the father who wants his child to come to him and ask for help, God wants us, His children, to go to Him and ask for help. He longs for our companionship and is glad when we take time to talk to Him. We should feel free to tell Him all our joys and our sorrows, our disappointments and our happiness. He is as much interested in you as if you were the only person for whom He gave His Son. If His interest in you is so great, as a kind and merciful loving Father, should you not regard Him thus, and seek Him as His child?

"His will for your life down here these days is a father's will for the one most dearly loved."

How comforting is the thought that at the close of every day we can come apart from the busy world with all its dazzling lights, its people hurrying to and fro, and the usual hum of a big city, to talk with God in solitude. Just a moment, if not more, to thank Him for His loving watchcare throughout the day, and for the showers of blessing that He has poured down upon us.

"Alone with God in the evening,
When are past the cares of the day,
And the hot, flushed clouds of sunset
Have faded to sober gray!
The troubles that weighed my spirit,
In the hush of the darkness cease.
I'm alone with God in the evening,
And my soul is filled with peace."

Should we not be thankful that we have the privilege of humbly kneeling before God and asking for pardon for our numberless transgressions?

Can you imagine the situation that would prevail if man never had the privilege of asking for forgiveness? Since we can come before the Father and obtain forgiveness of sins in the name of His Son Jesus, we should not be hesitant, but go to the Father, humbly confessing all, and "he will abundantly pardon" (Isa. 55:7).

When Gen. Gordon was in Africa, though he was very busy, he daily had "an interview with the great General of heaven and earth." He took his problems to the Lord in prayer.

"At Valley Forge, Washington was frequently seen to retire to a secluded grove. Mr. Potts, a Quaker, followed him on one occasion, and saw him on his knees in prayer. He returned, and told his family he was sure the American cause would prevail, because he had seen the American commander in prayer."

Washington evidently knew the power of prayer and took his problems to the great Commander.

"Take to Him everything that perplexes the mind. Nothing is too great for Him to bear, for He holds up worlds, He rules over all the affairs of the universe. Nothing that in any way concerns our peace is too small for Him to notice. There is no chapter in our experience too dark for Him to read; there is no perplexity too difficult for Him to unravel."

Our hearts would feel lighter should we lay our trouble at Jesus' feet and trust it all to Him, to do with it as He sees best.

Let us pause only a moment longer to ask that He watch over us through the night and keep us from harm and danger till we seek Him again in the early morn.

Only a moment throughout the day, and what bountiful blessings received! Does it pay to commune with God for only a moment? Surely it does.—Mabel Liu in Signs of the Times.

The Power of the Bible

"TWO infidels were sitting in a railway car discussing Christ's wonderful life. One of them said, 'I think an interesting romance could be written about Him.' The other replied, 'And you are the man to write it. Set forth the correct view of His life and character. Tear down the prevailing sentiment as to His divineness, and paint Him as He was—a man among men.'" The suggestion was acted on and the romance was written. The man who made the suggestion was Col. Ingersoll; the author was Gen. Lew Wallace; and the book was Ben Hur. In the process of gathering information and constructing the book, the General found himself facing the unaccountable man. The more he studied the life and character the more profoundly he was convinced that Jesus was more than a man among men, and at last, like the centurion at the cross of Jesus, he was constrained to cry out, "Verily, this was the Son of God." Thus, through research and writing Ben Hur, Gen. Lew Wallace, the infidel, became a Christian, convinced of Christ's divinity, and that He was and is the long-promised Messiah, Christ Jesus, the Savior of men.

"Two poverty-stricken, illiterate men, one blind and the other seemingly at the point of death, came to a mission hospital in India. On leaving the hospital some time later, the blind man asked for a copy of the 'Jesus Book.' 'Of what use is it to you? You cannot read,' remarked a missionary. 'No,' replied the blind man, 'but we will take it to those who can.' They returned to their village, the happy possessors of a Gospel. They were weavers by trade. Whenever men came to purchase cloth in that village they were met with the remark, 'Before we do any business with you, you must read us a few pages out of our book.' When the tax collectors came round, they, too, were told, 'We can do no business with you until you have read to us out of our book.' When the doctor from the hospital visited that village two years afterward he found the heathen temple permanently closed, and a church built, and the whole village won for Christ." Such is the power of the Bible.

A poor student in Germany, needing money to make a trip, borrowed from a rich Jew, leaving as security a Hebrew Bible and a Greek New Testament which contained the Greek and German words side by side in separate columns.

In the student's absence "the Jew determined to read the New Testament through, in order to strengthen in his mind his hatred for Jesus, to ridicule His teaching in the synagogue, and so to be better able to show forth his zeal for the Jewish faith."

After reading the New Testament through the third time, he was so overcome with its power, and so filled with its truths, that he cried out in the language of Saul of Tarsus, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" And when the student returned after several weeks and went to redeem his books, the Jew asked him if he would sell him the New Testament and for what price.

The student named a nominal sum. "The Jew opened a drawer in the table, and, taking out a bag, counted out a hundred gold pieces. 'There, take that,' said he. 'Gladly will I give you more if you wish it, and if at any time I can be of any use to you, only come to me and I will help you to the uttermost of my power.' He then upbraided the student for setting such a low price on the Book. Being converted through the reading of the New Testament, he became, not only a follower of the Christ he had before hated, but also became an earnest Christian worker, and in a short time won nine Jewish families of his town to the Christian faith. Such is the power of the Bible."

We are told that "the Old Testament is the New Testament concealed, and that the New Testament is the Old Testament revealed." Christ and the gospel which is "the power of God unto salvation," is the central theme of both the Old and the New Testaments, and is still doing the work of saving men and women from sin and making them Christlike wherever and whenever it is preached in love and the power of the Spirit.

"George Wendling, a follower and close friend of Ingersoll, read the Scriptures more closely than Ingersoll did, that he, too, might be more able to successfully argue against them. But Wendling, reading sincerely, became convinced of the truth of the Word, and was converted and became Ingersoll's most powerful antagonist."

"So also Joseph Barker, the English infidel, reading the Bible to get more material against it, came to believe it, and went unweariedly over the ground again to undo the great harm he had done, becoming a flaming evangelist in England and America." So we could go on introducing testimony ad infinitum, setting forth the power of the Bible.

For nearly two thousand years everything that infidelity and atheism could do to discredit the Bible has been done, but without avail, for it still stands without a peer among books, and is being published each year in larger numbers and in more languages and dialects, and remains the best seller among books. It continues to be the headlight of civilization, and wherever it goes, schools, colleges, almshouses, orphanages, hospitals, and other institutions of mercy and charity multiply. Can infidels and atheists show where their teachings do this? No doubt some infidels and atheists are kind-hearted, and contribute to worthy causes, but I have never read or heard of a college, hospital, or any charitable institution throughout this or any other land. founded and supported by any infidel or atheistic society.

Thomas Paine once said, "I have gone up and down through the Christian Garden of Eden, and with my single axe I have cut down one after another of its trees till I have scarcely left a sapling standing." But where is the boaster today? His memory and his vaunted "Age of Reason," like himself, are buried in oblivion, but the trees of the "Christian Garden of Eden" still flourish in immortal bloom.

"Voltaire openly boasted that 'with one hand he would overthrow the edifice of Christianity which required the hands of twelve apostles to build up.' But the very press which he employed at Fernay to print his blasphemies, has been employed for years past at Geneva in printing Bibles."

Yes, thank God, the Bible still stands and has not lost its power and never will, for God has said, "As the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater: so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth; it shall not return unto me void, but shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it" (Isa. 55:10, 11).—R. M. Simmons in The Messiah's Advocate.

WHAT IS MAN?

(c) and since he became a living soul as the result of the breath of life entering into him, therefore when the breath of life leaves him what is the result?

The record is very plain that man was formed "of the dust of the ground." Here was a miracle among the many which God had already performed. Let us look at man after God made him, and just before the breath entered into him. He had eyes that could not see; he had ears that could not hear, a tongue that could not talk, a brain that could not think, and feet that could not walk. But the moment God breathed the breath into him all these parts began to function. His brain being vitalized, he could think, and thus he became a living soul, or a soul that lived.

I read that "the spirit of God hath made me, and the breath of the Almighty hath given me life" (Job 33:4). Here Elihu affirms that the principles of Genesis 2:7 are true, that the Spirit of God created man, and that the God-controlled breath gave him life. Elihu thus views him as he comes into being; let him view him as he goes down into death: "If he set his heart upon man, if he gather unto himself his spirit and his breath; all flesh shall perish together, and man shall turn again unto dust" (Job 34:14, 15).

Man is never said to go up when he dies; it is always "downward to the earth," and fully harmonizes with Genesis 3:19.

In the face of these plainly stated truths, why will professed ministers of the gospel persist in teaching that the soul of man never dies, when there is not one passage of Scripture that sustains their view? I state it this way: The thing that lives is the thing that dies, and that which dies stays dead until the resurrection. If man doesn't die, there is no burial, and therefore no resurrection; hence, why expect one? And how foolish to believe in a resurrection of dead people if nobody dies!

May I give this little bit of personal experience: In a public discussion the opposition followed my affirmation with all the power at his command, and said, "Elder Drinkard, all those scriptures which you gave refer to the body, and say that when death to that body comes, we ascend to heaven and there receive a house or body not made with hands" (2 Cor. 5:1-4). My question to him went unanswered, and that was, If his theory was true, would there

The Anvil of God's Word

"Last eve I passed beside a blacksmith's door
And heard the anvil ring the vesper chime;
Then, looking in, I saw upon the floor
Old hammers worn with beating years of time.

"How many anvils have you had,' said I,
'To wear and batter all these hammers so?'
'Just one,' said he, and then with twinkling eye,
'The anvil wears the hammers out, you know.'

"And so,' I thought, 'the Anvil of God's Word
For ages skeptic blows have beat upon,
Yet, though the noise of falling blows was heard,
The Anvil is unharmed, the hammers gone.'"

"He Satisfieth the Longing Soul"

"The hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth."

You have seen many well-kept cemeteries. You have looked out over the neatly trimmed, deep green grass sparkling with dew in the early morning sunshine, and you have seen the polished marble shafts and headstones, the orderly rows of white crosses. You may have thought, Rich and poor alike bring the bodies of their loved ones here to this lovely spot, but their longing souls are not satisfied.

The rich and powerful follow the bodies they have adored to lay them beneath magnificent masses of stone. The beloved Lincoln lies encased in a great ball of solid concrete beneath a tomb constructed from marbles and other choice stones from all parts of the earth. Beautiful, domed mausoleums preserve loved forms. Some cemeteries do away with headstones and lay their dead to rest beneath rolling lawns and shady trees. Others cremate —. Thus the aching void in the human heart is eased with beauty. But the void still remains. The longing soul is not satisfied.

Just one thing could satisfy. If the cold, still form should thrill to life again. That only can satisfy the mourner.

The aching heart is not deceived; those dead bodies are valuable. Not only are they the forms that contained the mortal life of our loved ones, they also are the forms that must contain the resurrection life. Those bodies "shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day" (John 11:24). "For he satisfieth the longing soul" (Psalm 107:9).

The Spiritual Body

The resurrection of our Lord was not just an empty gesture. He really needed His body in order to have the resurrection life. The resurrection does away forever with the idea that the body can be stored away in some marble vault while the real person is off living in some other form. This "vile body," that is, "the corruptible," shall be changed, "that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body" (Phil. 3:21). This life "is even a vapour, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away" (James 4:14). It is corruptible. Therefore, "this corruptible must put on incorruption" (1 Cor. 15:53). The natural body must be changed to the spiritual body. Resurrection is the only hope.

But the only difference in form between the natural body and the spiritual body is in the type of life contained — the difference between mortal life and immortal life. Jesus is now called a spirit in 1 Corinthians 15:45. That refers to the type of life His body now contains. The Greek word for "spirit" is pneuma. You see it in the English word "pneumatic." But a pneumatic tire could not be a pneumatic tire if you took the rubber and cord away. That is, if you removed the body. No more can there be eternal life without a container. That container will be what we now have to contain our natural life. Then our bodies will be called spiritual bodies.

What Will You Do?

One purpose of the Berean editorials is to stimulate thought and impel you to "search the Scriptures." No one likes a teacher that does all the talking. Such a class is usually boring. Please, please send in articles for your editor to edit. Like every other branch of our church work, this is not "my" work, it is "our" work.

Will each of you answer one of these questions for me:

Is it right to tithe with the idea that God will give us a material blessing in return?

What are the things that destroy the feeling of reverence in church?

Can a person be saved without making a public confession of faith?

Is it possible for you to really forgive those who wrong you?

What is the worst sin possible?

If you are absent from your place of worship at any service should you make up your contribution next time? Should you penalize yourself and give more?

Can my ordinary activities of life affect the eternal life of others?

If I cannot sing well does it mean that I mustn't sing in church?

I should be loyal to our church even if I don't like the preacher.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

TRAINING CLASS

All who contemplate entering the proposed Bible Training Class under the conditions specified in the announcement published in The Restitution Herald of March 2, 1937, must notify the committee of their intention to do so not later than May 1, 1937, to ensure the opening of the class next fall. There is much to be done before arrangements can be made definitely for the establishment of the class, and unless a sufficient number indicate by May 1 their determination to enroll, the committee will not feel justified in going to the expense of making such arrangements. Let us hear from you before May 1, 1937, if you plan to enroll in the Training Class!

Before sending us your name, please read again the conditions specified in the announcement previously made.

BURR OAK, INDIANA

Our ladies are today (March 25) feeding the folks at the Bender home, and tomorrow they will again serve a dinner for a township men's noon meeting.

Services are being held this week at our church: last night; Communion tonight; Friday evening, a drama at the community building.

Sunday our choir will give a musical cantata entitled "In Joseph's Garden."

The basement is nearly finished and everyone has said that it is grand.

April 6 we will have our quarterly meeting of the church, at which time reports will be given as well as a fellowship time enjoyed.

The Morning Star Class will stage a basketball game in Culver using teams from South Bend, Monterey, and two teams from Culver. This money is to be used for the basement.

We are not losing sight of the great spiritual need, and are looking forward to a more personal evangelistic effort. Pray for us, as we pray for you.

REFLECTIONS OF GREAT MINDS

"Think on these things."—Paul.

"No one can be perfectly free till all are free; no one can be perfectly moral till all are moral; no one can be perfectly happy till all are happy."—Herbert Spencer.

Humanity is a unit, for God "hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth" (Acts 17:26). It is evident, then, that if perfect freedom, morality, and happiness are to be attained by any they must be attained by all, i. e., that freedom, morality, and happiness must be made universal. Such a state of human perfection can only be brought about and maintained when Christ comes and eradicates all evil and establishes everlasting righteousness. Dan. 9: 24; Isa. 11:1-10; 35:1-10; Psalm 72:2; 2 Peter 3:13; Rev. 21:1-5, 22-27,

CURRENT EXPENSES

Although Herald readers have given excellent support to the fund for raising the indebtedness of the National Bible Institution, income for meeting current expenses has suffered seriously during the past two months. For example, during the week of March 18-25, total receipts (exclusive of $3.45 contributed to the indebtedness fund) from all sources were only $54.63, whereas necessary expenditures came to $204.99.

Obviously, this differential cannot be long continued. Within a short time, paper for The Restitution Herald and the Truth Seekers' Quarterly, both of which sustain an annual loss, must be purchased, at a probable cost of $300.00. Almost simultaneously, taxes to the amount of $285.00 will fall due. Neither of these bills can be postponed if operations are to be continued.

We earnestly ask, therefore, that you who have aided us so liberally in the past again come to the relief of the printing plant and its publications. No more effective means for evangelism than the quarterly and The Herald are now available. It is the task of the Church of God as a whole to see that this work for God is maintained without curtailment.

Arlen Marsh, Asst. Treas.

WHAT'S THE ANSWER?

What judge lost his wife to his best man? The answer will be found somewhere in next week's paper. Don't forget! It'll be there!

The answer to last week's question will be found in Judges 14:20.

BRUSH CREEK CHURCH OF GOD

Near Tiptecanoe City, Ohio

We are pleased to report that a vestibule has recently been built to the church edifice, which will add much to the appearance and convenience of the building.

The Sunday school attendance on March 21 was 117, and both morning and evening services are being well attended.

We anticipate a visit by our parents from Minnesota some time in April.

IOWA

What is the gospel? Good news. Who needs it? Everyone. What is it worth? Invaluable. But in order that the good news or glad tidings can be brought to the people of Iowa, the State Conference does need a certain amount of money to carry on this work.

The State treasury is very low at the present time, and to anyone who thinks he is able to contribute to the work in Iowa, we will be very thankful. Bro. John Denchfield has two charges and Bro. J. W. Williams four appointments each month. Donations will be accepted by Mrs. W. H. Allard, 1118 Rainbow Drive, Cedar Falls, Iowa.

Sr. Arnold Sealine of Stanhope, daughter of the late Sr. Flora Fish of Maxwell, has been confined to her bed since Christmas time. A card or letter of cheer would be much appreciated to help pass the time.

Sr. Marie Dorothy Lundquist, daughter of Sr. Nettie Lundquist of Stanhope, was married March 21 to Clifford L. Nelson of Boone. A small church wedding took place at the Swedish Mission Church in Boone. They will live on a farm near Boone.

IT HAPPENED A LONG TIME AGO

At Dixon, Illinois

"Died, Sept. 25th, '67, from accident, Sister Lizzie Brookner, of Dixon, Ill., in her 31st year."

Does anyone now living remember the young matron who was killed in an accident involving a runaway horse, who left "her husband and many friends (who) sadly feel her loss?" She was once a Baptist, but came to believe the gospel of the kingdom and was baptized by Bro. H. V. Reed.

Sr. Brookner is dead, forgotten, perhaps, by all except the One in whom she sleeps. But the words that comprised a part of her obituary which appeared in The Prophetic Watchman of October 12, 1867, are worthy of resurrection from the dusty files of the newspaper as Sr. Brookner is worthy of restoration from the tomb.

"Another bright star has set. Ten shining talents are eclipsed. We laid her down in her dusty bed by the side of the majestic rolling river. She rests in peace—sleeps in Jesus. No other monument need ever be raised than that which nature has erected—the beautiful hills in which she lies buried. The restless waters as they hurry along their rocky shore will sing her requiem. The gentle breezes of the mild September will annually celebrate her burial, as they sigh around her tomb. The place that knows her now will know her no more; yet we trust her name is written in the great book of God's remembrance. Angels watch with care her sleeping dust, and will ere long gather her as one of the elect. Hence, we sorrow not as those having no hope."

The funeral sermon was delivered from 1 Thessalonians 4:13, 14, by the one who composed the above little literary gem, Bro. A. J. Eychaner, who was then a very young man,

The Christian Home

THE most potent argument for or against Christianity as a way of life is made by the atmosphere pervading the homes of Christian people. Yet when seeking causes for the religious indifference about us we usually examine the churches, expecting to find there the cause of our failure as well as the possibility of future remedy. Is it not possible that Christianity has become as impotent as it is today because it is failing to prove itself within our so-called Christian homes?

Evidence of this conviction on the part of ministers is shown by their plans to restore again "the family altar," "family prayers," and "the family pew." But this attempt to go backward is futile, and were it possible to re-establish these customs it would not make our homes more Christian. Family prayers, however sincere, become a formality within the homes of devout Christians. Often this observance seemed fostered by an intolerant spirit at an unsuitable hour of the day imposed upon unwilling minds. Some children accepted it along with the regular discipline of the home, some found it truly helpful, but too many others remember it as a period of actual misery which has turned them from religion altogether. But if after careful consideration we would still wish to restore these periods of worship in the home we face difficulties. The routine of the home, and, more important still, the discipline of the home, make it nearly impossible. What, then, can be done to produce in the homes of church people an atmosphere that will foster a Christian spirit that will make it easier for children to have faith in God?

The only answer is this: make our homes truly Christian, not through any formal ceremonies, not at any set time of day, but in spirit and in truth. This is a very difficult thing to do. Only a person with rare gifts finds the making of a successful home life an easy task. Few men and women find life together to be a joyous experience without putting forth special efforts to make it so. Likewise the father who would have his children to believe in a loving heavenly Father must make a special effort to be a loving earthly father to his children; the mother who wants her children to follow the principles Christ has laid down must see that the principles of Christ guide the actions in her home. A stern, irascible temper may put the fear of the Lord into men, but it will never foster the love of God. The portrayal before your children of the understanding of Jesus at the well, of His thoughtfulness for the comfort of others at the wedding in Cana, of His friendly spirit when with Mary and Martha and Lazarus, will do more to draw them to Jesus than all the sermons that have ever been preached. This does not mean a soft, over-indulgent attitude; Jesus faced every issue as it came. But we cannot have the poise and clear sight to settle our problems wisely unless we live in happy homes where father and mother love each other, where there are no emotional outbursts, where the beauty of trust in one another can make every meal a time when grace is said in the heart as truly as it is voiced before partaking of it, and every "good night" is a benediction. Best of all is the family prayer rising from the heart as your son treads the stairs to bed with the assurance that tomorrow will be another day spent in a home where God's spirit prevails.—Aurora College Notes.

MARY ELIZABETH BECK STALEY

Mary Elizabeth Beck Staley was born October 6, 1861, in Frederick, Md. She was the daughter of John N. and Eva Marie Beck. At an early age she moved with her parents to Springfield, Ohio, where she died on March 17, 1937. She was united in marriage to Albert W. Staley, who preceded her in death 28 years ago. For the past several years she made her home with her daughter, Mrs. Miers, of Springfield.

Besides the daughter, Grace L. Miers, there is one son, Harold A. Staley, of Cincinnati. There are also three grandchildren, three brothers, and three sisters who survive.

She became a member of the Church of God in her girlhood, and remained faithful to the high calling. She will be long remembered as a loving mother, grandmother, sister, and friend to all who knew her.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer on Friday, March 19, at Jackson Funeral Home in Springfield, after which we laid her to rest and to await the Master's call at the resurrection. Our text was 1 Corinthians 15:49.

EXHALING THE FRAGRANCE OF CHRIST

manifest the savour of his knowledge by us in every place."

We stumble a little over that word "savour." It was a common word when the Bible was first translated into English some four hundred years ago, but is not so well known today. Dr. Moffatt's rendering is more in keeping with our manner of expression: "The perfume of his knowledge."

What an impressive thought that is; how true it is to the facts of the gospel! The glad tidings, the good news, the gospel of the kingdom of God and of Christ, is indeed a perfume, diffusing its fragrance throughout the world.

Paul sees in himself the means by which that fragrance is spread abroad.

"Wherever I go, thank God, he makes my life a constant pageant of triumph in Christ, diffusing the perfume of his knowledge everywhere by me."

I wonder if that is also true of us, Paul's fellow workers? Is God making our lives "a constant pageant of triumph in Christ," breathing out into the world through our lips the fragrance of His own spirit and truth and sweetness "everywhere"?

But how exceedingly strange is the statement following!

"I live for God as the fragrance of Christ breathed alike on those who are being saved and on those who are perishing, to the one a deadly fragrance that makes for death, to the other a vital fragrance that makes for life."

The fragrance of which he speaks has its source in "the knowledge of God" and the channel through which it reaches the world at large is Jesus Christ. Therefore Paul calls it "the fragrance of Christ."

Do our lives really diffuse the love, the kindness, the truth, the self-sacrificing devotion of Jesus our Lord? Are people generally comforted by our presence? Are they uplifted by our conversation? Are they drawn closer to God by the influence of our presence? Are they more willing to forgive their enemies because we have so obviously removed all hatred from our hearts? Is the faith of those with whom we come into contact strengthened because our faith is steadfast, warm, and true?

The fragrance of Christ reached both great divisions of mankind through Paul because he lived for God! He did not live for himself alone. He "breathed alike on those who are being saved and on those who are perishing." He showed no difference of attitude or of interest toward friends or foes when it came to the question of taking the gospel to them. He was "all things to all men."

But the gospel fragrance he breathed brought different results to the different classes. To those who were "being saved" it was "a vital fragrance that makes for life." But "to those who are perishing" that same sweet fragrance of Christ, breathed upon them by the same Apostle, was "a deadly fragrance that makes for death." The result depended not on the nature of the "fragrance," which was the same in both cases, but upon the response made by the individual who received it.

"By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith" (Heb. 11:7).

The same love-prompted warning which God sent to Noah, the same assurance through obedience based on faith which brought salvation to the patriarch and his family, resulted in the condemnation and death of all the rest of mankind!

That is what Paul is saying here.

The same beautiful message of divine truth concerning God's plans for man's redemption which produced faith and obedience in "those who are being saved," brought assurance of death only to those who rejected the gospel and left them exactly where it found them, in a perishing condition.

Whether the fragrant truth of our Lord results in life or in death to you or to me depends entirely upon our individual attitude toward it. Do we reject its power to sweeten our lives through faith, and put it from us, death will be the result. But if we will gladly inhale its fragrance of Christ-righteousness, life, beautiful and rich today and eternal and glorious tomorrow, will be ours.

"There are some truths which the Bible teaches, which we must accept, not because we have proved them true, but because we have faith in the One who made the promises. Faith in God's promises should be as strong to the true child of God as proved facts."—C. E. Randall.

WHAT IS MAN?

be any necessity for a resurrection of those bodies gone down into death? He knew that he could not defend both positions.

Job was surely a student of the Word of God, and he gave some of the strongest arguments in favor of the position I hold to be scriptural, and therefore true. Here is his version of the question: "Man dieth, and wasteth away: yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?" (Job 14: 10). Man lives, he dies; but after he dies, where is he? Now read verse 12: "Man lieth down, and riseth not: till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep." At death man lies down, and in that condition he remains until the time of the resurrection.

With these passages of Scripture before us that show plainly the make-up of man, and that at death he goes down to the grave, and there remains until the resurrection, I say it without fear of successful contradiction that there is not one passage of Scripture that directly or indirectly teaches that man can or will be made in part or in whole immortal this side of the resurrection. Every promise of eternal life is for the man that is in sin and needs salvation. There is no salvation promised to immortal, deathless souls. If they were immortal, they would be already saved.

The Tree of Life

By A. E. Griffiths

HAVING read so many different ideas of this subject written by those who are professedly members of God's family, let us take heed to Paul's words in 2 Peter 1:20 that there is "no private interpretation of prophecy of the scriptures." Realizing this rule, let us turn to the revelation of God's wisdom and He will answer us correctly.

Moses was inspired by God and gave us the history of the creation. In Genesis 1:27, 28 we read God created man, male and female, and told them to be "fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth."

This is proof that they were mortal, i. e., subject to death. Angels do not marry and so do not multiply (Matt. 22:30; Mark 12:25). So man had no immortality in his make-up, and was not like angels. Therefore, being on probation, he had two alternatives offered to him, obey God and live, or disobey Him and die (Deut. 30:15-18). Adam chose to disobey and so died, and brought death on all his race. But God in His infinite wisdom had a plan whereby He could cause him to live again, and the means He uses is symbolized by the tree of life.

There are some who believe that Adam ate of the tree of life, and that is what prolonged his life; but let us see how this idea works out.

Genesis 2:9 states that God caused to "grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food; the tree of life also in the midst of the garden." Then in the 16th verse He told Adam he could eat of every tree of the garden except the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. By this scripture some claim that Adam was allowed to eat of the tree of life, and in consequence his life was prolonged; but let us see if that was the case.

There is no record how long Adam and Eve lived before they sinned, but we know that after they had been expelled from the garden they commenced to have children. First Cain was born and then Abel; after these two had grown to maturity, they quarreled, and Cain killed Abel because Abel obeyed God in what he offered for sacrifice and Cain did not. God's accepting Abel's sacrifice and not Cain's made Cain jealous; hence his crime.

We are glad to welcome to our columns a new writer of such obvious ability and scholarship as is the author of the following article. Brother Griffiths is a strong and vigorous defender of the truth and has enjoyed marked success in presenting it in new places. He lives in Olmstead Falls, Ohio, where, in addition to his regular work, he is teaching a group of truth seekers the fundamental facts of the gospel.

Perhaps these events occupied the first hundred years of Adam's life, but we know that he was 130 years old when he had another heir, Seth, according to Genesis 5:3.

Now he lost all access to the tree of life when he left the garden, and as he lived to be 930 years old it is certain that a greater portion of his life, at least 800 years, he was not kept alive by eating the tree of life. Moreover, both Jared and Methusaleh lived longer yet than Adam, and they certainly did not get their longevity from eating the tree of life, because it was not accessible in their day. Consequently such private interpretation is absolutely unsound and liable to cause believers to drift into Christian Science and other healing cults.

Among the early fathers before the flood, the only one who is recorded by Paul in Hebrews 11 as having walked with God (Enoch) lived only 365 years, not half as long as some of the others. Perhaps that is where the saying, "The good die young," comes from.

God does not always mete out judgment at once (Ecl. 8:11). The record shows that as soon as Adam and Eve had sinned they were sentenced to death, and then, having fallen from God's grace and so separated themselves from Him, God drove them out of the garden "lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live for ever" (Gen. 3:22). By saying, "lest he take also of the tree of life," God assumed that Adam had not eaten of it up to then, and as we study the text we shall find this premise to be substantiated.

Let us examine closely Genesis 3:24. "So he drove out the man; and he placed at the east of the garden of Eden Cherubims, and a flaming sword (Please turn to page 16)

Columbia Dean Declares Court Changes Threaten Religious Liberty

"Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free."—Galatians 5:1.

President Roosevelt

"If the President appoints six new justices who will take his interpretation of the general welfare clause, . . . the Congress will be able to do anything under the general welfare clause not specifically prohibited elsewhere in the Constitution. . . . Such an interpretation . . . can be carried to the extent of giving Congress general power to regulate all intrastate activities, including education, marriage and divorce, and any other things that Congress might find to be a national question."

Democratic Senator Tom Connally of Texas asked Dr. Smith if even the restrictions specified, such as those preventing governmental interference with freedom of speech and of the press, of peaceable assembly, and religious worship, would "be subject to a reinterpretation by this court as it would be constituted."

"O yes, of course," was the witness' positive reply. As Gentile times accelerate near the close of this dispensation, we may look for the loss of many cherished liberties which we now enjoy. Christians in other lands have already experienced such curtailing of their freedom of worship and have also been deprived of the right to "preach the gospel to every creature," something which even pagan Rome permitted in the days of the Cæsars.

Chinese Famine Horror Increases

*"If you bestow your bread upon the hungry,
And relieve men in misery,
Then light shall dawn for you in darkness,
And evermore shall the Eternal guide you."
—Isaiah 50:10, 11, Moffatt.*

CHUNGKING, China, March 28.—The drought and famine which have visited Szechwan Province have already brought ten million persons to the verge of starvation. During the past two weeks a thousand dead have been picked up on the streets of this city. Most of them merely go to sleep on the streets and never awaken. According to missionaries, who are striving valiantly to relieve a little of the suffering, "unless heavy and widespread rains come before the rice transplanting season, late in April, there is danger of a famine of terrible and enormous proportions."

Of course they are "only heathen Chinese away over on the other side of the world!" But Christ loved them enough to die for them! They are our brothers in sin, in suffering, and in need of a Savior! We may not be able to divide our dinner today with them. We cannot feed them as Jesus fed the hungry multitudes from a miraculous store. But can we not do something toward bringing them the comfort which the knowledge of a coming Redeemer from sin as well as Deliverer from starvation will provide? At a not distant day these very people, or those who are left after the famine has exhausted its fury, will be the beneficiaries of the kingdom over which Christ and His church are to rule. As our future subjects they should claim our sympathy and prayer, if nothing else!

Japan Abrogates Naval Limitations Treaty

"Men shall be . . . trucebreakers."—2 Timothy 3:2, 3.

TOKIO, Japan, March 27.—Japan notified the world on March 17 that she would no longer be bound by the qualitative limitations of the expired Washington and London Naval Treaties, since, she said, qualitative limitation is impossible without quantitative limitation. By this notification Japan informed the world that she would no longer agree to a maximum 14-inch gun caliber for battleships and indicated that she would mount 16-inch guns on future battleships if she saw fit to do so.

Great Britain and the United States, the other two leading naval powers, have signified their intention to meet the challenge of Japan with regard to the size of guns to be installed on battleships now building.

And so the great naval and military contest continues. It is of interest to you and to me who pay the cost of building and equipping these great ocean-going engines of destruction that a single broadside from one of those mighty battleships costs us, you and me and the rest of the people of the United States who pay taxes, the snug sum of $50,000. That is just one broadside, remember!

This Do in Remembrance

THE gift of memory is one of the greatest bestowed by a loving God upon human beings. Lower orders of creation have memory sufficient for the repetition of habits (natural or acquired); and the higher animals are capable of receiving training to render obedience to a master, this involving memory of the master and of the actions it has been trained to perform. Some domestic animals possess also the qualities of love and fidelity, demonstrated by lifelong devotion to their owners.

Yet men, for all their superior endowment of mind, can also forget. They forget God, who created them and the earth on which they live. Long ago the nations forgot God, not through some trick of memory, but because "they did not like to retain God in their knowledge"; they preferred a manner of conduct different from that which God required (Rom. 1:28-32).

The children of Israel often found it convenient to forget God, with all that loyalty required in the way of obedience on their part. In this they showed less sense, less appreciation of values, than do the brute beasts with their limited mental equipment—"The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib: but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider" (Isa. 1:2-4). The ox and the ass know upon whom they are dependent for care and food, and they remember. But Israel, who had every reason to know how dependent they were upon God, who had brought them out of Egypt and made them a great nation, were so foolish as to fall into the ways of the evil nations around them; and not only so foolish, but so wilfully perverse, for they knew better, and it was with them a case of not wanting to remember either God or their covenant with Him, or the code of laws He had given them.

AIDS TO MEMORY

God early arranged aids to memory. That the human family might not wander from Him, God communed with the human pair He had created; gave them directions concerning the garden, their home, and regarding their duty to their Creator, who was perfect, and in whose image and likeness they were. Yet they allowed themselves to be led into sin. After the sin, God again provided aids to memory—the spoken words, the fig leaves, the imposition of regular offerings and sacrifices. Also the curse was (and still is) such an aid, inasmuch as men who suffer under it are often thereby induced to remember that there is a God to whom they owe their lives, and whom they should serve.

Often the children of Israel, under bondage to their neighbors as a punishment for their sins, sat down and wept, and cried to the God whose goodness came back to their memories. And God heard their cry and delivered them. See book of Judges, 1 and 2 Samuel, and their history under the kings as well.

From the beginning God expected worship from the human beings He had made. Even after sin entered, He established a method of approach whereby those who came would be constantly reminded that, far from abandoning them to their own devices, He still cared for them and would bless those who showed their appreciation of this fact and would render obedience. The offering of animal sacrifices was the means of approach prescribed.

When Abraham and the other patriarchs wandered from place to place in the Promised Land, they erected altars, and after a time would come again, to offer again, the altar of stones meanwhile remaining as a witness that God had blessed them there and would bless them again (Gen. 12:6-8; 13:3, 4).

Throughout the bondage in Egypt God remembered them; and they (or the faithful among them) remembered God and the promises, and fully expected the deliverance which came finally under Moses and Aaron, as related in the book of Exodus.

ORGANIZED ASSEMBLIES AND FORMS

While in Egypt under the unfriendly Pharaohs the children of Israel necessarily worshiped God under more or less hardship, and to a great extent privately. But when brought out triumphantly they were soon gathered to Sinai to be organized into a nation, under Moses appointed as mediator and lawgiver. The whole effect of Sinai, with its lightnings and thunderings and voices, was to impress the memories of the people there gathered, to remind them who they were and how God had taken them for His people; and there could be no question of this, for the demonstrations were miraculous, and ever after in their history the prophets and later the apostles of Jesus reminded them of that awe-inspiring scene.

The regular service at the tabernacle was an aid to memory, and the priests and Levites scattered among the people settled in the land constantly reminded the people (when the priests and Levites themselves were not reprobate) of the commandments of the law and their duty to assemble for stated feasts, when special sacrifices were offered of a national character, while throughout the year their sins should be repented of and appropriate individual sacrifices brought for the priests to offer on their behalf.

In the Promised Land the tabernacle, and later the temple at Jerusalem, became the center of worship. Wherever an Israelite dwelt, his mind and heart were to be at Jerusalem and so far as possible the feasts were to be participated in. Three times in the year all the males were to appear before the Lord, and certain ceremonies were to be observed (Ex. 23:17; Lev. 23).

The day of atonement was for the confession of the sins of the nation as a whole, and the offering of an atonement sacrifice. All the people were to afflict their souls and by faith enter into the meaning of and the necessity for an atonement (Lev. 16), whereby the way was made clear for a new year of devotion to God. (Please turn to page 10)

The Word of God Which Liveth

IT MUST be evident, to those who pay close attention to the spiritual condition today that a determined effort is being made to set aside entirely the authority of the Word of God as given in the Bible. The Bible claims the right to control the actions of men, and speaks as one having authority. It admits of no question nor dispute from men. The democratic spirit of the times brooks no authority higher than that of the people, which is to say, of man himself. If man can set aside the Bible he can have the long-coveted state of absolute independence which is equivalent to utter lawlessness.

But can man set aside anything declared by God to be living and powerful, and sharper than a two-edged sword? Wherever we look we see death in possession—fastening its tentacles upon everything. What we call the land of the living could be described better if we say the land of the dying, for death seems the monarch of the world. The only power greater than death is the power of life. There was nothing in Christ's appearance to manifest His deity. The fact was demonstrated, not by His blameless and unselfish life, nor by His incomparable teaching, but by His resurrection from the dead.

Similarly the Bible—there is nothing in its looks to show it is above other books except that it is a living book, while other books are dying. The Bible is ever a fountain of living water, while all other books diminish in freshness after the first perusal. Man's books are all like himself, dying creatures. There have been centuries of progress in many lines, but absolutely nothing has been added to the knowledge of the Bible—it is always fresh and up-to-date.

All books of science must be changed from time to time, but not so with the living Word. It is the only truly scientific book on earth, for it only gives precise, accurate, and absolutely reliable information upon every subject whereof it treats.

The Bible is the only book that is truly hated. The hatred it arouses is bitter, persistent, and murderous. This hatred has been kept alive from generation to generation. But there is a supernatural explanation to this, for it has a supernatural enemy who has personally experienced its power. The natural explanation for the hatred of this book is that it does not give a flattering picture of man, as man's books always do. It reverses the picture and shows man to have made no progress, but rather on the contrary, that his career is one of departure from God—a preference for darkness. It derides his wisdom as foolishness with God. Neither does it say he will eventually emerge into a state of better things, but shall wax worse and worse. No wonder the Bible is hated. No man would write a book showing such development; he would draw a different portrait of himself.

Again, the Bible does not speak as an equal, but as an authority. It plainly says what man shall do, and what he shall not do. It addresses all ranks and conditions of men—the king, the governor, parents and children, husbands and wives, rich and poor, high and low, masters and servants, free and bond. It is no respecter of persons, and for this it is hated. It tells the king on his throne and the peasant, "Thou shalt not."

No ingenuity of man has been omitted in the desperate attempt to put this detested Book out of existence, but to no avail. Man has commanded that it be brought to the streets and burned publicly, but still it outsells any of man's books by more than thirty million copies each year. Men of high intelligence have been enlisted to write against it. Yes, man's books against the Book! But to no purpose, for the Bible is a living book, dictated by a living God as against dying books by dying men.

In recent times a book was published that was hailed as a work that would quickly destroy the credibility of the Bible; it was called The Descent of Man and was written by Charles Darwin, but it died. It was a book made by a dying man, and consequently could not be a living book. Of the many millions of books that have existed, the Bible is the only one that has excited deep and persistent hatred; it is the only one that man has ever tried to destroy by the help of the state, by pseudo-religion, and by learning. But it has gone on steadily increasing in numbers. Can we explain these facts better than to exclaim, "The Word of God is living!" When we read it we do not think of it as a book of the distant past, but as a present living book.

From a literary standpoint there is not a nation on earth famed for its culture that has produced a book comparable with it. There is nothing more exquisite in the English language from a poetical standpoint than the Shepherd Psalm, Psalm 23. And it is considered a model of poetic excellence in many languages.

Why has this book gone to the ends of the earth, and maintained its supremacy against all other books? Verily it seems to be waiting for an opportunity to become acquainted with every child of Adam—to direct his steps through life, and keep him from the pitfalls of the enemy. Jesus in explaining the parable of the sower, said, "The seed is the word of God," and we well know that seed that has no life is worthless, so we again declare the Bible to be the living Word.

The attempt made by man to explain life as a mere property of atoms of non-living matter grouped in certain complex combinations has been confessedly a failure, after repeated trials in the laboratory. Life is produced by life and only by life. Then we may ask, Can the living Word produce after its kind? Can it impart its life to others? Yes, the Word implanted within us is quickened by the Spirit of God, and hence is the beginning of life eternal. Humans are born of corruptible seed, and must be born of incorruptible seed before they can enjoy immortal life. That the receiving of God's Word in the heart through faith is the beginning of a new life seems too simple to the superficial reader of the Scriptures. He thinks there must be something difficult about it, or that it must be a costly thing, but all one has to do is to accept freely. The Word of the Lord endureth forever, and so will those who accept it.

After Adam fell, the most urgent need of the world was life. To this end God sent His Son to partake of flesh and blood, that through death He might destroy him who hath the power of death, that is to say, the Devil (Heb. 2:14). Man is utterly unable to produce for himself, though all the elements are available, but God imparted this secret to the lowly plant—it can convert the minerals of the earth and air—inert, lifeless elements, into living tissues with the property of nourishing creatures of higher life. "He causeth the grass to grow for the cattle, and herb for the service of man: that he may bring forth food out of the earth" (P'salm 104:14).

How wonderful that man can take food into his mouth, and without any thought or attention from him, it will be digested, and the valuable parts taken to every part of the body in exactly the right proportion needed to sustain growth and life!

As with the physical life, so it is with the spiritual. It requires spiritual food, and God has provided appropriate food for growth. Paul says milk for the babes, and strong food for those able to take it. To read the Word of God and meditate upon it are what mastication and digestion are to physical food—they take time, and the results are the same. To neglect either is to starve. Yes, surely there is life in the Word.—A. S. Christenson in The Bible Advocate.

Did Christ Die?

By Thomas E. Adams

AFTER we have established firmly the doctrine of the mortality of man, and his unconsciousness after death, and his dependence on a resurrection for future life and reward, I am frequently astonished to hear our opponents, after their arguments and criticisms all fail, resort to frivolous pretexts, such as, "Why is it that Bro. Wesley or Bro. Campbell did not find these things, if they are true?" thus evincing that their faith is based upon men's opinions.

When their folly at this point is manifest, the next declaration made is that "it is not essential to salvation anyhow." That is, they claim that they may be ignorant of, or even repudiate, these Bible truths, and yet be saved.

Now we wish to know how this matter stands. And, first, we argue that if the man never dies, in the sense of losing life, and consequently intelligence, then man is not subject of a resurrection, and hence there is no such thing. Why? Because there is no one dead (to be resurrected). Job says that "man dies," and then inquires, "If a man die, shall he live again?" He then declares that he will wait in the grave (not Paradise) till his change comes (Job 14:13-15).

Paul also says that "if the dead rise not, then is Christ not raised: and if Christ be not raised" our faith is vain and "they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished" (not saved) (1 Cor. 15:16-18), all of which is true, if Christ never really died, as is taught and believed by many.

Now let us hear the beloved Paul again: "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him" (1 Thess. 4:13, 14).

Query: Why should Paul trouble himself about the sleeping ones so much that he was unwilling that the brethren should be ignorant concerning them, if it makes no difference whether they are mortal or immortal? Second, why should he say, "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him," if he knew that Jesus never really died?

Now let us ask the upholders of the Platonic philosophy of the immortality of the soul a few questions.

First, What is the gospel of Christ of which Paul says he is not ashamed (Rom. 1:16)? Some answer that "it is the death and resurrection of Christ" (1 Cor. 15:4). We would then ask, "Did Christ die?" "O yes," is the response, "He certainly did!" Did He accompany the penitent thief to Paradise the day He died? Again the answer comes in the affirmative. And both of them were dead? "No," is the hesitating reply, "their bodies were dead, but not the men themselves."

Well, we ask, is that the way the Scriptures declared that Christ should die, by merely putting off His house, while the real man, the soul, should not taste death?

We answer for our friends negatively and earnestly solicit their careful examination of the 53rd chapter of Isaiah, where it is said that His (Christ's) "soul" was made "an offering for sin" in the process of which He "poured out his soul unto death" (Isa. 53:10, 12).

We can now see the propriety of David's rejoicing because Christ's soul was not left in hell (Hades, the grave, not Paradise, as modern theologians vainly imagine) (Psalm 16:10; Acts 13:35).

How careful we should be that we do not preach a perverted and contradictory gospel by saying that Christ died and that He did not die! (Please turn to page 16)

Our Sick World

I WANT you to come with me to visit a sick man—a very sick man indeed. You will observe that his trouble is not a local irritation, not a common disease; it is an organic malady. Its roots are down deep in the system, as deep as life itself. The very vitals are affected, and the deep-seated organs are wasting away. He is past human succor, beyond medical aid. His body feels the death grip. “From the sole of the foot even unto the head there is no soundness in it; but wounds, and bruises, and putrefying sores: they have not been closed, neither bound up, neither mollified with ointment” (Isa. 1:6).

What brought on this terrible, loathsome, repulsive, nauseating condition? Dissipation. It is the result of madness, of self-will and self-service; it is the harvest of the years, the aftermath of almost a continuous spree for six thousand years—for, of course, the individual I refer to is this old world of ours. It is no wonder that he is a chronic invalid, prematurely old.

Things are out of joint. Things are in a mess. East, west, north, south, it is all the same. In America, Europe, Africa, Asia, it is a repetition of the same human afflictions, the same national ills, the same miscarriage of justice, the same hopelessness and despair—with “men’s hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth” (Luke 21:26).

Some try to console themselves with the delusion that things are improving, that the world is getting better. But the world is not getting better, nor are there any trustworthy signs of improvement. It is true that modern governments, as a whole, far surpass those of two thousand or three thousand years ago. But it is also true that these governments place a heavier burden upon man than those of former days. And it is also a fact that these very laudable governments seem to be entirely inadequate to cope with increasing crime or to pacify populations, seething in unrest or breaking out into open revolt and rebellion.

Thus dictators and dictatorial governments have sprung up all over the world. Men, unable to govern themselves, are practically slaves and serfs to the strong men of the hour. A handful of men, as it were, dictate national policies and mold world opinions. Never was Rome in the darkest days of her decadence more dominated by some master mind, or more truly in the grip of some iron hand, than are many of the nations of this twentieth century. Does this argue a better world? No, even the superficial observer looks upon these conditions with alarm and faces the future with the greatest concern.

It is true that there is more money in the world today than formerly. But it is also true that there is more poverty and sorrow and wretchedness in the world than ever before. Thus while there are ample supplies and provisions, furniture and equipment, in the world for all, and luxuries enough for millions, it is also true that the unequal distribution of wealth and the selfishness and greed of men prohibit the obtaining of these things except by the more gifted and the more favored ones of earth. Thus we have world depressions and universal unrest. The brightest minds are harnessed, statesmen are working overtime, millions of dollars are being spent, and one plan after another is being tried; and all to no avail. Plans seem to be inadequate to meet the situation; money to have lost its power to accomplish; and men impotent to meet the demands of the hour, or to stem the tide of evil that sweeps madly down upon us.

This is so even in the world of physical health. It is true that medical science has learned much about the human body and its reactions to disease and drugs. Yet never was mankind afflicted more with deep organic maladies than today. Tuberculosis is being beaten, but cancer is on the increase. Smallpox is stamped out, but heart disease is far more prevalent than formerly. Plagues of contagious diseases are almost impossible today, but insanity is a scourge that is filling our asylums and giving the greatest concern to every thinking man and woman. Medical science has done wonders, but it is unable to cope successfully with the situation forced upon us by the rising tide of organic diseases that are consuming us today.

No, the world is not getting better. It is all a snare and a delusion. We make superficial advances in one direction only to lose out fundamentally in another.

Thus while it is true that we have better homes than formerly, with conveniences undreamed of by our parents, yet the stress and pleasures of life keep us from those homes until all other places are closed up. Thus family life is rapidly disappearing. And children are brought up with little home influence, to be molded by public institutions and—the street.

It is true that slavery has disappeared in civilized lands, but it is also true that about as many persons are in abject slavery to drugs today as ever served beneath the lash in other times. And their condition is more grave, and holds less of hope and happiness. Sincere men and women stand appalled at the fearful inroads wrought by drugs in these United States, and all other countries are similarly afflicted.

Child labor is disappearing, but the slums are blasting more children than child labor ever did; and the streets and vice are devouring more. Thus the great army of criminals is continually recruited from the ranks of the young. The immediate future is dark indeed because of the thousands of youth who are depraved by present unfavorable conditions, who are roaming the country without aims and without principles.

The red-light districts have disappeared, yet never was vice more rampant than it is today. It has left the brothel to walk the streets, and it enters even our institutions and our homes.

It is true that education is more universal today than at any previous period of the world's existence, but it is also true that education has not taught us enough to meet the demands of the more complex and intricate machinery of our twentieth century civilization. Education has taught us to demand and expect more, but it has not supplied us with the means effectively to obtain more. Education has taught us to delight in the pleasing things of life, but it has not fitted us to endure hardships or to glory in struggles or privations. Education has civilized us, but it has not made us strong or humane or sympathetic. It has not lifted us above selfishness or weakness. It has not mitigated our sorrows nor alleviated our distresses. It has filled our heads with knowledge, but it has not filled our lives with wisdom.

It is true that our land is filled with automobiles, radios, and moving pictures, but these same things weaken and enslave us. We have pure food laws to protect our health, but we have also tobacco, liquor, and sexual allurements to pull us down to perdition—destroy both body and soul. Our world is filled with machinery and labor-saving devices, but if the time thus gained is spent in folly, where is the gain?

It is true that American ideals are high. Is it not also true that American morals are low? What is it that is glaringly spread over the front pages of our newspapers? Is it not divorce scandals? moral infidelity? terrible depravity? and revolting sexual crimes? What is it that furnishes the jokes for our funny papers? Is it not family irregularities and improper marriage relationships? What is it that forms the central theme of our fiction today? Is it not sex?—grossly painted and stripped of every semblance of reticence and refinement?

It is true that Christianity is more universal today than ever before, but it is also true that, with the exception of the Dark Ages, never was Christianity at a lower ebb than now. Christianity is only a name today, "having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof" (2 Tim. 3:5). Christianity, that started out to evangelize the world a few brief years ago, is now in many cases withholding mission funds, recalling missionaries, and closing mission stations. Many of the missionaries who remain abroad are modernists, engaged in social welfare work instead of in the sacred ministry of the word. (Please turn to Page 11)

False Teachers

By T. A. Drinkard

"But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction. And many shall follow their pernicious ways; by reason of which the way of truth shall be evil spoken of."

IT IS a regrettable thing to know that "those who were once enlightened" (Heb. 6:4) should go so far as to deny their Lord and Master "that bought them," and "bring in damnable heresies" to lead men and women away from God and His Son, and the hope of life beyond the grave.

Heresies as herein given were doctrinal teaching contrary to the truth of God, the preaching of which converted these people. The Apostle warns the church that inasmuch as false prophets were "among the people," even so "false teachers" would appear and privately bring in things that tend to cause harm. You will note that "false teachers" would not "bring in" their heresies openly, where all could see and quickly detect the deception, but would "privily," or privately, bring them, or in other words begin to teach them privately to the brethren who would listen to their newly discovered (?) truth; and ere long the heaven would do its work.

Not only did Peter warn the church against heresy teachers (2 Peter 2:1, 2), but Paul said, "For I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them. Therefore watch, and remember, that by the space of three years I ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears" (Acts 20:29-31).

Why warn the church if her ministers are not to safeguard her interests and keep false teachers from privately teaching heresies that scatter her membership? Paul spent three years warning the church, having shed tears over the way brethren would act in breaking up church activity and interest in a private or underhanded way.

The church can and will be built up by "the word of his grace" way, and by no other (Acts 20:32).

May God enable us to stand firmly upon His Word for our faith and practice. We are warned about being carried about by every wind of doctrine (Eph. 4:14; Heb. 13:9). Every wind of doctrine is not profitable for the man or woman who desires to grow in grace and knowledge of Jesus Christ, or else these winds would have been prescribed as an element in the Christian's spiritual diet. Therefore, God is not the author of those doctrines that tend to cause trouble in the body of Christ.

The Cocktail Snare

“WE WANT you out for dinner some night soon. We will have Mary and her husband, too, because she is so much fun when she has had a drink or two.”

Quite an amazing way to invite me for dinner, good Christian that I am. No offense was meant, for the friend is a member in good standing of one of our large denominational groups; the wife a cultured college woman, the gentleman a doctor of science, extremely prosperous in the dye and chemical business, both fine citizens and civic-minded.

That invitation set me thinking pretty seriously. Why would anyone think I would particularly enjoy a party where another guest would be likely to furnish the entertainment when she had had a glass too many? Mentally I reviewed some similar occurrences and came to this disturbing conclusion: By a large group of respected and respectable people, it is no longer considered unusual to drink. It is no longer considered swanky by one group, or common and cheap by another, but by an increasingly large, reputable, cultivated, and educated class of people, college and church folk, it is taken as a matter that causes little or no comment. It must have been because of this widespread indifference that my friend saw no incongruity in inviting me in such a manner. That is the insidious aspect of the whole matter as I see it.

Twenty-five years ago the general opinion of “good society” was, if a woman drank or smoked she must be of the ultra-Bohemian smart set, or in the outcast class. There seemed to be no place for the drinking and smoking woman who considered herself, or wanted the world to consider her, a leader in social, civic, educational, and, surely, in church affairs. A woman, then, who must have her “pick-up” drink before dinner was a marked woman.

It is pretty difficult to make headway against vice when it becomes usual, expected, unnoticed, commonplace. No woman of your class would ever have considered going to a common saloon or barroom for a drink, but now that is unnecessary, for a drink can be had so generally with a meal in every grade of eating place, from the daintiest to the cheapest. The cozy blue and silver cocktail terrace in a lovely, soft-lighted hotel holds quite another sort of appeal than did the “ladies’ entrance” of a decade ago. So far have we gone that cocktail dresses, hats, lounging apparel, parties are the vogue of the hour.

Recently the daughter of a prominent clergyman in a large city was to be married. The society editor gave half a column to a cocktail party to be given for her on Sunday evening at the country club. As far as I know, it caused no unfavorable comment. It was just included in the round of gay parties for the young bride and her fiancé.

A few weeks ago I attended a committee meeting for a medical institution at the home of the president, a physician of recognized ability. We held our meeting in the well-equipped rathskeller of the doctor’s new home. To begin the meeting, a round of drinks seemed in order. I was asked what I would have, and innocently said ginger ale; but found to my surprise that it was taken for granted that ginger ale was simply considered one ingredient in the drink. No one apparently expected me to desire just plain ginger ale unmixed. These fine people were serving as volunteers on this committee for a philanthropic institution; it was, in no sense, a social occasion and the drink was only a gesture of hospitality on the part of the hostess.

Some time ago I paid a visit to an old college chum in the northern part of my State. Late in the afternoon her dainty seventeen-year-old daughter came sleepily downstairs to regale us with an account of a college dance that had occurred the night before. Her young escort had become so drunk that she finally sent him home after walking him around in the outside air for awhile, but to no avail. She said he bored her. One word led to another, until I found myself recalling to her mother’s mind the fun we had in our college days with old-fashioned candy pulls and sleighrides. So engrossed were we in our reminiscing that we were startled when the young daughter broke in with, “My, my, what a drab time you and Mother must have had.”

I understood a little later how the daughter had acquired her point of view when wine was served with the dinner; and the mother, a graduate of a college of which her father had been the honored president, rather apologetically remarked to me, “I hate to have Betty go with that crowd, and particularly with that boy, but he is from one of the best families in town, and if she doesn’t accept invitations when she gets them, she is soon left out.” Left out of what? I wondered to myself. What a tragic thing that a slip of a girl of seventeen should be up against a condition like that, and where does the responsibility rest? Such experiences seem to excite little anxious comment; inconvenient and boring, to be sure. I recall the old verse about familiarity with vice, “Seen too oft familiar with its face, we first pity, then endure, then embrace.”

Some time ago I had occasion to call upon a girl at her office. When our business was transacted, she arose and went to her locker and brought out the makings of a drink. Apparently she was only extending a courtesy at the close of a business interview.

This fallacious and easy manner of thought concerning increasing social drinking and indifference to it, seem easily to find many followers. Have we helped the cause of moderation by making it possible for men and women to find a drink in almost any restaurant, coffee shop, or tea room? We have dressed up this evil with shining silver and lovely glass until we have raised it to the point of respectability and usualness.

It is time to see this question with new eyes and not allow fashion or familiarity to dull our perception of the direction in which we are drifting. This is an issue that involves the stability of the home and the morality of the new generation that we mothers have brought into the world.

I do not intend to present a false picture, nor to give the impression that this is an everyday occurrence in my experience, but it is a frequent one; nor do I insinuate that the best people of the world are drinking their way through business, college, or society. What I do want to point out is the prevalence of social drinking, and that it is not confined to any one group or stratum of society, and also the astounding fact that so many fine people are unperturbed by it. But now I ask myself, Who am I to sit in judgment on these friends? They are eminently worth while in business, in civic affairs, in educational circles, in church and pew. In this fact lies the danger.

Personally I believe we have a biblical prohibition for those who try to follow the Master, and I believe the stuff is too dangerous to mental and physical health to be fooled with. Therefore I feel justified in saying that as Christians we do a positive wrong to the cause of Christianity when we assume the attitude that drinking—no, a drink—can be looked upon lightly and that the only wrong is done when we lose completely our sense of careful moderation and proper propriety.—The Christian Advocate.

Has Science Made Humanity Happy?

IF ONE could enumerate all the modern appliances and equipment that have been brought into daily use for the convenience, comfort, and ease of humanity it would seem that we ought to be the happiest people on earth since time began.

Throughout the cycle of years we have passed through eras or ages, so called, which have given to humanity much to consider and much to think of. We have a reformation period, an age of art, an era of literature, and an age of music. All these contributed to the education and entertainment of both the masses and the favored few. We have had during the last few years the privilege of living again all of these periods because we have the radio, which is one of the most amazing inventions that science has brought to the world.

But we are living now in a scientific age. An age of materialism and of mechanism. We live so close to a pushbutton or a switch that the absence of it throws us all out of gear. Everything is so mechanical that our lives are run on the same principle as our automobiles, our ships, our trains and airplanes. Our thinking is mechanical. We talk of trips and of voyages twenty years ago unheard of as most commonplace and to be expected.

We are so mechanical that we have come to think that a showing of emotion is to show weakness. We have become as mechanical or technical as a cinema, and we watch its thrills in silence. The ordinary things of life have lost their effect. Most of us are stoics in outward appearance. We have used the superlative in language so much that everything has a false value. Something that a generation ago was just very good, today is perfectly marvelous.

We ride in gorgeous cars and we look as if it were to be expected. Even our speech is affected. We say chawmed for charmed and make ourselves think it is the ultra-fashionable in conversation, don't you know?

The styles in clothing which are seen today would have made our grandparents green with envy, yet we speak of them as very common. Real music has given way to jazz. Even our hymns are jazzed. Beauty has lost its color because we lack language to express ourselves. Language has lost its beauty because we have substituted slang. Religion has lost its sincerity and sin has lost its sting. Science has made life so easy it wearies us to even think of it. A tree may be a poem, but to most of us it is just a tree.

The great operas that made their composers immortal and the world-renowned singers of them have been supplanted by the hill-billy and cowboy songs which come to us as so much mush.

The following incidents related by a speaker recently illustrates this. One evening at an opera a man in a box was noted. He was dressed in the latest fashion. He was very fat. His heavy jowls hung over his collar. His fat, pudgy fingers, upon which glistened magnificent diamonds, kept up a tattoo on the arm of his chair. His broad expanse of shirt front was aglow with another brilliant diamond. The expression on his face was one of boredom. His nervous twitching showed his lack of interest. Repeatedly he left his seat to the annoyance and disturbance of others. He neither understood nor appreciated the performance.

On another occasion the speaker attended the performance of an Italian opera. His seat was in the gallery. Beside the speaker sat a native of sunny Italy. His clothing was poor and threadbare. His shoes were worn. His collar was open and he wore no tie. Yet his hungry eyes never left the stage. He quietly hummed the score. He knew the opera and he knew the history of it. He knew the composer and his soul throbbed and thrilled with the melody and the majesty of the music.

One of these men, although wealthy, had lost the very secret of living. His wealth could and probably did bring him ease and comfort, yachts and cars. His wealth could buy the material things of life, but it could not buy one moment of the happiness of the reality of the smiling Italian.

When materialism and science and the mechanism of life have so cheated us that we cannot enjoy the song of the mockingbird or the beauty and the fragrance of the rose; when our breasts cannot expand when we draw close to our hearts a little child; when the martial air of a band pa-reading down the avenue does not stir within us the spirit of victory; when a vision of Christ on the cross of Calvary does not create within us a desire to carry on; when the sufferings of humanity do not kindle within us the spark of the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God; when smiles and tears and sighs and sobs fall on deafened ears and hardened hearts; when our hearts cannot ache with sympathy at another's grief; when we stifle and smother the urging of the spirit and our hearts only know the sordid end of our desires; then we are living in a modernism that has cheated us out of much that stands for real happiness.

Jesus said that iniquity would chill the love of the church. Paul said that men would be seekers of pleasure more than they would seek God. Peter spoke of those who would count it pleasure to riot in the daytime, those who would be ever seeking something new to attract the attention, whose minds would be on earthly things, doing the things of the flesh, not discerning the things of the spirit, and who in the end would have a conscience seared as with a hot iron and who, past feeling, would give themselves over to work uncleanness. The Revelator called it indifference. Neither quite dead nor very much alive. Satisfied with self. Neither heathen nor Christian, neither good nor evil, neither awake nor sound asleep, neither led away by false doctrine nor adhering to that which is true, neither one thing nor the other. On the fence ready to jump either way. One old writer expressed it thus: "To good and evil bent, I'm both a devil and a saint." Saint on Sunday and devil the rest of the week. And in the end God will say as He said to one of old, "Ephraim is joined to his idols; let him alone."

We have become machines instead of men and women, automatons that dance and jig at the pull of the string.

We are like the Athenians who worshiped an unknown God. We have a form of godliness, but we lack power to bring conviction to a sinner. We lack the power to bring victory in our lives. We lack power to reach God for the healing of the sick. We just go around in circles arriving nowhere. James said in a very emphatic sense (James 5:5), "Ye have fattened your hearts so that they are incapable of feeling."

Our worship is mechanical. We nod our heads and lift our eyes. We say amen because it is in the ritual. We repeat the Apostles' Creed and hardly know its meaning. The service we enjoy most is when the preacher takes a straw man into the pulpit and beats him to death. Our audiences sit with an expression on their faces as if to say, "Well, here we are. Let's see you do your stuff." After the service we hear the remark, "That wasn't so hot." But there are audiences that sit with expectant expression and enjoy every moment of the service. What makes the difference? One group comes to meet God. And God only knows what the other group comes for, anyway.

One set are machines. The other set are Christians who find happiness in the service of Jesus Christ.

We have let ourselves become hardened because of bitterness, because of the deceitfulness of sin, and so have lost the secret happiness.

Has science made humanity happy? We think not. But what is happiness? And who has it? What goes to make up such a contentment in life that we are satisfied? I might risk a guess on the thought, at least. It is memory. It is our thinking that we live. There has been much of life that we would like to forget, but there are experiences that we would not forget. There are days in which we lived such a perfect and full life, and the memory of them is like an oasis in the desert to the thirsty traveler. Days in which we asked for nothing more perfect. Days in which desires were satisfied. Love of friends can bring us happiness even while we are in strife. Sympathy for those who suffer and whose lives are a struggle, helping such lives to a higher walk and thought—this will bring happiness.

Happiness consists in living for others. To the writer this is perhaps the greatest incentive to happiness. No life can be happy that is lived for self alone, and no life can be more happy than the life that lives and loves for the service that it can do. Love and devotion are twins in the service to God and the church.

Happiness must come from within and not from without. Happiness will not need scientific apparatus or mechanical adjustment. Jesus was happy in that He might do His Father's will. Paul was happy because he could defend the new gospel before Agrippa. Peter was happy because he could suffer for righteousness' sake. James said that they would be happy who would endure. Paul said a man was happy who had a clear conscience. Jesus said humility would bring happiness. In Proverbs we read that wisdom and understanding is a tree of life, and happy is the man that retaineth her.—Present Truth Messenger.

The feast of tabernacles was another reminder of God's goodness to them, and of their privilege of rejoicing before the Lord as His redeemed people (Lev. 23:39-43).

EVENTS RECALLED BY PASSOVER SUPPER

The manner of the deliverance of the children of Israel from Pharaoh and Egyptian bondage was most impressive. One would think that anyone participating in it would never forget it. The raising up of Moses and Aaron to be their leaders, the ten plagues on the Egyptians owing to Pharaoh's hardness of heart, the exodus after the tenth plague, Pharaoh's subsequent pursuit of the fleeing captives, the crossing of the Red Sea as on dry land, and the overwhelming of Pharaoh's hosts by the return of the waters to their normal level, were all so wonderful and so beyond the power of man to accomplish that one would think the children of Israel would be God's grateful and loyal subjects for all time.

But God, who sees the end from the beginning, knows the power of the Evil One to deceive and the willingness of many to be deceived because the way of sin seems to them more pleasurable than the uprightness and truth which God enjoins. Hence, before the deliverance on that wonderful night, the Israelites were subjected to several tests, the last test being the taking of a lamb for each household, sprinkling its blood upon the doorposts, the girding of themselves in readiness to depart, the eating of the lamb prepared in the prescribed manner and with unleavened bread, and the hasty departure under the leadership of Moses.

And in connection with the directions for this occasion, Moses gave them to understand that a yearly observance was to be kept, with lamb and unleavened bread, in remembrance of (or as a commemoration of) that last night in Egypt, the departure in the middle of the night, and their complete deliverance from Pharaoh and his hosts.

This yearly observance was not only to keep their recollection vivid and to quicken afresh their sense of gratitude to God; it was also to serve as a training ground for the children of the family, for whose benefit the whole series of events would be related.

Reading the history of Israel, and the pleadings and rebukes of the prophets made necessary by their frequent backslidings, we can see that God was longsuffering and patient, always willing to bless when they were obedient, but for their own good compelled to chastise them for disobedience which with many went to the extent of idolatry and the corruption associated with it. Yet in our Lord's day there were still members of the twelve tribes of Israel who by families regularly kept the Passover at the appointed time and in the prescribed manner, always looking back to recall the events of the exodus and explaining them to those present. And up till then there is no indication that any Jew saw anything in the Passover supper more than a celebration of a past event. It remained for the apostles of Christ to inform the early church that the passover lamb was also a type and pointed forward to Christ Jesus as the One whose blood must be sprinkled on the doorposts of our hearts before we can experience complete deliverance from the captivity of sin and death. As the Apostle Paul wrote (1 Cor. 5:7), "For even Christ our passover is sacrificed."

Did the unleavened bread of the Jewish Passover point forward to anything to come in the Christian's experience? Answer: Yes, the unleavened bread has for its antitype the "sincerity and truth" that should characterize the whole of the Christian believer's life. So the Apostle said (1 Cor. 5:8).

As Christians, then, we are not under instruction to keep the Passover supper as given to the Israelites, which commemorated their deliverance from Egypt.—The New Covenant Advocate.

Thus even a casual glance about us reveals a sick world—a very sick world. And as we study the question seriously and deeply in the light of Bible predictions, we recognize that we have reached the darkest hour of earth's checkered career—"a day of darkness and of gloominess" (Joel 2:2).

Yes, the shadows are all about us. Yet remember, the darkest hour is before the dawn. We face the sunrise. Were it not for this, I would give up in despair. But the sunrise is so sure and its nearness so certain that it buoys me up and sustains me in this hour of darkness. I cling to the words: "When these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh. . . . So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand."

Never did the world hold such hopes as it does today. Never was the future brighter. Never were days so large with promise, nor true Christianity so sure of its way, so certain of its reward. The golden rays of the everlasting morning already illuminate the darkness of earth's night. Heaven, the New Jerusalem, unending bliss, are just before us. I would have you look beyond the terrible scenes of to day and the troubled seas of human suffering and woe, unto that day which this age declares is so near at hand.

Good cheer, wayfarer! Take courage! Look up! The future is as bright as the promises of God, as beautiful as the primeval world, as sure as God's word, and as everlasting as His throne. Heaven is waiting for those who will seek it.—Edward J. Urquhart in Signs of the Times.

To whom you speak, of whom you speak,
And how, and when, and where."

MAY OTHER CHURCHES COPY

THROUGHOUT the spring and summer the Church of God will continue its Sunday evening services as usual. We feel that we need spiritual refreshing even more during the warm months of the year than we do in cold weather. There are more inducements to keep us away from the house of prayer in the summer than there are in the winter. Pleasant weather, good roads, and easier economic conditions conspire to call the winter-weary man and woman out on the highways on Sunday afternoons and evenings.

We cannot blame them for being thus tempted to relieve the tedium of life by such excursions away from home. And yet there is grave danger when such practices are carried to excess, when the lure of distant places causes us to forget God and our duty to Him.

As far as our own congregation is concerned we generally find a goodly proportion of them in their accustomed pews at all seasons of the year. Our opportunity for special service is found in the fact that most churches in the town and in the surrounding cities discontinue evening services during the summer. If we make our summer Sunday evening gatherings sufficiently attractive, inspiring, and helpful, they may serve as a spiritual center of strength for the entire community.—From a church bulletin.

Entering Prayer

"God, make the door of this house we have raised to Thee wide enough to receive all who need human love, fellowship, and fatherly care; and narrow enough to shut out all envy, pride, and hate; make the threshold smooth to be no stumblingblock to childhood, weakness, or straying feet, but rugged and strong enough to turn back the tempter's power. God, make the door of this house to many souls the gateway to Thy eternal kingdom."

First Impressions

The public had been invited to the meeting. There were many strangers coming. Should we let them just wander in and blunder into a seat or should we give individual attention to each person as he came? You know what we would do if we were giving a party at our home. We would receive each one, take his hat, introduce him, and find him a chair. We are no less the hosts at the religious meeting. So we picked out one of our number that had a very gentlemanly bearing and stationed him at the door. He listened for steps on the porch and was right there with a friendly and dignified greeting for each one that came. Everyone felt right at home and joined in the meeting with unusual enthusiasm. The friendly greeting had done it.

Dare to Be a Daniel

* * * * By Lucille LeCrone, Kennard, Nebraska

Have you ever wished that you could have lived while Jesus was here upon earth performing His wonderful works? Have you, as you studied and meditated upon the various events of His life, the treatment He received at the hand of friend and foe, wondered why they acted thus and assured yourself that you would have done much differently?

Take for instance the case of Pilate and the multitude as recorded in Matthew 27. Jesus had been betrayed by Judas, taken before High Priest Caiaphas for trial, and was now standing before Governor Pilate. Pilate, after questioning Him, reported to the multitude, "I find in him no fault at all." But the multitude clamored for His death, and Pilate, "willing to content the people," delivered unto them an innocent man.

It has been said that any fish, even a dead one, can float downstream, but it takes a real live one to swim upstream. The application here is this: Pilate, finding no cause for death in Jesus, instead of standing firm in his conviction that He should go free, regardless of what the mob thought and said, took the course of least resistance. Figuratively speaking, he floated downstream. Had he refused to deliver unto them an innocent man despite their demands and threats, he would have been swimming upstream.

We may justly condemn Pilate for his treatment of Jesus, but "what shall I do then with Jesus which is called Christ?" (Matt. 27:22) is a question confronting each of us daily. It isn't always easy to do that which we know to be right when others are perhaps laughing or ridiculing. But we, as Bereans, are more concerned with doing the things which please our Lord than in pleasing any other.

If doing with Jesus the thing we know to be right means bearing the reproach of the world, we will bear that reproach gladly and rejoice to be able "to suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together."

Berean Pulse

Last week, in an effort to stimulate thought and study among the Bereans and to give them an opportunity to express their individual viewpoints for the edification of us all, certain questions were propounded. Answers to all the questions are beginning to come in. It is hoped that you each will submit the results of your earnest meditation.

TITHING:

If one fully understands the principle of tithing, it will be impossible for him to tithe without having the idea that there will be a material blessing in return. The notion should, of course, be subordinate; but human nature being what it is, there will, regardless of individual insistence otherwise, be the thought that this is going to give me a blessing.—Arlen Marsh, Oregon, Illinois.

A Mighty Tear

It is fitting that in the junior Berean book, The Hebrew People, the only picture is of the Babe Moses being found in the water by Pharaoh's daughter. Attention is thus centered on this little drama as being a moment in the history of the Hebrew people when their fate hung in the balance. The scales were tipped by the tear of a baby.

"And the daughter of Pharaoh came down to wash herself at the river; and her maidens walked along by the river's side; and when she saw the ark among the flags, she sent her maid to fetch it. And when she had opened it, she saw the child: and, behold, the babe wept. And she had compassion on him" (Ex. 2:5, 6).

Pharaoh had made a law that all the boy babies of Israel should die; and here his own daughter saved alive the one boy that was to lead the Israelites out from under his cruel treatment. It was the baby's tear that did it.

"God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty" (1 Cor. 1:27). "That no flesh should glory in his presence" (v. 29). "That, according as it is written, He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord" (v. 31).

GOD SENDS A STORM

THERE is no other book in all the world that contains so many different kinds of interesting stories as the Bible. Some are long and some are short. The story that we have this time is about a man who lived to be 950 years old.

Noah was the name of this man. Sometimes he made mistakes and did wrong, but most of the time Noah did as God wanted him to do. This pleased God, for at that time there were many people living all round Noah who were very, very bad. Noah had three sons who were fine young men. He had taught them to obey God as he did.

God watched the people on the earth. He saw that all of them were thinking constantly of something wicked to do. They never thought of God who had made the beautiful earth for them. Only Noah and his family were thankful for that.

At last God said, "I will destroy the men and the beasts and the birds that are on the earth. They are so wicked they are spoiling the earth. Only Noah is good. I will save him and his family. I will start a new creation with them just as I did with Adam."

So God talked with Noah and told him that a great flood was to come and destroy everything on the earth. But Noah was to build a great boat and in this boat he and his family were to live during the flood. God told Noah exactly what he was to do and Noah did exactly what God had said. That is why God liked Noah so well.

This boat, which is called in the Bible an ark, was to be built of gopher wood. It was as large as many of our boats that travel on the ocean. It was probably about 600 feet long, 100 feet wide, and 60 feet high. The Bible does not say what shape it had. It only says that there were to be three stories divided into rooms, a door in the side, and a window in the top. It needed no oars nor engine nor sails, for it was only to float on the top of the water.

All the time that Noah was working on the ark he was preaching to the wicked people around him. But only his wife and his three sons and their wives would listen.

Since all the birds and animals were to be drowned, too, God told Noah to choose two of every kind to take into the ark with him. There were a few kinds of them that God called "clean." Of these kinds Noah was to save seven pairs each.

Food was gathered and stored in the ark. Fruits and grains and vegetables were carried in so that there would be plenty to eat and some for seed.

When everything else was inside, Noah and his wife with their three sons and their wives went into the ark and God shut them in. Then it began to rain.

The strange thing was that it had never rained before. The people did not know what a flood was like. Do you? Have you seen houses that have been destroyed and animals that have been drowned? It looks dreadful to us. As it rained day after day the waters got deeper. At first the level ground was covered, then the small hills. At last the water came far above the mountain tops and nothing living was to be found anywhere. Only the ark with its load was floating safely on top of the water.

Then the wind began to blow. Do you suppose the waves made Noah and his family seasick? I do not think so, for God was caring for them. But you know when the wind blows it helps to dry up the water. So God sent the wind and the sunshine.

After a long time the water dried up so the tops of the mountains showed. But it looked so quiet without any birds! Lower and lower went the water down the mountain sides until, one day, Noah felt a little jolt. Sure enough the ark had settled on the top of Mount Ararat. (That is a long name, but try to remember it.)

It was a long time after that before the water was all gone. A little over a year Noah and his family spent in the ark and then one happy day God said to him, "Go out of the ark now, all of you. Take everything out with you so the animals and birds may live naturally in the open air. Soon the earth will be as full of animals and birds as it was before."

So they all went out on the mountain side. The first thing Noah thought of was to build an altar. He took some of the animals and birds of which he had seven pairs and burned them on the altar. That was his way of saying, "Thank you," to God for saving their lives.

When God saw this He blessed Noah and his family and told them to be happy and have many children. He caused a rainbow to be seen, and He said, "This rainbow is a sign of My promise to you that I will never again destroy the whole earth or everything in it with a flood."

So when we see a rainbow we must remember God's promise to Noah, and that may help us to be as obedient as Noah was.

WHAT'S THE ANSWER?

What king named in the Bible was under weight? Another easy one—if you know one of the most dramatic books in the Bible. The correct answer will be printed in the paper next week. Look for it. Don't forget! It'll be there!

WE NEED YOUR HELP

As every Illinois property owner knows, personal property and real estate taxes for the State became payable April 1. Taxes on property held in Illinois by the National Bible Institution this year amount to somewhat better than $300.

These taxes become delinquent to the amount of $200 on June 1. On the same date, approximately, a bill for about $300 for paper stock intended for The Restitution Herald and the Truth Seekers' Quarterly will fall due. This bill, like the tax bill, cannot be postponed. Normal expenses from April 1 to June 1 will continue at the usual level; and it cannot be expected that the Institution's treasury can stand up under the sudden drain of two good-sized bills, ordinary current expenses, and a simultaneous decrease in the amount of contributions, such as has occurred in recent weeks.

We urge, therefore, that you give as liberal support as possible to these necessary bills. Only through your cooperation can The Herald and the quarterly, our most effective means for teaching the gospel throughout the world, be continued.

Arlen Marsh, Asst. Treas.

REPORT FOR MARCH

Sermons: Pleasant View, 2; Rensselaer, 2; Hillisburg, 2; Plymouth, 1; North Salem, 1. Funerals, 1. Money received: Pleasant View, $12.00; Rensselaer, $20.00; Plymouth, $15.00; Hillisburg, $35.83; North Salem, $8.50; conference board, $7.00. Expense, $15.00.

On March 6 we were called to South Bend to preach the funeral sermon for Bro. Gideon Logan (whose obituary appears elsewhere in this paper). A very large crowd came to the funeral to pay their respects to a man who was well known and liked by a large number of people.

J. H. Anderson, Indiana Evangelist.

PENNELWOOD CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

A beautiful Easter was enjoyed to the full. We were richly blessed with God's Spirit within and sunshine without.

A surprisingly large number started the day with a sunrise service in charge of Bro. Walter Ellis of Wayland, who has been filling the pulpit the last few months. Sunday school was at ten o'clock. The morning sermon by Bro. Austin was preceded by a sermonette for the children by Bro. Ellis, and followed by Communion. Bro. Austin was a guest speaker at the young people's meeting at 6 p. m., and gave the evening sermon.

We were very happy to have Bro. Austin with us over the week-end.

Lynn D. arrived March 16 to make his home with Bro. and Sr. Robert Townsend and brother Larry.

Mrs. L. F. Slocum, Secretary.

CAMDEN, ILLINOIS

Illinois Evangelists F. L. Austin and J. W. McLain began a series of evangelistic services at Camden on Saturday night, April 3. This meeting is to last as long as circumstances warrant. All those in the vicinity are urged to uphold the effort.

RIPLEY, ILLINOIS

An Easter program given Sunday evening was enjoyed by a full house. Short exercises by the little folks preceded the showing of pictures of the life of Christ.

The church people were pleased to have Sr. Emma Swan and Sr. Maurine Greene of Quincy, Ill., visit here recently.

Sr. Lola Clark has moved to Mt. Sterling, Ill., and will be unable to attend services.

Francis Burnett, our Sunday School superintendent, has gone to Peoria, Ill., where he has employment.

Our attendance at Sunday school and church has been fairly good throughout the winter months.

We are planning an evangelistic meeting to be held the first three weeks in May. Bro. T. A. Drinkard has been engaged as speaker. Pray for the success of these meetings that much good may be done.

Ednah Cooper, Secretary.

DELAYED CONTEST DECISION

Bro. James A. Patrick is the winner! The contest which was announced several months ago has not been forgotten, but difficulty has been encountered in arriving at final decision. For a time the committee was evenly divided and an additional judge had to be appointed before the deadlock could be broken. This fact speaks well for the work done by all of the contestants.

Three of the articles submitted will appear (D. V.) in our regular columns in the near future and you will be able to determine whether or not you agree that the answer prepared by Bro. Patrick most nearly met the requirements. The question will be repeated when the articles are published so that you may compare the question with the answers submitted.

MACOMB, ILLINOIS

On Easter Sunday, both morning and evening, the writer held services in Macomb, Ill. The church met in the home of Bro. and Sr. Richard Mercer. Sunday school was held in the morning at ten o'clock. The newly organized church is very zealous and the many new members in the faith are making definite steps toward steadfastness. I highly commend them for the steps that they have taken.

Wilsie J. McKnight.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

The address of Harry Gokler, president of the National Berean Society and present pastor of the Louisiana Churches of God, has been changed from Marshall, Ill., to Route 3, Box 50A, care Albert Siple, Hammond, La.

Bro. and Sr. T. J. Ellis of Jennings Lodge, Ore., both of whom are former members of the executive board of the National Bible Institution, write of the beauty and general attractiveness of their new home. They mention that recently they spent a day at Corvallis, Ore., where they "listened to a splendid discourse by Bro. Corbaley of Washington, on Israel's regathering." Bro. Ellis, with his son and son-in-law, is constructing a modern tourist cabin camp on U. S. Highway No. 99, eleven miles south of Portland, Ore.

Sr. Mary A. Gesin, after four weeks in bed, is now gaining rapidly and hopes soon to be enjoying all her usual church activities. The many letters and cards of greeting which she received, as well as the personal kindnesses of the Oregon church members, aided greatly in her recovery. The prayers of the botherhood offered for her accomplished more than anything else, and she wishes to take this opportunity to thank the Giver of all good for the many blessings she has received. "May God bless every one of you," is her prayer.

According to a letter from Bernard Crofton, Mt. Carroll, Ill., Mrs. Frank Switzer of the Plum River, Ill., Church of God, is in a serious condition at the University of Chicago Hospital, Chicago, Ill.,

Arrangements are being made for the summer Bible schools and conferences in various localities. It is advisable that boards and committees having such plans in charge should get in touch with the speakers and teachers they desire as early as possible in order they may not be disappointed in securing the help they require.

If you have not already done so, we suggest that you read the article which appeared in The Herald of March 30 by A. H. Zilmer, entitled, "The Border Line of Creeds," and notice especially this assertion, which we believe is amply supported by many scriptures: "What is necessary for salvation is contained in the record of the preaching of the apostles to the world." Many have mistakenly sought to find the basis of the gospel in the Epistles, which are without exception addressed to those who already have entered the road that leads to life.

The executive board of the Illinois State Conference, together with representatives from the General Conference board, met in Oregon, Ill., on Saturday, April 3, and made plans for the coming Bible school and conference to be held in Oregon, August 3 to 15.

Bro. and Sr. Frank Laning of Ripley, Ill., and Bro. Clyde Graham of St. Louis, Mo., accompanied Illinois board members to Oregon. The associations with them were much enjoyed. Because of illness Bro. Silas Claypool and his family of Paris, Ill., were unable to be at the meeting.

ST. CLOUD, MINNESOTA

Sunday evening, March 28, brought to a close our week of pre-Easter services. They were well attended each night considering that we had a cold snap with snow and wind attending for several nights. A good spirit of cooperation prevailed throughout the entire week with special music by members of the choir lending an additional touch to each service.

The Lord gave us a beautiful, warm Easter Day with many attending blessings. Many who had flowers or plants brought them to help beautify the church.

Our Sunday school attendance rose to 107, and while our average for March was only 68 we can see great possibilities. After a short period for the Sunday school lesson, each of the classes presented different Easter selections. The program was enjoyed by all and was followed by a brief Easter sermonette by the pastor.

The evening service was well attended and after an anthem by the choir and a solo by the choir leader the evening sermon, "The Crowning Day," was given. Indeed it was a crowning day for the entire week, for at the close of the service five young people were baptized into the name of Jesus. We commend them to the entire brotherhood.

Those baptized were: Gloria and Alice Brown, 112 19½ Ave. N.; Margaret Leisteman, RFD; Dorothy and Vernon Stone, 1026 30th Ave. N.;—all of St. Cloud.

We are sure these young people would be glad to hear from any of the other intermediate young people of the church.

C. E. Lapp, Pastor.

CHURCH OF GOD MESSENGER
Niagara District

The last issue of this splendid local bulletin is filled to overflowing with condensed "sweetness and light." An article on spiritual peace starts on the first page. (This will appear later in our regular columns.) An editorial entitled "The Upper Room" is exceedingly suggestive.

From the news pages of the little paper we gather the following notes of general interest:

The Truth Seekers' Sunday School Class of the Fonthill, Ont., church enjoyed a pleasant evening in Thorold, Ont., last Friday night as guests of the vice president of the class, Florence Yarnell.

Sr. Albright, who, with her husband, spent the winter with relatives in New York State, is welcomed back to the Welland, Ont., church.

The editor of The Herald joins the pastor of the Niagara Falls, N. Y., church in extending congratulations and best wishes to Bro. Ellison Shea, who was recently married. He is now located in Ford City, Pa.

Bro. C. E. Elliott, for many years an active member of the Fonthill congregation, is under the care of a physician, due to a heart attack. "We commend him to the Great Physician's care as well."

The Niagara Falls Bereans to the number of about thirty spent an enjoyable evening at the home of their president, Mrs. Faye Brown. An offering was received to be applied on the church improvement fund.

A number of active members met at the home of Pastor C. E. Randall recently to talk over plans for putting on a consistent personal work campaign. Another meeting will be held soon, when it is expected a definite program will be adopted. A Christian psychological approach to win friends for the church will be attempted. Debate, argument, and uncalled-for antagonism will be on the taboo list.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

The general feeling among the South Lawn brethren is that this Easter was one of the finest we have ever enjoyed. The most beautiful, sunny weather marked the anniversary of our Savior's resurrection, and the church rejoiced that because He lives, we shall live also.

Superintendent Stevens wore a broad smile as the Sunday school went over the top and exceeded by 15 the attendance goal of 225, which was our Easter aim. The church was also filled for the service following. The senior choir furnished the musical part of the morning worship.

Several families enjoyed the Easter dinner in the church parlors at noon.

The junior choir, which is becoming quite an attraction, delighted a full house at the Sunday evening service. They were truly "Easter lilies" of much beauty and sweetness as they witnessed in song for the risen Lord.

The church family was made happy with the presence of our beloved Sr. Fletcher of Kalamazoo, who came up for the Easter worship and fellowship. She never misses an Easter with us if it is humanly possible for her to come. The day's pleasure was also heightened by the attendance of Bro. and Sr. Skeels, who because of failing health have not been able to be out for several weeks. Sr. Harriet Hansen, who spent the winter months in Colorado, has returned home and is again a regular attendant at the church services. Another welcome face in the Easter congregation was that of Sr. William Shephard, who arrived home Saturday from St. Paul, Minn., where she had been the guest of her son and family for the winter.

A number of the brethren gathered at the Pixley home recently to bid Godspeed to Sr. Pixley, who is leaving for a visit of several weeks with relatives and friends in California.

The church here is busy and happy in the Lord's work. May God help us all to hold fast.
F. E. Siple, Pastor.

PRE-EASTER SERVICES IN MINNESOTA

A beautiful folder, the cover of which shows a picture of the empty tomb of our risen Lord printed in pastel colors, announces the pre-Easter services and themes of Pastor C. E. Lapp, St. Cloud, Minn. We regret that the folder did not reach us in time for earlier publication, but we regret still more that we were not present to hear Bro. Lapp speak on the interesting subjects named as follows: "The King Enters Jerusalem," "The King Cleanses the Temple," "Last of All, the Last Man," "Are You Trying to Be Neutral?" "Three Crosses," "Father, Forgive Them," "It Is Finished!" and "Three Dark Days." And for Easter Sunday: "The Easter Message" and "The Crowning Day."

We hope that all things conspired to give the church and its pastor an opportunity to present these great subjects to large and appreciative audiences.

April 3 marked the 25th anniversary of the removal of what is now Aurora College from Mendota to Aurora, Ill. Prior to its transfer to Aurora, the college, then Mendota College, had been operated for nineteen years. The week of April 11-18 will be occupied with special anniversary services, including lectures by some of the most famous educators in the world. Three Church of God young people are now students of the Aurora College theological class.

GIDEON LOGAN

Gideon Logan, son of Charles H. and Sarah Voreis Logan, was born in Marshall County, Ind., January 31, 1855. He was married in 1877 to Martha D. Heston. To this union two children were born, Ernest S. Logan, Lakeville, Ind., and Leona Johnson, now deceased.

After the death of his wife he was married to Eva Winrott Stilson on November 12, 1885. To this union two children were born, Lottie Pickerl, 407 LaMonte Terrace, South Bend, Ind., and Russell, now deceased.

Most of his life was spent in Marshall County, where he was a merchant for several years.

He had been a member of the Church of God of the Abrahamic Faith for over sixty years and remained true to this belief.

On Friday evening, Feb. 26, he was anointed by the elders of the South Bend church, Bro. Roland Stilson conducting the service.

He died March 3, 1937, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Lottie Pickerl, with whom he and his wife made their home. Funeral services were conducted by Bro. John Anderson, in the home on Saturday, March 6. Burial was at Niles, Mich.

Mrs. Lottie Logan Pickerl.

The answer to last week's question was just below the question. Did you find it? In case you didn't look in Judges 14:20.

RILLA DREW

Miss Rilla Drew died at her home on North Galena Avenue, Dixon, Ill., March 22, 1937. She was born in Biddeford, Me., March 7, 1852. When four years of age she moved with her parents, Henry J. and Mercy Nowell Drew, to Illinois, locating in Dixon in 1857. Here she grew to womanhood, attending the Dixon schools and graduating from the only high school in the city of that early date, in the class of 1871. Following her graduation she taught in the school from which she graduated, and later in some of the rural districts and the north side grade schools.

In 1887 Miss Drew went to Glenwood, Iowa, where she held various positions in the State Institution for Feeble-Minded Children, remaining there for 35 years. She served as official matron of the institution during the last twenty years or more of her residence there. She was greatly loved and respected by her fellow officers, the teachers, as well as the patients at the institution, the children especially finding in her a true and loving friend. She returned to Dixon in 1923 where she has since made her home with her sisters.

She had been an invalid the past two years.

Those left to mourn her death are two sisters, the Misses Ada and Anna Drew; a sister-in-law, Mrs. Lena Drew of Dixon; a niece, Mrs. Olive Guttery of Lynch, Neb.; three nephews, Herbert Drew of Cloquet, Minn., Lee of Dixon, and Howard of Montour Falls, N. Y. Many more distant relatives and friends will mourn the loss of this true Christian character. In life she was gentle, kind, generous, and faithful. She now sleeps in peace awaiting the coming of the Lord, whom she loved to serve.

Funeral services were held at the Dixon Church of God, of which she has been a faithful member for more than sixty years, and were conducted by the writer, assisted by Bro. G. E. Marsh. We laid her to rest in Oakwood Cemetery until the morning for which we pray.

which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life." It does not say God surrounded the tree with angels to guard it, but that He placed cherubim and a flaming sword. It does not say that the cherubim had swords in their hands, but both cherubim and flaming sword were there to protect the way of the tree of life, not just to keep the man from touching the tree.

Having emphasized these words, let us examine them in seriatim.

First, the word "east." When the tabernacle was erected, we find the specifications called for the entrance to face the east (Ex. 27:13, 14; 38:13, 14). The east always indicates the point from which God approaches man. According to Numbers 3:38 Moses and Aaron were placed east of the tabernacle because they were God's representatives. For the same reason the entrance to the temple that will be built in the kingdom age will have its front entrance facing the east (Ezek. 47:1), and through this gate the Prince (Christ) will enter (Ezek. 43:1, 2; 44:1-3). It is reserved for Christ only. The children of Israel entered the Promised Land from the east, and Christ and His saints will approach Jerusalem from the east. Isaiah 63:1 and Revelation 16:12 show the East is being prepared for the reception of Christ and His saints. Therefore, the East symbolizes the point from which redemption will come.

The next word, "Cherubims," is a Hebrew word, not translated, and means "to hold," but the root meaning of "cherub" comes from the Hebrew ka, "like," and rub, "a multitude," which defines the word "Cherubims" as "a multitude like Christ that hold fast and protect the Word of God."

The word "cherub" is singular and "cherubim" is plural. The suffix "im" is the Hebrew equivalent to the English "s." How does the Scripture define the word "cherubim"? In Ezekiel 1:5 we read of four living creatures who have the appearance of a man; in the 10th verse these creatures are said to have four faces, a man's, lion's, ox's, and eagle's. These represent the four standards of Israel referred to in Numbers 2:3, 10, 18, and 25; and these in turn correspond with the four beasts in Revelation 4:7. All these symbols represent complete Israel, or in other words the saints.

In Ezekiel 10:14, 15 the cherubim are called the living creatures, so they are identical; and in the 20th verse of the same chapter the Prophet says the living creatures were the cherubim. This enables us to understand that the cherubim of Genesis 3:24 are a type of prophecy of the saints in light (Col. 1:12). Christ and His saints are represented as one body (1 Cor. 12:12-14; Eph. 4:12, 13). This completes the picture of the Christ body holding and protecting the truth, so that only those who are fit for it can receive it (John 6:44; Amos 8:11, 12).

The next word, "flaming sword," is comparatively simple. In Leeser's translation it reads: "The flame of the sword revolveth to guard."

We must remember that the words "flame," "fire," and "sword" denote God's judgments. In Numbers 21:6-9 we find an instance where God punished with fiery serpents, and Christ uses this as an example in John 3:14 (Psalm 97:1-5; Deut. 4:24; 9:3; Heb. 12:29; Isa. 33:14; 2 Peter 3:10-12). These texts all show us that the flaming sword is the symbol of God's judgment exercised by Christ and His saints.

Now, lastly, the way of the tree of life. We all remember the Lord's words in John 14:6: "I am the way, the truth, and the life." He was the way prophesied in Eden by which God was going to redeem man from sin, but that redemption could not come until Christ had lived and suffered death. The law was a shadow of good things to come (Heb. 10:1), but the law itself could not redeem us from sin, i. e., the trouble Adam brought on us. The sacrifice of the law was a shedding of blood foretelling the sacrifice of a perfect man, and so God had this plan in view when He put the tree of life in the garden as a symbol of the Christ He had foreordained (1 Peter 1:18-20).

The tree of life is introduced at the beginning of creation and is carried right through to the completed kingdom (Rev. 22:2). Wherever it is mentioned it symbolizes Christ and purity (Prov. 3:18; 11:30; 13:12; 15:4). All these texts refer to the tree of life as a purifying element and symbols of Christ, who eventually will purify the earth and make it perfect once more as God originally created it.

DID CHRIST DIE?

We understand that the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ is one proposition of the gospel, and the other is the good news or glad tidings concerning the kingdom of God which will be established on earth when Christ, the Nobleman (Luke 19:12), returns. Then shall He be seated on the throne of His glory (Matt. 25:31-34), which is David's throne rebuilt (Luke 1:32, 33; Acts 15:13-16).

In order to have the one faith which precedes and gives validity to baptism, we must believe this gospel, for Paul says:

"In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation: in whom also after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that holy Spirit of promise" (Eph. 1:13).

And again: "When they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women" (Acts 8:12).

In conclusion, let me say to the reader, Believe the gospel, if you have not, and obey it in baptism, and thus become an heir of the kingdom which God has promised to them that love Him.—The Herald of the Coming Kingdom, August 15, 1868.

Cornelius Was Not a Christian

By the Editor

CORNELIUS was "a devout man, and one that feared God with all his house, which gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God alway." And God heard and answered his prayers and accepted his alms in the spirit in which they were offered. In addition to all this Cornelius had a deep spiritual experience which included "divine guidance" through a most impressive vision sent by God. (Acts 10:1-4, 30-32.) Yet he was not a Christian! He was still without Christ, being an alien from the commonwealth of Israel and a stranger from the covenants of promise; he had no hope, and was without God in the world (Eph. 2:11-13)!

Belief in God does not make one a Christian. Devotion and piety do not in themselves make one a Christian. Love for mankind, shown in acts of charity, does not make one a Christian. Even answered prayers, and "divine guidance" of the most unmistakable character, do not prove that the one who receives such indications of heavenly approbation is a Christian!

It is clearly apparent that one may receive from God blessed recognition, that one may experience the leadership of God in a most remarkable way, that one may be deeply spiritual in heart and mind, that one's life may conform to the loftiest standards of Christlike conduct in his relations to his fellow men, and still the one thus blessed and led and recognized by God may not be a Christian!

Membership in the body of Christ and eternal salvation are not assured by piety and prayer and Bible reading. They are not assured by an inner recognition or an outward manifestation of divine leadership. These experiences have and do come to people who are not Christians. They may never become Christians. Had Cornelius not voluntarily obeyed God and sent to Joppa for Simon Peter to come and instruct him in the doctrine of Christ, had he not believed that doctrine and sealed his belief in baptism, in spite of his piety, his answered prayers, his vision, he would never have been a Christian—he would have died as a worldly man dies, without hope!

What with church leaders who call Ghandi a Christian and who urge the social-centered principles of Kagawa upon the world as the essence of the Nazarene's teachings, Christianity has been pretty well undermined. The editor now points out the sole cause for which anyone may properly style himself a disciple of the Christ.

This is a thing which many people seem unable to grasp. They identify men and women as Christians because they are fervent believers in God, because they pray effectually, because they trust to what they believe to be "divine guidance," because they profess and sincerely believe that they have the witness of God's Spirit in their hearts, testifying to their acceptance by Him.

It is this serious and vital mistake which so many make; even pastors and evangelists themselves are not always free from this error that causes earnest seekers after salvation to look upon "doctrine" as of minor importance and to feel satisfied with what they term the "testimony of God in my heart."

There are devout men, prayerful men, Bible reading men, men zealous in their efforts for advancing what they look upon as the cause of Christ, who are not Christians. These stand as much in need of the gospel as—perhaps more so than—do those who have made no profession of Christianity or of godliness. In many instances such spiritually contented people are far more difficult to reach with the gospel than are those who have made no religious profession at all. They honestly think they are "saved." They have no doubts as to their relationship to God and to Christ. They can see no reason why they should have to change their belief regarding the location or character of the kingdom of God or why they should be baptized "again." In their own estimation they are Christians now! They have the witness in themselves!

It is significant that apparently the great majority of the converts made by Paul were already devout and pious men and women who believed in God. They were mostly Jews, or Gentile proselytes to the Jewish faith, who were regular attendants in the synagogues. We may well suppose that many of them were (Please turn to page 16)

"At the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder."—Proverbs 23:32.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 4.—Dr. R. R. Spencer, senior surgeon in the United States Health Service, denied the value of alcohol as a stimulant or as a relief for colds or snake bites today.

"I am not a prohibitionist," he said, "and these statements are not results of my own research. They are offered as a correlation of results of experiments in the United States and England during the past few years."

One of the most astonishing conclusions in the estimation of the layman at which the scientists have arrived was expressed by Dr. Spencer in these words:

"Alcohol is not a stimulant to the nervous system, but a depressant even in small amounts. When a person is under the influence of alcohol, he or she is less keenly aware of environment. Muscular skill and coordination are perceptibly decreased. However, subjective feelings are improved and there is increased contentment and satisfaction with oneself." This may be a pleasant state for the person imbibing, he added, "but he is less able to perform duties and accept social and community responsibility."

In addition to this, the ability to learn and to memorize is reduced and "thinking becomes fuzzy," the doctor declared. "Mental activity is clumsy, similar to the clumsiness of both hands and feet, and, contrary to the belief of many writers and artists, there is no evidence that alcohol stimulates creative thinking."

Careful measurements of the blood pressure of the tiny capillary blood vessels which feed the skin, he said, show that alcohol dilates them and lowers the pressure, resulting in a greater loss of heat from the body. "Therefore most observers believe it should not be taken before exposure to cold."

Shattering a superstition that has persisted for generations, Dr. Spencer declared that the belief that a drink of whiskey will prevent snake venom from taking effect in the body is as erroneous as the belief that snakes grow from horsehairs in a watering trough. "Alcohol does not neutralize the poison and therefore its use is more likely to be harmful than good," he concluded.

(The above facts may be used to advantage in teaching the Sunday school lesson of April 18.—Editor.)

Such an Important Question!

"Foolish and unlearned questions avoid."—2 Tim. 2:23.

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla., March 26.—A dispute as to whether Judas Iscariot hanged himself from a redbud tree raged among club women here today. The cause of the discussion was the fact that the State legislature recently passed an act naming the redbud as the State's official tree. The bill awaits the signature of Gov. E. W. Marland to become law. Mrs. Robert Lawson of Tulsa, Oklahoma, national president of the Federation of Women's Clubs, telegraphed the Governor objecting to the choice. She declared that the redbud tree is the tree from which Judas, the betrayer of Jesus, hanged himself, and therefore would not be a suitable symbol for the great State of Oklahoma. Club leaders who sponsored the redbud bill were quick to reply that there is no reference to the redbud in the Bible.

It is not only among club women that such "foolish and unlearned questions" arise to bring discord, but many a church congregation, and not infrequently whole denominations, have been split into bitterly opposing factions over insignificant matters of no more vital moment than this one.

British-American Cooperation

"Keep the munition, watch the way, make thy loins strong, fortify thy power mightily."—Nahum 2:1.

LONDON, April 7.—So closely interwoven are the economic interests of Canada and the United States that the recently enacted neutrality of the latter country must be taken into account by Great Britain in planning what requisitions will be made upon Canada for the support of the Empire's annual billion and a half dollar defense program. "The participation of United States capital in Canadian industry is well known, but the British armament program gives it new significance," said the Manchester Guardian today. That Canada holds the key position as a British supply base for future war adds to the complexity of the situation.

A Chat With Prospective Training Class Members

By J. B. LeCrone

AS A GRADUATE of the Training Class and as one of the more enthusiastic supporters of the movement to reopen the school, I feel that the time has come to have a talk with those who may be considering entering the class in the event that it is reestablished. I make no pretense of being an authority on the subject, but merely thought that the viewpoint of one who had attended the class might be of assistance to you in making your decision.

First as to the need for the class. It is argued by the opponents of the movement that it is possible to get a more thorough and complete education elsewhere and that the establishing of a school of our own would be merely duplicating the work of others and therefore a waste of time, effort, and money. With the first part of their argument I have no quarrel. That a broader education is to be had elsewhere I fully agree. But there the agreement ends. By all means get as broad a general education as you can, but education alone is not enough. "For it is written, I will destroy the wisdom of the wise, and will bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent. Where is the wise? where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this world? hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world? For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe" (1 Cor. 1:19-21). Evidently Paul, the most learned of all the apostles, considered that there was something still more essential to his ministry than mere knowledge. He declares that he was sent "to preach the gospel: not with wisdom of words, lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect" (1 Cor. 1:17).

That attractively displayed goods are more readily accepted by the public than those in an unpolished showcase is not to be denied. But consider the plight of the beautifully polished showcase with nothing worth while inside to display. To be able to say nothing in well chosen words and with excellent grammar and diction may tickle the ears of so-called "educated" people, but it has never been known to bring a sinner to repentance.

A sound foundation in essential doctrinal truths, combined with the inspiration and spiritual insight gained by studying at the feet of kindly and experienced soldiers of the cross has meant more to me than any amount of "general education" could ever have meant. That I am no exception to the rule is evidenced by the fact that, almost to a man, former members of the class are to be found laboring faithfully in the field, often under very trying circumstances. Paul did not attribute his courage to education. He stated his position thus: "But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ. Yea, doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord: for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ" (Phil. 3:7, 8). Who is there who will gainsay that the best place to gain "the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus" is within the ranks of the Church of God?

Now about the need for more religious workers. There are those who would have us believe that there are so many "unemployed ministers" that any newcomers in the field would either have to wait several years for a position or else crowd some older man out of a job. This can best be answered by relating the experience that the Minnesota Conference board had this spring in its search for a man to act as State evangelist. The board requested of national headquarters a list of "unemployed ministers" and were furnished with a list of seven. Of these, two were physically unable to answer our call; two were employed in other lines of work that prevented their serving; one, because of local conditions, could not be considered; one has since been employed in a pastorate; and the other failed to even answer the letter sent him. We were told that there were others, but that their names and addresses were unknown. There you have a view of the unemployment situation among the ministers of the Church of God. The result was that the board finally secured an employed man who obtained a three months' leave of absence from his pastorate in order to answer the call.

The Ministerial Association at the last report had five men registered as available for evangelistic work. Whether or not any of them are at present employed the report did not say. I know of at least two churches that expect to employ pastors in the near future.

That many of the churches are either unable or unwilling to pay a pastor a living salary is another reason often set forth why no more men should be trained. Can you imagine a man refusing to work in his garden because it is not filled with fruit ready to fall into his lap? The gardener expects to spend months of hard labor, breaking the ground, planting the seed, and carefully tending the growing plants before he can reap much harvest. Paul assured the Corinthians that "I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase. So then neither is he that planteth any thing, neither he that watereth; but God that giveth the increase. Now he that planteth and he that watereth are one: and every man shall receive his own reward according to his own labour. For we are labourers together with God: ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building" (1 Cor. 3:6-9). God rarely gives the increase until the planting and watering have first been accomplished.

In any other profession men expect to go through a period during which they have little income while they "build a practice." Why make an exception of the min-

Does Christ Always Intercede for Us?

By Laurence M. Howell

IN 1 Timothy 2:5 we read, "For there is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus." Hebrews 12:24 also speaks of Jesus as the mediator of the new covenant. "It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us" (Rom. 8:34). Hebrews 7:25 also says, "Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them." Now with this background we will proceed with our subject.

When we believe the gospel of the kingdom, repent, and obey in baptism, we put on Christ, or become a part of His body (Mark 16:15, 16; Acts 28:31; Gal. 3:27). According to Romans 8:14-17, "as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." They are children of God, and so heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ. Such persons have come into covenant relationship with God, and so have access to Christ as their intercessor.

It is only through Christ we are saved (Acts 4:12). He is now at the right hand of God as our only mediator. Hence it follows that if we would have our petitions to the Father heeded or granted, they must be offered in the name of Christ, the only one who can plead our cause with God (John 15:16).

In case a Christian sins and desires God's forgiveness, he stands in much the same relation between Christ and God as a convict in state prison, and desiring pardon, holds between the state board of pardons and the governor of the state. A request for pardon by the governor must be acted upon by the board of pardons. This board investigates the applicant's prison record. If the board is honest, and the record shows reformation and seems to justify a pardon, such recommendation is made to the governor for his action; otherwise the petition is denied. So it is with Christ and the sinning Christian. If I commit a wrong against some one, and truly repent, doing all in my power to right the wrong, then Christ will cheerfully intercede with the Father for my pardon; otherwise, not.

Let us consider a parable of the farmer and his servant. A certain farmer desired to hire a servant. He communicated with a distant laborer, offering him thirty dollars per month. In addition he promised the laborer a horse at the end of the year as further compensation. The laborer replied, stating he would accept the offer and be satisfied. He presently took his journey and performed his service. At the end of the year the farmer delivered to his servant a sheep. Whereupon, the servant remonstrated, "Did you not promise me a horse?" The farmer replied, "My family and I concluded we would only give you a sheep. Take this substitute and be satisfied." The servant under pressure finally yielded to the wrong.

Now let us suppose the characters of the parable are actual persons. In this case, if the farmer were a professed Christian, what effect would his sin in the parable have on his own salvation?

In Matthew 5:23, 24 Jesus says, "Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee; leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift."

In the light of the above quotation, it is obvious that the farmer is scripturally bound to right his sin against his servant. This does not mean that he may persuade his servant to consent to the wrong and so clear his guilt. Two wrongs do not make one right. On the contrary, the farmer must make restitution to his servant and fulfill his contract as made. This being done, the farmer can now pray the Father in Christ's name for forgiveness, and the prayer be granted. To obtain forgiveness we must bring forth fruits meet for repentance. See Matthew 3:8; 1 John 1:9. It also seems quite evident from Matthew 5:23, 24 that any religious gift or worship on the farmer's part would be vain and useless until he corrected his wrong against his servant.

Now, how about the farmer's inheritance in the kingdom? Could it be lost? At least a portion of the Galatian Christians had fallen into sinful practices. In Galatians 5:19-21 Paul lists some of the works of the flesh and then concludes, "They which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." The Galatian letter was addressed, not to the world, but to Christians of Galatia. So we must conclude that any Christian committing sins of which he does not truly repent, or make right, so as to be eligible for God's pardon, must lose his inheritance in the kingdom of God.

Earthly parents have disinherited children for unforgiven wrongs. So also will God disinherit those of His children who fail to repent for sins committed against Him.

The United States treasury has a fund known as the "conscience fund." Various times have I read of employees of the Government stealing or defrauding it of money. Then years later, on reforming or becoming converted, this money was returned to the Government to clear the conscience of the sender.

Have any of us any sins hanging over us that have not been made right? We may try to forget them, and be too stiff-necked to humble ourselves and make them right. God knows all about us and will surely hold us to account. We may ignore them now, but they will come up before us later—even on our deathbed to plague us and condemn us. Of all times, then we want to be at peace with God.

Years ago I was charged by a church member with being too strict in my views on moral conduct of Christians, because I did not sanction their practicing so-called free love. So now I imagine some may say I have taken too strict a view of my subject. I have merely tried to present God's laws in the matter as the Bible gives them to us. They are not my laws. I could not change them if I wished.

The serpent beguiled Eve in the Garden of Eden and caused her to disbelieve God's law. Death resulted. So now

Satan subtly persuades men and women to disbelieve God's present laws to their eternal destruction. "Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall" (1 Cor. 10:12).

The promise of life, of being saved, is only to those who are faithful unto death, who endure unto the end (Rom. 2:10; Matt. 24:13). May God help you and me to be of that number.

Shall We Tithe in Hard Times?

THE question of appropriating a tenth or even any part of one's income becomes a serious problem to many people in these days of scarcity. Then it becomes even more necessary that we examine the Bible standards for Christian conduct in such exigencies. We need to study more closely the true meaning and spirit of stewardship.

Before deciding whether we ought to tithe in hard times, let us see if we really appreciate what true stewardship is. Stewardship is not a method by which God tries to take something from us, but one of His ways of enriching us with new, deeper experiences of fellowship and partnership with Him. He could carry out His program of saving the world without us if He so chose, but that is not the way He has chosen. He counts us His partners in the great undertaking of giving the glad tidings to the world. One thirteen-year-old boy when asked what stewardship is gave this beautiful expression of the idea: "Stewardship is a great ship loaded with a rich cargo, bound for many lands. God owns the ship, but I'm the captain." God has chosen us as captains of the good ship, Stewardry. It is our task to bring the rich cargo, the funds intrusted to us, into the harbor of greater usefulness.

Stewardship is not a matter of owning, but owing. We do not own what we possess, but we owe it to God, and I owe it to Him to use as He directs. This level of stewardship is the Christian rule of ownership. It is not a question of private ownership. Communism fights private ownership yet rejects God as sovereign. Communism is fast becoming materialistic and capitalistic. A man can own vast lots of private property and through Christian stewardship do more good in the world than ten thousand godless Communists.

Stewardship is the soul of religion. Man would yet be in sin or worse had Jesus acted with His life as some men do with their paltry possessions. One of the happiest men on earth is the man whose religion makes him want to give (or rather pay) to God's cause. Stewardship is so much a part of religion that it is mentioned seventy-eight times in the Bible. Forty-eight of these passages carry open promises of blessing to the giver.

There are four principles of stewardship worthy of our consideration in connection with the question of giving. The first principle is that God is the owner of all things and that what we have is ours only for a time. God can take it when and how He wishes. Prosperity is promised to those who use their means for God. This principle was recognized by the early church, for "no man said that ought which he possessed was his own." The whole church was consecrated and unselfish. It is no wonder they stirred the nations. If God's people today were even half as liberal, His gospel would still turn the world upside down. The second principle is really an outcome of the first. If God is owner of all things, man is simply His steward. Man holds in fee that which he has. This idea is pointed out in the parable of the rich fool. The good Samaritan is an example of a man who used his trust well. The third principle is that not how much we possess, but how we use what is intrusted to us, is important. Man has no right to ask: How much of my money must I give to the Lord? Rather, he should ask: How much of God's money have I the right to keep for my own use? It is not a matter of how much we should do if we were rich, but what we are doing with what we have. Many people seem to think that only those who are well-to-do ought to tithe, but the Bible requirement says nothing about how much one must have before he gives, but requires a proportionate amount of our means. All are to give a tenth. "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse . . ." (Mal. 3:10). I have told people who are not yet giving a tithe to start giving a certain per cent of their income at regular intervals, thus developing the habit, and gradually they would be giving their tithe and hardly missing it. The fourth principle of stewardship is a warning against the dangers of the love of money. Jesus knew the danger of dealing with money from a selfish standpoint, as He warned the disciples repeatedly about holding back God's share of their lives. Some one has said that one-seventh of the New Testament deals with money. I have not counted the verses to see. Whether or not that statement is true, we do know that Jesus was very emphatic in His teaching about money. The love of money feeds all forms of selfishness. Giving ought to express our love to God. Some people do not have much love, for out of their plenty they give God so little. Many who live in luxury give to God as they would tip a bellhop. God is not a bellhop, nor yet a beggar, but He is life's Sovereign who owns all that we see.

This Do in Remembrance

WHEN the disciples asked the Lord where they should prepare for Him to eat the Passover. He sent them to a householder with this message. "The Master saith. My time is at hand: I will keep the passover at thy house with my disciples. Now when the even was come, he sat down with the twelve" (Matt. 26:1, 2, 17-20). "And he said unto them. With desire I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer" (Luke 22:15). He knew that this was to be His last Passover with them; that Judas was ready to betray Him, that in the same night He should be taken with wicked hands and before the end of the day which had begun at sunset He should be slain. He was to offer up Himself as the true sacrifice for sin, as the ransom for the whole race of mankind, and provide His blood as the blood of the new covenant.

The disciples at the time could not fully comprehend what was involved in the crucifixion and death of their Master. It was to be to them all a time of great sorrow and distress, the outcome of which should bring a great blessing. There would be therefore a double reason for remembering that night—the sorrow and pain of parting in such a base and cruel manner by the betrayer's hand and the wicked conspiracy of the high priest and the council; and afterward the joy of knowing all that had been accomplished by the Lord's death and resurrection.

An event so great and far-reaching in its effects would call for memorialization in future days. Therefore, after the Passover supper had been concluded the Lord instituted a new commemoration, different from any the Jews had been commanded to observe.

JESUS THE BREAD OF LIFE

The emblems which the Lord utilized in the institution of this new commemoration were there on the table, remaining over from the just concluded Passover supper; but now to the unleavened bread and the wine He gave a new significance. Jesus took bread, and gave thanks, and broke it, and gave it to the disciples, saying, "Take, eat; this is my body." The disciples would understand that the Master gave them this as the first feature of the new memorial, which would be an annual observance or celebration to be held by all believers. Unleavened bread was to be taken as an emblem of His body.

Each believer was to receive a small portion, which he would eat, in token of the fact that he accepted Jesus as the bread of life. Previously Jesus had told them that He is the bread of life; "the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world" (John 6:32-35, 47-51). We celebrate annually this great fact that Jesus gave Himself on the cross for us, and our eating the bread is an open confession or acknowledgment that we accept His death as the offering on our behalf. By prayer and the devotion of our lives we indicate daily our faith in God, and in His dear Son as the ransom for all; but for the memorial service we gather together and unitedly carry on the ceremonial in the manner He directed as a testimonial of our love and gratitude: "this do in remembrance of me" (Luke 22:19).

Of this memorial bread the Lord did not eat; neither did He drink of the "cup" which He passed to the disciples.

THIS IS MY BLOOD

The wine He gave them as an emblem of His blood. In the new commemoration which He was then arranging, the disciples were to observe orderly procedure. The Lord took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave to the disciples, saying, "Drink ye all of it": or, "All ye drink of it": or, "Drink all ye of it." The meaning and reason are (Matt. 26:28)—"For this is my blood of the (new) covenant, which is shed for many for the remission of sins."

That is to say, in the commemoration the wine is to be taken as an emblem of His blood. To drink the wine at this solemn meeting for remembrance indicates that each one so doing accepts the blood of Christ shed on Calvary as the seal of the new covenant. The new covenant had been promised through the Prophet Jeremiah, but it could not come into force until the Lord Jesus had fulfilled His mission on earth and given His life as the sacrifice for sin. And this the Father accepted as bringing that new covenant into operation.

Consequently, those who desire to honor the Lord and commemorate all He has done on our behalf are, while drinking the memorial cup as it is passed to them, to have in mind while doing so a personal appreciation of the fact that Jesus shed His blood in order that we might receive the forgiveness of sins as referred to in the new covenant (Jer. 31:31-34; Heb. 8:8-12). And not only so, but also the other benefits mentioned—to have the true God as our God, and to have the writing of His law—His holy will—on our minds and hearts by the Holy Spirit (Heb. 9:14, 15; 10:10-18; 2 Cor. 3:3-11).

WORTHILY OR UNWORTHILY?

Going through the form is not enough, however. We who partake of the emblems should do so with faith in the Lord and in the significance of His death, and with love in our hearts toward Him for all He has done for us. The Apostle gives a warning that some may eat and drink "unworthily," and each of us should see to it that we do not come under that reproof. He explains the particular test of worthiness or unworthiness—"Wherefore whosoever shall eat this bread, and drink (Please turn to page 10)

Inherent Immortality

"Jesus Christ . . . brought . . . immortality to light."—1 Timothy 1:10.

MORTAL men are naturally intrigued by the thought of immortality. The orthodox Christian teaching ascribes immortality to the soul of man as the irrevocable gift of the Creator at the inception of the race, and thereby men have a "never-dying soul" which can only be saved from everlasting conscious suffering by the grace of God. The purpose of this article is to show that the New Testament Scriptures and the history of Christian doctrine indicate conclusively that this doctrine of the immortality of the soul is non-Christian in its origin, and that its incorporation into Christian thought has been responsible for many serious evils.

Luther Burbank said in February, 1926: "The idea that a good God would send men to a burning hell is utterly damnable to me. I don't want anything to do with such a God."

Dr. A. Barnes in his Notes says: "Time and again I have come up to this doctrine and tried to find some way to escape from it. In the distress and anguish of my soul I confess that I see no light whatever. Not one ray to disclose to me the reason why sin came into this world, why the earth is strewn with the dying and the dead, and why man must suffer to all eternity. It is dark, dark to my soul, and I cannot disguise it."

The writer recalls an experience of childhood when in the necessity of finding lodging for the night on a New England journey, his parents found a room, on the walls of which were certain pictures illustrative of the horrors and agonies of hell. After catching sight of these portrayals of unspeakable misery, his mother turned to his father and simply said: "Father, we can't stay here."

ORIGIN AND HISTORY

Herodotus, the earliest Greek historian (424-485 B. C.) writes of meeting the doctrine of the immortality of the soul for the first time in his world wanderings in Egypt. The "ka" or spirit of man was supposed to leave the body at death and after an undetermined period of absence, return, to again inhabit the body; hence, the body was prepared by the tomb, in order that recognition by the "ka" might be easy and accurate.

The Assyrians and Babylonians thought of the death state as one of pain and darkness, with certain ideas of purgatory, retribution, and transmigration.

For the Greeks the Odyssey of Homer, and for the Romans the Aeneid of Virgil, set forth in poetic fancy their respective conceptions of the immortality and after-life of the human soul.

In ancient Judaism sheol was the place of all the dead in a state of unconsciousness, from which both prophet and psalmist expected a resurrection by Messianic intervention.

The Jews of Jesus' day had come under corrupting influences during their Babylonian captivity, according to their own worthy historian, Josephus, so that at least one sect, the Sadducees, had given over entirely the hope of the resurrection. The Pharisees, however, believed themselves guardians of the truths of Israel, and Martha told Jesus that she believed her brother Lazarus would rise again at the resurrection of the last day. And Paul reminded Agrippa that the "twelve tribes" hoped to come into fruition of the promises which God had made, and therefore it should not be "thought a thing incredible . . . that God should raise the dead" (Acts 26:8).

IN CHRISTIAN THOUGHT

Jesus Christ alone died and rose again, and He it was who brought life and immortality to light through the gospel. The attribute of immortality is ascribed to Deity alone (1 Tim. 6:16), but it is held out to mortal men as a proffered gift of God to be conferred at the return of Christ, upon those who have sought it by faith and obedience (Rom. 2:7). This view, known as conditional immortality, makes glorious harmony of the New Testament doctrines concerning death and afterward. The offer of eternal life through faith in Christ becomes a pledge upon the believer's acceptance, and the assurance is, "I will raise him up at the last day" (John 6:39, 40, 44, 54). The apostles preached the gospel of the kingdom when the resurrected and immortalized saints should dwell upon the earth made new and free from sin and mortality (2 Peter 3).

But Christianity came under the influence of Greek philosophy and early embraced the Platonic dogma that all souls of men are eternal. The great Roman orator Cicero meditated upon Plato's teachings concerning the immortality of the soul, with the result that while reading he was convinced, but when he put the book away, all conviction ceased. Not so was it with certain of the early Christians. For by the year 200 A. D., a Christian by the name of Athenagoras had begun to teach the doctrine of immortality. Justin Martyr (100-165 A. D.), however, had warned his fellow Christians in these words: "If you meet some who say that there is no resurrection of the dead, but that at death their souls are received up into heaven, do not regard them as Christians."

Nevertheless, this extraneous doctrine of heathen origin came into Christian thought, and soon became the orthodox teaching concerning eternity and the souls of men, at length finding its most classic expression in Dante's Divine Comedy, which perhaps, more than any single factor, crystallized the Roman Catholic dogmas of heaven, hell, and purgatory. The Protestant reformation did reject the dogma of purgatory, but kept the doctrinal inheritance of heaven and hell.

SCRIPTURAL TEACHING REGARDING DEATH

If immortality is a present possession of man and the experience of death is only a transition into a more preferable phase of life, then it would appear that death is a friend rather than an enemy; that smiles should supplant tears; that suicides should be encouraged; and that Spiritism should be the rightful and happy resort of those unhappy victims of life who are left behind.

A leading evangelist said in our hearing one day: "I shall know more in one minute after I am dead than I knew in all my life of seventy years."

Dr. Talmadge once likened his experience of crossing a Connecticut stream by the kindness of a boatman to the event of death when he would approach the river, call to the boatman, who would come to get him, with his departed friends as oarsmen.

Representative S. A. Kendall of Pennsylvania committed suicide on January 9, 1933, leaving this note to his children: "My dear children, I cannot stand this loneliness any longer, and am going to join your dear mother in heaven."

Mrs. Houdini, after years of attempted contact with her famous husband, who, during life, offered to duplicate and expose any phenomena of the Spiritists, made this public statement: "I have decided that the soul is a function of the body and perishes with it at death."

The Bible everywhere indicates that death is the cessation of life processes, that it is an enemy to life: "the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death" (1 Cor. 15:26). Jesus never intimated that death was a friend, but rather a declared enemy, from whose grasp He would free all men by His power to raise them from the dead (John 5:28, 29). Ask Dr. Mattson of Tacoma, Washington, whose little son was kidnaped and brutally murdered, if death is a friend; ask Mrs. Martin Johnson, whose famous husband suffered death as a result of an airplane crash near Los Angeles; or ask the million widows of Spain if death is a friend, and what would the answer be?

THE SECOND ADVENT

"That blessed hope" (Titus 2:13) of the return of Jesus Christ in person to this earth to raise the dead and to establish His kingdom under the whole heaven, has glowed with warmth or faded into obscurity in direct ratio to the attitude of Christians toward death. Augustine's City of God substituted death and heaven for the blessed hope, and for years and centuries the grand central theme of the New Testament was lost to the church. Now that the hope has come back into the teaching of the fundamentalists, it has brought some awkward and cumbersome problems of interpretation because of this extraneous doctrine of natural immortality. The writer once asked an outstanding Bible teacher, the head of a great fundamentalist Christian college, concerning the state of the saved dead. He went farther than most teachers in admitting that there would be no rewards nor punishments until after the resurrection and judgment.

Martin Luther was inclined to agree with the Scriptures when he wrote: "Another proof the dead are insensible. Solomon thinks that the dead are altogether asleep and think of nothing. They lie, not reckoning days or years, but when awakened will seem to themselves to have slept scarcely a moment." The return of Christ was a cardinal doctrine in early Christianity, and is, we believe, foundational to all future hope and life (1 Thess. 4:13-18).

THE RESURRECTION A STUMBLINGBLOCK

The doctrine of the resurrection of the dead holds a place of centrality in the faith and teachings of the first apostles. In Paul's classic on the subject (1 Cor. 15), he goes so far as to state that if there be no resurrection of the dead, then those who have fallen asleep in Christ have perished (15:18).

James Hastings observes that "the resurrection has become a stumblingblock because we have exaggerated death beyond all reason and Scripture."

Adam Clarke admits that "there is no doctrine on which so much stress is laid and which in our present system of preaching is treated with more neglect."

The New International Encyclopedia states that "through the influence of Greek philosophy the resurrection has lost its practical significance."

Little wonder then that William Tyndale asked this pertinent question of his persecutors: "If they (the dead) are in heaven, what need is there for a resurrection?"

Another angle of evil is evidenced by the godless Russian Government in causing the bodies of two men, the one a Christian, the other an atheist, to be disinterred after twelve years, to prove to the Russian people that dead men are all alike and insensible. These two bodies are on exhibition in one of the Government museums for the advancement of atheism.

THE DOCTRINE OF THE JUDGMENT

If, according to current orthodox Christian teaching, death is the gateway to the bliss of heaven or the unspeakable sufferings of hell, then it becomes necessary that a continuing assize be going on with the "Judge of all the earth" sitting on a judgment seat rather than upon a mediatorial throne, where the Scriptures state He is interceding for mankind (Heb. 4:16). The New Testament calls for a "day" of judgment (Acts 17:31), a time for the dead to be judged (Rev. 11:18), which time Paul indicates will be at "his appearing and kingdom" (2 Tim. 4:1). Thoughts of his reward beguiled the great Apostle, but he expected his reward only when all who love His appearing should obtain theirs (2 Tim. 4:8). Previews of judgment scenes in the Scriptures indicate the consideration of men en masse rather than one by one (Matt. 25; Rev. 20). But the doctrine of natural immortality necessitates immediate action and assignment by the eternal Judge, thus "adding to or taking from" the words of the book.

THE DOGMA OF ETERNAL TORMENT

The modernist branch of the church has long since discarded the terrifying concepts of a present and eternal hell as the everlasting abode of the finally impenitent. But the fundamentalists are compelled to find such concepts unavoidable and inescapable in their system of interpretation. Membership in certain of their churches and in the World Fundamentalist Association is impossible without a written ascription to the doctrine of everlasting conscious punishment for the wicked.

Such noted scholars as Rotherham, Moffatt, and Weymouth, assure us that no such concepts are indicated or supported by the original Greek texts.

Dr. J. Agar Beet says: "That all souls are immortal and that they think and feel forever, is not taught in the New Testament. We have seen that the doctrine of the immortality of the soul so prominent in the teachings of Plato has no place in the teachings of Christ and His apostles."

The hell fire (gehenna) spoken of by Jesus is to be a fire that burns up, consumes, not one that burns out, or burns on forever; and it appears self-evident that when the fuel has been consumed, the fire will go out.

THE DOCTRINES OF UNIVERSALISM

Rebelling against the doctrine of eternal torment, many have taken refuge and comfort in happier solutions of the problem of divine retribution in varying conceptions of universal salvation; when, according to the theory, all men (some even including Satan himself), at length prepared by purgatorial fires and retributive experiences, shall come into willing submission and perfect harmony with the infinite and all-loving heavenly Father. However desirable and beautiful such a doctrine may appear to be, its foundations may well be very carefully considered lest they rest upon the sand, and at length the storm may topple the superstructure to destruction, carrying with it the many who may have trusted in its shelter for their eternal security.

A friendly Universalist minister once engaged the writer's father in conversation on this subject with this simple and powerful denouement. Father suggested: "I have two chances to your one, the best you can fix it." "How is that?" came the rejoinder. "Well, if my platform lets me through, yours will catch me, will it not?" "Why yes, of course," replied the minister. "But if yours lets you through, what will catch you?" said my father.

CONCLUSION

The doctrine of natural or inherent immortality seems then to confuse the great harmonies of the New Testament teachings, whereas the simple doctrine of conditional immortality allows for perfect concord of the music of the gospel.

The Egyptian may have preserved the body as essential to a future life, the Greeks may have burned their bodies as irrelevant and immaterial to a future existence, the Hebrews may have laid their dead away until the day should break and the shadows should flee away, but the Christian, whether awake or asleep, awaits the great and necessary change from mortality to immortality, when death shall be swallowed up of life (1 Cor. 15:54), and when there shall be "no more death" (Rev. 21:4). "Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. 15:57).—Lee E. Baker in The Messiah's Advocate.

The Poison of Prejudice

ONE of the least happy traits in human nature is prejudice. The word "prejudice" means literally "judgment before," and it stands for an idea or judgment or feeling that exists before we have examined all the facts. A prejudice has been defined as "a vagrant opinion without visible means of support." It has been characterized as "something we can be very certain about without having paid any particular attention to it."

All of us have our prejudices. Many of us are chuck full of them. Born of ignorance and a closed mind, they are the standing army and navy by which we maintain our pride.

Few of us are devoid of personal prejudices. Most of them are due to lack of understanding—nothing else. Senator William B. McKinley used to say, "Get acquainted with folk—you might like them."

Bishop Daniel Goodsell used to tell about a janitor in one of his early churches. He said the fellow was unconscionably slow, and nothing that could be said would speed him up. In his heart the Bishop condemned the man as being downright lazy. But in later years he discovered that all through life the poor fellow had been afflicted with a disease which kept him from moving fast. That discovery made, the Bishop blamed himself for judging hastily.

Then, there is racial prejudice, which is rife today. It is both cruel and wicked. It cannot be reconciled with the religion of Jesus. God has no pets among the races.

Nor can it be reconciled with anthropology. In fundamentals all races are akin, and the differences between them are as nothing compared to their likenesses. Prof. Max Mueller once said a striking thing: "The carnal mind and the spiritual mind are seen to act in this way: the carnal mind always detects differences, while the spiritual mind notes similarities."

There are no inferior peoples, there are only undeveloped peoples. There is not a reputable anthropologist in the world who would support the proposition that certain races are inherently inferior to the rest.

It is time we made an end to this silly twaddle about the Nordics. That is a sort of a racial Calvinism from which we ought to pray, "Good Lord, deliver us!" The so-called Nordics owe many of their advantages to the shifting of the lanes of traffic from the Mediterranean to the Atlantic basin. What made them was not so much their Anglo-Saxon blood as the blood of the Son of God. The gospel penetrated those northern fastnesses and subdued the savage people who were their progenitors.

We believe in cultural pluralism. Each race has some contribution to make to the enrichment of world civilization. As has been said, race prejudice is judging any variety of the human species on the basis, not of facts, but of feelings. It is not instinctive. We get it by social contagion.

Religious prejudices are, of course, the most foolish of all. All of us are quite likely to be prejudiced in favor of our own form of religion. Like Parson Thwaekum in Tom Jones' School Days we are tempted to say, "When I mention religion I mean the Christian religion, and not only the Christian religion but the Protestant religion, and not only the Protestant religion but the Church of England."

Admittedly, religious wars have been the bloodiest wars of human history. More blood has been shed in the name of religion than for any other cause whatsoever. How strange that religion which should bind men together has so often been a divisive force.

The grace of God is not distributed denominationally. The true apostolic succession is in the lives of the saints. No church has a monopoly of the saints. They flower equally in all Christian bodies. "He that sitteth in the heavens laughs" at the follies of men who think to hold God in their custody and to distribute Him to whomsoever they will. These religious differences remind me of the saying of Dean Swift that "some people have just enough religion to make them hate one another, not enough to make them love one another."

Prejudice is poison. Instead of airing our prejudices we had better examine them carefully. A man will change his well-founded ideas sooner than his prejudices. The average person would prefer to have his appendix cut out rather than lose his precious prejudices.

The remedy for all this is to let in the light. Oliver Wendell Holmes said that bigotry is like the pupil of the eye, the more light you pour into it, the more it contracts. When we think resolutely precious prejudices slip away. They cannot stand the sunlight of fearless investigation.

Richard Porson once said to a lady who annoyed him by stubbornly holding her point in argument, "You may, if you please, retain your opinion, but you cannot maintain it." So, when we find it impossible to dislodge prejudices, we may say to their possessors, "You may retain your prejudices, but you cannot maintain them."—Herbert E. Keck in The Christian Advocate; selected by Mrs. E. C. Olmstead.

this cup of the Lord, unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord. But let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup. For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation (or, condemnation, an unfavorable judgment) to himself, not discerning the Lord's body."

The test of worthiness is to discern the Lord's body; that is, to recognize that the commemoration is to show forth or proclaim the Lord Jesus as having given His body on the cross, the very body He possessed in life and vigor when He instituted the ceremonial, saying, "Take, eat: this is my body."

At the present time a considerable number of Christians hold that the "body" to be discerned is the church, which is sometimes called His body (Eph. 1:22, 23; 5:30, 32). Jews and Gentiles, once two distinct bodies of people, are "one body" when they become believers in Jesus. In 1 Corinthians 12 the different members of a human body (including the head) are used to illustrate the diversities among Christian believers: "But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him."

In ordinary speech we say a body of soldiers, a body of worshipers, etc., referring to groups of persons engaged in similar pursuits or under similar rules. The church as a body is a unit in faith, doctrine, service, etc., subject to the Lord Jesus, who is the Captain of our salvation, our Lord, Master, Ruler. But surely no one would seriously say that when Jesus said to the disciples, when giving them the bread, "this is my body"—surely no one could think for a moment that He meant "this is My church." No; He meant his own body of flesh which would shortly be crucified, the blood of which body would flow when the soldier pierced His side (Heb. 10:10-14). The bread and wine of the memorial supper are emblems of His perfect body and shed blood which were given as a sacrifice for our sins and as the seal of the new covenant.

Let a man examine himself, says the Apostle; and, when partaking of the bread and wine of the Lord's Supper, let him recognize that Jesus Christ alone is there represented. Let every one of us acknowledge that of himself he is a sinner under condemnation, and that in order to be saved we—each individually—must eat, or appropriate to ourselves, the Lord Jesus Christ as the Life-Giver, the Savior from sin.

We must also drink, in order to live. We drink the Lord's blood when we accept the fact that He died for us, when we recognize in addition that the new covenant was brought into operation for our benefit when the Lord Jesus died and the Father accepted His blood as the seal of that new covenant.

Never in the remotest sense can it truthfully be said that the "body" to be discerned when we partake of the Lord's Supper is the church, which was not even in existence when Jesus spoke the words. The Lord did not give the bread to the disciples to eat as a memorial of themselves. The memorial is not to show forth or proclaim what we are or have done, but to proclaim the Lord Jesus' death "till he come"—until He receives us to Himself, that where He is there we may be also.—Condensed from The New Covenant Advocate.

SHALL WE TITHE IN HARD TIMES?

Tithing is the Bible standard of giving to the Lord's work. Some object that tithing is not specified in the New Testament. This is true, but it was under the old law, and certainly nothing less is expected under the bounties of grace. If ceremonial salvation merited a tenth part of man's substance, surely the full salvation of the New Testament deserves man's best. The early church gave all to God's work. Are we to excuse ourselves from a mere tithe? The gospel spread through their sacrifice, and it does so today when God's people are willing to do their duty. The Seventh Day Adventists, who are tithers, send more to foreign missions alone than our entire budget calls for. The tithe is our debt to God, and all honest people want to pay their debts. This particular debt is easily paid if done promptly and regularly.

The tithe is our recognition of our copartnership with God. When He is our partner, cheating and crooked business tactics are forsaken. Waste is reduced to a minimum. American Christians waste more than they give to the church. The money wasted by the average American home would support some poor orphan on the mission fields or would go a long way to support some missionary. The spiritual poverty of the church today is a counterpart of the financial stinginess prevalent in the church. There can be no hope of a change for the church until the pocketbook is healed of the lockjaw.

The objections to tithing are trivial. A little prayer about our financial condition usually wipes them out. Some one has said that giving is really the acid test of the true Christian. A man might give and yet not be a Christian, but a man who is a Christian certainly ought to give to God's work. Tithing warrants the emphasis placed on it. One statistician has compiled figures which show that for every 5 millions that Americans put into missionary endeavors there are 100 millions spent for chewing gum, 500 millions spent on jewelry, 750 millions thrown into cosmetics, and 3,600 millions spent for tobacco. Then tithing deserves the attraction of all Christians. Besides the effect tithing would have on the spread of the gospel, it has spiritual and material benefits for the donor. The story is told of a firm in Toronto whose books were being audited. The auditors noted that a tenth of the income was spent in the behalf of charity. They immediately passed on the books with no further observation. Tithing gives the church more self-respect. Many people support the church like a servant or lackey, but the church is their spiritual mother. The church is not a charitable institution but is God's corporation for the spreading of the most wonderful message the world has ever heard. We are its directors, copartners with God. Are we going to dissolve that partnership just because our means get low in a "hard time"?

Tithing in "hard times" has the effect of twice warming the giver. It is like cutting wood for our own fire. Cutting the wood warms us up and the wood in the fireplace or stove warms us later. Tithing teaches us better management of our means, thrift, and honesty. It gives us the satisfaction of coming nearer to Christ's ideal as individuals and as a church. Then shall we give the tenth in hard times? By all means. The church needs it more than ever, for its expenses run on the same and most people cut off their support of the church first when hard times hit them. The promise of God accompanies a man when he does his duty through hard times as in better times. Habakkuk set up the idea of serving the Lord even though "the fig tree shall not bloom, neither shall the fruit be in the vine" (Hab. 3:17). The promise is given to all who tithe, no matter how large or small the income. God requires no more of us than we are able to do. If we are afraid we cannot tithe, then let us covenant with God: "Lord, if you provide us with the means, we still shall give you the tenth." God never fails and His promises in Malachi are still for us (Mal. 3:8-12).

What about paying our debts first? This is a serious matter, but it can be solved. Work out a budget; give God a tenth and pay others out of the balance. It will surprise anyone who tries it how effectively this plan can be worked out for God. I feel that we must meet our obligations with our fellow men; of course we must be careful to be reasonable in financial matters. It is not consistent with good ethics for a man to give a fourth or some large portion of his income to the church and allow his debts to accumulate. Pay God His tithe, and when debts are lifted then give more if so inclined.

It is surprising how much can be done with a little advance planning, a little method in buying, and so on. One little trick that most of us can use to save a little toward our tithe is to put off buying for a few days something that we could buy now and want to buy very badly. Within a few days that desire may weaken and what we would have spent can be used to God's greater glory. Christians of all people ought to buy for use, and not for appearance nor to keep up with the Joneses. Some families could give more to the church if they bought more wholesome food and fewer needless knick-knacks. Our small church raised fifty dollars within one month in that manner and yet starved no one. Conserve in every way you think of and give a portion of the saved money to the tithe fund.

Then can we tithe in hard times? Yes, I believe that we can by a little management, care, effort, and occasional self-denial. "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse . . . and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." Shall we prove God with our tithe? Or shall we be satisfied to starve God's cause and rob God and thus pinch our own souls? Shall we give of our means during hard seasons or only when prosperity smiles on us?—Edgar Williams in The Gospel Trumpet.

The doctrine of the immortality of the soul finds no support in the Bible. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die (Ezek. 18:4) is a clear and positive declaration. There can be no mistake about it—souls can and do die!

Religious Free Trade

In these days it is very popular for people of differing religions to get together and "share" with each other. Some go so far as to share with any religion that comes along—Hindu, Rosierucian, Buddhist, Mohammedan, and everything else. The bridge across the bottomless chasm of death changes its spans and pillars as a chameleon changes its color. It is all in the name of tolerance, world brotherhood. It isn't faithful. It isn't loyal. It's cowardly.

The Christian's character ought to be what the Bible would make it, strong, vigorous, fearless, uncompromising. Be hot or be cold. If Jehovah be God, serve Him. If Baal be God, serve him. We cannot serve both.

Sir Monier Monier-Williams, Professor of Sanskrit, Oxford, once said: "Dare to be downright with all the uncompromising courage of your own Bible, while with it your watchwords are love, joy, peace, and reconciliation. Be fair, be charitable, be Christlike, but let there be no mistake. Let it be made absolutely clear that Christianity cannot, must not, be watered down to suit the palate of either Hindu, Parsee, Confucianist, Buddhist, or Mohammedan, and that whosoever wishes to pass from the false religion to the true can never hope to do so by the rickety planks of compromise, or by the help of faltering hands held out by half-hearted Christians."

Loyalty

The Christian world is divided into three general groups: modernists, fundamentalists, and conditionalists. We bear the torch of conditionalism. The modernists deny the inspiration of the Bible and put a blind trust in the gradual evolution of the human race out of the primal type of life into the higher and possibly the immortal. They are frankly ignorant of what is to be after death.

The fundamentalists acclaim the inspiration of the Bible, but are laden down with the tradition of the natural immortality of the soul. This has led to other errors such as their dogma of endless life in endless suffering for the unbelievers. They thus unwittingly blacken the loving character of Him they attempt to honor.

The conditionalists uphold the inspiration of the Bible, and have searched the Scriptures to discover that God promises life after death only upon condition of faith and obedience. This has led them to stress as the Bible has stressed the doctrines of the second coming of Christ, the resurrection of the dead, and the kingdom of God on earth. With these doctrines so filled with the love of God they so whole-heartedly have honored God, and so earnestly have tried to follow His commandments. They can find in Him no fault at all. Their attention is centered upon "the promise of life which is in Christ Jesus" (2 Tim. 1:1), "who brought . . . immortality to light through the gospel."

We bear the torch of conditionalism. There can be no compromise. Let us give straightforward answers to questions on what we believe. Do not use ambiguous language. Say what you mean in as clear, concise a form as you know how to say it. People are not offended by straightforward answers. Trying to win an argument offends, but trying to help the other fellow to a more satisfying understanding of eternal truths will draw his respect and love. There is a deep heart-hunger in people for more understanding of the way of life eternal. Awaken this hunger and feed it with the "sincere milk of the word." Be loyal to your convictions.

What are the things that destroy the feeling of reverence in church?

"Gum-chewing, loud chatter, gossiping in church entrances, informality in services, lack of control of small children, lack of suitable incidental music, poor taste in interior or exterior decoration, use of the church for purely social activities (particularly of the church auditorium), poor janitor service (nobody in the world could be reverent when he's shivering)—these control a feeling of irreverence in any church. Naturally, there are dozens of other causes, most of them having to do with particular localities."

Mother and Father

Some of you remember back when you were four years old, or three, or two. What little incident do you recall? I vividly remember sitting out under a tree cracking walnuts. Suddenly through the balmy air sounded the haunting whistle of the fast express train. My whole outlook on life at that moment comes back to me even yet. We lived in a little cottage, but it was a palace to me. In it was food when I was hungry, and a bed when I was sleepy. There were my brothers for play, and a big barking dog to be afraid of. There were bright red toys at Christmas, the rag doll my mother made, a spanking on my birthday. But out of it all comes back the love of my mother and father. They took care of me, guided me, and gave me that companionship that money cannot buy, so dear to the yearning heart of a child: They played with me.

Let us honor our mothers and fathers on their special days by returning some of that love they stored up in our hearts so long ago. God has honored them by claiming for Himself the attributes of a loving parent.

PREPARED BY GRACE M. MARSH

THE FRIEND OF GOD

THE story today is about a man whose name was Abram. If you learn to spell the name it will be much easier to remember it. Abram and his brother and his father lived in tents in a place called Ur. (Now that is an easy name to remember. Isn't it?)

In those days the father and his sons with their wives and children, as well as their servants, were most likely to live in tents very close together. The whole family listened to the father's counsel and advice. If trouble arose with a neighboring family the father led his sons and servants in a battle to protect his home. They had flocks of sheep, herds of cattle, and probably some camels to ride upon.

It was this sort of home that Abram had. Their tents were woven from wool from their own sheep, and probably covered with animal skins to keep them dry. Terah, his father, was always obeyed. Abram's younger brother died, leaving a son called Lot who was brought up by Abraham and Terah.

After this Terah took Abram and Lot and Abram's wife and started on a long journey. The tents were folded and carried along. The servants cared for the flocks and herds on the way. When they came to good pasture they would all stay there until the grass was gone. Then they would move on to a better place.

We do not know how long they spent this way, but they had gotten about six hundred miles from their old home in Ur when Terah died. This left Abram the head of the family. Here they lived until Abram was seventy-five years old.

You must remember one very important thing about this man. He was called "the Friend of God," and he was just that. That is not said about his father, nor his grandfather, nor his great-grandfather. The people whom he knew around his old home in Ur worshiped idols made from gold and silver. But Abram was wiser than they.

He knew that idols made from gold or silver could not make the rain to fall, nor the grass to grow. Such idols could not give life to the tiny lambs or the babies. He knew that the idols were made from things that God had already created for us. Such idols have no more power to do anything than your toys have.

He watched the sun and moon and stars. He watched the grass and trees growing. He saw the tiny lambs grow into large sheep. He saw the rain fall, and the rivers flow on their way to the sea. And he knew that there must be just one God somewhere who was great enough to watch over all these things. And he wished he might talk with such a God. There were so many things he would like to know.

Then one day his wish came true. God really spoke to Abram and told him just what he was to do. If God really spoke to you, and you knew it was truly God speaking, what do you think you would do?

God said to Abram, "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will shew thee: and I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee."

Abram was so pleased that God had spoken to him that he did at once what God told him. Hundreds of years later the Apostle Paul said, "Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness." Of course if Abram was the Friend of God, he would believe what God said. Wouldn't he?

Again the tents were folded. The servants hid the silver and gold inside the folds of the tent. The flocks and herds were driven ahead of them as Abraham and his wife and Lot started southward. There was a larger company than when they came to Haran. They traveled slowly.

When they came to the land of Canaan God spoke to Abram again. He said, "This is the land your children's children will have." And to show his gratitude Abram built an altar there. Later when he had moved again he built another altar.

A famine caused him to move down into Egypt for awhile, but soon he came back to Beth-el where he had built the second altar.

Abram was growing very rich. His herds and flocks grew larger and larger, so he had more and more servants to watch them. Lot had been married and he, too, was growing rich. Sometimes their servants quarreled. So Lot took his family and servants and flocks and moved away toward the Jordan River to make his home.

After Lot had gone, God talked with Abram again. He said, "All the land that you can see in all directions is to be yours. Your family shall become such a great nation that no one can count the people in it. And this land is to be theirs. Arise! Go through the land and see it. For I will give it to you."

So Abram started moving again and everywhere he stopped to dwell he built an altar because he was God's Friend.

WHAT'S THE ANSWER?

What two men were given a new name that reminds one of a summer rainstorm? Watch next week's paper for the answer. Don't forget! It'll be there!

MINNESOTA MEETINGS

The following special meetings are scheduled for the State of Minnesota:

State Berean Society convention at St. Cloud April 17 and 18.

State Conference at Eden Valley June 9-13. Evangelistic services at Eden Valley June 27 to July 18 with Bro. S. J. Lindsay as the evangelist.

WE MUST HAVE HELP

If every member of the Church of God should tithe, no appeals ever would have to be made for funds to carry on the ministry of the Word. However, very few members in proportion to the total membership do tithe; and, consequently, it is necessary for those responsible for continuing the work of the church to appeal frequently for money.

The National Bible Institution is now in need of a minimum of $500 to meet tax and paper bills which come to this figure. None of these bills can be postponed if The Restitution Herald, the Truth Seekers' Sunday School Quarterly, and some other phases of the institutional activity are to be continued. The entire sum will be payable on or about June 1.

We ask particularly that you read the article on page 5 of this issue, "Shall We Tithe in Hard Times?" (although times for many of us now are much easier financially than they were three years ago), and determine how much you can devote AT ONCE to the cause of evangelism through this paper and our other publications.

Arlen Marsh, Asst. Treas.

GENERAL EDUCATION AND DOCTRINAL KNOWLEDGE

The attention of our readers is especially invited to two articles which appear in this issue having to do with the same question, that of the importance of definite biblical teaching. Bro. Richard LeCrone, a graduate of our former Bible Training Class, speaks from experience. Fully appreciating the value of a broad general education, he is assured that the more important knowledge for the Church of God preacher to acquire has to do with the teaching of the Bible. Such knowledge, he believes, cannot be secured successfully in other than a class directed by instructors who are thoroughly familiar with the doctrines commonly held among us. Read Bro. LeCrone's article carefully. It begins on page 3.

Also on the front page of this issue is an article by the editor, in which the fact is pointed out that the foundation upon which the Church of God rests is doctrine, definite teaching regarding the essential elements of saving truth. Compare the two articles and meditate carefully on the conclusions drawn as you plan the recommendations you wish to make to the forthcoming General Conference.

SPECIAL MEETINGS AT ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI

The congregation at St. Louis, Mo., is planning to begin a series of special services on Tuesday evening, April 20, under the leadership of G. E. Marsh, editor of The Restitution Herald. It is expected that the meetings will continue for two weeks or more.

According to present suggestions, Bro. Marsh will devote his attention, under the general subject, "Preparing to Meet Our Returning Lord," to three major topics of timely interest: "Taking Out a People for His Name," "Building Up a People in His Likeness," and "Indications That His Coming is Very Near."

A cordial invitation is extended to brethren within reach of St. Louis to attend these meetings and to bring their friends.

TO THE BROTHERHOOD

I plan to leave home on Thursday, April 29, D. V., for Ripley, Ill., to hold a meeting from May 1-23. I shall be glad to hold several more meetings while I am in the North if desired.

There never was a time when the Church of God should be more active than today. Her opportunity is NOW, not later, to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ. If the preaching of the gospel was necessary in the days of the apostles for the conversion of men and women, it is as necessary NOW. I am willing to preach that gospel without adding to it or taking away its meaning. Will you support these efforts? Can I help you in the Master's work? If so, write me at once, and I will do so at the close of the Ripley meeting.

T. A. Drinkard,
Handley, Texas, Box 344.

A writer in the Millennial Harbinger, under date of February 18, 1863, in the midst of financial distress caused by the Civil War which was then at its height, said: "With 125 presses, the Treasury Department is now just able to print enough greenbacks in two thirds of a day to pay the expenses of the Government for one day." Inflation and depression are not new.

HELPS FOR THE SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHER

The attention of Sunday school teachers, superintendents, and scholars is directed to the facts presented by Dr. R. R. Spencer, senior surgeon in the United States Health Service, which appear in this week's "Abreast of the Times."

This authoritative statement will provide a strong and timely argument against the use of alcohol in "The Scientific Approach to the Liquor Problem," which is the Sunday school topic for April 18.

GOLDEN RULE CHURCH OF GOD Cleveland, Ohio

A full attendance at both Sunday school and church helped make the Easter morning services inspiring to all. Four new members were received through baptism: Fred Tavernier, 13305 Eaglesmere Ave.; Miss Violet Berryhill and Mrs. Alma Skelley, 824 E. 149th St.; and Mrs. Laura Parish, 13603 Deise Ave.

A happy Easter surprise was the visit of Mr. and Mrs. Roscoe Dunbar and son, Delbert, of Delta, Ohio, and their daughter and her husband, Mr. and Mrs. William E. Frye, and baby daughter, of Port Clinton, Ohio. This was their first visit to our church, which they helped to build almost nine years ago.

Carol Patrick was married March 27. (No further information is now available. Mr. Patrick is a son of James A. Patrick of Ashland, Ohio.—Ed.)

Our basement improvement is almost completed. The small room for our beginners and primary classes now has folding doors in place of green curtains. All of the basement has been covered with a sheetrock ceiling, and the whole interior painted ivory, with the lower section of the walls, below the windows, a chestnut brown. We also have two new cold air returns installed, which should help in the heating. Within the past year, the entire building has been redecorated.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Bro. A. H. Zilmer was with the Pomona church on Friday evening, March 26 (commonly known as Good Friday). Many people were present to enjoy his words of wisdom and inspiration. He spoke at length on the subject, "Keys to the Kingdom." His illustrations, often quite humorous, added to the effectiveness of his sermon. Bro. Duncan Macleod sang that ever-popular song "Holy City."

On Sunday evening (Easter) the Pomona church presented a musical program for the delight of the audience. Bro. Duncan Macleod opened the service with "Gloria in Excelsis" (Bach) followed by congregational singing. Among the numbers of the evening were the singing of "The Holy City" by Sr. Charlotte Rahn, who has recently gained quite a bit of local fame by winning an amateur contest, representing Pomona Junior College in another contest, and being selected as leading lady in the Junior College Opera, "Martha." A quartette composed of Sr. Charlotte Rahn and her friend, Miss Lola Schumann, and Bros. Edwards and Eagleston sang "Christ Arose." Sr. Leta Macleod presented a pageant around the cross with her Sunday school class. Duncan sang Handel's "I Know That My Redeemer Liveth." As a conclusion to the evening the president of the conference presented ministerial certificates to the recognized ministers of the California Conference who were present. Bro. John Eagleston, who has recently placed his membership in the Pomona church, and has been thrilling the audiences here and in Los Angeles with his discourses, was the first to be presented with his certificate. He expects to go north to Oregon, Washington, and various parts of Western Canada, and will meet with the brethren in those districts to whom He is most heartily commended by the board and membership of the California Conference of the Churches of God. Bro. J. E. Adamson and Sr. Emma C. Railsback were present to receive their credentials in person. Bro. Adamson turned the tables on the president of the conference by presenting him with his credential. The list of recognized ministers of the California Conference thus stands: Bros. J. E. Adamson, John Eagleston, Edwin E. Groat of Hanford, George P. Lichty and Norman Macleod of Pomona, S. G. Elton of Ventura, and W. A. Reid of Riverside; and Sr. E. C. Railsback of Los Angeles.

The next California Conference session is being planned to coincide with the dedication of the Los Angeles church, which will probably be about the middle of May.

Norman John Macleod, President, California Conference of the Churches of God.

REAL SACRIFICE

A beloved brother who has done much in many ways to spread the truth wrote us the other day regretting his inability to contribute more to the support of the general work. Expressing his determination to again become a member of the Dollar-a-Month Club, he says, "I am only getting $14 weekly, have a wife to support, carfare, taxes, and something on the principal on the house to meet." He says nothing here of the fact that he is just out of a sickbed and a man well advanced in years whose health has not been good for a long time—but he incloses a dollar bill as a contribution and 25 cents for a book which we know he plans to give away! And then he says, speaking of a contribution made by one of our young people, "It makes me feel ashamed—I must make another effort to be on the Dollar-a-Month fund!"

It is the rest of us, my faithful friend, who should be "ashamed"!

FROM OLD LOUISIANA

The writer has accepted a call to work with both the Blood River and Happy Woods Churches of God, at least until General Conference time. This is the first time any attempt has been made to maintain a regular pastor here, and we sincerely trust that the new undertaking will bear much fruit.

We have been here three weeks at this writing and feel highly gratified with the interest and attendance at all services. Especially has the attendance of young people been encouraging.

It was our pleasure this past week to baptize Mrs. Melvin Richardson into the saving name of Jesus. Mrs. Richardson is a young married lady and was brought up in the Catholic faith. She has been studying and listening to Church of God teachings the past three years, and it was only after seriously considering the step she was about to take that she requested baptism. She may be addressed at Route 1, Hammond, La.

The work here bears abundant testimony to the faithful preaching in past years of some of our most able ministers, and during their absence the work was carried forward very faithfully by the local leaders. Truly, we are laboring where others have sown, and we pray that we may prove worthy of the great work before us and that we may be laboring in the Master's vineyard until He comes.

Harry Goeckler, Pastor.

Bro. R. H. Judd, Toronto, Canada, recently sent us copies of two patriotic poems of his which have been published widely in the Dominion. Both poems possess undoubted merit, being lofty in tone and Christian in spirit. A disciple of Christ is loyal to the government that gives him protection and appreciative of the benefits it affords (Rom. 13:1-7).

BURR OAK, INDIANA

Easter Sunday services brought us great joy. The cantata given by the choir, "In Joseph's Garden," is a beautiful story of the gardener's viewpoint.

Sr. Evelyn Woods, wife of Bro. Samuel Woods of Knox, Ind., was baptized into the Lord Jesus Sunday, April 4, in Lake Maxinkuckee. After the baptism we assembled again at the church and she and her husband took fellowship with us, followed by observing the Lord's Supper. We introduce to the household of faith this sister who began the new life. Will you pray for her?

Tuesday evening, the 6th, we held our quarterly meeting, with devotions by Elder Ferris Zechiel followed by a splendid program with readings and song. After hearing the reports of the church departments we assembled in the basement (note our new basement) for lunch, the first meeting of the church in this fine new room. The work is nearly finished; also, we only need at this writing $145 to pay off the debt. As we gaze upon the walls, ceiling, and other work, it calls to remembrance the hard work of our people here to finance this project. The Morning Star Class, Ladies' Society, Gospel Seekers, Sr. Lamunion's Juniors, and Sr. Zechiel's little tots, as well as the gifts of the older members and friends, all remarkably lifted this heavy load over the hill. My, how we do thank God for His manifold blessings! We wish also to thank those who have contributed and who wrote the encouraging letters we have received.

There has been considerable sickness: Sr. Wilma Osborn, Marybelle Osborn, Mrs. Russell Heiser, little Joe Currens, Sr. J. C. Butler. However, all are out again, for which we are thankful.

A. E. Hoskins, Pastor.

MINNESOTA CONFERENCE CHRONICLES

The State Conference authorities of the Church of God in Minnesota have just issued a special edition of Conference Chronicles devoted to evangelism. That plans for advancement have been thoughtfully arranged is evident from the following appeal which forms a part of the contents of the little paper.

"We earnestly request that you consider this special edition of Conference Chronicles as a most intimate personal word, even though it is sent to many persons the same day. You are receiving this copy because we have reason to believe that you are the kind of Christian who will be both interested and responsive.

"You know how God blessed our efforts to spread the Word of truth in the State of Minnesota last summer. The good done and your enthusiastic support of that work have encouraged us to plan an even more extensive campaign for this summer. While we are sure of your whole-hearted support, we feel that we, your conference board, could plan the work much more intelligently and efficiently if we had a more definite idea as to the extent of the financial backing we can depend upon. Accordingly we are putting the matter up to you."

Expressing its satisfaction in being able to secure as an evangelist the services of Bro. Adna Hoskins, who is thoroughly "familiar with the situation in Minnesota, who is energetic and forceful, and who has already claimed the affectionate regard of many brethren," the board declares that "it only remains for us to make it financially possible for him to go to work."

A generous response will no doubt be received by the conference treasurer for the purpose outlined.

The following suggestion is worthy of attention by every State conference board and its constituency:

"We are convinced that you are weary of careless, haphazard ways of carrying on the Lord's work and will heartily approve of the business-like methods your board is employing and will give the plan your full cooperation."

LOUIS G. JAEGER

A strong and faithful member of the Church of God nearly all his life, Louis G. Jaeger received the peaceful sleep for which he had been longing suddenly and without warning January 14, 1937. He had been afflicted with angina pectoris, heart trouble, since the drowning of his grandson, Louis Burk, 3½ years ago. Although his heart grew weaker his faith and will power kept him up and dressed every day and able to wait on himself to the last. A nurse had been in attendance for a year.

He was born in Eureka, Wis., October, 10, 1855, and lived there until 1888, at which time he moved to Tacoma, Wash., and resided at the same address ever since. In Wisconsin he followed farming and coopering, but took up steam laundry work when he came west and continued his interest until his death. In 1879 he married Miss Sarah Forrest, and she died in 1919 also a strong member of the Church of God. In 1923 he married Mrs. Anna Kranz, and she died two months later following an operation.

He leaves one daughter, Sr. Mabel Burk; and one granddaughter, Sr. Hazel Burk; three brothers, A. J. of Wisconsin, A. F. of Woodland, Calif., and E. R. of Long Beach, Calif., to mourn his death.

Bro. A. L. Corbaley conducted a very fine funeral service, and Bro. Jaeger was laid to rest in Tacoma Cemetery.

A CHAT WITH PROSPECTIVE TRAINING CLASS MEMBERS

istry? All of our evangelistic efforts will avail little unless we have men who are willing and able to go into the undeveloped field, once the evangelist has opened the way, and "labor in hope," cultivating the ground until God shall give the increase. Which of the present well-established churches first appeared as a fruitful garden, capable of supplying the gardener's every need?

Yes, dear friends, entering the ministry calls for sacrifice and often brings with it much heartache. That is a part of the price that must be paid for the privilege of carrying the gospel. I have yet, however, to see the consecrated Christian worker who does not reckon with Paul that "the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us" (Rom. 8:18). Is that asking too much? Consider the answer Jesus made to the scribe who came to Him with the declaration, "Master, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest. And Jesus saith unto him, The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head" (Matt. 8:19, 20). We are still in much better circumstances, from a material point of view, than was our Master.

Now what to do about it. If you are considering entering the Training Class, either to train for the ministry or simply to prepare yourself for better service in your home community, communicate at once with the committee that has been appointed in charge of this work. If you are not yet sure whether or not you will be able to attend, at least apprise them of the fact that you are interested. For only by hearing from you can they know whether or not it will be worth while for them to go forward with the work of preparing for the opening of the school.

I would suggest that you ask the committee to give you the names and addresses of other prospective members. By working together you may be able to work out an economical arrangement for providing living accommodations for members of the class. Why not get organized and see what can be done? I am sure that the committee will be glad to help you in any way possible. Remember, May 1 has been set as the deadline for you to communicate with the committee.

Now just a word to those who do not care to enter the school, but are interested in the work and desire to see it go forward. No doubt the committee is interested in knowing whether or not this plan is merely the hobby of a minority or whether a majority of the members of the General Conference are anxious to see this work go forward and are willing to get behind it spiritually, morally, and financially in case this work is undertaken. Why not write to them and let them know how you feel about it? After all, they are merely trying to carry out the wish of the majority.

Is there a young man or woman in your community who desires to take this training but is financially unable to do so? Wouldn't it be a good project for your Berean society, church, or conference to make it possible for him to attend? It seems to me that the state organizations could finance at least one member each.

At any rate, let us pray over this matter, and then express ourselves either pro or con as we feel that the Lord directs us to do.

The words that Jesus spoke are still true that "the harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth labourers into his harvest" (Matt. 9:37, 38).

The committee in charge of organizing the Training Class and its curriculum is as follows: Miss Leila E. Whitehead, chairman, 5439 Ohio St., Austin Station, Chicago, Ill.; G. E. Marsh, Oregon, Ill.; Floyd A. Stilson, 411 E. South St., South Bend, Ind.

The answer to the question, "What king named in the Bible was under weight?" will be found in Daniel 5:22, 27.

like Paul himself before his conversion, "exceedingly zealous" (Gal. 1:14) in their religious observances.

But this did not constitute them Christians!

Writing of the intensity of his desire for the salvation of his Hebrew compatriots, Paul says:

"Brethren, my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved. For I bear them record that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge" (Rom. 10:1, 2).

Without the "knowledge" which they lacked, their "zeal of God" was of no value so far as eternal salvation was concerned. So it is with millions of religiously minded Gentiles today. They, too, like Cornelius, the "first Gentile convert," have "a zeal for God." But their zeal is inspired by false conceptions of what constitutes the gospel "which is the power of God unto salvation" (Rom. 1:16). They believe many wonderful things about God and about Christ, true things, helpful things, character-building things, even spiritual things. But unless they have also "believed . . . the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ," and been "baptized . . . in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins" (Acts 8:12; 2:38) after believing them, they are still "without Christ"—they are still under the condemnation of sin and its penalty, death!

This is the truth for which the Church of God has stood throughout its entire past history. And this is the truth for which it must continue to stand until the Lord comes, if it is to be worthy of the name it bears and maintain itself as a separate, distinct, and necessary organization in the hands of God for the salvation of men!

The Promises Made to the Fathers

By Wiley Jones

SURELY there can be no rational doubt as to the importance of our knowing the blessed Redeemer to whatever extent He has clearly revealed Himself in Scripture. Such a knowledge of Him is a mark of our being members of His flock; for He says, "I . . . know my sheep, and am known of mine" (John 10:14). Hence, we are commanded to "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ" (2 Peter 3:18). Now a clear understanding of this text will greatly increase our knowledge of Him and of that gospel of the kingdom which He and His apostles preached.

To obtain such a clear understanding of Paul's language in this verse, let us first inquire, Who are "the fathers"? and then, What are "the promises" made to them?

WHO ARE THE FATHERS?

Moses was commanded to say to the children of Israel, "The Lord God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, hath sent me unto you" (Ex. 3:15). And Peter said, "The God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, the God of our fathers, hath glorified his Son Jesus" (Acts 3:13).

These testimonies, one from each Testament, are enough to show that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob are "the fathers." But in another place Paul has explained himself clearly and settled the question, saying, "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made" (Gal. 3:16). And because these promises were, in substance, repeated to Isaac and Jacob, they are called "the promises made unto the fathers," in the plural number.

WHAT WERE THE PROMISES MADE TO THE FATHERS?

The promises made to the fathers are found in the history of those patriarchs as recorded in Genesis.

When Abraham left Mesopotamia and came into the land of Canaan, the Lord said to him, "Unto thy seed will I give this land" (Gen. 12:7). "Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art northward, and

"Now I say that Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the fathers."—Romans 15:8.

southward, and eastward, and westward: for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed for ever" (Gen. 13:14, 15). "The Lord made a covenant with Abram, saying, Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates" (Gen. 15:18). (The reader would do well to look up on a map the extent of the land promised and observe what a small portion of it Israel conquered and occupied in the past. The rest remains to be subdued and occupied when the Messiah comes.—Editor.) "I will establish my covenant between me and thee and thy seed after thee in their generations for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee. And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession; and I will be their God" (Gen. 17:7, 8). "Thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies; and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed; because thou hast obeyed my voice" (Gen. 22:17, 18).

That substantially the same promises were repeated to Isaac and Jacob is verified by the fact that, about sixty-seven years after the last promise that I have quoted was given, the Lord said to Isaac, who was dwelling in the same land, "Unto thee, and unto thy seed, I will give all these countries, and I will perform the oath which I sware unto Abraham thy father; . . . and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed" (Gen. 26:3, 4).

About forty-four years after making these promises to Isaac, the Lord said to Jacob, who was also dwelling in the same land, "I am the Lord God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Isaac: the land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed. . . . And in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed" (Gen. 28:13, 14).

When about to die Jacob told Joseph, "God Almighty appeared unto me at Luz in the land of Canaan, and blessed me, and said unto me, Behold, I will make thee fruitful, and multiply thee, and I will make (Please turn to page 10)

Begins Drive on Darwinianism

"What if some did not believe? shall their unbelief make the faith of God without effect?"—Romans 3:3.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., March 29.—Aroused by seeing in the school notebook of the daughter of the chairman of his board of deacons the notation, "Man made his first appearance on earth in an ape-like animal," Rev. Verdi Allen, pastor of the suburban Beech Grove Baptist Church, has launched a State-wide drive on the teaching of evolution in the public schools. "I have resolved," he said, "that this shall be a fight to the finish. I am not going to stop until Indiana has a statute prohibiting the teaching of Van Loon's theories (The Story of Mankind, by Hendrik Willem Van Loon) in our schools. Evolution is a crime-breeding germ that lives in the same stench as Communism and modernism, going hand in hand in undermining the church and state."

There is nothing that reveals a lack of faith in God more conclusively and that indicates limited knowledge of the Bible plan of redemption and of the prophecies, than for Christians to attempt to accomplish purely spiritual purposes by appeals to the political power of the state. The Christian home and the Christian church are the real defenders of our children's faith.

Demand Sunday Observance

"The seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God."

TORONTO, Canada, April 5.—The British-Israel World Federation of Canada, in a large display advertisement appearing today in the Globe and Mail, calls upon "the Mayor, City Council, and the Police Commissioners, who are entrusted with the maintenance of law and order, to enforce the Lord's Day (Sunday) laws."

"Observance of the Lord's Day, in obedience to the Fourth Commandment, confirmed by the Lord Jesus Christ, is one of the strongest bulwarks of the British order of civilization." (It is interesting to note that nowhere in the Bible is the Sabbath or the first day of the week, Sunday, ever referred to as "the Lord's Day.")

Calling attention to the laxness with which Sunday observance laws are now enforced in the Dominion, the appeal declares that such laxness "is but a manifestation of the fallibility of man-made laws and the urgent need, which we (the British-Israel Federation) constantly proclaim, for the restoration of the divine laws set forth in the Bible and obedience thereto."

It is strange that this organization, which, although composed of many different races, claims to be of the "ten lost tribes of Israel," should demand the observance of a day of worship which Bible students know was never commanded to be observed by Israel! One of the strongest proofs Anglo-Israelites could make that they were the fleshly descendants of Jacob would be for them to scrupulously keep the "words of the covenant, the ten commandments," which included the observance not of the first day, but of the seventh day, as "the sabbath of the Lord."

This was a law which was given to Israel and to no other people as a "sign" throughout their "generations," that they might know "that I am the Lord that doth sanctify you. Ye (Israel) shall keep the sabbath therefore; for it is holy unto you (Israel): every one that defileth it shall surely be put to death" (Ex. 31:13, 14).

To be logical the Federation should insist, not only upon the enforcement of the seventh day Sabbath law, but also upon the infliction of the penalty God attached to it, which alone could give it divine force and sanction.

Death for Drug Addicts

"Why spend your money on what is not food, your earnings on what never satisfies?"—Isaiah 55:2, Moffatt.

TIENTSIN, China, April 1.—The municipal government put into effect a new and very drastic anti-narcotic law last year which contained a provision that drug addicts who failed to obtain a cure for the habit before January 1, 1937, would be executed by shooting. To make the threat more impressive, two thousand coffins were purchased and placed on display. Immediately after the first of the year arrests began to be made, and on January 3, 128 victims of the drug habit were summarily shot. If the law is strictly enforced, it is said that at least 100,000 will face execution by shooting or by decapitation. The terrible scourge of the opium traffic was forced upon a bitterly resentful China more than a hundred years ago through the efforts of business-seeking foreigners, citizens of a great so-called Christian nation.

How grateful China will be when the only real Christian nation is set up when the Lord comes and the principles of its founder are put into effective operation. And what a different understanding the people of that vast country will soon obtain of the spirit and aim of our blessed Lord!

John Milton on the Trinity and the Soul

By the Editor

"GREAT men, taken up in any way, are profitable company," Thomas Carlyle declared. And his conclusion is fully verified by experience. We cannot remain long in the company of a great scholar or a great scientist without being stimulated to "seek out wisdom and the reason of things" (Ecc. 7:25) for ourselves. Nor can we associate on terms of intimacy with a good man and not be inspired to higher thinking and nobler living by the resistless power of his example. The influence of greatness and of godliness cannot be restrained. It radiates from its possessors as light radiates from the sun.

It is this fact that makes the study of the lives of great and good men of such inestimable value to those who seek to make the most and the best of themselves.

Some men are rightly counted "great" because of material services which they have rendered to mankind. Others are thus distinguished because of their equally valuable intellectual contributions to the betterment and enrichment of human life. Still a third group of great men, and this is by far the most important one, has earned the right to be styled "great" through the spiritual influence it has exerted upon the world. It is seldom, however, that there is found in a single individual more than one of these attributes of greatness, yet occasionally such a rare character is revealed, as is exemplified in the man to whom I would invite your attention here.

Among English-speaking people, no poet has endeared himself to so wide a circle of admirers, or attained a more distinguished place in the world of literature, than has John Milton who, according to the critics, stands second alone to that greatest of all uninspired writers, William Shakespeare.

John Milton was born in Cheapside, London, December 9, 1608, and died in the same city November 8, 1674, leaving behind him a literary heritage that has enriched the entire world.

His best known production, "Paradise Lost," has been rightly called "one of the few monumental works of the world, with nothing in modern epic literature comparable to it except the great poem of Dante." For more than two hundred years this great masterpiece has maintained its position among the "best sellers" in poetical books.

Milton was not only a poet, philosopher, and theologian, but he was also one of the most accomplished linguists of his time. It was because of his proficiency as a Latin scholar that he was appointed to the position of diplomatic correspondent of the British Government, all official international intercourse being carried on in that tongue. Milton's knowledge of Greek and Hebrew was equal to his familiarity with the language of ancient Rome. It is said that after he became blind his daughters read to him daily in both Greek and Hebrew, although they understood nothing of either language. Each morning he listened to a chapter from the Old Testament read to him in the original tongue.

Your attention has been called to the profound scholarship of the great poet that we might be made to realize more fully the authority with which he speaks when he defines certain vitally important biblical terms. He needed not to depend upon the translation of any man or group of men, however learned they might be. He was thoroughly competent to discover and reveal the meaning of the Scriptures through his personal proficiency in the languages in which they were originally written.

While John Milton is of interest to all the world because of his splendid poetical productions, to the student of the Bible he is even more interesting owing to the peculiar and unorthodox views he held on many important religious subjects, as for example, the Trinity and the immortality of the soul. These unusual theological ideas are brought to our attention in his last and perhaps his greatest work, a "Treatise of Christian Doctrine," which was published after his death.

In this remarkable commentary on Christian faith, a depth of biblical scholarship is displayed that no doubt will astonish those whose knowledge of Milton is limited to "Paradise Lost" and "Paradise Regained." Writing, not as a poet, but as a profound theologian, in a "Treatise of Christian Doctrine" he shows a wide divergence of opinion from the ideas held generally by other theologians, both in his day and ours.

To bring concisely before the reader's mind Milton's understanding of the doctrines named, and also of others equally important, I could not do better than to quote David Masson, LL.D., the poet's biographer.

THE BIBLE THE SOURCE OF MILTON'S THEOLOGY

"Much light is thrown upon Milton's mind in his later life, and even upon the poems of that period, by his posthumous Latin 'Treatise of Christian Doctrine.' It differs from his other prose writings of any importance in being cool, abstract, and didactic. Professing to be a system of divinity derived directly from the Bible, it is really an exposition of Milton's metaphysics and of his reasoned opinions on all questions of philosophy, ethics, and politics."

In this brief but appreciative analysis of Milton's work on the Christian faith, Dr. Masson makes two introductory statements that are of much interest.

First, he says that the "Treatise of Christian Doctrine" professes to be "a system of divinity derived directly from the Bible." In other words, Milton sought in the Bible for the truth concerning salvation. He did not appeal to pagan

What Is Your Life?

By Harriet E. Boice

OF THE many questions given for our consideration, none is more important than that given by the Apostle James, "What is your life?" Listen to the solemn warning voiced in answer to this question: "It is even a vapour, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away." The vapor vanishes so quickly before the heat of the rising sun that it is given as a fitting simile of human life. As the solemnity of the question dawns upon us, we perceive the warning. Life is too brief to waste, too uncertain to allow of boastful plans for tomorrow. "Whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow. . . . If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this, or that" (James 4:14-16). This language shows in whom we should put our trust—in Him who is able to save or to destroy.

AN ANSWER FROM THE OLD TESTAMENT

Inspired men of old have written in a way that seriously impresses us with the importance of culture and virtue in our brief span of life. They have pointed out the folly of sinful indulgence, of selfish passion and appetite. They have marked out the way of wisdom which gives the most true happiness in this life, and a hope of life beyond. "So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom" (Psalm 90:12).

Life at its natural length is compared to grass. "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him. For he knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are dust. As for man, his days are as grass: as a flower of the field, so he flourisheth. For the wind passeth over it, and it is gone; and the place thereof shall know it no more. But the mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him" (Psalm 103:13-17).

All generations but the present have been swept away by the ever-rushing flood of death. It is written, "Thou carriest them away as with a flood; they are as a sleep" (Psalm 90:5). We can see how rigidly the decree issued at the fall of man has been carried out—"Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return" (Gen. 3:19). Yet God in His mercy made man subject to death that he might not live always in sin and the suffering which sin entails.

A SAD STORY OF HUMAN LIFE

On the first pages of the Sacred Book the inspired penman shows us the bitterness and ruin caused by man's transgression of God's law, and the sorrow and suffering consequent upon having violated His commandment. Here is given a true delineation of human life. "Cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life; thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; and thou shalt eat bread, till thou return unto the ground, for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Unto the woman it was said, "I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception; in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children; and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee" (Gen. 3:16). Here is no rose-colored picture of human life, but a deep significance, a solemn, unalterable verdict in every sentence uttered.

When we look back over the pages of history we see how fearful has been the account of human suffering. Look at the world today, with all the enlightenment of Christian civilization, with all the learning and science which have been used to lighten the burden of toil and relieve physical suffering, and still the realities of human misery are beyond the power of man to picture in words. Thousands are swept away by disease, famine, and violence each day; and comparatively few live out the allotted span of natural life. What of the future? Is there no gleam of hope that the curse will be lifted from mother earth, and her sons and daughters be free from the bondage of corruption?

THE PROMISE OF REDEMPTION

We turn again to the sacred page and, imbedded like a gem in the jagged rock, we find the promise that the Seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head (Gen. 3:15).

Behold the man! "But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons" (Gal. 4:4, 5).

We turn again to the last pages of the Book, and find that the Paradise of God is to be restored to man. Again we read, "There shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain. . . . There shall be no more curse" (Rev. 21:1-5; 22:3). Here upon this earth the conflict between good and evil is to be fought out until the Champion of the human race, Jesus Christ, "shall destroy him that hath the power of death, that is, the devil" (Heb. 2:14).

God's purposes are unchanging. Man sinned and the world has been filled with wickedness, "but as truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord" (Num. 14:21). "Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for him. . . . For yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be: yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be. But the meek shall inherit the earth; and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace. . . . The seed of the wicked shall be cut off. The righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein for ever" (Psalm 37).

THE PROBLEM OF EVIL

Man was created a free agent and not a human machine. He was capable of choice and was given the power to choose his own destiny. He was placed under the law of faith and obedience that he might exert his power of choice and develop character. The choice was made and the record written: "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned" (Rom. 5:12). "Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man: but every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed. Then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin: and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death" (James 1:13-16).

It is needful that we should have a clear understanding of this problem of evil that we may know that man himself, having the power to choose or refuse either good or evil, is alone responsible for his own acts. "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he is tried, he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him" (James 1:12).

Are you spending the few brief years of your life following the trail of the serpent, plotting and planning wickedness, developing the character of a devil? You must choose your own destiny. As Moses set before the children of Israel "life and death, blessing and cursing" (Deut. 30:19), so now Jesus points out two paths—the one that leads to destruction and the other that leads to life. Which will you choose? "Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap" (Gal. 6:7, 8). Man must prove himself a man worthy of eternal life. If he proves himself otherwise, he will be destroyed in that day when Jesus comes to reward "every man according as his work shall be" (Rev. 22:12).

We entreat you to follow in the footsteps of Jesus, trusting in God and doing good, developing a character like the Man among men, who was tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin. "He is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him." "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Which will you choose?—The Visitor.

The President and the Bible

THE four hundredth anniversary of the printing of the first English Bible is an event of great significance. It challenges the reverent attention of English-speaking peoples the world over. To that day, October 4, 1535, when Myles Coverdale, an Augustinian friar, later the Bishop of Exeter, produced this book in the common vernacular, we trace a measurable increase not only in the cultural value and influence of this greatest of books, but a quickening in the widespread dissemination of those moral and spiritual precepts that have so greatly affected the progress of Christian civilization.

The part that William Tyndale played in this English translation is generally acknowledged by the historian. It is also evident that there were others who made valuable contributions to the monumental undertaking. Independent of and apart from the devotion of these zealous translators, the work they did marks the beginning of one of the great epochs in the history of English-speaking peoples.

It would be difficult to appraise the far-reaching influence of this work and subsequent translations upon the speech, literature, moral and religious character of our people and their institutions. It has done much to refine and enrich our language. To it may be traced the richest and best we have in our literature. Poetry, prose, painting, music, and oratory have had in it their guide and inspiration. In it Lincoln found the rounded, euphonious phrases for his Gettysburg Address. Speaking of its place in his life, he says: "In regard to the great Book, I have only to say, it is the best gift which God has ever given to man."

One cannot study the story of the rise and development of the men and women who have been and continue to be the pathfinders and benefactors of our people and not recognize the outstanding place the Bible has occupied as the guide and inspiration of their thought and practice. Apart from their professed allegiance to any particular form of Christian doctrine or creedal expression of faith, they found in it that which has shaped their course and determined their action. Look where we will, even in periods that have been marked by apostasy and doubt, still men have found here in these sacred pages that which has refreshed and encouraged them as they prosecuted their pilgrimage and sought for higher levels of thinking and living.

In the formative days of the Republic the directing influence the Bible exercised upon the fathers of the Nation is conspicuously evident. To Washington it contained the sure and certain moral precepts that constituted the basis of his action. That which proceeded from it transcended all other books, however elevating their thought. To his astute mind moral and religious principles were the "indispensable supports" of political prosperity, the "essential pillars of civil society."

Learned as Jefferson was in the best of the ancient philosophers, he turned to the Bible as the source of his higher thinking and reasoning. Speaking of the lofty teachings of the Master, he said: "He pushed His scrutinies into the heart of man; erected His tribunal in the region of his thoughts, and purified the waters at the fountainhead." Beyond this he held that the Bible contained the noblest ethical system the world has known. His own compilation of the selected portions of this Book, in what is known as "Jefferson's Bible," bears evidence of the profound reverence in which he held it.

Entirely apart from these citations of the place the Bi-

Chains of Circumstance

PAUL was a consummate master of the art of conciliation. To read his speeches before the centurion, before Felix and Agrippa, and on Mars' Hill, is to receive a comprehensive lesson in courtesy.

When the Apostle was on trial before Agrippa and was giving an account of his conversion, the King interrupted him: "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." Paul replied: "I would to God, that not only thou, but also all that hear me this day, were both almost, and altogether such as I am, except these bonds."

As he spoke he held up his hands revealing the chains that shackled him. It is not possible to think of Paul without at the same time thinking of his chains. In one of his last Epistles, he closes with the words, "Remember my bonds." The chains on his hands made it impossible for him to write his own letters. He was obliged to dictate the words to an amanuensis who set them down on the parchment as he spoke. When the letter was finished, Paul took the pen in his hand and laboriously wrote the last sentence and signed his name.

When he asked them to "remember his bonds," he was pleading that they might have patience with his limitations. He could not come to them as he had long desired. He could not do many things for them which had been on his mind. He could not even write to them himself. The chains prevented him from doing what he would like to do. So he bade them to remember his limitations.

Many thoughts are suggested by these words, which we find more than once in the New Testament. They are a plea for considerateness. In our appraisal of the lives of others we are not to forget their limitations. So much of our judgment of others is lacking in understanding and sympathy because we have failed to take into account the chains of circumstances that bind them.

There are limitations of temperament. In a family circle we recognize these restraints. One of the family is plodding and slow, another is smart and quick, one is thoughtless and careless, another is far-sighted and methodical. We have learned that to do justice to an individual we must not overlook his limitations. To correctly judge another, we must know his heredity and environment and training; we must know also his physical and mental weaknesses. These things we cannot fully know. Let us therefore be slow to condemn. Remember his bonds.

There are physical limitations, too, which hinder men and women from realizing the goals we have set for them. Paul had a thorn in the flesh that troubled him, slowing down his march and preventing him from attaining his high purpose. There are few of us who have not some physical or emotional handicap with which we have struggled most of our days. It is a large part of Christian charity to remember that others have their handicaps, too.

There are limitations or circumstances also which bind us. The word "circumstance" means literally the things that stand around us. We recall in our childhood the white picket fence that enclosed the yard where we played. We were not permitted to go beyond that fence. The pickets were the circumstances that hemmed us in. Often we climbed up on the fence and gazed over it at the world outside, and longed for the time when it would no longer shut us in. As we grew older, the picket fence disappeared, but there were other circumstances that bound us.

It is well also to remember that we, too, have our limitations. Really we do not have to remember them. They thrust themselves upon us at every turn. Our limitations, handicaps we more often call them, are often our largest assets. Paradoxical as it may seem, our bonds frequently set us free for the work for which God intended us.

We know how true this is in nature. There is a stream of water sweeping down the hillside. It leaps over the rocks and rushes through the gorges in time of flood, carrying destruction and loss in its wake. Then the engineers come and they impound its waters behind a dam, and release it to do the work of factories and railroads and cities.

We hear men who chafe at the restraints of law, but it is the limitations imposed by just laws that are at the basis of our freedom. Here, for example, are two men. One recognizes the limitations imposed upon him by law. He is a law-abiding citizen. What is the result? He is freed from the law. He walks abroad in the land. Here and there he meets uniformed guardians of the law. He passes buildings erected to the administration of law. They do not trouble him. He walks at liberty, as the Psalmist expressed it, because he keeps the law. Another man refuses to be bound by the limitations which law imposes. At once the law becomes his enemy. He has lost his freedom because he would not be bound.

The state sees fit to impose certain restraints on its citizens. It is the only sure guarantee of its permanence. The citizen who accepts these limitations and works within them is the freest and most useful member of the commonwealth.

God has hedged us all about with bonds. We cannot go far without coming to the end of our tether. It is through these restraints that we are freed to accomplish the divine purpose.

The arch enemies of Paul thought they had sealed his testimony forever when they shut him in prison and chained him to a soldier. They did not know that it was through those bonds that God was setting His word free. One of the soldiers was always with him and no one could be with him without knowing, not only Paul, but also Paul's Christ. These guards were changed every few hours. Thus a host of men were brought into intimate contact and acceptance of the Christian religion. Later on these men carried the name of Christ to the farthest outposts of the empire. In his limitations, Paul found his emancipation.

John Milton in the prime of his manhood was smitten with blindness. He felt the walls of night closing in around him, and there was no escape. But these bonds that shackled his vision and circumscribed the bounds of his habitation were the means in God's hands of setting his spirit free.

How many of these bounds there are! None of us is free from them—poor eyesight and defective hearing; impaired health and disappointed hopes; domestic difficulties and poverty. These are the fetters of circumstances which God is using to give us a larger usefulness to our day and generation.—Stuart Nye Hutchison in The Presbyterian.

God in the Test Tube

IN AN issue of Harpers' Magazine, James H. Leuba, Professor of Psychology at Bryn Mawr College, attempts to place God in a test tube, and then gives the results of his analysis. He discovers that the churches and religions, "in order to be again a vitalizing and controlling power in society, . . . will have to organize themselves about ultimate conceptions that are not in contradiction with the best insight of the time. They will have to replace their specific method of seeking the welfare of humanity by appeal to, and reliance upon, divine beings, by methods free from a discredited supernaturalism." How did Mr. Leuba arrive at this far-reaching conclusion?

To four groups of scientists and two colleges he sent the following propositions:

A. "I believe in a God to whom we may pray in the expectation of receiving an answer. By 'answer' I mean more than the natural, subjective, psychological effect of prayer.

B. "I do not believe in a God as defined above.

C. "I have no definite belief regarding this question."

One scientist gave the startling reply, "I am refraining from complying with the request because I believe that real harm is done in announcing to the world opinions of scientists relative to religious matters." The basis for this conclusion is not given.

To summarize, Prof. Leuba found that the chief believers are (1) scientists in non-living matter, (2) less eminent scientists, (3) scientists and students of twenty years ago, (4) students in lower college classes. Of the physicists, 38 per cent subscribed to the first of the above statements; biologists, 27 per cent; sociologists, 24 per cent; psychologists, only 10 per cent. In other words, the more one studies from a "scientific" viewpoint the physical and mental nature of man, the less he is inclined to believe that God recognizes worship, and that there is a future life.

A DECLINING FAITH

Comparable results were obtained from the colleges studied. In College A, of high rank, moderate size, in which practically all Protestant denominations were represented, Prof. Leuba found that 34 per cent of the freshmen believed in a God of the nature suggested; sophomores, 37 per cent; juniors, 30 per cent; seniors, 20 per cent. In the other college, a definitely radical institution, only 11 per cent of the seniors believed in such a God, with the figures for the other classes in proportion.

Incidentally, this is a noteworthy comment on what happens to the religious beliefs of the young person who goes to the average institution of higher learning.

Now we have no quarrel with the figures Prof. Leuba supplies. They doubtless represent the facts within the limits of the investigation. But we do challenge his conclusions. That scientists and college students believe about as he finds is likely true; and it is also true that the past two decades have witnessed the decline in belief in intellectual circles that he suggests. An investigation into the beliefs of seven hundred ministers and theological students in 1929 by George Herbert Betts showed somewhat similar results. But there are other considerations.

Prof. Leuba says that he has been dealing with the "best insight of the time," and from the figures we are asked to take it that the psychologists have the best insight of all, for only 11 per cent of them believe in the supernatural in the manner indicated. We can leave the students out of consideration, for it is inevitable that their beliefs would approximate those of their instructors.

The Professor naively assumes that scientists miraculously escape the mental and spiritual aberrations that afflict the rest of mankind. But it was no less than William James, psychologist, who said that "of all insufficient authorities as to the total nature of reality, give me the scientists. Their interests are most incomplete and their professional conceit and bigotry immense." This may be possibly somewhat of an overstatement, but nevertheless uncomfortably true. And it was no other than Robert A. Millikan who said, "Science is just as often misrepresented as is religion by men of little vision, of no appreciation of its limitations, and of imperfect comprehension of the real role it plays in human life—by men who lose sight of spiritual values, and therefore exert an influence upon youth which is unsettling, irreligious, and sometimes immoral."

Apparently even scientists find it difficult sometimes to distinguish between a theory and a fact. The great English physicist, Prof. Arthur Eddington, says that "in considering the relations of science and religion, it is a very relevant fact that physics is now in the course of abandoning all claim to a type of knowledge which it formerly asserted without hesitation." Psychology, a baby among the sciences, is apparently gifted with the rashness of youth.

After all, scientific truth is found by experiment and observation only. There are some matters that are beyond scientific experiment, and belong to the realm of philosophy and religion; and be it remembered that there is at least as much reality in a thought and a prayer as there is in an atom and an electron. Even Dean Inge was moved to say, in response to the claim of many psychologists, that prayer is merely subjective and psychological, "The suggestion that in prayer we only hear the echo of our own voices is ridiculous to anyone who has prayed."

WHAT SCIENCE CANNOT KNOW

Therefore, the fact that so many eminent scientists believe that God cannot be moved by prayer and worship is not very disturbing to the Christian. He has evidence to the contrary, evidence that is just as convincing and legitimate in its sphere as is the scientific evidence for a round world. There should be nothing at all incongruous about a preacher looking into a microscope or a biologist getting on to his knees. Such experiences would probably do them both good.

It may be claimed that there is no scientific evidence for the effectiveness of prayer or even for the existence of God. Possibly not. Neither is there any against it. Likewise it may be said that there is no scientific evidence that a certain man loves his wife because a chemical analysis of his blood reveals nothing to that effect; but, judging from other observations of a different order, we may have excellent reason for supposing he does.

There is such a thing as a spiritual faculty, and it can atrophy from either non-use or abuse. Charles Darwin complained in later life that he had, through non-use, entirely lost an appreciation for poetry and music. He regretted that he had not practiced and read in these arts regularly as a balance for his protracted scientific studies. Similarly, one's spiritual sensitiveness may be dulled by constant neglect. It is not at all improbable that many of these scientists who have responded to Prof. Leuba's questions, these men with "the best insight of the time," are, perhaps, blessed with more sight than insight, seeing very clearly the natural world about them, but failing to see with the inward eye the God who is above and in it all, not as some vague Oriental potentate, unapproachable and unfeeling, but as God the Father whom Jesus showed to us, interested in man and entering into his life in no uncertain way.

The religionist and the scientist have a common ground in their devotion to their callings, although it must be admitted that part of the present popularity of science is due to its practical value as a dollar maker, just as it has been with organized religion in times past, if not today. Religion needs science and science needs religion—they are mutually cleansing and clarifying.

But the kingdom of heaven is not entered by formal argument and scientific demonstration, else it would be inhabited only by logicians and scientists. That is why prayer is one of the gates into the city, for all men can pray and enter into the spiritual life, whether they be scientists, churchmen, or those with no special qualifications either way. "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God."

Yes, the religionist, too, has gone to his laboratory, conducted his experiments, and announced his findings, without in any sense violating the scientific spirit of which we hear so much today, and rightly so. He has found that God answers him at the highest and deepest points of his experience; that a great assurance of divine guidance takes hold of him, and leads him serenely through a troubled world; that "he that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty."

The man, then, who sees life whole, and not simply one phase of it, will accept without difficulty both the facts of science and the facts of religion. He is not called upon to sacrifice his belief in an understanding and responsive God; rather, he sees that the lines of faith, reason, and revelation all converge in a fixed central point.

Yes, a man can still pray to his God in the expectation of receiving an answer.—Gerald H. Minchin in Signs of the Times.

WELCOME, THOU KING

Welcome, Thou sovereign King of grace,
 We long, we long to see Thy face;
 Our hearts are weary of delay,
 When, when shall come the promised day?
 Come, make the cloud that bore Thee hence
 Thy chariot back for our defense;
 We own Thy sovereign right to reign.
 Come back, come back to earth again.

Rulers and people call Thy name,
 But seek instead for earthly fame;
 And justice holds uneven hand;
 Thy glory fills not all the land.
 Thy throne, long vacant here below,
 Needs Thee, as do Thy people, too;
 Return, Thy right and rule maintain:
 Come back, come back to earth again.

Thy heralds now in every land
 Proclaim Thy kingdom near at hand;
 Thy bride has long her vigil kept,
 In weariness Thine absence wept.
 How long, how long must she still wait
 Thy coming at the eastern gate?
 She still her would-be lovers spurn,
 And waits in hope for Thy return?

Delay not more, we longing cry,
 Come back and let us see Thee nigh;
 Come and restore our dead who sleep,
 Come, dry the tears of those who weep.
 Answer our prayer, "Thy kingdom come,
 Thy will on earth again be done":
 Thy bride still gives her heart's refrain—
 Come back, come back to earth again.

THE PRESIDENT AND THE BIBLE

ble has occupied in the thought and philosophy of the good and the great, it is the veneration in which it has been and is held by vast numbers of our people that gives it its supreme place in our literature. No matter what the accidents and chances of life may bring in their train, no matter what the changing habits and fashions of the world may effect, this book continues to hold its unchallenged place as the most loved, the most quoted, and the most universally read and pondered of all the volumes which our libraries contain. It has withstood assaults, it has resisted and survived the most searching microscopic examination, it has stood every test that could be applied to it, and yet it continues to hold its supreme place as the Book of books. There have been periods when it has suffered stern and searching criticism, but the hottest flame has not destroyed its prevailing and persistent power.

We cannot read the history of our rise and development as a nation, without reckoning with the place the Bible has occupied in shaping the advances of the Republic. Its teaching, as has been wisely suggested, is plowed into the very heart of the race. Where we have been truest and most consistent in obeying its precepts we have attained the greatest measure of contentment and prosperity; where it has been to us as the words of a book that is sealed, we have faltered in our way, lost our range-finders, and found our progress checked. It is well that we observe this anniversary of the first publishing of our English Bible. The time is propitious to place a fresh emphasis upon its place and worth in the economy of our life as a people. As literature, as a book that contains a system of ethics, of moral and religious principles, it stands unique and alone. I commend its thoughtful and reverent reading to all our people. Its refining and elevating influence is indispensable to our most cherished hopes and ideals.—An address by F. D. Roosevelt, October 6, 1935; a National Broadcasting Company presentation.

or even Christian commentators, but to the Word of God. He found the Holy Scriptures all-sufficient. They alone were "profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness" to the "man of God" (2 Tim. 3:16, 17). He called upon no man-made creed for evidence, nor did he claim the support of any historic church council. He recognized no authority save that of the inspired Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments.

Thus as to the source of his theological conclusions, John Milton stood on identical ground with the Church of God today. A "thus saith the Lord" settled every question.

The second especially interesting observation Dr. Masson makes in his opening paragraph regarding the "Treatise of Christian Doctrine" is found in his suggestion that while the work professes to be "a system of divinity derived directly from the Bible, it is really an exposition of Milton's metaphysics and of his reasoned opinions" on the subjects of which he treats (italics are mine).

Those who are familiar with the theological teachings of Milton's earlier works, like "Paradise Lost," may, when they read what follows, be led to wonder how it was that a man who held doctrinal views harmonious with our own could, at the same time, express ideas so apparently at variance with them.

And yet in that same matchless poem there are many passages which foreshadow those changes in religious belief which were to come with the maturing thought of a great mind.

The opening words of the poem provide an example:

"Of man's first disobedience, and the fruit
Of that forbidden tree whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world, and all our woe,
With loss of Eden, till one greater Man
Restore us, and regain the blissful Seat,
Sing, Heavenly Muse —"

Here the poet introduces the thought that death and the "loss of Eden" came about because of Adam's disobedience and that both life and Paradise are to be restored in the future through Christ. These basic truths of the gospel he clarifies and elaborates upon in his final review of Christian teaching.

"Paradise Regained" contains passages suggestive of the interpretations of prophecy at which Milton later more definitely arrived. In the following lines we are reminded of the words found in Jeremiah 30:9: "They shall serve the Lord their God, and David their king, whom I will raise up unto them."

"The shepherd lad,
Whose offspring on the throne of Judah sat
So many ages, and shall yet regain
That seat, and reign in Israel without end."

It is Milton's "reasoned opinions," his mature conclusions, at which he had arrived after a lifetime of diligent study, that find expression in a "Treatise of Christian Doctrine," and not the ideas he entertained at an earlier period while under the influences of instructors provided by the established Church of England.

MILTON WAS NOT A TRINITARIAN

Quoting again from Dr. Masson:

"The treatise shows that Milton in his later life was not an orthodox Trinitarian, but an anti-Trinitarian of that high Arian order, counting Sir Isaac Newton" (the renowned scientist and commentator on the prophecies, who is said to have discovered the "law of gravitation"), "among its subsequent English adherents, which denied the co-essentiality of co-equality of Christ with absolute Deity, but regarded Him as clothed with a certain derivative divinity of a high and unfathomable kind."

Belief in God marks the beginning of all religious convictions. It is the basis of all faith (Heb. 11:6). Hence it is logical that Milton's analysis of Christian doctrine should begin with a statement regarding the nature of the Deity.

We observe that on this subject Milton was not merely a non-Trinitarian, but an "anti-Trinitarian." That is, he not only did not believe in the commonly accepted doctrines of the Trinity, but he vigorously opposed them. The phrase, "God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost," he looked upon not only as a false definition of God, but also as essentially harmful.

Appealing to the Bible alone, Milton affirmed that "the Lord our God is one Lord" (Deut. 6:4) and not three; that "there is none else beside him" (Deut. 4:35), which positively forbade the presence in equality of either a "Second" or "Third Person" of a "Holy Trinity."

According to Milton's conception of the Deity and in harmony with his profound knowledge of the Scriptures, "to us there is," and there can be, "but one God" (1 Cor. 8:6).

MILTON ON FREE WILL AND PREDESTINATION

The "Treatise of Christian Doctrine," declares Dr. Masson, shows Milton "to have been Arminian rather than Calvinistic, in his views of free will and predestination."

The terms "Arminianism" and "Calvinism" grew out of the doctrinal discussions of the period of the Reformation. The followers of the Dutch reformer, Jacobus Arminius, argued that "Calvin's doctrines of 'particular election' and 'limited atonement' would render nugatory all endeavor for the salvation of the elect, while the elect would in any event be saved. . . . The Arminians further objected that Calvin's views on divine sovereignty and predestination would by necessary logical consequence make God the author of sin, as one of the things He had foreordained."

In other words, Milton believed in "conditional salvation," that while salvation was freely offered to all through the gospel of Christ, it was forced upon no one, and was obtainable only by those who heard, believed, and obeyed it.

It is not at all strange that "the tendency came to be for those specially zealous in evangelical work to incline to Arminianism" (New Standard Encyclopedia). The great poet and student of the Word naturally recognized not only the unscriptural character of the doctrine of foreordination, but also the deadening effect it would have upon missionary and evangelistic endeavors.

In his teaching on free will and predestination, Milton is again found to be in closest harmony with the historic thought of the Church of God.

MILTON WAS NOT A SABBATARIAN

Continuing his review of John Milton's teaching as presented in a "Treatise of Christian Doctrine," Dr. Masson says "it shows him to have been no Sabbatarian, like the Puritans of the first wave (of reformers), but most strenuously anti-Sabbatarian."

Again we find this mighty man of God battling against error in doctrine. He not only saw its unscripturalness but he was so deeply impressed with the danger that lurked in a return to the dead rudiments of the law that he openly and vigorously opposed it (as, no doubt, the Church of God should be doing today).

Commenting on this feature of his teaching, Dr. Masson says that one of the doctrines which the treatise sets forth (Please turn to page 16) of thee a multitude of people; and will give this land to thy seed after thee for an everlasting possession" (Gen. 48:3, 4).

Having learned what the promises are, let us bring out their full meaning by carefully considering the following important points: Who are the heirs and where is the inheritance? How long will the heirs possess it? The certainty of the promises. And how may individuals obtain a personal interest in them?

WHO ARE THE HEIRS AND WHERE THE INHERITANCE?

It is plain enough who Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were, but perhaps there are some who imagine that the word "seed" here refers to the Jews or Israelites who came into the land of Canaan under Joshua. This question, however, is not left to human conjecture, for the inspired Paul has settled it plainly and forever. Oh, that all the world, wherever the Bible is read, would hear this explanation and would understand its full import!

"Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ" (Gal. 3:16)!

In these words, "And to thy seed," Paul makes an exact quotation, word for word and letter for letter, from the Greek (Sept.) Version of Genesis 13:15 and 17:8, both of which places refer to "the land."

Common fairness requires us to observe the critical exactness of the quotation, which is the key to its meaning.

That Paul refers to the "land" is further evident from his calling it "the inheritance" (v. 18). Dr. Lightfoot, a celebrated Greek and Hebrew scholar, viewed the words, "And to thy seed," as quoted from Genesis 13:15 and 17:8, and said, "It is true that in both alike the inheritance spoken of refers primarily to the possession of Canaan."

Because the promise of the landed inheritance is so often repeated and involves or comprehends within itself so many other promises, it may rightly be called, "the promises," in the plural.

The word "seed" is frequently used of a single person. It has this meaning in Genesis 3:15 and 2 Samuel 7:12, as its pronoun "his," in the singular number, sufficiently proves. Liddell and Scott's Greek Lexicon mentions various Greek authors who also used it in this way.

Here, then, we discover that, in the plainest and most positive manner, a real and tangible inheritance on this earth has been promised to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Christ for an "everlasting" or "eternal" possession. But the Bible just as clearly shows that although Christ and all of those "fathers" to whom the promises were made, sojourning personally on that land, yet none of them obtained possession of it.

Concerning Abraham it is said that the Lord "gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on: yet he promised that he would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him, when as yet he had no child" (Acts 7:5).

Nor did "Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise" (Heb. 11:9), fare any better, for "these all died in faith, not having received the promises" (Heb. 11:13, 39).

The blessed Savior, in the very zenith of His personal ministry on earth, testified concerning Himself that "the foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head" (Matt. 8:20). "He came unto his own, and his own received him not" (John 1:11), or "He came to his own land, and his own people received him not" (Campbell's Version). "He came to his own domains, and yet his own people received him not" (Diag.).

The land is particularly called Immanuel's by virtue of "the promises" (Isa. 8:8). But although His enemies rejected and crucified Him, He arose and ascended to heaven. And from that day until now "the land of promise" has been desecrated by wicked men. But it would be acting the part of an unbeliever to conclude from this that the promises have become a failure or that they ought to be tortured into some other than their true meaning. "The scripture cannot be broken" (John 10:35). "Though the vision tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come" (Hab. 2:3).

The blessed Immanuel foresaw that the people then occupying His land would reject Him, and so He spoke two parables which, viewed in succession, afford a thrilling outline of events from His first coming as a "Lamb" to suffer and die, till He return as a "Lion" to conquer and reign.

In the parable of the vineyard, He is the "heir" of whom the wicked husbandmen say, "Come, let us kill him, and let us seize on his inheritance" (Matt. 21:33-39). This represents His inheritance as on earth, for of course they could not seize an inheritance above the skies by killing Him.

And, having killed Him, His resurrection intervenes at this point as the golden link which connects this parable with that of the pounds, for without His resurrection the latter parable could not be fulfilled.

In this parable we behold the risen "heir" as the "nobleman," arrayed in the princely attire of immortality and going into the "far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return" (Luke 19:12-27). By a glorious retinue of holy angels He is escorted from the top of Olivet through the shining pathway of the skies, through the crys-

While the bereaved disciples were looking "stedfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven" (Acts 1:10, 11).

The parable of the pounds is based on the fact that the kings of Judea in those days, before commencing their reign, used to go on a journey to Rome in "a far country" to be invested with royal authority, after which they would return and reign in Judea. Herod and Archelaus are notable instances of this practice. And so, although the Savior's kingdom will be on earth, He has gone to heaven to receive it, or rather, "to procure for himself the royalty," as Campbell's Version renders it. He would not accept His crown either from the multitude or from Satan, but only from His omnipotent Father, who alone has the right to give it. John 6:15; Luke 6:6, 7; Dan. 7:13, 14.

When He returns, having been divinely invested with the royalty, "then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory" (Matt. 25:31) and establish in the land of promise a glorious and divine kingdom which will quickly and miraculously "break in pieces and consume" all human kingdoms and, like a great mountain, fill the "whole earth" (Dan. 2:35, 44); for "his dominion shall be from sea even to sea, and from the river even unto the ends of the earth" (Zech. 9:10).

Thus throughout the world He will "possess the gate of his enemies," and great voices will be heard, saying, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever" (Rev. 11:15).

Because the full scope of the promise God made to Abraham and his Seed involves all this extensive inheritance, Paul speaks of it as the promise of "the world" (Rom. 4:13).

But will the merciful Redeemer refuse to associate with Himself in the glorious kingdom any of Adam's race except Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob? No, the mercy of God has "provided some better thing" for the sons and daughters of our fallen race!

The relationship which every believer sustains to Christ makes that believer a joint-heir with Him. "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ . . . for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise" (Gal. 3:27-29); "heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ" (Rom. 8:17).

Christ is preeminently Abraham's Seed, but believers, being reckoned by adoption as all "one" in and with Christ, are also Abraham's seed (though multitudinous), and therefore joint-heirs with Christ.

So intimate is the union between Christ and believers that they are called "the body of Christ" (1 Cor. 12:27), and "members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones" (Eph. 5:30). They are also, collectively and by figure of speech, called, "the bride, the Lamb's wife" (Rev. 21:9), all of which proves their joint-heirship with Him.

“Tell Me About Hollywood”

A traveler just returned from a round-the-world journey says that whenever she met anyone who could talk English the invariable request was, “Tell me all about Hollywood.” Luckily she had spent an hour in Hollywood just before sailing.

Can it be that foreign peoples no longer look to us as the nation that sends them their missionaries, but as the nation that produces their moving pictures?

What have you and I done during the past year to give them any other idea? Figure up and compare, how much of your money went for foreign missions, and how much for moving pictures? Dare you continue that way in the light of Jesus' command, “And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature” (Mark 16:15)?

Berean Pulse

Again we present an answer to one of the questions on the March 30 page. Don't let the other fellow answer all the questions. You have some excellent ideas. Put them on paper and send them in.

Can a person be saved without making a public confession of faith?

Under some conceivable circumstances, a person doubtless could be saved without a public confession. Anyway, the usual public “confession” takes the form of the most inane ritual the religious mind has yet devised. “Do you believe Jesus is the Son of God?” “I do.” Whoops! Trinitarians, Rosierucians, Mormons, Nestorians—they'd all confess to that. Paul's jailer didn't bother about going before the congregation to tell 'em how he'd suddenly reformed; he was baptized, and that was that, and in the secrecy of his own chambers, at night. To be altogether honest, I've not much time for the usual public confession; it's embarrassing for congregation, for candidates, for strangers in the church, and it accomplishes practically nothing.—Arlen Marsh, Oregon, Illinois.

W-o-n-'t Does Not Spell “Can't”

You say, “I cannot go to the Bible Training School. I have a good job that brings me in good money. If I were to give it up I could not have the things I want to buy.”

My friend, I do not ask you to do anything I didn't do myself. My salary was $150 per month. I am satisfied I made the choice that brought me enduring happiness. None of my companions in the Training Class has been a failure. They had to sacrifice the things that didn't matter to attain the one thing that really mattered.

You say, “But this new Training School is different. There won't be any part-time work for the students.”

The only part-time work any of us students had during the last two years the Training Class was in operation was what we could scrape up for ourselves. If we could do it in hard times, you can do it in good times.

You say, “But I haven't the $100 tuition. You didn't have that to pay.”

No, my friend, we didn't, but somebody had it to pay for us, although it was done in a general way and not for each individual. The Training Class always cost the church at large for the tuition. Where would our church at large be now without those young ministers that they helped to educate? What greater aim could one of our pastorless churches or one of our state conferences have than to pay the tuition and help a student through the Training Class with the expectation that the student should be their pastor or state worker for the first few years of his ministry? It is up to you to find an organization that will make that agreement. The best things are not handed to us on a silver platter. You must be a go-getter.

Authority

In your Berean class it is important that your teacher understand the proper methods of teaching. He should study his technique and seek to improve his ability to lead his class on to the higher ground. The study of psychology is invaluable in teaching.

But before technique, psychology, or methods ever can help to awaken the slumbering forces in the breasts of the class, the teacher really must have the message himself. He must know his Bible. The authority of that Bible must be unquestioned in his own heart before he can hope ever to lead others to accept divine truths.

The Bible must be his Rock to which he anchors while he seeks to save others from the tempest. Thus equipped with an understanding of the fundamentals of Bible truth he is ready to use methods to get it across to others. He must have something in his own vessel before ever he can pour out to others.

The Bible is authority. Let us not forget, It IS the Word of God. “All scripture is given by inspiration of God” (2 Tim. 3:16).

“Faithful men” (2 Tim. 1:2) are vested with authority. “These things speak, and exhort, and rebuke with all authority” (Titus 2:15). This includes ministers, elders, teachers. We have authority from on high; but remember it is ours only so long as we are “faithful men.” And that means we hear the Word and believe from our hearts.

First let us be endowed with it, and then let us speak with authority.

ABRAHAM TALKS TO GOD

THE shadows of evening were growing deeper, and the stars were just beginning to dot the sky overhead. Betty and Bobby and Mother, their usual tasks all finished, had come out on the lawn to enjoy the first warm spring night.

Mother took her usual chair on the lawn, and the children seated themselves on the soft green grass at her feet. All three were silent at first as the hush of the evening folded them in its warm embrace. Betty and Bobby were unusually quiet, thought Mother. Most every evening their questions tumbled over one another.

"God knew how to make beautiful things," said Betty at last. "The sky looks just like a blue velvet cape dotted with diamonds."

"God can do anything," declared Bobby, who greatly admired strength and power, as most boys do.

"Yes," said Mother softly, "God can do anything. And He does so many good things for us we should never forget to thank Him."

"I wish we could talk to God face to face, Mother," sighed Betty. "Then we could be sure He heard us. How can He hear us when we kneel beside our beds at night to thank Him?"

"Well, Betty," answered Bobby, "If God is great enough to make a man like Adam, don't you think He's great enough to hear him when he talks to Him? 'Course He is!"

"You know, children, long, long ago there was a man who talked to God face to face," said Mother. "It was Abram whom we learned about last week. We have another story about him for Sunday school next Sunday."

"Tell us more about him, Mother," begged Betty. "I remember last week Mrs. Marsh told us that Abram was called the friend of God, because of all the people around him he was the only one who believed God."

"It must have been great for Abram to have God for his Friend," declared the practical Bobby.

"It was, and it's just as great, as you say, to have Him for your Friend today and just as easy, too," answered Mother. "All we need to do is to love Him and trust Him, as we do our earthly friends, only much more so. He is a much greater Friend because He never fails; He does all that He promises.

"But we must see what happened when Abram talked to his great Friend, or it will soon be bedtime and we will have to go in. Abram's name had been changed to Abraham, and that is what we shall call him now. As he sat in the door of his tent one still, hot noonday, he saw three men coming toward him. He went out to meet them and bowed before them. You know, the Easterners were very polite and always greeted a stranger very solemnly.

"Abraham invited them to rest under a big shade tree while he hurried to fetch water so they could wash their feet. For the sand would get into their sandals when walking in that country. Then he had Sarah make cakes for them, and he brought milk and butter and meat to add to the dinner. Remember, they were strangers to Abraham, but nothing was too much for the comfort of a guest.

"Before they left Abraham realized from something they said that God had sent them to him that day. For they told Abraham that he and Sarah were going to have a son to bring them happiness in their old age. Sarah couldn't quite believe it, but Abraham did. He knew that everything God promised always came true.

"Soon the three visitors started back toward Sodom, and Abraham walked a little way with them. As they went on into the distance, Abraham stood watching them. Soon he felt the presence of God before him, and he heard Him speaking to him."

Betty and Bobby, who had been just a little restless before this, were now as still as still could be. They fairly held their breath. Think of talking to God and God talking to you! Wouldn't it be wonderful and yet sort of strange?

"God told Abraham," continued Mother, "that He had planned a great and terrible thing. But it had to be done because the people were so wicked. They didn't believe God, and they had followed their own evil ways so long that they weren't fit to live.

"Tomorrow is Saturday, children, so you will have time to look for this story in your own little Bibles. You will find it in Genesis 18. And when you read the story you will see that Abraham was growing to be like the God he worshipped.

"God is a God of love and mercy and justice. Abraham was growing to be just such a person, and though he knew God was right in planning as He did, yet he begged that the life of every good person should be spared. And now it's time to go to bed," finished Mother.

And so we say good night to Betty and Bobby and Mother.

A WORD OF APPRECIATION

Our assistant treasurer, Arlen Marsh, upon whom devolves the responsibility of seeing that taxes, paper bills, and salaries are met as they fall due, has been confined to his home the past week with illness, but has kept in touch with the results that have come from his recent appeal to the brethren to aid him in meeting various pressing expenses. He wishes to thank those who have so quickly responded to his appeal and to assure them that if a few more will show as great a willingness to respond to our need at this time, we will soon be relieved from our immediate embarrassment. Will some who have not yet done so send in something to help in this matter? We are sure you will.

WHAT'S THE ANSWER?

Where is it said that "cleanliness is next to godliness"? If you fail to find it in the Bible look in next week's paper. Don't forget! It'll be there!

MY MOTHER—DAUGHTER—FRIEND

In renewing or discontinuing subscriptions to The Restitution Herald, or in ordering a change in the address to which the paper is to be sent, please do not say, as many do, "Please change the address of my daughter's paper to 000 Hick Street, Timbuku."

The bookkeeper who handles our mail is frequently one who is not acquainted with you and your family. He does not know your daughter's married name, nor that of your mother. Neither does he know the past address of either. In order to make such changes of address or give proper credit for renewals sent in we MUST have each time the full name and previous address of the person concerned in the transaction.

IT HAPPENED IN IOWA A LONG TIME AGO

The following "Conference Notice" is taken from The Herald of the Coming Kingdom, edited by Thomas Wilson and George Moyer in Chicago, under date of August 15, 1868.

"To the Brotherhood of the State of Iowa. The annual meeting of the Church of God in the State of Iowa will be held in Waterloo, in Blackhawk County, commencing on Thursday evening, Sept. 24, and continuing over the following Sunday. Waterloo is on the Dubuque & Sioux City Railroad, the first station east of Cedar Falls. We hope to see a general attendance of the brethren from all parts of the State." (Signed) R. J. Hill, Secretary.

Nearly twenty years before, the present Iowa Conference was organized at Watkins Well, Iowa held an "annual" conference at "Waterloo" under the name "Church of God."

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

Plans are already under way for the eleventh anniversary celebration of the building of South Lawn church. The date this year will fall on the week-end of October 22-24. Bro. C. E. Randall, pastor of our Fonthill, Welland, and Niagara Falls churches has been secured as guest speaker. Our church wishes to extend this early invitation to the brethren everywhere to plan now to spend this week-end with us.

The ladies' organizations are busy at this season. The Doreas group is working out a program of worth while activity for the summer months, and the Morning Star Sunday school class is laying plans for the annual mother-daughter banquet in May.

We were delighted to welcome to our services on Sunday, April 11, Sr. Minnie Porter of the South Bend, Ind., church, and a friend who accompanied her.

Bro. and Sr. Cecil Smead of Blanchard, Mich., were welcome guests at a church gathering recently.

Bro. Jerry Keyes continues to be in very poor health. We ask God's comfort and peace for him and his faithful wife.

The rest of the church family for the most part are enjoying a portion of health and many rich blessings, for which we praise our heavenly Father. F. E. Siple, Pastor.

CORVALLIS, OREGON

Jean, daughter of Bro. and Sr. H. D. Hathaway, suffered the misfortune of a broken nose while playing ball last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur H. Tremaine and sons left several weeks ago to locate in California, probably in or near Los Angeles.

Sr. Gross and daughter Patricia have moved from their home in Salem and are staying with Sr. Gross' parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. Kerr. Mr. Gross, who is attending law school at Willamette University, will join his family as soon as school is out.

Carl Barber recently returned from Seattle, Wash., where he completed a course in Diesel engineering.

The Clarence Green family who reside at Wilamina, Ore., and who are newcomers to the State, spent Sunday at De Lake where they visited Sr. Sarah Smith and family. We hope that they will drive to Corvallis for Sunday services soon. Gladys Barber.

HERALD RECEIPTS

Ada Simpson; Glen Hoffman; Alma B. Steffa (for self and others); Russell Harmon; Mrs. F. M. Cawby; Mrs. Charles Jewell; Lia Kirkpatrick (for others); Mrs. Mabel E. Dickinson (for others); Walter Owens (by another).

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Renewing her subscription to The Herald, Sr. Charles Jewell of Florida kindly says with regard to the paper, "I could not get along without it. It is growing better every week." She also expresses her regret to learn of Sr. Mary A. Gesin's illness and hopes for her complete and speedy recovery.

The editor left Monday evening for Chicago and St. Louis, Mo., where he is to begin a series of meetings on Tuesday night. During his absence his pulpit in Oregon will be filled by one or more of our student ministers in attendance at Aurora College, and by Bros. Paul C. Johnson and Harold Hardesty of the home church.

We are delighted to report that Sr. Mary A. Gesin, beloved editor of the Children's Page, is recovering her health and has taken over her usual work on behalf of the little folks. During her absence, Mrs. Grace M. Marsh, who was the first editor of the page devoted to boys and girls, assumed the position.

In a recent issue of The Ripley Evangelist, its editor, Pastor Harvey Krogh, Jr., said: "We tithe because we love the Lord and have found it to be the simplest and most convenient way to show our appreciation for His material benefits." Love for God is the one great motive behind all Christian service."

During the illness of Bro. Arlen Marsh, William Nedrow of our Oregon young people's group is doing the bookkeeping and assisting generally in the office,

Bro. Walter Randall and family have moved from Mora, Minn., to Eden Valley, according to The Assistant Pastor, published at the latter place.

The Visitor, local bulletin of the Church of God at Burr Oak, Ind., comes out this month with an especially attractive cover page which bears this striking statement: "Great Britain is nervous! Why? Italy's Il Duce shouted: 'We rear on sea, in the sky, and on land!' Is this what John saw? Babylonian power is soon to grip the world."

And speaking of the Burr Oak church, the congregation is rejoicing over the completion of its new basement, which provides space for the younger classes of the Sunday school and gives the older ones upstairs a chance to expand more comfortably.

The office enjoyed a brief call from Pastor Harvey Krogh, Jr., of Ripley, Ill. Bro. Krogh had been called back to his former charge for the funeral of Sr. Frank Switzer. The sermon was given by Bro. L. E. Conner and Bro. Krogh contributed several comforting vocal numbers to the service, both at the home and at the church in town. Obituary will follow.

We copy this from our files of The Herald of April 24, 1918: "We learn that Bro. and Sr. Eckert of Dixon, Ill., have taken a little girl into their home and named her Mary Jane. It is just like their good spirit to do this. We trust the little one may bring to the home corresponding joy."

MOOREFIELD, NEBRASKA, MEETINGS

The Church of God at Moorefield, Neb., had the opportunity recently of hearing Bro. Willie McKnight, formerly of that community, but now a student in Aurora College, give a short series of discourses before his home people.

The meetings began on April 4 and concluded with an all-day gathering, Sunday, April 11. On that day the pastor of the church, Elder E. E. Giesler, spoke in the afternoon, Bro. McKnight filling the pulpit in the morning and evening. The attendance was said to have been good, some driving from a distance to be present.

Bro. McKnight was accompanied by his wife, being enabled to visit the brethren and friends in Nebraska during the spring vacation period.

"Our prayer is," writes our correspondent, "that some may have been drawn closer to the Lord and have had their faith strengthened by the services."

VOICE OF THE ELDERS

Another splendid number of Voice of the Elders reaches us. This little paper gotten out in the interest of the elders of the Church of God everywhere, always has much that is of value to those who occupy the pews as well as to those who stand in the pulpits of our churches.

On its first page, the Voice of the Elders offers "A Recommendation" to the ministers that is applicable to every lay member of the church as well: that is, that we would do well to intensify our zeal for the salvation of men.

The church has two tasks to perform, the first of which is to "go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature"; the second, to build up and strengthen the spiritual life of those who have already believed and obeyed the glad tidings of the kingdom of God. Neither should be neglected.

On the editorial page, President C. E. Randal of the Ministerial Association calls impressive attention to the blessedness of experiencing what he terms the "illuminated life." By this expression he means that deep, heart-satisfying sense of fellowship with God which flows from complete consecration to Him.

In the "Problem Corner" the question is asked, and answered scripturally, "Should discipline be practiced by the church?" The obligation of enforcing moral discipline on the members of the body is insisted upon.

The answer to last week's question: Mark 3:17.

NEW LOS ANGELES CHURCH PROGRESSING

According to the following report the Church of God in Los Angeles will soon be in its new church building. During the many years in which the brethren of that western city have carried on their work so zealously they have labored under the disadvantage of having no house of worship of their own, but it is now expected that the structure which is in process of erection will be ready for occupancy by the middle of next month.

Sr. Laura H. Bleasdale, secretary of the congregation, reports other recent happenings on behalf of Pastor Emma C. Railsback.

"At the request of the pastor I am sending you a short account of last Sunday's meeting and the progress of the new church.

"As is the custom on the first Sunday of the month, the out-of-town members from Riverside, Redlands, and cities nearer by were present. The service was brightened by a vocal duet by Sr. Verna Rahn and daughter Charlotte and by a solo by Mr. Olsen. These pleasing numbers, together with Sr. Railsback's sermon on 'Random Thoughts About Israel,' repaid all who made any great effort to be present.

"After the Communion service, nearly all of the congregation went to the new church, where the new building was thoroughly examined, discussed and admired, after which a picnic lunch was served.

"The church will not be finished until about the middle of May, but as the walls, partitions, roof, and floors were in place, a fair estimate of the general appearance could be made.

"Sr. Railsback is receiving substantial letters of congratulation in every mail and she wishes to express to all who have thus shown their interest and cooperation in this effort the hearty thanks of the membership and herself."

OREGON AND WASHINGTON

The Northwestern Conference met March 19-21, at Corvallis, Ore.

The speakers present were Bros. A. L. Corbaley, A. W. Darby, and H. J. Prosser. Their subjects were concerning the kingdom soon to be established on the earth, the warning signs for the church in world events, and the ever-beautiful message of Israel.

The social hour program on Sunday afternoon included talks by Bro. and Sr. T. J. Ellis and Elder Herbert Armstrong, pastor of the Seventh Day Church of God at Eugene, Ore., who told of his radio work. Elder Armstrong broadcasts a sermon every Sunday morning at ten o'clock from radio station KORE in Eugene. It is also released through stations KSLM, Salem, and KXL in Portland, Ore. S. P. Baker offered prayer.

Visitors included Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Ellis and Mr. and Mrs. Eldridge Ellis, Jennings Lodge; A. W. Darby, Gresham; H. J. Prosser, Newport; Elder and Mrs. Armstrong and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Fisher, Mr. and Mrs. S. P. Baker, and Minnie Rogers, all of Eugene; and A. L. Corbaley of Puyallup, Wash. We were very glad to have these old friends with us again and to welcome the Ellis family who are newcomers to Oregon.

The next meeting will be the annual conference which will be held at Felida, Wash., probably in June. We are hoping that every member will cooperate to help make this meeting an unusually interesting one. We have already had offers to help along with the program from some of the isolated members and we are sure that if each one does his part, the conference will be a success.

Pray for us, that we may be loyal workers for the Master in the fields where we have been placed. The neglect of one member to use his talent or to fail to support the local work weakens the whole body.

Gladys Barber,
Secretary Northwestern Conference.

AURORA COLLEGE NOTES

Beginning April 12 and continuing through until April 18, Aurora College will devote itself to open house activities on the campus, celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of the coming of the school to Aurora.

Six days will be given over to the activities which include one lecture of Dr. Arthur H. Compton, internationally famous scientist; another by Dr. John Dale Russell, University of Chicago educator who was recently appointed to President Roosevelt's commission on the study of vocational education; evenings devoted to drama, music, sound pictures of scientific achievement, climaxed with a community service emphasizing the Christian foundations of education.

The school which is now Aurora College was started as Mendota Seminary on January 3, 1893. Within one year the curriculum was enlarged and the name of the institution changed to Mendota College. When it outgrew its accommodations, steps were taken to erect more suitable and commodious buildings, but the question of a new location arose.

After much discussion concerning which of four cities to choose, Aurora finally won through the invitation and persuasion of five of her leading citizens who made the trip to Mendota to secure the school. William George contributed one block of ground and other citizens of Aurora subscribed several thousand dollars to purchase additional ground and to assist in the erection of the new buildings. The work of construction was rushed rapidly. Ground was broken on May 31, 1911. More than one thousand persons gathered on a hot Saturday afternoon, July 22, to participate in the cornerstone ceremonies. On April 3, 1912, with the building ready for occupancy, the students and faculty arrived in Aurora. Five days of dedication services were held October 2-6, climaxed by the raising of the last dollar necessary to free the buildings from debt.

Since 1912 the school has developed steadily. Aurora College is recognized by the State Department of Public Instruction in Illinois as a qualified institution for the preparation of teachers in the upper grades and high school, and is accredited by the University of Illinois as a four-year college of Class B.

Arthur Mills, of the Church of God group of students, and Mark Trumbo have returned from their trip to the Cooperative Farm project in Clarksdale, Miss.

REFLECTIONS OF GREAT MINDS

"Think on these things."—Paul.

"The efficacy of religion lies precisely in what is not rational, philosophic, or eternal; its efficacy lies in the unforeseen, the miraculous, the extraordinary. Thus religion attracts more devotion according as it demands more faith—that is to say, as it becomes more incredible to the profane mind. The philosopher aspires to explain away all mysteries, to dissolve them into light. Mystery on the other hand is demanded and pursued by the religious instinct; mystery constitutes the essence of worship, the power of proselytism. When the 'cross' became the 'foolishness' of the cross, it took possession of the masses."—Amiel.

most clearly "is that the Decalogue (the Ten Commandments) is no longer the standard of human morality, and that Christian liberty is not to be bounded by its prohibitions or by any sacerdotal code of ethics founded on these."

In this conclusion Milton is in almost unique agreement with the long-maintained thought of the Church of God. Most Protestant churches apparently look upon the Ten Commandment law as binding upon Christians as it was binding upon Israel before Christ came into the world.

While the Church of God has ever held that the great principles of morality contained in the Decalogue are included in the standard established by Christ, we deny that such "works of righteousness" are produced in the believer through fear of punishments attached to the infraction of the law, but that they are inspired by "faith that works by love." The follower of Christ strives for righteousness because he delights in righteousness and finds his greatest satisfaction and pleasure in doing God's will.

MILTON DENIED THE IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL

One of the most astonishing statements contained in the "Treatise of Christian Doctrine" has to do with the beloved poet's attitude toward what might be termed a cardinal tenet of orthodoxy and the cornerstone in the foundation of every false religious system the world has known--the doctrine of the immortality of the soul.

Regarding this vitally important subject Dr. Masson affirms that Milton in his treatise holds that "the soul of man is not something distinct from the body of man and capable of existing apart, but is actually bound up with the bodily organism. Therefore, when the body dies, the soul dies also" (the italics are mine) "and the whole man ceases to exist."

To those of the Church of God, who depend for their knowledge of the nature of the soul upon the Bible only, this conclusion is necessarily true; but to the majority of professed Christians it would appear heterodox or even actually heretical. We realize, of course, that few people study the Scriptures for themselves. They depend upon their "spiritual leaders" to interpret it for them. Or, to speak properly, they rest their hope of salvation in men's analysis of what constitutes the basis of saving faith as that faith has been crystallized in ancient creeds.

Milton, deriving his "system of divinity directly from the Bible," believed most firmly that "the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man"—this earth-formed, earth-bound creature—"became a living soul" (Gen. 2:7). He accepted, as a demonstrable truth, the fact revealed by God concerning man's nature and destiny: "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return" (Gen. 3:19). He insisted, "therefore, (that) when the body dies, the soul dies also, and the whole man ceases to exist."

He found ample support for this unique conclusion in many places in the Word, as for example, Ezekiel 18:4, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die"; and Ecclesiastes 9: 4-6, 10, where the inspired writer declares that "the living know that they shall die: but the dead know not any thing. . . . Also their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished."

MILTON BELIEVED IN A LITERAL RESURRECTION

In harmony with his conviction that the soul is at present mortal, subject to actual death, John Milton held that "the immortality revealed in the Scripture is, therefore, not a continued existence of the soul in an immaterial condition immediately after death, but a miraculous revival of the whole man, soul and body together, at the resurrection, after an intermediate sleep."

What a glorious as well as reasonable hope that is—the hope which has sustained and comforted the Church of God in every hour of separation and sorrow! And how like the assuring words of Paul:

"I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep . . . For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words" (1 Thess. 4:13-18).

MILTON BELIEVED IN A KINGDOM ON EARTH

With the entire brotherhood of the Church of God, Milton looked forward to a resurrection, "a final judgment, a reign of Christ, and a glorification of the saints in a new heaven and a new earth," in which, Dr. Masson says, "Milton declares his absolute belief."

Dr. Masson's concluding comment is worthy of thoughtful pondering.

"Throughout the treatise, with all its differences from the orthodox interpretations of the Bible, nothing is more remarkable than the profoundness of the reverence avowed for the Bible itself. The very initial principle of the treatise is that, as the Bible is a revelation from God of things that man could not have found out for himself, all that the Bible says on any matter is to be accepted implicitly, however strange it may seem to the natural human reason.

"Hence in all these essentials of Christianity which consist in the doctrines of the fall of man, atonement by Christ, and restoration and sanctification through Christ only, Milton is at one with the great body of Christians.

"Altogether, what the treatise makes clear is that, while Milton was a fervid theist and a genuine Christian, believing in the Bible and valuing the Bible over all other books in the world, he was at the same time one of the most intrepid of English thinkers and theologians."

How inspiring it is to know that throughout the ages God has had faithful witnesses to His truth; that men of superb intellects, of profound learning, of deepest piety and godliness, have "earnestly contended for the faith" that is so dear to us today!

The Ministry of Comfort

By the Editor

I HAVE just returned from a funeral—a baby's funeral. It was that of the five-months-old son and only child of a Roman Catholic. According to the death certificate the little one was "baptized" by a priest in the Catholic hospital where he was born. I was asked to officiate because I had conducted a similar service for the child's aunt, a Presbyterian, something more than a year ago.

On Wednesday I preached a funeral sermon for a man seventy-one years of age, who had made no religious profession, but whose relatives were of still another denomination. Day after tomorrow I will comply with the request of a sorrowing family that has lost a father, brother, uncle—a man seventy-seven years old at the time of his death. He was not a member of any church. His children are professed Christians, but not associated with the Church of God.

Three funerals in a single week in a small community conducted by the pastor of the Church of God, and not one of them for a member of our denomination nor are their bereaved families associated with us in any way!

This is by no means a unique record for ministers of our church. After many years of observation and experience we find that as a rule the pastor of the Church of God is in greater demand as a "Minister of Comfort" than any other preacher in his community. Often we are told that the one who has answered the final summons left a request months in advance of his death that a minister of our denomination should be called for the funeral service. And, strangely enough, such requests come quite as frequently from members of other churches as they do from those who have never made a religious profession. Orthodox Jews, Roman Catholics, Lutherans—members of nearly all denominations, have at one time or another asked us to conduct the last rites for their beloved dead.

In very few communities are we looked upon as a "popular" church. And yet there can be little doubt but that our preachers generally are personally "popular" as "Ministers of Comfort" in times of sorrow and distress.

Perhaps the strangest thing about the whole situation is that the most unpopular doctrine we hold, the one which is the most bitterly opposed by other churches, that of the mortality of man and our dependence upon a resurrection from the dead for eternal life, seems to be the very thing that appeals most strongly to those who mourn the loss of loved ones! When death strikes down a dear one, finespun theories no longer suffice. The reality of death is too evident for the bereaved family to trust in the poet's vain imaginings—that "there is no death"! Death is present in all its stark reality. Icy features, unseeing eyes, unhearing ears, and motionless hands all testify with an eloquence which cannot be denied that "the dead know not any thing"!

There is little solace in the serpent's lie, "Ye shall not surely die," when death actually comes into the homes of men. His assertion is too obviously false. Nothing but truth, unmistakable truth, can give strength to the anguish-weakened hearts of those who meet the "last enemy" face to face!

And that, I am convinced, is why even the worldly find something of comfort in the funeral sermons of our faithful ministers of the Word.

Knowing the preachers of the Church of God as we do, we feel sure that they will hold out no false or misleading hopes on such solemn occasions. They will not assure the sorrowing that their loved ones are in heaven and better off than they ever were before! (Few ministers of any church do that any more. Perhaps it is because they no longer believe it.)

How many times have we said in the presence of such gatherings, addressing our words directly to the most deeply affected and concerned:

"Your dear one has not left you. He has not been taken from you. He is still here, just where you see him. In a little while we will take him to a (Please turn to page 11)

Peace Propaganda Dangerous To Germany

"The ambassadors of peace shall weep bitterly."—Isaiah 33:7.

BERLIN, Germany, April 7.—Addressing from the bench Kremer Zu Remscheid who, with seven other Germans, was on trial for high treason charged with subversive attempts to form a Communist-Catholic united front and with spreading "peace propaganda" by means of the "peace union" he headed at Duesseldorf, the presiding judge said:

"Did it ever occur to you that the repeated stressing of the peace idea would bring about refusals to perform military service in case of war?" The defendant denied that such would be the result.

Germany is not the only nation that fears the effect of peace teaching on its plans for aggressive military activity. Even in such peace-loving countries as the United States and Canada, we not infrequently hear the fear expressed that national security may be undermined if our citizens are continually taught that wholesale murder, even when prompted by patriotic motives, is not only wrong but actually sinful in the sight of God.

Railroad System Given to Charity

"The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof."—Psalm 24:1.

MUNCIE, Ind., April 8.—George A. Ball, manufacturer of the Ball Mason glass jars used extensively in home canning, today turned over to a trust which was organized for a purpose set forth as "religious, educational, and charitable," his entire holdings in the common stock of the Mid-America Holding Company which controls the vast old Van Sweringen railroad system and includes several of the largest railways in the United States. The stock thus placed at the disposal of the charitable trust consists of 14,050 shares out of a total of 15,000 shares of the common stock of the holding company and is valued at more than $8,500,000.

Few wealthy men have looked upon their fortunes as coming from God and upon their own position as that of custodians of the treasures He has provided. There would be much less social unrest and dissatisfaction if more rich men would recognize the fact that all good things are gifts from above and have been provided for the blessing of all mankind.

Ghost Fails to Keep Appointment

"The man . . . shall remain in the congregation of the dead."—Proverbs 21:16.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, April 14.—Another ghost has failed to keep an appointment! A year ago attention was called to the failure of Harry Houdini, the famous magician who died in 1926, to manifest his presence to his wife at any of the ten annual trysts which she attempted to keep with him. He had arranged with Mrs. Houdini and several close friends to attempt to get into communication with him after death and pledged himself, that if it were at all possible, he would make himself known to them on the anniversary of his death. The agreement was faithfully kept by the living, but the dead magician did not succeed in materializing himself or establishing the fact that he was even alive "in the spirit world" on any occasion. Howard Thurston, another magician, we are told made a similar compact and he has also failed to prove to his sorrowing friend who awaited hopefully for such evidence, that he is still living. The news report, which establishes the truth of the biblical dictum that "the dead know not any thing," is as follows:

"Howard Thurston's spirit failed yesterday to strike a magician's wand from the hand of a friend who knelt before his tomb in fulfillment of a secret pact.

"Claude D. Noble of Detroit, administrator of Thurston's estate, wiped tears from his eyes as he rose from the floor of Greenlawn Cemetery Abbey and remarked, 'I am sorry, but not disappointed. Neither Howard nor I ever believed in spiritualism, but he was deeply interested in trying to discover true phenomena.

"My pact is over, but I'll try next year, and the next, just to make sure.'

"Thurston, Columbus-born showman who died exactly one year ago, made twenty-four agreements with friends to try to communicate with him after death.

"In New York, another old friend, Joseph Dunninger, reported that his pact, too, had proved unsuccessful. Thurston's spirit had not broken the glass case which inclosed an image of the Egyptian Pharaoh, Rameses II."

What Would You Do?

The Young Man

* * * *

By James A. Patrick

THE character of the young man brought before us by our editor, whether real or imaginary, is a difficult one with which to deal. He will neither read the Bible nor tracts, nor talk on religious subjects. How is he to be approached?

It seems to me there are two avenues of approach, one his love of mechanics and the other his love of nature. I realize this is a difficult problem and that it may be solved only after much prayerful consideration.

We will call him John, and I am Jim. I will have a little talk with him. We are in a print shop where there are many different machines working.

Jim: "John, I would like to have you show me over this shop if you have the time."

John: "I have a little spare time and will be glad to show you around."

Jim: "Well, John, I have enjoyed looking at those wonderful machines at work. Those typesetting machines seem almost as if they could think and reason; and that big press that prints five colors at one run is a wonderful machine. It must have taken the mind of an inventive genius to have brought such a wonderful piece of machinery into existence. The inventor must have had a complete picture of it in his mind before he could begin to draw his plans."

John: "Yes, it must have taken a wonderful mind to make such machines."

Jim: "Now, John, there is one more excursion I would like to make with you."

John: "Where do you want to go?"

Jim: "Out in the woods. We are both lovers of nature, and I would enjoy a trip with you out in the open spaces."

John: "Well, how about Saturday afternoon?"

Jim: "That suits me fine. I'll call for you at two o'clock so we will have plenty of time."

John: "Okey. So long, Jim."

Jim: "Good bye, John."

Jim: "Well, here we are! You know, there isn't anything I enjoy much better than meandering through the woods like this. Just look at these beautiful roses. You know, John, their mechanism is about as intricate as that of those machines we looked at in the print shop."

John: "Yes, it is. More so, if there is any difference. I have often wondered how they could take the elements from the soil, water, and air and turn them into these wonderfully beautiful delicate tints in their coloring."

Jim: "Yes. And I have often wondered how they came to be as they are. Those machines we looked at couldn't have come by chance, could they?"

John: "No. But scientists have explained how life came upon the earth and how plants and animals have come up from the lower forms through a natural course of development. In fact, the theory of evolution explains all that."

Jim: "Does it? Does it explain those things to your entire satisfaction?"

John: "Yes, so far as I have given them any thought. I haven't thought about them very much."

Jim: "John, did you ever stop to think that the forces of nature cannot, and never could, bring into existence the simplest plant cell?"

John: "Now, Jim, you must be joking. Scientists have proved that you are wrong."

Jim: "Yes, they have proved it to their own satisfaction and to the satisfaction of those who, like yourself, have taken their word for it without any investigation. I said a moment ago that it was impossible for nature to produce the simplest plant cell; and that is because nature hasn't any of the material out of

WHAT WOULD YOU DO?

In the accompanying articles, James A. Patrick (whose article was the winning one in the contest), Mae Mercer, and Lulu Johnson give their answers to the following question:

"Suppose you have a friend whom you regard highly and in whose salvation you are deeply interested. Your friend is a young man of excellent character, honest, industrious, and respected by all who know him, but he is entirely indifferent to religion. His family background, while not irreligious, was not religious. He is not given to reading, either of books or newspapers, and much less the Bible. You know you cannot induce him to study for himself, to read tracts or other religious literature. It is a bore for him to attend church or Sunday school. He is interested in mechanics and enjoys being out-of-doors. While kind in his attitude toward all, he is very decided in his refusal to talk on religious subjects.

"What would you do under such circumstances? Would you forego all further efforts to bring him to faith and obedience to Christ, or would you try new and different methods to arouse his interest in spiritual things?"

John: "What do you mean when you say nature hasn't any of the material out of which plants are made?"

Jim: "Plants are made up of wood fiber, carbohydrates, chlorophyll, etc. Are any of these things found in the soil, water, or air?"

John: "N-no, I guess not."

Jim: "You don't need to guess about it, John. You know those elements are not found in nature at all except in the plant. How could nature build the plant, not having any of the material of which it is made?"

John: "But the elements that go to make up wood fiber and these other elements are in the soil, water, and air."

Jim: "To be sure they are. I'm very glad you made that statement. Now, how and where does nature combine the elements that go to make up the plant?"

John: "Wh-why, in the plant I suppose."

Jim: "Yes, and the plant is the factory in which these elements are combined. Could the combinations be made till the factory was in complete working order?"

John: "B-but how could that be? How could the plant be there, if nature couldn't make it?"

Jim: "How could those typesetting machines and presses come into existence before they could begin to print a paper?"

John: "When we were looking at those machines, we agreed that some one had a wonderful mind that made them."

Jim: "If there had to be an inventive mind before those machines could come into existence, do you think this wonderful mechanism could come into existence without a wonderful inventive mind?"

John: "Look here, Jim, you are bringing this round to be a religious discussion, and you know I never discuss religion."

Jim: "No, John, we are not discussing religion. And though we are not scientists, we are discussing a scientific subject that is so clear a child can understand it. And if our discussion leads us to religion, are you going to sidestep? That isn't like your straightforward way of doing things.

"However, our discussion has led us to the point where we are bound to admit that there is an inventive mind that has brought things into existence as they are. That inventive mind resides in the person of one we call God."

John: "Well, Jim, I've never heard the subject of religion approached in this way; and, besides, if your God is the cruel monster you make Him out to be, I don't want anything to do with Him."

Jim: "No, John, you have always heard the subject of religion approached from the sentimental standpoint; and while there is sentiment in Christianity, it is founded upon as sure a foundation as the print shop we were in a few days ago. But what do you mean—'cruel monster'?"

John: "You teach that your God is going to torture some people for all eternity. Isn't such a God a cruel monster?"

Jim: "Yes, John, such a God would be a cruel monster. But you never heard me teach such a doctrine, did you?"

John: "No, but I supposed you were like all the other preachers. The most of them teach that doctrine, don't they?"

Jim: "Yes, but the Bible doesn't teach it, and I try to teach what the Bible teaches. The Bible says, 'The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.'"

John: "Do you mean to say that the Bible doesn't teach the eternal torment doctrine?"

Jim: "Yes, John, I mean to say just that. The Bible says, 'God is love.' Could a God of love torment any of His creatures for all eternity and still be 'love'?"

John: "No, certainly not. But your approach to this subject is so different from that of any I have ever heard, that I will have to have a little time to think it over."

Jim: "All right, take some time to think it over, but remember that time is precious."

Jim: "Good morning, John, I haven't seen anything of you lately. Have you been thinking of the subject about which we were talking?"

John: "Have I? I haven't thought of much else!"

Jim: "Well, what are your conclusions?"

John: "I have come to the conclusion that the scheme of things as they are must have a God back of it all. And since you say the Bible teaches that God is a God of love and not a cruel monster, I have come to the conclusion that the subject is worth careful consideration."

Jim: "Then I suppose you will be willing to study the subject with me, and try and find out what it takes to bring yourself into harmony with the God of whom you have just learned."

John: "Yes, Jim, I will, and I will be glad to have you for a teacher, and I am willing to do whatever is required of me in order to become a Christian."

And in this way I would lead the young man to a knowledge of God, whom to know is life everlasting.

What I Would Do in This Case

* * * *

By Mrs. Mae Mercer

IT SEEMS to me, if I had a friend who was not interested in religion, as you say, neither would read the Bible nor listen to anyone talk about God's wonderful plan of salvation, I would look upon it as a sign that he is not hungry for these things. He feels no need for them, so why persist in making him partake of them? He probably is like the child who refuses to eat what is needful for him, but when he gets hungry will cry out for this same life-giving food.

I would say in this case, Take him to the throne of grace in prayer that God will bring him to the place where he will realize his need for salvation and cause him to hunger and thirst after these things. The offer is to those who are athirst (Rev. 22:17).

There is nothing impossible with God (Luke 1:37), so if we have faith enough, God will hear the prayer of intercession and will bring him to the place where he will be really hungry for the bread of life (John 6:35).

I Would Depend Largely on Prayer

By Lulu Johnson

THERE is an incident recorded in 2 Samuel 12, which teaches the subtle art of causing one to confess his own sin before he realizes that he himself is the sinner.

David had sinned. The Lord sent Nathan with a parable of a rich man taking a poor man's only possession. David's anger was greatly kindled against such a man, until Nathan said, "Thou art the man." I don't believe anyone could have conceived of a better method to bring to David's mind his sin in its true light.

It seems to me this same method might be carried out with good results in the case of a very obstinate young man who doesn't care to discuss subjects of a spiritual nature.

He is no doubt a good friend to those he cares for and has a high standard of honor of treatment and dealings between man and man. What would he think of a man who is dependent upon a very kind, generous friend for all he has in life that is worth while? This noble friend continues to give and give, and this ungrateful fellow is willing to take and take. Yet he is so ashamed of this friend that he refuses to even mention his name, and it never occurs to him to show a particle of gratitude or offer any thanks for all his kindness. His generous friend is under no obligations whatsoever to him, yet he continues to befriend him.

The young man who refuses to talk on religious subjects, or have anything to do with any religious service, is exactly like this selfish young man. He enjoys outdoor life, the pure air, the sunshine, and growing things. Everything he comes in contact with are gifts from God. Yet his every action denies Him—he is ashamed of the Giver of such abundant gifts which he takes and takes without a word or thought of thanks.

People who will not read are a hard proposition. It is a difficult matter to instill the desire to study and read in one who cares nothing for it. Yet, if his views are not infidelic, it should be possible to cause him to ponder. Many seemingly impossible things become possible with faith and prayer. God and His truth are in everything. By using the simple things of life, the things which people love best and understand, it is often possible to reveal God and His goodness through them.

This young man is typical of many we would like to see interested in the truth. Prayer is first, last, and always our greatest help when trying to lead others. When our friends absolutely refuse to discuss the subject, then prayer is all we have left. When we have exhausted all our known resources God will find a way.

Modernism Has Failed

"MY SOUL, what a world, which the gentle modernism of my younger ministry, with its kindly sentiments and lush optimism, does not fit at all!" In these words one of America's outstanding modernist church leaders, now approaching sixty years, and with more than thirty years as a minister behind him, reveals his dissatisfaction with the movement of which he has been an important part.

Writing in the Christian Century, this veteran church leader brings against modernism four specific charges: It has concerned itself with the intellect, to the serious neglect of the heart; it has yielded to an illusory belief in inevitable human progress, with a consequent oversight of the sinfulness of sin; it has diluted the central message and distinctive truth of religion—the reality of God; and it has adjusted itself to the modes of modern culture, to the extent that it has lost its ethical standing ground and its power of moral attack.

The article concludes with this ringing statement: "This inescapable fact, which again and again in Christian history has called modernism to its senses, we face: we cannot harmonize Christ Himself with modern culture. What Christ does to modern culture is to challenge it."

Confessing that many times the modernist has diluted the thought of the divine to the point that souls have been left standing, like the ancient Athenians, before an altar to an unknown God, he continues: "On that point the church must go beyond modernism. We have been all things to all men long enough. We have adapted and adjusted and accommodated and conceded long enough. We have at times gotten so low down that we talked as though the highest compliment that could be paid to Almighty God was that a few scientists believed in Him. Yet all the time, by right, we had an independent standing ground and a message of our own, in which alone there is hope for humankind. The eternally real is the spiritual. The highest in us comes from the deepest in the universe. Goodness and truth and beauty are not accidents, but revelations of creative reality. God is! On that point come out from among them and be ye separate!"

THE FUTURE OF MODERNISM

It is a far cry from the optimistic and gentle modernism of the newly ordained young Baptist to the militant call of the veteran thirty years later, for a movement beyond modernism. For that matter, it is a far cry from the America of 1904 to that of 1936. This period of thirty-odd years has witnessed the transition from small to superindustrialization, from individualism to a materialistic and perhaps even mechanistic collectivism, from churches militantly opposed to certain theories of contemporary science to churches adjusted to those theories.

Modernists have long complained of the "bigotry" of the fundamentalists in refusing to swallow the evolution pill. But it is precisely from this source that modernism's aches have originated. True, the first effect of the pill was a feeling of well-being and fitness for twentieth-century living. But, like Alice's mushroom diet in Lewis Carroll's tale, it was difficult to control the effects. An immediate feeling of spiritual growth was succeeded by an unmistak-

Two Ways of Selling the Bible

FROM every corner of the country have been coming to the office of the American Bible Society inquiries from readers of the January issue of the Reader's Digest concerning the background of the article appearing therein, entitled "High Pressure in the Bible Belt." Because the American Bible Society is probably the largest distributor of Scriptures in the United States, and the article included some comprehensive figures concerning their manufacture and distribution, it was felt by many readers that the type of selling described would be confused with the missionary service of the American Bible Society. Because of this possible misunderstanding, the American Bible Society desires to state the facts.

There is no reason to mistrust the facts given in the Reader's Digest concerning the methods employed by the publishers described. Neither is there any reason to believe that the Reader's Digest has any desire to endorse such methods. There is rather every reason to believe that it is in hearty agreement with the American Bible Society in its condemnation of all such practices. Not infrequently does the Digest warn its readers against commercial sharpers and recommend the services of the Better Business Bureaus.

Quite apart, however, from the story of these high-pressure methods, the Digest article creates some impressions about general Bible distribution in the United States that are not warranted by the facts. It states, for instance, that five million Bibles are sold in the United States each year. Just where this figure was obtained is hard to discover. The commercial publishers, other than the Bible societies, do not publish their figures of sales. The only source from which the figure could have been taken is the United States Census of Manufactures. In 1931 this tabulation reported the manufacture in the United States of 4,676,680 Bibles and Testaments. This may be the basis for the round figure of 5,000,000 Bibles given in the article under review as being produced annually. But the figure itself is wrong. In the 1933 census, a partial correction was made in this 1931 figure, which then appeared as 1,376,680, the editors probably having discovered that the American Bible Society had in that year manufactured over 3,000,000 "portions" of Scriptures, for the most part individual copies of single Gospels which cannot be rightly classed as Bibles.

In another place the Digest article states that 134,000,000 Bibles have been distributed in this country by one agency alone. Although the agency is not named, it may be presumed to be the American Bible Society, since no other agency whose circulation is made public could approximate such a figure. But again the figure is wrong. It does not yield to even any plausible explanation like the one above. In the 120 years of its existence, the American Bible Society has issued 268,588,000 Bibles, Testaments, and portions in the United States and some forty other countries. That this figure is approximately twice the number given in the article is probably only coincidental. Of this total accumulated issue of 268,588,000 volumes, approximately 20,000,000 whole Bibles were distributed in the United States—an average of 166,600 a year.

There appeared in THE RESTITUTION HERALD of January 12, this present year, an article selected from Reader's Digest, entitled, "High Pressure in the Bible Belt." At the time of its publication the editor felt that there must be another side to the Bible-selling picture that would do credit to the conscientious efforts put forth by Christian men and women who were anxious to place the Word of God in the hands of humanity. We are glad, therefore, to present the following article by Francis Cörr Stifler, Editorial Secretary of the American Bible Society.

Reference is made toward the close of the Digest article to one canvasser who, in a city in New York State, in one year found one fifth of the 8,062 people he visited to be without Bibles. This statement contains figures found in the Annual Report of the American Bible Society for 1935. The Society's colporteur referred to traveled 13,400 miles in that year, chiefly in one county, and sold—in some instances donating—1,742 Bibles, 1,984 Testaments, and 17,484 Gospels and other portions. But this colporteur was an entirely different type of agent from those described in the Digest article. He is typical of hundreds of men who, representing the American Bible Society and its auxiliary societies over the country, are not interested in a "dotted line," but are missionaries eager to bear witness to what the Bible has done for them and for others and concerned that no man shall miss the chance to find guidance and hope in the supreme Book of mankind. The American Bible Society's Scriptures are for the most part well made, readable, but inexpensive books. They contain no explanatory notes. They are sold at cost and often below. Thousands of them are given away to those who suffer from disasters such as floods, fires, and earthquakes. The Bible Society's colporteur's task is a missionary task, not a commercial one. The American Bible Society was organized under the conviction that the Bible, unlike any other book, was a Book that should become the possession of every person, and that, therefore, no purpose of profit should retard its distribution.

Such figures as are available reveal that, although it is true that year in and year out the Bible is the "best seller," and is purchased by American people to the hundreds of thousands of copies, there are still hundreds of thousands—maybe millions—more to whom it must be taken and who must be persuaded that it is indispensable. That a corps of students is engaged in mock-persuasion in certain sections of the country is indeed deplorable, but their numbers are small compared with the great army of Bible Society agents, colporteurs, and correspondents, who for twelve decades have been pressing the claims of the Book of books upon those who do not know God's Word, with no thought of profit either to themselves or the American Bible Society. Those faithful agents labor to serve the single purpose of spreading the knowledge of salvation to the ends of the earth.—The Presbyterian.

What Is Man?

By T. A. Drinkard

"If a man die, shall he live again? all the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come."—Job 14:14.

MAN as he was could die. Man as he is does die. Man as he will be shall never die. Job presents a question that has confounded the wise men of all ages: "If a man die, shall he live again?" then affirms in no uncertain terms that he does die. Yet I meet those from day to day that affirm that there is no death, and what appears to be death is not death, but only transition.

It is written, "Man that is born of woman is of few days, and full of trouble. He cometh forth like a flower, and is cut down: he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not" (Job 14:1, 2).

Herein lies truth relative to the nature of man that forever refutes the theory of the present immortality of the soul. The expressions, "is of few days" and "continueth not," clearly indicate that man of himself does not possess an inherent life, nor life within himself independent of God.

Man, as he was created, was and is a material being. True it is that he has certain faculties, such as the mind and the power to reason; but the power to reason is the result of the proper functioning of the mind, and the mind is the result of a vitalized brain. Any injury inflicted upon the brain will cause a cessation of proper or normal thought. Take, for example, our insane institutions that are filled with those whose brains have become impaired to such an extent that normal thought is hindered. This fact alone should be enough to convince those who believe in the immortality of the soul that there is no such thing as an immortal entity dwelling on the inside of the material man. If such a theory is true, then why are so many people insane?

God organized matter as He saw fit, and He vitalized the brain of man in such a way that it produced thought and action. If thought is the product of an immaterial spirit that lives within us, then the material brain could not affect its functioning power. This is another fact that proves that our thoughts do not come from immaterial spirits. When the brain is injured seriously it causes consciousness to cease, and intellectuality comes to an end. The living brain is the center of all thought and action.

Viewing a man as he comes to the end of life and faces death, David said, "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish" (Psalm 146:4). (1) His breath goes forth; (2) he returns to the earth; (3) his thoughts perish. Such are the results of death.

In order to live we must breathe, and we could not do this unless the air encircled us. Therefore, our lives and our thoughts are the result of breathing the breath of life. But, as David affirms, when that breathing stops, our brain ceases to function, our thoughts perish, and we simply return to the earth from which Father Adam was made.

Here was a man who was "sick unto death," whose name was Hezekiah, and God sent him a message, saying, "Set thine house in order: for thou shalt die, and not live" (Isa. 38:1). So to die is not to live. This argument of the Prophet confuses the wiseacres who profess to be called and sent of God. And in the great judgment day they will say, "In thy name we have done many wonderful works." You may search diligently and you cannot find a human argument that can offset this declaration of God, "Thou shalt die, and not live." There is no eternal life in fact this side of the coming of Jesus Christ.

Again it is written, "In death there is no remembrance of thee" (Psalm 6:5). Why? Simply because death kills the activity of the brain, and the thoughts cease to function. It is "the living (who) know that they shall die: but the dead know not any thing" (Ecc. 9:5). If our thoughts were the product of an immaterial mind, of an immaterial entity that lived on the inside of our material bodies, then death would not affect their thoughts.

I have never been able to get even one to tell me just where these immaterial entities originated. With all the false teaching in the world is it any surprise that we see so much darkness in the religious field of thought?

Since the living know that they shall die, and since to die is not to live, and since in death all thoughts perish; therefore, when all thoughts perish the dead know nothing. Death does not mean for us a heavenly home. It simply means an end of life as we have it now. In death "the wicked cease from troubling; and there the weary be at rest. There the prisoners rest together; they hear not the voice of the oppressor. The small and great are there" (Job 3:17-19).

Job said to his God, "Now shall I sleep in the dust; and thou shalt seek me in the morning, but I shall not be" (Job 7:21). "In the morning" when God seeks for Job he said he would not be. Why, surely not, because he would be in the land of death. God will find him there and call him out of that long sleep of death and let him enjoy seeing the Son of God that died for him (Job 19:23-27). Job looked forward to this happy meeting, and so tells about it in his message.

When God created man of the dust He gave him the breath of life (Gen. 2:7). This breath of life is also called the "spirit" of God by Job, who says, "All the while my breath is in me, and the spirit of God is in my nostrils" (Job 27:3). Solomon so understood in this manner. And when he wrote his message in which he deals with the estate of man in death, he said, "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was: and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it" (Eccl. 12:7). Because it is said that "the spirit shall return unto God" is no proof that it returns to the immediate presence of God, any more than "There was a man sent from God" would indicate that John the Baptist came forth from the very presence of God (John 1:6). The spirit or breath of life is said to return, showing that it goes back, so to speak, to the great reservoir of life, returns to God's control and authority. What is the dust herein mentioned? It is the man of Genesis 3:19 and Psalm 146:4.

You will notice that the spirit is never said to return to heaven. Let us read: "And Moses returned unto the Lord" (Ex. 5:22). Was Moses ever in heaven in the immediate presence of God? God said to Israel, "Return unto me" (Jer. 4:1). Did Israel once live in heaven? Yet He said, "Return unto me." The context will determine the meaning in this instance.

Solomon did not mean to teach the mortality of man in Ecclesiastes 3:19, 20, and the reverse in chapter 12! A clergyman trying to answer my argument based on this passage said that Solomon did not know very much when he wrote the first eleven chapters, but he was speaking wisdom when he wrote the 12th chapter.

Discussing the question of death, Solomon says, "That which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other: yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no pre-eminence above a beast: for all is vanity. All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again" (Eccl. 3:19, 20).

This is the teaching of the Scriptures: the man that lives is the man that dies, and the man that dies is to be resurrected to life again. How? God knows, and in His hand abides that secret.

The answer to the question, "Where is it said that 'cleanliness is next to godliness'?" This statement is not found in the Bible, but was quoted from some unknown work by John Wesley in a sermon "On Dress."

MODERNISM DEFINES THE KINGDOM OF GOD

THE kingdom of God is made equal, by popular modernism, with an improved human society, Kellogg pacts, Locarno agreements, the League of Nations, social uplift, and the like. Similar identifications have been made in the past.

Dr. Walter Lowrie ("Religion or Faith") tells us that the Emperor Constantine found eschatology (that is, the teaching concerning last things) distasteful since it dimmed the glory of his (Constantine's) earthly achievements. It went so far that Constantine's court bishop, Eusebius, nearly succeeded by his schemings in excluding the book of Revelation from the canon. He wished no apocalyptic prophecy which could not point to fulfillment in Constantine and the kingdom of God he was erecting. "The Emperor it was that had trodden the dragon of paganism under his feet. By building a few churches in Palestine (he thought) he had perhaps realized the prophecy of the New Jerusalem, and by the bountiful banquets he provided for the bishops was fulfilling a promise of the celestial banquet of the kingdom of God. There was little doubt that the kingdom had come already."

Yet, in fact, Constantine's reign was the initiation of an apostasy that lasted to the Reformation. It was a fresh beginning of the kingdom of darkness. — Sunday School Times.

Henry Ward Beecher once said: "The church is not a gallery for the exhibition of eminent Christians, but a school for the education of imperfect ones."

FACING THE RUGGED PATH

I love my child, I note his slightest need;
I long to prosper him in all his ways,
To give him quiet nights and peaceful days;
But if I do, he'll lose himself from me—
My outstretched hand he will not wait to see.
I'll place a hindering wall before his feet;
There he will wait and there we two will meet.
I do it not with wrath for broken laws
Or willful disobedience, but because I want him nearer, and I cannot wait
For him to come, for he might wander late.
My child will wonder, will not understand,
Still half in doubt he'll clasp my outstretched hand;
But when at last upon my heart he leans
He will have ceased to wonder what it means.

The Blood Is the Life

By. Dr. A. Wallace Mason

BUT flesh with the life thereof, which is the blood thereof, shall ye not eat" (Gen. 9:4). "For the life of the flesh is in the blood: and I have given it to you upon the altar to make an atonement for your souls: for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul" (Lev.

17:11). "Without shedding of blood is no remission" of sins (Heb. 9:22). "Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness, and the first begotten of the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth. Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood" (Rev. 1:5).

It is evident from these quotations, first, that the life is in the blood; second, that according to God's plan of salvation there can be no remission of sins without the shedding of blood; third, that Jesus the Christ shed His blood for us upon the cross; fourth, "Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved" (Acts 4:12).

When we examine the circulation of the blood in a human being, we find that, to the ordinary observer, there are apparently two classes of blood passing through the veins and arteries. One is venous or dark blood, the other is arterial and bright as scarlet.

If a cut is made into the living body, the blood from a vein flows slowly, but that from an artery spurts. The arterial blood is being thrown from the heart, so to speak, to every part of the body, carrying in its stream life and health to all the tissues; while the veins are carrying back to the heart, and from there to the lungs, much of the waste material of the body. This waste material is being carried out in combination with the oxygen that has been brought in with the arterial blood, and which has bathed every tissue of the body. And when this oxygen combines with the waste material of the body, then the blood assumes the dark color.

This dark blood, as I have said, goes to the lungs, where the waste material is thrown out through the breath and the pure oxygen of the atmosphere comes in and combines with the blood corpuscles and makes them of a bright scarlet color again.

This process of circulation and purification of the blood has to go on constantly. If the air is cut off for a few minutes from any breathing creature, it will die.

Roughly speaking, the atmosphere is composed approximately (there is a fraction which we need not mind at present), of 21 parts of oxygen and 79 parts of nitrogen. There are traces of other substances, even in the purest air on a hilltop, and much more in the air in cities. But the purer

The following instructive article is taken from the files of The Restitution, which have been kindly supplied by friends in response to the editor's request. Such literary contributions as this are worthy of preservation for much longer periods than those usually accorded the material published in a weekly paper. This article originally appeared August 16, 1911.

the air, the better it is for living beings.

As far as it is known at present, the nitrogen is not used in the living being but is thrown out again with the breath; but the oxygen is absolutely essential to life.

We are told in the Scriptures that God breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul (Gen. 2:7), or living being.

And then we have this statement concerning mankind which had grievously transgressed God's laws: "And, behold, I, even I, do bring a flood of waters upon the earth, to destroy all flesh, wherein is the breath of life, from under heaven; and every thing that is in the earth shall die" (Gen. 6:17). Later we are told that "all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beast, and every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, and every man: all in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land, died" (Gen. 7:21-25).

Notice that the writer is careful to state that "all that was in (or on) the dry land, died." God stopped the breath of all those, both men and animals alike, who lived by inhaling the oxygen in the atmosphere.

The word translated "breath" in the 6th and 7th chapters of Genesis is the Hebrew word ruach. The translators of the so-called King James Version have rendered this word variously, "breath," "spirit," "wind," "mind," "blast," "courage," "anger," "quarters," "vain," "air," "tempest," and "whirlwind."

There are some very important passages in this connection: "Behold, I will cause breath (ruach) to enter into you, and ye shall live. . . . And I will . . . put breath (ruach) in you, and ye shall live. . . . But there was no breath (ruach) in them. . . . Then said he unto me, Prophecy unto the wind (ruach), prophesy, son of man, and say to the wind (ruach), Thus saith the Lord God; Come from the four winds (ruach), O breath (ruach), and breathe upon these slain that they may live. So I prophesied as he commanded me and the breath (ruach) came into them, and they lived, and stood upon their feet, an exceeding great army" (Ezek. 37:5, 6, 8-10).

The Psalmist says, "Thou takest away their breath (ruach), they die, and return to their dust. . . . Thou sendest forth thy spirit (ruach) and they are created: and thou renewest the face of the earth" (Psalm 104:29, 30).

We have seen how God breathed into Adam the breath of life and he became a living being. Also how He took away the breath of all mankind except those who were in the ark, by covering them with the waters of the flood. All men and animals died alike, because the air was cut off from their nostrils. Both men and animals, then, can only continue to live so long as they are able to inhale the air or the blood is allowed to remain in their bodies. If either is withdrawn, men and animals die alike (Ecl. 3:19). Consequently the Scriptures and observation are against the idea of the immortality of the soul.

From the beginning, in God's dealings with men, after Adam's transgression, sacrifice of animals was commanded to be made, and all of these sacrifices of animals were typical of the sacrifice of Christ, or pointed forward to a spotless One who was to die, pour out His life's blood, for the sins of the world. Consequently even Christ could not have been an immortal being.

If He was the eternal God, the Second Person of the Trinity, as nearly all Christians claim that He was and is, then He could not possibly have "died for our sins according to the scriptures" (1 Cor. 15:3), nor could He have been tempted in all points as we are (Heb. 4:15).

"But Christ being come an high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building; neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us" (Heb. 9:11, 12).

Before Christ's death and resurrection He lived as we do, by inhaling the air to vivify His blood; and He lived by eating food, as we do, in order to make fresh blood to repair the waste.

But after His resurrection all the conditions of life were changed. He was no longer dependent for life upon breathing or eating or drinking or sleeping. While we know that He did some, if not all, of these things after His resurrection, He possessed a perfect and a deathless body which was unaffected by impure air, unweakened by lack of food, and not subject to disease. Hence He was capable of living forever without fear of death, and was qualified to assert with positive conviction: "Fear not; I am the first and the last: I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell (hades, the grave), and of death" (Rev. 1:17, 18). And we are able to say with equal conviction: "Now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the firstfruits of them that slept" (1 Cor. 15:20). In this is our assurance, our comfort, and our hope.

MODERNISM HAS FAILED

able shrinkage. And with it came the appalling realization that, modernism having adjusted itself to current scientific fads, the newer fads had moved on into other fields, requiring adjustments increasingly difficult.

Today the modernists themselves, seeing over their horizon social changes even greater than the scientific changes to which they are largely adjusted already, and beginning to be conscious of the enormous price they have paid for the modernizing treatment to this point, are suffering a revulsion as painful as the dilemma which faces them is great. Of this revulsion the article quoted above is an expression.

To have its face lifted, modernism has paid with the loss of the sense of the sinfulness of sin, with the loss of the sense of the character of God—perhaps even of His very existence—and with the loss of its power of moral attack. It has gained nothing but an untenable position. At a terrible cost it has adjusted itself to modern culture only to discover that "we cannot harmonize Christ Himself with modern culture." Now here is the dilemma: Shall modernism go on as a social religion with a social gospel and nothing else, or shall it look beyond modernism? And if beyond modernism, where can it look?

There is only one direction in which modernism can look and still call itself Christian. Conformity to modern culture leads to neopaganism. "Beyond modernism" must be seen to mean toward the Christ.

"Where is the wise?" asks the Apostle Paul, "where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this world? hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world? For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe. For the Jews require a sign, and the Greeks seek after wisdom: but we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumblingblock, and unto the Greeks foolishness; but unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God" (1 Cor. 1:20-24).

"We speak wisdom," Paul continues, "yet a wisdom not of this world, nor of the rulers of this world, who are coming to nought: but we speak God's wisdom" (1 Cor. 2:6, 7, A. R. V.).

The clearest lesson taught by history to the church is that compromise brings weakness, while a firm adherence to the eternal truths of the Bible brings strength. Let us by all means have an advance beyond modernism. But let it be a step toward the Master. And if the modernists object to fundamentalism because there have been stubborn and cantankerous fundamentalists who have belittled the real and worth while accomplishments of the age, let them remember that there are also leaders who, with a sure voice and with God's given wisdom, interpret the eternal truths of God in terms of current needs.

For it is here that the roads divide. Modernism adapts itself to modern culture until, its force and meaning lost, it has nothing but a social message. True fundamentalism takes to our generation the eternal plan of salvation, explaining that plan in terms of modern problems. Modernism adapts itself. Fundamentalism interprets, without attempting to change, God's message to man. Modernism says, "Be ye conformed." Fundamentalism says, "Be ye transformed." When we look beyond modernism and its social gospel, we see on the one hand chaos, and on the other hand the Rock of Ages. It is for the church to choose.—Keld J. Reynolds in Signs of the Times.

quiet place on the hillside and lay him down to rest in peace. We will draw the curtains of earth about him that he may not be disturbed by Time's thunderous passage in all the years to come. We will leave him there, without fear, under the eyes of God. He has passed out of our control, beyond the influence of our love and care. But we are not afraid for him. Whatever his destiny may be, and that is something which only God can determine, will be in keeping with the wisdom and righteousness of Him who made him. And what more could we ask than that?"

On occasions like those suggested here, when the Church of God minister is called upon to speak at the service of one who was not a professing Christian, who had not really believed the gospel and obeyed it in baptism, no false hopes of salvation should, of course, be held out. Any implication that might lead to such a conclusion should be avoided. At the same time the necessity seldom if ever arises when the minister in the interest of truth must state plainly that because the one now dead failed to embrace the gospel while he was alive, he is lost forever.

In our own experience we have found that the least said about the dead the better. God only knows them for what they really were. He is their Judge, not the minister who speaks at their funerals.

The purpose of the funeral discourse is to comfort and instruct the living. We should never forget this. We do not say "comfort" only, but "comfort and instruct"! The latter purpose is quite as important as the former; perhaps more so. And on such occasions the preacher is provided with one of the best opportunities he will ever have to present the attractive features of the gospel under the most favorable circumstances. The minds of his hearers are in a tender and receptive mood. The bereaved family and their sympathizing friends are hungering for something to assuage their grief, if not for the loved one who is dead, at least for themselves as they are faced with the proof of man's mortality.

This obvious fact, the mortality of man, has, of course, been strongly yet most kindly emphasized by the minister by quotations from the Word of God. His hearers and observers can see for themselves that what he has told them about death is true. And because they are thus gently forced to agree with him in this matter, they follow him more readily as he proceeds to point out the possibility of a resurrection from the dead for those who have believed and obeyed the gospel in life.

The funeral service is seldom the time (if such a time ever comes), for a minister to definitely attack the religious opinions of others. His duty on such occasions, as we have said, is to comfort and instruct the living in the most tender, sympathetic, and helpful way he can and remain true to his convictions.

We have learned that little is to be gained by violence and the arousing of antagonism at any time. But many sorrowing, truth-hungry hearts have been stimulated to earnest study to discover what the nature of man really is and to satisfy themselves as to the conditions by which eternal life may be obtained through funeral discourses that presented the truth in love and supported it strongly by ample scriptural references.

The Ministry of Comfort is one of the most blessed, fruitful, heart-satisfying services the Church of God minister is called upon to render. As a regular pastor, or as an evangelist, he invites the public to come and listen to his message; as a Minister of Comfort on a funeral occasion, the public not only invites the preacher to address them, but actually insists upon his doing so!

Furthermore, this self-invited audience brings with it a goodly number of men and women who could not be induced to come out to the regular services of the church. The interest of such people is often aroused and leads to their attendance at other times, thus providing the Minister of Comfort with an opportunity to become to them a Minister of Eternal Salvation as well.

THE WRECKER AND THE BUILDER

I watched them tearing a building down,
A gang of men in a busy town,
With a ho-heave-ho and a lusty yell
They swung a beam and a side wall fell.
I asked the foreman, "Are these men skilled
And the men you'd hire if you had to build?"
He gave a laugh and said: "No indeed!
Just common labor is all I need.
I can easily wreck in a day or two,
What builders have taken a year to do."
And I thought to myself as I went my way,
Which of these roles have I tried to play?
Am I a builder who works with care,
Measuring life by the rule and square?
Am I shaping my deeds to a well-made plan,
Patiently doing the best I can?
Or am I a wrecker, who walks the town,
Content with the labor of tearing down?

"Remember you were in those days outside Christ, aliens to the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers to the covenants of Promise, devoid of hope within the world. Whereas now, within Christ Jesus, you who once were far away have been brought near by the blood of Christ. For he is our peace, he who has made both of us a unity and destroyed the barrier which kept us apart. . . . Thus you are foreigners and strangers no longer, you share the membership of the saints, you belong to God's own household, you are a building that rests on the apostles and prophets as its foundation, with Christ Jesus as the corner-stone."—From Ephesians 2, Moffatt's Translation.

What You Say About It

A Non-Christian Answers

As told to Mrs. Mae Magnus, Detroit, Michigan.

Is it right to tithe with the idea that God will give us a material blessing in return?

Answer: "I do not know anything about that. What do you think?"

What are the things that destroy the feeling of reverence in church?

Answer: "Too much talk about money matters."

Is it possible to forgive those that wrong you?

Answer: "If you really want to you can forgive those that wrong you."

What is the worst sin possible?

Answer: "Well, I do not know what the worst sin is, but I believe every sin is bad, isn't it?"

Can my ordinary activities of life affect the eternal life of others?

Answer: "Yes, if church members don't do any different, what is the use to belong?"

Is it right to tithe with the idea that God will give us a material blessing in return?

DETROIT, Michigan.—Says Mrs. Mae Magnus, "Read the 3rd chapter of Malachi; there are many helpful messages on that subject in this chapter. The 10th verse says: 'Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it.' The Word also says, Proverbs 3:9, 10, 'Honour the Lord with thy substance, and with the firstfruits of all thine increase: so shall thy barns be filled with plenty.'

"I believe these promises teach us that we can expect a return material blessing from tithing. If we obey the things God asks us to do, then He does just as He has promised."

RIPLEY, Illinois.—Says Harvey Krogh, Jr., in The Ripley Evangelist: "You may believe it or not, but the question is, Will you try it? 'The tithe would make possible the speedy payment of all church debts, provision for all benevolences, proper equipment for church, Sunday school, social and community service, a living salary for every pastor, skilled and paid helpers for church enterprises, and the immediate evangelization of the world' (Luther E. Lovejoy). This is not the real reason for tithing. We tithe because we love the Lord and have found it to be the simplest and most convenient way to show our appreciation for His material blessings."

Is it possible for you to really forgive those who wrong you?

OREGON, Illinois.—Says Arlen Marsh: "Forgive? What? I've gotten too many other people into trouble to remember what they may have done to me. There are those with whom I can't work very well—I haven't much sympathy with chronic stupidity, for instance; but that's a matter of disposition more than of forgiveness."

DETROIT, Michigan.—Says Mrs. Mae Magnus: "Turn with me to Matthew 5:44-48. In these verses it tells us to love our enemies. Also, if we love those that love us, why, even the publicans do that. Matthew 6:15: 'But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses.' Here we must obey what God asks of us and He will forgive us. There are only two ways to follow: the way that leads to eternal life or the way that leads to eternal death.

"To be truthful with you readers and soldiers of Jesus, I tell you this is not always easy to do, to forgive those that wrong me. But when I am tempted to nurse a grievance against my fellow men, I ponder over some of the things I have done that brought grief to our Savior, and yet I expect Him to plead for me to the Father any time I ask. I then feel quite ashamed of myself, and that helps root out this bitterness. I believe if we all would strive to drive out bitterness we would be happier. I read in John 15:12 that we should love one another as Jesus has loved us. We cannot love one another with bitterness in our hearts. Hebrews 12:14: 'Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord.' May God help us to be more forgiving toward our fellow men is my prayer."

EDEN VALLEY, Minnesota.—J. R. LeCrone quotes a poet:

"In speaking of a person's faults,
Pray don't forget your own.
Remember those with house of glass
Should never throw a stone."

A New Berean Class

On Friday evening, April 8, a new Berean class was organized at Ponchatoula, Louisiana. The following officers were elected: president, Mrs. Ellen Williams; vice president, Mrs. Etta Bangston; secretary-treasurer, Miss Dorothy Foster. There were sixteen in attendance at the organization meeting, only six of whom were members of the Church of God. There seem to be good possibilities for growth in this class, and with the fine interest being shown we are sure the work will go forward.

A MAN WHO WOULD NOT QUARREL

"SOME of the boys had a terrible quarrel at school yesterday," said Bobby to Mother, as they rested one Saturday afternoon under the shade of the big maple on the lawn.

"How did it start?" asked Mother.

"Well," Bobby replied, "it was this way. They couldn't agree about which part of the playground should be theirs to play ball. Some of them wanted to play on one side of the schoolhouse and some on the other."

"And we girls had to stop playing," Betty joined in, "and just sit down in one corner under a tree."

"What did you do, Bobby?" asked Mother.

"Well, I just sat down on the steps and watched the fight until the bell rang," said Bobby.

"I'm glad you did that, Son," said Mother. "And I think you girls did the best thing, too, Betty. You might have been drawn into the argument and soon you would have been quarreling as bad as the boys. It's best just to stay out of such things.

"That is something like our lesson for tomorrow," continued Mother. "You remember that last week we learned how the three visitors sent by God told Abraham that he and Sarah were to have a son to bring them joy in their old age. Well, the next year that son arrived, and they called him Isaac, which means 'laughter,' my dears."

"I guess he brought laughter to his parents, if he brought them joy," said Betty.

"Yes, a son such as Isaac grew up to be was a joy," Mother continued. "Now turn in your Bibles to Genesis 26, and we will dig out the story. Verses 12, 13, and 14 tell us something about Isaac."

"He was a farmer," said Bobby, "and he was rich. He had many cattle and sheep and servants."

"Betty, do you see one word repeated again and again in the story?"

"Yes, Mother, I see 'wells' seven or eight times."

"Bobby, do you know why a well would be so important to Isaac?" asked Mother.

"Why, a man who raises cattle and sheep must have water," said Bobby.

"Yes, and in that dry and sandy country wells were more important than ever. Now, Betty, you see if you can find out what happened."

"Some people, I can't say their name, filled them with earth. Wasn't that mean!" said Betty.

"It was the Philistines, Betty," said Mother. "Bobby, see if you can find out what Isaac did then."

"In verse 17 it says Isaac left when they asked him to, and then when he had dug another well, he had to leave that, too. That was hard on Isaac, I think," said Bobby.

"It looks so to us," said Mother, "but let's read on and see. Remember, Isaac was a peaceful man and would rather move on than have any trouble. He could have kept the wells in a fight because he probably had more servants than the king did. But he chose not to fight.

"God appeared to Isaac that very night and told him not to be afraid, for He would be with him and bless him wherever he went. That must have made Isaac feel happy and safe.

"He was by this time at Beersheba, and there his servants dug another well, and that one they were allowed to keep. But what did Isaac do before they dug another well, Betty?"

"He built an altar to God," said the little girl, "to show Him he was thankful, I guess."

"After that a queer thing happened," Mother continued. "One day Isaac looked out across the plain and there he saw some men approaching. Who should it be but the king that had driven Isaac away off to this southern land, and two of his officers with him!

"Naturally Isaac asked them why they were coming to see him, seeing they had hated him so and driven him away. What do you think they answered? Why, that they saw God was with Isaac, and they wanted to make peace!

"We would have been tempted to tell them to go back home and not bother about us; that we could get along without their good wishes. But not so Isaac! He made a feast for them, kept them overnight, and sent them on their homeward journey well pleased with themselves. And never again did Isaac have any trouble with them as far as we know.

"By this time Isaac's father, Abraham, was dead; his twin sons, Jacob and Esau, were grown to manhood; and Isaac himself was a hundred years old," finished Mother.

"A hundred years old!" echoed Betty and Bobby.

"Yes, but men weren't counted as old at a hundred in those days, for they lived longer. Isaac, in fact, lived longer than any of the other ancient fathers of his time. Bobby, you will find his age in Genesis 35:28. You figure it up while Betty and I get supper."

And Mother and Betty went into the kitchen while Bobby figured up Isaac's age. Do you know what it was?

AMONG THE CHURCHES

CHANGE OF DEDICATION DATE

Los Angeles, Calif.

Owing to unavoidable delay in getting the millwork for the new church the date for dedication has now been set definitely for June 6. Los Angeles is experiencing a building boom and as soon as we learned that there would be a delay in getting our doors and windows through the mill the congregation voted to set the above date. This also accommodates some of our local members who will be away on vacation during May. We hasten to get this announcement in our Restitution Herald because we know quite a number of our isolated are planning to attend the dedication.

God has greatly blessed our efforts so far, and we trust that the interest will increase and the gospel be heard by many who have never heard it as it was proclaimed by our Lord and His apostles.

I will mention also that the local church officers decided at an official meeting that Bro. George Parker Lichty of the Pomona congregation would deliver the dedicatory sermon. Emma C. Railsback, Pastor.

WHAT'S THE ANSWER?

What military commander during a battle issued an order that was sent farther than around the earth? Look carefully in next week's paper for the answer. Don't forget! It'll be there!

"CORNELIUS NOT A CHRISTIAN"

During the editor's absence the following comments on his recent editorial under the above title have reached the office:

Bro. S. J. Lindsay writes in part as follows: "I feel that your article, 'Cornelius Not a Christian,' is as sound doctrine as I have read in the columns of The Restitution Herald for a long, long time. . . . If the church ever needed sound doctrine, it needs it now. I think it should be put in tract form. . . . Some may be found who would condemn that sort of teaching, but they are very much in need of a good physician. Thanks a-million for it."

From Bro. R. H. Judd of Canada comes this comment: "Just a line of thanks . . . for the very fine pithy article re. Cornelius. You have certainly nailed the colors to the mast. You may remember that the same fact was incidentally brought out in my tract, 'How Much Do You Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ.'"

We now await adverse criticism of the article.

VIRGINIA

On Easter Sunday our hearts were gladdened at the close of the morning service when Mr. Emory Ritenour of Pendroy, Mont., came forward presenting himself to his Lord and Master for baptism. Bro. Ritenour is a man in the very prime of life and we are predicting in him a strong and courageous worker for the Master. His baptism brought great joy to us all, but especially to his two sisters, Mrs. Virginia Kincheloe and Mrs. Seraphine Cleek, who have been members of the church for many years.

Our brother came here to attend the funeral of his father, Mr. Thornton Ritenour, who has lived in or near the Shenandoah Valley in Virginia the greater part of his life, and was well known among our church people and highly respected by all.

At this writing Sr. Verna C. Thayer is just beginning to stir about again after two weeks in bed, three days being uncomfortably spent in the hospital. Her condition is not serious.

Church activities in Virginia are apparently about normal.

V. Earl Thayer.

THE PROBLEM OF SUFFERING

May we suggest the following as a question for our writers and Bible students to help us to solve, which has been brought to our attention recently by a children's specialist.

"If God is the kind, sympathetic, and loving Father that He is painted, and if He is all-powerful, so that nothing is impossible to Him, why does He allow little children, who have done harm to no one, to suffer as these innocent ones do who come under my care?"

It should be remembered that the question is to be answered on behalf of an honest man who wants to be convinced that God is great and good, and who wants his faith in God fully restored. Further, the logical, scientific mind of the questioner should also be taken into account as an answer is prepared.

Who will be the first to attempt to meet this man's serious difficulty?

A PLEASURE TO AID IN THE LORD'S WORK

From two letters received as we go to press on Monday morning we call attention to the following, which we believe voices the sentiments of all whose willingness to give to the work of the Lord makes possible the publication of The Restitution Herald and Truth Seekers' Quarterly.

Accompanying a generous contribution one sister writes from California:

"I consider the opportunity and the means to give one of the pleasures enjoyed by the brotherhood. May God be with and bless your efforts in keeping the gospel before a dying world."

From the representative of a faithful group in West Virginia comes another fine contribution, together with this comment:

"We certainly would hate to hear that we could not get the paper any more and the Truth Seekers' Sunday School Quarterly. I am sending the enclosed for the Church of God at Skelton, West. Virginia."

IT HAPPENED IN INDIANA A LONG TIME AGO

Kokomo, Indiana, September 26, 1866

The following, taken from the "Prophetic Watchman," edited by J. M. Stephenson and H. V. Reed and published at Harvard, Ill., will be of interest to our present valiantly struggling congregation in Kokomo, Ind.

"You are aware that so many of the brethren removed to the West, it took all the officers of the body at little Wildeat Church off, and thus that body has been in a disorganized condition until on last Sunday a series of lectures were delivered by Elder W. L. Winslow and others, where there was a (re)organization effected, and you will rejoice to hear of the glorious reunion of fifteen of the disciples of Christ now standing firmly united on the old foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief cornerstone. . . . The cause of truth is in a prosperous condition in this vicinity, and I think much good is being done under the unceasing labors of the above named brother."

The letter is signed by Isaac N. Butcher, who later moved to Irving, Iowa, where both he and his wife died. They have a surviving daughter in Nevada, Iowa.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Bro. James A. Patriek of Ashland, Ohio, has been on the sick list for about four weeks.

In the absence of Pastor G. E. Marsh from his pulpit in Oregon, Ill., April 25, Bro. Glen Mills of Aurora College spoke both morning and evening.

The time is almost here for Bro. T. A. Drinkard of Texas to begin work with Pastor Harvey Krogh, Jr., and the Ripley, Ill., congregation. He expects to be with them from May 1-23.

Good attendance and interest are reported from Camden, Ill., where Bros. F. L. Austin and J. W. McLain are holding evangelistic meetings.

Sr. Anna Boyanovsky writes from Marathon, Iowa: "After our severe winter we started our meetings at Carl Bjurklund's on April 4, and last Sunday, April 18, we met at the Harold Smith home, with Communion. Both meetings were very well attended. We hope to gather at the Guy Selleck home near Storm Lake on May 2."

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI

The meetings at St. Louis, Mo., now being conducted by the editor of The Herald, are progressing reasonably well according to our latest information. Bible classes are being held each morning and preaching services at night. Sunday morning and afternoon Bro. Marsh preached at the Morse Mills Church of God. Sunday evening Bro. Roy Graham preached to the St. Louis congregation.

It is expected that Bro. T. A. Drinkard will be in St. Louis on the night of April 30, at which time he will be asked to speak in Bro. Marsh's place. Bro. Drinkard will stop off in the city on his way to Ripley, Ill., where he is announced to begin a series of meetings with Pastor Harvey U. Krogh, Jr., May 1 to continue over May 23.

WHAT WOULD YOU DO?

In this issue we are presenting three articles in answer to the question that was submitted in these columns some months ago, in which inquiry was made as to the best method of approaching a young man of excellent character on the subject of his own salvation. The young man takes no interest in the Bible nor in religion.

We believe that the suggestions that have been sent in are all worthy of most serious consideration, and the editor congratulates the authors on the thought and care which they have bestowed upon this important matter. For their information, he wishes to state that the question was asked concerning a real person of the kind described, and we will watch and see what results may follow the actual application of these splendid answers to a problem that frequently presents itself to the Christian worker.

REFLECTIONS OF GREAT MINDS

"Think on these things."—Paul

"A very merry, dancing, drinking, Laughing, quaffing, and unthinking time."
—John Dryden.

Few uninspired writers have described the moral and spiritual condition of the world as it is today more aptly than Dryden does here. Only Paul, with his divinely given insight into the future, can bring more vividly before us the deplorable state of mankind at the present time. In spite of universal education and the encouragement which such education should give to the development of the universal mind, men will not stop in their pursuit of pleasure to think seriously of the great problems of life.

"Mark this, there are hard times coming in the last days. For men will be selfish, fond of money, boastful, haughty, abusive, disobedient to their parents, ungrateful, irreverent, callous, relentless, scurrilous, dissolute, and savage." (Look up the definitions of each of these words in a good dictionary and consider the weight of their combined meaning.) "They will hate goodness, they will be treacherous, reckless and conceited, preferring pleasure to God—for though they keep up a form of religion, they will have nothing to do with it as a force. Avoid all such."—2 Timothy 3:1-5, Moffatt's Translation.

HOW LONG DOES A HERALD LIVE?

We recently received a letter and an article from a gentleman in Missouri who stated that a copy of The Restitution Herald of January 17, 1935, had just fallen into his hands. He calls attention to an article which appeared in that issue from the pen of Bro. J. S. Lyon treating of a subject in which he was especially interested.

His remark, that a Restitution Herald published more than two years ago was still in circulation and arousing interest and calling forth response from readers, prompted the editor to ask himself the question, "How long does a Restitution Herald live?" How long does it continue to pass from hand to hand with its widely varied messages of truth? Much longer, no doubt, than many of us suppose.

A spoken sermon generally lives but a few hours or a few days at best in the minds of those who listen to its delivery, but a printed sermon survives for years. We are now republishing some of the splendid addresses and articles which were prepared from fifty to eighty years ago by men who have been sleeping in the dust for decades, but whose work is alive and vital with truth still.

The Church of God needs qualified writers on Bible subjects who are specially schooled for their task, whose work will be worthy of lasting preservation, and whose influence for good will remain fresh for a hundred years if necessary, as much as it needs pastors, evangelists, and teachers.

SHOULD A CHRISTIAN JOIN A LABOR UNION?

Such is the interesting question we are asking our readers to help us to solve. Tell us in your own words just what you think the attitude of a Christian, a member of the Church of God, should be toward labor unions. We will be glad to publish in full or to summarize the substance of such replies as may seem more advisable, for the benefit of our readers. The letter on which this suggestion is based follows:

"I wish we could have some articles written about the (labor) unions. There are some who think it is all right to join them but not to be active. For myself I think it is wrong for one who has named the name of Christ to belong to any organization of that kind. I think Christians should keep themselves unspotted from the world."

The Wise Men and Their Visit

By C. R. Loomer

MY ATTENTION has recently been called to the events associated with the birth of Jesus, particularly to the visit of the wise men from the East. The succession of these events are given in the helps which are to be found in teacher's and student's editions of the Bible. But the bare enumeration of them does not give much satisfaction to the inquiring student. Therefore, I will endeavor to give an explanatory account of them.

When our first parents, by transgression, fell into sin, God promised to give to their posterity a Redeemer. This promise He renewed to Abraham with the assurance that the Redeemer should come in the line of his descendants. Accordingly the Hebrew people were the sole repository of God's promise, and their prophets had foretold many of the characteristics and circumstances of His life.

In the course of time the conditions of worldly affairs gave rise to an expectancy that the Redeemer's appearance was imminent and many people were looking for signs of His coming. In fact, some persons had received divine assurance that they would see the fulfillment of God's promise before their death.

There was also an indefinite conception among heathen nations that a great King was to arise who would restore the "golden age" and eradicate evil. This idea seemed to point to the Jewish people for its fulfillment. This expectation among the heathen constitutes no obstacle, however, to the reality that the descendants of Abraham were the sole repository of God's promise.

The Jews were scattered through all nations, and in many cities they had synagogues where the tenets of their faith were promulgated. Consequently, I cannot believe that the wise men were heathen magi; rather they were descendants of the Babylonian exiles who did not go back with any of the groups that returned to Palestine.

It is reasonably certain that the wise men were conversant with the Hebrew Scriptures, including the prophecies of Daniel, for Daniel is the only one who provides data which, if understood, gives a close approximation of the facts concerning Messiah's coming.

In the year 6 B. C. (some say 7), there occurred a very remarkable celestial phenomenon, the planets Jupiter and Saturn came into conjunction. This event gave to what appeared to be a single star an unusual brilliancy. This phenomenon would give an ardor to the faith of the wise men that the fulfillment of God's promise was near at hand.

Then in 5 B. C., Mars came into conjunction with the others, which would naturally add to their enthusiasm. I believe that in addition to all this God communicated personally to them that the looked-for Redeemer had come. The star that guided them on their journey was, beyond a doubt, a miraculous manifestation, similar to the pillar of fire that led the children of Israel from Egypt.

Judging from the conditions as they existed at the time, the visit of the wise men occurred within a month after the birth of Jesus, and before the flight into Egypt took place. The testimony of Matthew confirms this opinion.

Complying with the order of Cæsar Augustus, Joseph and Mary went from Nazareth to Bethlehem to be enrolled as subjects of the Roman Emperor. They found the little village overcrowded with people, for the descendants of David were legion. While awaiting their turn for enrollment the child Jesus was born. This was late in September, 5 B. C. During the night following the shepherds made their visit. (These shepherds kept the sheep that were intended for the sacrifices.)

On the eighth day the parents took the Babe to Jerusalem for the circumcision rite. Then they returned to Bethlehem. By this time the crowds had returned to their several homes and the holy family obtained lodgings at the inn.

According to the Levitical law (Lev. 12:4, 6), on the 33rd day after the birth of a son, the parents were required to bring to the priest an offering for the mother's purification ceremony. This would be about November 1 of 5 B. C. It was on account of this ceremony that Joseph and Mary returned to Bethlehem and it was at this time that the salutations of Simeon and Anna occurred.

In the meantime, while waiting for this ceremony, the wise men arrived with their precious gifts.

It seems from the statement of Luke that it was the intention of Joseph and Mary to return to their home at Nazareth, but being warned of God to flee from Herod they departed to Egypt, beyond the reach of the King's power.

The accounts of these events by Matthew and by Luke do not seem to agree exactly, but there is no contradiction, for some items mentioned by the one are omitted by the other.

Matthew was a Jew and an apostle and he wrote his Gospel for the Jewish Christians. Hence, he mentions certain prophecies and historical incidents to strengthen the faith of his fellow countrymen and for their encouragement.

Luke was not a Jew and had never resided in Judea. As Paul's physician he accompanied that Apostle on several of his journeys. He wrote his Gospel by Paul's request. It was intended for Greek and other Gentile converts. He obtained his information concerning Jesus Christ and events associated with His life from the testimony of others. His purpose was to prove the reality of Jesus' existence, to give an account of His life's work, and show how by His death and resurrection man's redemption had been purchased.

The Vacant Signpost

By George A. Waters

A WEARY traveler was plodding along a dusty highway. His attire proclaimed him to be a Jew. The road upon which he was traveling gave evidence of former grandeur by the ruins of magnificent structures scattered by the wayside. Being very tired, he sat down for a few minutes' rest, and taking a small book from his pack, he began to read aloud.

Upon another road, hidden by some shrubbery, a second man was slowly advancing with bowed head. He, also, was weary from a long journey, and, as the Jew began to read, he paused to listen. He could catch only part of the words, but this is what he heard: "If thy people . . . sin against thee, . . . and thou be angry with them, and deliver them to the enemy, so that they carry them away captives . . . far or near; yet if they shall bethink themselves . . . and repent, and make supplication unto thee, . . . saying, We have sinned, . . . and so return unto thee with all their heart, . . . then hear thou their prayer . . . and forgive thy people" (1 Kings 8:44-50). A moment later the Jew's voice arose in prayer: "Oh, Lord, God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, help me. Open Thy way before me."

In a few minutes the men met where the two roads converged. The stranger extended his hand to the Jew, saying: "Sir, I overheard a part of thy reading and prayer, and I trust that we may be friends, for I also carry a guidebook similar to thine. My name is John, and I read in the book the supplication of Solomon: 'Moreover concerning a stranger, that is not of thy people Israel, but cometh out of a far country for thy name's sake; . . . when he shall come and pray toward this house; hear thou in heaven thy dwelling place, and do according to all that the stranger calleth to thee for' (1 Kings 8:41-43). I also have asked for guidance along this road of life."

The Jew accepted the proffered hand, saying: "My name is Simon, and I welcome thee. Knowest thou the way from here on? I see yonder broad highway leading to the left, and a straight, narrow way leading to the right. There is a signpost, but it is vacant, the crossarms are not on it. Surely that paved highway is the way we should go."

"Hold!" cried John. "Our Guidebook says: 'There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death' (Prov. 14:12; 16:25). Let us examine yon signpost that we may determine the right course if possible."

They found the crossarms lying near, and, by fitting the nails in the holes in the post, were enabled to restore it to its original purpose. Their task completed, the arm pointing to the broad way said, "Destruction," and the other, "Life." Then said John: "I remember that the supplement to my Guidebook, which is called the New Testament, says: 'Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it' (Matt. 7:13, 14)."

Simon replied: "Thy supplement is indeed true in this case, but I have never accepted it as true because it teaches that Jesus is Christ, and I must have a sign proving the truth of that before believing that it is authentic."

John answered: "The Master said: 'An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given to it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas: for as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly; so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth' (Matt. 12:39, 40). Surely His burial and resurrection fulfill that sign."

"How can it," said Simon, "if He was buried at sundown Friday and raised Sunday morning? We might stretch our imaginations and say He was in the grave three days, but only two nights intervene; so thy sign faileth. Jesus said, 'No other sign shall be given,' so how can I believe?"

John replied: "I see thy logic. The cross is a signpost to thee, and the crossarms are (Please turn to page 9)

New Methodist Prophetic Monthly

"We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed."—2 Peter 1:19.

WILLIAMSTOWN, N. J., April 20.—Tomorrow—In the Light of Prophecy is the name of a new monthly publication now being issued here. It is described as "a Methodist testimony for the imminent, personal millennial return of the Lord Jesus Christ."

In the first number of the paper, which appeared in January of the present year, the editor declares that there are thousands of members of the Methodist Church throughout the country who believe that the Bible is the literal Word of God to man; also that there are many who hold very firmly to the conviction that the Lord is to return to the earth in the very near future to establish His millennial kingdom here, but there has been no publication voicing the thought of this great cross-section of Methodism until now.

The paper issues a call for the rallying together of all in that great denomination who are looking for the glorious return of Jesus Christ.

The editor of THE RESTITUTION HERALD was told recently by a minister of the Methodist Church that the Bishop of the district of which he is a member asserted that he, the Bishop, was making a strong effort to overcome the current that was sweeping the church toward modernism. He stated that the "social gospel" was nullifying the gospel of Christ and destroying the value of the church from a real spiritual standpoint.

It is to be hoped that the new magazine will aid in leading the followers of the Wesleys, who believed so firmly in the second advent, back to the more scriptural ground of their founders.

Paganism Endorsed by Nazis

"Hath a nation changed their gods, which are yet no gods?"—Jeremiah 2:11.

BERLIN, Germany, April 4.—General Erich Ludendorff, who with his wife, Dr. Mitilda von Kemnitz, founded the neopagan cult in Germany in 1926, announced today that the new religion of "German understanding of God" has been granted full and equal status with Protestantism and Catholicism by the Government.

The program of the revived paganistic system was recently laid down by General Ludendorff in his magazine, Am Heiligen Quelle Deutscher Kraft (To the Holy Source of German Strength), as follows:

"We will rid ourselves of Christian dogma and realize the mystery of the incarnation of the German people or else we will sink in the rottenness of a humanity without consistence."

General Ludendorff urged his followers to redouble their efforts in fighting "supernatural powers who recently have attempted more furiously to undermine the bases of our young, racial State in order to build up once more their domination over the German people."

These words were taken as a direct reference to the Catholic Church, which strengthened its opposition to State domination after the recent encyclical of the Pope. The General is said to regard the Vatican as the most dangerous of "supernatural forces" in this respect.

The declaration of the leader of the neopagan cult coincided with renewed anticlerical moves by the Government. Within recent days police authorities have forbidden the holding of a Protestant evangelical service at Darmstadt.

His experience in the World War, Ludendorff declared, convinced him that in order to be victorious in any future conflict Germany must destroy Christianity, which he described as a "foreign religion which falsifies our inheritance, slays our racial qualities, steals their unity from our people, and renders them defenseless."

On many fronts a relentless war against Christianity and Judaism is developing. The movement in Germany already claims hundreds of thousands of adherents and sympathizers. Avowedly antichristian and in many countries antigod, one can readily see how easy it will be for the "man of sin" to secure the devoted support of vast numbers of deceived men and women when he openly "opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped" (2 Thess. 2:4).

The Holy Spirit—The Spirit of God

By Ezra D. Gifford

THE scriptural doctrine concerning the Holy Spirit is very plain and evident. We are simply told that the Holy Spirit is the Spirit of God. We refer the reader to Ephesians 4:30, "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of the Deity, in which you were sealed into the day of releasing," and to 1 Thessalonians 4:7, 8, "The Deity called us not upon uncleanness, but in holiness. Surely, therefore, the one putting away, puts away not man, but the Deity, the one bestowing his Spirit, the Holy, within you."

The reader can find many other passages by turning to his concordance, all teaching that the Holy Spirit is simply the Spirit of God. We submit a few: Matt. 3:16; 12:18, 28; Acts 2:17, 18; 5:9; 8:39; Rom. 8:9, 11, 14; 1 Cor. 2:4, 5; 3:16; 6:11; 7:40; 12:3; 2 Cor. 3:3; 1 Peter 4:14; 1 John 4:12, 13.

We wish to emphasize that the Spirit of God means the Spirit of the Father; for the Father, according to the Scriptures, is the only true God (John 17:4; 1 Cor. 8:5, 6; Eph. 4:6, 1 Thess. 1:9, 10; 1 John 5:20). The Scriptures distinctly call the Spirit the Spirit of the Father. "For you are not the ones speaking, but the Spirit of your Father is the thing speaking in you" (Matt. 10:20). The same is also clearly involved in Ephesians 3:14, 16, and in many other passages. And as further evidence, note the fact that Jesus plainly taught it was the Father who would give and send the Holy Spirit: John 14:16, 26; and that the Holy Spirit proceeds from the Father: John 15:26.

As the Holy Spirit is the Spirit of God the Father, it is well called in the Scriptures: "The Spirit of holiness" (Rom. 1:4). "The Spirit of the grace" (Heb. 10:29). "Spirit of power, of love, and of sobering" (2 Tim. 1:7). "The Spirit of the truth" (1 John 4:6). "The Spirit of the faith" (2 Cor. 4:13). "The Spirit of the promise" (Eph. 1:13). "Spirit of wisdom and revelation" (Eph. 1:17). "The Spirit of the life" (Rom. 8:2). "The Spirit of prophecy" (Rev. 19:10). "Age Spirit" (Heb. 9:14). "The Spirit of glory" (1 Peter 4:14).

These, together with several other titles of like nature, are applied to the Spirit in the Scriptures, all showing that Holy Spirit is the all-pervading Spirit of God that fills all things with the life and presence of God. It contains personal attributes because it is Spirit of a Person, but itself is not a person from the very fact that it is the Spirit of a Person.

It is indeed called God and the Lord in John 4:24 and 2 Corinthians 3:17, 18; but this is a common form of personification in the Scriptures, where one thing or person stands for or personates another. The Word was called flesh (John 1:14), because the flesh of Jesus contained the Word and represented the Word, not that the real body of Jesus was the Word, for this would be untrue. Man was called dust (Gen. 3:19), but this does not teach that the dust was the person of man, for man is a living soul (Gen. 2:7), his form being indeed of the dust, for the body is but a house (2 Cor. 5:1-4), a house necessary to conscious existence, but yet not the real man that sleeps in death in the dust of the earth (Isa. 26:19). The body, by representing the man, is called the man, just as the flesh of Jesus, by representing the Word, is called the Word. God is called love (1 John 4:8), but love is not the person of God. Love is God because it represents God. And so we might go on and show many instances from the Scriptures where one thing or person is called another thing or person because it represents that other thing or person. In these matters the Lord expects us to use reason and common sense.

It is manifest that the Holy Spirit is not the person of God, for it is the Spirit of God. The spirit of a being cannot be that being himself, although it may be called that being because it represents that being, according to a scriptural law of personification. The light that shines through the window we call the sun, practically speaking. But we do not mean the individual sun—that great luminary in the heavens above, 92,500,000 miles from the earth, and 860,000 miles in diameter. We simply mean that a radiance representing the sun comes through the window. In the same way the great and infinite God, our heavenly Father, comes to His believing children through the unshaded window of faith and illuminates their souls with heavenly light and glory, giving grace, mercy, and peace, faith, hope, (Please turn to page 11)

THE AUTHOR

Elder Ezra D. Gifford was a man of unusual spiritual and intellectual attainments. Reared in an orthodox church, quite early in life he came to question the scriptural basis upon which the teachings of his denomination rested. He started in to discover in the Bible proof to support such ideas as the immortality of the soul, the Trinity, going to heaven at death, eternal torment for the wicked, etc. He found instead that such doctrines of men were not taught in the Word of God.

Elder Gifford became a proficient Greek and Hebrew scholar and translated portions of the Scriptures from the original tongues into English. He established a small religious paper which he called "The Way of Truth." He also organized a number of churches, and was the author of several very excellent books.

For some years he was pastor of a church in Seattle, Washington, which was called "The Church of God in Christ." He was never associated directly with our own body, but was in close sympathy with most of our doctrinal teaching.

Bible Christianity

I AM a firm believer in evangelism; and this means carrying good news to my fellows in the everyday associations and intercourse of living. Furthermore, it is my sincere conviction that the teaching of Jesus Christ is, and always has been, the best news to impart to my fellows. It is real news to most persons, even to church members. The Christian Bible has been and still is sadly neglected in church worship, in church schools, as a standard of spiritual values and ethical duty, and as a counselor in the business and pleasures of common life, and as a teacher of those spiritual truths which lead to the assurances of hope; and this hope is the true supporter of the motive forces of our lives. A recent writer has well expressed the truth: "The Christian gospel is plain enough; what is lacking is simply the courage to act upon it." Or as another modern teacher has said: "Christianity has not been tried and found wanting; it has been found difficult and not tried." The purpose of this short article is to discuss some of these difficulties as met today. We all may heed the advice of Gamaliel, the doctor of the law, before the Jewish council: "And now I say unto you, Refrain from these men, and let them alone; for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought; but if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; lest haply ye be found to fight against God" (Acts 5:38, 39).

Some very stern facts meet us in this study of why churches do not thrive and bear more fruit. Why are so many talking about the failures of Christianity, even some religious periodicals that profess faith in Jesus Christ? Should we not rather revive the church and the world by magnifying the good done? An evangelist once asked a Boston policeman what would happen to the city if there were no churches; and his immediate reply was: "We could not get policemen enough on the streets to keep order." A good judge, presiding at a church trial, made the statement: "Every clergyman in the city is of more value in preserving the good order of this town than ten policemen." Here is a view of the effectiveness of the Christian church not often published in the Evening News or the Morning Herald. It would not be amiss to publish this news.

Let us return to the positive side of this subject. We acknowledge that what E. Stanley Jones, the noted missionary, says, is true: "One can know as much about God as he is willing to practice—no more." It is true. And we need to remedy as many of the deficiencies of the church as possible. We might live in a more comfortable way if we should take God into our plans. And our knowledge of God's dealings with men is in the Bible; in the history of the universal church. To know the Bible is to know God; for the consciousness of God in human experience is the inspiration which makes God real to us. It is the only way to salvation which has been revealed to man. A lawyer, to win his case, must prepare his brief in accord with the laws of the land. It must be presented in proper form and in harmony with the rules of court procedure. And more; the pleader himself must be qualified before he may appear before the court. Is it too much to expect a Christian preacher or evangelist to be qualified in regard to Christian doctrine—the "law"—which was fully recognized by the master Preacher and Pleader, as he abjures the wicked "to forsake his ways, and the unrighteous man his thoughts"? The church fails when it neglects God and the Bible. Listen to a reviewer of a book, A Guide to the Bible. He says: "Today very few people quote the Bible to clinch an argument, and those who read it at all do so for other reasons." Would a Webster or a Choate or an Elihu Root dare to treat the statutes of his state or his country in such a fashion? What do we read in the Gospels? "It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life" (John 6:63).

The misuse of the Scriptures is one of the appalling hindrances to Christian evangelism. Men do not hear the truth. It is reported that in the United States there are 243 distinct denominations of professed Christians, each striving to preserve their peculiar differences. Social choice may justify several kindred groups, but it does not in any degree necessitate strife. All Christians carry the same Bible, worship the same God, adore the same Christ, are sanctified by the same Spirit, enjoy the hope of the same kingdom. No doubt there are honest disciples of the Lord in every church: the Lord seems to bless them. But the question of the Apostle comes to mind: "Is Christ divided?" (1 Cor. 1:13). This is the testing question at this moment. When professing Christians cease to love their neighbors, and sometimes plan to do them harm, how are we to evangelize the world? How are they to give the cup of water in the Master's name? In a city of fifty thousand inhabitants, less than one half belong to the church. Yet, on a house-to-house canvass, more than nine tenths declared their belief in God, and more than four fifths were believers in the saving power of Jesus Christ. The problem of today is plain and feasible. No one is saved on account of belief. But when belief is translated into action it becomes faith. And we "are saved by grace through faith." Says the Apostle James: "Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed" (James 1:25).

Bible Christianity is different from theological churchism in this: It accepts the fundamental truth that God is, and that He is a "rewarder of those who diligently seek him" (Heb. 11:6). Our conceptions of the attributes of God are nothing more than explanations of how God appears to us. His wisdom, power, providence, grace, and so on, are different to each believer. Stopping to contend about such differences, and not pressing on "toward the mark of the . . . high calling of God in Christ Jesus" (Phil. 3:13-19), has destroyed the true purpose of God's beneficent dealings with mankind. This, in short, is "churchism." The nominal church, in some ways, has put the opinions of men in the place of God's revelation of Himself in Jesus the Messiah, whose parting message is: "Ye believe in God, believe also in me" (John 14:1). One of the causes for the rapid advance of the early church, according to Gibbons' history, was "the union and discipline of the Christian republic." It was in the world, but not of the world. But it was the follies of men that undermined the efficacy of faith. "Human reason," says the historian, "which, by its unassisted strength, is incapable of perceiving the mysteries of faith," has been allowed to usurp the place of triumphant confidence in God, has wrought strife and disaster. The message to the church at Sardis (Rev.

3:1-6) is a vivid picture of the conditions; and present-day conditions require the same remedy: "Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die."

This is not a plea for the present-day notion of the union of churches. It is more. They advocate concessions, coordination, liberalism, concordats. But this is a plea for Christian unity, which is lacking. Already the plan is perfected. Grace is sufficient for all, in every emergency of life. Human sins are not cancelled by the works or worth of the sinner; they are forgiven. There is, however, a charity without which "I am nothing"—a charity that "bear-eth all things, believeth all things, endureth all things" (1 Cor. 13:1-13). In this charity we may come to Christian unity. Our duty is to "walk worthy of the vocation wherewith (we) are called, . . . endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" (Eph. 4:1-7).—George H. Dewing in The World's Crisis.

Jonah and the Whale

AGAIN the old Bible story of Jonah and the whale breaks into print with the publication of a new book, Gospel Light, by an Assyrian scholar, George M. Lamsa. For some time, Mr. Lamsa made an extended research in the wind-swept hills of ancient Kurdistan, studying the Aramaic language with a tribe of swarthy Kurds, who still speak a form of the Aramaic in which parts of the Bible were originally written.

In his book, Mr. Lamsa brands the story of Jonah an "Oriental hyperbole." Contending that translators misinterpreted the Aramaic, which, he affirms, was mixed with the ancient Hebrew, this modern scholar declares that to say that Jonah was swallowed by the whale was simply the equivalent of a slang expression, such as an American would use in saying, "So-and-so is in a hole." This scholar asserts that in the interpretation of dreams in the East, fish or a whale means trouble. Consequently, when Jonah is reputed to have been engulfed by a great fish or whale, it was just another way of saying that he was in trouble.

So on the basis of this evidence, Mr. Lamsa with decision relegates the whole experience, which has formed a part of the inspired Word of God for centuries, to the scrapheap of Oriental superstition and mythology. Because today, twenty centuries after Christ, in the semipagan superstitions of an almost unknown tribe living away up in the mountains of Turkey and Persia, if a man dreams about a whale or a fish, it means he will have trouble, a modern scholar decides that a book written in the ninth century before Christ is a myth and fairy tale.

But what assurance do we have that the Aramaic language discovered by Mr. Lamsa in bleak Kurdistan has not passed through some of the changes which have affected other languages? The Greek in use today is not the same as that used by the apostles in writing the New Testament.

The language spoken and written by modern Jews is not the same as the Hebrew of the Old Testament. The English we speak and read today has passed through great changes since the time of Chaucer. So what positive evidence do we have that the same interpretation was placed on dreams twenty-eight hundred years ago in Palestine that there is today by the wild, fierce Kurds of Western Asia?

And if the language is unchanged after these thousands of years, still would that be sufficient evidence to reject a part of the Word of God, of which Paul the Apostle spoke under inspiration of heaven, "All scripture is given by inspiration of God" (2 Tim. 3:16)? That includes the book of Jonah and the story of his being swallowed by a great fish. And if it was inspired of God, why should men, with their feeble conception of the purpose of God, undertake to declare it untrue and impossible?

Further, if man believes in the Lord Jesus Christ, he will have to believe the story of Jonah. The strange thing is how some people can profess to believe in Jesus, and even in His miracles, and not believe the record of Jonah. If we believe in the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ we will believe this unusual experience of the Old Testament, for it was a type of the resurrection of Jesus. Note what Jesus Himself said in Matthew 12:39-41: "He answered and said unto them, An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given to it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas: for as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly; so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth. The men of Nineveh shall rise in judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it: because they repented at the preaching of Jonas; and, behold, a greater than Jonas is here."

What Happens After Death?

THE course of human history is marked by great adventures—of war, invasion, and defense; of exploration; in armies and groups; of single-handed prowess. But there is one great adventure which is the common birthright of all mankind; the greatest and most terrible of all, and that is death; when this living power we all possess, of breath, of speech, of movement, forsakes us, and this majestic human form molders into dust, and must be buried out of sight in its mother earth. The horror of great darkness, the natural fear with which we approach this dread adventure, the heart-broken grief of those left behind, make this a poignant question, "What happens after death?"

In every age and every nation, mankind doubtless has sought the answer. Philosophers have tried to reason it out; from the earliest ages there have been initiates in touch with unseen spirits whose communications have been embodied in early religions, the fundamental tenets of which have obtained remarkably widespread acceptance. The doctrine of the immortality of the soul, early taught in Egypt, passed on by the Greeks, and widely accepted even today, had its origin, not in the Word of God, but in the first lie of the Father of Lies, the Devil—"Thou shalt not surely die." The Chinese practice ancestor worship, and among many savages and half-civilized races there exists the belief that the spirits of the dead hover around unseen. This belief is now being revived in civilization, and has captured the allegiance of millions.

But all these things lack one fundamental feature, an absolute and adequate authority, who declares himself responsible in saying these things are so, and that they shall be so to those who rest their future hopes upon them. In the Word of God, however, we have authority of the most satisfying adequacy; the revelation of the Creator of heaven and earth, the supreme God, and the Inventor and Maker of mankind—spirit, soul, and body.

Here in one hand I hold a handbook issued by the makers of the Rugby Motor Car, describing its parts and how to look after them to ensure for the car the most lasting life. In the other I hold the Handbook of the Maker of the human frame, telling of its parts and how to secure everlasting life. In this large volume of a thousand pages, the Bible, we have abundant evidence from our Maker Himself for the answer to this question: "What happens after death?"

The first part of the investigation must therefore be, "What can happen after death?" If some one asked the question, "What would happen if a Rugby Car was driven two hundred miles per hour?" the natural question would arise, "Can it run at that speed? Is it built to do so?" So also the question must be asked, "What inherent power reposes in our human personalities as constructed by our Maker to enable us to survive death in any form?" For answer we turn to the Manual. We soon come across Genesis 2:7. "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." The body is dust; the breath gives life; the result is, a living soul. A breathing man is a living soul.

In the same chapter is the first reference to death: "... the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." This is a threat, not an actual event. Soon, however, Adam broke this command, and God arraigned him for judgment.

Here we have the essential factors of the case. The dust, the breath, the soul, comprise the man. Now God intimates that dissolution which is to fulfill His threat, "Thou shalt surely die." The terms used are notable. "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return"; that is, the real man, the being who carries the ego, the real person, is dust, and is to return to dust again. That is death. What can happen after that? Nothing! so far as man is concerned. Here, in the very forefront of Scripture, with the factors of the case before us, there is not the slightest hint of any inherent ability being granted to mankind to survive this dread reversal of creation.

As we follow the further developments of the Word of God, we find references to this event called Death—which now became the common heritage of mankind; and these references are in keeping with this original statement. Psalm 104:29: "Thou takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust." Gen. 47:30: "I will lie with my fathers; bury me in their burying place." 1 Kings 2:10: "David slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David." This is the fundamental teaching of the Scripture concerning the dead, and the basis of the whole subject in Old and New Testaments. Words could not possibly put it plainer than Ecclesiastes 3:19, 20, "That which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts . . . as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath . . . All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again." What happens after death? The living bury the dead and that is the last of them, so far as any inherent ability in them is concerned to survive in any form.

But the same God who gave us this great revelation of Himself and of ourselves tells us that death does not end all. The process of death itself will be reversed by His almighty power. Hebrews 9:27: "It is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment." Romans 14:12: "So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God." If there is to be a judgment after death, there must be a restoring of the dead: and that such will be brought about, the Bible abundantly declares; and it designates that act of restoration by the word "resurrection."

1 Corinthians 15:21-24: "For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order, Christ the firstfruits; afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming. Then cometh the end." In view of the fact that every human being since Adam is to be raised from the dead, to give account of himself to God, the death state is termed in the Bible "a sleep." Daniel 12:2: "Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake." John 11:11: "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth"; v. 14: "Then said Jesus unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead." Psalm 17:15: "I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness."

From that sleep of death there is to be a great awakening; not one by one, but in great groups. This will be the most stupendous miracle the world has ever known; but all things are possible to God. To those who were incredulous, and derided the thought of resurrection, the Lord spoke strongly, saying, "Do ye not therefore err, because ye know not the scriptures, neither the power of God? Ye therefore do greatly err" (Mark 12:24-27).

The Lord Jesus Himself is the pattern of the resurrection of the saved. He rose from the dead; the very same Jesus. No longer dependent upon blood-life, not a ghost nor an angel, but a resurrected and transformed human body, able to be seen and handled, yet able to enter a room without door or window being opened; and able to appear and disappear to human sight at will, and able to rise to the skies without wings. This is resurrection, nor survival. The tomb was emptied when He rose.

For the saved, therefore, there awaits the glorious prospect of being raised in His likeness (Phil. 3:20, 21). For them will follow the judgment seat of Christ; judgment for reward and position thereafter, not for life or death, for they will receive immortality on being raised.

When we fall asleep at night, tired out, the most refreshing sleep is that of utter unconsciousness, dreamless, from which we awake rejuvenated. So with the sleep of death for the Christian; the Lord will impart rejuvenating power to awake and arise, glorious, immortal. That is to occur at the second advent.

The Bible has many references to the death state; and frequently the popular notion of an immortal soul which can survive death is read into texts where they have no place. To understand this subject it is necessary to have a comprehensive grasp of Bible teaching concerning soul and spirit; and in pondering any passage, to ask, "Is soul or spirit spoken of here?" If not, do not read it where it should not be: and again, ask yourself whether the soul or spirit can do what you understand it to do, in view of the fact that the Bible plainly speaks of the soul dying, and going to the grave.

Another obstacle to the grasp of this truth of the death state is to read the advanced New Testament figurative use of "death" in relation to spiritual teaching, into the primary or literal statements regarding death in the Old Testament. God said to Adam, "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die"; but because the Hebrew words used read, "Dying thou shalt die," it has been inferred that some slow lingering death happened while Adam still enjoyed 930 years of life. But this phrase occurs elsewhere in the Old Testament, and simply means the infliction of an untimely end. God in mercy changed the death sentence to a "life sentence"; and Adam still would have lived without dying had not access to the tree of life been prohibited. The fundamental fact remains that the death threatened and the death suffered were simply the cessation of life.

The truth regarding the death state shows the absolute necessity of the resurrection. The Bible undoubtedly teaches resurrection; but the notion that a soul or spirit phantom floats away somewhere and is quite happy (or miserable) without a body, obscures the need for a resurrection altogether. The Bible deals with this emphatically in 1 Corinthians 15:13-18, the argument of which amounts to this: "If there be no resurrection of the dead . . . then they which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." How could such a thing be said if the dead were alive in a self-existent life somewhere?

This truth clears the character of God from the awful calumny of the doctrine of eternal torment. The idea that the souls of the wicked go immediately to hell-fire, and commence to suffer excruciating agony, from which there is no hope of release to all eternity, is about the most wicked lie that was ever invented; the mind cannot think of anything more fearfully unjust. This terrible doctrine gives constant cause to rationalists to deride the whole gospel of Christ. The Bible over and over again speaks of the soul being killed and dying, never once of an immortal soul; and on that fundamental basis every reference to the soul must be viewed. Neither soul nor spirit can survive death according to the Scriptures. The end of the wicked is not eternal torment, but death; not "spiritual death" (how could they die a "spiritual death" who never lived a "spiritual life"?), but simply plain death, from which there is no resurrection.

This truth removes the foundation from the false doctrine of purgatory. If death is a sleep, then there is no such institution as purgatorial fires. Millions of people would keep their hard-earned money in their pockets if they grasped this great truth. The doctrine of purgatory is a vast financial swindle.

This truth shows up Spiritualism in its fearful satanic nature. If the human dead are dead, unconscious, helpless in the grave, then they cannot communicate with the living. Thus 1 Timothy 4:1-3 stands out in its true significance, that the spirit beings who communicate through mediums are not and never were human, but are lying spirits. A medium of thirty years' experience confessed, concerning the trustworthiness of the spirits, that it would not be inconsistent with their character if their whole case was a gigantic camouflage. The Bible said so long ago.

Christians who hold to the idea of the immortality and survival of the soul are at a great disadvantage in combating Spiritualism. If the dead are alive somewhere, why should they not be able to communicate with the living? But the Bible says the dead know not anything. Nor did the resurrection and ascension of Christ empty the graves, as some believe, of the saved dead. Ten days after the ascension, Peter said that David was still in his grave. If any were taken on high, why was David left?

Finally, the great truth removes obscurities from the gospel, and makes it shine out in peerless glory as a necessity to all mankind. It shows it to be not a question of happiness or misery simply, but the fundamental issue of life or death. It shows forth the glorious Son of God as the great Life-Winner and Life-Giver to mortals. "I am come that they might have life," He said, not "happiness" merely. Is the Lord still saying of anyone who reads these words, as He sadly said to some in the days of His flesh, "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life"?

Now there is no question but that some very brilliant-minded men have doubted the veracity of the story of Jonah; but I read that the One whose mind is far more profound than that of the keenest skeptic that ever lived, believed that the story of Jonah was literally true. So much did He believe it that He used it to illustrate the certainty of His own death and resurrection. He said, "Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly." No ifs nor qualifications, but a simple statement of facts. A man cannot believe that Jesus was the way, the truth, and the life, and not believe Jonah's record of his experience, for Jesus said it was true.

So Christians should have no trouble deciding whether or not the tale of Jonah is just an "Oriental hyperbole." On one side of the question is the opinion of a modern scholar, on the other is the clear statement of the Lord Jesus Christ Himself.

There really is no reason why even skeptics should put forth such an effort to have evidence for disbelieving this Old Testament experience. Similar experiences are known which are outside of the Bible record, and which cannot be disputed. If a man could go through an experience like that of Jonah and survive today, why is it impossible for the tale of Jonah to be true?

In the June 27, 1936, issue of The Literary Digest appeared an article referring to the work of Mr. Lamsa and also harking back to February, 1891, when The Digest printed an article facetiously asking, "Could Jonah have swallowed the whale?"

The 1891 article quoted a French magazine, the Cosmos, in which M. P. Courbet related the following story:

"In the month of February, 1891, the whaler, Star of the East, launched two whaleboats to pursue a superb whale. . . . The huge creature was harpooned and wounded to the death.

"While it was writhing in its last agonies, one of the whaleboats was struck by its tail and shattered to pieces. The sailors who were in it were thrown into the water; all but two were saved. . . . The body of one of the missing was recovered, but a man named James Bartley could not be found.

"When the monster had ceased moving, . . . the work of cutting it up began. . . . When it was ended, the stomach of the whale was opened. What was the surprise of the whalers to find in it their comrade, James Bartley, unconscious but alive."

It was some time before he completely recovered from his terrible experience, and, writing of it later, Mr. Bartley said:

"I remember from the moment that I jumped and felt my feet strike some soft substance. I looked up and saw a canopy of pink and white descending, and the next moment felt myself drawn downward, feet first, and realized that I was being swallowed by a whale. I was drawn lower and lower; a wall of flesh hemmed me in, yet the pressure was not painful, and the flesh gave way before my slightest movement. Suddenly I found myself in a sac much larger than my body, completely dark. Soon I felt a great pain in my head, and breathing became difficult. At the same time, I felt a terrible heat; it seemed to consume me, and I believed I was going to be boiled alive. The thought that I was to perish in the belly of a whale tormented me beyond endurance, while the awful silence weighed me down. I tried to rise, to cry out. All action was impossible, but my brain seemed abnormally clear, and with full comprehension of my fate, I lost consciousness."

This story is evidently regarded as authentic by The Literary Digest. And if a man could be swallowed by a whale in the nineteenth century and live to tell about it, why should it be considered impossible at the time of Jonah? And this experience does not stand alone. There are other similar experiences which might be noticed.

It is true it might take a miracle of God to keep a man alive within a fish as long as Jonah was in the great fish which God prepared for him; yet if we are to accept any of the miracles of Christ, there is no reason for rejecting the miraculous in Jonah's experience, especially since the great Miracle-Worker Himself testified to its certainty.

But the question of the authenticity of the story of Jonah goes far deeper than that alone. It involves the truth of the whole Bible; for if part of the Bible is not reliable, who is able to determine which part of it is inspired and reliable? And if we cannot place our hope and trust in the Bible as a guide and rule of faith, upon what can we depend in our search for religion? That is exactly the conclusion that the Devil wants us to come to; that there is no basis and foundation for religious faith, and therefore it should be cast aside entirely, and we should believe in nothing. Such is the inevitable conclusion for the man who begins to question the authenticity of any part of the Word of God.

In the days when men and women are casting about for something to tie to, we should be very cautious lest we lose the great anchor of our souls, which alone can hold against every chance wind of doctrine. David said of the Bible: "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path" (Psalm 119:105). Paul asserted that "the foundation of God standeth sure" (2 Tim. 2:19). Peter affirmed that "the word of the Lord endureth for ever" (1 Peter 1:25). John, under inspiration of the Spirit of God, solemly declared that "if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book" (Rev. 22:19).

Let us then come back to the Bible and its great message of truth. The arrows of skepticism and doubt may be hurled at it occasionally, but still its mighty truths remain unaffected, shining out with renewed luster and brilliance. Still remains unshaken the conclusion of Paul, who, after a lifetime spent preaching Jesus and the Bible to a skeptical, scoffing, heathen world, declared in the last book he wrote: "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness" (2 Tim. 3:16). So let us agree with Paul that all Scripture is indeed "given by inspiration of God," and let us guide our lives by its divine precepts.

THE FOREVER HOUSE

By Laura Slusser Glanton

Oh, Mother! my heart is calling for you,
The world seems so cheerless and cold;
I miss the sound of your voice, the touch of your hand,
Tonight I feel weary and old.
The dear little house where so long you dwelt,
Will know your presence no more;
You went away on a chill autumn day,
And softly "shut to" the door.
Your flowers are asleep 'neath a blanket of snow,
So you, dear, are sleeping, too—
Awaiting the call of Eternal Spring,
To live again in a world made new.
I know your journey was long and hard,
And you often grew tired on the way;
But you went through the night and came into the light
Of an endless Eternal Day.
Yes, Mother dear, you followed the path
That all earthly pilgrims have trod,
But it led to the door of the "Forever House"
"Whose builder and maker is God."

missing, just as that signpost was vacant a few minutes ago. Let us try to reconstruct the one as we did the other. If we fit each passage of Scripture in its proper place, as we did the nails in their holes, we must learn the truth. The Apostle Paul said: 'Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth' (2 Tim. 2:15). With God's help, may we not try to establish the day of His death and of His resurrection? That might overcome your difficulty."

"I am willing," said Simon. "But tell me, what is the use of a resurrection? My Guide says (Eccl. 12:7), 'Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was: and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it.' If we can be happy with God as soon as we die, what is a resurrection for?"

John replied: "In thy Guide the Prophet Daniel (9:24-26) tells us as to the time of His coming, and that 'after threescore and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself.' And Isaiah (53:8, 9) says, 'He was cut off out of the land of the living: for the transgression of my people was he stricken. And he made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death.' So we cannot deny that the Messiah was to die, although the throne of David was promised Him for an everlasting possession (Isa. 9:6, 7). My supplement says that the angel Gabriel promised Mary that her child, Jesus, would be called 'the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end' (Luke 1:26-33). If He really died, a resurrection was imperative for this promise to be fulfilled. Believest thou this?"

"If we can prove the truth of the sign, I will believe," answered Simon. "Where shall we begin?"

"Let us compare the events as related by Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, as there seems to be a misunderstanding," said John. "Matthew, Mark, and Luke seem to teach that the Passover was eaten, Jesus betrayed that night, and crucified the next day, while John is positive that Jesus was slain before the Passover was eaten and about the time the lamb was killed. Let us compare their stories. Matthew 26:17 says: 'Now the first day of the feast of unleavened bread the disciples came to Jesus, saying unto him, Where wilt thou that we prepare for thee to eat the passover?' Mark 14:12: "And the first day of unleavened bread, when they killed the passover, his disciples said unto him, Where wilt thou that we go and prepare that thou mayest eat the passover?" Luke 22:7, 8: 'Then came the day of unleavened bread, when the passover must be killed. And he sent Peter and John, saying, Go and prepare us the passover, that we may eat.' This language is so similar that it cannot be questioned that they all meant the same thing, which seems to be that they went to prepare the Passover the first day of the feast of unleavened bread."

"But that nail will not fit," said Simon. "My Guide says (Lev. 23:5, 6): 'In the fourteenth day of the first month at even is the Lord's passover. And on the fifteenth day of the same month is the feast of unleavened bread unto the Lord.' How could they prepare the feast the day after it was eaten?"

"Could they not have eaten it a day in advance or a day afterward? What difference would a day make?" asked John.

"The difference was life or death. The Lord said concerning the Passover (Num. 9:3, 13): 'In the fourteenth day of this month, at even, ye shall keep it in his appointed season: according to all the rites of it, and according to all the ceremonies thereof, shall ye keep it. . . . The man that is clean, and is not in a journey, and forbeareth to keep the passover, even the same soul shall be cut off from among his people: because he brought not the offering of the Lord in his appointed season, that man shall bear his sin.' ”

“When did preparation for the Passover begin?” asked John.

“The first preparation was the taking of the lamb from the flock on the tenth day of the month (Ex. 12:3).”

“Then is it not possible that the disciples referred to the first day of preparation rather than to the first literal day of the feast? That is the only reasonable explanation I could give, and that point must be explained whether one believes Jesus and His disciples did or did not eat the Passover,” said John. “Matthew 26:19, 20 says, ‘The disciples . . . made ready the passover. Now when the even was come, he sat down with the twelve.’ Mark 14:15-18: ‘He will shew you a large upper room furnished and prepared: there make ready for us. . . . And they made ready the passover. And in the evening he cometh with the twelve. And as they sat and did eat.’ Luke 22:13, 14: ‘They made ready the passover. And when the hour was come, he sat down, and the twelve apostles with him.’ These references seem to teach that they ate the Passover that evening, although it does not positively say so.”

“That nail does not fit very well,” was the reply. “Exodus 12:11 says, ‘Thus shall ye eat it; with your loins girded, your shoes on your feet, and your staff in your hand; and ye shall eat it in haste.’ Sitting down does not seem to conform very well with that command. Proceed.”

“Matthew 26:21-25: ‘As they did eat,’ Jesus said, ‘He that dippeth his hand with me in the dish, the same shall betray me.’ In verses 26-29: ‘As they were eating’ the bread and wine were given and the promise made not to drink henceforth ‘until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father’s kingdom.’

“Mark 14:18-25 says practically the same thing. Luke 22:15, 16: ‘He said unto them, With desire I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer: for I say unto you, I will not eat any more thereof, until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God.’ He then gave the bread and cup, and proved that Judas partook of it by saying, in verse 21, ‘Behold, the hand of him that betrayeth me is with me on the table.’ John 13:14: ‘Now before the feast of the passover, when Jesus knew that his hour was come that he should depart out of this world unto the Father, having loved his own which were in the world, he loved them unto the end. And supper being ended, . . . he riseth from supper, and laid aside his garments; and took a towel, and girded himself.’ The verses following tell of the washing of the disciples’ feet as an example for them to follow, and then prophesied His betrayal by one of them. When asked which one would betray Him, He answered (v. 26): ‘He it is, to whom I shall give a sop, when I have dipped it. And when he had dipped the sop, he gave it to Judas Iscariot. . . . He then having received the sop went immediately out: and it was night.’ From there on to the end of chapter 17 Jesus gave instructions to the remaining disciples.

“Now let us study these quotations. Matthew, Mark, and Luke agree that it was while eating that the Lord gave the bread and wine, or cup. Luke makes it plain that Judas then went out and betrayed Him. John tells us nothing of the preparation, but fixes the time as ‘before the passover’ (John 13:1), and in verses 2 and 4 he calls the repast of which they had just partaken ‘supper.’ In verse 29 he says, ‘Some of them thought, because Judas had the bag, that Jesus had said unto him, Buy those things that we have need of against the feast.’ ”

Simon replied: “My Guide never designates the Passover as ‘supper,’ and it tells me (Lev. 23:5-7) that ‘the fourteenth day of the first month at even is the Lord’s passover. And on the fifteenth day of the same month is the feast of unleavened bread unto the Lord: . . . an holy convocation,’ or sabbath day. All preparations for those days were made before sundown of the preceding day. If the ‘supper’ had been the Passover, they could not have made purchases afterward for the feast the next day. The Passover was to be eaten with unleavened bread and bitter herbs, not raw, nor sodden at all with water, but roast with fire (Ex. 12:8, 9). These directions were very explicit. Tell me, I pray thee, into what was the ‘sop,’ or morsel, dipped?”

“That I cannot do,” said John.

“Then I do not believe it was the Passover they ate,” said Simon.

“Very well. Let us look farther. Matthew 26:30 and Mark 14:26 both say: ‘And when they had sung an hymn, they went out into the mount of Olives.’ They then tell of His agony in the garden, the betrayal, His capture by the multitude (Matt. 26:55; Mark 14:43), His trial before Caiaphas, where the scribes and elders were assembled (Matt. 26:57; Mark 14:53). Luke 22:39-65 tells practically the same story. John 18:1-27 tells it again with the information (v. 13) that He was taken to Annas first. Are there any nails to drive in these statements?”

“There is certainly a big spike to be driven there. We have already learned that the Passover must be kept according to all the rites and ceremonies (Num. 9:3). Exodus 12:22 says that, after the blood was placed on the lintel and sideposts, ‘none of you shall go out of the door of his house until the morning.’ Jesus and the disciples ‘went out,’ the priests and elders gathered together, and the multitude was out when Jesus was seized. According to the law, they were all subject to death if that was Passover night. Read some more.”

“Matthew 27:1, 2: ‘When the morning was come,’ they delivered Him to Pontius Pilate. Mark 15:1: ‘And straightway in the morning,’ they delivered Him to Pilate. Luke 22:66; 23:1: ‘And as soon as it was day’ the whole multitude of them arose, and led Him unto Pilate. John 18:28: ‘Then led they Jesus from Caiaphas unto the hall of judgment: and it was early, and they themselves went not into the judgment hall, lest they should be defiled; but that they might eat the passover.’ ”

“Surely we need no further proof that the Passover had not been eaten,” said Simon. “They were keeping themselves clean in order to eat the Passover, so it could not be past. We have already studied Numbers 9:13 as to the penalty for not keeping it at its appointed season. Is there any more direct evidence?"

"Yes. As the trial progressed Pilate tried to release Jesus, but they cried that He was not Cæsar's friend if he let Jesus go; so he gave final judgment. John 19:14 fixes the time. 'And it was the preparation of the passover, and about the sixth hour.' If John counted time as we do (see note on John 1:39, Emphatic Diaglott), it was about 6 a. m. Mark 15:25, 33, 34, using Jewish time, places the crucifixion at 9 a. m. and darkness from noon until His death at 3 p. m., thus fulfilling the type of the Passover lamb which was slain that evening, about the same time. John 19:31 tells us: 'The Jews therefore, because it was the preparation, that the bodies should not remain upon the cross on the sabbath day, (for that sabbath day was an high day,) besought Pilate that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away.' That sabbath was a 'high day' because it was the feast of unleavened bread.

"It is usually said that Jesus was crucified Friday, Nisan 15, but surely we have proved it to have been the 14th; but we have more evidence. Matthew 27:62-64: 'Now the next day, that followed the day of the preparation, the chief priests and Pharisees came together unto Pilate, saying, Sir, we remember that that deceiver said, while he was yet alive, After three days I will rise again. Command therefore that the sepulchre be made sure until the third day, lest his disciples come by night, and steal him away, and say unto the people, He is risen from the dead.' Why did they not accuse the disciples of stealing Him during the night the tomb was not sealed? Because it was Passover night and they knew that no one would be out. Surely He was buried Thursday near sundown, was in the tomb Thursday night, Friday, Friday night, Saturday, Saturday night, and was raised 'the third day, according to the scriptures' (1 Cor. 15:4).

"The annual sabbath was followed by the weekly sabbath, but Matthew 28:1 says: 'In the end of the sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene and the other Mary to see the sepulchre.' They found He had risen. If it was 'in the end of the sabbath,' it was Saturday evening. How shall we answer that? The Diaglott translates it, 'Now after the sabbath,' and the phrase, 'As it began to dawn,' indicates morning. Mark 16:1, 2 says: 'And when the sabbath was past, Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome, had brought sweet spices, that they might come and anoint him. And very early in the morning the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulchre at the rising of the sun.' John 20:1 says: 'The first day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene early, when it was yet dark, unto the sepulchre.' Luke 24:1 says: 'Now upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the sepulchre.'

"Reading on through Luke 24 we find the disciples did not believe Jesus was risen (v. 11). Two of them went 'that same day' (Sunday, v. 13) to Emmaus. Jesus joined them and asked what they were talking about. Cleopas answered (18-21): 'Art thou only a stranger in Jerusalem, and hast not known the things which are come to pass in these days? And he said unto them, What things? And they said unto him, Concerning Jesus of Nazareth, which was a prophet mighty in deed and word before God and all the people: and how the chief priests and our rulers delivered him to be condemned to death, and have crucified him. But we trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel: and beside all this, today is the third day since these things were done.'

"Here we have a definite key to the day of the crucifixion. Cleopas states, on Sunday, that it was the third day since the crucifixion. Saturday would be the second day since, Friday the first day since, and thus Thursday the day it occurred.

"Brother, art thou satisfied that the pointer has been returned to the vacant signpost, and that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, the King thou hast looked for so long?"

"I believe," replied Simon, "and I am ready to serve Him the rest of my life."

"Then thou shalt be baptized into Christ. 'And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise' (Gal. 3:27-29). May God's blessing rest upon our efforts. Amen."

THE HOLY SPIRIT—THE SPIRIT OF GOD

and joy, power and holiness, and all other blessings.

The Holy Spirit also forms Christ and the Spirit of Christ within us, but this does not prove that the Holy Spirit is the person of Christ, nor the Spirit of Christ's person. For Jesus prophesied that the Holy Spirit should take of His things and show them to us (John 16:14). When we have the Holy Spirit dwelling in us we have God and Christ dwelling in us, because the Holy Spirit is the Spirit of God and the Spirit of Christ's ministry. And because it is the Spirit of Christ's ministry, it is sometimes called the Spirit of Christ.

But we must not get mixed up and get into Babylon's mysteries. Christ personally is now in heaven and His personal Spirit is with Him. But we may have the Spirit of Christ, as the character of Christ, wrought in us by the Holy Spirit of God; and thus the Spirit of Christ and the Spirit of God, being of the same essence, are both in the Christian and are practically one and the same Spirit. We may say, in a general sense, that the Spirit of God as it comes upon us, and the Spirit of Jesus as it works in and through us, form the character of Jesus in us. Or speaking more technically, we may say that the Holy Spirit is, not the personal Spirit of Christ, but the Spirit that proceeds from the Father as a gift of grace through Christ. It is the Spirit of Christ's ministry, but it is really the Spirit proceeding from the person of God. It is used in this sense in Acts 16:7; Romans 8:9; and Philippians 1:19.

Thus the great Bible doctrine shines out clearly, revealing that the Holy Spirit is the Spirit of God the Father and not another person distinct from God.

Needed—Shepherds

* * * By J. Richard LeCrone, Eden Valley, Minn.

An evangelist of the Church of God, a man who had given his life to evangelism and was nearly past the age of active service, once remarked that during his career he had baptized more than fifteen hundred people. When asked how many of them had remained faithful to the Lord, he replied sadly that he was afraid that it was less than 50 per cent. A large percentage of them had been lost to him and he had no way of knowing where they were and what they were doing, but of those that he was able to get in touch with occasionally, less than 50 per cent had remained true. This indeed is a sad state of affairs. We are forced to wonder how many another evangelist would make a similar confession if questioned in the same manner.

Do such situations exist because the evangelist does not properly do his work? Is it because he has not been conscientious enough about properly instructing his converts before gathering them into the fold of Jesus? Or must we seek elsewhere for the root of the trouble? Experience and a bit of investigation seem to point to this as the reason for this sad state of affairs: When the evangelist finished his work in a community and moved on to new fields, no one was left behind to "feed the sheep," with the result that more than half of them literally starved to death for lack of nourishing food. As yet they were "babes in Christ" and lacked the strength and skill to successfully forage for themselves in the rich pastures of the Scripture. They had their Bibles, it is true, but they were in much the same position as was the eunuch who replied to Philip's query as to whether or not he understood what he was reading with "How can I, except some man guide me?" (Acts 8:31).

For this reason the Minnesota State Berean Society, which sponsored an evangelist in the field last summer, has been watching with keen interest developments regarding the reopening of the Bible Training School at Oregon, Illinois. They are in a position to fully realize the importance of proper follow-up work if evangelism is to bear the proper fruits.

They noted among other things that the committee in charge of this work, in reporting in THE RESTITUTION HERALD, said much about the expense of opening and running the school and little or nothing about the need for such a school. Accordingly the Society resolved to do what it could to help the work along. The result was that the Society voted to hold itself responsible for the tuition of one student or its equivalent in case that it is decided to open the school. Unless some young person from the State of Minnesota expresses a wish to attend the school before General Conference time, the money will be turned over to the committee in charge of the work to be used to pay the tuition of some student from another state. In case no student is found who needs this aid, the committee will be at liberty to use the fund as they see fit, provided only that the school is opened and that the money is used in connection with it.

Bereans everywhere, are we going to let this great work drop for lack of proper financial support? How much is your society willing and able to help with this work? If you don't feel that your society is able to raise tuition for one student ($10 per month for ten months) determine what you can do and let the committee know. It seems to be chiefly a fear of financial difficulties that is hindering the work. Let's replace that fear with faith and confidence and the work will go forward.

It is a fine thing to send out evangelists to gather lost sheep into the fold, but remember, the sheep must be fed. Are we going to permit them to starve for the lack of trained and willing shepherds?

A Challenge to Youth

You think the Training Class idea is good. You're for it. Yes, but do you know that the plans are about to fall through because you who are for it do not have the money to finance it? I know you are for the idea or you wouldn't be reading this page, which is a page essentially for youthful-minded people, a page of the visions of youth.

Now is the time for you to act. In a few weeks it may be too late. The Minnesota Bereans again are blazing the trail for us to follow. (See above article.)

The church of tomorrow stands to gain or lose the most by the success or failure of the Training Class now. Young people, I appeal to you, get your society into line to bear the responsibility of the tuition costs for one student.

When tomorrow comes, will it find us losing more and ever more members, gradually retrenching before the onslaughts of the enemy, or will it find us marching on to victory, a militant, dynamic church? Decision Day is upon us. Which way will you go taking your church with you? You face the challenge.

THE TRAINING CLASS

Somebody prayed and sweated and then prayed and sweated some more, and finally pulled into the minutes of the General Conference a resolution to reestablish the Training Class for ministers if—somebody else went home and talked and prayed and talked and got some young people to decide to become preachers and teachers. Now somebody is pushing and praying and digging down into his pockets and praying and raising some money to send these young people to that Training Class. Where do you fit into this program, my friend? The future of your church hangs in the balance. "What kind of a church would this church be if every member were just like me?"

TWIN BROTHERS WHO WERE SO DIFFERENT

"MOTHER," exclaimed Bobby as he hurried into the house from school, "there are two new boys in my class and they are twins."

"Well, that's interesting," answered Mother. "What are the boys like, Bobby?"

"They aren't like each other at any rate, Mother," he said. "One is quiet and bashful, and the other is noisy and friendly."

"Their names are John and James," said Betty, "but they don't look a bit alike."

At this Mother laughed, as though having names alike the boys ought to resemble each other in appearance at least.

"Well, you won't have the usual difficulty of trying to learn which boy is John and which one James," she reminded them. "We have a lesson Sunday about twins, and since we are all going to the program at school tonight, we'd better get at it at once."

"Were these twins alike, Mother?" asked Betty.

"No, they were very unlike each other in every way," Mother told her. "Get your Bibles and we will learn all about them."

So Betty and Bobby went to the bookcase, got down their Bibles, and seated themselves at the table, one on each side of Mother.

"Find Genesis 25, children, and we will begin reading at the 27th verse. Bobby, tell me what you learn about these twins from that first verse."

"Well, Esau liked to roam around the fields and hunt. And Jacob liked to stay at home."

"All right. Betty, you tell us something about them found in verse 28."

"Esau was his father's favorite," said Betty, "and Jacob was his mother's favorite. But why should they have favorites, Mother?"

"Well, you see by this time Isaac, the twins' father, was very old, and he enjoyed comfort more than anything else. Esau brought him the very finest meat to eat that he had hunted and dressed and cooked in just the way his father liked best. A mother, naturally I think, loves a son who stays close by home, and Jacob spent most of his time with her, you see. And so she loved Jacob, while the father loved Esau. You know, the people of the Bible were no more perfect, some of them, than people are today. You'll see that is true as we go further into this story."

"The next verse, Mother, says that Jacob sod pottage. What does that mean?" Bobby asked.

"He boiled pottage, in other words. And pottage was a dish made of vegetables boiled with meat which has a very appetizing smell. It increased Esau's feeling of hunger until he thought he'd die of starvation if he didn't have some at once.

"But Jacob wanted to make a bargain with his twin brother before he gave him some of the stew, as we would call it. He wanted Esau to trade his birthright for it. You've heard of one twin being older than the other, having been born first. Well, Esau was the older, and so the 'birthright' belonged to him.

"Now the birthright was a double share in all the father's property and, besides, the honor of being the head of the family or tribe. Jacob was envious of Esau's right to that, and he planned to get it by whatever means he could, honest or otherwise. Esau lived only for the present, and so he thought that a good meal was about the only thing that mattered just then. But he was very sorry about it afterward, as you shall see. Oftentimes the things we do in haste we repent of after we have had time to think.

"Now turn the page over to chapter 27. There we will learn something more about these brothers, and the story is one that I think will make you feel sorry for them and ashamed.

"You see, there was still one thing left to Isaac that he could bestow upon Esau and that was his blessing given before his death. Rebekah desired even that for Jacob, her favorite son, and she helped Jacob deceive his father so that he got it."

"Why," said Betty, shocked by her mother's words, "did they do such things in those days, Mother?"

"Yes, I'm afraid they did, Daughter, for they were human, too, and often did things they knew were wrong. If Rebekah had only been content to wait, God would have blessed Jacob, for He had promised He would. But she was impatient and didn't have enough faith to wait God's own time for things to happen. So she took things into her own hands.

"It's almost time to get supper now, and so we will have to leave the rest of the story for Sunday morning while we are eating breakfast," said Mother. And she hurried out into the kitchen, leaving the children reading it over so that they could tell it to Father.

OUR IMMEDIATE NEEDS

The response to the appeals made in The Restitution Herald for funds to meet tax and paper bills amounting to $550 (this figure now can be given exactly) has been gratifying, and we want you to know that your aid has been appreciated.

The fact still remains, however, that not enough to cover these expenses in addition to normal running costs has been received; and we are still obliged to ask for assistance in support of the denominational weekly and Sunday school quarterly. A paper bill of $260 is payable June 15 if a substantial discount is to be secured, and must be paid by July 15. Tax bills totaling $150 must be met before June 1. The remainder of the tax account may be postponed to August 1.

Arlen Marsh, Asst. Treas.

WHAT'S THE ANSWER?

Upon whom was the first surgical operation performed in which an anaesthetic was used? That's an easy one! But if you don't know it you'll find the answer somewhere in next week's paper. Be sure to look for it! It'll be there!

REPORT FOR APRIL

Sermons: Pleasant View, 2; Rensselaer, 2; Hillisburg, 2; Plymouth, 1; North Salem, 1. Baptisms, 1. Money received: Pleasant View, $28.00; Rensselaer, $20.00; Hillisburg, $20.83; Plymouth, $15.00; North Salem, $7.50; conference board, $8.00. Expense, $16.00.

On the third Sunday it was our pleasure after Bible study on baptism to baptize Orville Clark, our son-in-law, Maggie's husband, into our Lord Jesus Christ. That night he was given the right hand of fellowship by the members of the Hillisburg Church of God. May he and we ever keep in the way of life and meet the Savior at His coming, is our prayer.

J. H. Anderson, Indiana Evangelist.

The Student Christian Association of Aurora College held an inter-college religious meeting on the Aurora campus Thursday afternoon and evening, April 29. Eight colleges in the Aurora area were invited to send a delegation of fifteen students. A full program was arranged by Arthur Mills, president of the Association, with the counsel of Pastor Richardson.

CORVALLIS, OREGON

Bro. J. Eagleston of Pomona, Calif., spent two days recently in Corvallis before continuing on his long trip northward. He visited the sick and elderly, gave two sermons at the chapel and many interesting and helpful talks in the homes. The manner in which old truths were presented was new and unusual, and we enjoyed having him here very much. We hope that he will come this way again, and we pray that God's blessing will rest upon the work which this brother is doing.

We are glad to report that little Joyce Morgan is at home, where she is recovering from bruises received when the bicycle which she was riding was struck by a car. First aid was rendered by attendants at the infirmary on the Oregon State College campus and later Joyce was removed to a local hospital.

Gladys Barber.

NOTES FROM LOUISIANA

The attendance and interest at both the Blood River and Happy Woods Churches continue to be very gratifying.

Our present arrangement calls for preaching service each Sunday night at Happy Woods and Bible study every Wednesday night. Preaching services are held at Blood River each Sunday morning and Berean Thursday night.

The new Berean class which was recently organized in Ponchatoula is doing much better than we dared hope. This class meets in the Martin Bangston home each Friday night and studies the lessons in the new Berean book.

We are also very happy to report that every Tuesday night we are holding services in a new territory located about four miles from Blood River. These services were requested by some of the people living in this new locality who were anxious to hear more of the teachings of the Church of God. We trust that some will be led to accept these truths.

It is very gratifying to report also that Grandma Siple, as she is called by all, is able to attend services again following a brief period of illness.

May God give us strength to carry forward in His service until Jesus comes.

Harry Goekler, Pastor.

Again we ask that checks and business letters intended for The Restitution Herald and the National Bible Institution not be made out nor addressed to individual employees. Sickness and absence from Oregon during the last month of two employees has resulted in serious delays in acknowledging letters and contributions faultily addressed to those employees personally.

IDA GAWEN FREEMAN

Mrs. Ida Gawen Freeman, wife of Lot Freeman, deceased, was born June 20, 1861, and died April 18, 1937. She is survived by one son, three grandchildren, and three great-grandchildren, and by a number of nieces and nephews. She was a devoted Christian woman, and was a member of the Liberty Adventist Church for the past forty years. Services were conducted by the writer.

M. O. Williamson.

AMY ALICE SWITZER

Amy Alice Fraucke, daughter of Herman and Laura Cary Fraucke, was born August 12, 1887, near Hanover, Ill., where she lived until sixteen years of age, when the family moved to Thomson, Ill., and where she was united in marriage with Frank Switzer, also of Thomson, Feb. 16, 1909. They lived for a number of years on a farm near Thomson, where their three children, Helen, Stephen, and Homer, were born. Later they moved to Savanna and then to their home in Freedom Township, where they have since resided. She died April 11, 1937, after three months of suffering, which she endured with patience and Christian fortitude, leaving her husband, two sons, and one daughter, above named; her aged father and mother; one sister, Mrs. Charles Switzer of Thomson; and two brothers, Hal of Mt. Carroll and Earnest of Savanna; with other relatives and many friends to mourn the loss of a beloved daughter; a true and faithful wife; a kind, tender, and patient mother; and a kindly, generous neighbor.

When eighteen years of age she united with the York Baptist Church, where she held membership until middle life, when she left that church and became a member of the Church of God of the Abrahamic Faith.

Sr. Switzer was a faithful and earnest church worker, always in the front ranks of those working to build up and improve society in her community, and will be sorely missed by her neighbors and those with whom she associated in life.

On account of the many neighbors and friends that could not make the long journey to the place where burial was to be made, some forty miles away, memorial services were held at the home, which was quite inadequate to accommodate the numbers that assembled to pay their respects to one they had loved so well; and after that service we drove to the church and cemetery near Thomson. A dozen or more carloads of neighbors and friends accompanied her over the forty-mile drive. We found that the church building was too small to accommodate the near friends of this much-loved woman.

In each of these services Bro. Harvey Krogh, former pastor of Plum River Church, where Sr. Switzer worshiped during the last years of her life, sang two beautiful solos which were much appreciated.

As her life was rich in faith and good works, she now rests in peace, until that day for which she looked, hoped, and prayed.

L. E. Conner.

MARTHA GRIFFITH KIRKPATRICK

Martha Griffith was born near Roll, Blackford County, Ind., in 1871, where she grew to womanhood. She was baptized into Christ when eighteen years of age, from which time she remained faithful to the Master and His cause to the time of her death, which occurred April 2, 1937.

When a young woman she was united in marriage to Bert Swindler, who died a few years after their marriage. Some years later she was united in marriage with J. C. Kirkpatrick, M. D., who preceded her in death by some four years.

Maude, as she was familiarly known and addressed by her relatives and friends, was a kindly, mild-mannered woman firm and strong in faith and true to her convictions and in her devotion to the principles of the gospel she cherished, loved, and supported during the last 47 years of her life.

After appropriate funeral services we placed her beside her husband in the silent city of the dead to await the dawn of God's eternal day.

L. E. Conner.

ELIZABETH CONAWAY

The subject of this sketch was born in Boston, County of Lincolnshire, England, February 12, 1844, and died in Seattle, Wash., March 6, 1937. She came to this country in 1871, arriving in Chicago just after the great fire in that city. Here she met Jeremiah Conaway, to whom she was married in 1873. With her husband, she crossed the plains in 1880 in a train of 100 wagons, making the hazardous journey over the Oregon Trail. The family settled first in Oregon, then came to Seattle about 1890.

During the past few years, Sr. Conaway spent her time with her children in southern California and in Washington State. She was a rugged Christian character and a triumphant believer, dearly beloved by all who knew her. During her last conscious hours, she was praising God with Psalms of thanksgiving, and her "God bless you, dear," was her farewell to all who called upon her.

Her beloved husband, from earliest youth an earnest defender "for the faith once delivered to the saints," preceded her in death June 11, 1933. Our one-time dearly loved Sr. Morrill of Aurora, Ill., was his sister.

"Grandma" Conaway is survived by six daughters and one son, all living on the Pacific Coast.

Funeral services were held in Seattle, where a large congregation of friends assembled for the final rites. Words of comfort were spoken by the Advent Christian pastor, and then our dear friend was laid to rest beside her husband, where together they await the coming of the great Life-Giver.

THE RESTITUTION HERALD

THE RESTITUTION HERALD advocates: the near return of Christ, Acts 1:11, and life only through Him, Col. 3:3; the literal resurrection of the dead, John 5:28; the immortalization of those in Christ, 1 Cor. 15:53, 54; the final restoration of Israel as the kingdom of God under the kingship of Christ, Luke 1:32, the church to be joint-heirs with Him, Rom. 8:17, and Israel to be made head over Gentile nations, Isa. 60:13; the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began," Acts 3:21. It also firmly advocates repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, Acts 2:38, and a consecrated life as essential to salvation.

IT HAPPENED AT OLD UNION, IND.

September 25 to October 2, 1866

A notable discussion was conducted between J. M. Stephenson and P. T. Russell, the latter designated as "a Disciple minister," during the period named above. The nature of the debate is indicated by the following resolution which sets forth the first point at issue:

"Resolved: That everything that appertains to a human being becomes perfectly unconscious in death."

J. M. Stephenson affirms, P. T. Russell denies.

Bro. Isaiah Hornaday of Clermont, Ind., in reporting the results of the discussion, wrote to the Prophetic Watchman to this effect:

"The parties met at the time and place agreed upon and spent six days and a half (in the debate), three and a half on the state of the dead, and three on the kingdom, Stephenson affirming the entire unconsciousness of all that pertained to man in death and Russell affirming that the kingdom spoken of in Daniel 2:44 was set up on the day of Pentecost. And the result was glorious for the cause of truth. . . . Without giving the particulars of the arguments, I would say that Stephenson fairly, logically, and scripturally took from P. T. R. every position and point he made."

That J. M. Stephenson, then a very young man, was able to meet and vanquish in public debate a man of the apparent education and experience of his opponent, speaks well for Bro. Stephenson's knowledge of the Scriptures and for his qualifications as a defender of the truth. In those stirring days no minister of the Church of God was "ashamed of the gospel of Christ" or hesitated to proclaim forcefully and continually the great doctrines he believed.

A Busy Day

By Lottie E. Young

MOST of us have seen a picture of Jesus sitting in the house of Mary and Martha talking to them, rather reproving the latter for paying too much attention to the cares of the household, and commending Mary as she sits at His feet drinking in all He has to say. He has such a quiet and untroubled face one would be tempted to think He never knew the meaning of hard work as compared with the lives of the fishermen with whom He associated, or was ever tired or hungry. Let us take a look at a day in His earthly ministry and see how it was spent as told in the 5th chapter of Mark.

The night before had witnessed the storm on the Sea of Galilee, which was so severe the disciples were greatly alarmed and disturbed the Master's rest by crying out in terror—"Teacher! carest thou not that we perish?" and the record says, "He awoke, and rebuked the wind, and said unto the sea, Peace, be still," followed with, "Why are ye fearful? Have ye yet no faith?" to those in the boat with Him.

Very likely there was no more sleep that night, but hard rowing, as the boat reached the other side of the sea the next morning. This was the country of the Gerasenes, and there a demoniac was met, so strong that he broke all the fetters and chains with which he was bound, and could not be permitted to live with other men, as all were afraid of his strength. In some manner, however, he recognized Jesus as the Son of God, running to Him and worshipping. The infinite compassion of Jesus was manifested as He commanded the unclean spirit to come out of the man, and we soon see this sufferer "clothed and in his right mind" desirous of being one of the helpers of Jesus, but as this was forbidden he was told to go home and tell his friends what great things the Lord had done for him, which he did.

After this humane deed one would think all men would have been assured that this Healer was none other than the Son of God, but the sad part of the story is that the men who owned the swine into which the demons had been driven, and which had perished, thought more of their pigs than they did of their afflicted fellow man, and besought Jesus that He would leave their country and not destroy their profits! Men and women today are doing the same thing; instead of seeking first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, living to help and bless those with whom they come in contact, they are thinking how much money they can make, perhaps by shady measures, no matter how much their associates may suffer.

Again the sea was crossed, and here a great multitude was found to be waiting for the One who had done such great miracles. Among them was "a ruler of the synagogue," but evidently one who believed that Jesus was the Son of the Highest. From the days of Adam to the present time there has been an unending line of those who sorrow, and this Jairus had a heartache which he felt Jesus alone could remove, for he cried out piteously, "My little daughter is at the point of death; I pray thee that thou come and lay thy hands on her that she may be made whole and live." The compassionate Savior could not resist such a touching appeal, and He started to go with the despairing father, "and a great multitude followed him, and thronged him." I think this constant pushing and crowding of Jesus as He went along must have been a cross to His sensitive nature (especially when He realized it was for healing of their bodies, or for the loaves and fishes, that they flocked about Him), but I do not think He was ever cross with them, or said an unkind word, as He realized they were as sheep without a shepherd.

Now comes an interruption in this walk: a woman who has been suffering for twelve years, whom the doctors have not been able to help, is in the crowd; and we can picture her pushing through, having the feeling if she can only touch the garment of Jesus she will be healed. She succeeds, and instantly realizes that she is cured; Jesus also knows who it is that touched Him, but wants the person to confess to it, which the woman does, falling at the feet of the Great Physician and hearing His sweet, "Daughter, thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace." But how did Jairus feel at this interruption! I am afraid we would have chafed and expostulated if our plans had been so disturbed! Just then the message came from his house that it was useless troubling the Master, as the little girl was dead. We can imagine how the poor father's heart sank, but hope must have been restored when Jesus said—"Fear not, only believe." We all know the rest of this beautiful incident; how, in spite of the laughing Him to scorn of the hired mourners, and the tumult always incident to an Oriental funeral, the voice of the Life-Giver brought again joy to the loving father and mother, for their little daughter was brought back from the sleep of the dead and once again demonstrated the power of Him who alone could say, "I am the resurrection, and the life."

Do you ever say when asked to do an act of kindness—perhaps visit one who is sick and unable to leave the house—"I cannot possibly go; I am too busy"—and then contrast your "busyness" with this full day in the life of the Master, acting accordingly? We cannot do the wonderful acts of mercy which Jesus did, but every day there are opportunities for doing good to some one. Don't let us wait until our friends are dead to send them flowers, or to say the word which may cheer them up, but follow our Great Example, whose life was spent in doing others good.

He Liveth Long

He liveth long who liveth well ;
All else is being flung away ;
He liveth longest who can tell
Of true things truly done each day.

Waste not thy being ; back to Him
Who freely gave it, freely give ;
Else is that being but a dream ;
'Tis but to be, and not to live.

Be what thou seemest ; live thy creed ;
Hold up to earth the torch divine ;
Be what thou prayest to be made ;
Let the great Master's steps be thine.

"Deadeye Dick" Literature For the Sunday School

"Provoke not your children to wrath: but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord."—Paul.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., May 4.—Editors and publishers of Sunday school papers for children decided yesterday at a meeting of the editorial section of the International Conference for Religious Education that in the interests of "continued profits and a higher moral (!) tone among the younger generation, they would brighten up their reading matter to compete with 'deadeye Dick' and 'G-man' literature," according to the press reports.

Churches for and Against Communism

"There is confusion and every evil work."—James 3:16.

EVANSTON, Ill., May 5.—Resolutions were adopted by the unofficial Methodist Federation for Social Service at its annual convention today endorsing the American Civil Liberties Union, which is known as a "Red front" organization, in demanding freedom of speech in the pulpit for all clergymen. The resolution was aimed at the action of the quadrennial conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church which last spring repudiated the so-called social service group after the Methodist's Laymen's League charged that five of its leaders were also members of the Moscow-directed organizations.

Included in this latest action of the "social gospel" organization was a protest to the board of bishops against penalizing ministers "who express liberal, social, and economic views" from their pulpits.

The editor of THE HERALD recently interviewed a minister of the Chicago area of the Methodist Church regarding the attitude of the bishops toward the preaching of the so-called "social gospel" and was informed that the bishops generally are opposed to pastors engaging in such political activities and were attempting to curb the tendency toward radicalism in the church.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 5.—Communism is increasing rapidly throughout the United States and unless speedily curbed will undermine the very foundations of our government, declared Walter I. Plant, District of Columbia deputy of the Knights of Columbus, a layman's organization of the Roman Catholic Church, in a radio address tonight.

"I believe the public generally is not aware of the seriousness of the situation," the speaker said. "Otherwise, I believe, we would have seen more concrete action taken against those professional uplifters who would supplant democracy with Russian Bolshevism." Congress should rewrite our laws governing the deportation of undesirable aliens, Mr. Plant asserted, making it possible to expel from the country those who seek to overthrow this Government by force or violence.

It is obvious that the Methodist social group and the Catholic laymen's organization are agreed on one point: that is, that the hope of the country rests in the hands of our politicians. Both would reform the nation by legislative enactments. Neither has apparently any understanding of the predictions of the prophets which affirm so clearly that moral and economic conditions are to "grow worse and worse" until the Lord comes.

"Alarm Clock" in Brain, Scientists Assert

"I myself will awake early."—Psalm 57:8.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 27.—Every person has a "time clock" in his brain which keeps track of the seconds, even while he is asleep, Dr. E. Newton Harvey of Princeton University told the National Academy of Sciences today. The discovery was made, Dr. Harvey said, while he and two associates were studying the brain's electric currents. The experimenters found two major types of brain potentials. One was a continuous rhythm of ten a second while the other ran forty a second. Currents during sleep were different from those of the waking hours.

Psychologists long have suspected that individuals could tell time while asleep, but lacked positive proof. The present experiments establish that the brain is like a metronome used by a beginner during his piano lessons.

The strange power which many people are known to possess which enables them to wake at almost the exact moment they desire without the aid of an alarm clock is still one of the many unsolved mysteries of the marvelous machine which God made out of the dust of the ground. In the future when this mortal shall have put on immortality, no doubt many such problems will be solved and we shall also discover that the Creator has provided us with many other equally remarkable powers, such, for example, as the ability to assume visibility or invisibility at will (Luke 24:16, 31; John 20:26).

With Whom Shall We Commune?

THREE letters have been received in answer to the question which was asked by Sr. Mandes Reed in THE RESTITUTION HERALD of March 16. Realizing that many of our readers are perplexed regarding what their action with regard to partaking of Communion in other churches should be, we are publishing all three letters which have come in answer to the question.

Most of our readers apparently look upon the problem as one which must be settled by each individual for himself, and we trust that the material submitted will aid those who are in doubt to solve the question scripturally and with satisfaction to themselves.

In publishing the different views, THE RESTITUTION HERALD does not hold itself responsible for the opinions expressed on either side, nor are we permitted to publish replies to the arguments presented. The writers have in each instance stated their conclusions clearly, and the reader should be able to make his own decision without further assistance.

THE QUESTION STATED

The original letter from Sr. Reed follows in part.

"I wish some of our able writers would publish articles in THE RESTITUTION HERALD on the question of taking Communion with other churches. We have no Church of God here and therefore we attend the _____ Church services where they take Communion every Sunday.

"I have been taught, and always believed, that it is wrong to partake with other churches, or with unbelievers. But I can find no Scripture to prove that I am right. I have asked different ministers of our faith about the matter. Some very strongly disapprove, others approve, and I have been unable to decide as to which are right.

"As this is a very sacred act I thought others might desire light on the subject also, and I would be very thankful if some of our able ministers would help us out.

"Your sister in the faith, seeking the truth,
"Mrs. Mandes Reed."

We regret that our ministers have failed to respond more generally to Sr. Reed's request. At the same time we have Bible students who make no pretense of being preachers who are quite as qualified to speak on spiritual matters as are any of our recognized preachers. Many of our people are profound biblical scholars though they may not feel qualified to present from the pulpit what they have learned from God's Word.

The replies have all reached us in the form of personal letters, and we submit them in that form for your consideration.

THE FIRST REPLY

Dear Brother: Perhaps I am trespassing a little, inasmuch as "some of our able ministers" were invited to "help out" Sr. Mandes Reed in solving her problem as to whether "it is wrong to partake (of Communion) with other churches, or with unbelievers"; but I would like to make a few comments "from the pew."

In the first place, unbelievers would not bother to observe the ordinance—what good would it be? They would serve no purpose to themselves, and it would be just a waste of their own time. We who believe in Christ do not believe in atheism, and certainly would not spend time "going through the motions" of an atheistic service; so that part is disposed of quickly.

Now for the other part—"with other churches." First of all, I think we will agree that the supper or ordinance is not of the church or congregation, it is of Christ; therefore, we are not invited, nor inviting ourselves, to sit at the table of a congregation, but at the table of our Lord Jesus Christ. In other words, He is our Host—He extends the invitation, not the presiding minister nor the other guests. We gather at His table as His guest, and He has given us no authority to judge other guests as being worthy or unworthy. For that matter, were all of the guests at the first Supper worthy, as we understand worthiness? No; for one betrayed Him, another denied Him, others left His work and His cause and went back to their fishing. No, sister, fortunately it is not given to us to judge who is worthy and who unworthy to sit at the table of the Master; and in 1 Corinthians 11:28 Paul says very plainly, "But let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup. For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself." He says again in Romans 14:4: "Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth." Let us not be exercised unduly as to others and their worthiness, as we view it; let us "examine ourselves" to see that we are worthy, and let us leave the rest to God, who does not judge after the hearing of His ears or the sight of His eyes. Let us beware of that "holier than thou" attitude toward others who do not interpret God's Word just as we do; and in questions involving conduct for ourselves let us study the life of Christ while He was here upon earth, let us consult God in earnest prayer, and such things will be made quite clear to us.

Do not settle this by the judgment of men, Sr. Reed; ask God to guide you.

Arthur Gilbey.

THE SECOND REPLY

Dear Sr. Reed: In THE HERALD of March 16 I notice your request about taking Communion with other churches, who are, as Paul words it, "aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise." My remarks will not come under the title of "an able writer," not even a ready writer. (Please turn to page 16)

The Blessing of All Nations

By A. H. Zilmer

TO BLESS is to make happy by some particular means. Blessing is that which makes happy or prosperous; any temporal or spiritual good calling for gratitude. Blessedness is a state of happiness resulting from the divine favor.

From first to last God had thoughts of good for the human beings He had created and placed upon the earth; in fact, we may say, He created them with the object of bestowing blessings upon them, and making them happy. Scarcely had He made the first human pair until He pronounced blessings upon them. "And God blessed them, and God said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and fill the earth, and subdue it, and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over everything that moveth upon the earth" (Gen. 1:26-28). When Noah and his family came forth from the ark, "God blessed Noah and his sons, and said unto them, Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the earth . . . And you, be ye fruitful and multiply; and bring forth abundantly in the earth, and multiply therein" (Gen. 9:1, 7).

In making the earth, and placing man upon it, God would "rejoice in the habitable part of the earth," and have His "delight with the sons of men" (Prov. 8:31). He filled the earth with His "riches" (Psalm 104:24), and presented it to man "to have and to hold," and be happy in the use and enjoyment of those riches.

But the possession and use of the material wealth placed in the earth is not the only blessing that God would bestow, nor yet the greatest. God would have man live in the enjoyment of what the Apostle Paul styled "spiritual blessings in heavenly things" (Eph. 1:3, margin). First among these is communion with God: to hear, heed, and obey His word, and to have delight therein. This is the highest form of enjoyment possible. Here, as in the work of creation, that is first which is natural, and afterward that which is spiritual (1 Cor. 15:46).

Even though a man strays from the path of right, and loses his communion with God, God is gracious to him, bears with him, entreats him to return from his wanderings, and offers to abundantly pardon his transgressions, wash away the guilt of his sins, and mention these no more, nor even remember them. This is a most remarkable thing in God's dealings with mankind. The introduction of sin into the world made manifest this divine characteristic of love toward the sinner, and the gracious pardon of his sins. The sinners were not the exception in the world of mankind, but the rule. "For all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God" (Rom. 3:23). It was with this fact in view, and with the object of extending mercy to the sinners, that God made to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob the great promise of blessing for all families of the earth. This promise is first mentioned in Genesis 12:3, and was repeated to Abraham (chap. 18:18; 22:18); then to Isaac (Gen. 26:4); and again to Jacob (chap. 28:14). It is a promise of divine blessing not merely to the descendants of those fathers, but to all the families; nations, or kindreds of the earth.

The promise was made to Abraham "because" he had shown himself willing to offer up his son Isaac (Gen. 22:18). The promise was repeated to Isaac, and the reason given was the same as before: "because" of Abraham's obedience to God's "voice" and keeping His "charge," His "commandments, statutes, and laws" (Gen. 26:4). To Jacob it was said that in his "seed" all the families of the earth should be blessed. One of the promises to Abraham said, "In thy seed," while two said, "In the," or "In him." Thus these patriarchs were the mediums through which blessings from God were to flow to all the people of the earth.

We further mention the fact, vouched for by the Apostle Paul, that the "seed" referred to in this promise of blessing is Christ, and also embraces those who through faith and obedience belong to Christ. "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ" (Gal. 3:16). "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. . . . And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise" (vv. 26-29). Thus Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, as well as Christ, and those belonging to Christ, constitute the group through whom all the families of the earth shall receive blessings from God.

Not only was Abraham to be a blessing, but in order to make this possible he must first be blessed. "And I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing" (Gen. 12:3). The Apostle Paul saw a blessing to those who are of faith. "So then they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham" (Gal. 3:9). As will be readily seen, the blessing to Abraham consisted of vastly more than a numerous progeny, and the enjoyment of the material things of life. This progeny promised to Abraham was necessary for the production of Christ as the outstanding personage of Abraham's "seed," and the medium through which the divine blessings are to flow to mankind.

We next mention the citation and comment on this promise from the Apostles Peter and Paul. The former was addressing a considerable company of the "men of Israel" at Jerusalem, mentioning the fact that the nation of Israel had "killed the Prince of life," whom God had raised from the dead. He then called upon those Jews to so repent that their sins might be blotted out, that so might come the times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord, "and he shall send Jesus Christ," who had been previously designated to them, "whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things spoken of by the mouth of all God's holy prophets since aionian times." The speaker then cited a prophecy made of God to Israel by Moses of a prophet whom God would raise up unto Israel, to which he subjoined the solemn declaration, "And it shall come to pass that every soul that will not hear that prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people" (Acts 3:12-23). To this statement the speaker added, "Yea, and all the prophets from Samuel and those that follow after, as many as have spoken, have likewise foretold of these days" (v. 24). The prophets "foretold," or told beforehand, of certain "days," and this is qualified by the definitive word "these." This word as used by the Apostle denotes proximate nearness, while "those" refers to that which is more remote. Hence the various passages cited before this Jewish audience applied to the situation then and there existing.

These observations are further sustained by the context following. "Ye are the children of the prophets (who 'foretold of these days'), and of the covenant which God made with our fathers, saying unto Abraham, And in thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed. Unto you first God, having raised up his Son Jesus, sent him to bless you in turning away every one of you from his iniquities" (vv. 25, 26). Here we see the following items:

1. That God raised up His Son Jesus.
2. That God sent His Son to Israel.
3. The object of His mission was to bless them.
4. The blessing would consist in turning them away from their iniquities.
5. This mission was to the Jews "first," implying that God would "bless" others besides the children of Israel.
6. Such blessing was in fulfillment of the promise which God had made to the fathers.

Here was a powerful incentive to the Jews to turn away from their iniquities. To repent of those iniquities and be converted would make possible the blotting out of their sins, for so reads the command: "Repent and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out." The "that" here has the force of "so that," or "in order that." To blot out sins and turn away from iniquity are one and the same thing. This is also styled to "bless."—The Faith.

What Is a Christian?

By J. W. Williams

THIS question may be asked sometimes by non-Christians, prompted by the selfish objection of justification for that non-Christian state, the thought being that the standard for Christianity is too high of attainment to please selfish people, so high that no professed Christian is living to it, and therefore that there are no real Christians.

Then again there is the earnest believer with conscience quick as a magnetic needle who is uncertain of his state of grace, and longs for the assurance that he is a child of the gracious Most High. It is for this one especially we write, and if such can manifest Christ to men in daily life perhaps any honest inquirers among the non-Christian class may be in that way influenced to behold the Christ, and glorify the Father for such a noble work of grace.

"And the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch" (Acts 11:26). Then a Christian is a disciple of Christ. So if we can identify disciples we can know what Christians are. What, then, are the identifying evidences of discipleship? They are two, faith and works. If Christians need have no definite faith, then infidels who have no faith and heathen and deceivers who have false faiths can all call themselves Christians if they think they have the necessary good works. Most of all such classes would repudiate the title; however, some who admire the Lord and His Book claim to be Christians because they think they compare so favorably in deeds with other religious people who do claim the title of discipleship. Also many religious people are deceived as to their standing, being confident when they should fear, for all that so many true saints doubt when they might rejoice if they only understood.

As to faith, "disciples indeed" may be identified in John 8:30-32. True Christians are here seen to be such as have for their faith what is taught in the "word" sent from heaven. That is, true Christianity's creed is the infallible truth of the Word of God instead of the traditions, opinions, reasonings, and commandments of men. If the immortality of the soul is a Bible doctrine, then Plato had the Christian faith, for he taught that. And then all the heathen and most of the other religion in the world is in Christian faith, for only a few professed Christians in the world refuse to believe that doctrine. Then why do professed Christians send missionaries to the ends of the world to convert the heathen when very largely they believe the same basic doctrine as the missionaries?

Again, if wearing a distinct style of dress to distinguish religious people from others is taught in the Bible, then those who follow that have one mark of Christian identity, and if such is not taught, then Christians will not seek so to manifest themselves. In short, a Christian is in faith one who believes what is in the Word of God and nothing that is not taught therein. And when his attention is called to matters of his faith which are not in that Word he will at once gladly yield to the change in his faith. Then the only differences in faith among Christians are those which come from honest misunderstandings of what is said in the Bible,

The Greatness of God's Love

"For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—John 3:16.

THIS well-known verse is the cream of the gospel, "the gospel in miniature," "the epitome of the gospel," the glad tidings "in a nutshell." It is a divine picture of the wonderful love of God, graciously painted by the blessed Son of God. There has been nothing ever said like this in all the world's literature.

As we dwell upon the amazing love of God, let us consider (1) the object of His love; (2) the gift of His love; (3) the fruit of His love.

THE OBJECT OF HIS LOVE

Whom did God love? "The world." While there was nothing in the world to deserve the love of God, but much to repel it, nevertheless God loved the world. He loved an ungrateful, hostile, dead world. He loved a judgment-bound world which ignored Him. He still loves a lost world.

"For the love of God is broader Than the measure of man's mind;
And the heart of the Eternal
Is most wonderfully kind."

The fact that God loved the world does not signify that He approved the conduct of men. Rather, He had benevolent feelings toward them, and was earnestly desirous of their happiness in spite of their shameful conduct toward Him. It will help us to realize the greatness of God's love if we bear in mind this comment made by Dr. Albert Barnes: "When we simply desire his happiness, this is the love of benevolence."

God hates wickedness, but still desires the happiness of those who are sinful. A parent may love his child and desire his welfare, and yet be strongly opposed to the conduct of that child. When we approve the conduct of another, this is the love of complacency; oh, think of the wonderful love of God! He loved the world. He still loves the world. He loves all the people in the world. He loves the whole world. God's love is universal, all-embracing. Salvation is for the ignorant as well as for the cultured. Yes, salvation is proffered to every person under the sun. See how illimitable God's love is, and how unconfined. Oh, it amazes me to think of this wonderful love of God! The love of God has been compared to the ocean. It is fathomless, immeasurable, illimitable, inexhaustible; but unlike the ocean, it has no bounds.

PROOF OF GOD'S LOVE

Many passages of Scripture which declare the universality of God's love come to mind. "He died for all" (2 Cor. 5:15); "Who gave himself a ransom for all" (1 Tim. 2:6); "That he by the grace of God should taste death for every man" (Heb. 2:9); "For the bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world" (John 6:63). He "spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all" (Rom. 8:32).

There is something you cannot find in this wide world—a human being whom God does not love. Of course, God loves those who are obedient to His will. But never make the mistake of supposing that God does not love the disobedient. In His very nature God is love. He loves the sinner. "God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us" (Rom. 5:8).

No matter how great a sinner you may be, God loves you and Christ died for you. Let this much be forever settled in your mind: God loves you. Do not make this love conditional and uncertain. God's love toward us does not depend on our love toward Him. God does not love us because we are good, but because He is good. Because God loves the world, He loves you and He loves me. The greatness of God's love is seen in the object of His love—a rebellious world.

THE GIFT OF HIS LOVE

It is a truthful saying that love is measured by the gifts it presents and the sacrifices it makes. In the light of this truth how great is the love of God! To redeem man God gave His only begotten Son! He gave Him as a sacrifice. The gift was unmerited. "All our righteousnesses are as filthy rags" (Isa. 64:6). Yet God gave His Son, and Jesus went to the cross and gave His life for us.

No more costly gift could have been given! God's only begotten Son is the price of man's redemption. We know something of what it meant to fathers and mothers during the World War to give up their sons at the call of the nation. It meant more than tongue could tell for them to lay their lives upon the altar of a nation's need. It is a picture of the sacrificial love of God. God loved His Son with an unutterable love, yet He loved the world so much that He gave His Son in sacrifice upon Calvary's cross that lost mankind might be saved. If you would know the greatness of God's love, go to Calvary.

The story is told of a child who had been taught to think of God only as a stern judge. One day in her father's printing office she picked up a scrap of paper, and found on it these words, "God so loved the world, that he gave . . ." The other words of the verse had been torn off. The girl had no idea of how the whole verse read. What she did read was quite a revelation to her. She did not know what God gave, but it made her think of God in a new light to know that He had given something. It brought great joy to her heart.

The giving of God's Son was the giving of Himself. The love that prompted the greatest of gifts was so great that it seems impossible to express in words its greatness. "God so loved . . . that he gave." That little adverb "so" speaks volumes. The intensity of the Father's love is by no means fully appreciated.

A parent's love for a child is the strongest illustration we have of God's love. God loved His Son more than an earthly parent loves a child, yet "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." What a wonderful gift! What marvelous love!

THE FRUIT OF HIS LOVE

Eternal life! Eternal life!! Eternal life!!! "That whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." This probationary life is short at the longest. But eternal life is in the promise of God. "And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath not the Son of God hath not life" (John 5:11-12).

This life, though begun through faith, by the engrafting of that word which is living and powerful and which "liveth and abideth for ever" within the Christian's soul, is not yet revealed in all the glorious plenitude of its future perfection. So we read, "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear (in His second advent glory), then shall ye also appear with him in glory" (Col. 3:4).

Who enjoys this everlasting life? The text reads, "That whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." "Whosoever"! Some one asked a little boy the question, "What does the word 'whosoever' mean?" The little fellow answered, "It means you and me and everybody else." Thank God for that word "whosoever." That takes in you. It takes in me.

Richard Baxter is reported to have said that he was mighty glad that the word "whosoever" was used. These are his words: "I am thankful the verse does not read, 'There is mercy for Richard Baxter.' I am so vile, so sinful, that I would have thought, had it read that way, that it must have meant some other Richard Baxter; but this word 'whosoever' includes all the Baxters that ever lived."

DO YOU BELIEVE?

"That whosoever believeth in him should not perish"! Be sure you get that word "believeth." Do you believe? You can believe. There is no good reason why you should not believe. Do you say it is too good to be true? But it is true. This great verse packed full of gospel does not say that whosoever is worthy, or moral, or respectable, or rich.

A Pastor Meditates

ONCE a very important and attractive young woman for whom the pastor had recently performed a marriage ceremony, came to him at the close of the morning service and said, with tears in her voice: "This is our first Sunday after our wedding trip, and my husband would not come to church with me." She was a very active and sincere member of the church, and her position was conspicuous and well known long before her marriage. The husband was once a church member. His parents and home life had always been openly Christian. He had attended church regularly while courting his bride. He was a professional man of standing, and lived a well-ordered life. But this day on which his bride counted so much he refused to accompany her. He was well and apparently happy. He simply balked without expressed reason. He inflicted a wound which did not heal for a long time, if ever it did.

Do you know the folks who excite the pastor's pity? They are fine, loyal, devoted wives who carry on their Christian practices absolutely alone. There are some of them in every church. The pastor has found a less number of husbands who are neglected or deserted by their wives in all the public exercises of the church. We maintain with some earnestness that such cases at best fall short of the biggest attainment in marriage and parenthood. Either person who must go alone in anything so important as religion has a pitiable struggle against great odds. Matters cherished by a believer as precious are totally unshared and locked up in the home circle.

The unbelieving member of the family may have an easy-going tolerance and condescending attitude toward the other which is perhaps worse than open antagonism. The believer who loves the church, its worship, its work, its leaders, its pastor, must be constantly on guard to keep calm the unchurched one.

The rarer instance of believing husband and unbelieving wife is equally painful. Paul, the unmarried, saw clearly that a union of the two would fail to get the best there is in either marriage or religion. A pastor might prove it by some people whom he knows. True marriage is true union in essential things, and religion is essential to a true and really happy home. It is so easy to be unwittingly cruel to each other when two souls are joined in the permanent relationship of holy marriage. Let no husband or wife despise the religious life of the other.—The Presbyterian.

Heaven—Myth or Reality?

THE great Book of God opens with a new world: "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." It closes with a new world: "I saw a new heaven and a new earth." The first two chapters of the Bible describe the Eden that was lost; the last two tell of the Paradise to be restored. The third chapter of the Sacred Volume speaks of the tragic entrance of sin and death; the third chapter from its close predicts the final exit of sin and the termination of the controversy between good and evil.

At the beginning, because of man's transgression, the earth was cursed with thorns and thistles; at the end the cheering announcement goes forth: "There shall be no more curse." When Eden was lost, man was debarred from the tree of life; when Eden is restored, the redeemed are cordially welcomed to satisfy their hunger at the tree of life "in the midst of the Paradise of God."

The Bible takes man from the closed entrance to the lost estate, and leaves him before the open gate of the Holy City, where, victorious over sin and death, he enters in triumph to live evermore. Think of

"Stepping on shore and finding it heaven!

Of taking hold of a hand and finding it God's hand,

Of breathing new air and finding it celestial air,

Of feeling invigorated and finding it immortality,

Of passing from storm and tempest to an unknown calm,

Of waking up and finding it Home!"

Inspiration tells the story of three worlds. The first was our earth as it came from the hands of its Maker in surpassing beauty and loveliness. But sin entered, and violence increased until "the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished" (2 Peter 3:6). In this way, the first, or antediluvian, world, came to its end. "But the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men" (2 Peter 3:7).

A REAL COUNTRY

Since the days of the great flood, mankind has continued living in "this present evil world"; but Scripture prophecy, fulfilled and fulfilling, unmistakably declares that this planet is soon to be completely renovated; while from its ashes a third will emerge that is just as pure and beautiful and real as the Eden home of our first parents. Concerning this land of desire, the inspired Apostle testifies: "Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness" (2 Peter 3:13). The Old Testament also declares that "the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth," while from the lips of the Master came the beatitude, "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth" (Prov. 11:31; Matt. 5:5). Yes, this old earth that has been so marred by the curse is to become the paradise home of the redeemed.

In imagination, many feature a mystic heaven where illusive spirits and souls without bodies sit upon fleecy clouds and play ethereal harps to all eternity. But the Bible describes a better country, a heaven upon earth, that is altogether tangible and real. That will be, not a realm of idleness, but of activity, with useful labor for tireless hands, and enjoyable tasks for flawless artisans. Vineyards and orchards are to be planted and cultivated. Houses will be built, beautiful parks and woodlands will adorn the countryside. Vast enterprises will be carried forward, and the loftiest aspirations attained. Isa. 65:17, 21, 22.

The contrasts between the present world and the world to come baffle the imagination. Here a man may construct a palatial residence and beautify his estate; but in an untimely moment tragedy may occur, and he must leave all for others to enjoy the fruit of his toil. How wonderful it will be to dwell in a land of actual security where calamity cannot invade, and misadventure never mar!

Among the attractions and surprises of Eden restored will be its botanical and zoological gardens. "The glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee, the fir tree, the pine tree, and the box together, to beautify the place of my sanctuary; and I will make the place of my feet glorious" (Isa. 60:13).

A large proportion of the earth's surface now consists of water, ice, desert, wilderness, and rugged mountains. In its renewed state all this is to be changed. "There was no more sea," John wrote when relating his vision; while Isaiah, in his pen picture of the new earth, stated: "The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose. It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing: the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon, they shall see the glory of the Lord, and the excellency of our God" (Isa. 35:1, 2).

IDEAL CONDITIONS

Travelers tell of the balmy climate and varied scenery on the Mountains of Lebanon, of the sparkling waters from spring and rivulet, of stately cedars, luxurious vegetation, beautiful flowers, delicious fruit, and charming bird songs. Inspiration speaks to us in language easily understood. With no more boundless oceans or trackless Saharas, no more frozen wastes or burning sands, and with ideal climatic conditions everywhere, the entire globe will become a Lebanon of beauty and delight.

The animals of field and forest will be there, but their natures will be entirely transformed. "No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast," requiring bars and cages; but with changed instincts "the wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; . . . and the lion shall eat straw like the ox. . . . They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain." The citizens of that redeemed country "dwell safely in the wilderness, and sleep in the woods." Isa. 35:9; 11:6-9; Ezek. 34:25.

Here we are afflicted with aches and infirmities, with losses and crosses. But in that day the fondest dreams will be more than realized; the anguish and disquietude will all be past; for "the inhabitant shall not say, I am sick." "Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing." Isa. 33:24; 35:5, 6.

SHALL WE KNOW AND BE KNOWN?

In that land of health and perfection, we shall be surprised to find some that we never imagined would reach heaven, surprised not to find others whom we confidently expected to be there, and yet overjoyed to find ourselves in that chosen company. Shall we recognize our friends? Oh, yes, for the identity of all will be preserved. "Now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known." "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." 1 Cor. 13:12; 1 John 3:2.

"O how sweet it will be in that beautiful land,
So free from all sorrow and pain;
With songs on our lips and with harps in our hands,
To meet one another again!"

Our movements are now restricted to this world and the surrounding atmosphere; but in the future life "all the treasures of the universe will be open to the study of God's redeemed. Unfettered by mortality they wing their tireless flight to worlds afar," from planet to planet, from system to system, to enjoy the marvelous handiwork of God. No lurking fears will be entertained that the rolling years or centuries will bring an end to the delights of research in that university of the hereafter.

Best of all, these tidings from the future homeland are actually true, for they are certified by the unfailing promises of God. To you and me the question of supreme personal import is: Shall we be welcomed as guests and citizens? Our Lord replies: "He that overcometh shall inherit all things." That "inheritance incorruptible" is "reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God." Now is our time and opportunity to make reservations. This life is a training school where all the lessons of loyalty and obedience must be completely mastered. The price of eternal life is simply surrender; and when at length that victorious company reaches the eternal shores, there will arise from blood-bought men and women the triumphant chorus: "Heaven is cheap enough!"—Roy J. Cottrell in Signs of the Times.

The answer to last week's question will be found in Genesis 2:21, 22.

PERFECTION

"Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."—Matthew 5:48.

"PERFECT" and "holiness," being translated from the same word, mean about the same thing. "Perfect" is defined thus: "Brought to consummation or filled up; full. Especially, not defective; having all its requisites to its nature and kind; without deficiency or blemish; finished; complete."

God made these perfect, not immaculate:

"Noah was a just man and perfect in his generations, and Noah walked with God" (Gen. 6:9).

"The Lord appeared to Abram, and said unto him, I am the Almighty God; walk before me, and be thou perfect" (Gen. 17:1).

"Thou shalt be perfect with the Lord thy God" (Deut. 18:13).

"There was a man in the land of Uz, whose name was Job; and that man was perfect and upright, and one that feared God, and eschewed evil" (Job 1:1).

"The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul" (Psalm 19:7).

"Speak unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, and say unto them, Ye shall be holy: for I the Lord your God am holy" (Lev. 19:2).

"Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father also is merciful" (Luke 6:36).

In the last two verses, both "holy" and "merciful" mean "perfect."

"Jesus said unto him, If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come and follow me" (Matt. 19:21).

"Howbeit we speak wisdom among them that are perfect: yet not the wisdom of this world, nor of the princes of this world, that come to nought" (1 Cor. 2:6).

"Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ" (Eph. 4:13).

The question now arises, In what does Christian perfection consist? If not in deeds, words, or thoughts, in the heart, will, motive, intention, or choice?

We read that "the heart of Asa was perfect all his days" (2 Chron. 15:17). No doubt King Asa made mistakes like other men, but he was governed by the right motive. Here that motive is called a perfect heart. (OVER)

King Hezekiah said when God warned him that death was approaching: "Remember now, O Lord, I beseech thee, how I have walked before thee in truth and with a perfect heart" (Isa. 38:3). The moral quality of all action is in the will. We do not sin until the will consents to what we know is not right. Hezekiah had a perfect will. He did not consent to the allurements of evil.

Let your heart, therefore, like that of Asa and Hezekiah, be perfect with the Lord our God.

We are nowhere taught to be perfect in knowledge or in wisdom, but in purpose, motive, will, faith, and love.

Everyone would do well to commit the following text to memory. "The eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth, to shew himself strong in the behalf of them whose heart is perfect toward him" (2 Chron. 16:9).

Among the Beatitudes, none is greater than this: "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God" (Matt. 5:8). A pure heart and a perfect heart are one and the same thing.

The next important question is: How may we secure a perfect heart? The secret is revealed by Jesus when He says, "I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one" (John 17:23). That is the only way in which a perfect heart may be acquired.

Now let us turn to that startling text: "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect" (Matt. 5:48).

"Perfect" does not mean equal. A green apple in June, if it has no defects, is just as perfect at that point in its development as it will be when it is fully ripened in September. A child may be as perfect bodily as a full-grown man.

(A person may be perfect as an infant, a child, a youth, or an adult, but the qualities of perfection manifested at each period of his development differ in degree, and sometimes in kind, each from the other.—Editor.)

We hear a great deal of preaching nowadays on sanctification, holiness, regeneration, and being born again. These expressions all convey much the same thought as do such words as saint, consecration, and righteousness. And they all lead us back to the subject of which we write, "Perfection."

Now let me point out to you a short route to perfection:

"If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body" (James 3:2). So let us be careful what we say, for this is the way in which most offenses come. Again James says, "If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain" (James 1:26).—J. E. Snyder in Present Truth Messenger.

WHAT IS A CHRISTIAN?

such as the apostles and others as given in Acts 15, and all such honest differences may be harmonized as that was, by some one citing some scripture which manifestly sets against the erroneous view, as James then did.

As to works, Christians may be identified by John 15:8. If out of faith in the Scriptures believers bear the fruit of the Spirit given in Galatians 5, then their works are Christian works, and anyone who has not this spirit of Christ is none of His. Whoever fails to add these works to his faith is blind, and cannot see afar off, and will fall, with those he leads, into the ditch. If war is Christian work, then the army chaplains and the pulpit recruiters who promise soldier martyrs a sure entrance from the battlefield to heaven are doing a Christian work, and if war is unchristian, all such teachers are wolves in sheepskins. If piling up land and gold and oppressing toilers is according to Scripture, and if oppressed toilers follow the commandments divine when they destroy the lives and property of their rich oppressors, then Christian capitalists and Christian laborers may engage in mortal combat and the martyrs on both sides soar away from the blood-soaked soil of earth to continue in blissful harmony the lives so sadly separated here. So of German and French and English Christians and all the rest who engage in war. So also of all the warring factions of present religion, all claiming the same faith and the same loving, merciful works, while severed as far as the poles on many items of both faith and works.

And now, better still, a Christian can identify himself, for since love is the fulfilling of the law, all Christian works will be works of love; hence, John can say that if we love, not merely in lip service, but with hands and feet, by that we can know what we are (1 John 3:14-19). Do you believe the faith taught in the Bible and that alone, not accepting the traditions and commandments of men? Does your faith work the works of brotherly love? Then you may know you are a disciple, and hence a Christian. This is the true witness of the Spirit, for the Word is the testimony of the Spirit.

Finally, and best of all, if you are a Christian everybody else will know it (John 13:34, 35). Those who love as Jesus did will have the works that only Christianity has. Such light cannot be hid.

Then a Christian is one who takes the Scripture truth alone for his faith and takes the deeds that the Scriptures alone teach for his works of love.

How sadly the world needs true Christianity! How disastrously is Christ misrepresented by false profession! How straitened and narrow is the way, and how few there be that find it!

For the sake of any who may wish to be Christians it may be well to add that by John 4:1 you find that baptism has to do with becoming disciples. For by other scriptures it is evident that those who believed the Bible faith of the gospel were baptized.

Finally, let no one take such a step until he has pondered well the Master's words in Luke 14:25-33, where He says no one can be His disciple without a complete consecration of "all that he has."

THE RELIGION WE WANT

WE WANT religion that softens the steps and turns the voice to melody and fills the eye with sunshine and cheeks the impatient exclamation and harsh rebukes; a religion that is polite, deferential to superiors, considerate to friends; a religion that goes into the family and keeps the husband from being cross when dinner is late, and keeps the wife from fretting when the husband tracks the newly washed floor with his boots and makes the husband mindful of the scraper and the doormat; keeps the mother patient when the baby is cross and amuses the children as well as instructs them; cares for the servants besides paying them promptly; projects the honeymoon into the harvest moon, and makes the happy home like the Eastern fig tree, bearing on its bosom at once the tender blossom and the glory of the ripening fruit. We want a religion that shall interpose between the ruts and gullies and rocks of the highway or honored, or wise. No! Thank God for these words, "Whosoever believeth." That means you, if you will only believe. God grant that you may put unbelief far from you. Cry out, "Lord, I do believe."

Is it not quite clear in your mind what it is to "believe" in Jesus? What does the word mean in ordinary speech? When you believe in a physician you put your confidence in him as a physician. You put your case into his hands. When you believe in a banker you are willing to trust him with your money. To believe in Jesus Christ is to put confidence in Him as to what He claims to be. He offers Himself as Savior from the guilt, the power, the penalty of sin. He bears credentials from God the Father. He is divinely anointed and divinely appointed.

The infinite gift of eternal life is withheld from unbelievers. Reject the atonement, and there is no hope for you. Reject or neglect the only Savior whom God has provided for you, and you are lost. Accept the gift and be saved.

My friend, do you think lightly of God's way of salvation because it appeals to you as being too cheap? I shall never forget a little incident I heard related when I was a youth. A preacher had gone down into the coal mine during the noon-hour to tell the miners the simple gospel story. On his way back to the shaft the preacher asked the foreman what he thought of God's manner of saving men.

"Oh, it is too cheap; I cannot believe in such a religion as that."

Without immediately replying to this remark, the preacher asked this question, "How do you get out of this place?"

"Simply by getting into the cage," was the reply.

"And does it take long to get to the top?"

"Oh, no; only a few seconds."

"Well, that certainly is very easy and simple. But do you not need help to raise yourself?" asked the preacher.

"Of course not," replied the miner. "As I have said, you have nothing to do but to get into the cage."

"But what about the people who sank the shaft, and perfected all this arrangement? Was there much labor or expense about it?"

"Yes, indeed; that was a laborious and expensive work. The shaft is a thousand feet deep, and it was sunk at great cost to the proprietors; but it is our way out, and without it we should never be able to get to the surface."

"Just so," said the preacher, "but when God's Word tells you that whosoever believeth on the Son of God hath everlasting life, you say, 'Too cheap,' forgetting that God's work to bring you and others out of the pit of destruction was accomplished at a great cost, the price being the death of His only begotten Son."—W. S. Bowden in Present Truth Messenger.

TRY GOD!

HE WAS a college graduate, wealthy, cultured, with a great capacity for fine living. Yet no man tried harder, by unbelief, ridicule, and sin, to drown out the inward voice.

Then he presented himself at the door of the rectory of Calvary Baptist Church, New York City—a gentleman bum. In his story he said that he had never been "searchingly exposed" to religion. His spiritual confidant asked him if he would be willing to "surrender as much of himself as he could, to as much of Christ as he understood." Then and there, although unable to understand the entire plan of salvation, this young man dedicated his life not only to believe in Jesus, but to His life and work. The hated past fell away and he felt himself "reborn." Yes, there was the usual slipping, and he fell with a crash. But it was the last time.

Hating to grub for money, and caring much more for people and ideas, he soon was giving his whole life as a member of the church staff. His friends could not understand the amazing change that had taken place, even in his appearance. It was as though one person had moved out and another had moved in.

Why Not Try God? is a question which a little blue-backed book has sent ringing around the world. "We have followed the jungle method of the survival of the fittest—fighting, struggling, ruthless and cruel! Result? Look around you—confusion, dishonesty, failure, and almost utter collapse under trials."

Failure is not in falling down, but in staying down. Most of us want to live in a world of goodness, love, and friendliness. Give God a chance in your life, and you will find that, being "in tune with the Infinite," the world will assume its rightful place, and you as a part of it—not victim of it.

Try God!

Your Voice

If I cannot sing well does it mean that I mustn't sing in church?

OREGON, ILLINOIS

"Think of the neighbors in the matter of singing. It adds nothing to the reverence or success of a church service to have a voice like a buzz saw striking a knot try to lead the singing. On the other hand, unless our voices are extraordinarily bad, there's no reason for saying that we can't, and therefore won't sing. Not many of us can. We all haven't voices like Tibbett's Thibault's, Eddy's, MacDonald's, and we certainly shouldn't use that fact as an excuse for not helping with the services."—Arlen Marsh.

HICKORY RIDGE, ARKANSAS

"Even though I don't sing so well as others, why should I miss the thrill of devotion that floods our hearts as we join in songs of worship and praise to our God? It helps us to 'lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and to run with patience the race that is set before us' (Heb. 12:1).

"As the happy throng sang hosannas for Jesus long ago, so we may all together express our faith in His soon return and the joy for which He endured the cross, despising the shame.

"How often has the singing of a hymn (Col. 3:16) brought cheer and comfort to those too aged and infirm to attend church services! And as the poor widow cast her mite into the treasury and won the approval of our Lord, even so the feeble voice has joined in the song.

"Memory goes back to pleasant days and to those dear voices of loved ones that we hear no more, and hope leaps onward to the coming of Jesus and the resurrection, when we shall meet and sing together once more (1 Thess. 4:13-16)."—Mrs. Letitia Waller.

If I miss church should I make up my contribution next time?

"If one tithes, he has no contributions to make up, even if he misses all the services for a year. Since I hold to tithing as the only scriptural means for giving—or returning, or paying—I can't very well talk of penalties and making up contributions. People shouldn't miss church services for unimportant causes, anyway; if they actually do miss them, all the contributions in the world won't make amends."

—Arlen Marsh.

Minnesota Conference

The Minnesota Bereans convened in quarterly conference at St. Cloud, April 17 and 18, with a large attendance from each local society and from the isolated membership.

The conference opened with a song and pep service led by Carol Hawkins. It was followed by an excursion to the Minnesota Men's Reformatory.

The afternoon service included a Love Feast led by the Eden Valley Bereans, a Bible discussion on "Marriage and Divorce," led by Elder G. L. Cooper, and a sermon, "Duty to God," Elder J. R. LeCrone. At the evening service Mr. Malmquist gave a lecture and showed tinted slides of "The Passion Play," after which the local society entertained the rest in a social period.

Sunday morning, Elder C. E. Lapp preached a sermon, "Duty to Others." Sunday afternoon the Mora Bereans sponsored a musical and devotional session, the business meeting was held, and Elder Cooper preached on "Duty to Ourselves."

The conference closed Sunday evening with a prayer period and a sermon by Elder LeCrone. The Bereans separated looking forward to the July conference at Eden Valley.

At the business meeting it was voted that the State Society would pay the tuition of one student to the Bible Training Class. In the event no one needs the tuition money, or the Class is not started, the money is to be used in State evangelistic work. The Society wants to raise sufficient funds for both of these causes.

Obedience

Saul, the first King of Israel, was a young man of promise. Head and shoulders he towered above his contemporaries. After the Prophet Samuel anointed him King, "God gave him another heart" (1 Sam. 10:9). And when he went home from the ceremonies attending his choosing "there went with him a band of men, whose hearts God had touched" (v. 26). If any man ever showed promise for good it would seem to be Saul.

But the next thing we know Saul has fallen; he usurps the place of the prophet and sacrifices without authority; then he actually disobeys the exact orders God gave him regarding the cleaning out of that nest of iniquity, the Amalekites, and saves alive "the best of the sheep, and of the oxen," and other things. When accused of his disobedience, he "passes the buck," and says, "But the people took of the spoil . . . the things that should have been utterly destroyed, to sacrifice unto the Lord thy God."

To this day the answer of Samuel rings down to us when we think that extra heavy contributions to the church can make amends for sin: "Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams" (v. 22).

JACOB'S GREAT DISCOVERY

IT WAS on a late Sunday afternoon in May that our friends, Betty and Bobby and their parents, were seated on the beautiful lawn in back of their home. The story of Jacob and Esau, which had been the center of the Sunday school lesson that morning, for some reason interested Betty and Bobby very much.

"I just hated to leave Jacob this morning, Father," said Bobby. "He was running away from home, and I keep wondering what happened to him."

"His mother was helping him, though," said Betty. "She always helped him. She had to help him out of this trouble because she helped him get into it."

"Well, children," Father replied, "suppose you run in and get your Bibles, and we will see if we can find out what did happen to Jacob."

In they hurried and soon were out again seated beside Father and Mother, their Bibles open at Genesis 28.

"Rebekah, always ready to shield her favorite, told the father that she was afraid Jacob would follow Esau's example and marry one of the Hittite girls. She knew that would alarm Isaac, and he would probably send Jacob away for awhile. The real reason, that Esau had planned to kill Jacob, she didn't mention, for then she would have had to confess to her part in the deceit," Father explained.

"I remember," said Betty, "what we read about those Hittite girls. 'They were a grief of mind to Isaac and Rebekah.' And now she said they made her weary of life."

"They must have been terrible," said Bobby. "Something like that girl Joe Brown married and brought home, eh, Mother?"

"At any rate, Isaac told Jacob to go and visit his uncle Laban awhile, and he gave him a parting blessing from God, much like the blessing given to his own father, Abraham, before him," Father continued.

"I remember," Bobby spoke up, "it was a promise that he should one day own all the land he could see on all sides of him."

"Betty," said Mother, "you know the other night you had such a beautiful dream that you had to come running to my bed to tell me about it because it seemed so real. Well, Jacob, far from home, had a very real dream, too."

"Was he at his Uncle Laban's?"

"Bobby, you see if you can find out where he was," suggested Mother.

"He must have been sleeping out of doors, because in verse 11, it says he had stones for his pillow," answered Bobby. "But he was sorry he had acted at home the way he had."

"And now the dream!" said Father. "You tell it to us, Betty."

"Well, Jacob saw a ladder in his dream that reached from earth to heaven, and the angels of God were going up and down the ladder. It must have been a beautiful dream," mused the little girl.

"God stood at the top of the ladder," said Bobby, "and gave him the same promise again, the promise of land."

"Then God added another promise," said Mother softly, "that He would be with him wherever he went and at last bring him back home safe."

"That must have made Jacob feel kind of ashamed of himself," said Bobby.

"Yes, I think it did, because when he awoke he said that God was in that place and he hadn't thought of it."

"Jacob named the place Beth-el, which means House of God, and he used his pillow of stones for an altar to God," added Mother.

"Then Jacob, because he was so thankful to God for sending him that wonderful dream and giving him those great promises when he was lonely and perhaps afraid, promised in return something to God. What was it, children?" asked Father.

"A tenth," they said in chorus.

"Why, that's what we give," said Bobby, "because God is so good to us. He gives us everything."

"Did Jacob ever get back home, Mother?" Betty asked.

"Of course he did," said the practical Bobby. "Didn't God promise him that He would see that he got back home again?"

"But wasn't he afraid of Esau any more?" persisted Betty.

"It was twenty years before he started back home, children. By that time he was married, and had a family, and was very rich. And a queer thing happened to him on that trip, something like what had happened on that night so long ago when he had left home, alone and friendless. He met God face to face," said Mother.

"You will find the story of that journey in Genesis 32, children," said Father. "But we will have to leave that for later in the week. Now it's time to get ready to go to church."

WHAT'S THE ANSWER?

Where does God say that wicked Israelites, who have been sent to heaven because of their sins, may be brought back if they repent? See next week's paper for the answer. Don't forget! It'll be there!

NORTH SALEM - PLYMOUTH, INDIANA

The North Salem and Plymouth, Ind., churches are extending an invitation to all lovers of truth to attend a "Homecoming Day" to be held in the Plymouth church on Sunday, May 23. Services will be held at 11:00 a. m. and at 2:30 p. m. Following the morning service, a carry-in dinner will be served in Centennial Park. Bro. J. H. Anderson, Indiana State evangelist, will deliver the sermons.

It will be a great pleasure to meet those who have not met here for some time. Both North Salem and Plymouth are looking for a day of rejoicing and Christian fellowship.

CENTRAL ILLINOIS

A series of evangelistic meetings conducted by T. A. Drinkard is in progress at Ripley, Ill. The series started May 1 and will last to May 23. Services are held each evening at 8:00. On May 9 an all-day meeting, with Communion service and a basket dinner, was held.

The church at Camden, organized April 25, has services scheduled for May 16 and every other Sunday. J. W. McLain will be in charge. The field is large, and prospects for growth are favorable. Sunday school was organized May 2, and will be held each Sunday morning at 10:00.

J. W. McLain is acting as temporary pastor for the newly organized Macomb Open Bible Church. Sunday school for this church is held each Sunday morning at 10:00. Preaching services were scheduled for May 9 at 11:00 a. m., and for every other Sunday at the same hour. A Bible study and prayer service is held each Wednesday evening at 7:30 at the homes of members.

—The Ripley Evangelist.

ILLINOIS EVANGELISTS' NOTES

Meetings at Camden closed April 25, on which day a church was organized with 15 charter members. The interest was excellent throughout the meeting. The average attendance was approximately 65.

This was the last meeting for the present. All effort will be spent toward strengthening the new works to a point of being self-reliant.

The writer is to continue working with Camden and Macomb until conference.

We are grateful to all those who have aided in the winter meetings and to those who added encouragement by driving many miles to various points to attend.

The new Camden Open Bible Church of God officers are: elder, R. Hightower; deacon, L. Vincent; deaconess, L. Davis; treasurer, P. Chapman; secretary, E. Davis; trustee, I. Vincent; Sunday school superintendent, J. Hightower.

PATTERSON - PATRICK

On Saturday evening, March 27, Miss Anna Mae Patterson of Haysville, Ohio, was united in marriage to Mr. Carroll Patrick of Ashland, Ohio, by the groom's father.

The ceremony was performed in the presence of the immediate families of the contracting parties and a few close friends in the home of the happy couple, which had been previously furnished for the occasion.

They will make their home in Haysville.

A notice was written and sent to The Herald immediately after the wedding, but went astray. This is why the notice is so late.

REFLECTIONS OF GREAT MINDS

"Think on these things."—Paul.

"One cannot preach the truth without explaining what the truth is not as well as what it is. One cannot paint white letters on a white board, but one must paint white on black and black on white if the letters are to stand out."—Dr. J. Gresham Machen.

One is almost moved to regret the passing of the "good old days" when religious people fought for what they believed, when a preacher did not hesitate to call a spade a spade and a lie a lie. While under modern conditions it seems to be advisable to preach the gospel from a positive rather than from a negative standpoint, there is much force in what Dr. Machen says: "One cannot preach the truth without explaining what the truth is not as well as what it is."

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

The response to our appeals for money to meet exceptionally large bills that demanded payment on or before June 1 has been astonishingly liberal. Those responsible for the continuous publication of the quarterly and The Herald very much appreciate your efforts. Only $125 of the total bill of $550 remains to be paid.

The editor reached Oregon Thursday afternoon from St. Louis, where he had assisted the church in that city in a meeting for the past two weeks. In spite of almost continuous rain, the attendance was good throughout. During the meetings eighteen sermons were delivered and ten Bible classes conducted. A full report will appear later from the church secretary.

Mrs. Verna C. Thayer, author for several years of the junior department in the Truth Seekers' Sunday School Quarterly, is reported as being seriously ill at her home on Route 1 out of Woodstock, Va. Her husband, V. Earl Thayer, pastor of three Virginia churches, has found it necessary to discontinue his usual midweek services and his Sunday evening service at Maurertown in order to attend her.

Sunday, April 25, the Oregon pulpit was filled by Glen Mills, student at Aurora College. May 2, the morning service was conducted by Paul C. Johnson and the evening service by Harold Hardesty, both of the Oregon congregation.

Bro. Roy Graham of St. Louis, Mo., spoke for the brethren at the Blush Church of God near Fredericktown in that State last Sunday. Bro. Graham is one of our promising young preachers for whom we anticipate a successful future in the ministry.

Bro. and Sr. Romine of Golden Rule Home were at South Bend, Ind., last Saturday, where they met with other members of Sr. Romine's family at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Howard Nagle, to celebrate the 91st birthday of her mother, Mrs. Anna Cordill. Mrs. Cordill will be remembered by our older readers as the widow of Bro. H. S. Cordill.

Owing to the pastor's absence the pulpit of the Oregon church was occupied on the morning of Mother's Day by his son, Arlen Marsh, who spoke on John 3: 16.

TITHING — PREACHING

We have been glad to read the articles on tithing, and it is our firm belief from personal experience that tithing pays, whether we have little or much income. If the Lord wants us to give a lot, He'll provide us with a lot to give, but we've got to show our willingness first, we have found.

It is our firm belief that every church of our denomination should feel obliged to contribute to the support of the N. B. I. and its enterprises, as their funds will permit. We have heard some members excuse themselves by saying they do not agree with all that is done at Oregon. Maybe so, but neither do they agree with everything the members of their own families do. That's no excuse; that's an alibi. Our Savior didn't agree with what was going on in the world, but He gave His life for it and for us. All of our churches and members benefit from the work of the N. B. I. whether they realize or will admit it or not, especially in the way of quarterlies, tracts, Herald, etc.; and all churches should help, for the load belongs to us all, and should be shared by all.

If the members of every church would tithe, such notices as you are compelled to insert from time to time would be unnecessary, for all church finances would be in good shape, there would be plenty to spare to help at headquarters. Also, the members themselves would be better off, our ministers would not be compelled to leave God's work to seek secular employment where they will be paid sufficient to support themselves and their families, but we would be able to send more evangelists out year by year. More and more we appreciate the truth of, "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few." Laborers are willing, but even they have to eat and clothe themselves and their families.

There has been some discussion here and there as to what our ministers should preach today, whether doctrine, prophecy, spirituality, etc. Let them preach the Word in all its phases, and ask God for the increase. Let the members pray for the increase and back their prayers with their time and their money, and the Church of God will have such an awakening as none of us ever can dream of. Doctrine is good—we must have it; prophecy is good—it guides us on our way and we see where we are going; spirituality is good—we need the love of Christ in our hearts, we need the comfort of His Word: we need all three of these things. I fear that some of our older pastors looked a little too much to the first two, in many cases, and not quite enough to the last one. Let our younger ministers beware they do not reverse the order; if they do, their labor will bear only half a harvest.

IT HAPPENED WHEN R. V. LYON WAS IN ILLINOIS

October, 1866

Who can remember Middleport, Hickory Grove, and Bluegrass, Ill., somewhere in the eastern part of the State near the Iroquois River, where R. V. Lyon of Suspension Bridge (Niagara Falls), N. Y., conducted splendid meetings more than seventy years ago? And where is the fruitage of his labors?

Addressing his report to the Prophetic Watchman published by J. M. Stephenson and H. V. Reed at Harvard, Ill., Bro. Lyon says:

"I have been preaching once and twice a day to large congregations—more than could get into our houses of worship. Last Friday it was a grand sight to see the people coming over the broad prairie in every direction. Our house was large, but in every part it was filled to overflowing and about 100 could not get in. Truth took effect."

One might well ask as to the results that followed such great gatherings. Bro. Lyon says, "The truth took effect," and adds: "On Monday morning we retired to the Iroquois River where I immersed two into the Christ. One of the number was Dr. Horton's wife." Not many converts, we may think, for so great a gathering to produce. But in those days evangelistic success was not counted by the number baptized but by the breadth of the territory and the number of persons to whom the kingdom message was given as a "witness" (Matt. 24:14).

Bro. Lyon was assisted in his work in Illinois by "Eld. Shanklin." Does anyone remember Elder Shanklin?

An interesting comment on the method pursued in those days is suggested by Bro. Lyon's statement that he frequently spoke to overflowing houses for two hours and a half and that after he had baptized those who expressed faith in the things he taught, and they went "on their way rejoicing," the evangelist "left them to journey for the kingdom, whilst I am in pursuit of other sheep."

WITH WHOM SHALL WE COMMUNE?

We are admonished by the great teacher, "Take heed what ye hear," and the Prophet says, "Come, let us reason together." Truly, as you say, it is a sacred matter; and we should study carefully to rightly divide the Word of truth, that we may be approved of God. In our study, we should be careful to know who the speaker is, and to whom he was speaking, and then what it is about.

When the great teacher said, "Examine yourselves," he was not speaking to a lot of people of different faiths, but to those who had enlisted under the banner of gospel truth, those who believed the message he brought and had the seal affixed to their faith.

Question: Could a seal be affixed to a faith that did not exist?

The blood of Jesus Christ sealed the promises. In Romans 15:7, 8 we read, "Wherefore receive ye one another, as Christ also received us to the glory of God. Now I say that Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the fathers." The Diaglott says, "Christ became a servant of the circumcision, on account of the truth of God, in order to confirm the promises of the fathers."

Paul tells us in Colossians 2:10-12, "Ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power: in whom also ye are circumcised with the circumcision made without hands, in putting off the body of the sins of the flesh by the circumcision of Christ: buried with him in baptism."

Dear ones, before we believed the covenants (which Paul says are the gospel; see Galatians 3:8) and had the seal of baptism affixed to our faith, had we any right to partake of the emblems which sealed the everlasting covenants? In other words, can a seal be affixed to a faith which does not exist?

When Israel went up to partake of the Passover, no uncircumcised person could partake. Dear ones, "let us hold the profession of our faith without wavering; (for he is faithful that promised)." "As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him: rooted and built up in him, and stablished in the faith, as ye have been taught, abounding therein with thanksgiving." Then Paul adds, "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ" (Col. 2:8).

The great Teacher, just before giving the disciples the foundation on which the church should be built, warned them against false doctrine; said, "In vain do ye worship me, teaching for doctrine the commandments of men."

Paul admonishes, "If ye continue in the faith, grounded and settled, and be not moved from the hope of the gospel which ye have heard."

May we have courage and strength to overcome is my prayer,

Nancy B. Robison.

THE THIRD REPLY

Dear Fellow Ministers: The March 16 issue of THE HERALD expresses a desire for a prepared article on the Lord's Supper, or the Communion.

1. It is a memorial. Jesus said, "This do in remembrance of me" (Luke 22:19).

2. A communion (1 Cor. 10:16), not a communion with one another, but with Christ (1 Cor. 16:2).

3. It is intended to build us up in Christ. The more we reverently think of His death for us, the more we are determined to live for Him.

Who can partake? Compare 1 Corinthians 11:23 and 1 Corinthians 1:1, 2. We learn here that Paul says all who call upon the name of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Christ gave it to His followers and has never taken it from them. It is the Lord's table and is spread for His people, and no one nor company can rightly deprive one of God's children of partaking. Closed Communion is unscriptural.

Acts 2:42 indicates that the Lord's Supper had a prominent part in the worship of the early disciples. By comparing Acts 20:7 and 1 Corinthians 16:1, 2 we discover that when the disciples met it was to partake of the Lord's Supper, and it was their custom to meet every Lord's day. For the first seven hundred years the ordinance was observed weekly. John Calvin said, "The change was a contrivance of the Devil." John Wesley advised his people to spread the table each week.

What New Testament passage argues for any sort of service on the Lord's day that does not also argue for the observance of the Lord's Supper on that day?

John Calvin, Book VI, chapter 18, section 56, says, "Every week, at least, the table of the Lord should have been spread for Christian assemblies, and the promise declared by which, in partaking of it, we might be spiritually fed."

Weekly Communion did not die with the apostles and their contemporaries. There is a cloud of witnesses to testify that it was kept up by succeeding Christians. See Fuller's Strictures on Sandemanianism, New York Edition, page 188; Letters to America (John Wesley), 1784.

1. As to the interpretation of "this body," see 1 Corinthians 11:24 and 26:27; John 15:1-5.

2. As to who should partake of the Lord's Supper, see 1 Corinthians 11:27-29. The decision rests with the individual.

3. About the manner of observance, see Matthew 26:26-30; Mark 14:22-26; Luke 22:14-20; 1 Corinthians 11:20-34.

The church at Troas was accustomed to meet on the first day of the week to partake of the Lord's Supper. The church, when established, immediately began the observance and continued with the same persistence and frequency that marked their regular assembling.

Much more can be said in favor of this great memorial and its perpetual observance. These are just a few of the evidences of its place in the church of today.

C. W. Johnson.

God Among the Nations

By the Editor

"THY KINGDOM COME!"
These words, which form the first petition of the Lord's Prayer, might be construed as implying that the Creator of the universe had abdicated the throne to which He was entitled as the designer and perfecter of all things, that through some inexplicable happening He had lost His supreme position of authority over the empire He had formed, and that Jesus His Son would have us to pray constantly that that sovereignty should be speedily restored.

But such an interpretation of Jesus' words cannot be correct. God has not abdicated His throne. He has not lost His dominion. He is still the "King over all," for "he ruleth by his power for ever; his eyes behold the nations: let not the rebellious exalt themselves" (Psalm 66:7). Let no earthly ruler delude himself with the thought that God has withdrawn from world affairs or confessed His inability to govern all things that are within it!

It is as true today as it was when David wrote these words, that "the Lord hath prepared his throne in the heavens; and his kingdom ruleth over all" (Psalm 103:19). The divine sovereignty is firmly fixed and is as definitely exercised today as it was when Jehovah sentenced Nebuchadnezzar, the proud King of Babylon, to punishment "to the intent that the living may know that the most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will" (Dan. 4:17).

No! When Jesus said, "When ye pray, say, . . . Thy kingdom come," He did not mean to infer that God had abdicated His throne and forsaken His kingdom, but He did mean that the Lord has certain great purposes which He designs to accomplish through the establishment and exercise of direct regal authority over the political affairs of the nations of earth through His Son.

Preparations for the setting up of that kingdom and the initial steps that will eventually lead to the answering of

In the following article the scriptural quotations are drawn from "A New Translation" by James Moffatt, D.D., D.Litt., M.A. Dr. Moffatt's version is of special interest to our readers owing to the fact that he is a believer in conditional immortality. of our prayer, "Thy kingdom come," are now being carried forward in all parts of the world.

POWER OF THE NATIONS MUST BE BROKEN

One of the most effective means employed by an ambitious monarch who plans the conquest of another nation is to seek first to weaken that nation's powers of resistance in every possible way. It is said that Peter the Great of Russia directed his descendants, in that strange document that has erroneously been called his "will," to endeavor to keep the other nations of Europe in a constant state of strife and warfare among themselves, that they might be drained of their military resources and thus fall a more easy victim to Russia in her effort to conquer the continent and clear the way for Muscovy's descent into India.

Apparently God Himself approves of that form of military strategy, for He watches with interest the demoralizing influences which are now operating among all nations and makes no effort to stay the development of such deplorable designs.

The divine purpose in this seems to be much the same as that which inspired the monarch of Russia to suggest the inauguration of a similar situation a few generations ago. The economic resources of the nations must be drained, their military strength must be exhausted, their morale must be broken in preparation for the day of national judgment which is to overtake them all.

We need scarcely remind you that agitation and fear fill the minds of men everywhere. The observant know, even as they go about their peacetime tasks, that another war is imminent.

The first issue of the National Geographic Magazine of the present year contained an article treating of the preparations which are being made for "the next war" in England. "Before the Mansion (Please turn to page 10)

Four Million Criminals

"Iniquity shall have an end."—Ezekiel 21:25.

PHILADELPHIA, May 14.—J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the "G-Men," made some astonishing statements before a vast audience that filled the stadium in this city. Among other things he said that the United States had in 1936, one felony every 24 seconds: 13,242 murders or manslaughters during the year; 7,881 sex crimes; 45,660 robberies; 47,534 cases of aggravated assault; 278,823 burglaries; 716,674 larcenies; and 213,712 cases of automobile theft. Altogether there was a grand total of 1,333,526 major crimes reported last year!

The cost of all this, according to Mr. Hoover, was $28,500 a minute; $41,040,000 a day; or $15,000,000,000 for the year. Comment would be superfluous!

Missionaries Driven From Ethiopia

"If they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you."—John 15:20.

ROME, Italy, April 9.—"All foreign missionaries in Ethiopia will be revealed as spies or the agents of shady business," declared Virginio Gayda, editor of the Giornale d' Italia, official organ of Mussolini. Seven British and three American missionaries have been ordered expelled from the new Italian dominions in Africa. Referring especially to the three American women who were ordered out, the fiery Fascist editor said, "It is only fair that these three American girls should be put across the frontiers to hunt for other fields for their propaganda. . . . These missionaries are disturbing and their work is useless."

Thus still another country is eliminated as a field for free Christian evangelistic activity. So will it continue until the man of sin is fully revealed.

Torture Cult Flourishes in Detroit

"They shall not . . . make any cuttings in their flesh."—Leviticus 21:5.

DETROIT, Mich., April 14.—The existence of a strange religious cult in this city was revealed tonight while the police were questioning Mrs. Irma Duncan, a 27-year-old mother, in an effort to solve the mystery of the kidnaping last September of two-year-old Harry Browe.

In the course of the questioning Mrs. Duncan admitted that she was a member of a religious group which had many adherents in the Detroit area, that believed "in God, self-sacrifice, and self-torture." The woman's arms and legs were covered with cuts and burns which she said were self-inflicted.

Preparation for the ordeal of torture consists of drinking several bottles of beer. "I have to have about four or five bottles of beer," said Mrs. Duncan, "before I can bear the pain of cutting and burning myself."

Like every other false religious system, the torture cult is based on the serpent's lie. Its devotees believe that they receive communications from the founder of the sect, who died in Pennsylvania in 1916. Mrs. Duncan's abuse of herself with a red-hot poker, knives, and razor blades resulted from one of these mystic conversations, the woman's common law husband, Thomas Holden, told the police.

There are literally hundreds of religious organizations with millions of believers which base their claims upon the satanic assertion, "Thou shalt not surely die" (Gen. 3:4), "but the trail of the serpent is over them all."

A King Is Crowned

"They blew the trumpet; and all the people said, God save king Solomon."—1 Kings 1:39.

LONDON, May 12.—Standing with his face toward the east, surrounded by notables from all parts of the British Dominions, the Archbishop of Canterbury proclaimed:

"I here present unto you King George, your undoubted King: Wherefore all you who are come this day to do your homage and service, are you willing to do the same?"

The question was repeated as the Archbishop turned to each of the cardinal directions and the vast throng responded:

"God save King George!"

Thus with impressive historic ceremonies a new monarch was inducted into office as the head of the world's greatest empire. The popularity of the House of Windsor and the loyalty of the great mass of the British people to the throne cannot be questioned. When kingdoms and principalities were crumbling throughout Europe in the closing days of the World War the stability of the British throne never trembled. This is especially notable owing to the fact that the royal family of Britain is of the same blood strain as were the kingly families that fell in the crash. It is loyalty of a high order that holds this vast empire together.

Meeting the Lord—When?

By B. H. Judd

"CHINA'S MILLIONS" for April, 1937, in a memorial of Mrs. E. E. Cory, who died in China on New Year's night, takes its text from Jacob's statement in Genesis 32:30, "I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved." Its remarks may be briefly stated as follows: "Primarily these words refer to the preservation of Jacob's physical life on earth, but the news of several of God's servants being 'called up to glory,' where they shall serve Him and see His face, within a few days of Mrs. Cory's call on New Year's night, seemed to draw one's thoughts out to a fuller appreciation of these words. In her promotion above this faithful servant saw God face to face and her life was preserved—yes, preserved with Him forever and ever."

The above-quoted remarks are correct in saying that the text in question has primary reference to Jacob's physical life. It is not only the primary sense, but the only sense in which the words were used when due consideration is given to the context.

Without going into the details of the harmonizing of Jacob's much-discussed statement with some half dozen others of Christ and His apostles, that no (mortal) man has seen or can see God, there are some vital truths to consider.

Had Jacob's life not been preserved we think the fact is beyond dispute that he and Mrs. Cory, though centuries intervene, would both be in the same condition in relation to life and death. If death meant "promotion above" to Mrs. Cory, why would it not mean the same to Jacob? Why should Jacob rejoice that his life had been preserved, if its non-preservation meant that he, like Mrs. Cory, would "be promoted up to glory and see God face to face"? This question requires careful consideration.

According to Scripture, Jacob, when he died, was buried (Gen. 50:13). He "slept with his fathers" (Gen. 47:29, 30), as did all of the patriarchs. We venture the assertion without fear of contradiction, that not in all Scripture is there any record of bodiless humanity going to heaven at death; much less of its performing acts that only a body can do, such as "seeing God face to face."

Nor does the New Testament differ one iota from the Old Testament in its presentation of the facts relative to life and death. David "died and was buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day" (Acts 2:29, 30; 13:36).

Paul, who said he did not shun to declare the whole counsel of God, used language identical with the Old Testament when he spoke of those who died as "them that are asleep," "the dead in Christ." The comfort he held out is not the statement that "they have been promoted to see God face to face," but, "The dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive (note the contrast) and remain shall be caught up together with them . . . to meet the Lord."

Among others of the China Inland Mission who have recently suffered death, few, if any, are so well known and respected in this city of Toronto as the editorial secretary, Mr. Fred Helmer, whom the writer has at varied intervals known for some forty years. The following are typical extracts from the reports of the memorial service held in Toronto Bible College, which the writer attended, as given in China Inland Mission publications: "Mr. Helmer was not, for God took him." "He had a severe heart attack, and in a few moments passed into the presence of the Lord." "He has gone to be with the white-robed throng, where the Lamb who is in the midst of the throne shall feed them." Mr. Brownlee, secretary of the Toronto Branch, quoted, "Absent from the body, present with the Lord," and reminded his hearers (and readers) of D. L. Moody's saying: "When you read in the papers that D. L. Moody is dead, do not believe it."

Very many Christians must have died in Paul's day, but never once does Paul state that the saints "have gone in to see the Lord face to face." True, he says, "Absent from the body, present with the Lord," but if any sincere Christian will faithfully read 1 Thessalonians 4 and 1 Corinthians 15, he cannot fail to see that the time of being absent from this (mortal) body and present with the Lord is when this mortal puts on immortality, and dead and living, changed, meet the Lord together.

Also, in the beautiful picture in Revelation of the white-robed throng with the Lamb (Jesus) in their midst, we must not forget that He (Jesus) went up bodily, and was "seen go into heaven." (Please turn to page 11)

But talk of those who sin,
'Tis better we commence at home,
And from that point begin.

I'll tell you of a better plan,
You'll find it works full well.
Just try your own defects to cure,
Before of others tell.
And though I sometimes hope to be
No worse than some I know,
My own shortcomings bid me let
The faults of my neighbors go.

Then let us all—should we commence
To slander friend or foe,
Think of the harm one word may do
To those we little know.
Remember curses, like chickens,
Return to roost at home;
So don't speak of other's faults
Till you have none of your own.

Studying the Bible

IT IS assumed at the outset, that if the Bible were studied more faithfully there would be fewer sects, less division, more Christians, and a better opportunity for people generally to be content, useful, happy, and enlightened. Another benefit to be derived from continued Bible study, provided the wisdom learned be consistently followed, would be more effective results in trying to lead those who are not acquainted with the gospel of grace to unite in a forward movement in proclaiming the kingdom of God. Studying the Bible does not mean searching for passages and verses to support some opinion or theory or creed. That is destroying the Bible. Nor is it studying the Bible to seek to find what is forbidden as to personal behavior. Scripture is written for a definite purpose and positive action. When we seek to understand the way of life which makes the individual a child of God, when we enlist our energies to do good and to aid others in doing good, when we strive to comprehend the Spirit that brought the written Word to the human mind, when we volunteer in the service and sacrifice and yearning that are manifest in the life and teachings of Jesus and consecrate our own lives and labor to carry out the Master's purposes and struggles, then we are sincerely studying the Word of God.

On my table is a little book, which came to me many years ago, entitled, Corruptions of the New Testament; and here is the first sentence: "Everything which passes through human hands is liable to be altered, corrupted, or vitiated; and sacred books form no exception to the rule." Our written Bible was completed within the memory of one man after the resurrection of Jesus, that is nineteen hundred years ago. It has been copied, translated, and retranslated many, many times during that period; many mistakes have been made and numerous "various readings" discovered in the versions now known. If we count the different ways of spelling, there are some 150,000 variations in the Greek copies alone. Nearly all of these are of no consequence, as they do not mar the thought of the original. Such errors are found in most any book. The city of Herculaneum in Italy was buried in ashes from Mount Vesuvius in the year 70 A. D., and uncovered more than a thousand years afterward. Writings brought to light there, after eighteen centuries, are in the same Greek letters as the oldest manuscripts we now have of the New Testament, and Bible students since the time of Wyclif (1324-1384) have been seeking to correct all errors of any significance. Still there are some unsettled points, but they are few. For all practical purposes, then, our Bible is the same as that of the Apostle John. Much more could be said about this, but that is beyond our purpose.

We now find ourselves with a well-authenticated Bible in our hands, presented in a superior literary form. It is just what it purports to be, a revelation to man, free from speculation and magic. Its truth has been developed through centuries of human experience; and it holds a promise of a future life, which is the ground of the Christian hope. The most flourishing civilization known to history has been created by those who strive to follow its precepts. Its morals and social order depend upon faith in God not only as a provident Ruler, but also as a just and merciful Father, who cherishes the creatures of His wisdom as the custodians of the earth. What are we going to do about this guide to holiness, this advocate of righteousness, this key to the secrets of human destiny, this revealed truth? It is so completely adapted to the needs of man that the simplest can derive satisfaction from its teachings and the wisest can profit by its precepts. How shall we interpret its teachings and apply its truths to our lives in the exigencies of service and social intercourse? Listen to the Psalmist:

"How sweet is thy word to my taste,
Yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth!
Through thy precepts I get understanding,
Therefore I hate every false way" (Psalm 119:123).

The value of the Bible depends upon our acceptance of it, our interpretation and application of it.

The superficial student says there are differences and contradictions in the Bible which have not been explained; how can it be true? Such a statement can be made concerning many other written accounts, even of quite recent events. But our ability to understand may be at fault; or the writer, or the copyist, or the translator may have erred. This, however, does not necessarily render the Bible untrue. A notable example of such disagreement is that connected with the time of Jesus' resurrection. Matthew 28:1 reads: "In the end of the sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week." Another, perhaps more literal, translation reads: "Now late on sabbath, as it was getting dark, toward the first day of the week." Mark 16:1, 2 reads this way: "The sabbath being past . . . and very early on the first day of the week, they came to the tomb, the sun having risen." Luke says: "On the first day of the week, at early dawn, they came to the tomb." And John 20:1 reads: "But on the first day of the week, Mary the Magdalene came early, it still being dark, to the tomb and sees the stone taken away." Were Matthew's our only record, evidently Jesus may have risen just after sunset Saturday evening, before dark. According to Mark, Luke, or John, it may have been before sunrise the next morning. Whichever position we take, it is to a considerable extent jumping at a conclusion. But the principal fact remains undisputed: Jesus did rise from the dead.

But we have not studied these passages. In Matthew's account, the story commences when Mary Magdalene and the other Mary came to the sepulcher. "And behold, there was a great earthquake," or as the margin says, there had been a great earthquake, for the angel had rolled away the stone and sat upon it. But the guard fled (see Matt. 27: 62-66). This event no doubt was told by the keepers who fled (see Matt. 28:11-15). But when the two women came they found another guard, who told them Jesus was not there. What the two women told the disciples (v. 8) was that the Master was not in the tomb; but the evangelist is telling what happened to the guard. What the women were doing before going to the sepulcher is not told. But Mark says that they brought sweet spices, and when they looked the stone was indeed rolled away. They saw a young man, clothed in a "long white garment," and he told them, "He is risen, he is not here." This is the three women's story after the Sabbath was past.

When Luke tells the story, he relates that they were women who came with Jesus from Galilee, who went to see "how the body was laid," that is, in what condition He was laid away (Luke 23:55). They brought spices "very early in the morning"; and they found two men in shining garments who told them, "He is not here, but is risen." The time when this occurred is "upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning." But Luke does not tell us who were the women. This is not an important point with him. But they saw two men, instead of one, at the tomb. Were they two believing priests in their white linen gowns? John describes another scene. This time it is Mary Magdalene alone. She was unsatisfied and persevering, and came back. But He was not there, and she went for Peter, who with that "other disciple," ran to find still only an empty sepulcher. There was no Lord! They left the scene, but Mary lingered, and at last met the risen Christ. "Go," said He, "and tell my brethren." It was in the morning of the first day of the week.

In order to study faithfully the Word of God, it is essential to study human life in all its phases, as it is exhibited in the principal affairs of the world—in infancy, in maturity, in declining age. More than any other book, the Bible touches every phase, every emotion of man's experience. By its teaching, the commonest events are filled with a new meaning. Little mustard seeds, the barren fig tree, the growing grain, and the lily of the valley all mean something in God's kingdom. Its doctrine is like leaven in the meal. Its disciples are the salt of the earth and the light of the world. Children in their innocence are models of citizens in the kingdom, and saints of fourscore years are shocks of wheat fully ripened, ready for the world's harvest. The divine Word is no less pregnant with meaning to man's spiritual life. Every holy emotion of his being is awakened by its simple narratives, and the profound wisdom of its prophecies. By it the strongest attachments of human affection are glorified in the home and the sincerity of faith is sanctified in the children's love for father and mother. The church of God is symbolized by ten virgins. In solemn expectation it waits at the bedside when the babe is born; it pronounces its benediction at the marriage altar; it points the eyes of everlasting hope to the resurrection and immortality as the last rite at the covered tomb.—George H. Dewing in The World's Crisis.

GOD AND THE NATIONS

By S. J. Lindsay

AS ONE looks out upon the scene of the present day and sees the attitude of the nations toward God, the picture would be, indeed, discouraging if it were not for the fact that Scripture advises us what to expect at this time. We see some of the nations defying God openly and we find the influence that is at work in these nations making great headway in nearly all of them, all inclined to take the same course in their attitude toward God. In our own nation, which we call a "Christian" nation, we find only three and one third as much spent on all religious effort as we are paying to combat the crime evil. Nations are making faces at each other with threats of war to reach their goals. The whole world is all a-quiver with the prospect of greater and more cruel wars than we have ever seen before.

Much that is called religion serves only as a social condiment to add flavor to a rotten social condition. But the true child of God is not without compass and guide in these matters. The nations may run their course until the time appointed of God and then they must give heed whether they would or not. For "I will gather all nations, and will bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat" (Joel 3:2). "Let the heathen be wakened, and come up to the valley of Jehoshaphat: for there will I sit to judge all the heathen round about" (Joel 3:12). Ezekiel gives a picture more in detail in the 38th chapter. There are many other references to this judgment and it is sure to come, and in such a way that all nations will be broken by it, until we learn in the prophecy of Zechariah that the nations which are left will eagerly go up from year to year to worship the Lord of hosts in Jerusalem. What a change!

With this picture spread out before us why should we mourn over present conditions? And why should we wonder at present-day religious conditions? We have been amply informed as to that. 2 Timothy 3 gives us a very vivid picture of present-day religious effort. The first five verses picture to us the condition in the churches of the present time. Lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God. They have a form of godliness, but deny its power. True disciples are to turn away from such. In the next chapter we are told that they will turn away their ears from the truth and shall turn their minds to fables.

Yes, the day of reckoning is coming and it will surely come. It is for us to live the best lives of faith we can. We shall not be able to stem the tide, for the nations and their religion are bound to go their course until God puts a halt to it all at the coming of our Lord. It is for us to pray, "Come, Lord Jesus, and quickly come."—Messenger of Truth.

The answer to the question in last week's paper will be found in Deuteronomy 30:1-5. Notice verse 4 especially.

Youth and Conditionalism

"YOUTH is the time of enterprise and hope," declares Dr. Johnson, and with that statement I think we all readily agree. Parents, organizations, or nations possessing wisdom and foresight lavish care and attention upon the young in their midst. The future happiness of the home depends upon a proper development of the children from infancy to youth and maturity. The success and strength of an organization very often is based upon its ability to capture youth and fire its heart and imagination with its principles and ideals. When a movement fails to touch and arouse the adolescent mind, that movement is, without the shadow of a doubt, doomed to early extinction.

In choosing such a subject as "Youth and Conditionalism" for consideration, I had two objects in view: to impress upon the minds of the youth of our movement a sense of the difficulties confronting the youth and maiden outside of our truths in embracing conditional immortality; to consider how best we can equip ourselves to win them to our side and to the great truth of life only in Christ.

I know it is an overworked statement I repeat in saying that we live in difficult days for Christian witness. The church of Christ, instead of being the very center of the nations' life, is often ignored, and sometimes openly despised. How much the church, by her compromise and lukewarm testimony, is to blame for this we cannot say, but the fact remains too obvious for denial. Religion, in the minds of great masses of the people, has become detached from everyday life. It is not looked upon as something intensely practical. The pages of the Rainbow and similar magazines written in the later years of the last century reveal a searching after truth, a spirit of inquiry, and a zeal for the things of God among great numbers of men and women. Truth, or what was believed to be truth, was held as something very precious indeed. The Conditional Immortality Mission's testimony was criticized, misrepresented, attacked—and it stood and grew. The attacks upon it today are fewer and milder. We must give honor to the stalwart pioneers and their early followers for some of that; not for all of it, however.

We cannot help being driven to the conclusion that our immunity from more frequent attack is due to the fact that men have grown more tolerant, not through charity, or understanding, but because of indifference. Men have rejected in a great measure the monstrous doctrine of eternal torment. Were this rejection based upon a fuller knowledge of God through His Word, how happy we would be. Too often, however, it is a mental act alone. Men feel they cannot accept such a doctrine, yet fail to seek the truth where alone it is to be found—the Bible.

This article, originally given as an address by a Mr. Beattie at a conference of the English Conditional Immortality Mission, sets forth the premise that belief in the inherent immortality of men is not only untrue, but destructive to the church.

There still abides in the mind of man, however, a belief in the hereafter. Man's pride will not allow him to contemplate a day when he shall have no part in the world that now is, or in some other sphere. Men may reject eternal torment, but in every heart there is a yearning after eternal life. One young divinity student said to me recently that this yearning in the human heart for immortality was a conclusive proof that we possessed it. I do not desire to appear irreverent or speak lightly of any man's beliefs, but I can only say that if the fact of longing for things made us the possessors of them, would London not have a fine population of millionaires? Truly, "if wishes were horses beggars would ride."

The things we long for, and long for most deeply, are the things still beyond our reach. "For what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for?" It is a great privilege to be able to undergo a theological training course where the mind is trained to sound logical conclusions upon matters which perplex and baffle the untutored mind. I have never enjoyed the privilege; nevertheless, I would humbly submit that it is the most logical thing in the world to reason that this longing within my breast for life everlasting is the strongest proof that I do not possess it.

In coming to such a conclusion, we have reached one of the great truths of Scripture for which our Mission stands, that immortality is not inherent in man, but is the gift of God through faith to believers to be bestowed upon them at the coming of Christ. At this time I would like us to consider how this truth has been obscured and how best we can display it in its purity, beauty, and power, to the eyes of men, especially to the youth of our land.

We shall fail to grasp the nature of our task in our approach to youth unless we realize how deeply youth is in love with life. To every age, life is sweet, but to youth, with bright prospects and warm desires, with ambitions and dreams, and strength, courage, and talent to fulfill them, how sweet, how fair is life; how bitter, how ugly is death!

Sir Walter Scott, in his Coronach, reveals the sense of desolation at the cutting away of a young life, when he pens the lines:

"He is gone on the mountain,
He is lost to the forest,
Like a summer-dried fountain,
When our need is the sorest.
The font, reappearing,
From the raindrops shall borrow;
But to us comes no cheering,
To Duncan no morrow!

“The hand of the reaper
 Takes the ears that are hoary ;
 But the voice of the weeper
 Wails manhood in glory.
 The autumn winds rushing,
 Waft the leaves that are serest ;
 But our flower was in flushing
 When blighting was nearest.”

The passing of the years and the recurrence of death within his intimate circle may help a man to restrain his grief and become reconciled. Youth knows no such restraint. It is not able to look upon such a catastrophe philosophically. It feels that indeed there has come “a mist and a blinding rain and the world is never the same again.” Youth rebels against the thought of death being the end of everything, but to what or whom does it turn?

Standing under the shadow of some great grief, faced with the brevity of life, the finality of death, what beliefs fill the young impressionable mind? What comfort is there for the breaking heart, and the numbed brain? If we can discover that we shall perhaps be on the way to an understanding of the barriers which must be removed ere we can present conditional immortality as a comfort and support.

There are those, and we thank God for them, who in the hour of sorrow and affliction seek comfort in the Word of God. To them assuredly will the promise be fulfilled that God will bind up the broken heart. They draw strength from the promises of God. They dwell upon the glowing descriptions of the glories reserved for the saints in a land where there is neither sorrow nor sighing nor any more pain. Invariably they draw comfort from the thought that their dear one is already in full enjoyment of these blessings, in a “land that is fairer than day.” These sorrowing ones believe their Bible, trust its promises, draw upon it for their faith, yet fail to see that the time of the reward is not yet.

There are others, and their name is legion, who base their assurance upon the teaching of their spiritual advisers. The words of well-intentioned but unscriptural comfort which speak of promotion to higher service find ready entrance into saddened hearts who see in death not a cessation of life, but a transition into a fuller and purer existence.

A third class is willing to accept the faith of its fathers without questioning. Youth which oftentimes questions and rejects the orthodox conclusions upon secular subjects very often accepts the beliefs of a father or mother without cavil. They have seen what their father's faith has meant to him; have seen how he was able to fight life's battles courageously and meet death fearlessly. Their father looked for a triumphant entry into the land of Beulah and the son, believing his father's faith to be founded upon gospel verities, believes him to be already enjoying the bliss of the purified.

I tell you, the hand that would remove that comfort and support must be wondrously tender, as qualified to bind up the wound as it is to remove the growth of error.

How shall the conditionalist meet these three classes? The young man who loves his Bible, studies it, yet elings to soul immortality as a Bible doctrine; the youth who is content to accept the creeds of his church; and the third who feels that he desires or needs nothing better than the faith that made his father and mother the saints they were.

The demand in the world of men today is for specialists; for men who know a little more about their job than the mass around; men who have studied, searched, sacrificed until the secrets which evade the casual observer become their own. For such men there is high reward and great honor. The principle holds in the things of God. God keeps His best for those who do not keep their best from Him.

Upon what is our faith founded? Upon the Bible, the teaching of men, or the beliefs of our fathers? We must settle this ere we seek to become teachers or evangelists. We need, as young conditionalists, familiarity with the Word of God. I do not mean being able to turn to, or even quote, passages of Scripture which seem to prove the truths we are proclaiming. It is so easy to prove almost anything from the Bible if verses or phrases are quoted at random, and the friend with whom you are discussing the subject may be as well qualified to quote Scripture which appears to disprove your assertions. What is necessary is that we become more familiar with the plan of God as revealed throughout Scripture, with the promises made to men through Christ; with divine history and prophecy and our place and part in them. Unless we are prepared to study from the Bible, and everything that will help to an understanding of it, we are unfit to take upon ourselves the role of critic or teacher of others. Let us not be deluded with the thought that a man because he cannot see “life truth” is not a Bible student. Many of the greatest students and exponents of the Word have failed, we cannot say how, to grasp this truth. Let us seek to grasp the unity and purpose of the whole Book and get to love it. Frequently a talk over some Bible theme far removed from our special views is the avenue to a heart-to-heart discussion upon conditionalism.

So far our consideration has been upon those who possessed faith, large or small, and traced their belief in immortality to the Bible. We cannot close our eyes, however, to the sad fact that a great percentage of the youth of today is out with religious influence altogether. The Bible is unread, the church and its message spurned. There is no family altar or Christian home life to remind the adolescent of things eternal and unchangeable. Even among such, however, we will find, not faith, but a belief in a future state, always happy, and usually to be enjoyed by all. The light manner in which such a future is referred to reveals to the spiritually discerning that there has been no fellowship with the One who “only could unlock the gate of heaven and let us in.” Upon what authority does this increasing army of young men and women outside the church of Christ base its hopes?

I believe they form their opinions from a perusal of the writings of many masters of fiction and from the thoughts of famous poets. Among the writings of those who occupy a high place in our nation's honored roll of authors and poets, you will find a vagueness regarding the requirements for an entrance into the joys of the saints of God. In spite of this many of them make the deathbed scenes of their heroes and heroines mediums to reveal their own beliefs in human immortality and endless happiness.

If we take one or two examples from the writings of poets and authors whose writings have captured the attention and won the admiration of succeeding generations, we shall see how widespread is this teaching and how subtly it is administered to the mind of the casual reader or the earnest student. Could any poet have chosen words more pleasing to the natural pride within man than did Addison when he wrote:

“The soul secured in her existence, smiles
At the drawn dagger and defies its point.
The stars shall fade away, the sun himself
Grow dim with age, and nature sink in years;
But thou shalt flourish in immortal youth,
Unhurt amidst the war of elements,
The wreck of matter and the crash of worlds.”

It is but a little step from such a belief in human immortality as a possession, to universalism. The mind is left with such an awful alternative to endless bliss—never-ending torment. If we consider Tennyson's In Memoriam, we will see how true this is. Tennyson was a young man when his dearest friend, Arthur Hallam, was cut away. To the poet it was an overwhelming grief. His poem, In Memoriam, is charged with beautiful tenderness as he dwells on the memory of past days, gone never to return. The poem was begun when Tennyson was a young man of 24, although it was not completed and given to the world until seventeen years later. Seventeen years of perfecting—the poet's tribute to his lost friend. Seventeen years, too, alas, in which a great error took stronger root in the poet's mind. A belief in immortality as a present possession was the stepping-stone to Tennyson's universalism, and thus we hear him saying:

“Oh, yet we trust that somehow, good
Will be the final goal of ill,
To pangs of nature, sins of will,
Defects of doubt, and stains of blood.
That nothing walks with aimless feet;
That not one life shall be destroyed,
Or cast as rubbish to the void,
When God hath made His pile complete.

I stretch lame hands of faith and grope
And gather dust and chaff and call
To what I feel is Lord of all
And faintly trust the larger hope.”

How beautiful are these words, how idealistic, and yet how unutterably pathetic. They are not the expression of a hope at all, but of a desire of the poet's heart. “We trust,” “We know not anything,” “I falter where I firmly trod,” “I faintly trust.” How different the disciples' and apostles' testimony, “We know,” “We know,” “We know.” We cannot wonder at the fact that they were able to add to their teaching, “Wherefore comfort one another with these words.” The tragedy was that men not only admired the splendor of Tennyson's poem and revered his sorrow for a lost companion, they drew comfort from his vague hopes as though they were the messages of God. One writer says, “Multitudes of these readers were imperfectly capable of appreciating him as an artist, but at any rate they heard a voice which they could generally understand. They felt that it was beautiful and noble and they loved it because it softened and elevated them. They cherished a poet who compels the sinner to join in a simple reliance on the divine love; who taught that through all the struggles and perplexities the life was being guided toward some final good.” Thus Tennyson's vague hopes and blind gropings become men's doctrines, the ground of their hopes. Error is never so dangerous as when mixed with truth and clothed in language of exquisite beauty, but if the brilliance of a Tennyson, Longfellow, or Addison dazzle our eyes so that the glory of the eternal Word is dimmed, they must be put to the one side. The natural man wants to believe such teaching, for at the back of the mind is the thought of the alternative to everlasting life—extinction.

How depressing, how utterly unsatisfying, for instance, is the philosophy of Omar Khayyam:

“Oh, come with old Khayyam and leave the wise
To talk; one thing is certain that life flies;
One thing is certain and the rest is lies,
The flower that once has bloom forever dies.

“Then to the rolling Heaven itself I cried
Asking, ‘What lamp had destiny to guide
Her little children stumbling in the dark?’
And ‘A blind understanding!’ Heav'n replied.”

How cold, how comfortless, and thank God—how false. Our great writers have felt how utterly foreign to men's hopes and fears was such an outlook, and so you will find that time after time when death flits across the pages and some lovely character is taken from the scene, it is to some brighter and happier land their spirit takes flight. No author understood men's hopes and fears better, perhaps, than Charles Dickens. Listen to his outlook as portrayed in the incident of the death of “Little Nell” in The Old Curiosity Shop. “It is not,” said the schoolmaster, as he bent down to kiss her on the cheek, and gave his tears free vent, “it is not on earth that Heaven's justice ends.” “Think what it is compared with the world to which her young spirit has winged its early flight and say if one deliberate wish in solemn tones above this bed could call her back to life which of us would utter it.”

Or consider Mrs. Stowe's theology in Uncle Tom's Cabin. We have the following words recorded after the death of the child Eva, “Oh, woe for them who watched thy entrance into heaven when they shall wake and find only the grey sky of daily life and thou gone forever.”

These few illustrations are typical of the outlook of the great army of writers with which youth becomes familiar in its reading, whether such reading be in course of a study of English literature or merely miscellaneous. The mind, perhaps unconsciously, but nevertheless surely, is being influenced by the great minds of our literary world to an acceptance of soul immortality as an indisputable and seemingly undisputed fact. I have sought to prove by Tennyson's famous poem that a belief in human immortality is an avenue to universalism. I believe it is also the gateway to spiritism.

One of the poet Burns' most tender songs is addressed "To Mary in Heaven," Mary, whom many believe would have made Burns, humanly speaking, the man he often longed to be. In this poem we hear Burns' breathing these words:

"Oh, Mary, dear departed shade,
Where is thy place of blissful rest,
Seest thou thy lover lowly laid,
Hear'st thou the groans that rend his breast?"

Other poets have followed this style of addressing the departed. Today we have the spectacle of churches praying for the dead. Why should we be surprised that thousands have gone a step further in an attempt to speak to their dear dead, departed—not dead, but "over the river, looking this way?" Is it not logical to assume that loved ones now free from the limitations of earthly coils should seek to comfort the mourning heart by an assurance of their welfare and a description of the felicities which are theirs? Admit the consciousness of the dead, and human weakness and sentiment will break down every barrier which ecclesiastical authorities may raise, in an endeavor to pierce the veil and recapture the joy of broken friendship.

To these dangers, springing as they do from a belief in man's never-ending personality, what answer can the young conditionalist give? His weapon in defense of truth when dealing with the believer, we said, was familiarity with the Bible. To meet this class there must be a faith, without reserve, in the Bible. Many, many religious teachers are familiar with the Word, and yet doubters. They cannot preach from this part, they are not sure of that; this book is of purely historical interest, this one has slipped in by some accident. If we would be of any service in the proclamation of God's purposes we must be certain in our own mind, that the Bible is God's Word, inspired, authentic, infallible. In a word, we must be so certain of its power and authority that where the world's master minds, whether Dickens or Dumas, Shaw or Shelley, Burns or Bunyan, disagree with revealed truth we must be fearless in our attack, confident in our testimony. Let God be true and every man a liar. Let us remember, however, that in attacking and seeking to overthrow the youthful conception of death and the hereafter as formed by the reading of classical fiction, we are undertaking a serious business. Dickens with his wizardry painted characters like Little Nell, pure and innocent, or Joe, the crossing sweeper, poor, neglected, yet how attractive. He made you fall in love with them for their beautiful natures, then having made you love them he made their departure so tragic, so sad, that the reader is moved to tears. He feels their sorrows so deeply that he agrees with the sentiments of the writer when he grants to them an immediate entry into a fairer and purer world. We must remember, in our attempts to dispel such conclusions, that human sentiment often clings to a belief although there be no reason nor faith to support it.

Our work must be far more than merely negative. We must dwell on the promises for the future, the certainty of the second coming, the glory of the resurrection morning, and the final destruction of evil. Faith in the whole Word is absolutely essential to our success as we seek to oppose error created by fiction. Our testimony must ever be, "Thus saith the Lord."

Familiarity with the Word; faith in the Word; there is one more requirement, and it is essential for every aspect of our work: it is fellowship with God. If we are out of touch with God our testimony will be barren, our lives joyless, prayers powerless. No amount of Scripture knowledge, intellectual attainment, or preaching fluency can atone for spiritual bankruptcy.

A Christian who professes to have a distinctive message is a marked man. His life is often examined before his preaching. Two men were discussing a certain preacher; said one, "I do not know why it is he gets such crowds and great results. I confess I can never see much in his sermons." "Ah," said his friend, "but there are thirty years of holy living behind every sentence." How many years of holy living are behind my witness to the truth of life only in Christ?

There is always the grave danger of a man becoming so much in love with a doctrine that it fills the place which belongs to Christ alone. He must be King of our lives. Our highest honor is the winning of a sinner back to God. This is God's will for us, and to be successful we must be living very close to God. If our lives show forth the beauty of Christ our message will be more acceptable. It may be we shall hear some one say to us:

"For me 'twas not the truth you taught,
To you so clear, to me so dim,
But when you came to me you brought
A sense of Him."

Witnesses, bearing His likeness; these are what the Mission needs to lead men to the truth which shall make them free. Ours is a solemn responsibility, a glorious privilege, a divinely commissioned service. To us is given by the grace of God the task of revealing God through His Word as the God of love offering eternal life through His Son. To us also is given the ministry of warning, the foretelling of the destruction of the impenitent sinner, and all that savors of evil; to prophesy of a time when sin and pain shall be no more and God and His exalted Son shall reign in glory and righteousness.

Our resources on the human side are small, but on the divine they are infinite. It may be that we have not because we ask not. Let us prayerfully, in the light of our responsibilities as sons of God, disciples of Jesus Christ, examine our fitness to witness before men, believers or scoffers, to the truths we hold. Let us more earnestly seek to develop these three essentials: familiarity with the Word, faith in the Word, and fellowship with God. So, by God's help, we shall see truth triumph over the errors of tradition and false doctrine, the sentimental speculations of fiction and the vague suppositions of poetical dreamers. We shall see our blessed Lord given the place in the hearts of men for which He died. Men will at last see the true meaning of His claim when He said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life. No man cometh unto the Father, but by me."

House a soldier demonstrates an anti-aircraft gun, while another pleads for recruits. Beneath its routine hurly-burly, all London is uneasy. Thoughts of war and bombs are with it always." Under a sinister picture of a woman wearing a hideous gas mask, is this inscription: "With Europe uneasy, the British Government has ordered forty million gas masks for safety of the citizenry in time of war. . . Britains vividly recall the horror of the air raids over London during the World War, and some modern homes are provided with gas and bomb proof chambers."

Observers at the beginning of 1937 took a world-circling view of international prospects for peace, but found nothing to give them reason for hope. Not a single rift in the clouds could they discover. All was gloominess, apprehension, and dread. Joel's voice of lamentation might well be the one to which we listen as the radio commentators bring us the news from day to day. Listen to the stirring words of Moffatt's translation of Joel 2:1-6:

"Blow the bugle-blast in Sion,
Sound the alarum on my sacred hill,
Till the citizens all tremble!"

Why should such a solemn warning be sent ringing forth by Jehovah's command? Here is the answer!

"For the Eternal's day is coming—here it is!" (The italics are ours.)

Then follows this vivid description of what Joel was given to see:

"A dark day in a shroud,
A day of fog and cloud."

The thought of a dead man wrapped in a somber winding sheet, provides the Prophet with an illustration of the picture of destruction upon which he looks. Then he records some of the fleeting details of that picture:

"Here comes a huge host in power,
Blackening the hills;
The like of it never has been,
The like of it never will be,
For years upon years to come."

The progress of the devastating scourge is described vividly.

"Before them a fire is devouring,
Behind them flames a-blazing;
Before them the land lies like an Eden paradise,
Behind them it is as a desolate desert—
For nothing escapes them."

Approaching the scene of awfulness more closely, the Prophet paints the remainder of the picture in bold and vivid strokes of crimson:

"They look like horses,
They run like war-horses,
As chariots rattle,
They leap on the hill-tops,
Like flames that crackle, consuming the straw,
Like a vast army in battle array."
Then, moved by the dreadfulness of it all, he cries,

"Hearts are in anguish before them,
All faces turn pale.
They charge like warriors,
They advance like fighters,
Each on his own track—
No tangling of paths—
None pushes his fellow."

But why continue? You have heard it all over the radio, this agonized warning of the Prophet Joel; you have read it in your papers; you have seen it on the silver screen! And you know what it means! You know what it portends! "The Eternal's day is coming—here it is!"

One more inspired prophet-poet brings to us the same sad message of warning, telling of the futility of human efforts to buy off or to hinder by any means the coming of this dreadful onslaught that threatens the world. And how solemnly impressive are these words of Zephaniah!

"Hush, 'tis the Lord Eternal!
The Eternal's day is at hand!
The Eternal has ready a victim for sacrifice,
And his guests are all prepared.
The Eternal's great day is near,
Near, speeding apace!
The Eternal's bitter day is near,
Rushing on like a warrior!—"

Now he also enters into a burning description of that day:

"A day of wrath, that day, of woe and anguish,
A day of stress and distress, darkness and gloom,
A day of cloud and thunder cloud,
A day of trumpet-blast and battle-cry
Against towns fortified and ramparts high—
When men must grope like blind men, desperately,
Because against the Eternal they rebelled."

Again that fearful scene of carnage and of death:

"Their blood shall be scattered like dust,
Their flesh like dung."

The wealth they have accumulated will not purchase their deliverance from the avenging hand of Almighty God!

"No silver and no gold avails
To protect them on the day of the Eternal's anger,
When the fire of his fury consumes the whole earth;
For a full end, ay a fearful end,
Will the Eternal make of all on earth."

(Zeph. 1:7-18, Moffatt.)

Such are God's movements, such are His accomplishments, such are the judgments, He is about to pour out upon the ungodly nations of the earth. None can stay His hand! None can prevent or delay His advance! Opposition is swept before Him like chaff from a wind-swept harvest field!

But the nations do not recognize His presence. They feel His power, but they do not see His hand. They pass in judgment before Him, but they do not realize where they stand. The trample of feet, the feet of nations, of tribes and peoples, approaches; they converge from the four corners of the earth. Soon they will meet. Soon they will flow together in one red stream of carnage and of death!

Perhaps that is the time when the words of the Revelator will come to pass. I again quote from Moffatt's translation.

"So the angel swung his sickle on the earth and culled the clusters from the Vine of earth, flinging the grapes into the great winepress of God's wrath; outside the City was the winepress trodden, and blood gushed out of the winepress as high as a horse's bridle for the space of two hundred miles" (Rev. 14:19, 20).

Yet even in this awful scene there is a gleaming ray of hope for mankind. To find it, we turn to Isaiah, the 60th chapter, the first three verses, as provided in the same version of Scriptures from which we have read the others.

"Arise, be glad, your light is dawning,
The Eternal's splendor rises upon you.
Though darkness covers all the earth,
And a black cloud shrouds the nations,
Yet the Eternal shines out upon you,
His splendor on you gleams,
Till nations gather to your light
And kings to your bright beams."

In this promise of our blessed Lord there is hope indeed! For not only do those effulgent beams of glory fall across the path that sorrowing Israel treads, but from east to west, from north to south, over all lands and over all races of men who dwell in "darkness and in the shadow of death," falls their shimmering golden splendor!

God Among the Nations, first to punish, then to bless!

MEETING THE LORD—WHEN?

He had left an empty tomb, which Mr. Helmer did not do, and the undeniable fact remains that had God not raised Christ from the dead He would have remained dead, and our hope of salvation would have been forever gone. If we are not to believe that D. L. Moody died, then we put ourselves in a different class from Paul, who said, "These all died in faith, not having received the promises." Nor, in view of that statement, is it possible to believe Paul's ringing message that "Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures," that He "was buried," and that He "was raised from the dead" the third day.

This opens up another phase of the subject, viz.: If it is true that mutual friends who have recently died have "passed into the presence of the King," then it is equally true that you and I have never yet seen them, for it is undeniable that those whom we have been accustomed to see and hear did not go into heaven. Dr. R. A. Torrey, in his Fundamentals of the Christian Faith, actually makes the statement to his audience, "You do not see me." Has God then put a mask on His creation? Are we living in the midst of unrealities and false conditions? Are the Bible descriptions of men and women so vividly portrayed untrue in their portrayal? We read in John 20:20 that our Lord showed His disciples His hands and His side, and the record says: "Then were the disciples glad when they saw the Lord." Are we to believe the statement? John, in his Epistle, says, "That which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and which we have handled . . . that which we have seen and heard, declare we unto you."

All the relationships of family life, father, mother, son, and daughter, are of God's own appointment. To tell me that I have never really seen my mother, never really looked upon the one who gave me birth, is irony too deep for words. To say, as is affirmed by this self-appointed teacher of God's Word, that He who gave me the wife who for thirty-five years has been my companion, has only permitted me to love, care for, and cherish "the house in which she lives," is to mock God to His face and put to shame the declaration that "a prudent wife is from the Lord" (Prov. 19:14). "Children," says the Psalmist, "are an heritage of the Lord; and the fruit of the womb is his reward" (Psalm 127:3). But according to this man the only reward my eyes have seen is the "house" in which they live. God forgive me if I feel harshly toward such a religion that snaps asunder all the loving ties of human relationships with one mighty stroke of the pen, and in doing so maintains it is one of the foundation truths of the Christian faith!

What will the Savior of men say in the great judgment day? He who was Himself man that He might redeem men, what will He say? Twenty times, and over, does the Word of the living God declare that "God raised him from the dead"; but according to these people it was only a buried "house"—Jesus Himself never died, never was buried, and never was raised from the dead.

David says of his body, "I (ego) am fearfully and wonderfully made." Modern theology denies its personality, and substitutes for it a supposed immortal, immaterial unreality impossible of description.

Now let us listen to Paul's comforting message (I quote from the Revised Version, and you will see it is not Paul only who speaks): "But we would not have you ignorant, brethren, concerning them that fall asleep; that ye sorrow not as the rest which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also that are fallen asleep, will God through Jesus bring with him (from the dead). For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive, that are left unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent (go before) them that are asleep . . . the dead in Christ shall rise first, then we that are alive, that are left, shall be caught up together with them to meet the Lord . . ." (1 Thess. 4). See also Job 14:14, 15; 1 Cor. 15:51, 52. "We shall not all sleep, we shall all be changed."

House-Cleaning Time

* * * *

By Gerald L. Cooper

House-cleaning, the delight of all the ladies, is again with us. Always in the spring there is a bustle about the house, and the cleaning commences. The winter's accumulation of dirt and grime is removed from the windows, walls, and the floor. The cellar and the attic are gone over, and all things that are not necessary to our well-being are junked or burned. Then, too, the spare room, or the place that we have to throw everything, just to get it out of sight, is often cleaned and the old junk taken out of it and destroyed. This is a good idea, this house-cleaning.

There is another house of which I am thinking that should be cleaned, not just in the spring, but whenever we find anything that should not be there. That house I am referring to is our own bodies, which are called in the Scriptures "the temple of God" (1 Cor. 3:16).

How are we going to cleanse these bodies? Through the blood of Jesus Christ, "which cleanseth us from all unrighteousness" (1 John 1:9). But, friends, we cannot expect Christ to cleanse us unless we do our part. Let us see just what we might have to cleanse from our lives.

There are at least three ways that we can soil ourselves, all under the heading of evil communications. The first is swearing, or taking the Lord's name in vain. What real Christian would do such a thing? Yet we find many who profess to be Christians who can curse better than the vilest sinner. Another way is by telling stories that are just a bit "shady." Many of us are guilty in this respect, but Christ would not have one of His to do so, and God is not desirous of having His "temple" defiled in such a manner. Then there is gossip. Many a life has been broken and saddened by an idle tale told and retold, and each time growing worse. Let us cleanse the conversation and the words that fall from our mouths.

Again, we may have habits that are tearing us down rather than building us, and I am sure that God desires our bodies, His temples, to be strong and sturdy. Perhaps we use stimulating beverages, or tobacco, or just a little of an alcoholic drink. Do you suppose that our Great Example would even think of such a thing? Do you know of any place in the Bible where it is written that Christ asked the disciples for a chew or a cigarette? No, friend, we cannot indulge in these things and still follow Christ. If we do these things, it is high time we had house-cleaning.

Some of us are afflicted with a bad temper, and unless we learn to control that temper, Christ does not desire us to be a part of His church. We must learn to control our tempers. Christ Himself was angered at the traders in the temple of God, and we can be angry as long as we control ourselves.

Let us remember that we are the temple of God, and let us look to ourselves to see if there is any way in which we could be cleansed, and if there is, let us accept of the blood of Jesus Christ which "cleanseth us from all unrighteousness."

Bottled Prayers

"Another angel came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer; and there was given unto him much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar which was before the throne."—Revelation 8:3.

That this priestly angel is none other than the Lord Jesus Christ there can be no question, for He alone is our advocate with the Father. "And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous" (1 John 2:1).

During the years of His earthly ministry our Lord brought down many blessings upon His contemporaries: He healed the sick, raised the dead, and preached the gospel to the poor and broken-hearted. We sometimes think that we would like to have been in the crowds that thronged Him—oh, to have touched the hem of His garment! But, my friend, do you realize that Jesus now has infinitely more power to help us than He ever had then to help His contemporaries? It is true; He is a priest made "after the power of an endless life" (Heb. 7:16). Listen: "He is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them" (Heb. 7:25). Oh, ye of little faith, wake up to your privilege of powerful prayer! It is a fundamental of Christianity that God answers prayer. Jesus receives your prayers, adds unto them the sweetness of His own personality, and offers them up as incense to the Father.

There are some prayers that cannot be answered until the second coming of Christ to set up His righteous government over the earth. There isn't a Christian but what has prayed, as taught by the Lord, "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven" (Matt. 6:10). Of necessity the answer to that prayer must await the coming of the King. Those prayers are not wasted. They are saved, put away in "golden vials full of odours, which are the prayers of saints" (Rev. 5:8). When the scene opens in Revelation 8, the Lord Jesus takes these unanswered "prayers of all saints." The time has come for an immediate answer. He adds His own intercessory sweetness, and immediately the drama of Revelation moves toward the answer: Fire is cast into the earth, the seven last trumpets prepare to sound, the armies of heaven move in! "The prayers of all saints" have an answer!

STANDING BEFORE A KING

"MOTHER, I can't wait until I am grown up," exclaimed ten-year-old Bobby, as he put his school books down on the library table one warm spring afternoon.

"Why so suddenly anxious to be grown up, Son?"

"You see, today we had to write an essay on what we expect to be when we are grown up, and I got to thinking," Bobby said, "that the time will never come."

"It does seem like a long way to go now, but it will go so fast you'll be grown up before you know it."

By this time nine-year-old Betty had entered, and she began at once to ask Bobby all about his essay. For the teacher had recommended Bobby's essay as being the best in his class.

"You know, Mother, I'm going to be a doctor when I grow up," said Bobby, "but the things I have to do every day haven't anything at all to do with being a doctor."

"Well, now let's see," said Mother. "We have just an hour before time to prepare supper, and suppose we go over the lesson for next Sunday, because this is Friday and tomorrow is a full day. You know you'll be practicing for Children's Day and decorating the church."

"You still haven't answered my question, Mother."

"Perhaps it will answer itself," she said as they got down their Bibles to read the story.

"Oh, the lesson is about Joseph," exclaimed Betty. "I always like to hear about him."

"Yes, it's rather a long jump from last week's story. Joseph, as you recall, was one of the twelve sons of Jacob, the next to the youngest, in fact. His father loved him very much and often showed him special favors. Tell me, Betty, what you find in verses 3 and 4 of Genesis 37."

"Joseph's father gave him a beautiful coat, and his brothers were mean to him because they were jealous."

"Bobby, you read verses 5 to 10, and tell us what happened one day," said Mother.

"Joseph dreamed that he and his brothers were binding sheaves in the field and his sheaf stood upright while all his brothers' sheaves bowed down to it. Another time he dreamed that the sun and the moon and eleven stars bowed down to him."

"Now we must read between the lines to see what sort of boy Joseph was," said Mother. "I believe one reason his father loved him was because he had a sunny disposition. He was so happy himself he never dreamed that his brothers were jealous of him, or he might not have told his dreams. Another thing, I think he was an obedient boy. When his father asked him to go a long way to see how the brothers were getting along with the flocks, he didn't grumble or complain. He did the things of each day just the very best way he knew how to do them.

"Betty, tell me what the brothers planned when they saw Joseph coming a long way off."

"They planned to kill him. Oh, how dreadful!"

"One brother, Reuben, begged for Joseph's life, and so they put him in a pit after taking off his beautiful coat. Bobby, tell us what happened next."

"Some merchantmen came along and the brothers lifted Joseph out of the pit and sold him to them for twenty pieces of silver. But they didn't tell Reuben about it," said Bobby.

"When Reuben found Joseph gone he felt so frightened he didn't know what to do," Mother added. "The others dipped the coat his father had given him in the blood of a goat, and when they showed it to Jacob he thought that a wild animal had killed him. He mourned many days for his beloved son."

"Oh, Mother," said Bobby, "the merchantmen sold him to a servant of Pharaoh in Egypt."

"God was watching over Joseph, you may be sure, children, and He guided the events of his life so that they turned out for Joseph's good, because Joseph trusted God. Many, many things happened to him, some hard and some pleasant, but through all of them Joseph did each day's work just the very best he knew how and was always ready for any advancement that was offered to him. Even when he was in prison he was put in charge of all the prisoners.

"Chapter 40 tells us about some more dreams," said Bobby. "And chapter 41 tells the King's dream. Joseph got out of prison by explaining the King's dream to him."

"Notice, children, verse 16 says that Joseph didn't take the credit for explaining the dream. He said God would give the answer. Joseph never became proud over his position or accomplishments. The King's dreams meant plenty followed by famine, and when the King wanted a wise head to arrange things for the years of famine, whom would he naturally choose?"

"Joseph," exclaimed the children in chorus.

"Doing each day's work well and keeping his faith in God brought him to the place he desired. Do you see, Bobby?"

"Yes, Mother," said Bobby thoughtfully.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

IOWA CONFERENCE ANNOUNCEMENT

It is time for another district conference in Iowa.

Take heed to the time, May 23, and place, Pleasant Prairie Church near Sac City.

Forenoon meeting at 10:00 and afternoon at 2:30, with basket dinner at noon. We would appreciate a large crowd out.

The annual conference will be held at Waterloo August 21-29. We are planning for a good time, as it is the fiftieth anniversary or Golden Jubilee. Everyone make this a real homecoming. Esther Sealine, Corr. Sec.

The annual May Meeting of the Fonthill, Ont., church will be held May 28, 29, and 30. F. L. Austin will be the guest speaker. An invitation is extended to all who can to be present.

CALIFORNIA CONFERENCE

At a board meeting held Sunday, May 2, in Pomona, plans were made for the next one-day conference of the southern California churches. It is to be held June 6 in conjunction with the dedication of the new Los Angeles church, which is located between Main and Broadway on 103rd Street. Everyone is urged to reserve that date. Such an event does not happen often. We want it to be a big day.

The following program was drafted: morning worship—dedicatory sermon by George Lichty, Pomona, Communion service led by Emma C. Railsback, Los Angeles; noon, picnic lunch at the church; afternoon service, 2:30, sermon by Norman John Macleod; a short business session; evening service—6:30-7:30, Berean meeting in charge of the young people of the Los Angeles group, 7:30, sermon by E. E. Rogers, Los Angeles. The Pomona Music Committee is planning special music for each service. Grace Adamson, Secretary.

The meetings at Ripley, Ill., being conducted by Evangelist T. A. Drinkard and Pastor Harvey U. Krogh, Jr., continue to attract interested crowds. The meetings will continue over May 23. From June 6 to 13 Bro. Drinkard will be engaged in a series of services with Bro. Magaw at the Brush Creek, Ohio, Church. Between these two campaigns Bro. Drinkard has several free days, including the last Sunday of May, which he would be glad to spend profitably with some congregation in the Middle West. He may be addressed at Ripley, Ill.

WHAT'S THE ANSWER?

How many good people does the Bible say went to heaven before Jesus was born? Look for the answer in next week's paper. Don't forget! It'll be there!

At the annual election of the Students' Christian Association, Aurora College, Aurora, Ill., Arthur Mills (now training for Church of God ministry) was reelected president; Helen Harper was chosen vice president, and Gwendolyn Vannah as secretary-treasurer, and Joe Tom Tate as reporter.

FROM SISTER ANNA B. EYCHANER

The following items of general interest are selected from a letter received from Sr. Anna B. Eychaner, widow of our lamented "father in the faith," A. J. Eychaner. Sr. Eychaner is now on her way north after spending the winter with her son Karl in Florida.

"I have enjoyed reading the paper this winter very much. One of the especially good articles was the one which commented on the faith of John Milton, pointing out his agreement with our own precious truths of the Bible. If everyone who is a seeker after truth will take only 'a thus saith the Lord' and require no other authority except that of the Scriptures, he will find the truth.

"I thank you for the tribute to my dear husband regarding the obituary he wrote seventy years ago. Yes, I remember the accident and the death of Lizzie Brookner at Dixon, Ill. My father took the church papers from the beginning of their publication. Bro. Chaplin (an early editor of The Restitution) used to come to our house and preach in our schoolhouse.

"I want to compliment the Berean editor. He has a well-filled page each issue of the paper. I am glad to know that Sr. Gesin is improving in health so that we can have more of her timely articles. We miss Bro. Lyman Booth's writings very much."

We are sure our contributors will appreciate these commendatory remarks from Sr. Eychaner and continue to put forth every effort to make The Herald a real instrument in the hands of God for the instruction and strengthening of His people.

A letter from Mrs. Anna Boyanovsky, Marathon, Iowa, reports the visit of Mrs. Anna Fales of California at the last service held at Marathon. The next meeting to be held in northwest Iowa will be at the residence of Harold Smith.

Lower Rates to New Subscribers

To provide our readers with an opportunity to engage in a great missionary campaign at little or no expense to themselves and at the same time to make it possible for them to help us in placing THE RESTITUTION HERALD in hundreds of new homes between now and the first of next August, we are making the following unprecedented offer:

For the next two months we will accept annual prepaid subscriptions to THE HERALD at exceedingly low rates when sent in in groups of five or more at one time as specified below.

Five new annual subscriptions will be accepted when sent in by one person and accompanied by check or money order in full, for $6.25.

Ten or more new annual subscriptions will be accepted at the rate of One Dollar each when sent in by a single individual!

Subscriptions will be counted as "new" and entitled to this very low introductory rate when the one signing for the paper has not been a paid subscriber since January 1, 1937.

Here is a wonderful opportunity for our pastors, Sunday school superintendents, and local workers generally to get their people enlisted in a great missionary enterprise!

Remember THE RESTITUTION HERALD will continue to bring you the news of the churches from all parts of the country, the latest information as to prophetic developments throughout the world, and hundreds of inspiring articles on doctrinal and spiritual subjects of the deepest interest.

LITTLE - BELL

A beautiful and impressive home marriage was solemnized at the country residence of Mr. and Mrs. Crouse, uncle and aunt of the groom, near Savanna, Ill., at high noon on Mother's Day, May 9, 1937, when Merle E. Bell, son of Bro. and Sr. Harlan S. Bell, and Miss Elnora Little, daughter of Willis and Flora (Cole) Little, pledged themselves to each other for life.

Before an altar arranged from spring blossoms and in the presence of a large number of relatives and friends, Mr. and Mrs. Lamont Crouse, acting as matron of honor and best man, the lovely bride was given by an uncle of the groom to be the wife, the companion, and the comforter of Bro. Merle Bell.

The ceremony was performed by G. E. Marsh, pastor of the Oregon, Ill., Church of God.

Preceding the marriage and forming a part of it, friends of the young people gave two delightful vocal solos and another played Mendelssohn's Wedding March as the bridal group approached the altar. A lovely little flower girl added a delightful touch to the picture.

The young people will make their home in Chicago, where the groom is employed as an accountant.

SARAH LETISHIA MELTON

Sarah Letishia Stevens was born in North Carolina September 8, 1864, and died at her home near Clarksville, Ill., April 15, 1937.

Her first marriage was with John Neidigh, to which union were born two sons, Edward, who died in 1920, and Amos, present residence unknown; and two daughters, Mrs. Anna Woods of near Clarksville, Ill., and Mrs. Anna Eddinger of Westfield, Ill.

After the death of her first husband she was united in marriage with William Melton, who, with the two daughters and one son above named, and two sisters—Mrs. Liza Lect and Mrs. Dora Bennett, both residing in Indiana—with other and more distant relatives and friends, remains to mourn the loss of a faithful wife, mother, sister, friend, and neighbor.

In 1915 she was baptized into Christ by Bro. S. J. Lindsay, uniting with the Salem Church, in Clark County, Ill., to which church she remained "faithful unto death," and from which, after memorial services, we took her to the Clarksville Cemetery, where she awaits the return of the Savior, for whose coming she looked, hoped, and prayed.

MRS. ALICE BAKER HAUPT

After a long period of semi-invalidism and a week of critical illness Mrs. Alice Baker Haupt entered into her long rest the evening of May 4, 1937, at her home in Natchitoches, La.

Alice Cornelia Baker was born in Aurora, Ill., October 1, 1853, the daughter of Leonidas Zephaniah and Nancy Emmons Baker. Her life before her marriage was spent in Aurora with the exception of two years spent in Minneapolis, Minn. She graduated from Aurora High School and attended the Jennings Seminary, then studied portraiture in Chicago at the Academy of Design, now the Art Institute. She taught four years in the little brick schoolhouse at Galena, Ill., the same school which her father had taught in his early manhood.

Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Haupt

At 18 she united with the Church of God, her family being closely associated with Benjamin and William Henry Wilson and their families. She was a devout Christian and Bible student and was steadfast in her faith all through her life. Much of her time after her husband's blindness was given to looking up passages for his writings on Bible topics, until he preceded her in death on June 9, 1936. In late years her eyesight failed, and each week she requested that The Restitution Herald be read to her as she so much enjoyed the articles.

On July 7, 1879, she married John Gustav Haupt and went to Walcott, Iowa, where he was principal of the school. Later they lived in Durant, Iowa, where their first child, Bertha Violet, was born; then went to Bijou Hills, S. D., where Vernon Baker and Winifred Hope were born. They moved to South Sioux City, Neb., where Mr. Haupt was made County Superintendent of Schools. On account of ill health Mrs. Haupt had to live in a warmer climate, and the family moved to Lake Charles, La., where they lived for eight years, then going to Crowley, La., where Mr. Haupt had a position in a bank. Here they lived for over twenty years, leaving for Natchitoches in September, 1925, to make a home for their daughters, who taught in the Normal College.

Wherever Mrs. Haupt went she made her grounds beautiful with trees, shrubs, and lovely flowers and in her last years she has made her home one of the beauty spots of lovely Natchitoches; even this last year, though unable to walk about unaided, she directed some planting and care of her beloved grounds and planned some changes for the next year.

All through her life she kept her interest in art. She did considerable china painting both for her home and for her friends, but it was not until she came to Natchitoches, after she was 72, that she began landscape painting, which she continued until a few months before her death. Her daughters have a precious legacy of paintings of beautiful spots their mother loved so well. Besides her painting she made lovely hooked rugs in her own original designs and crocheted bedspreads in her later years.

As she was quiet and retiring by nature, one had to go into the home to know Mrs. Haupt, where he realized her wonderful character and ability. Among her last words were these: "Tell all my friends I love them, and I have so many lovely friends." The esteem in which she was held was evidenced by the many lovely flowers sent by those who loved her, during her illness and as a last tribute to a beautiful life well lived.

The services were held in the home at 4 p. m., May 5, 1937, and were conducted by Herbert J. Sudbury of the Church of Christ and Norman Gibbs of the Presbyterian Church, both close friends of Mrs. Haupt.

Mrs. Haupt is survived by her two daughters, her son having preceded her in death.

She was laid to rest in the beautiful American Cemetery beside her husband and son, there to await the resurrection morn.

TITHING PAYS

The middle of March my husband gave his consent that we might try tithing. Not being a church member, he had his doubts. He could not understand how we could give a tenth when it was all we could do (with much skimping) to live and pay a little each month on back debts. I reminded him of Malachi 3:10—"Prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

And so we started tithing. At the end of the month we got a $5.00 raise in wages (to be sure, we had been promised a raise at this time six months ago, but my husband did not believe he would get it). In April we unexpectedly made $1.85 extra, and the last week in April we were offered, and accepted, a job up here with better hours and an increase of $15.00 per month (through the winter) over our former wages (and more through the busier season).

Now all of this wasn't just a "happen-so." God told us to prove Him, and we did; and He has kept His word. And I am happy to say that I think He just about has my husband convinced that there is something to it.

Another thing I notice is that after taking out God's tenth our nine tenths seem to go just as far as the ten tenths did before we started tithing.

How much different this world would be if everyone gave God His tenth! And think what our own Church of God could do if all of the members tithed! I hope you go right on publishing articles on tithing.

The Voice of Wisdom

By E. O. Stewart

OUT of the incomprehensible vastness of that beginningless sphere of existence known as eternity, that unique sphere of existence inhabited only by the high and lofty One (Isa. 57:15), comes the voice of wisdom, declaring, "The Lord possessed me in the beginning of his way, before his works of old" (Prov. 8:22).

If I were asked to define the word "eternity" I would, in order to give it priority and the uniqueness which it deserves over all other spheres of existence, define eternity to be that beginningless and endless sphere of existence inhabited by no other being but God Himself. Eternity is coexistent with God and His unlimited attributes of power, knowledge, and wisdom.

The monumental blunder against all rules of language was thrust upon an ignorant world, when such expressions as "for ever," "for ever and ever," and "everlasting" were given the force of and stretched to mean infinite duration.

A moment of honest consideration, facing the facts as they are, will convince anyone that these expressions which are found hundreds of times in our English Bible cannot mean infinite or endless, duration.

"Forever," in its grammatical usage is an adverb of degree. Endless duration is not punctuated by degrees or periods of time. To divide infinite duration into periods of time is an insult to language and absolutely destroys its endlessness.

Forever is an indefinite period of time. But remember it is time, and not eternity. Time has a beginning and an end. We cannot determine the length of time "forever" spans by the expression itself. The thing to which it is applied must determine its length of duration.

Christ is to reign over the house of Jacob forever (Luke 1:33). The saints of Revelation 22:5 are to reign forever and ever. But it is impossible to stretch their reign beyond the time when Christ shall deliver up the kingdom to the Father. For He must reign, till all enemies are put under His feet. Then He shall deliver up the kingdom to the Father, and shall cease to reign (1 Cor. 15:24, 28). The saints cannot reign beyond that time, for all things will have been subdued unto Him, which brings all rule to an end.

We have proved by the grammatical usage of "forever," and by positive statements of Scripture, that it does not mean endless duration.

In Genesis 17, we read of the covenant of circumcision which God made with Abraham. Verse 13 says it shall be an everlasting covenant. We know this covenant was not in force when Paul wrote Galatians 5, for he says so. So here is an everlasting covenant which was in force for forty-two generations and ended at the cross (Matt. 1:17).

About 430 years after the covenant of circumcision was made with Abraham, God established the Levitical priesthood and said, "It shall be an everlasting priesthood" (Ex. 40:15). This everlasting priesthood ended at the cross, and the Melchisedec priesthood is in force (Heb. 7:12). Here are two everlasting things that are not even of the same length in duration, the difference being about 430 years.

The longest "everlasting" period I remember reading in the Bible is applied to the angels, which are reserved in everlasting chains of darkness, which lasts from the time that the angels sinned until the judgment of the great day (Jude 6). If you will read carefully, you will always find that the word "everlasting" never carries the meaning of infinite duration.

When the Bible speaks of everlasting or eternal fire, prepared for the Devil and his angels, the thought of duration is not under consideration at all.

The people of Sodom suffered the vengeance of eternal fire (Jude 7). Peter declares that they were reduced to ashes, and are an example for those who afterward live ungodly (2 Peter 2:6).

If the people of Sodom are set forth as an example for those that afterward live ungodly, how can the future punishment of the ungodly be endless conscious suffering unless the people of Sodom are already in a state of endless torment? How could they serve as an example for other ungodly people if eternal fire in Jude 7 carries the thought of endless duration, unless we take the position that the Sodomites are now in a condition of endless torment?

But the Bible says the wicked shall be burned up, root and branch (Mal. 4:1), shall be ashes (Mal. 4:3), shall consume into smoke and consume away (Psalm 37), shall be burned up (Matt. 3:12).

This is just what eternal fire did to the people of Sodom. It reduced them to ashes, and they are an example for other ungodly people. They, too, shall be reduced to ashes by the future aionian, eternal, everlasting, fire.

God did not create eternity. It is the sphere of His beginningless and endless existence. He made the eons, or ages of time (Heb. 1:2). The worlds, eons, ages of time, which God makes (Heb. 1:2) are the "forevers," because "forever" is translated from eon which means "age." The world to come is the eon or age to come. The eon to come is the "forever" in which Christ shall reign over the house of Jacob (Luke 1:33). Beyond the age to come is another age. Ephesians 2:7 speaks of the ages to come. Those two future eons constitute the "for ever and ever" of Revelation 22:5, which must come to an end when Christ delivers up the kingdom to the Father. All ages of time shall then cease, and the redeemed creation shall enter into the sphere of infinite duration, which is not composed of ages of time.

The Immortality of Character

By the Editor

THE MYSTERY of heredity has never been solved. That "like begets like" has long been recognized, but why this is true no one has as yet determined. Darwin believed that a particle from each part of the parent body was transmitted to the child. Weismann's more recent theory is that the pronounced characteristics of the parents are transmitted to the child through the stronger elements that are carried over into the new life. But no one knows the truth about it. It is hidden, as are so many other interesting facts, in the depths of the Creator's mind. Like the law governing creation, it exceeds our human comprehension.

But while we cannot tell just how the miracle is accomplished, yet we know that parental qualities are handed down from generation to generation. Sometimes parental tendencies of both parents are apparently blended in the offspring, the characteristics of each being equalized and modified by the influence of the other. Again such qualities seem to be entirely separated, and the son or daughter appears to possess at different times two distinct personalities, each representing one of the parents.

We often hear the expressions, "Like father, like son," and "A chip off the old block!" These common sayings indicate that it is generally recognized that bodily characteristics and mental inclinations are handed down from father to son. The fact that this is so presents a serious and important matter to which all parents should give most prayerful consideration. If, as Holmes declares, "Our lives go on in our children," how earnestly we should endeavor to hand down to them a heritage that will prove to be a blessing and not a curse.

As science advances, it continues to verify the truth of the Bible. Or, to put the matter in proper order, the Bible continues to prove the correctness of many scientific deductions and conclusions. This is obviously true with regard to heredity. The most recent announcements of science on this subject assert that heredity is limited strictly to the physical, that mental traits are not transmitted.

Science explains that the reason why children so often show the moral and intellectual tendencies of their parents is because of the influence which their early surroundings have upon them. Unconsciously to both parents and child the latter absorbs at an astonishingly early age what he sees and hears and senses in the home life of the father and mother.

He builds his parents' attitudes and expressed characteristics into his own life. He becomes like them!

The mental processes of the child are like those of his parents because he has been taught to think like them. Hence, the parents are said to be responsible to a large extent for the after-life and conduct of their children. The parents are responsible not simply for the things which they consciously teach their little ones, but they are equally responsible for the many more lessons which they unconsciously teach them.

Bodily characteristics can be changed in a measure by modern surgery. They are now able to alter the contour of the features and even change the color of the hair. They can straighten crooked legs and erase the disfigurement of a hairlip. Such physical imperfections and blemishes can be removed by the beauty specialist, but no scientist, however competent he may be, can change the results of early intellectual environment.

Here it is that the Bible bears testimony to the truth of scientific deductions and discoveries. According to the Scriptures the character of the child is determined not by heredity, but by the instruction he receives from his parents in early life. We recall the reason God gives in the 18th chapter of Genesis, verses 17 to 20, for revealing to that man of faith the divine

Jews Pay Millions To Escape From Germany

"Their silver nor their gold shall be able to deliver them in the day of the Lord's wrath."—Zephaniah 1:18.

BERLIN, Germany, May 16.—Before Jews are permitted to leave Germany they are required to pay an exceedingly heavy tax. A single wealthy Jewish family is said to have paid the Government the staggering sum of $6,400,000 in August, 1935, for the privilege of emigrating from the country with the remainder of their fortune intact. Receipts from the "flight" tax in 1935-36, amounted to $18,000,000. It is true, however, that this tax is not exacted from the Jews alone. Germans who desire to transfer their property to other countries are mulcted in a similar fashion.

Many Jewish firms which are still operating in Germany are compelled, it is said, to hand over to authorities the equivalent of what they would pay in "flight" taxes if the owners migrated. Such firms frequently find it impossible to raise the required money without seriously imperiling their business. The Government declares, however, that they must insist on payment as a precaution against the removal of Jewish capital.

Jewish Homes Raided in Poland

"Boast not against the branches."—Romans 11:18-21.

BRZESC-LITEWSKI, Poland, May 16.—Crucifixes and pictures of the Virgin Mary and Christian saints were displayed in shops and homes of this city today to protect them from anti-Semitic disorders. Such displays apparently averted attacks, but some houses lacking them were broken into during the night. The mayor of the city posted an appeal on street corners expressing regret at the disorders of last Thursday, when a policeman was fatally stabbed by a Jew.

Soul and Body One

"Man became a living soul."—Genesis 2:7.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., April 21.—Dr. John Dewey of Columbia University, who has just returned from Mexico, where he presided at the "trial" of Leon Trotsky, Russian political exile, addressed the American College of Physicians here last night, on "The Unity of Man." He took the phrase as referring to the whole psychophysical organism of man and his environment rather than the orthodox definition of a dual being consisting of soul and body. He protested vigorously against what he termed "the canonized dualism" which he asserted is embodied in the "soul and body" conceptions of theology.

While this traditional dualism has been rejected scientifically, Dr. Dewey said that it still colors our thought, causing the splitting of man into separate physiological categories and ultimate elements, and the major split between man and his environment. He defined unity as "the way in which a number of different persons and things work together toward a common end."

Step by step science is unconsciously leading the thought of the world back to the Bible. According to the inspired description of man's origin and nature he is exactly what Dr. Dewey contends that he is, a unit being, an integral part of his elemental environment. He is of the earth and is seen in the Scriptures, as he is discovered by the scientist, engaged in working "toward a common end" with all the rest of creation.

Revelation plunges fearlessly much farther into the future than science dares to go, and asserts that the "end" in view for man and the creation of which he is an infinitesimal part is the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began" (Acts 3:21), when the "earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord as the waters cover the sea."

Music Creates Light

"God said, Let there be light: and there was light." "The morning stars sang together."—Gen. 1:3; Job 38:7.

NEW YORK, May 21.—Dr. Leslie A. Chambers of the University of Pennsylvania announced the discovery that certain liquids, as alcohol, chloroform, and glycerin, "emit visible light, when cavitated by intense sound waves of audible frequency." Dr. Chambers was able to record the "sound-caused" light on photographic plates after four minutes' exposure.

Light, one of the most mysterious of natural phenomena, has long been recognized as the result of wave vibration. The vibrations that produce it are now found to be closely related to those which produce sound. God's creation is indeed a "universe," an interrelated unit composed of many parts, of which man is one.

Where Are the Dead?

By L. S. Bronson

MANY have been the replies to this question, and numerous are the pages that have been written in answer to this inquiry. There is hardly a home in all the world from which there has not been some loved one carried forth to return thither no more. Where are they? is the greatest question to many.

Time so far has revealed but one reply; and the Bible, the only record man has of his origin and destiny, gives to us the same answer to our question. It is to that volume alone we turn. But before we go farther, let us say that these pages are written and directed to those only who are willing to believe the Bible to be the Word of God and are desirous of knowing its truths and believing that it says what it means and means what it says to the children of men, even to the "whale story."

No opinions of men and no long-spun theories of ancient times from learned commentators shall enter into the evidence to prove our position. The Bible alone shall be the authority. We know it is sufficient, as the reader will discover, and cannot be overthrown or set aside, unless the Scriptures are denied altogether.

It is obviously true that a living man cannot be in two places at the same time. Does it look reasonable to suppose or believe that a dead man can do what the living man cannot do? If we therefore can show, by abundant Bible testimony, where they are at present, shall we not have fairly answered the question? But in order more easily to prepare your mind to receive the Bible account we shall first show where the dead are not, and that the modern idea of their present condition is untrue.

The popular theology of our day tells us that "blessed are the dead that die in our Lord," for at death they begin to know more than ever before and are capable of enjoying far more than when living; that at the hour of death they are immediately wafted by angel hands up to heaven to dwell forever in unending bliss in the presence of their God. But if on the other hand they have died sinners, they are immediately cast into a burning hell and there tormented through the ceaseless ages of eternity. Does such a religious theory as this, which has made more infidels in the world than any other doctrine Christianity has ever taught, appeal to your affection, sympathy, and love? And is it taught in the Scriptures?

While we firmly believe that a glorious reward is awaiting the overcomers in the battle against sin and wickedness, and a terrible punishment is as surely awaiting the ungodly for their transgressions, yet we greatly differ with many concerning the time and place where the reward is given and the punishment inflicted. But to discuss these two points is not a part of our purpose in writing these pages.

First the negative side of the question. According to the Bible the dead are in neither heaven nor hell, as the modern theory pictures them. Under the type given in the law of Moses (Lev. 16:17), the high priest went into the holy of holies alone. For all the congregation (the world) to follow our Lord and great High Priest into heaven, the most holy of all, would come far short of teaching the true idea and greatly mar the beauty of the antitype referred to in Leviticus 16:17 and Hebrews 9:24-28.

If the dead, good and bad, go to heaven and hell at death to receive their reward, why should there be a resurrection and a future day of judgment to decide what shall be the nature of their recompense?

The Scriptures tell us that God has appointed a day in which He will judge the world (Acts 17:31). Will He punish and reward before that day arrives? Is God less logical, just, and merciful than earthly rulers?

Another proof from the Bible is found in John 3:13. The Savior said, "No man (good or bad) hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven." A great many people had died before that day, but Jesus said they had none of them ascended to heaven.

Addressing the scribes and Pharisees in reference to His returning to His Father, He said, "Ye shall seek me, and shall not find me; and where I am (at that time) ye cannot come" (John 7:34).

But I hear the objector suddenly exclaim: "Christ was there speaking to the wicked Jews!" Oh, yes, I know it. The poor Jew! But read the follow- (Please turn to page 10)

Life's Stagy

The sturdy rock, for all his strength,
By raging seas is rent in twain;
The marble stone is pierced at length,
With little drops of drizzling rain:
The ox doth yield unto the yoke,
The steel obeyeth the hammer stroke.

The stately stag that seems so stout,
By yelping hound at bay is set:
The swiftest bird that flies about
Is caught at length in fowler's net.
The greatest fish in deepest brook
Is soon deceived with subtle hook.

Yea, man himself, unto whose will
All things are bounden to obey,
For all his wit, and worthy skill,
Doth fade at length, and fall away.
There is no thing but time doth waste;
The heavens, the earth, consume at last.

But virtue sits, triumphing still,
Upon the throne of glorious fame:
Though spiteful Death man's body kill,
Yet hurts he not his virtuous name.
By life or death, whatso betides,
The state of virtue never slides.

“That Isn’t False Doctrine”

By A. H. Zilmer

THIS remark was passed by one brother to another when reference was made to the fact that a certain married brother was “running around” with another woman. One case of this kind, and the attitude shown by the foregoing remark would be bad enough; but when this view exists in various places, if it is not general, the matter requires, in fact urgently demands, serious attention and speedy correction. There is something diseased and deadly about a view such as this.

First, this view restricts the word “doctrine” to theoretical propositions, to the neglect of the practical teaching aiming at correct living. To illustrate, let us take the subject of the kingdom of God.

1. There is to be a kingdom of God upon this earth.
2. This kingdom is to be world-wide.
3. It is to subdue all existing kingdoms.
4. It is to be an everlasting kingdom.

All this is theory. It may be and is correct. But if it goes no further it will do no one any good. In fact, we go so far as to say that one may have a theory regarding the kingdom that is ever so correct, and yet fail of an entrance into that kingdom. Even the belief of these points will not of itself insure to anyone an entrance into that kingdom. Why not? The apostles set forth, both negatively and positively, the conditions upon which an entrance into the kingdom of God may be gained. The negative side is embraced in the proposition that “the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God” (Gal. 5:19-21; Eph. 5:5). Hence, we see that it is indispensably necessary that they who would inherit that kingdom refrain from doing certain specified things. Upon the other hand, we have the teaching that to those who “do” certain things there shall be ministered abundantly an entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ (2 Peter 5:5-11). The foregoing instructions, both negative and positive, were addressed to such as were “brethren.” These brethren must do certain things that are commanded, and refrain from doing certain other things that are forbidden. Unless they fulfill these inexorable conditions all knowledge regarding the kingdom is at best but empty theory.

We would not minimize the importance of understanding the primary and simple “things concerning the kingdom of God” (Acts 8:12; 19:8; 20:4; 28:31). But we will say that where views are entertained such as expressed in our heading, there is manifest a woeful lack of the sense of proportion, and a lamentable failure to understand the importance of right living. Jesus Himself during His public ministry emphasized the same truth when He said, “Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven” (Matt. 7:21). To make a difference between what is called “doctrinal” teaching and “practical” living, as if they were two entirely different things with a distinct line of separation between, is an arbitrary and artificial distinction for which no warrant can be found in the Word of God.

Let us again hear the Apostle Paul: “But we know that the law is good, if a man use it lawfully, knowing this, that the law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient, for the ungodly and sinners, for unholy and profane, for murderers of fathers, and murderers of mothers, for whoremongers, for them that defile themselves with mankind, for manslayers, for menstealers, for liars, for perjured persons, and if there be any other thing that is contrary to sound doctrine, according to the glorious gospel of the blessed God” (1 Tim. 1:8-11). Here is a list of eleven items which were by the Apostle said to be “contrary to sound doctrine.” One may have theories and beliefs regarding the kingdom of God that are flawlessly correct, and engage in the practice of any or all of the items mentioned, and not be “sound in doctrine.” Or he may believe all the items that enter constitutively into the message concerning the kingdom, but fail to practice the virtues enumerated by the Apostle Peter, and utterly fail of an entrance into the kingdom.

Further: The Apostle Paul through Titus commended to the brethren “the things which become sound doctrine,” and listed these as follows:

To the aged men: That they be sober, grave, temperate, sound in faith, in charity, in patience.

To the aged women: That they be in behavior as becometh holiness, not false accusers, not given to much wine, teachers of good things; to teach the young women to be sober, to love their husbands, to love their children, be discreet, keepers at home, obedient to their own husbands.

To the young men: To be sober-minded.

To servants: To be obedient to their own masters, please them well, not answering again, not purloining, showing all good fidelity, adorn the doctrine of God (Titus 2:1-10).

Here again it is seen that “sound doctrine” relates so largely to the practical life of sobriety and godliness. The Apostle neither excused nor condemned the moral aberrations of the brethren upon the score that they were “straight in doctrine.”

We register our conviction that, according to the scriptural standard, it is false doctrine of a very grave character to affirm that it is possible to get into the kingdom of God so long as one’s belief is right when the life is in violent conflict with the precepts of Christ. Those who hold such loose views are sure to experience a shocking disillusionment, and it may be when it is too late,

No one can attentively read the Apostle Paul's account of his work in Thessalonica, and its effects upon the converts, and not be impressed with the importance he placed upon holy living. Hear we him: "From you sounded out the word of the Lord, not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but also in every place your faith to Godward is spread abroad; so that we need not to speak any thing. For they themselves show of us what manner of entering in we had unto you, and how ye turned to God from idols, to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, which delivereth us from the wrath to come" (1 Thess. 1:8-10). Those people had turned, or were converted, with a twofold object, namely first, to serve the living God, and second, to wait for His Son from heaven. Such being the object of their conversion, we see that it was with the distinct understanding that they were to render such service to God, and at the same time wait for Christ. But we are led further back than even this. It was due to the instructions given by the faithful teachers who had "entered in" at Thessalonica. It is an essential part of the apostolic teaching to those without to instruct them as to what kind of life they will be expected to live who desire an entrance into the kingdom of God.

The person who made the remark at the head of this article either had not been properly instructed, or else had later adopted loose views with reference to morality. A great responsibility rests upon the teacher to rightly divide the word of truth, and to impress upon those without, but more especially the candidates for baptism, the necessity of breaking off sinful habits, and entering a life of godliness, holiness, and sobriety. After faith, repentance, and baptism for the remission of sins (Luke 24:47; Acts 2:38; 10:43), correct living according to the divine standard is everything. "If ye do these things, so an entrance shall be ministered," and in no other way.—The Faith.

The Social Gospel

IN THE FACE of what some thinkers recognize as "the public impotence of Christianity," that is, the fact of the old Jerusalem gospel having lost much of its early and influencing dynamics, there are many of us, still, that belong to "the old school," who are still preaching that the gospel, if faithfully preached and gladly accepted, is dynamically "the power (the dynamite) of God unto salvation" (Rom. 1:16).

The Congregationalists are the first among the Protestant bodies to accept the so-called "social gospel" as a church responsibility. They so decided, in June, 1934, at their national council at Oberlin. They claim to blaze the way, opening up new frontiers of Christian activity. For nearly nineteen centuries the church has focused, in organization, plans, and habit, on the concept of individual salvation.

The very fact that these folks have adopted the social gospel program is proof positive that they are "in the woods." The claim is that the social gospel must be integrated, organically, into the Christian system. Whatever we may say for the purpose or against it, the fact of a social gospel is not found in Matthew 28:16-20; Acts 2:38; Romans 1:16; and John 3:16. There we get individual salvation. The commission of our Lord doesn't leave room for "social creeds," "social service commissions," and a hundred other modern appendages! We have been professing to believe His commission, but we have given it only a marginal authority in many places. When we socialize the gospel, and create only a by-product out of such texts as John 3:16, we are sadly depleted!

When the church of God will commit itself to its basic thesis, namely, to preach the everlasting gospel, it will regain its lost momentum.

Our modern theological seminaries are fully honeycombed with this poisonous thing. When a church can so forget her Lord's commission as to place this social gospel on a parity or status with the great gospel facts, commission, and imperatives, it is headed for the rocks!

Whether the church is episcopal in its forms, presbyterial or hierarchical, the church has no other chief business than to preach the gospel and save individuals from "the judgment to come."

That a few educated men have become enamored with the "social gospel" is no wonder. Education, unless under the direction of God, always fosters human pride in one form or another; and one form of modern pride is that man can do something to help his fellow men, and this is gospel! Another form of human pride—the second cousin of the first form—is to idealize and idolize the human intellect! "Liberalists" are full of this.

The missionary function, at home and abroad, should be the church function, par excellence.

Satan is very wise. The subtle serpent is not ever foolish. To get the eyes of the race off the cross and off Christ's complete work on the cross on to "service"—that is one of his characteristics. And it has gone over very well.

There may be a "dim and uncertain orientation" about the preaching of an individual salvation. Some accuse us thus. But the people today who are making strides are preaching the individual gospel, and they are letting law, lawmaking, lobbying, reforming countries, states, and nations, strictly alone, going straight for individuals, notwithstanding the misgivings of some and scornful high-hatted mutterings by others.

The thing we need to attack, as Christian bodies, is the

The Importance of Small Words

SMALL words may be very powerful in their effect on the value of a sentence—though they be neither nouns nor verbs. When we want to say something is settled beyond alteration, we say—“There are no ifs, ands, or buts about it”; for these three little words imply conditions, or possible alterations, additions, or objections.

Take the connectives, and, or. The smallest toddler knows the difference between bread or jam, and bread and jam; would you like a dog and cat, or a dog or cat? Frequently in life one is unable to have this and that, and has to be content with this or that. We cannot serve God and mammon; therefore we must early in our Christian life decide positively whether we purpose to serve God or mammon (Matt. 6:24). Much trouble is avoided if the decision is promptly arrived at and rigidly adhered to.

The little word both adds great emphasis to such statements as our Lord's—“Can the blind lead the blind? shall they not both fall into the ditch?” and “But now have they both seen and hated both me and my Father” (Luke 6:39; John 15:24).

Another little word. Only three letters, but what tragedies are associated with it. He started to walk to the village, but the storm overtook him and he was drowned in the flood. We lived forty years in the old home, and Mother expected to end her days there, but Father died without making a will, and the house had to be sold over her head.

On the other hand, what joys may be in it. I was late to school, and deserved a black mark, but teacher said she would excuse me because. The car was headed for the embankment but struck a stump and swerved round the bend, and we were saved.

Of this little word the Scriptures make abundant use, and every student does well to consider its powerful effect in the teaching of our Lord and the apostles. Jesus said—“Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, . . . But I say unto you” (Matt. 5:21, 34, 39, 44). The Apostle said—“For ye were as sheep going astray; but are now returned unto the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls” (1 Peter 2:25).

Then there is that little two-letter if; the “big if” it is sometimes called. We do not want to run up against it, or have it run up against us. Every plan we make, every expectation, is contingent on innumerable ifs. The big if in all our planning must be as James says—“If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this, or that” (James 4:15). Every promise made to us has an if attached—“If ye abide in me”; “if ye keep my commandments”; “if we believe”; “if we hold fast” (John 15:7, 10; Rom. 4:24; Heb. 3:6, 14). Likewise threats of the Lord's permanent displeasure have an if attached, thank God—“if we sin wilfully,” which we are not obliged to do (Heb. 10:26). On the other hand, “if we confess our sins,” we shall be forgiven, and cleansed “from all unrighteousness” (1 John 1:9).

Here is the first of two articles taken from a New Zealand paper, The New Covenant Advocate. Small words in the Bible, as in life, sometimes have extraordinary importance, a fact which the author of this series adapts to church doctrine.

How powerful is the Apostle Paul's argument in 1 Corinthians 15 by the use of the if—

“If Christ be preached—”

“If there be no resurrection—”

“If Christ be not risen—”

“If so be that the dead rise not—”

“If the dead rise not—”

“If Christ be not raised—”

“If in this life only—”

How expressive is the little as found in Isaiah 60:8—“Who are these that fly as a cloud, and as the doves to their windows?”

As - So

Some little words are frequently used in pairs; both—and; as—so. The latter pair is used in comparison. As the bird flies to its nest, so the child runs to its mother's arms. Beautifully expressed by the sweet singer of Israel is our thirst after God—

“As the hart panteth after the water brooks,

So panteth my soul after thee, O God” (Psalm 42:1).

Since our understanding is aided by comparison of different objects and ideas, the pair as—so is frequently used in Scripture to teach important doctrines. Deeply significant is our Lord's statement—“As the living Father hath sent me; and I live by the Father: so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me . . . not as your fathers did eat manna, and are dead” (John 6:57, 58). Another wonderful passage is John 3:14-16—“And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up. . . . For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son.” Prophecies of the future are made clearer to us by referring to natural phenomena—“As the lightning, . . . so shall also the Son of man be in his day” (Luke 17:24); also by referring to incidents of the past—“And as it was in the days of Noe, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man. They did eat,” etc. (Luke 17:26, 27).

The combination as—so, frequently implied when not expressed, was useful to show type and antitype. “So also Christ glorified not himself” implies as Aaron took not honor to himself (Heb. 5:4, 5).

The wonderful scope of God's plan for human salvation from sin and death is brought home to us by the use of this notable pair (as—so)—“Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, . . . Therefore as by the offence of one . . . ; even so by the righteousness of one . . . For as by one man's disobedience . . . , so by the obedience of one . . . That as sin hath reigned unto death, even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom. 5:12-21). All who were in Adam were condemned, but now grace gives opportunity to come into Christ and receive life. "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive" (1 Cor. 15:22).

IN

This last quotation brings to our notice another very important little word: in. We must observe not only the force of as and so, but what it means in the one case to be in Adam, and in the other case what is involved, and what is required, when we read "so in Christ." We know that none outside of Adam—the angels, for example—were condemned when Adam sinned: only those who were in him, that is, those of whom he was the father. Eve was in him in a sense before she was created, but not after her creation as a separate entity or soul. She was condemned for her own individual sin, as had been stated in God's command that they should not eat of the forbidden tree lest they die; for "in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." But the whole of their posterity have died, because they could not inherit more than the forfeited life our first parents could give them (Gen. 2:17).

The preposition in indicates means, instruments, and conditions, on account of which things will be done, and apart from or without which they will not be done. This meaning of the word is clearly shown in the case of Adam and the race in him. Its true significance must also be observed when considering the phrase "so in Christ." The life will be given to none except those of whom it can be said that they are in Christ. And the way to get in Christ is to believe in Him—to accept Him as the Son of God sent to redeem us; for on that condition God agrees to grant forgiveness of sins and to give everlasting life, the Son being the instrument in their raising from the dead, as He said—"I will raise him up at the last day" (compare John 6:54; 11:25, 26).

Searching the Scriptures, we find that all blessings and privileges are in Christ, and can be obtained in no other way; as stated in 2 Corinthians 1:20—"For all the promises of God in him are yea, and in him Amen, unto the glory of God by us. Now he which stablisheth us with you in Christ . . . is God." So it is clear that to receive the promises which are in Christ it is necessary to be established in Him. This is confirmed by 1 John 5:11, 12—"And this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."

If we wish to understand the Bible correctly it is necessary to observe the distinctions in meaning between these important little words; also, when quoting Scripture we should be particular to use the proper prepositions and conjunctions. To speak any modern language as it should be spoken it is necessary to familiarize oneself with the method of using the prepositions and conjunctions. The difficulty of doing so is well illustrated in their misuse by foreign immigrants.

One of the first things they have to learn is that the little word by has altogether different meanings from the word in. If we place a paper in the desk, it is not by the desk; if the paper is placed by the desk, it is not in the desk. The fish is in the stream, but we sit down by the stream to enjoy the scenery. In these and similar cases by refers to location.

BY: ACTION PERFORMED

But by has another meaning besides location. It is used of an action to indicate who performed the action. Thus—The path was raked by Tom; meaning that Tom, and not Ted or some other person, used the rake. Or we might say, to illustrate two meanings of by—We sat by the stream, and the fish was caught by Tom. In Romans 5:12 by is used in this latter sense: "By one man sin entered into the world." The action of bringing sin into the world was performed by one man, not any man or every man, but one man in particular; namely, Adam, who is named in verse 14.

Another action, to provide a way by which men might be delivered from the effects of Adam's action, was required. Sin "hath reigned unto death." But now by Christ another reign is set in operation, the reign of grace through righteousness (Rom. 5:21).

Action by Christ in our behalf involved His death on the cross (Rom. 5:19; 1 Peter 2:24), but that was not all that was necessary for Him to do. It was necessary for Him to be raised from death and to institute a reign of grace or favor, under which penitents of Adam's race might be dealt with.

And so we have the many passages that tell us of God's grace or favor extended to us—"The grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared" (Titus 2:11). "Grace to you, and peace, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ" (Philemon 3). Let us never forget that this favor has come to us by Jesus Christ. He is the instrument, the One who was sent to accomplish the great redemptive work—"Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works" (Titus 2:14).

"Grace! 'tis a charming sound,
Harmonious to the ear;
Heaven with the echo shall resound,
And all the earth shall hear."

FOR: ON BEHALF OF

Two other important little words are now and then, adverbs of time that we must notice in our study of Scripture, and much might be said about the prepositions on and to; but space prevents enlarging upon them at present. We shall pass on to a little word very essential in our endeavors to impress upon ourselves and others the breadth and length and depth and height of the love of God in Christ Jesus. We use it when we sing—

"I gave my life for thee;
My precious blood I shed,
That thou might'st ransomed be,
And quickened from the dead."

"Jesus died for all mankind,
And Jesus died for me."

Used thus, for is a preposition, and means on account of, or on behalf of. It was on account of our fallen state and great need that Christ gave His life; it was on behalf of, in the interest of, and for the benefit of our race that He died, and it is on behalf of believers that He intercedes—"seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them." That is, them "that come unto God by him" (Heb. 7:25).

The word for is surely convincing in the following passage as evidence that our Lord Jesus died on behalf of sinners—"For (connective, because) scarcely for a righteous man will one die: yet peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die. But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us" (Rom. 5:7, 8).

FOR: BECAUSE

The first word in verse 7 (of the above quotation) is also for, but used as a conjunction. It is useful in argument to show the dependence of one proposition upon a preceding one, and means "because." Since verse 7 begins with for, we must read verse 6 to see what the for or "because" relates to—"For when we were yet without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly." Here we see the word for in its two different significances—"for the ungodly," on their behalf; and for as a conjunction referring us to the preceding argument, which covers verses 1 to 5.

For as a conjunction is indeed a weighty little word. Its frequent use in Scripture shows that the doctrines of Christ are not mere assertions. They are reasoned expositions of profound truths. The Prophet Isaiah gave this message to the Jews—"Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord: though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool" (Isa. 1:18). In the New Testament we are also invited to reason. All who hear the gospel are invited to realize the wonderful love of God in devising a plan whereby this promise through Isaiah might be fulfilled to those who were willing to come and reason on the subject. The invitation is given out to repent and believe the gospel, or good tidings (Matt. 4:17; Mark 1:15). The gospel was good news of forgiveness of sins put within reach of those who would believe and accept what God offered through His beloved Son; thus, though red as crimson, they could become white as wool.

After Pentecost the apostles traveled about as the Lord's messengers, and some of them wrote letters to individuals and churches to establish them more firmly in the faith. It is interesting to read through the Epistles and see how frequently the writers used for in the sense of because. See, for example, Romans 2:11, 12, 24, 25, 28; 3:22, 23; 4:13, 14; 6:7, 10, 14, 20, 23, and many more throughout the book. Both Paul and Peter urge us to become so expert in knowledge and in scriptural methods of argument that we shall be able to give to everyone who asks a reason for the hope within us (2 Tim. 2:15; 1 Peter 3:15).

See also the connected arguments in the book of Hebrews, in which the mighty, though tiny, word for serves valiantly. The number of verses beginning with for is most impressive, and we realize that we are not asked to swallow something blindly, but to examine it and understand it and so be able to accept it intelligently and hold on to it confidently as undoubted truth.

Said Epictetus, "In prosperity it is very easy to find a friend; but in adversity it is the most difficult of all things." Yet none of us need be friendless, for Jesus, known as the Friend of sinners, says, "No longer do I call you servants, . . . but I have called you friends."—John Marvin Rust.

I AM HERE

By T. A. Drinkard

TODAY as I stood at the grave of Brother J. M. Stephenson in the little cemetery at Ripley, Illinois, I thought of the many years that he spent in the service of his Master, and of the doctrinal truths he preached in Ripley which were the basis upon which the church there is founded. In mind, I said, "Brother Stephenson, I am here preaching the same doctrine, the same truths, that you preached and taught. I am here building upon the same foundation you sought to build upon. I am here teaching men and women the way of salvation, by the way of the cross. I am here teaching that men everywhere must believe the Word of God, taking heed to the doctrine. I am here presenting those doctrinal truths that Jesus gave so long ago. I feel that such men as you gave us so much by way of faith and courage to carry on that those coming later might be encouraged to follow the Master. God grant that beyond this vale of sorrow, tears, and death we all be permitted to meet in the kingdom of God."

It is an inspiration to me to know that such men as Brother Stephenson and others stood so faithful and loyal to the truth of God, and because of their faithfulness and loyalty we are today realizing blessings heretofore unexperienced. They planted the truth in the hearts of men and women, and it found fertile soil in which it germinated and produced a very fruitful yield, thus bringing glory to the Son of God.

Surely our God remembers them, and will not forget to give to them a just recompense of reward when Jesus comes.

I rejoice to acknowledge their place in the work which bears the endorsement of God. Surely God will give them a place in His kingdom that is yet to be established on the earth. Their success was largely the result of teaching those things that should be taught as a foundation, and those things that are necessary to cause the Christian to grow and produce the fruits of the Spirit which mean so much to the sincere follower of the Master.

May God grant that we continue to build upon the foundation of our brethren's faith—the foundation of the Son of God that died in order that men might live beyond this condition of sorrow and tears.

deadly, wide-spread, penetrating, and fatal inertia everywhere. The killing drag of inertia is a thousandfold worse than any rank opposition. Our apathy is killing us, as Christian people. We must proceed to go on, amid conflicting alternatives and a faithless generation; but we must go on! We must map out new land and new forms of attack, but always with the gospel!

There are many social issues today, but the business of the church is to march on with the cross of Christ in the lead, and herald the good news to lost men and women. It is the good news of individual salvation. Inhibited by our listlessness and inactivity, we have become timorous, and are "at rest," as an old prophet saw ancient Israel.

The original church had a dynamic gospel. It involved a solitary experience in divine grace. This was in potent abstraction from a concrete context, namely, a living Lord in glory; and to one who has thus been well saved, it is hard to sell and invest the social vision and social action with the real "feel" of a regenerated heart and New Testament experience.

Early in the history of the church, a man tried to rationalize faith. He was a great man, but in this he miserably failed. There was too much man in it. If the church should attempt to thrust herself violently and zealously into the midst of these secular (though social) things, it would, in all probability eventually result in her becoming a political body, or an economic agency of the world, operating only in the extreme outer context of the work her Lord gave her to do. God deliver us from a truncated religion!

It is well enough for Protestant churches to come out of their long, soft retreats, and get busy; but the work must be that which Christ—her resurrected and glorified Lord—commanded her to do, and not that of morally reforming the world. When it projects its totalitarian purpose into the social order, into world affairs and politics, it is out of the precinct of divine blessing and the zone of power. Any social adventure can live only as the Holy Spirit is in that adventure. If the modern church puts action in the headlight in the place of faith, conviction, and feeling, it will be decidedly like a fighting army, the fighting line of which has been cut off from its food supplies.

The organic commitment of these good people—as well as it may be intended—could easily become a tremendous millstone tied around their neck. To have a social extension of theology, and a social expansion of ethics is not enough. The mighty power of Christ may and must tabernacle over the church. The church must be infinitely more than a forming agency.

Our defections, as Protestant churches, and our fatal shrinkages, do not root back to a graceless "social gospel." They are founded on our getting away from the old Jerusalem ideal of the book of Acts—the church electrified and active—in the Holy Spirit.

"Educability" has taken the place of divine ability;

"service" is thrust in where faith and conviction and prayer should be. The persuasive pressure of the gospel is even yet an asset to the church, did she but know it.

There are forces at work to "modernize." To use modern tools is wise and effective. To be up-to-date is commendable. To delete out-of-date machinery and methods no one condemns. But to take our New Testament timber, and replace it with some modern composition, just because it is "new," and such as the market is glutted with—that, of course, is a different thing.

It is our humble opinion that when we get to the place where we can get an issue, and emphasize what we once did emphasize, we will yet get listeners.

We have a great message. The Holy Spirit will bless it, when presented in the power of the Spirit.

But at present we are emphasizing in too many places other things.

God called us out to preach a powerful gospel with which to save individuals, and we have, somehow, failed to do this. We are talking about more "modern" things. But, all this is not the thing God called us out to do.

The "judgment to come" is sure to overtake a godless world. It is even hanging over it this minute. We cannot and must not fail God in declaring this in thunder tones.

The people who are doing this are getting some hearers, and when Adventists will get down to business and preach the gospel of the book of Acts, they will also get some hearers.—The Messiah's Advocate.

THE OXFORD MOVEMENT

WHATEVER good there may be in the Oxford Movement, one thing is certain: it teaches an approach to God different from that taught in the Holy Scriptures. It utterly disregards the blood of Christ and its expiatory character, and substitutes "sharing and confession of sin."

No one seems to know exactly what the movement believes. It has no anchorage in the "faith once for all delivered to the saints." The Bible need not be an inspired book to the Oxfordite.

Modernists see no objection to the particular brand of piety which Oxfordism produces. Unitarians everywhere commend this movement because it voids commitments to the discussion of fundamental truths; their textbook does not even mention the Lord Jesus as Savior. He has no redeeming capacity and the cross of Christ is disregarded altogether. There is no sacrifice for sin.

Those who attempt to enter into the kingdom of God through this movement try to do so by their "changed lives." Oxfordism attempts to approach God through the fruitage of good works rather than by the sacrifice of Christ. Thus it lays itself open to every wind of doctrine. Disregarding the gospel of Jesus Christ as the remedy for the ills of the world, it substitutes the theories of men, theories which always prove futile and destructive in the end.—Dr. L. R. Patmont in Present Truth Messenger.

WHERE ARE THE DEAD?

ing scripture: "Little children (His disciples), yet a little while I am with you. Ye shall seek me: and as I said unto the Jews, Whither I go, ye cannot come; so now I say to you" (John 13:33). What, Christ's disciples shut out of heaven? If they cannot go there any more than the unbelieving Jews, is it safe for us to believe and teach that those who now "die in the Lord" are permitted such a happy experience? Who is granting such a privilege? Certainly it comes not from the Scriptures.

Again, Peter on the day of Pentecost declared, "David is not ascended into the heavens" (Acts 2:34). If the ancient worthies and the apostles are not in heaven, little hope have we of going there.

The wicked dead are not now in hell, as some are teaching. They are not now being punished. Listen: "The wicked is reserved (kept, laid up) to the day of destruction. They shall be brought forth to the day of wrath" (Job 21:30). What day is that? 2 Peter 2:9 defines that day very clearly to be the future day of judgment. It reads thus: "The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation, and to reserve (keep) the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished." Has that day come yet? If none of the wicked are now suffering the tortures of a burning hell, I hear you ask, where are the dead? Now the answer: They are all, good and bad, in one place and in one common condition—in the grave.

Jesus said, "Marvel not at this (some do): for the hour (or time) is coming, in the which all that are in the graves (not in heaven or hell) shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection (raised up, not brought down) of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation" (John 5:28, 29). It is from the grave that humanity comes forth to the day of judgment because it is there humanity is placed at the close of life. If ever they are raised to life again, they come forth from the tomb and not from heaven or hell.

After Lazarus had been dead four days and decomposition had taken place, Martha, his sister, heard that Jesus was coming back to Bethany, and she went out to meet Him. Then when Mary was also come where Jesus was, she fell down at His feet and said unto Him, "Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother (not the house he lived in) had not died." Jesus said unto her, "Thy brother shall live again." Mary said unto Him, "I know that he shall rise (not come down from heaven) again in the resurrection at the last day." Then when Jesus saw her weeping, He said, "Where have you laid him?" They said unto Him, "Lord, come and see." These weeping sisters had not forgotten where they had buried their brother. They had no thought of his being in heaven. These sisters knew as well where their brother was that day, as we all know when we turn from the grave of our buried dead. And when that little company of mourning friends reached the grave, Jesus said, "Take ye away the stone," and when it was removed Jesus said, "Lazarus, come forth," and their brother that was dead, came forth, not from heaven or hell, but from the tomb where four days before he had been buried.

Here we find two sisters who could point the Son of God to the grave where they had buried their beloved brother, and Christ could say, "Lazarus, come forth"; and strangely, in the light of modern teaching, the dead obeyed the voice of Jesus and came, not down from heaven, but up from the tomb.

Should Jesus come to your home and say, "Where have you laid your loved ones? I have come to restore them to you," would you begin to look for Jacob's ladder, or would you say, "Come and see," and then walk with Him to yonder cemetery? Would not the Lord find your long-lost loved ones yet in the graves where you placed them, just as Jesus and the sisters found their loved one?

When Mary Magdalene had brought sweet spices to anoint Jesus after His death and burial, where did she go expecting to find her Lord? The little company at early dawn went to the sepulcher where three days previously Jesus had been buried. And in the journeying thither there was but one question that troubled their minds. Was it, "Who will bring Christ down from heaven that we may be able to perform our deed of love and devotion to our Lord?" No, no, not that. But it was, "Who shall roll away the stone from the door of the sepulcher?" where their Lord and Master had been buried.

The little company expected to find Jesus where the sisters and Jesus found Lazarus not long before, and they would not have been disappointed, had He not been raised from the dead.

All are now in the dust. In Genesis 3:19 God, speaking to Adam, pronounces the following punishment upon him for disobeying His commandment: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it (the ground) wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." To whom is God here speaking? Man, Adam, or Adam's house? He was speaking to the Adam that sinned by breaking God's law; the Adam that was ever after to earn his living by the sweat of his brow; the Adam God declared He created out of the dust of the ground; the Adam that was to return to the same place at his death. We have no Bible account of any other Adam but the one that sinned and should die for his disobedience and return unto the ground from which he was purposes concerning him.

"And the Lord said, Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do; seeing that Abraham shall surely become a great and mighty nation, and all the nations of the earth shall be blessed in him? For I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment; that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of him."

Abraham was called the Father of the Faithful not alone because of his own abiding confidence in God, but because he was faithful in teaching to his children the principles of righteousness and faith which he himself constantly displayed.

The physical characteristics of Abraham are still observable in his Jewish descendants. The features of the patriarch are reborn in each Hebrew child to this day. But the character of Abraham could not thus be transmitted down through the ages.

Of course there are some Abrahamic qualities still to be observed among those in whom his blood flows, but they are not present because of inheritance. The physical characteristics have persisted because of a law of nature which cannot be broken, but only those have retained the faith of Abraham whose parents consciously taught it to them in early childhood.

Paul points out the difference between these two classes of Jews like this: "For he is not a Jew," he says, "which is one outwardly; neither is that circumcision, which is outward in the flesh: but he is a Jew, which is one inwardly, and circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter; whose praise is not of men, but of God" (Rom. 2:28, 29).

The character and the faith of Abraham were transmitted to his children by teaching and by teaching alone.

But teaching takes many forms: books, example, environment, and associates are among the means by which instruction is imparted.

Character is immortal! I do not say that the individual that possesses a character is immortal, but that the character he has is immortal, in that it lives after he himself has submitted to the demands of mortality. His character lives in the lives of countless others whom he has influenced. We cannot avoid this conclusion.

The characters of our parents, our grandparents, our great-grandparents—live in us today. They are reflected in our conduct and attitudes. Just to the extent that we have been consciously and unconsciously influenced by the philosophy of life of our progenitors do they live in us.

"The evil that men do lives after them;

The good is oft interred with their bones."

The great English dramatist was right in his conclusion, but he did not state the whole truth. Both the evil and the good men do live after them in the lives of those who follow in their steps.

We recall the familiar words with which Solomon described the condition of man in death: "The dead know not any thing. . . . Also their love, and their hatred, and their envy is now perished; neither have they any more a portion in any thing that is done under the sun" (Ecl. 9:5, 6).

So far as the dead are concerned they are dead. They no longer love or hate or envy. But the love which they once manifested, the hatred which they once showed in word and action, even the envy which men were able to see in them—the elements that went into the make-up of their characters live on in the lives of those whom they have influenced for good or ill and will be handed on down through succeeding generations by others who have acquired those qualities of life from them.

In each one of us are not only physical weaknesses of parents, but the qualities of character which they by precept and example have transmitted to us. But God has provided a way by which all of these undesirable qualities may be eradicated and our very natures changed. Here is the miracle of miracles, the mystery of mysteries revealed!

"For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ," Paul declares, "have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus." But a more glorious, a more wonderful, a more blessed thought by far remains for us to glean from the words of the Apostle to the Gentiles in this passage. He continues: "And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise" (Gal. 3:27-29).

Our very heredity is changed through our relationship to Jesus Christ! We are no longer the inheritors of the meager qualities which our human parents transmitted to us! We are no longer dependent upon what they were able to teach us of truth and of righteousness! We are now "Abraham's seed" and inheritors of the promise which God made to him which includes not only life, but righteousness and perfection of character as well!

Hereafter the assurance of the same apostle is true in us. "To whom God would make known what is the riches of his glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory" (Col. 1:27).

Personally our dear Lord is now in heaven at the right hand of the eternal Father, but His character and His spirit live in us! "Christ in you!" Well may it be termed "the hope of glory" or the glorious hope! The qualities of heart and life that have made the Son of God the most beloved, the most revered, the most inspiring figure that ever crossed the pages of history now live in you! They are a part of you! They are you!

Our subject being "The Immortality of Character," we will go a little further with the thought. Writing to Timothy Paul said, God "only hath immortality" (1 Tim. 6:16). But we know that He has transmitted or conferred that same eternal nature upon His Son, who is now able to say, "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore" (Rev. 1:18).

And He, this deathless One, lives in us! And we live in Him! "For ye are dead," is the blessed assurance, "and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory" (Col. 3:3, 4).

Our lives go on in our children. Our words and manners and attitudes toward others all live in them long after we are dead. But more blessed and more assuring is the thought that if we, like Abraham, have taught our children the great truths of Jesus Christ and of God, the eternal and life-giving promises upon which our Christian hope is based, our faith likewise lives in them to bless and comfort and encourage, and at last bring them safely and surely into the harbor of God's kingdom of peace.

Christian Soldiers' Memorial Day

"Like a mighty army moves the church of God; Brothers, we are treading where the saints have trod."

That there is a mighty Christian army is evident from several scriptures: "A good soldier of Jesus Christ" (2 Tim. 2:3). "War a good warfare" (1 Tim. 1:18). "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God" (2 Cor. 10:4). "Put on the whole armour of God" (Eph. 6:11). "The armour of light" (Rom. 13:12). "The armour of righteousness" (2 Cor. 6:7). "The breastplate of faith and love; and for an helmet, the hope of salvation" (1 Thess. 5:8).

Many "a good soldier of Jesus Christ" has fought in the battle before us. They have lived and died for the ideals of Jesus. But now they are dead. We bear a sacred trust—to live and die for the same ideals. We are left on guard. The price of victory is eternal vigilance. It is in our hands.

The picture of the Christian army in the last days is presented in 1 Thessalonians 4:14-18. The soldiers who have died are likened to a great army asleep at night. "We which are alive and remain" are the soldiers on guard. "The Lord himself shall descend"—the General comes out of His tent. "With a shout"—with a word of command. "The voice of the archangel," "the trump of God," are the signals to the sleeping soldiers to awake, reveille. "The Sun of righteousness" shall have arisen (Mal. 4:2); "the day of the Lord" (1 Thess. 5:2) shall have begun. And at last those who had slept, those who had been on guard, and the mighty Captain, "together," move forward an irresistible army to take possession of the earth.

Let us keep a memorial to our sleeping comrades; let us keep alive the flame of their ideals. Let us have on the same armor, "the breastplate of faith and love; and for an helmet, the hope of salvation."

Eternal Life Insurance

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me hath everlasting life."—John 6:47.

Some people want wealth, others seek fame and notoriety, while others are satisfied if they have enough to live comfortably. But regardless of their station in life, since God first breathed the breath of life into men, men have been willing to give all they have to retain that life.

Man forfeited his right to life in the Garden of Eden (Gen. 3:24), but God sent Jesus into the world that we might have abundant life through Him.

Jesus is the head of the Eternal Life Insurance Company, which will insure anyone for everlasting life. There is no age limit, and no physical examination is required.

It is impossible to set forth all the benefits to be derived from a policy in this company (1 Cor. 2:9), but study these references for a few of them: Phil. 3:20, 21; John 16:23; Rom. 5:1; 8:15-17; Luke 18:29, 30; 2 Tim. 4:8.

Before we take out a policy in any insurance company we inquire as to what dues or payments we will have to make. We find we will be expected to present our bodies completely to Jesus (Rom. 12:1), to love God and our neighbors (Matt. 22:37-39), and live a separated life (1 Peter 3:9-11).

When our payments are made, they are deposited in the bank of heaven where moth and rust do not corrupt nor thieves break through and steal (Matt. 6:19, 20). If we keep our payments up to date we may be certain the policy will be paid in full (Rev. 22:12).

(The above is taken from the new Berean Bible studies book, The Gospel and Christian Living. You will find this book very interesting reading, and you should have a copy even if your Berean class is studying with some other booklet just now. Order from the National Berean Society, Oregon, Illinois. Price 25 cents per copy.)

To You Graduates

You are standing on the threshold of your adult life. Your education, denied to hundreds of millions of your fellow human beings, is a sacred trust. Each one of you is a debtor.

You may use your education in one of three ways: as a miser, as a spendthrift, or as a steward.

The miser receives, but never spends. Ignorance is the curse of this world. He who hoards away his education, never helping some one else to more understanding, will find in the end that his gold has turned to brass. He will himself become ignorant. For an education is not like gold; to keep, you must give.

The spendthrift dissipates his education, throws it away on worthless causes. The education you have has been bought at an infinite price. Who can count the lives lost, the labor expended, the struggles of many generations that went into making it possible for you to be educated? In the spendthrift, the ten-thousand-dollar education has come to rest in a ten-cent mind. The horse is running four ways at once. He has no bridle.

The steward decides that his education, yea, his life, has been given him as a sacred obligation, for the good of all. He chooses the vital cause to back and goes into it heart and soul. And he finds, like the faithful steward of the Bible, that his talents increase and his reward is many times over.

Your education is a debt you owe. In return you must pour out your life for others. Remember the Christ: "For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich" (2 Cor. 8:9).

BENJAMIN'S BIG BROTHER

IT WAS Monday evening and our friends, Betty and Bobby and their mother, were just ready to begin studying the lesson of the next Sunday. Betty and Bobby had finished their home work for the next day and had been talking to Mother about the large family that had lately moved into the next block.

"They all seem to think so much of each other," said Bobby. "They play together without much fussing and never seem to get tired of each other."

"There are so many of them they don't need to call in any other children for games," added Betty. "It must be fun to have so many brothers and sisters."

"You remember, children, Joseph had many brothers," said Mother. "But things weren't always so happy among them. Our first lesson about him told us that. We have three lessons in all about Joseph and his family, and the second and third lessons are happier in some ways. There are so many interesting things in this second lesson we must hurry or we'll not have time to read about all of them."

"By this time the famine was over all the earth. But Joseph had wisely prepared for it, and all the other countries came to Egypt to buy corn. Bobby, read Genesis 42:3, 4, and tell us who were among the many who came to Joseph for food."

"Why, Joseph's ten brothers! Jacob wouldn't let Benjamin, the youngest, go for fear something might happen to him," said Bobby. "Wasn't it strange, there they had sold Joseph to the merchantmen who had taken him down to Egypt, and now he was the only one from whom they could buy food!"

"Yes, you know we decided in our first lesson that God was watching over Joseph and made the events of his life turn out for good. Betty, do you suppose Joseph and his brothers knew each other?"

"In verse 8 it says Joseph knew them but they didn't know him. I suppose they didn't dream he'd be in such a great position. Maybe they thought he was dead," said the little girl.

"Joseph talked roughly to his brothers to find out just what sort of men they had grown to be. He wanted to know," Mother explained, "if they were still so selfish and cruel. He heard them talk in their own language to each other and found out that they felt very dreadful about what they had done years before. Then he told them they must bring Benjamin to Egypt if they expected to get any more food. He kept Simeon as a pledge that they would do that."

"Just listen," exclaimed Bobby, "when they were on the road home one of them opened his sack to feed the animals and there was his money in the top of the sack. And when they got home the rest all found their money in their sacks."

"All of this worried their aged father greatly," said Mother, "and when they told him that Joseph had made them promise to bring Benjamin and had kept Simeon as a pledge, he declared he couldn't part with Benjamin. But when their food was again all gone the brothers persuaded their father to let him go with them. He sent a present of precious spices and honey to Joseph, not knowing that it was Joseph, of course. And they all took back the money which they had found in the sacks. When they explained what had happened to Joseph's servant, he told them not to be afraid, for everything was well."

"Betty, read Genesis 43:29, 30, and tell us how Joseph felt when he saw his brother, Benjamin."

"He was so happy to see him he cried, tears of joy, I guess. But he went into his own room so his brothers couldn't see him," said Betty.

"Joseph put their money back in their sacks again," said Bobby, who was already reading ahead. "In Benjamin's sack he put his own silver cup. Then he sent his servant after them when they were a little way out of the city, and he accused them of stealing. Joseph was always up to something, wasn't he?"

"They all declared that they had showed their honesty by bringing back the money, and if the silver cup was found in any of their sacks, that one should die," said Mother. "When the cup was found in Benjamin's sack they felt as though nothing worse could have happened and they returned to Joseph. Then Judah begged Joseph to think of their aged father and his great distress if Benjamin did not return. Judah begged so hard Joseph could stand no more. Tell us, Betty, what followed."

"Joseph sent everyone out except his brothers and then he told them who he was, while the tears rolled down his cheeks," said Betty.

"The best part of all follows," said Mother. "Joseph told them that God had sent him down to Egypt to preserve many, many lives during the famine. And the next lesson on Joseph is the happiest of all, just because Joseph always trusted God no matter what happened."

AMONG THE CHURCHES

THE MISSION WORK

I am very sorry that I have not been able to do anything about this work for so long. I have been wrestling with rheumatic fever for about two months, and I want to assure you that it isn't a bit of fun.

For a long time after conference money came in so slowly that we could not do anything but mark time, but now we have enough to make a start.

We would like to have the names of a number of places where meetings can be held. We would like to make the best disposition of the money possible. If we have a number of places to select from, we can choose the one where conditions seem most favorable.

Will the brethren please help us by sending us the information desired.

ARLEN MARSH RESIGNS AS ASSISTANT TREASURER

Arlen Marsh, who for the past five years has been employed in various capacities in the office of the National Bible Institution, his duties including proofreading, sales management, semi-editorial work, and that of assistant treasurer of the Institution, tendered his resignation to the executive board at their meeting last Saturday.

He has received appointment to the editorial staff of the David C. Cook Publishing Company of Elgin, Ill. The Cook company is one of the largest publishers of religious literature in the United States. Their Sunday school papers and quarterlies are in use in churches of all denominations.

Bro. Marsh leaves the National Bible Institution with the best wishes and prayers of his former associates for his continued success in his new field of spiritual service.

CORVALLIS, OREGON

Sr. Carrie Jaquith, wife of Bro. W. W. Jaquith, died last week at Scholls, Ore.

Bro. H. B. Hathaway has gone to Felida, Wash., where he will spend several weeks.

Sr. Evelyn Gross, who recently underwent an operation for removal of goiter, has been moved to the home of her mother, Sr. Kerr. She is getting along very nicely.

Many friends and relatives were in Corvallis to attend the funeral of the late Bro. Platt Hathaway.

Bro. Elmer Hathaway is moving to Corvallis from his home in Felida, Wash. He will be associated with his brother, H. D. Hathaway, in the dairy business.

The Radio Church of God, Station KORE, Eugene, Ore., offers $25 to anyone who can furnish the Bible text that gives the promise of going to heaven at death or any other time.

Birthday congratulations were sent to Bro. A. W. Darby from the Corvallis Sunday school on his 81st birthday, May 1. Bro. Darby was baptized 61 years ago and came to Corvallis 31 years ago. He seldom misses a meeting of the conference. We hope that he will have many more happy birthdays!

BRUSH CREEK CHURCH OF GOD

Near Tippecanoe City, Ohio

We are pleased to announce that Elder T. A. Drinkard of Handley, Texas, will be guest minister for the annual June Meeting, June 6-13. Bro. Drinkard will find many here who remember him when he preached at the local church about fifteen years ago, and others who have not met him will be glad of the privilege.

Bro. M. W. Lyon, pastor of the Golden Rule Church of God in Cleveland, was recently called to his former pastorate to assist in a funeral, at which time he visited us and several of the church families. We were glad to see him, but sorry for the sad conditions which called him here.

The local activities are normal, and looking up. The Sunday school averages above the hundred mark, and both morning and evening services are well attended. Come to the June Meetings. We want you.

Sydney Magaw, Pastor.

PLATT G. HATHAWAY

Platt G. Hathaway, son of H. B. and the late Anna Skeels Hathaway, was born in Vancouver, Wash., July 2, 1901, and died at Corvallis, Ore., May 5, 1937, death resulting when he apparently fell from his tractor into a disc plow while working on a farm near his home. He lived in Felida, Wash., until thirteen years ago, when the family moved to Corvallis.

Bro. Hathaway was married to Miss Evelyn Johnson in Corvallis, Dec. 31, 1929. Besides his widow, he is survived by one daughter, Beverly, age four years; his father, Bro. H. B. Hathaway; two sisters and three brothers, Srs. Edna Chamberlain and Zilda Nordyke and Bros. Delbert, Elmer, and Burrell Hathaway.

Bro. Hathaway's death was a great shock to the community, and our loving sympathy goes out to those who have lost a good friend as well as to the grief-stricken family, which has lost a fine and highly esteemed member.

Lower Rates to New Subscribers

To provide our readers with an opportunity to engage in a great missionary campaign at little or no expense to themselves and at the same time to make it possible for them to help us in placing THE RESTITUTION HERALD in hundreds of new homes between now and the first of next August, we are making the following unprecedented offer:

For the next two months we will accept annual prepaid subscriptions to THE HERALD at exceedingly low rates when sent in in groups of five or more at one time as specified below.

Five new annual subscriptions will be accepted when sent in by one person and accompanied by check or money order in full, for $6.25.

Ten or more new annual subscriptions will be accepted at the rate of One Dollar each when sent in by a single individual!

Subscriptions will be counted as "new" and entitled to this very low introductory rate when the one signing for the paper has not been a paid subscriber since January 1, 1937.

Here is a wonderful opportunity for our pastors, Sunday school superintendents, and local workers generally to get their people enlisted in a great missionary enterprise!

Remember THE RESTITUTION HERALD will continue to bring you the news of the churches from all parts of the country, the latest information as to prophetic developments throughout the world, and hundreds of inspiring articles on doctrinal and spiritual subjects of the deepest interest.

"Peace on Earth"

THUS the angels sang at the birth of our Savior. Was it a prophecy that wars would cease and peace prevail throughout the earth? If so, it was a prophecy which has failed. Jesus Himself in His earthly ministry predicted wars and rumors of wars during the gospel age, and they have come. Perhaps the message was rather an expression of God's will for men, and of His purpose to make peace possible among men by the gift of His Son. If men would accept His gift and conform their lives to His teachings, they would have peace. For do not wars and strife come from unrestrained human passions? and did not Jesus come to give power to control their passions?

Looking down upon the world today, what a spectacle presents itself to the eyes of God! In stead of peace He sees strife everywhere. Instead of good will He sees jealousy and hatred. Even among those who profess to believe the gospel there is too often a woeful lack of love and harmony. "The ways of peace have they not known," might be truly said of the majority of mankind today, nearly two thousand years after the Prince of Peace came into the world with His message of good will to men.

We divide the world into two divisions, Christian nations and heathen nations. And as far as international strife is concerned, the heathen nations have less than the so-called Christian nations. In Europe, with its background of Christian civilization, preparation for war goes on with such strides that the peace talk is entirely nullified. The self-styled representative of the Prince of Peace condoned the breaking of solemn covenant obligations by Italy and used his power in trying to subvert the other nations, proposing terms of settlement of the African conflict that were at once flagrantly unjust and demoralizingly vicious.

In Asia, we see Japan trying to gain control over a portion of China by methods just as immoral. And in our own land, there comes the announcement that hundreds of new bombing planes are to be built by our Government. Will they be used, as the planes of Christian (?) Italy were used in Ethiopia, to drop death upon defenseless towns and hospitals? Who can tell?

Every true Christian heart must be moved by these things to cry out, "How long, O Lord, how long?" The message of the angels on that first Christmas morn, while it has not yet been verified in human experience on the earth, as far as governments are concerned, shows God's purpose for mankind; and His purposes never fail. There will come a time when peace shall reign on the earth and men will learn war no more; a time when they who have been willing for the Prince of Peace to rule in their hearts and lives will "take the kingdom and possess the kingdom for ever and ever." There will come a time when they that "destroy the earth" shall themselves be destroyed (Rev. 11:18). There is no good reason why men cannot live together in peace on this earth. The only reason they do not is that they will not submit their wills to the will of God. Selfishness and sin are synonymous. The angels' message is essentially a message of unselfishness. It teaches us to think of others. It teaches us to put God first, which is another way of saying, "Seek first His kingdom and His righteousness."—H. L. Babcock in The Herald of Life.

CALIFORNIA CONFERENCE

The next one-day California Conference is to be held June 6 in conjunction with the dedication of the new Los Angeles church, which is located between Main and Broadway on 103rd St. Everyone is urged to reserve that date.

The following program has been drafted: Morning worship—Dedicatory Sermon, Bro. Geo. Lichty, Pomona; Communion Service, Sr. Emma Railsback, Los Angeles. Noon—Picnic lunch at the church. Afternoon service, 2:30—sermon, Bro. Norman Macleod. Evening service—6:30-7:30, Berean Society, led by the young people of the Los Angeles group; 7:30, sermon, Bro. E. E. Rogers, Los Angeles.

The Pomona Music Committee is planning special music for each service, and they promise something good.

Grace Adamson, Secretary.

A card from V. Earl Thayer, pastor of the Virginia Churches of God, announces that his wife, who has been confined to a Winchester, Va., hospital for the last three weeks, is slowly improving. On May 20, her hospitalization was expected to end within a few days. Her residence address is Route 1, Woodstock, Va.

The answer to the question in last week's paper may be found in John 3:13.

GEORGE KNIFE

George Knife was born March 10, 1853, in Monroe Township, near Tippicanoe City, Ohio, and lived in that vicinity all his life. He married Leah May Moist, November 15, 1883, to which union three children were born, Raymond, Mrs. Clara Hoke, and Mrs. Paul Shellhaas.

Bro. Knife was converted and baptized in 1891 by Elder Elton of Cleveland, Ohio, and was a faithful member of the Brush Creek Church of God until death, which came May 10, 1937. He firmly believed in the return of Christ and resurrection.

Bro. Knife was the youngest of a family of fifteen children, and is the last one to be claimed by death. He is survived by the three named children, eight grandchildren, and six great-grandchildren, also by a host of more distant relatives and friends.

Funeral services were conducted from the Shellhaas home and the Brush Creek Church of God on May 12 by Elder M. W. Lyon and the writer.

Sydney E. Magaw.

Memorial services were held in the Oregon, Ill., church last Sunday. The American Legion, Daughters of Veterans, and other patriotic organizations were well represented. The pastor used as his subject Kipling's words, "Lest We Forget." Owing to the baccalaureate service for the high school graduating class, there will be no evening service in the Church of God next Sunday. It is the only Sunday in the year in which but one service is held.

THE RESTITUTION HERALD advocates: the near return of Christ, Acts 1:11, and life only through Him, Col. 3:3; the literal resurrection of the dead, John 5:28; the immortalization of those in Christ, 1 Cor. 15:53, 54; the final restoration of Israel as the kingdom of God under the kingship of Christ, Luke 1:32, the church to be joint-heirs with Him, Rom. 8:17, and Israel to be made head over Gentile nations, Isa. 60:13; the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began," Acts 3:21. It also firmly advocates repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, Acts 2:38, and a consecrated life as essential to salvation.

WHERE ARE THE DEAD?

taken when he was created.

When God would warn Nineveh of its destruction on account of its wickedness, He commanded Jonah, the Prophet, to go and carry the message. When he refused, it is stated (Jonah 1:17) that God prepared a great fish to swallow him as a punishment for his disobedience. What did God punish? The house in which Jonah had been living, or Jonah that had been sinning against God? Was God deceived in what He was punishing, the whale fooled in what it had just swallowed, and did the real Jonah sit on the shore of the mighty deep three days and nights watching for the return of his body (or house) and laughing at the farce transpiring amid the tossing waves of the sea? We think it was the man Jonah.

In the days of the Prophet Isaiah God commanded him to go and tell Hezekiah to set his house in order, for "thou shalt die, and not live" (Isa. 38:1-4). To whom was God speaking? Was it the house in which Hezekiah lived, as we are sometimes told, or was it he who "wept sore" because of this message that came to his ears from Isaiah? I am foolish enough to believe it was Hezekiah unto whom God added fifteen years of life because of his prayers and tears.

We read in Luke 7:11, 12 that as Jesus came into the city of Nain He saw a dead man carried out, and he was the only son of his mother, and she was a widow. "When the Lord saw her weeping, he had compassion on her, and he came and touched the bier, and said, Young man, arise; and he that was dead sat up, and began to speak." Here it is declared Christ saw a dead man carried out for burial. Was it a man or the house in which he had been living? The Scriptures teach that it was a man, and he was dead, and Christ said unto him, "Arise," and he that was dead sat up and began to talk. Do you believe these words of Scripture to be true? We do.

And Abraham said, "I have taken upon me to speak unto the Lord, which am but dust and ashes" (Gen. 18:27). But it has been asked, "Must we lie down and die like the beasts of the field?" God has not left us to choose in all things. It is very evident to an observing eye that we brought nothing into the world, neither can we carry anything out. It is also apparent that we had no voice in the manner of our appearance here or the particular style of our departure. We have only to bow to God's purpose or plan as revealed to us by holy men of God as they were moved by the Holy Spirit (2 Peter 1:21). Whether His plans are pleasing to our sensitive natures or not, we must submit to God's arrangement, even though we "die like the beasts of the field," if that is His will. What saith the Scriptures on this particular point? Hear it: "For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing (the same thing) befalleth them: (what is it?) as the one dieth, so dieth the other (no difference in the nature and manner of their death); yea, they have all one breath: so that a man hath no preeminence above a beast: (why?) for all is vanity. All (man and beast) go unto one place

(do you believe it?); all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again" (Ecl. 3:19, 20). While death and their resting places are the same for man and beast, yet for mankind there is hope and a promise of a resurrection from the dusty grave to a future life, which the animal creation has no promise or hope of enjoying.

Again, as the book of Job is a favorite authority on funeral occasions in order to give comfort to mourning friends, let us also turn to see what Job has to say on the question. "And why dost thou not pardon my transgressions, and take away my iniquity? for now shall I sleep in the dust; and thou shalt seek me in the morning, but I shall not be" (Job 7:21).

"All flesh shall perish together, and man (not his house) shall turn again unto dust" (Job 34:15). He could not return to dust if he had never been there or come from there.

Again: "If I (Job, not his house) wait, the grave (not a palace in heaven) is mine house: I have made my bed in the darkness. I have said to corruption, Thou art my father; to the worm, Thou art my mother, and my sister. . . They shall go down to the bars of the pit, when our rest together is in the dust (not in heaven)" (Job 17:13-16). "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him. For he knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are dust" (Psalm 103:13, 14). But man has forgotten that.

Again: "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might: for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest" (Ecl. 9:10). The writer of the words just quoted well knew, as we also do, aside from our religious theory, that when we reach our grave our knowledge and our wisdom cease and our work is finished. "For to him that is joined to all the living, there is hope (because he lives among the living): for a living dog is better than a dead lion (why?). For the living know that they shall die; but the dead know not any thing" (Ecl. 9:4, 5). Many do not believe this nowadays; do you? "Why died I not from the womb? . . . For now should I have lain still and been quiet, I should have slept: then had I been at rest (in the grave), with kings and counselors of the earth (great men), which built desolate places for themselves; or with princes that had gold, who filled their houses with silver: or as an hidden untimely birth I had not been born; as infants which never saw light. There (in such a condition) the wicked cease from troubling (as in life); and there the weary be at rest. There the prisoners rest together; they hear not (can neither hear nor speak) the voice of the oppressor. The small and great are there; and the servant is free from his master" (Job 3:11-19).

"Are not my days few? cease then, and let me alone, that I may take comfort a little before I go (to heaven? no) whence I shall not return, even to the land of darkness and the shadow of death, a land of darkness, as darkness itself; and of the shadow of death, without any order, and where the light is as darkness" (Job 10:20-23). This is not very much of a heavenly city of light or a glorious land for Job when his life is ended,

THE RESTITUTION HERALD

VOLUME 26

OREGON, ILLINOIS, JUNE 1, 1937

NUMBER 35

Essential Elements of Christian Faith

1. The Source of Authority

ON ONE occasion as Jesus entered the temple, "the chief priests and the elders of the people came unto him as he was teaching, and said, By what authority doest thou these things? and who gave thee this authority?" (Matt. 21:23).

The question of authority presents itself at the beginning of every religious study and continues to demand serious recognition throughout the investigation. The challenge which the chief priests and elders of the Jews addressed to Jesus nearly two millenniums ago, both the world and the nominal church have both the right and reason to address to the advocates and defenders of the doctrines taught by the Church of God today.

By what authority does the Church of God demand compliance with certain specified matters of teaching and practice before it will admit an applicant into its fellowship? Or, what is of far greater importance, who gave the Church of God authority to lay down as an unchallengeable condition of salvation belief in the distinctive interpretations of God's Word which it holds?

By what right and by whose authority do we go before the public and assert that in order to be saved one must believe the glad tidings of the kingdom of God as they are understood by us, and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins after coming to such belief?

The people who listened to the great Teacher were "astonished" at His "doctrine: for he taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes" (Matt. 7:28, 29). He spoke with the positive assurance which comes only with definite knowledge. No shadow of doubt or uncertainty entered into His teaching. He neither "gave it as His opinion" nor did He philosophize or reason, as such terms are generally understood; in the presentation of His message, He simply stated facts as facts!

The apostles followed closely in the Master's footsteps in their manner of preaching and teaching. They, too,

The editor has prepared a series of articles treating on the conditions of salvation in a comprehensive way. These studies should be of special value to those who are seeking to learn the way of life "more perfectly" and to those who seek to help others to a full and saving knowledge of God's truth.

spoke with obvious definite finality. Their hearers were impressed with the conviction that every word they uttered concerning the conditions and results of salvation through Christ was unmistakably true.

Has the Church of God today authority to deliver its message with equal assurance? There can be but one answer to this question: If the church is what its name indicates it to be, it surely has both the right and the authority to speak in the name of God with the conclusive finality with which the Lord Himself would present the truth He desires that all men should know and put into practice in their lives.

SOURCE OF AUTHORITY IN THE CHURCH

The only authority which the people of God of any age can recognize is that of the Lord Himself. If we cannot, or if we do not, speak with divine authority our work is vain. In this age God is visiting "the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name" (Acts 15:14), for such is the inspired assertion of both the Old and New Testament writers. This evangelistic invitational work has been assigned to the church to accomplish. The means by which it is to be carried forward has been provided by the Lord and consists of the prophets, apostles, evangelists, teachers, and other public and private instructors whom the Lord has appointed for this purpose (Eph. 4:11-16; 1 Cor. 1:21).

Unless the Church of God is operating today under the direct commission of the Father, we have no right to teach, to preach, to lay down standards of faith and of conduct, or to baptize in the name of the Lord. Furthermore, it would not only be useless, but presumptuous and exceedingly dangerous, for us to profess to speak in the name of the Lord if He has not given us the right to do so.

While the Scriptures, tradition, and the voice of the church have been recognized by different groups as the channels through which authority (Please turn to Page 11)

Mussolini Joins Hitler in Attack on Jews

"We have heard a voice of trembling, of fear, and not of peace."—Jeremiah 30:4.

MILAN, Italy, May 25.—Premier Mussolini's Milan newspaper, Popolo d'Italy, declared editorially today that the time had come when the Jews must decide "whether they are Jews in Italy or Jews of Italy." The article emphasized that Italian Jews must give up any opposition to the German Nazi principle of a pure Teutonic race and must abandon any participation in the Zionist Movement for a national Jewish home in Palestine.

The paper held that opposition to Nazi ideas would be "irreconcilable with the friendship that binds us to Germany and which has objectives far more vast and fundamental than the Jewish question."

Support of the Zionist Movement would be "in definite opposition to the Mediterranean spirit of Italy" because, the newspaper said, the national home project is designed to set up a new state under British control which would be hostile to Arabs and Moslems. (Mussolini has declared his firm friendship for the people of Islam and expressed the desire to gain the mandate authority, now held by Great Britain, over Palestine.)

Winds Destroy, Then Rebuild

"The Lord shall make the rain of thy land powder and dust."—Deuteronomy 28:24.

DELHART, Texas, May 28.—The great dust storms of the past few years which have swept across many sections of the country, utterly destroying the agricultural value of what was once fertile fields, has aroused deepest concern on the part of farmers and of all others who realize the importance of maintaining the productiveness of the land. Among the interesting experiments which have recently been conducted to overcome this condition, one of the most promising is reported by Dr. Charles C. Whitefield of the Federal Soil Conservation Service.

Sand dunes, some as high as a house, have spotted many unkept fields and ruined them for ordinary cultivation. Government experts, Dr. Whitefield reveals, who were brought in to combat erosion, have discovered that the prevailing westerly winds can be used to tear down the dunes which they have built up. By piling sand around some fixed object—a tumble weed, clump of grass, or fence post—the winds are caused to drop their dust-load, which they have taken from the top of near by dunes, in a new spot, thus gradually leveling off the field.

"The windward slopes (of the dunes) are generally long and gently rising," Dr. Whitefield said, "while the leeward slopes are crescent-shaped. There is evidence that the crescent shape of the leeward side is responsible for the increase in the dune size. When the wind approaches the top of the dune it drops its load of sand due to the eddies of wind current that move at right angles against the prevailing winds."

By eliminating the crescent, where adverse winds are generated, workers found they could halt the increase in the size of the dune. They dragged heavy poles across the dunes with horses, tearing down the "trap" formed by the pile of sand, and in less than two years the wind had practically restored the fields to their earlier condition.

We know very little about the laws by which God governs the operation of natural forces. But the King who is soon to come will be thoroughly acquainted with them all and able to direct their operation in the most advantageous manner for the rehabilitation (which is but another word for "restitution") of the earth to its first state of Edenic fertility and beauty.

John. D. Rockefeller Dies

"Wise men die, . . . and leave their wealth to others."

ORMOND BEACH, Fla., May 23.—John D. Rockefeller, at one time accounted the richest man in the world, died suddenly at his winter home in this city at an age close to ninety-eight years. Mr. Rockefeller was always a hard worker, beginning his business career at a wage of 50 cents a day. From the very start he set aside a part of his earnings for the poor and another part for religious purposes. For thirty years he was a Sunday school superintendent. His contributions for educational, religious, and charitable purposes were greater in all probability than those of any other one man in the history of the world. With his obvious faults (who does not have them?) the American oil magnate showed throughout his life a respect for honesty, sobriety, industry, and religion that constitutes a lasting monument to his memory.

Where Are the Dead?

By L. S. Bronson

“AND when thy (David’s) days be fulfilled (or spent), and thou shalt sleep with thy fathers, I will set up thy seed after thee, which shall proceed out of thy bowels, and I will establish his kingdom” (2 Sam. 7:12). “And Hezekiah slept with his fathers, and they buried him in the chiefest of the sepulchres of the sons of David” (2 Chron. 32:33). “And why dost thou not pardon my transgression, and take away mine iniquity? for now shall I sleep in the dust; and thou shalt seek me in the morning, but I shall not be” (Job 7:21). “But man dieth, and wasteth away: yea, man giveth up the ghost (“life,” see marg., Job 11:20), and where is he?” Now listen to the Bible answer: “As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up, so man lieth down, and raiseth not: till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep” (Job 14:10-12).

Do you need more proof that the dead are asleep? We have it. “For David (a good man), after he had served his generation by the will of God, fell asleep, and was laid unto his fathers (in the grave, not in heaven), and saw corruption.”

In speaking of Christ’s resurrection, Paul in 1 Corinthians 15:6, says, “After that, he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once; of whom the greater part remain unto this present, but some are fallen asleep.” Let us take the Bible rather than man’s theory.

“But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep (very many are ignorant concerning them today), that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope . . . For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord (note his authority), that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent (or “precede,” see Diaglott) them which are (in heaven? no) asleep (in their graves). For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise (not come down) first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words” (1 Thess. 4).

The dead praise not the Lord. “For in death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave, who shall give thee thanks?” (Psalm 6:5). “The dead praise not the Lord (many claim they do), neither any that go down into silence” (Psalm 115:17). How different this language is from that we have so often heard from modern teachers on funeral occasions!

Again: “Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help. His breath goeth forth, he (the man) returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish” (Psalm 146:3, 4). “His sons come to honour, and he (the dead father) knoweth it not; and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them” (Job 14:21).

Death is not a friend to the living, as the poet teaches us, when he says, “Death is the gate to endless joy, the opening scenes to heaven.” If that thought be true, why, why do we one and all, when we see the death angel hovering above our homes, do all we can to prevent his entering into our dwellings and taking our loved ones from us? Why do we not greet him as we do all our dear friends who come to our homes and say to him, “God bless you; take them home to glory”? It is because away down in our better, truer, more enlightened natures we do not believe a word of such religious theory.

If it is true that death is the opening gate to heaven for the righteous, it is equally true that it is the opening gate to hell for the ungodly. Is such an idea pleasing for your mind to dwell upon, providing any of your relatives and friends were taken from the world unprepared to go? As long as I have lived, I have never heard a person advocate this doctrine who for a moment believed that any of his dear ones had gone to such a place. It is always the unfortunate across the way that has gone there. I cannot call to mind any marble cutter who has placed this epitaph, “Gone to hell,” on any tombstone I have ever examined. Why should he, as it is not true? We all in our sober moments, always (unconsciously, perhaps) reach out beyond our religious theories and look upon death as an enemy, and not a friend. The Bible teaches this, (Please turn to page 7)

The Passing Days

Days of my youth,
Ye have glided away;
Hairs of my youth,
Ye are frosted and gray;
Eyes of my youth,
Your keen sight is no more;
Cheeks of my youth,
All your vigor is gone;
Thoughts of my youth,
Your gay visions are flown.

Days of my youth,
I wish not your recall;
Hairs of my youth,
I’m content ye should fall;
Eyes of my youth,
You much evil have seen;
Cheeks of my youth,
Bathed in tears you have been;
Thoughts of my youth,
You have led me astray;
Strength of my youth,
Why lament your decay?

Days of my age,
Ye will shortly be past;
Pains of my age,
Yet awhile ye can last;
Joys of my age,
In true wisdom delight;
Eyes of my age,
Be religion your light;
Thoughts of my age,
Dread ye not the cold sod;
Hopes of my age,
Be ye fixed on your God.
—St. George Tucker.

The Importance of Small Words

THE apprentice at dressmaking or in the machine shop has been learning; but—I'm in a bit of a bother here; how shall I do this? The answer is, Do it so, and the instructor shows how it should be done. How many do it the first time as they are shown? But always when the same class of work comes along they must remember and try to do it so. The one who does not make a reasonable effort to do it so, but insists on doing it some other way and marring the work, is not long tolerated.

Moses in the mount was commanded to erect a tabernacle for the worship of God. He was shown patterns—either by models or by vision, or perhaps merely by description—of every detail of construction and furnishing. “According to all that I shew thee, after the pattern of the tabernacle, and the pattern of all the instruments thereof, even so shall ye make it” (Ex. 25:9). How long would Moses have been God's chosen leader of Israel had he not carried out these very definite instructions to do everything so?

In the matter of morals and ceremonial cleansing and offerings everything had to be done just so, or God was displeased with the Israelites. In every affair of life they had to learn to do God's way in preference to their own, in order that they might be lifted to a higher plane of sanitation and morality than that of the surrounding nations. So cleansed and instructed, they were ultimately to be ready to receive their promised Messiah and be in a state of mind to appreciate His goodness and His message. Not all of them profited by the instruction of the law and the prophets, and therefore only a remnant was ready to receive Him (Heb. 4:2).

We as pupils and apprentices in the school of Christ have every reason to value the little word so, because our dear Lord set us an example that we should follow His steps. In all the relations of life He has told us how to conduct ourselves; we should do it so, and not some other way. The Golden Rule is—“Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them” (Matt. 7:12).

Another use of so is to describe degree or quantity, either definite or indefinite. I like it so much. Paul exhorted the believers to meet and exhort one another—“And so much the more, as ye see the day approaching” (Heb. 10:25). Our Lord said—“Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip?” (John 14:9). “Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works” (Matt. 5:16).

SO: IN THIS MANNER

In concluding a narrative, an illustration, or an argument, so with the meaning “in this way,” or, “in this manner,” or “thus,” is frequently used. For example, the parable of the laborers in the vineyard was intended to illustrate a certain truth, namely, that those who entered God's service late, as did the “publicans and sinners,” would be as welcome and receive as great reward in the kingdom as those Pharisees and scribes who had at least nominally been faithful all their lives—“So the last shall be first, and the first last.” The husbandman had a right to pay as he wished—“I will give unto you this last, even as unto thee.” The high calling opportunity (the penny) was offered impartially to both, but the publicans and sinners by reason of their faith went in first—so (in this way) becoming first in the Lord's sight (Matt. 19:30; 20:1-16; 21:31, 32; Luke 11:52).

The parable of the unforgiving servant also illustrates the use of so with the meaning “in this way.” The Lord points the lesson—“So likewise shall my heavenly Father do also unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their trespasses” (Matt. 18:35).

AND SO

In the sense of “in this way” so is frequently preceded by the connective and, to emphasize the conclusion of a presentation or explanation. “And so Abraham begat Isaac, and circumcised him the eighth day” (Acts 7:8) is the conclusion of the explanation beginning at verse 2 concerning the promise given to Abraham on entering Canaan. In this way Abraham, who was childless, became heir of the world (Rom. 4:13); for he had implicit faith in God and in His promises. “And so (Revised Version, “thus”) after he had patiently endured, he obtained the promise.” Here “and so” refers back to verses 12-14, and also to the following explanatory clause—“after he had patiently endured.” It was “thus,” “in this way,” “in this manner,” that Abraham obtained the promise (Heb. 6:12-15). This way of doing is an example to us, who should also faithfully endure.

Another argument or explanation is concluded by the Apostle in these words—“And so shall we ever be with the Lord.” That is, “in this way,” by His return and the church being received by Him, first the dead saints and then those who are alive and remain (1 Thess. 4:13-17; 1 Cor. 15:51, 52). This is the grand hope of the church, to be forever with the Lord.

“And so were the churches established in the faith”; in this way, as explained in the preceding verses (Acts 16:5).

“And so were driven”; they were driven “in this way” because they had prepared the ship as described in the preceding sentence (Acts 27:17).

“And so it came to pass, that they escaped all safe to land.” As described in the preceding sentence, “in this way”—some swimming, and some on boards, and some on broken pieces of the ship, they safely reached the land (Acts 27:44).

AND SO ALL ISRAEL

Other examples might be given of and so used in the sense of "in this way," in conclusion of an argument, but we will quote only one more: Romans 11:26—"And so all Israel shall be saved," that is, "in this way" shall all Israel be saved, in the way he has just been explaining (vv. 1-25).

Though in the preceding chapters he had spoken of Israel "going about to establish their own righteousness" (10:1-3), Paul shows (11:1) that all Israel were not cast off, because he himself was an Israelite and had not been cast off. Had absolutely all Israel been cast off, he as an Israelite would have been cast off, also. Then in harmony with his previous statements that "they are not all Israel, which are of Israel" (9:6; 2:28, 29), he proceeds to show that God's intention to have an Israel would not be frustrated by the failure of some of the members of the Jewish nation to appreciate their privileges. By reason of their perfidy and disobedience He was justified in rejecting them. He had also the right to select others to fill the places of the rejected ones. This God proceeded to do after the manner described in Romans 11:7-25. The unbelieving Jews were cut off, and the believing Gentiles were accepted in their place. Nevertheless, if any Jew had "stumbled" over the "Rock" mentioned in Romans 9:32, 33, that was no reason why he should "fall," by remaining in unbelief. The way was always open to any Jew to become a believer in the Lord Jesus Christ, and God was "able to graff them in again" (Rom. 11:23).

Some Christians have misunderstood the Apostle's statement (v. 26), because they have not recognized the force of the weighty little words and so, "in this way," in the way he has just explained. By taking the believing remnant of Israel, and to them adding any Jews who might subsequently repent of the apostasy of their nation and become believers, and to these adding believers from the Gentiles, the whole number of Israel would be made up. By counting these as Israel, God's project to have an Israel is an absolute success. Everyone of this Israel shall be saved.

To say that the "all Israel" here referred to is the Jewish people by fleshly descent regardless of whether they are believers or unbelievers is clearly contrary to the whole of the Apostle's argument. His desire was to stir up his fellow countrymen to be in this Israel of faith, not to lose the high calling to which they were called, not to be bewildered by seeing the Gentiles coming in, nor to feel that they were not wanted. God did want them. All the promises were "to the Jew first." It was only their own obstinacy that hindered them.

In further support of his argument concluding with "and so all Israel shall be saved," the Apostle now adds (Rom. 11:26) a quotation from the Prophet Isaiah (59:20)—"There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob." Our Lord Jesus Christ was their Messiah, the Deliverer referred to. Ungodliness was turned away from Israel by Him—not by condoning their sins and lowering the standard of His requirements, but by dying for their sins, and then opening up a new covenant under which their sins might be forgiven, and under which they should have the help of the Lord and His Spirit to eradicate the tendencies to and love of sin. Those who accepted this new covenant arrangement were recognized as the true Israelites.

Was then our Lord's mission to turn away ungodliness from Jacob a partial failure, seeing that the vast majority of the nation persisted in sin? No: because there was another string to His bow. The remainder of the ungodliness was turned away by ejecting the persistent rejectors of His mercy. Out they went. They are not all Israel that are so by birth. They are the true Israel who are so by faith and promise. Thus Israel—the "Israel of God"—was purged, and to this purged remnant Gentiles were called—not all the Gentiles, but those who would believe and obey the gospel.

The Apostle then cautions the Gentiles not to imagine that no more Jews would be received and that only Gentiles would thenceforth be called. "For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance." That is, no Jew would be rejected because he was a Jew. On the other hand, no Gentile would be accepted simply because he was a Gentile. The proper attitude of the Gentiles was so to appreciate the blessings that had come to them and so to feel for the Jews who lost their place in the Israel of God, that they would preach the gospel to the Jews, and by such an exhibition of mercy be the means of bringing back some of the Jews blinded or hardened by unbelief to a more reasonable frame of mind and belief in the Savior who died for them as well as for the Gentiles (Rom. 11:28-31). Until "the fulness of the Gentiles be come in," and so all the places filled, there is time and room for the Jew to repent and be received back.

BELIEF AND UNBELIEF

God now recognizes two conditions—not two nationalities. These two conditions are belief and unbelief. Unbelieving Jews and unbelieving Gentiles are on the same level. But, thanks be to His holy name, believing Jews and believing Gentiles are on a higher level. They constitute the "new man" made out of "twain" (Eph. 2:15), and now constituting "one body," the church. And the Lord Jesus Christ is the One who has effected this result, reconciling both to God by the cross (Eph. 2:16).

What God has in store for the Jews in their own land after the kingdom is established in the earth is another matter, upon which the Apostle does not here touch. The Scriptures show that it is God's purpose to bless all the families of the earth, even raising the dead to be enlightened. However, permanent salvation on the earth in the kingdom age will depend upon faith and obedience and repentance.

But when studying the Apostle's argument in Romans 11, we must consider it as a whole, and when he says—"And so all Israel shall be saved," we must give due weight to so, in this way, and not contrive or look for some other way. It was a great work which God undertook: to have an Israel pleasing to Himself, and this is how He has secured it. Let us Gentiles who have been called to be partakers in that glorious inheritance give heed that we, in our turn, do not fall away through unbelief (Rom. 11:17-22).

"As it is written," "so it is written," must ever be our guide. "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God" (Matt. 4:4).—New Covenant Advocate.

Hindrances to Evangelism

EVANGELISM, the presentation of Jesus Christ for immediate and personal acceptance as the Savior of the soul and the Lord of life, is the primary function of the church. Everything else, and there is much else in the Christian life, is secondary. Hence, whatever hinders evangelism hinders the basic mission of the church.

That something is hindering evangelism is self-evident. In spite of vast increase in physical equipment and great improvement in organization we bemoan "the decrease in the increase" in membership.

Consider some of the hindrances to evangelism.

THE ATMOSPHERE OF THE TIMES

Life has become vastly more complex. Science and invention have created a new civilization. The emphasis has been shifted from the spiritual to the material. The pressure is compelling too much thought for temporalities, mistaken for essentials, and too little thought for the eternities, now deemed irrelevant if not outgrown fallacies. Time is the full scope of life vision. Eternity has faded away. Humanity and its Utopia have become the ideal, and God and the kingdom of heaven have become the vain dream of a past age. A lesser half-truth is stifling the fullness of "the truth."

THE DOGMATISM OF SCIENTIFIC THEORY

Mistaking theological systems for Christianity and hypothetical propositions for science, we have had a generation and more of a supposed struggle between religion of the Bible and the religion of nature. Out of Philistia came the Goliath of evolution defying the hosts of Israel and causing many of the faithful to fear and faint and falter. But though David has come and proved that the fateful giant was not what he seemed, and the dogmatism of the godless evolution of the universe no longer loudly claims the field, there has filtered through the thought-life of our age a spirit that has produced far-reaching changes. The personal God has been displaced by an impersonal process, and divine providence replaced by implacable law. Therefore prayer is futile and communion is impossible, for there is no personality to respond. There is no one who knows or cares. Culture replaces conversion, the cross is a relic of outgrown ideas of religion, the gospel of regeneration is superseded by cults of ethical culture.

THE CHANGED ATTITUDE TOWARD THE BIBLE

The resultant mood of life in a universe without God has been destructive of faith in the inspiration of the Word of God. There being no God, there could be no Bible, so the effort has been made to discredit the Scriptures and reduce them to a collection of myths, legends, and folklore. The Old Book, however, survives, and not a single Christian doctrine has been uprooted from its holy soil. Yet great damage has been done. "The Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture" has not been shaken, but the faith of the people has.

For multitudes the Bible has lost its note of divine authority, and it is increasingly difficult to persuade men to accept its message for life here and its guidance for the pilgrimage to the "City Celestial" beyond.

THE WORLDLINESS OF THE CHURCH

"Keep the church out of the practical affairs of the world"—that can never be. "Keep the spirit of worldliness out of the church"—that must be, for while the church is "in" the world it is not "of" the world. We must regain our "lost radiance." Our testimony has largely lost its personal note because we have so little personal spiritual experience. Dr. Clausen said we must "Pray It Through," and we must, and this year's motto declares that we must "Live It Through," and that we must. We must go much deeper in Christian experience before we can go much further in Christian evangelism.

THE WANING SENSE OF SIN

Unless men realize what sin is in the sight of God, and what it actually means to them and in them they will never realize their need of a Savior, nor value the salvation in Christ that we proclaim. But ours is an age when "men do not bother about their sins." Violation of law, human and divine, is flagrant. The only deterrent is the fear of being caught, and then—there are many ways of escape. Itching ears welcome the Devil's old lie, "Thou shalt not surely die."

Somehow, conscience must be aroused to the claims of righteousness, convicted of the guilt of sin, and convinced that "the soul that sinneth, it shall die." The New Testament hell is the measure of heaven's estimate of sin, and the cross is the symbol of the divine sacrifice to save men from its curse. We must thunder and implore, we must warn and woo men to "repent: for the kingdom of God is at hand."

Too many in the churches are of the following of Apolos who have not so much as heard that there was a Holy Spirit, or at best know little more of it than a few stock phrases. In the delicate task of bringing a sinful soul to a saving Lord our dependence is absolutely on the Spirit. Its place in the economy of grace, its work in the saving of a soul, its mission as the guide and power of the church many do not know, and yet we wonder at our impotence in the field of evangelism.

In our work of "winning souls" we must go "in the power of Christ's might" appealing to the hearts and minds of men with the positiveness of personal faith in such fundamentals of the gospel as the holiness and grace of the personal God, the sinfulness of the morally responsible humanity, the only hope of salvation in the crucified and risen Christ, the imperative need of the new birth, and the certainty that without holiness no man shall see the Lord.—Samuel J. Skevington, D. D.

WHERE ARE THE DEAD?

if the hymnbook does not. Listen: "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death" (1 Cor. 15:26; Rev. 20:14).

Death came to this world as a punishment for transgression (Gen. 3:19), and not as a reward for righteousness. When its mission is ended, as stated in Scripture, Christ is to come and destroy death. "I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction" (Hosea 13:14). Why all this work of Christ, if there is nothing of particular importance in the tomb except the house in which the real man once lived?

God only hath immortality. "Which in his times he shall shew, who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords; who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto; whom no man hath seen, nor can see" (1 Tim. 6:15, 16). "Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honour and glory for ever and ever" (1 Tim. 1:17).

Man is mortal. "Shall mortal man be more just than God? shall a man be more pure than his maker?" (Job 4:17). Man must seek for immortality in order to obtain it, or perish in corruption (2 Peter 2:11, 12). "To them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honour and immortality, eternal life," is the reward (Rom. 2:7). Why seek for immortality or anything else if we already possess it? Immortality is received and put on at the appearing of Christ when He returns to earth. "Behold, I shew you a mystery (it is no longer a mystery after it is revealed); We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye (when?), at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then (not before) shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory" (1 Cor. 15:51-54). "The first man Adam was made a living soul (not an immortal soul); the last Adam (Christ) was made a quickening spirit. . . . The first man is of the earth, earthy: the second man is the Lord from heaven. . . . As we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall (future) also bear the image of the heavenly" (1 Cor. 15:45-49). But we cannot bear both the earthly and the heavenly at the same time. "Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." "First (that) which is natural (or mortal), . . . afterward that which is spiritual (or immortal)" (1 Cor. 15:46).

The change from one to the other comes, not at death as many teach, but at the resurrection. But I hear you say, If no one as yet has gone to heaven or hell, how can any be rewarded at death? The Bible says nothing about anyone being rewarded at that time. Yes, you know it is stated in Revelation 2:16, "Be ye faithful unto death, and I will give you a crown of life." Yes, my friend, that is the promise. The faithfulness must continue until death, but does that determine the time when the reward is given? Certainly not. We must look to another scripture to determine that. Here it is: "And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be" (Rev. 22:12). "Behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him" (Isa. 40:10).

Is not this sufficient proof to settle the point as to when men are to receive their reward for their deeds in this life? But again you say, It is stated by Christ in Matthew 5:12, "Great is your reward in heaven." Because Christ, at the time He spoke these words, declared the reward was then in heaven, many people have concluded that they must go there to obtain that reward; and they have also made up their minds that at death is a very good time to go. But because it is reserved (preserved) in heaven for you, does it follow that you must go there to obtain it? Paul, in 2 Timothy 4:8, tells us just how he expects to secure his crown of life. Hear it: "Henceforth (from now on) there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." Of what day is Paul speaking? The day of Christ's return.

Should you receive word from a Chicago banker that there is a large fortune reserved in his bank for you, would it be absolutely necessary for you to go to Chicago to receive that fortune?

Where, then, are the rewards to be given? "Behold, the righteous shall be recompensed (in heaven? no) in the earth: much more the wicked and the sinner" (Prov. 11:31). "Blessed are the meek: for they shall (future) inherit the earth" (Matt. 5:5). "But the meek shall inherit the earth, and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace" (Psalm 37:11). How long shall the meek inherit this earthly possession? As yet they have never possessed and enjoyed many corner lots and beauty spots of earth. Listen: "The righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein for ever" (Psalm 37:29; Prov. 2:21). "The righteous shall never be removed" (Prov. 10:30). If these statements be true, we see no opportunity for men to go to heaven. But one says, Such a home, such a reward, would be far too gross for me.

O consistency! Perhaps for more than half a century you have been struggling against thorns, thistles, disease, tears, sorrow, pain, and death, and yet, with all this before you, you toil on striving to add acre to acre and farm to farm, never once feeling that these earthly possessions, though resting under the curse of God for the sins of man, are in the least degree gross. But when we give you the Bible picture of earth "made new," the curse removed, a home where there are to be no more tears, sorrow, pain, or death (for the former things are passed away—Rev. 21:4, 5); and when we picture to you the city fair with streets of gold and gates of pearl, with river broad "where goes no galley with oars," and in the midst of the city and on either side of the river the tree of life with its monthly fruits, and God and the Lamb dwelling in it forever (Rev. 22:23)—all this perfection of beauty and glory, such a home is far too gross for you! O consistency! thou art a jewel!

We will now answer a few objections often urged against our position. Time and space will not permit us to answer all that might be urged against our position and which are as easily answered as those noted.

"He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him" (John 3:36).

Here we have the possession of everlasting life depending on a certain belief. Would believing or disbelieving a certain proposition change the nature of an individual being? "He that believeth . . . hath everlasting life." Is it now in the believer's possession? No, is our answer. Where is now that life? Colossians 3:3 answers the question. Listen: "For you are dead (to the world), and your (eternal) life is hid with Christ in God," not in our mortal bodies.

Again in 1 John 5:11: "This is the record, that God hath given to us (believers) eternal life, and this life is (now in us? no) in his Son." It is not yet bestowed on us, but God has promised it to us if we are faithful. When? When His Son returns the second time. "And this is the promise that he hath promised us, even eternal life" (1 John 2:25). Again Christ says, "And this is the will of him (the Father) that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up (not bring him down) at the last day" (John 6:40). "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Thus we see from the Bible that eternal life is a gift to only a portion of the human family and is not a part of the present nature of any man. You must know your Bible to understand God.

Away back in the Garden of Eden, just after our first parents disobeyed God's law in partaking of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, "lest (in that sinful condition) he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live for ever (become an immortal sinner)," God drove man out of the Garden and placed a flaming sword which turned every way to guard the true life (Gen. 3:22-24). "Lest he . . . eat of it, and live for ever." Now please tell us when man passed this flaming sword and partook of the tree of life, thereby changing his nature from mortal to immortal.

Again in Matthew 19:16 we read of a young man who came to Jesus, saying, "Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?" Did Jesus say to that young man, "Son, you have that immortal life nature already in you"? No; He said nothing of the kind, but He did say, "Go, sell all that you have, and give to the poor, and come follow Me." "The young man went away sorrowful: for he had great riches."

As yet no man has passed the flaming sword and partaken of the tree of life.

The second point the objector urges is this: "If Moses and Elias appeared with Christ, Peter, James, and John on the mount of transfiguration, they must have returned from the spirit world." There is nothing of the kind even hinted at in all the Bible. As Christ and the apostles were coming down from the mountain after the transfiguration, Jesus charged them, saying, "Tell the vision to no man, until the Son of man be risen from the dead."

Jesus called that scene which inspired the hearts of the apostles with joy, devotion, and astonishment, a vision. Did He not know? Is a vision a reality, or a representation of what has been or may be? In Acts 10:11 Peter declares he saw heaven open and a certain vessel descending unto him as it had been a great sheet knit at the four corners and let down to the earth, wherein were all manner of four-footed beasts and creeping things and fowls of the air. And there came a voice to him, "Rise, Peter; kill, and eat." Was all this a reality? And did Peter kill and eat as he was commanded? In the 17th verse we read that while Peter saw all this, he doubted in his mind what the vision should mean. We all know it was a vision, and yet it taught Peter a great fact, as he afterwards stated. Again (Dan. 7:13, 14), "I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him." Was that which he saw a reality at the time Daniel saw it in his "night dream"? Has the time yet arrived since the days of Daniel, when "all nations, people, and languages" have served Him? But the time will come when that vision will become reality. The same is true of the vision on the mount of transfiguration. Jesus there revealed to His three disciples the glory and power of His coming kingdom.

Be careful how you hear, what you hear, and how you read, and do not jump at conclusions in order to sustain a theory of long standing. Error is no account to anyone, but truth is golden to all and loses nothing by examination and exposure to the light of investigation.

Next we will venture to notice the oft-repeated and much-abused request of the dying thief on the cross.

As we approach the subject we are reminded of a sign a carpenter once hung out over his shop door. It read as follows: "All kinds of twisting and turning done here." It is much the same in regard to the above quotation by many religious expounders.

The plainness of the request and the promise given are so apparent to anyone desiring the truth that we shall consume very little time and space in its consideration. The passage referred to reads as follows: "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." Remember the exact language of the request. It was not, "When thou goest to heaven, remember me; but, When thou comest (back) into thy kingdom, Lord, remember me." "And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, To day shalt thou be with me in paradise." With many, these words forever settle the question and prove that all good people go to heaven as soon as they die, notwithstanding the many passages of Scripture we have already quoted to the contrary. Well, let me say this, and remember the same: If the thief went to paradise, or heaven, that day, he went alone. On the morning of the resurrection, when Mary sought the grave of Jesus to anoint His body and found the tomb empty, Christ appeared before her and said, "Mary." She turned toward Him and said, "Master." Jesus said, "Touch me not: for I have not yet ascended to my Father" (John 20: 16, 17). Did Jesus tell Mary the truth and deceive the thief in not going to paradise with him on the day of His death, as orthodoxy teaches He promised? The word "to day" was used, not to denote the time when the request was to be granted, as many claim, but to give emphasis to the words of the promise. The thief did not ask for a home in heaven, nor to go to paradise; but his great desire was, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." Their condition and surroundings on the day of their crucifixion did not warrant the thought that they were about to enjoy a home and glory, joy, and happiness in paradise. Oh, no, not that; but after the suffering on the cross is over, after the dark night of death is past, after the resurrection morn has come, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." This thief seemed to know something about Christ's going into a "far country to receive for himself a kingdom" from the Father and then to return as King, as recorded in Matthew 13:34. It was at that point of time that the thief asked to be remembered.

The original Scriptures contained no punctuation marks. Our system of punctuation was invented by Aldus Manutius, a printer of Venice, in the fifteenth century, and is not inspired. We therefore have a right to place the comma after "to day" instead of before it. This gives the true meaning of the Savior's answer and makes the passage harmonize with other scriptures instead of contradicting them, and is according to Rotherham's translation.

But right here I hear you ask, If Christ did not go with the thief to paradise on the day of their crucifixion, where did He go? We read in Matthew 27 that "when even was come," Joseph took Jesus from the cross and laid Him in his own new tomb, and a seal was placed upon the door. If Jesus did not remain in that tomb the following three days and nights, but went to paradise with the thief, or went to preach to the antediluvian world that perished centuries before, then the words of the Savior spoken to the Pharisees and recorded in Matthew 12:40 could not be true. They read as follows: "For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly; so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth."

We think Jonah did very little missionary work for the people of Nineveh during the time he was in the whale's belly. As the Roman seal was not broken and the door of Christ's tomb was not opened until angel hands rolled away the stone from the door of the sepulcher on the morning of that third day, we think Christ's journey with the thief to paradise, or His missionary efforts among the "spirits in prison," the inhabitants of the old world, must have been very short and greatly disappointing to all. Oh, give us the Bible and the words of Jesus and not the theory without proof!

Now, a few words about paradise that we hear so much about. That word is found only three times in the Bible. The first occurrence of the word is found in Luke 23:43 as previously quoted. "I knew such a man, whether in the body or out of the body, I cannot tell (God knoweth), how that he was caught up ("snatched away"—Diaglott) to the third heaven." He was caught into paradise and heard unspeakable words which it is not lawful for a man to utter. The third use of the word is in Revelation 2:7. "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God." This tree which is here spoken of as being in the midst of the paradise of God, was at the dawn of creation placed in the Garden of Eden on the earth and not in heaven above (Gen. 3:22). We know of no account in all the Book of God of its being transplanted to any other clime. The tree of life and paradise have ever been earth's most beautiful and valuable adornings.

In earth's Edenic state, the tree of life was there, and paradise was there, not in heaven. And when the new earth's condition appears to gladden the hearts of the overcomers, it will then be there. "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God." Then the prayer of the penitent thief, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom," will be answered.

Now for a few moments let us look at the third heaven and paradise of which Paul speaks in 2 Corinthians 12:2-4, which reads as follows: "I knew a man in Christ above fourteen years ago, (whether in the body, or . . . out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth;) such an one caught up ("snatched away"—Diaglott) . . . into paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter."

From these words of Paul it is claimed by many that heaven and paradise spoken of here are one and the same place; and that heaven is a kind of three-storied place, one above the other, the third one being paradise, the abode of all the saints. That the third heaven and earth and paradise are inseparably connected we are free to admit and believe, but we do not accept the popular combination and arrangement of them.

Does the Bible teach a three-storied heaven, one above another? No, it does not. Let us see if we can learn how the Scriptures have them arranged. The Bible does speak of three heavens and of three earthly conditions, and the order in which they occur. That order is very different from the one given in these days.

Here is the Bible order. "For this they (the scoffers, v. 3) willingly are ignorant of (we find such now), that by the word of God the heavens were of old (Gen. 1:6-9), and the earth standing out of the water and in the water. Whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished" (2 Peter 3:1-7).

Here are the first heaven and earth, destroyed by water. "But the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word (of God) are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." Here is the second heaven and earth, to be destroyed by fire. "Nevertheless we, according to his promise (Rom. 8:21-27), look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness" (2 Peter 3:13). "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth" (Rev. 21:1). Here we find the third heaven and third earth, not a three-storied edifice, one story above another, but one following the other in succession until the third heaven and the third earth appear, "wherein dwelleth righteousness." There again the tree of life is found growing in the midst of the paradise of God (Rev. 2:7), and as in Eden of old, once more yielding its fruit every month for the healing of the nations (Rev. 21:1, 2). Is not this harmonious teaching far better than theory without evidence? Then walk in it, and teach the same glorious truth that cannot be denied or overthrown.

1 Peter 3:18-21 is often popularly and confidently used as proof of a present spiritual world where departed spirits congregate, can hear, understand, and receive instruction from spirit teachers. If there are spirits in a spirit land that as yet has never been located by anyone, its inhabitants, according to the Bible, have but little to do and are not capable of doing that. What say the Scriptures on this point? Listen. "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might (be quick and earnest about it); for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave (not heaven nor hell), whither thou goest" (Ecc. 9:10). Not very much business goes on in the grave where we lay our dead, according to the Bible. But to the text in 1 Peter. It reads as follows:

"For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened (made alive) by the Spirit: by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; which sometime were disobedient, when once the longsuffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water."

First it is stated that Christ suffered for sin, the just for the unjust. He suffered by being put to death in the flesh, but He was quickened (or made alive) by the Spirit of God.

Second, by the same Spirit of God which brought His Son from the grave, Christ was enabled to do something more. It enabled Christ to go and preach to the spirits in prison. When and where did Christ (by God's Spirit) do that preaching? is now the question.

We are very confidently told by many learned teachers that it was during the time between His death and the hour of His resurrection, and that the spirits to whom He preached were the spirits of those destroyed by the flood in Noah's day. Let us see if this popular theory is true. It is stated in the text just when the preaching was done and to whom the message was delivered. Listen. "When once (at one time) the longsuffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water."

That was the time when, and the place where the preaching by Christ through Noah and the Spirit of God took place, thereby condemning them to death because of their rejecting the warning message delivered to them. Do you get the thought? If not, read the passage again and see what you find. It has been said, "He who has the darkest vision is the one who will not see." Enough is better than more.

"Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also" (John 14:1-3).

This is a very popular text and often chosen to give comfort to mourning friends in the hour of sorrow. The thought they derive and believe they are justified in deriving from this text is this:

Christ, when He left this world, went to heaven to prepare a place for His chosen ones in that house of many mansions, and at death He comes to waft them home to glory to enjoy a place He has prepared for His people. "If I go away, I will come (back) again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." Because He has gone to heaven to prepare a house of many mansions (apartments) for the saints, does it follow that it is to be erected and remain where it is being prepared to all eternity? And that the righteous are to go there at death, or at any other time in order to enjoy its beauty and grandeur? We answer no. Let us give you an illustration. When Solomon would prepare a temple with its many mansions, or compartments, in which his people could serve and worship God, he sent thousands of men into the forests of Lebanon and the marble quarries, and there formed the beams, timbers, and marble pillars. When all was prepared and perfected, did Solomon rear the temple there? No. When all was ready, all the parts of the temple were transported to the city of Jerusalem and then, without sound of ax, hammer, or any tool (1 Kings 7:1-7), it appeared in all its beauty and grandeur. So it will be with the house of many mansions which Christ has gone into the "far country" to prepare. And as Solomon brought the temple to Jerusalem, Christ, too, will bring the temple (the house of many mansions) down to earth where His people may dwell forever and where the nations may bring their glory and honor into the city, as shown in Revelation 21:24-27, and as pictured in different symbols in the Scriptures. One of these descriptive passages we will quote in full (Rev. 21:2, 3). "And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God." When the holy city, the new Jerusalem, comes down from God out of heaven, and the tabernacle of God, with its many mansions, appears in the new earth conditions, and Christ is there with His people, and "God himself" shall be with them as above stated, what will there be left in heaven for man to visit or enjoy? It is when Jesus returns that the people of God are to be rewarded, and not one at a time as death claims them.

"I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." The enjoyment of what Christ has gone to prepare for His people, according to the language here used, all depends upon His return. When He returns, where is He? You say on earth. True. Then if the many mansions He has gone to prepare are forever in heaven, they certainly are beyond the reach of Christ and His people ever to enjoy, for there is not a single text in all the Bible that teaches that Jesus will ever return to heaven after His second coming; but there are many passages, as we have shown, that state that He brings His reward with Him when He comes. "Behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be" (Rev. 22:12). He comes to earth the second time to reward all, and not to transport any to heaven.

Know what your Bible teaches, obey the same, and all will be well.

"King of kings, His sway extending Over all earth's wide domain;
Justice, love, and life unending,
Bring back Paradise again.

"Jesus comes, earth's rightful Ruler,
Every knee to Him shall bend.
Peace shall flow, a gentle river,
Life and joy shall know no end.

is received, it is acknowledged by all that in the final analysis God is the one real source of such authority.

Israel recognized that this was true, and the prophets, judges, and kings confessed that Jehovah was "Lord of all." All the power which they possessed and exercised came from Him. They were in their several offices but the representatives of God. He alone was supreme.

From the midst of the burning bush God called to Moses and said: "Come now therefore, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring forth my people the children of Israel out of Egypt" (Ex. 3:10).

"Moreover the word of the Lord" (Jer. 2:1) came to Jeremiah and to the other prophets, all of whom "spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (2 Peter 1:21).

It was the Lord who gave to the various orders of the Mosaic priesthood the authority to officiate in the system of worship provided for Israel, and even the kings were chosen and qualified for rulership by Him (1 Sam. 9:17; 13:13, 14).

The supreme authority of God was as fully recognized in the New Testament as it had been in the Old. Even the only begotten Son disavowed any authority as originating in Himself, declaring that "the words that I speak unto you I speak not of myself: but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works" (John 14:10). And after His resurrection He declared all the power He possessed had been "given" to Him by One mightier than He (Matt. 28:18). His words, His works, His power to speak for the Father, all came from God.

Paul ascribes his authority to the Lord Jesus Christ, who, as we have seen, derived His from the Eternal One. "I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man. For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ" (Gal. 1:11, 12).

What is thus asserted of the source of Paul's authority to speak for God and in the name of Jesus Christ was true of all the other apostles as well. They received their commission, as well as their instruction, directly from the Son of God or from God through the instrumentality of the Holy Spirit, the original source in each instance being God Himself.

Dependence upon other suggested sources of authority is obviously dangerous. Speaking of the tendency of the nominal church to appeal to human sources of authority in religious matters, Bishop Hoadley writes: "Authority" (i. e., "the assumed right of dictation, attributed to certain fathers, councils, or church courts") "is the greatest and most irreconcilable enemy of truth and argument that this world ever furnished. All the sophistry—all color of plausibility—all the artifice and cunning of the subtlest disputer in the world may be turned to the advantage of that very truth which they are designed to hide; but against (such) authority there is no defense."

DOES THE CHURCH OF GOD POSSESS DIVINE AUTHORITY TODAY?

Does the Church of God with which we are identified today have the divinely given authority to preach and teach and baptize in the name of the Lord that the apostles and evangelists of the early church so obviously possessed? Does our authority rest upon mere ordinations and appointments of men, or is it derived, as theirs was, from God? That is the question!

To bring the matter clearly before us, I assert as my firm conviction that not only do we as a church have the right to make a claim of divine authority, but that it is possible to prove conclusively from the Scripture that we are possessed of such authority!

To maintain this position does not involve the necessity of claiming "apostolic succession" or of demonstrating that we possess inspirational powers or miraculous gifts similar to those exhibited by the leaders in the early church.

We may claim, and we do claim, however, that the work we are doing is carried on under authority from God which has been conferred upon us by the apostles and prophets who spoke for Him.

In other words, our authority, like that of Jesus Christ and the apostles and prophets, is derived from God through the instrumentality of the Holy Spirit and the Scriptures of truth.

It is evident that such was to be the means by which God would reveal His will to those who sought the way of life in post-apostolic times. In His prayer for the unity of His followers, Jesus pleads thus: "Neither pray I for these alone" (i. e., the disciples who were present with the Lord), "but for them also which shall believe on me through their word" (John 17:20).

Jesus would not be with those later disciples personally, as He was then with the apostles. He would be unable to in-

Christ Liveth in Me

* * * By Edith Smith, Blanchard, Michigan

"I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me."—Galatians 2:20.

To say I know the Christ of history is not enough. One may know the Christ of history, the Christ of the Scriptures, but if he does not know the Christ of experience, he lacks the vital source in all life. Christ must be accepted and appropriated so that one can say: "My Lord, my life, my Sacrifice, my Savior, and my all." It is not that Christ lived in Nazareth, but that Christ lives in me, that counts.

If we would be most helpful and profitable to those about us, we must make our lives clear and constant channels for the divine life. The Christ who lives in us is waiting to touch other lives.

We are not called to live the joyless life; our prayer is that we may help others. There is no other way to a better understanding of Christ than living our life for Him and doing His will.

Nobility

True worth is in being, not seeming,
In doing each day that goes by
Some little good—not in dreaming
Of great things to do by and by.

For whatever men say in blindness,
And spite of the fancies of youth,
There's nothing so kingly as kindness,
And nothing so royal as truth.

We get back our mete as we measure,
We cannot do wrong and feel right;
Nor can we give pain and feel pleasure,
For justice avenges each slight.

The air for the wing of the sparrow,
The bush for the robin and wren;
But always the path that is narrow
And straight, for the children of men.

We cannot make bargains for blisses,
Nor catch them like fishes in nets;
And sometimes the thing our life misses
Helps more than the thing that it gets.

For good lieth not in pursuing,
Nor gaining of great nor of small;
But just in the doing; and doing
As we would be done by, is all.

Through envy, through malice, through hating,
Against the world early and late,
No jot of courage abating—
Our part is to work and to wait.

And slight is the sting of his trouble
Whose winnings are less than his worth.
For he who is honest is noble,
Whatever his fortune or birth.

You Answer it

What is the worst sin possible?

Arlen Marsh, Oregon, Illinois, says: "A whole book has been written about the worst sin possible. Personally, I hold that there isn't any. Sin is sin; and only man tampers with it to make one branch of it worse than another. If you insist on differentiating, however, my vote points to blasphemy of God and the Christ."

Another Question

A young man wishes to know, "Why do you consider the baptism of infants as useless?"

Many churches make infant baptism one of their most necessary and sacred rites. Write a short article setting forth in the spirit of love logical reasons why you do not so consider it.

Life's Mirror

There are loyal hearts, there are spirits brave,
There are souls that are pure and true;
Then give to the world the best you have,
And the best will come back to you.

Give love, and love to your life will flow,
A strength in your utmost need;
Have faith and a score of hearts will show
Their faith in your word and deed.

Give truth, and your gift will be paid in kind
And honor will honor meet;
And a smile that is sweet will surely find
A smile that is just as sweet.

For life is the mirror of king and slave,
'Tis just what we are and do;
Then give to the world the best you have,
And the best will come back to you.

THE CHILDREN'S PAGE

PREPARED BY MARY A. GESIN

A HAPPY FAMILY REUNION

IT WAS Saturday afternoon and Betty and Bobby had just come in from a game of croquet. The week had been the last week of school and had been a very busy one. The children had enjoyed a school picnic just the day before in the woods not far from home.

This picnic had been a little different, for it had been a sort of reunion. The teacher, who had been with them so many years, had invited as many of her former pupils as she could reach by telephone or mail. It had been a very happy picnic, and Betty and Bobby couldn't seem to get through telling Mother about it.

"There were some there whom the teacher thought she would never see again," said Betty.

"Some came from other states just to see their teacher and the old schoolhouse. One young man came all the way from New York," exclaimed Bobby.

"No wonder your teacher was happy, to think she was so much loved and so well remembered. But we must hurry with our lesson. You know we didn't get to study much of it last Monday evening before our company came," said Mother.

"This is about a reunion, too, you know, a family reunion, such as so many people near us have every summer, and yet quite different. We know that Joseph could never be completely happy until he should see his father again and know he was well provided for the rest of his life. Bobby, tell us what you learn from Genesis 45:9-11."

"Joseph told his brothers," Bobby replied, "that they must hurry and return home so they could bring his father down to Egypt. For there was going to be five more years of famine, and Joseph wanted to be sure his father wasn't suffering."

"When Pharaoh heard about it he told Joseph to give his brothers wagons and food and clothing for the trip," said Mother, "and soon they were on the way. Tell us, Betty, what Jacob thought when the brothers got home and told him about Joseph and his plan."

"At first he couldn't believe that Joseph was alive," Betty answered, "but when he saw the wagons Joseph had sent for the journey he said he was ready to go."

"God spoke to Jacob one night when they were on the way and told him not to be afraid to go down to Egypt, for He would be with him just the same as He had always been," Mother told them. "There were seventy all together, counting Joseph and his two sons, who left Canaan and went down to Egypt. Remember that number, children, for we will learn more about it next quarter. Bobby, read Genesis 46:29, then tell us what you learn."

"Joseph went part way to meet his father. He went as far as Goshen. When he saw his father he couldn't keep from crying. No wonder! he hadn't seen him for a long time."

"Yes, Bobby, and Easterners are different than Westerners. The men show their feelings much more. Jacob was now 130 years old, and Joseph was 39. Joseph told his father that the land of Goshen was to be theirs, for it was a good country for sheep and there they would be more or less separated from the Egyptians who hated shepherds. This was the happiest day in many long years for Joseph and his father. And Jacob enjoyed seventeen peaceful years near his long-lost son.

"Joseph was just as kind to his brothers. Although they had treated him so cruelly years before, Joseph had fully forgiven them. He presented five of his brothers and his father to Pharaoh, the King, who spoke very kindly to them and welcomed them to their new home.

"Tell us, Betty, when it came time for Jacob to die what did he make Joseph promise? You will find it in Genesis 47:29, 30."

"He made Joseph promise not to bury him in Egypt, but to bury him up in their homeland," answered Betty.

"In Genesis 50, we find that Joseph kept his promise," Mother said. "And after it was all over, the brothers began to think that perhaps Joseph wouldn't treat them so kindly now that their father was gone. I am sorry to say some children do act that way. But they didn't know Joseph. Bobby, tell us what he said to them."

"He told them that they need not be afraid. He would always be good to them and their little ones. He told them that even if they did think evil against him, God meant it for good, and so it had all turned out," finished Bobby.

"How old did Joseph live to be, Betty?"

"He was 110 years old, it says in verse 22."

"Joseph showed that his faith in God was strong to the end of his life. Can you find the verse that shows it, Bobby?"

"Here it is, Mother, verse 24. Joseph said he knew God would some day bring them back to the land He had promised to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob."

INDIANA BIBLE SCHOOL AND CONFERENCE

All roads lead to the Indiana Bible School at North Salem Church north of Plymouth, Ind., June 16-27, 1937. Bro. G. E. Marsh of Oregon, Ill., is to be the guest teacher and speaker this year. Also, Bro. James McLain will assist as song leader and teacher. Other teachers on the staff are Lulu Stilson, Doris Rough, Doris Naylor, J. H. Anderson, and F. A. Stilson. Sr. Norman LaMunion will assist at the piano and perform the duties of matron.

Besides these a good group of noble sisters will be on hand to minister to your daily physical needs. We urge your attendance.

Floyd A. Stilson, President of Conference.

TO MAKE OFFICIAL SURVEY OF WESTERN CHURCHES

Arrangements are being perfected for making a survey of the churches in the northwestern part of the United States, primarily in the interest of the Committee on Evangelism, which was appointed at the last General Conference. Bro. C. E. Randall, president of the Ministerial Association of the Church of God, has been selected as the one to carry on this work. Bro. Randall is well fitted, both by experience and by wide acquaintanceship, for the task that has been assigned to him. Further announcement will be made as soon as a schedule can be arranged and preliminary arrangements completed.

MICHIGAN STATE CONFERENCE

The eightieth annual Michigan State Conference and Bible School will convene at the Pennellwood Chapel, 28 Allen Road, S. W., Grand Rapids, June 21-27, 1937.

Bro. C. E. Lapp of St. Cloud, Minn., will be the guest speaker.

Bible classes will be held twice daily, Monday through Saturday. The teachers will be: Adult—Bros. Austin and Smead; young people—Bros. Lapp and Austin; intermediate—Bro. Smead and Sr. Cole; junior—Srs. Hills and VanPortfleet. Sermon each evening.

Sunday will be a full day. There will be Sunday school and a sermon in the forenoon, basket dinner at noon (please bring table service), a sermon and Communion in the afternoon, and young people's meeting and a sermon in the evening.

The business meeting is called for 3:15 p. m., Saturday, June 26.

We hope to have the pleasure of having as many or more out-of-state guests as we had last year. In order to assist the entertainment committee, will all who plan to attend the full or major part of the week kindly notify the secretary. This is YOUR conference, so we will be seeing you where friend joins friend in unity of service to our Lord and Master.

Mrs. L. F. Slocum, Secretary,
635 Alexander St., S. E.,
Grand Rapids, Michigan.

NORTHWEST CONFERENCE

The annual Northwest Conference of Oregon and Washington will be held, June 24-27, 1937, at Felida, Wash.

A hearty invitation to attend our meetings is extended to all far and near. Every member is urged to attend the business meeting when new business will be transacted.

Anyone desiring further information should correspond with the secretary, Gladys Barber, 634 N. 16th St., Corvallis Ore.

Gladys Barber, Secretary.

Lower Rates to New Subscribers

To provide our readers with an opportunity to engage in a great missionary campaign at little or no expense to themselves and at the same time to make it possible for them to help us in placing THE RESTITUTION HERALD in hundreds of new homes between now and the first of next August, we are making the following unprecedented offer:

For the next two months we will accept annual prepaid subscriptions to THE HERALD at exceedingly low rates when sent in in groups of five or more at one time as specified below.

Five new annual subscriptions will be accepted when sent in by one person and accompanied by check or money order in full, for $6.25.

Ten or more new annual subscriptions will be accepted at the rate of One Dollar each when sent in by a single individual!

Subscriptions will be counted as "new" and entitled to this very low introductory rate when the one signing for the paper has not been a paid subscriber since January 1, 1937.

Here is a wonderful opportunity for our pastors, Sunday school superintendents, and local workers generally to get their people enlisted in a great missionary enterprise!

Remember THE RESTITUTION HERALD will continue to bring you the news of the churches from all parts of the country, the latest information as to prophetic developments throughout the world, and hundreds of inspiring articles on doctrinal and spiritual subjects of the deepest interest.

INDIANA CONFERENCE NOTICE

The annual business meeting of the Indiana State Conference will be held Saturday, June 26, 1937, at 2 p. m., in the North Salem Church of God. The annual business meeting of the Indiana Bereans will meet at the same place on Wednesday, June 23, at 6:00 p. m.

"GOD AND THE NATIONS"

A Correction

In our issue of May 18, 1937, there appeared an article on page 5 from the pen of Bro. S. J. Lindsay, under the above title. The author calls attention to an error occurring in the first paragraph, which he says crept into the original copy. We make the following correction and suggest that our readers review the entire article (it is a short one) and observe the change.

"In our own nation, which we call a 'Christian' nation, we find only there and one third per cent as much spent on all religious effort as we are paying to combat the crime evil."

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI

On Tuesday, April 20, Bro. G. E. Marsh arrived in St. Louis for a special meeting.

Our services were held on Sundays at the Morse Mills Church, where we were met by brethren from Hillsboro, Blush, and Belgrade.

On Friday, April 30, Bro. T. A. Drinkard of Handley, Texas, spoke for us.

We were visited during this meeting by Bro. and Sr. Overmyer of Burr Oak, Ind.; Bro. Ed. Williams and family, Bro. John Bechler and family of Hillsboro, Mo.; and Sr. Ella Hanson MacDonald of Wyoming; and Bro. Evan Knodle of Oregon, Ill.

Our meeting closed on Wednesday evening, May 5. We had a total of eighteen sermons and ten Bible lessons. Those of you who are acquainted with Bro. Marsh know what a feast of good things we enjoyed.

Mrs. Claude Graham.

Bro. and Sr. George Slagle of Dunlap, Ill., visited with relatives and friends at Oregon, Ill., the past week-end.

RICHARDSON - ROBINSON

At the close of the morning church service at Blood River, La., Sunday, May 23, it was the writer's privilege to unite in marriage Miss Orine Richardson and Mr. James Robinson.

The bride is a graduate of Springfield High School, graduating with high honors. The groom is a successful young farmer and well liked by all who know him. Both are members of the Blood River Church of God, having been baptized this spring by Bro. Magaw, and are active in Sunday school and Berean work.

We pray God's richest blessings may attend them in their journey through life together and that they may remain faithful until the Master comes.

Harry Gockler.

COOPER - BREWINGTON

We are happy to announce that on May 15 we had the pleasure of uniting in marriage Miss Vivian Cooper to Mr. Howard Brewington. Sr. Brewington is the daughter of Bro. and Sr. Robert Cooper of Fredericktown, Mo.

We understand that they plan to make their home in St. Louis. May they have many happy years of married life.

Roy G. Graham.

MRS. G. P. ALLARD

Melissa Elvira, daughter of William W. and Sarah Allard Taylor, was born in Shefford County, Canada East, August 9, 1857. At the age of four she went with the family to Illinois, and eight years later to Tama County, Iowa, the family settling on a farm two miles south of Gladbrook, before the town was founded. She received a rural school education at the Landt School, and grew to womanhood on the family homestead. On the 30th of June, 1874, she was married to G. P. Allard, the couple driving to Toledo in a light wagon for the ceremony. They lived on two different farms south of Gladbrook till they retired and moved into town in 1913, where Mr. Allard died in 1921.

Eight children were born to them, of whom five survive, Wallace H. of Cedar Falls; Mrs. Pearl Engel, Ray C., Mrs. Leta Stauffer, and Mrs. Edna Wiese, all of Gladbrook. Two children died at an early age, and the other, Mrs. Emma Oaks, in 1935. Two stepsons, O. J. and William G., also survive. There are likewise two brothers and a sister surviving, Nelson W. Taylor of Morris, Minn.; John C. of Minneapolis; and Mrs. Rose Starbuck of Rockford, Ill. There are also seventeen grandchildren and six great-grandchildren who, with many other relatives and friends, mourn her absence.

Mrs. Allard's Christian life began about sixty years ago, under the ministry of C. C. Ramsay. She lived a very devoted and useful life of service, ever thinking of the welfare of others, and was a faithful and loving wife and mother, always concerned for the material comfort and spiritual welfare of her family, who hold her memory in dearest respect.

She died at her home in Gladbrook May 23, 1937. Funeral services were held at the Park Hill Church in Gladbrook, May 25, by the pastor, J. W. Williams, and burial was made in Crystal Cemetery beside her husband, six grandsons acting as pall bearers.

J. W. Williams.

CARRIE E. JAQUITH

Carrie E. Humphrey was born near Buffalo, N. Y., in 1859, and died at the family home near Hillsboro, Ore., May 14, 1937.

In 1866, she went to Kansas with her people, and was married to Walter W. Jaquith at Milford, Kan., in 1883. They came to Oregon the same year, settling near Scholls Ferry on the farm which has been their home ever since.

Surviving the deceased are: the husband, Bro. W. W. Jaquith, Newberg; two sons, Walter L. at home and Roy H. of Sherwood; also six grandchildren.

Although confined to a wheel chair for the last twenty-two years, she was cheerful and optimistic. She lived a useful life, and had a large correspondence with shut-in people in several states. Letters received from these unfortunate people encouraged her to think that her efforts in writing to them was very gratefully received. The May number of the Shut-In Society's paper, published in New York, contained her last poem, "We Thank Thee."

Funeral services were held from the Scholls church with Rev. A. S. Hisey of Tigard officiating. Burial was made in Mountainside Cemetery.

The time cannot be long until we meet those who are asleep in Christ. Then "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away.

Gladys Barber.

MRS. E. A. GORDON

Emma A. Richards, daughter of Roderic and Mary Ann Richards, was born at Elmira, N. Y., September 1, 1854, and died at the home of Mrs. Eva Phelps at Holbrook, Neb., May 22, 1937.

While still a child she moved with her parents to Altona, Ill., where she grew to womanhood. On June 11, 1872, she was married to James P. Gordon of St. Paul, Neb. To this union fourteen children were born. Three sons died in infancy. A fourth, William Goodman, died at the age of four years, and a fifth, David, at the age of 26.

In 1893, she, with her husband and several children united with the Church of God and was immersed by Elder Almus Adams into the all-saving name of Jesus. She remained faithful and loyal to the end, and will be greatly missed from her accustomed place in the congregation.

Seven daughters, Mrs. Rena Willard, Mrs. Eva Phelps, Mrs. Cora Pace, Mrs. Inez Nelson, Mrs. Ida Pinkerton, Mrs. Minnie Greenlee, and Mrs. Winnie Steele, and two sons, Grover J. and Harry, survive to mourn the loss of a kind and loving mother. Twenty-seven grandchildren, nine great-grandchildren, one brother, Roderic Richards, and two sisters, Mrs. Flora DeCamp and Mrs. Hattie Wadsworth also survive.

Following short services at the home, the funeral sermon was preached at the Holbrook Church of God by Bro. Arthur Hornaday of Arapahoe, Neb., and burial was in the St. Paul, Neb., cemetery, where she awaits the resurrection of the faithful.

The annual business meeting of the Oregon, Ill., Church of God will be held (D. V.) on the evening of Thursday, June 10, 1937. Non-resident members of the congregation are urged by the elders to be present if possible.

Bro. Claude O. Graham and family, accompanied by Sr. Fern Blair, all of St. Louis, Mo., drive to Ripley, Ill., on Sunday, May 23, where they attended one session of the meetings being held by Pastor Harvey Krogh, Jr., and Evangelist T. A. Drinkard. They report having "heard a good sermon" and say that en route they drove for more than two miles over a highway that was covered with water to a depth of about eleven inches. "Ducks swam back and forth across the road" ahead of their car. Several from the St. Louis congregation are planning on attending the General Conference next August.

THE RESTITUTION HERALD advocates: the near return of Christ, Acts 1:11, and life only through Him, Col. 3:3; the literal resurrection of the dead, John 5:28; the immortalization of those in Christ, 1 Cor. 15:53, 54; the final restoration of Israel as the kingdom of God under the kingship of Christ, Luke 1:32, the church to be joint-heirs with Him, Rom. 8:17, and Israel to be made head over Gentile nations, Isa. 60:13; the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began," Acts 3:21. It also firmly advocates repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, Acts 2:38, and a consecrated life as essential to salvation.

struct them individually, as He had instructed those who accompanied Him through His earthly ministry. Nor would they be severally inspired by the Holy Spirit "to bring all things to their remembrance" (John 14:26), as was to be the case with the first ministers of the church. But He would send the same gospel message to them through the word of the apostles whom He was about to commission for that specific purpose (Mark 16:15, 16), and these later seekers after saving truth would be as fully instructed as the earlier disciples had been who had received their information directly from the Lord.

Paul confirms this view, that it was the Lord's intention to transmit the gospel to succeeding generations through faithful, though uninspired, men. Writing to his "son in the gospel," an earnest young preacher named Timothy, he says:

"The things that thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also" (2 Tim. 2:2).

To learn that our authority is transmitted to us by the word of the apostles and prophets on the printed pages of our Bibles rather than by direct personal inspiration, in no wise changes the fact that it comes from God. God may speak orally, as He spoke to Moses (Ex. 33:11); in a vision, as He did to Peter (Acts 10:9-19); or through the Word which He has caused to be written (Rom. 15:4; 2 Tim. 3:16). No matter which channel of communication He employs at any time, the statement that He makes, the truth He reveals, is the Word of God!

In our acknowledgment of the Bible as the source of our authority we do not differ from other denominations with the possible exception of the Roman Catholic Church. The latter affirms that the church itself is the supreme authority in all matters pertaining to spiritual things. For, she asserts, the church has even passed upon the authority of the Scriptures themselves, having determined in solemn conclave what writings were entitled to a place in the Sacred Canon.

But "reformed" churches generally look upon the Bible as the highest court of appeal in questions concerning God and our relation to Him.

Article VI of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States expresses clearly the accepted Protestant idea regarding the authority of the Bible. It says:

"Holy Scripture containeth all things necessary to salvation; so that whatsoever is not contained therein, nor may be proved thereby, is not required of any man, that it should be believed as an article of faith, or be thought requisite or necessary to salvation."

THE BIBLE OUR ONLY SOURCE OF AUTHORITY

The Church of God as a denomination has always acknowledged no other authority in matters of faith and practice than the Bible. The following statement was incorporated in the report of a "Committee Appointed to Consider the Subject of Church Union" which reported to the first General Conference of the Church of God, held in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, November 23, 1888:

"Being desirous of honoring God, we accept as our sole rule of faith and practice His Word in its fullness and simplicity according to His mind and will therein revealed. . . . We trustfully place a free Bible, released from human fetters, into the hands of all members and preachers of the churches now composing and which may hereafter compose our conference."

To show that the Church of God still holds to the same understanding of the authority of the Scriptures, we call attention to Article II of the Constitution of the Church of God in Los Angeles, California:

"This church shall consist of baptized believers in Christ who take the Holy Bible as their only rule of faith and practice."

The Church of God, local, state, and national, has repeatedly gone on record as accepting the Bible as the highest and final Court of Appeal and the Supreme Authority in all spiritual matters.

Through this unchangeable Word of God we receive the authority to preach the same gospel which Jesus and the apostles proclaimed, to affirm as vital to salvation the same great truths which they taught, and to insist that "the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12) must be heard, understood, and believed before one is a fit subject for Christian baptism.

The word of an inspired prophet of God furnishes all the confirmation of authority that is required for one to assume any holy office in His service. It was the word of a prophet that authorized Aaron to enter upon his priestly duty. It was the word of a prophet that conferred upon Saul and David and Solomon the regal power which they afterward exercised as occupants of "the throne of the Lord" (1 Chron. 29:23-25) over Israel. It was the word of a prophet that gave to Nebuchadnezzar his throne and empowered him to overthrow Judah and Jerusalem (Dan. 2:37, 38; 4:17). It was when Jesus spoke as a prophet (Acts 3:22) that He conferred upon the apostles "power from on high" (Luke 24:39), attesting their authority to speak for God (Mark 16:20) in the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom in all the world. It was the voice of a prophet, Paul, that commanded Timothy to commit the word of salvation which he had received "to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also"—the word which he had received both from the lips of the Apostle and from "the holy scriptures" (2 Tim. 3:15), that the glorious truth might be handed down through the ages authoritatively so that you and I might hear and heed and obey its requirements in their fullness.

It is by the word of these same prophets, voicing the will of God, that there has been given to us the right to preach the gospel, to outline the conditions of salvation, and to baptize the repentant, believing sinner into the saving name of Jesus Christ our Lord!

NUMBER 36

The Judgment

By Norman Macleod

MANY of our ideas of the judgment are taken from the childish ideas of the pagans, particularly the Egyptians. They believed that at death, the ka, or soul, went to the underworld by means of the devious passage of the "underground Nile," where its heart was taken out and weighed against a feather. If the heart was evil the person would be condemned, for the heart would outweigh the feather. Only by a most intricate system of charms set forth in the Book of the Dead could the ka sail successfully the tortuous passage of the underground Nile, stand successfully in the criminal trial called the "judgment" and eventually sail aloft to the "celestial Nile" which the Egyptians saw in the Milky Way. Such puerile teachings have colored some of the translations and interpretations of the Scriptures to the present.

The word "judge" or "judgment" may be used in various ways. It may mean criticism, as in Matthew 7:1: "Judge not, that ye be not judged"; which might read: "Criticise not, that ye be not criticised." Or it has the meaning somewhat of adverse criticism or condemnation: "Condemn not, that ye be not condemned." The verses which follow it would bear out that connotation: "And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye?" (Matt. 7:3). In other words, you had better change your own manner of living before you start condemning others: "People who live in glass houses should not throw stones," says the more modern proverb.

Again, the word means punishment, as in Isaiah 34:5: "For my sword shall be bathed in heaven: behold it shall come down upon Idumea, and upon the people of my curse, to judgment," or punishment. Is that the "judgment of the great day" that you hear so many people mention? Idumea is Greek for Edom, and the passage refers to a time in the period following the return of the Jews from Persia when southern Palestine, later all of Palestine, was ruled by the Herods who were half Jewish and half Edou-

One of the most interesting articles that has passed through the editor's hands for some time is here presented. The author, who has specialized in history for years, approaches his subject from a fresh viewpoint. We commend it especially to the deeper students of the Bible.

ite. Anybody who follows the episodes of Jewish history through the Maccabean revolt, the consequent wars between Syria and Egypt, and the ultimate conquest and destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans will agree that that was a most severe judgment or punishment of Idumea. Ezekiel 35:15 and 36:5 refer to the same events.

Misapplication of another passage is that of 1 Peter 4:17-19: "For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God: and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God? And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear? Wherefore, let them that suffer according to the will of God, commit the keeping of their souls to him in well doing, as unto a faithful Creator." Certainly none of us believes in purgatory, or eternal torment, or even that God is going to punish even for a short time with actual fire! Judgment in this connection merely means that in the days of Peter already had the church begun to enter those fiery persecutions that were instituted by the Roman Government at the behest of the Jews. The church then, says the Apostle in effect, should prepare itself for such trials, and should commit the keeping of their souls (lives) with absolute trust to God.

Manifestly we cannot apply the word "punishment," or "condemnation," or "persecutions" to the word "judgment" wherever used. "For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved" (John 3:17). Another meaning must then be sought for this. "And the time of this ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men every where to repent: because he hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead" (Acts 17:30, 31). Judgment may very definitely mean condemnation, however. Without doing (Please turn to page 10)

Nazis Bar Old Testament From Young

"From a child thou hast known the holy scriptures" (the Old Testament), "which are able to make thee wise unto salvation."—2 Timothy 3:15.

BERLIN, Germany, June 3.—"Subjects which wound the moral feelings of the Germanic race must not be dealt with in religious lessons in the schools, and consequently certain portions of the Old Testament must be omitted and other parts shoved into the background," declared the Wuerttemberg Minister of Education, Prof. Mergenthaler, in his instructions to teachers.

Prof. Mergenthaler asserted: "The education of German youth must be carried on in a uniform manner in the spirit of national socialism. The influence of theories opposed to the Nazi philosophy must not be allowed to create discord in the souls of young Germans."

How appreciative ought we to be who live under governments which permit us to exalt the Word of God as revealed in both the Old and New Testaments, above every other source of authority! The nations which grant religious freedom to their people and whose attitude toward the Jews is sympathetic and friendly, may well expect on scriptural grounds to receive greater blessings from the Lord than those which deny religious liberty to both Jew and Gentile.

Mussolini's Changing Attitude Toward the Jews

"All thine enemies have opened their mouth against thee."—Lamentations 2:16.

ROME, Italy, June 4.—A year or more ago, when students of prophecy were suggesting the possibility that the revival of the Roman Empire would include the establishment of much closer relations between Italy and Germany, many thought that such a development was impossible owing to the jealous eye with which Italy viewed German influence in Austria. Rome, it was said, knew that the absorption or control of Austria by Germany would strike an almost killing blow to Italian dominance and prestige in Europe and probably mean the loss of certain rich territories which had come to her at the close of the Great War.

A further objection that was raised to the idea that Germany and Italy might be brought into closer relations, was the fact that Mussolini and Hitler took opposite positions in their attitude toward the Jews. In Germany Hitler demanded that they should be deprived of all rights of citizenship and so far as possible driven from the professional life of Germany. Mussolini, on the other hand, "looked with approval . . . on the Zionist Movement six months ago" and gave many encouraging assurances to the Jews of Italy.

Now, however, the entire scene is changed. Early last March, seeking to improve Italy's strategic position in her relation to Great Britain, Mussolini sought to ingratiate himself with the Arabs of Palestine and at the same time undermine British prestige throughout the East by declaring himself the ardent supporter of the Arabs everywhere. Fascist Italy, he said, "wishes to demonstrate its sympathy for Islam and for the Moslems of the entire world."

The result of this change of attitude, which was due, as we have seen, to the exigencies of international politics, is that anti-Semitism has arisen in Italy and that nation is rapidly assuming a restrictive and almost a destructive policy toward the Jews.

According to The Literary Digest (June 5, 1937), "Last year Mussolini's espionage advised an anti-Semitic campaign in Tripoli (an Italian possession), as a foretaste for peninsular Italy's 70,000 Jews. Libyan Jews were flogged in the public squares for refusing to open their stores on Saturdays (the Jewish Sabbath) and close them on Sundays (the Roman Catholic Sabbath), in accordance with a decree issued by Gov. Italo Balbo."

The student of the prophets is aware that the Jews are yet to pass through terrible persecution (Dan. 12:1), first, to complete the punishment which God has pronounced upon them and, second, to force them out of all countries and back to their homeland where they will at last come to acknowledge Jesus as their Messiah and Deliverer.

Hitler Doubts Nations' Sincerity

"Upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity."

REGENSBURG, Germany, June 6.—Addressing 120,000 persons here today, Adolf Hitler said: "Germany has been asked why she doesn't disarm. Well, Germany has become distrustful. This time it is up to the other nations to disarm first. In the past the other nations could have had the blessings of disarmament while Germany was disarmed, but they ignored the opportunity."

Essential Elements of Christian Faith

2. The Deity

"GOD, who can by no means be completely known by us, is Himself the essential postulate of all theology." is the scripturally supported conclusion of Dr. R. V. Foster. The thought of God, the acknowledgment of His being and power, is the first requisite of religion. There could be no religion aside from a recognition of the Deity, for "he that cometh to God," either for the purpose of worship or to obtain salvation, "must believe that he is" (Heb. 11:6).

"The existence of God is a fundamental presupposition not only of the Christian religion, but of all religion," declares Albert C. Knudson in The Doctrine of God (1934). "In modern times," he continues, "various efforts have been made to start a religion without God, but the results have not been encouraging. No such effort could be successful without a radical change in the religious nature of men. So long as religion implies a trustful feeling of absolute dependence and a deep longing for redemption, it will inevitably tend not only toward a belief in a super-world, but toward a belief in a transcendent personal Being."

Such a belief in a supreme Creator and Protector of mankind seems inherent in man. Hidden within the deepest recesses of the human heart is an inborn consciousness of God. Men may verbally deny His existence; they may not believe in His providence; they may question the reality of His intercourse with man through the Bible. But they cannot satisfactorily dispute the testimony of their own hearts! Voltaire, skeptic though he was, was forced to confess that "if God did not exist, it would be necessary to invent Him" in order that the spiritual hunger of man might be satisfied.

"Lo, the poor Indian! whose untutor'd mind Sees God in clouds, or hears Him in the wind," required no black-robed missionary to introduce to him the thought of a supreme Being—he already believed in the Great Spirit that ruled over all.

Without a prophet, church, or Bible the world would, and the world did, believe in God!

The imprint of His creative hand is everywhere seen: in the fathomless deeps of the ocean, on the snowy crowns of the mountains, along the winding paths of the rills and rivers, throughout the wide expanse of the heavens and the dense fullness of the earth, the Creator has left unmistakable traces of His presence!

"If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there: if I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea; even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand hold me" (Psalm 139:8-10).

The editor, with a deepened sense of reverence, enters upon the investigation of the most profound subject to which the human mind can be applied—that of the being and nature of God.

It is that universal and persistent consciousness of God that prompts men to worship and that indicates his innate spiritual capacity. And it is this spiritual capacity, this power to understand God and to cooperate with Him in the accomplishment of His eternal purposes, that has given man the right to "have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth" (Gen. 1:26).

In his eloquent and convincing address before the Athenian philosophers and idolaters on Mars' Hill, Paul said: "God that made the world and all things therein, . . . hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek after the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us" (Acts 17:24-27).

Driven by that divinely implanted and irresistible urge to discover God, millions of men and women have "changed the glory of the uncorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and fourfooted beasts, and creeping things, . . . and worshipped and served the creature (rather) than the Creator" (Rom. 1:23, 25).

"The heathen in his blindness bows down to wood and stone" not because he really believes that his idols are more than the material substances of which they are composed, but because he must express in some outward way his inner realization of the being and power of God. And thus it was that men came to worship the forces of nature which they could not understand. They worshiped them not only because they could not understand them fully, but because behind such incomprehensible forces they sensed the presence of the true and living God whom they longed to find. They knew that somewhere God existed and they wanted to discover Him and know Him! In those crude and ugly caricatures of men and of animals they endeavored to express in forms which their very limited intelligence could grasp, their conception of the power which they could feel but could not understand.

Such was the situation in Greece when Paul gave the sermon to which reference has already been made. His opening words, you will remember, were: "Men of Athens, I observe at every turn that you are a most religious people! Why, as I passed along and scanned your objects of worship, I actually came upon an altar with the inscription, To an Unknown God" (Acts 17:22, 23, Moffatt).

The Greeks were not alone in the worship of an unknown God, practically all (Please turn to page 9)

Why Should the Dead Be Raised?

"And when they heard of the resurrection of the dead, some mocked: and others said, We will hear thee again on this matter."—Acts 17:32.

PAUL was at Athens, the center of Greek culture and learning, waiting there for the coming of Silas and Timothy. While strolling about the city he had observed the many altars erected to various heathen deities. One especially attracted him because of its inscription—"To the unknown God." The Athenians were said to have worshiped thirty thousand gods. One of their own writers said: "Our region is so full of deities that you may more frequently meet with a god than a man." The god whom they ignorantly worshiped was the One whom Paul preached, declaring that he was Lord of heaven and earth, and the giver of "life, and breath, and all things," the One in whom "we live, and move, and have our being." In other words, He is the Supreme Being, the only one to be worshiped by man. To prove this, Paul quoted from their own poet, Aratus, who had declared that "we are also his offspring."

Having thus gained the attention of the Epicureans and Stoics, he proceeded to declare the gospel unto them, showing that this supreme God had a plan for the salvation of men which involved the resurrection from the dead. Up to this point they had listened attentively to Paul, but when they heard of the resurrection of the dead, the Epicureans mocked, while the Stoics said, "We will hear thee again of this matter."

Why did the Epicureans mock at the resurrection? Because they held the notion that death is nothing to us, "since when we are, death is not, and when death is, we are not." Their philosophy was expressed in the phrase, "Let us eat and drink; for to morrow we die." They lived for the present, with no hope for a future life. And Paul endorsed their philosophy on the hypothesis of no resurrection of the dead. "If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus," he says, "what advantageth it me, if the dead rise not? let us eat and drink; for to morrow we die." The Epicureans were right, if there is no resurrection.

The Stoics were fatalists. They admitted the existence of the gods, but did not believe they interfered in the affairs of men. To them the doctrine of the resurrection seemed unreasonable, but they were willing to hear more about it when convenient for them to do so. They had interrupted Paul's discourse at his mention of the resurrection of the dead, and had they been keenly interested to know more about his teachings they might have had opportunity right there and then. It is evident they had no deep desire to know the truth. Their interest was merely casual. They were the "forgetful hearers" of the Word.

Now why should it be thought a thing incredible that God can raise the dead? He who made man in the beginning can surely make him over again. Anyone who is not an atheist can believe that.

But let us put the question as Paul put it to Agrippa: "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?" All who believe in God admit that God can raise the dead. But why should He? What need is there of a resurrection?

None whatever, if we go to be with Him when we die. If we can enjoy the bliss of heaven without a body, why should we again be encumbered with "this house of clay"? We have never seen a satisfactory answer to this question.

But the Bible doctrine of conditional immortality has a very important place for the body. In the case of Jesus it was the same body that hung on the cross and was pierced by nails and spear, that came forth on the third day from Joseph's tomb. That body was just as much a part of Jesus as was His soul. In fact, it was His soul, in the meaning of the Scriptures; for do we not read, "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell (hades), neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption"? During those three days and nights which intervened between His crucifixion and His resurrection, Jesus had been in "the heart of the earth," according to His own statement: "As Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so also the Son of man shall be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." To Mary, after His resurrection, He said: "I am not yet ascended to my Father." Could He have said this if His soul had gone to heaven at death? And if His soul went into the grave at death, will not the souls of all His followers go there, too? "The disciple is not above his master: but every one shall be perfected as his master" (Luke 6:40, margin). As Paul puts it: "Christ the first-fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming" (1 Cor. 15:23). All of which clearly shows that resurrection is the gate to life, and no one can "climb up some other way." Jesus led the way into life through His resurrection and thus pointed the way for all who follow Him. There is no other way. "I am the way, the truth, and the life," said He.

While all Christians believe in the doctrine of the resurrection, not all understand that it is conditional. A careful reading of Jesus' words and of the teachings of the apostles makes this truth plain. Hear Jesus:

"Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day" (John 6:53). Here Jesus limits the resurrection to those who are vitally connected with Him by a living faith. The same truth is expressed in verses 39 and 40 of the same chapter, where He conditions eternal life and the resurrection upon faith in Him. Both are conditional. Both are matters of promise, and not of natural inheritance. Once we come to understand this, we see the greatness of Jesus' mission to the world. He came not to bring happiness merely, but life itself—eternal life, and that by a resurrection from the dead.—H. L. Babcock in The Herald of Life.

The Power and Purpose of Church Life

AS RECORDED in the famous passage in the 16th chapter of Matthew, our Savior told Peter that He would build His church upon the capacity of the human spirit to understand that He was the Christ, the Son of the living God.

That power was not of Peter, as it is not of any other man. It was and is the revelation of God through Christ that quickens a human soul unto spiritual understanding and adoration. The Lord built His church upon Himself, and the power of His love made understandable to and dominant in man through the Holy Spirit.

Thus the church is other-worldly in origin. It is likewise other-worldly in its power to propagate its message. It is also other-worldly in its purposes. The great revealed purpose of the church is that through its message and witnesses God shall gather out a people unto Himself in this world.

The by-products of the life imparted by Christ through the witness of His church and His people do cleanse and build and purify human society. But human uplift, as exhibited in the New Testament, and accomplished in the purpose of Christ for His church, is a by-product of His announced objectives for His church. Those objectives are nothing less than implanting and bringing to maturity in man of a new kind of life—spiritual life.

I

It is nowhere taught or implied that He came to reform this world or in His church to set up an institution the business of which is to reform the world. To the contrary, He declared that the world hated Him, and that it would hate them, if they were faithful in their witness to Him. No divider between men would He be in things that belonged to Caesar.

Men were to render to Caesar what belonged to him, and to God those things that belonged to Him. To God belongs the soul and its eternal destiny—which will be determined by its response to God's grace and love. To Caesar, whose sword God ordained, belongs civil and property and personal adjustments among men.

The power of the church is the supernatural power of God. That power convicts and brings to repentance and faith all who in reality come to God. By it the repentant believer is born again, and receives Jesus Christ as His Savior. It is power that from the unseen world has entered into the lives of believers. From beyond the veil the Spirit of God has entered into man and enabled him to see his sinful need, and to turn to Christ for his salvation. This is mystical, other-worldly, and brings into play in believers' lives a mystical and other-worldly power to guide their lives and to make them able to bring others to Him.

To what end? What are the purposes of God that He expects to accomplish through the life of His church, or the believer? His church was to be a witnessing body. It was to bear witness to man's sin and need and to the love and redemptive suffering of Christ for man's sin. It was also to bear witness that the newly imparted life is to be sustained by the supernatural abiding of Christ within it, just as it was imparted at first by receiving the supernatural life of Christ through the Holy Spirit.

II

The broadspread backsliding and world-conformity among many churches today consists in this—that they have become numb and almost dead to a sense of sin. This numbness to sin is the counterpart of numbness in faith. To such professing Christians there is an almost meaningless unreality in redemption through the atoning blood of Jesus Christ.

The Lord builds His churches to bear witness to these blessed revealed verities of the gospel of God. If they become blind and deaf to the great realities of sin and guilt and love and redemption, they are in fact at the point of spiritual death, whereas the Lord has commissioned them as witnesses of spiritual life.

But the power of God which the Lord Jesus in the famous passage of the Great Commission declared had been committed to Him to bring the dead to life through the witness of His disciples, was also the power which was to bring infants of faith, through the maturing of gospel milk and also of meat, unto spiritual growth and maturity. The limited usefulness and the powerlessness in spiritual witness of many of us—preachers as well as others—is that we have been like the Galatians of whom Paul queried (Gal. 3:3): "Having begun in the Spirit, are ye made perfect in the flesh?"

It will require humility to make the confession, but would it not become many of us frankly to confess, "Yes, Lord, we did begin in the Spirit. We were able, by the grace of God, out of our blindness and need to look unto Thee and be saved. But most of us were not even taught, and we did not understand that the supernatural life which

“The Precious Blood”

THIS expression is used by Peter, one of the greatest of the apostles, and perhaps the most tender-hearted of them all. No student of Scripture can fail to notice the striking contrast between the pre-pentecostal and the post-pentecostal character of this man. As his name signifies, he certainly became “a rock” in the early church, and he has left behind him an example we do well to follow. His appreciation of the “precious things” of the gospel is a call to every Christian to a more devotional study of the Word.

During the period of his discipleship he received the training necessary to equip him for his later service. He had learned something of himself and his own inherent weakness. At heart he was loyal, though at times impetuous, and then vacillating between courage and cowardice. This culminated in his denial of his Lord with oaths and curses. But let us not be too hasty to condemn him. Is there one among us who dares to throw a stone? One thing is certain, if he learned his own weakness and also to distrust himself, he also became aware of the tenderness and compassionate love of the Savior, and these are among the “precious things” it is also our privilege to learn.

The denial was the climax of human weakness, and the cross the eclipse of his cherished hopes and aspirations.

But the darkness of the night of the crucifixion soon gave place to the dawn of the resurrection morn. The tomb of despair became radiant with hope as from the angelic messengers who adorned it came the supreme announcement: “He is not here: for he is risen; come, see the place where the Lord lay.” Yes, Jesus was alive again. This was the good news borne by the women who had visited the sepulcher very early on the first day of this new week. They told the disciples, also, that Jesus was going before them into Galilee and would meet them there, and with this message came a special request that it should be communicated to Peter. Such was the Lord’s feeling toward His failing disciple.

Thus the outlook of these otherwise despondent men became changed.

That their hopes had been crushed was evinced by two of their number on the occasion of that memorable walk to Emmaus. Their conversation centered in their disappointment, and when a third one joined himself to their company this was still their theme. To their great surprise, however, the stranger, instead of being sympathetic, gently rebuked them for their little faith: “O fools and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken; ought not Christ to have suffered these things and to enter into his glory?” It is said of one eminent divine that, while pondering the gospel story, his “heart became strangely warm.” Can we wonder, then, that the hearts of these men burned as He talked with them by the way? But who could this stranger be? He talked freely of the recent happenings and then, wonder of wonders, He expounded the Scriptures and applied them to the very experiences through which they had just passed. “Beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself.” Yet “their eyes were holden, that they should not know him.”

It was not until “he went in to tarry with them” and “took bread, and blessed it, and brake, and gave unto them,” and then “vanished out of their sight,” that their eyes were opened and they knew Him. “Who could it be but Jesus?”

Thrilled with this glorious experience they made haste to the “eleven gathered together at Jerusalem.” And what a meeting that was! How they tried to rehearse that Bible lesson given to them “by the way,” and then told of the Savior’s self-revelation as He vanished from their sight. Truly, “the Lord is risen indeed.”

How the “eleven” received their testimony we are not told; we know that there was at least one doubter in their midst, but confirmation was not long delayed. “As they spake, Jesus himself stood in the midst of them.” He quickly allayed their rising fears as He showed them His hands and His feet—blessed pierced hands and feet. And then He expounded once again the fulfillment of all that was written in Moses, the prophets, and the Psalms, concerning Him. “Christ in All the Scriptures” would have been an appropriate title for that wonderful Bible lesson.

“Beginning at Moses.” Moses, let it be marked, the author of the first five books of the Bible, the Pentateuch, that section of Holy Writ so often the subject of unsympathetic criticism in these enlightened (?) days. Jesus began there, at the beginning. He revered these pages as the very Word of God; they were an integral part of His Bible.

Now it is quite open for us to wonder at what point or incident this exposition began. No doubt the subject uppermost in all their minds was the decease (or exodus) He had just accomplished at Jerusalem. This was an exodus from death. It is possible this may have carried their minds back to the story of the fall; it was there that sin, with its condemnation of death, first entered into the world. There, also, God’s merciful provision for the guilty pair was manifest, for the clothing provided was suggestive of sacrifice in that far-off and distant day. That, surely, would have been a fitting starting point.

But we are reminded that Christ’s earthly mission was primarily to His people Israel. He “came unto his own,” and it may be that the founding of this nation, and their exodus from Egypt, formed the starting point of the discourse. It was of this nation that the disciples were representatives, and for its deliverance and salvation they fondly hoped. In either case there was one fundamental principle underlying the story, i. e., that redemption could only be accomplished through sacrifice. What was the most momentous happening on the night of Israel's deliverance? Was it not the slaying of the paschal lamb and the sprinkling of "the precious blood"? Faith in God's promises concerning the precious blood was the fundamental of fundamentals that mattered then. It is the fundamental of all fundamentals that matters now. That alone secured, and still secures, immunity from the righteous judgment of God.

Assuming "The Passover" to have been the subject of the discourse, the further study of "all the prophets and the psalms" would yield a flood of corroborative evidence that without the shedding of blood there could be no remission of sins, and only upon the ground of substitutionary sacrifice could anyone be restored to life and favor.

How such a message would thrill the hearts of the disciples, as the great facts of history were recounted to them. But how much greater must have been the thrill and adoration as they were shown that these were but types of the great antitype, Jesus, "the Lamb of God," whose precious blood had been shed for the sins of the world. Yes, He opened their understanding that they might understand the Scriptures. Oh, that He may illumine ours, also, as we sit at His feet to hear His Word!

Before proceeding, we would reiterate that the foundation of the apostles' equipment for service lay in their knowledge and understanding of the Word of God. And the precious theme to which this "Word" pointed was the death and resurrection of the Lord Jesus. Now it also testifies of His triumphs. He is alive, the Vanquisher of Death, the Savior of the World. This was the gospel the apostles were commissioned to preach.

But there is more to be added. During a period of forty days after His resurrection, our Lord companied with them. He gave them commandments and also spoke of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God. This excited their curiosity as to when these things should be, but instead of satisfying them on this point He made a further promise that power should be given to them to carry on their work effectually.

Thus their preparation was complete. Their message would embrace the foundation and extend to include the whole edifice; the suffering and the glory; the cross and the crown.

With Pentecost the "power" came, and the immediate effect is seen, especially in Peter. Instead of being the weakling of the betrayal night, he became the fearless contestant of the gospel of the risen Christ. Thousands repented and turned to the Lord under his ministry. And his zeal remained steadfast unto the end. The enthusiasm which marked the preaching of Peter is predominant also in his Epistles. To him every aspect of the gospel was precious, as was also the faith possessed by those who embraced it. It would be both interesting and helpful to review the "precious" things of which he speaks, but space forbids. We will, however, venture some further thought upon the one text we have chosen.

"THE PRECIOUS BLOOD"

In Peter's use of this expression the theme again is redemption. The purport of the passage is to show the utter impossibility of anything being made to avail for human redemption save "the precious blood of Christ." Only through death could Death's dark king be defeated. This was in keeping with the previous types. A victim slain provided a covering for our first parents. The blood of the lamb alone availed upon the great Passover night. It was the blood borne by the high priest into the holy of holies that availed on behalf of the offerer; so now it is the "precious blood of Christ" alone that can make an atonement for the soul. Corruptible things such as silver and gold are of no avail, place and privilege count for nought, the only redeeming power lies in the blood.

But, it may be asked, why is such emphasis laid upon the "blood"? What is its significance? If many of our well-known hymns were consulted as a means to answer this question, it would appear that the "precious blood" as blood alone possessed some cleansing virtue, that in it lay some mystic power to wash away the sinner's sin. But is this a correct understanding of its application in Scripture? We judge not.

We have already quoted that the "blood alone can make an atonement for the soul." Here it is evident that "blood" and "soul" are in some way to be regarded as equivalents. Throughout the Scripture it will be found that "blood" and "life" and "soul" are used interchangeably. Let one example suffice: "It (the blood) is the life of all flesh; the blood of it is for the life thereof . . . for the life of all flesh is the blood thereof" (Lev. 17:14). By reference to the margin it will be seen that "life" and "soul" are equivalents in this passage.

It will therefore be apparent that the shedding of the "blood" is the forfeiture of "life" or "soul." In the plainest words possible, it is death. Now "death" is presented as the "wages of sin," and nothing short of "death" could effect an atonement. Had it been possible, as it now is, to extract only a proportion of the blood from the victim's veins, this could never have been accepted as a substitute. Moses was instructed that the paschal lamb was to be taken, and kept until the fourteenth day, and then killed, before the "precious blood" could be sprinkled upon the houses. Is it not even so with the great Antitype? With all reverence we assert that the blood flowing from His thorn-pierced brow, as precious as that was, could never cleanse us from sin. Not until the spear had rent that sacred side, and He had literally "poured out his soul unto death," the last drop of His precious blood having been spilt, could it be said that redemption's price had been paid. Well may the Apostle Paul epitomize the gospel into these few words: "We preach Christ, and him crucified." In both type and antitype the essential feature is a victim slain.

It will now be as well to consider briefly why this should be so. This inquiry has a direct bearing upon the nature and condition of the sinner the "precious blood" was shed to redeem. It will be admitted, generally, that the human family has fallen under the domination of sin, but it will not be so readily agreed that the penalty incurred as a result is death, absolute death. Ever since its first insinuation of the evil one, which led our first parents astray, attempts have been made to modify the penalty inflicted, until in most accepted beliefs there is little correspondence between the "wages of sin" as taught, and the penalty borne by our Savior, Jesus Christ. For the absoluteness of death, life in some inferior form is substituted, and this in turn supplies the basis for the theory of eternal suffering. But if eternal torment is the "wages of sin," we then fail hopelessly to find any compensation in the death borne by our Savior. On the other hand, if death, as the Scriptures state, is the penalty, and this implies a complete cessation of being, then it surely demands a divine redeemer — one who can enter its dark domain with the power to rise out of it again, if the sinner is to be rescued from its grip. And, blessed be God, it is such a Savior we have. "It is Christ that died, yea rather, that is risen again, who is even at the right hand of God."

This is the gospel message; it is the sole foundation of our hope for a resurrection unto eternal life, also. No other "soul" or "life" sacrificed could accomplish this—but only "the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot." It was witnessed to in every offering, but all these in their totality and over many generations could never take away one human sin, much less could they redeem from the power of death.

Can we wonder, then, that Peter waxed valiant in preaching this gospel? The Jews cherished the memory of their nation's deliverance from Egypt; they were also proud of their privilege of approach to the holy places, but they failed to believe the testimony of Moses and the prophets which pointed forward to the "Lamb of God" whose precious blood should take away the sins of the world. He suffered, the just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God. This, we believe, formed a part of the conversation on the way to Emmaus. It was confirmed to the "eleven" in the upper room at Jerusalem; it is the gospel we desire to preach today.

In concluding, it may be well to emphasize two points which go to show the logic of the atonement. (1) The Scriptures assert that the "wages of sin is death." The theology, therefore, that attributes to every soul an inherent immortality, stands in absolute contradiction of this plain pronouncement. If such immortality could be proved true, it would imply the eternal conscious suffering of the unsaved, and (2) such an implication would render ineffective another equally clear declaration that "Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures." This reference to the "scriptures" can only relate to the Old Testament, and the analogy therefore must be with the types of that age. In every case, as we have seen, these substitutes were slain, but never tormented. Even so the antitypical Sacrifice was slain. He endured, voluntarily, the death of the cross to meet the demands of divine righteousness and "set the captive free." But there is not the slightest suggestion of eternal suffering here revealed. To import the idea is to destroy the harmony of the whole subject. Between the penalty inflicted and the judgment freely borne there is a perfect correspondence and every soul believing its glad message will yet share in the Savior's triumphs. Of such a one it is said already that "he hath passed from death unto life." Such is the certainty for those who believe.

May we ever strive to preserve in its purity this gospel which once for all has been delivered unto the saints.

"Precious, precious blood of Jesus
Shed on Calvary,
Shed for rebels, shed for sinners,
Shed for me.

"Bless, bless the Conqueror slain,
Slain in His victory,
Who lived, who died, who lives again,
For thee, His church, for thee."

THE COUNTRY PREACHER

THERE are some who seem to think that any minister who cannot succeed in the city should go to the country and devote himself to the country ministry. This is very far from being as it should be. Of course there are some men who can succeed in the country better than in the city, but it should be borne in mind that everything being equal, it takes a stronger preacher, a more versatile minister, to succeed in the country than in the city.

Another fact which we should always bear in mind is that the country pulpit is more valuable than the city pulpit. The country preacher is preaching to those who are the real producers in our nation. The farmers are those who feed us and clothe us and pay much of our taxes and tariff. The country preacher's pulpit is at the fountain-head, the source of supply.

Again the country preacher is the one who is preaching to and converting to Christ America's religious, political, educational, and commercial leaders of the next generation.

If the city pulpit needs gifted men, remember that the country pulpits are in greater need of more gifted men.

The city minister has his ministerial associations and various clubs and organizations which aid him in keeping "pepped" up and enthused and doing his best. Not so with the average country minister. He must generate his own steam, and, by sheer force of character and determination, make his pulpit a dynamo for righteousness, culture, enthusiasm, and devotion.

Whereas the country preacher has the most important job and the hardest job, it takes a greater man to succeed in the country than in the city.

God bless all ministers who preach His Word faithfully but may a double portion rest upon those forgotten and neglected ministers who are giving their lives and their all in preaching the Word of God to those in the rural sections of our great nation, the sections from which 95 per cent of our great men come.—Harry Benton in World Evangel.

THE STANDARD OF DEMOCRACY

PRESIDENT Theodore Roosevelt perhaps expressed more clearly than any other great American the principle upon which the United States Government is founded when he said that "the rich man should have justice and that the poor man should have justice, and that no man should have more or less." In the following excerpt from his fifth annual message to the Congress, which was presented to that body on December 5, 1905, Mr. Roosevelt enlarged upon his conception of Americanism.

"The standard we should establish is the standard of conduct, not the standard of occupation, of means, or of social position. It is the man's moral quality, his attitude toward the great questions which concern all humanity, his cleanness of life, his power to do his duty toward himself and toward others, which really count; and if we substitute for the standard of personal judgment which treats each man according to his merits, another standard in accordance with which all men of one class are favored and all men of another class discriminated against, we shall do irreparable damage to the body politic. I believe that our people are too sane, too self-respecting, too fit for self-government, ever to adopt such an attitude. This Government is not and never shall be government by plutocracy. This Government is not and never shall be government by a mob. It shall continue to be in the future what it has been in the past, a Government based on the theory that each man, rich or poor, is to be treated simply and solely on his worth as a man, that all his personal property rights are to be safeguarded, and that he is neither to wrong others nor to suffer wrong from others."

The above lofty definition of the American standard of democracy is in every way admirable and worthy of the great man who uttered it and of the great people whose sentiments he endeavored to voice. But such an idealistic state cannot be developed nor maintained until selfishness is dethroned and human government gives place to divine.

the races of the earth united with them in such ignorant worship. And sadly enough, there are millions of people today, many of whom even count themselves Christian, doing the same thing, worshipping a God whom they do not know!

FAITH IN GOD THE FIRST ESSENTIAL OF CHRISTIAN FAITH

Faith in God is the basis upon which all other religious beliefs rest. "He that cometh to God must believe that he is," otherwise he would make no effort to find Him and to know Him.

"This is life eternal," Jesus said, "that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent" (John 17:3).

Let us notice the point of emphasis there: "That they might know thee, the only true God!" It is indeed fundamental that we should know that there is only ONE TRUE GOD. To believe and to teach otherwise would be both unscriptural and unchristian.

When one of the scribes, who were among those who tried so often to entangle Him in His words, asked Jesus, "Which is the first commandment of all?" the Lord replied, "The first of all the commandments is, Hear, O Israel; The Lord our God is one Lord" (Mark 12:28, 29).

In making this response to the scribe, Jesus echoed the teaching of Moses and the prophets. In fact, He drew His answer word for word from the saying of Moses in Deuteronomy 6:4—"Hear, O Israel: The Lord our God is one Lord." And to this agree the words of the Prophet Malachi (2:10)—"Have we not all one father? Hath not one God created us?"

We are told that in the beginning "God created man in his own image" (Gen. 1:27). Malachi declared that "one God created us." Was man created in the "image" of an invisible principle? Was he made in the "likeness" of an intangible, immaterial force, having neither body nor parts? Can we conceive of an "image" being made of something which cannot be seen, which is possessed of no substance or organization?

With the thought in mind of the traditional "Trinity," I would also ask, Was man created in the image of "God the Father," or of "God the Son," or of "God the Holy Ghost"?

The apostles, who followed closely in the footsteps of their great Teacher in their theology, emphasized strongly the unity of God. Paul's language is both clear and positive on this subject. Writing to the church at Corinth, he says: "There is none other God but one. For though there be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth, (as there be gods many, and lords many,) but to us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we by him" (1 Cor. 8:4-6).

"To us," i. e., to Paul and to the Corinthian Christians, and to you and me if we are fellow Christians with Paul, "there is but one God" (1 Tim. 2:5), who is "the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God" (1 Tim. 1:17).

I am sure it would be contrary to the desire of the ever-humble Son of God for us to declare Him to be God Himself, worthy as He is of our adoration! We recall how that on one occasion "one came and said unto him, Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?" And Jesus promptly responded, "Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is, God" (Matt. 19:16, 17). Observe the force of the singular number: "There is none good but ONE, that is, God." Jesus would not permit a statement to go unchallenged that suggested that even He was "good" as God is good. Paul declared that God only is "wise"; Jesus, that God only is "good."

The Church of God everywhere affirms this great truth to be essential to salvation, that "there is but one God, the Father," that "the God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, the God of our fathers" (Acts 3:13), "is one Lord"

(Deut. 6:4), and beside Him there is no God (Isa. 44:6).

DOCTRINE OF TRINITY UNKNOWN TO EARLY CHURCH

Some denominations today place the doctrine of the Trinity first in order of importance in Christian teaching. This doctrine, stated in the language of The First Article of the Church of England, is as follows: "There is but One Living and True God. . . . And in Unity of this Godhead there be Three Persons, of one substance, power, and eternity; the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost."

It is interesting to recall in this connection the declaration we quoted from the Statement of Faith of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States in our article on "Authority": "Holy Scripture containeth all things necessary to salvation; so that whatsoever is not contained therein, nor may be proved thereby, is not required of any man, that it should be believed as an article of faith, or be thought requisite or necessary to salvation."

We seriously question—in fact we are sure—that this strange doctrine of three gods in one cannot be "proved" by the "Holy Scripture," and therefore should not be considered as "necessary to salvation."

It is confessed, even by some of its strongest advocates, that belief in the Trinity is not an essential to eternal salvation. Dr. Robert V. Foster, D. D., Professor of Systematic Theology in the Cumberland Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Lebanon, Tennessee, says in his great work on Systematic Theology, that "So far as the formulated doctrine (of the Trinity) is concerned, . . . it is of course not essential to salvation; for comparatively few Christians even, to say nothing of mankind in general, know anything about this or any other doctrine" (page 261).

But what is so freely confessed regarding the nonessential character of Trinitarian teaching, cannot be said of the doctrine of the being, nature, and character of God. For "he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him" (Ileb. 11:6). One cannot be saved without such an understanding of God.

As we conclude, permit me to quote the following from Discussion on the Trinity by N. Summerbell:

"None of the early fathers were Trinitarians. Theodosius, the tenth professedly Christian emperor of Rome (379 A. D.), was the first baptized in the faith of the Trinity."

This monarch suffered a severe illness following a difficult but successful military campaign, "and, in the belief that his end was near, received baptism at the hands of Ascolius, the orthodox (Greek) bishop of Thessalonica. His baptism was followed, February 28, 380, by an edict which imposed the Nicene Creed (containing a binding clause on the Trinity) on his subjects as the faith of the land" (McClintock and Strong's Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature).

Returning to Mr. Summerbell's Discussion, I quote further:

"At that time (the time of Theodosius' baptism in 380 A. D.) all Christian nations rejected it (the Trinity). Of forty-five councils held in the fourth century, embracing the largest councils held in the early ages, only thirteen of the smaller ones held to the Trinity, while thirty-two opposed it."

In the light of Biblical testimony, amply supported by the best early scholarship of the church, the Church of God affirms that the unity of God is an Essential Element of Christian Faith and necessary to salvation. And at the same time, it denies the doctrine of the Trinity and rejects it on the ground that it presents a false and unscriptural definition of the character, nature, and being of God.

violence to the meaning of Scripture we may substitute the word "condemnation" for judgment in John 12:47f: "And if any man hear my words, and believe not, I condemn him not: for I came not to condemn the world, but to save the world. He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that condemneth him: the word that I have spoken, the same shall condemn him in the last day." The "word" will condemn those that believe it not; Jesus does not need to do it.

Again, judgment may refer to the Jewish-Roman wars that ended the disgusting history of the Jewish world by the conquests of Titus; or to the greater wars that shall end our present regime to usher in the reign of righteousness. Two portions of Holy Writ are most often misapplied. 2 Peter 3:7, in speaking of the wars and tumults which shall end our present dispensation, writes thus: "But the heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." If the belief that the earth is going to be actually burned be accepted, many things in that chapter cannot be explained. Previously in the columns of THE RESTITUTION HERALD we have set forth our views on that phase of the subject. Peter has said that the first heaven and earth were destroyed by water, referring without the necessity of proof to the flood in the time of Noah. But the present earth is headed for its own destruction through war and its accompaniments of fire, famine, and turmoil: "the day of judgment (punishment) and perdition (total annihilation) of ungodly men." If men are left to themselves they will annihilate one another as witnessed by the recent World War, and the present Spanish civil war. That passage might be otherwise explained if it were not followed by the statement that we are to look for a new earth, "wherein dwelleth righteousness."

With these thoughts in mind, let the reader, without our explanations, turn to those much-discussed passages in 2 Peter 2:1 and Jude 6. Are not the people of whom we have been speaking the kind referred to in 2 Peter 2:9: "The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished." Let us read it thus: ". . . and to reserve the unjust unto the day of punishment to be punished." Is God going to punish the world with eternal, tormenting fire? No, it is the same kind of fire referred to in 2 Peter 3, the fire of wars and tumults of the great wars of the last days of Gentile times.

But judgment has a more glorious meaning than any of these we have discussed. Slight reference was made to it in connection with Acts 17:30. The ancient Hebrews and Romans and modern Americans have one thing in common: a judge has the power of injunction. That is, that judicial power is not confined to mere presiding at court trials as is the case in modern Europe. The Hebrew judge and the Roman magistrate, in common with the American judge, could enforce the law as well as try cases at law. When the Bible uses the word "judge" or "judgment," that power is often meant. Judgment may then mean government. Let us read Acts 17:30 with that meaning: "And the times of this ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men every where to repent; because he hath appointed a day in the which he will rule the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained."

Do not the Scriptures give ample support to that teaching? Let us refer to Isaiah 32:1; 9:6, 7; 11:3, 4. In the latter passage He speaks about judging the poor. Certainly He is not going to condemn, or punish, the poor! But he is going to "reprove with equity for the meek of the earth." In England and America there are certain cases where the law if enforced would work an injustice. In such cases the whole matter is taken up in "equity" rather than at law. Or in case a man would kill somebody in the enforcement of the law his case may be taken into the regular courts and the executive pardon used. Christ is not going to govern after the generally accepted standards of men, but will rule with justice, equity, and that sight which perceives the thoughts of men. He knew that the Samaritan woman at the well had had many husbands without her telling Him. He knew that the Pharisees and their allies were trying to trap Him, and could read their thoughts. The saints are also going to have the same powers given to them: "Until the Ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom" (Dan. 7:22). That accords with Isaiah 32:1, which says: "Behold, a king shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment." And this quotation brings us now to a consideration of another phase of the "eternal judgment."

The things that we do, those are eternally the things that we have done. Whether those things be good or evil, we cannot change them. They have passed into the realm of eternal things. We have used our judgment: in other words, the judgment, or the decision, is ours to make. Upon such decisions ultimately rests our hope of eternal life, or of eternal annihilation. Now just when such a decision is made the Scriptures are not specific.

Let us contemplate a few portions of the Holy Writ that speak of such a judgment. "Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man. For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil" (Eccl. 12:13).

"But why dost thou judge (condemn) thy brother? or why dost thou set at nought thy brother? for we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ. . . . So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God" (Rom. 14:10, 12). In this last portion of Scripture we note that everybody is to give an account of himself to God through Christ. But before we picture that as a criminal trial, let us read again: "Forasmuch then as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, arm yourselves likewise with the same mind: for he that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin; that he no longer should live the rest of his time in the flesh to the lusts of men, but to the will of God. For the time past of our life may suffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles, when we walked in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revellings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries; wherein they think it strange that ye run not with them to the same excess of riot, speaking evil of you: who shall give account to him that is ready to judge the quick and the dead. For for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit" (1 Peter 4:1-6).

How could the gospel be preached to the dead? Assuredly we must, if we accept that at face value, also accept the idea that when Christ died His soul went down to the place of eternal torment and preached to the "spirits in prison"! Who are the dead? The passage says those that are in the flesh, or in sin. When Jesus spoke as follows He was not referring to the physically dead: "And another of his disciples said unto him, Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father. But Jesus said unto him, Follow me; and let the dead bury their dead." (See also Luke 9:59.) Was not that the kind of dead people to whom the gospel was preached? Those who are dead in this manner are also referred to in Ephesians 2:1: "And you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins; wherein in time past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience. . . . Even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ, (by grace are ye saved;) and hath raised us up together to sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus." "What shall we say then? Shall we continue in sin, that grace may abound? God forbid. How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein? Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection" (Rom. 6:1-5). "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection (the resurrection from the symbolic grave of waters): on such the second death (the first one was when he went into the symbolic grave of waters; the second one, the actual physical death) hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years" (Rev. 20:6).

Do You Really Want the Lord to Come?

Just this evening a man said to me that he never yet had wanted the Lord to come; there are too many relatives and friends who are not ready to meet the day of judgment. However, Jesus teaches us to pray "Thy kingdom come." What else is this than praying for the second coming of Christ?

This dread that is in so many for the second coming of Christ is really a lack of faith in God arising from an ignorance of God and His promises.

Multitudes of peace organizations can never bring in a lasting peace among nations and individuals. Only the coming of Christ can and will do that. "They shall beat their swords into plowshares" (Isa. 2:4) will be one of the blessed results of the coming of our Lord in His kingdom.

All the scientific devices in the world can never make people live so long as Methuselah, or anywhere near so long. Science has added back to the span of life but a small percentage of the years mankind has lost by repeated sinning since the first sin of Adam. It is only in the paradise of God that we find the Tree of Life. That paradise can come to earth only with the coming of Christ. Then, and then only, may men live forever.

And so we can go through the whole long list of human sin and misery, and we find that the only remedy for it all is the kingdom of God established on earth with Jesus Christ as the reigning King of kings.

Therefore, I long for the coming of Christ with all my heart, and soul, and body. I trust God that the general good of His coming will infinitely outweigh any part of it that we now might dread. Let us all seek a deeper understanding of the love of God.

A Cloudy Day

How often do you find your heart overcast with cloudiness, and do you notice the effect on those with whom you come in contact?

It is only natural for one to have his "off days" when he feels depressed and sad; but it is interesting to note how you can influence them. It is very pleasing to see a smile chase away shadows on the face of a friend when you apply a few cheerful words and a friendly smile.

It's letting the light of Jesus shine so that others may see and benefit by it.

"Laugh, and the world laughs with you;
Weep, and you weep alone.
This brave old earth must borrow its mirth;
It has troubles enough of its own."

We'll borrow our mirth—not from worldly pleasures, but by living and following the example set by our Savior, Jesus Christ!—Lorraine Brossard in the Minnesota Berean paper, The Nobler.

Empty-Handed

Must I go empty-handed?

Thus my dear Redeemer meet?
Not one day of service give Him,
Lay no trophies at His feet?

Not at death I shrink nor falter,
For my Savior saves me now;
But to meet Him empty-handed,
Tho't of that now clouds my brow.

O, the years of sinning wasted,
Could I but recall them now,
I would give them to my Savior,
To His will I'd gladly bow.

O ye saints, arouse, be earnest,
Up and work while yet 'tis day;
Ere the night of death o'ertake thee,
Strive for souls while still you may.

—Selected by J. R. LeCrone, Eden Valley, Minn.

Broad-Minded

Whether you know it or not, there are people that call you narrow-minded. It is the sneer of vice against virtue. One young man thinks it is being broad-minded to go with the crowd that can stomach anything. He is the type whose mangled body is often extracted from the mess that was once his car. Another young man seeks his recreation with true friends who go in for the things that leave the mind refreshed, the body invigorated, and the spirit edified. Which young man is being truly narrow-minded?

Is the great athlete narrow of mind because he doesn't debauch? Ridiculous! He must develop the things that make him a winner in the race. So the Christian is the most broad-minded of people, for he takes care of his body, mind, and heart in order to gain the highest prize.

The person of broadest mind sees clearly to give up harmful things for helpful; he has no time for the things that do not help when time is needed for the things of positive benefit. A broad-minded person understands that he is steward of himself, and he desires to rise higher in the scale of humanity. The narrow-minded person sinks toward the level of the hog, wallowing in filth and stench.

I call for a new definition of the narrow-minded person: a person who does not seek to know God and who does not have his life centered on the way of Jesus Christ with all his heart, mind, and strength.—C. A. Smead in The Nobler.

HEROES OF FAITH

FATHER had just come home from work and had been telling Mother and Betty and Bobby all about a big fire he had seen downtown. One fireman had gone many times into the burning building where several families lived and had rescued their little ones and two aged grandparents.

"He was a real hero," declared Bobby. "I wish I had been there so I could have seen him."

"Yes, he was very brave, the bravest of the company," answered Father quietly.

"I bet the crowd cheered him, too," Bobby said.

"I'm sure he must be a great hero," Mother joined in. "But it takes greater courage to be brave when there is no one to cheer. Many real heroes perform great deeds that those around them know nothing about. The last Sunday school lesson of the quarter points out that fact to us."

"Let's get our books out now and study it," said Father.

"It's the review lesson," Mother told them when Betty had given each one his Bible and they were all settled in their chairs. "Hebrews 11 sums up most of the lessons. The first two lessons were on the creation and the disobedience of Adam and Eve. Then came a lesson on temperance, one of which is given in each quarter. Let's begin with Noah, lesson 4. Betty, tell us why Noah was brave enough to build an ark and tell people that a flood was coming when it had never even rained as yet."

"He was brave enough to build an ark because he believed that what God said was true," Betty replied.

"By faith," said Father. "Faith is simply believing in God, in the people around you, in each other. The things that we do every day show in whom we believe or in what we believe."

"Two lessons on Abraham follow," Mother continued. "Bobby, Hebrews 11, verses 8 and 17, shows us in what two great ways Abraham showed his faith. What were they?"

"He obeyed God by leaving his home and going where God wanted him to go, not knowing where he was going," said Bobby. "And when God asked him to offer up his only son he didn't hesitate, even though he didn't know God wasn't going to let him do it in the end."

"The next lesson is about Isaac, that very son," said Father. "Betty, do you remember anything about him?"

"He wouldn't quarrel, I remember that. God had promised him land for a home, but he had to move several times to keep peace with the people of that country."

"Yes, he showed that he believed God's promise to be with him and bless him," said Father. "Even the King of the Philistines acknowledged that the God Isaac worshiped was a God who kept His promises."

"Next we have two lessons, 8 and 9, about twins, Jacob and Esau," said Mother. "Bobby, you were so interested in them I know you can tell us about them."

"Esau sold his inheritance to Jacob one day for something to eat. Esau lived only from day to day. He never looked ahead as Jacob did. Jacob had lots to learn, though, because he wanted everything for himself. He found out later on that God would do things for him in His own good time and in His own way."

"Very well stated, Bobby. Next and last are the three lessons about Joseph and his father and brothers. I believe you were both more interested in Joseph than in any other of our heroes of faith. Tell us, Betty, in what way you think Joseph showed his faith in God."

"He served God just as well when he was having nothing but trouble as he did when everything was going well," Betty told them. "He told his brothers that though they meant it all for evil that they did to him, God turned it to good."

"Bobby, what do you remember particularly about Joseph?"

"He didn't try to pay his brothers back by doing them harm. But when he was the only one in the country that could save their lives he hurried to do it. And then, I remember, Joseph did each day's work the very best he knew how and was advanced right along by the King."

"Joseph never forgot the promise God had made to bring his descendants out of Egypt again, back up to the land of Canaan, their promised homeland. And he told his brothers to see to it that his body was not buried in Egypt, but taken along to Canaan when they returned," said Mother. "It was many, many long, sad years before they returned, but of that we will study next quarter. And now, Father, you sum it all up for us."

"Action always follows real faith. If we have faith in God we will obey Him. We just can't help it. For faith means that we are sure of the things we hope for; we know we will receive the things God has promised even though we cannot see them. And because of our faith we try to please Him."

INDIANA BIBLE SCHOOL

As Bro. J. W. McLain, who has been engaged to work in our school this year, is an experienced organizer and instructor of harmonica bands, we wonder if some recreational work along this line would not be enjoyable and profitable for the youth.

If there is sufficient interest in this kind of work it will be planned as part of our recreational program.

Everyone who would like to do this bring your harmonica—a "Marine Band," "Hohler Band," "Old Standby," "34-B," or "Chromonica," Key of C. You do not need to know how to play, you will be taught.

Also bring stringed or reed instruments if you play. F. A. Stilson.

COMMITTEE REPORT

The committee that was appointed by the General Conference to ascertain the feeling of the people toward the establishment of a Student Bible Training Class, and to plan a course of study for such a class, if said class should be desired, wish to submit the following report.

Applications for membership, 1; inquiries concerning course offered, none.

We wish to thank Bro. Richard LeCrone and Bro. Cecil Smead for their able articles on the subject of a Training Class.

BRUSH CREEK CHURCH OF GOD Near Tippecanoe City, Ohio

By the time these lines are in print Bro. T. A. Drinkard will be in the midst of his sermons at our annual spring meetings. Sr. Emory Macy has charge of the primary class in the Bible School, and Sr. Eunice is teaching the intermediates. The teen age are studying this year with the adults under the leadership of Bro. Drinkard. Sunday, June 13, will be our final day, with three preaching services and dinner at the church. The Lord is gracious to us. Come!

Sydney Magaw, Pastor.

LOUISIANA CHURCH NOTES

The attendance and interest at the Blood River and Happy Woods Churches continue to be gratifying. A number of new faces are seen in the audience at each service, and we sincerely trust that this interest may be continued.

Our Wednesday night Bible class at Happy Woods is proving to be very interesting and helpful to all. The book of Acts is being studied at the present time.

The new Berean class in Ponchatoula has been kept going the past few weeks by the faithfulness of a few members. The attendance has been held down by the rush of the strawberry season; and when we say "rush" we mean just that! We are hoping that now the attendance may increase.

The Berean class at Blood River is also picking up in attendance and interest since the close of the berry season, and for this we are thankful.

Harry Goekler, Pastor.

RANDALL'S NORTHWEST DASH

The recently created Home Mission Board has arranged with Bro. C. E. Randall, president of the Ministerial Association, to make an evangelistic trip across the continent to the Northwest. He will plan to visit as many churches in Washington and Oregon as possible and also any places along the route that desire it. He is anxious to see as many of the isolated brethren as possible, also.

Do You Want Him to Stop?

His schedule is being arranged as rapidly as possible. Contacts are desired with all places where there are believers who would like to have him stop off. If your church has not had an inquiry as yet, and you wish Bro. Randall to make you a visit, don't wait, but notify M. W. Lyon, 13517 Darley Ave., Cleveland, Ohio, at once. A short meeting could even be arranged, or a week or ten days, if advisable. Bro. Randall will leave Fonthill, Ont., July 5, working westward through Minnesota, and leaving St. Paul July 12 over the Great Northern. He must be back at Oregon, Ill., by August 3. Stops will necessarily, therefore, be brief.

A Great Opportunity

This is the first evangelistic effort put forth by the Mission Board since its organization. We are anxious to make it count for the utmost. Bro. Randall will carry the message of the Mission work and of the General Conference, and will inspire you with his vigorous presentation of the gospel message. Whatever offerings are made, above expenses, will be turned into the Mission Fund for further evangelistic work. In these days of crisis, with the Lord's return so near at hand, we need to witness far and near! This may be your great opportunity. Let's all make the most of this trip, pray for its success, and everyone cooperate as far as possible.

Send in your reservation for a meeting at once.

M. W. Lyon, Mission Board Chairman.

BEAR, ARKANSAS

We are pleased to announce that Elder T. A. Drinkard of Handley, Texas, is to be with us to begin a meeting at the church June 18. We have not had the pleasure of hearing Bro. Drinkard preach, but we have greatly appreciated his articles in The Herald.

We are looking forward to a very interesting meeting and invite all to attend, that we may grow in grace and in a knowledge of the truth.

The Arkansas-Oklahoma Conference will be held at Driggs, in Logan County, Ark., about the last of July. We would be glad to have a representation from all the churches in both the North and the South.

Mrs. S. A. Dorris.

CASEY, ILLINOIS

The Church of God (Restitution Church) at Casey, Ill., is to have Bro. L. E. Conner with them over the week-end of June 12 and 13. A cordial invitation is extended to the brotherhood in that vicinity to be present at the meeting.

BLAIR, NEBRASKA

I wish to report a very good meeting held at Blair, Sunday, May 30. The morning Bible study was led by Bro. John Denchfield, followed by a sermon by Bro. E. E. Giesler. Basket dinner was at the park. At 2:30 p.m., a sermon was given by Bro. Denchfield.

The day was certainly enjoyed by all present. A few showers of rain came during the afternoon as added blessings. Bro. Giesler will be with us until the latter part of the week.

Sr. Lucille LeCrone was operated on Tuesday, May 25, in an Omaha hospital. We are glad to state that she is recovering nicely.

I wish the brethren would pray for Sr. Howard Appleby, who is in a very serious condition at her home near Omaha. How much this sin-sick world needs the Lord! O, may He come soon, is my prayer.

Birdie Krogh.

ST. CLOUD, MINNESOTA

From The Gleaner, the local bulletin of the St. Cloud Church of God, we "glean" the following items of general and specific interest.

Sunday, June 6, was to be observed with an outdoor service. A picnic dinner was served at noon (weather permitting, we suppose). Both Sunday school and the worship service were scheduled for the picnic grounds.

Monday, June 7, is the date for the annual business meeting. "This meeting is very important and we urge everyone who is a member of the church to be present." That is an admonition that should be addressed to members of every church on the approach of the business meeting. The work of the church cannot go on successfully without careful planning and prayerful selection of leaders.

Attention is called to the forthcoming State Conference, which is to convene at Eden Valley June 9 to 13, inclusive.

THE EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS

Ripley, Illinois

The meetings closed Sunday night, May 23. Many good sermons were enjoyed, as the good attendance testified. There were no baptisms during the meeting, but we feel that the brotherhood profited, for we had our mind refreshed with the Word. The seed, which is the Word of God, has been sown, and as God giveth the increase in His own good time we do not know how far-reaching the effects may be.

Bro. Drinkard plans to be at the Brush Creek, Ohio, church for a meeting to begin June 6th and close the 13th. We trust that many will attend and that much good may be done.

Harvey Krogh, Jr., Pastor.

PREACH THE WORD

A leading brother writes me from a certain state. Among other things he says, "In our work is being left undone. The older brethren are fast passing on and few young converts being made. We surely need some awakening."

Here is a challenge to the Church of God to do missionary work. The call is urgent. Will you help with your means to carry the gospel to those in darkness? Here is pictured a sad condition, a condition that can be changed to a great extent if the church will set her face toward the goal of preaching the gospel, and demand of her ministers that they preach the doctrinal truths, the acceptance of which will make Christians, as it did in the days of the apostles.

How can the Church of God succeed if some of her professed ministers preach sound doctrine and urge men and women to turn from sin, while others say sin is necessary, and still others say that you should not preach so much doctrine?

Do not forget this, brethren, while you are demanding that the general brotherhood allow you to preach certain destructive theories—the world is in darkness and the condition mentioned above is growing worse day by day.

Still from another state come these words, "About the work here in ——. It certainly needs more preaching." The cry for more preaching of the gospel is going up from our brotherhood.

I am at your service, brethren, wherever I am called to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ, to preach the "great salvation" (Heb. 2:3) which the Master taught during His personal ministry upon earth. I am not receiving a set salary—only freewill offerings—and your help may be the means of saving some one and leading him to Christ. My home address is Handley, Texas. But while in the North you may write me in care of The Restitution Herald, Oregon, Ill., and the letter will be forwarded to me. I shall be happy to serve wherever I may be called.

May God open your hearts to realize that Jesus Christ is coming soon, and that we should put forth our best efforts to preach the gospel NOW! The Church of God will be held responsible for the preaching of the gospel. Never before have we had a greater opportunity to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ!

In unity there is strength and power. In division there is wreck and ruin. I stand for doctrine, faith, and practice. The faith is of no value without the practice, nor the practice without the faith. One cannot have the faith without the doctrine. So I preach doctrine, faith, and practice. Will you support such an effort? I have faith in God that He will make it possible for me to go forward in gospel service, and pray that you will cooperate with me.

T. A. Drinkard.

REPUBLIC, MISSOURI

Addressing her letter to the brotherhood in general, Sr. S. Herren reports an interesting meeting conducted by Bro. J. H. Anderson in her community recently. Having learned from Sr. Ethel Fyfe of Lockwood, Mo., that Bro. Anderson would be in Springfield of that State on May 31, Sr. Herren wrote and invited him to come and hold a short meeting at Republic. Bro. Anderson therefore preached for the brethren there on June 2 and 3, taking as his subjects the old but ever new themes of the Lord's coming and the kingdom of God and its locality.

Bro. Anderson was accompanied by his daughter and some of the brethren from Springfield. Speaking of the latter, the writer says: "Those good people from Springfield, though they were strangers in the flesh, yet they were far from being strangers in the Spirit. Sound in the faith as they were, they seemed more like beloved friends whom I had known for ages. It was a real pleasure to meet them."

"Bro. Anderson is an able speaker, driving the nails just where they are needed to make the house of God firm and unshaken by winds of false doctrine. At the close of the services an old neighbor of mine declared that he had preached more Scripture than he had heard preached for a long time."

The writer acknowledges great appreciation of the work being done by the Bereans, and declares that their faithfulness and zeal has endeared them all to her. She admonishes them to remain steadfast and true, knowing that their labor is not in vain in the Lord. She looks forward to eternal reunion with God's people when Jesus comes, "in the land where we shall never say good-by."

PASTORS APPRECIATE THE RESTITUTION HERALD

Pastor J. R. LeCrone of Eden Valley, Minn., states that he is making an earnest drive for new subscribers for The Restitution Herald under the very low special rates now being offered. He says that he finds that those who take the paper are quite generally more active, faithful, and interested in the work of the local church than are those who do not take it. He has already secured several new subscriptions and says there are more to follow.

Pastor Harry Goekler, Hammond, La., was the first from whom we received a list of new subscribers. Bro. Goekler adds: "Each paid for his own subscription."

Pastor C. E. Lapp, St. Cloud, Minn., evidently has a fine list to be sent in soon, judging from the announcement which he makes in the last issue of The Gleaner. He says:

"It is with great pleasure that we make announcement of the following very unusual offer. The Restitution Herald, our national weekly church paper, is now offering to new subscribers in clubs of ten or more the extremely low price of One Dollar as the subscription price for one year. Where could you get a religious paper for the very small price of a fraction less than two cents a copy? One whole year for one small dollar. Twelve have already given in their names. Hand or send in your name, address, and the dollar immediately so you, too, may take advantage of this real offer."

"Maybe you have a friend who cannot afford the paper. Why not send it to him as a perpetual gift for every week in the year. Help us put this paper in every church home."

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Bro. S. J. Lindsay may again be seen on the bank of Rock River with a fish pole in his hand. But he does not spend all of his brief vacation period in that delightful occupation, for he is present with his words of counsel and instruction at practically every service of the Oregon church, of which he was the founder.

Have you started to organize that auto party to attend the General Conference? If not, it is time to make your plans. We are looking forward to meeting many new faces at the meeting this year.

Earliest reports from the Fonthill, Ont., May Meeting indicate another successful gathering there. We await with interest a full report.

On the last Sunday in May a gospel team from Aurora College conducted the services at the Advent Christian Church in Mendota, Ill. Among those who assisted in the services was Bro. Arthur Mills, one of our promising young preachers-in-the-making, whose home is in Monroe, Wash.

Among the students whose scholastic progress entitled them to special honors for the first semester at Aurora College, we are pleased to observe the names of Bro. Vivian Kirkpatrick of Cass Lake, Minn., and Bro. Wilsie McKnight, formerly of Moorefield, Neb., but whose address is now Aurora, Ill.

Bro. F. L. Austin and Sr. Leila E. Whitehead of Chicago were callers in Oregon the other day. As usual, Bro. Austin was very busily engaged in the Lord's work, to which he devotes his entire attention as State evangelist of the Illinois Conference.

Sr. Samuel Upton, who is better known by her former name of Sr. Emma Lenz, has just returned to her home in St. Elmo, Ill., after undergoing a serious operation. A postcard and letter shower we are sure would be appreciated. She should be addressed as Mrs. Samuel Upton, St. Elmo, Ill.

The treasurer of the National Bible Institution deeply appreciates the generous manner in which the brotherhood has responded to recent special calls for help to meet current expenses. Our contributions always fall off during the summer, and if it were not for these special donations to the cause the Institution would find itself in dire straits for funds with which to carry on.

Among the visitors from "foreign lands" who attended the May Meeting at Fonthill, Ont., last week were Bros. Paul Hatch and Arlen Marsh, of Illinois. Bro. Hatch is well known in the Niagara district, where he acted as supply pastor at Fonthill and at the Falls some years ago. He planned to spend a little time after the meeting in renewing acquaintances in the two communities.

THE POWER AND PURPOSE OF CHURCH LIFE

Thou didst implant within us was to be built from spiritual infancy into spiritual strength by spiritual food, and not by mere admonitions of fleshly decency and honesty of human knowledge. Yes, we have tried to come on toward perfection through the flesh, and multitudes of us still stumble along there, and find it hard to believe that there is in the provisions of Thy grace full power for spiritual living as well as for spiritual regeneration. Does Thy Apostle mean there is spiritual food for growth?"

III

There is among us wholesome and larger emphasis on teaching as a means of spiritual growth and usefulness. But we must remember that the spiritual life of the Christian is matured as well as implanted only through the supernatural work of God's Spirit. Teaching must be informed by and impart this truth. All other teaching for spiritual growth deals with values secondary to and dependent upon this. No preaching or teaching to strengthen church life is satisfactory that is not drawn (1) from revealed Bible truth as to what builds spiritual life and is not (2) out of the teacher's own personal experience of that truth.

The teaching of the Spirit-filled life occupies more space in Romans than does that of justification by faith. In Romans 5:10 Paul writes: "If we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life." Most of us have preached almost exclusively the salvation of reconciliation and justification. We have not preached that the Christian as to his life is to be saved by daily identification through faith with the life of Christ. Many of us have behaved as if no such teaching was in the New Testament, with vast loss of spiritual usefulness.

Our Lord declares that we shall bear much fruit, if we shall abide in Him—not otherwise. He teaches the same thing that Paul does when he says that we shall be saved by Christ's life. Spiritual fullness in a Christian does not result from anything we may do or teach in the way of outward standards or methods. It results only from a life daily lived in Christ with God as truly as salvation from the guilt of sin at conversion results only from new-found faith in Christ. This is mystical and supernatural. It is so in the same measure and sense that regeneration is mystical and supernatural. But it is truth as essential to fruitful spiritual service as regeneration was essential to the soul's salvation when it was justified.

Paul declared to the Corinthian church that they were spiritual infants, babes in Christ. He glorified that they were even born. But he did not let it go at that. He was deeply concerned that they might grow—spiritually.

Of all things, the human infant is the sweetest. It is a heart-mastering bundle of promises and potencies. But if it should remain an infant four years, ten years, twenty years, thirty years, how the heart of the mother and all others would bleed and suffer! Yet, spiritually speaking, have we not permitted this to be the situation in regard to untold multitudes who have membership in our churches!

IV

We must teach without placing the teaching cart before the horse. Dr. John McNeill, wonderful Scotch preacher, in a sermon on the woman at the well, tells how with glad heart she hastened from the well, forgetting her waterpot, to spread the glad tidings. No waiting to be "trained" or taught "all things." He adds: "How vastly the churches have lost because they have not used the ringing testimony of newborn souls. We have gagged them and quieted them. and said, 'Now, before you dare to speak, you must come and get a great deal of instruction.' And we ram them and cram them with instruction and make them stiff with knowledge, so that they cannot move at all."

We should encourage young converts to tell what the Lord has done for them without waiting for instruction. If they have had no experience of any kind that speaks to Christians of conversion, we need to discourage their uniting with the church until we have instructed them. Dr. McNeill has put us on the spot by instancing the joyous witness which the poor woman at the well hastened to bear. We have often been guilty of telling the young convert in effect to keep quiet while we pumped instruction into him. Too often he becomes like a young pigeon fed so full that it cannot fly.

We are spiritually poorer for having lost the simplicity and enthusiasm of our fathers of another generation. Some of us have even blindly supposed that that simplicity and enthusiasm was a hallmark of their spiritual inferiority as compared with us, whereas it is the other way around. If we could see and act upon this, and then could find our way back to the abundant biblical example in our preaching and teaching for spiritual growth and fitness for service, we should be in a far better position to win the lost and to win the multitudes whom we have brought to Christ to lives lived in daily identification with Christ, and therefore lived in abounding and world-conquering spiritual witness—which is the fruit Christ our Lord seeks from His churches.—The Western Recorder.

An architect complains that many of his clients come and ask him to design a house for them, only to let him very speedily discover that they have already designed it all for themselves. What they really want is his sanction of the plan and the satisfaction of seeing him draw on paper what they have fully in mind. It is in very much the same fashion that we often go to the great Architect with our lives. We ask Him for wisdom and guidance, but we have already planned how we will build our fortunes and shape our course, and it is not His way we are seeking, but His approval of our way.—Mississippi Visitor.

NUMBER 37

Do You Know the Answer?

By Mary A. Gesin

SOME years ago, there met in the city of London a great assemblage of the foremost leaders of practically every religious denomination in the world. The paramount objective of this gathering was to arrive at some solution of the problems confronting the nations of earth with respect to disarmament.

No less a dignitary of the great church than the Archbishop of Canterbury declared this to be the "most critical hour in history." And he issued a solemn appeal for peace among the nations. "For," he warned, "sinister forces are at work imperiling civilization itself."

With the assertion of the Archbishop, all thinking people are agreed. The great need and desire of mankind today is a sense of security. But suspicion, mistrust, and fear are so widespread throughout all nations that their governments are practically paralyzed. Lasting peace is further from their borders than in any preceding period of history.

"We cannot forget," urged this great religious leader, "that by the Treaty of Versailles in 1919, limitation and reduction of armaments were imposed upon a certain nation in order to render possible the initiation of a general limitation of the armaments of all nations." And he rightly feels that their governments can no longer acquiesce in the neglect of the moral obligation involved in such a treaty.

The true child of God has at his command the wisdom of the omniscient One. Opening the pages of the Book of Truth, he learns that "nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places. All these are the beginning of sorrows."

Though all this and much greater distress shall prevail over the face of the earth, the faithful are counseled not to be troubled but to lift up their heads, for their redemption draws near. And "he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved."

The great leaders at this gathering perceived on the

"They that feared the Lord spake often one to another: and the Lord hearkened, and heard, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name."

horizon indications that the "reason and conscience of mankind are moving toward acceptance of the principle" of the brotherhood of man, which, in their opinion, is the only condition that will bring peace. But the student of God's Word knows that "iniquity shall abound"; "the love of many shall wax cold"; and "evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse."

Thus has God chosen "the foolish things of the world to confound the wise." For the "foolishness" of God is stronger than the "wisdom" of men, and He will "bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent," that "no flesh should glory in his presence."

That sense of security which all men are seeking is for you and me by the simple expedient of accepting it from the hands of the omnipotent Ruler of the universe. Now, today, it is ours. We need not wait until our Savior comes to bring peace to the troubled nations. He extends to us a "peace which passeth all understanding."

The faithful know that "in the last days perilous times shall come," but they are not seriously disturbed, because "the steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord: and though he fall, he shall not be utterly cast down." True wisdom, then, is found not in the philosophy of men, but in the simple truths of God's Book.

May we embrace every opportunity for collective and individual study and communion with our heavenly Father, at home, in our places of worship, at our Bible schools and conferences. Thus shall we find true peace and security, which all men crave. The weightiest problems, if unanswerable to us, will be left in the hands of the great Judge, resting assured that He will do all things well. For we know that in Him and in His Son are hid "all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge."

Better than all these, through the searching of the pages of His holy Word we may find eternal salvation when our Savior appears and brings with Him everlasting peace,

Blood—the Fluid of Life

The life of the flesh is in the blood.—Leviticus 17:11.

BALTIMORE, Md., June 5.—Life in all its manifestations is wholly dependent upon an uninterrupted flow of blood through the veins and arteries of the body, insisted Dr. William H. Howell, Professor Emeritus of Physiology, of Johns Hopkins University. The innumerable microscopic cells of which the body is composed derive their vitality and their reconstructive and reproductive powers entirely from the blood, Dr. Howell declared in a recent Science Service Radio Talk.

This conclusion is, of course, nothing new to the physiologist. Its interest to us lies in the fact that it states as a scientific dictum a truth which the religious world denied for thousands of years, but which was revealed by God to Moses more than three millenniums ago.

“Great Doctrinal Testimony”

Praying always . . . for me, that . . . I may open my mouth boldly, to make known the mystery of the gospel.—Ephesians 6:18, 19.

PHILADELPHIA, June 1.—Many leaders among the great denominations are coming to see the danger that threatens their churches and the cause of religion everywhere from ignoring doctrine. A cleavage seems imminent in several denominations from this cause. Such a division has actually occurred in the Presbyterian Church in the United States, to which attention was called in these columns some time ago. (Jan. 20, May 7, Sept. 17, 24, 1935.) Division in the Disciples of Christ is recorded October 23, 1934. In the Methodist Church protests against the preaching of the “social gospel” were made by laymen and mentioned in our columns September 3, 1935.

Pleading for a return to a positive biblical theology to be proclaimed forcibly from the pulpit, a prominent leader in the Presbyterian Church asserts that “the hitherto popular liberalism, its ‘applied’ Christianity, and its condescension for the ‘grand particularities’ of the Christian faith have run out. Our assembly would do well to omit so many deliverances on social matters, and give itself to a great doctrinal testimony. God will honor His Word now as ever.”

We question whether the “liberalism” to which the Presbyterian writer refers has really “run out” or not. It seems to us that it is growing stronger rather than weaker in the average pulpit. Should the churches be induced to return to the preaching of doctrine there would be more opportunity for the Church of God to point out to the thoughtful the difference between biblical and traditional religious teaching. But so few in these days know anything about doctrine, true or false, that it is difficult to arouse an interest in it. May Church of God ministers not make the mistake which has been made by those of other churches, and discontinue to teach and strongly emphasize the vital importance of right doctrinal understanding of the Scriptures.

Psychologist Condemns The “Liberal Mind”

“Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus.”—Philippians 2:5.

NEW YORK, June 11.—Dr. Henry C. Link, director of the Psychological Service Center conducted by the Government in this city, and author of the popular book, Back to Religion, told the National Committee on Religion and Welfare Recovery that the “liberal mind” had proved disastrous to religion in this country.

Dr. Link affirmed that his conclusions were based on a scientific study which involved the questioning of five thousand individuals in sixty-five cities, “a cross section of all economic classes.” He found that “it is the mind systematically cultivated to question the traditions and morals of the past, the mind habituated to doubt the old and to place credence in the new; the mind which accepts no authority except the authority of its own reason,” which is “the road to moral, social, and economic anarchism, the road to chaos and revolution.”

Commenting on his remarks, The Presbyterian says that Dr. Link claimed that “religious leaders” are mostly unconscious of this. “All of which is a pointed commentary on the need for emphasis on those supernatural verities, the authority of the Scriptures, and the bold proclamation of the gospel even in the face of a gainsaying world, and impeded by the equivocal leadership which has been misleading the churches for twenty years.” (The editor of THE RESTITUTION HERALD is inclined to the opinion that this “equivocal leadership” has been misleading the churches for nearly as many centuries as The Presbyterian names “years.”)

Essential Elements of Christian Faith

3. The Eternal Purpose

FAITH is an active principle, an energizing force, which puts into operation the entire machinery of salvation which has been designed and perfected by God. To change the metaphor, faith is the "enabling act" which authorizes man to become God's agent, God's representative, in the Creator's marvelous plans for human redemption and world reclamation.

"Without faith it is" not only "impossible to please him," but without faith, which, as we shall see, involves a knowledge of His will, it is impossible for man to fulfill the purpose for which he was created and to enjoy life in its broadest and richest possibilities. Faith enables man to conform his activities and services to the standard established for him by the Lord.

Faith, then, when thus understood, is more than an expression of belief in the being, goodness, and saving power of God; for, while it includes all this, it exalts belief far above mere intellectual assent to the truth of certain dogmatic ideas by producing in a man's life a definite and continuous reaction to those ideas.

Therefore, faith consists of an understanding of specified revelations of God's will, followed by a conviction of their truth that is so strong and certain that men are impelled to act upon it, govern their lives by it, and sacrifice all else that they may obtain for themselves the splendid rewards God offers for such faith and such service.

FAITH BASED ON GOD'S PROMISES

Faith, being "the substance of things hoped for, the evidence (or conviction) of things not seen" (Heb. 11:1), must of necessity depend entirely upon the promises that God has made. And if men are to be moved to action, even to sacrifice, by their faith in God, the promises upon which their faith in Him is built must contain three vital elements: First, they must be true; second, they must be understood; and, third, they must be worth while or valuable in their sight.

Those who are approved of God are said to live by faith (Rom. 1:17); walk by faith (Rom. 4:12); overcome the world by faith (1 John 5:4, 5); obtain a good report through faith (Heb. 11:2); and to die in faith (Heb. 11:13).

Thus the entire experience and service of the believer is governed from beginning to end by his faith in the promises of God. And faith, to develop and to maintain so powerful an influence over the lives of men, must be based upon (1) a clear understanding of the promises of God; (2) a definite conviction of their truth; and (3) a deep appreciation of their value.

In this article the editor seeks to define the purposes of God for the eternal welfare of man: why God created man and the earth in which he lives and what the final outcome of the creation will be.

For the joy that was set before Him, Jesus endured the cross and despised its shame (Heb. 12:2). Because "he had respect unto the recompense of the reward," Moses chose "to suffer affliction with the people of God, (rather) than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season" (Heb. 11:25, 26).

GOD'S PURPOSE IN CREATING THE EARTH

That God had a definite purpose in view in the creation of the heavens and the earth and all things that are in them is evident for at least three reasons: First, the fact is clearly revealed in the Scriptures; second, it is indicated in nature and in the laws by which nature is governed; and, third, such a conclusion is in harmony with reason.

Our knowledge of the creation of God begins with the facts revealed in the first two chapters of Genesis and which are more fully developed throughout the remainder of the Bible.

"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth" (Gen. 1:1).

We observe that this reference to the creation of "heaven" employs the singular number, and evidently has little or nothing to do with the creation of the place where God dwells, which must have been in existence when the "heaven" here mentioned was formed. The present personal abode of God is reserved for Him, the celestial beings who compose His heavenly court, and for His glorified Son who sits at His right hand. Recognizing this fact, the Psalmist cried:

"Ye are the blessed of the Lord which made heaven and earth. The heaven, even the heavens, are the Lord's: but the earth hath he given to the children of men" (Psalm 115:15, 16).

The "heaven," the creation of which is recorded in the first verse of the Bible, is the heaven which forms the canopy of the earth, the atmospheric envelope that surrounds the earth, and not the glorious place of which David sings in the 11th Psalm: "The Lord is in his holy temple, the Lord's throne is in heaven: his eyes behold, his eyelids try, the children of men."

So far as man's knowledge is concerned, so far as the revelation of God in the Scriptures goes, so far as the human interpreter of the Word may venture if he would not exceed that which has been made known by the Spirit of truth, the habitat of man is absolutely limited, for time and for eternity, to the earth upon which God has placed him and of the substance of which God has made him!

This we believe to be a fundamental tenet of Christian faith, for without such an un- (Please turn to page 10)

Ishmael at Home

GOD told Abraham to cast out the handmaid and her son, for the son of the handmaid should not be heir with Isaac. Nevertheless, God, because of Israel's sin, did finally give the land to Ishmael, and he has had it for thirteen centuries.

Ishmael is at home in his own country; it is his by right of conquest and by inheritance. But the Jew comes and claims it. Shall he give it up? America is ours by conquest and inheritance; if the Indians should come back and demand it, would we recognize their claim?

There are problems that only God can solve, and the problem of Palestine is one of them. We dare not run ahead of the Lord. The Crusaders tried it and paid a terrible toll of lives and money. Abraham did this when he became impatient with God's delay in fulfilling His promise. He undertook to help God out. The birth of Ishmael was the result.

From this seed of impatience there sprang twelve tribes who have lived in opposition to the twelve tribes of the promise to this day. From these tribes came Mohammed in the spirit of Antichrist, who now leads one seventh of the world's population in the stiffest kind of resistance to the gospel. Mohammed now rules the land and the temple site, and there seems to be no hope for Israel's Glory.

God has promised, but Israel must wait for God's time. Jacob of old learned this lesson to his sorrow. God had promised him the leadership; but not being willing to receive it God's way, he twice cheated his brother and gained it by his own devices. As a result he lost the Promised Land for twenty years and incurred the enmity of Esau against his seed. Now God is leading Israel back, but not as in the days when Jericho fell. God's way is always by faith and obedience. Israel is still in unbelief, and God will never send the blessing until Israel repents and turns to the Messiah.

There are two sides to the trouble between Jew and Arab. The Arab looks with alarm at the growing, flourishing settlements of the Jew in Palestine. The Jew is a better builder, a more efficient farmer, is far more progressive, and has set a standard that the Arab cannot compete with without breaking away from the good old order of things; and that he is not yet willing to do.

This strange civilization in Palestine is disturbing the "peace of the land." The Arab landowner sells out to the Jew; the Jew then puts the Arab serfs off the land to make room for his own people, and then the Arab complains because so many have lost their means of livelihood and the Jew is taking the country. It is true that the Jew has failed in not knowing how to handle the Arab. The Arab says that the Jew's next move will be to take Mecca! A Moslem told me yesterday that the uprising and killing in the land was caused by Communistic Russian Jews who are actually hiring assassins to kill Jews so as to provoke the British Government to war with the Arabs!

Now the Jewish side. The Jew remembers God's promise to his fathers. He wants a home of his own, which is natural and right. He feels that he has a right to the temple site and the Cave of Macpelah, from which he is now excluded. He objects to being shot in the back by assassins. The Palestine strikes last year resulted in the death of over eighty Jews, death and wounds to British police and soldiers, devastation of property, and the destruction of ten trains, but also in the death or injury of hundreds of Arabs.

Then, when the Royal Commission came last October to discuss terms with them, the Arab Higher Committee refused to send any representatives for about two months. The truth is, the Jew has done more for the Arab than he realizes. Arabs are building better houses today, learning better ways of farming. If many have lost their livelihood, many more have found new occupations, as is shown by the fact that many Arabs have immigrated into the land and found work where there was none before.

Much of the trouble was caused by lack of acquaintance with the facts. A representative of the Arab delegation stated before the Royal Commission that the Government was spending more money on Jewish education than on Arab, especially for girls' schools. But the records revealed that the Government expenditures on Jewish schools in 1934-5 amounted to about $187,800, while that for Arab education was $960,000. Besides, the Jews themselves contributed five times as much as they received, while the Arabs gave nothing.

But when all is said and done, the fact remains that the Arab owns the country, and only God has the right to displace him. God will at the proper time give him a land of his own, if he is willing to let God have His way, for God promised to make Ishmael a great nation. I see many proofs that the Arabs are capable of being evangelized and educated for higher things. They are not wholly to blame for mad leadership, slavish customs, and the blighting religion that has held them in ignorance and error for centuries.

Inherently they are a strong and healthy people. There was a time when they were the conservers of civilization, and Europe was in darkness. Such Arabic words as algebra, chemistry, the names of the stars, and the numerals are constant reminders of the noble contribution they have made. The more probable explanation of the atrocities in Palestine lies in corrupt Moslem politics. The fanatical leaders incite their followers to unreasoning hatred of the Jews by playing on their prejudices.

Palestinian Arabs are far from being pure Ishmaelites; there is probably much of Esau in them, and also a mixture of Greek, Roman, Jew, Canaanite, and Philistine. At Bethlehem one sees descendants of the Crusaders. Gypsies also pitch their tents in and about the city; they are recognized by their love of bright colors; the real Bedouins stay mostly away from the cities.

Most Arabs are Moslems, but many are Greek or Roman Catholic, or Protestant. I have met many victorious and happy Christian Arabs, some of whom are real powers for the propagation of the gospel. Dr. Cooper and I had the pleasure of visiting some of the villages of the Hauran, northeast of Galilee and of preaching to them. Here we saw Arab life in its primitive form and in deep poverty. But it was a delight to meet fine and enlightened Christians, all praising God and eager to hear the gospel.

Here I learned to love the Arabs; and I invite the reader to join me in praying that these people may have this gospel, for many want it.—William T. Bruner, Jr., in The Western Recorder.

Better Times Ahead

THRILLING and inspiring as have been the developments made certain in the Scripture as a result of the second coming of Christ, there are others of like nature which we now present.

The earth itself will be completely renewed, renovated, cleansed of sin, made over into an entirely new earth. This is assured under God's Recovery Administration. The platform provides: "Behold, I create new heavens and a new earth" (Isa. 65:17). And "we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness" (2 Peter 3:13). John in vision said, "I saw a new heaven and a new earth" (Rev. 21:1). And in Psalm 37:11 is the promise, "The meek shall inherit the earth; and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace."

In this new earth, where righteousness and peace abide, there will be pleasant, homelike joys and occupations. "They shall build houses, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them. . . . Mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands" (Isa. 65:21, 22).

Peace and security, quietness and assurance forever, will be characteristics of this coming administration. "My people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation, and in sure dwellings, and in quiet resting places" (Isa. 32:18).

Every person under the Divine Recovery Administration "shall be in rest, and be quiet, and none shall make him afraid" (Jer. 30:10). "And they shall no more be a prey to the heathen, neither shall the beast of the land devour them; but they shall dwell safely, and none shall make them afraid" (Ezek. 34:28). "They shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid: . . . for the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it." (Micah 4:4).

NO MORE VIOLENCE

There will be no crime, no violence, no accidents, no wasting, no destruction, under God's Recovery Administration. "Violence shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders; but thou shalt call thy walls Salvation, and thy gates Praise" (Isa. 60:18).

There will be no sickness there. Disease of every kind will be conquered and abolished forever. "The inhabitant shall not say, I am sick" (Isa. 33:24).

And death, sorrow, pain, crying, will be forever in the past, unknown in God's kingdom. "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away" (Rev. 21:4).

Now to sum it all up—let us look at the whole of this Divine Recovery Administration. Let us examine all that God plans, and proposes, and promises when His government is established.

Nothing that man has done or can do bears any comparison with it. Nothing we have seen or heard or thought can equal it. All the proposals and promises of men pale and grow dim alongside it. What God will bring about exceeds even our most extended imaginings. The things He has prepared have not entered into the heart of man.

The earth will be made new—not one country, one continent, one hemisphere, but the entire earth. All the misery, wretchedness, sin, violence, terror, injustice, and oppression shall be gone forever.

Social and political conditions will be made new. Social justice and equity will rule in all human relationships. Everywhere there will be absolute security, peace, quietness, and permanent safety and assurance. The redeemed will be on an equality with the angels of God. Sin and the curse shall have gone forever. The former things are passed away.

Our bodies will be made new. The bodies we have now are subject to decay, illness, pain, disintegration, and death. They are easily injured, disorganized, destroyed. Disease feeds on them, dims their eyes, dulls their ears, disarranges all their functions.

Not so with this new body, the resurrection body. No disease will ever sap its strength. No death will ever disintegrate its particles. The passage of time will leave no mark upon it. The creeping of age will never bow it down. It is incorruptible. The forces of eternal youth are in it. The energies of the eternal God are imparted to it. It will never die. It will never grow old and feeble. It will never feel pain. It is eternal, immortal, incorruptible.

And we cannot even imagine the powers of the new life under God's Recovery Administration. Our bodies then will throw off and transcend the limitations that handicap

More Preachers Needed

"Then saith he unto his disciples, The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth labourers into his harvest."—Matthew 9:37, 38.

THE demand today is more urgent than ever before for strong men with the personal presence of God in their lives, God-called, God-sent, well qualified, fully trained, for the ministerial leadership of the church at home and abroad.

In the intellectual and spiritual unrest and ferments of our times men are needed in the ministry who can feel deeply and think straight and speak intelligently and passionately on the great fundamentals of life as they relate to the individual, to the church, and to society as a whole. Men of balanced but vigorous and deep emotions, men of strong will, men with intellectual powers trained for God, men who love truth, men of widest human sympathy and understanding, men with zeal and holy enthusiasm who will refuse to be discouraged or disillusioned, men of patience and persistence who will not quit, men of conquering spirit, men of creative ability, men who are pioneers not content always to follow the well-beaten path but who as trail-blazers will risk everything for God and their message, men of vision, men who can see ahead and go ahead, men who are not narrow, men who are not prejudiced, men of large mold, men of catholicity of mind are needed to lead the church in its great task.

The size and importance of the church's task and the world's need demand such men, and more and more of them. Surely there is no human need and no human problem that is outside the proper interest of the church either directly or indirectly.

The minister of the Church of God is at once an administrator, pastor, teacher, priest, and prophet, and men are needed to perform all these duties that devolve upon a minister. The true minister is always and everywhere a master builder; a builder of character in the individual and a constructive force in the great structure of human society. The minister is a prophet of God; that is, a man who speaks for God. His life work is to interpret God to men and make the spiritual real and vital in the life of the individual and of society. He is a preacher of righteousness and of the good news of the kingdom of God. Jesus was a great preacher, at once the message and the messenger of God. From His time down to our own day a noble company of preachers have followed in the Master's steps, making Christ and His saving power known to men. Ever and again the preachers have been the leaders who have cried out against great wrongs and sternly called the people to righteousness. Every great movement in the history of the church has begun with some prophet who stood forth to declare the mind of God. Peter at Jerusalem, Paul at Ephesus, Augustine at Rome, Savonarola at Florence, Chrysostom at Constantinople, Luther at Erfurt, Wesley at Whitefield in England, Spurgeon in London, Moody in the great cities of America and Britain—these and hundreds and thousands of other heroes, even if lesser ones, ministers of the Most High, preachers of eternal truth, have set in motion streams of influence reaching down to our own day, and now the call is for preachers today who will follow them and take up the tremendous responsibility.

Preachers are needed to proclaim God's truth to the people. Not men who try to work out a little philosophy of their own and tag it with their own name to live perhaps for a day, but men who will preach the gospel of Christ for the salvation of mankind; a message which takes its authority not from current conventions, but from God Himself; not men who keep one "ear to the ground" to hear what the people want, but both ears attuned to God to hear what He wants.

More preachers are needed who will take the message of God's saving grace to those who are in sin—flaming evangelists who will herald the good news far and wide, in rural areas, in cities, at home and abroad, for the field is not home and foreign, but the world.

Preachers are needed who can teach these as they are won to Jesus Christ to serve in the work of the church, build them up in Christian character, and minister to their spiritual needs.

Ministers are needed who can meet the age-long cry of the world for a friend. In the brotherhood of the church and out in the world the minister should stand always as the true friend of man. To the discouraged and disappointed, to the sorrowing and the sick, in homes where death has come, in homes where joy has come, the minister has wonderful opportunities to be a source of comfort, inspiration, hope, cheer, courage, and a steadying, helping influence. Preachers are needed who can be pastors in the full sense of the word—men who can be friends to men.

More preachers are needed to lead in every task which is the church's to do. The preacher may not be the superintendent of the Sabbath school nor of the other religious and general educational agencies of the church, and certainly not teacher of all the classes. Nevertheless, the preacher will and must continue to be the directing head of these agencies and furnish the inspiration for them and the leadership and guidance of them. They must not get out from under the direct influence of the preacher. More preachers are needed to help in developing the general educational work of the church. This is the time of times for such work.

More preachers are needed to instruct more perfectly in the truths of God those who are but partially instructed or who have been taught false doctrines. This is a short paragraph but think how great the need in this line! We cannot dismiss this need with a wave of the hand.

More preachers are needed to lead the way in the quest for Christian unity. Men who have caught the vision of the one true church, who see the evils of division, and who at the same time can see the problems that such a quest presents; men who are not prejudiced, men who are not narrow, men who are not selfish, Christian leaders of large mold, men of catholicity of mind big enough to be apostles of unity are needed to lead the church to that unity for which Christ prayed and which so many true Christians are earnestly desiring today.

And then there are what we call the great social problems of mankind. The rich stand over against the poor; in a world of plenty millions face the future with fear; some are actually starving. Inequality and greed and oppression and injustice, and still "man's inhumanity to man makes countless millions mourn." Labor and capital raise the noise of incessant tumultuous wrangling. Public morals as evidenced by the widespread craze for gambling, indecency, a legalized liquor traffic, still need reforming. The races stand apart in suspicion and distrust. The nations of the world are tearing at one another's throats. Without entering into any argument as to whether these things are of any concern to the church it is my positive conviction that the preacher may without turning social reformer so lift up his voice and so proclaim God's truth that an enlightened public opinion will result which in time will bring in some degree these much needed social changes. And to do this more preachers are needed. A wide and challenging field of service is open before the church. She no longer can proclaim that the task is too indefinite; she cannot longer excuse herself on the ground that the problems are too delicate and that the discharge of her duty would offend some of her members. The church no longer can turn a deaf ear to the call of the world without being untrue to her trust. She has a message that strikes at the very root of the false economic practices and injustice and the maladjusted social order of our day, and she must declare her message with-

Modernism

By T. A. Drinkard

MODERNISM in the pulpit today is preparing that element who desire it for the reception of what is called the social gospel. It purports to interpret the Master's gospel message, when in fact it misinterprets it and reduces it to a cold ritualistic form. It calls for a unionized effort regardless of the spirit of unity, and is based upon a theory that recognizes no necessity for faith in the doctrinal teaching of the Son of God. It counts doctrinal faith as so much hindrance, because no union can be attained so long as doctrine is recognized as a basic principle of the Christian faith, as revealed in the Word of God.

Are we, as a body of people, immune to the sinister attacks, whether open or private, of the modernistic appeals? Are we growing tired of the ancient paths? Have we come to see that it is no longer necessary to preach doctrinal truth as our former brethren did, and who lived to see established one of the most militant armies of men and women of any age or time, this side of the Dark Ages, fighting for the faith of the gospel? Shall we look at other people and crave to pattern after their compromising tactics of securing numbers regardless of unity? Shall we imitate their attitude against doctrinal truth? I say, kindly, NO!

I suggest that we take a look at their history, their faith and practice.

Israel tried the back-trail, and, behold her sin! The same dire results stare us in the face when we begin to throw bouquets before those who care little for the truth and less for a compromise.

Shall we decide that doctrine is out of date, that it is not as effective as some of us think it should be, and seek to help the Lord by discarding it for a while, and preach something more attractive?

Shame on any brother who makes an effort to teach spirituality, or Christian living, and at the same time seeks to teach that such is not doctrinal truth. I suggest and solemnly affirm that no man or woman can practice spirituality unless he or she has doctrinal faith.

Christian unity is based upon doctrinal truth. Men and women come into Christ by way of doctrine, as "the law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul" (Psa. 19:7). Even the Master had a doctrine, and He called it the doctrine of God (John 7:16). And we are authorized to "teach no other doctrine" (1 Tim. 1:3).

But I am reminded that we are not united as we should be. That difficulty is easily settled by becoming united in the preaching of doctrine. Just as well try to keep the house erect after taking the foundation from under it.

The great movement, of which I am happy to be a member, is based or resting upon doctrinal truth, faith, and practice. However, sometimes the practice is not just what it should be. There is much room for improvement in the practice department. Let us get busy! The shortcoming is not in doctrine, but in the practice, therefore, let us see that doctrinal teaching and practice go hand in hand and never become separated. When an effort is made to separate them, dire results will follow when the seed of error germinates.

"FATHER DIVINE" IN NEW YORK

THIS more or less noted Negro who claims to be the Creator Himself, and who has, I am told, numerous followers in Seattle, Washington, and Portland, Oregon, has a headquarters in New York, where he is being "worshipped" and "adored" by many people who ought to have better sense. He has succeeded, however, in duping these "worshippers" and, apparently, persuaded some of them into giving him their property in return for their devoted enjoyment of his teaching and fellowship, and promised support.

In the Christian Herald for January, 1937, there is the following account of the impressions made upon one who went to "Father Divine's" headquarters in New York, and observed the movement at close range. He has this to say: "Up in New York's Harlem is a man much in the news, a little Alabama Negro, who says he is God, and who has made thousands believe it, and who laughs at courts and income tax collectors. He is Father Divine. One day he's in court, denying that he has a cent to his name in this wicked world, and putting up $1,000 (cash) bail; the next day he or his 'angels' may be putting down $30,000 for an upstate farm. Now the police are raiding a luxurious Beverly Hills mansion in which three hundred of his followers have raised such a bedlam that the neighbors can't stand it; now, say the newspapers, one of his followers has sent back fifty cents to a New York subway company in payment for fares he didn't pay three years ago, and signing himself 'Wonderful Victory.' It is all a little confusing. The watchword of the movement is 'Peace, peace,' but there is no peace in it, for the innocent observer. Your reporter has just journeyed up to Harlem to attend a meeting of the 'children' and the 'angels' in the Harlem heaven; he watched five hundred or more of them go wild with enthusiasm over the least gesture of their diminutive leader, for three solid hours. It was frenzied, furious, pathetic, and blasphemous.

"Father Divine, doubtless, has done some good. That convert who sent back the fifty cents is quite typical. No man can owe a dime and follow Father. In all that five hundred we did not find a single girl who smoked or used rouge, a single man who swore or drank. But we couldn't get over a certain sensation of nausea at the thought of this little black hypnotist calling himself God, claiming to have written the Bible and to have resurrected the dead. For we knew that he had allowed some of the dead to be buried in potter's field, after giving all they had to this movement; and we knew that there was a sharp class distinction in this heaven of his, between the 'children' who still had some money and property of their own, and the 'angels' who had given their all to the cause of 'Peace, peace.'"

One cannot but wonder if some people have not taken leave of their senses, when they take up with a movement of this sort. But it appears to be altogether too true, that it does not make any difference, seemingly, how crazy a movement may be, and how wild and fanatical the teaching, there are always those who will listen to it and even join in with it.

Our Savior distinctly told us that there would be such movements: "For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders; inasmuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect. Behold, I have told you before" (Matt. 24:24, 25).

And that great Apostle to the Gentiles, Paul, in 2 Timothy 3:1-7, 13, warns the church against the coming of "evil men and seducers" who shall "wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." Verse 6 tells us: "For of this sort are they which creep into houses (invade privacy!) and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts," and the next verse says that people of this sort are "ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth." And, for some reason, a great many of this man's followers are women, as are also the teachers and followers of many other well known cults, too well known to be here mentioned separately and in order! All honor to those loyal women who have ever followed the Lord Jesus Christ, even to death! The church would go into oblivion in many places, were it not for their loyalty and devotion! But beware of any man or woman who comes in the guise of sheep, but inwardly is a ravening wolf! They are not seeking the eternal welfare of the flock, but their pelts! They will meet their Judge one of these days! But it is passingly strange that some people seem to be able to receive anything but the truth!—A. E. Bloom in The Messiah's Advocate.

MORE PREACHERS NEEDED

out regard to what may be said by some who hesitate or pretend to fear that her spiritual mission would suffer. I am not saying that the ideal of Jesus is mainly one of social welfare and justice, concerned with questions and problems of economics and sociology. But with morals and human values Jesus is tremendously concerned, and He wants His church and His ministers to be tremendously concerned. The prophets of the Old Testament, especially such as Jeremiah and Amos, and John the Baptist and Jesus and James and others in the New Testament have a great deal to say about such because all these issues are at root moral and human value questions. I am not pleading for mere social reformers, but for preachers of righteousness who will cry out against sin as the prophets of old brought the message of God against the sins of their day, even sin in high places. Jesus had a heart of compassion for the ills of humanity. The preacher of today must have "an enthusiasm for humanity." The spirit of Christianity is a golden rule of patience; it is compassion for the multitude; it is a spirit of healing and service and peace. The church and the minister who would follow the Master cannot be ignobly patient with wrongdoing. The church and the preacher are not antagonistic to any social order as such, nor proponents of any social order as such, but they are hostile to every offense against humanity and the friend of whatever is wholesome. I may have dwelt at some length upon this phase of the preaching of the preacher for this day, but I know that I am upon ground that is disputed and debated, and I want to make myself clear if possible. I do not see how the prophet of God can shut his eyes to any form of wrong. A realistic facing of facts will mean a lifting of the prophetic voice against sin in every form.

When we contemplate the task of the preacher and see that it is immeasurable in its extent and that it is terribly solemn in its issues, that the preacher is witness to the truth which God has revealed to men, that God has instructed to the preacher the answer to the question of the ages, "What must I do to be saved?" and that he is the interpreter of the message of the cross, that the preacher bears a commission for all mankind, with a work so broad and so varied that it is almost beyond comprehension; when we see that "the foolishness of preaching" is the instrument for the salvation of the world, we shall agree that more preachers are needed. Preachers are needed who are compelled to say, "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel." Preachers are needed, more preachers, who are saturated by the motives and the energies which come from a life of close communion with Jesus Christ and in whose hearts the fires of this great communion have set glowing the passionate purposes of prophecy. God does not have enough of that kind of men in His ministry. More preachers are needed.—Earl Martin in The Gospel Trumpet.

them now. There will be no weakness, no deformity, no limitation of movement. So will our bodies be. For He "shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body" (Phil. 3:21).

And "we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is" (1 John 3:2).

There will be no more feebleness of the physical powers; no more dreaded creeping on of old age, impairing our faculties, only abounding health, thrilling vigor, unimpaired strength, more abundant life, and the abiding confidence that it will always be so as the millenniums roll on and on.

INSURANCE NOT NEEDED

Eyes that were blind here will be opened; ears that were deaf here, unstopped; tongues that were dumb here, unloosed; limbs that have been crippled here, made whole. Truly the people of God "shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away" (Isa. 35:10).

There will be no need for life insurance, for there will be no death; no need for old-age insurance, for there will be no old age. "As the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands" (Isa. 65:22). There will be no need of sick insurance, for there will be no sickness; no need of accident insurance, for there will be no accidents; no need of theft and fire insurance, for there will be no robbery, no fires; no need of unemployment insurance, for the service of God will employ all forever; no need of security insurance, for safety and quietness will prevail always; no need of storm and lightning insurance, since wasting and violence and destruction will give place to security and peace and assurance.

There will be no more depression, no more alarms, no more uneasiness or fear, no failures, no poverty, no injustice, no oppression, no unfairness, nothing to molest, nothing to make afraid, no more tears, sorrow, crying, no more pain, no more death. Sin and the curse are gone forever. The former things have passed away.

There will be no freezing cold, no burning heat, no gloomy clouds, no darkness of night, no wasting sickness, no cruel pain, no graveyards, no parting with loved ones, no temptations, no sin.

The saved will enjoy only victory, only praise, and rest, and glory, and quietness, and confidence, and assurance, and safety evermore, world without end. Fulfilled then will be the ancient oath of the divine Administrator. "As truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord" (Num. 14:21).

It will not be difficult then to exclaim: "The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places; yea, I have a goodly heritage" (Psalm 16:6).

BRIGHT PROSPECTS FOR WHOM?

To God, who is now preparing all this for His people, we will sing: "In thy presence is fulness of joy; at thy right hand are pleasures for evermore" (Psalm 16:11).

As our hearts thrill at the contemplation of this coming Recovery Administration, and we meditate on the infinite goodness of God in making such a future possible, let us be reminded that all these glorious prospects are for the followers of God, the saints of Christ. They cannot be claimed, and the future life cannot reasonably be expected, by those who have not, and who will not, surrender themselves to Jesus Christ our Lord.

Even now every person is preparing for a harvest of glory or a harvest of shame. Even now everyone is deciding whether he will be in the new earth we have been studying about. Our individual future is in the making now. "He that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting" (Gal. 6:8).

There is no cheating the harvest, dear friend. What are you expecting of that resurrection day? Eternal life and eternal death are placed before you. If your mortal body is quickened to life in the resurrection when Jesus comes, it will be because your living spirit has been quickened now by the Spirit of the Lord.

CITIZENS NOW BEING RECRUITED

May you know the "power of his resurrection" now in being given life from the dead, and may the Lord Jesus Christ quicken you who are dead in trespasses and sins, that you may live His life here in the conquest of sin as well as hereafter following the conquest of death.

To everyone comes the gracious invitation: "The Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely" (Rev. 22:17).

The citizens of the new earth are being recruited now. Their fitness for life under the Divine Recovery Administration is being determined now. The eternal destiny of all is being decided now.

Christ has come to seek and to save the lost. He has sought you. He has found you. May God help you to let Him save you. He offers you eternal life. He offers you an eternal home. He offers you all that I have so feebly and inadequately set before you.

He has died for your sins. He will pardon them if you will accept His death.

He has canceled the sentence of the law against you. He will lift that sentence from your soul if you will now accept His sacrifice. He has purchased eternal life for you. He will confer it upon you if you will now surrender yourself to Him.—Carlyle B. Haynes in Signs of the Times.

THE SEARCH

I sought His love in sun and stars,
And where the wild seas roll,
And found it not. As mute I stood,
Fear overwhelmed my soul;
But when I gave to one in need,
I found the Lord of Love indeed.

I sought His love in lore of books,
In charts of science' skill;
They left me orphaned as before—
His love eluded still;
Then in despair I breathed a prayer;
The Lord of Love was standing there!

—Thomas Curtis Clarke.

Understanding of the Scriptures it would be impossible for us to follow intelligently the unfolding and development of God's eternal purposes in their relationship to man.

Confirming our conclusion that the earth was formed for man, and man for the earth, the greatest of the Old Testament prophets says:

"Thus saith the Lord that created the heavens; God himself that formed the earth and made it; he hath established it, he created it not in vain," that is, not without a purpose, "he formed it to be inhabited: I am the Lord; and there is none else" (Isa. 45:18).

Here two important facts are revealed: First, God formed the earth for a definite purpose; and, second, that purpose was that it might be inhabited.

Having created it and made it in every way a suitable dwelling place for those for whom it was designed, God gave the earth to "the children of men" for an everlasting possession.

GOD'S PURPOSE IN THE CREATION OF MAN

The purpose of God in the creation of man is twofold as it is revealed in the Scriptures. The earliest record we have (Gen. 1:26-28) contains this statement of the introduction of human life upon the earth:

"And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth. So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them. And God blessed them, and God said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it: and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth."

Examining the passage carefully we observe how closely the purpose of man's creation is associated with the earth. The blessing which God pronounced upon him was to the end that he might "be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it." Before he could hope to conquer the forces which were then latent in the earth—the natural sources of energy as gas, oil, steam, and electricity—he must increase in numbers. One man and one woman could not accomplish so great a task though they might have all eternity in which to attempt it.

In addition to blessing him with mental and physical powers which would enable him to conquer these material forces of the earth, God blessed man with higher intellectual abilities that he might master and govern its animal inhabitants as well.

Man was thus created, equipped, and empowered by the Lord to be the conqueror and the king of earth under God. No doubt this was the reason why he was made in the "image" and after the "likeness" of the One whose representative he was to be. Moffatt's translation says that God proposed to make man to "resemble" his Maker, which suggests even more clearly that the Creator designed him to be His vicegerent, and so provided him with a form which all lesser creatures would recognize as more godlike than their own.

The purpose of man's creation is enlarged upon in the second chapter of Genesis. "Thus the heavens and the earth were finished, and all the host of them. . . . The Lord God had not caused it to rain upon the earth, and there was not a man to till the ground. . . . And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul" (Gen. 2:1-7).

In this, the second record of man's creation, the purpose of his coming into existence is again seen to be very closely connected with the earth. In the earlier statement, as we have learned, man was commanded to subdue the forces of nature and to rule over the brute creation. To accomplish this purpose of the Creator, he must multiply in numbers until his offspring filled the whole world. Here there is now added to the former statement of purpose the fact that man was created to supply the lack suggested: "There was not a man to till the ground." To provide for this necessary service, "the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground." He was thus made out of the substance of the earth he was to subdue and rule that he might be a part of his own kingdom in the fullest sense.

MAN'S OBEDIENCE A PART OF GOD'S PURPOSE FOR HIM

In the light of these facts, that man was created of the earth, to be its conqueror, developer, and sovereign under God, it becomes plainly apparent why it was that the Lord demanded absolute and unquestioning obedience from him. Man is here to carry out God's purposes in the earth.

Adam's failure to obey God in no way changed the Creator's eternal purpose. The action of no man or group of men can alter the purposes of God! Yet without changing His purpose, God may and often does change the individuals through whom He will bring His designs about. When the first Adam failed through disobedience to carry out the divine purposes, a second Adam was promised who would take his place and succeed in overcoming the forces of earth until He had "put all enemies under his feet" (1 Cor. 15:22-25, 45).

The first Adam lost his own life and the life of his bride and of their offspring through sin. This simply means that because they showed by their actions (Gen. 3:6) that they did not believe God (Gen. 2:17), and therefore could not be depended upon to carry on faithfully and unquestioningly the task of world-conquest and rulership which had been assigned to them, the Lord cut short their lives and banished them from His royal throne in Eden. Had Adam and Eve not thus failed in both faith and duty, and had none of their descendants failed in a similar way, every man would have been a king and every woman a queen under the earthly dominion of God.

Unbelief introduced an element of weakness into the characters of our first parents which speedily brought about a weakening of their bodies.

It is becoming ever more apparent, not alone to the psychiatrist, but to the physician as well, that Dr. Schofield, of the British Medical Association, was right when he said some thirty years ago that while "the power of mind over body has limits, they have never yet been ascertained."

Nor was Shakespeare mistaken in his conclusion that "our remedies oft in ourselves do lie." But he might well have added that the causes of our physical weaknesses, as well as the remedies by which they may be removed, frequently may be found within ourselves, that is, embedded in our characters. For, to change the wording but not the thought of a biblical statement, "as a man thinketh in his heart, so is he" (Prov. 23:7).

Wrong belief on the part of Adam and Eve led to wrong action, and wrong action led to weakness of body, and eventually to death.

OBEDIENCE THE PRODUCT OF FAITH

Character, good or bad, is the outward expression of inner mental attitudes. And such attitudes grow out of what one really believes. If he believes God as did Abraham, his faith will not only lead to divinely imputed righteousness (Rom. 4:3), but will result in actual righteousness as well. Consciously or unconsciously, we live what we believe. Emerson observes that "the thing a man does practically believe (and this is often enough without asserting it even to himself, much less to others); the thing a man does practically lay to his heart, and know for certain, concerning his vital relations to this mysterious Universe, and his duty and destiny there, that is in all cases the primary thing for him, and creatively determines all the rest."

To put the matter in another form: What a man really believes, not merely what he professes to believe, determines what he is. Which assertion is, after all, but an echo of our Savior's words: "By their fruits ye shall know them."

Adam and Eve disobeyed God because they did not believe what He had told them would be the result of eating of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. Completeness of obedience comes only through completeness of faith. Had they fully believed, they would have obeyed. Christ, the second Adam, who, "Son though he was, he learned by all he suffered to obey, and by being thus perfected he became the source of eternal salvation for all who obey Him" (Heb. 5:8, 9, Moffatt).

Obedience is the thing which God wants and must have from those who would cooperate with Him in His glorious work of restitution. Without such unquestioning obedience on the part of His coworkers and rulers, the eternal purpose of God could not be accomplished and the whole earth be filled with His glory. And, as we have seen, perfect obedience will be rendered only by those who have a perfect faith in the Lord and in the promises He has made. And perfect faith cannot be attained without coming to a definite knowledge of what God has promised to those who believe in Him.

Salvation, then, comes by faith, faith by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God (Rom. 10:17).

To sum up the entire matter: It is God's great purpose to reclaim the earth from the effects of sin; to fill it to overflowing with righteousness, prosperity, tranquillity, and life. To accomplish this objective, He is now calling out and developing a body of people who are to be the aids of the King of kings when He comes. In them must be cultivated above all else the qualities of faith and obedience to God. Furthermore, they must be thoroughly taught the breadth and fullness of the Lord's purposes that they may work intelligently with Him in every way. As we contemplate these things, we echo the words of David in the 72nd Psalm: "Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel, who only doeth wondrous things. And blessed be his glorious name for ever: and let the whole earth be filled with his glory; Amen, and Amen."

The Aim of Christian Discipline

"Now the end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned."—1 Timothy 1:5.

"The object to be secured by such caution is the love which springs from a pure heart, a clear conscience, and a sincere faith."—Weymouth.

"Whereas the aim of the Christian discipline is the love that springs from a pure heart, from a good conscience, and from a sincere faith."—Moffatt.

It used to be considered good psychology among certain intellectuals that a child should be allowed to express its own personality without dogmatic coercion. Thank goodness, many fathers and mothers are seeing their mistake and are turning back to the Bible doctrine of discipline for their sons and daughters. To always "do the thing I want to do at the time I want to do it," whether in work or play, never yet developed red-blooded personality, and never will.

The aim of the Christian discipline is to develop a personality of love. True happiness is found in giving, not getting. From earliest years a child needs once in a while to be set to doing things he most emphatically does not want to do. The discipline does him good. You young people need often to set about doing first the thing you would rather put off to some other time. Practice that piano lesson when you would rather be off with the gang. Go play ball even if you feel more like sitting at home reading a book. Enter into the plans of other people; make them happy.

Personality is like a flower garden. If nature has its way the garden goes to weeds. Yes, even your character must be cultivated. Flowers spring from properly kept soil. Love "springs from a pure heart, from a good conscience, and from a sincere faith."

"The lives which seem so poor, so low,
The hearts which are so cramped and dull,
The baffled hopes, the impulse slow,
Thou takest, touchest all, and lo!
They blossom to the beautiful."—Susan Coolidge.

The touch of Christ is a touch inspiring us to love. His disciples are good Samaritans. No matter who you are, "God is no respecter of persons." Let yourself go in His way. You may not want to do His way at times. It will be hard but, like David, you will find that "my cup runneth over" (Psalm 23:5). A personality of love will spring forth from your life.

A Pure Heart

"The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked."—Jer. 17:9.

These impurities of the heart must be purged out. It takes discipline, first by one's parents and teachers, then by oneself: "If a man therefore purge himself from these—" (2 Tim. 2:21). We find this to be a big "if." We turn to the Lord for help and we find Him faithful: "Every branch (in me) that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit" (John 15:2).

A Clear Conscience

"Conscience" is defined in Young's Concordance as "a knowing with oneself." There is the seared-with-a-hot-iron conscience, which enables a selfish man to live with himself without despising himself, and there is the good conscience. The evil Jews were convicted by their own consciences (John 8:9). A clear conscience is one that is good and that has not become seared; yes, and more, it is a conscience which the blood of Christ has purged "from dead works to serve the living God" (Heb. 9:14).

A Sincere Faith

The measure of the good you can do is what Jesus said, "According to your faith." Believe good things of God. Have supreme confidence in Him, that He is perfect in every way. Then cast your life upon His promises. Be like Paul: "I am not ashamed: for I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day" (2 Tim. 1:12). Hear the Word of God, for "faith cometh by hearing" (Rom. 10:17), and then build the Temple of your life upon the Rock of Faith which cannot be moved.

Love

Plant a flower seed in rich ground, cultivate and water, let the warm sun shine on it, and, lo, you have a flower. Even so, plant the Word of God in your heart, and then with sincere faith keep your heart pure and your conscience clear, and, lo, you have the fragrance of love. "Out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water."—John 7:38.

Praise Ye the Lord

All in the darkness, seeds have been growing
Slowly, slowly, day and night;
Now in the sunshine, blossoms are blowing
Glad and gay in the golden light.

Now in the happy springtime weather
Sing the birds in sweet accord;
Children and birds and flowers together,
All the world is praising God.

A PRAYER FOR HELP

"TODAY I read the nicest story," said Bobby. "I found it in my book of Birds and Their Habits that Uncle John gave me last Christmas."

"Tell it to us," said Betty, as she and Mother seated themselves in the living room. They had just finished in the kitchen for the day and were ready for that cozy chat the three always had before going to bed.

"It was in the chapter on eagles and it told how the mother eagle teaches her little ones to fly," Bobby told them.

"She builds her nest at the edge of a steep cliff. When her baby eagles are old enough to begin to learn to fly, the mother eagle pushes one little one out of the nest and lets it fall. In just a few seconds she flies down and swoops under her frightened baby bird. Then she catches it on her back, and it rides safely back to the nest."

"Imagine how happy the little eagles are when they are able to soar through the air by themselves," Mother remarked, "but it does seem a hard way to learn."

"I've watched an eagle," said Bobby, "and I've thought it was the bravest and freest of birds. Perhaps its flying lessons have something to do with that."

"I shouldn't wonder," said Mother. "We, too, learn the best lessons of life through the hardships we endure. Since we've led up to this point, let's look over our lesson for next Sunday. It's right along this line. Betty, get our Bibles, please."

"We start a new quarter of lessons which shows how God helps in the building of a nation," Mother continued. "But it is really a continuation of last quarter's lessons. It concerns the children of Jacob or Israel, in whom we were so interested. Betty, do you remember how many there were who went down to Egypt from Canaan when they had nothing at all left to eat?"

"It was seventy, Mother," Betty answered promptly.

"They had increased to six hundred thousand men, not counting the women and children, during the time between, which was a little more than four hundred years. Bobby, turn to Exodus 1, verses 11 and 14, and tell us if they were still so favored by the king."

"Oh, no," said Bobby, "they had masters placed over them who made them work terribly hard."

"Verse 8 says there was a new king in Egypt," Betty said, "who hadn't known Joseph and didn't care anything about them."

"Yes," said Mother, "and they had become slaves for the Egyptians who didn't want to lose them because they did all their hard work. Now do you remember what promise God had made to Joseph before he died?"

"That He would see that they all got back to their home land again," spoke up both children at once.

"And God hadn't forgotten His promise, either," Mother assured them. "Even before the children of Israel asked God to help them He was planning just how He would do it. I wonder if you children know the name of the man God chose to lead them away from the cruel Egyptians and back home."

"Moses," said Betty quickly, "and I remember what happened when he was a baby. The cruel king had made a law that every boy baby of the Israelites must be thrown into the river. But this little baby's mother just couldn't bear to part with him, and so she kept him hidden for three whole months. By that time he was getting so big and cooing so loudly she couldn't hide him any longer."

"Please let me tell it now," interrupted Bobby. "The baby's father, I think it was, made a little boat and fixed it so it wouldn't leak, and then the mother put the baby in it and they carried it down to the river side. Then the baby's sister stood near by to see what was going to happen. The first person that saw the little boat was no one else but the king's own daughter. She told her maids to bring it to her, and when they turned back the blanket there was the baby! When the little baby saw the strange faces about him he began to cry, and the princess felt sorry for him. She knew by his looks that he was one of the Israelites' babies and that according to her father's law he shouldn't be alive."

"Now let me finish it," said Betty eagerly. "By this time the baby's sister had come up and asked the princess if she should go and call an Israelite nurse. The princess wasn't a bit afraid of her father, the king, so she told the baby's sister to go. And, of course, she went and got their own mother. The princess told her to care for him and she would pay her for it. But she didn't know she was paying her to take care of her own son."

"Then the princess named the baby Moses, which means, 'drawn from the water.' And that is enough for one evening, children," finished Mother,

THE RELIGIOUS CENSUS

A representative of the United States Census Bureau called at our office last week asking us to urge upon our local church authorities the desirability of immediately filling out and sending in to the Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, Washington, D. C., the religious census blanks which they have received. The Government representative stated that thus far but twenty-six had responded from our denomination.

We believe that the protection in worship and the freedom of conscience which our country assures to us should be recognized by our churches everywhere and our appreciation shown by complying with this very simple request. May we depend upon you, the local church officer reading this paragraph, to see that the census blank is properly filled out and sent in to Washington immediately?

G. E. Marsh, Secretary General Conference.

"CORNELIUS NOT A CHRISTIAN"

The editorial which appeared under the above title on the front page of The Restitution Herald of April 13, is republished in the June issue of the "Messenger of Truth" Bro. S. J. Lindsay's excellent little paper. We appreciate the notation which Bro. Lindsay appends to the article in which he states that he heartily agrees with the thought presented in it.

If you wish to know what it was about look up your Herald of April 13 and reread it.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

Due to the extremely busy season, and multitudes of demands on time, news items have not been sent as often as they should. We wish to tell our many friends, however, that the banner of truth is still flying high at South Lawn Church, and plans are being worked out for real development in the future.

Sr. Agnes Lumsden faced the sad experience of burying her father June 5, and the sympathy of the church goes out to her.

Superintendent Stevens of the Sunday school has plans of special interest for each Sunday throughout the summer months. It is not expected that the attendance will run as high through the vacation period, but we anticipate a good sized, loyal group each Sunday morning.

Visitors are always welcome at "The Church That Lights the Way."

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

MORE THAN A TITHE

A husband and wife, who are equally interested in the Lord's work, not only in their own locality but throughout the country, felt an insistent desire to help pay off the indebtedness of the National Bible Institution. They have been tithers for many years, but their tithe was only sufficient to meet their regular pledges for other religious work. Here is how they met the problem.

"When the Conference suggested that if three hundred members would each contribute $25.00 the debt would be met, we wanted to send our $25.00. Our tenth wouldn't be enough to pay other church bills and still provide this amount. So on January 1 of this year we began saving half dollars for this purpose" (this, remember, was in addition to their tithe), "and much to our surprise by the end of the first week in May we had the $25.00. It wasn't always easy to do, but we stuck to it."

How much of real Christian devotion is expressed in that last statement: "but we stuck to it"! We thank God for such coworkers in the Lord and for their example, even though it puts many of us to shame.

RANDALL'S NORTHWEST DASH

The recently created Home Mission Board has arranged with Bro. C. E. Randall, president of the Ministerial Association, to make an evangelistic trip across the continent to the Northwest. He will plan to visit as many churches in Washington and Oregon as possible and also any places along the route that desire it. He is anxious to see as many of the isolated brethren as possible, also.

Do You Want Him to Stop?

His schedule is being arranged as rapidly as possible. Contacts are desired with all places where there are believers who would like to have him stop off. If your church has not had an inquiry as yet, and you wish Bro. Randall to make you a visit, don't wait, but notify M. W. Lyon, 13517 Darley Ave., Cleveland, Ohio, at once. A short meeting could even be arranged, or a week or ten days, if advisable. Bro. Randall will leave Fonthill, Ont., July 5, working westward through Minnesota, and leaving St. Paul July 12 over the Great Northern. He must be back at Oregon, Ill., by August 3. Stops will necessarily, therefore, be brief.

A Great Opportunity

This is the first evangelistic effort put forth by the Mission Board since its organization. We are anxious to make it count for the utmost. Bro. Randall will carry the message of the Mission work and of the General Conference, and will inspire you with his vigorous presentation of the gospel message. Whatever offerings are made, above expenses, will be turned into the Mission Fund for further evangelistic work. In these days of crisis, with the Lord's return so near at hand, we need to witness far and near! This may be your great opportunity. Let's all make the most of this trip, pray for its success, and everyone cooperate as far as possible.

Send in your reservation for a meeting at once.

M. W. Lyon, Mission Board Chairman.

FROM AN AGED SERVANT OF THE LORD

Knowing that such an encouraging message is always welcomed by our readers, we present the following letter from Sr. J. E. Brown of Tacoma, Wash. That one of such advanced age remains interested in the things of God and in the writers for The Herald shows how rich her faith is. May God bless and strengthen her and the hands of those who minister to her needs until the Master comes.

"You cannot imagine the joy that I have in The Restitution Herald. I am nearly blind, but a friend reads it and the Bible to me. I enjoy always your good articles, and though I am ninety-five years young, I like the young people's department. I was sorry when Arlen Marsh left the department, but glad that it fell into such good hands as those of Bro. Smead.

"Of course I know Srs. Lottie Young and Emma Railsback and Bro. Corbaley and others, but even those whose names I have become familiar with through their contributions to the various funds I feel I know, for we all belong to the one body, the body of our Lord Jesus Christ."

BAPTISM AT OREGON, ILLINOIS

The Church of God at Oregon was given occasion for rejoicing last Tuesday when William Arbogast was immersed by the pastor into the name of the Lord Jesus. Bro. Arbogast has been probably the most regular attendant at all the services of the church during the past six years of any in the congregation. He is present at Sunday school, Berean and prayer meetings, in addition to practically every preaching service. And not only has he been present, but he has taken an interested part in Bible discussions and frequently conducted Berean meetings. He is in the prime of life and we look forward to many years of successful service for him before the Lord comes.

KOKOMO, INDIANA

After a long silence, Kokomo reports that we are still active in the service. We greatly miss Bro. A. E. Hoskins of Burr Oak, Ind., who is on an evangelistic tour through his old home State, Minnesota. His monthly visits to Kokomo are most pleasant and beneficial. We pray for the success of this effort.

Bro. Robert Harvey, 1230 S. Union St., was released from the St. Joseph Hospital, June 4, where he underwent a minor operation. He is doing nicely and hopes to be out to services next Sunday.

Sr. O. J. Parker has been on the sick list most of the winter and spring, but is faithful in attendance at all services, though often in great need of rest.

Sr. M. D. Porter of South Bend, Ind., was a visitor for both Sunday school and morning service June 6. Come again, Sr. Porter.

We will hold our Children's Day program June 13. Both the committee and the children have been hard at work the past month.

Our program for summer services is: Sunday school, 9:45 a. m.; morning worship, 11:00 a. m., with Bro. O. J. Parker in charge; Berean classes (adult and junior), 6:30 p. m.; and evening sermon at 7:45 p. m., by the writer, who is thankful to be back in the work after five months of illness during the winter. Brethren living near or passing through Kokomo are invited to visit with us.

D. G. Harvey.

REPORT FOR MAY

Sermons delivered in Indiana: Plainview, 2; Rensselaer, 2; Hillisburg, 2; Plymouth, 1.

Sermons given in Missouri: Blush, 5; St. Louis, 2; Springfield, 2; Republic, 2.

Money received in Indiana: Plainview, $28.00; Rensselaer, $20.00; Hillisburg, $20.83; Plymouth, $15.00; North Salem, $7.50; conference board, $7.00. Expenses $15.00.

It was our pleasure to hold two services in Republic, Mo., where we met Bro. Si Herrea and family. Bro. Herrea, wife, and son are members of the Church of God, and learning that we would be in Springfield, asked us to come to Republic and hold some services. This is a new field and good interest was shown, but we could be there for only two nights.

J. H. Anderson, Indiana Evangelist.

HOPKINS - NEWELL

South Lawn Church in Grand Rapids, Mich., was packed to standing room Saturday night, May 22, for the wedding of Lyle Newell and Ilah Hopkins, two of our popular young people. Ilah is the daughter of Bro. and Sr. Oscar Hopkins. She has been a member of our church and Sunday school for several years. Lyle has also been identified among our young people for some time. Sr. Newell, his mother, will be remembered as one of the attendants at General Conference from here.

The church was beautifully decorated for the occasion, and following the wedding a reception was held in the church parlors. The heartiest good wishes of all go out to these young people in their lives together.

F. E. Siple.

SMITH - SHERMAN

At a simple wedding service, celebrated in the Church of God at Oregon, Ill., Sunday, June 6, 1937, Sr. Anna Aslaksen Smith of Forreston, Ill., became the wife of George W. Sherman of Byron, Ill.

They were accompanied to the altar by Bro. and Sr. Charles Gesin, the latter a sister of the bride. Others in attendance were close relatives of the two families.

For many years Sr. Smith was a widow, fulfilling ably and faithfully her duties as a mother by bringing up her children "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Under difficult circumstances she reared them to young manhood and womanhood, instilling within them those qualities of character which make them worthy of her instruction and example. We wish for both husband and wife the joy and comfort in each other's association which they so richly deserve.

Mr. and Mrs. Sherman will make their home in Byron, Ill.

MRS. ERMA MYRTLE PEARSON

Mrs. Erma Myrtle Pearson, daughter of Mrs. and Mrs. Warren Honeyman, was born near Nashville, Ohio, May 28, 1914, and died at Stouder Hospital, Troy, Ohio, June 3, 1937. She was married to Bro. Forest Pearson, of near Tippecanoe City, Feb. 7, 1937. She is survived by her husband; her mother, Mrs. Anna Honeyman; five brothers, Leonard, Arthur, Lloyd, Ralph, and Lawrence; and four sisters, Mae, Angie, Elsie, and Florence. Many other relatives and friends survive.

Though she had attended the Brush Creek Church of God for only a few months, she showed an interest in the faith. She was reared as a member of the West Union Christian Church.

Funeral services were conducted June 5 from the Honeyman home and the Church of God by Elder T. A. Drinkard and the writer. Sydney E. Magaw.

Bro. Earle H. Mogle, treasurer of the National Bible Institution, and his wife are spending a brief vacation on the Pacific Coast. While there Bro. Mogle will inspect the property belonging to the Institution at Riverside, Calif.

Sr. Mattie H. Scott writes as follows: "Friends of Bro. and Sr. J. A. Grant of the Rensselaer church will no doubt be interested and saddened to learn that Sr. Grant suffered a stroke last August and since that time she has been confined to her home, and much of the time to her bed. Bro. and Sr. Grant are further distressed by the failing health of their only child, Bro. Hale Grant." Let us ask the Father to comfort and strengthen these suffering ones.

PATRICK - WILLIAMS

A beautiful marriage was solemnized in Ashland, Ohio, May 30, when Miss Ione Patrick, daughter of Elder and Mrs. James A. Patrick, became the wife of Mr. Wilber Williams of that city.

A large section of the commodious auditorium of the Christian Church was well filled with relatives and friends of the popular couple when the sweet tones of the organ announced that the hour when two good souls were to be joined into one had arrived. A beautiful solo was sung by the bride's brother, Cecil Patrick, after which, to the beautiful strains of the Wedding March, the bridegroom, with his brother as best man, appeared and stood between the rows of lighted candles, emblematic of the lighted way of life, waiting to receive the one he loved above all others, when the bride, on the arm of her father, preceded by her maid of honor, appeared, marching slowly down the aisle to her future life's companion—an impressive picture to those who appreciate the significance of marriage.

The marriage rites were solemnized by the writer, assisted by Elder Hull, pastor of the Ashland Christian Church, of which the bridegroom is a member.

In attendance at the wedding were representatives from Cleveland, Akron, Dayton, and the neighborhood of the Brush Creek Church, Ohio, and from Illinois.

Many of our people are acquainted with Miss Ione, a former teacher and a true Christian girl. Mr. Williams is a fine, Christian young man, holding a responsible position with one of the large chain stores in Ashland, where they expect to make their future home, and where they may be addressed. As they are true to the elements of Christian character, we bespeak for them a happy and successful wedded life.

L. E. Conner.

The editor left today, June 15, for Plymouth, Ind., to attend the Indiana State Conference and Bible School, which meets from the 16th to the 27th, inclusive, at the North Salem Church, between South Bend and Plymouth.

Sin and Its Results

WE READ in Matthew 24, the 12th verse, these words: "And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold."

I presume the "many" referred to here are those with a profession of love to Christ, and how well Jesus knew the fickleness of the human heart, how well He knew the mighty power of Satan, for who else could conceive the knowledge that Christian people would be lured into sin because it abounded?

One would naturally expect them to be disgusted with it, and yet this prophecy is signally fulfilled. Don't we find our own church people drifting here and there because there is so much wickedness all about them?

The trouble is that we haven't learned to hate sin—we don't want our boys and girls, and sisters and brothers, to indulge, but if they do we excuse the sin, we tolerate it. Oh, for such a hatred of sin in each one of our lives that not for a moment will we excuse or tolerate it, but as far as we are concerned, and by the grace of God, keep ourselves from it.

I feel confident that when we get a good look at sin, we shall be ashamed to be counted among those who indulge in it.

I know a man who considered himself broad enough politically to listen to all sides during a recent campaign, and so he visited the primaries of both factions, and he said that at one he looked about at his companions and saw about them such marks of dissipation and illiteracy, that he felt ashamed to be there, and kept hoping no one he knew would discover his presence and, just alone for the type of men who were voting on that side, he cast his ballot on the opposing side. And so, friends, when we get a good idea of the awfulness of sin and the type of people associated with it we will pack up and move out. It has been said that the greatest sin in the world is unbelief, and it is that sin which will keep the sinner out of the kingdom of God, but the real motive for this unbelief, it seems to me, is one of two things: pride and selfishness.

All unrighteousness is sin! Do we admire an unrighteous person? Yet because we are proud, rebellious, and selfish, we become the very kind of person we dislike. Sin is an overstepping of the divine boundary between good and evil. For just a few moments let us consider some who have had to pay in a measure for the sin they committed: We know that Adam and Eve were cast out of a garden in describable for beauty to earn their bread by the sweat of their brows. Misery and pain and sorrow were their lot. Thistles, briars, and thorns were they to fight continuously! Was the apple worth it? Would it not have been better to remain a bit less intelligent than God than to have assumed such self-exaltation? You may say, "No, but I never would seek that position." Listen: Every time you get up in the morning and fail to thank God for His protection during the night and seek His guidance through the day, you are assuming that you can take care of yourself as well as He can. Every time you plan your own affairs without seeking His approval you are exalting your own ability and intelligence. In the day of judgment if He casts you out to utter darkness, will your self-exaltation be worth it? When you rob God of tithes and offerings, when you refuse to witness for Him or speak a word to some lost soul because you are too proud, you are hoarding up wrath unto yourself. And when you see your loved ones going down to destruction will your pride and selfishness be worth it?

We cannot go on in this life doing the very things Satan was cast down from heaven for and expect to get away from it. We may stay away from theaters and dances, but we may be stingy and mean and rebellious and proud. We may give our tenth regularly, but we may refuse to speak to a fellow man because we don't like what he does; we may attend services regularly, but we may be unwilling to make these services inspirational by the help we may give; in fact, merely being indifferent often kills a service.

Can any of these sins be excused or justified?

We don't want to be numbered with the whoremongers, the murderers, the liars, when they weep and gnash their teeth, but sin is sin in the eyes of God, and there is no excuse for it, for His grace is sufficient, and we have Christ for an example, and we know that sin when it is finished bringeth forth death. But Christ was wounded for our transgressions, bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon Him, and by His stripes we are healed. He was manifested to take away sin, and in Him is no sin. "He that committeth sin is of the devil: for the devil sinneth from the beginning," and Christ was manifested that He might destroy the works of the Devil.

That sin exists none can deny. Why it was permitted has perplexed many minds, but God can bring light out of darkness, make the wrath of man to praise Him, and turn a curse into a blessing. He can bring good out of evil and turn mistakes and downfalls into stepping stones to higher ground. John says in the Revelation, "There shall be no more death, and there shall be no more curse."

"God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform;
He plants His footsteps in the sea
And rides upon the storm.

"Blind unbelief is sure to err,
And scan His work in vain;
God is His own interpreter
And He will make it plain."

Essential Elements of Christian Faith

4. The Church of God

IT IS obviously impossible in a single article for the author to do justice to the vast theme to which he invites the reader's attention at this time. For, The Church of God: Its Origin, Purpose, Constitution, and Destiny, includes the entire divine plan of human redemption and of world reclamation. And yet it is necessary for us to know something of the origin of the Church, something of the purpose for which it was established, something of its nature and eternal destiny, before we can exercise an intelligent and active faith in God and in the Lord Jesus Christ. For faith rests upon the promises that God has made, and the promises He has made have much to do with the purpose, constitution and destiny of the Church of God.

It is not compatible with the positive nature of our studies for me to introduce opinions of my own, but I ask your indulgence for a momentary disregard for our established rule in the interest of candor. In what I am about to say, to paraphrase a confession of Paul, "I speak not by inspiration," but by conviction.

It is my personal conviction, reached after a careful study of the scriptures applying to the subject, that the Church of God has in a sense existed from the beginning of God's dealing with men. For as we proceed with our study we shall find that the word "church" means "called out," and that the Church is composed of individuals whom God has "called out" because of their faith, that they may render certain specified services to Him.

The word "church" sometimes means simply "congregation" or assembly of workers for God, as in Acts 7:38, where mention is made of "the church in the wilderness," which obviously means the congregation of Israel in the journey through the wilderness of Sinai.

But Israel is entitled to be termed the "called out" or Church of God for a more definite reason. The twelve tribes had been "called out" of Egypt to serve Jehovah in a very special way. He had said through Moses, "If ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then shall ye be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people: for all the earth is mine: and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation" (Ex. 19:5).

In this, the fourth of a series of articles in which the editor presents some of the more important elements of Christian faith as taught by the Church of God, he invites the reader's attention to one of the most comprehensive subjects of the entire Bible—The Church of God: Its Origin, Purpose, Constitution, and Destiny.

God had called out the twelve tribes of Israel from the bondage and sinfulness of Egypt into the glory of His own service that they might be "a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation."

Egypt was not merely a type of the sinful world out of which God calls those who come to have faith in Him, but Egypt was actually a state of sin, from which the Lord literally "called" His people.

Moses, we are told, elected to "suffer affliction with the people of God, (rather) than to enjoy the pleasures of sin (in Egypt) for a season" (Heb. 11:24-26).

Speaking through Hosea (11:1), Jehovah says, "When Israel was a child, then I loved him, and called my son out of Egypt."

The similarity of the description given by inspired writers of Israel and the Church are striking. God said through Moses that Israel should be a "peculiar treasure," and a "kingdom of priests, and an holy nation." Peter, speaking under the inspiration of God's Spirit, described the church as "a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people," whose duty it was to "shew forth the praises of him who (had) called (them) out of darkness into his marvellous light" (1 Peter 2:9).

Both Israel and the Church were called out of darkness into the glorious light of the truth of God. Both made a covenant with Jehovah to do His will. To both God promised that if they remained faithful they would be a royal or kingly priesthood and "an holy nation." Both Israel and the Church were called out for service and that service was to be the service usually rendered by kings and priests.

That this is to remain the dominating purpose for which God calls out His people is evident from the song which the four and twenty elders sang:

"And they sung a new song, (Please turn to page 11)

Bible Reading Permitted in Public Schools of Illinois

"From a child thou hast known the holy scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation."

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., June 10.—It was brought out in the discussion of a bill which would specifically state that the reading of the Bible was allowable in the public schools of Illinois, that no law now existed forbidding such reading. In introducing her measure in the House of Representatives, Mrs. Lottie Holman O'Neill said: "This is only a permissive bill, and a number of other states have adopted similar laws recently. They have found Bible reading to be a deterrent to juvenile crime."

Arguing against the enactment of such a law, Representative F. W. Lewis voiced the chief objection of the opposition when he said: "I have no antagonism toward the Bible. Even the Koran could be read as a matter of education, but not a religious doctrine. The question is whose Bible would be read—yours or mine?"

At this point in the debate it was revealed that "there is no law prohibiting such reading" in the Illinois code, but State Superintendent of Public Instruction, John A. Wieland, said that court decisions permit no interpretation of the Scriptures.

Surely the devout Christian parent can find no serious objection to the present situation with regard to the reading of the Bible in the public schools. To read the Bible in the schools is permitted by law, but to attempt to interpret the Bible is forbidden. For ourselves we are glad that such is the case. Doctrinal errors result, not from reading the Bible, but from the misinterpretation of it. Let the Word of God be implanted in the minds and hearts of our boys and girls in the home by godly parents and grandparents, as was the case with Timothy (2 Tim. 1:5; 3:14-17), and it will make little difference whether or not it is read in the schools!

Quenchless Fires of Hatred

"And Esau hated Jacob."—Genesis 27:41.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., June 19.—Rev. W. H. Allen, of the Moravian Church in America, who has recently returned to this country from Palestine, has this to say regarding the present situation between the Jews and Arabs:

"About 750,000 Arabs live in Palestine (which is about the size of the State of Vermont and much less fertile). Three British Royal Commissioners that have been sent out to study the situation have reported that Palestine is unable to support more than the present population.

"It is also claimed that the late Col. T. E. Lawrence promised the Arabs, as a reward for helping the British in the World War, that an all-Arab federation would be formed, including Palestine. As a result of the Balfour Declaration, the Arabs are exceedingly bitter against both Jews and British.

"The Arabs admit that the Jews are smarter than they, and have more wealth, but they believe that if Jewish immigration continues the country will be completely dominated by them."

In this view of eventual Jewish domination in Palestine, the Arabs are not mistaken, as the student of prophecy is aware, and as a Christian Arab told a visiting Methodist minister of the editor's acquaintance, to the latter's amazement, recently. Palestine belongs by promise and inheritance to Jacob, not to Esau, and soon we believe he will come into full possession of it.

Jewish Fears in Italy

"Fear is on every side."—Jeremiah 6:25.

ROME, Italy, June 19.—The judgment of Jehovah is searching out the "dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth" (Isa. 11:12) and forcing them by persecution and economic pressure to seek a place of refuge within the circling hills of Zion. According to Current History, the Jewish communities in Italy are beginning to be deeply concerned as to what may be before them in that country. Up to the last few months they have "enjoyed a degree of freedom from social, racial, and religious prejudice that has been equalled in few other countries." But now the situation is changing entirely and the restrictions which have been placed upon their compatriots in Germany it is feared may soon be applied to the Jews in Italy.

While the Government itself has made no threatening move against them, with the exception of the restrictive laws passed recently in Libya (see Abreast of the Times, Jan. 5, 1937), which is Italian territory, various newspapers, apparently "inspired" by Italian authorities, have been inaugurating an anti-Semitic campaign after the order of that carried on in Nazi Germany.

Let's Dust Off the Bible

By Mary A. Gesin

AMERICA is a nation of reading people. The well filled news stands on every business street or corner proclaim this fact in no uncertain terms. They also proclaim just as unmistakably the trend of the taste of the reading public. And a few moments' survey of the titles displayed on the stands gives evidence of the cultivation of a type of literature that is detrimental to both sound thinking and sound living.

Why has this popular trend in reading habits come about is a question that may well be asked. Students of the problem tell us that people read because they want to forget. Howard Jennings, in Signs of the Times, quotes from David Raffelock, editor of a writer's journal, and we give you in part his analysis.

He says, "We are in a transition stage of society, and there is a great uncertainty among leaders. When no remedies to difficulties are forthcoming, it has become politic to serve the narcotics of forgetfulness, of diversion and camouflage. The more a yarn can make people forget, the more popular it is."

Desiring to evade the stern facts of living people demand an opiate. The wierd, fantastic tales that find such an eager following speak only too clearly that men today are seeking an unrealistic world where the grim realities of living are forgotten.

Disregard for the principles of noble character is most obvious in the flagrant display of the sex periodicals. The so-called "confession" story is one of the most popular among readers and, no doubt, the greatest source of income for present-day writers.

We are all appalled at the descent of youth into crime. Dare any thinking person say that popular literature, as well as the popular type of movie, has nothing to do with it? And the really distressing fact is that this so-called literature is as often brought to the reading table by the parent as by the child.

Just a few hours after completing this article, the following incident came to my attention first-hand, and I have inserted it here. At one o'clock in the morning a small boy was noticed sitting on the curb at an oil station, hoping for a ride to his home which was in the next town fifteen miles distant. Upon inquiry the following information was obtained. His age was twelve years, and he was the oldest of a family of nine, living on relief. He had hitch-hiked to the next town to see a movie. When asked why he didn't go to the movies in his own town, he replied, that there "wasn't any killings in it."

In beautiful contrast to the lurid tales of present-day fiction let us turn the pages of that good old Book of books and read: "Thy testimonies are wonderful: therefore doth my soul keep them. The entrance of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple . . . Great peace have they which love thy law: and nothing shall offend them. . . . Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path. . . . Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly . . . but his delight is in the law of the Lord; and in his law doth he meditate day and night. . . . The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple. . . . The commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes. The fear of the Lord is clean, enduring for ever" (selections from the Psalms).

Ignoring the facts that face one never did change those facts. If the difficulties of every day, the problems of making a living, are too burdensome, discover the plans that God has for you in the not far distant future. The world's greatest Book is replete with information on this subject.

Listen: "He shall judge the poor of the people, he shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor. . . . He shall deliver the needy when he crieth; the poor also, and him that hath no helper. He shall spare the poor and the needy, and shall save the souls of the needy. He shall redeem their soul from deceit and violence: and precious shall their blood be in his sight" (Psalm 72).

Listen again: "Say to them that are of a fearful heart, Be strong, fear not: behold, your God will come . . . with a recompense; he will come and save you. . . . And the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away" (Isaiah 35).

Is not this concrete enough for you? Listen: "I saw a new heaven and a new earth . . . and I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people . . . And God shall (Please turn to Page 11)

Forgotten!

Forgotten! no, that cannot be,
The oath of Him who cannot lie
Is on the city and the land,
An oath to all eternity.

Forgotten! no, that cannot be,
The grace of ages deep and broad
Is grace without decay, the grace,
O Israel, of the Lord thy God.

Forgotten! no, that cannot be,
Sun, moon, and stars may cease to shine,
But thou shalt be remembered still,
For thou art His, and He is thine.

Forgotten of the Lord thy God!
No, Israel, no, that cannot be,

God's Character

By Harvey Krogh, Jr.

MANY pictures of God's character have been painted since men began to worship and preach. Our Creator has been shown as carnal man in his good and evil moods. God has been pictured as a tyrant with all sorts of characteristics.

Possibly you have heard of Christ's sacrifice as something to appease the anger of God. And if you would say there is no reason in that according to the Scriptures, the answer you will hear is, "You must take those things on faith." But we should say, "Come, let us reason together," for there are things that we are not to take on faith, but we are to reason and understand as God has instructed us. If we try to take obvious untruth on faith people will doubt all that we try to teach.

Would you want to worship a God who became angry at any little thing we might do wrong and demand a sacrifice to appease that anger? Of course not. God is perfect. When a man learns to keep his temper and use reason he is considered to be civilized and advanced higher than the man who immediately becomes enraged. Can man, therefore, be more advanced than God? No! And we must, therefore, admit that God is not less civilized than man.

Maybe you have heard some one say he could not believe in a God who would consign poor sinners to a burning hell just because they knew not how to be good. Such a one has a mistaken idea of the character of God. It would be hard for me to put my trust in that kind of a God. A good man would never torture his dog to punish him. He might kill him but never torture him. Is God less merciful than man? No! That cannot be!

Why did God request the life of His Son? Was He angry? I do not think so. Nor did God need to be pacified with human blood. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." "Have I any pleasure at all that the wicked should die? saith the Lord God: and not that he should return from his ways, and live? . . . For I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord God: wherefore turn yourselves, and live ye" (Ezek. 18:23, 32). "For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Saviour; who will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth" (1 Tim. 2:3, 4). "The Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; but is longsuffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance" (2 Peter 3:9).

According to these scriptures God is not a cruel tyrant seeking vengeance where He can, but is a God of love. Because some have thought God was not a loving Father they have tried to escape Him, Because they commit sin they think God is angry with them, and the human inclination is to become angry with the one who is angry with you. For this same reason some children are hard to correct. They feel that punishment is a means of getting even for some wrong done. How much easier it would be if it could be made clear to the child that punishment is for the child's good and is directed by love. Of course it would follow that in punishing one would have to be careful that malice and anger were not the motives. Solomon said, "He that spar-eth his rod hateth his son: but he that loveth him chasteneth him betimes." Therefore the motive would be love. Now if that is correct for man, would God punish just to avenge Himself? Can you imagine God doing the opposite of what He has asked man to do? When God punishes, it is for the good of the one being punished.

There is a popular teaching that the wicked shall be tormented for all eternity. This has been taught because of a belief that man has an immortal soul which cannot die but is capable of enduring punishment as long as punishment is continued. With all kindness and love toward those who hold this view we believe it has done harm to the cause of Christ because it does not show God in His true character as a God of love, mercy, and justice. Such a loving Father as we worship did not create His creatures capable of endless torment. No place in the Bible can it be found where people are to suffer torment for eternity. It is true that in Revelation 20:10 it speaks of the devil as one that shall be tormented day and night forever. There is one other scripture that might lead some to think Jesus taught eternal torment, but there is no proof that He so taught it. Luke 16:19-31 is the narrative of the rich man and Lazarus, but this had only one purpose that we know of and that was to portray a picture of the Jews, rich in the promises of God, the Gentile with nothing but crumbs, but since the Jews did not accept Christ and He turned to the Gentiles, therefore, the Jews became tormented by national failure and loss of the promises and the Gentile became a child of Abraham by faith. (For a complete study of the subject write to the National Bible Institution, Oregon, Illinois, for the tract on "The Rich Man and Lazarus" by J. H. Anderson, 5 cents a copy.)

We often speak of a time of trouble called the Great Tribulation. In Isaiah 13:11 God spoke: "And I will punish the world for their evil, and the wicked for their iniquity; and I will cause the arrogancy of the proud to cease, and will lay low the haughtiness of the terrible." What is the purpose of all this punishment? Is it to please an angry God? The Prophet Ezekiel tells us of a great slaughter where God invites the birds and beasts: "Ye shall eat the flesh of the mighty, and drink the blood of the princes of the earth. . . . Thus ye shall be filled at my table.

... And I will set my glory among the heathen, and all the heathen shall see my judgment that I have executed, and my hand that I have laid upon them. So the house of Israel shall know that I am the Lord their God from that day forward. . . . Then shall they know that I am the Lord their God" (Ezek. 39:18-28). This is all done that Israel may know that the Lord is their God. In Ezekiel 38:14 God commands Ezekiel to prophesy and speak to God: "And thou shalt come up against my people of Israel, as a cloud to cover the land; it shall be in the latter days, and I will bring thee against my land." Why? Yes, to punish, but why? "That the heathen may know me, when I shall be sanctified in thee, O Gog, before their eyes" (Ezek. 38:16). "That the heathen may know me." Do you know what Jesus said it meant to know the Father and the Son?

"And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent" (John 17:3). What does it mean to know God? Not only life eternal, but to know Him truly is to love Him, the Father who is the most lovable being that lives. The Son is like Him, "He is altogether lovely" (Song of Solomon 5:16). Jesus said, "If ye love me keep my commandments," and, "If a man love me, he will keep my words" (John 14:15, 23). Oh! the joy and peace that comes when you know the Lord.

Why does God want men to know Him? God loves men or He would never have created them. When all men know Him as He really is, many shall love and serve Him. Let us study that we may know the wonderful character of our God and that we may know Him and our Savior better.

PRAYER

By A. H. Zilmer

THE Gospel of Luke relates that when Jesus had finished praying in a certain place, one of His disciples said to Him, "Lord, teach us to pray, as John also taught his disciples" (Luke 11:1). Doubtless those disciples were in much the same state as regards prayer as were the brethren at Rome to whom the Apostle Paul addressed himself thus:

"For we know not what to pray for as we ought" (Rom. 8:26). They felt the need for prayer, but were unable to frame their thoughts in such a manner as to both express their inmost feelings, and be assured of acceptance with God. They needed "help" in this matter of prayer. The Apostle built around this human helplessness the thought of Spirit help: "Likewise the Spirit also helpeth our infirmities . . . But the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered." Jesus likewise helped His disciples to pray acceptably by inditing a prayer which we often call the "Lord's Prayer." Thus there was help for the disciples then living, and those later on who were contemporary with the apostles.

The first element of acceptable prayer is thanksgiving to God for blessings received. This at once recognizes the goodness of God and our dependence upon Him for every good. "Giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ" (Eph. 5:20). "In every thing give thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you" (1 Thess. 5:18).

The next element of prayer consists of requests. These arise from a sense of need. However, here, too, "we know not what we should pray for as we ought," and we require instruction as to what are our real needs, as distinct from merely imaginary ones. "Always in every prayer of mine for you all making request with joy" (Phil. 1:4). "Be careful for nothing; but in every thing by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God" (Phil. 4:6).

These testimonies lead us to ask for and expect much. But first let us tarry a moment longer with the words, "Let your requests be made known unto God." Does this mean that in making such requests we are giving God information as to what we really need? Jesus said, "But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions, as the heathen do; for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking. Be not ye therefore like unto them; for your Father knoweth what things ye have need of before ye ask him" (Matt. 6:7, 8). Yea, as one said of old, "Thou understandest my thoughts afar off" (Psalm 139:2). Hence in our prayers we are not supplying God with information as to our desires, or even our needs, but simply acknowledging our dependence upon Him, and taking advantage of His gracious offer of good things.

Neither do we make such requests to make God willing to bestow good things. Hear we this: "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask him" (Matt. 7:11)? The heavenly Father is much more willing to give good things to those who ask Him than parents are to give good gifts to their children. Such willingness can only be the divine willingness.

Both Jesus and the apostles assured the saints that if they asked it should be given them. "For every one that asketh receiveth" (Luke 11:10). Again, as to how to ask: "All things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive" (Matt. 21:22). "What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them" (Mark 11:24). "If ye abide in me, and

In the Land of the Patriarchs

THE BEERSHEBA road climbs out of Hebron and the Wadi el Khalil, and turns southeast across undulating country which gradually drops away to the southern desert. The outlying olive groves and luxuriant vineyards are soon left behind, and only a few evergreen oaks remain to relieve the stony hillsides. Once these slopes were clothed with extensive forests, but through the centuries the trees have been gradually cut down without any thought of reforestation, until the hills have become practically devoid of timber. The country is by no means desolate, however, for wide fields of wheat stretch away on either side of the road wherever the ground permits, and large flocks of sheep and goats dot the higher hillsides.

It was plowing time when I went down to the "south country," and here and there Arab husbandmen were turning over the reddish soil with their primitive plows. These crude implements, consisting simply of a bent wooden frame, to the lower end of which an iron blade is affixed, have probably not changed in form since Old Testament times.

Until coming to the Holy Land, I had always been puzzled by the prophetic command, "Beat your plowshares into swords" (Joel 3:10), and that other prophecy of the time when the nations would "beat their swords into plowshares" (Micah 4:3). But when I saw that the plowshare is merely a long iron spike or blade, I saw how appropriate the symbolic language was.

While occasionally a camel dragged the simple plow along, there were more usually two animals, sometimes oxen, sometimes donkeys, while quite often a donkey and an ox were yoked together. Such unequal yoking was prohibited in the Mosaic law, and provided the Apostle Paul with a striking illustration for his exhortation against marriage with unbelievers (2 Cor. 6:14).

Crossing a wide valley, we passed a little spring called Ain Hejireh from which an Arab was bailing water by means of a long pivoted pole with a bucket attached to one end and a counterpoise weight on the other. This apparatus, known as a "shadoof," is very commonly used for raising water in Egypt, but is somewhat rare in Palestine.

The spring itself interested me because of the probability that it is one of the "upper springs," which, with the "nether springs," were given by Caleb to his daughter to compensate for the arid character of most of the territory assigned to her (Judges 1:14, 15). The lower springs in this case would be represented by the pool of Ain Dilbeh farther south.

It is an arid, tawny plain over which the road runs for the remaining dozen miles to Beersheba. Yet, though one would hardly believe that it could produce anything, much of it was plowed in anticipation of the meager rains just about due.

Not a house or even a mud hut was to be seen, but far back from the road little groups of black goat- or camel-hair tents speckled the yellow plain, and I knew that I was in the land of the patriarchs. These wandering Bedouins live exactly as did the patriarchal ancestors of Israel two thousand years before Christ. Many subsist entirely upon their flocks of sheep, goats, and camels; while others, like Abraham and Isaac, are semi-agricultural, and year by year extract from the sandy soil quite a remarkable harvest of wheat.

At last, Beersheba came into sight, its gray and yellow buildings dominated by a tall, slender minaret, rising out of the plain amid groves of cypress, pepper, eucalyptus, and carob trees, and clusters of date palms, a refreshing oasis in the fierce, hot desert. There is a settled population of about three thousand, chiefly Arabs, in Beersheba; but a very much larger number, estimated at forty-five thousand, rove the sandy plains, leading their flocks and herds from pasture to pasture. There are said to be no less than thirteen thousand camels and sixty thousand sheep in the district.

Beersheba was the southernmost town of the land in the days of Israel, whence arose the expression, "from Dan even to Beersheba" (Judges 20:1; 1 Sam. 3:20), to describe the limits of the land. Today it is still the last outpost along the road over the desert of Sinai until Akaba on one arm of the Red Sea or Suez on the other is reached.

WELLS WHICH ABRAHAM DUG

At the entrance to the town we came upon the largest of the wells of Beersheba, confidently believed by the Bedouins to have been dug by Ibrahim el Khalil (Abraham, the Friend), as he is known to them. That the masonry lining the upper part of the well dates back to the twelfth century is proved by the fact that Major Conder discovered the date A. H. 505 on a stone some fifteen feet down. But the well itself is certainly much more ancient, and may indeed go back to the time of the patriarch. (A. H., Anno Hegirae, the year of the flight of Mohammed from Mecca to Medina, A. D. 622.)

According to the Bible, Beersheba got its name as a result of a treaty of peace which Abraham and Abimelech made at one of the wells: "Abraham took sheep and oxen, and gave them unto Abimelech; and both of them made a covenant. And Abraham set seven ewe lambs of the flock by themselves. . . . And he said, . . . These seven ewe lambs shalt thou take of my hand, that they may be a witness unto me, that I have digged this well. Wherefore he called that place Beer-sheba; because there they sware both of them" (Gen. 21:27-31).

Isaac and Jacob in turn sojourned in Beersheba and watered their flocks at these wells (Gen. 26:23; 28:10), re-digging some which had been filled up by the Philistines in an attempt to drive the patriarchs elsewhere for pasture and water.

Elijah passed through Beersheba into the southern desert when fleeing from Jezebel after his solitary stand on Carmel. And here, too, no doubt, Joseph watered his animals and rested awhile when the holy family went down into Egypt to escape the wrath of Herod.

From Beersheba we turned westward over a barren desert toward the Philistine plain. Now and again we saw a small Bedouin encampment or passed a camel caravan on its way northward. Here and there the remains of trenches, from which the Turkish troops had at one time resisted the British advance, were still visible.

As we drew near the coast, the wide expanse of plain became green with sprouting wheat, recalling in fact that for four thousand years this has been one of the principal grain-growing areas in southern Palestine. It was its possibilities in this direction which first led the Philistine sea kings from Asia Minor and the islands of Crete and Cyprus to establish colonies here. Among them Isaac settled when famine overspread the land of Canaan, and, by his prosperity, aroused their envy (Gen. 26:13, 14).

Gerar, one of the Philistine towns, whose successive governors came into contact with both Abraham and Isaac (Gen. 20:2; 26:1), has been identified by Sir Flinders Petrie with Tell el Jemmeh, some miles to the south of the Gaza road. In the levels of this mound representing the city of Isaac's time, Petrie found many fragments of flint sickles which had anciently been used by the Philistine reapers.

It is rather strange that although Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob all dwelt at different times in southern Palestine, the city of Gaza is never once mentioned in the record of their journeyings. That it existed in their day has been proved by Sir Flinders Petrie, who showed that old Gaza occupied the hill of Tell el Ajjul down to about the time of Abraham. Soon after this the population moved, probably as a result of malarial conditions in the old city, to the present location.

A low hill, covered with a confusion of flat-roofed mud houses and a couple of mosques, rises a hundred feet or so above the plain in the center of modern Gaza. This marks the site of the citadel of Philistine days in which Samson was imprisoned, and of the temple of Dagon in which he came to his courageous and spectacular end (Judges 16:30). Professor Garstang took soundings in the mound some years ago and brought up many Philistine objects.

The gates which Samson carried away (Judges 16:3) would most likely have been on the east side of the city, and tradition has placed them at Babel Mountar. A hill known as Jebel el Mountar, near the landing ground where the England-India mail planes alight before proceeding across the desert to Bagdad, is suggested as the eminence to which Samson carried them.

Extricating ourselves from the narrow winding streets of Gaza, we followed the modern "way of the sea" northward through plantations of sugar cane, luxurious orange groves, and wide fields of wheat and lentils. At the Arab town of Majdal, corresponding to the biblical Migdal-gad (Josh. 15:37), we turned westward, and, on the seashore beside the tiny village of Jorah, found the ruins of ancient Ashkelon.

Evidently, visitors there are few and far between, for no sooner had we reached the first mud houses of Jorah than we were surrounded by a crowd of shouting children. As we wended our way through the tortuous alleys, our following increased rapidly until, by the time we reached the center of the village, we must have had most of the juvenile population behind and around us. Yet, strange as it may appear, not a single request for baksheesh came from these unspoiled children of Jorah!

AMONG THE RUINS OF ASHKELON

Unlike most of the other cities of the Philistine league, Ashkelon did not lie along the great highway through the plain, but occupied a small oasis on the seashore about fifteen miles north of Gaza and twenty-seven miles south of Yafa, or Jaffa. It was surrounded on all its landward sides by rising ground upon which the city walls were built.

Standing upon this ridge, I realized what a paradise Ashkelon must have been; for, while outside the walls stretched miles of desolate dunes relieved only by scattered desert bushes and a few trees, in the hollow where Ashkelon once lay were green fields, orchards, olive groves, and groups of picturesque date palms, watered by literally scores of springs. Its long and prosperous history right down to the days of the Crusades indicates how well its original founders selected the site.

The orchards and gardens now occupying the site of the crowded markets of Ashkelon reminded me of how accurately the prophecies concerning the ancient city had been fulfilled. Jeremiah asked the question: "O thou sword of the Lord, how long will it be ere thou be quiet?" and answered it in the ominous words: "How can it be quiet, seeing the Lord hath given it a charge against Ashkelon, and against the seashore" (Jer. 47:7)? Zephaniah declared its doom more definitely, "Gaza shall be forsaken, and Ashkelon a desolation" (Zeph. 2:4).

Today, not a fragment of the Philistine city remains above the surface of the ground, though Professor Garstang, who conducted excavations there in 1920-21, uncovered many Philistine objects. Notable among his discoveries was a conspicuous line of ashes marking the capture of the city by the Philistines from its earlier Canaanite inhabitants. There was a marked contrast between the Canaanite and the foreign types of pottery that were found below and above the dividing line.

A steep path led down to a beautiful stretch of golden sand pounded ceaselessly by the breakers of the Mediterranean. Once innumerable merchant vessels anchored in the roadstead of Ashkelon, and discharged their cargoes at its quays; but all that now remains of the ancient port are broken fragments of the Crusaders' sea wall, with Herodian columns again built into it to withstand the force of the sea. Gazing at this ancient wall, one could not but think of the many centuries it had seen.

Retracing our way to Majdal, we stopped to watch the village women deftly operating the primitive hand looms which have gained for Majdal a reputation for native cloth. Then striking diagonally across the undulating plain, we made for Latrun and the Jerusalem road, through wide wheat fields, across extensive stretches of uncultivated marshy land, by mud-built Arab villages, and the trim bungalows of Jewish colonies.

ASHDOD AND EKRON

To the west lay the villages of Isdud and Akir, marking the respective sites of two other cities of the Philistine confederacy: Ashdod, where the ark of the Lord was placed in the temple of the fish god Dagon; and Ekron, whence the ark was despatched to Bethshemesh when the curse of the Lord descended upon the Philistines. In ancient times these cities stood upon the old trade route through the land of the Philistines, and they are still on the main road from Gaza to the north.

Away on our right, among the foothills of the Judean highlands, the remains of ancient Gath, the home of Goliath, were found by Sir Flinders Petrie in a mound known as Tell es Safi. In the lowest levels, the high place of the original Canaanite inhabitants was discovered, together with a large number of revolting terra-cotta figures illustrative of their debased nature worship. The remains of the city wall around the mound were attributed by Petrie to Rehoboam, who won this important fortress for Israel (2 Chron. 11:8).

In the gathering dusk, we reached the main Jerusalem road and turned up the defile of Bab el Wad, leaving the Philistine plain behind. But our thoughts continued to dwell upon the powerful sea rovers who once held sway over the coastal plain. Like Israel, they came in from another land and subjugated the original inhabitants. As rival claimants, they were constantly in conflict with Israel, the advantage being now with one, now with the other. But as the centuries passed, Israel, in the providence of God, increased, while the Philistines decreased and eventually disappeared. And yet though they have gone, and their cities are waste and desolate, their memory lingers on in the modern name of the land, "Palestine."—W. L. Emerson; condensed from Signs of the Times.

Aionian or Eternal Things

By E. O. Stewart

"AIONIAN" is an adjective translated "eternal" and "everlasting" in the King James Version. It is used as a modifier of the following words: fire, judgment, punishment, gospel, life, and salvation. Hence we have eternal and everlasting fire, judgment, punishment, gospel, life, and salvation.

AIONIAN FIRE

In Jude 7 we find that the Sodomites suffered the vengeance of eternal (aionian) fire. Peter declares that the aionian fire reduced the Sodomites to ashes, and that they are an example for those that afterward live ungodly (2 Peter 2:5-7). As they are set forth as an example, and as the aionian fire reduced them to ashes, it follows as an inevitable conclusion that the everlasting, eternal (aionian) fire of the future shall do likewise with the ungodly, else the Sodomites cannot be a true example of the victims of aionian fire.

As the Bible elsewhere declares that the wicked shall be burned up root and branch (Mal. 4:1), shall be ashes (Mal. 4:3), shall be consumed into smoke (Psalm 37:20), it seems that the aionian fire of the future will be just as effective in reducing the wicked to ashes as it was with those of Sodom.

As the aionian fire reduced the Sodomites to ashes, and is not burning today, but went out when it had finished its work, this fact is the most positive proof that could be produced that aionian does not carry with it the thought of duration at all. It expresses quality rather than duration.

AIONIAN JUDGMENT

Let us foolishly suppose that aionian carries the thought of endless duration. To take such a position will absolutely exclude any possibility of future punishment. In Hebrews 6:2 we have the expression, "eternal judgment." How can the wicked ever be punished at all, if the judgment is to be eternal in the sense of duration? They are certainly to be judged before they enter into aionian punishment; but if they must first face eternal judgment, how and when can they ever be punished at all, if aionian judgment means endless judgment?

We wonder, foolishly speaking, how much longer period of time eternal punishment will cover, than eternal judgment? Anyone can see that if aionian carries the thought of duration, that there can be no punishment, simply because the judgment in that case will never end.

AIONIAN PUNISHMENT

If aionian punishment is to be of endless duration, how could the people of Sodom, who suffered the vengeance of eternal (aionian) fire, be an example unless they have already entered into endless punishment? If they have already entered into endless punishment, how can they come forth to judgment? (See Matt. 11:24; Ezek. 16:55.) Then if they have to face eternal (endless) judgment after they come forth, when can they ever be consigned to endless punishment afterward, if aionian means endless duration, as eternal and everlasting seem to suggest?

AIONIAN GOSPEL

When the angel (Rev. 14:6) speeds through the heavens, having the everlasting (aionian) gospel, which announces the hour of God's judgment, are we to understand by this that the gospel is to be preached eternally? It cannot mean anything short of this if aionian is used for the purpose of expressing the thought of the endless duration of the thing under consideration.

AIONIAN LIFE

"And these shall go away into everlasting (aionian) punishment: but the righteous into life eternal (aionian)" (Matt. 25:46).

This passage is always adduced as proof that punishment shall endure just as long as the life of the righteous. That would be true if aionian is for the purpose of expressing duration. But let us remember that before those on the left hand depart into aionian fire to suffer aionian punishment, they must face aionian (eternal) judgment (Heb. 6:2). If aionian punishment endures as long as the aionian life of the righteous, then why not affirm that aionian judgment endures just as long as aionian punishment and aionian life? This presents an insurmountable difficulty. For just as certainly as aionian is for the purpose of expressing endless duration of life and punishment, it is equally true that it also expresses the endless duration of judgment. If the righteous and wicked must first face endless judgment, it follows as an inevitable conclusion, that the righteous will never go away from the judgment into eternal life, neither can the wicked ever go away into everlasting punishment; for if aionian means endless duration, Christ will never finish the judgment. There is no use to quibble over this; aionian does not mean endless duration.

Now we hear some one asking this question: "Are you not affirming that the aionian life of the righteous shall come to an end, just as judgment and punishment shall end?"

Aionian means, "without fail," instead of "without end." The righteous of course shall live eternally, not because they receive aionian life, but because they put on immortality, which renders them death-proof. The fact that the wicked do not put on immortality accounts for their being reduced to ashes by the aionian fire, just as the people of Sodom were. God shall render to every man according to his deeds "without fail." Judgment, punishment, life, and salvation shall be rendered "without fail." This is the true meaning of aionian, instead of "without end." It expresses quality rather than quantity.

"I Do Not Believe in Death"

SO SAYS a popular writer in a recent newspaper article. Well, what of it? Because one doesn't believe in death, does that change the fact that death is here and is daily robbing us of our loved ones and bringing sorrow and heartache to millions of humans? Can we be rid of death by denying it exists? Our Christian Science friends try this method of dealing with sickness and sin, but they have not succeeded in ridding themselves of either. Facts are facts, and they are not changed one iota by our denial or belief. The way to face facts is not by denial, but by acknowledging them and adjusting ourselves to them.

But let us look further into this article. Is it really true that the writer does not believe in death? If so, why such language as this:

"Until the stars have been torn from your sky and the heart from your bosom—until you have been drowned in that vast loneliness which lies like a black sea between the Here and the Hereafter—you cannot know what death means to the desolated living. You are not among the initiate. You cannot speak the new and dreadful language they have learned, nor can you follow the shadowy trail their feet must tread."

Can such an experience come to one who does not believe in death? No. This writer may try to deceive herself into thinking that death is not real and that all the heartache and sorrow and despair which follow in its train are merely the result of fear and a misguided belief, but down in her heart she knows it is as real as life itself; that it is the arch-enemy of the race, the despoiler of peace and the destroyer of homes. It was the serpent in Eden who said, "Ye shall not surely die," after God had said, "Ye shall surely die!" Which spoke the truth?

The whole scheme of human redemption is based on the reality of death. Christ came not merely to deliver us from the fear of death, but from death itself. It is true that if we believe in Him as our Savior we do not fear death; not because it is not real, but because He has conquered it and given us the promise of resurrection out of death. "I am he that liveth," He said, "and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore; and have the keys of death and the grave." "Because I live, ye shall live also." "He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." These are the reasons why we do not fear death. It is a conquered foe for the Christian. But it is a real foe, nevertheless. Our hearts tell us so, even if our heads are deceived by false teaching.

But if death is real, life beyond death is just as real. The writer we have quoted says that "life goes triumphantly through the grave's shadow," meaning that life continues through "what we call death"; it is not even interrupted by death. The Bible does not teach us that, and the Bible is the only authority on life and death. Jesus said of His own life: "I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again." His life was interrupted temporarily by death; and had He remained in the grave the interruption would have been permanent. But "it was not possible that he should be holden of it," for He was sinless; which was why He had power to "take it again." In our case, "death will be swallowed up of life" in the resurrection at the last day, only because Christ is our life and has the "keys of death and the grave." "When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory." He is "the resurrection, and the life." To Him we must go for life, just as the inhabitants of Egypt in the days of the famine must go to Joseph for bread. It may be flattering to our human nature to think we have life in ourselves that cannot be destroyed nor interrupted, but such an assumption contradicts the words of Jesus, who said: "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." Then He put the truth positively by saying, "Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day." Which is to say that life beyond the grave is conditional. It is for those only who partake of the living bread that came down from heaven. For all others "death is an eternal sleep."—H. L. Babcock in The Herald of Life.

my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you" (John 15:7). "I have chosen you . . . that your fruit should remain; that whatsoever ye ask of the Father . . . he may give it you" (John 15:16). "And this is the confidence that we have in him, that, if we ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us; and if we know that he hear us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him" (1 John 5:14, 15). "Whatsoever we ask, we receive of him, because we keep his commandments" (chap. 3:22).

Thus, while there seems to be no limit to the things we may ask of the Father, there are some very definite limitations. Let us set these off, so that they may stand out:

1. "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you."
2. "If we ask any thing according to his will."
3. "If we keep his commandments."

If the words of Jesus abide in us, in our minds, our memories, we shall be governed in our requests by those words. Hence we shall ask nothing that is in conflict with those words. Again, if we ask according to God's will. That will has been made known to us; and so long as we ask within the scope of the will of God, there is no limit to the things we may ask for with the confident expectation of receiving them. Then, as to the keeping of God's commandments. It is a foregone conclusion that if we do not keep those commandments we shall receive nothing. The doing of God's commandments keeps us in harmony with His will, and it is only upon this condition, along with those previously mentioned, that we may reasonably expect to receive anything.

This was also the view set forth by James when he wrote: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed. Let not that man think that he shall receive any thing of the Lord" (James 1:5-7).

All of which makes manifest that according to the will of God there can be no indiscriminate asking with any prospect, or even possibility, of receiving anything from the Lord. Hence it is necessary to ascertain what the will of the Lord is with reference to the things we may ask for. This has been made so clear in the Word that there can be no mistake, and he who asks amiss does so because he disregards the divine rule of prayer.

The Father is able to do more by far than we can ask or think, and is more willing to give good things to those who ask Him than parents are to give good gifts to their children. It is therefore neither a question of ability nor of willingness on the part of God, but of observing the conditions of prayer.—The Faith.

"No man has come to true greatness who has not felt in some degree that his life belongs to his race, and that what God gives him He gives him for mankind."—Brooks.

THE DIFFERENCE

SOME years ago one of the leading English actors was asked at some drawing room function to recite for the pleasure of his fellow guests. He consented and asked if there was anything special that his audience would like him to recite.

After a moment's pause, an old clergyman present said: "Could you, sir, recite the 23rd Psalm?"

A strange look passed over the actor's face; he paused for a moment, and then said: "I can, and I will, upon one condition; that you, my friend, will do the same."

"I?" said the clergyman, in surprise. "But I am not an elocutionist. However, if you wish, I will do so."

Impressively, the great actor began the Psalm. His voice and his intonation were perfect. He held his audience spellbound; and as he finished, a great burst of applause broke from the guests.

Then, as it died away, the old clergyman arose and began the same Psalm. His voice was not remarkable; his intonation was not faultless. When he had finished, no sound of applause broke the silence—but there was not a dry eye in the room and many heads were bowed.

Then the actor rose to his feet again. His voice shook as he laid his hand upon the shoulder of the old clergyman and said: "I reached your eyes and ears; my friend—he reached your hearts. The difference is just this—I know the 23rd Psalm, but he knows the Shepherd."—The War Cry.

saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth" (Rev. 5: 9, 10).

The true origin of the Church of God, that glorious company of love-governed faithful men and women, lies enshrined within the gracious heart and the eternal purpose of the heavenly Father. He has Himself "called" them "out" of the darkness and hopelessness of sin to be His coworkers throughout the endless eons of eternity, "that in the ages to come he might shew the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus" (Eph. 2:7).

THE CHURCH OF GOD A WORKING BODY

The Church of God, the called out of God of all eras, is therefore seen to be a working body, a body qualified to render eternal spiritual service to the Lord. The called out ones are not saved by their works—they are saved for their works. This is a distinction we must grasp before we can fully appreciate the meaning and purpose of salvation.

Jesus taught this important truth when He said: "Neither be ye called masters: for one is your master, even Christ. But he that is greatest among you shall be your servant" (Matt. 23:10, 11).

Paul repeatedly presents the same truth. He says that "he that is called in the Lord, being a servant, is the Lord's freeman: likewise also he that is called, being free, is Christ's servant. Ye are bought with a price; be not ye the servants of men" (1 Cor. 7:22, 23).

Our Lord places the service we are to render to Him upon a much higher plane than that of the reluctant slave, although Paul continues to refer to himself as the "slave of Jesus Christ." But the Apostle speaks of the willing bondage into which he has entered, which was foreshadowed in the law. The Mosaic code provided that a slave might by his own desire remain forever in the service of the master he loved.

Jesus expressed this higher conception of slavery when He said: "This is my commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you. Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant" (the Greek word here is "bondsmen" or "slave") "knoweth not what his lord doeth: but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you" (John 15:12-15).

To be counted as the friends of Jesus we must do whatsoever He commands us. In other words, to be acceptable to Him we must render acceptable works in His service. Not that such "works" can save us; but because we cannot be saved without them, for the accomplishment of those works is the real purpose of our calling.

Joyful, willing service to our Lord is to be continued throughout the glorious ages which are to come. We read that when all iniquity shall have been put down, all enemies conquered, and death itself vanquished throughout the new heaven and the new earth, "there shall be no more curse: but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it; and his servants shall serve him. . . . And they shall reign for ever and ever" (Rev. 22:3, 5).

Here the form or nature of their eternal service is indicated, and we find that it differs in no essential thing from the service which God created Adam to perform. For God blessed the first man and woman and said to them: "Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it: and have dominion . . . over every living thing that moveth upon the earth" (Gen. 1:28).

The highest service which any man can perform for God is to rule upon the throne of His kingdom with Him. This was the duty to which David, the man after God's own heart, and his son Solomon were called (1 Chron. 29:23).

LIKE AS A NURSE

Even as a nurse, whose child's impatient pace
Can hardly lead his feet from place to place,
Leaves her fond kissing, sets him down to go,
Nor does uphold him for a step or two;
But when she finds that he begins to fall,
She holds him up and kisses him withal;
So God from man sometimes withdraws His hand
Awhile, to teach His infant faith to stand;
But when He sees his feeble strength begin
To fail, He gently takes him up again.

LET'S DUST OFF THE BIBLE

wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away" (Rev. 20).

Those of us who are parents or have under our supervision the instruction of youth will do well to recall often that God, in Deuteronomy 6:6, 7, enjoined that "these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart: and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." No room, then, for popular literature of a debasing order and no danger of its criminal and corrupting influence on young minds or older.

Let's clear away the trash and give the Word of God an honored place on our reading tables.

That Training Class

It wasn't just a frustrated feeling that swept through me when I saw that report of the Training Class Committee in THE HERALD of June 8. I often have been balked in pet schemes, and I have learned to take it and try again. If you think you're licked, you are. If you don't know it can't be done, you are very much apt to go on and do it. We have been baffled, but, my fellow laborers, we will press toward the mark until we succeed.

But the appalling feeling swept over me: we have failed to fire the imagination of our young people. Mussolini has fired his youth to go and die on foreign battlefields for him. Hitler, Stalin, labor organizations, have fired the imaginations of their youth. Yes, the call of the church for youth to go to China, to Africa, to India, has sent thousands of youth marching with the banner of Christ to dark heathen lands. But when the Church of God makes a call for volunteers to build up the walls of God's temple which are fallen down here in our native land, what reply do we get from the youth of our church? Do they come in hundreds, in tens, in threes, and twos? No, but one lone figure, God bless him, stands forth, and says, "Here am I; send me."

THAT LONE FIGURE

I am not aware whether this lone figure is young or old, man or woman, but because he has stood forth my heart and hand go out to him. I'm for you, brother, one hundred per cent. May your tribe increase. In times of stress it is often one man who stands in the breach until help comes. In the great ocean one wave turns the tide. May you be that wave. May our youth catch a vision of the cause of Christ besieged on every hand. Unless the tide is turned, the failure of our youth to respond rings the death knell of our church to future generations.

At Plymouth, Indiana, The Restitution was once published. Here was a thriving community of Christians, one of the leading congregations of our brotherhood. The building still is left. The city is there. Where has the glory departed? At Dutton, Michigan, stands a lovely church edifice, once regarded as the headquarters of our Michigan Conference. A handful of God's people are left holding the fort at both these places. How many places are there, living now only in the memories of some of our older ministers, that were once centers of Christian fellowship? The history of those forgotten places will be the history of our denomination as such unless the imagination of our youth is captured and fired with zeal for the true gospel.

THEY OVERESTIMATED OUR ZEAL

But perhaps I am judging harshly to call the committee report a report on the zeal of our youth. I know a great many young people of the Church of God, steady, zealous, standing for unity, truth, and righteousness. I recall especially my companions in the former Training Class—the sacrifices they willingly made, the loyalty they displayed. No, it cannot be that that report is a report on the true condition of our youth. Perhaps there are extenuating circumstances.

I am sure that there was a widespread feeling among our young people that the older people were putting thumbs down on this Training Class project. The way it was presented by the committee made most of us think they thought the whole thing was just a lot of foolishness and more bother than it was worth. Surely we were mistaken. I am personally acquainted with the members of the committee. I know them to be true, loyal Christians with a vision for the progress of our church. What happened was that they overestimated our zeal and desired to turn some of it to the continued support of our beloved church paper, THE RESTITUTION HERALD. They desired to put it as a challenge to us that we must not lose our present ground in order to be gaining some five years from now. Let us accept their challenge, and show that we are capable of keeping up our present work even while going forward on this other front of training Christian workers.

I call for you to send your name to the committee if you are willing and desirous of attending the Training Class. If you do not see your way clear financially, tell that to the committee; there is a group of young men and women in your church who are going to pray together from many different places for the solution to just that problem. Will you step out on faith? Do it now!

Not a Chance

He couldn't play tennis. Anyone that watched him would know that. He galloped across the court like a young colt, swinging his racket with wild abandon. He would be in this corner, and the ball would go way over in that other corner where he couldn't possibly get it. But he didn't know that, and so over he would gallop and hit it back. No form at all, no judgment; just go after the ball any place. Couldn't possibly get it, but he didn't know it, and so he went and got it.

There isn't a chance of starting the Training Class this coming fall. Anyone with any judgment can tell you that. Not a chance in the world. It just can't be done. But I don't know it, and several others don't know it. We are going after the ball. Are you going with us?

HOW GOD ANSWERED HIS PEOPLE'S PRAYER

"I'M SO ANXIOUS to learn more about the baby Moses that I can hardly wait," said Betty as she got their Bibles from the library table on Monday evening.

"We left him just as his sister had gone to get their mother for his nurse when the princess told her to find one among the Hebrew women," Bobby informed them.

"Turn to Exodus 2, children," their mother said, "and let's see what happened. Very little is told of Moses' boyhood and young manhood. But, as in the case of other men of the Old Testament, we can learn something about him from the New Testament. In that wonderful sermon of Stephen's, in Acts 7, we read several bits of information about him. Verses 20 to 22 tell us that Moses was a very nice looking baby, and that the princess had him educated as her own son at the best schools in Egypt."

"If the princess hadn't taken him for her own son would he have grown up as a slave, Mother?" asked Bobby.

"Yes, that is, if his life had been saved. You remember the cruel law that had been passed about all the Hebrew boy babies," Mother reminded him. "But we know that God had a hand in saving Moses' life and had him educated for a special purpose, but we'll see later on about that education. Now, Betty, tell us what happened one day when Moses was a grown man."

"When he saw how hard the Hebrew slaves had to work and how cruel the Egyptians were to them, he killed an Egyptian," said Betty in horrified tones. "He thought nobody saw him, and he hid the body in the sand."

"Moses sinned very greatly that day," Mother replied, "but later on he learned to be patient and to wait for God to correct the evil. Bobby, what happened to Moses the next day?"

"When he saw two Hebrews fighting he tried to make peace between them. But they asked him what right he had to find fault with them and if he was going to kill one of them as he had the Egyptian the day before," Bobby said. "Then Moses knew that some one had seen him kill the Egyptian, and he was afraid and ran away."

"Moses was forty years old when all this happened," said Mother, "but still a young man as they counted age, and a very finely educated one. Now, we know that God looked down in pity on His people, for they were His people, you remember, He had promised them that one day they were to return to their homeland. Here was an eager, educated young man, Moses. Why not call him to be their leader to lead them back home? But no! Moses had something more to learn first. Where did he go when he ran away, Betty?"

"He went to Midian, and as he sat by a well one day he saw seven sisters come to draw water for their sheep. When they had the water troughs full some shepherds came and drove their sheep away. So Moses stood up for them, and the shepherds had to let them alone."

"He was always fighting somebody's battles, wasn't he, Mother," declared Bobby.

"Yes, and that is one of the reasons he was just the person to deliver the Hebrews from the Egyptians. But let's see what occurred next," Mother continued. "The father of the girls, of course, wondered how it happened they got home so early that day, and they told him all about Moses. To make a long story short, the father insisted on Moses' coming to live with them, and in time he married one of the girls. Chapter 3 tells us what happened one day as Moses tended the sheep for his father-in-law."

"He saw a bush burning and burning, and yet the bush remained," said Bobby, who was already reading ahead. "And God spoke to Moses out of the bush and told him to take off his shoes, for it was holy ground he stood upon. Then God said He was the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and that He had heard the cries of His people who were slaves to the Egyptians and He had chosen Moses to lead them out of Egypt back to their homeland."

"Very well stated, Bobby," said Mother. "Now Betty, tell us, did Moses say that was just what he was waiting to do?"

"No, Mother, he was afraid he couldn't do it."

"Moses was now eighty years old, children, for he had been in the desert tending sheep for forty years. Bobby, where do you think Moses had learned to be so humble? He wasn't humble when he killed the Egyptian, surely," said Mother.

"He must have learned it in the desert, but I don't know how," said Bobby.

"Think of the days he would be all alone, with time to think of the hasty and wicked thing he had done in killing that man," Mother reminded them. He knew God had promised to deliver His people, and he should have been willing to wait God's time. In the desert he learned patience, meekness, and faith in God. Now he was ready to work for God in God's way."

WESTERN CHURCHES TO HEAR C. E. RANDALL

A splendid opportunity is presented to the churches in the western part of the United States to hear Bro. C. E. Randall, president of the Ministerial Association of the Church of God, and to inform themselves concerning the work of the missionary organization which was organized at the last General Conference.

Bro. Randall is an interesting and enthusiastic speaker and prepared by experience to present the gospel in an appealing way. In addition to that, he has been for years in close touch with the general work of the Church of God in Canada and in the United States and will be glad to answer any questions regarding it.

Those churches and communities of believers which are within a reasonable distance of Bro. Randall's proposed course of travel are urged to get in touch with him immediately at his home in Fonthill, Ont., and arrange for him to stop off for a brief stay among them. Bro. Randall expects to leave for the West early in July, so it is important that those who desire to have him call upon them should write to him at once.

It should be remembered that in making this survey Bro. Randall has the full support, endorsement, and cooperation of the National Bible Institution, which has empowered him to represent the General Conference.

LOUISIANA CHURCH NOTES

It was the writer's privilege during the past week to baptize three young people into the saving name of Jesus. These young people are regular attendants at all the various services of the Blood River Church and are well grounded in the truth. The names of the three who were baptized are: Miss Lela Mae Shandor, Miss Effie Walls, and Mr. Ernest Barnum. They may all be addressed at Hammond, La., Rt. 1.

The attendance and interest at the Happy Woods Church has been highly gratifying and the Wednesday night Bible class is also enjoying increased interest and attendance.

Harry Goekler, Pastor.

BRUSH CREEK CHURCH OF GOD Near Tippecanoe City, Ohio

The annual series of meetings came to a successful close Sunday, June 13. Bro. Drinkard, guest minister, worked faithfully. 156 were present for Sunday school the closing Sunday, and about two hundred were present for morning, afternoon, and evening services. Two, Mrs. Ashford Jones of Tippecanoe City and Miss Vera Brown of Troy, were baptized, and with Mrs. Laurel Macy, who was baptized by the writer just a few days before the meetings, were given fellowship.

While the evening services were the better attended, the daily afternoon Bible classes were also successful. Other steps of interest were the securing and paying for screen doors and screens for all windows, and the obtaining of thirty subscriptions for The Restitution Herald.

We pray God's blessing upon Bro. Drinkard wherever he goes to preach the gospel.
Sydney E. Magaw, Pastor.

NEW STATE EVANGELIST IN MINNESOTA

We are in Minnesota, and their conference is closed. Folks went home encouraged and refreshed. Our State evangelism begins with meetings at Graytown, Wis., June 16, after which we will attempt to begin a new work at Onamia. Our desire is only to do the Lord's will, and we seek your cooperation by prayer for the work in this State.

The Burr Oak, Ind., brethren granted a three months' leave of absence for this undertaking. We are very grateful for their vision in the missionary field. Reports of the work will be given from time to time.

A. E. Hoskins, State Evangelist.

THE INDIANA CONFERENCE

"The Indiana Bible School and Conference are in full swing," writes the editor of The Herald, who is one of the guest speakers at the gathering. "The attendance for the opening week has been very good in spite of much rain and fog. Bro. James McLain is conducting the musical part of the program with his usual energy, and encouraging even the children to take an active part.

"State Evangelist J. H. Anderson, although far from well at this time, is directing an adult class and a class of senior young people in the study of 'God and His Work' and 'The Son of God and His Work.'

"The writer, at different periods, is leading the same groups in an investigation of 'The Purpose of God as Revealed in the Bible and Indicated in Nature.'

"The opening sermon was given by Bro. Anderson, who took as his theme, 'Joseph, a Type of Christ.'

"Bro. and Sr. F. L. Austin and Sr. Leila Whitehead of Chicago made a brief call at North Salem Church Thursday afternoon. They were on their return home from South Bend, Ind., where Bro. Austin had been called to conduct a funeral. The brethren at the conference regretted that Bro. Austin could not remain for the evening and give them at least one sermon, but pressure of other work prevented."

We will be glad to furnish sample copies of The Herald to those who are soliciting subscriptions from new subscribers at the special low rates as given in the announcement on the opposite page. A goodly number of new subscriptions have already been turned in and, according to the Brush Creek, Ohio, report, some more are coming.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Bro. and Sr. C. E. Lapp and daughter Elaine and Kenneth Bremer, all of St. Cloud, Minn., stopped off in Oregon overnight recently on their way to Ohio to visit relatives and then on to the Michigan Bible School and Conference.

Arlen Marsh, formerly of The Herald staff, but now with the David C. Cook Company of Elgin, Ill., occupied the Oregon pulpit Sunday morning and evening in his father's absence. Next Sunday Bro. Paul C. Johnson and Bro. Harold Hardesty will deliver the sermons.

One of our aged subscribers in Canada, Bro. John Parker of Gravenhurst, Ont., sending in his renewal for the paper, says, "I am getting very old and this is my excuse for neglecting to send in my subscription on time." How glad we are to know that the day is at hand when the saints of God will know no weakness of advancing age! If our younger people were always as quick to remember their responsibilities as is this old brother, the Lord's work would not lack necessary funds to carry on.

A note from Bro. T. A. Drinkard, dated June 12, says that the meetings at Brush Creek Church of God near Tippecanoe City, Ohio, were progressing satisfactorily. Bro. Drinkard was helping Bro. Sydney Magaw, pastor of the Brush Creek Church, in the effort there. From his present appointment, Bro. Drinkard goes to Bear (Royal is the post office), Ark., to assist in work there.

Bro. Arthur Mills of Aurora College, whose home is in Monroe, Wash., assisted by Elwell Drew of Rhode Island, conducted services morning and evening at the Advent Christian Church in Arena, Wis., June 13.

A correspondent in the West wrote us recently: "I think The Herald is fine and, as my father said, 'One article in the paper is often worth the price paid for a year's subscription.' I wish the Church of God had more preachers and evangelists to go out and preach the gospel, as there are so many places where the truth has not been taught." Consecrated men and consecrated money are what we need!

ANNUAL MAY MEETING

The thirty-third Annual May Meeting of the Fonthill, Ont., Church of God is past, and another chapter in the life of this church is written. It would require too much space to name the many towns and cities from which came worshipers for this annual retreat. The farthest places were Syracuse, N. Y., on the east, Kingsville, Ont., on the west, Norwich, Ont., on the north, and Lancaster, N. Y., on the south. Within this area of four hundred miles in length and one hundred twenty-five miles in width, came many truth lovers. Then there were two from Illinois, previously mentioned in Herald news items.

As usual, Sunday was the big day, and the smile of God rested upon us with a delightful day. The heat of the sun warmed our bodies and the glory of the Son of God radiated from our hearts. These times of spiritual refreshing do us much more good than we casually realize. These gatherings of "speaking oft one to another" by those who love the Lord had their beginning away back in Old Testament times when God first appointed feast and worship days for Israel.

The visiting speaker was Elder F. L. Austin, Chicago, Ill., who put the vigor of youth into his sermons and seasoned them with the wisdom of age.

The choir contributed in no small way to the spirit and interest of the services. The Niagara Falls choir had charge of the singing on Sunday afternoon. One of the highlights of the day was the young people's hour when they, by songs, instruments, and sermonettes, pictured the coming of Christ and the signs that point to the nearness of the event.

C. E. Randall.

ARKANSAS CITY, KANSAS

We are pleased to report the meeting we had here for one week with Elder E. E. Giesler of Moorefield, Neb., in charge. The meeting began June 6, continuing over June 13. We had basket dinner the first Sunday. There was quite a nice attendance from out of town. Bro. Giesler gave us some fine sermons and everyone seemed to enjoy the services. He has the Bible truths and plenty of enthusiasm to make them stay with his audience. We heard not one word of criticism or fault-finding. A spirit of Christian fellowship was in our church, such as had not been seen here in years.

Bro. and Sr. Giesler left Monday, June 14, for Sweetwater, Texas, where Bro. Giesler's mother resides; then on to visit Sr. Giesler's parents some two hundred miles farther on. They expect to do some evangelistic work during their summer vacation.

Mrs. A. J. Chaplin.

LAWRENCEVILLE CHURCH OF GOD

The ever loyal congregation of Lawrenceville and Springfield (Ohio) attended the all-day meeting of the Brush Creek Church on Sunday, June 13. It was their first meeting with Bro. Drinkard, and all were interested in his Sunday sermons.

On Sunday, July 11, Bro. James A. Patrick will preach for the annual big day meeting at Lawrenceville. There will be morning and afternoon sermons, and basket dinner. We hope the Brush Creek brethren will show the full cooperation with the Lawrenceville effort that the brethren there gave to Brush Creek.

Let us all give Bro. Patrick the best we have—warm hearts as well as the firm handshakes—and in return we know he will edify us in the saving gospel of Jesus Christ.

Sydney E. Magaw, Pastor.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

Children's Day, although a rainy day, drew a full house, and the program was one of interest indeed. The young people had charge of the church hour service, even to the sermon, which was delivered in masterful style by Harold Doan, a lad of about thirteen years. The pastor having to be absent that Sunday, due to a funeral in Illinois, was happy to learn on his return of the wonderful way in which the local people had taken care of the day's activities.

Our whole church family at this writing is praying for the recovery of Sr. Skeels, our church "mother," who has just submitted to a major operation. She is loved and respected by all for her many years of faithful service and friendliness.

A touch of sadness was brought also on June 12 by the death of the eighteen-month-old infant daughter of Sr. Nelson. God's comfort is sought for the sorrowing family.

On June 14 a group met to plant shrubbery around the church and fix up the lawn generally. Year by year the attractiveness of the corner increases.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

WILLIAM COLUMBUS HENDRIX

One of the largest funerals to be held near Marshall and Martinsville, Ill., for a long time was that on the afternoon of June 13, 1937, at the Hendrix farm.

Mr. Hendrix, although not himself a member of our Salem Church, was one of the most faithful backers of the work there for many years. He and Sr. Hendrix, his faithful wife, reared a family of nine young people who constitute one of the most respected and popular families in that part of the State. Almost all of the members of the family are members of the church, and their influence has done much to keep up the cause of truth.

For the past three years Mr. Hendrix has been in failing health. Having always been extremely active, it has been hard for him to relax and let others carry the load. Death came on Friday, June 11. Sunday afternoon, June 13, we conducted final services at the home, where all of the family and hundreds of neighbors and friends had gathered. He was then laid to rest in the beautiful cemetery north of Marshall.

F. E. Siple.

Lower Rates to New Subscribers

To provide our readers with an opportunity to engage in a great missionary campaign at little or no expense to themselves and at the same time to make it possible for them to help us in placing THE RESTITUTION HERALD in hundreds of new homes between now and the first of next August, we are making the following unprecedented offer:

For the next two months we will accept annual prepaid subscriptions to THE HERALD at exceedingly low rates when sent in in groups of five or more at one time as specified below.

Five new annual subscriptions will be accepted when sent in by one person and accompanied by check or money order in full, for $6.25.

Ten or more new annual subscriptions will be accepted at the rate of One Dollar each when sent in by a single individual!

Subscriptions will be counted as "new" and entitled to this very low introductory rate when the one signing for the paper has not been a paid subscriber since January 1, 1937.

Here is a wonderful opportunity for our pastors, Sunday school superintendents, and local workers generally to get their people enlisted in a great missionary enterprise!

Remember THE RESTITUTION HERALD will continue to bring you the news of the churches from all parts of the country, the latest information as to prophetic developments throughout the world, and hundreds of inspiring articles on doctrinal and spiritual subjects of the deepest interest.

Sinister Influences

THAT the spirit of revolution is abroad in the land is apparent to any careful observer of the trend of the times. Traditions once held sacred by the American people are being cast aside. The bulwarks of liberty which have stood for centuries as trusted safeguards of human welfare are being assailed by influences whose origin is not always recognized. We are living in the "perilous times" of which the Apostle Paul has warned us.

What are the influences that are behind the "sit-down" strikes that have spread like an epidemic over our country? What, or who, was it that influenced our President to seek reorganization of the federal judiciary by congressional legislation rather than through constitutional amendment? What force is behind the attempt to control industry by bringing the labor organizations of our land under the domination of a political dictator. These and other questions are puzzling some of our most able writers today.

Perhaps the answer is to be found in a letter written by Father Patrick O'Brien, a Catholic priest of Rochester, N. Y., to the editor of L'Aurora, an Italian Baptist paper published in Philadelphia, Pa. The letter appears in the April 3 issue of that paper.

The handwritten original is kept in the editor's safe, ready to be reproduced in facsimile if necessary.

In a previous letter the priest had boasted that the Roman Church now has her representatives at Washington, headed by Postmaster General Farley. He opens the present letter with the following comment on the Supreme Court issue:

"We, the hierarchy of the Holy Roman Catholic Church, expect all loyal children of the church to assist the President with all our strength to see that the individuals comprising the United States Supreme Court shall obey the President's injunctions, and if necessary we will change, amend, or blot out the present Constitution (italics ours) so that the President may enforce his, or rather, our, humanitarian program on all phases of human rights, as laid down by our saintly popes and the Holy Mother, the Church."

Here is frankness for you, and here, possibly, we have the explanation of Mr. Farley's activity in behalf of the Supreme Court packing scheme. It will be recalled that he blandly assured the public on his recent return from Texas (where he seems to have gone in the interest of his church's program), that "after they have all finished talking we will call the roll. We have plenty of votes to put this over."

Did he mean the same "we" that Father O'Brien declared would, if necessary, "change, amend, or blot out the present Constitution"? Both of these statements make it clear why the President is so insistent to put over his scheme. He is under obligation to Rome for his recent election, according to Father O'Brien, who so states in his letter. Here are his words:

THE RESTITUTION HERALD does not often publish articles in criticism of any other religious organization by name, but owing to the unusual nature of the following editorial, which is taken from The Herald of Life, we give it to our readers without comment, leaving them to draw their own conclusions as to its value and significance.

"We elected our worthy President by the greatest majority ever recorded in history. We are ready prepared for 1940." Here is the same "we" again. It is the "we" of the Roman Church, which is determined to make America Catholic.

Do you ask for proof? Then read this illuminating information from the same letter. The priest refers the Baptist editor to a pamphlet published by The Queen's Work, St. Louis, Mo., entitled "The Sacrament of Catholic Action," which, he says, "tells you plainly just what we Catholics expect and are going to have it, too." Now note what they expect to have:

"We are going to have our laws made and enforced according to the teachings of our Holy See and the popes and canon law of the papal throne. Our entire social structure must be rebuilt on that basis. Our educational laws must be construed to the end that atheism, the red peril of all blathering isms—Protestantism, Socialism, and all others of like ilk and stamp, be driven out of this fair land. The cross was planted on our shores by a staunch, loyal Roman Catholic. This land belongs to us by every right. Long enough have we compromised on every important question. Now we demand what is really ours, and we are going to have it. We will support our President in every way to obtain it: peacefully, honestly, if we may; if necessary, we are ready to fight and die for it. . . . We want as Cabinet members, children of the Holy Mother Church, holding important positions in the entire structure of our Government." (Italics ours.)

And he closes his letter with this blast: "We control Massachusetts, we control America; and we do not propose to stop until America, or the Americans, are genuinely Catholic, and remain so. God help us."

Extended comment is unnecessary. These statements speak for themselves. They show clearly whither we are tending and explain many of the activities and attitudes of the present Administration.

The question is, Will the expectations of this alien institution be realized? Will her "demands" be met? Will God help the forces who seek the overthrow of our civil and religious freedom? Will Protestantism be "driven out of this fair land"?

. . . It behooves us all to awaken to the dangers confronting us, both politically and religiously. The sinister influences at work are powerful and far-reaching.

The Hills

The towering hills are the doorsteps
That lead to God's Sky-Home,
And He keeps them clean
With each sparkling stream
With its dash, and spray, and foam.

Each rising flight has a carpet
Of verdure rich and rare;
Its warp and its woof
Of pine and green spruce
Is a fitting Godward stair.

The coverings near to the portals,
Are snows of ages dim
Yet! rare are they trod
Save by friends of God
Who climb to commune with him.

Pertinent Comments on the News of the Day

Fascism and Communism to Fuse

"The whole earth followed the animal in wonder, and worshiped . . . and said, 'Who is there like the animal? Who can fight with it?'"—Rev. 13:3, 4, Am. Tr.

NEW YORK, June 18.—Dr. Will Durant, philosopher and lecturer, said that "within a generation communism, fascism and democracy will approximate to a common denominator. Similar economic inventions, developments, and problems," he declared in an address before the Free Synagogue, "generate similar, though nationally various, responses and institutions. Liberty will decrease in democracies and will increase in dictatorships. Even now, the rival systems cooperate with small regard to their differences," he continued. "Conservative France allies herself with radical Russia. Russia compels French communists to support the army and the Government in France. Capitalist America tends to side with communist Russia against capitalist Japan. Russia's democratization is a gesture to win the aid of democracies."

Late last year the editor expressed the opinion in a prophetic address that it was his conviction that regardless of their present antagonistic differences, all dictatorships would eventually be allied. His conclusion was based on three things, history, logic, and the Bible. We may not here go into the first two reasons suggested for believing that fascism and communism will come to work in reasonable accord, but the third reason is clear to the mind of the student of prophecy who realizes that the government of the Antichrist is to be a dictatorship and the nations must be prepared in advance to accept his authority and to unite under his banner of sin.

Army of Locusts

"He spake, and the locusts came . . . and that without number."—Psalm 105:34.

MANAGUA, Nicaragua, June 15.—The inhabitants of El Realajo, hearing a noise like that of an enormous squadron of airplanes, fled fearfully into the streets yesterday, only to find that they might better have remained indoors, for the air was filled with clouds of locusts numbering millions.

In an article appearing in Christian Faith and Life last April, Harry Rimmer, president of Science Research Bureau, calls attention to the fact that the ten plagues poured out upon Egypt by Moses and Aaron were each directed against one of the false gods of that land. The locust is found engraved on the ancient Egyptian tombs, and signet rings have been discovered having the locust setting cut from beautiful stones.

Arab Submission to British Rule

"Behold, therefore I have . . . delivered thee unto the will of them that hate thee."—Ezekiel 16:27.

CALCUTTA, India, June 16.—The unrest that is felt in Palestine owing to the discontent of the Arabs with British rule is being watched with close attention throughout the Empire. The Amrita Bazar Patrika of this city recently made the following editorial comments on conditions in Palestine.

Calling attention to the necessity of the country being placed under martial law, the paper observes that the fact "that affairs in Palestine would come to this pass was almost a foregone conclusion. The Arabs, who since the war have been fed on false hopes and treacherous promises, have at last been thoroughly disillusioned; their faith in the honesty of the Mandatory Power has been rudely shattered; and if they have taken up an unequal fight it is only because they are convinced that there is no other way left for them by which they may record their protest against imperialist iniquity.

"No wonder that the Arabs are angry. Palestine, they say, belongs to them; there are six Arabs to one Jew in the country; they meet the cost of all development undertaken by the British, paying annually two and a half million pounds to Britain, while they paid only a hundred and eighty thousand to Turkey before." (It is interesting to note that the Arabs evidently have the financial resources to meet these increased demands, which they obviously did not possess before the country came under British control.)

In spite of the opposition of the Arabs "Britain cannot make up her mind to give up Palestine, which is fast becoming the vital trade-route between the East and West. The new motor and air routes between the Mediterranean and the Persian Gulf, as well as the new oil pipe lines, must be controlled in British imperial interests. And Palestine must learn to subordinate her national aspirations to those British imperial considerations if she is ever to be fit for self-rule."

THE Greek word ekklesia is generally translated in our English Bible by the word "church." We are familiar with several Anglicized words which are derived from ekklesia, such, for example, as "ecclesiastic." Webster's New International Dictionary of the English Language defines "ecclesia" as, "the public legislative assembly of the Athenians."

This definition, however, is not altogether satisfactory. It does not go deeply enough into the original meaning of the word. Years ago the writer traced the word "ecclesia" to its ultimate source. He was amply rewarded for his efforts by the discovery he made, which throws much light upon the question of God's purpose for the Church—the ecclesia—in its past, its present, and its future phases.

The compound Greek word ekklesia was coined or invented and used for the first time by Solon, the "Father of Democracy," who lived some six hundred years before Christ. This renowned statesman of ancient Attica or Greece was numbered among the "Seven Sages" because of his splendid achievements in political reform.

Solon formed the word from two Greek roots which mean, broadly speaking, "out" and "called." Ek is defined by Strong as "a primary preposition denoting origin (the point whence motion or action proceeds), from, out (used of time or cause).

The Greek root kaleo, which forms the latter part of the word ekklesia or "church," signifies "to call (properly, aloud, but used in a variety of applications, direct or otherwise): bid, call (forth)."

But what did this strangely originated Greek word mean when it was first used by Solon, the builder of constitutions?

Our researches revealed the fact that Solon created the word as a suitable name for the Assembly for which he made provision in his new democratic constitution for Greece. That Assembly of statesmen-rulers he termed the Ekklesia.

FUNCTIONS AND POWERS OF THE GREEK ASSEMBLY

The Athenian Assembly was composed of individuals who were "called out" from among the people of the nation by the Archon or ruler to meet at stated intervals in the capital. Here they were instructed in the laws which the Archon had already formulated.

On this point the Encyclopedia Britannica (14th edition) remarks: "The Ecclesia did not exercise the power of lawmaking." Its function in government was therefore not legislative, but executive. It could not enact new laws,

The editor has been presenting a series of articles dealing with some of the more important elements of Christian faith as taught by the Church of God. This is a continuation of article number 4, begun in our last issue. It deals with the origin of the word "ecclesia" and its significance in relation to the Church.

but it was, the Britannica continues, "concerned with the supervision or administration."

From other sources we learn that the Ekklesia also possessed judicial authority.

Returning to the consideration of the original position of the Athenian Ekklesia, we observe that after the Archon or King had selected from among the entire population of the country those men who, because of their superior intellectual ability, faithfulness, and loyalty, were best fitted to serve in the position to which they were called, they were, as we have seen, thoroughly instructed in the laws of the land pertaining to the administration of justice.

Having completed their course of education and having also acted under the Archon in a capacity corresponding to that of judges of the Supreme Court in this country, when the Assembly was over the various members of the Ecclesia returned to their original homes in different parts of the country where they were received as local rulers or subordinate "kings" under the general authority of the Archon.

THE ECCLESIA OR CHURCH OF GOD

It does not require unusual acumen for one to perceive the remarkable correspondences that exist between the historical Ecclesia of ancient Greece and the biblical Church of God. As the name itself implies, the members of the political Ecclesia of Solon and the members of the spiritual Ecclesia of Jesus Christ, are said to have been "called out" from among the general population of the territories over which they were eventually to rule.

Furthermore, the "call" in both instances was issued by the Sovereigns and was selective. That is, while the invitation was as broad as the races concerned, those only were accepted by the one issuing the call who were qualified for the positions it was desired that they should fill.

So far as the Church is concerned this conception of its method of assembly is amply verified. We recall how that Peter in defending the admission of non-Israelites into the body of Christ, "declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name" (Acts 15:14).

Commenting on this, James affirms that it is in harmony with the promises in which God declared that at a certain time He would "return, and . . . build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and . . . set it up: that the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles, upon whom my name is called," or, according to Moffatt's rendering, "It was (Please turn to page 11)

The Promise of His Coming

"Where is the promise of his coming?"—2 Peter 3:4.

AT LEAST once a year the whole world is conscious of the first advent of our Lord Jesus Christ. Many times a year an uncounted multitude of people, representative of the races and nations of earth, joyfully contemplate the second coming of the Son of God to earth (Heb. 9:27). The promise of that coming, visibly and personally, to end the present world order; to judge the living and the restored dead; to end earth's long night of sin and death; and to establish the promised kingdom of God "under the whole heaven," has always been the imminent hope of the Christian church and the goal of its ordinances.

That promised advent could hardly be at the death of the individual, for no living saints are simultaneously caught up (1 Thess. 4:16, 17); nor could it have been the coming of the Holy Spirit, for no corruptible bodies have been "fashioned like unto his glorious body" by the advent of the Comforter (Phil. 3:21); nor yet could it have been the destruction of Jerusalem (Matt. 24:16), for years later in the Revelation to the beloved John, the promise still echoes: "Behold, he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him" (Rev. 1:7). With the unquestioned assurance of ultimate triumph thrilling the mind of the Apostle, "Surely, I come quickly," it is little wonder that the prayer of John arises, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

The implication of the cynical words of the "scoffers," who, Peter says, shall "come and say, Where is the promise of his coming?" is that there is no sufficient groundwork for such a hope, and that there is no worth while confirmatory evidence to cause men to believe that the Christ of Olivet should again visit this earth. Nevertheless, with the most skeptical, there is in the background of consciousness a conviction or a fear of a day of impending doom and judgment which will one day break upon the world.

"IN THE VOLUME OF THE BOOK"

"I will come again."—John 14:3.

In the volume of the book of God the promise of His coming shines from the pages of both the Old and the New Testaments. Some one has reckoned the number of prophecies pertaining to the Lord's return as being more than eighteen hundred. The theme of the Bible has been designated by the three simple words: coming, came, coming. The seed of the woman (Gen. 3:15; Gal. 4:4), the Messiah of the Old Testament prophets (Isa. 9:6, 7), is still looked for by present-day blinded Israel; and the crucified, resurrected, ascended Lord is anxiously awaited by the faithful church of Christ. It has been calculated that in one verse in twenty-five in the New Testament, or 318 times in the 260 chapters, the promise if His coming is indicated.

Jesus, in parable (Luke 19:12-27), in direct discourse (Matt. 24), in intimate conversation (John 14), and in public statement (Matt. 26:66), promised His return. The apostles, Peter (Acts 3:20, 21), Paul (Titus 2:13, 14), James (James 2:8); Jude (Jude 21), and John (1 John 3:2), by word of mouth and by word of pen, pointed to the "blessed hope" as the goal of their aspirations. All these writers of the New Testament Scriptures looked forward to the world's crisis and to the consummation of their hopes, of which the ordinances of baptism and the Lord's Supper were perennial reminders. The whole life and service of the New Testament church were characterized by the spirit of maranatha, "the Lord cometh" (1 Cor. 16:22).

IN THE BOOK OF NATURE

"The whole creation groaneth . . . in pain."—Rom. 8:22.

He who reverently turns the leaves of the book of nature will find confirmation of the promise of His coming. The evidences of cataclysmic catastrophes involving fire, water, and earthquake may be read as assurances of both past and future periods of divine intervention in earth's history (2 Peter 3:5-7). The swirls of the bones of prehistoric animals, the glacial deposits remaining from the ancient ice age, and the treasures of coal, oil, and minerals in the earth, mutely testify to great transition periods of history; and the inspired Apostle would by these witnesses assure men that there will be another transition which will bring in "a new heaven and a new earth." Contemplating with prophetic insight that great conflagration which shall purge the earth at that time, he states that the earth is "reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men," that the "heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works that are therein, shall be burned up." Science has discovered that by passing a charge of electricity through water it can be separated into its two component gases, hydrogen and oxygen; and that these two highly inflammable and combustible gases may become almost indispensable servants in the industrial world, because of the intense heat of the gases when ignited. It is not difficult, then, to understand the possibility of the eternal God turning on a charge of electricity to separate the boundless waters of the earth, sea, and air, that would result in a "great noise and fervent heat."

We speak of the earth as being under a curse, and so it is. Nature is cursed and human nature is cursed (Gen. 3:17, 18). The curse of mortality with all its attendant ills rests heavily upon the human family. The precarious supremacy of man over nature is only won and maintained by incessant struggle. And in the presence of untoward circumstance of wind, of flood, or of earthquake, man is utterly impotent. The "thorn and the thistle" are symbolic in the book of nature, and they speak of a great need for, and of the promise of, redemption; when instead of the thorn there shall be the fir tree, and instead of the desert there shall be the fruitful plain (Isa. 35; 55:13), and instead of pain and suffering and death there shall be freedom and life and joy (Rev. 21:10).

IN THE AFFAIRS OF NATIONS

"Nation shall rise against nation."—Luke 21:10.

The history of the world is all too largely made up of "wars and rumours of wars," and the end is not yet. The

The Most Important Truth of Scripture

By Mary A. Gesin

AS HAS been said countless times on these pages, the most precious thing in all the world is life. Men cling desperately to life even when every vestige of comfort and joy seems to be absent. And they relinquish it voluntarily only when their minds have been weakened because of hopeless conditions.

But this life that we treasure so dearly is at best fleeting; it is so soon gone. And if we will acknowledge the real truth of the matter we must admit that with death the end of all life has come, as far as our own abilities and our own natures are concerned.

Just a text or two from the Word of the One who gave life in the beginning, and hence knows the very essence and nature of it, should be sufficient to convince the doubtful. We read in Psalm 49:12, 20 that "man being in honour abideth not; he is like the beasts that perish."

One who has surrounded himself with the things we call best in life perishes as the animals do? Language could not be plainer, and no one in reason would believe that the animals possess in themselves something that endures after death.

But let us read the words of Solomon, simple, understandable, emphatic words. Solomon, who asked God for wisdom and was given it beyond measure, as well as all other desirable things of life, says, "The living know that they shall die: but the dead know not any thing, neither have they any more a reward; for the memory of them is forgotten. Also their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished" (Ecc. 9:5, 6). We may say there is no death, but what is the advantage in thus deceiving ourselves?

Job tells us (33:22) that when a man is about to die "his soul draweth near unto the grave, and his life to the destroyers." Many other texts give us like information, and they can readily be found with the aid of a concordance. Study Ezekiel 18:4, 20; Psalm 22:29; James 5:20, with many others.

Only a thorough understanding of our own natures brings us to a complete realization and a deep appreciation of God's great Gift to us, His Son, our Savior. No more effective words than those most familiar, found in John 3:16, can be applied here. Read them thoughtfully.

"For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." That is the bright side of what otherwise would be a dark picture.

Thus we begin to realize the significance of our mortal natures. For to "perish" would be to die without hope of any future life. From this we are saved by One alone—Christ.

The next question that should occur to us is how and when do we receive this "everlasting life." For if such is held out to men, surely all would desire it. And when we learn the perfection of conditions pertaining to that life, it becomes all the more alluring.

"I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly," says Jesus in John 10:10, telling us in words more effective than any we might formulate.

The story of the resurrection of Lazarus, John 11, gives us much needed information as to the time of our receiving this life everlasting. Martha's implicit faith was placed in the resurrection "at the last day." Jesus reassured that faith in Martha's hour of sorrow. Study particularly verses 23-25 and 43-45. Notice that Jesus called the Lazarus they had known and loved out from the grave.

In Colossians 3:4 we read that "when Christ, who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." So we may rightly conclude that at Christ's coming we shall receive this glorious life.

Many other scriptures may be brought to our attention on this point, the most outstanding being in 1 Thessalonians 4:13-17 and 2 Timothy 4:8.

None of these things we deem so necessary for our comfort in this life can be compared to the rich treasure of the life that is to come. It is held in reserve for all those who make themselves worthy of it. The way to life eternal is found through a study of God's Word—a way open to all.

"These are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name."

The Christian and His Money

ONE of the most familiar verses of the Bible is, "The love of money is the root of all evil" (1 Tim. 6:10). This principle is illustrated in the Scriptures by many unfortunate examples. In 2 Kings 5:20-27 we are told that for the love of money, Gehazi, the servant of Elisha, took two talents of silver from Naaman, the healed leper, and hid them in his house. Because of this and the deception practiced with it, Elisha pronounced upon him the curse of the Lord. "The leprosy therefore of Naaman shall cleave unto thee, and unto thy seed for ever. And he went out from his presence a leper as white as snow" (v. 27).

Again, the 7th chapter of Joshua tells us of Achan, who, because of his love of money, took of consecrated things "two hundred shekels of silver, and a wedge of gold of fifty shekels weight," and hid them in the earth in the floor of his tent. "And Joshua said, Why hast thou troubled us? the Lord shall trouble thee this day. And all Israel stoned him with stones, and burned them with fire, after they had stoned them with stones. And they raised over him a great heap of stones unto this day. So the Lord turned from the fierceness of his anger" (Josh. 7:25, 26).

Because of the love of money men turned the very temple of God into a den of thieves till the Lord Jesus drove them out (Matt. 21:12, 13).

Because of the love of money the rich man with the plentiful crops tore down his barns that had formerly held the full increase of his place, and disdaining the fact that a special opportunity had been given him to glorify God by ministry to Jesus in the person of His suffering ones, he built greater barns in which selfishly to hoard his great gains. But God said to him that night, "Thou fool," and took his life, and said, "So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God" (Luke 12:21).

For the love of money the rich young ruler turned sadly away from Jesus and eternal life (Mark 10:17-27).

In contrast with the love of money, let us note briefly what effect the love of God will have upon a man and his money.

The love of God prompted the wise men of the East to bring "gold, and frankincense, and myrrh," to be laid at the Savior's feet (Matt. 2:11). The love of God caused the children of Israel to bring gifts for the building of the sanctuary in such quantities that they were restrained by Moses from bringing, for the builders had more than enough (Ex. 36:4-6).

The love of God caused the poor widow to bring the two mites, even all her living, recognized by Jesus as more than all the gifts of the rich who gave of their abundance (Luke 21:1-4).

The love of God caused the newly converted followers of Jesus in the apostles' day to sell their possessions and lay the proceeds at the feet of the apostles, till none lacked (Acts 4:33-37).

Nor have the centuries in the least minimized the power of the love of God to create good in the hearts of men, for today there are thousands all over the earth who gladly give their tithes and offerings according to the instruction of Holy Writ.

Malachi 3:6-12 brings to us the following message: "I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed. Even from the days of your fathers ye are gone away from mine ordinances, and have not kept them. Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord of hosts. But ye said, Wherein shall we return? Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts. And all nations shall call you blessed: for ye shall be a delightful land, saith the Lord of hosts."

THE PROMISES OF GOD

These scriptures bring before mankind obedience and disobedience with their consequent prosperity or losses, success or failure, the blessing or the curse of God. These are examples "for our admonition."

God's requirements of mankind in tithes and offerings are not for the sake of the money involved, but for the sake of the love that will prompt the obedience of sacrifice in meeting His tasks of love. The gift of money is the medium of the expression of our love to God in the same way that the gift of Jesus is the medium of God's expression of His love to us.

The full payment of our tithe—the tithe, of course, is a tenth of what we receive—is also a test and builder of our faith in Jesus. For we must pay the tithe before the promised blessing can come; but the full payment of the tithe will bring the promised blessing and thus increase and build our faith.

Dr. A. F. Shauffler once wrote: "My money is myself. I am a laboring man, we will say, and can handle a pickax, and I hire myself out for a week at two dollars a day. At the close of the week I get twelve dollars, and put it in my pocket. What is that twelve dollars? It is a week's worth of my muscle put into greenbacks and pocketed; that is, I have a week's worth of myself in my pocket. Or I am a clerk and hire myself out, being an intelligent and capable clerk, at twenty dollars a week. The end of the week comes and I get my pay, and when I put it in my pocket, I pocket a week's worth of myself as a clerk. Or, I am a merchant and I have large affairs; I have the handling of many clerks and require a higher brain power than that of the ordinary man. At the end of the week I strike my balance sheet and find that I am to the good one thousand dollars. This is a week's worth of the merchant.

"Now, the moment you understand this principle, you begin to understand that money in your pocket is not merely silver and gold, but it is something human, something that is instinct with power because it represents power expended. If you are not earning any money of your own and your father is supporting you, then you are carrying that much of your father around in your pocket. Money is electricity, it is stored power, and it is only a question as to where that power is to be loosed."

"And I say to you, Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness; that, when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations" (Luke 16:9).

In the margin of our Bible we learn that mammon is riches. This verse indicates that by the proper use of riches or money we may make friends of God and of the angels so that when the things of this old world fail us or permit us to fail "they" will receive us "into the everlasting habitations of the righteous" (Luke 16:9-11).

GOD'S STEWARDS

"God has made men stewards of means. He has placed in their hands the money with which to carry forward the great work for the salvation of souls. In His providence, the Lord has ordained that the work in His vineyard should be sustained by the means intrusted to the hands of His stewards. A neglect on their part to answer the calls of the cause of God in carrying forward His work, shows them to be unfaithful and slothful servants."

The question may be asked, Does God really fulfill His promise to bless, if a faithful tithe is brought in, and offerings are given? I spent some years in the West Indies and there observed faithfulness in tithe-paying and giving. On one occasion a brother brought his tithe of a few shillings, which was all the money he had. Without saying one word of his own need, he paid the money in and received his receipt. He then disclosed that during the night his baby had died and that he had no money to purchase wood and cloth with which to make a coffin for the body. We readily advanced money for the purpose, and the child was buried. It is doubtless needless to add here that despite the unfortunate loss of his infant, this Christian brother was blessed for his faithfulness and exceptional prosperity attended his efforts from that time. God does see and bless faithfulness.

On another occasion a great hurricane had swept the island of Jamaica, and immediately afterward I visited a number of the churches and homes in the stricken area. Many homes were destroyed, and crops ruined. We gave each family a sum of money with which to purchase seed in order that they might replant their fields. A certain church held a meeting, and reasoned after this fashion: "We owe a sum on the church lot. We could make payment on the lot with this money, and as the business of the Lord comes first, we will do this, and trust Him to furnish the seed some other way." This was done. It is true that God did furnish them seed, and that they were greatly blessed of God.

"All the tithe (the tenth) of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's: it is holy unto the Lord. . . . And concerning the tithe of the herd, or of the flock, even of whatsoever passeth under the rod, the tenth shall be holy unto the Lord. . . . These are the commandments, which the Lord commanded Moses for the children of Israel, in mount Sinai" (Lev. 27:30-34).

"But woe unto you, Pharisees! for ye tithe mint and rue and all manner of herbs, and pass over judgment and the love of God: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone" (Luke 11:42).

It is clearly enunciated here by Jesus in the New Testament that "judgment, mercy, and faith" "ought" to be done, and that the payment of the tithe on the smallest gains should not be left undone. And surely what Jesus says should not be "left undone," Christians will do.

"Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom. Sell that ye have, and give alms; provide yourselves bags which wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that faileth not, where no thief approacheth, neither moth corrupteth. For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also" (Luke 12:32-34).

"Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom. For with the same measure that ye mete withal, it shall be measured to you again" (Luke 6:38).

"When he was gone forth into the way, there came one running, and kneeled to him, and asked him, Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life? . . . Then Jesus beholding him loved him, and said unto him, One thing thou lackest: go thy way, sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come, take up the cross, and follow me. And he was sad at that saying, and went away grieved: for he had great possessions. And Jesus looked round about, and saith unto his disciples, How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God! . . . It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God. . . . And Jesus looking upon them, saith, With men it is impossible, but not with God: for with God all things are possible" (Mark 10:17-27).

"There came a certain poor widow, and she threw in two mites, which make a farthing. And he called unto him his disciples, and saith unto them, Verily I say unto you, That this poor widow hath cast more in, than all they which have cast into the treasury: for all they did cast in of their abundance; but she of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living" (Mark 12:42-44).

Why should it be thought strange that money, which has more to do with our daily acts than any or perhaps all other material things, should be of great importance to the spiritual welfare of man in the sight of God?—G. A. Roberts in Signs of the Times.

Bible Schools and Public Schools

OUR Bible schools have our Baptist youth only an hour on the Lord's day, and our public schools have them in schoolbooks from half-past eight to three o'clock for five days in the week.

Our Bible schools have and teach the eternal Word of God, written by His prophets and chosen men as a record from the beginning of the creation, the disobedience of Adam and Eve, and their loss of the presence of almighty God as a companion. Their expulsion from Eden followed Eve's believing Satan's lies that she would not die—and we have died now six thousand years.

The Bible is also the record of human disobedience toward our Lord, which we call "sin" and of the new covenant of grace by love which was bestowed in Jesus' death upon the cross to save all flesh from their sins, simply by receiving Him to pardon all iniquities of all peoples. This Book tells us all the sins of good men and all the goodness in bad men—no discriminations nor partialities!

Also, the children who come to our church Bible schools learn parallel ancient history in their tenderest years: Moses in the Nile bullrushes, Joseph in Egypt, and Daniel in the lions' den, etc.—of which a child is deprived who never attended a Bible school, nor gets the lesson papers and cards. So the child attending the Bible school has a background that one who never comes does not know. And parents are wholly to blame in this dire neglect toward their own children's education. The warden of the Alcatraz Penitentiary for desperadoes out in the bay off San Francisco, hurled this rebuke at the Social Workers' Convention recently in San Francisco, in the press: "If our Nation took more time with its youth to make upstanding citizens and less time punishing them, we would have fewer criminals to deal with."

One of the direst tragedies is being perpetrated through our public schools. Violative of every iota of common sense, our youth are taught, not the higher spiritual codes in the Bible for human self-control to reject crimes (because the fear of God is the beginning of wisdom), but infidel teachers under the name of science slip in their degrading theories of evolution wherein, by self-urge, they declare beyond all doubt animal forebears have within millions of years "evolved," evolved into man.

They do this, though no evolutionists calling themselves scientists have ever once produced on the earth or in the waters under the earth a single proof that nature in her inscrutable laws has ever deviated an iota "after its kind"!

An artist friend of mine was painting on canvas a large picture of Aurora waking up in the morning, for a woman's clubhouse. Standing by it I commented: "I have more respect for the heathen who picture the unseen with pagan goddesses and gods—with no morals at all—than for pretended scientists degrading the human mind into belief in its animal ancestry. This betrayal causes much crime."

A visitor standing by, a devout Presbyterian, instantly agreed with me, saying: "I take a students' magazine of Oglethorpe University that rampantly teaches it." She ran home and got a copy and gave it to me. The president was running a series of chapters from his "book on evolution," and on one page was pictured "seventy-five embryos" of fishes, fowls, and animals "to prove" that the human embryo is akin to all these.

This absurdity is broadly, by educational "authority," foisted on us as truth, though nowhere on the face of the earth have they ever been able to find a single fact that proves their silly contention. In my childhood, Cinderella was a popular fairy tale for children. In it a witch turned a pumpkin into a carriage, mice into men, and rats into horses. But they all turned themselves back into a pumpkin, rats, and mice. A witch performed the wonder! I never dreamed that in coming years such a stupendous, amazing fraud would be taught in our public schools! and backed as a hallmark of exclusive scholarship—real scholarship, you know—by heads of the American educational hierarchy.

This, too, when millions of dollars invested in excavations of ancient and mediæval cities, have caused to be unearthed past history, peoples, and places, and cities—completely vindicating the Bible as incontrovertibly true! Yet behold men posing as scientists, blind guides, creeping into our school curricula in public schools, colleges, and universities, making this infidel nightmare the supreme dogma of learning, and not an iota of proof to sustain their folly!

Is it not amazing that Christian parents allow it? They teach God's Book on the Lord's Day and then let the infidel ghouls deny every word of the Bible for fake theories in our public schools all the week. Its brazen assumption that it is scientific truth seems to make cowards and snobs of American men and women, even most preachers dodging!

Further, the "psychiatry" books in our public schools' curricula, even in Christian colleges, are the Germans' substitute for the Bible and for man's soul. Here is a verbatim quotation from the psychology book: "Love is the act of using one's cerebral-spinal and sacral-divisions of one's automatic nervous system."

Webster defines "sacral" as the triangular bone above the coccyx—the last bone in the spinal column. Our Bible tells us "God is love." Psychiatry tells us love is the end of the backbone! And our own American youth are stuffed with this satanic drivel! Is it any wonder the press is shrieking, "Juvenile criminals"?

Here in Birmingham peddlers are arrested selling the infamous dope-cigarettes "marijuana" to high school students. The weed grows universally over our country, yet there is no law against using it to make degenerates of our young Americans—and old ones! And Congress is saying it is too busy to enact such a protection to our public school children. Meanwhile the Federated Churches of America shriek for the union of churches, while Satan works to deceive and pervert our children in our public schools.

Heavenly Father, awaken us American Christians! Save our children in our public schools from perfidy.

—Lida Bestor Robinson in The Western Recorder.

ETERNAL LIFE A GIFT

AT THE time our Savior was on earth the Hebrews were divided into the sects of the Pharisees and Sadducees, and some others. Much attention was given to the external forms of worship, but there was little real life in their religious activities. The Pharisees taught the theory of the immortality of the soul, and the resurrection of both good and bad, in contrast to the doctrine of the Sadducees, who offered no hope of a future life for anyone.

Amid such conditions and misunderstanding of the Scriptures came Jesus, with a teaching foreign in many points to that of both these sects. He announced His mission thus: "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly" (John 10:10). The words of consolation He spoke to Martha at the grave of Lazarus completely blasted the theory of the Sadducees. He said: "I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believes on me, though he die, he shall live (again); and he that believes on me, in no wise shall die for ever" (John 11:25, Handy Int. Translation). And in direct opposition to the Pharisaic doctrine of eternal life for both righteous and unrighteous are Jesus' words in John 3:36: "He that believes on the Son has eternal life; and he that believes not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abides on him" (Handy Int. Translation).

The great truth that Jesus brought to those who sat in darkness was that those who came to the Father by Him should have eternal life. But to those who would not accept Him, He gave no promise of a future life. To Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews, and a Pharisee, He said: "Whoever believeth in him (Jesus) should not perish, but have eternal life" (John 3:15). He made eternal life dependent upon the sacrifice of His own life, when He should be lifted up.

In the Garden of Eden our first parents enjoyed life under perfect conditions. Upon their death had no claim, unless, or until, they should sin. Says Paul: "The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law" (1 Cor. 15:56). "Sin is the transgression of the law" (1 John 3:4). If the first law given in the garden had been obeyed, there would never have been any more law given. In Galatians 3:19 we are told it "was added because of transgression." The whole issue was summed up in four words—obedience, and life; disobedience, and death. Adam's disobedience proved his unworthiness; hence, God shut him out of the garden and access to the tree of life—"lest he should eat, and live for ever." So was unending life lost to man.

Think you that if man possessed eternal life, God would have given up His Son to the cruel death of the cross? "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John 3:16). Paul puts it in these words: "For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom. 6:23). He contrasts "wages" with a "gift." The "gift" which is from God, is a ransom from death, to be realized at the resurrection day. There is no other way to be free from the "wages of sin."

The first Adam failed to pass the test for eternal life, so it became necessary for another to be put to the test and successfully pass. This Christ, the second Adam, did. Through one man came death; through another came the resurrection from among the dead. All die in Adam. All who believe and obey the Christ shall be made alive. Death is an enemy, and will continue to be until it is destroyed in the resurrection morning.

Jesus came to bring life, to purchase it by His own blood, to redeem man from the slavery of sin. He is coming again to finish the work of redemption by freeing His own from the bands of death. He did not come and die to change man's state in eternity, but by His sacrifice to fulfill the law's demands and secure for man a hope of living again. And He promised to come again and raise up the sleeping ones who trusted in Him. These words spoke Jesus: "Father . . . as thou hast given him (thy Son) power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him. And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent" (John 17:2). Eternal life is the "reward" Jesus will bring with Him for those, and only those, who obey the gospel.—Arthur E. Conant in The Herald of Life.

scandal of nations is the tendency to ambition in monarchy and the possibility of corruption in democracy. Every monument to military heroes, every heap of debris resulting from war, and every pillar marking a scene of battle, might well become a pulpit loudly proclaiming the futility of temporal empire, and declaring the only hope for just and abiding peace to be in the changing of the kingdoms of this world into the kingdom of our Lord (Rev. 11:15). The ever-recurring international distress because of real or alleged injustice (Matt. 24:7) and the ever-increasing problems of readjustment still accruing from the World War are sources of hopeless embarrassment to the League of Nations. And no concert of powers appears able to clear away the ominous clouds of unrest and war that keep rising continually in the political heavens.

The hordes of Gog and Magog may descend from the north (Ezek. 38:9), the "kings of the east" may come with great power (Rev. 16:12), and unspeakable burdens may continue to oppress the Western World, but in all the conditions which may arise among men and nations, there remains the gracious assurance that the King of Glory will come to end wars, to break the bows and spears, and to burn the chariots in the fire (Psalm 46:6-11). And this assurance inspires the breathing of the Master's prayer and thought, "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven" (Matt. 6:10).

IN THE STATUS OF CHRISTENDOM

"This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come."—Matt. 24:14.

The ministry of the church was to embrace all peoples, kindreds, and tongues, according to the vision and charge of the great Head of the church (Matt. 28:18-20), but not without hindrance and division from within, and from persecution from without. The book of Revelation depicts in symbolic language the age-abiding conflict of good and evil. There has been a "falling away" both in ancient and in modern days (2 Thess. 2:3); a "denying of the Lord" (2 Peter 2:1); a "departing from the faith" (1 Tim. 4:1); and a "giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils." But there has also been a missionary impetus which has swept forth to almost every corner of the earth where the children of men dwell. If there have been pulpits which rob Christ of the glory due His name, as the Savior and the coming King, and in which the name of the Deity is seldom heard in sermon, or even in prayer, there have been other pulpits which have been blessed by the power of the Highest, and the grace of God has fallen upon the believing hearers. And if there is confusion concerning death, there is also clarity on the essential doctrines of the resurrection of the dead and the translation of the living saved at the parousia of Christ.

The outreach of evangelical Christianity has left only a few dark spots where the light of the glorious sun of righteousness has not as yet shone. The Philadelphian church still enters the open doors, even if the Laodicean church still contentedly sings her song of peace, safety, and self-satisfaction. It seems safe to say that never have so many hearts thrilled nor so many pulses been quickened with the desire and expectation of the second advent as now. Hope is desire plus expectation, and hope is like "an anchor of the soul" (Heb. 6:19).

IN THE SOCIAL FABRIC OF SOCIETY

"As it was in the days of Noah . . . so shall it be."—Luke 17:26.

History is forever repeating itself, for human nature is ever the same. And as God is ever the same in His righteousness and holiness, He may be expected to act in judgment again and again upon similar provocation. A return to the utter disregard for the sovereignty of God as in the days of Noah and of Lot seems imminent in certain circles of society today. The repeal of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States has apparently paved the way for a moratorium on the Ten Commandments, and the exceeding sinfulness of sin is becoming more and more apparent. One pessimist has proposed that the power behind the throne of government in America is but a combination and an alliance of "crooks, politicians, and policemen." Our newspapers reek with records of crime. A murder is committed every forty-five minutes, we are told, and the annual crime bill amounts to fifteen billions of dollars, or two dollars and fifty cents for each man, woman, and child in the country.

America, founded by God-fearing men and women; America, a base of operations and missionary supplies, has become the criminal paradise of the world, despite sincere and earnest efforts to prevent the infamy; and both the underworld and the sovereign states are unhappily engaged in the common program of ending human life. America, which has led in the matter of the equality of the sexes, has awakened to find that the "weaker sex" has become equally guilty of the ridicule for law, and equally involved in the vices of this modern age; while the home and the church stand by helplessly languishing. The greatest educational institution of the land, the talking picture, has so far belied its trust as to merit the boycott of the Roman Catholic Legion of Decency. Unmentionable vices are countenanced in certain circles of society even as they were in the days of Noah, and of Lot, thus heralding the advent of the coming One.

CONCLUSION

The turning of these few pages of the several books of life and time has produced unmistakable omens, evidences, and confirmation, of the promise of His coming. The second advent has been the continuing inspiration of believing souls who have desired that "better country" (Heb. 11:16). Unfortunately, controversies have arisen over the sincere desire to approximate the exact time of His coming and to determine the succession of events that will follow. Nevertheless, the time when "he shall send Jesus," who was before preached, draws near, and the subsequent events will be of divine ordering. Readiness for that grand event has been the barometer of Christian faith and practice, and new confirmation of the promise has resulted in a lifting up of the head in anticipation (Luke 21:28) and in a purifying of the life (1 John 3:3; 2 Peter 3:11). To be "willingly ignorant" of this promise will in no wise defer the event, for "yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry" (Heb. 10:37). May the Lord "direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ" (2 Thess. 3:5).—Lee E. Baker in The Messiah's Advocate.

The Balfour Declaration, made November 2, 1917, was: "His Majesty's Government view with favor the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people, and will use their best endeavors to facilitate the achievement of that object, it being clearly understood that nothing shall be done which may prejudice the civil and religious rights of existing non-Jewish communities in Palestine, or the rights and political status enjoyed by Jews in any other country."

God's original concern to secure a People from among the Gentiles to bear his Name . . . that the rest of men may seek for the Lord, even all the Gentiles who are called by my name" (Acts 15:13-18).

It is evident from this passage that those who were to be called from among the nations were to be counted as members of the family of Him who called them, for they were to "bear his name." That is no doubt the reason why the Ecclesia is termed thirteen times in the New Testament the "Church of God." It is God's family, God's "offspring" (Acts 17:28). This thought is enlarged upon by John in the 3rd chapter of his second Epistle.

Two principal objectives are to be accomplished by the Ecclesia of God in this age: the first, the issuing of the "call" or invitation; and, second, the instruction and preparation of those who respond to the call for the service which will be required of them when they have been qualified.

As was the case with the Ecclesia of Greece, the members of the Ecclesia of God must first be assembled, instructed in His laws, and given an opportunity to gain a degree of experience in their administration. During this period of education the authority of these future rulers does not extend beyond their own body, the Church. They must first learn to govern themselves before they will be prepared to rule over others (1 Tim. 3:4-7, 15) with justice and sympathy.

Here again we find that the word used to describe the members of the Ecclesia in its present phase of development expresses the purpose of God for them. They are called "disciples," that is, followers, not leaders; learners, not fully qualified teachers (Heb. 5:12), but being prepared by the instructors provided by the Lord (Eph. 4:11-15) to render acceptable and intelligent service in the ages to come.

THE CALL TO SERVICE NOW GOING OUT

The present purpose which God desires His Ecclesia or Church to accomplish is indicated in the Great Commission.

"Jesus came to them and spake unto them, saying, All authority hath been given unto me in heaven and on earth. Go ye therefore, and make disciples" ("taught or trained ones"—Young) "of all nations: . . . teaching them to observe" (understand and carry out) "all things whatsoever I commanded you" (Matt. 28:18-20, A. R. V.).

When the work of the Church of God for this age is completed and "the fulness of the Gentiles be come in" (Rom. 11:25), and "the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled" (Luke 21:24), then "the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, (and) then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory: and before him shall be gathered all nations: and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth the sheep from the goats" (Matt. 25:31, 32).

But the Son of Man will not rule alone, for when Jesus answered a question of Peter pertaining to the matter of rewards in the kingdom, He answered it not alone for the apostles, but for every disciple which should be counted worthy of the honor with them.

"Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, That ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. And every one" (here He touches on the destiny of every disciple of the Lord) "that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands" (in obedience to the call of the gospel) "for my name's sake, shall receive an hundredfold, and shall inherit everlasting life" (Matt. 19:27-29).

The position which the members of the Ecclesia of God are to occupy finally, the function which they are to perform, is even more clearly indicated in the song of the four and twenty elders, who raised their voices in praise to Him who sat upon the throne in these words: "Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth" (Rev. 5:9, 10).

To still further satisfy our searching minds, the resurrected Savior gives us this blessed assurance which, we observe, is addressed to "the churches," the "called out" of God: "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me. To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches" (Rev. 3:20-22).

UNTIMELY AND INAPPROPRIATE HYMNS

We have heard "Day Is Dying in the West" announced as the opening hymn of the Sunday school and many similar inept selections made by thoughtless service leaders. One minister, however, whose choir director chose the hymns and placed the numbers upon the hymn-board in advance of each service, decided upon a change in the number selected when he opened his hymnal in the pulpit.

"We will not sing number 437," he said, indicating the one named on the hymn-board, "but will substitute in its place number 344. I don't mind a certain amount of involuntary unconsciousness when I'm preaching," he continued, "but you can't expect me to be a part to it."

"Of course," says the one reporting the incident, "we sang number 344, but I caught several others leafing through their books as I was doing to find out what the preacher was driving at. Well, in our hymnal, number 437 was a funeral hymn containing these words:

"Sleep on, beloved, and take thy rest."

The Macedonian Call

The need of some one else is ever pounding at the gates of our hearts with the cry, "Come over into Macedonia, and help us" (Acts 16:9). Every Berean is entitled to all the tracts he can use simply for the asking. One of the finest ways to help the other fellow is to send him a tract in that letter you write. The seed thus sown may bring to some one a harvest of eternal life.

Another way to help the other fellow, if you will deny yourself some personal need to obtain a ten dollar bill, is to make up a list of ten people or families and take advantage of the present offer of THE RESTITUTION HERALD to send the paper to ten new subscribers for a year. This great spreading of the gospel net is bound to bring many to the great Fisherman for their eternal good. Think how much can be accomplished by placing THE HERALD in a thousand new homes! One hundred Bereans, each putting in ten dollars, can do this!

In a hard-fought revival meeting only one convert was recorded. Yet that one became a great missionary and converted thousands! The year's work of a certain hard-working minister was just one boy converted. That boy translated the Scriptures and brought the true light to multitudes in darkness! So the results of work you do, of sacrifices you make, cannot be measured now but in eternity. Listen to the Macedonian call. Go help some individual to know Christ.

Your Answers

Mrs. Mae Magnus, Detroit, Mich., gives the following answers:

What is the worst sin possible?

"I heartily agree with the writer who said that sin is sin, and that only man tampers with it to make one branch worse than another. 'But every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed. Then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin: and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death' (James 1:14, 15). So we see the result of any sin.

"We start out by doing things we do not feel to be sin, but really are on the border of the danger zone. The first thing we know we have pitched our tents over in the lowland and are soon swept away with the tide. Let us stay away back on the righteousness side of the border and there will be no danger."

If you are absent from your place of worship at any service, should you make up your contribution next time?

"If we have decided to make a regular contribution and are not present we should make it up next time or sometime. 'Not slothful in business; fervent is spirit; serving the Lord' (Rom. 12:11). 2 Corinthians 9 has a message for us on this question: 'God loveth a cheerful giver' (v. 7). Malachi 3:10 tells us, 'Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it.' The blessed Word teaches me a tenth belongs to God. 'Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings' (Mal. 3:8). I wish it were possible for me to give you my experience in tithing. O Church of God, we are such a little band, but if we would follow the teaching of the Word on tithing we could go forward so much faster with the message that we are to bring to this sin-sick world."

If I cannot sing well, does it mean I must not sing in church?

"'Paul and Silas prayed, and sang praises unto God: and the prisoners heard them' (Acts 16:25). Even if we cannot sing very well we should sing, for we sing praises unto God. The words in our song may touch some heart and change its way to the way that leads to eternal life, and how the words may soothe the ache in some sad heart. This has been my experience."

Can my ordinary activities of life affect the eternal life of others?

"We are taught time and again in the Scriptures to set a good example and to avoid every appearance of evil. I am afraid that our conduct can affect the eternal life of others. What a great responsibility rests upon professed Christians! I fear we do not give the subject enough thought. I would like to read an article from one of our learned writers on this subject. I am expecting to read answers from many others to the questions on the Berean page of March 30."

Assigned Subjects

For the encouragement and edification of us all we are asking you to write an article of three hundred words on one of the following subjects and to send it to the Berean editor. You may write articles on several of the subjects if you wish. How much mutual benefit we can get out of hearing from all of you and knowing that you are standing fast in Christ. Here are the subjects:

Full Consecration; Truthfulness; Honesty; Forgiveness; The Power of Unity; The Purpose of Doctrine; The Second Coming of Christ; Alcohol; The Prayer Meeting; The Goodness of God; Baptism; Repentance; Faith; Works; The Present Christ.

GOD STANDS BY HIS WORKERS

"IT TOOK Moses a long time to say that he would do the work God asked him to do, Mother," said Bobby as he and Betty and Mother studied the Sunday school lesson one afternoon out under the trees on the lawn.

"Yes, Son, the forty years he had spent in the desert had changed him from the hasty and thoughtless person that he had been," Mother replied. "He was more fitted to do God's work because he wasn't depending on his own strength, as he was when he killed the Egyptian who was striking the Hebrew."

"It sounds as if he didn't want to go back to help his people get away from Pharaoh," Betty commented. "He made all sorts of excuses."

"The first thing he asked God was what name he should give when he told them their God had sent him. You know, the Egyptians worshiped many gods and had as many names for them. But the Hebrews worshiped the one true God, and they were the only people on the earth at that time who did," Mother explained to them.

"Bobby, what name did God give to Moses as His own name?" Mother asked.

"I am that I am," said Bobby. "Say, I am has sent you," it says in verse 14."

"In other words, the God who had no beginning and no ending, the One who was eternal, who had always been and would always be. Jehovah was their Hebrew name for God. Abraham showed that he believed in the one true God, as did Isaac and Jacob. So He was called 'The Lord God of your fathers,'" said Mother.

"Betty, read verses 19 and 20, and tell us what God told Moses was likely to happen."

"God told Moses He was sure Pharaoh would not let the Hebrew slaves go with Moses. But He would bring some wonders upon the land, and after that Pharaoh would let them go. What did God mean by wonders, Mother?" Betty asked.

"I know, I know," said Bobby eagerly.

"Just wait, Bobby, we'll learn all about that later," said Mother. "First, let's see what unusual things God gave Moses power to do."

"God told Moses to throw the stick he held in his hand on the ground, and when he did the stick turned into a serpent. Then God told him to take hold of it by the tail, and when he did it became a stick once more. Wish I could do that," exclaimed Bobby.

"God gave Moses that power for a special purpose, and that was to convince those poor, ignorant Hebrew slaves that the all-powerful God was working for them through Moses. Betty, tell us what else He gave Moses power to perform."

"He told Moses to put his hand in his bosom, and it came out white as a leper's hand. And when he put it back into his bosom it was healed again. That must have frightened Moses, I should think," said Betty.

"Moses must have begun to realize something of God's power, I'm sure," Mother answered. "One more miracle God gave Moses power to do. What was it, Bobby?"

"He told him that if he took some water from the river and poured it on the land, it would turn to blood," Bobby replied.

"Still Moses wasn't satisfied, children. Read over verses 10-16, and you will see what disturbed him further."

"He said he wasn't a good enough speaker. He was a slow thinker and a slow talker. But God said He would teach him what to say. Still Moses wasn't satisfied. It seems to me he was stubborn, Mother," said Bobby.

"Just like some people we see today, Bobby. They have all sorts of excuses for not going to church or Sunday school. They never have time to read the Bible, and say they couldn't understand it if they did. But Moses wasn't quite that bad," said Mother. "The thing Moses couldn't see was that if God promised to be with him, he wouldn't need any further help. With God's help he could do all God asked."

"It says in verse 14 that God became angry at Moses," said Betty. "Then God told him that his brother Aaron could go with him and be the spokesman. I guess that made him feel better."

"Aaron was a long ways away from Moses, but that didn't hinder God at all. He appeared to Aaron, we read in verse 27, and told him that he was to go to meet Moses. Then Moses told him all that had happened and all that God had said to him. And they went together back to Egypt. Bobby, tell us what happened then."

"When the people heard all that God had said to Moses and when they saw the wonderful signs which He gave him power to do, they believed that God had really sent Moses to deliver them. Then they bowed their heads and worshiped God."

RAKER CHURCH, DELTA, OHIO

On Sunday, June 13, Bro. S. J. Lindsay of Tempe, Ariz., began a short series of meetings at the Raker Church, south of Delta, Ohio, continuing over June 20.

At our first Sunday morning service we were pleasantly surprised to have Bro. and Sr. Stadden of Cleveland, Ohio, and Bro. and Sr. James A. Patrick of Ashland, Ohio, with us. They spent the day with us, returning to their homes in the late afternoon. We were all sorry their stay had to be so short in duration. In the evening, as it was Children's Day, Bro. Lindsay was asked to give an address, which was pleasing and profitable not only to the children but to the grown-ups as well.

Throughout the week the attendance and attention were most gratifying. As always, Bro. Lindsay gave us some wonderful discourses, which could not help but cause one to think along vital points and be drawn nearer to God. The kindly manner and consideration for others has endeared Bro. Lindsay very much to the people of Raker. The feeling of brotherly love and fellowship was never shown more strongly than at this visit.

On Sunday, June 20, we had the pleasure of having with us Sr. Mary Elton of Cleveland, Ohio, and Mrs. Rose Law and daughter Maybelle of Elyria, Ohio.

There was one candidate for baptism, Mrs. Victoria Dunbar of Delta, Ohio. This was a cause for much rejoicing, as this united husband and wife in the same bonds of faith.

We appreciate very much the effort Bro. Lindsay puts forth each year, with on-coming age, to come to us and give us such marvelous lessons. After having the flu three times this past winter, it has left him in quite a weakened condition. We only trust he may soon gain his health and strength back and that he may be spared to come to us again next year.

Mrs. Roscoe Dunbar.

WALLER - POWELL

At the home of Mr. and Mrs. Luther Savage of Helena, Ark., Miss Mary Edith Waller, a member of the Salem Church and Sunday School and formerly of Marshall, Ill., was united in marriage to Mr. James Powell on June 5, 1937, by Elder J. R. Francis of Helena. Mr. Powell is a rice farmer living near Hickory Ridge, Ark., where they expect to make their future home.

Mrs. Letitia Waller.

"THE STORY OF A HAPPY CHRISTIAN LIFE"

The editor is deeply indebted to Bro. W. S. Tomlinson, Chagrin Falls, Ohio, for very nearly complete files of "The Restitution," containing valuable historical and biographical sketches of "Auntie" Wince. For several years Sr. Wince continued a series of articles in "The Restitution" under the title of "The Story of a Happy Christian Life," in which she recorded many interesting facts relative to the struggles and successes of those who lived and taught the truth as it is in Jesus in an early day.

From the data provided in these sketches and gathered from many other sources, the editor is arranging, as time taken from a very busy life permits, facts concerning the origin of the Church of God in America and the lives of the men and women who carried the work of the denomination forward.

He believes that such a review will prove helpful in many ways. It would stimulate interest in individual Bible study to be brought into contact with those who worked their way out of error and into truth by their own efforts. It would cultivate a spirit of sacrifice, as we look upon the self-forgetful struggles of the servants of God who defended the faith so long ago. And it would also fix more firmly in the minds of believers the facts of the gospel as they have been handed down to us out of the past.

A letter from Bro. H. S. Hunt, president of the Iowa State Conference, asks that the dates of the annual conference be corrected from August 17-22 to August 21-29. Please note the change in the Conference Calendar.

"I LOVE TO READ IN THAT BOOK!"

It was the little granddaughter of Sr. R. A. Robinson of Clyde, N. C., who made that statement recently as the two were discussing the Bible. But let us give the facts in Sr. Robinson's own words:

"My little granddaughter said to me last evening, 'I love the names of all those good people in the Bible. Don't you?' 'Yes,' I said. 'They comfort us so much.' She then asked me to read from the book of Proverbs. As we did so she said, 'I love to read in that book. It isn't so hard for me to pronounce the words.' I hope she never loses the love she now has for those old prophets."

We all echo Sr. Robinson's evident prayer for this little girl. Sr. Robinson's attitude toward her granddaughter reminds us very much of another grandmother whose name was Lois. She, too, read the Bible to her grandchild and because she did so he became one of Christ's great workers (2 Tim. 1:5; 3:14-17; 1 Cor. 16:10).

DAVIS - RICHEY

A quiet and simple little wedding took place in Casey, Ill., June 12, 1937, when Mr. Clement Richey and Miss Rosalie Davis, both of Martinsville, Ill., were joined in marriage by taking the solemn vows that, according to God's ordinance, will cause them to walk, labor, and serve together as one during the remainder of their lives.

These estimable young people will be remembered with pleasure by many, as they have attended the Illinois Bible School and General Conference. They are of the finest of the wheat, and we bespeak for them a successful and happy journey together through life. They will make their future home in Martinsville, Ill., where Clement is well and profitably employed.

MALINDA MILLER SHRADER

Malinda Miller was born December 31, 1844, in Greencastle, Pa., where she grew to womanhood and where, on March 24, 1864, she was united in marriage with George W. Shrader, to which union four sons and eight daughters were born.

After marriage they moved to Illinois and settled on a farm in Ogle County near Polo, and later to the farm west and north of Dixon, Ill., where she resided until the time of her death, which occurred June 9, 1937. Surviving of her immediate family are three sons and six daughters. Her husband, one son, and two daughters preceded her in death.

On July 18, 1911, she was baptized into Christ by S. J. Lindsay, becoming a member of the Church of God of Dixon, to which church she was much devoted and remained faithful unto death.

"Mother" Shrader, as she was affectionately known by her many friends, was a remarkable woman in many ways. She was an inveterate worker, always busy with her household duties and caring for her flowers, of which she was extremely fond. When not on her feet with these duties she was busy with her needle and chochet hook producing useful and beautiful rugs and other articles. She always met everyone with a smile and cheerful and encouraging words. She was not a complainer, and her cheerful, happy disposition assisted materially in making her life and the lives of those with whom she associated enjoyable and sweet. She fell asleep in Christ rich in faith and full of years of usefulness and good works. She sleeps well, for she lived well.

Appropriate memorial services were held in the late commodious home, after which we laid her to rest in the "silent city of the dead" at Rock Falls, there to await the return of the Lord she loved and served in life.

MRS. MARY HONEYWELL

Mary Catherine Hollenbaugh was born August 19, 1874, at Shelby, Ohio, and died June 6, 1937, at Cleveland, Ohio. She was the daughter of William and Almira Hollenbaugh.

On June 5, 1910, she was married to Walter W. Honeywell. They made their home in Cleveland, where they lived until eleven years ago, when they moved to Shelby, remaining there until her husband's death a year ago.

Soon after her marriage she was baptized, and for many years Bro. and Sr. Honeywell were active and faithful members of the Cleveland Church. Since returning to Cleveland, she was often seen at services, where she loved to meet with those of like precious faith, often bringing some of the grandchildren to Sunday school with her.

She "fell asleep" literally, going to bed in apparent health on a Saturday night, with plans to bring the children to church the following morning, but death came while she slept, so that her next awakening is to be when Jesus comes. She leaves behind two sisters, one brother, two daughters and nine grandchildren, whose sorrow is acute because of the suddenness of her passing.

On June 8 she was laid to rest in Woodland Cemetery beside her companion, where they together will wait to hear the sound of the trumpet which will call the dead to life at the coming of our Lord.

REFLECTIONS OF GREAT MINDS

"Think on these things."—Paul.

"This conception of religion without God has, in recent years, come to be known as 'Humanism,' and under this name has become the professed creed not only of a considerable number who have broken with organized religion, but also of a few radical spirits occupying pulpits in American churches. These people, especially the latter group, profess with a good deal of unction that they believe in religion. Religion, however, they stoutly insist, does not necessarily involve belief in God. Indeed, the idea of a personal God is their pet hostility. They emphatically reject it, and not only it, but also the very word 'God,' which they think has become contaminated by its personalistic associations of the past. In the place of God they put the idea of 'the sacred,' and to the sacred they give whatever content happens to satisfy their idealizing mood. Of the world they take a thoroughly naturalistic view, which they confuse with that of current science. Nature for them is entirely impersonal. There is no such thing as Providence. Providentialism, we are told, is the direct antithesis of humanism. What humanism preaches is self-help, not dependence on Providence. 'Human control by human effort in accordance with human ideals'—such is the program of the new humanistic religion. God and theology have no place in it." —"The Doctrine of God" by Albert C. Knudson. The Abingdon Press, 1934, $3.50.

FROM AN OLD SUBSCRIBER

Sr. Ida Overton, Eldorado, Ill., who has been a reader of The Restitution Herald for many years, writes appreciatively as follows:

"I believe the paper gets better all the time, yet I have old copies I turn to and read and wonder what could be more helpful than they are. I really think that sometimes one copy of the paper is worth the year's subscription. The Berean page of May 25 has such a good article on "Christian Soldiers," also the one "To You Graduates" is fine. I wish everyone could read them. Farther back on the same page was another article by Arlen Marsh, "Shall a Christian Dance?" How I wish we could encourage our young folks to read these.

"Bro. Wilsie McKnight is to be with us next Sunday. We greatly appreciate Bro. F. L. Austin's untiring efforts down here and the help of those in other places who have stood behind him."

"A peculiar twist in some minds is the expectation of reaping a reward for good deeds and escaping the consequences of evil ones."

Lower Rates to New Subscribers

To provide our readers with an opportunity to engage in a great missionary campaign at little or no expense to themselves and at the same time to make it possible for them to help us in placing THE RESTITUTION HERALD in hundreds of new homes between now and the first of next August, we are making the following unprecedented offer:

For the next two months we will accept annual prepaid subscriptions to THE HERALD at exceedingly low rates when sent in in groups of five or more at one time as specified below.

Five new annual subscriptions will be accepted when sent in by one person and accompanied by check or money order in full, for $6.25.

Ten or more new annual subscriptions will be accepted at the rate of One Dollar each when sent in by a single individual!

Subscriptions will be counted as "new" and entitled to this very low introductory rate when the one signing for the paper has not been a paid subscriber since January 1, 1937.

Here is a wonderful opportunity for our pastors, Sunday school superintendents, and local workers generally to get their people enlisted in a great missionary enterprise!

Remember THE RESTITUTION HERALD will continue to bring you the news of the churches from all parts of the country, the latest information as to prophetic developments throughout the world, and hundreds of inspiring articles on doctrinal and spiritual subjects of the deepest interest.

Faith and Doctrine

FAITH and doctrine many times are used as though their meaning were the same. But when the Bible is consulted, when the 11th chapter of Hebrews, or the 4th chapter of Romans, or the 37th Psalm is studied, it seems there is a difference so pronounced, so obvious, that it is unsafe to accept such an attitude. There is a difference. How can we understand the writer, and appreciate the design of the inspired message, if carelessness is allowed in learning the terms used? But much of our present-day religious literature, especially the denominational papers, leaves a hazy or vague impression, and even after careful reading we wonder if there is such a thing as really positive religion, such a faith as unflinching confidence in God; whether there be in the life of the nominal church member a consciousness of being a child of God. Are we joint heirs with Jesus Christ to an inheritance which shall endure forever? Does the minister feel that he is not only called, but sent, to declare the unsearchable riches of Christ? Are these periodicals, these messages to humanity, proclaiming the invitation, "Come unto me, all ye who are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest"? Is the minister preaching the grace of God, the forgiveness of sin, the comforts of the gospel of Christ, and the assurance of hope in His resurrection?

We may notice some examples as illustrations. In a current Christian magazine, on the editorial pages, occurs a discussion of the nature of Christian faith. In this consideration the name of God as a personal Being in whom man may have faith, is not mentioned once. The Bible is mentioned once as "the one-time authority for our Pilgrim Fathers." It is not, however, held up as the source of enlightenment for present-day needs. Religion does not get beyond the relations of man with his fellows. Jesus is an unsullied example for behavior; but the magazine leaves Him dead on the cross. Easter morn never dawned, and the Lord remained a sacrifice. He is not the Savior of men because of His triumphant victory over death, not the Redeemer because of His resurrection, as Peter proclaimed on the day of Pentecost—as all the great evangelists have proclaimed since that time. Listen to what the Apostle says: "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." And he calls this the law of faith "which we preach." See Romans 10:8-10. This is not an unusual example. Reading eleven of the sermons from the popular pulpits of today, we find only three of them appeal to the wayward, the bewildered, the discouraged, to come to the fountain of life and drink. Aside from short quotations at the head of the discourse as "texts," four of them fail to refer to the Scriptures even by quotation. Two of them did not mention the church. What poor, penitent sinner would gain a crown of life from such sermons? Thousands enjoyed them, thousands who, no doubt, are Christians in the sight of the Lord. But the 50 per cent of the masses who do not frequent our churches, could they hear these sermons, would find few crumbs of comfort, little inspiration to a better life, nor would they have a chance to listen to the Lord's message, "Come."

There is a counterpart to faith which does not appear on the church register; an influence unseen and unsung always attends a sincere service in the Lord's vineyard. Recently a notice appeared that a certain rich man's will had been opened for probate. After providing a sufficient sum for each of the legitimate heirs, he bequeathed one million dollars to the Salvation Army of this country. Why? Here is the reason: "Because the Salvation Army is doing so much to spread the gospel and save souls, more than any other institution of which I know." This is a freewill offering whose satisfactions had cheered the giver in passing years. But it was sanctified in the sincere faith that the donor, even though he die, would still be working for the redemption of the lost.

Still another witness to the faith speaks. A man whose life has reached the period of honest reflection says: "The Bible is the best of books. It pays anyone in this world to study it. And if anything is left when I am done, I hope it will go to the American Bible Society. Their money is well spent." To fill one's mission so well that the faith may command the faith of the generations to come is what the Prophet meant when he said: "The just shall live by faith."

Such examples might be multiplied by thousands. Faith, which "is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen" (Heb. 11:1), is at the foundation of man's destiny. Doctrine is the outcome of faith; it is anything that is taught. Faith is the groundwork of our thinking. It inspires our actions and inspires our hopes. Doctrine explains our convictions to others. It is the means to convey to others what has become the cause of our beliefs. Our faith may be wrong, and our purposes may fail. Our doctrine may be false, and loss come to us, or we may be overtaken with disaster. The disciples could not heal the demoniac because they lacked faith; but their doctrine was true—God healed the unfortunate (Matt. 17:14-21). Faith as a grain of mustard seed could have removed the mountain. An unpromising field may be the place where the Lord will bestow an unexpected blessing. The proof of the doctrine is works. "If any man shall do his will (the Father's will), he shall know the doctrine" (John 7:17). His doctrine was marvelous; His works beyond belief. The sick were healed, the dumb spoke, even the dead were raised; indeed the doctrine must be true. Thousands gave glory to God for His wonderful works. All their sins were forgiven. Such are the convincing evidences that the doctrine was true. Such were the "signs" that followed His disciples; and such are the results today. But back of it all is faith in God.—George H. Dewing in The World's Crisis.

Quickening Our Church Life

By C. E. Randall

THE CHURCH OF GOD needs a quickening in life and action—an experience in gospel mission work that will require a thorn in the flesh to keep us from glorying. The self-satisfied and complacent attitude must give way to an enthused and an awakened conscience of gospel responsibility. Deafness to Macedonian calls can no longer be suffered; we must arise and no longer tarry. We need to set sail for new fishing grounds! The forces of indifference and Laodiceanism are a challenge to our right to continue to exist as the Church of God. This challenge must be met with a determined spirit of work. Instead of waiting at the crossroads of inactivity, hoping for some turn of fortune to guide us on our way, let us as one man in Christ Jesus shout the command, "Go forward," and then in conquering spirit march into the good fight of faith.

A church or a denomination that loses its missionary and evangelistic outlook is destined to gradual disintegration. Poverty of home missionary enterprise has stalemated us! Our work is nearing the century mark in this country, and yet our leaven is little more widespread than the limits of the first few years following the cry of 1844, "Behold! He cometh." Is it that Providence has decreed that our message should be anchored to a proscribed area and our bounds set beyond which no man can go that we have failed to measurably enlarge the borders of our tent? Or shall we refrain from shouldering the cause of our limited work upon the name of our Father and frankly confess to our own failures and slowness to perceive that we had a responsibility to carry the torch of truth, and that we, not God, are accountable for the present small status of our work?

In calling attention to the failure to attain in gospel work, there is no thought in mind of converting the world or of rearing up a large organic body comparable to some other groups. But merely do we wish to bring to public attention that the stability, life, and vigor of our established work can be secured only as we share with others our spiritual life and knowledge. Injecting the Samaritan spirit into our gospel work, that is, sharing our gospel light with those who need it, will vitalize our work to such an (Please turn to page 16)

British-Italian Disagreement

"Go your ways: behold I send you forth as lambs among wolves."—Luke 10:3.

LONDON, England, June 15.—At best the missionary's lot is not an easy one. But generally he encounters the strongest opposition in lands ruled by non-Christians. Up until very recent years the missionary has been admitted to, or at least has been suffered to enter, all Christian countries, even those where the Roman Catholic was recognized as the state church. Since the war, however, the situation has been changing rapidly and missionaries of almost all denominations are being prohibited from carrying on educational work, and sometimes purely religious efforts as well, in many lands which hitherto have welcomed them.

The latest embargo to be placed on missionary activity has been announced by the revived Roman Empire, which has issued an edict forbidding missionaries to engage in educational work in Ethiopia.

The British Foreign Minister, Captain Anthony Eden, told the House of Commons that the subject of British missionaries in Ethiopia has been a matter of "prolonged negotiations" between his Government and that of Italy.

"I regret that these negotiations have not proved successful," he said. "The Italian Government has informed His Majesty's ambassador at Rome that it is its intention not to entrust to any foreigner, no matter of what religious denomination, the task of setting up any kind of school in Ethiopia. It will be seen, therefore, that the decision applies to all foreign missionaries."

During the war in Ethiopia most of the foreign missionaries left the country with the exception of those representing the Seventh Day Adventist and Presbyterian churches. In the case of the Adventists, they maintained a hospital which rendered splendid service to all, regardless of their nationality.

Labor War Goes On

"The labourer is worthy of his hire."—Luke 10:7.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 1.—Taking full advantage of the favorable attitude of the Administration toward organized labor, the C. I. O. continues its relentless warfare against the great steel corporations. Already some lives have been lost and the outcome is still in doubt. Gov. Townsend of Indiana last night ordered the mobilization of two thousand National Guard troops to protect thousands of workers who are determined to return to their jobs this morning in defiance of the strike imposed by the C. I. O.

In a veiled statement issued earlier in the week, President Roosevelt applied to the battling factions the words of Shakespeare: "A plague on both their houses!" How long the public, which is the chief sufferer from such industrial disputes, will put up with the present situation it is hard to tell.

In his first annual message to Congress, Abraham Lincoln, speaking of the conflict between labor and capital, said: "Labor is prior to and independent of capital. Capital is only the fruit of labor, and could never have existed if labor had not first existed. Labor is the superior of capital, and deserves much higher consideration. Capital has its rights, which are as worthy of protection as any other rights."

The President then called attention to the fact, which is as true today as it was seventy years ago, that "a large majority (of the American people) belong to neither class—neither work for others nor have others working for them. . . . Men, with their families—wives, sons, and daughters—work for themselves on their farms, in their houses, and in their shops, taking the whole product to themselves, and asking no favors of capital on the one hand nor of hired laborers on the other."

It is this great independent class of self-supporters which is concerned in no direct way with either capital or organized labor, but upon the purchasing power of which both capital and labor depend for their prosperity, which is suffering most during the present struggle owing to the difficulty encountered in obtaining necessary manufactured supplies. We watch developments with considerable apprehension.

Lewis on "Communist Honor Roll"

"Ye shall know them by their fruits."—Jesus.

LOS ANGELES, July 3.—The Western Worker, the "western organ of the Communist Party, U.S.A. section of the Communist International," included in the American honor roll of the Communist Party the name of John L. Lewis, head of the C. I. O., the labor organization which was repudiated by the American Federation of Labor and which is now involved in so many bitter conflicts.

Why Is the House of God Forsaken?

By D. G. Harvey

"Then contended I with the rulers, and said, Why is the house of God forsaken? And I gathered them together, and set them in their place."—Nehemiah 13:11.

HOW amiable are thy tabernacles, O Lord of hosts! My soul longeth, yea, even fainteth for the courts of the Lord: my heart and my flesh crieth out for the living God. Blessed are they that dwell in thy house: they will be still praising thee. Selah. For a day in thy courts is better than a thousand. I had rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness" (Psalm 84:1, 2, 4, 10).

THERE IS JOY IN SERVICE

Despite the assurance of David of the joy and peace to be found in service in the house of God, yes, even in the humble position of doorman, the servant of all who enter in, yet today we find empty pews, ministers driven from the pulpits to find employment in industry that they may provide food and shelter for their families.

It is said that "history repeats itself."

"And I perceived that the portions of the Levites had not been given them: for the Levites and the singers, that did the work, were fled every one to his field" (Neh. 13:10).

Oh, yes, we speak of the responsibility of the minister. But, remember that each member of the body of Christ has a responsibility which he alone can bear. The house of God is forsaken! Why? Lack of interest! All are dismayed by the condition today.

For example, I pass a bank on the corner. It is of little interest to me. Oh, yes, it is a nice building. Perhaps the safe is modern, but that does not matter to me. Why? I have no money on deposit. Not interested! But, on the other hand, let me put my savings in that same bank. My, what a change! Is the bank safe? At once my interest is keen.

When you have nothing invested in a project you can have no interest in the future of that project. So it is with the house of God. If you invest nothing you have no interest, take no active part.

But the lay members are not alone to blame. When leaders, pastors, teachers, indulge in worldly lusts, the house of God is forsaken.

What are worldly lusts? "The works of the flesh" (Gal. 5:19). Let us not read in haste, but for once pause and get the true meaning of Paul's words.

"Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these; Adultery (unfaithfulness to marriage vows), fornication (unlawful sexual relations), uncleanness (filthiness, impurity), lasciviousness (lewdness, lust), idolatry (idol worship, perhaps self-worship), witchcraft (magic, contact with evil spirits), hatred (ill will, loathing), variance (producing disputes), emulations (endeavors to excel), wrath (rage, anger), strife (contention for superiority), seditions (rebellion against authority), heresies (that contrary to received doctrine), envyings (jealousy of the success of others), murders (taking life, spoiling or ruining), drunkenness (drugged condition), revellings (taking part in boisterous merrymaking)."

Why do we notice and stress only the first two and the last three of these works and overlook the other works so much more common to man and the cause of falling into the more grave of the works? As long as church leaders manifest these works of the flesh, interest of the membership will lag. The church will no longer draw men to it.

The church is a called out people (Acts 15:14), called out from the world, to be different from the world.

Signs were given to identify the called out ones in the past. "Truly the signs of an apostle were wrought among you in all patience, in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds" (2 Cor. 12:12).

But today—"By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another" (John 13:35).

Paul describes the character of the true child of God in Galatians 5:22, 23: "But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law." Simple words, easy to understand.

Let me again use Paul's words. No words of my own could mean so much. "For ye are all children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. . . . Let us not be desirous of vain glory, provoking one another, envying one another" (Gal. 3:26; 5:26).

"Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice: and be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you" (Eph. 4:31, 32).

When this spirit of Christ prevails in the church (Please turn to page 16)

Preaching Doctrine

WHO has not heard: "Oh, brother, you are always preaching on doctrine," "We do not like doctrinal preaching," or, "Give us the practical and let the doctrine alone," or, "You are always disputing about doctrine"? This is said often. We do not think any harm is meant by the use of such language, nor are those disloyal who say these things. But, they are ignorant, and woefully so.

There should be nothing hard to understand here—not at all. "Doctrine," in the Bible sense, is simply teaching; faith is believing when it is taught.

The value of any doctrine, therefore, depends upon its origin, its truthfulness, its authenticity, and its importance. We are expressly warned in Scripture against those who teach "for doctrines the commandments of men." "The doctrine of the Pharisees and Sadducees" is expressly singled out as to be avoided; but "the apostles' doctrine" (Acts 2:42), "the doctrine of the Lord" (Acts 13:12), the "sound doctrine" (1 Tim. 1:10), "the good doctrine" (1 Tim. 4:6), the "doctrine of God" (1 Tim 6:1), the "doctrine of God our Saviour" (Titus 2:10), the "doctrine which is according to godliness" (1 Tim. 6:3), is worthy of the attention and the confidence of all men; while "divers and strange doctrines" (Heb. 13:9), "doctrines of men" (Col. 2:22), and "doctrines of devils" (1 Tim. 4:1) are to be avoided and rejected.

We greatly fear, however, that much of the prejudice against what is generally called "doctrinal preaching" is entirely without good ground and foundation.

It is certain that among all the doctrines of scores of differing and contradicting sects, there must be some doctrine which our Savior and His apostles never taught. It is impossible to believe that the "sound doctrine" which fell from the lips of the apostles of Christ and the Son of God, can be held responsible for all the differing denominations that vex the church with their disputes and sectarianism, or for the various names, the contradictory creeds, the differing forms and ceremonies, the divergent systems, and the inharmonious organizations which today present themselves to the eye of the candid and thoughtful Christian. Some of these doctrines must be "doctrines of men," and some of them may be even "doctrines of demons"; but it is utterly impossible to believe that all of them are doctrines of Christ and of His apostles.

If, therefore, men dislike to hear "doctrinal preaching," before we blame them, we should inquire what are the particular forms of doctrinal preaching which they so dislike. It is certain that there is error somewhere, and every man has a right to dislike error, and he has no right to love it or to receive it. If then it should be found that the doctrines which men like are doctrines which are unscriptural and untrue, their dislike may be instinctive, and fully justifiable, and may indeed be praiseworthy instead of blameable and criticized.

We may, however, suppose that "for substance of doctrine" in very many respects these differing people agree; yet we know that their differences of opinion and practice have been, in their own estimation, so great as to cause them to separate from each other, and so disturb the harmony of the church of the living God.

But if we suppose their separations have been causeless, and hence are the more sinful, and believe that there is substantial doctrinal agreement among them, and consequently no excuse for their antagonism and separation, there may still be reasons why men should not be interested in what is termed "doctrinal preaching."

What was the doctrine of Christ, at which the people were so astonished when He spoke to them as one having authority and not as the scribes? How was it that the common people, wearied of the everlasting hairsplitting of scribes and Pharisees, heard Him so gladly when He came to them with the message of love and peace? Wherein did the gospel which He preached so differ from the messages which they had before received, and the words which had been read to them from childhood every Sabbath day? Certainly the apostles said "none other things than those which Moses in the law, and the prophets, did say should come to pass." The Savior did not come to destroy the law, but to fulfill it; and the doctrine which He taught was not so very different from that taught in the Old Testament.

But He taught in a different manner from that in use among the Jews. He was done with hairsplitting and disputing about trifles, and dealt with great and grand, glorious and important facts and principles, reasoning out of the prophets, expounding the Psalms, reading the Word of God, and then talking in the simplest, and yet the wisest way, of the things which concerned their present and eternal peace. The common people heard Him gladly. There was nothing of the formality of the Reverend Doctor Dryasdust in the presentation of divine truth by this great Teacher. He spoke in simplicity. A child could understand Him. He talked of the fishes and the birds, the ravens and the sparrows, the seeds and the thorns, the wheat and the tares, the shepherd and the sheep, the fisherman with his net, and the housewife with her dough-dish, the woman with her broom, and the harvester with his sickle. He talked of the clouds and the sky, of the crops and the weather, of the lost sheep brought home by the shepherd, and the wandering son coming back to his father's house; of the ill-clad guest cast out from the feast, of the belated virgins vainly seeking admission to the marriage, of the slothful servant hiding his master's money in the ground, of the tricky steward cheating his employer to curry favor with his debtors; and finally, by the shepherd dividing the sheep from the goats He illustrated the work of the Judge of quick and dead, who shall separate the sons of men before His glorious throne.

Was this doctrinal preaching? If it was, then in our opinion it has not become stale or obsolete, unless men have turned from it, to substitute for the teaching of Christ doctrines of men and ideas and notions and theories of their own. And we believe that such doctrine as this, "sound doctrine," "the doctrine of Christ," "the doctrine which is according to godliness," may today be made as simple in statement, as sound in exposition, as convincing in argument, and as impressive in its facts as in olden times.

But if by doctrinal preaching we mean the diving into hidden mysteries, the teaching of divine decrees, the searching out of things which are unsearchable, the finding out of ways which are "past finding out," the formulation in human creeds of matters which ought only to be delivered in the "words which the Holy Ghost useth," the attempt

Immortality of Character

By Jerry Kroncher

THE article, "Immortality of Character," written by the editor of THE HERALD, is the product of careful study.

We often hear pseudo-psychologists speak of "inherent tendencies." The Bible knows nothing of such things—does not even mention the subject. If I am invested with such things, then the deeds I do are not mine; I am merely doing those things that my parents made me to do. But God is going to judge me according to the deeds I do.

Where is justice? Plainly, if there are any such things as "inherent tendencies" God is unjust. If Adam and Eve had no "inherent tendencies," from whence came they? If Adam had no such things, then each descendant would pass none to the next generation.

Again, if I have an inherent tendency to evil, I most certainly would have another one to righteousness, each opposing the other. How could I do other than obey the stronger of the two? If the evil one was the stronger, I would have to obey it; or vice versa. My righteousness would not be mine, but my parents'; my wickedness not mine, but my ancestors'. And yet God is going to judge me for the deeds I do! Where is justice?

Again, every brother and sister would have to be identical in character. This we know is not true. In spite of this last axiom, some folks argue that children of the same parents could differ in character and also have inherent tendencies from parents and ancestors. For argument's sake, grant it. Then some "force" is selecting the inherent tendencies to be transmitted to each child. If God can foretell what a person will do, God must be that force. Then it would be God who makes a person do righteously or wickedly. Plainly, predestination would be true, and God's judgments unjust, for every person could do only those deeds which he was made to do, and God made him do them.

Notice, the Bible teaches that God does not make a person do the deeds which He foretells that person will do.

In presenting the following article to our readers, we welcome a new writer to our columns. The author handles the controversial subject of which he treats with obvious fairness and scriptural accuracy. Brother Kroncher's home is in Hammond, Louisiana. The editorial to which he refers appeared in THE RESTITUTION HERALD of May 25 of the present year.

God does not "foremake" a person do so and so, but merely foretells what he is going to choose to do. "Foremaking" and "foreknowing" are not interchangeable terms. They differ widely.

If I am to be judged justly for the deeds I do in the flesh, then I must of necessity be a free moral agent. I must have the privilege of "squaring off" and giving God a "good round cursing" if I choose to do so. If I choose to humbly submit myself to God, the deed must be mine, not my ancestors'. If I do the deeds that I do, when God judges me judgment will be just, correct, faultless.

Of course, I cannot—will not—submit myself to God's will faultlessly enough that I will deserve salvation. But a person, to have righteousness "imputed" to him, must do some deeds of his own will. God accepts or rejects as He pleases.

All these arguments lead to other questions. If God permits no one to be tempted above that he is able to bear, then when I sin I am not coerced into it. I have plenty of reserve strength to resist. I simply deliberately choose to commit the sin. I have plenty of strength to resist all temptations that God lets come to me if I will. God watches to see that I am not tempted above that I am able to resist. Therefore, God is just when He judges me according to the deeds I do in the flesh.

Some argue that we have "inherent tendencies" and also "free-moral-agency" to do as we choose. Gently now. If our inherent tendencies do not affect our choice of good and evil they must not exist. If we do not exercise our free-moral-agency to sidetrack our inherent tendencies, is this a product of our inherent tendencies? It has to be. Therefore, we must be complete free moral agents; free from our parents, similar to Adam.

My character, then, is what I (all by myself) choose (learn) from my environment. Each of us is free to choose

The Doctrine of Inspiration

“DO YOU believe the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments to be the Word of God, the only infallible rule of faith and practice?” This question is the first one to be asked the candidate for the ministry of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, when he is licensed. And it is the first question to be asked at the time of his ordination. It is logical that this should be the first question put to him because it is the foundation of our Christian religion and the basis of all our doctrines.

Christianity is founded upon a divine revelation—a revelation that is therefore authoritative in all matters pertaining to faith and practice. Apart from this foundation upon a God-given Book, there would be no certainty of salvation, no true hope of eternal life, and no clear authority as to the moral requirements of God. But since Christianity claims to be the one true religion, she has always established herself upon an infallible, inerrant revelation that God has given to men under the guidance and control of the Holy Spirit.

In view of this fundamental doctrine of the inspiration of the Scriptures, a serious problem is confronting the Presbyterian denomination. A large number of the recent graduates of our seminaries, who are coming into the active ministry and becoming the pastors of many of our churches, do not accept the doctrine of the verbal or plenary inspiration of the Scriptures. The “higher criticism” of modern scholarship which is so widespread today has succeeded in permeating their minds with doubt and skepticism and is destroying their faith in the Word of God.

What will happen to the doctrinal position of our Presbyterian Church—what will hold us to the teaching of our Confession of Faith—what will keep us true to the great system of doctrine that has been handed down to us from our forefathers—when a sufficient number of men who do not accept the full inspiration of the Scriptures have been permitted to enter the ministry of our denomination? It is a serious question that we must face. A grave responsibility has been laid upon us by virtue of the ordination vows that we have taken. And yet, whether through a mistaken conception of Christian tolerance, or through ignorance, or through pure indifference, we are breaking down the standards of our church and destroying the great foundation upon which our whole doctrine and faith are laid, by permitting men who do not regard the Scriptures in toto to be the infallible Word of God to be ordained to the ministry.

The Confession of Faith, which forms a part of the Constitution of the Presbyterian Church in the United States,

When a minister whose duty it is to proclaim the message that God has for men as it is revealed in the Scriptures declares that certain parts are the infallible Word of God and other parts are not, he is treading on dangerous ground himself and leading his people into the quicksands of doubt and destruction. In contrast to this tendency we see the younger ministers of our own faith standing firmly for the divine inspiration of the entire Scriptures of Truth.

is very clear in its statements regarding the Holy Scriptures. After including under the name of Holy Scriptures all the books which are commonly accepted as forming the Old and New Testaments, the statement is added in regard to them, “All which are given by inspiration of God, to be the rule of faith and life” (Chapter I, Section II). In Section IV of the same chapter, the authority of the Holy Scriptures is said to depend “not upon the testimony of any man or church, but wholly upon God (who is truth itself), the author thereof; and therefore it is to be received, because it is the Word of God.” It does not distinguish between the great spiritual truths of the Bible and the historical facts and details that are recorded; it does not grant more authority to the ethical teachings of Jesus than it does to the writings of St. Paul; nor does it separate the passages that speak of God’s love from those that record His wrath and justice, and say that the former are divinely inspired and that the others are false ideas of bigoted Jewish writers. But the Confession of Faith of our church accepts the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments as a complete whole and says of them, as a whole, that they are the Word of God.

In the same chapter of the Confession of Faith, Section VIII, we read the following words: “The Old Testament in Hebrew (which was the native language of the people of God of old) and the New Testament in Greek (which at the time of the writing of it was most generally known to the nations) being immediately inspired by God, and by His singular care and providence kept pure in all ages, are therefore authentic.”

What plainer statement of the full inspiration of the Scriptures could one desire! What more direct assertion of plenary inspiration could one expect! The Old Testament as it was originally written in the Hebrew, the New Testament as it was originally written in the Greek are said to have been immediately inspired of God. If the men who wrote this Confession of Faith meant that only the great spiritual truths were inspired or if they had believed that only parts of the Scriptures were given by God, why would they make such a statement of divine inspiration?

Finally, in Section X of Chapter I, we read that “the supreme Judge by whom all controversies of religion are to be determined . . . can be no other but the Holy Spirit speaking in the Scripture.” If one does not accept the full authority and inspiration of the Scriptures, but sets himself up as the standard by which he selects those portions of the Bible to which he ascribes divine inspiration, then the supreme Judge is no longer the Holy Spirit speaking in the Scriptures, but the individual man himself.

Recently a candidate for the ministry, who does not accept the doctrine of the plenary inspiration of the Scriptures, admitted to the writer that the standard which he used in finding those portions of the Bible that he felt were divinely inspired was his own conception or idea of God. When one comes to such a view of the Scriptures as this young man has, he ceases to believe that the Bible is the infallible rule of faith and practice. How, then, can he, or any other who does not accept the full inspiration of the Scriptures, take in good conscience and in all sincerity the vow for licensure and ordination, answering in the affirmative the question, "Do you believe the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments to be the Word of God, the only infallible rule of faith and practice?" Facing a Crisis

By T. A. Drinkard

The dangers to which the author of this article points are apparent to every observer. Indifference to the doctrinal basis upon which our redemption depends is one of the developments of the last days. Emotionalism, which some have looked upon as evidence of spirituality, is in itself without value. Only a definite faith in the gospel and a hearty obedience to its requirements in baptism and in life will assure the salvation we seek.

"THE CHURCH OF GOD as we know it today is facing a crisis, not from the same causes as other religious bodies, but a breaking up process has been in operation for some time."

Thus comments a leading brother concerning the troubles that demand immediate attention. There is a cause that produces the effect. May it not be much the fault of ministers who claim to have visions and dreams, who like to pattern after other people, who have grown tired of God's simple way of converting men and women, and who are trying to eliminate "the ancient landmark, which (our) fathers have set" (Prov. 22:28)? And may it not be that such effort will cause the brethren "to stumble in their ways from the ancient paths, to walk in paths, in a way not cast up" (Jer. 18:15)?

We need not seek for visions, nor to have dreams. All we need has been provided by the Father. It took doctrine, faith, and practice in the days of the apostles to convert men and women from sin and make them new creatures in Christ Jesus. That doctrine and that faith are just as effective today as they were in the days of the apostles in the conversion of men and women. If God had needed anything else to make His cause better surely He would have added it.

We do not really need a new vision, but the application of a little common sense to cause us to be willing to carry out the plan and purpose of God. I find it written in the Word, "Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself and them that hear thee" (1 Tim. 4:16). This is the divine plan.

Is it not true that there is a tendency with some to discard doctrine and to center most of their efforts on what they term spirituality, when they should know that spirituality minus doctrinal truth is powerless to save anyone?

And, too, is it not true that we have allowed ourselves to sanction and endorse as a body men to represent the truth that are growing tired of preaching doctrine? In other words, a desire is being manifested to be like other people. For my part I do not care to be like other people or I would have joined them years ago. I am perfectly willing to follow the New Testament rule of faith and practice as we are required to do now. As I see it we have the doctrine and the faith, and what we really need is a great deal of practice.

Another thing I might mention is this: In the days of the apostles when one received a "vision" and tried to preach some false doctrine, the apostles opposed it and demanded that such cease. But the rule heretofore observed among us as a people has been to condone such practice. That is the reason that as a people we are facing a crisis. We have condoned things that Paul would not have permitted to continue, thinking that we were practicing brotherly love.

Some brother had a vision (?) that sin was of God, and that it was, and is, the will of God. And we have done absolutely nothing to let the world know that we as a people do not endorse such a doctrine that casts shame and disgrace on the name of God. Here is another reason why we are facing a crisis. God's doctrine comes first before human toleration.

God gave to Israel His law to direct them. But in process of time they grew tired and brought in and allowed the practice of things that caused trouble. Why? Because they did not follow the Father's instructions. When the Master came He presented a plan and demanded that it be followed. But we want to help the Lord (?) and we invent to ourselves strange doctrines, and here we are suffering the result of such folly. Such things ought not to be. Just do what God wants you to do and success will crown your efforts.

The Signs of the Coming Kingdom of God

FOR untold ages men have racked their brains in an attempt to inaugurate some kind of system to settle international, domestic, and petty disputes. Today there are many organizations composed of both men and women who are directing their energy and influence to outlaw wars. Men and women today, a small minority, 'tis true, are beginning to see the absolute futility of wars. They see how little is accomplished by them. They are learning, a little late, what destruction follows in their wake. They not only see crippled bodies, sightless beings, and crazed mortals, but they have learned that morals are broken, and licentiousness follows also. Read our books which have been written since the great World War. They are filled with thoughts and words which one with any degree of modesty would not quote.

Our young people are fed with this cheap literature. They read only about the sordid side of life. They, these young, go about and say, "Let me lead my own life. I am responsible to no one but myself." "The only harm I do, I do to myself." This is, of course, irresponsible youth talking. How little do they realize that what they do themselves affects many others. How well this is explained in the life of the daughter of Jacob. She, too, thought she could lead her own life. But see what happened to her gray-haired father and her brothers.

Again, all of us who are compelled to fight and pay the taxes realize that there are those invisible forces within the governments which force others to do battle for no other purpose but money and power. Recent investigations have revealed this power all too plainly. What can we do as followers of Christ? Let us see.

One thing this world needs is knowledge. You may say, "This world has more knowledge than at any time since man's birth." This may be true, and in many things it is true. We have gone very, very far in material things since the first man saw the dawn of light. The change from those long and wearisome and tiresome methods of travel upon camel back to the methods of travel upon our swift-moving trains, ships, automobiles, and airplanes, has made life much better. Today indeed we can travel in great ease and comfort. The time is not far distant when we can eat breakfast in New York, lunch in Chicago, and supper in San Francisco. Today we can speak to others thousands of miles away in a fraction of a second. Distance means nothing. We can sit comfortably around our fireside with the family and listen to the strains of a rhapsody, or a symphony, or to an opera which comes over the air. Soon we may be able to see the actual performers.

Then in medicine, in surgery, miracles have been done.

In the following article the author, Thomas D. Grosseup, says that though the world is filled with knowledge, yet it is lack of knowledge that proclaims that we are nearing the end of the present order of affairs. He declares it the duty of every Christian to spread the knowledge that results in salvation.

In the arts men have risen very, very high. Learning and education have been made available for all. The genius of man is transcendental. These things are fine. But still with all this knowledge, something is lacking.

Yes, it is knowledge that men—the vast majority of men—have lacked for so long. After all I have said, you would think no more could be said. But let me elaborate. The lack of knowledge has stained every land and every sea-way with the spreading scarlet of spilt blood. Lack of knowledge has caused that strange self-mutilating trait of mankind, the organization of hatred, in the form of dreadful group rivalries and wars. Man has never organized love with any success. This is the task of the future; and only the knowledge of God can lead unto this. This is an indictment of our Western civilization, which is a so-called Christian civilization—people who are supposed to follow Christ. Yes, man has never organized love with any success.

What a sad commentary upon religion, a religion which is founded on love, when one realizes that there never was a time when man was without God's revelation, God who has revealed to us how to live, how to walk, and how to love! Notwithstanding this, ever since man has been driven out of the Garden of Eden there have been hatred, wars, and rumors of wars.

The blame lies at the doors of our religious leaders—priest and rabbi, minister and preacher. These men are supposed to mold minds spiritually and morally. They know (if they do not, they should know) that several thousand years ago a voice spoke from heaven, "Thou shalt not kill. Thou shalt not covet." We are told we are our brother's keeper.

A man by the name of Jesus, known to millions I fear by name only, has said in unmistakable terms, "Love your enemies; do good to all men; pray for them who despitefully use you." He also said, "They that take the sword, shall perish with the sword." This statement is true in more ways than one. Nations today are in a scramble to build more and more war implements. These implements will act as a boomerang. Sooner or later, if Christ does not hasten His coming, nations will destroy themselves with their own weapons.

Jesus Christ was sent by God to teach men love and humility. Jesus Christ came and preached the kingdom of God, and its purpose. He showed people how to live to get the most out of this mortal life. There is no excuse for not knowing this. Anyone who reads the Gospels, believes them, and lives according to their message, will leave a heritage to be proud of. There in the Gospels in plain, unadulterated language, He tells us of our relationship to one another. "Love your neighbour." "Do unto others as you wish to be done by." "Thou shalt not kill." Our so-called leaders have no excuse for not knowing these things. No, they have failed us, and they have failed God. In more instances than one they have insulted God and His Son. The Word of God was thrust to the background and the sword was rattled in the foreground. They were and still are traitors to their calling. I say this not in the spirit of malice, but with a heart filled with pity.

Where are our so-called institutions of love? You would at least expect the church to be such. But it has failed to effectively show brotherly love.

Suppose we would teach our children in the schools the ethics of Christ. Suppose we would teach them the true Christian principles, hatred of wars, do you think we would have wars? Suppose we were to teach our children the equity of Christianity, do you think we would have legalized extortion? Suppose we would teach our children the politics of the Old and New Testament, do you think we would have corrupt politicians? Suppose we would teach our children the true equality of man according to God's Word, would we have class hatred and class wars? Suppose we taught our children that with God there are no national boundaries, would we have wars? Suppose we taught our children in school that God is no respecter of persons, but has made of one blood all nations, do you suppose we would have so much national pride?

Suppose we taught our children in school that come what may the kingdom of God will take in the whole earth, and the ultimate destiny of man if he abides by what God wills, is to inherit this earth with immortality and grace God's earth when His glory shall cover this earth. You would build up a different psychology—one which would make all the more happy. Impossible, you say! O no, it is just as possible to do all this as it is to build up our present trend of thought.

There have always been two classes ever since Adam was sentenced to a life of toil and sorrow. These classes are the rich and the poor, the slave and the privileged. The privileged were cunning enough to overcome the less fortunate brothers and made themselves leaders. Instead of being helpers they became drivers. Men are still driven like cattle. These workers toil and slave. When a surplus of goods is made, high finance seeks other avenues for exploitation. Foreign fields are courted, instead of sharing this surplus with their overburdened and overworked brothers. They want money, and more money, power and more power which money can buy. Then when nations default, war ensues and again the toiler must pay. The churches and the powers preach patriotic sermons instead of preaching peace through Christ. This goes on and on. Now if true knowledge were preached in times like these and before this happened, what a difference it would make.

The cause of many of our ills could be easily cured if men and women were taught the true Word of God. The Christian world has failed to do this, and for doing so has paid dearly.

This will not always be so. The time will soon come when the law shall go forth from Zion and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. This statement may appear strange to some. God has decreed it so. If we all had the true knowledge we would know this. It is plainly so stated in the Bible. It is said, "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." And if the heavens declare the glory of God, what good things will happen in this earth!

Yes, the time is coming when just and equitable laws will be made, not for some but for all. There shall be one law for the whole world. And He who rules, the Lord Jesus Christ, will rule righteously. "He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God." We are God's creatures. God loves His creatures. Anyone who injures, or hurts, or treats unfairly His creatures, who were made in His image, God will hold accountable. There will be one King. This one King will rule the whole world. This is God's plan. He has revealed it through the ages.

Men are looking toward this end, but not in God's way. I will quote from one, and here is what he said:

"There will be no rest in Europe until it is under a single chief—an emperor who shall have kings for officers, who shall distribute kingdoms to his lieutenants, and shall make this one king of Italy, that one of Bavaria, this one ruler of Switzerland, that one governor of Holland, each having an office of honor in the imperial household."

The man who made this statement was a murderer, one of the most ambitious emperors of Europe, Napoleon Bonaparte.

Another made a statement covering all this and more. This one said in Revelation 5:10: "Thou hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth."

Daniel prophesied (7:27): "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High." There will be no rest in Europe, Asia, or the Americas until He, the Lord Jesus Christ, comes to partition this world according to God's plan.

Why does Germany want to rule the world? Why does Mussolini want Ethiopia? Why does Turkey want Greece? Why does Stalin want to communize the whole world? Why does Japan want China? Is it for humanitarian purposes? Oh, no. It is for exploitation, for ambition, for money. Not so with Jesus. He will have an effective organization for love.

Let me tell you, my friends, the time is coming when there will be rulers, kings, and priests, who will sit upon thrones. These rulers will need no implements of war. They will rule in justice, for they will rule in the fear of God. Yes, the time is coming when every man and woman and child will sit under his own tree, and enjoy the fruit of his and her labor. They won't hear the roaring of cannons. Swords will not be clashing and the strutting of war lords will be a thing of the past. Mothers will be able to hold their children close to their hearts without fear. We are assured by God that nations shall "beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks. Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

(over)

My friends, this is not a dream. These are not idle words. This isn't impossible. It is the Word of God, and God's Word is true. Believe God, for He has decreed it to be so. "As truly as I live, the whole earth shall be filled with my glory." This is the knowledge the world needs so much.—Condensed from The Faith.

among the things that environment presents. An individual cannot choose anything except something that his environment contains. At the same time God does not permit a person to be tempted above that he is able to resist if he will. God requires much from him to whom environment gives much, little from him to whom little has been given. There are good and evil (much and little) in every environment. He that uses the good that his environment contains (whether it be much or little) will have righteousness imputed to him. He who chooses the evil his environment contains (whether much or little) will be humanely laid to one side in a "lake of fire and brimstone."

Therefore, God's judgment will be fair, just, perfect, far above discrepancy. Predestination is not true. There are no such things as "inherent tendencies."

DOCTRINE OF INSPIRATION

Our greatest theologians, Dr. Charles Hodge and B. B. Warfield, proclaimed and defended the doctrine of the plenary inspiration of the Holy Scriptures. Dr. A. A. Hodge, who at one time was professor of Didactic and Polemic Theology in the Western Theological Seminary, says in his Commentary on the Confession of Faith, page 55: "Nevertheless, these books are, one and all, in thought and verbal expression, in substance and form, wholly the Word of God, conveying, with absolute accuracy and divine authority, all that God meant them to convey, without any human additions or admixtures."

If we lose this trust in the full and complete authority of the Holy Scriptures, which has characterized the Presbyterian Church in the United States throughout its great history, there will be little left to our religion. The infallibility of Christ stands or falls with the infallibility of the written Word, and if we lose one, we must give up the other. Let those who love the Christ of a complete God-inspired revelation affirm and defend their belief in this foundational doctrine. And let all ministers and elders be true to their ordination vows and do as Dr. Mark A. Matthews urges them to do when he says, "Another piece of business that ought to be finished is the closing of the door to the ministry to those who do not understand and who do not believe and who do not have a passionate fondness for our creed."

May the ministers of the gospel, whose duty it is to proclaim the message of Almighty God as it is revealed to us in the Scriptures, accept those Scriptures as the infallible, inerrant, divinely inspired and God-given Word of Truth.—James H. Blackstone, Jr., in The Presbyterian.

TRUTHS AND CONSEQUENCES

"LET'S lynch him! String him up! He'll get out from under if he goes to trial. Lemme at 'im!" The disheveled, hiccuping "hit-and-run" driver was dragged out of his car, and the excited men were about to carry out their will when the police arrived.

"Whatsa matter here?" a sergeant wanted to know as he forced his way through the crowd. He jerked the groveling drunk to his feet. "What were you doing?" "Nothin' (hie) that I know of, 'cept they're pickin' (hie) on me!"

"I'll tell you what the matter is!" A clean-cut fellow stepped out of the crowd. "This drunk was parked on the wrong side back there about a mile. When he started up, he veered all over the road. A little tot, three years old, ran out into the street—he was having a birthday party—and this guy ran him down. Carried the baby on his bumper for a hundred feet! Then he stopped, threw the child up on the curb, and drove off. I followed him, and after chasing him down here, stopped him by ramming my car into his. He deserves the electric chair!"

The crowd thought differently, suggesting a rope over a bare tree limb. The police dragged the fellow away—not a bad-looking chap—dazed, unaware that he was responsible for the death of a little child. The poor mother now had a lifeless little body. The hopes and dreams of years vanished in breath-taking sorrow. It was a horrid nightmare—it couldn't be true—that in a civilized land a child could be killed by a man who didn't know what he was doing. But it was true!

Yet the man was not to blame for the killing! True, he was indirectly responsible in that he poured something down his throat which stole his brains. But the moment he drank liquor he was no longer responsible for his actions. He was no more accountable for what he did than is an insane man who runs amuck!

The court does not inflict punishment upon an insane person—it puts him away where he cannot do harm—because he is irresponsible. What is the court to do with a drunken death-driver? Punish him for drinking? That isn't quite fair these days, since the law says any citizen can drink, and the more the citizens drink the more the Government makes in taxes. Of course the law says no one under the influence of liquor must drive a car, but when most people drink they have no intention of driving their cars, to say nothing of killing babies. Unless some inventor finds a way to make folks swallow an anchor when they drink, so they can't leave the premises until they sober up, there is no way of controlling liquor in a man. It enters and takes possession—mind, body, and soul!—Charles S. Kendall in Zion's Herald.

WHY I PLEDGE TO THE CHURCH

BECAUSE everything I have comes from God, and by giving a part of my income to Him I thus acknowledge His ownership and my stewardship.

Because the church is the best institution I know of through which my money can most profitably be used to proclaim the gospel of God's kingdom.

Because when I joined the church I promised to support it, and I want to make that promise good.

Because making a pledge and paying it regularly reminds me constantly that I have a definite share in proclaiming the gospel of God's kingdom.

Because the missionary, relief, and educational agencies of my church have no source of support other than the pledges of church members, and they depend on my pledge.

Because I am not willing to accept the benefits of the church without contributing to its work.

Because by giving my money to Christ and His church, I am laying up treasure in heaven.

Because pledging to the church keeps me from growing selfish and indifferent.

Because when I pledge in faith to God's work, I know that I can count on Him to see to it that I am able to meet this pledge.—Adapted from Present Truth Messenger.

PREACHING DOCTRINE

to explain the inexplicable, to comprehend the incomprehensible, and to lay burdens upon the consciences of weak believers, and entangle good men in their speech by party shibboleths and artfully worded tests, and the everlasting struggle to prove things which, judging by all outward signs, are not really believed by the men who undertake to prove them—if this be "doctrinal preaching," then there is small wonder that men are not pleased with it nor partial to it.

"Doctrine," which simply signifies teaching, has somehow come to be the synonym for some dissecting, classifying, systematic statement of the opinions of a peculiar class of theologians. It presents us the results of their investigations among the moldy mysteries of centuries. We are to accept it as a summary of their opinions. Instead of walking in the green pastures of God's Word, we are to be fed on their bundles of baled hay, not always free from weeds and thorns. Everything is to be analyzed, and this we might assent to if we were sure of any purer doctrine than we can gather for ourselves. Unfortunately, we have no such assurance. Doctors disagree quite as much as their disciples ever did. The learned men differ fully as much as do the unlearned; and a man may be wise with the wisdom of this world, and yet know comparatively little about the wisdom of God.

This "doctrinal" method of unfolding divine truth is unnatural. It is systematic, technical, and analytical; but you can analyze milk till it would kill a child to drink it, you can analyze meat till it would kill a dog to eat it, you can analyze bread till no beggar would be hungry enough to swallow it, and you can analyze truth until its component parts have all the deadliness of error; and it is possible that in some cases this is one reason why doctrinal preaching is so distasteful to many people.

Let us then see to it that we accept the doctrine of Christ, the "doctrine which is according to godliness." Let us have a care that we do not drift into the error of those who will not "endure sound doctrine," and let us also have a care that we do not substitute "the doctrines of men" for the doctrines of the Lord Jesus Christ, and that we be not carried away by "every wind of doctrine" through the craftiness of men. Let us beware of the wisdom that sets aside the words of Jesus Christ and fills the minds of men with phrases which He has never used, which convey opinions which He has never seen fit to teach.

All Scripture is profitable for doctrine. Give us then the doctrine of God, the doctrine which the common people heard so gladly; the doctrine which won the hearts of the peasants of Palestine, the fishermen of the Sea of Galilee, the publican sinners, the common people who gladly heard the Word of God. Let us have that doctrine which astonished the wise men and the Pharisees, and which was received by the devout and humble with childlike innocence and faith.

Let this doctrine be taught as the Savior taught it. Let it come like the warm breath of spring with the sunshine and the rain. Let us follow the sower as he sows the seed. Let us warn the believer as he digs deep and places his house on the rock. Let us go with the shepherd to find his lost sheep, and let us learn on every point the lessons which the Savior taught us, the doctrines which He unfolded for the comfort and salvation of His people. If we thus teach, we may be sure that now, as of old, there are hungry souls that long to be fed, thirsty ones who would gladly drink the water from the smitten rock, weary ones who are yearning for rest, and sinful ones who would find pardon and peace through the blood of Christ. And it may be that we shall find that much of the prejudice that has existed against "doctrinal preaching" is the dislike, not to the divine truth taught, but to the poor, blundering teacher who fouls the crystal waters of divine revelation with the tramping of his own clumsy, blundering feet; who instead of leading the flock to green pastures, insists on shutting them up and feeding them the musty hay which he has made; who gathers doubtless very many excellent herbs for his pottage, but who manages now and then to get in enough of wild gourds to make any man whose taste is acute cry out, "There is death in the pot!" and who, instead of grumbling at Christians because they do not like his doctrinal preaching, should thank God for their spiritual instincts which turn them away from the thoughts, the commandments, and the doctrines of men, to know the good Shepherd's voice and follow Him until there shall be one fold and one shepherd.

Berean Department

Cecil A. Smead, Editor, Blanchard, Mich.

To All Bereans

We have come again to the time of year when the various state and national conferences are being held. In most of these conferences one day has been set aside for the Bereans, at which time the year's work is reviewed and plans made for the future.

Berean work is not confined to study of lesson books alone. While this is the primary purpose of Berean work, yet there are other phases of Berean activity that are outstanding. Speaking from a national standpoint we refer especially to the two correspondence committees maintained by the Bereans. The work that is carried on by these two committees is such that not much publicity is given them. But since we are strong believers in giving honor to whom honor is due we offer a word of praise to these committees.

We refer first to the Junior Committee. This committee, composed of young people, has the task of writing to newly baptized young people, and of making them welcome into the faith. This not only inspires the new converts but also draws the young people into unity. The chairman of this committee is Miss Elna Ruhn, and she has a very active committee composed of Lorraine Brossard, Lila Kirkpatrick, Jeanette Romine, Milderd Siple, Francis Burnett, Delbert Jones, Emily Fyfe, and Muriel Randall. These members write to the young people all over the country and serve to unite more firmly the young people of the Church of God.

The chairman of the Senior Correspondence Committee is Mrs. Rhoda Hanson, and her able assistants include Miss Lottie Young, Mrs. Laura Briggs, Mrs. Mary Hatten, and others. This committee writes to new adult members and also to the isolated. Much comfort is thus given the older members.

We might mention also that General Conference time is near. We urge every Berean to attend. On National Berean Day reports will be given, officers elected, and business transacted. Be there with your criticisms and your suggestions.

Harry Goekler, President.

Fishers of Men

"And he saith unto them, Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men. And they straightway left their nets, and followed him."—Matthew 4:19, 20.

Two Galilean fishermen, diamonds, but very much in the rough, were Peter and Andrew. Unknown, uneducated, it is just such souls as these that the Lord Jesus takes and makes to be glittering jewels on His breastplate. It is because they willingly leave all and follow Him.

What does He mean—"I will make you fishers of men"? You fishermen know that there is a knack to catching fish. It takes an understanding of fish—what kind of bait, where to fish, how to act. It is common knowledge that the country lad with homemade equipment catches more fish than the city man who has a complete angler's outfit costing plenty but who is unexperienced.

So Peter and Andrew, expert fishermen, were to be made Fishers of Men, catching men for their own good and for Christ. There are all kinds of men—rich and poor, educated and uneducated, strong and weak, big and little, good and bad, in high places and in low places, manual laborers, skilled laborers, mental laborers, and spiritual laborers, the haves and the have-nots, the doers and the do-nothings, but without exception all are eligible for the gospel net. All can be saved. "Whosoever will may come." And the Christian is a Fisher of Men.

A thorough study of the Bible will provide you with a knowledge of the bait to be used, and then your own experience and common sense must tell you what message to give to each individual.

A man who is saving for a rainy day can be told of the heavenly bank. "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal" (Matt. 6:20). When Jesus leaves that heavenly bank for this earth again He will bring your savings, with His interest added, too.

The plumber can be told of the water of life which comes in refreshing purity to make us never to thirst again (John 4:14). Jesus cleanses His church "with the washing of water by the word" (Eph. 5:26). "The pure river of water of life, proceeding out of the throne of God and the Lamb" is just what the thirsty inhabitants of this old earth need.

The farmer knows that every seed he sows must conform to its kind and will grow up for just what it is. Even so, "whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting" (Gal. 6:7, 8). The Word of God is "incorruptible seed" (1 Peter 1:23). And in the resurrection God will give "to every seed his own body" (1 Cor. 15:38). Be careful of the seed you receive into yourself, and upon receiving good seed tend it carefully and let God develop out of this "vile body" a "glorious body" (Phil. 3:21).

Jesus is the greatest of servants, for He served righteousness. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon" (Luke 16:13). "The servants of sin" work in the stench of uncleanness and iniquity. They of necessity must associate with filth. "The servants of righteousness" associate with God and all the pure and holy persons and things of the universe (Rom. 6:16-23).

You can think of different ways to tell the old, old story to different people. Study the Bible and search out ways of helping others to understand. Write your experiences for this page. What would you say to a carpenter, to a business man, to a soldier?

READY FOR A LONG JOURNEY

LAST week we left Betty and Bobby and their mother out under the trees on the lawn at their home. They had just been reading that God had given Moses a great work to do for Him, but He had given him a helper—his brother Aaron. That great work was to lead the Hebrew slaves away from Egypt and back to their homeland.

You remember that when Joseph was about to die, he told his brothers that he was sure that God would one day see that they all got back to their beloved home again, for He had promised that He would. And now, even though none of Joseph's brothers were alive, still their descendants were and the promise meant just as much to them.

That is one thing we learn from these lessons—God always keeps His promises. You know, we make promises sometimes that we are not able to keep. And some people make promises they never intend to keep. That makes us lose faith in people sometimes.

But God never fails. We can depend on Him and on everything that He says He will do. That is what faith is—knowing, being sure of God. And our having faith in Him is what pleases Him, just as our having faith in our mothers and fathers pleases them.

The Apostle Paul tells us in very plain words that it is impossible to please God unless we have faith in Him. If we didn't believe what God says to us in His Book, we wouldn't do what He asks, and then, of course, we couldn't expect any reward.

Today's lesson shows us how necessary it was for the Hebrew slaves to have faith in God. If they hadn't believed Moses when he told them what God said, they would not have done the things God asked them to do. And, as a result, they would never have returned to the land they loved so well.

There are four chapters of Exodus telling us what happened before Pharaoh would let God's people go. In them we read of the dreadful things that God brought upon the people of Egypt by the hand of Moses because Pharaoh was so wicked. These things were called plagues, and some of you can tell the story of what happened.

Now the last plague was the most terrible of all. And it was then that the Hebrews had to show their faith in God. Let's slip into Betty's and Bobby's house this evening and listen while they talk it over with their mother.

"But God knew every house where a Hebrew lived, Mother, and every house where an Egyptian lived," Bobby was saying. "Why did He tell the people to sprinkle the blood of a lamb on their doorposts?"

"God wanted the Hebrews to show their faith in Him," Mother replied. "He wanted them to believe Him and then to obey Him, just as He wants us to do, you see. And it would show to everyone the difference between a Hebrew and an Egyptian."

"Verse 11 in chapter 12 says they were to eat the roasted meat all dressed as for a journey," said Betty. "They were to eat in a great hurry. Why was that, Mother?"

"God told them that after this last plague Pharaoh would let them go. And He wanted the Hebrews to show that they believed God and so were ready for the journey," Mother explained. "It all happened just as God said it would. At midnight the oldest child died in every house where there was no blood on the doorposts, from the king's palace down to the lowliest Egyptian."

"Pharaoh begged Moses and Aaron to take the Hebrews away then," said Bobby, who was always reading ahead of the others. "The women even took the bread they were making. Here's a funny thing! They borrowed all the jewelry and fine clothes of their neighbor Egyptians and took that with them, too. They probably had nothing of their own."

"God told them that in later years whenever their children asked what the meaning of all this was, they were to explain it to them. They were to impress it upon their children's minds that they had been led out of Egypt by the hand of God," said Mother.

"God went ahead of the people by day with a big cloud like a pillar to lead them," said Bobby. "By night He led them with a pillar of fire to give them light. It must have been a wonderful sight. That army of slaves would have been lost long before they reached home if God had not led them."

"There is a lesson for us in the Passover lamb, children," Mother concluded. "The blood of the lamb is what saved the Hebrews that night. Christ is our Lamb. He shed His blood on the cross for us. And if we believe God when He tells us that there is no other way to be saved except through Christ, then we will try to do as He says, just as the Hebrews did when they escaped from the cruel Pharaoh."

AMONG THE CHURCHES

CONFERENCE CALENDAR

- July 29-August 1—Oklahoma-Arkansas Conference at Driggs, Ark.
 August 3-16—General Conference of the Church of God; Illinois State Conference and Bible School; National Berean Conference, Oregon, Ill.
 August 15-22—Western Nebraska State Conference at Holbrook.
 August 21-29—Fiftieth anniversary of the Iowa State Conference, Waterloo.
 August 17-30—Virginia State Conference and Bible School, Maurertown, Va.

THE MISSION WORK

The Church of God, through the Mission Board appointed by the Ministerial Association, is endeavoring to stimulate interest in missionary and evangelistic work.

We have been somewhat slow getting started, because at first the money came in so slowly. But at last we have enough to make a start, and the board is sponsoring a trip by Bro. C. E. Randall through the Middle West and West, or rather, Northwest. Bro. Randall's efforts will be put forth in the interest of evangelistic and mission work. It is hoped that every community visited will heartily cooperate and give him every assistance possible. Make every possible effort to have large audiences greet Bro. Randall.

Will you pray for this effort? "If God be for us, who can be against us?"

I think all of us realize that the time is short and that eternity is near at hand. Are we satisfied with our efforts? How will we stand when we meet the Master? I am asking myself this question as much as I am asking it of you. How many sheaves have we to lay at the Master's feet? How many stars will there be in our crown?

Whatever is done in assisting Bro. Randall will count for you and me in whatever results may follow his work. Paul said that the Philippians had sent once and again unto his necessity, and then he adds, "Not because I desire a gift: but I desire fruit that may abound to your account." Every convert that Paul made would be counted as fruit to those Philippians. Why? By their help they had made it possible for him to do the work, and it counted as much for them as for him. Every bit of effort you put into this work of Bro. Randall's will count in your favor on the records in heaven. Lay up treasure in heaven where moth and rust do not corrupt.

If you have not written him for an appointment, it is too late to reach him at his home in Fonthill, Ont., but I think if you write him at once, addressing him at Mora, Minn., he will get it, or in care of the National Bible Institution, Oregon, Ill.

It is to be hoped that Bro. Randall's trip will be more than self-supporting, and that there will be money to put into the mission treasury.

James A. Patrick.

IF YOU WANT A ROOM

Those desiring rooms in Oregon homes during the General and Illinois Conferences should write to Miss Elizabeth Ordnung, Oregon, Ill., stating the number to be accommodated and the length of time rooms are wanted.

CHURCH OF GOD, LAWRENCEVILLE, OHIO

"The best laid schemes o' mice and men gang aft a'glee."

After announcing that Bro. Patrick would speak at Lawrenceville on July 11, it develops that he cannot be there because of another appointment. Hence the writer is now scheduled for that work. Services will be held morning and afternoon, and a basket dinner will be served at noon. We expect a good meeting.

"QUICKENING OUR CHURCH LIFE"

On the front page of this issue appears an article under the above title, in which the author, Bro. C. E. Randall, emphasizes the vital importance of arousing an evangelistic or missionary spirit in our people in these times.

Remember, Bro. Randall is now making a trip through the north-central and western parts of the country and he will be glad to stop off at available places on the way to hold meetings, give a real gospel message, and stir up the people on the needs of the hour. Send your requests for his services to this office and we will get into immediate contact with Bro. Randall on your behalf.

A CORRECTION

Somewhat belatedly we learn that Bro. F. L. Austin is no longer regularly engaged as State Evangelist of Illinois, although still carrying forward some of the work he started in that State, and consequently is able to fill outside engagements of an evangelistic or pastoral nature. His address is 5439 Ohio St., Chicago, Ill.

NOTICE TO PASTORS

One day of the Ministerial Conference to be held in conjunction with the General Conference has been set aside for a discussion of problems relating to our duties as pastors. If you have a problem or problems of such a nature, and would appreciate an opportunity to profit by the experience of other pastors in dealing with the same problem, this is your opportunity to do so.

Since I have been placed in charge of that discussion, I am requesting that pastors having problems that they wish discussed write their problems out, stating them as clearly and concisely as possible, and mail them to me. This will give us an opportunity to discuss related problems together, and to announce them to the various pastors beforehand in order that they may have time to give their comments the serious thought and consideration of which they are worthy.

It is not my intention to attempt to answer the questions myself. It is my purpose merely to organize and direct the discussion in such a way that the greatest good can be done for the greatest number. Send in your problem today. Your cooperation will be greatly appreciated and should prove to be fruitful to all

ILLINOIS BIBLE SCHOOL TEACHERS

The Illinois Bible School, which convenes in Oregon, August 3-15 in conjunction with the General Conference, will have the following teachers for the various classes: beginners, Mrs. Ruby Railton; primary, Mrs. Mary Krogh; junior, Elder H. U. Krogh; intermediate, Miss Lucille LeCrone; high school young people, Elder C. E. Lapp; advanced young people, Elders G. E. Marsh and C. E. Randall; adult, Elder F. L. Austin; general class, Elder S. J. Lindsay; teaching principles, Elder C. E. Randall.

MINNESOTA CONFERENCE REPORT

The annual conference of the Churches of God in Minnesota which convened June 9-13 at Eden Valley enjoyed the largest attendance of any conference for several years, this in spite of the fact that it rained a great deal during that time, preventing many who had planned to attend from arriving. Sunday noon meals were served to approximately two hundred fifty people in the basement of the Eden Valley church, and there were some who had been in attendance earlier in the week who could not stay for Sunday services. The total attendance at the conference would be between two hundred fifty and two hundred seventy-five.

Visitors from another state remarked that never had it been their privilege to attend a conference where a better spirit of Christian fellowship prevailed. They stated that, though they listened carefully for it, they heard not one note of discord during the entire session. Each individual showed a willingness to sacrifice personal whims and selfishness and to forget past misunderstandings and grudges in order that the work of the Lord might go forward and the gospel be made effective in the State of Minnesota.

A resident of Minnesota who had been out of the State for some time remarked that he observed a more zealous spirit among the Christians of Minnesota each time he returned. We do indeed thank the Lord for the manner in which He has rewarded our efforts and request the prayers of the saints everywhere that this work may continue to grow and increase. We have only scratched the surface of the work to be done in the State, and we realize that without the help of God and the prayers of the brethren we can do nothing. Pray for us!

The election of officers resulted as follows: president, J. R. LeCrone; vice president, J. L. Denchfield; secretary, Mrs. Alvin Bennett; treasurer, Mrs. W. F. Hoskins.

Our State evangelist, Elder A. E. Hoskins, is at present conducting a series of meetings at Graytown, Wis. After he completes his series of meetings there, he plans to go to Onamia, Minn. Dates for other points have not yet been definitely arranged. The field at Onamia is entirely new to the Church of God, and we are confidently expecting great things there. It has been opened to evangelism largely through the zealous efforts of Bro. and St. Orlando Berry. The work everywhere would be the better for more such zealous workers as these two.

J. R. LeCrone.

THE LOS ANGELES DEDICATION

Owing to the fact that we are having a cut made of the splendid new church building which was recently dedicated in Los Angeles, we are withholding the report of what was evidently a most inspiring gathering, until we can publish the picture with the report.

We are also going to press with our final run earlier than usual due to the celebration of our country's independence, which is to be observed on Monday, July 5.

BROTHER J. H. ANDERSON'S CONDITION UNCHANGED

A note from Sr. Mellie Anderson, daughter of Bro. J. H. Anderson, Michigantown, Ind., informs us that Bro. Anderson's condition remains about the same as it was during the latter part of the Indiana Conference. That is, while he is able to be up a part of the time, he is not yet sufficiently recovered in strength to undertake active work. We pray for his complete and speedy recovery, as the Church of God stands in need of men like Bro. Anderson, who stands firm and unyielding in defence of the truth.

LOUISIANA CHURCH NOTES

It is indeed gratifying to see the continued good interest and attendance manifested at all our various church services. Such loyalty and interest give inspiration to the leaders to carry on in service.

Some improvements have been made at the Happy Woods Church, including the building of a small vestibule and the screening of all the doors and windows.

The Blood River Church has realized a long-felt need by purchasing a Communion set.

The Ponchatoula Berean class is enjoying the study of the new Berean book, and under the capable leadership of Mrs. John Williams and the loyalty of the Bankston and Foster families, the class is making progress.

This is picnic time and during the past week picnics were held by the Ponchatoula Bereans, the Happy Woods Church, and the Blood River Church. Needless to say, an enjoyable time was had by all.

Harry Goekler, Pastor.

RIPLEY, ILLINOIS

The annual business meeting was held Sunday, June 13, for the purpose of hiring a pastor for the coming year. A picnic dinner was served at noon.

It was the wish of all present at the meeting that Bro. and Sr. Harvey Krogh be retained to work with us.

In the absence of Bro. James McLain and family, our pastor and his wife go to Macomb to conduct the midweek Bible class.

At our Thursday evening prayer service we plan to take up the study of the book of Revelation.

Sr. Mary Laning is ill and unable to attend church. We hope she soon can be back with us. She and Bro. Laning are enjoying a visit from their son Dwight and wife of California.

Sr. Lola Clark's husband passed away June 24. We ask that prayers be offered in her behalf.

Ednah Cooper, Secretary.

ANNUAL CLEAN-UP DAY

Friday, July 23

The Annual Clean-Up Day at the dormitory, in preparation for the coming conferences to be held in Oregon, Ill., has been set for Friday, July 23. There is plenty of hard work to be done, so the more there are to do it, the less each one will have to do. This is work which falls upon the Dixon, Rockford, and Oregon churches. A full attendance of willing workers with brooms and pails is expected.

JASPER M. LAKE

Jasper M. Lake, at the age of eighty-seven years, died at his home west of Argos, Ind., on Tuesday, June 22, 1937, after an illness of six months. One of Marshall County's oldest residents, he was born on the farm, and but a few feet distant from the place of his death.

On November 2, 1879, he was united in marriage with Laura E. Price, to which union were born eight children: Mrs. Nora Helsel of Bourbon; Mrs. Clara Stults of Argos; William of Plymouth; Orvin of Argos; Mrs. Orley Zerbe, Arnold, and Milburn of South Bend; and Mrs. Olive Kline of Culver. Of this family of father, mother, eight children, and their respective families, the first occurrence of death therein was that of above date—June 22.

Fifty-four years ago the deceased united with the Church of God. He lived his faith and loved his Lord to the end. The hope of the resurrection of the just, and of all to which said resurrection points, was not only the hope of Bro. Lake in life, but was the theme asked for at his death.

Funeral services were held at the near by Poplar Grove Church. A concourse of friends fully occupying the building bore evidence of the great esteem which neighbors held for one who had said, "Our Savior was not honored with flowers at His death; I therefore ask that none come to me."

F. L. Austin.

ALBERTUS C. THOMPSON

Following an illness of two years, Albertus C. Thompson died at his home at 1111 Blaine Ave., South Bend, Ind., on the afternoon of June 15, 1937.

This much respected and kindly citizen was born to Dixon and Amanda Thompson at Plymouth, Ind., Jan. 7, 1860. On January 1, 1886, he united in marriage with Jennie Evans and located in his native city where mutual love and faithfulness and industry were blessed with a home of comfort and happiness, and with two daughters, Lois, now Mrs. William I. Hunt, and Lettie, who died in early childhood.

About thirty years ago they moved to South Bend. Later, jointly with their son-in-law and daughter, they built the commodious home wherein the remaining years of life of a genial and provident husband and father were to be spent.

He is survived by his devoted companion of fifty-one years; the mutually and lovingly attentive household of his daughter and her husband and three children: William T., Albert E., and Erma Jane Hunt; one ever devoted sister, Mrs. Eva L. Underwood; a large number of kinfolk; and friends all about.

In the quietude of death loving hands and hearts laid him at rest in beautiful Oak Hill Cemetery at Plymouth to await the call of Him who only has the power of resurrection.

F. L. Austin.

AMARILLA T. RICHARDSON

Amarilla T. Richardson was born to Nathan and Mary O'Dell at Troy, Ohio, on March 22, 1847. Her baby eyes never saw the face of her father, and on February 23, 1861, when she was but twelve years of age, death removed the loving care of Mother from her life. Thus orphaned, she was later, at the age of fourteen, adopted by a Mr. and Mrs. Hibbard. There the yearnings of her mother's Christian fervor were continuously a definite part of the family life, and at the age of seventeen, at Fitchville, Ohio, she aspired to the Christian life, uniting with the First Congregational Church.

The changing vicissitudes of life took her into New York State, Illinois, Michigan, and back to Ohio—all during the tender years. When twenty-five years of age her brother, two years her senior, induced her to locate near himself, near Coldwater, Mich. Her activities in music and school-teaching, which she had followed for several years, were continued first around Coldwater, later about Hastings, and finally at Grand Rapids and Jamestown. At Jamestown she was kindly afforded the comforts of a home by her uncle, William O'Dell. Here, also, she met in her music work J. Franklin Richardson, with whom she was afterwards, June 6, 1877 united in marriage. Soon they purchased the home near Jamestown in which they lived the remainder of their lives.

To this union were born three children: Esther C., now Mrs. William Holmes of Santa Paula, Calif.; Marian J., now Mrs. John Richards of Los Angeles, Calif.; and Alan of Jamestown, Mich; all of whom, together with three grandsons, survive.

This whole family united with the Church of God years ago at Jamestown.

This Christian home was first entered by death when the husband and father was smitten on October 27, 1925. Since then this mother in Israel has been amply and tenderly cared for by her children, a portion of the time being spent in California, but most of it with her son in Michigan because of her attachment to her old home.

Her death, which occurred most quietly and peacefully, June 23, 1937, closed a very active, kindly, and useful life. Since early youth she tried to live a life of true devotion to her God and to His Son. In the same faith and trust she approached life's close, looking toward the resurrection day and its unspeakable glories.

Funeral services were conducted at the home, fifteen miles out of Grand Rapids, Mich. Interment was at Jamestown Center.

THE APOSTLE PAUL

By Beatrice Walter

THE basis of Christian work is self-denial. Paul willingly deprived himself of human pleasure that he might do service to others. He was a person of great natural ability, quick of mental grasp and of anticipating evil, with a fixed determination when he knew he was right. He led a blameless life and lived in the midst of great opposition. He was neither discouraged nor fearful of any danger, and endured a great many persecutions with cheerfulness.

Paul's whole life speaks humility without measure. Through it he expressed a great understanding of God his Father. He manifested faith, patience, wisdom, and an unlimited unselfishness. He showed confidence and security by his ever readiness to do God's will rather than his own. He showed love and gentleness in his teaching and leading under great opposition. He showed a sense of duty with an understanding calm and secure, realizing his responsibility.

All personal superiority vanished with the meekness and simplicity of the way Paul went about his work. He showed humility by his loyalty and steadfastness of mind, by not being moved by the threats of injustice and misjudgment, two of the severest persecutions one can experience.

Paul was the greatest force mentally and spiritually in the work of spreading the gospel to the Gentile nations. He stood forth against odds that were great because of his faith in his Master and a desire to do His will. He was an outstanding character and he suffered because he was right. But through suffering he was victorious. He was very industrious. He enjoyed the pure, the virtuous, and the beautiful in life. He had a tremendous fight against jealousy, superstition, vice, cruelty, and false friends. The very environment of his life cried out the words of the Master in regards to him, "I will shew him how great things he must suffer for my name's sake." Hear him declare positively, "I can do all things through Christ, which strengtheneth me."

Paul had neither health nor money, but on the contrary was a poor man, often in distressing need. He had a chronic ailment, "a thorn in the flesh," which was a great handicap to him, but through it God showed His power. He was indeed not an exciting or emotional speaker, and according to his own testimony not impressive in appearance. Certainly many people did not like his nationality, Jews being a despised race. Yet with triumph Paul could look back with great satisfaction in his heart at the fight he put up to follow the course there was laid out for him, and he knew there was laid up for him a crown of righteousness.

As Christians are we willing that the world should know the motives of all our actions? all we do and say? We should fight against pretense and dishonesty, and should stand forth and be our honest self, and let that honest self reflect a Christian spirit that the world and all who know us should be made better because we have lived,

As Christians we will suffer because we are right, and the more of the Spirit of God we have in us the greater will be our conflict with the world. As living stones we should be patient with the chastening brought upon us because of our faith, knowing that God has chosen us for a special purpose. Paul suffered for well-doing to gain his crown of life. How can we ever hope to gain our crown any other way? Let us rejoice that we have been chosen and have a faith that will stand the test, and we will conquer through our Master, as Paul did.

"I have known ninety-five of the world's great men in my time, and of these eighty-seven were followers of the Bible."—W. E. Gladstone.

extent that we will be brought to our knees seeking forgiveness for failing to do it sooner.

The dash across the country to which Brother Lyon referred in a previous article is for the purpose of arousing our interest in home mission and evangelistic work. It is the desire that this special mission trip will quicken our spiritual pulse and revivify our conscience of gospel responsibility. A missionary Church of God will be a growing, warm-hearted, spiritually endowed, hard-working church. To accomplish the aim in mind, we are asking all of our folk over the country to be thinking, talking, and praying in terms of mission adventure. A mission-minded church, a church interested in the biblical welfare of adjoining communities is our need, our responsibility.

Brother pastors, will you not bring before your congregations our duty of preaching the gospel as a witness. If we have not such calling and obligation then we must not be the people of God. Pray with them over this matter. Keep it ever before them! Let each of us pray that under divine guidance we may as a church press forward in service that will exalt the name we bear! Every attempt to further the interests of this trip thus far has met with success. God has led us to this point! Pray us through to victory!

WHY IS THE HOUSE OF GOD FORSAKEN?

interest will increase, confidence will be restored in the leaders. Then the brotherhood will provide funds to carry on the work as they did in days of old: "Then brought all Judah the tithe of the corn and the new wine and the oil unto the treasuries" (Neh. 13:12). The world will see the reflected light and no longer will the house of God be forsaken,

NUMBER 41

THE NEW LOS ANGELES CHURCH OF GOD—The beautiful and commodious structure pictured here was dedicated to the service of the Lord at Los Angeles, California, Sunday, June 6, 1937. For years the congregation in this, the largest city on the West Coast, has been laboring under the disadvantage of having no house of worship of its own. We pray that this splendid new building, which has been provided at so much sacrifice on the part of the brethren who are to worship in it, may result in bringing many men and women to a saving knowledge of the gospel.

Protestant Unity

"Mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned."—Romans 16:17.

NEW YORK, June 18.—Final reports of the action taken by the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America last April, have just been made public regarding the creating of "A Commission for the Study of Christian Unity." Dr. Samuel McCrea Cavert, General Secretary of the Council, in making the announcement of the creation of the commission, said:

"The appointment of the commission would emphasize the fact that there is a real desire to move in the direction of some larger integration of our Protestant forces than now exists. Since it is obvious that there is as yet no general agreement as to the solution of the problem, the commission's primary method should be that of objective study and research. Any final decision would, of course, rest with the churches themselves."

Canada, it is said, is planning the organization of a federation of churches similar to that of the Federal Council in the United States. When the United Church of Canada was formed some years ago, through the amalgamation of the Methodist, Congregational, and a part of the Presbyterian churches of the Dominion, the Baptists, Church of Christ (Disciple), a section of the Presbyterians, and some other denominations, declined to enter the union on doctrinal grounds.

The proposed federation hopes to make possible the presentation of a Protestant united front on such questions as war and temperance.

It has been demonstrated that union of religious bodies is impossible where doctrine is taken into account. Union must be based principally on agreement as to what constitutes morality and good political government. All theological questions must be eliminated. Of course, to do this Protestantism must cease to protest against the false teachings of Catholicism and thus no longer remain "Protestant" in the sense in which the word was used by the great doctrinal reformers who separated themselves and their followers from the apostate church.

Premarital Health Tests and the Bible

"Thus shall ye separate the children of Israel from their uncleanness; that they die not."—Lev. 15:31.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., July 1.—Following the example of a number of other states, Illinois put into effect today a new marriage law requiring a physical examination of both the prospective bride and groom before a marriage license is issued. Following the examination, the physician issues a certificate attesting the fact that the applicants for the license are free from venereal disease.

From many quarters of the globe news comes announcing that governments are entering upon a relentless war against social diseases which undermine the strength and virility of their people. "Even from far-off Bagdad," says The Literary Digest, "there is a proposal before the Government to require prospective brides and bridegrooms to obtain medical certificates before marriage." In Germany and Turkey such examinations are compulsory; in other countries, The Digest declares, "they are voluntary, but encouraged, and in some cases are 'voluntary' under pressure."

In his work on Medicine in the Bible, Dr. Charles J. Brin of the Jewish Beth-Israel Hospital in New York, says:

"Moses, the great sanitarian, recognized the food-urge and the sex-urge as the basic passions which control man's short sojourn upon this small planet. He legislated accordingly and stressed cleanliness, hygiene, and prophylaxis. The Mosaic dietary code and the Mosaic sex-hygiene regulations are as potent a factor in the health of man today as they were over three thousand years ago. Sex matters are discussed candidly and from a health standpoint of the Bible.

While speaking plainly of those dreadful diseases, Dr. Brin says that the Old Testament does not classify them into a distinct group. "Uncleanliness resulting from promiscuous acts of intercourse is brought out in many passages. But Leviticus 15 is devoted to a thoroughly detailed description of one of the most loathsome diseases resulting from intercourse . . . and the diagnosis, management, and after-care as described here, more than three thousand years ago, cannot, with few minor exceptions, be improved upon today."

A study of the health laws of the Jews will be found to be of great help to the Bible student in his efforts to combat skepticism, for it will be found that the discoveries of modern science were anticipated by inspired men ages before the development of our present system of medical practice.

What Is a Good Man?

IT WOULD be hard to find a more splendid tribute to pay to any man than that contained in Acts the 11th chapter and the 24th verse: "For he was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith: and much people were added to the Lord."

He was a good man, the man to whom Luke referred in such approving terms. His name was Barnabas. Once he had been wealthy, but long ago had turned his property into cash and contributed it for the support of the disciples of Christ in Jerusalem at the time when they had "all things common." Now for several years he had been devoting his life wholly to missionary labors in the city of Antioch in Syria. Therefore it is not surprising that he should be called "a good man" by Luke who had known him so intimately both at home and abroad.

It has even been suggested that Luke was a convert of Barnabas and of Paul, for their early labors had been performed in Luke's native city. The "beloved physician," who penned those words of commendation, was well acquainted with all that Barnabas had sacrificed in the way of material riches and social position on behalf of the gospel. Luke also knew the depth of Barnabas' faith, his devotion to duty and to God, and he spoke from his own personal knowledge when he said that Barnabas was "a good man."

Before we go deeper into the study of the qualities which Barnabas possessed and which entitled him to the commendatory words of Luke, we would ask this question:

Just what is a good man? What are the elements of character which distinguish "a good man" from an indifferent man or from a man who is obviously bad?

The word "good" is too varied in its meaning for us to be able to find a satisfactory answer to our question in the definition of the word itself. We must look farther afield for our answer.

Back in the old days of human slavery, when men because of the accident of their birth and color were placed upon the auction block and sold to the highest bidder, the auctioneer often described such a one in these very words: "He is a good man." Then in support of his claim he would direct attention to the slave's vigorous and healthy body, his strong physique and perhaps his youthful appearance. The slave being offered for sale was "a good man" physically. He could be depended upon to render many years of laborious service to his master.

We use the expression in much the same way still. A prize fighter is "a good man" because of his muscular development and physical training. The ball player is "a good man" because he is able to drive a certain number of "homers" over the back fence during the baseball season.

The difference between the divine and human viewpoint is nowhere more evident than in the way in which God and man analyze the qualities that constitute a "good man." In this article the editor compares God's standard of goodness with the standard of society.

The foot racer, the discus thrower, or the hurdler is each accounted "a good man" because of his ability as an athlete.

Then we have the "good man" in politics. Here, too, the word "good" is used more or less ambiguously. "A good man" in politics may mean a man who faithfully tries to carry out his pre-election pledges, one who does not forget or intentionally delay the execution of the promises he made when he stumped the country in his own behalf. But there seem to be few "good men" of this kind who obtain positions in the political world in these days.

We have also another type of politician who is frequently spoken of as "a good man." He is the man who "remembers his friends," those who have supported him in his campaign, by providing them with soft but well-paid jobs when he comes into power. Of such "good men" there are legions in the land.

We might also recall he who is known as "a good man" in the field of commerce. He is referred to more often as "a competent business man," "an able executive," or "a good financial manager." He buys and sells "to advantage." He is able to show a satisfactory net profit for his firm at the end of the year.

There is also the "good man" in the sales end of the business—he who can induce people to buy and pay for what they really do not need and cannot actually afford.

We have "a good man" in society, although he is generally spoken of as "a good fellow." He drinks, gambles, associates with everybody in his set without restraint. He spends his money freely and never protests against the excesses of others.

Yes, there are men in every stratum of society and in every department of human life who are regarded as "good men" irrespective of their morality or immorality, or whether they are religious or profane. The word "good" tells us little or nothing about the character of a man, for its meaning differs according to the standard of morals that is or is not maintained by the particular group that employs the term.

Even in the Bible the goodness of a man is not static. It changes with conditions and circumstances. The Scriptures describe "good men" who were good morally but not spiritually. (And there is a vast difference between these two standards, that of "morality," which is the human standard of righteousness, and "spirituality," which is the divine standard.)

Each of the several classes of men whose abilities or attainments, whether physical, intellectual, or spiritual, entitle them to be looked upon favorably by their fellows is often denominated in the Bible as "good." But over and above all other "good men" mentioned in God's Book of Truth is the man who is "good" according to Jehovah's own standard of goodness. And that is the kind of a good man of whom I wish to speak especially.

Cornelius, of whom we wrote some time ago, was "a good man" from every recognized human viewpoint. He was "a devout man, and one that feared God with all his house, which gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God alway" (Acts 10:2). And yet Cornelius lacked the one essential quality which God looks upon as really "good" in the highest sense of the word. For the goodness which God recognizes rests upon quite a different basis than that upon which men erect their foundations of morality and uprightness. This is a fact which even the Christian world has persistently failed to understand.

Paul speaks of this divinely approved goodness as "God's righteousness" and "the righteousness which is of faith." Man's righteousness is altogether of works—outward, visible works, capable of being observed and analyzed by his fellows. If a man is outwardly honest, he is said to be "a good man." If he is morally upright, so far as others can determine from their observation, he is "a good man." But faith in the gospel makes a man "a good man" inwardly first. It changes his heart and mind and purpose. And out of that inward change of disposition grows the visible fruitage of observable righteousness.

Such a man may sometimes fail to show his goodness to those around him noticeably, owing to the weakness of the flesh and the insistent demands of habit, yet within himself he is striving valiantly to attain to true goodness before God and man.

The righteousness recognized by God is inaugurated and made possible by divine power working in the heart of the one who believes the gospel. The truth of God is power—supernatural, miraculous power. Paul made no mistake when he asserted that the gospel "is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth . . . for therein is the righteousness of God revealed" (Rom. 1:16, 17).

We observe that he said that to the one who believes it, the gospel is the power of God unto salvation. Salvation involves deliverance from sin and finally from the result of sin, which is death. Belief in the gospel, then, cleanses the heart by "the washing of regeneration" (Titus 3:5). "Regeneration" means to begin life anew, to make a fresh start under the impulse of righteous thinking, thinking that has been made to conform to God's thoughts which are "higher" than our thoughts in that they are not tinctured by evil desires and false conceptions of what is good. The Lord makes all this very clear in Isaiah 55:6-11.

The morally good man has no standard of righteousness to follow but that which other men like himself have laid down for themselves. And that standard is as variable as changing times and human differences of opinion can make it. Men's ideas of right and wrong differ as widely as do their ideas about politics. And nothing could be more divergent than that!

The Christian has a higher, a diviner standard upon which to model his conduct, Jesus Christ and His example. In Him he has an unchangeable standard of perfect righteousness. But let us return to Barnabas, the "good man" whom we are especially considering.

"For he was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith: and much people were added unto the Lord" (Acts 11:24).

Barnabas was full of the Spirit of God and of faith. He was led by the Spirit; he walked by the Spirit; he lived by the Spirit of God. Because he allowed the Spirit of God to control his every thought and word and action he was said to be "a good man." Because he was full of the Holy Spirit, which is the power and purpose and mind of God, his entire life was governed by faith. Barnabas measured up fully to God's standard of "a good man" which, as we have seen, is His Son.

The purpose for which the various officers of the church are appointed is to help those who seek for the righteousness that comes by faith to reach that full spiritual development, "till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect (full grown) man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ" (Eph. 4:13).

Our failure to fully grasp God's valuation of "a good man" is due to our failure to take into account God's eternal purpose for man. Our viewpoint is too restricted. We do not see, or often attempt to look, beyond the present life. Many Christians have apparently lost all interest in the eternal verities of God. They are so concerned with the pleasures and accomplishments of the life that now is that they do not concern themselves with the life that is to come and with what God plans to achieve through their cooperation in the future. Only today is real to them.

Such Christians have a faith, if faith it may be called, that places no greater valuation on the future than did the old Persian philosopher, Omar Kayyam, when he said,

"Some for the glories of this world; and some Sigh for the Prophet's Paradise to come;
Ah, take the cash, and let the credit go,
Nor heed the rumble of a distant drum!"

If we could but grasp the stupendous truth God reveals, that this present life is but the preparatory school that fits the Christian for a greater, broader, and more fruitful life to come, could we but see beyond the curtain of the day in which we live and glimpse events now hidden in the mists of time as God sees them, we would understand far better the meaning of God's measure of "a good man"!

God measures men for eternity—we measure them for time! God plans our work for eons—we plan our work for years! God judges the value of a man by what He sees him accomplishing in distant ages, beyond the tomb—we judge his value by what we see him doing here and now!

"A good man" in God's evaluation is a man who does God's work in God's way and at God's time. Barnabas, "full of the Holy Spirit," was led into full submission to God's will. Consequently he did not attempt to reform the world. He did not try to educate the citizens of Rome by introducing improved worldly methods among them. He was content to do God's work, the only work God had given him to do, that of preaching the gospel of the kingdom in God's own way. And he was perfectly willing to leave the result, whatever it might be, with the Lord.

Barnabas was "full of faith." But it was not faith in men or laws or governments. It was not even faith in himself. He gave all that up when he gave his heart and life to

The Doctrine of Christ

By Harvey Krogh, Jr.

BEFORE we introduce this subject it might be well to answer some questions. You may have had that tired feeling that comes over one just a little while before church time, knowing that the sermon may not be any better than the one last Sunday night. The seats are hard, and it is too warm to sit still for so long. Then comes that question of "What is the use anyway?"

If you are really seeking an answer, the Bible is the best book of answers to the problems of life that has ever been written. If you will open that book and ask the Lord to help you, the first thing He will do (at least, He does for me), is to take away that tired feeling and in its place give you an earnest desire to become better acquainted with your heavenly Father.

You may remember that you accepted Christ and were baptized because you wanted to be saved. You knew that life was not all joy. You had felt the weakness of sin and knew that death would surely come. I doubt if a greater misery of soul can come to one than the loneliness of being apart from friends and God. It is not so bad if you have relatives and friends, but you will not always have them. After you accept Christ there is that great calm and peace of mind that God alone can give you.

But that is not all there is to salvation. The Bible tells us of work to do. Jesus speaks of knowing the Father and the Son. It is necessary to know something about one to really know him. More than that, you must fellowship with one to know him. Prayer is a very large part of this fellowship, but Bible study is also very important. We must know God's principles to know Him best.

There is something that will be very helpful in our getting better acquainted with our Father, and we can best tell of it by seeing why we go to church. In Hebrews 10: 24, 25 we are instructed as follows: "And let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works: not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching."

There is a great purpose in assembling together. In Genesis 2:18 we found that it was not good for man to be alone. This was because man was not a complete creature by himself. Paul testifies, "For none of us liveth to himself" (Rom. 14:7). When a man lives alone it is hard for him to be regular in his habits; it is harder for him to be stable by himself. (Try "batch" for awhile and you will know what I mean.) The larger the group that live together, the more regularity they observe in all things, the stronger they can be. Meals at a regular time; to work, to school, or to rest at a more certain time.

We need church services so we can keep regular in our worship. You know the natural tendency is to relax or forget God or let up on discipline when we are not with a group of those of like precious faith. We need to go to church to keep that discipline and regularity, that we may keep in close contact with God.

Why must we keep in such close contact? First, it is a testimony to others that we are Christian and that God does recognize men today. It gives others a constant opportunity to accept and worship. In all this we strive to obey the great commission of going into all the world and making disciples of all nations.

One other great reason why we should meet for study, for prayer, and for fellowship with God and with one another is this: We are called out of the world to be rulers with Christ in the next age. We are to be the servants of God. In 1 Corinthians 4:2 Paul speaks of faithfulness. Now what good would a servant be if he were not faithful? So, then, one of the necessary things now is to practice being faithful, for that is the whole reason why God is choosing us rather than the world to be His servants.

One of our greatest duties in this life is to prepare for the work God has for us in the life which is to come. What, therefore, should we do? What should we study? Paul helps us with this question by his words to Timothy: "Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee" (1 Tim. 4:16). What could you or I do more than labor so that we might be saved and also save those that hear us?

The doctrine, or teaching, mentioned seems to be important. Let us see what that doctrine is and what is its importance, as told in 2 John 9: "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son."

Will you study the doctrine of Christ with us? Look for the next article which will be wholly on this subject, but in the meantime do not forget to assemble with those who worship the Father in spirit and in truth. May God bless us all in our efforts to serve Him.

Christ Our Passover

IN GOD'S HOLY WORD we are plainly told that everyone is a sinner and that the wages of sin is death. So we find that everybody, judged by God's standard, is worthy of death and none deserves to live. But is there not a way by which man can be cleansed from his sins, a way that will not bring about God's judgment upon the sinner, a way of life? Yes, thank God, there is a way, and that is through the blood! Without the shedding of blood there is no remission, for it is the blood that makes atonement for the soul.

Blood of beasts cannot avail, for God will not accept that. He says, "Though ye offer me burnt offerings and your meat offerings, I will not accept them: neither will I regard the peace offerings of your fat beasts" (Amos 5: 22). Then we will have to look for a better offering, an offering acceptable to God. This we can find only in Jesus Christ. All sacrifices prior to the death of Christ were figures for the time then present. These could not cleanse the sinner and make him perfect. But Christ, not by the blood of goats and calves, but by His own blood, has obtained eternal redemption for the sinner.

In order for the sacrifice of Christ to be acceptable unto God, and save man from the awful judgments of his sins, it must accomplish all the types of the sacrifices of which it is the fulfillment. Otherwise God will not accept such an offering for sin, and judgment will certainly fall upon the sinner.

When God wanted to pass through the land of Egypt to execute His judgment on the people, He gave the blood as a token which, when He should see, He would pass over and not suffer the destroyer to come into such a house. This blood was a token. It was something representing another thing or event. It pointed to the sacrificial death of Christ. When John saw Jesus coming to him, he said, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."

A lamb fitly symbolizes the unresisting innocency and harmlessness of the Lord Jesus. Isaiah, speaking of His death, said, "He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he openeth not his mouth." Christ, when brought before Herod, was questioned with many words, but He answered nothing. In the judgment hall, Pilate asked Jesus, "Whence art thou?" But Jesus gave him no answer. When He was reviled, He reviled not again; when He suffered, He threatened not. We have seen that Christ fulfilled the type of the lamb, both in His life and in His death.

Now in order that the Passover lamb should be an acceptable offering to God, it had to agree with His condi-

The International Sunday School Lessons for the present quarter are concerned with the period of the Exodus, and the accompanying article, taken from The Bible Advocate, will be found to be of value to teacher and student alike in preparation for these lessons. The author, J. A. Kort, points out that as salvation in Moses' day came only to those who followed God's instruction, so today there is only one Way for us.

tions. It had to be without blemish and without spot. To test this it was kept four days. The lamb thus tested must be slain, and the whole assembly of the congregation of Israel must kill it at evening. The blood must be applied. The blood thus applied of itself, without anything in addition, constituted a perfect protection from judgment.

All these points were types of the great sacrifice, and we find them all fulfilled in Christ, and in Christ alone. He was without blemish. His life under hostile scrutiny was the very testing which proved His holiness. In Luke 11 we find Christ denouncing woes upon the lawyers. When the scribes and Pharisees heard it they "began to urge him vehemently, and to provoke him to speak of many things: laying wait for him, and seeking to catch something out of his mouth, that they might accuse him."

Christ, in addressing the Jews in John 8:46, asks, "Which of you convinceth me of sin?" Pilate, judging Him, said, "I find in him no fault at all." Isaiah, in speaking of Christ, prophetically foretells, "And he made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death; because he had done no violence, neither was any deceit in his mouth." Peter, writing in his first Epistle, testifies that Christ did no sin, neither was guile found in His mouth. These references and many others prove to us that Christ was without blemish and without spot.

The Lamb, thus tested and found without blemish, had to be slain. The death of Christ is the antitype of this sacrifice.

Had the Jews only killed the lamb and not applied the blood to their doorposts, they would have surely received God's judgment, just as any Egyptian in the land. Although the sacrifice was there, yet, if they did not take of the blood and strike it on the two sideposts and on the lintels of their houses, they would suffer death. Christ, the eternal Sacrifice, has been offered up. But if we do not apply His blood to the doors of our hearts, we shall suffer death.

"He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him" (John 3:36). "He that believeth on him is not condemned: but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God" (John 3:18).

Christ, in the great discourse on the bread of life, said, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me hath everlasting life." The only way of applying the blood of Christ to our hearts is by accepting Him as our Savior, our offering for sin, and believing in His atoning blood.

There is no other way.

Works cannot save us. This is distinguished by Cain's bloodless offering of the fruit of his own works, and proclaims in the very infancy of the race the primal truth that "without shedding of blood is no remission."

Can the law save us? The law is helpless in this respect. "For as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse: for it is written, Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them" (Gal. 3:10). But, "Whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all" (James 2:10). By the works of the law shall no flesh be justified, for by the law is the knowledge of sin.

Thus we can only be justified by the blood of Christ. Neither law, nor works, nor any other thing can save us, if we do not accept His finished work.

As the blood of the Passover lamb, applied of itself, without anything in addition, constituted a perfect protection from judgment, so also the blood of Jesus Christ, of itself, applied to our hearts forms a full salvation from the consequences of sin. For "the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin," by the which we are all sanctified. "For by one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified" (Heb. 10:14).

Only in one manner could the Israelites be saved from the judgment of God. And only through Christ can we obtain salvation. For He is the way, the truth, and the life, and no man can come unto God but by Him.

Let us imagine ourselves visiting at some houses on Passover night, when God is to pass through the land of Egypt to execute judgment. Here we come to a house where the lamb has been slain and the blood applied to the doorposts. Although the family inside knows that this night God will pass through the land of Egypt to smite all the firstborn, yet they have no fear. They are joyously feasting on the lamb and trusting in the saving power of the blood, knowing that their salvation is nigh. So likewise we, believing in Jesus Christ, should rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory.

In the next house, upon entering we notice the deep silence that reigns. Fear dwells in the hearts of all. They are upset by doubt as to the efficacy of the blood, although they have properly carried out all the instructions of Moses. Yet they do not possess joy and happiness as their neighbors. Their firstborn is trembling with fear and anxiety. This reminds us of some who, although having taken the Lord Jesus Christ as their own personal Savior, yet do not lead a happy life. They are sometimes upset with doubts and fears.

Upon gazing at the next door, we are struck with astonishment. The blood is not there! We can find traces of a lamb that has been slain, but where is the blood? Have they not heard? Have they not known that this night is the Lord's Passover, and that if He does not see the blood He will smite their firstborn? Why have they not applied it?

With Whom to Commune

By Zennie Self

IN REPLY to the wish of Sister Mandes Reed in THE RESTITUTION HERALD of March 16, I wish to say:

Take not the Communion with a church that believes in the natural immortality of the soul, neither hold continual religious fellowship therewith, lest by so doing you sanction a falsehood.

Do not hold closed Communion in your own church, because Jesus did not close the Communion against Judas Iscariot, even though he was the betrayer. So also, it is better for one who is in error, by his action in taking Communion with you, to show sympathy for the truth, than for you, who know the truth, to show sympathy for a falsehood by taking the Communion with those who do not believe even the fundamentals of the one faith, which fundamentals are (1) belief in the total mortality of man; (2) belief in the total death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus Christ; (3) belief in God and the principles of the kingdom of God (1 Cor. 15:1-8, 12-23; Acts 8:12; Heb. 11:6; Psalm 6:5; Eccl. 9:5, 6).

What fellowship hath light with darkness, a lie with the truth? So also, how can two walk together in religious fellowship when one believes a lie and the other the truth?

"Can two walk together except they be agreed?" (Amos. 3:3). See also 2 Corinthians 6:14-16.

If there is no church of one's own faith to which to go, it is better to stay at home and study than to go to a church where the Devil's lie is taught for doctrine; and it is better not to take the Communion than to take it at a church where the natural immortality of the soul (which is the Devil's lie) is taught for doctrine. But if one is so situated the time will come, no doubt, sooner or later, when such can attend a church of his own faith.

In my opinion, it is all right to have a set and regular time to take Communion, but that it is not absolutely necessary to do so, but to take it whenever conveniently possible. It is easy to tell with whom to commune, for the worldly churches are all agreed upon one principal doctrine, and that is the natural immortality of the soul. With such do not hold Communion. The members of the true church of God are all agreed upon one principal doctrine, and that is the total mortality and the total death, burial, and resurrection of man. With such, it is just to hold Communion and religious fellowship.

Sit-Down Strikes

"THEIR strength is to sit still" (Isa. 30:7). How strangely does this statement of the Prophet Isaiah, echoing down from the dim ages of the past, become amplified into a description of conditions prevailing in our own day!

Surely we have come upon strange times when the energetic American begins to resort to sitting down to attain his ends! The idea of sitting down on the job is the very antithesis of that virile American spirit which rolls up its sleeves, sees the job through, and looks around for the next. It was not born on this free soil.

There can be no question in the minds of impartial observers, whether sympathizers with the labor movement or otherwise, as to the legality of one or more individuals taking forcible possession of another's property. Might, or numbers, does not make right; and there can be no doubt as to the final results of resorting to force on the part of either employer or employed. "They that take the sword shall perish with the sword" is the Savior's unequivocal warning. The sword is the symbol of force. To force another's will is like bending a steel spring. As soon as the force weakens, or a stronger counterforce is applied, the steel will rebound with vindictive energy. So long as force is resorted to, the outcome can only be disastrous to the participants, and injurious to those innocently involved.

AN ECONOMIC CRISIS

Millions are suffering directly or indirectly because of the present . . . impasse. During two weeks of sit-down strike the loss of wages alone to 90,000 automotive workers in Detroit was estimated at $7,000,000. The entire business of the nation at home and abroad is adversely affected. A recent market report from New York says: "The merits of the dispute between the workers and the employers, as well as the terms of the settlement, if and when arrived at, are legitimate subjects for debate; but there can be no disputing the retarding effect of continuous industrial warfare. It is very plain that the market is sensitive to labor news. Today, for instance, prices turned up or down according as the reports from Detroit were favorable or otherwise for a settlement of the Chrysler strike."

A scientific poll conducted by the American Institute of Public Opinion reveals the fact that the public condemns the sit-down strike by a 67 to 33 verdict. In a news dispatch from Washington under date of March 28 we read: "President William Green of the American Federation of Labor tonight condemned the sit-down strike as illegal, warned sharply that it will bring permanent injury to trade unionism, and called on workers to disavow it as an economic weapon." So serious has the situation become that President Roosevelt has summoned a conference of Congressional leaders to the White House to devise means of putting a stop to the sit-down orgy.

It is hardly necessary to remind our readers of the strictly nonpartisan stand taken on all such matters by the Signs of the Times, and that the only reason such subjects are discussed in our columns is that we may better interpret their meaning by focusing upon them the prophetic telescope of the Word of God. Whether the radical or the more sober element in labor ranks will prevail, and what the immediate outcome of the present imbroglio will be, none can foresee; but on the authority of the Bible this magazine unhesitatingly predicts an intensifying struggle between capital and labor that no human instrumentality can avert. Nor are we alone in this conviction. In an editorial in Current Opinion, entitled, "The Battle of the Titans," we read: "The greatest of all wars between organized labor and capital has begun. It is described as 'a fight to the finish'; but there is no such thing as a fight to the finish between these two contestants; and, if there were, the world would swing back a thousand years. . . . Organized labor in the United States was never as powerful as it is today; and organized capital never as gigantic. After this pending battle is fought out, each will continue to grow in power, for the finish of one means the finish of the other, and each side knows that."

In James 5:1-7 the very conditions now obtaining in the industrial world are accurately portrayed; and in the concluding verse the solution to the whole problem is given: "Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord." Nothing short of the coming of the Prince of Peace can bring industrial, political, and international peace to this distressed world. At that time membership in the strongest labor union will avail nothing: "Associate yourselves, O ye people, and ye shall be broken in pieces" (Isa. 8:9). Neither will the fortunes of the wealthy purchase them security; for "in that day a man shall cast his idols of silver, and his idols of gold, which they made each one for himself to worship, to the moles and to the bats; to go into the clefts of the rocks, and into the tops of the ragged rocks, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his majesty, when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth" (Isa. 2:20, 21).

Thus in this increasing unrest of the industrial world we see yet another sign of the second coming of Christ; and just as in the face of the most ominous preparations for war the nations are talking peace and safety and protesting their peaceful intentions, so amid the increasing perplexities and uncertainties of the economic world men are talking glibly about social and economic security. But they are struggling in vain to place business operations on a more secure basis because the material with which they must build is the selfish hearts of men. Only righteousness in the individual can assure a righteous settlement in collective bargaining; and love must take the place of hatred if an agreement equitable to all is ever to be arrived at.

But after all, humanity cannot produce a Utopia in this present world. As Christians, let us seek a better hope. "Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness" (2 Peter 3:13). "The work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance for ever" (Isa. 32:17). Let us not neglect the present and only opportunity of preparing for citizenship in that better land, so soon to be established at the second coming of our Lord.—Arthur Mountain in Signs of the Times.

"At Eventide It Shall Be Light"

By Lottie E. Young

LET us take a long look back to the days of Joseph and his brethren in Egypt when, the record says, "Israel dwelt in the land of Egypt, in the country of Goshen; and they had possessions therein, and grew, and multiplied exceedingly." Doubtless before the death of Joseph all of his brothers had likewise died, and their descendants may have congratulated themselves on being in a goodly land with a secure habitation. This was not God's plan, however, and as the years rolled by "another king arose who knew not Joseph," and then a time of severe persecution came, lasting many years, during which the Israelites were slaves to the Egyptians. In due time God raised up a deliverer for them in the person of Moses, and we all know the story of the terrible plagues sent upon Egypt which cleared the way for the escape of the Israelites across the Red Sea.

Who would have thought that that horde of slaves would develop into the mighty force of fighting men who, under Joshua, crossed the Jordan River, took the walled city of Jericho and numerous other points, conquering when they heeded God's commands, but failing when they attempted warfare in their own strength. In the old age of Joshua he evidently feared the people were going after the gods of the heathen nations round about, as among his last recorded words to the twelve tribes were, "Now therefore fear the Lord, and serve him in sincerity and truth: and put away the gods which your fathers served on the other side of the flood, and in Egypt; and serve ye the Lord." His triumphant shout, "But as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord," has come ringing down the ages.

The "last enemy" conquered Joshua, as it has millions of his successors, and then came the stormy time of the judges when, in spite of the promise of the Israelites to serve the Lord, they worshiped all manner of idols, and were punished by being made captives of the nations round about. One can imagine the condition of things, as the last verse in this book reads, "In those days there was no king in Israel: every man did that which was right in his own eyes."

Sometime, however, while the judges ruled Israel, there was famine in the land, during which a certain man of Bethlehem took his wife, Naomi, and two sons to the land of Moab, perhaps thinking there was more food to be found in that heathen land. Here the sweet story of Ruth, the Moabitess, comes into history, as she became the wife of one of the sons. Things may have been prosperous at first, but during the next ten years sore trials came to the little family. First the husband died, then both of the sons, leaving Naomi alone in a strange land with two daughters-in-law who did not know the God of Israel. A widow in heathen lands has a hard struggle to get along, and probably Naomi soon longed for the old home and the friends of bygone years, and so decided to make the long trip afoot, bidding her daughters-in-law farewell. One returned to her parents and her gods. But the immortal response of Ruth has been voiced by hundreds in the years between then and now, and she journeyed with Naomi on to Bethlehem.

What a fine character Naomi must have been to influence Ruth so favorably that she was willing to say, "Thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God." And how good it was of the Father to permit this joy and love to come into the life of the lonely older woman!

The journey ended, the friends exclaimed when they saw their one-time neighbor, "Is this Naomi?" (which name means pleasant). She replied, "Call me not Naomi, call me Mara (bitter): for the Almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me," thus reproaching the Lord for the sorrows which had befallen her. As we read on in the account, the beautiful love story of Ruth and Boaz is developed, resulting in marriage and in due time the birth of a son who became the grandfather of David, the pride of all Jewish hearts. Then was Naomi comforted, and doubtless she ended her days in peace with this new treasure close to her heart.

Ten years had passed from the time of the start for Moab until the time of the return to Bethlehem. It is a long time to which to look forward, but only a short period when a backward look is taken. Has any ten years in your life seemed full of happiness, and then came trials and difficulties about which you murmured? Perhaps God's plan for your life may be the same as that which He had in mind for Naomi. Remember the words, "At eventide it shall be light," and look forward to the time of peace and joy for which we are all longing.

The poet Longfellow sings, "Into each life some rain must fall; some days must be dark and dreary." These words were true in the days of Jacob when he grieved long years for the loss of his dearly beloved son, Joseph. But how bountifully God blessed him in the end of his days. Moses went through years of trial and trouble, but was permitted to see the goodly land which was to be the inheritance of his people, and his "swan song" tells of the comfort of the "Everlasting Arms." Paul's early life may have been a happy one, but what suffering he endured when the preaching of Christ Jesus was the sole object of his life, and how glorious his last recorded words as he spoke of the crown of righteousness which he was sure of obtaining in the great day of his Master's triumph. Jesus, on the last night of His life, after years of hardship could truly say, "Foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." Even with the vision of the agony of the cross before Him, He could speak of peace and joy in the future.

Do you get "blue" at times, seeing nothing but the wickedness and misery in the world, as well as your own loneliness and privations, even as Naomi did? Just look ahead to the great recompensing time and believe God has you in His care and keeping. And if you are an over-comer, the crown of eternal life shall be yours when the King comes to make up His jewels.

"Are we weak and heavy laden,

Cumbered with a load of care?

Is not Jesus still our refuge?

Take it to the Lord in prayer."

World and Individual Peace

THE following excellent editorial, taken from The Gideon, answers scripturally the question as to how peace may be obtained by the individual in this present life—that it "is conditioned on our acceptance of the grace and mercy of the Prince of Peace" as offered in the gospel. But with regard to the manner in which the world may obtain peace we believe the editor of The Gideon is both right and wrong. He is right as to the method, but wrong as to the time.

The peace of the world will be brought about, it is true, by the nations accepting the grace offered through the Son of God and by submitting willingly to His rulership. But the prophets indicate that such acceptance of divine favor and such submission to Christ's universal authority will not be realized until He comes again and establishes His kingdom upon the earth and the words of Isaiah are fulfilled: "And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths" (Isa. 2:2-4). Then, and then only, will the law go forth from Zion and the Word of the Lord from Jerusalem so effectually and powerfully as to induce the political leaders of the nations to voluntarily seek admission into the kingdom of God.

Aside from this single objection, having to do with the time when world peace shall be attained, we feel that the following editorial is worthy of thoughtful study.

"The word which is upon the lips and in the hearts of more people the world over than any other is 'peace': not merely a cessation of hostilities, but a universal, lasting peace. Peace is the universal desire of the whole race, and the ordinary salutation of many Jews even today, when meeting a friend, is Shalom Alothem, or 'May you have peace.' This was their ancient salutation.

"Many statesmen and writers have proposed various plans for promoting world-wide peace, such as leagues of nations, treaties, pacts, and agreements of one sort or another, but so far none of the various methods proposed for obtaining this much-desired end has been successful, and none of the proponents of these devices seems to be aware of the true source of peace or the only way by which it may be obtained.

"I remember hearing a friend, a former pastor, say at the signing of the Kellogg Pact to outlaw war, that this was the greatest step for promoting peace taken by the world in a hundred years, and the date of the signing of this pact would be remembered forever. And yet, how many of us can remember the date or even the year of its signing. The World War was fought as a 'war to end wars,' and we were told we would never have another, and yet the air is full of wars and rumors of war, and we seem to be as far away from the desired goal as ever.

"When all these nostrums have failed, 'is there no balm in Gilead? is there no physician there?' Is there no morning star of hope of 'peace on earth, good will toward men'? Yes, we have a hope both sure and steadfast, and the old Book we all love so well tells us the source of a lasting peace.

"In Psalm 29:11 we read, 'The Lord will bless His people with peace.' Again, in Psalm 85:8, 'I will hear what God the Lord will speak; for he will speak peace unto the people.' And again, in Psalm 119:165, 'Great peace have they that love thy law.'

"The Prophet Isaiah catches the vision in 26:3, 'Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee'; and again in 48:18, 'Oh that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments! then had thy peace been as a river, and thy righteousness as the waves of the sea.' And in contrast, in the same chapter and 22nd verse, 'There is no peace, saith Jehovah, to the wicked.'

"Our Savior in John 16:33, says, 'These things I have spoken unto you that in me ye may have peace.' In Romans 5:1 we read, 'Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ.' The great Apostle Paul, in the salutation of each of his Epistles, couples grace, mercy, and peace, thus indicating that peace is contingent on the mercy of God, extended through His grace; and Paul's colleague, Peter, likewise starts each of his letters.

"In each of these passages, and many more, the Scriptures make very plain that lasting peace to the individual is conditioned on our acceptance of the grace and mercy of the Prince of Peace, our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. In this, and this alone, is there hope for peace here or bliss in the hereafter. Our Lord says, 'Peace I leave with you: my peace I give unto you,' and this heritage is given only to those who have been begotten again, and have accepted His saving grace.

"What is true of the individual is equally true of the nations, as nations are only an aggregation of individuals. The great national need for enduring peace is not heavy armaments, great armies, or superior navies, but for the citizens of the nations to have a baptism of the Holy Spirit and a revival of 'old time religion.'

"All great revivals of religion have been the result of prayer, and it seems to be the duty of the church at the present time to be much in prayer for a nationwide and worldwide revival. It is a time that demands great heart-searching on the part of each 'ambassador for Christ' and a prayer by each of us, 'Lord, send a revival and let it begin in me.'"

CHRIST OUR PASSOVER

We are much concerned about their safety, and enter in to remind the father of such an important duty. He laughs and scorns as we entreat him. "I am an Israelite," says he, "and have had a lamb slain. For what do I need the blood? God will not punish me; He will only judge those heathen Egyptians." We earnestly plead with him, but all in vain. He will not listen. If he persists in his obstinacy, death will surely smite his firstborn.

In which of these states are you? Have you accepted the sacrifice of Jesus Christ, and trusted in His atoning blood for the cleansing of your heart? Are you rejoicing in Christ with joy unspeakable? If you are in that blessed state, then you have much for which to thank God and give Him glory.

Perhaps you have accepted Christ, but do not possess that entire confidence and are sometimes upset by fears and doubts, thus having an unhappy life. Why not have the full conviction, that through the work of Christ alone, received by faith, you are in possession of a salvation in which you will be eternally kept?

Or, should your state be that of the Israelite who, after having had the lamb slain, did not consider it necessary to apply the blood to the door, thinking that he, being an Israelite, would not receive God's judgment, it is a very serious one indeed. You are in extreme danger and God's judgments are sure to fall. Just as in the days of old, God says, "When I see the blood I will pass over you." If you think that because you came from Christian origin, you are saved, you make a grave mistake. It is either within the blood or without the blood—which? This is a question of life or death! If you want life, there is an only way, and that is through the blood of Christ. If you will believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, you shall have everlasting life, and will not come into condemnation, but shall pass from death unto life.

WHAT IS A GOOD MAN?

Jesus Christ. The faith of Barnabas was in GOD!

Like Paul, his friend and companion on many a hazardous journey, Barnabas realized that the only hope of salvation for mankind was in the cross of Christ and that which the cross of Christ typified. And this was contrary to the wisdom of the world. "For the preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us which are saved it is the power of God" (1 Cor. 1:18).

What, then, is "a good man" according to God's unchangeable standard of righteousness?

This was a question which the disciples asked Jesus and to which they received a strange but impressive answer. After He had called the attention of the multitude who followed Him to the fact that they sought to be with Him that they might enjoy the physical blessings which He miraculously provided rather than to hear the spiritual truths He had to impart, the future apostles said:

"What shall we do, that we may work the works of God?" That is, What shall we do that we may be counted as good men in God's sight? Here is the Lord's answer: "This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent" (John 6:26-29).

First of all, then, "a good man" according to the standard of goodness recognized by our Lord, is one who believes on the Lord Jesus Christ and all that is included in such a belief. This is the only kind of goodness that God recognizes.

But of course out of such a faith grow the works of obedience and of service which are acceptable to the Father. And the first of these works is baptism, by which the believer's faith is symbolically expressed and definitely sealed.

Then follows, as naturally as the light follows the rising of the sun, the new life which is inspired by the gospel. To such beginners in Christian experience, Paul addresses the following very practical admonition:

"If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God." Then the Apostle reminds the seeker after God's righteousness of the certainty and greatness of the reward he shall receive in these words: "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory" (Col. 3:1-4).

A Message of Courage

Elder C. E. Randall, president of the Church of God Ministerial Association, has sent the following message of courage regarding the editorial, "That Training Class," on this page of June 22:

"Such courage and inspiration is a valuable asset to the Church of God and is sorely needed today. Only a forward-looking vision put into action can stay the forces of disintegration at work within the borders of our work. More power to you."

Brother Randall is on an evangelistic mission to the Northwest. Let us hold up this mission to the Lord in prayer, not forgetting to hold up the hands of the ones in charge. "Be strong and of a good courage; . . . for the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest" (Josh. 1:9).

"Be of Good Courage"

"Who art thou, that thou shouldest be afraid of a man that shall die, and of the son of man which shall be made as grass; and forgettest the Lord thy Maker, that hath stretched forth the heavens, and laid the foundation of the world?" (Isa. 51:12, 13).

One of the faults in man that has persisted all through history is to be afraid of other men, all the while forgetting God. In spite of the numerous times that God has shown His keeping power this weakness has prevailed. Humanity is gripped in a fear-complex!

"Be ye of good courage!" cried Moses to the twelve spies he was sending to look over the Promised Land (Num. 13:20). The people of Israel had just come from Egypt. They had seen the mighty hand of God: the Red Sea had opened before them by the power of God, He had sent bread from heaven, water in the desert, and flesh to eat. They had witnessed the mighty power of Jehovah from Sinai. Now they were approaching the Land of Desire, with everything in their favor. Moses charged the chosen twelve: "Be ye of good courage." But ten of those chosen men turned out to be afraid, and as a result that whole generation wandered homeless in the wilderness until another and courageous generation grew up.

To this new generation Moses said: "Be strong and of a good courage, fear not, nor be afraid of them: for the Lord thy God, he it is that doth go with thee; he will not fail thee, nor forsake thee" (Deut. 31:6). Then Moses turned the people over to a new leader, Joshua, one of the two faithful spies, with the injunction: "Be strong and of a good courage" (Deut. 31:7). But it wasn't enough that that stout-hearted leader should be told so again and again by Moses, for the Lord Himself spoke to Joshua: "I will be with thee; I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee. Be strong and of a good courage" (Josh. 1:5, 6). Then He repeated it: "Only be thou strong and very courageous" (v. 7). And again: "Be strong and of a good courage; be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed: for the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest" (v. 9). Even the people cried out to Joshua: "Only be strong and of a good courage" (v. 18). And he answered back in the midst of the battle: "Be strong and of good courage: for thus shall the Lord do" (Josh. 10:25).

How can faith and fear go together? The Christian, of all the people of the earth, alone has the right to courage. For faith drives out cowardice and establishes courage. If your confidence in safety is in locks and keys, police, armies, and navies, you are trusting only the power of human blood, and blood is, oh, so corruptible. "Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish. Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord his God" (Psalm 146:3-5). The peoples of the earth have tried to lull their fears to sleep with vast armaments, with laws against murder, with police, with new tires, with every conceivable device they can think of for safety. But the only solid foundation for true safety is to put your trust in God. He has put these other things here for us to use, with common sense, against dangers; but all the while we must know that the flesh is weak, the Lord alone is a Rock. Men must die; God lives on perpetually. You may tap this great reservoir: "Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might" (Eph. 6:10); "Wait on the Lord: be of good courage, and he shall strengthen thine heart: wait, I say, on the Lord" (Psalm 27:14).

Right Now Is a Bible Time

When you say, "Back in Bible times," people think of the times from Adam to John the Apostle. They think of Isaiah, Ezekiel, Paul, and Peter. But in a broader sense, every time is a Bible time. God has a message to every generation. His hand controls the destiny of the world. His pre-written advice and His pre-written history are in the Bible so that each generation may look itself up to find out what God says about it. The Creator of life has charted the winding River of Life all down its course through the ages. If you would travel on that river in safety consult the Chart and follow its advice. Right now is a Bible time.

WHEN GOD'S PEOPLE WERE HUNGRY

THE Hebrews had scarcely left Egypt behind when Pharaoh was sorry and angry because he had let them go," said Mother to Betty and Bobby as they studied together one evening on the cool porch of their home. "So he took his horsemen and his army and hurried after them to force them to come back. They came in sight of the poor, frightened slaves just as they were camping by the sea."

"I suppose they thought at once that God had forgotten about them," said Bobby, "and that He would let the Egyptians get them again."

"Yes, that is just how foolish and fearful they were," Mother replied. "But Moses spoke such wonderful words to them that we often use them when we get into trouble today. Read together, children, verses 13 and 14 of Exodus 14."

"And Moses said unto the people, Fear ye not, stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord, which he will shew you to day: for the Egyptians whom ye have seen to day, ye shall see them again no more for ever. The Lord shall fight for you, and ye shall hold your peace," read Betty and Bobby.

"I remember, Mother," said Betty. "Moses stretched out his rod, and God caused the waters to pile up until there was a dry path through the sea. Then the Hebrews marched through safely. But when the Egyptians started to do the same thing the waters returned, and the Egyptians were drowned."

"You will see in verse 31 what effect this all had upon God's people," said Mother. "They believed God and His servant Moses, it says. But I wonder how long that lasted. I am afraid they were a great deal like us, for their faith wasn't firm enough to stand very hard trials. They should have known that when God said He would take care of them He would do just that."

"In a short time, Mother," Bobby said, reading ahead of the other two," they were hungry and wondering how they were going to find food in the wilderness, wishing they had stayed in Egypt where there was plenty to eat."

"Betty, read verses 13 and 14 of Exodus 16," said Mother, "and you will see how God fed them."

"And it came to pass, that at even the quails came up, and covered the camp: and in the morning the dew lay round about the host. And when the dew that lay was gone up, behold, upon the face of the wilderness there lay a small round thing, as small as the hoar frost on the ground," Betty read.

"That was their bread, which they called manna, and the quails were their meat. How good God was to them in the very midst of their complaining, and how good He is to us in the very midst of our complaining," said Mother softly.

"Why did God give them such careful directions about not gathering too much at one certain time?" asked Bobby. "Why do you think, Son?"

"Maybe God wanted to see if they really believed Him and would obey Him," said the boy, after thinking a moment or two.

"That is just it, I think," said his mother. "God wanted them to learn to trust Him perfectly and not worry about tomorrow. God provided for them over their Sabbath when they were not to work. For on Friday they were told to gather enough for two days and it kept perfectly. But if they did that during the week it spoiled."

"They did the same way when they were thirsty," said Betty. "They began to wish they had staid in Egypt where there was plenty of water. I should think God would have lost His patience with them, Mother."

"Yes, and I wonder He doesn't lose patience with us. Everything we have comes from God—our food, our water, our homes, everything. Can you tell us how, Bobby?"

"Well, God created everything. He made the springs of water in the beginning. He ordered the seasons and created the first vegetables and fruits," said Bobby. "He made the trees of the forest and the gold and silver and coal mines."

"He expects us to make the very best use of everything He has given us, take good care of all we have to use and enjoy, and never to think that we have it all because of our own effort, but to thank Him daily for all. Now, Betty, say the little verse you learned at school when you were making your nature study scrapbook."

"Back of the loaf is the snowy flour,
And back of the flour, the mill;
And back of the mill is the wheat, and the shower,
And the sun, and the Father's will."

RESTITUTION CHURCH HOME-COMING Eldorado, Illinois, July 23, 24, 25

"O come, let us worship and bow down: let us kneel before the Lord our maker" (Psalm 95:6).

That we may again assemble in one common body for fervent worship and earnest Bible research, the resident members of the Restitution Church of Eldorado have set aside July 23, 24, 25 for home-coming week-end for all its near by and distant members—and their friends.

Nor is this invitation limited to members of the Eldorado church, but it is extended, fervently, to all who are interested in such united worship, and in Bible research for the valued truths of God.

Bro. F. L. Austin of Chicago is planning to be present to assist all he can, and we are hopeful that one or two other speakers will be present to help.

Services are announced for Friday evening; Saturday afternoon and evening; Sunday morning, afternoon, and evening. Basket luncheon will be enjoyed on the spacious, shady lawn of the church Sunday noon.

It is for His name and His honor that this service has been arranged.

Watch next week's Herald for fuller program.

"Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another: and the Lord hearkened, and heard . . ." (Mal. 3:16).

BROTHER S. J. LINDSAY REQUESTS—

Bro. S. J. Lindsay, who is to be teacher of the general class at the Illinois Bible School, Aug. 3-15, asks that any who contemplate attending his class who have subjects they would like to have presented, to please send their suggestions in to him at Oregon, Ill., as early as possible. "Should there be more sent in than we have time for, the most important will be selected," Bro. Lindsay says.

"THE DOCTRINE OF CHRIST"

We take pleasure in introducing a series of brief but pithy articles by one of our popular younger writers and preachers, Bro. Harvey Krogh, Jr., which begins in this issue and will continue for some weeks to come. After reviewing the opening numbers which have reached us, and recalling the very acceptable service Bro. Krogh has rendered our readers in the past, we feel sure that what is to come to us in this series of thoughtful studies will be exceedingly worth while.

DEDICATION OF THE NEW LOS ANGELES CHURCH

It was indeed the most joyous occasion ever experienced by Church of God members in this section. The new building was a surprise to many, being completely finished and furnished. Sr. Leta Macleod and others came early with beautiful flowers for decoration. Bro. E. E. Rogers, our Sunday school superintendent, reported an enrollment of 92, and by eleven o'clock the building was filled.

Bro. N. J. Macleod, the conference president, opened the morning service promptly, calling on Sr. Railsback for a few words of welcome. She was followed by Bro. G. P. Lichty, who gave the dedicatory sermon, which was emphatically an exhortation. He said that while we were dedicating the new structure to the service of God for the promotion of the gospel, we should all rededicate our lives to the service of God, knowing that we are His building, His house, His temple. This impressive sermon was followed by the memorial service, in which we celebrated the great sacrifice made by our Lord. This was conducted by Sr. Railsback. The Pomona church conducted the musical part of the program and rendered several quartets and solos. Sr. Charlotte Rahn sang "Let the Lower Lights Be Burning" while the church lights were turned on, and the congregation joined in repeating the chorus.

Immediately following the morning service, a picture of the new building was taken with as many of the audience as could remain. Following this a bounteous repast was served in the Sunday school rooms.

The afternoon service consisted of a sermon by Bro. Macleod, a reading by Miss Imogene Rogers, and a solo by Master Duncan Macleod, whose vocal attainments are indeed marvelous.

Baccalaureate services in Pomona and Chino interfered with the attendance at our evening services, and we overheard many regrets being expressed to Bro. E. E. Rogers, who gave the discourse of the evening, which followed the Berean service at 6:30.

Those present from a distance were Sr. Thelma Moore and sons Dean and Jerry of Red Bluff; Sr. Bernice Roberson and son Allen Rae of Fresno; Sr. Lucy B. Groat of Hanford; Wayne and Georgia Thompson of Tularc; Bro. Will Reid, Srs. Jessie M. B. Kauffman, and Bessie Hoag of Riverside; Sr. Mary Howard of Temple City; Bro. and Sr. C. E. Hatch of Santa Ana; Sr. Hammond and daughter Ruth of Anaheim; Bro. and Sr. John Reid and the Gillespies of Pasadena; Bro. H. R. Hobart and the Knott family of Glendale; Srs. Kellogg and Morgan of Hollywood; a sister from Santa Barbara whose name we failed to get. Pomona, Long Beach, and Lynwood were well represented. And last but not least by any means, we wish to mention the presence of one who has been a decided inspiration to us in promoting this work, Sr. Mary Calkins of Lynwood, who is nearing the ninety-first anniversary of her birth. She was able to attend morning and afternoon services.

We received regrets from Bro. J. A. Squires, one of our elders, two days before the service. He has been very near death's door but is now slowly recovering. An air mail letter from Bro. J. Eagleston, who is on a missionary tour in the North, was received in time for the service, as well as another of congratulation and blessing from our dear Sr. Maria Truesdell of Fresno. Other pressing duties prevent us from answering the many encouraging messages, and we take this opportunity of thanking you one and all.

The financial support of this work has far exceeded our expectations. Like Abraham we started out not knowing whither we were going, but we walked by faith, and God has abundantly blessed the work. We now have an opportunity of promoting the gospel in a new locality, and we know that we must vigorously push forward. Our membership being so widely scattered is more of a handicap than some realize, but with God's help we will succeed.

Besides the Sunday morning services we hold Berean class on Wednesday evening and Doreas society meetings every two weeks on Thursday in the Sunday school rooms at the church.

Mrs. E. C. Railsback, Pastor.

REPRESENTATION AT THE GENERAL CONFERENCE

To State Conference Officials

Do not fail to appoint delegates to the General Conference which is to convene August 3-15, 1937! Your state should be represented officially that its influence may be felt and its desires made known to the Conference.

To Local Church Officials

Whether your church is affiliated with a state conference or not do not fail to select delegates to represent your local body at the General Conference. Remember to read carefully the instructions given below and provide your delegates with as complete a list of your membership as possible.

Representation

The following provision is made for delegate and individual representation at the General Conference under Section VIII of the "Declaration of Understanding" as revised by the General Conference in 1934:

"The General Conference shall be composed of individual members and delegates as follows: Each state shall be represented by delegate or delegates. Where states are organized into state conferences they shall be entitled to vote by delegates appointed by the state conference or its executive board 50 per cent of its membership. Each organized church in the state shall be entitled to appoint delegates with power to vote 50 per cent of its membership. Any church or any number of members not associated with a state conference shall be allowed a 100 per cent representation. Any member of any state conference or church who shall be present at any conference session shall be allowed voice and vote, but such shall first be deducted from the delegate vote of his church or state conference or both. Any isolated member of the General Conference who is not a member of any state conference or church organization shall, if present, have voice and vote in any conference session.

"The names of members and, if possible, the address of each member so represented shall be furnished and certified by the proper officer to the secretary of the General Conference before the session at which their votes shall be cast."

MISSION REPRESENTATIVE VISITS OREGON

Bro. C. E. Randall, accompanied by his wife and son, and Sr. Anna Dodridge, arrived in Oregon, Ill., Tuesday afternoon, July 6.

At a specially called meeting, Bro. Randall gave a stirring appeal for increased missionary zeal throughout the church. He declared that by united action and earnest prayer the work of the Lord could be successfully carried forward along all lines. He urged that from now until the General Conference meets early in August the thought of increased evangelistic activity should be kept uppermost in our minds.

"WITH WHOM SHALL WE COMMUNE?"

Since the publication of the three answers given to the question of Sr. Mandes Reed: "With Whom Shall We Commune?" appeared in our columns on May 11, we have received several other interesting communications on the subject, some of which have been accompanied by the request not to publish. But on page 7 in this issue we are presenting an article which we think may bring out an additional thought on the question. We believe that sufficient has now been said on the matter to satisfy the requirements of the brotherhood for the present.

GRAYTOWN, WISCONSIN

Our evangelistic effort at this place has been a blessing to all concerned. The average attendance was 20. The entire church was reorganized and a young people's Berean society was formed.

We are happy to introduce as heirs to the promise through baptism into Jesus Christ, the following precious souls: Misses Dixie Jean, 14, Shirley F., 15, Marjorie M., 16, and Frances E. Van Blaircom, 18, all of Clear Lake, Wis., Rt. 4; Maynard C. Van Blaircom, 21, Buddy Goodwin, 12, Erma J. Hillman, 18, Russell T. Hillman, 20, all of Downing, Wis., Rt. 1.

This class of young people is the finest that could be found in any community. We pray for them and for their success in their new walk of life. We are sure they would welcome a letter.

A splendid opportunity for service is provided for some one in this field. The Minnesota State Board is doing its best to lead this work, but we feel that there is a very great need for more ministers. God grant that the Training Class may be revived! Please, brethren, feel this burden on your heart.

We are beginning meetings in a new field at the request of Bro. and Sr. O. H. Berry. When you read this, put us on your prayer list. If we work and pray, God will give the increase.

A. E. Hoskins, Evangelist.

Since receiving the above report from Bro. Hoskins, Sr. Howard Goodwin, secretary of the congregation at Graytown, submits further information which we summarize:

"Throughout the meetings the attendance and interest were most gratifying. Bro. Hoskins' sermons caused us to think along the vital lines and drew us nearer to God. We all wish to thank him for his help in renewing our strength and determination to win the prize at which we aim. Let's all keep on!

"We are looking forward to the coming of Bro. C. E. Randall of Ontario, next Wednesday evening."

MICHIGAN CONFERENCE REPORT

The Eightieth Annual Michigan Conference and Bible School convened at the Pennellwood Chapel, Grand Rapids, from June 21-27, with Bro. C. E. Lapp of St. Cloud, Minn., as guest speaker.

Bro. C. A. Smead of Blanchard gave the opening address on Monday evening and taught two classes daily. Bro. F. L. Austin of Chicago taught two classes daily and gave the closing address on Sunday evening.

The Bible classes were held at 10 a. m. and 2 p. m. from Monday through Saturday, with an average attendance of 54. Nineteen members had perfect attendance.

The evening services were well attended, and we enjoyed the fellowship of many of like precious faith from all the churches and many isolated communities throughout the State. Out-of-state guests were Bro. and Sr. C. E. Lapp and daughter and Kenneth Bremer of St. Cloud, Minn.; Bro. and Sr. F. L. Austin of Chicago; and Sr. Edna Brewer of Tiptecanoe City, Ohio.

Business meeting with election of officers was held Saturday afternoon.

Sunday was a full day, with services morning, afternoon, and evening. The afternoon services included a baptismal service in which Bro. Austin assisted five to put on the all-saving name of Jesus. We wish to present to the brotherhood the following new members: Miss Evelyn Hills, 3228 Vine Ave., S. W., Grand Rapids; Miss Jeanne Simpson, Grandville; Mrs. Kendal Coats, Hastings; Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Koon, 225 Brown St., S. W., Grand Rapids.

The week's meetings were brought to a close on Sunday evening with Communion and the extending of the right hand of fellowship to the new members.

The one blot on a perfect week of fellowship was the death of our well-loved oldest member, Sr. Amelia Richardson of Jamestown. May God help us to prove faithful to our Lord and Master as she did.

Mrs. L. F. Slocum, Secretary.

ILLINOIS BIBLE SCHOOL TEACHERS

The Illinois Bible School, which convenes in Oregon, August 3-15 in conjunction with the General Conference, will have the following teachers for the various classes: beginners, Mrs. Ruby Railton; primary, Mrs. Mary Krogh; junior, Miss Lucille LeCrone; intermediate, Elder H. U. Krogh; high school young people, Elder C. E. Lapp; advanced young people, Elders G. E. Marsh and C. E. Randall; adult, Elder F. L. Austin; general class, Elder S. J. Lindsay; teaching principles, Elder C. E. Randall.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

Our Grand Rapids church was happy to be the first stop of Bro. C. E. Randall on his trip westward in the interests of the church work in general, and missions in particular.

Bro. Randall and family arrived Monday afternoon, July 5. In spite of the holiday occasion and the extremely hot day a goodly number turned out. Bro. Randall gave a very interesting and enlightening discourse, and brought to the attention of us all how our banner of truth is going to drag in the dirt soon unless we as a people put forth more effort to hold it aloft.

Following the service at the church the group repaired to the pastor's home where a good visit was enjoyed and refreshments were served.

We bade Bro. Randall and family godspeed, and they departed early Tuesday morning for points west. May God indeed bless the work being undertaken.

The work at South Lawn is moving along well. The pastor and wife, together with Sr. Jeanne Lyon, plan to visit the Cleveland church July 18, and then to spend two weeks visiting the old homes in Alabama and Louisiana, accompanied by Bro. Melville Lyon. The local workers have plans made for the two Sundays of our absence.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

NORTHWEST CONFERENCE REPORT
Oregon and Washington

The annual meeting of this organization was held June 25-27 at Felida, Wash.

Bro. Horace J. Prosser of Newport, Ore., gave us several interesting sermons and Bible studies, among which was one of his beautiful word-pictures of Christ and the Church as the Bridegroom and bride. Others who helped with the meetings were Bro. A. W. Darby, who is rightly called "Old Faithful" and who gave two sermons which were greatly enjoyed; Sr. Lottie E. Young, who gave one of her fine Bible studies; Sr. Amy L. Young, who gave a reading; and Sr. Minnie Rogers, who conducted two social hours.

Sunday was a full day with a sermon by Bro. Darby in the morning, basket dinner at noon in the basement of the chapel, a social hour in the afternoon during which many of the brethren were heard from, and a sermon in the evening by Bro. Prosser.

The business meeting was presided over by Sr. Rogers, president. Officers for the coming year are H. J. Prosser, president; Amy L. Young, vice president; Flora E. Hogue, secretary; and Lillian G. Woolf, treasurer.

The new board approved the hiring of Bro. Prosser to speak the first Sunday of each month at Corvallis, Ore., and the third Sunday at Felida, Wash., beginning August 1, at Corvallis.

We urge the members to give this new board, and especially the new leader, their whole-hearted support, without which the burdens fall too heavily on the shoulders of the few.

The next meeting will be held October 1-3 at Corvallis, Ore.

May God's blessing rest upon the leaders, the members, and their efforts to promote the preaching of the gospel in this territory. It would not be amiss at this time to remind the new board of the prayerful, untiring efforts and the great faith of Sr. Rogers, retiring president, who has rendered invaluable service to this organization.

The name and address of the new secretary: Mrs. Flora E. Hogue, 435 Kings Road, Corvallis, Ore.

We were very much disappointed not to have had Sr. Minnie Kerr with us. On Tuesday she was taken suddenly ill and was rushed to a local hospital where she remained several days. At present she is resting fairly easy at her home.

Out-of-town members who attended were Srs. Virginia Fike, Mary Fike, and Mary Anderson, Portland; Bro. Jay V. Fike, Gladstone; Bro. and Sr. T. J. Ellis and Sr. Edward Berek and son, Jennings Lodge; Sr. Minnie Rogers, Eugene; Bro. H. J. Prosser, Newport; Bro. A. W. Darby, Gresham; Sr. Flora Hogue, Bro. H. B. Hathaway, Jean Hathaway, and Gladys Barber, Corvallis; Srs. Lottie E. Young and Amy L. Young, Seattle, Wash.; Sr. Deborah Knapp, Camas, Wash.

Bro. C. E. Randall will hold meetings at the Corvallis church on July 14, 15. We are looking forward to meeting Bro. Randall and to hearing him speak.

Gladys E. Barber.

THE BOOK FOR ALL MEN

THE BIBLE is the voice of God, and it speaks to man's soul as no other book can. This is because God made man, and He knows what the soul of man needs. God put into His own Book the answers to the deeper longings of the human heart.

No other book in the realm of literature can compare with the Bible. Man writes books about God, but those books are short-lived. God writes about man, and His Book lives forever. It lives because God lives. Its enemies cannot destroy it, because God protects it; and each succeeding year witnesses an increase in its circulation in every land. It is now speaking to the peoples of more than nine hundred languages and dialects of earth.

It speaks to the universal heart of man. When the natives out in Central Africa heard the missionary read to them from their translation of the great Book, they exclaimed, "See! The white man has a book that talks to us!" Indeed, it talks to every man who desires to listen.

It speaks to all men of all races, all colors, all classes, and in all stations of life. It speaks hope to the troubled soul, and comfort to the sorrowing. It speaks admonition to the erring man, and counsel to the wayward youth. It speaks to every sinner, and points to Jesus, "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." It pleads with the hypocrite to forsake his self-righteous rags. It yearns over the prodigal, and offers everlasting joy in the Father's house.

The Bible is the Book that lifts. Wherever it is given entrance, wherever it is welcomed in the human heart, it works a transformation in the life, whether among the island cannibals or in the heart of the man of Broadway. It is a living Book for every man in every age. The Bible lifts the soul of man as no other book can.

God's Book never grows old. The writings of men after a few years are out of date. They may become obsolete; but such is not the case with the Bible. It possesses a freshness and a vitality that are startling. And it manifests its transforming power wherever it goes, the same now as it did a century ago. It has lost none of its power, for it is the living "word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever" (1 Peter 1:23).

The Book of God meets man's need in every era. It is always in advance of man, telling him of things to come. It contains predictions of future events, entirely beyond the reach of human wisdom. Man is baffled as he attempts to peer into the darkness of the future. Only divine revelation can draw the curtain and show to man the hidden things of God. His Book alone unfolds the mysteries of the future, and foretells coming events. His Word declares the end from the beginning (Isa. 46:9, 10).

Contemporary history contains the record of events foretold in Bible prophecy. In His challenge to the worshippers of heathen gods, the Creator demands of them that they prove their claims by foretelling future events. "Produce your cause, saith the Lord; bring forth your strong reasons. . . . Let them bring them forth, and show us what shall happen: let them . . . declare us things for to come. Show the things that are to come hereafter, that we may know that ye are gods" (Isa. 41:21-23).

The Bible contains scores of predictions and prophecies, given hundreds of years ago, which have been most accurately fulfilled as the pages of both ancient and modern history will abundantly testify. It foretold the rise and fall of the world's mighty nations and kingdoms down through the ages. Prophecies given more than twenty-five hundred years ago are being strikingly fulfilled in our own day. The Bible is the only Book that furnishes man with a revelation of the future from the Creator; and this revelation brings enduring satisfaction to the human heart. The Book that shows man the way to live in this life and prepares him for the eternal life beyond is the book for man to follow as his guide. Blessed is the man that walks in its counsel.—Ernest Lloyd in Signs of the Times.

PROOFS OF THE RESURRECTION

IT IS obvious from a reading of the New Testament that the disciples believed with unmistakable conviction that Jesus, who had been crucified and buried, was restored to life and lived among them more or less familiarly for a period of forty days.

The Gospel of Matthew, which was written a considerable period after the day of Pentecost, presents the resurrection at the climax of the story of Jesus.

All of the preaching of the apostles, as far as we have the record in the New Testament, presented the resurrection of Jesus as one of the indispensable facts of the gospel. This is specifically asserted in 1 Corinthians 15:1-19. Paul wrote to the Corinthian church his conviction that if Christ were not raised from the dead the preaching of the gospel was vain, there was nothing true in Christian faith, the apostles who proclaimed the resurrection were false witnesses of God, and Christians were yet in their sins. Nor was there any hope of their own resurrection, for in case Christ was not risen from the dead, "they also that have fallen asleep in Christ have perished."

The Gospels and the first Epistle to the Corinthians record twelve appearances of Jesus to His disciples. They are as follows: To Mary (Mark 16:9-11; John 20:14-18); to a number of women (Matt. 28:9, 10); to Cleopas and his companion on their way to Emmaus (Mark 16:12, 13; Luke 24:13-32); to Peter (Luke 24:34; 1 Cor. 15:5); to the ten apostles in the absence of Thomas (Mark 16:14; Luke 24:36-43; John 20:19-23; 1 Cor. 15:5); to the eleven apostles (John 20:26-29); to the seven disciples by the Sea of Galilee (John 21:1-24); to the eleven on a mountain in Galilee (Matt. 28:16-20; Mark 16:15-18); to the five hundred disciples (1 Cor. 15:8); to James (1 Cor. 15:8); to the apostles (Mark 16:19, 20; Luke 24:44-53); to Paul (1 Cor. 15:8).

It would be interesting to read the story of each of these appearances and note the circumstances under which Jesus manifested Himself.—The Front Rank.

What the Bible Means to Me

By Arthur G. Young

THE present day is one in which there is a great deal of confusion of thought and, with the rapid increase in material scientific knowledge, great changes have transformed the world, in comparison with the one that our fathers knew. These rapid changes have made for experimentation in many fields, and simultaneously there has come into men's thoughts a longing for a better understanding of, as well as a hope for, that which is definite, sure, fixed, and unalterable. This longing has led me to seek the source of that which does not change, and I have found it in the God of the Bible.

The Bible contains definite and positive answers to all the necessary questions of this life, as well as of the hereafter. And, furthermore, it gives historical and also present-day evidence of its truth. It is not generally realized, even among Christian people, but these very days in which we live are "Bible times," as the Bible clearly has a particular message for today.

It states the origin of the world and the cause of the present deplorable condition of all living creatures in it, including man. But, thank God, it also states that there is a remedy and how this remedy is to be applied. This remedy, bought through the sacrifice of the Son of God on Calvary, is all-inclusive and, therefore, it means you and me. But it has a wider scope than the individual. Just as the curse blighted man, it also operated on nature, and so the remedy provided is likewise all-inclusive.

Man, who had the power of choice before he fell, has the power of choice now to be redeemed. So I believe the Bible teaches that we, as individuals, must exercise the power of choice, and as we decide through the operation of our will, we thus determine our future. Therefore, the Bible cautions us to "choose life rather than death that ye may live" in the soon-to-be-inaugurated kingdom of God which is to be set up on this earth with Christ as the King. This will mean a thoroughgoing reorganization for good of the political, moral, spiritual, physical, and economic condition of the world, although the practical ramifications of this basic change we now can only dimly visualize.

Man has conceived wonderful ideas and treasured marvelous ideals of a better state of things than has existed and is now existing, but the truth is he has lacked the power as well as the all-inclusive wisdom to bring these hopes about. This lack will be supplied by Christ when He returns and conducts the reorganization of the world's affairs—when He actually and personally becomes King over kings and Lord over Lords.

The Bible specifically promises there will be a restitution of the perfection existing prior to the fall. That this will be done on a world-wide basis is evident and proved to all reasonable men's minds by the various miracles Christ performed, which cover completely in type those things which must be changed universally when He comes again. This positive proof gives you and me hope and assurance, as well as giving notice to the world not only that these things were done but that it is possible that they can be done again. These miracles give further evidence as to where the authority and power to make their wider application reside.

The Bible has appealed to me as a sure and steadfast note in this shifting and confused world; that there is a supreme, loving, and just God, and that He has a plan and a purpose to bring about by His power a change in the conditions under which the physical world and the inhabitants thereof operate, so that it will be possible for humanity to not only have eternal life in actual, individual possession, but also to have the opportunity of expressing all that is good and noble in a set of perfect conditions. Thus the long-striven-for happiness in activity will be our common lot.

Enlarged capacities and abilities will combine with enlarged opportunities. And I (Please turn to page 10)

Pertinent Comments on the News of the Day

G. E. Marsh, Editor

Astrologist Predicted Abdication of Edward VIII

"Let now the astrologers, the stargazers, the monthly prognosticators, stand up, and save thee"—Isa. 47:13.

AUKLAND, N. Z., July 15.—The following editorial which appeared recently in The Bible Standard, the official organ of the believers in New Zealand, is of such a timely nature that we feel it is worthy of a place in "Abreast of the Times." There are some, even among those who have embraced the gospel of the kingdom as taught by the Church of God, who have been influenced by the teaching of astrology to such an extent that they are governing their lives by the horoscopes provided by certain widely advertised radio astrologers.

"The predictions of astrology sometimes hit the mark, and give pause to the believer in God's Word to wonder if there is 'anything to it.' In 1927 there was published a book of astrological predictions, containing the following remarkable predictions regarding the Prince of Wales, which subsequent events have fulfilled: 'It is well within the range of possibility . . . that he will fall a victim of a devastating love affair. If he does, I predict that the Prince will give up everything, even the chance of being crowned, rather than lose the object of his affection.' And concerning the Duke of York, the following remarkable words were printed at the same time: 'In his case it is remarkable that the regal sign of Jupiter increases in power as the years advance, which was also the case of his royal father, before there was any likelihood of his coming to the throne.'

"What shall we say to these things? Is astrology reliable? No! Astrology is clearly forbidden to the obedient child of God. Isaiah 47:13 classes this 'science' with the enchantments, sorceries, and general godlessness of Babylon. From Deuteronomy 13:1-3 we may gather the general principle. 'If there arise among you a prophet, or a dreamer of dreams, and giveth thee a sign or a wonder, and the sign or the wonder come to pass, whereof he spake unto thee, saying, Let us go after other gods, which thou hast not known, and let us serve them; thou shalt not hearken unto the words of that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams, for the Lord your God proveth you, to know whether ye love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul.' The proper course for the trusting Christian therefore is, 'Trust in the Lord with all thine heart, and lean not to thine own understanding; in all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths' (Prov. 3:5, 6).

"Whatever there is in astrology we, with our present understanding, are to it as a babe is to fire; we do not know how to handle it, and we touch it at our peril; and our loving heavenly Father has banned it from our investigation. In the coming age, with heavenly powers, we shall be able to grasp whatever there may be in it. But from dependence upon God and communion with Him, and to infidelity, and soon the heart-vacancy will be filled with 'another god.'"

Partition of Palestine Proposed

"They shall build the old wastes, . . . the desolations of many generations."—Isaiah 61:4.

JERUSALEM, July 15.—It becomes increasingly apparent that the plans of the Royal Commission to divide Palestine into three sections, one for the Jews, a second for the Arabs, and a third to be held directly by Great Britain, is meeting with strong opposition from both the Jews and the Arabs. "The attempt to placate us (the Jews) with a doubtful state is, in effect, but to throw dust in our eyes," asserts the Hashomer Hatzair, Hebrew left-wing Zionist paper. "The Zionist Movement has not experienced such a difficult crisis in many years. . . . Jewish communities throughout the world must be aroused to oppose the cantonization plan with all their resources," declares the Palestine Herald.

"The Arab Higher Committee at Jerusalem," remarks The Chicago Tribune editorially, "declares the plan inadmissible because the proposed partition gives the Jews most of the fertile sections of the Holy Land while leaving the Arabs only rocky and arid territory. The Jewish reply to that might be that the Jews have shown their capacity for agricultural development as the Arabs, still a pastoral people, have not. They are not only farming but have invested some $380,000,000 in the development of industries and agricultural enterprises."

The problem presented to Great Britain is a difficult one owing to the spiritual, moral, religious, and delicate international factors that enter into it. Like many another problem of major significance, it will be settled only when the King comes! But it is for us to watch events with the closest attention, as the Jews are indeed the "sign people of the Lord."

Essential Elements of Christian Faith

By the Editor

THE word "gospel" possesses an attraction and an appeal that few other words contain. It expresses in a single phrase composed of two words, the highest conception of joy and of gladness of which the mind can conceive, for the word "gospel" means "good news" or "glad tidings."

Any good news is "gospel," but any good news is not "the gospel" of which the Bible speaks and in which the saints of God rejoice. Paul asserts that other gospels may be given to the world, even foisted upon the church, but warns the disciples earnestly that there is but one gospel that has power to save. Never in the history of Christian teaching has this solemn admonition been more needed than it is today when the "social gospel" and many other "gospels" are being presented as the gospel of Christ.

"Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed" (Gal. 1:6-9).

That there is but one saving gospel is indicated in many places and in many ways in the New Testament. For example, Paul, writing to the Ephesians, says: "There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism" (Eph. 4:4, 5).

In his powerful argument on the resurrection of the dead Paul strongly emphasizes the same thought. "Moreover, brethren, I declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand; by which also ye are saved, if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain" (1 Cor. 15:1, 2).

Jude, the brother of James and probably the half brother of our Lord, also admonished the disciples to remain steadfast in their defense of the one gospel or the one faith. "Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints" (verse 3).

The Apostle to the Gentiles declares that belief in the one gospel is absolutely necessary to salvation. "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek" (Rom. 1:16). According to this text it makes no difference who we may be, Jew or Greek, bond or free, male or female, the only means of salvation provided by the almighty God through His Son is belief in the one gospel.

Many different attractive and promising titles are applied to the gospel, as, for example, the following: "the gospel of God" (Rom. 1:1); "the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God" (Mark 1:1); "the gospel of the grace of God" (Acts 20:24); "the gospel of peace" (Eph. 6:15); "the light of the glorious gospel of Christ" (2 Cor. 4:4); "the word of life" (Phil. 2:16); and "the gospel of the kingdom of God" (Mark 1:14).

In the light of these wonderful descriptive titles by which the gospel is designated in the Scriptures, it is easy to understand the language of Isaiah which was quoted by Paul from the 5th chapter of that Prophet's book and the 7th verse: "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth!"

In the final clause of this text, Isaiah expresses the great central fact and glorious purpose of the message that really makes it gospel or good tidings—"Thy God reigneth!" For the true gospel, the gospel of the grace of God, the glorious gospel of Christ, is the assurance that God shall reign!

So far as the purpose of God is concerned, there is not the slightest hint of a change from the beginning of Genesis to the close of Revelation. That purpose is to establish and maintain the authority of Jehovah throughout the entire earth. Thus the first promise concerning the birth of Jesus had to do with the kingdom of God. "The angel said unto her, Fear not, Mary: for thou hast found favour with God. And, behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name JESUS. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for (Please turn to Page 11)

Carry the Gospel

Go, ye messenger of God,
Like beams of morning fly;
Take the wonder-working rod,
Wave the banner-cross on high:
Where the lofty minaret
Gleams along the morning skies,
Wave it till the crescent set,
And the "Star of Jacob" rise.

Go to many a tropic isle,
In the bosom of the deep,
Where the skies forever smile,
And th' oppressed forever weep.
O'er the Negro's night of care
Pour the living light of heaven;
Chase away the fiend despair,
Bid him hope to be forgiven.

Where the golden gates of day
Open on the palmy East,
Wide the cross of Christ display,
Spread the gospel's richest feast.
Bear the tidings round the ball,
Visit ever soil and sea;
Preach the cross and crown to all—
Christ who comes to set men free.

The Doctrine of Christ

Number 2

By Harvey Krogh, Jr.

"God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things."—Hebrews 1:1, 2.

WHEN God speaks, all should listen. God does not speak unless He has something important to say. How has He spoken to us? By His Son!

We turn to the recorded words of God's Son and read, "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me" (John 7:16). "Doctrine"? We find that the most common meaning of doctrine is "teaching." Our subject is "The Doctrine of Christ," but Jesus said that it was not His, but His that sent Him. "For I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak. And I know that his commandment is life everlasting: whatsoever I speak therefore, even as the Father said unto me, so I speak" (John 12:49, 50). "He that loveth me not keepeth not my sayings: and the word which ye hear is not mine, but the Father's which sent me" (John 14:24). Truly, it is God's doctrine, and it is God's Word.

Paul told us of the importance of this doctrine when he instructed Timothy to "preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine. For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears" (2 Tim. 4:2, 3).

We have pointed our fingers at others and spoken something about enduring or not enduring sound doctrine, but let us now turn our attention on ourselves and see how well we endure sound doctrine.

The first recorded words of Jesus are found in Matthew 3:15, where He speaks to John the Baptist concerning baptism. Jesus is here teaching of baptism by His example, but we shall speak of it later when He teaches it by word. The next words are during His temptation, and then His declaration of the kingdom at hand.

In Matthew 5 we read these words: "And seeing the multitudes, he went up into a mountain: and when he was set, his disciples came unto him: and he opened his mouth, and taught them, saying." This was the first of His teaching or doctrine, the greatest sermon that ever fell upon the ears of men. If ministers could preach like our Savior there would be more people converted, because they would see the Father and His wonderful plan more clearly.

Let us reverently study His doctrine. "And he opened his mouth, and taught them, saying, Blessed are the poor in spirit: for their's is the kingdom of heaven." Luke merely says, "Blessed are the poor," omitting the words, "in spirit." Some have thought Jesus meant either the bankrupt or the feeble-minded, but I believe He meant neither.

It is true He detested the greed of the rich and He was a friend to the poor, because they needed the necessities of life and He could provide them. But He was not so foolish as to think that to be poor in the goods of this world was a title to the kingdom of heaven. Jesus meant the "poor in spirit" who know of their spiritual poverty and their own weakness and how little good is found in us all. It is only those who realize they are poor that suffer from poverty, and only those who suffer try to escape from it. Blessed are these, for through Christ they are made happy and they are made rich, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

"Blessed are they that mourn: for they shall be comforted." Yes, the afflicted and the weeping—those who mourn because of their sins and the good they might have done and did not—those who receive evil for good and do not backbite. And why should they not be comforted?

"Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth." Oh! what a contrast! Those who hold the earth today and those who shall possess it! The soldier who leads in fierce battle, the cruel chancellor, the mighty dictator, are the possessors today. The meek are fighting within to conquer the enemies within—quick temper, hatred, malice, etc. They are the ones who will be the real victors. It is by inheritance that they shall possess the earth.

We have little quarrel with the majority of teachers today, for they are teaching more and more of the kingdom on the earth and the return of Christ and His reign with His saints. Therefore, we shall not now take time to contradict those who do not understand this verse, for Jesus was speaking of the character of men as of first importance.

"Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled." Hungering and thirsting not after the righteousness of men, the praise of men, or their honor, but for the righteousness of God, His justice, and His perfection—truly, they shall be filled.

"Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy." If you love will you not be loved? If you help will you not be helped? "As much as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." If we forgive we can be forgiven. So why can we not obtain mercy if we are merciful?

"Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God." Those whose hearts are filled with all uncleanness, carnal ambitions, and the desires of this world, cannot see God. They cannot know the sweetness of His love toward them until those things are crowded out.

"Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God." These are not the meek who refrain from returning evil for evil. These are the ones who go further and return good for evil. By the power of love they bring peace where war once was. Self-love is the cause of all wars. The peacemaker practices and teaches love, but it is love for fellow man, and by this practice and teaching he strikes at the very root of all war. The quarrel in the home, the strike in the city, the strife among states, the Spanish war, and the great international conflicts, shall cease when there is no more self-love and that all-powerful love of fellow man is practiced. Blessed are the peacemakers.

"Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for their's is the kingdom of heaven." When righteousness is practiced and preached, evil defends itself by persecution. We have the promise that the kingdom of heaven shall be ours if we endure.

"Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake." Persecution is physical. Jesus as much as told His disciples that men would take away their food and their liberty, and harm them bodily, but all manner of evil would be spoken of them also. The unclean would call them filthy, the wicked would accuse them of blasphemy, and they would be denounced for their faith. But what was the promise to them? (Turn to Page 11)

Christ the Restorer

By T. A. Drinkard

"For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost."—Luke 19:10.

AS I LOOK back over the years gone by, I recall that as a young man studying the Word of God I often read the brief but beautiful story of the creation of the earth and man and all other things that are mentioned by the several writers. That story has never grown too old to be interesting.

I found that God "cursed . . . the ground" for Adam's "sake," because of disobedience (Gen. 3:17). When this fact was brought so clearly to my attention I began to meditate upon what Adam lost as the result of his transgression. As to his nature—he could not have lost immortality. He only possessed temporal life, with the promise, or offer, of life eternal on the condition of obedience. The first he lost in death, and the second he lost by transgression of God's divine law. Since God intended to place Adam over the dominion (Gen. 1:26; Psalm 8:6), and since "we see not yet all things put under him" (Heb. 2:8), then Adam must have lost that also.

It would be unwise for us to assume that because Adam failed to live up to the privilege of developing a righteous character that would be in harmony with God's plan, that his failure changed the plan of God. It was God's prerogative to set Adam aside if he failed to meet His requirements, and give the chance to a second Adam, which He did.

In dealing with this subject men and women have gone astray by failing to comprehend God's own purpose, and by substituting their own personal opinions therefor. For God to have changed His plan, He would have necessarily had to change His purpose, and that would have called for a change of mind. This would have been out of harmony with God's nature.

I say that Adam had temporal life, and in addition thereto he had the offer of eternal life because "the tree of life also" was "in the midst of the garden," and because God said, "Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat," it is plainly shown that he did have the offer extended to him (Gen. 2:9, 16), i. e., the opportunity to live forever on condition that he comply with the simple test of obedience.

God not only tested the first Adam, but permitted "the last Adam" (1 Cor. 15:45) to be tried, yet He did not fail by transgressing the law of God. And Paul affirms that because Christ "loved righteousness, and hated iniquity" God anointed Him above His fellows (Heb. 1:9). It would seem from John 15:10 that Christ elected to do the Father's will of His own volition.

To Adam was given temporal life unconditionally, but life eternal was offered on condition that he obey. Even so, temporal life will Christ restore (John 5:28, 29; 1 Cor. 15:21, 22; Acts 24:15) unconditionally, but eternal life will only be given to those that "obey him" (Heb. 5:9). Christ complied with every condition of the Father's will, and thus received the approval of God "always" (John 11:42). God even heard and delivered Him from possible death in the garden, near to which He was brought by the agony of suffering (Matt. 26:39; Luke 22:42-44; Heb. 5:7).

Having met the conditions of the Father's will, Jesus Christ could claim the reward for obedience. God has never offered eternal salvation to any man except on conditions. If Adam had obeyed the command of God and had not failed, he could have had a very prominent place in the great plan of God, but since he failed, a second Adam was brought forth and as such was made the head of a new creation. Hence through Christ righteous characters are being made to be conformed to the image of God's dear Son, that in the kingdom age they may come into control of the dominion first given to Adam (Micah 4:8). And this dominion is to be from sea to sea and from the river unto the ends of the earth (Psalm 72:8). May God hasten that day when these blessings will be realized.

"In Him Was Life"

THESE words were penned by John many years after Jesus had been obedient unto death; and had been made to live again by the exceeding greatness of God's power, and glorified. His resurrection from among the dead had declared Him to be the Son of God, making manifest the eternal life which hitherto had been with the Father. Jesus was alive to die no more.

When John wrote, Jesus possessed both "the life that now is, and that which is to come." He had possessed the life common to all mankind, had laid it down, and now possessed that life which before His resurrection God, the self-existent One, alone possessed; a truth that caused John to say: "God is light, and in him is no darkness at all" (1 John 1:5).

John had seen Jesus, in fact, he had been with Him in both lives, and declares that "in him was life"; and adds, "And the life was the light of men."

Surely John does not mean that the physical life which the Son of God possessed in that life which was begun when "the power of the Highest" overshadowed Mary (Luke 1:35) so that in due season He was "born of a woman," the "seed of David according to the flesh," and which He possessed in common with all men, was a light to men. That life was in the blood, and began as an independent life when the "breath of life" entered His nostrils, and was maintained by breathing until He yielded up that breath on the cross. True, because that life had been begun by God, not man, it was unforfeited; yet He had the power to lay it down, by consenting to be "the Lamb of God."

However, until He had laid down that life which man had forfeited in Adam, and had received that life which man had never possessed—and of which He knew nothing save that God's promise bade Him hope for "eternal life"—His physical life could not light men. But when God raised Him, He made flesh, born of a woman, to live and abide forever for the first time; thus fulfilling the promise made to Abraham (read Acts 13:37), bringing the promised life and immortality to light. Then those who followed Jesus ceased to walk in darkness, for they had "the light of life." Having seen an immortal one with their eyes, and handled Him with their hands, John says, "We declare unto you the life, the eternal life, which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us" See John 1:1-4.

During the years in which the life of His flesh was the blood thereof, it was not the life itself, but the way He lived that life, that was a revealing light, causing John to say: "We beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father . . . full of grace and truth."

His advent was indeed the rising of "the sun of righteousness," to those who feared the name of Jehovah. The fruitage of sin, having entered the world, was all too well known through the trial of human suffering and misery that had followed, while its finished work, death, spread the horror of great darkness over the human race, through fear of which men were throughout their lifetime subject to bondage.

Into this darkness the Son of God was born to bear witness to the truth, to live a life of righteousness before men, so that they could find no fault in Him; a life of obedience to the will of God, that He might provide a mantle of righteousness for those who would permit Him to cleanse them from their sins in His own blood. He came, not alone to proclaim the love of God, but to make that love manifest; not merely to assure men with His lips that God so loved the world that He was willing to give His only begotten Son that they might not perish in the consuming fires of the grave, but to make possible their deliverance, by actually paying the price of their redemption, thus earning the right to give them power to become children of God.

By fulfilling all that was spoken of the Christ by Moses and the prophets, He not only bore witness to the truth, but became "the truth," so that one need only look at Him, and believe what he sees, to know the truth and find the correct answer to those questions which often puzzle one as he listens to the divergent opinions of God's zealous, but often mistaught, servants.

If you would behold that life, which alone can dispel the darkness and deliver you from the bondage that comes from the fear of death, in all its glory, then listen to Him, as from the right hand of God He reveals Himself to that beloved disciple who told you that "in him was life."

Yes, hear Him as He says, "I am the Living one; and I was dead, and behold, I am alive for evermore, and I have the keys of death and of Hades."

It is the cry of victory, not of an immortal soul, not of a being co-equal and co-eternal with God, but of a man of flesh, one born of a woman, who had been dead, was to all eternity a "living one," and that which was corruptible had put on incorruption, and that which was mortal had put on immortality; thus winning victory over death.

I looked at this life and it lighted the way of life to me. He has the keys of death and hades, therefore, the darkness passed away when I heard the voice of that little company of saints who, with the apostles of old, have continued "teaching the people, and declaring, in" (never out of) "Jesus, the resurrection which is from among the dead" (Acts 4:2, Roth.).

John truly says that the witness of God concerning His Son is this, "that God gave unto us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." This does not mean that I will be kept from dying, but it does mean that in laying hold on Jesus by faith, that the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus makes me free from the law of sin and death, rendering death as powerless to hold me as it was to hold Him, because my life "is hid with Christ in God." And when "he who is our life shall appear" may we all appear with Him in glory.

The victory is ours, not the victory of possession, but the victory of faith; therefore, beholding the life that is in Jesus, with Paul I can say, "Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ!"—E. F. White in The Herald of Life.

World Dominion—Whose Shall It Be?

MIGHTY forces are striving desperately today for world power. Fascism and Communism are at death grips, each determined to overthrow the other and seize universal dominion.

Gone are all hopes for a United States of the World, guided into the golden age by a benevolent patriarchy at Geneva. Such long-cherished aspirations have dissolved like ropes of sand.

Nations, armed to the teeth, are glowering angrily and fearfully at one another once more, awaiting the chance to strike the blow which will bring them the victory and expansion they have long coveted.

What of the future?

Shall we see the ancient Roman Empire revived under the powerful leadership of Mussolini?

Will populous, vigorous Germany, pressed beyond endurance, burst forth on the right hand and on the left, and seize the scepter of world dominion that she so narrowly missed in 1914?

Will some Eastern power sweep westward, and set up its triumphant standard upon the ruins of a conquered Europe?

There is an answer to all these questions, and it comes to us through the voice of Bible prophecy.

Incredible as it may seem to some, this very situation we face in the world today was outlined by a prophetic pen twenty-five centuries ago. While Rome was an unknown village, before Medo-Persia or Greece had tasted world dominion, the pen of Inspiration had already drawn the picture of modern Europe.

The channel used by God for this amazing revelation was a young Jewish nobleman, named Daniel, a captive in the court of Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon. His sterling character and exceptional wisdom had so impressed the monarch that he had invited him to join the official staff of counselors to the court.

One night Nebuchadnezzar dreamed a dream that greatly troubled him. In the morning he found that the dream had gone from his mind, though its vivid impression remained. Convinced that he had been given a revelation of unusual importance, he sent for his wise men and demanded that they tell him forthwith both the dream and its interpretation.

Such a task was beyond them, and they were forced to admit it. Whereupon the King, with the impetuosity characteristic of old-time potentates, commanded that they all be slain. Daniel, of course, was involved, but with great courage he sought audience of Nebuchadnezzar, and took upon himself the responsibility of meeting the King's requirements and so saving the lives of his associates.

The interview over, and time being granted him, he sought his immediate friends and set the position before them. Together they knelt in prayer. Doubtless the imminent peril made their prayers more earnest than they had ever been before. Certainly God heard them.

A KING'S DREAM

That night Daniel saw in vision the very dream that had appeared the previous night to the King, and in addition the meaning of it all was made plain to him. Early in the morning he arose, his heart full of thanksgiving. His beautiful prayer on this occasion is one of the choicest passages of Scripture.

"Blessed be the name of God for ever and ever: for wisdom and might are his: and he changeth the times and the seasons: he removeth kings, and setteth up kings: he giveth wisdom unto the wise, and knowledge to them that know understanding: he revealeth the deep and secret things: he knoweth what is in the darkness, and the light dwelleth with him. I thank thee, and praise thee, O thou God of my fathers, who hast given me wisdom and might, and hast made known unto me now what we desired of thee: for thou hast now made known unto us the king's matter" (Dan. 2:20-23).

Exultingly, yet with commendable humility, Daniel returned to the palace. The King was expecting him, skeptical no doubt as to the result of the interview and perhaps regretting that his decree made it necessary that this fine young man should be put to death.

"The secret which the king hath demanded," began Daniel, "cannot the wise men, the astrologers, the magicians, the soothsayers, show unto the king; but there is a God in heaven that revealeth secrets, and maketh known to the king Nebuchadnezzar what shall be in the latter days."

A DIVINE REVELATION

The conviction in the young man's voice, born of certain knowledge, stirred the King to the depths. One can almost see him leaning forward with eagerness to catch the next sentences.

"As for thee, O king, thy thoughts came into thy mind upon thy bed, what should come to pass hereafter: and he that revealeth secrets maketh known to thee what shall come to pass."

Then followed the recounting of the dream:

"Thou, O king, sawest, and behold a great image. This great image, whose brightness was excellent, stood before thee; and the form thereof was terrible. This image's head was of fine gold, his breast and his arms of silver, his belly and his thighs of brass, his legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay. Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshingfloors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them: and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth" (vv. 31-35).

It was the very dream the King had seen and forgotten! Every detail was perfectly drawn. Nothing was missing. His very inmost thoughts had been read by another. This was miraculous. Breathlessly he waited for the promised interpretation.

"This is the dream," went on the youthful Prophet, "and we will tell the interpretation thereof before the king."

THE INTERPRETATION

"Thou, O king, art a king of kings: for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, and strength, and glory. And wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field and the fowls of heaven hath he given into thine hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all. Thou art this head of gold."

A smile of satisfaction passed over the King's countenance, turning almost immediately, however, into a frown of puzzled anxiety as the young man continued:

"And after thee shall arise another kingdom inferior to thee, and another third kingdom of brass, which shall bear rule over all the earth. And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron: forasmuch as iron breaketh in pieces and subdueth all things: and as iron that breaketh all these, shall it break in pieces and bruise.

"And whereas thou sawest the feet and toes, part of potter's clay, and part of iron, the kingdom shall be divided; but there shall be in it of the strength of the iron, forasmuch as thou sawest the iron mixed with miry clay.

"And as the toes of the feet were part of iron, and part of clay, so the kingdom shall be partly strong, and partly broken.

"And whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, they shall mingle themselves with the seed of men: but they shall not cleave one to another, even as iron is not mixed with clay" (vv. 36-43).

THE FUTURE UNVEILED

Like a flash the veil of the future dropped and both Prophet and King found themselves gazing enraptured across the vast, enthralling landscape of history-to-be. In the foreground rose the golden domes of Babylon; not far distant the silvered heights of the coming Medo-Persian kingdom lifted themselves toward the skies. Farther on rose the brazen pinnacles of Greece, and beyond, the dark outline of the peaks of the Roman kingdom were clearly visible. Beyond these still, their eyes witnessed a time of confusion and chaos, division and dissension, with Rome partitioned, and each separate nation fighting desperately for its own existence. They beheld mighty plans on foot to fuse the broken iron into one great whole again, and the constant failures through the presence of the ineradicable clay. They looked upon events even of our own time, and saw the main outlines of modern European politics.

And then—? Suddenly through the blue mist on the far horizon a majestic, stupendous scene arrested their attention.

"In the days of these kings," said the Prophet, "shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever."

"THE DREAM IS CERTAIN"

"Forasmuch as thou sawest that the stone was cut out of the mountain without hands, and that it brake in pieces the iron, the brass, the clay, the silver, and the gold; the great God hath made known to the king what shall come to pass hereafter: and the dream is certain, and the interpretation sure" (vv. 44, 45).

Like a mighty beacon this amazing prophecy shines down the centuries, illuminating the great events of time. Glittering on the gold of Babylon, shimmering on the silver of Medo-Persia, glinting on the brass of Grecia, shining on the iron of Rome, lighting up the struggles and conflicts of the modern world, it glows at last upon the face of the King of kings as He comes back to the earth in His glory.

The very existence of this prophecy is overwhelming evidence of the controlling power of God in human affairs, and the fact that so much of the vision has come true already should convince us that the unfulfilled remainder will yet take place. Indeed, little is left but the final consummation and the setting up of God's eternal kingdom. Thus the national dissensions and rivalries of our time are as it were but shadows "cast before" by this crowning event of history. They warn us in clarion tones that the end is near.

Indeed, the more carefully this and other Bible prophecies are studied in their relation to the happenings of our day, the more clearly the fact emerges that we are now living on the eve of the long-promised, long-expected return of the Redeemer, described by the Apostle Paul as "the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ."

The material mind recoils at first from such a suggestion, considering that it is impractical and visionary. Yet, when all is said against it, is it not the only hopeful solution of the world's problems? Everything else has been tried, and has failed miserably. Conferences, leagues, pacts, wars, tariffs, and what not have been explored to the limit, but all in vain. So muddled and twisted have human perplexities become that only One with more than human wisdom could unravel this Gordian knot. Man has been caught in an evil net, and the more he struggles to liberate himself the more entangled he becomes. His desperate plight calls for a divine deliverer.

It is important also that due weight be given to Heaven's viewpoint. The old struggle between the powers of light and darkness that began among the angels and reached its climax at the cross has not ended yet. And it cannot end until Satan has been finally vanquished and destroyed. Indeed, not until Jesus Christ has returned to the scene of His humiliation in the glory that rightly belongs to Him will His honor be fully vindicated before all creation. Not till then will justice be done to those champions of righteousness who have suffered for His sake. Not till then will death be swallowed up in victory, and the redeemed of the Lord enter their eternal inheritance.

Truly Christ's glorious return is the only sane solution of the world's tremendous problems, the only way out of the chaos caused by sin.

Looking out over all the sorrows that have fallen upon mankind in this tragic hour, what brighter hope could one cherish than that Jesus should come back? Is He not the Carpenter needed to rebuild the waste of ruin around us?

Is He not called "Wonderful" because of His amazing capacity for helpfulness? Does He bear the name "Counselor" in vain? As "The mighty God" does He not hold the key to a treasury with eternal riches sufficient to banish all poverty? . . . As Prince of Peace is He not the only One able to banish the curse of war and make it cease to the ends of the earth?

He is all this and much more. He is the Comforter the world needs in its sorrows, the Physician to heal its diseases, the Savior who alone can save men from their sins. And because He is so all-sufficient "the government shall be upon his shoulder," and of the increase thereof and of peace "there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever" (Isa. 9:6, 7).

That is the government the world needs today. It is that under which redeemed mankind will thrive through the eternal years of Christ's unending reign. It will be the government of the next universal empire, whose inauguration is to be the stupendous climax of this mighty hour.

God grant we may give our hearts to Him today, and so be ready to meet Him in peace in the day of His glorious appearing.—Arthur S. Maxwell in Signs of the Times.

Peter and the Keys

THAT Jesus reestablished the church of God while on earth, few persons will deny, but that it was built upon Peter as the words seem to imply in Matthew 16:13-19, will not only be denied, but will be fought with a zeal calculated to make the light of truth shine clearly. The thoughts presented here are given for the reader's consideration, but if he does not find them compatible with the Word they should be disregarded.

Jesus had many private conversations with His disciples, but it seems the question as to whom He really was had not been a topic considered. But at this time He asked a pointed question, "Whom do men say that I the Son of man am?" This question was not asked for the purpose of eliciting information, for Jesus knew even the thoughts of men; but He wished to lay emphasis on the truth He was about to present. Some had heard that He was John the Baptist risen from the dead, while others that He was Elijah, and some that He was one of the prophets. It is rather strange that some had not heard it affirmed that He was the Christ. They must have been ignorant of the Scriptures not to have recognized the Messiah after witnessing all the miracles He performed. Perhaps they took the words of their teachers as so many persons do today, and do not trouble themselves to do any personal study. Perhaps today not one in one thousand can take the Bible and defend his faith. The blind lead the blind and all fall into the ditch together, even after being warned to study out their own salvation with fear and trembling.

After being told that some thought He was this or that man He asked a more pointed question: "Whom say ye that I am?" And with his characteristic promptness Peter said, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Peter, as spokesman for the twelve, gave the sentiments of their hearts without hesitation. They had no earthly conception about His personality as did those around them—they walked closer to Him. When Jesus spoke of Himself as being the Son of God the Jews said it was blasphemy, but Peter not only recognized the messiahship, but also the deity of Jesus. Many things had undoubtedly caused him to make this statement—the beauty of His life, the many miracles, and the words of life spoken. But at this particular moment he was carried above himself and spoke with an earnestness totally unlike his former self. Reader, have you come to the place where you, with the fervor of Peter, can make the same confession? If not, the gate still stands ajar.

What did Christ say? "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." Endless discussions have been made over the meaning of these words, and it is useless to repeat them. Humanity has been outraged by the papacy, that Peter was the first pope, which cannot be substantiated by any Scripture. Neither is there any reliable profane history that lends proof to the statement.

That Jesus wished to confer some honor upon Peter for being the first confessor of Him, the writer does not question. The name "Peter" literally means "rock" or "stone." And we read we "are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." Peter was the first confessor of Christ, the first living stone and, if you please, the first member of the visible church on earth. Upon, or after, him must all the subsequent members be built. This does not mean that he was the foundation instead of Christ, but he was the nucleus of the first church. In the Apocalypse we read that the city had twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb. Perhaps the thought is far-fetched, but the first foundation may have the name of Peter on it. By his open confession of Christ he laid himself upon Christ, and all others are built above him.

"And the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Hell, we must take as sheol or hades, and is but the grave. We might elaborate upon this to some extent, but it is useless. Persecution cannot prevail against the church, for it has been the cause of many leaving their native country to spread the message in foreign lands. And the message gives life from the grave or hades. But, you may ask, did Peter have the keys of the grave? In Acts 9:40 we read the following: "But Peter put them all forth, and kneeled down and prayed: and turning him to the body said, Tabitha, arise. And she opened her eyes: and when she saw Peter, she sat up." Yes, by raising Dorcas he showed he had the keys to the grave.

"And I will give thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven." This does not mean that Peter stands as porter before the pearly gates, but he did have the keys with which to open the gates of salvation or kingdom of heaven. Peter was the first spokesman at Pentecost, where three thousand were added to the church, and thus he led the way for the Jews to enter. But not only the Jews. Peter was a devout Jew, and not fitted by nature to work with the Gentiles. But a vision from heaven changed all this in one hour. Read Acts 11 and note how the sheet with all manner of four-footed beasts was let down before Peter, and explained to represent the Gentiles by the delegation awaiting him at the door. What was his reply? "What was I that I could withstand God?" Friend, did not Peter open the door of the kingdom for the Gentiles to enter, and thus have the keys of the kingdom?

"And whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." What authority to give to a human being! This authority was used when he called judgment on Ananias and Sapphira, when he rebuked Simon Magus, and when he preached to the household of Cornelius.

But why all this authority and power given to Peter? Jesus could see in this former weak man a giant when he was filled with the Holy Spirit. When he was thus filled he was led by it, and his works would be ratified in heaven. Should he fall the keys would be withheld, so there is nothing so strange about giving him this power. But the Bible does not teach that Peter was given the office of pope, or even head over his brethren. At a later date Salome asked that her two sons might sit, one on either side of Christ in His kingdom, and Christ said it was not His to give. Even at the Last Supper there was an argument about who should be the greatest. If Jesus had already given this place to Peter would not the other disciples have known it?

The Bible nowhere states that Peter was a Bishop of Rome, or that he could transmit any prerogative to another. It was to Peter as first confessor of Christ that the keys were given, but Peter himself was resting on Christ. Character cannot be transmitted to another as a coat. But has Christ given this key and this power to Peter alone? Turn to Matthew 18:18 and you will see that others were given, at a later time, this power or authority to bind on earth, and it would be bound in heaven. And, reader, if you are a true Christian will not these keys be given you so you may open the door of salvation to others? Surely! And the door you may open will as surely be recognized in heaven, and cause rejoicing even though only one sinner is saved. Let this be remembered, if there be any succession to the honor of having the keys it must be to those who have the character which evoked the words from the Savior. These characteristics cannot be left as a legacy to others. You cannot claim the honor if you are destitute of character. When men ask you, "What think ye of Christ?" and you can reply from the heart, "He is the Son of the living God," then you can open the doors and not before.

Have the gates of hell prevailed against the church? Emphatically, no. The addition of members from its inception until now is proof that they have not. But you may ask, Cannot a person be a Christian without belonging to a church organization? . . . Could a concerted effort have been put forth in missionary work, were there no visible church organization? Would we not be shirking our duty were we to stand aloof from the church? The guerrilla soldier is of little use in a battle. It is the concerted effort of many that makes winning possible.

Open confession is good for the soul. But remember, it is good for more than one soul. How many can trace their final decision to enter the church and serve the Lord by the open confession others were making? Is there not here an argument why you who are timidly standing aloof should come openly into the ranks of the church? Your zeal may be the means of others making a decision. The great question is still, "Who is on the Lord's side?" and if you are convinced that His side is right you are doing yourself an injury, your church an injury, your community an injury by keeping your convictions to yourself. Why not hoist your flag today?—A. S. Christenson in The Bible Advocate.

WHAT THE BIBLE MEANS TO ME

do not know how to describe happiness better than to actually have in possession the perfect ability to express a perfect ideal and have the opportunity to do it. This is not an intangible, mystical thought, but it is to be actual, positive, and concrete and, most important of all, it is guaranteed to you and me by God Himself if we comply with the conditions of belief in and obedience to Him in this life.

The Bible has given me hope to endure the present disappointments, trials, and difficulties that beset us all and when despair and doubt have knocked at my door during my life, it has been primarily my belief in God and my belief in the working out of His plan as set forth in this Book of books that has kept me steady under pressure. It has been a great comfort to me, I assure you.

Christ asserted without any "ifs" and "ands" that "all power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." And I emphasize the word "all."

No more sublime words were ever uttered than those found in the 21st chapter of Revelation, when the voice from heaven promised, "Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away. . . . And he said unto me, Write: for these things are true and faithful."

I am glad to testify that I believe the Bible is the divinely inspired Word of God and that the promises and proofs that it contains are my rock-bottom hope on which I rely. I am, therefore, either entirely wrong or I am entirely right in this hope, and from the many years of life that I have now gone through with this hope, I can testify that it has not deserted me and that all the results from this belief have been good and a blessing. May God add His blessing that some day, not far distant, you and I will see the realization of our hopes.

ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end" (Luke 1:30-33).

When John, the forerunner of Jesus, entered upon his great work of preparing the way of the Lord, his message had to do exclusively with the coming of God's kingdom upon the earth. This fact is made very clear by Matthew's record of John's preaching. "In those days came John the Baptist, preaching in the wilderness of Judæa, and saying, Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand" (Matt. 3:1, 2).

When John was cast into prison, Jesus immediately "began to preach, and to say, Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand" (Matt. 4:17).

Wherever the Master went, in country and village and city, we are told that His one great message was the kingdom of God. This was strongly emphasized when, on one occasion, the people implored the Lord to remain in a certain locality that He might continue His healing among them. But "he said unto them, I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also: for therefore am I sent" (Luke 4:43).

When the twelve were commissioned and sent forth to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, they were commanded to "preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand" (Matt. 10:7).

Practically all, if not all, of the parables of our Lord were designed to instruct the disciples and the apostles along this same line. "The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man which sowed good seed in his field"; "the kingdom of heaven is like to a grain of mustard seed"; "the kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven"; "the kingdom of heaven is like unto a treasure hid in a field"; and "the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net, that was cast into the sea" (Matt. 13:24, 31, 33, 44, 47).

When the disciples asked Jesus to teach them how to pray, He included within the model petition He gave them these impressive words: "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven" (Matt. 6:10). In the summation of His Sermon on the Mount He commanded His hearers to seek "first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness" (Matt. 6:23). The final instructions He gave to His apostles had to do also with the kingdom of God (Acts 1:1-3). We know further that when the apostles went forth under the Great Commission they, too, preached the kingdom of God. "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come" (Matt. 24:14). Thus the gospel of the kingdom of God is to remain the gospel of salvation "to every one that believeth" until the Master comes. No other gospel can possibly take its place in this age of grace.

The only biblical conclusion, therefore, which we may reach is this: If you would be saved, if you would have eternal life through Jesus Christ, if you would have your sins forgiven, you must believe the glad tidings of the kingdom of God and acknowledge your belief in baptism!

"Rejoice, and be exceeding glad: for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you." All of the prophets were insulted by men. Many of them were killed; but their voices were only multiplied into all languages and were heard through all the centuries. With that encouraging promise of great reward, our Savior ended the Beatitudes.

By these Jesus explained who was a fit citizen of the kingdom. The poor in spirit, the meek, the righteous, the merciful, the peacemakers, the pure in heart: these are the true citizens of that glorious kingdom. By this beginning of Jesus' doctrine He has turned upside down man's standards of citizenship. How do you measure up as a citizen according to Jesus' standard, let alone being a ruler in it?

The Lord willing, we shall next study how our Savior turned upside down man's standard of law. May we constantly strive to be good citizens of His kingdom.

Attend General Conference

Fortunate indeed is the young woman or young man who will be present at General Conference. Christian character is at a premium. You want your best friends to have high ideals. The best place for the Jonathans and the Davids to find each other is in church. A large gathering of Church of God young people from all over the nation always takes place at General Conference. It's the place for you to go to enjoy the companionship of honorable, warm-hearted friends.

Some people find it difficult to make new acquaintances. But there is a common fellowship among Christians that makes getting acquainted simple. Go to General Conference with the idea that you will like the rest of us from the very first. It is the truth. You will. And we will like you.

How to Kill a Church

* * * Adapted by D. G. Harvey, Kokomo, Indiana

1. Don't go to church services.
 2. If you do go, go late.
 3. If the weather is bad, don't think of going.
 4. When you do go be sure to find fault with the sermon.
 5. Never accept an office; it is much easier to sit back and criticize.
 6. If you are appointed on a committee, don't fail to forget about it.
 7. If you are not appointed, get peeved about it.
 8. When your opinion is asked reply that you have nothing to say. But afterward tell every one just how things should have been done.
 9. Do nothing more than is absolutely necessary; but when others do the lion's share tell every one that the church is run by a clique.
 10. Don't hurry about paying your pledges, always wait until your treasury is empty.
 11. Don't bother about seeking new members; let others who do the other work do that.
- (If enough members do any of the above things, it is sure to ring the death knell of the church.)

Has Your Society Paid Its Dues?

The constitution of the Berean Society states that the dues shall be paid semi-annually, on the first of January and the first of June.

Check up with your local secretary and see if your society has paid its dues for the year. Send these dues to the National Berean treasurer, Mrs. Esta Starbuck, 333 S. Prospect St., Rockford, Illinois.

Others

"Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others" (Phil. 2:4).

"Our Father in heaven: Bless us we pray Thee and keep us and our loved ones from harm." There's something incomplete about that sentence in our prayers. It has left out others. What about all those not within the circle of our family or companionship? What with the population of the earth at two and a half billion, I, myself, am just a small grain of sand on the beach. But God loves them all. Jesus died for all.

There are Christians living in Russia. We cannot send them Bibles; they would be confiscated at the border. But we can pray for our Christian brethren in that heel-crushed land. Or do we consider prayer is futile, of no value, except to change our own lives and to make us have the peace of God? No, my brother, prayer does that, and more. Paul requested his people to pray for him (Eph. 6:19), for his preaching to be bold. Many of our Christian brothers and sisters scattered all over this earth, doing the work of God, draw upon the heavenly bank for boldness to preach the Word. It appears that their checks require our counter-signing just as much as Moses required two others to hold up his hands.

So when you are praying for yourself and your loved ones never forget to include others. Only in immortal life will you realize all that it will have meant to others.

The Memory Text

What if all the Bibles were destroyed out of America and no more were permitted to be sent in or printed as it is in one sixth of the earth today? Would you have a storehouse of memory texts in your mind? Would you be able to quote the message of the Lord to others? Or would your life be dark, unable to know definitely what God has said, unable to enlighten others? Some in Russia today have only their memories to tell them what God's Word is.

But even if we may have a printed Bible all the days of our lives, there will be times when we will need some verse in the Bible to help us over some thorny path, and we will not even remember that there is such a verse. Where would our Lord Jesus have been if he hadn't remembered the right verses to say to the adversary during the temptation?

Don't neglect that memory verse in your lesson. Some day it may help you through a bad moment.

PREPARED BY MARY A. GESIN

BEFORE THE MOUNT OF GOD

THE children of Israel had been led out of Egypt by Moses and taken safely through the Red Sea. They were now near the place where Moses had stood when God called him from the midst of the burning bush. It was at the foot of Mount Sinai.

God had given Moses some very careful instructions as to what the people should do when they reached this spot. They were to purify themselves, and wash their clothes, and make their camp tidy. They were commanded not to touch the mountain, or they would die. They were to wait there for three days.

On the third day things began to happen. The thunder roared and the lightning flashed. Then they heard a voice like the sound of a trumpet. All of this frightened the people greatly.

Then followed a terrible earthquake which made the great mountain tremble, and smoke poured forth from it. God wanted His people never to forget that day. For God Himself was going to talk to them.

The first thing God told them was that they were to worship no other god but Him. You know, all around were people who worshiped many gods, and God knew that it was not good for them to do so. When we worship the one true God with a humble and sincere heart we grow to be more like Him as time goes by. We would not want to be like the gods that some people worship today.

The next thing God told them was that they were not to make any images to bow down before in their worship. No one could make a true likeness of God, for no one has ever seen Him. And to make one that was not true would be an insult to God.

Then God told His people they were not to use His name in vain. We hear so much swearing today that we sometimes wonder if people realize what they are saying. Why, those old people of Israel who really loved God honored Him so highly they scarcely dared pronounce His name in worship! Let not one of you boys or girls ever grow so thoughtless and irreverent that you would take God's name upon your lips in swearing.

The next commandment was that one day out of the week was to be used for worship and rest. And how far the people of today have wandered from the law of God!

How many good things come to all who set apart one day for God. But, of course, you realize that does not mean we may forget Him the other six days. We would not want to do so.

"Honour thy father and thy mother: that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee," was the next law God gave Israel. Indeed, each one of these laws is repeated in some form for us in the New Testament.

Paul tells us in Colossians 3:20, "Children, obey your parents in all things: for this is well pleasing unto the Lord." See how many ways you can think of in which you can honor your parents. Obedience is one of the first you will name, I am sure.

After that God told the children of Israel they were not to kill, or steal, or lie, or covet, which means envy. Jesus our Savior, when He was telling us how we should act, said that if we desired in our hearts to do these wicked things to those about us, it was just as bad as to do them.

And so we see that if we love the Lord God above all else, with our whole heart and soul and mind, and our neighbors as ourselves, we will keep every law of God. For love drives out all thoughts of evil or the desire to do evil.

Did you ever take a long auto trip over new country with your father and mother and forget to take along a road map? It was rather difficult to go direct to your destination, wasn't it? You drove several miles out of your way, no doubt, especially if the signs along the highway were few and far between.

Well, life without any rules from God to guide us would be something like that. We would wander many times off the right path, and often we would stop and wonder which way we ought to turn.

But God has given us a wonderful Guidebook, the Bible. The more we read it the more we will want to follow it's directions, and the more we will love the Giver of the Book. May each one of you girls and boys learn to love the Bible while you are very young. Then as you grow older it will grow more and more dear to you year by year.

CHURCH HOME-COMING

July 23, 24, 25, Eldorado, Ill.

"Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together . . . but exhorting . . . and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching" (Heb. 11:25).

It is in keeping with the above exhortation that the home folk of the Eldorado Restitution Church invite one and all of its members near and far, together with their friends and Christian friends everywhere, to assemble on July 23, 24, 25.

Program: Friday, 8 p. m., sermon; Saturday, 2 p. m., Bible study; 8 p. m., sermon; Sunday, 10 a. m., Sunday school; 11 a. m., sermon; 12:30 p. m., basket dinner on church lawn; 2 p. m., sermon and Bible study; 7:30 p. m., sermon.

Bro. F. L. Austin of Chicago will be present, God willing, and it is hoped that other speakers may be present.

That "the day is approaching" seems evident on every horizon. Our prayerful urge is that one and all will postpone every other kind of dating for July 23, 24, 25, and make it opportune to attend these additional efforts to seek the Lord while it is day.

For information address H. J. Edmister, Elder, Eldorado, R.F.D., or Miss Elizabeth Martin, Secretary, 1900 N. Illinois St., Eldorado.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

How many friends will you bring with you to Conference this year? It will be a never-to-be-forgotten experience and a great source of spiritual satisfaction, especially to such as may never have attended one of these fraternal gatherings before.

To show that even the United States Government is subject to accident or mistakes, we recently received a wedding announcement signed by Bro. James A. Patrick which should have reached us months ago. The explanation given was that the envelope containing the announcement had slipped behind a drawer in the post office and had just been discovered. The report of the happy event was published, however, after being sent in a second time.

Bro. J. W. McLain, who will be director of music at the coming Bible School and Conferences at Oregon, Ill., requests those who have instruments to bring them for use in orchestra work.

Word from Rensselaer, Ind., brings the information that Bro. J. H. Anderson was able to fill his monthly appointment Sunday morning at that place. One of the chief troubles from which Bro. Anderson suffers at the present is an eye affliction which makes reading not only difficult but results in much pain. We continue our prayers for his complete recovery.

There is much trouble in this old world of ours which only those who are personally affected by it know anything about. May God help us all to be sympathetic and "kind one to another" that we may help to bear each others' secret burdens as well as those which are obvious to us!

Sr. Lottie E. Young writes as follows concerning the forthcoming Bible School and General Conference: "I do hope and pray that the Bible School and Conference may not only be well attended but that the good seed sown may fall into 'good and honest hearts' and produce a bountiful harvest." May each one of our readers join Sr. Young and ourselves in prayer for the success of the coming annual gathering.

Bro. S. J. Lindsay returned last week from his work with Bro. Richard LeCrone in Minnesota. He reports a good meeting and a very pleasing reception from the brethren in and around Eden Valley. Also, incidentally, he assures us that fishing in the northern lakes is unsurpassed in inland waters.

Bro. and Sr. S. T. Stantial and their little son and daughter of Los Angeles, Calif., were surprise visitors at Oregon recently. Needless to say, the editors of The Herald, both of whom held the pastorate of the Los Angeles church for a time, were delighted to meet these faithful young people and to hear the interesting personal reports of the building and dedication of the new church in that western city.

Last Friday morning Bro. and Sr. Victor Corbell of Tempe, Ariz., paid a brief call at the office. They had spent the night with Bro. and Sr. S. J. Lindsay and were on their way to Waterloo, Iowa. It always gives us pleasure to have our brethren from various parts of the country plan their vacation or business trips in such a way that they can stop off in Oregon and bring us a greeting from their home congregations.

FROM LAWRENCEVILLE, OHIO

The annual meeting of the Lawrenceville and Springfield brethren, held Sunday, July 11, at Lawrenceville, was well attended, and successful.

The sermons were about the return of Christ and signs of the times in which we are living. A bountiful dinner was enjoyed in the shade of the maples near by. Throughout the day the spirit of Christian good will and unity was felt. Several more subscriptions for The Restitution Herald were handed in.

Most encouraging of all was the public acknowledgment of Christ by Mr. and Mrs. John Howell of Springfield, and Mrs. Howard Overholtzer, who were baptized in the late afternoon in a near-by stream. Mr. and Mrs. Howell are middle-aged, and are not only well acquainted with Church of God teaching, but for the past year or more have seriously considered the step now taken. Mrs. Overholtzer is a young mother who is anxious to do her part in building a Christian home. Her husband has been a member for a number of years, and is glad to see his wife also one in the Lord's work and fold. Mrs. Overholtzer lives in Lawrenceville, but her address is Springfield, Rt. 7.

All rejoice because of these visible blessings, and the church is more inspired to "press on" and to "occupy" until the Savior returns to earth.

Sydney E. Magaw.

ST CLOUD, MINNESOTA

During the month of June our program was somewhat varied. We had regular services the first Sunday with a picnic dinner at the noon hour. From June 9-13 the Minnesota State Conference was in session at Eden Valley and all services were canceled at our home church in order to allow everyone the opportunity of attending the Conference. In spite of the rain we had a very good time of fellowship together. On June 14 the pastor, wife, baby, and Kenneth Bremer left for Ohio. The first night was spent in Oregon, Ill., with Paul Johnson and family. We again had the privilege of meeting with the brethren at Brush Creek, Ohio. After several days we turned toward Grand Rapids, Mich., where the Michigan State Conference was to be held.

One full and very enjoyable week was spent working with Bro. Austin and Bro. Smead. It was a real pleasure to be among the brethren at this point, and even though strangers in the flesh we were one in spirit.

Several days after the close of Conference we started home via Chicago, stopping overnight at the Austin-Whitehead home. We also called at St. Luke's Hospital for a brief visit with Miss Marjorie Siple, who is now a graduate nurse.

July 4, our first Sunday at home, proved to be a glorious celebration for some, but brought sadness to our whole congregation due to the death of Sr. Richard Grandquist and her infant son. She was one of our faithful workers of the church and was, at the time of her death, one of the Sunday school teachers. May God comfort the family in their sorrow. Funeral services were conducted July 7.

In the evening of July 4 Bro. and Sr. Harold Starbuck of Rockford, Ill., were present at our services. We are always glad to have any out-of-town brethren stop. On Sunday morning, July 11, Bro. Clyde Randall of Font-hill, Ont., with his son Celaine and his father Bro. George Randall, was with us at the morning worship hour. Bro. Randall gave us a very inspiring missionary message. May the Lord bless the message and help us to become more zealous in spreading the gospel.

C. E. Lapp, Pastor,

T. A. DRINKARD REPORT

The writer enjoyed the Christian fellowship and splendid courtesy accorded him where he has "gone preaching the kingdom of God" (Acts 20:25) during May and June, among brethren who realized the necessity of preaching the truth.

At Ripley, Ill., May 1-23, I found a very fine congregation of Godfearing men and women. When pioneer soldiers of the cross come to me and say, "Bro. Drinkard, that preaching sounds like old times," I feel that my labor is not in vain. Our brethren, many now sleeping 'neath the clods of the valley, went through much hardship and faced great opposition to see the work established in Ripley. Some of them are still there and are standing very faithful to the Master. May God richly bless them for their loyalty to Him. Ripley is where Bro. Harvey Krogh, Jr., now labors as pastor. He is a splendid young man with a very bright future. I feel a very deep interest in him, as he obeyed the gospel under my ministry in Blair, Neb.

At Brush Creek, Ohio, June 6-13. Well, those who have labored there know the fine fellowship that a minister finds in that church. Bro. Sydney Magaw is the pastor, and is doing a splendid work. For a pastor or evangelist to do effective work, he must have the support of the brotherhood. Bro. Magaw has a splendid congregation, splendid support, and a fine field. I saw some that I met there years ago, and was happy to renew the friendship which grows through the years. What has been done there can be done elsewhere if our brethren will throw off the cloak of indifference and either pull or push. And if they can't do either, may they get gracefully out of the way so some one else can carry the work forward. Don't be a stumblingblock in the way of others. Time is too precious to waste. You have all to gain and nothing to lose by serving the Master.

On my way to Bear, Ark., I stopped for two nights, June 15 and 16, in St. Louis, Mo., where we had services. The people there are trying to build up the work, and one feels encouraged to go forward after coming in contact with their fellowship and courtesy. May God bless them for serving Him.

On June 18 a meeting was started at Bear, Ark., and closed on the 27th. There was not such a large attendance, but there was good interest. There is a good opportunity to build up a fine work there through the faithfulness of those whose hope is in the Master.

There are many places and calls for meetings if our brethren will unite their efforts, time, and means to answer them. As Bro. Randall says, "The Church of God needs a quickening in life and action." What good will doctrine and faith do us unless we put into practice our faith?

I expect to be at the Arkansas Conference from July 29 to August 1. Following that I plan to attend the General Conference at Oregon, Ill. I shall be happy to meet you there. However, let me hear from you that are interested in preaching the gospel at my home address—Handley, Texas.

T. A. Drinkard.

WALFORD - THAYER

On Saturday, July 3, a very quiet wedding took place, when Miss Georgia M. Walford became the bride of V. Lyle Thayer. They were married at the Church of God parsonage by the groom's father, Elder V. Earl Thayer. They will make their home in Winchester, Va., where both are steadily employed.

HAZEN - RICHEY

Miss Thelma Hazen and Elden Richey were united in marriage at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Connelly, southwest of Martinsville, Ill., Sunday evening, June 27. A. C. Smith, pastor of the Bethel Church of Martinsville, performed the single ring ceremony. The attendants were Luella Morgan and Clement Richey.

Mrs. Richey is the daughter of Sylvester Hazen. She has made her home with her aunt, Mrs. Walter Connelly, most of the time since the death of her mother when she was a small child. Mr. Richey is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Sylvan Richey of Martinsville.

Refreshments of ice cream and cake were served following the ceremony.

Mr. and Mrs. Richey will make their home in Hammond, Ind., where he has employment. Mrs. Sylvan Richey.

EVANGELISTIC ZEAL IN NEW ZEALAND

Our brethren in New Zealand are being stirred up to renewed activity in missionary work by the same considerations that have moved the Church of God to increased zeal in spreading the glad news of the coming King of glory. In the May issue of The Bible Standard, published at Auckland, appears the announcement and program of the "Annual Gatherings of the New Zealand Evangelistic and Publication Association," which corresponds to our own National Bible Institution. The program is prefaced as follows:

"Christian people have a responsibility not to be content simply with their own salvation, but to help to impress it earnestly upon others. Believers in life only in Christ, and in His second coming, are entrusted with a message which the world badly needs, especially now, when 'Social Gospel' and vague abstractions about 'the Christian ethic' make the heedless worldling feel that Christianity has nothing satisfactory for him. We have a message so true, so definite, so adequate, so personal, that we ought to encourage every sincere endeavor for its promulgation. You will be doing so by your personal presence at these meetings, and your interest in their proceedings."

The entire appeal is one that might well be addressed to the Church of God in America on the eve of its great annual gathering, and the last assertion is especially applicable to us. Your presence at the forthcoming General Conference in Oregon, Ill., will not only indicate your interest in the advancement of the gospel of the kingdom of God, but it will actually serve to further its advancement as you contribute of your spiritual and financial support to that work.

WILLIAM H. H. CLARK

William Henry Harrison Clark, son of Amanda and Calvin Clark, was born August 13, 1857, and departed this life June 23, 1937. On August 2, 1886, he was married to Lola Cooper of Ripley, Ill. To this union three children were born, two having passed away in infancy, and Harlan, who has spent most of his life with his parents, except the time served in the army during the World War, is left with the wife and mother to mourn the passing of this good man.

On August 2 of last year Mr. and Mrs. Clark celebrated their golden wedding day with a host of friends and relatives. Mr. Clark was not a member of any church, but has always expressed faith in his Creator.

Are You Short of Oil?

By W. H. Wilson

TEN virgins are represented as going forth to meet the bridegroom. They all took their lamps with them, but only half of them took the precaution to carry well-filled oil cans, that they might refill their lamps when the oil which was in them when they started should be consumed.

The bridegroom evidently tarried longer than they had expected and, wearied with long waiting, they became drowsy. All this time the oil in the lamps was being consumed.

"And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him" (Matt. 25:6).

The virgins were all at once aroused to a keen sense of activity in trimming their lamps, and those who had oil with them began to refill them. The foolish virgins observed that the flickering light of their lamps was about to expire just at the critical moment, when they should go forth to meet the bridegroom. Noticing their need, they said to the wise, "Give us of your oil; for our lamps are gone out." The wise virgins having no oil to spare, admonished the unwise to go and buy oil for themselves. "And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came; and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage: and the door was shut. Afterward came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open to us. But he answered and said, Verily I say unto you, I know you not. Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh" (Matt. 25:10-13).

Hence we observe the necessity of always keeping on hand a liberal supply of oil in case of emergency. To leave it for a more convenient season may result in the door being "shut" before a supply can be obtained.

The use of a lamp is to radiate light. "The people which sat in darkness saw great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up. From that time Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. . . . And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom" (Matt. 4:16-23).

The nature of the light as indicated by the above quotation is that which is radiated from the gospel lamp; for those people "which sat in darkness saw great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up." The gospel light is the only light which is strong enough to light up "the region and shadow of death." When Jesus began to preach "the gospel of the kingdom" in Galilee, "the people which sat in darkness saw great light."

Among the contributors to our church publications of the past generation none was better known nor more highly regarded than was the author of this article, which first appeared in The Restitution, June 19, 1895.

We read that Jesus "brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." The great light seen by people who sit "in darkness," by aid of the gospel lamp, is the light of "life and immortality."

I tell you that people will never see "life and immortality" unless they behold it "through the gospel" light! "The entrance of thy word giveth light!"

How different the condition of those whose life is radiant with the light which is radiated "through the gospel"! "Ye are an elect race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a people for God's own possession, that ye may show forth the excellencies of him who called you out of darkness into his marvelous light" (1 Peter 2:9). "And we have the word of prophecy made more sure; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a lamp shining in a dark place" (2 Peter 1:19).

Gospel light is made more searching and powerful when aided by good works. "Ye are the light of the world, a city set on a hill cannot be hid. Neither do men light a lamp and put it under the bushel, but on the stand, and it shineth unto all that are in the house. Even so let your light shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

We might compare "good works" to keeping the gospel lamp in good order—cleaned, trimmed, and filled. This gives brilliancy to the light, which otherwise would be charred and gummed up and finally go out.

All truly wise virgins are bound to be light-bearers. It is not to be hid under cover, but elevated where all can view it, and if accompanied by "good works" those who behold the light are sure to admire it. It is the duty of every single one to become lamp-bearers and let the light shine as best we can, either in private or in public. None are excused from this duty. It applies personally to you, my brothers and sisters.

It is with sorrow that I see that erroneous doctrine is putting some of the virgins to sleep. The tendency of universalism is to lead those who trust in it to undervalue the gospel oil, and who will be found without a supply when the Bridegroom comes. Hence you will not have "the great light" to show you the way through "the region and shadow of death."

None can become espoused virgins to Christ unless first obedient to the faith; and false teaching may lead others to neglect this duty, because they are taught that this is only incumbent upon Jews.

The coming of the Bridegroom for his bride is an event of daily expectancy; let us take no risks.

Our Increasing Responsibility

FROM East and West, from North and South, comes the sound of tumult and contention! Social, economic, and political unrest prevail everywhere! The nations are angry, the masses are aroused, fears have laid hold upon the people everywhere! And above the sound of confusing voices raised in clamor, is heard the thundering crash of guns, the moans of the maimed and dying on many battlefields, and the plaintive cry of little children begging for bread!

The day of God's wrath is drawing near! And with its rapid approach the responsibility of the Church of God, the mouthpiece of the Almighty, is vastly increased. No one in all this world of perplexity and doubt, of uncertainty and fear, knows the meaning of the tragic happenings that are taking place—no one knows what the outcome is to be—except the devout and patient student of the Word of God! No one else is qualified to “warn the wicked of his way to turn from it” that he may escape the time of trouble that is impending! Only the informed disciple of the Lord can give to the fear-stricken world the means of deliverance and salvation which God has so graciously provided in the Gospel of the Kingdom of God!

Such are the facts to which the Church of God has called attention constantly throughout its history. From pulpit and press we have criticized other denominations for their failure to carry these vitally important truths to the suffering world. But let us candidly ask ourselves these questions: What have we, who boast of our knowledge of these things, done more than others to accomplish this great purpose? What actual sacrifice and effort have we made as a people to tell “all nations” of the coming and kingdom of the Christ? We claim to know the biblical conditions of salvation from sin and death, but how many men and women outside of our own restricted communities have been made acquainted with the only gospel which is “the power of God,” through work you and I and the churches we represent have done?

These are questions which we should take into serious and prayerful consideration when we meet in General Conference next week. The opportunity before us is rich in possibility and heavy with responsibility. May God impress upon us our individual and our collective duty to Him and to our fellow men in these changing times!

Abreast of the Times

Pertinent Comments on the News of the Day

Holy Land an Armed Camp

"When ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh."—Jesus.

JERUSALEM, July 7 (delayed).—More than 12,000 British troops and police transformed the Holy Land into an armed camp tonight when Lord Peel's British Royal Commission announced its plan to split Palestine into Jewish-Arab sovereign states in an effort to end fifteen years of contention and bloodshed between the two races. Loudspeakers blared the four-hundred-page royal report from stores, theaters, mosques, and synagogues throughout Palestine. The British High Commissioner appealed to 1,000,000 Arabs and to 400,000 Jewish colonists to keep order. Troops with fixed bayonets, tear gas, and clubs were scattered everywhere.

The Royal Commission's plan, already approved by the British Government and awaiting only the consent of the League of Nations to put it into effect, gives one third of Palestine to the Jews and two thirds to their Moslem enemies. Between these two states—the Jews on the north along the Mediterranean and the Arabs on the south and west bordering on the British-mandated Arab nation of Transjordan—will be a British-controlled neutral corridor including Jerusalem, Bethlehem, and Nazareth.

Authorities received the long-awaited report with grave fear. They said it appeared inevitable that Arab nationalists, allegedly stirred to anti-British unrest by foreign agents (see "Abreast of the Times," March 30, 1937), would turn their anger upon the Jews because they have steadfastly opposed extension of Jewish concessions. Jewish colonists are likewise angered by the recommendations, arguing that they fall short of the late Lord Balfour's 1917 promise to provide a "national home for Jewry" in the Holy Land.

Christ for the Crisis

"He went forth conquering, and to conquer."—Revelation 6:2.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., July 13.—Recently returned from a world tour in the interest of the Christian Endeavor Society of which he is president, Dr. Daniel A. Poling said in an address before the 36th International Convention of the society, which just came to a close, that observations made in the forty-six countries he visited led him to the "disquieting conclusion that no country and no race has escaped the inoculation of fear and distrust" (Luke 21:26). "Today," he continued, "the world statesmen play bloody chess, war captains maneuver, and always youth marches." And then he asks, "In the light of the facts that constitute the world crisis, what of the church?"

"Protestant Christianity," he insists, "far from being in a position to conduct a successful offensive against the powerful forces opposing the church (Eph. 6:12) may be presently unable to maintain her own positions."

Calling attention to the unity and aggressive zeal being shown by Shintoism throughout Japan, Hinduism and Buddhism in India, and Mohammedanism in Asia and Africa, Dr. Poling laments the divisions and sectarian rivalries that keep Christianity from presenting a united and powerful front to the challenging world. He believes Christian unity will eventually be attained but warns that if the world is to be saved for Christ we dare not wait until that goal is reached.

Again we are impressed with the way in which a really sincere and devout man (Acts 10:2) can overlook the clearly stated purpose of God for this age. This is the "witnessing" age (Matt. 24:14), not the time when He that sits upon the white horse is to go forth "conquering, and to conquer." There can be no question in the mind of the believer but that eventually the crisis of the world will be successfully met by the Lord Jesus Christ. But let us not be misled into thinking that the conquest of the world is to be accomplished before the Lord comes!

Grafting Dead Eyes to Living

"I see men as trees, walking."—Mark 8:24.

Moscow, Russia, July 24.—"How do you call this tree?" asked a man who had never seen clearly in his life before. The question followed a successful operation in which a surgeon had removed a tiny piece of cornea from the blind man's eye and replaced it with a corresponding tiny particle of cornea taken from the eyes of a dead man. According to The Digest four hundred operations of this sort have already been performed in Russia. The originator of the amazing new technique is the well-known scientist, V. P. Filatov.

If men can make dead tissues live, God surely can make the dead in their entirety to live (Isa. 26:19).

Interpreting God's Word

By R. H. Judd

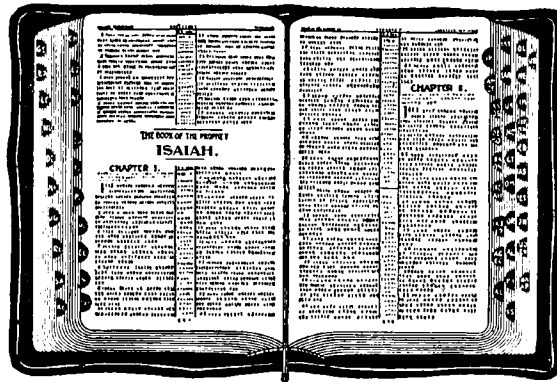

ONE has often been much surprised in reading literature on Bible subjects to see how little effort is sometimes made, even by leaders of Christian thought, to get at the bedrock foundation facts of the subject under review. This is true of "orthodox" and conditionalist alike.

Probably few books of recent date on the question of immortality have had a more sympathetic reception than has Life and Immortality, by our well-known and personal friend, Rev. Eric Lewis, B.A.

Discussing the subject of death and the tree of life, Rev. Lewis says: "Presumably Adam and Eve had been feeding on the tree of life." And again, "We do not know for certain whether their life was maintained by eating of the fruit of that tree." In the writer's opinion doubt on such a matter is too important to pass over, especially so when the answer is clearly given in Scripture, and all that is needed is more careful study and analysis of the language used.

In Genesis 2:9 we read: "And out of the ground (in the Garden) made the Lord God to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight and good for food: the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, and the tree of the knowledge of good and evil." From this verse it is clear that there were other trees that were "good for food" besides these two which are singled out as differing in some special way from the others. That the tree of knowledge of good and evil was the only tree forbidden is evident from verses 16 and 17. Had the narrative ended there our friend would have been correct in asserting that we do not know for certain whether the lives of Adam and Eve were maintained by eating of the fruit of the tree of life. He adds the remark: "We may with reason presume so." We might, however, with as much and probably more reason, presume that with so many other trees that were "good for food" they had not eaten of that tree. Already having life they did not realize their need. The other trees gave sustenance, not life, and that is all that any food gives us today. It was not life they desired, it was knowledge, and it apparently did not matter at the moment whether that knowledge was "good" or "evil."

In Genesis 2:9 these two trees are differentiated from the others by the little but significant word "also." In quoting Genesis 3:22, the author of Life and Immortality inadvertently omits the word "also," which is the key and the answer to his doubt. Let us notice how clear the statement is with that word in its right place. "And now, lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life." He had taken of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, and he was turned from the Garden lest he "take also of the tree of life." When that statement is considered in conjunction with the fact (which I think all will admit) that only once had he partaken of the tree of knowledge, the logical inference is tantamount to a statement that he had not yet, even once, taken of the tree of life. Had he done so and then died, the tree of life would not have been a suitable example of the true Tree of Life—our Lord and Savior, Jesus the Christ.

Let us notice another thought in close connection with the above, which illustrates the need of care and thoroughness in the study of God's Word before forming conclusions.

In Genesis 3:17 Adam is told: "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Here is a clearly stated matter of fact, but because Adam did not die in the day, but continued to live, many human devices have been resorted to to show that in some mysterious way the sentence was carried out. God did not threaten spiritual death, nor do we have any right to assume that He did. Neither did He address His threat to the character of Adam; but He did threaten death to the person of Adam: "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Nothing could be more explicit. The time named is equally as definite, viz., "in the day that thou eatest." If that does not distinguish between the day in which Adam ate the fruit and every other day of his natural life then there is no language capable of doing so. To speak of the day in which Adam ate as a day of a thousand years is unreasonable; indeed, foolish. Adam did not live one such day. It would therefore be impossible to distinguish one of those days from another. Further, the threat was directed to all that was embraced in the word "thou"—"the man" that He "commanded"—not merely some part of him.

One explanation that has been offered by some is that the marginal reading, "dying thou shalt die," meets the case in that a protracted death of indefinite duration is implied. Close examination, however, will reveal the futility of the thought. In the first place, "dying thou shalt die" is but a Hebraism to denote emphasis and certainty by repetition of the fact stated, and is (Please turn to page 11)

The Doctrine of Christ

By Harvey Krogh, Jr.

LAST week in the study of the teaching of Christ we discovered His standard of citizenship for the new kingdom. In this study we wish to see how He established a new standard of law and how He struck at the very roots of sin.

As introduction to this Jesus said, "Ye are the salt of the earth." Why did He not say, "Ye are the gold of the earth"? Is not gold more precious than salt? Oh, no, it is not! You and I can live without gold much better than we can live without salt. Salt is necessary and vital, therefore, God made so much of it. Humanity needs salt, and the world needs the disciples of Christ and the characters that He is building.

Maybe you have wondered what Christ meant when He said, "But if the salt have lost its savour, wherewith shall it be salted?" In the days of the first disciples, and before those days, there was a tax or customs duty on salt, and because of the abuse of this tax many mixed the salt with earth. When it reached the consumer it was often very impure, but was still salt. But sometimes that earth and salt were washed with water and the water dissolved the salt and carried it out of the earth which had been salty. It was then spoken of as salt that had lost its saltiness. It was therefore good for nothing but to be trodden under foot of men. The disciples are the salt and they dare not lose their value and purity by adulteration with the earth.

"Ye are the light of the world." Jesus meant to impress upon the minds of His followers how important their work was. That means that your labor for the Christ is also important. And as it would be foolish to make a light and then cover it up, so we should let our light shine. Consider for a moment the importance of light. And how much more important is that light of understanding that comes only from God and His Son!

The glory for all the good works that we do should go to the Father, for it is His influence upon us and that of His Son that enables and inspires us to do good.

Now Jesus speaks of the law. He came not to destroy it but to complete it, and no part of it should pass away until He had completed it. And our righteousness must exceed that of the scribes and Pharisees who kept only a part of the letter of the law, for the letter only restrains the outward manifestation of inward sin.

Then Jesus began to say to them, "Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time." Who were they of old time? The prophets, the lawgiver, and the people of the Mosaic law. That law was God's first step to change the characters of men, men in all their sin, their unrestrained lust, their unruléd passion, their greed. That law was a big step when men had been demanding a life for an eye, an arm for a finger, and a hundred lives for one life. Yes, it was a great step toward the right, when the law only required "an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth."

"Ye have heard . . . Thou shalt not kill; and whosoever shall kill shall be in danger of the judgment." This was spoken as though it were the custom to kill, and it took for granted that evil was dominant and that instinct and lust ruled. "But I say unto you, That whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the judgment." Anger equal to murder? We cry out that that is radical. But it isn't, for Jesus knew where sin starts: first a hard feeling, then harsh words, evil deeds, and murder! If that ill feeling could be nipped in the bud, the sin would be conquered. It is too late after the thought is executed. It will not suffice to forbid the final act, which is only the result of the sinful thought. That is His doctrine—quench the fire while it is yet a spark.

"And whosoever shall say to his brother, Raca, shall be in danger of the council: but whosoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire. Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee; leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift." If anyone has anything against you, you are the one to make the first step to him and do all in your power to make reconciliation. Do you know of anyone that holds anything against you? You had better make it right. And this is not my teaching; it is the doctrine of Christ.

Then our Savior said that we should come to terms with our opponent quickly. We are not to carry on the strife. If you do you will get the worst of it every time. Make settlement and get those things taken care of.

Again, "Ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time, Thou shalt not commit adultery: but I say unto you, That whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart." Even a single evil thought is condemned by the Master. Oh! how careful we must be, for it is only the pure in heart that shall see God. We must keep close to our Savior. We need His guidance in all that we think of as well as in all that we do.

"And if thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell. And if thy right hand offend thee, cut it off, and cast it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell." We might think that Jesus didn't mean that literally. But men literally have an arm cut off and cast from them if blood poison has infected it and endangered the whole body. They allow their bodies to be cut open for the removal of diseased parts when their lives are in danger. Why not cut off that part which is leading to the destruction of the very opportunity of eternal life? Maybe if you would think seriously of cutting off the offending member, you would walk closer to the Savior and the offense would not come. Try it!

"It hath been said, Whosoever shall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement: but I say unto you, That whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery: and whosoever shall marry her that is divorced committeth adultery.

"Again, ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time, Thou shalt not forswear thyself, but shalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths: but I say unto you, Swear not at all; neither by heaven; for it is God's throne: nor by the earth; for it is his footstool: neither by Jerusalem; for it is the city of the great King. Neither shalt thou swear by thy head, because thou canst not make one hair white or black. But let your communication be, Yea, yea; Nay, nay: for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil." If your word is true you need no oath; if untrue, an oath will not make it true. You and I in our weakness do not know what shall be on the morrow, nor do we know that we shall be able to do that which we might swear that we would do. We should not therefore swear and make God responsible for our failure. We may promise to do the best we can and ask the Lord to help us keep our promises. So let us tell the truth always and strive always to keep our word.

In all these things Jesus has given us instruction that has revolutionized the lives of His disciples, because His laws change the very life rather than merely restrain the outward expression of evil. These teachings are drawing us closer to our Savior.

Let us meditate on these true sayings, that we may ever abide in the doctrine of Christ.

Dead in Sins

By T. A. Drinkard

"Even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ."—Eph. 2:5.

AS WE study the Word of God we should learn that there are at least three different kinds of death: (1) dead in sins (Eph. 2:5); (2) dead to sin (Rom. 6:2); and (3) death that ends all consciousness (Psalm 6:5).

When Brother and Sister Adam became sinners as the result of transgressing God's law, they became "dead in trespasses and sins" (Eph. 2:1) and this was the crime, and should never be confounded with the penalty, literal, physical death, that reversed the order and returned them to dust (Gen. 3:19; Psalm 146:3, 4), because they had done the things that they should not have done (Gen. 3:17). Their sin found them out (Num. 32:23). Not only did they become dead in sin, but they came under the penalty of broken law, a reversal back to a non-existent state, into a death that ended conscious existence. To be morally dead is another way of saying that men and women are sinners and as such they are reckoned as dead, and while they are in this state of alienation (Eph. 2:12) the law of God becomes operative in its quickening influence. And when the finished work of this quickening process appears, then the finished product has become dead "to sin" (Rom. 6:2), by being "baptized into Christ" (Gal. 3:27) which was a figure of Christ's literal death upon the cross.

Only those who are dead in trespasses and sins can die to sin, for to die to sin one must be alive to sin first, and then through the purifying work of the gospel a new relationship is brought about and established.

It may be assumed that Christ died to sin, but such assumption is only superficial, since to die to sin you must first be alive to sin, and we know that according to Scripture Christ was not a sinner, since Paul affirms that Christ "was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin" (Heb. 4:15), because He "knew no sin" (2 Cor. 5:21). He knew no sin, neither did He recognize its necessity in His own life nor in the lives of those for whom He died, else He would not have died. Paul says, "For in that he died, he died unto sin once: but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God" (Rom. 6:10).

But that Paul did not mean to convey the idea that Christ was first alive to sin, and therefore died thereto, is clearly proved within the border of this text and also by others. Let me call your attention to Murdock's translation of this verse: "For in dying, he died for sin, once; and in living, he liveth unto God." Why and how could He be "made . . . sin for us" (2 Cor. 5:21)? By Hebrews 9:26—"but now once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself"—it is seen that "Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many" (Heb. 9:28). "While we were yet sinners, Christ died for us" (Rom. 5:8), and having died for sinners, it could be truly said that He died for sin. He came to "bear the sins of many," not for Himself.

Today when men and women obey the law of God they are said to be "free from the law of sin and death" (Rom. 8:2). Therefore when they become free they are also said to be "dead to sin" (Rom. 6:2), hence they should not "live any longer therein," because sin does not lead to God; it destroys, blasts, and ruins, wherever it takes root.

In All Things Like His Brethren

By A. H. Zilmer

ONE of the most sublime facts of the Bible is the self-effacing and loving service which the Lord Jesus Christ rendered for the benefit of humanity. Jesus is presented to us in two aspects, each of which must be given its proper place. We believe that the more important of these is the fact of His divine Sonship; the second, that, on account of His birth of Mary He was the Son of Man.

As Son of God certain privileges, emoluments, and exemptions accrued to Him.

His human maternity and His human nature exposed Him to certain disabilities. As Son of Man He was subject to the common vicissitudes of humanity, and His mental reactions were the same as those of other human beings. He was of their nature quite as much, and was therefore quite as mortal as they. His flesh craved indulgence of its desires the same as that of others of His kind. He could be and was tempted in every point as they are. His days, like theirs, were circumscribed by a nature which, not having been made for interminable existence, was of a sort sooner or later to reach its end.

As God's Son He was "the heir" (Matt. 21:38)—God's Heir. As such He received by inheritance from His Father a name more excellent than that of the angels (Heb. 1:4). As the Son of God He was rich (2 Cor. 8:9). God gave His angels charge concerning Him to bear Him up, lest at any time He strike His foot against a stone (Matt. 4:6). He was assured that twelve legions of angels were held in reserve to render service to Him when needed, and that He had but to ask and they would be sent for His safety (Matt. 26:53). The power had been given to Him to make bread of stones, satisfy His hunger, sustain His life, and demonstrate, at least to Himself, if to no others, that He was the Son of God (Matt. 4:3).

We suggested above that as the Son of God certain exemptions accrued to Him. In Hebrews 5:8 it is said of Him, "Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered." This language suggests that as God's Son He might have been exempt from suffering, or at least felt that He was. Yet, notwithstanding this, He suffered; and this in the path of obedience to His Father's will. In rendering obedience He is set in juxtaposition with Adam. While Adam, being placed in favorable and pleasant surroundings, was "disobedient," Jesus, placed in adverse surroundings, was "obedient" (Rom. 5:19). Disobedience implies forbidden self-indulgence; obedience, self-denial. Thus the two men stand at the poles apart. It was just as possible for Adam to obey as it was for him to disobey; and it was just as possible for Jesus to disobey as it was for Him to obey. Both were tempted to do that which was forbidden. The one yielded to the temptation; the other overcame it. The one was condemned for his disobedience; the other was approved and commended for His obedience. The one on account of his disobedience was left upon the earthly plane upon which he was created; the other, on account of His obedience, was exalted to the heavenly plane. Because of His perfect obedience "God also hath highly exalted him" (Phil. 2:8, 9).

In the case of Adam, God did not intervene to prevent him from becoming disobedient. In the case of Jesus, God did not make it impossible for Him to disobey, nor did He force Him to do that which He had commanded. Adam, by disobedience, brought suffering upon himself; Jesus, by obedience amid sufferings, obtained the nature which is free from suffering.

Jesus, the same as "the children" (Heb. 2:14), the "many sons" whom He is to "bring unto glory" (v. 10), was a partaker of flesh and blood. This made it possible for Him to be tempted in all points like as we are, and as Adam was tempted. Without flesh and blood temptation, temptation, as the word is used in speaking of human trial, would be impossible. Temptation implies lust, so that he who is tempted is drawn mentally by his own lust, or desire, and enticed (James 1:14). In this manner was Jesus tempted.

As His flesh and blood nature made possible His temptation, so it was, like the nature of other flesh and blood beings, mortal and terminable in condition and tendency. In a very interesting and unique way this fact is set forth in the Scriptures. Here He, the same as Adam and all his kind, is spoken of as having been made "a little lower than the angels" (Psalm 8:5; Heb. 2:7, 9). "But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death . . . that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man." This gives us the idea that to be made lower than the angels is to be made capable of suffering death. Consonant with this is the thought expressed by Jesus, "But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world (age), and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage, neither can they die any more, for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection" (Luke 20:35, 36). In the one case it is "lower than the angels" in order to be able to suffer death; in the other it is "can . . . die (no) more (because) equal unto the angels."

Had Jesus at the first been made equal to the angels, He would have been deathless, and hence could not have tasted death. Both Adam and Jesus were what they had been "made"—lower than the angels. Neither "made" himself what he was as to nature. They were both "made" living souls. But Adam, having disobeyed the divine command, was not "made a quickening spirit," as was Jesus on account of His obedience.

The object of His participation in flesh and blood was twofold:

First: That through death He might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the diabolos. The Greek text says "paralyze the diabolos." Who is this diabolos? It is said that he had the power of death?

James establishes the following relation between temptation, lust, sin, and death: (1) Every man is tempted when he is drawn away and enticed by his own lust. (2) When lust has conceived it brings forth sin. (3) Sin when finished brings forth death.

Thus, were it not for lust, there would be no sin; and if sin were not, there would be no death of the kind aimed at in James 1:14, 15. In this way lust has the power of death, and Jesus through death made this ineffective.

But did not God make Adam and all his descendants, including Jesus, with lust or desires peculiar to their kind, and which are absolutely necessary for the well-being of the race? This cannot be denied. Adam had, and only could have, such desires as the Creator gave him, and likewise the race springing from him, including Christ. Was the indulgence of those desires wrong? Only under certain specified conditions was it forbidden, and therefore wrong. If not forbidden, then such indulgence is not sinful. The right or wrong of such indulgence therefore depends entirely upon whether it is permitted or forbidden.

However there is further, this element to be considered, that those desires belong entirely to the earthy, animal, or sensuous nature. No moral considerations attach or belong to them. The question of morals is reserved entirely to the higher, the moral faculties, and it is the function of the moral judgment to pass upon the permissibility or otherwise of the indulgence of those desires. Where the divine rule forbids, the very entertainment of such desire is sinful in its tendency, and is potentially diabolical and through indulgence leads to sin; and sin, when finished, produces death. It was such desire for forbidden objects that Jesus, through His obedience unto death, rendered powerless.

Second: Another object in the death of Jesus was that He might "deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage" (Heb. 2:15). And who were these? We have several clear New Testament indications. We read of some being in "bondage" to the Mosaic law. "Even so when we were children (minors) we were in bondage under the elements of the world; but when the fulness of time was come, God sent forth his Son, born of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons" (Gal. 4:1-5). The context shows that it was the Mosaic law to which they were in bondage. "But after that ye have known God, or rather are known of God, how turn ye again to the weak and beggarly elements, wherunto ye desire again to be in bondage?" (v. 9).

Elsewhere the Apostle reminded the brethren that they had not "received the spirit of bondage again to fear, but the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father" (Rom. 8:15). What was it that inspired fear? It was the law. It pronounced a curse upon everyone who failed in any particular to do all things that the law commanded (Gal. 3:10), and the transgressor was stoned to death. If the brother, or son, or friend, or even the wife of the bosom, enticed anyone "secretly to serve other gods," the Israelite was neither to consent to pity anyone, nor spare nor conceal him. The command was, "Thou shalt stone him with stones that he die, because he hath sought to thrust thee away from the Lord thy God . . . And all Israel shall hear and fear, and shall do no more any such wickedness as this among you" (Deut. 13:6-11). The same rule applied to the presumptuous sinner who refused to hearken to the priest: "Even that man shall die, and thou shalt put away the evil from Israel. And all the people shall hear and fear, and do no more presumptuously" (chap. 17:12, 13). The same applied in the case of a rebellious son: "And all the men of the city shall stone him with stones that he die: so shalt thou put away evil from among you; and all Israel shall hear and fear" (chap. 21:18-21).

Thus the fear of death was the motive for keeping the law, and those who were under the law were all their lifetime subject to bondage. Through the death of Jesus the law was put away, or taken out of the way. He blotted "out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross" (Col. 2:14). What more did He do? He "spoiled principalities and powers, (and) made a shew of them openly, triumphing over them in it" (v. 15). Who were those "principalities and powers?" They were the Jewish law-enforcing authorities, including the eldership and the members of the Sanhedrin, the body which was entrusted with the enforcement of the law and the punishment of the transgressors. These He "spoiled" or stripped of their authority by taking away the law. The law then, having been taken out of the way, could no longer consistently be enforced, and therefore the fear of death is gone, and the worshipers may "serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter" (Rom. 7:6).

The result is most gratifying. After all, the desires of the flesh must somehow be regulated, whether by the law or otherwise. Jesus established the rule by which this was to be done. It was not by the law of Moses, with its threat of death hanging momentarily over the subject's head. The fear of death is not the best motive for the curbing of those desires. Such fear operates from without, to within. The new law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus works from within outward, and is prompted not by fear of death but by the desire to please God. The former relates to the instinct of self-preservation from danger lying without; the latter from love inwrought by the Spirit. Both methods aimed at the same result, that of curbing and keeping within proper bounds the natural desires, good and wholesome as they are, for the end they were intended to serve; but of the two the latter is vastly better.—The Faith.

Jerusalem and Palestine

WHY are the nations interested in events concerning Jerusalem and Palestine? Why have events here, in only a few years, attracted attention of both young and old in all nations? We know that only a few years ago this country was very desolate with hardly any rainfall and only a few buildings, and very little attention was given to what occurred here. But now what has happened? Since 1922 many thousands of Jews have returned to Palestine from all nations. The question may be asked, "Why are the Jews returning to Palestine?" We will let the Word of God answer.

"Behold, I will gather them out of all countries, whither I have driven them in mine anger, and in my fury, and in my great wrath; and I will bring them again unto this place, and I will cause them to dwell safely: and they shall be my people, and I will be their God: and I will give them one heart, and one way, that they may fear me for ever, for the good of them, and of their children after them: and I will make an everlasting covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them, to do them good; but I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me. . . . For thus saith the Lord; Like as I have brought all this great evil upon this people, so will I bring the good that I have promised them. And fields shall be bought in this land, whereof ye say, It is desolate without man or beast; it is given into the hand of the Chaldeans. Men shall buy fields for money and subscribe an evidence and seal them, and take witnesses in the land of Benjamin, and in the places about Jerusalem, and in the cities of Judah, and in the cities of the mountains, and in the cities of the valley, and in the cities of the south: for I will cause their captivity to return, saith the Lord" (Jer. 32:37-40, 42-44).

Isn't it wonderful that we have the privilege to serve such a glorious and all-wise God, who told us through the Prophet Jeremiah five hundred and ninety years before Christ that the Jews and Israelites, who at that time were scattered among the nations, would return and rebuild the cities and cultivate the soil of Palestine again? Knowing that this land for 2,520 years has been desolate and trodden under the feet of Gentile nations, it is surely strengthening to our faith to see in our own lives the prophecies concerning the return of the Jews and the rebuilding of this country fulfilled. How wonderful it is to see the beautiful modern cities that have arisen out of a desolate and scarcely inhabited country in so short a time. There are some places that look very desolate yet, but nevertheless God's blessings have returned to this country in many, many ways.

"And I will bring again the captivity of my people of Israel, and they shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof; they shall also make gardens, and eat the fruit of them. And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God" (Amos 9:14, 15).

This illuminating communication was sent by L. D. Snow, Jerusalem, Palestine, to The Bible Advocate, Seventh Day Church of God journal published at Salem, West Virginia. The author provides a remarkably vivid picture of the rebuilding of the homeland of the returning Jews.

After one sees this country and the old cities that are not rebuilt he can get a clearer understanding as to what the Prophet meant when he said that they shall build the waste, uninhabited cities. It is marvelous to see the modern farms and farm homes that have been built by the Jews since their return to the Holy Land. All along the highway from Haifa to Jerusalem can be seen beautiful farms of wheat and rye, and all kinds of fruits and vegetables are growing in the valleys and on the mountains. On this same trip we saw modern nurseries with their modern watering systems. I know of no evidence to present to you which would more absolutely confirm the prophecy concerning the return of the Jews to Palestine and the rebuilding of this country, than the reports given in the daily, weekly, and monthly newspapers of the progress of the Jewish national home in Palestine.

"The rapid progress of Palestine, even in time of stress, is nowhere more manifest than on the Haifa-Acre highway. It is a fact that if one has not traveled along the Haifa highway for two or three months, the neighborhood will have altered its outlines when eventually one makes this brief journey. Nowhere are the changes more notable than in Emek Zebulun, the area to the right and left of the highway belonging to the Keren Kayemeth and Bayside Land Corporation. New factories are steadily being added in the industrial zones, which lie nearest the city; in the suburban and agricultural zones, monuments to the foresight of the owners of the land (who commissioned a distinguished town-planning expert, Prof. Patrick Abercrombie, to lay out this important area before it was occupied and not as it so often done, afterwards), new homes and holdings rise up at the rate of almost one every day.

"Kiriath Motzkin is now entering on its third year of existence. Each dweller was allotted two thirds of a dunam and was required to pay sixty pounds towards the cooperative company which organized the establishment of the quarter, the provision of public facilities, etc. Eleven different designs for two- and three-roomed houses were composed, from which every settler could make his choice. Today, there are 272 houses in the quarter, of which nine are two-storied. 100 of these houses were built in the past year.

"Another Jewish agricultural settlement came into being in the past week. Like its recent predecessors, it has been established on the land of the Jewish National Fund, its site being in Emek Hepher, the great stretch acquired for the Fund by the Jews of Canada. Unlike its predecessors, however, its membership is not recruited from labor ranks, but from the youthful element of the middle-class farmer association, Benei Benjamin. This catholicity of land distribution is further evidenced by the forthcoming settlement in the Beisan Valley of Kibbutz Rodges, a Mizrahi group, and Akiba, a General Zionist group. That, of course, is only equitable, for all groups should participate in land settlement in the national home. Kfar Bnei Ben kamin occupies an area of 600 dunams not far from Natania. Forty families are being established there, each having fifteen dunams, of which seven dunams will be placed under citrus and eight under vegetables, fruits, and fodder.

“Orthodox Halutzim (this is one of the colonies). Our kibbutz (cooperative group) has been in residence here for eight years on an area of 300 dunams (about 75 acres). In all, we number two hundred and fifty souls, including adults and children, and fifty members of German Youth Aliya who have joined us in the past two years.

“During the time we have been here, and before our eyes were always fixed on our own, where we might live fully that life that we envisage as our own, a life on the land in the form of a kvutza (cooperative settlement), where we shall practice not only agriculture, but all other precepts of our religion. For ours is a Mizrahi group, regarding the Torah as the basis of our lives.

“Our menage at present consists of 6,000 chickens, some cows, citrus and other fruit trees, vegetable and flower gardens, and a tree nursery. We have a workshop where we carry out not only our own repairs, but take in also a little work from outside. While our small farm provides a good part of our livelihood, our major income is derived from work in the privately owned groves of the district and from outside sources of work.

“In most respects Kibbutz Rodges is like other kibbutzim in every part of the country. We all work with a will, and work hard, sharing everything alike. The women-folk join in the work equally with the men. In all our reckonings it is not the individual who counts, but the community, and so there are no bickerings or confused thinking or acting. But in one respect we differ from most. Twice daily, at dawn, before work, and at sunset, after work, we assemble for prayers. Sabbaths and festivals are more for us than mere days of physical rest; they are spiritual occasions, too. Friday night is quite different from all other nights at Kibbutz Rodges. After service, a traditional Sabbath eve meal is served in the communal dining hall, which echoes and reechoes during the evening with Zemirot lustily sung. Not a few of our tunes have been composed by members of the kibbutz, and of these we are especially proud.

ECONOMIC NOTES

“New and little-heard-of developments are constantly taking place in the field of Palestine industry. There is a perpetual effort to find outlets for the steady influx of capital into the country, with the result that industries, which no one could have anticipated would flourish in Palestine, are continually being established, and in some instances are beginning to take firm root.

“One such unexpected type of factory is the rubber goods factory operating near Petah Tikva. Although motor tires are not among its products and Dunlop has not yet found a Palestinian rival, tires for baby carriages and a vast variety of small rubber goods—plugs and shoe heels, for example—are being manufactured satisfactorily.

“A new and also unexpected industry, in the neighborhood of Tel-Aviv, is the fountain pen factory which placed its products on the market for the first time three weeks ago. The manufacture of fountain pens is an extremely complicated business. There are dozens of processes to be gone through before the finished article appears, and these are being performed with remarkable efficiency in the Palestinian factory. The possibility of building up an expert industry in this line is now being considered.

“A special machine for sorting oranges is being produced in a foundry near Tel-Aviv. This is a local invention, and is produced and used only in Palestine, although possessing a world patent. The use of this machine involves a very great saving in the cost of packing the fruit.” (From the Palestine Review of May 7, 1937.)

We see in these few notes, which harmonize with the divine prophecy concerning the return of the Jews and the rebuilding of this country, the prophecy of Isaiah fulfilled, which says, “And they (the Jews) shall build the old wastes, they shall raise up the former desolations, and they shall repair the waste cities, the desolations of many generations” (Isa. 61:4).

How wonderful it is to know that God through His Holy Spirit revealed unto the Apostle Peter the glorious scripture, which says, “We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts: knowing this first, that no prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost” (2 Peter 1:19-21).

Do we have any way of proving that the prophecies given to us by the holy prophets of God concerning the return of the Jews and the restoration of this country were not their own private interpretation, but through the inspiration of the almighty God? The above quotations that we have given you from The Palestine Review in harmony with these prophecies, should be enough to convince any honest-minded person that the prophecies of God’s blessings returning to this country were not merely ideas of the prophets, but God was directing their minds so that when we should see these prophecies fulfilled our faith would be strengthened in Him and in His Word.

There are some people who do not believe these prophecies, but we are glad to present further undeniable evidence concerning these things. (Please turn to page 16)

What Does Man Do While Dead?

AT THE very time God told Adam and Eve that disobedience would result in death, the serpent said unto the woman, "Ye shall not surely die: for God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil" (Gen. 3:4, 5).

Notwithstanding the fact that all through the centuries of time the countless funeral processions, with their accompanying heartaches and tears, are convincing proof that death is the exact opposite of life, nevertheless the idea advanced by Satan in the Garden of Eden, that man does not really die after all, is believed by many in the world today. We are told that only the body dies, while the soul never dies, and that in the case of a righteous person the soul goes up to heaven, while in the case of a wicked person the soul goes down into hell.

It is very important that we know the truth concerning this matter, for while it may be pleasing to some to think of their loved ones as going to heaven at death, yet we are compelled to think of the sadness that comes to those whose loved ones die in an unsaved condition. Surely no one wants to put such persons into a place of torment; and yet that is exactly what we do if it is a fact that man has a soul inside of him that never dies.

Certainly as to the truth regarding what actually happens to a man at death, the Lord, who made man, is the only one who knows all the facts in the case. God told Adam that man was made from dust, and when placed in the grave his body would return again to dust. We all know that the body at death has lost all action, all organs have ceased to function, and in the course of time the very bones will turn into the mineral elements composing the soil itself.

WHAT HAPPENS TO THE SOUL?

But what about that thinking, reasoning part of man some refer to as the soul? What becomes of it? In the first place, the Bible nowhere speaks of the soul as something dwelling in man that leaves the body at death, in order either to enter heaven or else to take on some other form of life. Such an idea is a mere theory, and does not have a single Bible verse to substantiate it.

Solomon, the wisest man who ever lived except Christ, speaks of man's state in death in these words: "The living know that they shall die: but the dead know not any thing, neither have they any more a reward; for the memory of them is forgotten. Also their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished; neither have they any more a portion for ever in any thing that is done under the sun. Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might;

In these days when even non-religious papers, noting the death of a celebrity, speak of the conscious existence of part of the person during death, such studies as these are most timely. Those of our readers who are not as yet convinced of the truth of the views expressed herein, will find them presented in a clear, scriptural, and kindly manner.

for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest" (Ecc. 9:5, 6, 10).

Let us also record the testimony of David, the sweet singer of Israel, who wrote so many beautiful psalms, and who certainly would be entitled to go to heaven at death if anyone would.

"Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish" (Psalm 146:3, 4). "Shall thy lovingkindness be declared in the grave? or thy faithfulness in destruction? Shall thy wonders be known in the dark? and thy righteousness in the land of forgetfulness?" (Psalm 88:11, 12).

From these scriptures it is made very clear that when a person dies, the power to think, to love, to hate, or any other function of the mind ceases. A person's very thoughts perish. That being so, surely no part of a man has gone to heaven, but all ability to think, to love, to worship, etc., is as dead as the body.

Job, the faithful servant of old, puts it this way: "His (man's) sons come to honour, and he knoweth it not; and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them" (Job. 14:21).

This testimony by Job is absolutely contrary to the views of some, that loved ones at death are in heaven looking down upon their friends left on earth. Personally, I am more satisfied every day with God's plan, which is that every person who dies goes down into the grave, peacefully, quietly resting, wholly unconscious of anything going on in the world. A godly mother sleeps on not knowing that her son has committed some terrible crime and brought disgrace upon the family name. On the other hand, if a wayward son dies, his mother is not tormented with the thought that his soul is being tormented in hell fire. She knows he is laid to rest, unconscious of passing events, and when he is raised in the second resurrection to be judged, a just God will not permit him to suffer more punishment than he should be called upon to bear. The Lord allows all to rest in the grave. Every one of them is unconscious, having no knowledge of time or events transpiring on the earth. They are all asleep; and when one is asleep he knows absolutely nothing. This is exactly man's condition in death.

SILENCE IN DEATH

When good King Hezekiah was told by the Lord that he was soon to die, he prayed that his life might be extended. The Lord granted him fifteen additional years. In his appreciation for this extension of life he declared, "The grave cannot praise thee, death cannot celebrate thee: they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth" (Isa. 38: 18). Hezekiah well knew that at death he would not go to heaven to join the angel band in singing praises to God. He knew his voice would be silent in the grave.

David did not go to heaven when he died, for centuries after his death the Apostle Peter at Pentecost stated that David "is not ascended into the heavens" (Acts 2:29, 34).

In the 12th chapter of the book of Ecclesiastes we have a description of a person growing old and finally dying. The 7th verse reads as follows: "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was: and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it."

From this scripture some have concluded that the expression "spirit" as used here refers to a never-dying intelligence in man which ascends to heaven at death. Now this is the only place in all the Bible where it says anything about the spirit's returning to God who gave it. But the scripture is speaking of all men who die, both evil and good. Can it be that the spirit of a sinful man—if it is something in a man that does not die—actually goes to heaven at death? Certainly no one would want to advocate that. Such a suggestion would be repulsive. What, then, can be the meaning of the expression, "spirit," as used here in the sense that it returns to God who gave it? There is no scripture that speaks of an immortal, never-dying spirit.

In James 2:26 we read: "As the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also." The margin of the Bible reads "breath" instead of "spirit." In other words, it should read, "As the body without the breath is dead," etc. So "spirit" in the Bible is often used to refer to the breath.

Job speaks in the 27th chapter and 3rd verse as follows: "All the while my breath is in me, and the spirit of God is in my nostrils." Instead of "spirit" the margin reads, "the breath which God gave him." So here again "spirit" means the breath of life.

Job 34:14, 15 speaks of God's gathering to Himself His breath of life, stating that when He does man returns again to dust.

In Job 12:10 we read that the breath of all mankind is in God's hand.

In Daniel 5:23 the Prophet tells Belshazzar the King that his breath was in God's hand.

In Psalm 104:29 it says, "Thou takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust."

The expression, "the spirit returns to God who gave it," and the thought that God holds in His hand the breath of all mankind, mean the same thing. God's power keeps us alive. In the beginning God breathed into man the breath of life; consequently, when He withdraws the spirit, or breath, we lie down in unconscious sleep in the grave. The spirit, or breath, is in God's hand, and returns to Him in the sense that He only can give it back at the resurrection, to start life over again. It is in His hand because no one else has the power to restore life. The expression, "spirit," simply means the breath of life, and does not in any sense refer to something in man that goes to heaven at death.

The great preacher and apostle, Paul, when about to die, declared as follows: "I am now ready to be offered . . .

I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them applied in Scripture to eating and other acts. In the second place, a protracted state of dying would not fulfill the conditions of death in the day on which the fruit was eaten, and under such circumstances it would be manifestly absurd to specify any other than a natural day. The only honorable conclusion that can be arrived at is that Adam did not die, and that there is a sequel to follow. What is the sequel? The whole narrative must be studied, else the whole truth cannot be attained.

INTERPRETING GOD'S WORD

The careful reader of the incident will notice that two distinct sentences are pronounced—one in Genesis 2:17, another in Genesis 3:19, each one as definite in its wording as the other. The first penalty—death—is announced as the reward for specific sin. The resulting trial brings forward extenuating circumstances; and the Judge of all the earth does right in commuting the sentence to penal servitude for life. Read the two sentences and it will be found that the first is laying down the law and attaching its penalty if dishonored. The second is using the prerogative of a judge to commute the penalty, and if carefully read it will be seen that it fulfills the requirements of what we understand to be penal servitude for life.

Another instance in which conditions are almost parallel is that of Nineveh. The sentence is equally as definite as that on Adam, and the course of events very similar. See Jonah 3:10 and also Jeremiah 18:9 and Ezekiel 18: 21, 28.

Viewed in this light, God's dealings with Adam correspond with His dealings with mankind ever since, through those whom He has appointed to positions of rulership.

When God threatened death to Adam on the day that he ate the fruit, God meant exactly what He said. Adam's contrition did not alter the penalty, which is still in force, but it did alter God's attitude respecting its immediate execution upon Adam. Adam "lived nine hundred and thirty years; and he died." That is the only authoritative declaration that we have regarding Adam's death. Why is it when God Himself does not say one word about Adam having died, men do their utmost to prove that he did, and when God says Adam died, they use every ingenuity to attest that he lives?

Were ministers and evangelists clear on this important matter of man's nature and sin's penalty, how much more simple and realistic would it be to present the message of salvation in understandable terms, and true in every respect to the Word of God. The Bible would become a new Book to the ministers themselves, and to the people to whom they give its message.

Some never do.
How do you do?

Dues to the National Berean Society are now past due, and the treasurer has received dues from only two or three states and societies. Much of the January 1 dues are as yet unpaid. Please send your dues at once to Mrs. Esta L. Starbuck, 333 S. Prospect St., Rockford, Illinois.

Preachers Least Eloquent

It has been said that in the callings that require public speaking to be the predominant feature, that ministers are last on the list from the standpoint of eloquence. Lawyers are most eloquent, then actors, and finally preachers. In spite of this handicap, however, the church has been built as the greatest institution on earth. It is not because of the eloquence of the speakers, but it is the rich content of the gospel message.

"And I, brethren, when I came unto you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God. For I determined not to know any thing among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified. And I was with you in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling. And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power: that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God" (1 Cor. 2:1-5).

Paul was not an eloquent man. And yet he was the greatest evangelist ever brought forth by the Christian church. Halting and trembling though his words were, they were vehicles to bear the power of God. His words were not empty; he, himself, was a living demonstration of his own preaching. And therein lay the power of his words.

"In Demonstration of the Spirit"

People look to Christians for some miraculous sign, some gift of the Spirit, demonstrating that their God is the true God. It is right that it should be so. If God be God then His hand will be felt in the lives of His people. The abiding demonstration of God dwelling in His people is three-way: "And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity" (1 Cor. 13:13).

When you see these three characteristics in action in the life of a Christian you are witnessing a demonstration of the Spirit of God. In times of stress these characteristics shine forth in truly miraculous beauty in the Christian life. How empty indeed would be the words preaching salvation if the speaker were afraid to live by his faith. God gives the power to live by faith. In the presence of death and suffering God gives a very real comfort in the hope of the coming of Christ. When persecutions and enmity arise against a child of God, God gives a sweet temper—He gives love.

These three gifts, faith, hope, and love, are the Christian's present assurance of salvation. They prove that he has God's Spirit, "which is the earnest (pledge) of our inheritance" (Eph. 1:14).

Graytown, Wisconsin

Word comes to us from Bro. A. E. Hoskins, who is doing work in Minnesota this summer, that there is a new Berean society organized in Graytown, Wisconsin. The officers: president, Ross Hillman, Downing, Wis., Rt. 1; vice president, Frances Van Blaircom, Clear Lake, Wis., Rt. 4; secretary, Erma Hillman, Downing, Rt. 1; leader, Mrs. Elliot Goodwin, Downing, Rt. 1. They meet each Sunday evening in the homes, and are studying from the new Berean book.

Bereans, give these new members a cordial welcome. They will need your prayers. Be like Aaron and Hur, who held up the hands of Moses that the people of God might prevail.

Election of Officers

Berean officers who were elected at the Golden Rule Church of God at Cleveland, Ohio, and installed at the final meeting of the year, June 25, are as follows: president, Adelle Onderdonk; vice president, Fred Tavenier; secretary, Ruth Tomlinson; treasurer, Elizabeth Dodge; pianist, Eunice Hawkins.

There Are Some in Every Church

Three members of a certain church seemed to have the habit of coming late for every service. They usually arrived just after the collection had been taken. One evening the minister decided not to take up the collection until after these three had arrived. At the usual time they arrived, but had no more than seated themselves when the pastor announced, "The offering will now be taken." The three looked at each other with a puzzled look. Finally, the ushers arrived to offer them the basket. Immediately one of them fainted, and the other two got up and carried him out—From The Visitor, South Bend, Indiana, Church of God bulletin.

THE HOUSE OF THE LORD

MOSES left the children of Israel in the valley below and went up into Mount Sinai to commune with God. The Israelites, a mixed multitude of slaves not long before, had depended upon Moses for everything. They could do nothing without his leadership. Their courage and faith in the God Moses followed ebbed away in his absence.

Moses had been gone forty days when the people told Aaron to make them a god out of gold that they could worship. It seems like a terrible thing to us for those people to do. For God had led them away from the cruel Egyptians, had saved them by a miracle from the waters of the sea, had fed them with bread that came down from heaven during the night. And they couldn't wait patiently for a few weeks to learn what God wanted them to know.

But if you look around you perhaps you can see something a little like that. There may be in your neighborhood a family whose grandparents were very faithful to God, or whose parents were fine Christians. But now they are gone, and the children have wandered off into the evil ways of the world.

Or perhaps you pass a deserted church building as you go to your own church. Father tells you that one day it was filled with people on Sundays for worship. But the ministers and the leaders are dead or have moved away, and there is nothing left to remind one of the place that church filled in the lives of young and old.

To return to Moses, we read in Exodus 32, that when the golden god, in the form of a calf, was finished Aaron said to the people, "These be thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt." And they fell down in worship to the god made of gold!

When Moses came down the mountain side and saw what his people were doing, you can imagine how terribly bad he felt. He stood in the gate of the camp and called to the people who were dancing about the golden calf, "Who is on the Lord's side? let him come unto me."

God sent a plague upon the people as a punishment for their disobedience and many died. Moses told God he would just as soon not be saved himself, if God didn't forgive the people for their wrongdoing.

Then God gave Moses directions for building a tabernacle or a sanctuary where the people could worship Him. They were to use only the very finest materials—the purest gold, the finest linen, and the most perfect wood. They now had good use for the jewels they had borrowed from the Egyptians just before they left.

But they were to give everything willingly. God told Moses no one was to give if he begrudged it. Did you ever see anyone give in that manner? If you did, no doubt you thought that he had better not give it. For God loves a cheerful giver.

And do you know? Moses had to tell the people not to bring any more, because they had more than enough! Turn to Exodus 36:5, 6 and read about it. That doesn't seem to happen nowadays, does it?

In due time all was finished after the very careful directions for every part which God had given them. It had movable pillars and supports, outer coverings of materials which the weather could not damage, and inner hangings of exquisite beauty.

Later on, when the children of Israel were settled in their homeland, they built their beautiful temple which stood for many, many years. But as they journeyed toward Palestine this movable tabernacle was very precious to them, for there they worshiped God just as truly as in their later temple.

The last chapter of Exodus tells about the completion of their great work. The most sacred part was called the holy of holies, and in it was the ark of the covenant. The lid of it was called the mercy seat, on which were two cherubim of pure gold with their wings outspread.

When all was ready God showed that He approved of everything in a remarkable way. A mysterious cloud covered the tent and filled the tabernacle with the glory of the Lord so that Moses could not enter at once.

There is more than one great difference in the tabernacle of the Lord in the wilderness and our places of worship today. But one thing seems especially noticeable. The people were not allowed to enter into the "tent of meeting," as they called it. God met His people there through Aaron the high priest. He, in turn, came out and gave the people God's words.

We may enter any part of our church. Even the little children may stand near the pulpit. But we should always do so with reverence. That is, we should remember we are in God's house and show our respect for it. We should not use any boisterous manners in our church. If we take pride in our church we will be very careful how we act in it and we will be very careful not to mar anything.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

REPRESENTATION AT THE GENERAL CONFERENCE

To State Conference Officials

Do not fail to appoint delegates to the General Conference which is to convene August 3-15, 1937! Your state should be represented officially that its influence may be felt and its desires made known to the Conference.

To Local Church Officials

Whether your church is affiliated with a state conference or not do not fail to select delegates to represent your local body at the General Conference. Remember to read carefully the instructions given below and provide your delegates with as complete a list of your membership as possible.

Representation

The following provision is made for delegate and individual representation at the General Conference under Section VIII of the "Declaration of Understanding" as revised by the General Conference in 1934:

"The General Conference shall be composed of individual members and delegates as follows: Each state shall be represented by delegate or delegates. Where states are organized into state conferences they shall be entitled to vote by delegates appointed by the state conference or its executive board 50 per cent of its membership. Each organized church in the state shall be entitled to appoint delegates with power to vote 50 per cent of its membership. Any church or any number of members not associated with a state conference shall be allowed a 100 per cent representation. Any member of any state conference or church who shall be present at any conference session shall be allowed voice and vote, but such shall first be deducted from the delegate vote of his church or state conference or both. Any isolated member of the General Conference who is not a member of any state conference or church organization shall, if present, have voice and vote in any conference session.

"The names of members and, if possible, the address of each member so represented shall be furnished and certified by the proper officer to the secretary of the General Conference before the session at which their votes shall be cast."

ILLINOIS BUSINESS MEETING

The annual business meeting of the Illinois State Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus will be held, the Lord willing, in the Oregon church at 3 o'clock on the afternoon of Friday, Aug. 13, 1937. All Illinois members who can be requested to be there to take an interested part.

Paul C. Johnson, President.

WELL-EARNED APPRECIATION

The following from "The Daily Press" of Riverside, Calif., will be of much interest to our readers who have met Sr. Jessie M. B. Kauffman at the General Conference, and especially to her many friends among the brotherhood on the Pacific Coast:

"Miss Jessie M. B. Kauffman, director of health education for the Riverside Y.W.C.A. for the past ten years, will retire from active Y.W.C.A. service Saturday after thirty-five years in the work. Miss Kauffman plans a vacation at the beaches and in San Francisco, but will continue to make Riverside her home.

"Beginning her Y.W.C.A. work in her home town, Springfield, Ohio, Miss Kauffman has served in only two other places besides there and Riverside, namely, Los Angeles and Fresno.

"During her ten years in Riverside she has taught a great many people to swim, including boys and girls and women, even a few grandmothers. Since the opening of the new Y.W.C.A. pool eight years ago she has given 41,538 swimming lessons and has supervised the pool while 65,038 people were swimming. Previous to that she taught swimming to women in the Y.M.C.A. pool and throughout the period has taught gymnasium classes and supervised all types of recreation."

Accompanying the news article was an excellent picture of Sr. Kauffman and display letter from the editor of "The Press" in which he said:

"During your ten years at Riverside 'Y' you have made many friends who are sorry that you are to retire but glad that you are to live in Riverside and take part in our community life."

LOUISIANA CHURCH NOTES

Again it is our pleasure to report that despite hot weather fine attendance greets us at nearly every service at both churches.

Since this was the first time that an attempt was made to maintain a regular pastor for the two churches here, it was felt that the first few months would determine whether such a plan was feasible. We have been here four months and from every standpoint regular pastoral work has been proved not only practical but necessary to further growth. Consequently the writer has accepted the invitation of both churches to continue working with them for another year. We trust that the same loyalty and cooperation shown by all thus far will be continued, for without the loyalty of the members our work would be futile.

We are planning to attend conference and then spend two weeks at home, returning here by the first of September to renew our work.

Harry Goekler, Pastor.

KOKOMO, INDIANA

The Church of God in Kokomo, Ind., held its annual get-together meeting, Sunday, July 18. The attendance was not so large as usual, owing to the fact that many were out of town on their vacations.

Bro. F. A. Stilson, who is president of the Indiana State Conference, and his wife, and Bro. and Sr. Houser of South Bend were present for the day. Elder Stilson preached a wonderful sermon on "The Ark of the Covenant."

Following the morning services all went to Highland Park where a picnic dinner was served and the older ones passed a pleasant afternoon visiting while the little folks enjoyed the playground. We hope our South Bend brethren come often.

"ABREAST OF THE TIMES" IDEA POPULAR

Since The Restitution Herald introduced editorial comments on current events as a regular feature, several of our leading exchanges in the religious field have adopted the idea as a basis for their chief editorial writing. For example, "The Presbyterian" now carries on its front page an editorial department entitled "Wings Over the World" in which terse comments are made on the religious news of the world. "Signs of the Times," a well-illustrated and equally well-edited Seventh Day Adventist weekly, devotes its second page to "The Flight of Time."

Selections from The Restitution Herald which appear in other journals, more frequently than not are taken from our "Abreast of the Times." All of this indicates that Christian people are interested, as indeed they ought to be, in the significant happenings throughout the world which indicate the trend of the times in which we live and the nearness of our Lord's return.

"LEAVE YOUR HOBBIES AT HOME"

With the fiftieth anniversary of the Iowa Conference just around the corner, the following announcement of the Conference held in Marshalltown, Iowa, 1895, will be of interest.

"The Iowa State Conference of the Church of God will be held in Marshalltown, beginning August 15, and lasting over till Sunday evening the 25th, 1895. . . . As to time, it will be of more leisure than in June (which was the month when the conferences had been held) and therefore secure a better attendance. Also crops will then be sufficiently matured to tell to a certainty what can be done for evangelistic work. . . . Begin now to arrange to attend the meetings. Leave your hobbies at home and come prepared for a meeting of straightforward gospel and Bible work. We shall try to make this one of the most interesting meetings we have ever held in Iowa."

(Signed) G. M. Myers, President,
O. J. Allard, Secretary.

The Restitution, from which this announcement is taken, also contains the obituary of Elder T. F. Whitesett who, with Elder E. A. Marsh, comprised the first evangelistic team sent out by the Iowa Conference when it was first organized.

RIPLEY, ILLINOIS

Lyle Ward asked to be baptized after the morning service Sunday. In the afternoon we went to the water for the immersion, which is a symbol of the death to the old life and a rising to a new life of service to the Christ who has promised us life eternal. We pray that God will bless this young man in a life of service.

Together with several others of Riverside, Calif., Bro. W. A. Reid drove to Los Angeles on Sunday, July 18, where, he says, "we had the pleasure of hearing Bro. C. E. Randall of Ontario, Canada, speak both morning and evening. We liked his sermons very much. He is an interesting and forceful speaker."

Friday was a busy day at Oregon. "Clean-up Day" at the Conference dormitory always is a busy day, filled with long hours of the hardest kind of work. But the brethren of Oregon and Rockford put their united shoulders to the wheel and made all things ready for the coming of their ever welcome guests. They are glad to do this as one of their contributions to the success of the great annual gathering.

MILBURN - THOMPSON

The Golden Rule Church of God in Cleveland, Ohio, was the scene of a very lovely wedding July 3, when Mr. Bruce Thompson and Miss Mary Milburn plighted their vows before a large assemblage of their friends. The bride approached the altar on the arm of her brother, Mr. Jeffrey Milburn. She was attended by her niece, Miss Peggy Blakemore, and the groom was attended by his brother, Mr. Donald Thompson. Mrs. Doris Reye played the organ and Mr. Merle Patrick was soloist. Hazel Stadden bore the rings for the double ring ceremony, and Messers. Jack Blakemore and Herbert Stadden were ushers. The pastor, M. W. Lyon, who had baptized both bride and groom, officiated, assisted by our beloved "assistant pastor," James A. Patrick of Ashland.

The unusual ceremony by which they were united, both contracting parties had actively shared in creating. Instead of simply responding mechanically to the usual questions of the minister, they used vows composed by themselves and repeated them in full to each other. When such eager interest is taken by both parties to make their marriage ceremony meaningful, it augurs well for the marriage itself, which requires so much of earnest cooperation to work out happily.

The young couple will make their home at 701½ Grace Ave., Charleston, W. Va., where Mr. Thompson is employed.

We regret exceedingly having to lose both these young people from the local church activities. Mrs. Thompson has been most active in many fields, as teacher in the Sunday school, member of the choir, and this past year as assistant Sunday school superintendent and church clerk. Both are splendid Christian young people with fine ideals. Their home, we feel, will be built upon a Christian basis, and with such a foundation they should find the happiness which all their friends wish for them.

HERALD RECEIPTS

Mrs. Hilding L. Anderson (for self and others); Mrs. Etta Hatch; Raymond Knife; James Vance; Henry Niestly; Galan Dokes; W. W. Smith; Mrs. Bernice Shiber; Mrs. Vera Wagner.

ELSIE G. GRANDQUIST

Elsie Gertrude Telschaw was born January 26, 1905, at Sauk Center, Minn., and passed away July 4, 1937, at the St. Cloud Hospital.

While still in her early teens she chose to remember her Creator and accepted Christ as her Savior. She was immersed into the name of Jesus by Fred Daubanton and has remained true and faithful in the work of her Master to the time of her death. She was a teacher in the Sunday school and was always active in the Ladies' Aid of the church.

On August 9, 1924, in the Church of God, she became the bride of Richard E. Grandquist. This sacred service was also performed by Fred Daubanton. To this union were born seven children, of whom three are now living. They are Kathlyn, 12, Virgil, 8, and Dwaine, 5.

Besides her husband and children she leaves her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Telschaw; two brothers, Walter of St. Paul and Alvin of Cincinnati, Ohio.

We shall all miss her and with sad hearts we will lay her away to await the call of the Master. Our sorrow is not as those who have no hope, for we know that when Jesus comes she will be given that most cherished possession—"the crown of life that fadeth not away."

HALE GRANT

Hale Grant, son of J. A. and Jessie A. Harding Grant, was born on a farm in Jasper County, Ind., October 8, 1885. He was baptized into Christ by Bro. F. L. Austin in 1897, becoming a member of the Church of God in Rensselaer, Ind.

In August, 1904, he was united in marriage with Miss Nellie Nichols, to which union five children were born, three of whom, viz., Samuel of Rensselaer; Jack, a dentist, of Joplin, Mo.; and Mrs. Darrd Fleming of Greenfield, Ind., with the wife and mother are left to mourn the death of husband and father, which occurred July 10, 1937, in his home in Rensselaer.

Except by experience one cannot fully appreciate the loss of a husband and father at that period of life. Hale was an only son of Bro. and Sr. J. A. Grant, who still survive. Sr. Grant is an invalid with practically no hope of recovery in this life, and was unable to attend the last rites or to see her son after his death—a sad thought in the heart of a mother of an only child.

Funeral services were held in the late home, where the wide bank of beautiful floral emblems and large number in attendance gave evidence of the popularity of one who had spent his entire lifetime among them.

He awaits the coming of the "just Judge" who "doeth all things well."

REFLECTIONS OF GREAT MINDS

"Think on these things."—Paul.

"I can imagine that when Christ said to the little band around Him, 'Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel.' Peter said, 'Lord, do you really mean that we are to go back to Jerusalem and preach the gospel to those men that murdered you?'"

"Yes," said Christ, 'go hunt up that man that spat in My face; tell him that he may have a seat in My kingdom yet. Search for the man that drove the spear into My side and tell him there is a nearer way to My heart than that.'—Dwight L. Moody.

HATTIE SAMPLE WHITESITT

The following obituary, which has just reached The Restitution Herald, will be of special interest to our readers in and around Marathon, Iowa, where Sr. Whitesitt resided for many years.

Sr. Hattie Sample Whitesitt was born July 28, 1863, at Clarion, Pa., and died at her home in Olympia, Wash., May 3, 1937. Her marriage to Bro. George R. Whitesitt took place December 24, 1882. The family was established in Marathon, Iowa, for some years, where Sr. Whitesitt conducted a millinery business until they moved to the West in 1911.

Her husband was a son of Elder T. F. Whitesitt, one of the first evangelists employed by the Iowa State Conference after its organization in 1886. He fell asleep in the Lord January 21, 1936.

Sr. Whitesitt is survived by one daughter, Mrs. Rillie Beardslee of Olympia, Wash., a brother, John Reynolds, of Kirkland, Wash., eleven grandchildren and four great-grandchildren.

The funeral service was conducted by Rev. B. A. McKeown, and she was laid to rest in the Masonic Cemetery at Olympia to await the call of her returning Lord.

THE TITHING BULLETIN

The bulletin, as prepared by The Layman Company, offers every church the most effective of tithing education plus relief from half of the expense and worries of the ordinary church bulletin.

The bulletin consists of four pages. Pages 1 and 4 are for the use of the local church. They may be printed, multigraphed, or mimeographed at one impression. Pages 2 and 3 carry any one of 32 of the famous Layman tithing messages.

This affords a quiet but effective course in stewardship education. It combines simplicity, effectiveness, and economy.

Sample set containing 32 different tithing bulletins, 20 cents. When ordering, please mention The Restitution Herald; also give your denomination.

730 Rush St., Chicago, Ill.

ILLINOIS BIBLE SCHOOL TEACHERS

The Illinois Bible School, which convenes in Oregon, August 3-15 in conjunction with the General Conference, will have the following teachers for the various classes: beginners, Mrs. Ruby Railton; primary, Mrs. Mary Krogh; junior, Miss Lucille LeCrone; intermediate, Elder H. U. Krogh; high school young people, Elder C. E. Lapp; advanced young people, Elders G. E. Marsh and C. E. Randall; adult, Elder F. L. Austin; general class, Elder S. J. Lindsay; teaching principals, Elder C. E. Randall.

THE RESTITUTION HERALD advocates: the near return of Christ, Acts 1:11, and life only through Him, Col. 3:3; the literal resurrection of the dead, John 5:28; the immortalization of those in Christ, 1 Cor. 15:53, 54; the final restoration of Israel as the kingdom of God under the kingship of Christ, Luke 1:32, the church to be joint-heirs with Him, Rom. 8:17, and Israel to be made head over Gentile nations, Isa. 60:13; the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began," Acts 3:21. It also firmly advocates repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, Acts 2:38, and a consecrated life as essential to salvation.

JERUSALEM AND PALESTINE

LATEST STATISTICS OF AREAS UNDER VARIOUS CROPS

"The latest estimates of crop returns for the 1935-36 season records about 2,320,000 dunams under wheat; 2,700,000 dunams under barley; 376,000 dunams under leguminous crops; 1,137,000 dunams under summer crops. Vegetable plots amounted to over 43,000 dunams. Tomatoes covered an area of 43,000 dunams, and potatoes 95,000 dunams.

"The population growth in Tel-Aviv from 1910 to 1937 is from 300 to 150,000. The constant advent of new settlers in Tel-Aviv has created a particularly virulent housing problem in spite of the brisk building movement which has been noticeable for many years past as the following figures illustrate: Tel-Aviv building movement from 1930 to 1935 rose from 43,692 square meters to 448,459 square meters.

"The area at present under irrigation in Palestine totaled 350,000 dunams (of which 300,000 were under citrus and 50 per cent in Jewish possession). Investigations of the Water Research Institute recently founded by the Jewish Agency point to the fact that there is a possibility of irrigating 2,200,000 dunams (excluding Beersheba). If an additional two million dunams were developed under irrigation, room would be provided for a further 100,000 settler families and a total additional population on the land and in the cities of 2,000,000.

"What is to be one of the largest bakeries in Palestine is now being constructed at Nachlat Itzhak. The most up-to-date machinery will be used. . . . Various kinds of bread and pastry will be produced according to special methods by a veteran Palestinian scientist, Mr. Wilbuschevutz.

"The production of glycerin is to be begun as a new addition to the wide range of its products by the Shemen Palestine Oil Industry, Ltd.

"In Haifa Bay work is to be recommenced at the Phoenicia Glass Works, which have been temporarily closed down. After a test it is reported that the plant is in a position to turn out an annual production of 80,000 square meters of glass.

"The local rice milling industry will now be able to import its raw material under a reduced customs duty.

"New companies registered include a match factory, the second of its kind in the country; a company to manufacture citrus by-products; and the Silicate Workers Company, Ltd." (Extracts from The Palestine and Middle-East Economic Magazine, May issue.)

Surely the above few notes harmonize with Ezekiel's prophecy and prove the authenticity of the Word of God, which says, "Thus saith the Lord God; In the day that I shall have cleansed you from all your iniquities I will also cause you to dwell in the cities, and the wastes shall be builded. And the desolate land shall be tilled, whereas it lay desolate in the sight of all that passed by. And they shall say, This land that was desolate is become like the garden of Eden; and the waste and desolate and ruined cities are become fenced, and are inhabited. Then the heathen that are left round about you shall know that I the Lord build the ruined places, and plant that was desolate: I the Lord have spoken it, and I will do it. Thus saith the Lord God; I will yet for this be enquired of by the house of Israel, to do it for them; I will increase them with men like a flock. As the holy flock, as the flocks of Jerusalem in her solemn feasts; so shall the waste cities be filled with flocks of men; and they shall know that I am the Lord" (Ezek. 36:33-38).

"When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory" (Psalm 102:16).

We earnestly desire your prayers for us here, that the Lord will demonstrate His power through these bodies of ours and show to these blind people the greatness of His majesty and love to the children of men. God bless you one and all. Amen.

WHAT DOES MAN DO WHILE DEAD?

also that love his appearing" (2 Tim. 4:6-8). This godly man says in a positive way that he did not expect to enter into his reward until the second coming of Jesus Christ. He peacefully sleeps in Jesus, soon to be raised at our Lord's appearing.

We read in the book of Hebrews of the heroes of faith all down through the ages, including the millions of martyrs who died rather than deny their Lord. It says of them: "These all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise: God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect" (Heb. 11:39, 40). These saints of God are unconsciously sleeping in the grave, quietly resting there until Jesus Christ raises the righteous dead at His coming.

Christ comes the second time to raise those who sleep in Him and to translate the living ones (1 Thess. 4:16, 17). If persons at death ascend to heaven, there would be no need of a resurrection. Job puts it this way, "If I wait, the grave is mine house: I have made my bed in the darkness" (Job 17:13). "If a man die, shall he live again? all the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come. Thou shalt call, and I will answer thee: thou wilt have a desire to the work of thine hands" (Job 14:14, 15).

These scriptures sum it all up, namely, that when men die the grave is their resting place. They are not in heaven, but are sleeping in the grave, having no knowledge of passing events. They remain there unconscious until the Lord Jesus calls them forth to life. This is God's way; it is the best way, and deals fairly with all. He does not favor some at death by taking them to heaven, neither does He torment others by sending them down into hell. All are asleep in the grave. The righteous come forth at the first resurrection when Jesus comes.—John K. Jones in Signs of the Times.

Rome Needs Iron

"There shall be in it the strength of iron."—Dan. 2:41.

ROME, Italy, July 30.—The editor of Prophecy calls attention to a headline which recently appeared in a newspaper, "Italy Needs Iron," and was immediately reminded of the great image described in the 2nd chapter of Daniel and especially of the legs and feet which were composed of iron and iron mixed with clay. The item under the news heading read as follows:

"Il Duce has summoned the mayors of all Italian cities to take a census of iron fences, municipally or privately owned; and the intimation is that all will be commandeered for the munition melting pot. All the iron fences in Rome have already been converted into shells, cannon, or armor plate, it is said, and the rest of Italy will be expected to make similar sacrifice. The high price of iron and steel scrap, due to the numerous rearmament programs, is hard on the debilitated finances of Mussolini's realm, it is explained. But if Italy is short of iron now, what would she do in case of war?"

STOCKHOLM, Sweden, July 24.—Concern is being felt in official circles here over the establishment by Soviet Russia of numerous aircraft centers along the Swedish-Russian border. The fear is being expressed that Russia has an eye on the rich iron mines of Sweden, the products of which she would need in case of war.

Sweden ships vast quantities of iron to England, Germany, France, and other countries, where it is turned into steel both for military and commercial purposes.

One of the chief causes of war spreading throughout Europe when it breaks out openly between two nations, is the fact that such nations always stand in dire need of certain essential products of still other countries, and in order to obtain those raw materials against the desire of their owners, a war of conquest and robbery is engaged in. It will be recalled that one of the most difficult questions the diplomats had to solve at the close of the World War was that of the final disposal of the Ruhr-Saar region in Germany, owing to the vast coal and iron deposits it contained and which were coveted by both France and Germany.

Hallucinations and Demons

"In the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to . . . doctrines of devils."—1 Timothy 4:1.

NEW YORK, July 28.—In the current issue of Psychology appears an article entitled "Illusions and Hallucinations," by Edward Ulback, of the Archeological Institute of America, in which attention is directed to the universal prevalence of the belief in demonology. Dr. Ulback says:

"About and before the time of the Reformation, the belief in diabolical agency, and the constant and often visible interference of evil spirits in human affairs was universal. Satan's invisible world was displayed with a topographical minuteness of detail which could scarcely have proved agreeable to that great personage. At this period . . . people would have sooner doubted their own existence or identity than ventured to call in question the most grotesque fooleries which the human fancy ever imagined. . . . Hallucinations will almost always be found to reflect the beliefs, the passions, the prejudices, and the manners of the age in which they occur."

We are reminded of the different nature of the "visions" reported by those who believe that they are to go to heaven when they die and those who look for redemption only at the coming of Christ. We know of many instances in which believers in the heaven-going theory have "seen" the golden gates ajar before their enchanted eyes and met at the portals of "heaven" dear ones whom they had lost by death. We also know of other instances in which men have "seen" the Lord coming "with ten thousand of his saints" with power and great glory. The difference in the "visions" is obviously dependent upon what is uppermost in the mind of the "beholder." It would be wise for the disciple of our Lord to withhold faith in all such illusions of the human mind and heart and study carefully such warnings as these: Jer. 17:9; Isa. 8:19; 1 Tim. 4:1, 2; Matt. 24:24; 2 Cor. 11:14.

New Inventions Threaten Employment

"No man hath hired us."—Matthew 20:7.

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—When late in July the National Resources Committee made public its report on new inventions, according to Forbes, "it posed a tremendous problem for solution by farsighted business statesmanship. For, said the report, thirteen inventions now in, or well past, the development stage will probably cause vast changes in employment before 1957." Forbes hopes that government may "find some way to bridge this chasm for the working man." Our hope is in Christ's coming!

Our Scientific Bible

IT IS not my purpose to attempt a defense of the Bible, for the Bible needs no defense at the hands of any man. The Bible is God's Word! and "the word of God is quick, and powerful (living and active), and sharper than any twoedged sword" (Heb. 4:12). It has nothing to fear from the weak and foolish attacks men make upon it. God's Word is final; it is conclusive. It puts an end to all argument.

God spoke and the blackness of chaos was transformed into light! God spoke and the circling planets came into being! God spoke and all things were made that are made! God spoke and the orderly processes and sequences of nature were set into operation! God's Word is powerful; it is irresistible and infinite. Presumptuous indeed would our efforts be should we seek to prove the truth of this Book!

Our simple purpose here is to bring before you for your appreciative consideration a few of the astonishing facts which God has revealed through holy men of old with regard to the laws which govern the universe, laws which He established and put into operation, which men for generations failed to perceive, but which scientific research is now revealing.

DEPENDENCE OF SCIENCE UPON GOD

At the beginning we should notice with particular attention the constant reliance which science, consciously or unconsciously, must place in God. There could be no real science without God and without the unchangeable laws He has established for the governing of the heavens and the earth. All scientific deductions and conclusions rest upon the knowledge and the assurance which ages of observation have served to make more certain, that the laws of nature, which are the laws of God, do not change. They are never suspended. They are always in force.

The reason for this is found in the character of the Creator Himself. He is unchangeable. "For I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed" (Mal. 3:6). In spite of protracted unfaithfulness, the life of Israel as a race has been preserved because God is unchangeable, He does not forget His covenant with Abraham and Jacob, the promise He made to the fathers of Israel and which He declared was to reach to all generations. It is man that changes—not God! It is man that forgets! "Even from the days of your fathers ye are gone away from mine ordinances, and have not kept them. Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord of hosts" (Mal. 3:6, 7).

Were it not for the unchangeableness of God, were it

In spite of the many attacks being made on the Bible by the self-styled advocates of science, the true scientist, who is ever a humble searcher for truth, is providing increasingly impressive evidence of the inspiration of the Scriptures. In the following article the editor presents facts which scientific investigators have discovered in support of the truth of the Word of God.

not for the fact that the Word which goes forth out of His mouth will never return to Him void, man could not long survive upon this earth. Had God been subject to change, the entire race would have perished miserably ages ago. But the sun rises and sets day after day, the earth circles the sun and the moon the earth in their appointed seasons, and so man can plow and plant and reap his harvest without fear that his labor will be in vain.

The scientist, once having learned the laws which with mathematical precision govern the actions and reactions of all sources of natural energy, is assured that no sudden suspension of those laws will occur, and he proceeds to utilize the powers which are generated under those laws with impunity and success.

TRUTH OBSCURED BY TRADITION

Smothered by the dust clouds of ignorance and superstition which whirled throughout the pagan world during the earlier centuries of the present era, the revealing light of Inspiration was gradually obscured. During the transitory period which followed the nationalization of the church under Constantine, Christianity was strongly influenced by the heathen philosophy which flourished in the Roman world. Failing to realize that men could not arrive at the truth of God by human reasoning alone, the leaders of the church endeavored to find support for the new faith in the philosophical systems of the pagans, and to harmonize the simple gospel of Christ with those theories. The consequence was that instead of discarding heathen philosophy altogether as they should have done and accepting Christianity in its fullness, they submerged and obscured the rich truths of our Lord in the absurdities of pagan teaching.

Under these alien influences leaders in the church began early to teach as doctrines of our Lord, the meaningless so-called "mysteries" of heathenism concerning future life instead of the splendid realities made known by Jesus' resurrection.

FALSE CONCEPTIONS OF IMMORTALITY

Leaders of the powerful Roman Church were induced by such borrowed philosophy to draw a sharp distinction between the nature of the life that now is and the life to come. They saw little or no similarity between the two. According to the traditionary teaching of heathenism, which they had carried over into their pseudo-Christian theology, man was a dual being composed (Please turn to page 10)

The Doctrine of Christ

By Harvey Krogh, Jr.

"Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Amen."—Matthew 28:18, 19.

TEACHING them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Jesus taught His disciples the things that we find in the Sermon on the Mount, and those things are for you and me if we are His disciples. Recorded in Matthew 5:38 He said, "Ye have heard that it hath been said, An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth." Yes, you have heard of this law of retaliation, the law of revenge. And it was a good law when compared to what had been practiced. It was a step toward justice and righteousness when the former retaliation was ten times the offense. The law of Moses placed a limit on man's evil and yet it was the law of fighting back. Then spoke the Master: "But I say unto you, That ye resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. And if any man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloke also. And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain."

If only those who kept this doctrine of Christ were Christian, there would be few Christians in the world.

Christianity has hardly pretended to follow this teaching. And it has suffered the loss of the accompanying blessings.

Let us consider the ways of meeting evil. First, to fight back; second, to run away; and last, to turn the other cheek. To fight back is the most natural way of resisting evil. You may say that you have to stand for your own rights. What are your rights? They might be to lower yourself to the level of the one attacking you and yield to the animal desire to fight for your rights. But the Christian has no such rights. God never gave us permission to do wrong. When you fight back you do wrong. Wrong is like a sword having a point at both ends and when used even to resist evil and establish right it pierces the hand that draws it. When you do wrong even to gain the right you have sinned.

One time a man asked what he should do if a robber came into his home to steal and harm his family. Should he not resist evil? This can easily be answered with a similar question: What would Israel have done when all of the men were worshiping at Jerusalem if an enemy nation had attacked them and carried away their goods, slain their families, and driven away their cattle? This question is not difficult to answer because we have no right to insert the "if." When the nation was occupied in the service of God it was protected from all its enemies. If you will keep the commandments of the Savior, God will not put you in a position where keeping those commandments will do you any harm. If you and I are doing good and following Christ we need never cross those bridges of "what if?"

All of this does not concern nations, but pertains to the individual Christian—you and me as servants of Christ.

The law of retaliation only satisfies the lower nature and the base desires of the one who fights back. Therefore the law, "an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth," has been overthrown.

The next defense against evil is to run away. "He who fights and runs away shall live to fight another day." But your enemy has taken courage because he has judged you a coward. You have forfeited the first victory to him and when you return you have two battles to win which is worse than having finished the first day. If you do not return, you live in fear lest you be found. There is no righteousness in running away.

Jesus said: "But I say unto you, That ye resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also." This is the most radical of all of our Savior's teachings. It is definitely opposed to all human nature. It is directly contrary to all of man's instincts. And yet it is the highest type of courage and bravery.

It is partly a desire for conflict that inspires the attack. When you do not return the blow, your enemy is confounded. You have done the opposite to what he expected. You have shown a courage that is rare, and in his confusion he has time to come to himself. You have done something that the Christ would have done, but above all you have choked that little stream of evil deeds at its very source.

And still we hear the cry that it is impractical. Have you ever tried the Savior's way? It is told that a preacher and an atheist had a debate. After the atheist had finished the first speech and had all but proved that God did not exist and that Christianity was a fake, the minister went to the platform, sat down, and ate an orange. When he had finished he asked his opponent how the orange was. The atheist laughed, and said, "You ate it, how should I know?" The minister then said, "Then who are you to judge God and Christianity, having neither tasted nor tried either?"

Try the Savior's way. Resist not evil. We are called Christians because we are followers of Christ. Let us truly follow Him.

Jesus said, "Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away." Is that not a command? And do we go away sorrowful as the rich young ruler did? Let us consider this. What are we to give? What is it that one wishes to borrow? Is it your name? Is it your promise of eternal life? your inheritance? your hope of resurrection? No! Only some temporal possession, something that will perish with the using and be forgotten, something not essential to life and yet it might be to the one who asked. Yes, only some small thing that was given to us is all that we are asked to give up. Christ one time said, "He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me." Oh! How much less worthy of Him we would be if we love some earthly possession more than Him.

You say that we must use common sense. Of course. It would be criminal to loan a gun to a child or to give your car to a drunken man. But you know deep down in your own heart whether you refuse because you are selfish or because of the wisdom that God has given you.

These things cut me as deeply as they do you. But may I assure you that the hardest part in keeping these laws of our Master is to make up your mind that you will keep them. If you will, with the help of your Savior, win that first battle with yourself, it will not be hard to turn the other cheek, to go two miles, or to give and loan of the perishable things that God has given you. Settle these things with Him now, and please don't turn away sorrowful but remain with Him filled with the riches of joy.

My earnest prayer to God is that we might follow more closely in the blessed way our Savior taught us.

An Open Letter on "Eternal Torment"

By T. A. Drinkard

The following letter was addressed to a radio preacher in Fort Worth, Texas. Generally we find it to be the better policy to present the truth from a positive rather than from a negative standpoint. But in the present instance the negative method was the only one possible, and we believe that there is too much valuable information in the letter to permit it to die without giving it wider circulation.—Editor.

Dear Sir:

I had the pleasure recently of listening to your sermon over Station FJZ and noticed that you very kindly criticized those who do not believe that eternal torment awaits the wicked in a literal hell of fire and brimstone somewhere, sometime.

Can you give me one scriptural reason for your believing that God will take His enemies and put them in such a place, and cause them to suffer eternal conscious torment when it is written, "The wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs: they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away" (Psa. 37:20)? How can the wicked be said to perish if they are to be eternally tormented? And how can they be consumed if they are to be indestructible? And, too, if they are to live in hell-fire eternally, would they not have to have eternal life, or be immortal? And if so, how can they suffer eternal torment if they are immortal? Can immortality suffer punishment?

Again it is written: "All that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch . . . they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet" (Mal. 4:1, 3).

Did Malachi believe in eternal torment when he said, "All that do wickedly shall be stubble"? Is stubble destructible or indestructible? How can they be "burned up" and at the same time suffer eternal torment? Why did he say that they would be ashes if they are not dead?

How can they "be as though they had not been" (Obad. 16), if they are suffering conscious torment in a hell of fire and brimstone?

You called attention to the rich man and Lazarus of Luke 16:19-31, as though it were in favor of eternal torment in a hell of fire. You assumed that it meant fire when the word "fire" is not used. Let us see if your hypothesis is correct. Are the two mentioned here literal men? Did the beggar literally die? Was the beggar that died literally carried into Abraham's literal bosom? Can you spiritualize a part of the narration and literalize the rest of it?

Did the rich man literally die? Was he literally buried? If he literally died, and was literally buried, how could he literally see and talk in view of the scripturally stated fact that "the living know that they shall die: but the dead know not any thing, neither have they any more a reward; for the memory of them is forgotten" (Ecl. 9:5); and, "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest" (Ecl. 9:10)? How could he literally see and talk, "for in death," the Bible says, "there is no remembrance of thee: in the grave who shall give thee thanks" (Psa. 6:5)?

Why do you assume that this hell of Luke 16:23 had, or will have, fire in it? Does it say so? Suppose it did say there was fire there, does the word "fire" always mean what is commonly termed "literal fire"? If so, please explain Hebrews 1:7 and Zephaniah 3:8, where "all the earth shall be devoured with the fire of my jealousy." But after the earth is devoured with the "fire," then (v. 9) God turns "to the people a pure language."

Was the amount of water that would adhere to the tip of Lazarus' literal finger sufficient to cool the literal tongue

The Great Salvation

By Lyman Booth

"How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?"—Hebrews 2:3.

IN WRITING to the churches the apostles made many allusions to salvation, and to certain means by which it might be obtained. For instance, they use such expressions as "saved" by faith, by grace, by hope, by blood, by the name of Christ, by calling on the name of the Lord, by His cross; or, without shedding of blood there is no remission of sins, justified by His blood, work out your own salvation. And our Lord said that His blood was shed for the remission of sins. John the Baptist said, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."

Most of these expressions do not, when used alone, afford a clear and satisfactory answer to an inquirer who asks the way of salvation. An earnest questioner after truth would have to assume the stand that the Jews of the first century took, and say, "How readest thou?" This should be the first question. If we could trace the history of the persons spoken of in those expressions and could know to whom the pronouns "we," "us," and "you" referred, we might find in some cases that they belong to a class of people who had come through certain previous experiences, such as the three thousand on the day of Pentecost, the many priests who became "obedient to the faith" (Acts 6:7), the Ephesians (Acts 19:8), or the Romans (Acts 28:31).

Some writers are free to use "the gospel of life," or "the gospel of the cross." Whatever tinge of truth they may hold, it is certain that neither of these expressions is used by any of the New Testament writers, and therefore we have no right to use them. The nearest approach to either of them is where Paul said, "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ" (Gal. 6:14). Paul well knew who suffered on the cross—that it was none other than the anointed King of Israel. The Roman governor had written His title on the cross in Hebrew, Greek, and Latin, that the people might read and know the accusation. This fact, although generally ignored by the common faith of Christendom, was recognized by the old masters of the painter's art in their celebrated works. In their pictures of the crucifixion, they placed overhead in capital letters, "INRI," being the initial letters of the principal words of the Latin inscription, "Jesus Nazarenus Rex ille Judaorum," which in English means, "Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews." Paul also alludes to Jesus' claim before Pilate as the "good confes-

The following unpublished article by the late Lyman Booth was found recently in a book in his library. We take much pleasure in presenting it to our readers who have shown so much interest in the past writings of this scholarly man. Brother Booth was the author of a number of outstanding works which have been published in book form. Among them are "The Way of Eternal Life" and "The Mystery of Iniquity Explained."

sion" (1 Tim. 6:13), that claim being that He was the King of the Jews.

"Messiah," is a title of office as "king" or "emperor," and is not a personal name as "Jesus" is. The translators of both the common and revised versions failed to give the translation of the Greek word Christos, which ought to be rendered "the Anointed One." Basileus is always translated "king"; why not Christos, "the Anointed One"? The scholars who provided a translation of the Greek New Testament into Hebrew for the use of the Jews understood this point and their work might well afford an object lesson for the Gentiles. So we find in the Hebrew New Testament the Greek term Christos rendered "Messiah." A Jewish reader would know that "Messiah" meant "the Anointed One." If any Jew should desire to verify this by consulting the Old Testament, he could do so by referring to some twenty instances where "Messiah" is rendered "Anointed." It is very different in the English New Testament, and the Gentile is placed at a disadvantage, since the word Christos is never translated.

What is true of the word Christos is also true with regard to the term Christianos. This occurs three times in the New Testament. In the version made for the Jews, it is rendered by a Hebrew term equivalent to "a Messiahist," meaning "a follower of the Anointed One." Hence a Jew in reading the New Testament in Hebrew will find in Acts 11:26, "The disciples were called Messiahists first in Antioch," and in Acts 26:23, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Messiahist."

The Messiahship, as a vital element of saving faith, was strongly declared by our Lord Himself: "If ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins" (John 8:24). John 1:49 records Nathanael's confession, "Thou art the Son of God; thou art the King of Israel." The Apostle declares that he wrote that "ye might believe that Jesus is the Anointed, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name" (John 20:31). He also stated that "whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Anointed is born of God" (1 John 5:1). In his second letter the Apostle says, "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine (of the Anointed One), receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed" (2 John 10).

Nathanael's confession met our Lord's approval. His testimony was to the effect that the Messiahship signified royalty. One testimony of Scripture is as good as a hundred if it be as clear as this one is. Even the chief priests, with the scribes and elders, acknowledged the connection of the Messiahship with royalty, for at the crucifixion they said, "Let (the) Christ the King of Israel descend now from the cross, that we may see and believe" (Mark 15:32).

The foregoing declarations concerning the Messiahship of Jesus, especially His own words, may well be placed alongside of the Apostle's statement regarding "the great salvation, which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord." They show the fundamental idea of His preaching.

Under the Mosaic dispensation oil was prepared in a peculiar manner for the purpose of anointing. It was called "holy oil." Inanimate objects (such as garments, musical instruments, the tabernacle, the altar, etc.) and also persons (such as priests, prophets, and kings) were sanctified, made holy, consecrated, and set apart for some special use by anointing. Such cases of anointing do not detract from the anointing of our Lord, but rather serve to illustrate it.

Saul and David were called Jehovah's anointed, and this designation was not applied to priests or prophets. Luke records that the confession of the apostles took the form of "the Christ of God," in other words, "the Anointed of Jehovah." Samuel said to Saul, "The Lord hath anointed thee to be captain over his inheritance" (1 Sam. 10:1). Our Lord was anointed, not with material oil, but with the Holy Spirit (Acts 10:38).

The essence of the above is simply this: If the Messiahship of Jesus be not understood in the sense of King of Israel, as in the scriptures just quoted, then the truth that Jesus is the Anointed One cannot be believed in its Bible sense. In that case our Lord's verdict is, "Ye shall die in your sins."

Paul counseled the disciples: "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith" (2 Cor. 13:5). Paul asked a question of prime importance, which sends the earnest inquirer to the fountain of knowledge for a reply: "If the word spoken by angels was stedfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward; how shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him" (1 Heb. 2:3). This plainly means, that if the great salvation first spoken by the Lord is for any reason neglected there is no escape.

Many, through wrong teaching inherited from the past are content to rest on the terms casually used by the sacred writers, such as "the blood," "the cross," as the exclusive elements of saving faith. The Alexander Campbell reformation furnishes an example of this fact. This religious body regarded the death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus as exclusively the elements of the gospel truth, and denied that Jesus was to reign over the twelve tribes of Israel. It might be said of them that they were not far from the kingdom, although far enough to fall beneath our Lord's verdict, "If ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins."

No one will deny but that the blood and the cross hold a very important place in the work of redemption, but if they are allowed to become a substitute for the great salvation, "which at the first began to be spoken by our Lord," the record leaves no escape from the doom of such as obey not the gospel.

This great salvation began from Galilee and was preached throughout all Judea (Acts 10:37). Our Lord Himself issued a call for repentance, saying, "The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel" (Mark 1:15). He was sent for this purpose by His Father (Luke 4:43). "The people heard him gladly," although but few became His disciples so as to attain salvation. His disciples were thus prompted to inquire, "Are there few that be saved?" His answer was, "Strive to enter in at the strait gate: for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able" (Luke 13:22, 24).

Salvation was the theme of His proclamation. His preaching was "confirmed unto us by them that heard him." Thus Peter on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2), Philip at Samaria (Acts 8:12), Paul at Ephesus (Acts 19) and at Rome (Acts 28), preached the kingdom of God as the principal element of the gospel. This is in strict accordance with our Lord's prediction: "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations" (Matt. 24:14), and with His charge to His disciples shortly thereafter, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be condemned" (Mark 16:15, 16). Those messengers had no difficulty in understanding what their mission was. They had been personally engaged in preaching the same gospel in Judea. They added to this the important facts concerning the death for sins and the resurrection of the Anointed One, as they carried out their mission. "Christ crucified" (that is, "the Anointed One crucified) and His coming again to receive his kingdom—this was the burden of their preaching.

Since the kingdom had existed some nine hundred years in Palestine, and was in ruins at that time, it had become a matter of history. It was the only kingdom God ever had on earth. "Thus saith the Lord the King of Israel, and his redeemer the Lord of hosts" (Isa. 44:6). In Daniel 2:35 we read that "the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth"; and in verse 44, that this was the kingdom of God, which shall break in pieces and destroy all other kingdoms, and stand forever. In Daniel 7:13, 14 the Son of Man is to be given this kingdom, "that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him," and that "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High" (v. 27). The kingdom having been preached as at hand by our Lord, He later explained that it should not immediately appear, as the Son of Man must first go to a far country and return.

The existence of this kingdom in history, its conquest by the Romans, and its promised restitution when "he . . . whose right it is" (Ezek. 21:27) should come, were all matters plain enough to the Jewish people. They should not be matters of difficulty to the Gentile readers who use ordinary care to learn the truth. (OVER)

The Apostle also speaks of the "deep things of God," which "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit" (1 Cor. 2:9, 10). Such was not the character of the proclamation of Jesus. His message was concerning things which had been clearly set forth in the Scriptures, which were simple and easily comprehended, lying, as it were, on the very surface. As a matter of fact, comprehension of His message required neither profound learning nor much study, and it was so well known by the common people to whom our Lord spoke that no question was ever put to Him as to what He meant by the kingdom of God which was at hand.

In view of these passages, and many more which might be given, who has any right to say that faith in the kingdom is not required? As well say that faith in the cross is not required! It is just as unscriptural to preach Christ without one as without the other. They are inseparably connected—the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow. The cross was necessary in order that those who believe in the kingdom might inherit the kingdom; for without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins. Until the blood of Christ had been shed none could receive the things promised.

The foregoing is presented for earnest and careful consideration. Strive to enter in at the strait gate and escape the doom of those who choose the wide gate; for "broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat." The Savior who uttered these words issued His call to repentance and faith. It is for the earnest and unprejudiced inquirer to judge for himself that his "faith should not stand in the wisdom of man, but in the power of God" (1 Cor. 2:5).

What Shall I Do to Be Saved?

THE above question is a legitimate one and one often asked by people who are convinced of their fallen condition and want to be prepared for the final call. It was asked by one a considerable time before the commission was given to the disciples to go forth preaching the gospel to a fallen world, and it was answered by the Master during His own personal ministry.

We know that there are a great many people living in the world today who believe that there is nothing at all we can do to promote our salvation because salvation is not of works. But of this they seem to be ignorant, that in every case where the question was asked in the Bible, the question included the word "do." "What shall I do to be saved?" The answer, too, invariably included something to be done.

In Revelation 20:12 we read that the dead are to be judged "according to their works." Christ saith that "not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." There are some scriptures, however, that seem to need some comment in the light of these sayings, and which some people think contradict them. Let us examine some of them.

John 3:16 says that "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." One might be led, then, to believe that faith in the Lord Jesus Christ is all that is necessary to salvation and, if properly understood, we shall agree with that belief, but most people who cling to the "faith only" mode of salvation fail to divide the word of truth rightly. Let us examine some other texts along this line.

"For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast" (Eph. 2:8, 9).

Now this scripture would seem to teach that there is nothing we can do about our salvation, that all we need to do is wait on the Lord for salvation, trusting that His grace is sufficient for us all and that He will see fit to spare us if we only believe that He will. But you must notice that salvation comes through faith, and the grace of God is extended only to those who have faith. Is there anything we can do about it, then? Can we not have faith, or is there anything we have to do to have this faith? In the first place one must admit that faith is the voluntary act of the individual who exercises it. In that case there is a very definite thing for us to do the very first thing—have faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, for "he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him" (Heb. 11:6). And in the same verse Paul says that without faith it is impossible to please God. Then we find that in the first place one must have faith to believe that He is, and that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him. May I ask if this seeking is something to be done on our part or does God do this for us? We must conclude that it is a voluntary act on our part that places us in communication with Him. Why, then, will people tell you to seek God diligently, have faith in Him, and then say that there is nothing at all we can do to promote our salvation?

Perhaps there are other things, also, we must do in order to be saved. Truly, we do not mean to gainsay the plain statement in Paul's writings to the Ephesians that salvation is not of works, but we wish to have him understood in the light of other scriptures. Peter stated that Paul's writings were somewhat hard to understand, and some people wrested them to their own destruction.

James says, "Even so, faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone. Yea, a man may say, Thou hast faith and I have works: shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works." I should like to ask how a man could show his faith without any works. Do you believe, then, that a man could be justified by faith only? If that be true, how about the devils? James further continues by saying, "Thou believest there is one God, thou doest well; the devils also believe and tremble. But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead?" Do you believe that the devils are saved? They believe with a belief that makes them tremble. Does your faith in God impress you with such force as to make you tremble? We do not believe that the faith exercised by the devils saves them, for their faith is without works. They do nothing but tremble about it. Their faith is a dead faith—it brings death, and we fear that one who hopes to be justified by faith only will also find that his faith is a dead faith and will bring death instead of life.

After recounting how that Abraham was justified by faith, James says, "Seest thou how faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect?" Do you want a perfect faith? Then make it perfect by your works. A perfect faith is all-sufficient, but perfect faith cannot be had without works. The 24th verse of this same chapter of James further states, "Ye see, then, how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only"; and verse 26, "For as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also."

It would seem conclusive evidence with such testimony, that there is something we can do about our salvation. What did Paul mean, then, in saying that "not by works"? Simply this: When Naaman came to the Prophet of old to be healed of his leprosy, he expected to be told to do something great, but instead of that he was told to go down and dip himself in the old muddy river seven times. That was a disappointment to him. If he had been told something great to do, he would have believed that what he did was the thing that healed him, but with this little simple thing he was told to do he could not say that; hence it was not of works, lest he should boast of what he did in the matter. I dare say that none of you believe he would have been healed if he had refused to do what he was told to do—neither do I believe it. So, then, his faith was made perfect by his works and he was healed by the grace of God. It was through faith, for if he had not believed that he would receive the blessing he would not have done such a simple thing for so great a cure. It was not of works, lest he should boast. Now we should begin to understand what Paul meant by his expression and also know how James felt about it.

(Editorial Note: At this point the author introduces the thought that the Ten Commandment Law was made binding upon His disciples by Jesus in that He told the young ruler, in answer to his question, "What good thing must I do?" etc., to "keep the commandments." While on superficial reading the argument seems logical, after careful analysis and comparison with the whole trend of New Testament teaching it appears to us far from conclusive. We recognize, however, the principle laid down by Paul in Romans 14:1-7, and feel that personal judgment in this matter should be withheld.)

When Jesus gave His commission to the disciples He told them to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all things which He had commanded them. We must conclude, therefore, that Jesus gave full and complete directions for a full and complete salvation before the cross, for a man's will and testament must be made before he dies, and must be sealed by his death. Paul declares that though it be but a man's covenant it is of no force at all until the death of the testator, and that no man can change or disannul a testament after that he is dead. We must conclude that Christ preached the gospel of His kingdom, sealed it with His blood, and then gave His commission to His disciples to carry out His will. They were made the executors of the will, and when on the day of Pentecost, Peter was confronted with the same question, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" he answered, "Repent, and be baptized . . . for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Here we find another thing that they must do. This was a requirement exacted of believers. Surely it is a simple thing, but it requires action on the part of the individual to perfect his faith in the death, burial, and resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ, in that it portrays His death, burial, and resurrection from the grave. May we here digress from the principal thought long enough to comment that only immersion in the watery grave fully portrays that historic event. Sprinkling or pouring water on the head of a person doesn't in any respect signify burial or resurrection.

This act of baptism brings one into Christ and covenant relationship (Gal. 3:27; Rom. 6:4). After that "he that endureth unto the end, the same shall be saved." Acts 3:19 states, "Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you: whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."

In conclusion, let us remark that there is a definite work for each of us to perform in service for the Master. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father." "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." Yes, religion is something that must be done; it is something that is work; and work is the means of perfecting our faith. Faith made perfect by our works is an abiding faith which is able to save. So then, "by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast"; that is, the works which we do are insufficient within themselves to save anyone, but by our works is our faith manifested and perfected. Again, "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." "But how shall they believe on him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher?"

It isn't just any old faith that is able to save, but faith founded upon the Word of God. It is possible for a man to believe a lie and be damned. "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death" (Prov. 14:12). Some one may ask whether one is responsible to God if he is misinformed and believes to the best of his information. To this I would reply that "if the blind lead the blind, they shall both fall into the ditch together." We should rather be like the noble Bereans, who searched the Scriptures daily to find if the things taught them were true. Our salvation is worth more to us than our earthly property. None of us would like to spend our life's savings for a piece of property without having examined carefully the abstract of title; but many are seemingly content to take the other fellow's word for our title to a home in glory. Look and live, my brother, live! Life is worth more than property on this earth in the present time.—Burt F. Marrs in The Bible Advocate.

OUR SCIENTIFIC BIBLE

of a temporal, material body and an immortal, immaterial soul. In this present existence the joys and sorrows experienced were those derived from the physical senses. Outwardly and visibly man was a tangible creature and in constant association with other visible, tangible creatures and objects. The earth was his home. When death came, it claimed the body only, not the soul. When the physical organs ceased to function, the soul was released from its fleshly prison and passed at once into a new state of being where the recognized laws of nature no longer operated. The material was discarded forever. The bodily senses ceased. An invisible "spirit" entity took the place of the visible, fleshly form.

Naturally such a view as this greatly diminished the value which men might otherwise place upon the present physically embodied life and put a premium on suicide, as is suggested by the Persian poet, Omar Khayyam:

"Why, if the soul can fling the dust aside,
And naked on the air to heaven ride,
Wer't not a shame—wer't not a shame for him
In this clay carcass crippled to abide?"

Naturally under such teaching, the church came to deny the reality of death and, as we have seen, taught the immortality of the soul. And not only the immortality of the soul, but the immateriality of the soul; that is, that the "ego," the real person, had no lasting connection or identity with the physical body. The two were regarded as being as distinct the one from the other as is the house and the man who lives within it.

VALUE OF RESURRECTION DESTROYED

A philosophy like this of course destroyed, for those who accepted it, the value of a resurrection from the dead.

All pain was recognized as arising in the physical senses and hence not associated with the soul. In death these physical senses ceased to function and all suffering consequently came to an end. Then why not, questioned many at that time, shorten the period of one's pain by committing suicide? And, why desire a resurrection which involved re-imprisonment in the physical body which is the source of such suffering? And why concern oneself with the future of the earth, if at death one left forever this mundane sphere? The beatitude of Christ was robbed of all meaning: "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth" (Matt. 5:5). It was heaven the meek were to inherit, not the earth, according to the borrowed philosophy which was being taught as Christian doctrine.

The earth, its forces, its resources, its possibilities, held nothing of permanent interest or value to the half-pagan, half-Christian men and women who comprised the mass of the "believers" in that period. They wanted to escape from all this! They expected death to separate them from all this! Such was their unbiblical hope.

Christianity, to those deluded people, had little or nothing to connect the interests and experiences of this present life with the life that is to come. The saved of earth were to "pass beyond the reach of time and space" and all that time and space represented of reality. Their eternal destiny was celestial, not terrestrial.

Yet we know that the Bible limits its promises concerning the future of the redeemed to earthly realization. It declares that the earth is to be the home of the saints "forever"; that "the righteous shall never be removed" from it (Prov. 10:30). Consequently the prophets, influenced by divine impressions, manifested a lively interest in the history, the development, and the destiny of the earth, and the descriptions given in the Scriptures of God's "glory land" point unerringly to it.

Science treats of the physical universe. The Bible likewise treats of the physical universe. "We have truth in nature as it came from God," declared Henry Drummond in Natural Law in the Spiritual World, and although Dr. Drummond reached his conclusion more than half a century ago, neither science nor biblical research has discovered anything contrary to it. The Bible and science have to do with the exploration of a common field—the universe of God.

It is true that science discards as untenable many ideas which are acceptable to the older order of theologians. And because science does this, it is frequently criticized severely by certain self-appointed "defenders" of the Scriptures. Yet not infrequently it is found that the final and definite conclusions of science agree remarkably well with the revelations of the Bible. It is of some of these recently discovered agreements that I wish to speak now.

Lord Bacon said that "a little philosophy inclineth man's mind to atheism, but depth in philosophy bringeth man's mind about to religion." More often than otherwise, it is the pseudo-scientist, the unquestioning follower of other men's theories, rather than the original searcher for demonstrable truth, who expresses insistently his skepticism with regard to religion in general and the inspiration of the Scriptures in particular.

It is also frequently the religious person of shallow thinking habits and limited biblical understanding who is the most likely to discredit the discoveries and the deductions of true science.

Before one is in a position where he can intelligently attempt a calm, judicious comparison of the Bible and science he must have cultivated a broadness of mind and a humbleness of spirit which will enable him to approach his investigation with a simple desire to learn the truth. Little of real value can be accomplished by the one who enters upon such an investigation with the thought in his mind that he already possesses complete and definite knowledge on either or both phases of the subject. "A valid analysis of biblical (and scientific) teaching may be made only by trained scholars. Not just anyone is qualified to sit in judgment upon the Bible (or upon science)," rightly declares Alva J. McClain in the Religious Digest.

Continuing, the author relates the story of a lumber dealer who became so interested in the Bible story of Noah's ark that he computed the amount of lumber that would be required to construct it. Later on he read in the Scriptures that "the children of the Levites bore the ark of God upon their shoulders." "Thereupon," said Mr. McClain, "remembering the enormous size and tremendous weight of Noah's ark, he pronounced the Bible to be 'a pack of lies.'"

Regarding the pseudo-scientific criticism of the Bible, the same writer reminds us that "many of the alleged inaccuracies of the Bible have been judged according to scientific theory, not fact. Professor Lydell once stated that 'in the year 1806 the French Institute enumerated no less than eighty geological theories which were hostile to the Scriptures, but not one of those theories is held today.'"

It must also be remembered that the Bible was not written in scientific terms nor was it primarily designed for the teaching of scientific facts. It was written designedly in the simple language of the common people for spiritual enlightenment rather than for scientific instruction.

INTERESTING SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERIES

One of the most interesting scientific facts that is pointed out in the sacred record of creation and repeated in the last book of the Bible has to do with "the tree of life," or the "trees of life," for the word refers to a species rather than to an individual tree.

As we are aware, the medical profession in recent years has come to attribute many diseases to bacteria in the air. Bacteria were unknown until recent years. The Garden of

A boy near the street had his dog pulling the lawnmower. A man was passing and the dog turned toward him and barked furiously. "Don't be scared, Mister," said the boy, "he won't bite. He's barking because it's easier barking than pulling." How about you? Are you a barker or a puller?

AN OPEN LETTER ON "ETERNAL TORMENT"

of the literal rich man that was being literally tormented in literal hell-fire flames? If the hell of your theory is as hot as you picture it to be, don't you think the water would be evaporated before it reached the rich man?

Is it not true that the word "hell" here used comes from the Greek word hades, and not from gehenna, from which the "hell" of Mark 9:43 is translated?

Tell me, if you can, what is the basis of eternal torment? Will God torment a man eternally that lives and never dies? How can he live and never die without being immortal? If he is an immortal sinner how can immortality suffer?

Ezekiel 18:4 says, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." And Paul says, "The wages of sin is death" (Rom. 6:23). Now, since the soul that sins shall die, and "the wages of sin is death," and to die is not to live (Isa. 38:1), how could a soul be literally dead and literally alive at the same time? If the hell of Luke 16:23 had literal fire in it, did the hell mentioned in Acts 2:27, 31 have fire in it? The word translated "hell" in both of these references is from the same Greek word, hades. Was the soul of Christ then rescued or delivered from a condition of fiery torment in which He had suffered for three days and nights prior to His resurrection? That would be the logical conclusion if the word "hell" in Luke 16:23 and the word "hell" in Acts 2:27, 31, mean a place of literal brimstone and fire.

I shall be glad to hear from you at your convenience.

D. L. Moody said: "We live in a day of shams in religion. The church is cold and formal; may God wake us up! And I know of no better way to do it than to get the church looking for the return of our Lord. I have felt like working three times as hard ever since I came to understand that my Lord is coming again. I look upon this world as a wrecked vessel. God has given me a lifeboat and said to me, 'Moody, save all you can.' This world is getting darker and darker; its ruin is coming nearer and nearer. If you have any friends on this wreck unsaved, you had better lose no time in getting them off. 'Behold, I come quickly,' said Christ to John; and the last prayer in the Bible is, 'Even so, come, Lord Jesus.' Were the early Christians disappointed then? No; no man is disappointed who obeys God. The world waited for the first coming of the Lord four thousand years, and then He came. He was here only thirty-three years, and then He went away; but He left us a promise that He would come again; and as the world watched and waited for His first coming and did not watch in vain, so now to them who wait for His appearing shall He appear a second time unto salvation."

National Berean Day

By the time this reaches you General Conference will be in session. Monday, August 9, is Berean Day. The message of the youth of the church will be given voice that day. You should be present to contribute your share to the message of youth. To many people the days in which we are living are dark days; the enthusiasm of youth is needed by those drooping spirits to inspire, to encourage. The church ship is not going down under the waves of indifference, but is going to ride gloriously into port captained by Jesus Christ and manned by brave and stalwart seamen. Do your part.

The Wisdom of God

In comparing the wisdom of man and the wisdom of God we find that the chief difference is that man's wisdom seeks for a favorable temporary result while God's wisdom seeks for a favorable eternal result. Some men can see only as far as the ends of their noses. These are the ones that live for the sensual comforts of the present; they are drunkards and gluttons, and the spoiled grown-ups who go into childish tantrums to have their own way. Then there are others who make a vast preparation for the comforts of this life, but lay up no treasures for the next life. The height of man's wisdom may be seen in advancements in science which enable men to live longer and more comfortable mortal lives among conditions of freedom and happiness. Who can say that the leaders in such advancements have not been endowed with a measure of God's wisdom in order to carry man's wisdom to such comparatively glorious heights? But when we compare such advancements with the advancements that God will make throughout the earth at the setting up of the kingdom of God, we must declare that man's wisdom falls far short of God's wisdom.

If we would have the wisdom of God we must look at things from the spiritual standpoint. We must understand that some things are "spiritually discerned" (1 Cor. 2:14). Sometimes what seems at the moment a serious setback in our plans, an aggravating inconvenience, becomes years later the doorway to much blessing and joy. Take the long view of everything. Look at the eternal result. Have "the mind of Christ" (1 Cor. 2:16).

"The Preaching of the Cross"

"For the preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us which are saved it is the power of God."—1 Corinthians 1:18.

The wisdom of man is expressed in the reviling of Jesus by the mob at the foot of the cross: "If thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross" (Matt. 27:40). If He had divine power why, in this hour of direst need, did He not call for those legions of angels? Before this the mob could not understand why He hid when they were going to make Him King.

Jesus had the wisdom of God. He looked at the eventual result. He saw the stony heart in the breasts of men standing forever as a barrier to true happiness on earth. And He took the only possible way to soften that heart, love. The cross was the demonstration of love. It showed that "God so loved the world" (John 3:16). And the result is, that "when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son" (Rom. 5:10). Thus the stony heart is removed and we obtain from God a heart of flesh. Stone does not yield to the needs of others, flesh is yielding. It would be impossible to have a world of people living together in happiness unless every person were unselfish. The way of the cross is the way to unselfishness. It is the way to eventual happiness on earth for mankind. It is the way to the kingdom of God.

The Thrill of Leadership

It would be false to deny that there is a thrill of accomplishment that goes with molding character. Faithful fathers and mothers, Bible teachers, preachers, all have this glow of satisfaction in their work. Carried into the field of godly character it is the pride of an artisan in the quality of his work. No one denies the architect his right to feel happy over the splendid church edifice he has built. How much greater should be the thrill of an eternity builder, one who builds character for eternal life! It is a normal reaction. It is part of the pay for all the work, sacrifices, and sometimes heartaches, that one must of necessity put into it.

But what can be said of the individual who does do the work of a master artisan of character merely for the thrill he gets out of it and no more? There come to every individual failures and disappointments where there can be no thrill of accomplishment. Upon what more solid foundation must one retrench? Surely, the driving force in every leader's engines must be the acknowledgment that what he is doing he must of necessity do; God has ordered it. It is his responsibility, through success or through failure, to do that particular job. "For if I do this thing willingly, I have a reward: but if against my will, a dispensation of the gospel is committed unto me" (1 Cor. 9:17).

There are times when one must have the attitude of Tennyson's Charge of the Light Brigade: "Theirs not to reason why, Theirs but to do and die."

WHAT A WISE KING SAID

GOD had given Moses and Aaron very special directions about the building of the tabernacle, how all its furnishings were to be constructed and where they were to be placed. Then He told them just how they should conduct the different services of worship. The tabernacle and later the temple were God's dwellingplaces among men, and as such it was right that they should be as worthy as the children of Israel could make them.

One of the first things that God requires of us is obedience, not because He wants to show His authority, but because He knows that only through obedience can we find happiness and peace. The story of Adam and Eve, which all of you know so well, shows the result of disobedience. Everything happened just as God said it would if they did not obey.

Now God expected the people to follow His directions concerning the different services of worship, just as carefully as the other laws He gave them. One of His rules was that the coals of fire for the censer should be taken from off the altar. The censer was a large metal spoon, or vessel, for carrying these coals, and incense, a sort of perfume, was burned on them.

Nadab and Abihu, the two elder of the four sons of Aaron, had been specially chosen to assist in the services of worship. It seems that one day instead of taking coals from off the altar in order to burn the incense, they took just ordinary coals. Their punishment came immediately, for we read that fire came down from God and devoured them.

We do not know that Nadab and Abihu had been indulging in strong drink before they went into the tabernacle. But we may rightly conclude that they had, because at once God spoke to Aaron and told him that neither he nor his sons were to drink wine or strong drink of any kind before going into the tabernacle, or else they would die.

This was to be one of their laws forever, God told them, because He wanted them to realize the difference between holy and unholy things. And they were to teach this to their children's children also.

One who had been drinking wine was unclean, according to God's standard, and not fit to take part in the services of worship. Aaron must have been very deeply grieved over his sons' conduct, but surely he realized that God's punishment of them was just.

You remember that Moses was leading his people back to Canaan, their promised homeland. Well, the inhabitants of that land, when the Israelites reached Mount Sinai, grew many fine grapes, and they made wine from them, which they drank to excess. Now God didn't want His people to do that, and so before they entered the land He gave them these rules about drinking.

Their wisest ruler, King Solomon, who reigned many years later, wrote the book of Proverbs, and there are two verses from it in our lesson for August 29. If the wisest man that ever lived told you never to drink wine or other strong drink, you would, no doubt, heed him. And that is just what he did.

Some day when you are tired of play and don't know just what to do, get out your Bible and look through the book of Proverbs. Mark down on a sheet of paper all the verses you can find that warn you against strong drink. See how many you can find. There are some on almost every page.

The 31st chapter of Proverbs gives us the words of King Lemuel, taught him by his mother. We do not know just who King Lemuel was, nor his mother, but we do know she was a very wise woman. She is the forgotten princess of some unknown land, but her words live even today, and they are good for us right now.

All of you can name one outstanding young man of the Hebrew race who would not touch the rich food and the wine served on the King's table. And he came out at the end of the ten days of trial in far better condition than the others who were not so wise. He was favored by God all through his life for his obedience and faithfulness.

Isaiah was another who warned the people against strong drink. Samaria, the capital of North Israel, was a beautiful city set on a hill surrounded by a fertile valley. Everything was there to make life worth living, but the nation was overcome because they had become a nation of drunkards. They never rose from their degradation.

And now we come to the New Testament and read the words of that greatest preacher for Christ—Paul, the beloved Apostle. He tells us that we harm not only ourselves by strong drink, but we are liable to lead another into the wrong path. Paul saw that very thing being done all about him in the wicked city of Corinth, and he warned the Christians of Rome so they would not do the same terrible thing.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

CONFERENCE CALENDAR

August 3-15—General Conference of the Church of God; Illinois State Conference and Bible School; National Berean Conference, Oregon, Ill.

August 15-22—Western Nebraska State Conference at Holbrook.

August 21-29—Fiftieth anniversary of the Iowa State Conference, Waterloo.

August 19-29—Virginia State Conference and Bible School, Maurertown, Va.

IOWA BIBLE SCHOOL AND CONFERENCE

This is the time of year when we think of harvest time, conference time, and vacation time. Can we bring all these together at one time on the beautiful camp grounds of the Church of God in Waterloo, Iowa, August 21 to 29?

The harvest truly is plenteous, and we have planned to have a number of laborers who will explain the Scriptures in lessons and sermons as they are revealed to them. Besides our usual leaders in the State, will be the addition of Bro. John Denchfield and Bro. Melville W. Lyon.

As this year marks the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Iowa Conference, we hope it will be a banner year for attendance and spiritual growth. We especially invite all ministers who have ever been to the Iowa Conference to come again this year, though not forgetting any who might be able to attend for the first time.

One day will be devoted especially to the Fiftieth Anniversary program, including a "50-cent march."

Berean Day will be held on the usual Thursday, with the young people's program in the afternoon. So please come prepared, young people, with special music or instruments or some other number.

How many would like to see the church building on the camp grounds all finished when you come to Conference? This very thing is being planned by your State president, Bro. H. S. Hunt, and his coworkers, and there will be an opportunity for you to make this a reality as you are financially able.

The general expenses of the Conference, tents and meals will also be taken care of by your freewill offerings. No one should stay away because he feels he cannot afford to attend. Come, be one of the large family and feel at home. May we see you there?

Esther Sealine, Cor. Sec.

ILLINOIS BUSINESS MEETING

The annual business meeting of the Illinois State Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus will be held, the Lord willing, in the Oregon church at 3 o'clock on the afternoon of Friday, Aug. 13, 1937. All Illinois members who can be requested to be there to take an interested part.

Paul C. Johnson, President.

THE VIRGINIA CONFERENCE

The Virginia Conference and Bible School will be held at the Church of God in Maurertown, Va., Aug. 19 to 29, inclusive. The date has been changed to enable those who are coming from the West to remain at the General Conference to its close and reach Virginia in time for the opening session.

Bro. and Sr. F. A. Stilson and Bro. and Sr. G. E. Marsh will constitute the teaching and preaching corps from out of the State.

This annual Conference and Bible School is held in the beautiful and historic Shenandoah Valley of the Old Dominion and the opportunity of visiting this region is sufficient to stimulate anyone to make an effort to attend this gathering, to say nothing of the blessings of a spiritual nature which are provided.

HERALD RECEIPTS

Mrs. Eliza Cassen; Mrs. A. E. Rush; Mrs. Ruby Johnson; J. A. Grant; Mrs. S. E. Hodges; G. Alfred Driskill; Mary Richardson; Mrs. Frances McCrodan; Bruce Thompson; Mrs. Wylodine Lederer; Mrs. E. Blick; Fred Tavenier; Mrs. Mattie Agard; Mrs. J. Elshaw; Mrs. Grace Hall; Miss J. Salisbury; A. Hollinshead; Mrs. Ella Berryfield; J. Don Swartz; Samuel Giles; Mrs. L. M. Parish; Harold Starbuck; William Gitchell; Mrs. Helen Banks; F. J. Pfiffner; Eldwin Knott; John Marsh; Mrs. Alfred Anderson; Mrs. Rex Crouch; Cloyd Starbuck; Mrs. C. V. Bodin; George Lansbery; Mrs. Nora Fieser; Otto Wilson; D. W. Kirkpatrick.

INDIANA EVANGELISTIC COMMITTEE

At the recent Indiana Conference plans were laid for an extensive evangelistic effort during 1937-38 in new localities throughout the State of Indiana. A committee was appointed to be in charge of this work. Bro. F. A. Stilson, South Bend, chairman; Bro. Willis Roose, Nappanee, treasurer; and Bro. D. G. Harvey, Kokomo, secretary.

Let each member of the Church of God in Indiana consider this project. All who see the need of the effort and feel able to contribute to the fund now being raised by pledges, dollar-a-month clubs, etc., send all donations to Bro. Willis Roose, Nappanee, Ind.

Any isolated member who desires services and Bible classes, with the intention of building up the work in his locality, please get in touch with the committee at once by writing to one of the members near you.

We hope to have the cooperation of the brotherhood throughout the State, that we in turn may cooperate with the recently created Home Mission Board of the General Conference.

D. G. Harvey, Secretary
Indiana Evangelistic Committee.

The Pine Woods Bible Class, by W. H. Wilson: 480 pages; cloth binding; a discussion, in conversational form, based upon actual class work by the author, on various phases of the gospel; 75¢, postpaid for cash. National Bible Institution.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

No, our beloved Bro. Lyman Booth was not the "first to arrive at General Conference" this year as he has been on so many previous occasions. He rests from his labor, but his influence will live until the Lord comes to reward His servants.

A new voice and smile will greet visitors at The Restitution Herald office this year. Sr. Lois Carpenter is now our proofreader and office secretary. Sr. Carpenter is also the organist of the Oregon church and as such will represent the local congregation in the musical part of our conference program.

The executive board of the National Bible Institution held its final meeting of the conference year last Saturday to discuss plans for the conference and to complete the reports which are to be presented to the brethren for their consideration.

The special offer to new subscribers to The Restitution Herald will be continued during the General Conference. A representative of the paper will receive subscriptions at the exceedingly low rates that were recently announced through these columns. WHILE THE CONFERENCE IS IN SESSION!

A letter from Sr. Lydia A. Railsback, South Bend, Ind., expresses her sorrow at not being able to be with us at General Conference this year and assures us that her prayers are for the advancement of the work. Sr. Railsback prepares the "Golden Text" department for the Truth Seekers' Quarterly. She was president of the National Berean Society, and has been actively engaged in Christian activity for many years.

Sr. William Lloyd, a sister of Sr. Philip Senff of Bremen, Ind., writes that the latter is improving since suffering a paralytic stroke during the Indiana Conference, and is able to use her hand and foot partially again. Sr. Senff asks for the prayers of the brotherhood for her recovery.

Among recent articles taken from The Restitution Herald which have been copied by other church papers are contributions from Emma C. Railsback, Richard LeCrone, and Lyman Booth. Our writers reach by way of The Herald and our numerous exchanges a large and appreciative audience. It is worth while to give profound thought and careful preparation to printed sermons when we realize that they are to reach an audience numbering thousands.

WORK IN MINNESOTA

We began meetings in the Mudgett Township District No. 19, schoolhouse, Wednesday evening, July 7, and closed on July 25, having had an average attendance of 22. The first Sunday the Bible school attendance was 24, and on the last Sunday, 27.

The following young lives were baptized into the all-saving name of Jesus Christ: Lois Elaine Baker, 13; William Baker, 11; Raymond Baker, 13, all of Onamia, Rt. 2. May we pray for these young people, that their new lives will be a great help to others.

An interesting thing we encountered in this district, which is several miles from town with no religious services, was one family that holds a Bible school for themselves in their own home. We thank God for Christian homes that keep their families close to the Lord!

We now have here an organized Bible school with Bro. O. H. Berry as superintendent. There are also twelve charter members as the beginning of a Church of God. Sr. O. H. Berry will act as chairman of the new church group and Bro. Berry as secretary-treasurer.

It was our joy to labor in this community. Our daughter, Pheiba, assisted with her good leadership in song and acted as organist. Much credit is due to Bro. and Sr. Berry for this beginning, as they have desired a church and Bible school to be established since they came into the community. Their home was opened to us, and we thank God for their hospitality. May the Lord bless their leadership and may some one of our ministers come to them permanently that they may be encouraged and strengthened. Pray for them, brethren.

There is much work to do and we find many places where people are hungry for the Word. Monday, July 19, I preached in another schoolhouse, northwest of Miloe Lake, to an interested group of about forty.

Sunday, Aug. 1, I will hold two services at Oak Park. Tuesday, the 3rd, I will begin a series of meetings in the McKinby Schoolhouse at Mora. We again solicit your prayers.

Owing to the fact that we will not return to Burr Oak, Ind., as pastor, we will be unable to attend the General Conference. Our plans were to attend, but the best we can do under the circumstances is to pray for a great revival among all Christians, and that the Conference will send forth many workers into the fields which seem to be ripe unto harvest.

Wednesday, July 28, Bro. Richard LeCrone and the writer drove to Graytown, Wis., for an evening with the brethren there. Bro. LeCrone in his splendid way preached to an interested group. We found to our joy the work going ahead nicely. The Bible school meets each Sunday and the new young people's Berean society is assembling each Sunday night in the homes. Sr. Elliott Goodwin is doing a good work in teaching these eager Bereans. They are planning to attend the young people's conference to be held in Eden Valley, Saturday, July 31, and Sunday, August 1.

A. E. Hoskins, Minnesota State Evangelist.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

When we read in The Restitution Herald that Bro. C. E. Randall was making a missionary trip to the Northwest, we sent an invitation for him to "come over into Macedonia and help us." He accepted the invitation; he came, and he has helped us. The occasion was one of rejoicing and spiritual uplift.

The matter of home missions is one that has been greatly neglected, and this effort that is being put forth at the present time is much needed. The sacrifice of time by Bro. Randall is a blessing to the scattered churches on the West Coast. His three sermons given on Sunday, July 18, were the means of inspiring us with more zeal, and a firmer determination to make every possible sacrifice that others in this broad land may hear the gospel of the kingdom in these closing days of the Gentile times.

On Monday we drove to Pomona and partook of a picnic dinner with a group of the brethren in the park which Bro. Macleod is superintending. Afterward we listened to a missionary sermon by Bro. Randall in the Williams Street Chapel. We know that Bro. Randall's efforts are meeting with God's blessing, and we feel assured that such an awakening will result that each individual group of workers will rally to the cause of home missions to the honor and glory of God.

REFLECTIONS OF GREAT MINDS

"Think on these things."—Paul.

"An ambassador is an honest man sent abroad for the commonwealth."—Sir Henry Wotton.

There is more truth than poetry in this statement, which the author called a "merry definition of an ambassador." It reminds one of Daniel 11:27, "And both these kings' hearts shall be to do mischief, and they shall speak lies at one table."

ELDER ALMUS A. ADAMS SLEEPS

Almus Adams, son of James and Sarah Adams, was born near Monmouth, Ill., Aug. 12, 1854, and died at his home in Omaha, Neb., July 22, 1937.

When he was about a year old his parents moved to Gifford, Iowa, where he grew to manhood. On July 27, 1876, he was united in marriage to Jane Wilson. To this union were born nine children, six boys and three girls. Two sons, Edgar and Glen, and one daughter, Maud, preceded him in death.

In the early eighties he took a homestead in southwestern Nebraska, near Holbrook, where he lived until 1901, when the family moved to Omaha, where they have since resided.

In 1878 he entered the body of Christ, being baptized by C. C. Ramsey, and since 1880 gave his life to the teaching of the kingdom.

Those left to mourn his passing are: his wife, Jane; four sons, Ray and Esco of Omaha, Leo of Los Angeles, and Clair of San Francisco, Calif.; two daughters, Mrs. Alta Thrush of Salem, Ore., and Mrs. Elsie Srong of Omaha; two brothers, Manny of Peterson, Iowa, and John of Holbrook, Neb.; one sister, Mrs. Cary Levy of Compton, Calif.; one half-brother, Edward of Baxter, Iowa; sixteen grandchildren; and a multitude of converts to the cause of Christ.

Funeral services were conducted by Elder Grover Gordon of Holbrook on Monday, July 26, 1937, and he was laid to rest in Mount Hope Cemetery to await the coming of the Lord.

CHARLES T. STORY

Charles T. Story was born January 24, 1861, in Cedar County, Iowa, and passed away July 19, 1937, at Hastings, Neb.

When but a small boy he moved with his parents to Gifford, Hardin County, Iowa. He grew to manhood there, and on September 1, 1880, he was united in marriage to Emma J. Harris. To this union five children were born, two of them having preceded him in death. In 1885 the family came to Furnas County, Neb., and located on a farm southwest of Holbrook, where they lived until 1912. That year he and his family moved to town. On March 23, 1933, his wife was called to rest and since that time he has resided with his son Guy, until July 3, 1937.

While but a young man he united with the Church of God and remained a faithful member until the end. He was always a hard worker and a kind husband and father. He was always thinking of the needs of others.

He leaves to mourn his death two sons, Clyde of Bartley, and Guy of Holbrook; one daughter, Mrs. Ada Stearns of Arapahoe; one step-daughter, Mrs. Cora Clay of Eldora, Iowa; one brother, S. A. Story of Holbrook; nine grandchildren and one great-grandchild. He was preceded in death by his wife, Emma, and two daughters, Mrs. Maude Cooper and Grace, who died in infancy.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer at the Church of God in Holbrook, Neb., and he was laid to rest in the Holbrook Cemetery beside his wife to await the call to life when Jesus comes.

Grover Gordon.

THE TITHING BULLETIN

The bulletin, as prepared by The Layman Company, offers every church the most effective of tithing education plus relief from half of the expense and worries of the ordinary church bulletin.

The bulletin consists of four pages. Pages 1 and 4 are for the use of the local church. They may be printed, multigraphed, or mimeographed at one impression. Pages 2 and 3 carry any one of 32 of the famous Layman tithing messages.

This affords a quiet but effective course in stewardship education. It combines simplicity, effectiveness, and economy.

Sample set containing 32 different tithing bulletins, 20 cents. When ordering, please mention The Restitution Herald; also give your denomination.

"DIVISIONS MUST NEEDS COME"

This seems to be a time of increasing division among religious bodies. One of the few denominations with which The Restitution Herald is in agreement doctrinally to a marked extent, is among those now suffering from this unfortunate condition. A few years ago the first open division came and a second general headquarters and a second official publication was established. Now a third paper appears which, while it declares itself as independent of all sects, is published by an "Elder" of this same denomination and obviously for the purpose of promulgating a "private interpretation" of a doctrine which does not find support in the church of which he is a member.

May we stand united in our proclamation of the great truths which have made us a people until the Lord comes!

OUR SCIENTIFIC BIBLE

Eden apparently knew not the presence of disease or of disease-transmitting bacteria. There were in the Garden of Eden, you will remember, "every tree that is pleasant to the sight and good for food; the tree of life also in the midst of the garden" (Gen. 2:9). The Garden of Eden was a beautifully wooded park. No dangerous bacteria lurked in its cool and healthful fastnesses.

Now for the astonishing assertion of the modern scientist!

Dr. Paine of the London Imperial College of Science and Technology, writing in the last edition of the Encyclopedia Britannica (Vol. II, page 305), declares that it is hard to demonstrate the presence of bacteria in forest areas because "the leaves of the trees seem to act as efficient bacterial filters."

"The tree of life (was) in the midst of the garden"! How significant are these words, especially when we recall the fact that when Eden is restored the "tree of life" will flourish again. John saw that "in the midst of the street" (of the city) "and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month: and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations" (Rev. 22:2).

Dr. Paine said that "the leaves of the trees seem to act as efficient bacterial filters"! This is interesting, to say the least!

Probably it will be because this will be true that "the inhabitants (of the new edenic world) shall not say, I am sick: the people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity" (Isa. 33:24).

Sin and sickness are closely associated by both the Bible and science. Disease is conceded to be the result of the breaking of natural law, declares the medical profession, while according to the Bible it is caused by breaking God's law, which means the same thing. Another interesting conclusion of science to which Mr. McClain directs our attention has to do with the earth.

The ancients had the idea that the earth was flat and rested upon the "Pillars of Hercules," or upon the back of a great tortoise which stood upon a coiled serpent, or upon huge elephants, or that it was upheld by the giant Atlas. It was in comparatively recent time that men came to believe the statement of the Bible with regard to this matter: "He stretcheth out the north over the empty place, and hangeth the earth upon nothing" (Job 26:7).

Apparently disagreeing with those who hold to the theory of a flat earth, the Bible affirms the deductions of science. "Have ye not known? have ye not heard? hath it not been told you from the beginning? have ye not understood from the foundations of the earth? It is he that sitteth upon the circle of the earth, and the inhabitants thereof are as grasshoppers; that stretcheth out the heavens as a curtain; and spreadeth them out as a tent to dwell in" (Isa. 40:21, 22). The Lord "sitteth upon the circle of the earth."

Our Lord also suggests that the earth is round in His great prophetic sermon, where He tells of conditions that will prevail in different parts of the world at the moment of His coming.

"I tell you in that night there shall be two men in one bed; the one shall be taken, and the other left. Two women shall be grinding together; the one shall be taken, and the other left" (Luke 17:34, 35).

Two men are sleeping—the earth is robed in the darkness of night—when the Lord calls one of the two to meet Him in the air. The two women are grinding grain, as is still done in the Orient, out of doors in the shade cast by their house, under the morning sun, when the Lord takes one of them to meet Him in the clouds. But He comes "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye," at the same instant to both groups. To the one group He will come at night; to the other, during the day. Such could be true only upon a round earth circling in majesty about its central sun in obedience to the unchangeable laws of the God of all science and the Author of Our Scientific Bible.

No one subject in all the field of physics is more interesting than light.

"From a Hero of Alexandria to Michelson of Chicago the basic hypothesis concerning light is that it is a form of energy. The logical sequence, it is agreed, is: first energy, then light."

This exact order is given in the divine story of creation as revealed in Genesis. "And the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters. And God said, Let there be light: and there was light" (Gen. 1:2, 3).

The word "spirit," whether it is applied to God or to man, always conveys the idea of force or energy. The Spirit or energy of God moved "upon the face of the waters" and "light" appeared. First the energy, then the light.

This same order will be followed when the Sun of Righteousness arises at the end of this present age of darkness. Isaiah describes the condition that will prevail before the glorious Sun comes to dispel the gloom.

"Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth and gross darkness the people; but the Lord shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee. And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising" (Isa. 60:1-3).

The darkest hour is just before the dawn, and so it will be when the Lord comes. Fear and weakness shall lay hold upon the people in those trying hours. "Darkness," the darkness of sin, "shall cover the earth." Then shall God say once again, as He said in the morning of creation, "Let there be light"! And there shall be light! For the Light of the world shall come at His command. The energy of God's Word shall go forth and the glorious Light of the World shall arise to set no more forever!

Thus we see in a few instances out of many which might be presented how the God of science, the Creator of natural law, proves His authorship of that law in Our Scientific Bible!

Always With Us

Always with us, always with us—
Words of cheer and words of love;
Thus the risen Savior whispers,
From His dwelling place above.

With us when we toil in sadness,
Sowing much and reaping none;
Telling us that in the future
Golden harvests shall be won.

With us when the storm is sweeping
O'er our pathway dark and drear;
Waking hope within our bosoms,
Stilling every anxious fear.

With us in the lonely valley,
When we cross the chilling stream—
Lighting up the steps to glory
With salvation's radiant beam.

Egypt Crowns an Independent King

"There shall be no more a prince of the land of Egypt"
—Ezekiel 30:13.

CAIRO, Egypt, July 29.—For the first time in four centuries Egypt today crowned an independent monarch. But not even with the coronation of King Farouk I, does "a prince of the land of Egypt" sit upon the throne of that ancient realm. It would appear that with the fall of the celebrated Bekenrenf or Bocchoris, the sole representative of the 24th dynasty, the Egyptian kingly line came to an end, and that God's Word has been again vindicated and that there has been "no more a prince of the land of Egypt" to reign over that ancient realm.

The new monarch, who ascends the throne today, on his eighteenth birthday, is of Albanian descent. Albania is now an independent republic, across the Adriatic Sea from Italy.

While it is true that no prince of the royal line of Egypt is to sit upon the throne of that ancient empire, nevertheless Egypt as a nation, like Babylon, Greece, and Rome, must be revived if the Word of God is to be fulfilled. For the time will come when "the Lord of hosts shall bless, saying, Blessed be Egypt my people, and Assyria the work of my hands, and Israel mine inheritance" (Isa. 19:25).

Relics From Armageddon

"He gathered them together in a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon."—Revelation 16:16.

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—The Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago received last week a collection of gold and ivory treasure unearthed in a palace at Megiddo (Armageddon) in western Palestine last March by a field expedition led by Gordon Loud. Prof. John A. Wilson, director of the Institute, said that inspection of the relics, which are more than three thousand years old, as they were being unpacked confirms the high importance which they will have for biblical and Oriental studies. Expeditions of the Oriental Institute have been working at the Megiddo site for the last thirteen years.

"The hoard was found in a magnificent palace with frescoed walls and floors of seashell mosaic that stood just within the city gate and dominated the ramp approach to the fortress city," said Mr. Loud. "Within this palace lived princes of Megiddo who ruled this small section of the Egyptian Empire from about 1500 to 1200 B. C.

"This hoard no doubt represents a collection of royal gifts sent from Egypt and from Asiatic provinces. A splendid gold bowl shaped like a sea shell probably was a gift from some Asiatic king. A gold mesh chain was so beautifully and carefully made that it remains strong and flexible today as it was 3,500 years ago."

It has been thought by some that the date when this great treasure was hidden was several hundred years earlier than that suggested by Professor Loud, and that it may have been placed where it was found by the royal family which ruled Megiddo at the time of the Israelitish conquest of Palestine, to prevent the invaders from getting it.

Bacteria Possess Remarkable Vitality

"The leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations."—Revelation 22:2.

LOS ANGELES, Calif., Aug. 1.—From the archeological expedition headed by Dr. Ira B. Bartle of San Louis Obispo, California, which has been engaged in making excavations at the "Pyramid of the Sun" at Tenotihuacan, Mexico, comes the report of the discovery of bacteria which are possessed of remarkable vitality. Dr. Bartle says that he removed a chunk out of the ancient pyramid by special permission of the Mexican Government, and experimentation under favorable conditions resulted in the "awakening of sleeping bacteria" which had remained dormant for (the Doctor's figures) eight thousand years. The bacterial cells immediately started reproducing, "each after his kind."

Bacteria is a name applied to the most minute vegetable organisms known. They were discovered about the middle of the seventeenth century by Anthony van Leeuwenhoek, a Holland lens grinder. At the beginning they were thought to be spontaneously generated, but the experiments of Conn, 1853-1872, demolished that theory concerning bacteria as the theory of the spontaneous generation of life in any form was overthrown by Professor Tyndall by the research in which he engaged at about the same time. In his Natural Law in the Spiritual World, Dr. Henry Drummond provides an interesting history of these various discoveries.

A recent editorial, "Our Scientific Bible," appearing in this paper of August 3, 1937, suggested some interesting thoughts with regard to the eradication of bacteria in the age to come through the instrumentality of the leaves of the tree of life.

Growth in the Kingdom of God

By the Editor

WHAT will living be like in the kingdom of God? When the trumpet sounds, when the dead in Christ arise, when these vile bodies are changed "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye" and "fashioned like unto his glorious body," and we are caught up to be forever with the Lord—how shall we from that day forward occupy our time, the endless, ageless, countless time of eternity?

That is an eminently practical question and one which thoughtful men and women have been asking since it was addressed to Jesus by the disciples long ago: "Behold, we have forsaken all, and followed thee; what shall we have therefore?" (Matt. 19:27).

If what Peter asserted was true, and we have every reason to believe that it was, the Apostle was fully justified in asking such a question. "Behold, we have forsaken all, and followed thee!" Surely if one gives up all that he may become a follower of Jesus it is not unreasonable for him to inquire what he is to receive by way of reward for doing so.

Of course some people are more easily satisfied than others. They are willing to let the future reveal conditions as they develop. They do not care to enter into a study of details. Eternal life and a place in the kingdom is all they ask. They care nothing for the geographical or astronomical location of the kingdom. They are not interested enough in it to seek to learn whether it is to be in heaven or on earth. So great is their faith in God, they declare, that they are willing to wait for eternity to make known to them all that God has in store for them.

Deeply thoughtful people, however, are not thus easily satisfied. They seek constantly and appreciatively for richness of detail and exactitude of statement regarding these things. This is not because meditative people have less faith than do others, but they are so constituted mentally that they crave knowledge as a hungry man craves meat. The more they learn about the kingdom of God that is to be, the more anxious they become to obtain a place in that kingdom.

We have studied this subject from many different viewpoints in the past, but never, we believe, have we approached it from the direction we are coming from at this time. We have had the answers to all of the more obvious questions long ago: The kingdom is to be upon the earth;

Christ is coming personally to be its King; the immortalized saints are to be joint-rulers with Him in the kingdom. These things, I say, we know. In our present investigation we will endeavor to ignore such matters of common knowledge, as we ask:

WHAT WILL LIVING BE LIKE IN THE KINGDOM OF GOD?

Will living conditions in the kingdom resemble in any way the life that we experience now? If so, in what way and to what degree?

Much more enters into this problem than appears on the surface. The only way in which we can really appreciate the possibilities of the future life is by comparing the descriptions of that life as provided by the prophets with the life that we now have. Therefore we must think of conditions over there as being somewhat like those with which we are familiar here.

Take for instance the matter of kingship. We recall reading the remarkable song of the four and twenty elders who stood before the throne and who testified: "Thou hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth" (Rev. 5:10). But just how much do you and I know about kingship? Not one of us has ever been a king. Very few have ever seen a king. Few indeed have lived in a kingdom at any time. Then what can we know about kings and kingdoms that would serve to create within us a fervent desire to obtain a place upon the throne of the King of kings in His kingdom?

We may imagine what such a position carries with it, but we cannot really know what being a real live king is like! When we were children we probably thought that a king went about always wearing a great golden crown upon his head and grasping a gem-studded scepter in his hand. That when he sat down it was upon a marvelous throne of gold and ivory. Great crowds of richly robed courtiers were constantly making obeisance before him. We never thought of a king, as we have since seen pictured in the daily papers, tramping through the woods with a shotgun under his arm and dressed in a wrinkled, mud-spattered hunting coat!

Knowing absolutely nothing about the manner in which a king lives and what he does (Please turn to Page 11)

IT IS GOD'S WORD!

Apart from any theory of inspiration, or any theory of how the Bible books came to their present form, or how much the text may have suffered in transmission at the hands of editors and copyists; apart from the question of how much is to be interpreted literally and how much figuratively, or what is historical and what may be poetical: if you will assume that the Bible is just what it appears to be, accept the books as we have them in our Bible as units, study them to know their contents, you will find there is Unity of Thought that seems to indicate that One Mind inspired the writing and compilation of the whole series of books; that it bears on its face the stamp of its Author; that it is in some distinctive sense the Word of God.—Henry Hampton Halley.

The Doctrine of Christ

Number 5

By Harvey Krogh, Jr.

"Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbour, and hate thine enemy."—Matthew 5:43

AGAIN the Christ reminds us of the old law which only strained at sin but could not wrench it from the human heart. The law takes for granted that love of self is the only love, and that for all others there is nothing but hatred.

After thus reminding us of the old, our Master spoke: "But I say unto you, Love your enemies." So often have we heard this, and thought it an outbreak of idealism on the part of Jesus and that it was not possible for us to attain such perfection!

Once more we say that His commandments were contrary to nature. We say it is humanly impossible to love those whom we hate. And it is true that carnal man cannot love his enemies. Then why did Christ command it? The answer is, He commanded it because He expected men to do it. But carnal man cannot do it.

When Paul wrote to the Corinthian brethren, he said, "And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ. I have fed you with milk, and not with meat: for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet are ye able. For ye are carnal: for whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men?" (1 Cor. 3:1-3). Paul here speaks of two classes of people, the one carnal, the other spiritual.

People have been divided into three classes. First, the animal man. And we do not mean the monkey man of the evolution theory, but man in all his unrestrained lusts and passions; the man before the law was given, who walked according to his own evil heart; the kind of man that you and I might be if we were not restrained by law or were not new creatures in Christ.

The second is the reformed man, he who refrains from committing sin because the law will punish him if he does wrong; the man that Paul was writing to, whom he called carnal; you and I when we walk after the flesh.

And the third class is the spiritual man who keeps the law of Christ; the one who keeps the law because he loves to do so and because it is written in his heart and is a part of him.

Of course the carnal man cannot love his enemies. The carnal man must die. Therefore we must crucify our old man with Christ and destroy the body of sin (Rom. 6:6). "Reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom. 6:11). "Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new" (2 Cor. 5:17). It is the new man that can love his enemies. Paul, after he became that new man of whom he spoke, said: "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me" (Phil. 4:13).

This is a test to determine whether or not you are yet carnal: Can you do all things through Christ? I do not mean that it is a test as to whether or not you are a Christian, but it determines whether or not you are a babe in Christ, or grown; whether or not you are carnal or spiritual.

"Bless them that curse you." I wonder sometimes why we are cursed. Could it be that our unkind attitude, our un-Christian acts bring out the worst in the nature of that one who curses? Just one little unkind gesture on the highway will bring a curse from another driver. Why should you add to your sin by cursing him in return? Would it not be much better to atone for your first sin by blessing him or wishing him well?

"Do good to them that hate you." We have all been condemned with those who hate us because we have hated them and therefore we were like them. When we hate we judge. "Therefore thou art inexcusable, O man, whosoever thou art that judgest: for wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself; for thou that judgest doest the same things" (Rom. 2:1, 2). "To them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honour and immortality, eternal life" shall be the reward. Patient continuance in well doing? Yes, patience and doing good to them that hate you is part of that "well doing." How shall we do good to them? Love them! Through Christ you can do it.

"Pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you." If you can pray for your enemies you manifest the Spirit of God in your heart. When you have His Spirit you cannot but pity and love those on your prayer list, even those who persecute you.

Do you pray for them? Or do you not because you do not want to? If you knew of the joy and blessings that come when such prayers are offered you would want to pray more. When such prayers come from your lips they change you and make you over inside and indeed you are a new creature in Christ.

Now why all these commandments? "That ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven." If we are to be children we should be obedient and be like Him in some small way. And the joy and blessings that come from such a kind Father! "For he maketh his sun to shine on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust!" Truly He is kind and merciful, for He

How Did the Early Christians Baptize?

FOR several centuries theologians have debated the exact meaning of the Greek word baptizo. Endless volumes have been written on the mode of baptism. In this article we propose to ignore the textual criticism entirely, and occupy ourselves with the ancient sources themselves—the authoritative Roman Catholic literature and early archeological relics, which demonstrate beyond a doubt how the early church administered this rite.

Suffice it to say in passing that the American Bible Union Version, Campbell's translation, Worrell's, Rotherhams, Cone and Wyckoff's, and the Emphatic Diaglott translate Matthew 3:13-17 and Romans 6:3 "immersed" or "dipped."

One of the early canons of the church (Canon II of XVII Council of Toledo, Spain, 694 A. D.) gives a sidelight on the form of baptism. It states: "Although at the beginning of Lent the general administration of baptism should cease, notwithstanding ecclesiastical order demands of necessity that the same day the doors of the baptistry should be closed . . . and the day of the Lord's resurrection, they be opened in the same way."—Coleccion de Canones de la Iglesia de Espana, vol. 2, p. 397.

The commentary of this canon follows:

"This canon commands that at the beginning of Lent the baptistries be closed. . . . Anciently the baptistries were not what we call baptismal fonts today. . . . In the first two centuries of the church there was hardly any special place for baptism but that which circumstances afforded in the houses, rivers, ponds, or any other place. But as soon as the emperors were converted to Christianity, and the church began to build magnificent temples, there were built also certain edifices for administering baptism. . . . They called these places 'baptistries,' and the Greeks called them 'places of enlightenment'; for the ancients often gave to baptism the name of illumination."—Id., p. 597.

"These buildings formed an edifice separate but contiguous to the church; and as the days on which baptism was administered were few and the number of illuminated ones was great, therefore these baptistries had to be large and spacious . . . ; ordinarily in each baptistry there were two conclaves, or habitations, that could be closed, one for men and one for women. In the middle was located a font, or receptacle for water, called many times the 'piscina' (the trough, or literally, the 'fishpond'), ordinarily round, in which the candidates were submerged. The water came into this piscina (or fishpond) by means of canals . . .

"After the sixth century they began to put the baptistries inside of the churches; and then later the rite of immersion was disused, and a new form was taken up in many parts very distinct from the ancient rite. . . . About the shape and adornments of the baptistries, although there is some uncertainty, nevertheless, Fleury, supported by Anastasius, Gregory of Tours, and Durandus, says the following: 'The baptistry was ordinarily round, with a basin into which descent was made by ladders to enter into the water. It was properly a bath, which was later reduced in size to one large block of marble or porphyry, and finally to that of the font as used at present.'"—Id., p. 598.

PHOTOGRAPH OF BAPTISMAL FONT

In Tarrassa, Spain, there exists an ancient church which still has its old baptismal font measuring 3 x 4 meters (a meter is 39 inches). In July, 1927, on the occasion of a holiday, the municipality printed a pamphlet containing photographs of the sights about the town, both ancient and modern, with their description. There is the photograph of this old church baptistry and the description, from which we quote:

"Next to this church is the baptistry of St. Michael, a rare work and of indisputable merit, constructed, according to some, in the fifth century, and, according to some, in the eighth or ninth. It is believed that it served for baptism by immersion. There is a crypt composed of three chapels that might have been the tombs of martyrs or perhaps another font for baptism by immersion for women."

Another Catholic authority states: "In the center of these exterior courts was a fountain, or cistern, or font, for ablution that anciently was done by profusion. . . . Ancient writers speak with frequency of these fonts. Anastasius, in the life of various popes, enumerates many of these which were made by popes in the courts of the Roman basilicas. . . . Either inside or outside the churches there was a place called 'baptisterion' (bath or baptistry), with a fountain or font in which was conferred the sacrament of baptism. These exist still in some of the catacombs, as for example in the cemetery of St. Priscilla. . . . It was called the 'place of illumination, holy font, divine bath, spiritual piscina'; and other similar names that are met at every step in the works of the holy fathers. . . . In the baptistries there were large fonts, troughs (or fishponds), so that those who were baptized could be thrust into them; because it is well known that then this sacrament was given by immersion, in imitation of Christ, who entered the waters of the Jordan to receive it at the Baptist. There were baptistries with one font, or trough, for men and another for women. The deaconesses were charged with helping the women enter and leave the water. . . . In the baptistry of St. John Lateran, Sixtus III, in the fifth century, ordered placed this inscription which exists today, 'Here is born from august seed, the race consecrated to heaven, that the Holy Spirit engenders in these fecund waters. . . . You who have been reborn in this font reckon with the kingdom of heaven. Eternal life is inaccessible to those who have

Sentiment and Immortality

IN THIS article the term "sentiment" is employed with considerable latitude. The method of its application will become apparent as we proceed.

When all things else have failed to demonstrate that particular and popular idea of immortality known as the immortality of the soul, then sentiment steps in and assumes, asserts, or postulates such immortality on her own authority alone.

The emotions, affections, ambitions, desires, feelings, instincts, and intuitions of the human heart are then supposed to do what science, philosophy, and revelation have never done—furnish sufficient evidence of the innate deathlessness of the human soul.

Far be it from me to make light of any worthy and healthy human sentiment. And especially far be it that we should make light of those profound emotions that lie deep-buried in the sacred and hidden shrine of the human affections. No! the iron has entered too deeply into our own soul. And we have been present at too many scenes of heart-rending grief, of individual and family sorrow, ever to consider the grief of the heart a trivial thing. But: Fancy is not fact; feeling is not infallible; instinct is not evidence; sentiment is not certitude; demand is not demonstration.

Moreover, it is often the case that a time of sorrow is a time of less clear and vigorous thought, of decreased resistance to insidious forms of error, of increased readiness to accept any alluring idea that may seem to offer some show of hope, however vain. Thus may vapid sentiment or pronounced error take the place of sound judgment, and some baseless spiritistic notion be substituted for the grander realities of divine promise.

It is easier to feel than to think. And it is but too true that, as regards the question of a future life, many are too ready to follow their feelings, affections, desires, or inclinations. On this, the most important issue of life, many men, and oftentimes those of ability and scholarship, are but too easily satisfied to accept things without substantial reasons therefor. Too often is the wish the father of the thought.

Some always have believed man to be an immortal being, immortal in himself, in his own inner constitution. They desire so to believe. And they do and will so believe. They speak of the personal and conscious survival of the human spirit and of its eternally perpetuated existence as they would speak of a ray of sunlight, as though the one were as clear and sure as the other, as though innate immortality were a question absolutely, scientifically, and eternally settled. To see the reasons put forth by some (when indeed they consider it necessary to do so useless a thing) shows upon what weak foundations men are content to rest their eternal interests—when their "feelings" or "instincts" bid them lean some other way.

It is truly pitiful to see how easily sensible men will quiet their minds on a subject of such vast moment—when they are led by their sentiments. This is one reason why there are so many conflicting ideas in the world. Oftentimes men do not really think. They do not look for reasons, the real reasons of a thing. They are led altogether too easily by their feelings, fancies, or foibles; too easily assured that the desired way is the right way. Many, therefore, go all their lives without really examining the bases upon which are placed their highest hopes. Yet every sensible man must agree with these words of Locke: "Besides his particular calling for the support of this life, every one has a concern in a future life, which he is bound to look after. This engages his thoughts in religion, and here it mightily lies upon him to understand and reason right."

We now come to some special expressions of sentiment in connection with the hope of immortality. If at any time I do not name the author, it is not because the citation is not bona fide, but because of the nature of the remarks in which I allow myself to indulge.

"The yearning for the eternal life of those we love involves the certainty that the great heart of God will outsoar, in the eternal order which He has established, our highest desires.

"When our friends have crossed the river, we are somehow bound to them by cords of a deathless love. We can somehow never realize that they are gone. The looks, the forms, the voices, the smiles of the dead are still with us. We feel their mysterious nearness. Love still teaches us to love them. In every tear that we shed, in every sigh that we heave, we have so many proofs in the soul itself, that the dead, whose memory we so fondly cherish, still live beyond the grave."

This may be eloquent. It may even make its appeal to a certain shallow type of mind. But it is not argument. It is not reason. It is not even good sense—or, to borrow the language of a friend, it is not even good nonsense. It is sentiment wholly, and that of the most gushy kind. And it comes perilously near to defiance of God's revealed Word, to that spiritism that the Bible so roundly condemns.

And yet it has its intended effect in its maudlin appeal to the unthinking emotions of wounded hearts. Doubtless, by pursuing such crude and baseless methods, one might soon win a large following. But it is not a following or a method that heaven or thinking men can smile upon. It is too shallow, too necromantic, too antichristian, for that.

If we cannot found a hope of immortality on a basis more real and substantial than upon the strung nerves, the wounded feelings, and the uncritical but blindly groping emotions of the sorrowing, then we are sorely pressed indeed. And as for the professed minister of the gospel of Jesus Christ who, with an open Bible in his hand, would yet descend to such motives and methods as a substitute for the glad hope of the gospel, well, to say the least, he is to be pitied, and—he needs to read his Bible. He may be as eloquent as Demosthenes or as Whitfield, but he is dispensing stones instead of bread.

The above-quoted writer is very rich in sentimentality of this kind. According to him, we can feel our immortality, can realize or be internally conscious that the soul survives death and continues eternally existent. Thus he speaks of “the satisfying sense of immortality.” He declares that “we consciously realize that death does not constitute the obliteration of all being, but that it is a passage beyond to the greater existence. Deep down in our being we feel that there will be no cessation, but rather a direct continuity, that death is but a bridge we have to cross to continue the endless march which life begins.” Again: “It was felt, realized, borne home from the beginning that death . . . was not the end of man, that there was another part, an immortal part, the soul, which should live forever.”

He cites Victor Hugo: “I feel in my life the future life.”

All this, of course, is sheer imagination. This is equally so whether or not the soul actually is immortal. As proof it amounts to nothing. And it is but one more of numberless exhibitions of the fact that natural immortality, immortality as inhering in the human constitution itself, is something that never has in any way been demonstrated. And all this dreaming, and feeling, and being inwardly and intuitively conscious of the soul's immortality, adds neither proof nor probability. Indeed, to some types of mind this gushy, sentimental, and wholly unreliable way of establishing anything is exceedingly repugnant. It not only begs the entire question, but it virtually begins with a tacit acknowledgment of inherent weakness.

Then there are those who employ the word “instinct” as a thing to conjure with. The belief in the soul's immortality is said to be instinctive and universal. But, first, such belief is not universal. This has frequently been noted by writers of various schools of thought. Nor, second, is it instinctive; for multitudes of intelligent people have never felt any such instinct nor held any such tenet. Some of these have not believed in any future life at all, while others have believed that immortality is not in any way an attribute of human nature, but is something entirely upon the will of God. Professor Leuba's comment seems well taken: “To label something an instinct is a convenient but unscientific way of disposing of a difficult question of origin. Speak the word and nothing more can be said on the subject. The present instance is an evident abuse of this delusive short cut to an explanation.”

Despite Dr. Savage's well-known belief in the soul's deathless quality, he seems to have spoken directly to our point when he said: “There are thousands of people . . . who are satisfied with saying, I am conscious of immortal life. I am conscious that I am immortal; I feel it, I know it . . . Theodore Parker was one of the men who held that position. But . . . I can but disagree with him at every point here. It seems to me that we cheat ourselves with a misuse of language. What Theodore Parker meant, and what all people who speak in this way must mean in the ordinary use of the English language, is that they feel very sure, perhaps, sure enough for them, as sure as they can feel . . . But I submit to you that it is a misuse of language for a man to say that he is conscious today of a possible future fact. The question as to whether or not I am immortal is a question as to whether I am going to keep on living after the fact we call death, or not. And since that is a fact . . . to be conscious of only when it comes . . . it is simply impossible that a man should be conscious of it now.”

Poets as philosophers, theologians, etc.—As is well known, the poets are frequently cited as teachers of immortality and of the happy state of the dead. It seems to be thought that their poetic instinct, fine fancy, and exalted intuition are safe guides in the dark labyrinth of the beyond. But, as regards the future life, much poetry is exactly of this superficial and sentimental type. It may be beautiful; it may be finely and feelingly expressed. But—is it true? that is the question.

Very likely, if the facts were freely admitted, poets, with some notable exceptions, would largely take their place as very poor theologians. Instinct is good; intuition is good; fancy is good—at times, in places, and in degrees. But when it comes to anything so important as eternity, we may be excused for not depending on imagination. We want facts, so far as facts can be ascertained. But much poetic fancy, coupled with poetic license, moves along the line of finely conceived and beautifully worded sentiment, emotion, and the like; and many fail to distinguish between this and what is substantially grounded on reality. Despite the sad facts of universal experience, despite the plain statements of the Word of God that death passed upon all men, that it is laid up for all men once to die, that dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return, even so sensible a man as Longfellow wrote that utterly inane and untrue sentiment:

“There is no death! what seems so is transition;
This life of mortal breath
Is but the suburb of the life elysian,
Whose portal we call death.”

Exactly this same sentiment can be duplicated from heathen writings more than two thousand years old.

And the assurance of deathlessness that is thus fatuously supported is that of the soul. Why of the soul? Why not of the entire man? If the hope of life eternal is to depend upon anything so unsubstantial as mere sentiment, the entire personality could be included as well as merely some particular specified portion thereof. But usually it is not so done.

Our final citation is from E. Griffith-Jones. “It may be ‘irrational’ to speak of love and virtue, moral beauty and holiness, as immortal; but the seers and the poets of the world, with their deep insight into the heart of things, have ever clung passionately to the faith that the soul capable of these high attributes and attitudes cannot perish with the bodily life where for the time their symmetries are enshrined and their promise is unfolded."—Ascent Through Christ, p. 355.

This has a somewhat different ring from our other citations. Yet even this is largely sentiment. And what does it prove? Nothing! simply nothing. As the erudite writer himself says two pages later: "All these intimations of immortality, however, drawn from the promptings of faith and the natural longings and expectations of the soul in its highest moods, are purely presumptive in their force and do not amount to a logical argument."

Such things, then, may be as beautiful as the tints that adorn the summer sky when the sun is near its setting—and they may be about as substanceless and fading. Anyone who would risk eternity on anything as light and airy and evanescent as this, such one must have a very vague idea of eternity or else is very reckless.

But we return to our thought as expressed by the last quoted writer. If this has even a tendency to prove anything, it would prove, not universal immortality, but limited immortality. For there are countless individuals who do not, in any real and deep sense possess or practice virtue, moral beauty, and holiness. Rather, they are like the men of Sodom, "sinners exceedingly." If, then, holiness should prove to eventuate in immortality, those destitute of the one would be likely to fail of the other. Failing therefore they would at last die, perish—and so pass out of being.

And, strange though it seems, to this agree exactly the words of the Apostle Paul:

"For the end of all things is death. But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life" (Rom. 6:21, 22).

And again: "For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die: but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live" (Rom. 8:13).

Here are holiness and life everlasting on one side with unholiness and death on the other.

And this is God's Word.

We have now seen that, with some, a sickly sort of sentimentality or emotionalism takes the place of faith in God or in a proper understanding of His Word. Under the stress of some personal predilection, emotion, feeling, or tendency, men often lend themselves to the most extravagant and unreasonable things, to all sorts of spiritistic vagaries, necromantic fallacies, or psychic monstrosities.

But emotion is not necessarily faith. Sentiment does not, for example, give any special assurance of such biblical truth of things as the reliving of the dead through the agency of divine power. Sentiment is usually too light and airy for anything so real, so substantial, so sensible, and so divinely assured as this. It can grasp only at something as flimsy and tenuous as itself, something dim, nebulous, mystic, occult, or ethereal.

The servant of sentiment has heard of the soul as a spirit entity. This as something unseen, uncognizable by the senses, has about it an air of the vague and mysterious. Many who are under the domination of this idea cannot grasp the dependable divine promise of life everlasting through Christ and in connection with bodily transformation and glorification. But it will, and does, grasp that which is unbiblical, undivine, and paganistic. Of this latter it lays hold greedily. So it feels and fancies, dreams and drivels, moons and muddles, concerning the mind as immortal, the spirit as undying, the soul as imperishable. And all the while the substantial promises given by an undying, unlying, and wonder-working God relative to the reliving, glorifying, and eternalizing of the bodily man may be left out of the account or be relegated to the musty creeds of long ago.

In speaking of an argument for immortality that makes appeal to the emotions, Dr. McComb, in his The Future Life, etc., has well said that "the emotions are not given us in order to guide us into truth. . . . They can stimulate the rational powers and lend dynamic force to the will, but by themselves they are no criterion of truth" (p. 40).

The fact is that the emotionalism that accepts what it wants to, and because it wants to, is pretty certain to go astray. That is why multitudes are running about at the beck and call of spiritistic fakirs of all kinds, from theologians and scientists to professional spirit-mediums.

Sentimentality possesses no solidity. It is as light as the froth on restless water or as the airy visions of an unsubstantial dream. Such may satisfy the maudlin vacuum of the unthinking, emotional, or dreamful heart, but it can give no substantiated assurance to the truly seeking and thinking mind. It may play hide-and-seek in the vacuous realms of fancy, but it fails to grasp the deep things of God as to the future life even on the best of evidence.

According to God's Word, it is those, and none but those, who fulfill certain conditions who are to "live for ever" (John 6:51-58).—G. L. Young in The World's Crisis.

ANOTHER MANUSCRIPT FOUND

MR. A. CHESTER BEATTY, the eminent collector, recently bought from an Egyptian dealer a quantity of manuscript. It was bound to contain a further part of St. Paul's Epistles, some leaves of which were already in Mr. Beatty's possession. The whole of the manuscript comprises about five sixths of the text of the Epistles. Sir Frederick Kenyon, formerly Director and Principal Librarian of the British Museum, says: "It contains all the Epistles of St. Paul, except Timothy, Titus, and Philemon. The Epistle to the Hebrews is placed second in the whole collection, coming immediately after Romans. This is a novelty. There is no other manuscript with the Epistles so placed. The Pauline papyri quite probably belong to the early part of the third century. That means it is about one hundred years older than the Codex Sinaiticus. It is the oldest manuscript, of any considerable size, of the New Testament. It is written in Greek in the ordinary ink of the time, and the hand is good and clear and easy to decipher." The greatest point of interest centers in the fact that there is no longer any doubt about Paul being the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews.—The Sabbath Observer.

HOW DID THE EARLY CHRISTIANS BAPTIZE?

been born but once. . . . Sinner, if thou wishest to purify thy soul, submerge thyself in this sacred bath; its waters will receive the old man, and from them the new shall emerge."—"Razon de la Liturgia Catholica E. Civera Prat," Barcelona, 1929, p. 77.

"There is no means of knowing when the first baptistries were built; but both their name and form seem borrowed from pagan sources. They remind one of the bathing apartments in the thermae. . . . The earliest extant type of baptistry is found in the catacomb chambers in which were the baptismal pools. These rooms were sometimes spacious; that in the Roman catacomb of Priscilla adjoins another larger cubicula used perhaps for the adjuncts of the baptismal rite; that of the Pontian cemetery bears traces of sixth century mural decoration. . . . With the construction of edifices for Christian worship a special building was erected for the ceremonies of initiation. Ordinarily circular or polygonal, it contained in the center the font; a circular ambulatory gave room for the ministers and witnesses. . . . Immersion gradually gave way to infusion, though in the South the custom of immersing children in the baptistries persisted long after the North had commenced infusion. . . .

ARRANGEMENT OF BAPTISTRY

"The arrangement of the baptistry requires but brief notice. A flight of steps descended into the round or polygonal font (piscina or fons) which was sunk beneath the level of the floor, and sometimes raised a little above it by a breastwork of stone."—Catholic Encyclopedia, vol. 2, art., "Baptistry."

"In the inner apartment the principal object was the baptismal font, in which those to be baptized were immersed thrice. Three steps led down to the floor of the font. . . . Baptistries belong to a period of the church when great numbers of adult catechumens were baptized, and when immersion was the rule. . . . A fireplace was often provided to warm the neophytes after immersion. . . . As soon as Christianity made such progress that baptism became the rule, and as soon as immersion gave place to sprinkling, the ancient baptistries were no longer necessary."—Encyclopedia Britannica, vol. 3, art., "Baptistry," 11th edition.

"In the East it took the form of a pool or cistern, similar to those of the baths, often larger, and deep enough to permit total immersion. Whence it was called kolumbentra (swimming bath), a name which in its Latin equivalent, natatorium, was also used in the West. . . . The oldest Western fonts are found in the Roman catacombs, cisterns hewn from the tufa in the floor of baptismal chapels. Examples are to be found in the Ostrian Cemetery, where in a small shallow basin in the floor a spring wells up; in the Cemetery of Pontianus, where an oblong reservoir, about eighteen square feet in surface area and three feet in depth, is yet filled with water, that of St. Felicitas; and of St. Priscilla, where in 1901 was found a basin of particular interest on account of its presumably high antiquity as a baptismal center."—Catholic Encyclopedia, vol. 2, art., "Baptismal Font."

Justin Martyr, born about 100 A. D., says: "As many as are persuaded and believe that what we teach and say is true, and undertake to be able to live accordingly, are instructed to pray and to entreat God with fasting, for the remission of their sins that are past, we praying and fasting with them. Then they are brought by us where there is water, . . . they then receive the washing with water."—Ante-Nicene Christian Library, vol. 2, p. 59.

Commenting on this, a modern historian says: "After this the catechumens were conducted to the water and were questioned as to their faith as they stood ready for baptism; they were thrice immersed."—History of the Christian Church, Foakes-Jackson, p. 231.

"With the thirteenth century, however, simple infusion came by degrees to be adopted, and with its general use, the font became smaller, and more shallow, and was raised from the floor on piers or columns."—Catholic Encyclopedia, vol. 2, art., "Baptismal Font."

In the Acts of Xanthippi, "not to be assigned to a late date," the baptism of her husband is thus described: "Rising early in the morning, he went to Paul, and found him baptizing, . . . and said, 'If I am worthy, my master, to receive baptism, lo! the hour is come.' Paul replied to him, 'My son, behold, the water is ready for the cleansing of those who approach Christ.' Forthwith, then, eagerly stripping off his clothes, Paul holding his hand, he leaped into the water."—Quoted in Liturgy and Ritual of the Ante-Nicene Church, p. 51, London, 1912; Society for Promotion of Christian Knowledge.

MODERN TESTIMONY

A modern authority states: "The usual form of the act was immersion, as is plain from the original meaning of the Greek baptizing and baptisms; from the analogy of John's baptism in the Jordan; from the apostles' comparison of the sacred rite with the miraculous passage of the Red Sea, with the escape of the ark from the flood with the cleansing and refreshing bath, and with burial and resurrection; finally, from the custom of the ancient church, which prevails in the East to this day. . . . Unquestionably, immersion expresses the idea of baptism more completely than sprinkling."—History of the Christian Church, Philip Schaff, vol. 1, p. 423.

Referring to the converts who apparently had not profited by their baptism, Justin Martyr says: "But the cisterns which you have dug for yourselves are broken and profitless to you. For what is the use of that baptism which cleanses the flesh and body alone?"—Ante-Nicene Christian Library, vol. 2, p. 104.

Tertullian, living about 200 A. D., says: "I shall begin with baptism. When we are going to enter the water, but a little before, in the presence of the congregation and under the hand of the president, we solemnly profess that we disown the Devil, and his pomp, and his angels. Hereupon we are thrice immersed." "It makes no difference whether a man be washed in a sea or a pool, a stream or a font, a lake or a trough." Again he says, "Our flesh as it emerges from the font," indicating immersion.—Id., vol. II, pp., 336, 235, 241.

Cyprian, who became Bishop of Carthage, 245 A. D., writes: "You have asked, also, dearest son, what I thought of those who obtain God's grace in sickness and weakness, whether they are to be accounted legitimate Christians, for that they are not washed but sprinkled, with the saving water. . . . It appears that the sprinkling also of water prevails equally with the washing of salvation."—Id., vol. 8, pp. 311, 312.

Thus early did sprinkling creep in.

Methodius (died in 312) speaks of the church thus: "She should stand upon the laver, bringing forth those who are washed in it."—Id., vol. 14, p. 73.

"The word 'baptism' is derived from the Greek word bapto or baptizo, to wash, or to immerse. It signifies, therefore, that laving is of the essential idea of the sacrament. . . . The very word 'baptize,' as we have seen, means a washing. Three forms of ablution have prevailed among Christians. . . . These forms are immersion, infusion, and aspersion. The most ancient form usually employed was unquestionably immersion. This is not only evident from the writings of the fathers and early rituals of both the Latin and Oriental churches, but it can also be gathered from the Epistles of St. Paul, who speaks of baptism as a bath (Eph. 5:26; Rom. 6:4; Titus 3:5). In the Latin church immersion seemed to have prevailed until the twelfth century. After that time it is found in some places even as late as the sixteenth century. Infusion and aspersion, however, were growing common in the thirteenth century, and gradually prevailed in the Western church. The Oriental churches have retained immersion."—Catholic Encyclopedia, vol. 2, art. "Baptism."

Concerning the practice in Scotland we are told: "In this country, however, sprinkling was never practiced, in ordinary cases, till after the Reformation," it being introduced by the Scottish preachers who learned it from Calvin in Geneva."—Edinburgh Encyclopedia, ed. 1830, art., "Baptism."

In the early African church "the mode of baptizing was by triple immersion in the font."—Catholic Encyclopedia, vol. I, art., "African Liturgy."

In Italy, Ambrose was Bishop of Milan from 374-397, and his name is connected with a ritual from the eighth century. "The Ambrosians boast that their baptism is always by immersion."—Id., art., "Ambrosian Liturgy and Rite."

In the Celtic rite also a triple immersion is ordered. "It has been conjectured, on no real evidence, that the British church resembled the Spanish in baptizing with a single immersion. But this form had been allowed by Rome in the case of Spain."—Id., vol. 3, art., "Celtic Rite."

Even as late as the seventh century they were still practicing immersing, as is seen by the following canon: "Because that the sacrament of baptism is administered by some Spanish priests by three immersions, and by others with one alone, some see a grave schism, and it appears that the unity of the faith is disrupted, because, as the parts work differently and almost contrarily, some say that they are not baptized; therefore, and with the purpose of terminating this difference in the administration of the sacrament, let us inform ourselves of the precepts of the apostolic chair, following, not our institutions, but that of the fathers, Gregory, Pontifex of the Roman church, of happy memory, . . . when consulted by the most holy Bishop Leandro regarding this diversity that was followed in Spain, responded among other things, that regarding trine immersion in baptism, it cannot be answered with greater truth, but that they should be ordered to do as they were accustomed to do; because the different custom, having one and the same faith, does not endanger the church. We, therefore, employ trine immersion, signifying with it the sacrament of the burial, that lasted for three days, . . . and if some . . . judge they should do so, this does not contradict the practice of others who baptize by one immersion."—Coleccion de los Canones de la Iglesia de Espana, vol. 2, p. 267.

"Thomas Aquinas preferred the more ancient custom because immersion reminded Christians of the burial of Christ; but he did not think it absolutely necessary. From the thirteenth century, sprinkling came into more general use in the West. The Greek church, however, and the church of Milan, still retained the practice of immersion."—History of Doctrines, vol 2, p. 85, Hagenbach.

"For several centuries after the establishment of Christianity, baptism was usually conferred by immersion; but since the twelfth century the practice of baptizing by infusion has prevailed in the Catholic Church, as this manner is attended with less inconvenience than baptism by immersion."—Faith of Our Fathers, James Cardinal Gibbons, 63rd ed., p. 317.

"The ordinary mode of baptism in the apostolic age was immersion, as is proved not only by Paul's figure in Romans 6:3 and 1 Corinthians 10:2, but also by the teaching of the apostles. The latter prescribes immersion in ordinary cases, but allows pouring under exceptional circumstances, when water is not at hand in sufficient quantity to permit baptism by the former mode. It may safely be inferred from this that while from the beginning baptism was commonly by immersion, the essential feature of the rite was the use of water and not the mode of its use."—History of Christianity in the Apostolic Age, A. C. McGiffert, D.D., p. 542. T. T. Clark.

The famed Catholic historian Dollinger writes: "John had first introduced the rite of immersion in the Jordan. . . . At first Christian baptism commonly took place in the Jordan; of course as the church spread more widely, also in private houses. Like that of John, it was by immersion of the whole person, which is the only meaning of the New Testament word. A mere pouring or sprinkling was never heard of. Paul made this immersion a symbol of burial with Christ, and the emerging a sign of resurrection with Him to a new life: baptism is a 'bath.'"—First Age of Christianity, vol. 2, p. 160. London, 1866.

Of the Ethiopian's baptism it is said that both he and Philip went down into the water.

"The true church must be apostolical," said Cardinal Gibbons. "This attribute or note of the church implies that the true church must always teach the identical doctrines once delivered by the apostles."—Faith of Our Fathers, James Cardinal Gibbons, 63rd ed., p. 60.

We heartily acquiesce in that, and unhesitatingly say that when a church openly and confessedly teaches and practices other things than that which the apostles taught, it is not the apostolic church.—Henry F. Brown in Signs of the Times.

THE DOCTRINE OF CHRIST

does not reward any of His creatures with cold justice but goes farther and shows mercy. True, He may bring judgment upon many, but He most always extends His sunshine and rain to all.

"For if ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? do not even the publicans the same? And if ye salute your brethren only, what do ye more than others? do not even the publicans so?" What reward have you if you do no more than these? It is only the reward of self-love that may come to those who love others only that they may be loved in return. He that loves himself has his reward and it is used up and he shall not have it for long. And if you love your own only, you shall have the reward of the publican.

Even the most vile love their own. We are commanded to do more—to love our enemies, to love them that curse us, to love them that hate us, to love them that spitefully use us and persecute us!

Christ demanded the opposite of our desire, that we might be the opposite to what we were. We are to love where we hated and to hate where we loved. We have loved ourselves and hated our enemies, now let us hate ourselves and love our enemies. We were the sons of Adam; let us turn about and be the opposite, the sons of God.

We have tried everything else. We have tried war and it brings forth war. We have tried envy and it reproduces envy and strife. We have tried hatred and it breeds hatred. We have tried force and it strikes back at us. It is not only we who have tried all these things, but men have tried them for thousands of years and they have failed to tame and reform man. They have failed to remove the undesirable, the suffering, pain, and anguish from life. They have failed to change the heart of man.

Have we tried love? Have we tried God's way? God is love. Can we be like Him in any way until we have tried His way of love? Jesus commanded: "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." This is the doctrine of Christ.

You can love your enemies if you want to, and you will want to if with the help of Christ you tear from your heart the stubbornness, pride, and self-love. If you have not accepted Christ, take Him as your helper now and He indeed will help you. Then the scales of sin will fall from your eyes and your heart will be cleansed and pure and you, pure in heart, shall see God. And you will see His creatures and love them even as He loves them and you.

Again, I plead with God that He will strengthen us and help us to abide in the teaching of our blessed Savior.

GROWTH IN THE KINGDOM OF GOD

and says on ordinary occasions we are obliged to draw more or less upon our imaginations to get a picture of what it may mean to be a king upon the throne of Jesus Christ.

The thought of being a king doesn't appeal to some people. That is, being the kind of a king most of us picture in our minds. And so it is with practically every other hope held out to us in the future. Everything promised is so different from what we have experienced that we have nothing with which to compare the glorious possibilities of Christ's kingdom.

I readily confess that the thought of being literally seated upon a great throne before which all earthly rulers are to bow in homage day after day, year after year, century after century, for all eternity does not attract me! It is true, gloriously true, that those who prove faithful to Christ will reign with Him a thousand years. But there must be much more in kingship than just sitting upon a throne, as there is much more in life than breathing.

To reign with Christ means in its fullest sense to do things in unison with Him! Helpful things, creative things, forward-looking things! God has never had a place in His plans for the past, the present, or the future, for idleness! "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work," Jesus said. One of the most illuminative and interesting things which the Bible tells us about eternity with reference to Christ is this: "His servants shall serve him" (Rev. 22:3)! For myself, I wouldn't ask anything better than that! And this brings us to the central thought of our study.

Let us, as suggested a moment ago, draw upon our imaginations just a little. We will suppose that the dear Lord has suddenly come and called us into His presence. He has changed our vile bodies, wracked by pain and disfigured by disease and accident, and fashioned them like His own glorious body.

When that wonderful transformation takes place, at the same moment, without one instant's delay, will you and I suddenly know everything that can be known—all that God knows now? Or do you suppose you will have something to learn as the endless ages of eternity roll forward unceasingly? Did you ever ask yourself that question?

In what does the chief joy of knowing consist?

Perhaps the thought expressed by one of the characters created by Edgar Allen Poe is not altogether amiss. Having arrived in "heaven," Oinos was informed that if he should meet with anything he did not understand to ask an angel, who would gladly supply the information de-

Water's Strange Behavior

"Do you know," remarked the school superintendent as we were out fishing recently, "marine life couldn't exist in the colder latitudes if it wasn't that water reacts to cold in a way the reason for which I have never heard. As water gets colder the weight for a certain volume increases. One cubic centimeter weighs more at six degrees centigrade than it does at seven, more at five than six, more at four than five. But the strange thing is that when the temperature drops to three degrees centigrade the cubic centimeter weighs less than it did at four. This makes the coldest water rise to the top before it freezes. If it were not for this fact oceans and lakes would freeze from the bottom up. You can imagine the consequences to marine life."

This superintendent is a teacher of biology. He has repeatedly declared that the evidence of the microscope is proof of the virgin birth of Christ, of the resurrection. A hand that can produce ordinary reproduction can do other miracles. Birth is as miraculous as rebirth. The students of this man's classes will carry through life unanswerable evidence of the being and power of God.

What, but the hand of God, can account for the above reaction of water so necessary to the existence of marine life in cold climates?

Water Typifies Humanity

"I am fearfully and wonderfully made" (Psa. 139:14). Just as in nature the hand of God moves in mysterious ways His wonders to perform, even so He works with mankind. A sea of water is a type of a sea of humanity. The armies of Assyria are spoken of as "waters of the river" (Isa. 8:7). "The wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt" (Isa. 57:20). The glorified Christ of Revelation 1:15 has a "voice as the sound of many waters." And why not? Jesus is the head over a great body of people, the church (Eph. 1:22, 23). When the old heaven and earth go to make place for the new heaven and earth of Revelation 21:1, the sea of raging humanity also will go, and, the prospect becoming too wonderful to be confined any longer to figures of speech, we see revealed what the new sea is to be—mankind dwelling in the presence of God, with "no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain." And then we see revealed the "pure river of water of life, clear as crystal" (Rev. 22:1).

Jesus filters the sin out of the human race. Jesus quiets the raging waves. Right now the human race is raging against righteousness more than the waves of blue Galilee raged against the disciples in a boat. It is a sign to us that Jesus is coming. And just as He came to those hard-pressed disciples with the assurance, "It is I; be not afraid" (John 6:20), so He is coming to bring peace to troubled humanity.

Looking Backward

A preacher once told me that you can't do much with a sinner unless you first make him mad. However I do not think the same thing is true of saints, if possibly it is true of sinners. Be that as it may. If I have made any of you mad during the past editorial year, you have kept it to yourselves and I don't know about it. A number of you have written in commendation, and I truly am grateful for your words of encouragement.

The editorials have been for different purposes: to stimulate thought, to encourage Bible study, to point out the way of righteousness and service, to inspire to action. None of you has fully agreed with everything, no doubt, but my words have been the expression of what I hold as the truth. I have tried to be forceful, accurate, uncompromising on essentialities. Many of the editorials were repetitions in my words of what different ones of you had taught me. Together we have planted and watered—"God giveth the increase."

Many of you sent articles and reports and answered questions asked on the Page. All of us appreciate this service you have performed. Brother Vivian Kirkpatrick, the associate editor, helped very materially to stimulate thought and to encourage in different ways. May God add His blessing to all that has been done.

Your interest has been a constant inspiration to me, and I urge you to enter as wholeheartedly into the next year's fellowship with my successor, whoever he may be, to be appointed by the new Berean board.

The National Berean Society

"We stand for unity, truth, and righteousness."—Berean slogan.

You know where to find us, we have taken our stand to live and die by it: "Unity, truth, and righteousness." We are for unity because there are great causes for which to fight, and an army cannot be divided against itself and hope for success. But the unity must be the unity of Gideon's army, a true unity and not merely an outward one. Therefore we seek for unblameable conduct; we deery vices of all kinds, and uphold purity in every department of our individual lives. We seek to know the faith once delivered unto the fathers, because we want to build our lives upon Truth, both in thought and in conduct.

And now, once again: "We stand for unity, truth, and righteousness."

SHOWING KINDNESS TO OTHERS

BETTY and Bobby and Mother always planned to study their lesson for the following Sunday very early in the week. If they let it go until later something always interfered with their study. And so we find them, as we often have this summer, on Monday evening on the cool porch of their home with their Bibles in their hands.

Bobby had just been reading the verses in Exodus 20 that give the laws God set up for His people just a little more than two months after they had left Egypt. Mother explained to them that God gave these laws for the good of His people, not just because He wanted to show His authority over them. She showed them also how everybody must obey certain laws in order to be happy and to be useful to those about.

Every family, Mother told them, has certain rules, not written down, perhaps, but understood just the same by every member. Each child and each adult in the family should keep those rules, for that makes life run smoothly for all. If one member of the family breaks a rule, every other member suffers also.

That last comment by their mother was a little hard for the children to understand. But she showed them that disobedience always causes unhappiness, not only to the disobedient one, but to brother and sister, and father and mother, as well. It causes suffering also, and that suffering affects all.

Every school, every town and city, every nation must have rules. This the children could understand easily. And they knew that anyone who disobeyed a law should be punished accordingly.

Then Bobby started to tell them about a teacher they once had who filled one whole blackboard with rules and laws. Several of the pupils tried to find some form of mischief that was not included in that long list of "don'ts."

When Bobby had finished his rather ridiculous description of that teacher's attempt to keep order, Mother said it reminded her of the law Jesus gave when He was on earth. It was just a short one, but it meant a great deal, nevertheless.

"Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them," was the law Mother explained, which we sometimes call the Golden Rule of life.

Jesus gave it again in even shorter words, and these are the words: "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself."

Then Betty and Bobby tried to tell Mother some of the things one would do who loved his neighbor as himself and some of the things he would not do. In the verses for the lesson they were studying, found in Leviticus 19, they found some things the Israelites were told to do in keeping God's law.

They were to be generous to the poor and kind to strangers. They must not steal, nor cheat another, nor tell lies. They must never use God's name profanely. They must be kind to all who were blind or crippled. They should never hate another, nor tell unkind things about him. But they were to treat everybody kindly, especially the aged.

"And right there at the end of all those rules and laws," said Mother, "we find the very rule Jesus gave so many years later: 'Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.' If God's people kept that law they would keep all the others as well.

"Now, Betty and Bobby, turn to the 1st chapter of the Sermon on the Mount. Where is it?"

"Matthew 5," they said in chorus.

"Read verse 44, and see how much further Jesus commands us to go in the treatment of others," said their mother.

"'But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you,'" they read together slowly.

"That's a great deal harder, isn't it, Mother," said Bobby. "It's easy to be good to some one who is good to you. But to be good to those who treat you badly—well, that's different. And to love your enemies—I just don't see how I could do that."

"We cannot do it in our own strength, Bobby. But God will help us if we ask Him. At first we may fail again and again. But as we keep on trying we will come closer and closer to doing the way Jesus always did and the way He wants us to do," Mother said softly.

"Tomorrow, Betty, you may make a long ruler from heavy pasteboard, and color it yellow. And you may make some slips of paper, Bobby, and print on them the following and other desirable traits: loving, kind, generous, obedient, helpful, unselfish. I will keep these, and when you show me in some special way you are deserving of one of these, you may stick it on either side of your golden rule, Betty on the right side and Bobby on the left."

REFLECTIONS OF GREAT MINDS

"Think on these things."—Paul.

"Only a little while now and we shall be again together and with those other noble and well-loved souls. . . . I am sure that I shall meet you then and there; that you and I shall talk of a thousand things . . . and that we shall clearly see that all were parts of an infinite plan which was wholly wise and good."—Richard Maurice Buck.

What associations and what associates, what opportunities for communion with kindred spirits, what endless possibilities for searching out the mysteries of God and of nature, what inconceivable sources of true and lasting enjoyment of a thousand different sorts, will be available to us when the gates of the kingdom of God are thrown wide at the approach of its glorified and eternal King!

EMMA E. UPTON

Emma E. Bledsoe, daughter of John T. and Julia Ann Bledsoe, was born January 27, 1880, in Fayette County, Ill.

She was united in marriage September 14, 1898, to Albert O. Lenz, who died April 27, 1918. On September 5, 1925, she was united in marriage to Samuel Upton of St. Elmo, Ill.

At the age of 23 years she was baptized into Christ and united with the Church of God located near Casey, Ill., of which church she remained a faithful member. She has fallen asleep in the hope of a future life through a resurrection from the death state at the second coming of Christ. She will always be remembered as a faithful mother and companion, and was always greatly devoted to her home. Her high ambition was to see her stepson, Harold, graduated from high school.

She leaves to mourn their loss her devoted husband, five sisters and two brothers, three step-sons and two step-daughters.

Elder S. J. Lindsay, who had been holding a series of meetings at the Salem Church near Marshall, Ill., was called to give comfort to the bereaved on Monday, Aug. 2. The funeral was largely attended and kind hands carried her to her last resting place just across the highway from the home where she had spent so many pleasant and happy days, to await Him who doeth all things well.

MRS. GOLDIE APPLEBY

Goldie White was born May 1, 1886, at Blair, Neb., and died at her home near Omaha, July 20, 1937.

She was united in marriage to Howard Appleby on December 20, 1911. To this union four sons were born, namely: Richard Earl, Leonard Lee; Glen Charles; and Lloyd White, all of whom are at home. Besides her immediate family she leaves to mourn her passing an aged mother, Mrs. Addie White; a sister, Mrs. Jessie Dixon; and two brothers, Arthur and Lester.

She united with the Church of God in August, 1906, having been baptized by Elder Almus Adams. She always lived a very devout, consecrated life, patterned after the highest standards of Christian conduct. Her greatest desires were centered in her Christian living for her family. Those who knew her will remember her as one who loved only the good and righteous things of life.

Services were conducted by the writer at the Blair church and interment was made in the Kennard cemetery. We laid her to rest in full assurance that the day is near at hand when "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first."

Interviews With Conference Delegates

By Mary A. Gesin

Bro. Lyle Rankin says, "Hello Cashmere," to the folks back home. He tells us that they have a membership of about 85, though they are widely scattered. His impressions of General Conference are very favorable thus far. Bro. A. Nichols, also of Cashmere, traveled a little over 1,800 miles by bus to be here with us, and he says he is thankful to be here and is enjoying the meetings very much.

Old friends are greeting old friends and new friends are being made old friends in Sr. Austin's Friendship Circle each evening on the church lawn after evening service. Something different and something interesting call us together every night, and help make the stranger feel no longer a stranger but entirely at home. Many are taking home some of Sr. Austin's ideas for use in their own localities.

Without having verified the fact we venture the information that there is present this year a wider representation of the brotherhood at large than heretofore, and that Minnesota leads all other states, excepting Illinois, in number.

Bro. W. A. Reid, delegate of the Los Angeles church, is enjoying his first visit to General Conference. He is fast making friends and deems it a great privilege to meet with so many brethren working in harmony with the same great hope.

We asked some of the Cleveland people to speak for themselves, and this is what they said: "As we Clevelanders journeyed over the highways on our way to the conference at Oregon we were reminded on every hand of God's great goodness—field upon field of ripened grain, and thousands of acres of corn fields. Upon our arrival we were thrilled at the meeting and fellowship with the brethren. Our zeal has been quickened and our determination renewed to go forth striving to love God and to do His will."

Mrs. Harry Stadden,
Mrs. Richard Lindstrom,
Richard S. Lindstrom,
Mrs. Martin Lederer,
Mary E. Elton.

In a meeting of the officers and teachers of the General Conference and Illinois Bible School, which was held at the very opening, Bro. Paul C. Johnson, president of the Illinois Conference, emphasized the importance of our message. He said that the truths we believe and teach are the reason for our existence, and if we nullify their importance we nullify the power of the Church of God. Bro. F. L. Austin, in his words of greeting to fellow workers, said that it is of primary importance that we consider God's glory and the support of His work rather than ourselves. And, after all, if we do that are we not at the same time serving ourselves in the very best manner possible?

Bro. J. Eagleston of Los Angeles, whose work is rather individual, as he travels from town to town, visiting the sick and isolated, reading to the aged and performing other kindly services, is here enjoying every minute.

WATCH YOUR STEP

By Glenn M. Birkey

IN THE entrance of all Pullman cars you will see in large white letters against a black background these warning words, "Watch Your Step." The Pullman Company wants its patrons to be free from accident while on its property.

As I looked at these words I thought of a far more important meaning than the taking of a false step in the railway car, and that was the taking of a false step in one's Christian life.

We have a warning, "Watch Your Step," in the Bible which God has given us as a guidebook in shaping our course through life. In it are many warnings addressed to those who have already accepted salvation through Christ, as well as those who have not.

I have been much impressed of late with the words of our Savior as given in Matthew 22:14, "For many are called, but few are chosen." We have an example of this in Noah who, as a preacher of righteousness, continued for a long period of time to warn the people to repent, but the result was that they spurned the warning and only Noah and his immediate family, eight in all, were saved from the waters of the flood.

In Ephesians 4:14 we read "that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive." And again in Hebrews 13:9, "Be not you therefore led away by various and foreign Doctrines; for it is an Excellent thing for the Heart to be established by Favor" (Diag.).

The point I wish to stress is a warning to the brethren everywhere to beware of new religious cults which enter your community. We are all prone to take an interest in everything that comes up that is new. This, to my mind, is a very dangerous thing when spiritual things are involved.

In late years I have observed people, whom I considered well grounded in the Christian faith, become very much interested in these new doctrines and beliefs which are contrary to God's Word. We are warned by Peter in his 2nd Epistle (1:10) like this: "Therefore, brethren, more earnestly endeavor to make your calling and election sure; since by doing these things you will never fall." In the 3rd verse of Jude this admonition is given: "Exhorting you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints."

The Apostle Paul makes it very plain in the 1st chapter of Galatians that there is only one gospel (glad tidings), so here is the conclusion of the whole matter: Stick by the Bible! Read it, study it, not once a month, but daily. Use it for your guide and pray much for light on its contents.

May we all grow strong in the faith as the time draws near for our Lord's return and may we be among the faithful who will be caught up to meet Him when He calls, is my prayer.

GIVING

IT HAS been said that "personal consecration" means "purse-and-all consecration." Everyone who reads his Bible and believes it, knows that giving is to be a part of his religion. Just as soon as he tries to be conscientious and systematic about it the question will arise: "How much, or in what proportion shall I give?" It is easy to be benevolent, for benevolence is nothing more than wishing the world well. Beneficence is carrying our wishes into practical effect. This is a more costly affair. It means money. It is applied Christianity of the most pronounced type. It is giving of our substance to the Lord's work, in the Lord's name, for the Lord's glory, and in the Lord's way. Any systematic beneficence is going about it in an orderly and businesslike manner. It is rooted in the divine idea of stewardship.

"Why should I give?" Because it is a duty. It is a debt both of gratitude to God, the giver of all we have, and of obedience to His will. Because it is a privilege. By giving we become laborers together with God, multiplying ourselves and our influence, doing good where we cannot go. Because it is a source of blessing to others. Because it is a source of blessing to self. It promotes growth in grace, character development, and personal happiness. "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Because giving is rewarded. God has promised that he that giveth shall not lack, but that all who honor Him with their substance He will honor by promoting their highest welfare.

"How should I give?" Cheerfully. My giving should be a love-prompted, willing-hearted act. Systematically. I should have a plan of giving, should provide that it be regularly, promptly, and conscientiously done. "Upon the first day of the week"—that means system, regularity. Proportionately. My giving should be both periodic and proportionate. "As God has prospered" means that there must be a distinct ratio between my income and my beneficence. Liberally. I must not be bound too closely by rule, but I am to be a liberal giver, going far beyond the narrow rule of must. The motive is "freely you have received;" the measure is "freely give." Lovingly. I should give with heart interest and devout prayers accompanying. My help to the poor and support of the gospel should be pervaded with the spirit of love—love to God and love to men. Humbly. "He that giveth, let him do it with simplicity.

"But the heart grows rich in giving;
All its wealth is living grain;
Seeds which mildew in the garner,
Scattered, fill with gold the plain."
—Bible Faith Mission Standard.

The phrase made immortal by Abraham Lincoln in his Gettysburg Address—"that government of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from the earth"—may have had its origin in the preface of Wycliffe and Hereford's translation of the Scriptures which was made in 1384. The publishers stated that "this Bible is for the government of the people, by the people, and of the people."

sired, for, said his heavenly guide, "not even here is knowledge a thing of intuition. For wisdom, ask the angels freely, that it may be given." "But," protested the newly arrived earthling, "in this existence I dreamed that I should be at once cognizant of all things, and thus at once be happy in being cognizant of all."

"Ah, not in knowledge is happiness," his guide replied, "but in the acquisition of knowledge! In forever knowing, we are forever blessed; but to know all, were the curse of a fiend."

Poe carried the parable into greater detail, but this is sufficient for the purpose of illustrating the thought.

There is infinite knowledge to be gained slowly, but not painfully as is the case today, in the kingdom of God. Only in growth, advancement, accomplishment, is there true happiness. The great artist who finally painted a picture with which he was wholly satisfied, never took a brush into his hand again! Complete knowledge, ability which cannot be improved or developed further, denies to one the greatest joy he can know, that of observing his own advancement.

Let us turn back the pages of our biographies, if we may, and discover the source of our greatest pleasure in childhood. Which did we enjoy the more, planning our games or actually putting our plans into operation? What I mean is this: Take that tiny girl with her sheet of paper dolls as an example. Out of which does she get the greater pleasure, playing with the dolls after they have been cut out or the process of cutting them out? Why, the cutting out of the dolls, of course! The manufacturers know child-psychology. They realize that the little mother will experience more real pleasure in getting those dolls ready, than she will in playing with them after they are all cut out and dressed!

So it is with us grown-ups. We don't want our dolls "cut out" for us! We want to cut them out ourselves! It is the creative instinct within us. God made us that way. He gave us the world in an unfinished condition. God finished His work (Gen. 2:1, 2) and then turned over to us the task of governing, cultivating, and developing all He had made. He endowed us with creative instinct, inventive minds, and adaptive hands that we might take the unfinished products of earth and build them into a million wonderful creations of usefulness and beauty.

Thus far science has discovered but about ninety primary elements in the universe—no more. All that is in heaven above and in earth below has been made out of these ninety-odd basic materials. The great masses of the stars and planets God formed "in the beginning" out of these same ninety elements. Some of them he blended in cunning ways to form the plants and animals and men of earth. And into these dead material bodies God placed the germ of life—the element which no scientist has as yet been able to isolate—and living plants and living creatures came into being. God also placed in each of these myriad forms of living things the genes—the units of heredity (see Sci- ence Digest for July, 1937), that like might produce like and the whole earth be filled with living fishes and birds and beasts and men!

Millions and millions of separate and distinct things, both living and lifeless, God made out of those ninety primary elements. But there are millions more equally valuable creations no doubt which He has left for men to fabricate for themselves out of those same materials. We have but opened the door of Nature a little way up to the present time. It must be thrown wide in the glorious ages which are to come!

It is clearly apparent that opportunities for scientific discovery and development will be limitless during the thousand-year reign of Jesus Christ upon this earth, and why not assign the oversight and direction of that marvelous age of restitution to those faithful souls, who in this present time have seen the hand of God in the forces and elements with which they have labored? Why not permit them to continue their valuable experiments under the ideal conditions provided in the kingdom of God, where neither accident nor death can cut short their efforts? I can see no reason why God should not do this.

Perhaps you think all this is too material to associate with the thought of immortality. I cannot concede the validity of that contention. The entire Bible is dealing with material things. Its records of the past, its history of the present, its predictions for the future—all are concerned with this earth and its inhabitants. If material things are not too mundane for God to devote His attention to them, surely they will not be altogether too earthy for the immortalized saints to take an active interest in them!

When the kingdom comes, when God's will is done in earth as it is in heaven, there will be a place for every man and every woman who has met the conditions of adoption into the divine family and there will be an opportunity and an incentive for them to cultivate to a limitless extent every worthy faculty they have today dedicated to the glory of God the Father!

The artist who paints his pictures today in glowing words of living fire, will have a place to fill in the kingdom of God! His best will be in demand over there, I'm sure!

For a thousand years the world is to go on under conditions comparable to those which prevail today. Millions of mortal men and women will be in need of the information which the writer and the orator can best provide. Those words of Isaiah, burning with the fervor of almighty God, mean much to the one who labors with pen and voice and radio today! "For out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem" (Isa. 2:3).

The artist, the orator, the scientist, the engineer—all will have a place and a work to do in the kingdom of God, for the laws of nature will not be suspended and her forces will still be utilized to the glory of God and the blessing of mankind.

The servants of the King shall serve Him, and as they serve Him, they will continue to grow in wisdom and in power to do the things they like to do the most and to perform the tasks they are best fitted by nature and by inclination to perform!

Was Jesus God?

By R. H. Judd

SO ACCUSTOMED have people become to current teaching on the subject of the Deity and so unfamiliar are they with the teaching of Scripture that they see no inconsistency in asking the question that heads this article. Most of them have a dim recollection that St. Paul said, "There is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus" (1

Tim. 2:5). But they seem unable themselves to do a little simple analysis of even such a plainly worded message. In spite of very many statements of Scripture which with equal clearness definitely distinguish between God and Christ, their vision has become clouded owing to the influence of some "recognized (human) authority." Thus it is that an inquirer in Signs of the Times asks this very question and, reflecting the popular attitude on the subject, says, "It does not seem that it makes any particular difference if this is so or not." The question and its reply occupy one and a half columns of closely printed matter.

The first appeal is to human opinion, viz., that of the well-known Yale professor, William Lyon Phelps, who said, "You cannot separate Jesus Christ from God," a remark that flatly contradicts the statement of the Apostle Paul already referred to. The reason given by the Professor, that "the moment you separate Jesus from God, He becomes not only mortal but vulnerable," cuts away the very ground on which our salvation rests. For if Jesus the Christ had not been mortal, how then could it be true that "we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son," and how could it be affirmed that "Christ died for us" (Rom. 5:8-10)? Surely it is an unanswerable fact that if God had not "raised him from the dead" He would still have remained dead. If scriptures such as these do not "separate" and distinguish between God and Christ, then there is no language by which any such fact may be expressed.

Let us now notice the scriptures which Signs of the Times advances in support of its claim that "if the Bible

The following question appeared in an exchange recently, and we asked Brother Judd to review the answer given. "Is Jesus, as the Son of God, really a member of the Godhead—'God of God, Light of Light, very God of very God,' as the creed says? Do you believe that it is necessary to believe this in order to be saved in the kingdom of God?"

teaches anything, it is the deity of Jesus Christ." Do the passages which they quote, in the plain, grammatical sense of the language used, definitely affirm their contention? We think that an honest, impartial investigation will reveal that they do not, and that they have allowed (unconsciously perhaps) the influence of preconceived ideas to distort their vision.

The prologue of John's Gospel is brought forward as the "challenging" proof that Jesus Christ is God. They assume, without any precedent, that "logos" is an actual person; conveniently overlooking the very real difficulty as to how a person could be "with God" and at the same time be God without antagonizing natural law and definite Bible statements that God is one and that "there is none other" but He (Mark 12:29-32). Such an idea is not only contrary to the language used and would displace language as a reliable vehicle of conveying thought, but it actually attempts the impossible. The seemingly impossible has been done, but the actually impossible—never!

There is absolutely no evidence that "logos" here means any other than its general sense of "speech," "word," or "wisdom," as commonly used in Scripture. Tyndale and others translate the word with the neuter pronoun, which would be entirely unpermissible were personality an absolute certainty. It cannot be successfully denied that John's remarks are based on events recorded in Genesis 1, where the oft-repeated phrase, "and God said," has unquestionably been the origin of John's beautiful linking together of God and His Word.

David and Paul, Peter and John unite in declaring that "by the word of the Lord were the heavens made, and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth" (Psalm 33:6; 2 Peter 3:5). Their mode of expression is practically identical, even to the use of the word "logos," but none of them would attribute creation to the "word" apart from "God himself that formed the (Please turn to page 10)

Presbyterians Survey Communism

"Beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness."—Peter.

LOS ANGELES, Calif., Aug. 3. — The First Presbyterian Church of Seattle, Washington, referred the subject of communistic activity in the United States to the Immanuel Presbyterian Church of Los Angeles. The latter's committee has recently submitted its report from which the following excerpts are taken.

The Los Angeles committee found that there are communistic parties in seventy-two countries, all of which are working for a world social revolution which is to include, if the definition of communism given in the 1931 Communistic Congress of the United States section is to be accepted, a world-wide political organization advocating hatred of God and all forms of religion; . . . destruction of all forms of representative government, including civil liberties, such as freedom of speech, press, and assembly; the right of trial by jury; and as the final objective, the establishment of a proletariat dictatorship in one union of socialist republics with headquarters at Moscow, Russia.

The Los Angeles committee's report closed with the following resolution:

"Resolved, That communistic activities are hostile to and subversive to the Government of the United States and the Christian religion on which it is founded, and that all such activities be opposed by sermons from the pulpit and by all other lawful means to the end that the standards of life maintained by the church may remain and continue unimpaired."

The Presbyterians, like many other Protestant bodies, seem to feel that the salvation of the United States from communism and its accompanying atheism depends upon the church bringing political pressure to bear upon our law-making bodies. What do you think about it?

"Spark of Life" Electrical, Scientists Say

"Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light."—Ephesians 5:14.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Aug. 5.—Discovery of millions of previously unknown electrical charges in the human body shows to the satisfaction of the scientists that "the spark of life" is essentially electrical. The discovery, according to a report made to the American Chemical Society which was recently in session here, was made at Harvard Medical School, and fits significantly into other recent revelations of science that include thought and emotions in a network of electrical phenomena which appear to underlie body chemistry and structure of living matter. The newly found electrical charges are on the giant protein molecules, the body's so-called "building blocks," hitherto considered electrically neutral.

"These newly found forces," it is stated, "are of primary interest in connection with the transmission of nervous impulses. Clarification of these electrical effects removes an important barrier to the understanding necessary to the intelligent treatment of nervous disorders, of how a nerve message courses down a nerve fiber."

The new discoveries were made possible by the use of radio waves ranging in length from ten to several thousand meters.

Not only does this throw light on the problem of life from the standpoint of the scientist, but it helps the Bible student to understand what God has revealed concerning life. Light is frequently associated with life in the Scriptures. Light and life are alike manifestations of the Spirit or power of God. In the record of creation we read that "The Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters. And God said, Let there be light: and there was light" (Gen. 1:2, 3). Of those who were to be destroyed in the flood it is said that "all flesh, wherein is the breath of life, . . . shall die" (Gen. 6:17). The Hebrew word for "Spirit" in Genesis 1:2 and the Hebrew word for "breath" (applied to all animals), is the same. They both represent the power of God by which comes both "light" and "life."

From the revelations of the Bible and from the deductions and discoveries of science, it is clear that "personality" is not attached to the life-principle, but that "life" is an inanimate force which energizes material organisms. Science continues to come to the support of the Word of God. Dr. C. A. Chant, Professor of Astrophysics at Toronto University, is reported by the Methodist Protestant Recorder as saying lately: "I have no hesitation in saying that at least ninety per cent of astronomers have reached the conclusion that the universe is not the result of blind law, but is regulated by a great Intelligence. Slowly but surely the mind of the great is returning to the Creator and the God of Providence."

The Doctrine of Christ

By Harvey Krogh, Jr.

NOT in a magnificent cathedral and not to the high and mighty of the day but on the mountain side and to the common people Jesus proclaimed the great sermon. And the common people heard Him gladly. Our hearts are filled with emotion and our Savior is magnified in our eyes each time we study the wonderful words that He spoke.

In Matthew 6 His words are continued: "Take heed!" And that we might do even that: "Take heed that ye do not your alms before men, to be seen of them: otherwise ye have no reward of your Father which is in heaven." Jesus did not say that if some one saw your doing of good that you would have no reward of your Father but that we should not do our righteousness before men to be seen of them.

Let us see why men do alms or what is in the human heart that brings forth good. First, man may do good because he fears punishment from one who compels him to do the good. Again, man may perform a righteous act because he desires a reward. And last, a man may do good because within him is a love for all that must have expression, a love that cannot be hidden.

Jesus was speaking of the hypocrites who did their good deeds for love of reward, the reward of men, the praise of men. He was speaking of the hypocrites who were not doers of good but seekers of praise however they might get it.

"Therefore when thou doest thine alms, do not sound a trumpet before thee, as the hypocrites do in the synagogues and in the streets, that they may have glory of men. Verily I say unto you, They have their reward." We are not guilty of sounding a trumpet but we have done some of our righteousness with a secret hope that some one might see it and maybe announce it. You and I may have been hypocrites to that extent at least. I wonder if that would explain why sometimes we did not receive the reward from the Father that we thought we should have gotten as well as the praise of men?

"But when thou doest alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth." Sometimes it may be thought that if some one knows how much you give to the church, you would be letting your left hand know what your right hand was doing. Maybe so, but the Lord never said anything about giving to the church in this chapter. He was speaking of almsgiving. We were commanded to pay our tithe and the church was to be supported even as the priests of Israel were (1 Cor. 9:13, 14). Paying what you owe to the church as a Christian is not the giving of alms. You should be an example of a tither who will not keep the Lord's share for your own. Jesus was talking about giving of alms, which was something more after the tithe had been paid.

The reason for not advertising your almsgiving was: "That thine alms may be in secret: and thy Father which seeth in secret himself shall reward thee openly." Therefore let us see that the good we do is done because of Christ in us and the good is His. Paul said: "I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me" (Gal. 2:20).

"Moreover when ye fast, be not, as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance: for they disfigure their faces, that they may appear unto men to fast. Verily I say unto you, They have their reward. But thou, when thou fastest, anoint thine head, and wash thy face; that thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father which is in secret: and thy Father, which seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly" (Matt. 6:16-18).

Fasting is not so popular in this day, but we might see what God spoke of fasting. "Is it such a fast that I have chosen? a day for a man to afflict his soul? is it to bow down his head as a bulrush, and to spread sackcloth and ashes under him? wilt thou call this a fast, and an acceptable day to the Lord? Is not this the fast that I have chosen? to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke? Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out of thy house? when thou seest the naked, that thou cover him; and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh?" (Isa. 58:5-7). God had a beneficial reason for a fast. Our Savior fasted, and He also had a reason. Upon one occasion Jesus ignored His disciples' request that He eat and said to them: "I have meat that ye know not of." He spoke of it as doing the Father's will. And it is true that one can draw closer to God by turning from the flesh and its desires for a season that he may more wholly consecrate himself to the Lord. Try it before you form an opinion and express it.

"And when thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites are: for they love to pray standing in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men. Verily I say unto you, They have their reward." Yes, the reward of men, the most unsatisfactory and short lived of all rewards.

"But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret, and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." It is no more popular to be seen of men while one is praying. Nevertheless there may be within us a lit-

The Inspiration of the Bible

IN VERY early years we become aware of being alive, and of other human beings old and young around us; we become aware of the world in which we live. We see the sun far above; we experience the wind and the rain. We behold the earth, the grass, the trees, and the flowers; we get to know about dogs, cats, and other living creatures. We become conscious of our own bodies and their powers and possibilities. We learn of the thoughts and deeds of other human beings, past and present. And we observe the heart-rending event termed death, which appears to be the absolute end of those to whom it happens.

We cannot but question, How did all this begin? The intelligence and wisdom displayed throughout all nature argues for a Power unknown, greater than all the forces manifested in nature; greater than wind and wave, than lightning and earthquake. We ask, Where is that intelligence? Is there any purpose in all this display of power and wisdom? Have I, personally, any significant place in that purpose? Is there anything for me if death should seize upon me?

We become aware of books, affording much information and interest. We come across one outstanding Book, called the Bible. It stands out beyond all others by its claims, its themes, and its power. As we read it we realize that many human writers had a hand in it; yet through it all there runs one consistent claim to be the record of the words of the great Unseen, who is called God. The Bible claims to be one consistent statement from God to mankind.

GOD A REAL PERSON

The Bible reveals God Himself, not as a vague, impersonal influence, a cosmic force, but with very satisfying definiteness. "Then went up Moses, and Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel: and they saw the God of Israel: and there was under His feet as it were a paved work of a sapphire stone . . . and upon the nobles of the children of Israel he laid not his hand: also they saw God, and did eat and drink. . . . And the sight of the glory of the Lord was like devouring fire on the top of the mount" (Ex. 24:9-11, 17). God therefore is a real Person.

The Bible begins by saying that the heavens and the earth were created by God; a statement not of fiction, imagination, or speculation, but of solid fact. This statement is frequently reiterated throughout the Bible. The Bible's human scribes during fifteen centuries knew no change of mind.

Throughout the Bible there recurs the same claim to be the record of words spoken or otherwise communicated by God to chosen men, who recorded them. "The Lord spake unto Moses, saying . . ." (Ex. 25:1). "The Lord said unto Samuel . . ." (1 Sam. 16:1). "Moreover the Lord said unto me . . ." (Isa. 8:1). ". . . to whom the word of the Lord came . . ." (Jer. 1:1, 2).

William Campbell, the author of this article, is a prominent minister of the body which represents the same truths in New Zealand for which the Church of God stands in America. Our brethren everywhere are found to be not only able expounders of the Bible's teaching, but also staunch defenders of its divine origin.

The Lord Jesus, the Son of God, said, "He that sent me is true; and I speak to the world those things which I have heard of him. . . . As my Father hath taught me, I speak these things" (John 8:26, 28). All things that He spoke, therefore, were from God. Peter, one of His disciples, having accompanied with Him and heard His teachings for three and a half years, afterwards wrote: "No prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (2 Peter 1:20, 21). Paul, to whom the Lord Jesus appeared several times and communicated the will of God to him, afterwards wrote, "All scripture is given by inspiration of God"; that is, "all scripture is God-breathed" (2 Tim. 3:16).

These great claims mean that the Bible is fully inspired by God and is therefore absolutely reliable; these claims are sustained throughout the Bible. But the same Bible foretold that enmity against it would arise "in the last days." "There shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts" (2 Peter 3:3). There are plenty of them today, not only outside the Christian churches, but, alas! within it as well, denying that the Bible is the Word of God, and alleging many reasons for such denial, as that the Bible has discrepancies, that one part contradicts another; that some of its books are "pious forgeries" (which is a contradiction in terms); that the morality of the Old Testament is unacceptable today. Many details are advanced in support of these allegations. But let all who have believed in the full inspiration of the Bible, and are faced and dismayed by any such statements, remember this, that stalwarts of the faith have taken up the cudgels against these "scoffers," and have by the Holy Spirit of God brought out the truth, the trustworthiness, and the morality of the Word of God abundantly; and even if you cannot lay hands on an answer to every objection which may be voiced in your hearing, hold fast this conviction that an adequate answer exists; and "let not your heart be troubled."

THE ALLEGIANCE OF PRECIOUS SOULS

Thus for many years these two great forces have contended for the allegiance of precious souls; on the one hand, the army of the unbelievers in the full, divine inspiration of the Bible rendering it without error: and on the other hand, the noble array of defenders of the faith once for all delivered to the saints. At the Battle of Waterloo, the French and British armies fought all day, hotly contesting various strategic points. So also many points have been warmly contested in this warfare over the Bible. But just as at Waterloo there came a moment when Wellington gave the command, "Let the whole line advance," and the armies of the French were swept from the field; so it would appear that the time is ripe for the whole of the overwhelming forces of the Word of God to be set forward to demonstrate the utter vanity of the case against its plenary inspiration.

When Goliath challenged Israel, the Lord's army quailed. But David stepped forward to offer combat, in the strength of the Lord. Supposing some of the officers of Israel's army had objected to David, advancing many accusations as to his unsuitability, as that he did not wear the regulation uniform, for one thing; some thought David walked "hen-toed;" some thought his shoulders were too broad in proportion to his height; his hair was cut the wrong style; his teeth were not perfectly regular; and his nose was not all that could be desired; and so on. But others, who favored David, hotly contested all these points, proving that the clothes he wore were after the pattern worn by the patriarch Judah; his shoulders were like Jacob's; his feet like Joseph's; and his hair and teeth and nose like others of the venerated patriarchs of their nation. That is something like the state of the battle for belief in the inspiration of the Scriptures today—David representing the Word of God itself. But supposing that at last some one in the camp arose and shouted, "A truce to all this nonsense. Let David prove that he is the chosen man of God by sending him against Goliath." All debating thereupon ceased, and David stepped forth to meet the giant, and lo! before David the mighty enemy fell, dead. Every quibble against David's clothes, hair, nose, was shamed into confusion; his mighty achievement proved conclusively that he was the man whom the Lord had chosen to manifest His strength.

Let us call a truce to the quibbles against the inspiration of the Word of God. Mighty giants wait to be laid low; let us send it against them. There are mighty giants laid in the dust by the Word of God, and by it alone, before whom all else quails in absolute insufficiency. There is the giant of the tremendous question, How did all things begin? This confronts every human being. Unbelief says, like Topsy, "I 'spects it growed," and leaves it at that. Believers in evolution frankly admit it is a very unsatisfactory and unproven answer to the question, but it is the best they know, for they refuse to accept the Bible; and the giant stands grinning at them. But the Word of God lays him low in each believing and most satisfying statement in this connection ever penned, "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth"; a statement unimaginable by the human mind. All else of man's philosophy is supremely unsatisfactory, and leaves this giant master of the field.

OUR PERSONAL SIGNIFICANCE

The importance of this question becomes apparent when we turn to confront his twin brother, the mighty question, What is the future of all things? Unbelief quails in the silence of complete ignorance, across which the fleeting will-o'-the-wisps of spiritism and theosophy pass, to delude unstable souls. A few puerile guesses are proffered—that the world will freeze up, burn up, or burst up, some day in the far-off bye-and-bye! You can choose whichever you like, no one can say you nay. Thus this giant also remains master of the field, as far as unbelief in the Bible is concerned. But the Word of God, again sublime and godlike, reveals a future utterly unimaginable to the mind of man, "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away . . . and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away!" (Rev. 21:1-4). Before these glorious words, this mighty giant is laid low.

The third giant is the question, What is my personal significance in the universal scheme of things? Infidelity answers, Nothing! The whole future is a horror of great darkness. And this giant holds the field, a ghastly conqueror. But the Word of God reveals a future for everyone who humbly submits to it in faith, and who finds that redemption unto God by the blood of His Son, our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; a future godlike, sublime, definite, transcendent in glory, breath-taking in its wonder; a revelation unique in the whole world, and worthy of the inspired Word of God. "The dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed" (1 Cor. 15:52). "For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body" (Phil. 3:20). "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us . . . Now are we the sons of God . . . we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is" (1 John 3:1, 2).

But the unbeliever asks, What is my significance in the universal scheme of things? Shall I be permitted to have my fling toward the world, the flesh, and the devil, and then depart into nothingness in peace? Again the Word of God meets such a towering giant, who would slay the promptings of conscience in the hearts of the ungodly; and the sword thrusts of the irresistible Word pierce the heart. "So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God" (Rom. 14:12). "It is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment" (Heb. 9:27). Unbelief would remove the sobering thought of personal responsibility to God, thus loosening a wholesome restraint upon human lawlessness; but the Word of God, in sword strokes worthy of its Inspirer, lays this giant low. "I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books (Rev. 20:12).

THE EXIT OF SIN AND DEATH

The next giant is the most important question: How did the world-tormenting principle called sin enter the human race, bringing terrible, constant, and incurable dis-

God's Greatest Sign—The Jew

WITHOUT the firing of a shot by the British, Jerusalem was surrendered to General Allenby on December 11, 1917, and the control of the Holy Land by the Turks passed to a Christian nation. Students of Bible prophecy were thrilled and awed. I remember a letter that I had from my beloved friend and teacher, Dr. C. I. Scofield, in which he said: "Now for the first time we have a real prophetic sign."

God's greatest miracle is the resurrection of the dead—"Christ the firstfruits; afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming" (1 Cor. 15:23), and finally the resurrection of all the dead before the "great white throne" (Rev. 20:11, 12). But—apart from this greatest of miracles, the resurrection—God's greatest sign through the ages has been, and will continue to be, the Jew.

This is not a mere human opinion. God settles it by a question He asked of Israel more than three thousand years ago: "For ask now of the days that are past, which were before thee, since the day that God created man upon the earth, and ask from the one side of heaven unto the other, whether there hath been any such thing as this great thing is, or hath been heard like it? Did ever people hear the voice of God speaking out of the midst of the fire, as thou hast heard, and live? Or hath God assayed to go and take him a nation from the midst of another nation, by temptations, by signs, and by wonders, and by war, and by a mighty hand, and by a stretched out arm, and by great terrors, according to all that the Lord your God did for you in Egypt before your eyes? Unto thee it was shewed, that thou mightest know that the Lord he is God; there is none else beside him" (Deut. 4:32-35).

God has done for the Jews, and will yet do for them, what He never has done and never will do for any other nation or race of mankind. Here are seven great privileges God has arbitrarily given to Israel and to no other people: "the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises; whose are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, who is over all, God blessed for ever" (Rom. 9:4, 5).

Is any further word needed to show Israel's unique glory? Then this: "The Lord hath avouched thee this day to be his peculiar people, as he hath promised thee, and that thou shouldest keep all his commandments; and to make thee high above all nations which he had made, in praise, and in name, and in honour; and that thou mayest be an holy people unto the Lord thy God, as he hath spoken" (Deut. 26:18, 19).

As Israel's land, divinely covenanted to her by the Lord as her possession forever, is in God's sight and plans the geographical center of the world and "the glory of all lands" (Ezek. 20:6), so Israel as a people is God's center and determinant for all peoples, as shown in this astounding declaration: "When the Most High divided to the nations their inheritance, when he separated the sons of Adam, he set the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Israel" (Deut. 32:8).

Such scriptures as these lift out of the realm of doubt or human opinion the preeminence of the Jew. God has called His people; God has given them great and unique gifts; and "the gifts and calling of God are without repentance" (Rom. 11:29).

Christ is the theme of the Bible. Prophecy, centering about Christ, is the dominant note of the Bible. The second coming of Christ—being His personal, visible, bodily return to establish His kingdom on earth and to reign over Israel and the world for a thousand years, after which will come "a new heaven and a new earth" (Rev. 21:1)—is the goal, climax, and consummation of Bible prophecy. As we study God's greatest sign, the Jew, let us remember that Israel never can fulfill God's destiny for her until Christ comes again. His coming is near; the Scriptures make this plain; and the Jews, as a people, while many of them do not realize it, are furnishing profoundly impressive evidence of this. The fig tree is one of the Bible symbols for the Jew, and the Lord said in His great prophetic discourse on Olivet: "Now learn a parable of the fig tree; When his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh" (Matt. 24:32). Israel is indeed putting forth leaves. Let us look at a few of the many prophetic scriptures revealing God's plan and purposes, blessings and judgments, for His great "sign," the Jew.

The Jews are a Semitic, or Shemitic, people. That word takes us back to Shem, the son of Noah who was blessed of God beyond the other two sons. Ham (or Canaan) was to be "a servant of servants"; Japheth was to "dwell in the tents of Shem": but, "Blessed be the Lord God of Shem; and Canaan shall be his servant. God shall enlarge Japheth, and he shall dwell in the tents of Shem; and Canaan shall be his servant" (Gen. 9:25-27). From Shem descended the Jews. There is our first prophecy of "the Jew first" (Rom. 1:16).

Four centuries later came the call and founding of the Jewish race through Abraham. A new dispensation had begun, that of promise, as God called Abram out of his land and away from his kindred and spoke this great prophecy: "And I will make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing; and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed" (Gen. 12:2, 3).

Then came the promise and prophecy of the land: "Unto thy seed will I give this land" (Gen. 12:7).

This basic prophecy-promise was reiterated and enlarged by God to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob (Israel), as when "the Lord made a covenant with Abram, saying, Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates" (Gen. 15:18).

There were detailed prophecies of both the natural and the spiritual descendants of Abraham: "And I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth: so that if a man can number the dust of the earth, then shall thy seed also be numbered" (Gen. 13:16). "Look now toward heaven, and tell the stars if thou be able to number them: and he said unto him, So shall thy seed be" (Gen. 15:5).

These prophecies have had partial fulfillment through the centuries, but not yet the complete fulfillment that awaits the Lord's return. Under David and Solomon, Israel possessed a great deal of the covenanted land; Abraham's natural posterity had become multiplied nations. Through Israel's Messiah, "Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham" (Matt. 1:1), many nations of the earth have been blessed and there are unnumbered millions of Abraham's spiritual posterity.

Abram was told that "thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not their's, and shall serve them; and they shall afflict them four hundred years; and also that nation, whom they shall serve, will I judge: and afterward shall they come out with great substances" (Gen. 15:13, 14). Two centuries later this prophecy's fulfillment began, and then, in God's time, came the miraculous exodus (Ex. 14).

Such blessings as no other nation has ever known were prophesied by God for Israel; and also such judgments, or divine curses, as no other nation has ever known—the latter because of Israel's deliberate, persistent, and continued apostasy in spite of her exalted favor in God's sight and purpose. The long chapter in Deuteronomy, 28, sets down these predicted blessings and cursings. Many of the blessings came to Israel under David and Solomon—but not all, for they yet await the return of Israel's Messiah, and Israel's turning to Him. Many of the tragic, desolating judgments have fallen upon Israel, and are striking again in the white heat of revived and increasing anti-Semitism.

Has ever another people, for example, known any such judgment and desolation as this? "And the Lord shall scatter thee among all people, from one end of the earth even unto the other; and thou shalt serve other gods, which neither thou nor thy fathers have known, even wood and stone. And among these nations shalt thou find no ease, neither shall the sole of thy foot have rest: but the Lord shall give thee there a trembling heart, and failing of eyes, and sorrow of mind; and thy life shall hang in doubt before thee; and thou shalt fear day and night, and shalt have none assurance of thy life: in the morning thou shalt say, Would God it were even! and at even thou shalt say, Would God it were morning! for the fear of thine heart where-with thou shalt fear, and for the sight of thine eyes which thou shalt see" (Deut. 28:64-67). This prophecy has been fulfilled with poignant fidelity in Spain and Russia in earlier times, and in Germany today.

Turning back again to Israel's Old Testament experience, we find her apostasy predicted by Moses even before she entered the land (Deut. 31:16-20); and then, many centuries later, came predictive warnings from the prophets, including the detailed prophecy of her seventy-year captivity in Babylon (Jer. 25:11).

The return from the Babylonian captivity after the seventy years is predicted with equal definiteness (Jer. 25:12), and the fulfillment of this prophesied return is recorded (2 Chron. 36:23; Ezra 1:1; Dan. 9).

There is a midnight darkness in these prophetic pictures of Israel, and there is a noonday brightness. But the bright and glorious prophecies more than offset the darkness and tragic ones. "Hath God cast away his people? God forbid" (Rom. 11:1). One of the greatest prophecies in all the Bible—and it was uttered by inspiration more than two and a half millenniums before the event—which has yet come to pass, is this: "Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that they shall no more say, The Lord liveth, which brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but, The Lord liveth, which brought up and which led the seed of the house of Israel out of the north country, and from all countries whither I had driven them, and they shall dwell in their own land" (Jer. 23:7, 8).

For even the great tribulation, "the time of Jacob's trouble," will not destroy God's people Israel. In the very verse that tells us of the coming of this great tragedy, when Jeremiah exclaims: "Alas! for that day is great, so that none is like it," the Prophet continues: "But he (Jacob) shall be saved out of it. For it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord of hosts, that I will break his yoke from off thy neck, and will burst thy bonds, and strangers shall no more serve themselves of him: but they shall serve the Lord their God, and David their king, whom I will raise up unto them. Therefore fear not, O my servant Jacob, saith the Lord; neither be dismayed, O Israel: for, lo, I will save thee from afar, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return, and shall be in rest, and be quiet, and none shall make him afraid. For I am with thee, saith the Lord, to save thee: though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee, yet will I not make a full end of thee" (Jer. 30:7-11).

Do you know any Jews today? Do you love them? If they do not yet know their Messiah and Savior, are you praying for them, asking God to save them for Christ's sake that they may be, like Paul, "born out of due time"? (1 Cor. 15:8). For, let us never forget, . . . the Jew is the apple of God's eye. "For thus saith the Lord of hosts . . . he that toucheth you toucheth the apple of his eye" (Zech. 2:8). And the time is coming when any Gentile, any man anywhere, who knows a Jew will be proud of it! The Jew will be the most admired, the most sought after, the most beloved and lovable, of all the men of earth. "Thus saith the Lord of hosts; In those days it shall come to pass, that ten men shall take hold out of all languages of the nations, even shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, We will go with you: for we have heard that God is with you" (Zech. 8:23).—Jewish Missionary Magazine.

If Ye Have Respect of Persons

IN OBSERVING and practicing Christian living we sometimes find that although the precepts of the Scriptures are well known and generally accepted, the circumstances in which these are to be applied are matters of considerable difference of opinion, perhaps even matters of obscurity. It is desirable, therefore, to have our attention drawn to these teachings from time to time, so that we may acquire a more thorough knowledge of them, and thus be better fitted to apply them in daily life. So one of these precepts, one well known but not so well practiced, has been selected as the basis of our exhortation; and it is stated by implication in the words, "If ye have respect of persons, ye commit sin" (James 2:9, R. V.).

Before applying the rule to practice it will be necessary to review the related biblical teaching, because among humans there is a tendency to cloud the issues involved. When we emphasize the statement, "There is no respect of persons with God" (Rom. 2:11), thereby implying that there should not be with us, some one is likely to remind us that "the Lord had respect unto Abel and to his offering: but unto Cain and to his offering he had not respect" (Gen. 4:4, 5). By some this is done in a shallow endeavor to discredit the Scriptures, by others, who profit by the forbidden practice, it is done to cast a "smoke screen" over the facts; while on rarer occasions some one does it for the purpose of stimulating thought. The usual result is a clouding of the subject, and at the outset we must clear away some of the resulting obscurity.

As seemingly contradictory statements of the Most High's practice have been quoted, consider the subject from His point of view first. In this connection examine the incident of Peter and Cornelius. No doubt all are familiar with the story of how the Apostle was obsessed with the idea of Jewish exclusiveness, and of how God used a vision to teach him differently. After his perplexity as to the vision's meaning had been dispelled by the events that followed, Peter said: "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is acceptable to him" (Acts 10:34, 35). Apart from the induction of Cornelius into Christ, the chief purpose of this episode was that of teaching the Apostle that God's grace and salvation extend to "all the families of the earth," instead of being confined, as Peter seemed to think, to those who were Hebrews by either birth or adoption. And the Apostle, in his confession, revealed that he had learned the lesson.

In Peter's words we have a re-stating of the Most High's decree: "I the Lord search the heart, I try the reins, even to give every man according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings" (Jer. 17:10). And in the sense of this language God is, undoubtedly, a "respecter of persons." In this sense He discriminated between Abel and Cain, showing respect for the former but not for the latter, because the works of the one were righteous while those of the other were evil. It would be impossible for God to judge the world in righteousness without His having respect of persons in this sense, and therefore it is obvious that Peter used the phrase in an entirely different sense.

In what sense, then, did he use it? The underlying thought is set forth clearly in Peter's first Epistle, where the Apostle, in referring to the Father, lays emphasis on the words, "who without respect of persons judgeth according to every man's work" (1 Peter 1:17). The inevitable inference, and one amply confirmed by experience, is that there are some who do not judge in this manner, but are given to partiality. The Almighty is differentiated from all such in that He is impartial in His judgments: in that He uses a single, righteous standard, judging every man according to his works. Therefore the phrase or title "respecter of persons" is a stigmatic one, applicable to those who pervert justice by having regard for persons, and as such it can have no fitting application to the Deity.

Next consider the subject from the human point of view. James made reference to "being condemned by the law," so let us peruse the commandment given to Israel's judges. The Mosaic recapitulation of it reads: "Hear the causes between your brethren, and judge righteously between every man and his brother, and the stranger that is with him. Ye shall not respect persons in judgment; but ye shall hear the small as well as the great; ye shall not be afraid of the face of man; for the judgment is God's" (Deut. 1:16, 17). If we consider this text in conjunction with a number of related ones (such as Lev. 19:15 and Deut. 16:19), we observe that the provisions of this commandment were to be extended to all classes in the nation: to prince and peasant, rich and poor, young and old, male and female. Justice was to be administered without partiality, and any contrary practice brought the condemnation of the law on the guilty party.

Another, and an entirely different phase of the subject, is set before us in the letter to the Romans. After asserting that the "powers that be are ordained of God," Paul wrote: "Render therefore to all their dues: tribute to whom tribute is due; custom to whom custom; fear to whom fear; honour to whom honour" (Rom. 13:7). This appertains to authorities outside the church; we have comparable instruction relative to those within it. For example, we read: "We beseech you, brethren, to know them that labour among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you; and to esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake" (1 Thess. 5:12, 13). These representative texts set forth clearly the principle involved; and from them we learn that authorities, whether in the world or in the church, should be respected because of the positions they occupy.

From the foregoing facts we perceive that in some instances respect of persons is sinful, that in others it is not, and that in a third set of circumstances the absence of it is. In the interdicted practice the divine rule is followed, requiring the use of a single standard rather than a double or multiple one. The enjoined practice is for humans only, requiring of them recognition of the rule, "Render therefore to all their dues." Thus the subject matter governs the rule to be applied; and in Christian practice, authority, virtue, and like things are proper bases for respect, while most class, racial, and like distinctions are not.

Turning now to applications of our rule, we read: "My brethren, have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, with respect of persons. For if there come unto your assembly a man with a gold ring, in goodly apparel, and there come in also a poor man in vile raiment; and ye have respect to him that weareth the gay clothing, and say unto him, Sit thou here in a good place; and say to the poor, Stand thou there, or sit here under my footstool: are ye not then partial in yourselves, and are become judges of (with R. V.) evil thoughts?" (James 2:1-4). Here James takes the principle laid down in the law and applies it to a wider field: he makes it clear that there should be no distinctions on monetary lines among those who are sons and daughters of the Lord God Almighty. It is a matter of common observation that distinctions of this type, varying in kind and degree, are rampant in the church today. Consequently we should give serious thought to the words, "If ye have respect of persons, ye commit sin."

A second, and equally relevant phase of our subject is linked with the blood relationships that exist between some members of the church. It is a common practice for professing Christians to claim respect or precedence because of their fleshly relationship to some one who has a legitimate claim to such distinction. This prevalent practice is regrettable, and on occasions would be entertaining were it not for the seriousness of the matter. In some cases the claim is made because one is the wife of a husband or the husband of a wife; in others because one is a son or daughter of a particular father or mother; and doubtless many of you will recall observing cases in which the connection was more, perhaps much more, remote.

In each generation there are those who, lacking the initiative, ability, or opportunity to acquire a luster of their own, are happy to bask in the light of reflected glory. Likewise, in each age there are those who seek, and often acquire, a distinction to which they are not entitled. But there is no good reason why such practices should be found in the Church of God. In the world a man may acquire a claim to precedence through his father, as by inheriting an earldom or baronetcy; but there is no such inheritance law in the church. Of worldly distinctions the doctor's is more like the saint's; the doctor must conform to a specified standard; he acquires his title on a merit basis, and he cannot transmit it to his wife, son, or daughter. So also it is with the believer; if he seeks distinction among his fellows, he must attain it by his own merits; and as his merits cannot, his honor must not be transmitted to his relations or progeny.

Although we have touched on only a few instances in which this idea of respect of persons is found, we have laid a foundation for a proper understanding of the Scripture teaching on the subject, and we have made it quite evident that James' words, "If ye have respect of persons, ye commit sin," are intimately related to our everyday life. We have seen that in its stigmatic, forbidden form this practice is comparatively common; we have seen that James brands those who indulge in it as judges with evil thoughts, who are condemned as transgressors; and we perceive that some among us, perhaps ourselves included in the number, come under the condemnation. Are not these sobering facts for us to think about? Let us ponder them; and as we do so, let us bear in mind that James' statements apply to both parties in the transaction: to those who ask and receive and to those who give.

We should give this subject serious thought. We should canvas its whole field and learn the many points of contact it has with our daily life. Some of these points have already been touched on, while others can be unearthed by anyone who will do a little searching. We should learn them all, thus familiarizing ourselves with the groundwork of spiritual distinctions. Those of maturer years should instruct the younger ones in right principles, so that neither class will seek nor grant precedence when and where there is no proper basis for it. Those who aspire to places of eminence among their fellows should see to it that they merit the honor they seek, and presumably receive. Those who cannot attain such a goal should learn that distance lends enchantment to the view, and seek some other objective. In this way we shall, one and all, put the precept into effective practice, and none will have occasion to say that we regard "the person of man."—K. Malcolm Pook in The Faith.

THE INSPIRATION OF THE BIBLE

turbances into the world of monkeydom? No one can say, and the world strives by education, legislation, and sanitation to grapple with it, but with very superficial result. The Word of God again victoriously overcomes: "By one man sin entered into the world . . . by one man's disobedience many were made sinners . . . all have sinned and come short of the glory of God" (Rom. 5:12, 19; 3:23). Christian Science denies the existence of sin; the Bible boldly faces facts. Unbelief does not know what to do with sin, and therefore whitewashes it to hide its fearful countenance; the Bible clearly tells how it began, and how God deals with it, in order to declare how it shall end.

The next giant, therefore, is the mighty question: "What shall be the end of sin; will it never end? Unbelief has no answer to this, but only for every one to do his best to brighten the corner where he is and hope for the best. The Word of God, again with sublime, godlike masterstrokes, reveals a magnificent purpose to cleanse the whole universe of sin. "Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness" (2 Peter 3:13).

The last giant, death, with grinning, fleshless, horrid skull, holds its fatal club over every head, of old and young, good and bad. What have you, unbelievers, who deny that the Bible is the Word of the living God, to meet effectively this awful monster? Only vague, cheerless, empty words to cover up the hideous fact that unbelief has nothing whatever to offer to a dying soul. "You pass over"; "You go west"; etc., are phrases used. And once more the magnificent Word of God steps forth undismayed, with the ringing cry, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" (1 Cor. 15:55). For, "He that believeth in me," said the Lord Jesus Christ, "hath everlasting life" (John 6:47). "These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have eternal life, and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God" (1 John 5:13).

And what for me? faintly asks the unbeliever. Again the Bible makes clear answer in words of solemn import: "And whosoever was not found written in the book of life, was cast into the lake of fire . . . This is the second death," even the lake of fire (Rev. 20:15, 14).

Thus these mighty giants which confront the human race, against which unbelieving scoffers who deny that the Bible is God's inspired Word to man, have nothing solid to oppose, but only the most futile and puerile weapons of straw; these mighty giants are laid low by the victorious God before the armies of the Lord. Let us therefore cease the petty quibbles about the details of the Bible—not that we need give way one inch before the arguments of unbelieving scoffers—but a truce to these details: "Let the whole line advance."

Let us demand from the opposers of the truth of the God-breathed Word an answer to this, that if THIS be not the inspired Word of the living God in its every sentence, what have they to offer in its place against these fearful giants with which which we all have to do? and at once their emptiness becomes manifest, for they have absolutely nothing that is adequate.

Let us, therefore, in the strength of the Holy Spirit of God, hold fast the faithful Word; hold for the Word of life; and lay hold on eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

WAS JESUS GOD?

earth and made it" (Isa. 45:18). Every true Christian believes that "the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us," and that personality then came to be. But the literal fact, which so many deny but which is expressly stated, is that it was the "word" or "promise" (for "logos" means both) and not a person, that was made flesh (John 1:14; Gal. 4:4).

The quotation from Paul that Christ "is the image of the invisible God" should surely be proof to any man that Jesus the Christ cannot be God. A thing, or a person, is called an image of another precisely, because that which is an image is not and has not the reality.

The fundamental thought in Colossians 1:15 is unquestionably that "God created all things" (Eph. 3:9, R. V.) and that He created them "on account of," "by reason of," or "with a view to" Jesus the Christ, as stated in Ephesians 3:11, "according to the purpose of the ages which he (God) purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord." The same thought is expressed in Hebrews 1:3, "on account of whom he (God) constituted the ages."

As to God proclaiming the deity of His Son, in Hebrews 1:8, 10, Paul tells us that God "cannot lie"; consequently He would not, nor could He, affirm as in Isaiah 44 and elsewhere, "Beside me there is no God," and then proclaim that another is God also. Dr. Robert Young, D.D., in his Concise Dictionary of the Bible, says, "It may be justly rendered, 'God is thy throne to the ages of the ages.'" Seeing how closely that compares with the marginal rendering of Psalm 45:6, "Thy throne is the throne of God," there need be no hesitancy in accepting the marginal reading as the correct one. See Hebrews 8:1; 10:12; 12:2; Revelation 3:21; 1 Peter 3:22.

The trial of Christ before Caiaphas is clear-cut and straightforward. The high priest did not ask Him if He was God, but if He was "the Christ the Son of the Blessed." His answer was, "I am." Anyone who will assert that Christ here claimed deity is (perhaps unintentionally) as far from the truth as the Pharisees themselves who brought false witnesses against the Christ. Unable to bring, in clear and definite statement, one single claim of the Christ that He was God, they were actually willing to accept the testimony of such men. The high priest's use of the name "Christ" (which means "anointed") is ample proof that there was no claim to being Jehovah God. In John 10:33 the enemies of Christ did their utmost to extort from Him this blasphemy, but failed utterly in the attempt. Had the charges been proved they could rightly, and doubtless would have, stoned Him. Let the honest reader note the direct denial to being God that the "Son of God" gave in verse 36.

Peter's confession no more declares Christ to be God than does the one just noted. Both Christ and Peter make clear distinction between the "Son of God" and "God the Father" which is in heaven. See Matthew 16:16, 17. The Son was on earth; God was in heaven. It would, therefore, be impossible for Christ to be God. To state that God revealed to Peter that Christ is God, is to be guilty of stating what is not in the record.

Attention is called to John 20:28, where Thomas uses the expression, "My Lord and my God." Apart from the certainty that no Jew, not even Thomas, believed that God had come down from heaven and stood before him, or that it would be possible to identify God in the manner described, the writer of those lines could hardly be ignorant of the well-known fact that the word "God," was frequently applied, even in Scripture, to secondary causes (see Ex. 7:1). In this very same Gospel (John 10) our Lord and

His Apostle John point to its use in this way. Further, if it is true that by accepting Thomas' remark Jesus the Christ actually claimed to be Jehovah God, the "I AM," then later Bible statements to the effect that "no man hath seen, nor can see" God (1 Tim. 6:16) are incorrect.

To our wondering amazement John 20:31 is actually brought forward as additional proof that Jesus was God. What does the text say? Does it say, "These things are written that ye may believe that Jesus is God"? Or does it say, "These are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God"? Dr. Denny truly says, "The man who by excitement and fanaticism will not look reality in the face is no safe guide. Many people do not know how to parse. The power to look at a sentence and see clearly the parts of which it is composed and the meaning of the words one by one and together, is absolutely necessary to anyone who aspires to read the Bible or make any advance in real knowledge of Christian doctrine."

Next our attention is drawn to Exodus 3:13-15, John 8:58, and 1 Corinthians 10:1-4, and the argument advanced that "our Lord said He was the I AM" (italics ours). No version inserts the definite article, and it is fatal to the theme of the writer, for it emphatically limits "I AM" to one individual. We believe it applies to the God of the Old Testament, who is "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ." It cannot apply to both. The words, ego eimi, occur over a dozen times in the New Testament and are generally translated, "I am he," or "It is I," the "he" being supplied by italics as being necessary to the sense. It is supplied in verses 24 and 28 of this same chapter, viz., John 8, and should have been supplied in verse 58, as it is in some well-recognized versions. John 4:26 and 9:9 are clear examples of the correctness of supplying the pronoun. No one can for a moment suppose that the blind man claimed to be "I AM," yet the Greek is the same as elsewhere. John's Gospel rings with the message that "I am he," viz., the Messiah—the One of whom all Scripture speaks—and He said to the Jews, "Except ye believe that I am he, ye shall die in your sins" (John 8:24, R. V.). The emphasis of the Revised Version is decisive—not merely if ye believe not—but "except ye believe that I am he, ye shall die in your sins."

It seems hard to realize that any honest expounder of Bible truth can quote 1 Corinthians 10:4 in support of the preexistence of Jesus the Christ as God, when in verse 6 we are told that "these things were our examples" (Greek, "figures," see margin), and verse 11, that "these things happened by way of type" (margin).

Jacob's ladder (Gen. 28:12) is the final of these remarkable attempts to prove that "Jesus was God." Bishop Moule is quoted as saying, "A Christ who is not God would be a bridge broken at the farther end." If that were true, the reverse would be equally true of a God who is not Christ. Yet never do the Scriptures make any such claim. The Messiah was God's "sent" One (1 John 4:14); He was God's "servant" (Isa. 49:5; 52:13; Matt. 12:18); God's "anointed" (Isa. 61:1; Acts 10:38); God's "elect" (Isa. 42:1; 1 Peter 2:6); the "Prophet" whom God was to raise up (Deut. 18:15). These are facts which, along with hundreds of others, definitely distinguish between God and the Christ whom He sent.

There is no question whatever but that the ladder is representative of Christ, for John 1:51 abundantly confirms it. But so far is that incident from representing Christ as God that He is represented there not even as "the Son of God" as quoted by the writer of that article, but as the "Son of man," as will be seen by reference to the text. The ladder is the same throughout. The "same Jesus" who went up into heaven will come again. Nothing is said in the incident of "our entrance into heaven." But is there not a suggestion in the vision that angels will once more be visitants to earth? For it is "angels of God" and not men who ascend and descend to and from the earth upon the Son of Man.

PRAYER FOR A HOME

Father, we thank Thee for the walls
That shut us from the world outside,
That build for us a holy place
Where we may dwell in unity
That reaches to our deepest lives
And blends them into one.

O grant us, Father, that no storm or stress
Shall mar the sacred beauty of our home,
That quietness and peace may ever brood
With healing power,
That in our sanctuary, here,
We may find strength to live.

And grant us, Father, that these walls
And every piece of furniture within,
Familiar grown, may have the sacredness
That sets a house apart as Thine,
That every common task or thought
May be a sacrament.

And, Thou who art Incarnate Love,
Grant that Thy presence may abide Forever on this home,
That we who dwell within may know
Thy perfect love.

—James Asa Johnson.

The material goods of life are such that one man's gain is another's loss! They perish with use; they are strictly limited; they may be detached from their owner without his consent. But the goods of the Spirit have exactly the opposite qualities. They are increased rather than decreased by sharing; they are absolutely unlimited; they do not perish with use; and they so wholly belong to their possessor that he cannot lose them except by his own consent.

Respect the Preacher

"Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honour, especially they who labour in the word and doctrine."—1 Timothy 5:17.

The world pays deference to the minister of the gospel. There is a note of respect in the way ordinary people, even though they may be non-Christian, address a minister. But sometimes the Christians see faults in the ministers and speak lightly of them. It is common to hear, "Oh, he is just in it for the money," or, "He knows better than to preach those false doctrines, but the people want to hear them." All such remarks are apt to react against the ministry in general, even though the ones who say them may hold other ministers in high regard.

Here is a danger that we who belong to a smaller denomination need to be on guard against. We feel our understanding of the Bible truths is so evidently true, that it is so easy to attribute base motives to those who hold and preach otherwise. But even if we are not willing to credit some with sincerity of motives, we should go to the other extreme in building up respect and deference for those whom we do consider as sincere. It is so easy for the children and less experienced members to pick up some such slighting attitude and let it color their attitudes to a degree that would horrify you if you realized it.

Honor and deference shown to a minister inculcates honor and deference for the message he brings. If you would have others respect the gospel of salvation, speak highly to others of the ministers of that gospel.

"And we beseech you, brethren, to know them which labour among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you; and to esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake" (1 Thess. 5:12, 13).

"The Lord Had Respect"

"And the Lord had respect unto Abel and to his offering: but unto Cain and to his offering he had not respect."—Genesis 4:4, 5.

Abel brought a blood offering, the first and best that he had. Cain brought agricultural products, and they weren't even the first fruits; he had had his own fill before he got around to offering to the Lord.

Everything belongs to God. His only concern about the material that makes up the offering is that it demonstrates the thoughts and intents of the heart. Abel showed by his offering that he honored God; Cain didn't. That was the difference. The offering was the witness.

"By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts" (Heb. 11:4).

In order to have faith Abel must have been taught of God. It is evident that he had sought to know the promise God had made of the seed of Eve bruising the serpent's head. Evidently he looked forward to the Christ, for his offering was a type of the offering of Christ. Taking everything into consideration we readily see why God had respect unto Abel.

Cain had the same opportunities as Abel, but he evidently neglected them. He didn't seek to know what would please God. He was a tiller of the ground, and he took the first thing that came to hand regardless of its propriety. It happened to be the fruit of the ground.

You know yourself how you would feel about two gifts, one carefully chosen, and the other without thought.

The Creator can and does see into the human heart. He knows whether or not your heart is prepared for worship when you make an offering. Do you deliberately find out what God wants of you, and then proceed to do it His way? If so, then God will have respect unto you.

In Defense of Gossips

Many hard things have been said about gossips by the victims (and who has not been a victim?) and the gossips merit the disgust and abhorrence of all the world. But they do fill a place in the life of weak-kneed individuals who are kept going straight by fear of what the gossips will say. It does seem to be a stringent rule that a bishop (or minister) "must have a good report of them which are without" (1 Tim. 3:7). (Certainly gossips are not "in" the church, and therefore are "without.") But the world has a standard of morals which even Christians may not violate unscathed.

Bible students say that the world is getting much worse, morally. Now with some individuals this truth works to make them repulse with renewed determination the onslaughts of sin. But some feel that if the world is so bad that they can get away with some minor sinfulness without being hurt, the contrast will be sufficiently great even so. It is the job of the gossip to get across to these latter individuals that "nice" society frowns upon indiscretions.

It is easy to see what is the moral of all this: Put the gossips out of a job by walking in the way of righteousness. "Abstain from all appearance of evil" (1 Thess. 5:22).

The next time a gossip injures you, don't spend all your steam tooting the whistle against gossips. Put some energy to driving the wheels of self-examination, and next time you will be a good bit beyond the reach of the gossip's injurious tongue.

HOW WE MAY PLEASE GOD IN OUR HOMES

ABOUT forty years after Moses, under God's guiding hand, had led the people of Israel away from Pharaoh and all his cruel treatment of them, Moses stood on the east bank of the Jordan River and spoke the words found in the 6th and 11th chapters of Deuteronomy. The horde of frightened slaves had by that time become a nation, with laws to guide them given by God. They were God's nation.

Because God knew that a nation is made up of homes and families, He wanted the homes and families of His nation to be the very best possible. And the only way in which a home can be a truly good one is for every member of the family to love and honor God.

We see all about us many beautiful homes. We see homes with everything in them to make life pleasant. When God is loved and honored in such a home, the children are truly blessed. For there is everything to make them happy and useful.

We see homes that are poor and unattractive all about us. In many of them God is not loved or honored. And when that is true such a home is very poor indeed, and the children are not at all happy in the real sense of the word.

So we see it isn't the size and the beauty of the building or its furnishings that make a happy home. But it is the fact that father and mother and the boys and girls of the family love and honor God.

Does it not make a beautiful picture in your mind when you think of the boy Timothy? When he was a very small boy his grandmother read to him every day from the Old Testament. Most likely she often read the 23rd Psalm, and we can hear the soft tones of her voice as she read the beautiful words to her little grandson.

Timothy's mother taught him, too, explaining the verses as he grew older and asked the many questions that all boys do. His grandmother and his mother had taught him so well that when he grew to be a young man he was ready to be the helper of the greatest preacher of all time.

Paul said that Timothy should hold fast to all the good things he had learned as a child. He said it filled him with great joy when he thought of the faith of Timothy's grandmother and mother, the same faith they had instilled into their little boy and which stayed with him all his life.

Many of you girls and boys who read this page have just such grandmothers and mothers. If you learn in your early years that the really valuable things of life are the things you cannot see and touch, you will be wise and happy as Timothy was. Love for God, faith in the promises He has made to us, respect for God's Book and a desire to read it—these are some of the really good things, the worth while things, in life.

Just imagine for a moment the difference there would be if every father and every mother in your neighborhood loved and honored God and taught their girls and boys to do so, too. How happy those families would be! How differently they would act!

You know, God told His people away back in Moses' time that if they taught their children God's ways He would give them longer life and happier days. He really meant it, too, and it came about just as He said it would.

Don't you think God would give every family today just as great a blessing for honoring Him? How many ways can you think of in which life would be better and happier? Many, many, I am sure.

There would be no quarreling, for one thing. Each member of the family would work, not for his own good alone, but for the welfare and happiness of every other member of the family. The children would obey their parents cheerfully, and the parents would sympathize fully with the children in all their problems.

Father and mother would set a good example before their boys and girls. All the family would attend church together whenever possible. Such a home as that you would remember with joy when you were grown up, and you would want to pattern your own after it when the time came.

Remember, girls and boys, home is the most sacred place on earth. It is the most wonderful. But you have a part to perform in helping it to be just such a place. Every other member of the family has a part as well.

Some day, perhaps not so far off, our heavenly Father will send Jesus to earth to take away all things that are evil, all things that harm us, all things that help destroy our homes. When Jesus has that great work completed God Himself has promised to dwell with men forever in an earth made new. Then all our homes will be perfect.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

CONFERENCE CALENDAR

August 15-22—Western Nebraska State Conference at Holbrook.

August 21-29—Fiftieth anniversary of the Iowa State Conference, Waterloo.

August 19-29—Virginia State Conference and Bible School, Maurertown, Va.

THERE WILL BE NO RESTITUTION HERALD ISSUED NEXT WEEK

It has been the custom to omit one issue of The Restitution Herald each year. We are taking advantage of this practice NEXT WEEK. You will not receive a copy of the paper under date of August 24, 1937. Bro. Marsh, our editor, will be assisting in the Virginia Bible School and Conference. So please do not write us when The Herald fails to reach you next week.

Interesting and valuable new features are being planned for our paper which will make their initial appearance in the near future.

NIAGARA DISTRICT CHURCHES OF GOD

Bro. C. E. Randall, pastor of the churches at Niagara Falls, N. Y., and Fonthill and Welland, Ont., after a protracted missionary survey trip through the West, followed by attendance at the General Conference, will be back at his home charge to conduct services on Sunday, Aug. 22. He has had a busy summer working in the interest of the Evangelistic Board, but that his labor was not in vain is evident from the encouraging reports which are coming in from the regions visited.

CORVALLIS, OREGON

The Northwest Quarterly Conference will be held at Corvallis, October 1, 2, and 3, 1937.

Having read in The Herald that the Ministerial Association Mission Board was sponsoring a trip for Bro. C. E. Randall, we extended an invitation for him to come to our Corvallis church. He accepted our invitation and was with us two nights, July 14 and 15. We were encouraged by the splendid talks he gave us.

The C. R. Greene family of Wilamina, Ore., were here for Bro. Randall's service, coming a long distance.

Mr. and Mrs. Ted R. Moline and daughters of Indiana have come to Corvallis to make their home.

Sr. M. C. Joseph of Albany, Ore., formerly of Kansas, was visiting Sr. Edith Barber and family.

Bro. H. J. Prosser, the evangelist of the Northwest Conference of Oregon and Washington, held meetings in Corvallis August 1. Sr. Minnie Rogers and Bro. and Sr. Baker of Eugene were present to hear Bro. Prosser.

CALIFORNIA CONFERENCE

The three-day California Conference will be held in Pomona, Aug. 27, 28, and 29, 1937. Bible classes are being planned for adults and children for both mornings and afternoons, with preaching services in the evenings.

Everyone is urged to come and take part in the study of the Word. Last year's conference was a very successful one. Let us have a good one this year to remember.

Grace Adamson, Secretary.

EVANGELISTIC WORK IN INDIANA STARTED

The Indiana Evangelistic Committee has started work at Logansport with Elder O. J. Parker of Kokomo conducting Bible classes in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Bean of that city. Bro. Parker reports that interest is good. One group on the west side of Logansport, where there is no church of any denomination near, urges that a Sunday school be organized in an unused school building. Seats may be obtained at a small cost. A piano and pulpit would be our chief expense. We feel that a Sunday school here would be self-supporting after the first month. We plan to train teachers and conduct preaching services each Sunday until interest increases to a point where a series of evangelistic services would be an advantage. Services may also be held in a community church building owned by the city by paying the light bills.

Bro. Parker spent two weeks in Logansport last spring, so your committee felt he was best fitted to open the work there at this time. He spent a part of last week there, and plans (D. V.) to return this week (August 9) to organize the work there. We hope to have favorable reports from Logansport in the near future.

D. G. Harvey Secretary.

GUTHRIE GROVE, SOUTH CAROLINA

The annual August meeting of the Church of God of the Abrahamic Faith at Guthrie Grove began Sunday, Aug. 1, with the pastor, M. O. Williamson, conducting the services. The music was under the direction of the writer, there being special songs by the church quartet. Request numbers were honored on the musical program each evening.

The meeting was a success from beginning to end; the interest was good, large numbers attending each evening service. Bro. Williamson used 2 Peter 1:4 as a text throughout the meeting.

On Sunday evening, Aug. 8, Bro. Williamson assisted the following to put on Christ by baptism: Mellie and Corine James, Mrs. Cora Bell Crone, Mrs. Annie Mae Reid, Alvin Mills, Mrs. Annie Mills, all of Piedmont; J. B. Gentry, Beatrice Mills, William B. Lance, all of Williamson; Mr. R. P. Bishop, 510 Green St., Greenville; Mrs. Blanche James, Piedmont; Mr. and Mrs. Ellis Smith, Rt. 1, Liberty; Mr. Louie Jones, Box 2433, Stockyard Sta., Oklahoma City, Okla.; Eva Leslie and Sara Williamson, of Pelzer.

BRUSH CREEK CHURCH OF GOD

Near Tippecanoe City, Ohio

Following the evening sermon on August 8, Mrs. Jesse Macy, Troy, Ohio, Rt. 3, accepted the gospel invitation, and was baptized in Brush Creek near by on Monday morning. We are more than glad to welcome this wife and mother into the fold, and pray for her a successful Christian life. It has also been our pleasure to baptize seven of her children and two daughters-in-law.

On Monday afternoon we left home with our family and Timothy Pearson for the General Conference at Oregon, Ill. We made a brief stop at the Hatch home at Harvey, Ill.

At Oregon we met many friends, and were strengthened in the faith by numerous sermons, and Bible lessons. At 7 p. m. Sunday, Aug. 15, with several others, Timothy Pearson was baptized, Bro. Harvey Krogh, Jr., officiating.

According to present plans we shall arrive home about the time you receive this report, following a two-day visit with Mrs. Magaw's mother and brother, Mrs. Hatch and Paul, at Harvey, Ill.

Sunday morning, Aug. 22, we will meet the Lawrenceville brethren, and Sunday evening we will be at Brush Creek. We pray your attendance.

Sydney E. Magaw, Pastor.

SHE "BEING DEAD, YET SPEAKETH"

In a letter received by Sr. Anna Drew since the death of Sr. Emma Upton, St. Elmo, Ill., July 31, it was her request before her death that a "thank you" from her be extended to those who remembered her during her illness by cards and letters. She was much cheered by these messages from those of like precious faith.

AURORA COLLEGE GOSPEL TEAM MAKES LONG TRIP

An Aurora College gospel team left the campus Friday morning, June 18, and returned Saturday, July 31, after a trip which covered 9,500 miles. The group passed through eighteen different states, visited the Dominion of Canada, and the Republic of Mexico. Those who made the entire trip were Pastor and Mrs. G. F. Richardson, Jerry, Jr., Elizabeth Smith, and Arthur Mills, the latter representing the Church of God. James Crimi was on the tour until the meeting in San Diego, Calif., July 21. Mark Trumbo was a member of the team from June 27 to July 21.

Thirty-four different services were held by the team in thirty-two different churches. Twenty-six of the churches visited were Advent Christian congregations, four belonged to the Church of God, one was a Union Congregational, and one a Methodist. The latter two connections were through individual friends of members of the team.

ST. CLOUD, MINNESOTA

On the afternoon of the last Sunday in July a number of the brethren met on the banks of the Sauk River while one of our young men was baptized into the name of Jesus. We welcome Mr. Kenneth Bremer into the fellowship of the church and pray he may be a blessing in the Lord's work.

MORA, MINNESOTA

On Tuesday evening, Aug. 3, Bro. and Sr. A. E. Hoskins and daughter Pheraba came to Mora to start a series of meetings. The interest and attendance have been good, considering the busy time at this season of the year. We feel God has blessed us here, and we want to show our appreciation for what He has done for us. We pray God will send a great revival in the hearts of all in this community. We are living in the last days, and therefore we are admonished not to forsake "the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching" (Heb. 10:25). Each night the messages have been inspiring and uplifting. Bro. Hoskins' thought has centered around the condemnation resulting from the tree of knowledge of good and evil that Adam and Eve partook of and the tree of temptation that still exists, which we still have to fight against; but thanks be to God, He has given us of the light of the better way which is in Christ Jesus. The question is, Have we been true to Jesus? Have we tasted of the good things of Jesus, and then again become entangled with the things that come under the tree of temptation? Once sealed with the Holy Spirit and then fallen away from grace—there is a possibility of breaking that seal and letting our light go out and by so doing become cold in God's service. Are we in that number? We must each one answer this in our own hearts, not by feeling of conscience but by the true Word of God weigh our walk in life by God's Word. Have we one hand on God and the other one on the world?

Dear brothers and sisters, not only in this place but everywhere this is serious and should be given deep thought with God's strength to help. As time speeds on and sin gets worse let us draw the line and be firm to stand wholeheartedly for the Christ who did so much for us. May God help us to live better Christian lives and remember Paul's admonishing words, "If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit" (Gal. 5:25). Lord, help us to awaken before it is too late. Pray for the work here and for Bro. Hoskins and the success of the meetings.

Ruby Randall.

At this time I wish to thank all those who remembered me with cards who are attending the General Conference and Bible School at Oregon, Ill. Words cannot express my appreciation for your kindness. They brought me closer to your meetings. May God bless you all. I would love to write each one separately, but as this is impossible, I am thanking each one through the columns of The Herald.

I wish to thank the folks back home, too—Welland, Fonthill, and Niagara Falls—for their cards and letters. I appreciate them all. May God bless you all.

Ruby Randall.

JOHN SMILEY REID

Bro. John Smiley Reid, for many years prominently identified with the believers in Pasadena, Calif., died June 20, 1937 at his home in that city. Bro. Reid was born in Wishaw, Scotland, March 1, 1858. For the past twenty-eight years he was employed as stationary engineer at the Hotel Maryland. He was unusually accomplished in his chosen work, and has presented to his friends many beautiful articles which he fashioned from various metals. His interest in the Bible and the glorious truths set forth in the gospel never diminished. He was present on every possible occasion when health and circumstances permitted, at the Bible classes conducted by Bro. Lindsay and other teachers who visited his city.

Bro. Reid is survived by his widow, Janet M. Reid; two sons, Frank S. Reid of Pasadena, and Jack S. Reid of Atlanta, Ga.; and one brother, Joseph Reid of Wishaw, Scotland.

Memorial services were held at Orange Grove Chapel under the leadership of pastors J. P. Lichty and Norman Macleod. He rests at the Mountain View Cemetery awaiting the call of the Master whom he served.

Conference Comments

By Mary A. Gesin

These lines are being written near the close of General Conference, but there still are new arrivals daily, some from distant parts, some from near by. A larger number of the younger young people are present than has been the case for the past couple of years. For this we thank the heavenly Father. The growth of the church is closely tied up with the life and loyalty of our young people.

The devotional services each morning at nine o'clock during the entire conference were a means of genuine inspiration and uplift to all who attended them. These were largely in charge of the younger workers and reveal a spirit of dependence upon God and a gratitude to Him for blessings received daily.

The program given on the last Thursday evening by the younger classes of the Bible School under the direction of Sr. Lucille LeCrone, was attended by many of the parents of Oregon who are not members of the church, but who send their children each year to our Bible School. This program was well received and showed excellent work done by pupils and teachers.

Bro. and Sr. P. N. Benn and Bro. Daniel Kent arrived on August 13 and were warmly welcomed by old friends. Sr. Benn says it seems good to be with us again, though for only a brief time.

Bro. Ray Abbott of Paynesville, Minn., has been conducting for the past 12 years an unusual work in that his congregation was composed of people of eight denominations. During these years only the Word of God has been preached and Bro. Abbott's conviction is that constant prayer and faithful service are the causes that are contributing to the success of the work. A goodly number have been baptized through the years. Bro. Abbott says that at the beginning of the work sometimes only himself and family were present, but he conducted services nevertheless. If you want to learn about perseverance in spite of discouragement talk to Bro. Abbott.

A carload of Grand Rapids folks rolled in from Yellowstone Park on Friday afternoon of the second week. We were glad to welcome Bro. and Sr. Arlie Townsend and Martha, Bro. and Sr. Lynn Slocum, and Sr. A. J. Richardson. Bro. Townsend is the contractor who built our beautiful little church edifice at Oregon several years ago.

The Bells of LaCrosse—Bro. and Sr. H. S. Bell—their son, Guilford and friend, Miss Beryl Christie of Tucson, Ariz.,—were here for the second week of conference. The Bells ring true and are always welcomed heartily at Oregon, where they hold their membership.

Srs. Helen Lewis and Lelin McDaniel of Ripley, Ill., were the two who dispensed good material food which enabled those present to digest the spiritual food given by the various teachers and speakers of the school.

Every heart was touched on Friday evening when Miss Hazel Reed of Oregon, Ill., who has not walked since childhood, was brought forward in her wheel chair and requested immersion. Several others, whose names will be given later, all in the younger years of life, were also baptized during the Bible School.

Sr. Leota B. Hanson was called home suddenly from General Conference to be at the bedside of her father who had collapsed upon receiving the news of the extremely serious condition of his daughter, Sr. Ella Hanson MacDonald, following an operation in a Denver, Colo., hospital. Word was received from Sr. Leota, who later went to her sister's bedside, giving encouraging news as to Sr. Ella's condition. Sr. Leota will remain a week or two, and her address is 11658 E. Colfax, Aurora, Colo.

tle of the love of the praise of men. I wonder if we enter into our closet to pray or pray alone enough each day? Remember that you cannot keep these commandments without help, and through prayer you will find the greatest help in Him who alone can make you a victor.

"But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions, as the heathen do: for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking." Jesus did not condemn persistence in prayer, for at two different times He spoke of it (Luke 11: 5-13; 18:1-8).

"Be not ye therefore like unto them: for your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask him. After this manner therefore pray ye: Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name." Oh! so often we (that includes me) are mechanically repeating this prayer even as the heathen prayed and we were commanded not to do so. I, and possibly many, never really learned that prayer, but by saying so many words to keep in rhythm with the group it became muscular memory and the words could be repeated without thought. It is so much more than that, so we should pray this perfect prayer.

"Our Father." Yes, He is ours, for we are brethren and we are not selfish to call Him our Father. He is also the Father of our Lord Jesus, the anointed One. Reverence be even to His name. We pray to Him: "Thy kingdom come." The kingdom is not yet here, although it was offered to the Jewish nation and they rejected it. We pray that it shall come soon and the distress of mankind be relieved. There is also another sense in which we ask that the kingdom come. In Romans 14:17 Paul said, "For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." Paul does not imply that this is all there is to the kingdom, but this is an important part of it and it is something of the kingdom which is to come to us now. If we are citizens of the new kingdom, why should we not enjoy a few small blessings while we are waiting for its fullness?

We also request that His will be done in earth as it is in heaven. Let us start with ourselves and when we do His will we will be doing much toward His will being done in all the earth.

"Give us this day our daily bread." We pray not for tomorrow's bread. To pray for tomorrow's needs shows a lack of faith in Him who provides so well. We pray not only for temporal bread, but for something which Jesus spoke of when He said, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God"—a bread from heaven, the bread of life. And have we forgotten that we prayed for "daily" bread? Each day we need this bread from heaven. It is not received in one lump each Sunday, but we need to ask for it day by day.

"And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors." We owe God a great debt because we have the things that we should have and we have done many things that we should not have done. Therefore we ask that the debts that can only be paid by the Christ be forgiven us only as we forgive others that owe us. "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you: but if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses."

And bring us not into trial but rescue us from the evil one. And indeed the kingdom is the Lord's. Whose is the power? It is not ours, for of ourselves we can do nothing. But through Christ we can do all things. The power is of the Father and the glory is His also.

Let us remember the meaning of this prayer. Would you pause just a moment and pray that prayer that Jesus taught us, in the spirit that He gave it? God will bless you for it.

ROCKEFELLER'S GIFTS TO THE JEWS

THROUGH the kindness of Brother H. G. Pierce of Mishawaka, Indiana, we have received an illuminating article taken from the Indiana Jewish Chronicle, in which Bertram Jonas enumerates the benefactions of the Rockefellers to the Jews. As the matter is copyrighted we cannot publish it in full, but we are permitted to provide our readers with a summary of the facts presented in it.

It is estimated that the Rockefellers, father and son, have given at least four million dollars to various Jewish enterprises of an educational, cultural, and philanthropic nature. It is impossible to give the exact amount the famous oil family has contributed, "for many of the Rockefellers' contributions to things Jewish were made on condition that the source remain undisclosed," Mr. Jonas states.

Among other notable accomplishments which have been made possible by the Rockefellers is the Palestine Museum of Antiquities, for the establishment of which they provided two million dollars, and the effort to eradicate malaria from Palestine, which required an outlay of a quarter million.

"It is also an open secret that the first medical unit sent to Palestine by Haddassah during the World War had received a substantial contribution from the Rockefellers, through a Jewish philanthropist acting as their intermediary," the author asserts.

The Rockefeller Foundation in 1933 granted more than half a million dollars to assist refugee scientists, educators, and other needy groups from among the Jewish intellectuals fleeing Germany, in establishing them in laboratories and universities in other parts of the world.

In addition to this, the Rockefellers indicated their disapproval of the Hitler anti-Semitic campaign when, in November, 1936, it carried out a pledge made some years ago and made a grant of $655,000 to the Kaiser Wilhelm Institute of Berlin, and at the same time declared that had the present anti-Jewish condition in Germany been foreseen when the contribution was asked for, no such commitment would have been made.

General Conference Report

BY THE FAVOR of Almighty God our Father another great General Conference of the Church of God in the United States and Canada has been brought to a successful close, and the brethren have returned to their homes refreshed in spirit and strengthened in purpose to carry forward the glad tidings of salvation in their own localities.

The Conference opened on Tuesday night with a historical service at which the Secretary presided. Brief addresses were given by brethren from widely scattered sections of the country, relative to the manner in which the truth as emphasized by the Church of God was introduced in various places.

This initial service naturally reminded us of those faithful men who studied themselves out of error into the truth and of the splendid, self-sacrificing devotion which they rendered to us long before we were born, by transmitting down through the years the promises of God concerning the literality of Christ's second coming, the resurrection of the dead, the regathering of Israel, the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, and the hope of eternal life, which is the richest promise of all.

As we recalled those early workers and the meetings in which they took an active part, we also recalled their zeal and earnestness in promulgating the things which they so firmly believed. Nothing in those early years of our denominational history was permitted to stand in the way of spreading the gospel of the kingdom and the fact that everlasting life was conditional on the establishing of man's unity with Christ through faith and obedience in baptism.

Before the Conference we are recording was over it became apparent that our people of today differ little from their fathers of a half century ago in matters of faith. While it is true that reports from some localities seemed to indicate a lessening of zeal in the preaching of the kingdom of God and kindred doctrines, as a whole, our brethren are not permitting their interest in these vital truths to flag. The general thought seemed to be that we were going forward, not backward, and that many of our younger ministers were developing into strong and vigorous defenders of the doctrines for which we have ever stood.

The musical part of the program was again under the supervision of Bro. James McLain, while the social activities with which (Please turn to page 5)

Archeology in Palestine

"Thy speech shall whisper out of the dust."—Isa. 29:4.

JERUSALEM, Aug. 17.—By means of the excavator's spade, ancient Palestine speaks "out of the dust" to those who "have ears to hear" of the truth of the Bible and of the faithfulness of Israel's God. The following items are reported by the Palestine Weekly Review, which Prophecy says might be termed, "The Literary Digest of Palestine."

Among other interesting discoveries recently made, the Review mentions the finding of the remains of brick houses and pottery of the period of some 3,500 years ago. These discoveries were made near Afule, Emek Jezreel, by an expedition under Dr. E. L. Sukenik of the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. The bricks of which the houses were constructed are of a rare round pattern. Some of the pottery it is thought dates back nearly 3,500 years.

Americans Protest Division of Palestine

"So I will gather you in mine anger and in my fury, and I will leave you there, and melt you."—Ezek. 22:20.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—The Palestine Royal Commission of Great Britain which investigated the conditions in the Holy Land and then recommended the partition of the country into three sections, Arab, Jewish, and British, is still being criticized severely for taking such a stand. Among the arguments advanced from Jewish sources against the proposed division, is that offered by Mr. Jabotinsky, head of the extreme New Zionists. Mr. Jabotinsky asserts that such an independent Jewish state would undoubtedly thrive economically and grow rich, and thus provoke the "pauper" Arab state to attempt a "covetous and militaristic" conquest of the country.

"Meanwhile, in America," says the Digest, "New York Senators Copeland and Wagner, Mayor LaGuardia, William Green of the American Federation of Labor, Christian clergymen, and even bishops 'call upon the British Government to fulfill its covenanted pledges to the Jewish people and to the world.'"

"From the other side of the wordy trenches, Arabs, pro-Arabs, anti-Semites, and Nazis oppose the partition as unfair to a still virile Islam. Roughly, in Palestine, there are 370,000 Jews and 850,000 Arabs."

Zionist Conference Studies Palestine Situation

"I will settle you after your old estates and will do better unto you than at your beginnings."—Ezek. 36:11.

ZURICH, Switzerland, Aug. 6.—The Zionist Congress, now in session in this city, is giving major attention to the proposal of Great Britain to split Palestine into three parts, one to be formed into an independent Jewish state, one to be given over to the Arabs, and the third, a corridor reaching from Jerusalem to the sea, to be held under mandate of Great Britain.

Opposition to the proposal of Great Britain is led by Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, president of the Zionist Organization of America. An effort is being made by the labor bloc of the Congress to induce Rabbi Wise, whose influence is strongly felt in Jewish circles throughout the world, to consider a modified form of the British proposal, but thus far apparently little progress has been made. The Rabbi still voices strong opposition to any division of the Holy Land that may be suggested.

Find Spear in Baby Mammoth

"The foolishness of God is wiser than man."—Paul.

FAIRBANKS, Alaska, Aug. 8.—A discovery recently made by Dr. Froelich G. Rainey, University of Alaska anthropologist, ten miles from Fairbanks, has thrown the scientific world into a tremor. Deeply imbedded in the frozen muck of Ester Creek was found a baby mammoth in whose shoulder was a stone spearhead undoubtedly cast by some prehistoric Alaskan hunter. According to the anthropologist this remarkable discovery casts a doubt on the conclusions of many scientists with regard to the time of the presence of the mammoth with reference to that of man. It has been generally believed that the mammoth disappeared long before the "evolutionary process" had developed the creature we know as man to the dignity of a human being as distinguished from a brute.

In the study of the geological periods it would be wise for the student always to remember the statement quoted by the editor in a recent article on "Our Scientific Bible," from Professor Lydell who stated that "in the year 1806 the French Institute enumerated no less than eighty geological theories which were hostile to the Scriptures; but not one of those theories is held today."

The Preexistence of Christ

By R. H. Judd

YOUR very kind letter came to hand, and I am now taking the earliest opportunity of replying to your inquiries regarding the scriptures you mention in relation to the subject of the preexistence of Jesus the Christ.

Under our so-called "orthodox" bringing-up we have become so accustomed to accepting ideas contrary to each other, that it takes little or no effort to think that we believe both. Bible doctrines, while beyond our finite comprehension in their fullness, are not illogical and self-contradictory in any stage of their expression, but are all through in harmony with reason and understanding. Speaking of wisdom we are told: "The Lord possessed me in the beginning of his way"; and wisdom and understanding are continually linked together, so that we may rest assured that all Bible doctrines will bear strict investigation of the most robust kind in every stage of their unfolding.

Before answering the references concerning which you desire explanation, there are one or two questions that naturally and logically present themselves, each requiring an answer.

Who was Jesus the Christ? The only logical reply is that He was the predicted Messiah—"the Christ," "the man Christ Jesus." Of Himself He said: "I that speak unto thee am he." And when He asked them, "Whom seek ye?" and they replied, "Jesus of Nazareth," He replied, "I am he." We need, then, be in no doubt as to who Jesus the Christ was.

But two other questions present themselves.

First, if He preexisted, who was He then? I have yet to meet anyone who can scripturally answer that question, and while answers vary, none of them can come under the designation of reason or understanding. Some claim that He was an angel, even identifying Him with the Angel Gabriel, while others name that same angel as the third person of the Trinity. "Unto which of the angels said he at any time, Thou art my Son?" (Heb. 1:5), completely closes the avenue, even without considering the further fact that "that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterwards that which is spiritual" (1 Cor. 15:46). If Jesus Christ preexisted He reversed that order—an unthinkable idea, for it is contrary to Scripture.

The second difficulty is equally insurmountable, viz., if Jesus the Christ preexisted His birth by Mary, the question is not, Who was He? but, What became of His previous personality while He was being "made of a woman" (Gal. 4:4)? They could not both exist at the same time, for personality and corporeality are practically synonymous ideas in Scripture. Did the previous personality die? Scripture is so emphatic that Jesus Christ died but once that any such thought is out of the question. Yet, if He preexisted as a living personality no other course is possible.

A friend of the author of this letter asked him to explain certain passages of Scripture which to some have appeared to teach that Jesus Christ existed as a personality before His birth in Bethlehem. The response made to this inquiry was so scholarly and biblical that we are publishing it here for the benefit of our readers.

When in our study of Scripture we run up against positive facts of this kind that go contrary to cherished belief, we are tempted to shut them out of our vision, thinking thereby to thus avoid the conflict, but we do not, in this way, do away with the difficulty. No, Christ came into existence by being "born," and He Himself makes the claim: "To this end was I born." The facts of His personality—His ego—and His birth are as close together, and closer, than the last two words of the scripture just quoted.

Now to answer the various scriptures for which you seek an explanation.

GENESIS 1:26. How can we take out of Genesis 1:26 what is not in it or in the surrounding context? There is no mention of Christ, then why put it there? Your difficulty here is, "Let us make man in our image." Why assume that those to whom God is speaking are part and parcel of Himself, as the trinitarian doctrine necessitates, when it is far easier and much more reasonable to believe that He was addressing others, as invariably is the case when we use the plural pronoun "us." The verse relates to the creation of man, but Scripture reveals that other beings, angels, similar in form to man, preexisted him. We have, then, a simple and logical explanation of Genesis 1:26.

JOHN 6:62. This text is commonly admitted as difficult of explanation. For a good deal of the explanation I am about to give, thanks are due to you for asking me concerning it, thus causing me to go once more direct to the Word and study it afresh. Thanks are also due to Elder James A. Patrick for a suggestive thought some years ago, that the passage has reference to resurrection.

The verse is a very clear instance illustrating the necessity of meditating on the Word, and being careful to note the language used. What is the central fact in the text? Surely it is Christ Himself. As what? As the "Son of man"—"the man Christ Jesus." Christ certainly had not been in heaven before as "the Son of man." Besides, the verse says nothing about heaven.

Looking up the Greek for the word "ascend" (anabaino), I find that Young's Concordance gives the meaning as, "to go, or come up." I have here put the emphasis on the words "come up," because I find that in most instances

By Harvey Krogh, Jr.

JESUS was a poor man. He had no great possessions of His own. He was poor by choice. The adversary offered Him all the kingdoms of the world, but He refused them not only because He would not worship the adversary but because riches would have been a burden to Him. Riches are a burden to all who possess them. Wealth is a hard taskmaster and all who desire it are slaves to it.

Jesus loved men and He warned us of the pitfalls in life, and earthly treasure is one of the deepest. "Lay not up for yourselves treasure upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal" (Matt. 6:19). He did not say, "I would rather that you not do this," but it was a solemn warning. If a man accumulates wealth on earth there is but one of two things that will be. Moth, rust, or thieves will take it from him or else he will spend so much time caring for and protecting it that he will not have time or thought for Jesus. Besides this James said that the rust of riches would burn his flesh as would fire.

Jesus did not say, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures." But He did say, "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal." Treasures in heaven remove all the worry about the things of this life. We rejoice that men cannot take from us the necessary things of life and if we should be deprived of those things for a time, God is aware of it and will not allow us to be tempted more than we are able to bear. For a Christian to lay up treasure on earth is an insult to God, who provides all of our needs.

More than that, Jesus said, "For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." The law of Moses asked of men service to God. They served Him with their lips and hands, but God said their heart was far from Him. If God does not have our hearts He has no part of us. That tell-tale treasure reveals to all where your heart is.

"The light of the body is the eye: if therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light. But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness. If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!" Jesus is showing the importance of the proper understanding of where treasure should be. The eye is small, but it does so much for the body. The understanding concerning treasures is small, but how important it is. A good eye—good light; bad eye—no light. A good understanding—eternal life; bad understanding—no life.

"No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Our God is a jealous God, He wants us wholly or not at all,

Mammon, the god of riches or demon of wealth is more jealous. If we worship mammon we are slaves to it. Let us consider the slave of mammon. He is always poor, though he may be wallowing in gold. He is wretched, though he may own a city and dwell in luxury. Men look down upon him and curse him because they want the things he has. Though he calls all those things his own yet they are not his, but he belongs to them and is a slave to them. Few men have been able to make wealth their servant, for most often it weights them down till they cannot lift a finger to help another; it enslaves them so they can serve no other master; and it even gets in their eyes so that they cannot even see anything else.

Let us consider the servant of God. He possesses all things. He can walk through the park and enjoy it as his, more than the man who claims it. He has time to enjoy every blessing of God and appreciate every one. As a son of God he shall some day inherit it and continue to enjoy it. Therefore serve God rather than mammon.

"Therefore I say unto you, Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink: nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment?" Again we are reminded of the clear-sounding words of the Savior: "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Taking care for the things of eternal life is far more important than meat or raiment.

"Behold the fowls of the air: for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns: yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they?" Every servant of God is rewarded according to how well he serves in the capacity that God intended him to serve. The birds do their part and they lack nothing. Remember that Jesus made this illustration.

"Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature? And why take ye thought for raiment? Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin: and yet I say unto you, That even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. Wherefore, if God so clothe the grass of the field, which to day is, and to morrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?" Those last five words strike deep into everyone of us. It began in the Garden of Eden. When man sinned, he was afraid of God and tried to patch things up by himself without putting any trust in his Maker. Since that time man's faith has been in everything else but it seems difficult to put faith in God. Jesus meant you and me when He said, "O ye of little faith." If we had more faith our church would grow in numbers and in service; we would all grow in grace and the knowledge of the Lord. The church seats would be used more and the church expenses would be more easily taken care of. And best of all, you and I would be happier in the service of the Master. Yes, if God so takes care of and blesses the least of His servants, the birds and the flowers, why should we not have more faith in Him?

"Therefore take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink, or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed? (for after all these things do the Gentiles seek:) for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things." If we are in Christ we are neither Jew nor Gentile, and why be like the Gentile in seeking after these things which God will provide if we are doing His will?

"But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." What comes first in a Christian's life? We know what comes first in other people's lives—everything but service to God. But in the life of a true Christian the first thing is doing service to God. That service consists of paying to His service the tithe or tenth of your income, attending church before attending other things, and having your greatest interest in God's service. Do you ever worry? Maybe you have reason to. You know we were not assured that all of our needs would be provided if we do not seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness.

"Take therefore no thought for the morrow: for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." Let us not misunderstand the word "thought" in these words of Jesus. In the days when the King James version of the Bible was translated it was said that a man died of thought and anguish. Today we would say that a man died of worry and anguish. Jesus did not mean we should not even consider the morrow, but we are not to be anxious about the future or about the things we eat, or drink, or wear. We are not to worry about those things that God has promised that we shall have. The best way to prepare for tomorrow is to serve God today. There is enough anxiety in this day without adding that which shall be tomorrow. Therefore, let us put our trust and faith in God.

This whole business of being a Christian is based upon faith in God. Men have departed so far from God and the earth is in distress. Let us return unto Him and do His will and receive His wonderful blessings.

General Conference Report

each day's labor was ended were directed by Sr. F. L. Austin. How much these two versatile workers contributed to the success of the gathering cannot be estimated. We only know that their efforts added greatly, not only to the interest but to the spiritual success of the Conference.

RESUME OF THE MINUTES

No particular advantage would result from the publication of the minutes of the meeting as a day by day record. Hence we shall endeavor to give a clear and complete resume of all that took place at the Conference which was of general interest.

Each business session was opened with song and prayer, and no one was permitted to forget that the primary purpose was spiritual and not material. Early in the Conference Credential and Auditing Committees were appointed that they might have their reports in readiness when the real business of the Conference was to be considered.

REPORT OF AUDITING COMMITTEE

In the absence of both Treasurer and Assistant Treasurer, the financial standing of the National Bible Institution was summarized by F. A. Stilson, Chairman of the Auditing Committee as follows:

An examination of the books and records of the National Bible Institution shows the following assets and liabilities, as of date of July 31, 1937:

ASSETS
Cash on hand	$ 1331.55
Notes Receivable	2438.50
Accounts Receivable	1570.86
Accrued Interest	212.45
Bonds Receivable	614.19
Real Estate Contracts	2129.98
Furniture & Fixtures (N. B. I.)	583.16
Furniture & Fixtures	1623.04
Machinery & Equipment (Print Shop)	2298.07
Real Estate (N. B. I.)	3600.00
Real Estate (Golden Rule Home)	25773.70
Merchandise Inventory	2188.90
Petters Memorial Library	83.35
Total Assets	$44447.76

LIABILITIES
Notes Payable	$ 5208.70
Accounts Payable	183.26
Accrued Interest	1925.84
Annuity Bonds	4850.00
Mortgage Payable	2500.00
Funds in Trust (Real Estate & Investments)	23457.02
Total Liabilities	$38124.88
Net Worth	$6322.88

The books show the trust fund of the Golden Rule Home to be $23,457.02, which is represented by net real estate value of $23,273.70, and the balance being held in bond investments.

At the present time the National Bible Institution has a liability of $4,850.00 in annuity bonds, on which interest is due to be paid annually to the annuitants. The principal sum of these bonds will accrue to the Institution on the decease of the annuitants; in other words, the National Bible Institution does not have to pay out the $4,850.00 at any time, but only the interest must be paid.

The total interest on the notes and other papers which the National Bible Institution must meet each year is now approximately $750.00.

The total taxes which the National Bible Institution must pay annually amounts to approximately $350.00.

The total salaries of the different departments are approximately as follows:

National Bible Institution Office	$2400.00
Print Shop	1800.00
Golden Rule Home	600.00
	—————
Total	$4800.00

In other words, the total fixed operating cost of the National Bible Institution is approximately $5,900.00 per year.

The general contributions to the National Bible Institution for the past year amounted to $2,491.65 and were dispersed to meet the expenses of the Institution and the Golden Rule Home.

The contributions to the Special Indebtedness Fund totaled $1,024.05 and were disbursed as follows:

Interest on the notes	$252.01
Principal paid (Ida Vogel)	100.00
Total paid out	$352.01

which leaves a balance of $672.04 in the Indebtedness Fund, which is now in bank ready to be applied as intended, that is, to be used only for the payment of the notes given by the National Bible Institution and representing loans made by different individuals to the National Bible Institution.

The total of the General and Special Indebtedness Fund contributions made during the last year totaled $3,515.70. (Disbursements shown above.)

The Auditing Committee submit the above report as an analysis of the records as presented by the books of the Institution. We also find that the methods employed in keeping records will admit of considerable improvement and recommend that same be done upon advice of competent authority.

(Signed) Floyd A. Stilson,
C. Lacey Compton,
Auditing Committee.

Submitted on August 5, 1937.

Upon motion of F. A. Stilson, seconded by G. E. Marsh, the report of the Auditing Committee was received and placed on file.

Owing to the unavoidable absence of both the Treasurer and the Assistant Treasurer, some difficulty was encountered in securing exact information concerning the indebtedness of the Institution during the actual conference sessions. Upon the arrival of the Treasurer, however, he stated that he had had the books covering our indebtedness examined by a competent bookkeeper who declared that records agreed "to a cent" with the report made by the Assistant Treasurer and bookkeeper. The total indebtedness of the National Bible Institution has been cut down since last Conference from over seven thousand dollars, which was the amount reported last year, to a little over five thousand dollars. The amount paid on indebtedness involves the payment of current bills which were standing against the Institution a year ago and the payment of interest and principal on notes as reported by the Auditing Committee.

In consideration of the fact that the indebtedness of the Institution had not been met in full, it was decided that the Special Indebtedness Fund, including the Moral Obligation Offerings to be taken one Sunday in each month, should be continued.

It was moved by M. W. Lyon, seconded by G. E. Marsh, that an effort be made to induce one hundred brethren each to give $25.00 to apply on the payment of this indebtedness, at the same time urging all others to continue to contribute as generously as possible for the same purpose. The motion was carried.

The President called attention to the fact that but about half a dozen churches were observing "Moral Obligation Sunday" and sending their monthly offerings to the Treasurer to be applied on the indebtedness. He further stated that the most expensive department under the control of the National Bible Institution was Golden Rule Home and that most of the property listed under assets of the Institution was really held in trust for the Home and its members. Income from the Home properties is not sufficient at the present time to meet the necessary expenses connected with its maintenance, and the deficit must be provided by the National Bible Institution.

GOLDEN RULE HOME

The President asked for the advice of the brotherhood with regard to the suggestion which is frequently made that the Home should be entirely separated from the National Bible Institution and incorporated as a separate enterprise.

At the same time he pointed out very clearly both the advantages and the disadvantages that would result from such a change.

In all the discussion concerning Golden Rule Home it was made apparent that the Home is now more strongly secured financially than ever in its history. The chief problem at the present time is the difficulty of disposing of some of its property to advantage so that the funds secured from such sale could be invested in income-bearing securities to provide means for the support of the Home.

On request of the President, Sr. Lewis Romine gave a very clear and comprehensive statement covering the history of Golden Rule Home, the number who had taken advantage of its security and protection, and also the number of those who spent their final hours under its hospitable roof. The President was asked by the speaker to suggest the improvements which he felt should be made about the Home in case its residents could be increased sufficiently in number to justify the expenditure such changes would entail.

The many comforts, the absolute security from economic worry, the care in sickness, the association with others of one's own faith—all such advantages are provided for the lifetime of those who enter the doors of Golden Rule Home as regular members of the family.

An appeal to the brethren everywhere was made to encourage them to seek for those who might be induced to take advantage of the comforts offered in the Home.

A motion was made by Leila E. Whitehead, seconded by M. W. Lyon, that a notice concerning Golden Rule Home should appear in THE RESTITUTION HERALD at least once each month and an advertisement be published in each issue of the Truth Seekers' Quarterly, setting forth the advantages which the Home has to offer those who stand in need of such security in old age. The motion was carried.

To further advance interest in the Home, it was moved by Leila E. Whitehead and seconded by G. E. Marsh, that the Home be advertised soon in newspapers of neighboring cities and towns. This motion was also carried.

A motion was introduced by Harvey Krogh, Jr., supported by Cecil Smead, that "This conference instruct its secretary to send to the pastor, or if there is no pastor, to the elders of each church of this denomination, a circular letter setting forth briefly the system of operation, the requirements for, and the benefits of being a member of Golden Rule Home; this to be passed on to their congregations and any other persons who may be interested. The Secretary shall place this letter in the mails within sixty days after the passing of this resolution. Carried.

A special committee was appointed by the President to inspect and appraise the value of the various properties which are held in trust by the National Bible Institution for Golden Rule Home. The committee had been instructed to be exceeding conservative in reaching their decisions, yet after careful consideration of all matters that contribute to the value of real estate, they reported that it was their judgment that the Home properties were, at the lowest estimate, worth $25,000.00.

It was suggested by Bro. John Eagleston of California that while the material comforts and advantages provided by Golden Rule Home, together with its financial needs, had been clearly set forth to considerable length, the spiritual atmosphere which was maintained in the Home had not been emphasized. He felt that the matter of devotion and of worship should be stressed more than the material benefits, as many of our elderly people would be more interested in being assured of the opportunity of enjoying the fellowship of believers than they would in the material advantages provided by the Home.

Bro. L. E. Conner reviewed the history of the selection of a location for the Home and gave an interesting and instructive analysis of the reasons which led to the choice of Oregon, Ill., as the place best suited to the needs of the Home and the printing plant.

MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION BOARD OF EVANGELISM

Bro. M. W. Lyon, President of the Ministerial Association, gave an interesting, though brief, report of the efforts made during the past year to carry on evangelistic or missionary work. He stated that for the most of the year little had been done. This failure to accomplish what the Board had intended was due in part to a lack of funds. Inability to find places where such work was desired by our people was a further hindrance, as was also a shortage of workers available for such service.

The speaker stated that a total of $266.90 had been contributed for evangelistic work, and that $176.60 had been expended, leaving a balance in the treasury of the Board of $92.30. He spoke of the value of the trip undertaken by Bro. C. E. Randall under the auspices of the Board and expressed the hope that such an effort to arouse the evangelistic zeal of our people throughout the country may become a permanent part of our program. Bro. Lyon then called upon Bro. Randall to tell the Conference of the interest shown by the brethren in missionary work in the various places he visited.

Bro. Randall responded with a brief, but illuminating, report of his recent tour through the northern and western parts of the United States. He declared that almost everywhere he went he found our people "anxious for mission work," and reports from the places visited which have been received since his return, indicate that the churches were greatly stimulated and encouraged by the work done and were more determined than ever to press the evangelistic effort more earnestly in their home localities.

"The only way in which we can become a mission people is to start out," Bro. Randall asserted. "If we are going to do anything along this line we must not wait for the work to come to us—we must be 'go-getters' and discover for ourselves where missionary work can be done to the best advantage."

About seventy-five hundred miles were covered in the trip taken on behalf of the Evangelistic Board, and addresses were given and meetings held in Ontario, Michigan, Illinois, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Oregon, Washington, and California. In all, 21 meetings were held by Bro. Randall while he was away, endeavoring—successfully endeavoring—to get our people "mission-minded," which was the real purpose for the journey.

Discussion followed Bro. Randall's address in which suggestions were made regarding methods of work. Among the more practical suggestions was that of Bro. J. A. Patrick, who said that he believed that much good would come from sending a zealous worker into isolated localities and keeping him there until our local brethren at such places could so strengthen their organization as to make it self-supporting.

At the conclusion of the report it was moved by John Eagleston of California and seconded by Leila Whitehead of Illinois, that this Conference should go on record as encouraging the Board of Evangelism to do all it can to spread the good news of the kingdom of God on every occasion. The motion was carried.

Out of the Dust

THE newspapers of the world carried the story last spring of the discovery of some bits of pottery in Palestine. At the time, it was said that the writing found on the sherds confounded the "higher criticism" and proved the truth of the Bible. No details were given. A few weeks later, in Jerusalem, we were fortunate in hearing Mr. J. L. Starkey, the discoverer of the now famous articles, present the final results of his findings.

A few months later, in London, we went to the beautiful museum of the Wellcome Archeological Research Foundation to a further lecture on this same subject by the discoverer. Afterwards we had the privilege of being taken into the exhibition rooms where the famous sherds were on exhibition among other articles, spending some time with this distinguished archeologist and receiving answers to all of the questions where knowledge is now available.

We can state without hesitation that the finds of Lachish are probably the most important since the recovery of masses of biblical papyri in Egypt.

Twenty-five miles southwest of Jerusalem lies a great mound of earth. For hundreds of years its summit, six hundred feet above the level of the sea, has been a landmark in the surrounding country, standing as it does on an almost isolated ridge and commanding an extensive view of the coastal plain. Nearby is the modern village of Bubeibeh. The modern Arabic name of the mound is Tel ad-Duwair, but its ancient name was Lachish.

We first come upon it in the book of Joshua. When the children of Israel entered the land, they conquered Jericho and then little by little many other cities of the land. The inhabitants of Gibeon, by ruse, made peace with Joshua and this drew forth the wrath of the king of Jerusalem, Adoni-zedec, as recorded in the 10th chapter of Joshua. This leader approached the kings of some neighboring towns, among them Lachish, and called them into a league against Joshua, an alliance which was destroyed at the famous battle in which the Lord made the sun to stand still while His people defeated the enemy. Following this battle, Joshua's army went up against Lachish and encamped against it. "And the Lord delivered Lachish into the hand of Israel, which took it on the second day, and smote it with the edge of the sword, and all the souls that were therein" (Josh. 10:32).

The town was later rebuilt and had a varied history through Old Testament times, as would be expected from a frontier fort of Judah which dominated such places as Ashdod, Askalon, and Gath. In the later periods of Jewish history, the armies of enemy powers were constantly in the land, and ultimately the city was destroyed. The poet has rendered one of these movements famous with the celebrated lines:

"The Assyrian came down like the wolf on the fold,
And his cohorts were gleaming in purple and gold."

The hosts of Nineveh overran Palestine and when the tide had receded, Lachish had been left in ruins. The walls of the palace of Sennacherib in far-away Nineveh were decorated with scenes in bas-relief illustrating vividly the victories of the royal leader.

Today these great sculptures are in the British Museum. How vividly they illustrate the words of Ezekiel who tells us how the Lord's people "doted upon the Assyrians her neighbours, captains and rulers clothed most gorgeously, horsemen riding upon horses, all of them desirable young men . . . pourtrayed upon the wall, the images of the Chaldeans pourtrayed with vermillion, girded with girdles upon their loins, exceeding in dyed attire upon their heads, all of them princes to look to" (Ezek. 23:12-15).

Such indeed are the men in the mightiest of all these stone pictures which depicts the assault and capture of Lachish by Sennacherib in 701 B. C. There we have undoubtedly a contemporary picture of the city with the Ninevite king seated upon a throne set up in the countryside in the midst of vines and fig trees. He is surrounded by officers who report the details of the battle, and behind him are prisoners of other defeated peoples standing and kneeling. Just in front of the king is an inscription in cuneiform letters which reads as follows: "Sennacherib, king of hosts, king of Assyria, sat upon his throne of state, and the spoil of the city of Lachish passed before him." That all this is historically true is confirmed by the Bible, for there we read, "After this did Sennacherib king of Assyria send his servants to Jerusalem, (but he himself laid siege against Lachish, and all his power with him,) unto Hezekiah king of Judah, and unto all Judah" (2 Chron. 32:9). In another passage we read, "And Hezekiah king of Judah sent to the king of Assyria to Lachish, saying, I have offended; return from me: that which thou puttest on me will I bear. And the king of Assyria appointed unto Hezekiah king of Judah three hundred talents of silver and thirty talents of gold" (2 Kings 18:14). There were fitful attempts made from time to time to restore the city, but when Nebuchadnezzar destroyed the kingdom of Judah and carried the people into captivity, Lachish was one of the cities taken (Jer. 34:7). One more feeble effort was made to occupy the site after the exile (Neh. 11:30), but in history it is never heard of again. Indeed all authorities point to quite another mound at Tell el-Hesi as the supposed site.

The city was left in one vast ruin which the centuries rounded into a great mound of earth some two hundred acres in extent and some two hundred feet high. Not a vestige of the dwelling place remained, and the winds of almost three thousand years smoothed its surface until only the eye of an archeologist could tell that underneath lay some ancient ruin.

To this desolate site the Wellcome Archeological Research Expedition to the Near East, under the auspices of Sir Henry Wellcome, Sir Charles Marston, and Sir Robert Mond, directed its attention three years ago. Patiently the vast quantities of earth were removed and in accordance with modern archeological method this was done practically handful by handful. Mr. J. L. Starkey was the actual director of the work, and to him goes the credit for the great contributions to biblical knowledge that are now available.

He says: "From the mass of material recovered from the ruins, it is certain that the original foundation goes back to a date toward the end of Egyptian occupation of the site—that is to say, soon after 1403 B. C., only just before the city revolted against her domination under Akhenaten's weak rule, a story that is vividly told in the Tell el-Amarna correspondence. The examination of several tombs of this period at Lachish bears witness to the prosperity of the site, then controlled by the petty princes paying tribute to Egypt. The high percentage of foreign wares tells of an intensive trade with the North, via routes which remained open until the closing of the frontier at the conclusion of the treaty between Rameses II and the northern confederacy.

"The succeeding Jewish occupation saw the mound re-fortified by a double stone wall; the inner wall encloses about twenty-two acres, and formed the main bulwark of military defense for the western frontier of Judah. So far, the expedition has examined but few of the extensive remains of this interesting epoch with its biblical contact. On the floor of a rock-cut tomb chamber which had survived un plundered lay a large iron fork or flesh hook with three prongs. Amongst the small objects from the same tomb were two bone seals, scarabs, and a bone plaque pierced with thirty holes arranged in three lines of ten. It is thought that these objects are calendars to mark off the thirty days of a lunar month.

"The levels of the later Jewish city bear eloquent witness to the tragedy of its complete destruction. The intensity of the great fires kindled below the walls during the Babylonian siege which preceded the first exile reduced the city to ruins. This state of desolation continued until the Persian rebuilding after the return from the captivity during the reign of Cyrus. During this final flicker of prosperity, the governor's residence was built directly over the ruins of the old Jewish palace-fort. The residency has been cleared and planned by the Expedition together with a solar shrine near it to the east.

"During the clearance of the Persian remains of the outer gateway, the earlier Jewish guard room was discovered; fifteen potsherds were recovered from the burnt debris above the floor, inscribed in ink with early Hebrew characters."

Not only did these writings on old bits of pottery identify the mound with Lachish of the Old Testament, but the content of these letters which had been written to the captain of the guard, one Ya'ush, gives us the precise date of the correspondence by a reference to the Jewish commander-in-chief, Achbor ben Elnatan and Nedebyahu, grandson of the king. Both these personages are referred to in the book of Jeremiah as officials under the king Jehoiakim.

WELCOME, THOU KING

Welcome, Thou sovereign King of grace,
We long, we long to see Thy face;
Our hearts are weary of delay,
When, when shall come the promised day?
Come, make the cloud that bore Thee hence
Thy chariot back for our defense;
We own Thy sovereign right to reign:
Come back, come back to earth again.

Rulers and people call Thy name,
But seek instead for earthly fame;
And justice holds uneven hand;
Thy glory fills not all the land.
Thy throne, long vacant here below,
Needs Thee, as do Thy people, too;
Return, Thy right and rule maintain:
Come back, come back to earth again.

Thy heralds now in every land
Proclaim Thy kingdom near at hand;
Thy bride has long her vigil kept,
In weariness Thine absence wept.
How long, how long must she still wait
Thy coming at the eastern gate?
She still her would-be lovers spurn,
And waits in hope for Thy return?

Delay not more, we longing cry,
Come back, and let us see Thee nigh;
Come and restore our dead who sleep,
Come, dry the tears of those who weep.
Answer our prayer, "Thy kingdom come,
Thy will on earth again be done":
Thy bride still gives her heart's refrain—
Come back, come back to earth again.

GENERAL CONFERENCE REPORT

THE RESTITUTION HERALD

The editor of THE RESTITUTION HERALD presented a summarized report of the present subscribers to the paper. Of the more than eleven hundred papers issued weekly, some 950 are paid in advance, and less than 10 per cent are delinquent. Of the latter group but 17 subscribers, and they people who have taken the paper many years, are now receiving it as delinquents of one year or more.

At this point letters were read at the request of the President indicating the high regard in which THE RESTITUTION HERALD was now held by many both within and without the Church of God.

TRAINING CLASS COMMITTEE REPORT

The Committee which was appointed last year to plan for the reopening of the Training Class reported as follows:

Having put forth a diligent effort to acquaint the Church of God throughout the country with the conditions under which a training class could be established, and having requested that all who were interested in such a class from the standpoint of preparation for religious service should signify their desire to attend under the conditions specified, the Committee, through its chairman, Miss Leila Whitehead, regretted to report that but one application had been made for entrance and that no other inquiries had been received. Therefore it was impossible at this time to attempt the revival of the class.

Various suggestions were introduced and discussed at length with the purpose in view of providing some means whereby young people might be prepared for the ministry under Church of God leadership. M. W. Lyon of Ohio called attention to the loss which the church has sustained during recent years in the death or removal from the ministry of several workers of ability and that consequently some means should be immediately provided to replace them.

It was moved by C. E. Randall, seconded by G. E. Marsh, that it is the sense of this Conference that a committee consisting of the presidents of the General Conference, the Ministerial Association, and the National Berean Society, together with the chairman of the Board of Evangelism, be chosen to provide, so far as financial support is available, for the training of young people of our denomination who desire special preparation for public Christian service. The motion was carried.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS

Election of officers for the General Conference was held on Friday, August 6, in order that the new Executive Board might organize and plan its work for the new year, if possible, while Conference was still in session.

The Credentials Committee having passed on the credentials of the delegates present, reported to each delegation the number of votes to which it was entitled, after which election proceeded as follows:

As provided for in the Constitution, nominations were permitted to be made from the floor.

Nominations for President being called for, T. A. Drinkard of Texas placed the name of L. E. Conner before the Conference. No other nominations being forthcoming, it was moved by Mrs. Lewis Romine of Illinois, seconded by John Eagleston of California, that nominations be closed and that the Secretary be instructed to cast the unanimous ballot of the Conference for L. E. Conner for President. The motion was carried unanimously, and Bro. Conner was declared elected to succeed himself as President of the General Conference and by virtue of that office, President of the National Bible Institution.

Nominations for First Vice President resulted in the following being named as candidates for that office: Leland T. Hanson and Paul C. Johnson. The electing ballot gave Bro.

Hanson 1307.6 votes and Bro. Johnson 476.9 votes. L. T. Hanson having received a majority of all the votes cast was declared elected to succeed himself as First Vice President.

Nominations for Second Vice President placed the names of J. H. Williams, Earle Mogle, C. E. Randall, and Glenn Birkey in nomination. J. H. Williams, Second Vice President for the past six years, refused to permit his name to be considered and it was withdrawn. Thereafter it was moved by B. H. Carpenter, seconded by J. A. Patrick, that the nominations be closed. Carried.

Proceeding with the election, the following resulted: Earle Mogle received 973 7-20; C. E. Randall, 393 2-5; Glenn Birkey, 208. Earle Mogle, having received the majority of all the votes cast, was declared elected Second Vice President.

Nominations were declared in order for Secretary. T. A. Drinkard of Texas placed the name of G. E. Marsh, the present incumbent, in nomination. No other nominations being forthcoming, John Eagleston of California, seconded they have reference to that sense rather than "ascend" in the sense and in the connection so commonly supposed. The following instances of its use (and there are not many) remarkably confirm this thought of resurrection. In Matthew 17:27 it is used of fish coming up out of the water. In Mark 1:10, Acts 8:39, and Revelation 13:1 it is used with the same idea of coming up out of where they were before. In the last mentioned passage the Revised Version has actually substituted the words "coming up" in place of "rise up." In Revelation 13:11 the word is used for "coming up out of the earth." It is, therefore, a reasonable conclusion that "come up" (from), instead of "ascend" (to) is the thought intended. I think I am correct in saying that the preposition is not in the Greek, therefore, "to" or "from" could be used as the instance required. The next verse seems to confirm the thought of resurrection, for the subject of it is life and death, and not existence in heaven.

JOHN 8:58. "Before Abraham was, I am" are doubtless the words concerning which you desire information. One would think that the wording of the phrase would cause one to meditate, for if anyone wished to plainly state his preexistence he would not say, "I am," but "I was." Here again the "I" referred to is "the man Christ Jesus." And who is there that will allow that He preexisted? The Pharisees and Sadducees thought to catch Him in His speech. They failed. But Christ used their own weapons with marked success, but never once, so far as I remember, did He seek the same method with His disciples.

Dr. Young renders the passage: "Before Abraham's coming I am he." Who? The promised Messiah. This is confirmed by referring to verses 24 and 28 of the same chapter where the language used would be meaningless without the "he" being supplied in italics. All Scripture spoke of Him—"except ye believe that I am he (the promised Messiah), ye shall die in your sins." In John 4:26 (Christ said in answer to the woman's remarks concerning the Messiah: "I that speak unto thee am he," viz., the Messiah). (See editorial note at the close of this article.) To assert here, as did a writer in a popular religious paper recently, that Christ claimed to be the "I AM" of the Old Testament is false testimony which anyone who will honestly read the narrative can verify. The same phrase occurs some fifteen times in the Gospel of John. It occurs in John 9:9, where the "he," as in other places, is supplied in italics. It would be worse than foolish to suppose that the blind man claimed to be "I AM." See John 18:5, 6, 8; Acts 13:25; Mark 6:50. So far from these words proclaiming that Christ claimed to be the "I AM" it is worthy of note that in the very same chapter (John 8), in the margin of verse 28, the italics are actually reversed, and "am" is rendered in italics. If Christ is the one sent of God, how can He possibly be the "I AM"?

MICAH 5:8. You will find this fully discussed in the last chapter of my book, Jesus Christ in the Old Testament, (National Bible Institution, Oregon, Illinois: 40 cents) Some have said that that last chapter alone is worth the price of the book. It is not easy to state such a matter briefly, but following are some points to be considered:

The Hebrew word for "goings forth" is in Young's Concordance given the meaning of "out-goings"—the place of out-goings. This is remarkably confirmed by reference to 1 Chronicles 5:16, where "goings forth" is in the margin and given as the Hebrew equivalent for the word "borders" in the text. As the whole passage is addressed to Bethlehem, it is the borders, or "out-goings," of Bethlehem that are referred to.

As to the expression "from of old, from everlasting," several points are worth noting here. The Revised Version makes two significant alterations. Instead of "have been" it reads "are," and gives as a marginal reading "from ancient days" instead of "from everlasting." A similar expression occurs in chapter 7:20 of this same book of Micah, where the same Hebrew words are rendered "from the days of old," thus bringing the scope of both of these passages within the period of time and human history, thus practically shutting out any thought of eternity. The passage might well be rendered: "But thou, Bethlehem Ephratah, whose borders (goings-forth or out-goings) are from of old, from ancient days, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall come forth to me he that is to be ruler in Israel."

In all the versions it is clear that the ruler was to come forth out of Bethlehem to God, not from God to Bethlehem.

Some endeavor to make much of the word "sent"—"whom the Father hath sent." But Jesus the Christ was not the only one "sent" from God. See John 1:6, where we read: "There was a man sent from God, whose name was John."

As to Jesus the Christ being "the beginning of the creation of God, even if the reference there is to the "beginning" of Genesis 1:1, it seems strange how the same persons will strive to prove from Micah 5:2 the eternity of Jesus the Messiah, and yet almost in the same breath speak of His beginning! Surely it is that He being the first fruits of resurrection from the dead to die no more, is the beginning of the new creation. You will find it quite interesting to study the various "beginnings" of Scripture.

2 CORINTHIANS 8:9. This is the only reference not yet considered, I think. "That, though he was rich." Was He not rich because of His lineal kingly descent, and because He was not only "son of David" but also "Son of God"? Had it not been for our sakes He could have claimed all the blessings or righteousness, for death had no claim on one who had no sin, and the change from mortality to immortality would have been His by right. It was for our sakes that He had no place where to lay His head, that He suffered, and suffered death that we through His poverty might become rich.

EDITOR'S NOTE. In additional support of Bro. Judd's argument dealing with John 8:58 and the words, "Before Abraham was, I am," it is of interest to note the following remarks from Dr. Andrews Norton of Cambridge.

Dr. Norton translates the phrase, "Before Abraham was born, I was He." He then comments on the passage in this way: "The rendering of the Common Version, 'Before Abraham was, I am,' is without meaning—the present tense, 'I am,' being connected with the mention of past time, 'before Abraham was'; and this circumstance has doubtless assisted in producing the belief that the words express a mystery. But our Savior says, that Abraham saw His day, that is, the times of the Messiah. This declaration no one understands verbally, and there is as little reason for giving a verbal meaning to that under consideration. In the explanation of it two things are to be attended to.

"In the first place, after the words, ego eimi, rendered in the Common Version, 'I am,' we must understand ho Christos, 'the Messiah'; as is evident from two preceding passages in the same discourse. In verse 24, Jesus says, with the same ellipsis, 'Unless you believe that I am (that is, that I am the Messiah), you will die in your sins'; and in verse 28 He tells the Jews, 'When you have raised on high (crucified) the Son of man, then you will know that I am,' meaning, that I am the Messiah. The same ellipsis occurs repeatedly in the Gospels and Acts, as, for instance, in Mark 13:6 and Luke 21:8 we find the words, 'Many will come in my name, saying, I am'; while in Matthew 24:6 the ellipsis is supplied, 'Many will come in my name, saying, I am the Messiah.' Other examples are referred to below. . . .

"The full meaning of Jesus, then, was this: Before Abraham was born, I was the Messiah; that is, I was designated by God as the Messiah; that is, I was understood verbally, because 'the Messiah' was the title of one bearing an office which did not exist till it was assumed by Jesus on earth. Before Abraham, there was no Messiah except in the purpose of God."

The Bible

Of this wonderful Word of God, Evangelist William A. Sunday wrote: "Twenty-nine years ago, with the Holy Spirit as my guide, I entered at the portico of Genesis, walked down the corridor of the Old Testament art galleries, where pictures of Noah, Abraham, Joseph, Moses, Isaac, Jacob, and Daniel hang on the wall. I passed into the music room of the Psalms, where the Spirit sweeps the keyboard of nature until it seems that every reed and pipe in God's great organ responds to the harp of David the sweet singer of Israel.

"I entered the chamber of Ecclesiastes, where the voice of the preacher is heard, and into the conservatory of Sharon and the Lily of the Valley, where sweet spices filled and perfumed my life.

"I entered the business office of Proverbs and on into the observatory of the prophets, where I saw telescopes of various sizes pointing to far-off events, concentrating on the bright and morning Star which was to rise above the moonlit hills of Judea for our salvation and redemption.

"I entered the audience room of the King of kings, catching a vision written by Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John. Thence into the correspondence room with Paul, Peter, James, and John, writing their epistles. I stepped into the throne room of Revelation, where tower the glistening peaks, where sits the King of kings upon His throne of glory with the healing of the nations in His hand, and I cried out:

"All hail the power of Jesus' name,
Let angels prostrate fall;
Bring forth the royal diadem
And crown Him Lord of all."

Faith Plus Works

By Norman Fyfe, Lockwood, Missouri

Before Christ came we were under the law that God gave to Moses. The law was given because of transgression. But the law was perfect, so strict, that none of the people could live up to it. Christ was perfect, He fulfilled the law. All others failed. Romans 3:20 tells us, "By the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight: for by the law is the knowledge of sin."

Is the law then against the promises of God? God forbid: for if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law. But the scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe. But before faith came, we were kept under the law, shut up unto the faith which should afterwards be revealed. Wherefore the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith" (Gal. 3:21-24).

God has His plan of salvation by which man may be saved if he only will obey and be faithful.

"But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves. For if any be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass: for he beholdeth himself, and goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was" (James 1:22-24). "Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone. Yea, a man may say, Thou hast faith, and I have works: shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works" (James 2:17, 18). Without faith it is impossible to please God: there is only "one Lord, one faith, one baptism."

If we have faith, and works enough to enforce it, we are sure to accept Christ by baptism. After this there is but one thing we can do: "Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage. . . . And let us not be weary in well doing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not" (Gal. 5:1; 6:9).

Let Us Take Time

—for the good-by kiss. We shall go to the day's work with a sweeter spirit for it.

—to speak sweet foolish words to those we love. Bye and bye, when they can no longer hear us, our foolishness will seem more wise than our best wisdom.

—to be pleasant. The small courtesies, which we often omit, because they are small, will some day look larger to us than wealth which we covet, or the fame for which we struggled and sacrificed.

—to get acquainted with Christ. The hour is coming swiftly, for us all, when one touch of His hand in the darkness will mean more than all that is written in the day-book and ledger, or in the records of our little social world.

—for the evening prayers. Our sleep will be more restful if we have claimed the guardianship of God.

—to read the Bible. Its treasure will last when we have ceased to care for the war of political parties, the fall of stocks, or the petty happenings of the day.

—to get acquainted with our families. The wealth you are accumulating, burdened father, busy mother, can never make a home to the daughter whom you have no time to caress, or chum with.

Since we must all take time to die, why should we not take time to live, to live in the larger sense of a life begun here for eternity?—Selected.

THE CHILDREN'S PAGE

PREPARED BY MARY A. GESIN

AT ILLINOIS BIBLE SCHOOL

ALL of you girls and boys who could not be present at the Bible School at Oregon, Illinois, I'm sure would like to hear something about the classes and the good times they had learning Bible stories, Bible verses, and Bible songs. I would like to have met all of you who read this page, especially those of you who are too far away to attend any Sunday school except the one you have in your own home. It is fine to have one of your own, but there is inspiration in numbers, you know.

The little tots' class at Oregon was taught by Mrs. Ruby Railton, and there were 17 on the roll, with an average of 10 present each day. These were girls and boys who have not yet been to school. They had a very cheery song called "The B-I-B-L-E," and their slogan was, "I will keep my heart pure for Jesus."

Their teacher told them stories of the boys and girls of the Bible and how they helped God in His work. Then each one tried to think of ways in which boys and girls can help Jesus today. They colored pictures, and the day I visited their class they were making a little Bible and pasting verses in it.

The class next in age, 7 and 8 years, was taught by Mrs. Mary Krogh, and there were 27 boys and girls enrolled, with about 15 present each day. For memory work they learned Psalm 100. How many of you know it?

In this class they learned many interesting stories from both the Old and the New Testament. They could tell you all about Noah's ark, the tower of Babel, Abraham's altar, Moses and the burning bush, David the shepherd boy, Jesus calling His helpers, Jesus healing the sick child, Jesus blessing the children, and oh, ever so many more stories. Each one had a picture of Jesus the Good Shepherd, and every time a boy or girl was present he received a picture of a lamb to paste on his picture.

These boys and girls made books to show the lessons they had learned, and on the front cover they pasted a picture of the Oregon church. Bro. Harvey Krogh had made a small reflectoscope, and one day they enjoyed seeing pictures of some of the stories they learned.

The class next in age, 9 to 11, was taught by Miss Lucille LeCrone, and they had about 22 present each day, with 38 on their attendance roll. You see, many of our Oregon Sunday school pupils come to Bible School every day, as well as those who come with their parents from a distance.

This class learned some of the ways that Jesus helps us every day. He is called our Master, and we obey Him. He is our Savior, the one who saves us from sin and death. He is the perfect Lamb, and the story of the Passover was studied to illustrate that. He is the Resurrection, and the story of Lazarus showed Him to be that for him and for us also.

Many other ways in which Jesus helps us were learned by these boys and girls. And the day I visited this class they gave an excellent review of several days' lessons. All in all it was a very interesting class.

The class of ages 12 to high school was taught by Harvey Krogh, and their roll numbered 34, with about 20 present each day. This class, being composed of older pupils, was able to take harder work. They each had a copy of the book of Mark, as translated by Moffatt, which puts the words into everyday language.

For example, can you tell what this verse is: "Let the children come to me, do not stop them: the Realm of God belongs to such as these. I tell you truly, whoever will not submit to the Reign of God like a child will never get into it at all."

They made a list on the blackboard each day of the most important things in the chapter and then copied the list in their notebooks. There were several very bright scholars in this class. You know, you get just as much out of a thing as you put into it. And those who were thinking every moment got the most out of the lessons.

One evening during Conference all the younger classes gave a program which was very much enjoyed by the church full of people who were present. There was music as well as recitation, and it showed the good work that had been done during Bible School. Everybody was interested in this program, and I'm sure that the teachers felt well repaid for the efforts they had put on their classes.

And now, do you not all who were not present this year wish that you could have been? Start right now planning to come next year with your parents. You will get acquainted with boys and girls from other states, and you will learn many things from the Bible which you have not learned before. It will help make you a good worker for Jesus.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

WE GIVE THANKS

We give thanks to our heavenly Father and to His Son for sparing our lives through fifty years of joy and happiness. Our lives and the lives of our children and grandchildren have been spared and they have proved so far to be the crown of our old age. As they have come to mature years, they have of their own accord obeyed the gospel, so that today we stand as a unit for the gospel of Christ.

As we look back over the fifty years we find that our sicknesses have served to show us how many and how good friends we have. As we contemplate all these blessings our hearts go out to God and His Son in thanksgiving and praise for what He has done for us. At best we have been poor servants, yet His mercy and goodness have been measured to us far above that which we merit.

So that we might have our children and grandchildren together to celebrate the event, we held the get-together on Sunday, August 15, although the actual date of our marriage is August 17. Many friends called on Sunday to congratulate and in the evening after Bro. Conner's discourse, he called us to the front part of the church where, after an appropriate address, he placed in our hands a token of the love and good wishes of the body of believers who had been in attendance upon the Bible School and Conference for two weeks. Our hearts welled up with a feeling that cannot be bought with money, and we wish to express to them all our deeply felt appreciation for their love and consideration on this happy occasion. May the God of heaven bless you all in the same measure with which He has blessed us.

Brother and Sister S. J. Lindsay.

SOMETHING TO REMEMBER

Among the expenses incurred in operating our Golden Rule Home and Herald print shop, is the item of fuel. Part of the winter's supply has just been put in the bins at a cost of $184.18. Will you remember this when you make your next remittance?

REGISTRATIONS AND BAPTISMS

The Illinois Bible School and Conference and General Conference register showed a total of 437, with 16 states and Canada represented, as follows: Illinois, 265; Ohio, 30; Michigan, 28; Minnesota, 22; Indiana, 20; Iowa, 18; Wisconsin, 12; Missouri, 10; Virginia, 9; Nebraska, 9; Arizona, 3; Washington, 3; Ontario, Can., 3; California, 2; Louisiana, 1; Texas, 1; Oklahoma, 1.

There were twelve baptisms during the meeting: Miss Ina Ruth Graham, 2616A Hodiadmont, St. Louis, Mo.; Miss Betty Lou Bechler, Hillsboro, Mo.; Miss Norma Paisley, Rushville, Ill.; Miss Jo Ann Romine, Miss Gladys Reed, Miss Hazel Reed, Miss Leota Gruber, and Lawrence Nedrow, Oregon, Ill.; Miss Jo Ann Kasper, 1807 Ridge Ave., and Miss Mary Catharine Railton, 1110 Rockton Ave., Rockford, Ill.; Oakley Krogh, Blair, Neb.; Timothy Pearson, Frederick, Ohio. These are all young people of teen age, and we pray the Father's blessing and guidance for them that they may be of much service in His vineyard.

HILLISBURG, INDIANA, ANNUAL HOMECOMING

The annual homecoming of the Hillisburg Church of God will be held on Sunday, September 19. Special services conducted by Bro. J. H. Anderson, assisted by Bro. W. H. Brown of Lafayette, former pastor of the Cleveland Church of God, will begin on Tuesday evening prior to the homecoming.

A cordial invitation is extended to all.

Mrs. Vernon Plummer, Secretary.

Mrs. H. H. Kent, whose interesting articles appear in our columns from time to time, writes with regard to present world conditions as follows: "We think the present outlook is indeed serious. Lawlessness and violence are becoming world wide. It reminds one of the passage of Scripture that says that in the days of Noah 'violence filled the earth.' May God richly bless the work of The Restitution Herald."

INDIANA BIBLE SCHOOL AND CONFERENCE REPORT

The 1937 Indiana Bible School and Conference convened on Wednesday, June 16, and closed on Sunday, June 27. A total of 97 were registered for classes for either all or a portion of the Bible School.

Classes were organized with Bros. Anderson, Marsh, and Stilson in charge of the adults and young people; Bros. James W. McLain and Floyd Stilson, juniors; Srs. Doris Rouch and Doris Naylor, primary; and Sr. Lulu Stilson, beginners.

Church services which were conducted each night as well as Sunday morning and afternoon were in charge of Bros. Anderson, Marsh, and McLain. However, due to the poor health of Bro. Anderson, a great number of the sermons were given by Bro. Marsh. On Sunday afternoon, June 27, Communion service was held with Bro. Stilson and Bro. Marsh in charge.

The business meeting was called at 2:00 p. m., Saturday, June 26, by Bro. Floyd Stilson, president. It was decided that Bro. Anderson be retained by the Indiana church and the Bible School for the coming year.

A committee of three with the President of the Conference board as chairman, was appointed to make arrangements to carry on evangelistic work.

The following were elected as members of the Conference board: Floyd Stilson, president; Otto Dick, vice president; Willard Naylor, second vice president; Willis Roose, treasurer; and Erma McChesney, Secretary.

Erma McChesney, Secretary.

In sending in a fine contribution to apply to the publication of The Restitution Herald, Winfield T. McKaig of Delaware writes: "It is a fine religious paper and seems to me free from prejudice and from time to time is enriched by many good articles. It affords me much pleasure to tell you that when I am through with The Herald I pass it along to a Baptist preacher, who makes use of it in his sermons. He agrees with me that it is one of the best, if not the best, of religious journals,"

MINNESOTA

Our meetings at Mora, which began August 3, closed Sunday, August 22. The evangelist preached 16 sermons and Bro. C. E. Randall spoke two evenings. During the services the attendance was such that the average was 24. This average is gratifying because of the busy season.

During the time, with the exception of the last four nights of the meeting, Srs. C. E. Randall and Anna Dodridge of Fonthill, Ont., were with us. Their presence was an inspiration to the services. Our daughter Phereba assisted very well in her leadership of the music.

The last service on Sunday evening truly was a crowning event, with 50 hungry souls filling the schoolhouse. Many folks drove several miles to attend. Bro. and Sr. Adolph Sandberg from near Grasston drove 6 miles; Bro. and Sr. Andrew Christensen of Grasston, 7 miles; Bro. and Sr. Leo Beaherends of Isanito, 32 miles; and Bro. and Sr. O. H. Berry and four young people of Onamia, 26 miles. This service surely was one of the best we have ever witnessed. The Spirit of the Lord was dwelling among us.

We desire to report that August 12 we drove to Onamia when one service was held, and the next day it was our joy to baptize into Jesus, Deloris Berry, age 16, and her sister Lucille, age 12. Their address is Onamia, Minn., Rt. 2. These two young people are the daughters of Bro. and Sr. Vernon Berry. Deloris is the organist at this place.

Our state work closed with this meeting at Mora. We have been working steadily since June 16 and feel in need of rest. However, we are returning to get our goods at Burr Oak Wednesday and after that we shall go where the Lord desires us to go. Our address for the present is 314 25th Ave. North, St. Cloud, Minn.

Two services were held Sunday, Aug. 1, at Oak Park, Minn., out on the lawn of the home of Bro. and Sr. Henry Stowe. At the morning service there were 26 present, and at noon we enjoyed dinner with these dear people. At the afternoon service I preached to an interested group of 46. At that time the Philo sisters sang, adding to the beauty of the service.

Mora has a Sunday school now and a good ladies' society.

We wish to thank the Minnesota State Conference board for their willing help, and also the brethren in the fields in which we labored—Graytown, Wis., Onamia, Oak Park, and Mora. We enjoyed the hospitality of the Christian homes that were so graciously opened to us.

Trusting that Jesus and His body have been edified and our God glorified, we pray that the love of the Father and the fellowship of the Holy Spirit may remain with each one until Jesus comes.

A. E. Hoskins, wife, and daughter Phereba.

RIBBONS FOR SOUVENIRS

There are a few ribbon badges left from the recent General Conference. Anyone desiring to have one as a souvenir send 5 cents to the National Bible Institution, Oregon, Ill.

SOUTHWESTERN NEBRASKA CONFERENCE

The evening of August 22 brought to a close the Southwestern Nebraska Conference at Holbrook, Neb. To merely say it was a success seems to underestimate the valuable and inspirational lessons, sermons, and devotional meetings. Bro. F. L. Austin was teacher and speaker for the entire conference with the exception of one lesson led by Bro. Gordon. He accepted the responsibility cheerfully and was rewarded by the ready response and cooperation of the class. The attendance was good, considering weather and conditions.

The death of Bro. Steve Story cast a cloud of sorrow over the group assembled, as well as the community, as did also the sudden illness of Bro. Virgil Clarkson who was rushed to the hospital for an operation. The prayers of the brethren are extended for those in sorrow and anxiety.

On Sunday, August 22, the other churches of Holbrook dismissed their morning service to hear the sermon delivered by Bro. Austin.

Death, illness, and change of location have reduced our little group, making it necessary to elect some new ones on the conference board. The following are the new board members: Wayne Wilson, president; Lulu Johnson, vice president; Beulah Wilson, secretary; Leona Lathrop, treasurer; Inez Gordon, corresponding secretary.

As we return to our daily work, meeting life's troubles and problems, we do so feeling that through the uplifting influence of the lessons learned we can more fully follow Christ, our Example, in forgiving and making ourselves a daily sacrifice for those about us.

Lulu Johnson, Cor. Sec.

While Bro. G. E. Marsh, pastor of the Oregon, Ill., church is busy among the churches of Virginia, Bro. James W. McLain is filling his home pulpit.

EDWARD M. MORAN

Edward M. Moran, son of John and Mary Holden Moran, was born near Iowa City, Iowa, January 14, 1863. In early days the family moved to Belle Plaine, and the son entered train service on the railroad before he was of age, working on the Milwaukee Railroad in Dakota and on the Iowa Central in Iowa, and finally on the Northwestern, where he continued as a passenger conductor until retiring about seven years ago because of failing health. In 1898 he moved from Des Moines, where he had been living, and for the last forty years his residence had been in Clinton, where his death occurred August 14, 1937.

In November, 1887, he married Miss Ada Steffa of Belle Plaine, and to them three children were born: John R. of Clinton, George, who died in childhood, and Harold. Mrs. Moran died in 1925. Two brothers, Frank and Thomas, both of Clinton, survive; also three grandchildren.

He was a member of the Church of God, of which he was a faithful brother, always devoted to the gospel and interested in world events in their relation to prophetic truth. His place in the family circle and among his brethren and friends will be greatly missed by those he leaves, who hold his memory in dearest esteem.

Funeral services were held in the Scottish Rite Temple in Clinton, August 17, by the Congregational minister, H. E. Harned, and at Driscoll's Funeral Home in Belle Plaine, August 18, by J. W. Williams of Gladbrook. Burial was in the Belle Plaine cemetery.

J. W. Williams.

ILLINOIS CONFERENCE REPORT

The annual business meeting of the Illinois State Conference convened at 3 p. m., Friday, August 13. The meeting was opened with a song, followed by a short session of prayer.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved. Owing to the absence of Sr. Leota Hanson, the treasurer's report was read by Bro. C. E. Lapp. It was accepted.

Reports from the following churches were read: Rockford, Camden, Marshall, Eldorado, Ripley, Dixon, Casey, and Macomb. Camden and Macomb are new churches which were organized during the past year. In some cases the written reports were enlarged on by representatives from the various churches. Bro. James McLain reported quite optimistically regarding the Macomb church that they are "seeking the truth and are growing." His report for Camden was not so optimistic. There are three or four families who are very much interested, but are discouraged because of lack of interest generally.

Bro. F. L. Austin gave a brief report of the evangelistic work for the year. He was assisted in this work by Bro. James McLain. He stated that the work during the year had been quite largely the strengthening of old churches rather than the opening up of new fields. The work started with a meeting at Eldorado in October. Eldorado held a homecoming meeting in July which was well attended and gave evidence of a greater spiritual awakening; and Eldorado now seems to be ready to go forward with a good work. The next evangelistic services were held at the Casey church. This is also an old church and is greatly in need of regular work. The meeting in Macomb resulted in the organization of a church and a good work is being carried on there. Meetings at Peoria resulted in the organization of a church among three families, but they were unable to keep up the work and have disbanded. A meeting was held at Camden and a church was organized. The people were interested during the meeting, but seemed to be unable to carry on for themselves afterward. The evangelist recommended that another meeting be held at Camden early in the fall, and also at Eldorado. He also recommended that we should urge all members to place their membership in the church nearest them. All churches should look after their non-resident as well as their resident members and promote interest by homecoming meetings, etc.

Under the heading of old business the president spoke of the proposed painting of the dormitory. Some volunteer help had been offered, but it was found that some repairs were necessary, windows had to be puttied, etc., and by the time this work was finished the weather was too cold for painting.

The election of officers was next in order. The president spoke regarding the election of a treasurer that inasmuch as Sr. Leota Hanson, who has served as treasurer for the past several years, had been elected treasurer of the General Conference and National Bible Institution it might be well to elect some one else as treasurer for the state because of the tendency of so many to confuse the state and national work. Election resulted as follows: president, Paul C. Johnson, Oregon; vice president, James W. McLain, Ripley; secretary, Esta L. Starbuck, Rockford; treasurer, Harvey U. Krogh, Jr., Ripley. Board members, elected for two years, Leota B. Hanson and Glenn M. Birkey; those holding over from last year are George M. Siple and Silas M. Claypool.

(At this point lengthy consideration was given to the matter of the deed for the Eldorado church property. This matter and its consideration was too long for the space available in this issue, but will be published later.)

It was moved by Harvey Krogh, in the name of the Ripley Church, that the Illinois churches hold quarterly conferences each year, each conference to be not more than three days in length, and to be held at one of the various churches of the state, further details to be worked out by the Illinois State Conference board. The motion was passed.

Leila E. Whitehead spoke in behalf of Leota Hanson, chairman of the Evangelistic Committee, that she favored the continuance of the evangelistic work. A motion was passed that an Evangelistic Committee be continued. Upon Sr. Whitehead's motion Leota Hanson was made chairman, Paul C. Johnson the second member, the third member to be chosen by them.

Bro. Austin stated that the Eldorado Church is desirous of having a pastor if the state can help in the support. Bro. McLain presented two petitions from the Macomb Church in regard to some regular pastoral work.

A motion was passed that the board be empowered to proceed with the painting of the dormitory and the raising of funds for same.

A motion was also passed that the "Dollar Day" be continued as in the past two years. The Conference was adjourned.

Esta L. Starbuck, Secretary.

REPORT OF MEETING IN TEXAS

We started a meeting at Ater, Texas, last evening (Aug. 20) with a splendid attendance and interest. This is as it should be. Why not start out right instead of waiting several days? The harvest is waiting for reapers, and such an opportunity for service is before the Church of God. I sincerely appeal to our brethren to give their moral support, as well as financial, to the evangelistic efforts of the church.

Why not continue special meetings throughout the year? Why should we be interested in holding meetings only during the summer? Can't we preach the gospel in cold weather as well as in the summer? And are we waiting for a special revelation, or shall we follow the message given by the Master to the apostles? I appeal for support of the written Word. It is all-sufficient for every need and every hour.

From this place I go to Arkansas for some special work. Another call came on August 17 for another meeting in Texas as soon as possible. This meeting will be held in a new place where several are interested. When those not of the faith call for a meeting our brethren should respond to the need of the hour.

Are you interested in preaching the gospel in new fields and building up the Master's work in general? I shall appreciate your cooperation in Christian service. My address is Handley, Texas. Everything we do, we do as unto the Lord, not to man.

Not long ago I received letters from three sisters of the faith, from Ohio, Texas, and California. One of these sisters is 89 years old, and the others are 83. Their interest is in the Master's work. It gave me encouragement to read these letters. They were worth their weight in gold. Whether you are able to contribute a penny to the work or not, your letters will be appreciated just the same. We have the same God that the prophets and apostles worshiped, and He expects us to follow the directions laid down in His Word. If we will not follow them, we will not follow others He may give. May God bless each one in Christian service.

by Lewis Romine of Illinois, moved that the nominations be closed. Carried. It was then moved by J. A. Patrick, seconded by B. H. Carpenter, that the President be instructed to cast the unanimous ballot of the Conference for G. E. Marsh. The motion was carried, and G. E. Marsh was declared elected to succeed himself as Secretary of the General Conference and the National Bible Institution.

Nominations for Treasurer being in order, Miss Elizabeth Ordnung of Illinois, Miss Leota B. Hanson of Missouri, Paul C. Johnson and Glenn Birkey, both of Illinois, were placed in nomination. Bro. Birkey declined the nomination and his name was withdrawn. The electing ballot resulted as follows: Leota B. Hanson, 1413; Elizabeth Ordnung, 459 4-5; Paul C. Johnson, 4. Leota B. Hanson, having received a majority of all the votes cast, was declared elected Treasurer of the General Conference and of the National Bible Institution.

The election having been completed as indicated, the Executive Board for the year 1937-1938 is as follows: L. E. Conner, President; Leland T. Hanson, First Vice President; Earle Mogle, Second Vice President; Leota B. Hanson, Treasurer; G. E. Marsh, Secretary.

COMMUNICATIONS

Several communications were received by the Conference and read by the Secretary from brethren who wished to extend their greetings and best wishes to those who were assembled in Oregon. The Conference instructed the Secretary to acknowledge the receipt of these welcome letters from absent brethren and to assure the writers that their communications were deeply appreciated.

A letter was received from the Secretary of the General Conference of the Advent Christian Church extending to the Church of God the greeting of that sister organization of believers in the second coming of the Lord to our brethren assembled in Oregon, and expressing the desire that the many matters of doctrinal agreement which unite us may continue to be emphasized and serve to draw us into still closer bonds of mutual regard. This communication was also gratefully acknowledge by the Secretary.

STATISTICIAN APPOINTED

An insistent demand having been made that the reports of the various churches be tabulated and presented both to the General Conference and for publication, this led to the appointment by the President of M. W. Lyon to act as a committee of one to accomplish this purpose. In accepting the appointment, Bro. Lyon stated that it would be necessary for him to receive such reports by the first of June next year if they were to be properly tabulated before Conference.

Many valuable suggestions were made by brethren whose hearts are in the work and who wish to see the Church of God press forward during the new year. Among such suggestions was that of Bro. Sydney Magaw, who proposed that if the Board of Evangelism is to send out a field secretary this year he should be furnished with material to advertise Golden Rule Home. Bro. C. E. Randall responded that if the Evangelistic Board is continued this suggestion will be carried out.

SUNDAY SCHOOL DISPLAY TO BE RESUMED

It was moved by C. E. Randall, seconded by Cecil Smead, that the display of Church and Sunday School methods and work which had been a helpful feature of past Conferences be resumed. The motion was carried.

PROVISION MADE FOR CONSIDERATION OF SUNDAY SCHOOL

PROBLEMS

M. W. Lyon, calling attention to the fact that in the past and present Conferences no time or opportunity had been provided for the consideration of problems pertaining to church and Sunday school organization and methods of work, introduced the following resolution:

Be it resolved: That this Conference set aside a suitable period of time in the next year's program for a discussion of Sunday school methods and problems.

The resolution was seconded by James McLain and carried.

RESOLUTIONS OF SPIRITUAL IMPORT

It was moved by C. E. Randall, seconded by Cecil Smead, to adopt the following resolution:

Be it resolved: That this Conference go on record as favoring a deeper spiritual life among our members, and further, as members here present, we are resolved that we will do what we can upon our return to our home churches to promote this important objective. The motion was carried.

Moved by C. E. Randall, seconded by Paul C. Johnson, the adoption of this resolution:

Be it resolved: That we recommend to our members that daily prayer be offered for the enlargement of our local, state, and national church life. Carried.

It was moved by M. W. Lyon, seconded by Paul C. Johnson, that "it is the sense of this Conference that the time has come when the Secretary of the General Conference, if acting as Editor of our publications, should give full time to the Conference work and that we accordingly plan for the accomplishment of this proposition at our next annual Conference. Carried.

Moved by C. E. Randall, seconded by Cecil Smead, that the officers of the General Conference, the Ministerial Association, and the National Berean Society be inducted into office with a consecration service beginning with this Conference. Carried.

This last resolution was carried out very impressively on the last Sunday afternoon of the Conference, Bro. Sydney Magaw having charge of the service.

At a brief session the final minutes of preceding minutes were read, including those of the last session, and approved. and on formal motion, properly seconded, the General Conference came to adjournment on Saturday, August 14, 1937,

The Bible in Our Public Schools

By Otto Dick

A FEW days ago newspapers gave valuable space to reporting the findings of Dr. Henry L. Smith of Indiana University in a nation-wide survey of the legal status and current practice in Bible teaching in our public schools. Dr. Smith's deduction that Bible instruction in our schools is sadly inadequate is not surprising: but the fact that one of our prominent educators is deeply concerned, and that the public press deemed his findings worth announcing indicates a growing concern about an old problem. In case many good citizens are asking why this condition exists or upon whom rests the responsibility, a few facts and opinions concerning the problem might be helpful.

As to the legal status of the Bible in our public schools we find that our Government does not consider religious teaching one of the primary functions of the school. In practically all of the more advanced nations the government has assumed the responsibility for the education of its people, and at the same time in most of these nations the government has been gradually withdrawing its hand from the direction of the religious life of its people. In the case of our own country it is quite evident that this attitude on the part of our Government is a result of popular demand; since one of the principles upon which our nation was founded is that of religious freedom, which brought about an early separation of church and state. However, the legal provisions of our several states for teaching the Bible in our public schools are more liberal than we might expect.

An examination of the various laws and rulings pertaining to this question will show the laws of a few states prohibiting the reading of the Bible in public schools; a few have supreme court decisions against such reading; while in a few others an opinion of the state superintendent of public instruction, the attorney general, or other authoritative construction has barred the Bible from its schools. On the other hand a few states require a portion of the

In the following article a new writer makes his initial bow to the readers of THE RESTITUTION HERALD. We are pleased to welcome him to our columns and hope that we may have the opportunity of publishing many other products of his scholarship. The author is a member of the Church of God at Hillisburg, Indiana, and the principal of the high school at Scircleville in the same state.

Bible to be read daily in their schools; a few specifically permit by law such reading; and a large number of states are silent on the subject. A limited number allow credit toward high school graduation to be given for Bible study.

Relative to current practice, recent surveys indicate that schools are doing virtually nothing constructive in Bible study even in states permitting it. Why is it not one of the prescribed courses? Why have the schools adopted this attitude about the oldest and most popular of all books? Does the Bible contain poor content for instructional purposes? Does the schoolroom present an undesirable situation for such instruction? Are teachers poorly prepared in the subject matter of the Bible? Are teachers on the whole indifferent to the moral welfare of their pupils?

As to the content of the Bible, Professor William Lyon Phelps of Yale University has said, "If I were appointed a committee of one to regulate the much-debated question of college entrance examinations in English, I should erase every list of books that has been thus far suggested, and I should confine the examination wholly to the Authorized Version of the Bible . . . I would refuse to allow any candidate to enter the university until he had satisfactorily passed an examination on the Bible. The Bible has within its pages every single kind of literature that any proposed list of English classics contains. It has narrative, descriptive, poetical, dramatic, and oratorical passages. . . . Priests, atheists, skeptics, devotees, agnostics, and evangelists are all agreed that the Bible is the best example of English composition that the world has ever seen. It contains the noblest prose and poetry with the utmost simplicity of diction."

Commenting on the same question, Colonel C. W. Larned, Professor at West Point, fully endorses Professor Phelps' proposition and (Please turn to page 16)

Independent Jewish State Foreseen

"Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?"—Acts 1:6.

ZURICH, Switzerland, Aug. 20.—After a stormy debate in which the non-Zionist delegation from the United States withdrew in protest over the proposed partition of Palestine, the Jewish World Congress in session here passed a resolution empowering the Jewish Agency executive to negotiate with Great Britain on a basis of the partition scheme for the establishment of an independent Jewish State in the Holy Land. It is believed that the opposing American delegation may be induced to return to their seats in the convention before its close.

The proposal to establish "an independent Jewish State in Palestine," whether the proposal is carried out at this time or not is of great significance, as it shows the trend not only of Jewish leaders, but also indicates that the proposal is receiving the serious consideration of world statesmen of many nations. How our fathers would have rejoiced to see our day! We may well repeat the question of the disciples and ask our Lord, "Wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?"

League of Nations Favors Division

"Hath God cast away his people? God forbid."—Paul.

GENEVA, Switzerland, Aug. 23.—The present mandate in Palestine has become almost impossible, the permanent mandates commission of the League of Nations reported today. The report recognized the difficulties that lay in the way of preventing the Arab-Jewish disturbances of 1936 but expressed the opinion that it ought to have been possible to adopt more resolute measures to break armed resistance.

It agreed to the proposal to withdraw holy places from both Arab and Jewish control and submit them to a special regime. It was this part of the scheme that met with the most bitter opposition from the Jews, as it would deprive them of Jerusalem, their ancient capital, in which their affection was centered. A home in the land of their fathers would mean little to them unless "the city of the great king" were also theirs.

The League of Nations committee, while favorable in principle to the division of Palestine into two states, said that this should be done only after the two states had passed through a period of political development in self-government. The committee's report concluded with a tribute to Great Britain, "without whose efforts no Jewish national homeland nor any free Arab state" would have been possible. It was recognized that the same strong hand would be needed in Palestine for some time to come.

Matter Said to Be "Frozen Light"

"The Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters. And God said, Let there be light: and there was light."

NEW YORK, Aug. 22.—Dr. J. S. O'Connor, priest-scientist, professor at Woodstock College, Maryland, announced recently, it was reported today, the discovery of matter in a form still smaller than the electron. Up to the present time the electron has been regarded by scientists as the original indivisible particle of material substance. This mysterious "neutrino," which is the name which has been applied to the theoretical particle, is said to be less than one fifth the size of the electron.

While all that God has made, however tiny or however enormous it may be, is of interest to the Christian as an exhibition of the Creator's wisdom and power, the further statement made by Dr. O'Connor in connection with his announcement of the discovery of the "neutrino," is what especially arouses our interest. Commenting on the different forms which energy may take, the professor remarked that it may assume the form of light radiation or material particles. Matter, he asserted, is simply frozen light, according to the new principles of Albert Einstein's theory of relativity.

In other words, the latest conclusion of science is that all matter is the product of light. In a recent article entitled, "Our Scientific Bible," the editor quoted as follows from Alva J. McClain: "From Hero of Alexandria to Michelson of Chicago, the basic hypothesis concerning light is that it is a form of energy. The logical sequence, it is agreed, is: first energy, then light."

Light, therefore, is regarded as the first product of energy. God's creative energy, His Spirit, "moved upon the face of the waters . . . and there was light." And now science, in agreement with the Bible account, declares that from that original light has come all material substance.

What was true of the first creation will also be true of the new creation in Christ Jesus. First the "Light of the world," and then all the glorious products of that Light, including individual salvation and the deliverance of the world from sin in all its forms.

The Oneness of God the Father and Jesus the Son

By R. H. Judd

NO READER of the journal in question who carefully reviews the editor's article on the above subject will find any difficulty in coming to the conclusion that he is advocating that God and Jesus the Christ are identical. He himself says that the "Jehovah of the Old Testament is the Jesus of the New" Testament.

Seeing that the article is so evidently written as a reply to literature sent by me to the editor, I venture to reply to it.

It is no uncommon thing for persons, having seen the error of some particular teaching, to swing to an opposite extreme, often more illogical and unscriptural than the one parted with. The present writer believes that our friend has taken such a position since he abandoned the doctrine of the trinity. We feel the view he now adopts is even more in direct antagonism with our well-known conditionalist platform of accepting the plain statements of Scripture; and that it is as incapable of being expressed by "sound speech which cannot be condemned" as is the doctrine of soul-immortality taught by orthodoxy.

The editor does well to inquire, "Who is Jehovah?" His first reference to Jehovah as the "self-existent One" is itself evidence that one Person only can in the strict sense of the word be called by the name of Jehovah in its primary application. The reference to Revelation 1:8 is assumed by a very general class of reader, including the editor, to refer to Jesus the Christ. Closer examination, however, will reveal this to be an error due like many another to too hasty reading of the divine Record. It is always well to note the context.

Speaking of Christ (and God is never called Christ), verse 6 says (see R. V.) He hath made us "priests unto his God and Father." Could language more definitely exclude the thought that they are identical? We think not. The immediate context, both before and after verse 8, as all will allow, makes clear distinction between God and Christ. It will also be conceded, as the marginal references show, that verse 8 is quoted from Isaiah 41:4; 44:6; and 48:12. There the application is unquestionably to God alone.

In this connection there is one remarkable fact worth noting, viz., that in the Revised Version there is placed the distinctive mark of a separate paragraph at the beginning of verse 8 and verse 9, thus completely enclosing the words as a detached paragraph. If time and space permitted other points of interest in the verse, all bearing strongly against the conclusion that verse 8 has reference to the Christ, might be mentioned.

Our esteemed contributor to THE RESTITUTION HERALD, R. H. Judd of Toronto, Canada, prepared the following for publication in an English conditionalist journal under the circumstances suggested in the article. As it was not admitted to the paper, we are giving it space here so that its value may not be lost.

Our friend's next line of argument is the following: "Now throughout the first two thousand years of human history Jehovah was frequently seen and spoken with by man" (italics mine). This is direct contradiction to the words of our Lord, of His Apostle John, and His Apostle

Paul, for they state unequivocally: "No man hath seen God at any time" (see John 1:18; 1 John 4:12, 20; 1 Tim. 6:16). Can the first two thousand years of human history be excluded from such statements? Certainly not! In the instances referred to by our brother there is ample evidence in each case to show that Jehovah was not personally present, but was personified by another as His messenger. It would make the article too long to discuss these, but we may reasonably expect to find such evidence in view of the numerous clear and definite assertions in both Old and New Testaments that God cannot be seen by mortal man, and it is there. One feels compelled to take strong exception to the remark that "Jehovah reveals Himself as a perfect human being," for Scripture emphatically states that "God is not a man."

We come now to an even more serious misrepresentation of fact. Here is the statement: "So when we read that the Lord repeatedly called Himself the 'I AM'" (italics mine), which is equivalent to Jehovah, we are bound to believe that the Jehovah of the Old Testament is the Jesus of the New." Then he adds, "They are identical." We most emphatically declare that in no single instance did Jesus the Christ (the anointed One, Acts 10:38) call Himself the "I AM"!

It is not without coincidence that at the time of first writing this article a popular Sunday school paper, speaking of the incident of the woman of Samaria in John 4, quotes the answer of the Lord Jesus to the woman as, "I that speak unto thee AM," then adds the remark: "This was a self-ascriptio[n] of the ineffable name of Jehovah." It is impossible to obtain such an idea from the context. The woman was, as she said, looking for the Messiah, the Christ. In reply Christ said to her, "I that speak unto thee am he." That the woman so understood Him, and not as stated by this paper, is emphatically certain from verse 29, where she says, "Come see a man . . . Is not this the Christ?"

Similar words occur in John 8:24, 28; and the context not only shows that He claimed to be the Christ, but in effect He denied that He was God. In verse 28 (in the margin) the Revised Version places "am" in italics instead of "he," thus completely reversing (Please turn to page 9)

The Doctrine of Christ

Number 8

By Harvey Krogh, Jr.

JESUS continued to speak to His disciples and said to them, "Judge not, that ye be not judged. For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again. And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye; and, behold, a beam is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye."

This has been one of man's chief faults since his fall into sin. Within us is some distasteful thing, some evil way, and we would abhor it if we could see it, but men are blind to their own faults. The thing in ourselves that we hate, we see in others and criticize. That mote which we see in our brother's eye is only a reflection of the beam that is in our own eye.

When we judge we never look at ourselves, nor do we look at the other side, nor the reason why there might be a fault in our brother. Let us, therefore, leave the judging of others to the Lord and judge ourselves.

"Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rend you." So often we have used this as an excuse for not witnessing for Christ. No matter where we are or what our work, we should abide in the doctrine of Christ, and proclaim Him before men. Jesus said, "Whosoever therefore shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven. But whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven" (Matt. 10:32, 33).

Of course it would be foolish to cast pearls before swine or give holy things to dogs, but we are to let our light shine. Solomon may help us on this question: "He that reproveth a scorner getteth to himself shame: and he that rebuketh a wicked man getteth himself a blot. Reprove not a scorner, lest he hate thee: rebuke a wise man, and he will love thee" (Prov. 9:7, 8).

Jesus continued thus: "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." Men had so long been departed from God they had forgotten about Him and His power. Jesus was reassuring men that God was still the Creator and great Giver of all time. "For every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened." While we read those words we did not believe them because of the hardness of our hearts. If we believed these words of the Son of God and had faith, we would have more of the joy of life, which all are striving for, but few find, because they do not ask of God. "Or what man is there of you, whom if his son ask bread, will he give him a stone? Or if he ask a fish, will he give him a serpent?" Can anyone deny the reasonableness of this? "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask him?" Where is our faith? Have we, too, become as faithless Israel?

Speaking of pearls, we do not even cast our pearls before one another enough to see what we really have. What greater riches could man desire than the riches of "ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you"? We have all dreamed of an "Aladdin Lamp" and we have not rubbed the one which we hold in our own hands. We dream of a great servant who would appear before us and present us with all of our needs, or give us a gold mine by which we could pay all our expenses; but is that what we really seek? We should seek for consecrated hearts and Christian workers that feel their responsibility; we must seek for the Lord's guidance and we must knock on the door of opportunity. And Jesus is that great servant (His work is to minister, not to be ministered unto) and he will grant us these things through the power of God.

Do we believe these things? Let us recount our riches in Christ and use them. They are ours to use and we dare not let them waste.

"Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets." Why did He say, "Therefore"? Because of all these things which are ours, which our Father gives us, because He is so good to us, we are to do to others and give to others. All that we have is of God. Why should we not freely give as we have been given?

Our ministers have argued with us on the nature of man and the gospel of the kingdom and other important things that we should know, but we also need to be convinced of the truth of this promise and be informed of the command to ask, to seek, and to knock. These things are vital, for if we lay hold on these things and have the Golden Rule written in our hearts that will have been accomplished for which the law and the prophets were written.

"Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." The masses flock in at the wide-open gate and jostle down the broad way with no other thought than the

The Law, the Covenant, and the Sabbath

By Zennie Self

IF THE old covenant, or Ten Commandments, was so perfect and complete as some contend, why did not God slay David when he committed his sins of adultery and murder (2 Sam. 12), for the penalty for breaking any of the Ten Commandments was death (Heb. 2:2; 10:28)? And why was not Peter slain when he had borne false witness by denying the Lord three times (Matt. 26:69-75)? Because David and Peter were not under the old covenant (Ten Commandments); neither were they under the Aaronic priesthood. But they were under the Melchisedec priesthood, and the covenant which God made to Abraham, saying: "And in thy seed shall all the kindreds of the earth be blessed" (Acts 3:25; Heb. 7:1-10; Gal. 3:17).

"For the law (Ten Commandments) made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did; by the which we draw nigh to God" (Heb. 7:19). Why didn't the old covenant make anything perfect? Because the old covenant killed the man and permitted the sin to live: whereas, the covenant under which David and Peter were punished killed the sin and permitted the man to live. However, we state that the old covenant was good for the purpose for which it was designated, as was also the sacrifices of bulls, of goats, of rams, and of lambs. That was for the purpose of foreshadowing or typifying the sacrifice of Christ, and the new covenant, of which Christ is the Mediator. "For the law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices which they offered year by year continually, make the comers thereunto perfect" (Heb. 10:1, 2; Col. 2:16, 17). So also, the death of those executed under the old covenant was a type of the destruction of the evil adversaries (evil passions or sins), of the willful transgression of the new covenant (Heb. 10:26-29; 1 Cor. 5:1-5). If the old covenant was so perfect and complete, why then was it necessary for God to establish a "new" and "better covenant"? For "now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much also he is the mediator of a better covenant which was established upon better promises" (Heb. 8:6-13).

We do not refrain from killing, committing adultery, and bearing false witness, etc., because it is written in the old covenant, "Thou shalt not kill, bear false witness against thy neighbor; thou shalt not commit adultery," etc., because the old covenant was never intended to be anything but a typical covenant of works, under which God's grace was not extended, being merely a type of the new covenant of grace, of which Christ is now the Mediator. The reason, therefore, that we refrain from killing, committing adultery, and bearing false witness is because God's grace is extended to us under the new covenant, which causes us to love the Lord God with all our soul, strength, and might, and our neighbor as ourselves (Luke 10:27). Paul says: "For ye are not under the law (Ten Commandments), but under grace" (Rom. 6:14).

Now instead of keeping the old Sabbath which was a shadow of the things to come (Col. 2:17), we keep the Lord (God in our hearts through sanctification (1 Peter 3:15), which is our new Sabbath. And instead of resting on the seventh day of the week, we now rest in the Lord, which excludes the necessity of resting on the old Sabbath (Matt. 11:28).

It is important to notice that those who contend that the Ten Commandments or the old covenant is not done away or abolished, apply the word "law" when found in the Scripture as being abolished, to what they call "the ceremonial law," or the law of offering sacrifices of bulls, goats, rams, and lambs. Notice that Paul says, referring to the same law that is abolished: "If they which are of the law be heirs (Was Abraham an heir? See Romans 4:13, 14), faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect" (Rom. 4:14). Surely if the word "law" can be applied to the offering of typical sacrifices, then Abraham was of that law, inasmuch as he offered typical sacrifices (see Gen. 22:13; 15:9-21). The Scripture also positively shows that Abraham was an heir by promise (Rom. 4:13; Gal. 3:18). If the word "law," spoken of in Romans 4:13, means the typical sacrificial law, as some contend, then Abraham would have been of the law and an heir too; and under this interpretation, faith would be void, and the promise of none effect. Jacob also being an heir by promise, "offered sacrifice upon the mount" (Gen. 31:54), and his faith was not void, nor the promise to him of none effect.

It might be asked by some: I know that the Bible teaches that the old covenant, or Ten Commandments, is abolished, but just how was it abolished? My answer to that question is: How are the stars abolished when the sun comes up? "By reason of the glory that excelleth," of course. The sun, when it came, blotted the stars out in the same manner that the new covenant, when it was instituted, blotted out the old covenant or Ten Commandments. "But of the ministration of death (Ten Commandments as the stars), written and engraven in stones, was glorious, so that the children of Israel could not stedfastly behold the face of Moses for the glory of his countenance; which glory (as the stars,) was to be done away: how shall not the ministration of the spirit (new covenant as the sun) be rather glorious? For if the ministration of condemnation (Ten Commandments as the stars) be glory, much more doth the ministration of righteousness (new covenant as the sun) exceed in glory. For even that which was made glorious (Ten Commandments as the stars) had no glory in this respect, by reason of the glory (new covenant as the sun) that excelleth. For if that which is done away (Ten Commandments as the stars) was glorious, much more that which remaineth (new covenant as the sun) is glorious" (2 Cor. 3:7-11). If the stars could have given us enough light then God would not have given us a greater light. So it is with the old covenant and the new.

Notice in the 5th chapter of Matthew how Jesus shows the old covenant to be inferior to the new. For if we do not become angry with our brother without a cause, then we need not to observe the old commandment, "Thou shalt not kill" (vv. 21, 22).

And if we look not on a woman to lust after her in our hearts, then we do not need to observe the old commandment, "Thou shalt not commit adultery" (vv. 27, 28). Hence the old covenant is blotted out in the observance of the new.

Should Christians Pay Tithe?

IT IS a strange fact that while the Protestant churches since the Reformation have sought to recover in its entirety the "faith which was once delivered unto the saints," God's plan for the support of His work in the earth, similarly lost during the Dark Ages, has been almost completely overlooked. In consequence, while the great doctrines of the Bible have become plain to earnest searchers of the Word, the church has been seriously handicapped in spreading the good news of the gospel through lack of men and means.

In the experience of most churches, the unorganized and often spasmodic giving, upon which the cause of God is invariably dependent, is inadequate even to meet local needs, much less to provide an overflow for the regions beyond. More often than not the ministry are compelled to resort to bazaars, flower shows, whist parties, concerts, etc., to supplement the precarious resources of the church. Much of their time is thus frittered away arranging programs and selling tickets which should be devoted to their sacred calling.

And in spite of all, the cause of God languishes at home and in mission lands, and the many meritorious charities and benevolent enterprises are continually hindered in their work by financial embarrassment. A little thought must convince anyone that such a haphazard plan cannot possibly be in harmony with the mind of Christ.

The perfection which characterizes all God's plans for human redemption is admirably revealed in the Old Testament.

Through Moses He communicated the wondrous symbolism of the sanctuary service. In order that this illustration of the plan of redemption might ever be kept before the children of Israel, one tribe was set aside for the work of the tabernacle and, later, the temple. And to maintain the tribe of Levi as they devoted themselves to their sacred responsibilities, God provided for systematic giving on the part of all the tribes.

"Behold," He declared to Moses, "I have given the children of Levi all the tenth in Israel for an inheritance, for their service which they serve, even the service of the tabernacle of the congregation" (Num. 18:21).

Surely no more comprehensive or equitable provision could have been made. Every Israelite was under obligation to contribute his part to the maintenance of the work of God. Yet no undue burden was placed upon any, for the measure of their contribution was according as the Lord had blessed them. The poor gave a tenth of their small possessions, while the rich gave a tithe of their larger increase.

BASIS OF THE TITHE

The basis of God's demand for a tithe of the increase of every Israelite was the fact that "the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein" (Psa. 24:1). "The silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith the Lord of hosts" (Hag. 2:8). "Every beast of the forest is mine, and the cattle upon a thousand hills" (Psa. 50:10).

Being, therefore, the owner of all things, He was entitled to instruct His stewards as to conditions of their tenancies, and the very reasonable return for which He asked was: "All the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's: it is holy unto the Lord" (Lev. 27:30).

The tithe did not belong to the Israelite. He did not give it; he paid it to the Lord as a recognition of the benefits he received from the Creator's hand. To withhold it, as Malachi declared in a later day, would be "robbery" (Mal. 3:8).

Then, after the Israelite had paid a faithful tithe, he gave "freewill offerings" to the temple as a token of thankfulness for special mercies and benefits. These gave him opportunity, not merely to recognize his duty to God, but to reveal his love. As long as these wonderful provisions were faithfully observed, the tabernacle and the temple were adequately maintained, and the glory of God became known among all the nations around. But when the Israelites were unfaithful to their obligations, the work of God languished, and the nation's influence was lost.

One of the last messages which came to the Jewish people, before the prophetic voice ceased in Israel, was a condemnation of the "robbers" among them. "Will a man rob God?" cried Malachi. "Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation" (Mal. 3:8, 9).

Then follows the wonderful appeal and promise: "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it" (v. 10).

With the sacrifice of Christ on the cross of Calvary, the typical services of the temple and the Levitical priesthood came to an end. In their place Christ laid the foundations of His church, ordaining His immediate followers as the first of the new succession of messengers who would undertake the even larger task of carrying the gospel of the kingdom to "every creature" under heaven.

In view, therefore, of the similarity between the work of the priests of the Mosaic era and the ministers of the gospel dispensation, one might naturally expect that some similar provisions would be made for the support of the latter as for the former. It is obviously unthinkable that Christ would have commissioned so great a work in the Christian dispensation without providing adequately for its accomplishment.

Nor does He; for a careful study of the New Testament reveals the same dual provision for the work of the gospel.

The Epistles of the New Testament are full of exhortations to liberality in ministering to the "necessity of saints" (Rom. 12:13) and for the work of the church, corresponding to the Israelite's "freewill offerings." But there are exhortations also to systematic giving as the duty of every believer. The work of the gospel is not to be left to chance or impulse any more than the maintenance of tabernacle and temple.

Writing to the Corinthians, the Apostle Paul explains this latter aspect of the divine plan. "Who goeth a warfare any time at his own charges? who planteth a vineyard, and eateth not of the fruit thereof? or who feedeth a flock, and eateth not of the milk of the flock? . . . If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it any great thing if we shall reap your carnal things? . . . Do ye not know that they which minister about holy things live of the things of the temple? and they which wait at the altar are partakers with the altar? Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel" (1 Cor. 9:7-14).

Paul here draws a direct parallel between the temple priesthood and the gospel ministry. As there was a regular income for the work of God in Old Testament times, the analogy demands that there be systematic and proportionate giving in New Testament times. Emphasizing this neglected principle, the Reverend Charles Leslie has written:

"Even so hath the Lord ordained. What? That the evangelical priests should live of the gospel. What revenue, then, has the gospel to maintain them? A revenue surely like that of the temple, else it is not even so, as the Apostle makes comparison.

"Some would have the gospel merely charity, nothing due, but all freewill offerings; then I am sure it was not even so as the temple, for there were freewill offerings, it is true; but that is not all; there were tithes and other offerings, as of obligation. . . . If the priests of the temple were sure of a tenth and the priests of the gospel not of a hundredth of thousandth part, or any part at all, how were they provided even so as the priests of the temple?

"There is no coherence, no argument, no comparison, nor good sense, which can be made out of this text, unless the Lord had ordained, that, as the tithes were paid to the priests of the temple, they should likewise be paid to the priests of the gospel."—Theological Works of Rev. Charles Leslie, pp. 341-346.

In the same Epistle to the Corinthians the Apostle further indicates that Christian giving should be on the same basis as in the Old Testament. "Upon the first day of the week," he enjoins, "let every one of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him" (1 Cor. 16:2).

Here the Apostle tacitly states first that everyone is under obligation to contribute to the cause of God, and, secondly, that the giving should be in proportion to the Lord's blessing.

These plain statements clearly preclude the suggestion that the obligation of tithing belonged to "the law of commandments contained in ordinances," which the Apostle declared had been nailed to the cross.

The ordinances which were abrogated were the typical services of the sanctuary which pointed forward to the sacrifice of Christ for the sins of the world. The purpose of the tithe is quite different. It is not typical, nor does it foreshadow anything. It is a continual reminder of the Lord's ownership.

The death of Christ did not change the fact of God's ownership. It rather deepens the Christian's realization of his debt. As Paul told the Corinthian church, "Know ye not that . . . ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price" (1 Cor. 6:19, 20). The obligation to acknowledge that ownership by tithes and offerings is thus strengthened, not diminished.

ITS ANTIQUITY AND UNIVERSALITY

Any lingering confusion of the law of tithing with the ceremonial law abrogated at the cross will be cleared up by the realization that tithing, like the Sabbath commandment, dates not from Sinai but from creation. . . . Abraham paid tithe to Melchizedek long before Sinai, and the fact that Melchizedek received it without question indicates that it was no new thing in Canaan.

As a matter of fact, ancient records show that tithing was practiced by the Babylonians, the Assyrians, the Egyptians, the Persians, the Phoenicians, the Greeks, the Romans, and even by the ancient Britons. So universal a practice can be explained only as a common inheritance and obligation from the earliest days of mankind.

Tithe paying thus ordained before the law as well as under the law, and, as it has never been repealed, it still remains the divinely appointed plan for the support of the gospel in the Christian era. In any case, even if the command to pay tithe had been abrogated along with the ceremonial law, this surely would not have meant that under grace God would expect less of the believer than under the law.

One writer has forcibly put it: "Let a man see to it that grace does not get less out of him than the law could get

Does the Mental Man Die?

THE question as to whether the mental man survives the death-stroke of the physical man cannot be dismissed by a shrug of the shoulders, or quenched by frowns, or squelched by ridicule. It is a very live question, and one that will not down at the nod of tradition, but comes forth boldly, challenging honest investigation.

The matter cannot be set aside by the flippant allegation that only the physical man is rendered unconscious by the stroke of death, leaving the mental man intact and untrammelled, to enter upon a career of separate consciousness in some remote sphere. The mere statement, however honestly made, must not be accepted as proof. "To the law and to the testimony"; for the voice of Inspiration must not be stifled.

We cite sample statements and briefly analyze them in the light of invulnerable facts, showing that death reduces some part of man to a state of unconsciousness—either soul or body, or both—and as it is impossible to reduce to unconsciousness in death that which was void of consciousness in life, death must deal with the conscious part, whether that is the body only, or the soul only, or both combined. If the body never possessed consciousness in life, then death cannot render the body unconscious, but must deal with the soul, or else nothing becomes unconscious in death, unless soul and body combined constitute the conscious man in life, and are both rendered unconscious in death.

Take the wise man's statement: "The living know that they shall die: but the dead know not any thing" (Ecl. 9:5). Some part of man is here said to possess knowledge in life, whether soul or body; and that same part is void of knowledge in death. If the soul, instead of the material man, has knowledge before death, there is no escape from the conclusion that death deprives it of that knowledge, for it reduces the conscious part to unconsciousness. And if the soul is not conscious in life, it has no consciousness to retain in death. That which is conscious in life becomes unconscious in death, and that which is unconscious in life must remain unconscious in death.

The mental man (let that be called what it may) is deprived of all its passions under the stroke of death, for the same writer affirms, "Their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished." In life the mental man can exercise love or hatred, but not so in death. Then all these faculties are perished; for the mental man cannot survive the stroke of death.

Concerning the dying man, David affirms: "In that very day his thoughts perish" (Psa. 146:4). The mental man is the thinking man, whether that is the soul only, or the material person only, or both combined; and that very mental man ceases to think when dead. While the thinker lives, the thinking continues: but the thinking ceases when the thinker ceases to live. The same witness affirms: "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence" (Psa. 115:17). Praise requires the exercise of the mental faculties in life; but in death those faculties are inoperative; so it is the mental man that is affected by death. For if mentality could survive the death of the saint, the praise of God would not cease, but rather be augmented.

Again David thus addresses Deity: "In death there is no remembrance of thee" (Psa. 6:5). During life it is the intellectual man that remembers God, whether that is exclusively soul or body, or the two jointly; and in death the memory of the same intellectual man ceases—cannot even remember good. For death obliterates the memory of the very man that has memory in life. So whether that is the soul or the body, or both combined, death produces the extinction of memory, or renders the intellectual man unconscious. These conclusions cannot be set aside by speculation, for death obliterates memory and thoughts and knowledge—all these belonging to the mental man.

In agreement with this conclusion, Job says of the dead man: "His sons come to honour, and he knoweth it not; they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them" (Job 14:21). The intellectual man only has the faculty of knowledge and perception during life, whether that is the soul only or the body only, or both combined; and the same intellectual man is void of knowledge and of perception in death. Upon the intellectual man death lays its potent hand, obliterating memory, thoughts, knowledge, perception, love, hatred, and envy; so there is no chance to evade the conclusion that death kills the mental man. Therefore if intellect is the property of the soul, and not the body, then death reduces the soul to unconsciousness. But if intellect is not the property of the soul, but of the body merely, then the soul lacks consciousness even in life, and therefore has none to retain in death. If, however, consciousness in life is the result of a combination of soul and body—neither having separate consciousness—then when that combination is dissolved by death, consciousness must terminate.

From the New Testament we learn that the accountable man, which is the mental man, falls under the power of death. "And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hades (the state of the dead) delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works" (Rev. 20:13).

Mental men die and are finally resurrected and judged, and the intellectual man is responsible, be that the soul only, or the body only, or both combined; and that responsible man dies, and is finally to be resurrected for judgment, instead of eluding the stroke of death. Those who have "done evil" and those who have "done good"—acts that involve intellect—are the subjects of death and resurrection, and subsequent judgment.—The Messiah's Advocate.

THE ONENESS OF GOD THE FATHER AND JESUS THE SON

the ground upon which the author of the article we are reviewing and also the Sunday school paper mentioned seek to build their unscriptural doctrine.

The author in question says, "We find Jehovah associated with Elohim, the name of God the Father." It is true that Jehovah is associated with Elohim, but it is absolutely incorrect to say that "Elohim" is a name of God. As Professor McCaul truly says: "The theory that Jehovah and Elohim are synonymous rests on an assumption wholly false. They are not synonymous and cannot be so used. There is the same difference between Elohim and Jehovah as between Deus and Jupiter, or Homo and Petrus. The one stands for the genus; the other stands for the individual and is a proper name. Elohim answers to our own word God, or deity, and is used of false gods as well as the true God. This distinction is strongly marked in the words of Elijah, 'If Jehovah be Elohim follow him, if Baal, then follow him.' It would be impossible to interchange 'Elohim' and 'Jehovah,' and to say, 'If Baal be Jehovah.'"

That the Creator is again and again said to have been Jehovah is also correct, but that Jesus the Christ was Creator is denied by the emphatic language of Jesus Himself in Mark 13:19 and in Matthew 5:45. In this latter passage, in attributing creation to God, Christ makes definite distinction between the "Father which is in heaven," and Himself, who at the time of speaking was on earth. Besides, no person could honestly ascribe to another that which they had themselves performed.

Eighteen different witnesses, Christ being one of them, in more than fifty passages of Scripture ascribe creation to God, and many of them definitely exclude the thought of another sharing that honor (see Isa. 44:24). Hence it is significantly remarkable that passages such as Ephesians 3:9 have been so altered by the revisers as to remove forever any question that God, not Christ, was Creator. Further, the passage quoted by the editor, viz., John 1:3, even if taken to have reference to Christ (which the present writer does not admit), does not on close examination necessarily bear his interpretation; for the word "without" has the significance of "apart from," as will be seen on reference to Young's Concordance, and no Christian will dispute that the Lord Jesus Christ was the central purpose of God's creation. Neither has he authority for capitalizing the initial letter of the word "whom," even if it were in the text. Some translators quite correctly give the neuter interpretation, recognizing that John's prelude is undoubtedly a clear reference to creation as recorded in Genesis 1, by the oft-repeated words, "and God said." Psalm 33:6 says, in harmony with Peter and John, "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth."

With reference to "I and my Father are one," the author in question says, "This word 'one' is the Greek numeral and cannot possibly be used to mean 'at one,' 'in agreement with,' etc. Words are not to be juggled with like that" (italics mine).

We heartily agree that "one" is the Greek numeral, but it does not help our brother, for if any person has "juggled" with the word "one" it is he in attempting to make it mean that "I and another" are one numerically! The words "at one" and "in agreement with," do not appear in the tract he attempts to criticize. The statement there is that they "were one in purpose, desire, and thought, and that Jesus wanted His disciples to be one with Him and God in precisely the same way." A similar Old Testament use of the word occurs in Judges 20:8, "All the people arose as one man." Possibly others could be named in both Testaments.

The uniquely original remarks concerning the Lord's Prayer will not bear investigation, even on basis of ordinary logic, much less comparing scripture with scripture. So, too, the remark, "The Father in sending the Son, came Himself," far from being "absolutely the necessary implication," is not the implication at all, for Jehovah repeatedly speaks of the Messiah as His "servant," His "chosen," His "elect."

The same loose confusion is apparent in his remarks concerning the burning bush. Scripture comment on the incident (see Acts 7) tells us twice over that it was an angel of the Lord. These messengers of Jehovah spoke for Jehovah. His "name was in them," and they often spoke in His name. There is not, so far as the writer recollects, one single occasion where God is defined as an angel. Concerning His Son it is said, "To which of the angels said he at any time, Thou art my Son; this day have I begotten thee." If God refused to classify His Son as an angel, He would not so classify Himself.

Our brother quotes the enemies and "contemporaries" of Christ as evidence that He claimed to be God. He cannot, however, produce their evidence, or that of the Christ that He did so. I wonder if he would be willing to accept the evidence of the enemies of Christ that it was by Beelzebub, the prince of devils, that He cast out demons! I wonder!

Why leave the understanding of a subject so vital to Christian fundamentals "to the future" when no other subject in the Bible has so many clear and definite statements in reference to it; statements just as clear, even more so, than those which made our brother a conditionalist?

If that for which our brother contends is true, it is the most momentous of any subject mentioned in the Gospel of John, yet when John sets forth the reasons for writing his Gospel in 20:31, any such idea of Christ being "the I AM" is not even mentioned. It is impossible to reconcile the prayer of our Lord to the Father in John 17 on such a basis that "they are identical." In verse 3 the words, "that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent," render any such thought absolutely impossible.

"We are not complete until we are saved from self-pity, and find joy in thinking of others."—Herbert Lockyer.

UNDER HIS WINGS

THE BIBLE is a book of many parts, but looked at from one viewpoint it becomes a great picture gallery. In it Jehovah talks to His people through similitudes, illustrations, and pictures of human life; through natural forms and divine things.

Perhaps one of the most expressive of the many pictures employed is found in the words, "under his wings." So simple, so homely—yet so deep is the grandeur of its symbolism that it should forever cheer the heart of faith.

The prophet-psalmist of Israel sings about hiding, rejoicing, and trusting "under his wings," while Malachi tells of "healing in his wings." Here, then, we have safety, gladness, confidence, and restoration—just the very things that the wayworn child of earth needs—all found "under his wings."

What a beautiful, sympathetic, yet inspiring picture these words present! Once, when a boy, I was entrusted with the care of a mother hen and her chicks, as a personal charge. I took great care of them. But one night, getting home late, I forgot them. Memory wakened in the morning, and on searching I found them in the unsheltered part of the barnyard. There sat the mother hen with the white frost on her back, cold, stiff, and dead! But the little chicks were well and happy. Love had given up its life in guarding them from danger.

Christ employs the figure of the mother hen in His sad lament over Jerusalem—"How often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings, and ye would not" (Luke 13:34). So it is even now. Jehovah would have His people consider the safety, joy, and restoration found under the wings of the Almighty.

Should you endeavor to injure one of those little chicks, hidden under parental wings, the stroke must first fall upon the mother of the brood. Her life is placed above their life in a self-forgetful defense. Think you, then, that the everlasting Father will be less considerate than the mother hen? Of Israel's trials we read, "In all their affliction He was afflicted." Again, "When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee."

In human history, protection and self-defense have ever been leading features in the mind of man. Cities with gigantic walls have been built to resist invaders. Lofty towers have been reared to keep watch against daring foes. Yet for all man's endeavors in the interests of safety, it is estimated that more than 6,800,000,000 persons have perished through violence and war.

Joy has been another great object of human endeavor. Hence we see the world crowded with theaters and picture shows. But the "rejoicing" produced by these agencies does not satisfy, neither is it enduring.

A few years since some travelers were passing over one of the slopes in the Himalayas. A fire was burning in the forest, but their attention was attracted by the peculiar call and distressed actions of a bird. Looking more closely, they saw its nest far up in a tree around which the fire was now burning. Soon the fire began to ascend the tree. Then the distress of the bird increased. Nearer and nearer the flames mounted toward the nest. The travelers thought, "When they reach the nest, the mother bird will fly away." But no! When the fire touched the nest, with a wild scream she flew down, spread her wings over her helpless brood, and perished in the flames.

Oh, there was power in the love that made that little mother dare the flames and death in the endeavor to protect her birdlings. Forget not, there was power in the love that dared Gethsemane and Calvary that the sinner might live! That voice is still heard calling, "I have loved thee with an everlasting love." Ten times in the Holy Book we read about "wings" of the Almighty. They are always outstretched for the protection of His people.

Then, child of faith, take courage. Your Jehovah is a living God. Above every trusting servant He spreads the shadowing wings, while underneath He folds the "everlasting arms." "He shall cover thee with his feathers, and under his wings shalt thou trust."

To talk with Him, and walk with Him

As days may come and go,

Where darkened clouds may spread their gloom;

Or in the smile of day's bright glow

To find companionship divine

On every path below.

Unseen that Friend; and yet we love

The visions of His face.

Unclassed that Hand, so strong and sure;

And yet we share its grace.

In confidence divine we seek

The path His feet would trace.

Dear Lord, stay near. Thy presence lift

Above our shaded way.

Make real to our darkened sight

Thy purpose, lest our feet should stray

And miss the path our tears have hid,

That leads to perfect day.

SHOULD CHRISTIANS PAY TITHE?

out of a Jew . . . Love is a poor thing if it can't get more out of anybody than the law can. A son is hardly worth the name if he doesn't give better service than a slave."

TITHING IN THE NEW TESTAMENT

Jesus surely expected that the Christian's giving, like all other good works which flow from his faith, would be even greater than that of Israel under the law when He said, "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. 5:20).

One question may yet puzzle some minds. It may be asked: If, in the Christian era, the believer should still render to the Lord a faithful tithe, as well as giving offerings according to his ability, why is this obligation not more frequently referred to in the New Testament?

The answer is that tithing was so taken for granted by the early church that the New Testament writers had no need to write concerning it in their letters to the churches.

The reason why the subject crops up only in Paul's letters to the Corinthians becomes clear from a reading of them. In order that none in Corinth might accuse him of avarice, Paul had actually refused to accept anything from the believers there. In so doing he had mistakenly stifled their initial willingness to bear their share of the burden of the gospel, and had robbed them of a blessing. When he realized this, Paul begged the church's forgiveness, and corrected the error by instructing them in the obligation of systematic giving (2 Cor. 12:13).

In harmony with the recognition of the duty of tithing by the Apostle Paul, there are innumerable references in the writings of the church fathers showing that tithing was practiced by the early Christian church in every part of the empire, while nowhere do we find a word against the practice or suggesting a lesser proportion.

It is of particular interest to note that the British church, established very early by Christian traders, colonists, and missionaries, was a tithe-paying church.

Henry Lansdell, D. D., states that "tithe paying was known and practiced in this country by British Christians, and in churches of British origin, before, and apart from, the Italian mission of Augustine."—The Sacred Tenth, vol. I, page 250.

During the Middle Ages, the divinely ordained plan for the support of the gospel was lost along with many other precious truths. It was recovered and again taught by some of the reformers; but while many individuals and groups have recognized and practiced it through the years, it has never been adequately emphasized, with the sad results in the frustration of the work of the ministry at home and in mission lands with which we are only too familiar.

As, therefore, Jehoshaphat and Nehemiah in their days called the Israelites back to faithfulness in their responsibilities to God in "tithes and offerings," so there is need of a universal call to the sincere people of God today: "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat day's job and the night's amusement. They seek what money can buy and are slaves to it.

But the few have read this wonderful teaching of Christ and have found that little gate, called "strait" because it is a narrow place, not that it is so difficult, but it is hard to find if the crowd is followed. By entering therein you are led up that narrow path where brothers walk hand in hand and the joy of life is experienced with Christ our Guide.

"Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves. Ye shall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles? Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire. Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them." We are to take note of them and know who they are, but it is not ours to judge them.

"Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity." The self-righteous, the ungodly, the hypocrites, the wicked who pretend to be servants of Christ only for the protection it gives them and those who serve only for a reward and those who have pleased themselves and thought they did God a service, these are the doers of iniquity of whom He speaks. But what is His admonition?

"Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock. And every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell: and great was the fall of it."

The people were astonished at His teaching, for He taught them as one having authority. You and I have these words of Christ in our own Bibles. If we read these words of the Christ and do them we shall be like a wise man; but if we do them not we shall be as the foolish.

There is one thing that must be cleared up and settled now, once and forever: one thing to remember. You know that feeling of helplessness that comes over you when you look at the perfection of the only One who could keep these things perfectly and then at yourself and your weakness. You need not have that feeling of inability to keep these words and abide in this doctrine, for contained within the commandments is the promise that we may have the help that we need to do all His bidding. It is as the man who was granted the fulfillment of three wishes and having wisely wished first, that all for which he might further wish would be granted, had all that his heart desired. So we in this wonderful word of our Savior have the promise of all good things and the help that we may need to do all His will. Remember, we cannot do these things alone, but by the grace of God we can abide in the doctrine of Christ. May God strengthen everyone of us in His service.

Berean Department

Cecil A. Smead, Editor, Blanchard, Mich.

National Berean Conference

The National Berean Conference held at Oregon, Ill., August 9, 1937, was truly an inspiration to all who were there. Reports from the various committees showed that all had been working effectively the past year. As one delegate said, it was refreshing to hear in all the reports a note of accomplishment. Not one gave an alibi, or said there wasn't much to report. The Conference, in high spirits, gave a vote of thanks to the officers of the Society, the Berean Editor, the Social Correspondence, Junior Home Study, and other committees, for their excellent work.

Your officers for the coming year are: President, Harry Goekler, Hammond, La.; first vice president, Gerald L. Cooper, Ripley, Ill.; second vice president, Elmo Gaspar, Eden Valley, Minn.; secretary, Roselin Fredlund, Mora, Minn.; treasurer, Lucille LeCrone, Kennard, Neb.

The Berean Editor, Bro. Cecil Smead, reported fifty-six articles submitted from various states (Minnesota was at the top, with seventeen—C. A. S.). He needs your assistance in articles and reports.

Roselin Fredlund, Secretary.

A Card of Thanks

Many splendid articles by Bereans have appeared on this page. There is an idealism manifested by young people that influences many even of the older people to press on to higher conquests. Youth is the time of vision, of aspirations to greater things. Therefore, I appreciate sincerely the compliment you have paid me in appointing me again as Berean Editor. I humbly accept the responsibilities you have placed upon my shoulders. But you must realize that the job of editor is of necessity a job that if one person does all the work the effort must fail. I need your help, otherwise I cannot succeed.

As we look forward to the year's work, our faces are upturned toward the same vision: to influence ourselves and others toward more unity, truth, and righteousness.

Some persons have a knack of influencing others. Whatever they say gets across. People accept their views readily. Perhaps some are born with the knack, but in the majority of instances the ability to deal with people successfully comes simply by learning the rules and observing them.

It is a sad fact that many people start out life with high hopes, but through inability to get people to like them they drift into discouragement, and in middle age find themselves settled down in a complacent rut, and end up at last by never accomplishing much. And all the time the remedy is right at hand; they simply have failed to observe the little niceties of dealing with others. Many of us are now starting out with our first steps on the climb toward the peak of service. We must avoid the paths where our feet will slip back more than they will go forward. I need your help; you need mine.

By virtue of the trust you have imposed upon me as your Editor, I find myself in a unique position where it is possible for me to advise you on the most effective ways of influencing others in what you write and in what you say. In order for me to do this it will be necessary for you each to send me an article you have written. I will ask my wife to help and we will go carefully over each article for the purpose of discovering the methods you are using to make your article a success. We will notice the sentences that we think are most productive of good, and see, perhaps, if there are any that we think should be reworded, deleted, or rearranged for more effectiveness. Then if you wish we will correspond with you regarding the article, which will enable you to repeat the successful methods and stop the methods that arouse resentment, antagonism, and are not productive of good. This should help you in your writing and in your speech. It will also help me, your Editor, for I will follow the successful methods we discover in your articles. I, also, am trying to grow in the ability to influence people toward unity, truth, and righteousness. Let us all go forward together.

Minnesota Conference

The Minnesota Annual Berean Conference was held at Eden Valley, July 31 and August 1. The following officers were elected: President, Carrol Bennett, Litchfield; first vice president, Lila Kirkpatrick, Little Falls; second vice president, Ross Hillman, Graytown, Wis.; secretary, Roselin Fredlund, Mora; treasurer, Lorraine Brossard, Litchfield.

We were glad to welcome the Graytown, Wis., Bereans who asked for membership with the Minnesota society.

Roselin Fredlund, Secretary.

Be the Fellow That Your Mother Thinks You Are

While walking down a crowded city street the other day,

I heard a little urchin to a comrade turn and say:
"Say, Jimmie, don't you know, I'd be happy as a clam

If I only was de feller dat me mudder tinks I am.
She tinks I am a wonder, and knows her little lad

Would never mix wit nuttin dat was ugly, mean, or bad.
I often sit and tink how nice 'twould be—gee whiz,

If a feller was de feller dat his mudder tinks he is."
So, folks, be yours a life of toil, or undiluted joy,

You still can learn a lesson from the small unlettered boy.
Don't try to be an earthly saint, with eyes fixed on a star;

Just try to be the fellow that your mother thinks you are.

IN GOD'S KEEPING

FREDDIE, who was just past six years old, lived with his father and his mother and his little baby sister on the edge of a small town. Nearby was a farmhouse, and every evening Freddie had to go there for milk for his little sister.

Now along the side of the road leading to the farm was a dense woods. And Freddie shuddered every evening as he walked quickly past it. Every shadow looked like some wild animal ready to jump out at him. Every noise of the birds or insects in the woods to his foolish ears sounded like a person in distress, calling to him for help.

Freddie had been going for the milk every evening for three long months when suddenly he decided one evening on the way home that he couldn't go again. There was no one else who could go, because Mother couldn't leave the baby to go and Father returned home too late from his work. Baby sister would be too hungry to wait that long.

Freddie had just come to the edge of the woods that evening when he happened to look up into the sky. There he saw a big, bright star, and it seemed to go ahead of him as he walked along with his pail of milk. He was whistling to keep up his courage and to drown out the sounds that frightened him so terribly.

When his eyes lighted upon the beautiful star he thought of the words that Mother had read to him just the evening before after he had returned from his usual errand: "He that keepeth thee will not slumber." He could still hear her soft voice.

"The Lord is thy keeper," Mother had also read, "the Lord is thy shade upon thy right hand. The sun shall not smite thee by day, nor the moon by night." Why should anyone be afraid? he asked himself.

Then Freddie thought of the One who had made the stars and the moon. Yes, God had made the woods and the birds and the insects also! And he thought that the One who had created all things for man to enjoy surely would not allow harm to come to a little boy who was going for milk for his baby sister.

God was so great, thought Freddie, that He could make all these things; something that the greatest man he had ever heard of couldn't do. And this same God never sleeps, as Mother had read to him from Psalm 121 just last night.

Why, God was awake up there somewhere beyond the stars, and He was watching over him as he walked along the path! As he watched the star march along the heavens ahead of him, he seemed to feel God's presence right with him.

Freddie stopped whistling so that he could hear the last bird call to his mate that night was coming. He wanted to hear the crickets chirp also. And instead of looking at the empty prairie on the other side, as he generally did, he looked at the woods and saw the tall, straight trees. They seemed to be lifting their arms up to God for His blessing before darkness came down and hid them from sight.

Suddenly Freddie discovered that he was at the edge of the woods, and in a few minutes he would be home safe with Mother. Then little baby sister could have her milk. How glad he was he had not told Mother, as he had planned to do when he started out tonight, that he couldn't go again! For it would have worried Mother very much indeed.

As the small boy neared the house he began his cheerful whistle, which his mother had often told him made her feel so happy in having such a dependable son. He straightened up his small shoulders and entered the house.

Every evening after that Freddie found something new or something interesting in the woods or in the sky. He learned many things about the stars and the trees and the birds and insects. For he always asked Mother or his teacher all about the things he didn't understand. He took different things that he found to school, and the whole class often became interested also.

Best of all, Freddie knew deep down in his heart that God was with him at all times. And this thought kept him brave and cheerful no matter what errand he had to do.

It also did another thing for Freddie. It kept him from doing many things that are wrong. "Because," thought the little boy, "God, who watches over me so carefully, would see, and it would grieve Him."

And God is just as watchful over little girls as well. For all God's children are His special treasure. And, "the Lord shall preserve thee from all evil: he shall preserve thy soul. The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in from this time forth, and even for evermore."

AMONG THE CHURCHES

SKELTON, WEST VIRGINIA

Again the faithful little congregation at Skelton has been given reason for rejoicing. A party of six drove to Maurertown, Va., last Friday night to attend the conference and remained until the following Sunday afternoon. On Saturday three members of the party, Mr. Michael Szoke and his wife, Mrs. Rose Szoke, and Miss Asilee Capps, were baptized by Bro. G. E. Marsh into the name of the Lord Jesus.

The party was headed by Bro. Poland, who has accomplished such a splendid work in the vicinity of his home, which is located in a mining region in south-central West Virginia. Bro. V. Earl Thayer visited the community at the request of the brethren there and baptized a number of believers some time ago. It is hoped that more frequent contact may be made between the church at Skelton, which is already contemplating starting a church building fund, and the older congregations of Virginia.

Bro. and Sr. Wilsie McKnight present a product of outstanding merit and beauty. On the market August 30, 1937; net weight, 8 pounds, 11 ounces; quantity, 1; type, boy; title, William Raymond; on display, Copley Hospital, Aurora, Illinois.

ATER, TEXAS

The Church of God meeting which was held at Ater, Texas, with Bro. T. A. Drinkard conducting the services, was brought to a close Sunday evening, August 29. We were very happy to see so much interest manifested by everyone throughout the meeting.

Bro. Walter Roberts led the song services, with Mrs. Ollie Little at the piano.

The following accepted the gospel invitation and were baptized: Delbert Melton, Edith Kays, and Imogene Whisenhunt.

Bro. Drinkard will return on the first Sunday of each month to assist with the work we have started.

Mrs. Wayne Yows.

Bro. C. E. Lapp, pastor of the Church of God at St. Cloud, Minn., writes: "On the evening of August 29 the St. Cloud congregation had the privilege of hearing Bro. Harry Gockler bring a message from the Word of God. We were very glad for that opportunity and also for the good message that he brought us. We are glad to welcome any of the brethren who may be near to come and strengthen us in the Word of God."

1887 Iowa's Fiftieth Conference 1937

Once more the Iowa State Conference, which convened August 21-29, 1937, has gone into history. Oh! how good to enter the camp grounds with the warm handclasp of friends we meet year after year and now and then a new friendship is made to enrich our memories of Conference days.

The intangible things are not the only ones that make this week happy and precious to the brethren, but the truths gained by many years of previous study of the Scriptures by ministers and teachers who give so freely and ably of their gospel wisdom.

We were happy to have with us this year Bro. Melville Lyon of Cleveland, Ohio, and Bro. and Sr. John Denchfield and Darlene, who have worked the greater part of the past year in Iowa. The ones coming the farthest were Ida Renner Shepard of Madera, Calif., and Mr. and Mrs. Guy Neale of Clearwater, Fla. The number enrolled compared favorably with that of last year.

The Bereans used a half day this year with business and program in the afternoon and Bro. Denchfield conducted the Berean sermon in the evening.

Saturday afternoon was in charge of the Fiftieth Year Jubilee Program Committee, with Bro. A. M. Jones presiding. Bro. O. J. Allard talked much about the work done by the pioneers in the gospel work in the state, and paid tribute to the late beloved Bro. A. J. Eychaner with whom he was so closely associated. Bro. J. M. Prime read a paper prepared by Bro. Eychaner about the many conferences held, the first one at Watkins Wells in the year 1887, the spot which is so well known in the writer's community as Lake Comar in Story County. This paper also recorded the beginning of Berean work, of which Bro. Eychaner was the founder. Bro. Frank Marsh read about the work and conference at Irving. Sr. Eychaner told of interesting things at the Marshalltown camp. Bro. O. J. Allard was also one of the pioneers in the gospel work, serving the State Conference fifteen years as president.

Bros. Lyon and Prime and Srs. Prime and Ann Patrice Prime sang "Beautiful Days," the song we like so well, composed by Bro. Eychaner. Several told of things that happened at their first conference or some other little interesting reminiscences.

Bro. Williams gave a sermonette, "Let Us Go On." The church has started on the way to the Father in Christ, so it must move on to its final destination.

An outstanding sermon by Bro. Lyon on "God's Jubilee" was in harmony with our golden jubilee anniversary.

A liberal offering was made and the observance as a whole was much enjoyed and one long to be remembered.

The result of the election of state officers was as follows: Herman Hunt, Clarksville, president; A. M. Jones, Eagle Grove, vice president; Mrs. J. M. Kiger, Marengo, recording secretary; Esther Sealine, Stanhope, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Lee Fish, Maxwell, treasurer.

Mrs. W. H. Allard, Cedar Falls, was appointed chairman of the Building Committee. Building funds may be sent to her, and the funds for general and evangelistic work to Mrs. Lee Fish. Everyone who saw the interior of the church building was very much pleased with it, though it is not yet complete. The acoustics is very good. There is still some indebtedness on it and any help on it, as well as for the general work of the coming year, would be greatly appreciated.

Bro. J. W. Williams and Bro. Arthur Jones will have charge of much of the work the coming year.

There is always rejoicing when one is added to the church. John Phillips requested baptism, and after the baptism had been administered the Communion service was held.

A memorial service was conducted by Bro. Williams in memory of those who have passed from this life during the past year. He also held the closing service of Sunday evening.

Sr. Arnold Sealine wishes to express her appreciation for the remembrance sent her from Conference friends.

And so another successful Conference has closed.

Esther Sealine, Cor. Sec.

(This is the part of the report left over from last week.)

Under the heading of new business Bro. F. L. Austin presented the matter of the deed for the Eldorado church property. This deed had been incorrectly drawn up. It was the desire of the Eldorado church members to have their deed made to the Illinois State Conference in trust for the Eldorado members. Bro. Austin consulted lawyers and after much research found out how to have the deed made, and the Eldorado members had it corrected and drawn to the Illinois State Conference, subject to certain necessary rules and regulations. After this had been done it was found that the Illinois State Conference has no rules and regulations in its constitution whereby it can receive, hold, and regulate such property.

Therefore, the following resolution was offered to the Conference:

"Whereas the Eldorado Church of God in Christ Jesus, as an affiliate member of the Illinois State Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus, has conveyed its church property to the said above named Conference, subject to certain conditions and rules with reference to the management and control of any such conveyed local church properties; and

"Whereas the constitution of the said Illinois State Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus does not now provide for handling such properties, as has been conveyed by the Eldorado Church; and

"Whereas it is the intent of this Illinois State Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus to so amend its constitution as to provide for receiving and controlling any or all such conveyed properties according to rules and regulations, and to make such amendment at the earliest possible convenient time; therefore,

"Be it resolved that the Illinois State Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus hereby direct its secretary to give proper, due, and legal notice of intent to offer the following amendment to the constitution of the Illinois State Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus at its regular annual meeting in the year 1938, namely:

"Be it resolved that the constitution of the Illinois State Conference of the Churches of God in Christ Jesus be and is hereby amended by the following addition to be known as Amendment Number 1; to read as follows:

"This Conference shall have power to acquire by purchase or by donation, or to sell, both real and personal property, subject to the following provisions:

"1. Real estate or personal property of the value of one hundred dollars or more shall be purchased or sold only after approval by the Executive Board, as provided in paragraph number 3.

"2. Donations to this Conference of property with conditions that impose obligations on this Conference shall be accepted only after approval by the Executive Board, as provided in paragraph number 3.

"3. Approval for purchase, sale, or acceptance of property shall be by an affirmative vote of two thirds of the members of the Executive Board at a meeting. Notice of the time, place, and the nature of the business to be considered shall be given to each member ten days prior to said meeting, and unless such notice is given, approval shall not be valid.

"The Executive Board shall have power to do any and all things necessary to protect the interests of this Conference in any property which it now has or may acquire."

"Be it also further resolved that the Executive Board elected as of this date be and is hereby authorized to place in force at once as between this Conference and the said Eldorado Church the rules declared as of intent, as stated in the above proposed amendment, including authorization that the Eldorado Church shall appoint three trustees to hold the Beneficial Title of said conveyed property, to manage, care for, protect, and utilize said property in trust for the said Eldorado Church at the said church's own expense and responsibility, all in every way the same as if the church had retained its property."

A motion was passed that the resolution be adopted.

The reason for conveying local church properties to the State Conference is to insure that the properties shall remain at the disposal of the church in the event of the death or disbanding of members constituting the local organization.

A letter from Bro. Lyle Rankin of Cashmere, Wash., contained the following, which was written after his return home:

"I am pleased to report that while Bro. and Sr. Corbaley and I were in Wichita, Kan., we had the pleasure of instructing a family in the way of life, and four of the family, Florence, Leonard, Gladys, and Warren Dart, were obedient in baptism. The parents had been obedient eleven years previous. Let the people of God pray for these to be faithful and endure unto the end.

"I arrived home safely the morning of August 29, having enjoyed the trip throughout. I thank God that I could have such a journey, and also I thank those who made the trip possible and enjoyable, and I am grateful for the hospitality shown me while attending the Conference."

HYMNOLOGY

By J. W. McLain

HYMNOLOGY is, primarily, the study and science of hymns. It would seem appropriate to include under that head the presentation of the same. Much knowledge of hymns would be of little importance in adding to our worship program if there is no feeling of appropriateness, timeliness, and value of the hymns in question.

It is no uncommon occurrence to find an invitation hymn being sung for a Sunday school opening song of praise. It is quite often that particularly slow and solemn tunes are selected for children's work in Sunday school and Bereau study.

Another extreme is the use of light, lilting music at the devotional service, when the more solid, worshipful hymn would be appropriate.

It would seem that our hymn worship would become more effective if the appropriateness of the hymn to the occasion were observed. Songs such as, "Jesus Loves Me," "Bring Them In," "Everybody Ought to Love Jesus," etc., should be appropriate in Sunday school work or any occasion where children participate.

"All Hail the Power," "In the Cross of Christ I Glory," "My Jesus, I Love Thee," are types of songs appropriate to the more solemn worship service.

The atmosphere for the sermon presentation can very successfully be prepared by choice selection of words and tunes that prepare the audience for the particular trend of thought desired.

An abuse of timeliness is to draw the congregation into a splendid spirit of worship through the solemn hymn, and then to offend the delicate sensibilities of all by callously turning to such as, "Onward Christian Soldiers."

A hymn has no value to worship if the thought expressed is in no sense biblical. Entirely too many songs are abroad that are the product of fancy rather than fact.

Every song writer at some point in his career is drawn to express a philosophy of life, death, the hereafter, reward, etc., because these are vital questions to every human to a certain degree. Our problem is to sort out those that are not the product of the devoted disciples of Christ and students of His Word.

We all make mistakes in providing a perfect relationship between the song service and each particular type of worship service. But we should at least make preparation for each song service, with the aim that the selection and the order of songs will contribute to the effect and the attainment of the aim of each meeting.

THE BIBLE IN OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS

pointedly asks, "Why is it that entirely aside from its religious bearings, this Book is not found worthy as literature, as philosophy, as history, of a place among the fundamental elements of knowledge which are compulsory in all institutions of learning?" Such testimony can be quoted from scores of other great teachers and gives us a positive answer to the first question.

Does the schoolroom present an undesirable situation for Bible study? I am inclined to believe that only the home affords a better one, but it is common knowledge that that institution has been gradually shifting this responsibility to the church and school. Due to the fact that the school reaches more children more often in a better organized learning situation than does the church under its present organization, it stands to reason that the school is deserving of more recognition as an institution in which to teach God's Word.

As to the preparation of teachers in the subject matter of the Bible there might be some debate. But certainly they should be as well prepared for the task as are most Sunday school teachers. Give the Bible equal importance with other subjects, and teachers will be required to prepare themselves to teach it. For you who fear that teachers would not be prepared to teach the Bible intelligently and spiritually it will be admitted that in every profession we shall find a few poorly qualified in this respect. The Sunday school is not always free from such teachers.

Are teachers indifferent to the moral welfare of their pupils? In answer to this question Washington Gladden, writing in the Atlantic Monthly, says, "A considerable acquaintance with teachers impresses me with the belief that the feeling of their responsibility for the moral welfare of their pupils, and their appreciation of the values of character, are steadily deepening among them. No profession is so sacred that shallow and self-seeking persons do not find a place in it; but I believe that as much seriousness and devotion may be found among the teachers of our common schools as among any other class of persons—the clergy not excepted."

Most educators agree that none of the reasons mentioned have caused the state and school to adopt the present attitude toward the Bible. Instead they place the responsibility upon religion. They believe that our insistence upon religious neutrality in America has made teachings of our sacred Book virtually inaccessible for purposes of instruction to the children of our public schools. Is it not a pity that religion, which should be the bond of peace, the force that should enable us to dwell together in unity, is the wedge that divides us and prohibits popular teaching of the Word of God? Educators of all shades of religious belief lament the restrictions which permit children to be taught geography, but not about God who made the earth; botany, but not about God, the great Creator; physiology, but not about God who made man; astronomy, but not about God whom the heavenly bodies obey; history, but not about inspired prophecy and the divine providence in human affairs; human laws, but not about the divine commands for human conduct.

To the reader it will be quite evident that in this discussion no solution of the problem has been suggested. There seems to be no immediate solution. Perhaps this is but one of the encouraging "signs" of the times. If this is true, we need not view the problem with alarm but should welcome it as one of the agents ushering in the new order. To a considerable number of people, however, the problem is merely a sign of a decaying civilization, a social phenomenon of gloomy significance. They understand it as one of the primary causes for the present distraught condition of the world and believe that unless religion can be given a place in education, under the new condition of modern life, and in the light of modern science, comparable with that which religion once held, human civilization is in danger of further disaster and ultimate ruin.

SHOULD CHRISTIANS PAY TITHE?

in mine house" (Mal. 3:10).

If all who named the name of Christ were to respond with the whole-hearted consecration which was seen in Israel as a result of the appeals of these leaders, a similar mighty surge of revival power would sweep through the church of God today.

The ministry would no longer need to dissipate their energies augmenting the dwindling finances of the church, but would be able to devote themselves wholly to their sacred calling. The poor would be properly cared for, and thousands more consecrated messengers of the cross would be able to go forth carrying the good news of salvation to earth's remotest bounds.

And far from being impoverished by returning to the Lord His own, His faithful people would prove again the Lord's promise through the Prophet Malachi: "Prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it" (Mal. 3:10).

Even now there are many thousands of earnest Christian people in every land who have embraced again the Lord's plan for the support and extension of His work. Without exception, they testify that, as they have rendered a faithful tithe, the Lord has blessed what remained, as He did the barrel of meal and the cruse of oil of the woman of Zarephath. With one accord they rejoice in reaching higher ground in faith and life. And as they have seen the result of their giving in souls won for the kingdom of God, they have found a satisfaction of spirit which is indeed their chief reward.

May you, my reader, join this loyal band and share their burden and their joy.—W. L. Emerson in Signs of the Times,

The Hope of Israel

By D. G. Harvey

"And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers."—Acts 26:6.

SINCE the dawn of history, mankind has been divided on the question of future life. Three thousand five hundred years ago Job asked the question, "If a man die, shall he live again?" (Job 14:14). Then, moved by the Spirit, he answers his own question in verse 15. "Thou shalt call, and I will answer thee: thou wilt have a desire to the work of thine hands." This division of thought prevailed in Paul's day, for we read of dissension between the Pharisees and the Sadducees: "And the multitude was divided." On what question were they divided? "For the Sadducees say that there is no resurrection, neither angel, nor spirit: but the Pharisees confess both" (Acts 23:8).

Without knowledge of this great truth there can be no hope. We remain in the same condition as the Gentiles of old: "that at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope and without God in the world" (Eph. 2:12).

Paul warns against ignorance and this hopeless condition in 1 Thessalonians 4:13, "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope." Look at Peter, when the test came to him. When he saw his Master taken he did not fully understand. He had no hope. In his fear he even denied his Lord, saying, "I know him not." Without hope he became a coward.

But this same Peter, when knowledge came and hope revived, boldly proclaimed the gospel of Jesus Christ without fear. He was a witness of the resurrection of Christ. Note his logic in the reference he makes to the tomb of David (Acts 2:29). The Jews knew of those two tombs. They knew that the tomb of David was not open and they knew that the tomb of Jesus was open! What greater proof could Peter have given in that city that Jesus had really risen from the dead? Can we wonder at the fact that three thousand came to believe on that day?

Today we have more evidence in history that Jesus lived than we have that Alexander, Cæsar, and Napoleon, lived. Of these latter men, we have ancient history alone as proof. But we have evidence on every hand that Jesus once lived. Why do we write, "1937 A. D."? Some great event occurred at that point in history that changed the affairs of men, even to the method of keeping time.

Again, if Jesus never lived, why do we have churches bearing His name? Why do we have Bible schools, Bibles, and Bible helps? Had Jesus died and remained in the grave as other men do, would He have been heard of today? But He arose!

We accept the annals of history as true, which are the recorded acts of men. Then why not also accept as true the recorded acts of Jesus? Why not accept them as history, if nothing more?

Paul writes of how Christ died, was buried, and rose again the third day from the dead. In support of his record he gives us as evidence not only the testimony of the apostles, but also that of many other witnesses, for "he was seen of above five hundred brethren at once" (1 Cor. 15:6). Had Paul's story been false, would it not have been proved false at once? Remember how Gamaliel, a learned Pharisee and "celebrated Rabbi and member of the Sanhedrin," and a former teacher of Paul, reasoned before the council. Calling attention to many would-be reformers who had passed by and been forgotten, he said, "And now I say unto you, Refrain from these men, and let them alone: for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought: but if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; lest haply ye be found even to fight against God" (Acts 5:38, 39).

The fact that the work did not die out, is proof that Jesus rose from the dead!

Then Paul reasons in the 15th chapter of 1 Corinthians (vv. 12-18), that if there is no resurrection, there is no hope: death ends all, and man returns to dust never to be seen again,

Pertinent Comments on the News of the Day

G. E. Marsh, Editor

British "Failure in Palestine"

"In that day will I make Jerusalem a burdensome stone for all people: all that burden themselves with it shall be cut in pieces."—Zechariah 12:3.

LONDON, England, Sept. 3.—Lord Strabolgi, in an article appearing in American newspapers, asserts that Great Britain has been forced to retreat from the positions it has occupied in Palestine owing to its inability to keep the peace between the Arabs and the Jews.

"On August 7, 1936," he writes, "following on one of the numerous outbreaks of unrest and bloodshed by the 900,000 Arab inhabitants, an exceptionally strong royal commission was appointed by King Edward VIII to enquire into the cause of the trouble."

The commission reported its findings and recommendations, with the nature of which our readers are already familiar, on July 8 of the present year. Lord Strabolgi, commenting on the recommendation that Palestine be separated into three sections, anticipates that the Government and probably the League of Nations will agree to such an arrangement, but asserts that to do this "records a failure, after seventeen years of British administration and statesmanship." Emphasizing the alleged failure, the noble author declares that "it must be admitted that this is the greatest setback to British prestige since the loss of the American colonies."

The language of Zechariah, quoted at the opening of this editorial, is significant, especially when its context is carefully considered. Jerusalem shall become "a burdensome stone" to all nations "that burden themselves with it" at a time approaching the day "when they shall be in the siege both against Judah and against Jerusalem" (Zech. 12:2).

World Ills and Sun Spots

"Let there be lights . . . for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and for years."—Genesis 1:14.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 3.—That the sun has much to do with life upon the earth has always been recognized, but that it has direct effect upon the destiny of races and nations is but beginning to be understood or imagined by our theoretical scientists. According to latest reports the unity of the solar system is much more complete than has been generally supposed. The terrific "storms" which sweep the face of the sun from time to time seem to exert a definite effect upon life that exists upon this planet. It has been observed that with each successive occurrence of "sun spots," not only has the weather of the earth apparently been influenced, generally for the worse, but the temperament of humanity has been stimulated.

The result has been that wars and commotions among the nations, increased crime among the peoples of the earth, terrestrial storms, droughts, and floods, together with pestilences and famines have been experienced in all parts of the world during the periods when these mysterious solar tempests prevailed.

In connection with these recent "discoveries" it is of interest to recall the purpose of God in the creation of the sun and the other heavenly bodies as stated in the Bible.

"And God said, Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven to divide the day from the night; and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and for years" (Gen. 1:14).

The Hebrew word translated "signs" in this place is rendered "miracles" elsewhere, and the word "seasons" is used in other places to designate great divisions of times (Acts 1:7), which compose distinct eras of divine accomplishment. The sun, then, may be regarded as one of God's prophetic "yardsticks" in a dual sense: first, it marks off the passage of the years into ages; and second, it passes through certain mysterious changes of a miraculous nature which serve to tell those who are "not in darkness" (1 Thess. 5:4, 5) of the nearness of the day of the Lord.

War in the Far East

"Tidings out of the east and out of the north shall trouble him."—Daniel 11:44.

SHANGHAI, China, Sept. 4.—Among the latest developments in connection with the undeclared war now raging in China is the report that Russia is secretly planning to take part in the conflict owing to the fact that the Russian "sphere of influence" in northern Mongolia is threatened by the Japanese advance in that direction. Should such an eventuality occur there is no way of telling how far the conflagration would spread, as Russia has secret agreements with France which might possibly involve that nation in the struggle. Owing to the meager and very unreliable information leaking out of the Far East it is difficult to know what the actual situation is at the present time.

Studies in the Christian Life

THE aim of the Sunday school lessons of the coming quarter (October to December) as stated by the International Lesson Committee is: "To create and deepen individual fellowship with Christ and to quicken the conscience of Christians that they may carry the spirit of Christ into all their activities and relationships."

To achieve such a purpose as this is surely worth much time and effort. There is nothing more important than to create and deepen fellowship with Christ, whom to know aright is life eternal.

The lessons of the quarter begin with a consideration of Christian sonship. To be made the sons of God is a sublime privilege, the ultimate greatness of which we can only dimly appreciate. It is not through the works of righteousness that we have done, but through God's mercy and grace. He does not leave us to try to live aright in our own strength. Rather, He gives us of His Spirit to assist us, and to lead us, and to guard us from stumbling.

After we have become God's children we should live in a manner befitting our heavenly lineage. This will mean, among other things, a proper control of the tongue. To no small extent a man's speech is a manifestation of his inner character.

According to James—and most people will readily assent—there is nothing more difficult to control than the tongue. But it is possible to have our lips so purged with a live coal from God's altar that our speech will be truly Christian in character.

Not only our speech, but all our conduct should show forth the new life which we have in Christ Jesus. The fruits of the Spirit—love, joy, peace, longsuffering, meekness, gentleness—should be borne by one who has the Spirit of Christ. But as a branch can bear fruit only as it is united with the vine, so also can we bear the fruits of the Spirit only as we are united with Christ.

The true Christian will not only be correct in his outward conduct, but he will enjoy inward peace and rest such as come alone through the presence of God's Spirit in the heart. Christ promised to give rest to the weary and heavy-laden. And Paul exhorted us to let the peace of God rule in our hearts.

Peace of mind is an inestimable boon which millions have sought for in vain. It is one of the most blessed truths of the gospel that such peace may be ours, without money and without price, if we will come to Jesus and learn of Him. Where this peace exists there is also fellowship with God and with His Son Jesus the Christ.

Christians should not keep to themselves the spiritual blessings that are theirs. But they should strive always to extend them to others. We all should be workers together in behalf of Christ. Christian consecration includes a willingness to do whatever God may direct. Surely no one who professes to follow Christ should do less.

ADAPTING LESSONS TO YOUNG CHILDREN

It is generally supposed that some of the Uniform Lessons are hard to adapt to the little folk. And this is particularly true of the majority of the lessons for the fourth quarter. If the Uniform Lessons are used in all departments, what can be done when the lesson text is of such a character that it would be too difficult or uninteresting for the primary children or even for the juniors?

There are several things that can be done. In the first place, the special topics for these departments can be developed by the resourceful teacher independently of the lesson text, or with only such reference to the text as may seem suitable. Every teacher should have ideas of his own, and may develop the topics in other directions and with such illustration and stories as may suggest themselves. Of course, a teacher is always at liberty to develop a topic of his own.

Again in difficult lessons a teacher may base his teaching upon a text different from the printed one, often using something that is related. Not infrequently when a lesson includes more than the printed text, there will be found a portion in the larger lesson that is better adapted to the little folk than is the printed portion.

The teacher of young children ought never to be tied down to the lesson text. He should feel free to introduce other material, though preferably this should be as closely related to the lesson as possible. Thus, if there is a lesson on Ezekiel or Jeremiah or Peter or John, instead of considering a text that is didactic or hortatory in nature, the wise teacher will use other material concerning these men.

The more the teacher knows of the Bible and about biblical characters, the more interesting and helpful will be his descriptions and stories. Occasionally a series of lessons is designed primarily for the consideration of important topics, as is true of the lessons of the coming quarter. In such cases, even in teaching adults one should by no means feel limited to the lesson text.

For primary children there should be considerable use of the concrete in the lesson period. No matter how well a lesson is adapted to the little folk, it is difficult for them, as well as for the teacher, to spend the full period directly upon the lesson itself. Handwork that is related in some way to the lesson is highly desirable, as well as the use of colored picture cards and blackboard drawings and other things of an objective nature.

A sand table is a great aid to the resourceful teacher. There is almost no end to the biblical scenes that can be represented thereon. But it can be used with the most profit only where there is a separate room for the primaries.

Another aid which is very attractive is the "feltogram." It is made by covering a light board, approximately 38 by

Grace Manifested

Titus 2:11-14

GRACE is the unmerited favor of God. It does not depend upon our actions at all. It is as free to the vilest as the cleanest.

Across all human actions is written, "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God." As the poet says, "And when our holiest works are done our soul depends on grace alone."

Grace is manifested through but one medium and that the Lord Jesus Christ. Law to correct and discipline came through Moses; but grace and truth came through Jesus Christ (John 1:17). Grace was impersonated in Christ. It was such that accepting the lowest poverty He was made rich in the highest sense. He showed grace in His attitude toward people while on earth. When Pharisee condemned. He forgave, and sent away with a new lease on life and new inspiration. The woman taken in adultery was bidden go and sin no more, when conscience-stricken accusers had stolen out one by one.

Grace is a teacher. We must not abuse it by casting off moral obligations. Some do so now and did in Paul's time. "Shall we continue in sin, that grace may abound?" "God forbid," was Paul's answer. "How shall we that are dead to sin live any longer therein?" Grace is a dominion, a realm of action, as well as a cleansed of the slate of sin's record.

Grace's teaching is very simple, having a negative and a positive phase. Denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, the negative; living soberly, righteously, and godly, the positive.

The subjects of grace are the lights of the world, or at least the aggregate of them is the light of the world.

Grace is expectant. It looks for the blessed or happy hope connected with the coming and glory of the second appearing of Christ. Jesus manifests both grace and glory, thus becoming the author and finisher of our faith.

Though the hope He clearly set forth, the emphasis is on the practical exhibition of Christian character. This world is the sphere of action and good works the operation.

The one who is to come was once here and gave Himself for believers. To be sure, He gave Himself in behalf of all, but believers are the ones in whom the fruit of this gift is seen.

He "gave himself." That is the most effectual gift. Some give things, but withhold the gift of self. Such do not effect the purpose that the giving of self does. The mother gives herself to the child. That is far better than things. Things are included, but the gift of self is the first consideration.

The purpose is wide. We have it in Galatians 1:4 that He gave Himself for our sins, that He might deliver us from this present evil world according to the will of God our Father. But the purpose connected with our passage is wider and deeper. He gave Himself for us, which included our sins, and the discipline of purification, also, that we might bring forth good works.

The gift means redemption. That is a buying back of that which had gone out of our hands through mortgage encumbrance. When the property is about to be sold, the stepping forward of some one who pays off the mortgage and returns the property to the original owner is a good illustration of redemption or buying back. Provision was made for this in the law of Moses. The case of Naomi and Boaz is in point here. Elimelech's estate had fallen into the hands of another while Naomi was away in the land of Moab. She found herself, on her return, without the property which had slipped away from her in her absence. There was a near relative whose office it was to redeem the inheritance. When apprised of the fact, he declined when he learned that redemption involved marriage with Ruth the heiress. Boaz, the next of kin, redeemed it and took the damsel to wife.

Ransom is a term to express the benefit of the gift. This is much in evidence in modern times in the matter of kidnaping. A child or some member of a wealthy family is seized and held for ransom to get it back. The money is paid in a secret arrangement and the kidnaped one delivered. There must be great care lest the kidnapers get angry and destroy the captured one. The love of the family for the one taken is appealed to and there must be great precaution that the captured one be not injured.

This is but a small part of the matter of ransom in kidnaping cases. The full settlement of the case requires the arrest and punishment of the kidnapers. The family has to attend to the getting back of the relative. The kidnaper is still at large and the law has to run him down and give him his just dues of punishment.

No human illustration can set forth the work of Christ in its fullness. It can do only a part of it. Take the day of atonement as set forth in Leviticus. We have two goats, one of which is killed and the other is led away into the wilderness. These represent Christ in both His death and life. The sacrifice for sin in one and the actual taking away of sins in His resurrected state.

In the application of this redemption, the captor, the kidnaper, the mortgagee, is Satan, the Devil. Christ is the Redeemer because He is the nearest of kin and capable of doing the work. He is the one paying the ransom price and who arrests the culprit responsible for our enslaved condition. His redemption, then, means the restoration of all rights and privileges of the one under bondage and destruction of him who has brought this upon us. This whole transaction is stated by the writer to the Hebrews: "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage" (Heb. 2:14, 15).

Personal redemption from this bondage awaits personal faith. The power of deliverance is then felt and the purification is instituted that results in good deeds. This faith is honored in the cleansing of the soul from the consciousness of guilt (Heb. 9:13, 14).

This redemption is complete. No taint of guilt remains after the cleansing faith. This life is one of vision. "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God" (Matt. 5:8).

The purified ones are to be God's own possession. This is the meaning of "peculiar" in this connection. It is not oddity, as some would imagine. Many strange things are

Public Enemy Number One

By J. W. McLain

WE ARE all familiar with the much-dramatized, much-eulogized, much-idolized Public Enemy, the gangster. We realize that not one of us is exempt from paying toll to him, in that the per capita cost of crime is approximately $128.00. While we are impressed with the grim reality of this public menace, yet there is, surely, a still greater menace that might well deserve the title, Public Enemy Number One.

Death is the real menace, the real enemy of the human race. Even though the poets would make of it nothing more than a transition, or an entrance into some unknown fairy-land, yet it is revealed in the Scriptures as a monster that plays no favorites, the grim reaper that brings, not blessing, but sorrow and anguish.

We are apt to forget that death is a part of the curse that was pronounced upon Adam and upon the ground. We are likely to overlook the fact that, whatever there is in death is there because of sin and transgression, not because of righteousness. The wages of sin is death.

If death could be looked upon as merely transitory to the blessings and rewards of God, we could see God lovingly administering the same. But we find, in blunt contrast to such thought, that God has no pleasure in the death of him who dies.

More significant is the fact that the last enemy that will be destroyed is death. Christ took on Himself the seed of Abraham, the nature of man, that through death He might destroy him that has the power over death. It was to attain a position in which He might have the power over death and be able to restore life to those who had died, that Christ suffered, died, and rose again.

In His resurrection Christ was made a quickening (life-giving) spirit. Triumphant over death, Christ was then in a position to fulfill His former statement: "Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation."

We find that Job's hope lay in the expectation of resurrection. For he said, "And though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God."

Paul said, "If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead," showing that his hope, too, lay in resurrection.

Some have acquired the habit of saying in the presence of death, "Jesus took her," or "He is with Christ." It is hard for us to conceive of the fact and reality of death. But we must remember that Christ is not the "death angel," and the "death angel" is not Christ. Neither is death the coming of Christ.

Christ is the Life-Giver, not the death-bringer. It was the poet who said,

"One by one we gain the portals,
There to join with the immortals."

It is true that we die one by one, yet there is no scriptural authority for saying that we gain the portals of immortality one by one. Rather, it will be by great companies at the resurrection.

Christ is the First Fruits, afterward, they that are Christ's at His coming. "In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump (seventh trump, suggested in Revelation); for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then" (this is the only time, scripturally, when the Christian has laid hold on life eternal—at the resurrection, not death) "shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory" (1 Cor. 15:52-54).

It is for us to realize the curse of death in all its reality and its completeness, and to live godly in Christ Jesus, while we have any being. Then when the Master comes, even though we might be sleeping the sleep of death, yet He will say, "Awake, arise, faithful servant. Enter thou into the joys of thy Lord." And we know that when He shall appear, we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is.

A correct understanding of the surety of death brings a corresponding trust and dependence in the only One who can give life. The power of God is magnified, in that even though "after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God."

The Word Was Made Flesh

VIEWING retrospectively the history of creation as given in the 1st chapter of Genesis, we find that "in the beginning" God created the heaven and the earth. "And the earth was without form and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep." How long the earth remained in this state we have no means of knowing. The record says it was created in the beginning. That is a point of time of which we have no definite knowledge. The years or ages of its formation are known to God only. Our first day came into existence when God said, "Let there be light; and there was light. And God called the light Day, and the darkness he called Night. And the evening and the morning were the first day."

We find that throughout the record of the seven days in finishing creation all was done by the spoken word of God. He commanded, and His will was accomplished. As He says, "So shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereunto I sent it" (Isa. 55:11).

When sin entered the Garden of Eden, and the federal head of the human race was driven from Paradise, the promise of redemption from sin was that the Seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head. Notice carefully, please, that God says the Seed of the woman, not the seed of the man, should bruise the serpent's head.

Seven hundred years before Christ was born Isaiah the Prophet said, "Hear ye now, O house of David; Is it a small thing for you to weary men, but will ye weary my God also? Therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign; Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel" (Isa. 7:13, 14). "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this" (Isa. 9:6, 7). Here we have God's Word promising Christ, the Seed of the woman, seven hundred years before His birth, and saying, "The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this."

How did God perform this? We answer, By the spoken word, just as the work of the seven days in finishing creation was accomplished by the spoken word. As John says of Christ, "And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth" (John 1:14).

In the fullness of time, in God's set time in His plan of salvation when Immanuel or Christ should be brought forth to the house of David, God sent His angel to Mary, instructing her that she should have a Son and call His name Jesus. "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end" (Luke 1:31, 32).

Why should God promise Christ the throne of His father David, and call David His father? For the reason that Mary was of the lineage of David, and Christ in lineal descent was the forty-first in line from David through Nathan his son (Luke 3:23-31).

Listen! "And Jesus himself began to be about thirty years of age, . . . which was the son of Heli, which was the son of Matthat, which was the son of Levi . . ."

I have purposely left out the clause, "being as was supposed the son of Joseph," in the above verse 23 of Luke 3, to show the connection. Heli, Matthat, and Levi are not the names of Joseph's ancestors. Jacob is Joseph's father instead of Heli, as you find in Matthew 1:16, and from Joseph to Solomon, the son of David, there are twenty-five in lineal descent.

So we find that Joseph and Christ are both of the line of David, Christ through Nathan, David's son, and Joseph through Solomon. In giving genealogy the names of men only are mentioned. Thus we find Luke gives Christ's age and line of descent, which makes Him of royal blood upon His mother's side.

Notice please, these two lines of descent from Solomon and Nathan, David's two sons, and you will hardly find two names alike. But Luke did not say that Christ was Joseph's son, but that He was supposed to be. Luke knew better, for he quotes concerning David and Christ, saying of David, "Of this man's seed hath God according to his promise raised unto Israel a Savior, Jesus" (Acts 13:23).

Luke had another reason for knowing that Christ was not the son of Joseph. The angel Gabriel, whom the Lord had sent to explain Daniel's visions to him, which were well understood by the Jews, was sent to Mary and Joseph. And when Joseph was minded to put Mary away privily, the angel appeared to him, saying, "Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife: for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost. And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name JESUS, for he shall save his people from their sins. Now all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying, Behold, a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emmanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us" (Matt. 1:19-25). Devout Jews understanding their Scriptures believed them and the testimony of angels sent to them also.

History states that all nations, hearing from the Jews for centuries that Jewish Scriptures foretold a coming

King to deliver them, were looking, too, for that personage. It was a knowledge of these Scriptures that caused Herod to put to death so many infants in the hope that he might destroy the King to be. But the King was not destroyed.

God gave power and wisdom to His followers, like the aged Simeon and Anna the prophetess. It was revealed to Simeon by the Holy Ghost that he should not see death before he had seen the Lord's Christ. Here we find the Holy Ghost acknowledges the Christ when He is but a babe.

"And he came by the Spirit into the temple: and when the parents brought in the child Jesus, to do for him after the custom of the law, then took he him up in his arms, and blessed God, and said, Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word: for mine eyes have seen thy salvation, which thou hast prepared before the face of all people; a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel. And Simeon said unto Mary his mother, Behold, this child is set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel; and for a sign which shall be spoken against" (Luke 2:25-38).

Why did many stumble and fall in Israel over the child Jesus? We will let Paul answer this question. He says, "For the Jews require a sign, and the Greeks seek after wisdom: but we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumblingblock, and unto the Greeks foolishness; but unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God" (1 Cor. 1:22, 23).

Christ was a stumblingblock to the Jews because they thought Him to be the son of Joseph. And many Jews and Gentiles today are stumbling over the same misleading and unscriptural belief. If the power of God was so great in Peter that his shadow could heal the sick and afflicted, could not the shadow of the Holy Ghost by the word spoken accomplish the conception of Christ?

Remember, there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost. And John says, "The Word was made flesh and dwelt among us." People saw Jesus, the spoken Word, among them, as we see starry heavens above, the spoken word of God. All were spoken

The Times of the Gentiles

IN COMPARING the divine prophecies with world movements, we are forced to the conclusion that we are living in close proximity to the coming of our Lord. We can say with full assurance that the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.

If we take one line of thought only and look at the governmental aspect of the world, we see that human government all the world over is at the breaking point, and lawlessness like a flood is sweeping away all authority.

The last form of human government in the dream image of Nebuchadnezzar (Dan. 2) is the "iron and clay," and we have reached the time when it is impossible to mix, or attempt to mix, more clay with the iron. The symbol shows us the brittleness of the last form of human government.

We are today confronted with the fulfillment of the symbol, for governments are at the breaking point wherever you look. This is seen and felt by our leading statesmen, and it has been put into words by General Smuts in his Sedgwick memorial lecture at Cambridge. Speaking of democracy, he said: "Since the days when President Wilson coined the famous phrase about making the world safe for democracy, we have been busily engaged in the task of making democracy safe for the world, with the result that in over half of Europe it has ceased to function as the main-spring of political institutions, and its place has been taken by forms of dictatorships."

This is only what we should expect from the prophecies concerning the last days. Democracy has been weighed in the balance and found wanting. The feet and toes were part of potter's clay, and part of iron—partly strong, partly brittle.

We are in the death throes of democracy, and on the borders of the satanic-human which will spring up in the toes, a dictatorship which will make the world wonder and tremble. This is the last and shortest rule in "the times of the Gentiles."

The stone cut out of the mountain without hands will fall on the feet, and break the whole image to pieces. That stone represents the Lord Jesus Christ as He comes forth with divine power and glory to establish God's kingdom over all the earth.

This fact, which is patent to all that have eyes to see, that human governments are at their last gasp, and that lawlessness is rapidly in the ascendant, is one of the most notable signs of the times, and tells us that our Lord is near, yea, even at the doors.

When our Lord comes in the glory of the Father and of the holy angels, the saints, who have been gathered out of Jew and Gentile through this long age of gospel grace, are coming with Him to share His glory and dominion. Before they can come with Him, they must be caught up to meet Him in the air, either through resurrection or translation. If the signs of the times tell us that the times of the Gentiles are just being fulfilled, or completed, and that the Lord is about to come to establish God's kingdom on earth, surely they tell us that His coming for His saints is nearer still.

Knowing the time, perceiving the time, in which we are now living, and understanding its portents, it is high time (the very hour) to awake, to arouse ourselves to action and diligence, out of sleep, for now is our salvation nearer, nigh at hand.—From Words of Life.

Christ Our Manna

CHRIST is God's Manna for us (John 6:31-60). There must be a daily feeding on Him in order to enjoy His divine sufficiency. You cannot keep in bodily health on one meal a week. Neither can you keep in spiritual health by thinking of your Lord only when you go to church on Sunday. You need daily spiritual food.

Personal appropriation of Christ is an essential requisite of a healthy Christian life. The manna was to be given every man according to his eating. "Gather every man according to his eating, an omer for every man, according to the number of your persons; take ye every man for them which are in his tents" (Ex. 16:16). Everyone must partake of Christ for himself.

As the manna contained all the constituents of a complete diet for the sustenance of the material life, so Jesus is the necessary and all-sufficient food for the spiritual life. Jesus is our sustaining and satisfying Manna. Beware of substitutes.

The whiteness of the manna was emblematic of Christ's purity. For He was "holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners" (Heb. 7:26). Its sweetness was typical of His grace. "We beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth" (John 1:14).

The unceasing supply of the manna kept the Israelites provided with food for each day. "And they gathered it every morning, every man according to his eating." This was symbolic of our Lord's abiding presence with us. "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world" (Matt. 28:20).

An omer of manna was laid up before the Lord (Ex. 16:33). Jesus, our Manna, is now at the right hand of the Father, "from whence also we look for" Him, "who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body" (Phil. 3:20, 21).

Let us feed upon Christ, our Manna, daily, for He is truly "the bread of life," and "if any man eat of this bread, he shall live for ever" (John 6:35, 51).—Adapted.

Does Christ Desire It?

A CERTAIN Christian writer presses and regrets the fact that notwithstanding His thousands of churches, His millions of worshipers, and His billions in gold, Jesus Christ still remains the man without a country. Not only is there no Christian country, he says, but there is not even a Christian city in the whole wide world. He defines a Christian city as one that would be without slums, jails, poverty, unemployment, injustice, drunkenness, vice, jealousy, hatred, or bitterness. A Christian country, he says, would be without guns, luxury for the few, and poverty for the many, without bribery, graft, oppression.

It is remarkable, this writer thinks, that with so many Christians in the world, no such country or city has ever been established. He lists the forces which, he says, prevent the establishment of such a country or city, and compel the King of kings and Lord of lords to reside in some distant heaven until the end of the age. The hindrances which he names are German rejection of Christ and worship of the fighting deities of the ancient Norsemen; Mussolini's revival of the cult of Cæsar Divine; the militarist, disclaiming any place for the pacific attitude and denying the truth of the pacific beatitude; business, insisting that there is no god but profit; "the millennialist, presuming to speak in the name of religion," and saying that there can be no Christian country until the Messiah returns to reign.

We do not wish to give space to enter at all upon a discussion of the practicability of maintaining or of establishing an exclusively Christian country or Christian city in a world like this. But we have decided convictions that the followers of Christ are not to be held delinquent on account of having no such country or city as are designated by our writer. If it was in the purpose of Christ that such a commonwealth or community should be established by His disciples, is it not strange that He should say nothing about it when He gave them their commission?

The work of the church is not building cities, nor establishing governments, but it is making disciples in all nations. The church has been told plainly, not that they will be responsible for the establishment of a country for Christ, but that they are to go into all the world and preach to every creature the gospel of His kingdom. When this gospel of His kingdom has been preached in all the world for a witness, Christ Himself will come to this world and set up a kingdom for Himself under the whole heaven. This is His prerogative.

Meantime Jesus Christ is not repining as the man without a country. If Isaiah understood himself, Jesus Christ will not fail nor be discouraged, till He have set judgment in the earth: and the isles shall wait for His law. The present distressing conditions in the world are but a strong indication of the approaching day when Christ will come and sit upon the throne of His glory.

It is lamentably true that the spirit of Cæsar is at the head of empire in the world. The church, however, is not instructed to set up a Christian country; but to be subject to the powers that be. The church, mingling with the nations, is in a position to sow light among all the peoples, but in an exclusively Christian city the church would be like a candle under a bushel. When the early Christians at Jerusalem would have settled down to enjoy the felicities of a spiritual companionship with one another, the Lord permitted persecutions that compelled them to go forth into the world, "and they that were scattered abroad went every where preaching the word."

Moreover, although the church has not built a city for itself here, we are looking for a city whose builder and maker is God. When the followers of Christ have discharged their commission to preach the gospel of the kingdom in all nations, then Christ will come into His kingdom and His servants will go with Him into the jeweled city where He shall reign in righteousness over all the earth.

The Christian Life Is the Normal Life

By Mrs. H. H. Kent

THE BIBLE teaches that man by nature is hostile to God and that there must be a change in the heart and mind before even his thoughts are acceptable to God. Christ told the Pharisees that they would not come to Him that they might have life. It is life from God, then, that makes the Christian, and this life is attained through faith in Jesus Christ as the Son of God. The result of the Christian life is peace, joy, and contentment. These characteristics show the normal atmosphere in which the Christian should live.

But instead of peace, the Christian finds that he is living in a world that is hostile to God and to himself because the sunshine of God's love has been crowded out of the life of men by the desire for money, position, and power. Covetousness and money-consciousness are so common that those who look at them as sins are considered an evil to society. Many of the best positions are held by unjust and even incompetent men. People of today pride themselves mainly upon their possessions. What kind of a spirit has a man who thinks that the things he accumulates are the most important? Security in the material things alone cannot be compared to the satisfaction that comes from a life of faith and just living, for if we forget God in our daily life, we would be cowards and would be ashamed to face God in the end-time judgment.

The Christian who looks to God for all things finds himself in an atmosphere of indifference to justice and truth. This spirit has invaded the field of almost every profession and business, yet people are surprised when crimes of violence increase. Our nation has become so intemperate that the majority are not satisfied with anything that does not savor of nonsense or excitement. In business, trickery and shrewd dealing take the place of honor, justice, and good will. We find these traits, more or less, in every walk of life. It is manifest in every activity to such an extent that people have become accustomed to it. When an alarm is sounded it seems to fall on deaf ears. No matter into what department of human activity we enter we will find some of this offensive atmosphere, whether it is in politics, the commercial sphere, religion, education, art, music, or literature.

In the religious field we find those who deny the miraculous things in the Bible; and faith, hope, and charity are replaced by higher learning. In the political world we find few statesmen who stand for just principles as they did in the days of Washington and Lincoln. Instead, these places of honor are held by crafty politicians who are not especially interested in the welfare of the common people, but rather in their own interests, that they may gain power and attain higher positions.

As we look at the field of music we find that this beautiful art has degenerated into the modern "jazz," which has taken the place of the songs we used to love and that never grow old. Little good would it do to raise our voices against these "trashy" songs that are suggestive of sensual things. The public wants them. No wonder we have so many broken homes! What would Wagner, Paderewski, or Lange say if they heard the songs of the present day, most of which are ragtime, which stir up emotions and passions that are not elevating? Surely, these things do not appeal to the normal Christian! The soothing music of long ago brought peace to our hearts and turned our thoughts to God, from whom all good things come. The ordinary music of today is too cheap and too sensational to accomplish anything good. The social world, too, has lost its pure and lofty motives which produced the great men and women of the past.

Some day the tide is going to change again. History repeats itself. A crisis always follows where justice and truth have been ignored. Judgments always come when nations are unrighteous. When kindness and forgiveness are lacking, ill will is bound to follow as day follows night. It looks as if some spiritual disease has overtaken the entire earth, for the earth is filled with violence because men do not know the God of peace, and right living. It will be an individual matter when it comes to the judgment and you and I will have to face our record.

When this condition becomes so general that all of God's warnings have gone unheeded, and when mankind is so out of the normal atmosphere that God intended we should live in, the only remedy then will be a judgment that will either bring men speedily to their senses or they will meet the decision from a righteous Judge from which there can be no appeal.

Christ said there would be another world catastrophe with cataclysmic changes such as those which occurred in the days of Noah, when the world was filled with violence, when the wickedness of the world was great. Paul tells us that "the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men who hold the truth in unrighteousness" (Rom. 1:18). Surely this wrath is impending.

The Purpose of Trials

SOME years ago there was found in the Kimberley mines of Africa the most magnificent diamond in the world's history. This diamond was presented to the king of England to blaze in his crown of state. He sent it to Amsterdam to be cut by an expert lapidary. After taking this gem of priceless treasure and cutting a notch in it, the lapidary struck it a terrific blow with his instrument, and behold! the jewel lay in two parts in his hand.

The stroke which split the diamond had been carefully and accurately aimed after weeks of study. Drawings and models had been made of the stone; its defects, qualities, and lines of cleavage had all been scrutinized with the utmost care. The blow marked the climax of the lapidary's skill. That stroke was needful to transform the gem into its most perfect shapeliness, brilliance, and radiant splendor. Thus from these two halves were made stones that far excelled the one rough and uncut stone from the mines.

In the same manner, at times, God lets a stinging blow fall upon your life. It may be sickness, loss of property, failure, or the death of a loved one. The pain terrifies us. We wince, and our soul cries out in pleading agony and protest. But remember that God holds you in His hand, and that He will make of your unlovely soul, even through severe trial, a brilliant jewel.

God is the skilled lapidary of the universe, and man is His most priceless gem. No blows will the Master Workman permit to fall upon your shrinking soul but those which will bring out a hidden richness and nobility of character. Thus may you comprehend the import of this verse in Hebrews 12:6: "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth."

God's one supreme purpose in training man is to form in him a character like that of the spotless character of Jesus. Only by leading man through fiery trials may that dross of imperfection be purged away. Trials which struck deep into his soul were borne heroically by Job. Speaking of God, he said, "He knoweth the way that I take: when he hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold" (Job 23:10).

"A visitor was watching a silversmith heating the silver in his crucible. Hotter and hotter grew the fires. All the while the smith was closely scanning the crucible. Presently the visitor said: 'Why do you watch the silver so closely? What are you looking for?' 'I am looking for my face,' was the answer. 'When I can see myself in the molten silver, then I stop. The work is done.'"

We who are being tried may be represented by the silver in the crucible. As the fires of the furnace are perfecting and purifying the silver, just so trials may perfect and purify us. In us God is looking for a face. It is the face of His Son. We are "to be conformed to the image of his Son." He is purging from our sinful characters all that dims that image.

Of Christ it is said: "Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered" (Heb. 5:8). Have you not seen how true this is in the lives of those who have borne suffering? I know a young Christian woman who spent months of suffering in bed. I loved to visit her, for she brightened many a dreary life by her submissive attitude toward her affliction. One day I expressed the hope that she would soon be well again. A moment of silence passed, and then she murmured with a smile on her lips, "If it is God's will." Tears filled my eyes as I realized that suffering had taught her perfect submission to the will of God. This woman had learned such patience, faith, unselfishness, sympathy, and trust in God that I felt ashamed of my own selfish nature.

From the suffering caused by unkind words and actions against ourselves we may learn patience. If we allow these injuries to perfect in us staunch characters, rather than chafe under them, they will be the means of preparing us to meet greater difficulties.

Faith and trust in God grow with trial and affliction. There are many despairing souls who have lost all earthly possessions, who are friendless and unloved; but through implicit trust and undying faith in Christ the Deliverer they have come from the darkness into the marvelous light of His love. Perhaps such ones have depended on themselves alone to meet the trials and burdens of life. One of God's methods to teach man dependence upon Him is to take these self-sufficient souls through trial and disappointment. Poverty is a cross bravely borne by those who have allowed it to teach them unselfishness and sympathy. Sharing what little there is of life with others perfects unselfish characters. Only those who have traveled the rough and thorny path of affliction can fully sympathize with suffering humanity about them.

God loves us. It is not in carelessness that He allows us to suffer. His mercy is yet with us, and even through our tears we may see the rainbow of His promise.

"We are in the school of Christ in this life, where we are to learn to be meek and lowly of heart; and in the day of final accounts we shall see that all the obstacles we meet, all the hardships and annoyances that we are called to bear, are practical lessons in the application of principles of Christian life." May God help us to grasp this lesson!—Lola E. Olmstead in Signs of the Times.

THE HOPE OF ISRAEL

But we have joy and assurance in the promise: "Because I live, ye shall live also" (John 14:19). We are not to continue in death, but like our Example, "Christ the firstfruits," we shall receive new life at His coming. When old friends and loved ones shall meet again on that glorious day of reunion, there will be no more parting, no more sorrow, no more tears!

Such was the "hope of Israel," the hope of Job, and the hope of every disciple of Christ. And such is our splendidly inspiring hope. "For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming?" (1 Thess. 2:19).

GRACE MANIFESTED

done and justified by the statement that God's people are a peculiar people. Such is a travesty on this text. It has no such meaning.

The special peculiarity is that they are zealous of good works. These are not works produced by the flesh but by the Spirit of God that dwells within. However much people glory in experience, the Christian life finally resolves itself into good, straightforward living. John, who of all the Bible writers gets most thoroughly down to the fundamentals of the Christian life, says, "Little children, let no man deceive you: he that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as he is righteous" (1 John 3:7). That, after all, is the sign by which the world distinguishes between saint and sinner.

This does not rob experience of its glamor. No joy is greater to experience than seeing others glad from some good we have done them.

The purified ones are to be zealous of good works. We find much religious zeal that is soon cooled off when some service or sacrifice is asked that is within the scope of the believer's duty. We have known of people who were very zealous about the coming of the Lord who became as dumb as clams when asked for means to send the gospel to the heathen.

The writer heard Mark Guy Pearce, a great London preacher, say that we would not be asked, in the day of judgment, how well we felt so much as to how we have made others feel.—A. H. Kearney in Present Truth Messenger.

THE WORD WAS MADE FLESH

into existence. "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth. For he spake, and it was done; he commanded, and it stood fast" (Psa. 33:6-9).

Paul says, "Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear" (Heb. 11:3).

"Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?" (1 John 5:5). There is none holy as the Lord. Every word of God is pure. The Lord is righteous in all His ways, and holy in all His works.

With this highly exalted character of God before us, as given by inspired men, we know that He would not give a law to govern man that should man violate it would keep him from the heavenly kingdom, and then God come to this earth and violate His own law. Let us not impute unrighteousness to God.

Let us learn with reverence and godly fear the song of Moses and the Lamb: "Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints. Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? for thou only art holy" (Rev. 15:3, 4). The Revelator says of Christ, "I saw heaven opened, and behold a white horse; and he that sat upon him was called Faithful and True. . . . On his head were many crowns; and he had a name written, that no man knew but he himself. And he was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood; and his name is called The Word of God" (Rev. 19:11-13). Which is in harmony with the words of our text, "The Word was made flesh."—Minnie S. Presler in The Bible Advocate.

STUDIES IN THE CHRISTIAN LIFE

32 inches, with black felt. Design and cut out of paper to fit the board three sections: sky, hills, and grass.

Transfer your patterns to blue, brown, or green felt, which when smoothed on the cloth-covered board will adhere firmly. This will furnish a background for almost any picture you wish to build. Cut out pictures of many kinds and paste them with thin glue to outing flannel, cutting out around the figure. Use these in building up a picture on your board as you tell your story. They will hold firmly when smoothed on to the background.

Some of the lessons for the fourth quarter of the year are off the beaten path, and have never before been used as Uniform Sunday school lessons. They are rich in devotional value, and should be a source of distinct spiritual profit to those who will prayerfully study them. They constitute a direct challenge to the teacher to make careful preparation that he may do more effective work for his Lord and Master.—Adapted from Arnold's Commentary.

Dreams—Visions

* * * By Marion Ellsworth, Blanchard, Michigan

Young men dream; what dreams are they?
Of far flung fields brought beneath the plow,
Of glistening towers rising to the sky,
Of rivers bridged and rolling oceans spanned,
Of gleaming rails that pierce the distant haze
On the horizon's rim.
Of lights that gleam from cottage windows,
Of women's welcoming smiles,
Of childhood's happy laugh, and peaceful hours
In twilight's deepening hush.

Old men see visions; what do these visions bring?
The dreams of youth fulfilled, of recompence,
Of battles fought, and victories won,
Of objects gained although the odds were great,
The picture of a life well lived?
Or do they bring the gray mist of despair
That slowly between the now and then
A dismal curtain draws;
A knowledge of a life ill spent,
Of precious moments wasted, and to know
The Reaper grim comes with uplifted scythe
To reap a sheaf of weather-blasted grain?

How to Listen to a Sermon

A speaker at General Conference, Elder M. W. Lyon, spoke on this very unusual subject. After hearing him a lot of us concluded we hadn't been doing our share in the delivery of the preacher's sermon. Too often we have considered that a sermon is some work the preacher is doing and the rest of us are just bystanders. Now it isn't that way at all.

Every sermon is essentially a cooperative effort. The minister and the audience go prospecting together for the gems of eternal truth. Finding those gems the minister and the audience confer together regarding what shall be done with them, and finally the gems of truth are used for the good of all.

The minister, by virtue of his office, wields the tools. But the audience carries the tools. What do you as a part of the audience contribute toward the successful conclusion of the sermon? Open-mindedness, a reverent attitude, freshness of mind and body, a seeking heart, and finally, application of the truth to self in obedient response.

Precious indeed are the gems of truth we may uncover in this way. And when the sermon is over we each one go home with our arms full, our hearts overflowing with the precious living truth. No one has too much or too little, for each one gets out of it according to his capacity to receive.

Your capacity to receive is measured according to what you willingly give.

Iowa Conference

The Iowa Berean business meeting convened August 26, 1937, at one o'clock. All reports were read and approved. Last year's officers were reelected: Helen Brown, president; Ann Patricia Prime, vice president; Barbara Fish, secretary; Delbert Jones, treasurer. It was decided to continue to publish the state Berean paper, "The Searchlight." The lookout committee reported five new members: Doris Lundquist, James Harland, Margaret Fish, Melissa Stauffer, and Marjorie Landt. We were very glad to welcome these new Bereans.

Barbara Fish, Secretary.

A Clean Heart

"Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me."—Psalm 51:10.

While at General Conference we studied the tabernacle in the wilderness. We found that the twelve tribes of Israel encamped around about the thirteenth tribe, the Levites, and that in the center of the Levites was the tabernacle made according to the pattern shown to Moses on Mount Sinai. The tabernacle was made of the most precious and pure materials that could be found among the children of Israel.

The term "tabernacle" means dwelling place, and in this case means the dwelling place of God. The question was asked, "Where did God dwell, behind the curtains and in the vessels of the tabernacle? or did He dwell in the priests and Levites that served in the tabernacle?"

"Thus saith the Lord, The heaven is my throne, and the earth is my footstool: where is the house that ye build unto me? and where is the place of my rest? For all those things hath mine hand made, and all those things have been, saith the Lord: but to this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word" (Isa. 66:1-2).

The Lord dwells in the hearts of His servants. That is why He finally removed from the Israelites. They sought Him in clean vessels of the temple but polluted hearts in the temples of their bodies. That is what the martyr Stephen meant when facing his destroyers. He quoted the above passage from Isaiah, and added: "Ye stiffnecked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost: as your fathers did, so do ye" (Acts 7:51).

When the priestly tribe of Israel fell into the habit of thinking of the golden vessels of the sanctuary as being where God dwelled, they neglected their own hearts. Let the church of the firstborn take heed!

A NATION NEEDS GOD

WE COME now to the last lesson of this quarter. We have been following the children of Israel from the time that they had become slaves down in Egypt to the time that they stood on the banks of the Jordan River, ready to cross over and live in their own land.

If you have been interested in these lessons, the Israelites have become real people to you as you watched them week by week. Let us see what we have learned about them. Some of the lessons may be good for us even today, many hundred years later.

You all remember how the land of Palestine came to have the name, "Promised Land," as we so often call it. It happened away back near the beginning, when God decided that He wanted a nation on earth that He could call His own. He wanted a nation that would serve Him only, not the many gods the people had come to serve.

Now God knew that it was not good for men to serve the things they could make with their own hands. So God called one man out of a people that worshiped idols and told him to leave his home and follow Him to a land that He would show him. By now, I'm sure, you are all saying, "Abraham, who was first called Abram."

Do you remember the wonderful promises God made to Abraham because he was obedient? I wonder how many people today would be willing, at the age of seventy-five, to go out and find a new home and make a new start in life? Abraham did that.

Finally Abraham reached this "Promised Land," where God again made those great promises to him, the greatest of all being that through one of his descendants, even Jesus our Savior, all the earth should be blessed.

It was because Jacob, Abraham's grandson, also became obedient to God that his name was changed to Israel, from which his descendants received their name, children of Israel, or Israelites. Through one of Jacob's sons, these same Israelites were saved from starvation and were brought down to Egypt where there was plenty for all.

Now I hear you all whispering, "Joseph." There are many, many interesting stories of Joseph, showing how he kept true to God through the hardest kind of trouble and the greatest kind of prosperity, also. Many of these stories come to your mind just now, I'm sure.

Well, the seventy people who traveled to Egypt for food had increased to more than six hundred thousand in a little over four hundred years. And gradually during the years after Joseph's death their life became harder. When a new king came to the throne, one who hadn't known Joseph, he made slaves out of these Israelites.

You remember how God, who hadn't forgotten His people, raised up a certain man to be the one to lead them away from slavery in Egypt back up to their "Promised Land." God worked different miracles through this man, and finally he accepted the job. If you were in my class, by now you would all be saying, "Moses, the one who was hid when he was a baby."

It wasn't just all easy traveling for the Israelites by any means, and often they wished they were back in Egypt. But God never failed them! For when they reached the wilderness where there was no food He rained down food from heaven. When they could find no good drinking water, God gave Moses power to strike water from a rock.

How could they ever have made that long journey without God to lead them? They never would have reached their "Promised Land," without God to help them, you all say. Why, He even made it possible for their clothes to last all those forty years!

Do you think we need God today, boys and girls? Does America need God as much as the Israelites did so long ago? Does our country need God just as much now as it did when He directed Washington and Lincoln?

The people of the United States are not on a long journey to find a home where they can enjoy freedom, as those poor Israelite slaves were. But each one of us is on a journey, as it were, and our nation is on a journey.

Life itself is a journey. As we go on from day to day, we have to make decisions. We have to choose between right and wrong.

Our nation has also to choose between right and wrong. Our nation has to choose for God or against Him. Some nations have forsaken God and are suffering for it. Let each one of us choose God and so help America to choose God.

"Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget."

AMONG THE CHURCHES

ARKANSAS CITY, KANSAS

The church at Arkansas City, Kan., was made to rejoice when one of our adult Sunday school members asked for baptism and was baptized by Bro. George Waters on August 7. Our young sister's name is Miss Florence Griffith, 608, Arkansas City, Kan. Letters of encouragement will be appreciated from the Berean members.

Mrs. A. J. Chaplin.

LOUISIANA CHURCH NOTES

Having enjoyed a very pleasant and profitable conference and visit with the folks at home, we find ourselves once more in the Sunny South to resume our work with the Happy Woods and Blood River churches. We are gratified to know that both churches maintained good interest and attendance during August and the prospects for continued development seem very evident. The loyalty and cooperation of the members give us courage and inspiration to serve with greater diligence and zeal. We were also glad to know that the Ponchatoula Berean Class was able to meet every week and plans are being made to increase the attendance.

The year lies before us and our hope and faith is in the future and in the work we may be able to accomplish. May God give us strength and wisdom to carry on in His service until Jesus comes.

Harry Goekler, Pastor.

GATESVILLE, TEXAS

We closed a fine meeting at the Ater Church of God last night and we will go home today. Three were baptized during the meeting. They bora, Tex.; Edith Kays, 19, Rt. 2, Jonesboro; bora, Tex.; Edith Kays, 19, Rt. 2, Jonesboro; Delbert Melton, 17, Rt. 3, Gatesville. I suggest that our Bereans write to these dear young people who have taken the step that will mean so much to them in life.

My daily prayer to God is that His people will rally to the support of His cause. Brethren, are you interested in missionary work? I shall be happy to hear from you. If you forget my home address, Handley, Tex., write me in care of The Restitution Herald, Oregon, Ill.

On request of the brethren our meeting in Arkansas was postponed from September 2 to Wednesday, September 15. I started a meeting last Saturday night, Sept. 4, near Glen Rose, Tex., to continue over the 12th, after which I go to Arkansas. Pray for us in the work. Good interest is being manifested.

May God bless His people and cause them to realize the great opportunity that faces them in preaching the gospel of the Master.

T. A. Drinkard.

VIRGINIA CONFERENCE REPORT

We who are members of the Church of God (Adventist) in Virginia have recently passed another milestone in our journey toward the kingdom of God. Coming to join us in worship for the first time this year were a number of devout brethren and sisters from West Virginia. Bro. Clarence Poland brought with him over the first week-end Bro. Capps and wife and daughter and Mr. Szoke and wife. Three of these were received by baptism into the church, namely, Asilee Jeanne Capps and Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell Szoke. We welcome these new members into the church and bid them Godspeed in the journey of life.

Over the last week-end Bro. Poland came again, bringing his mother, wife, sister, and brother, Clyde Poland and wife. In these brethren we see the fruitage of Bro. Lindsay's work, for Mother Poland told us that he had baptized her husband, who now sleeps in death, when they still lived in Tennessee more than twenty years ago. She herself had been baptized by Bro. Hudler. No greater blessing can come to consecrated parents than to see their children interested and active in church work.

Bro. and Sr. G. E. Marsh and Bro. and Sr. Floyd Stilson were our teachers this year. Sr. Stilson had charge of the junior class of an average attendance of fifteen. They studied the six periods of creation and illustrated same with crayon and paper. Together with Sr. Marsh's class of intermediates, who studied the Word of God or the books of the Bible, these children gave a very creditable program on Thursday evening, Aug. 26, in place of the regular preaching service. My young son said he liked Bible school and learned more this year than in any of the seven or eight years he has attended the school in the past. This speaks well for Sr. Marsh as a teacher, coming from a boy of twelve.

Bro. Stilson, who taught the adult Bible class alternately with Bro. Marsh, showed us from Paul's letters to the churches the transforming power of Jesus in shaping his brethren who are lively stones into proper size and form to fit in God's holy temple, which temple ye are. He also gave us several lessons on the types as seen in the tabernacle and its furnishings.

Bro. Marsh made an appeal to the intelligent student of science and the Bible, showing the harmony that is found between God's Word and God's world of nature. Bro. Marsh's sermons were faith-convincing and heart-searching. Some of us who have known him since young manhood can appreciate the strength and prestige one gains in a lifetime of Christian service in the ministry, for he has developed into a precious G.E.M. of a

Board of Evangelism

Preach the Word

C. E. Randall, Superintendent

The recent survey trip made in the interest of an awakened evangelism found the people ready to respond to the call of the church to renewed effort in preaching the Word. Everywhere the members expressed themselves as being in hearty accord with the aims and purposes of the church as being worked through the Board of Evangelism in attacking the long-deferred duty of preaching the gospel of the kingdom in new fields and the unified work of stimulating and inspiring already established fields into renewed labor for the Lord. The readiness with which the people fell into line with this venture for righteousness has so encouraged the leaders, that unexpected strength is being thrown into this campaign for the gospel of the coming kingdom of God. Before Conference ended plans were under way to crystallize the aroused sentiment into cooperative action. Already help is being extended on a monthly basis to one section of the country for evangelistic work. Correspondence is being made with several other fields that need assistance. Where preaching is wanted and the prospects warrant, your Board aims to supply the necessary help, that through this mutual partnership churches may become established.

The Board of Evangelism is your Board! It is your work! It is organized to serve on your behalf. The success attained during the coming year will depend entirely on how many of you will come to the help of the Lord in this God-appointed work. Our confidence is strong that you will make it possible for the Church of God to put over the largest evangelistic program in its history. To succeed with this appointed task we must in the first place feel that the Church of God has a message God would have us preach. Secondly, there needs to be a consecration to this message and work. Thirdly, we must support it with prayers and cheerful giving. Combining our sense of duty with our willing ability to serve will bring forth the fruits which are desired.

The personnel of the Board remains as it was last year, excepting that the writer has consented to take over the superintendency in the place of Bro. M. W. Lyon. Elder James A. Patrick is the secretary-treasurer, and all contributions should be mailed to him at Ashland, Ohio, Orange Road. Acknowledgment of each gift will be made and contributors listed in this column.

We have selected a picture of the world and the Bible as our symbol and "Preach the Word" as our motto. Under this symbol and with this banner we proceed with our task, expecting your cooperation and God's blessing. Watch future Heralds for the symbol of the world and Bible!

preacher of the gospel of the kingdom of God. Our church ought to keep him out in the field (world) as an evangelist sowing seed for the kingdom harvest.

The regular business session of the Conference was held on Thursday afternoon. The question of selecting a new pastor for the churches in Virginia was discussed but no definite action was taken at this meeting. The officers in charge were reelected for the coming year.

Our hearts were saddened during Bible school by the illness in Winchester hospital of the only surviving member of the original Boyer family. Just two days after Conference Bro. Samuel E. Boyer of Pelton, Va., slept quietly away, to rest from his labors till Jesus comes. We were so thankful that Bro. Marsh was remaining over to hold a series of meetings at the Dry Run church, so he could preach the funeral of this patriarch in our Virginia churches.

We pray for God's blessing to keep us all steadfast in faith and upright in our living till Jesus comes with power and great glory. Even so, come, Lord Jesus.

Virginia R. Kincheloc, Secretary.

SAMUEL EDWARD BOYER

Samuel Edward Boyer, son of the late William and Regina Boyer, was born in Shenandoah County, Va., in the house in which he spent his entire life and from which his funeral was conducted July 19, 1858. He died in the hospital at Winchester, Va., August 31, 1937.

Bro. Boyer was the youngest of a family of eleven children, consisting of eight boys and three girls, all of whom preceded him in death. His wife, Charlotte (Munch) Boyer, to whom he was married April 13, 1899, was laid to rest August 12, 1919. He is survived by one daughter, Mrs. Edith Regina Burke, of Washington, D. C.; and three sons, William Enoch of Woodstock, Va., and Ernest Lee and Samuel Herman who occupy farms in Fort Valley, Va. These comprized the entire family with which the union of Mr. and Mrs. Boyer were blessed. Six grandchildren also remain to mourn the passing of a beloved grandfather.

In his early manhood Bro. Boyer taught in the public schools in the vicinity of his home and at the same time engaged in farming. The latter remained his major business interest to the close of his life. He was actively identified with the affairs of Shenandoah County beyond his immediate community, being one of the organizers and an early vice president and lifelong director of the National Bank of Woodstock, Va., and also a director of the Farmers' Home Mutual Fire Insurance Company.

While still a young man he embraced the gospel as taught by the Church of God, of which his father and mother were the founders in this state, having established the work here long before the Mexican War. He continued to take an active and influential part in the work of the church in Dry Run, Brown-town, and Maurertown up to the time of his death.

The many business men, and prominent figures in the life of the county and state present at the funeral, together with the host of brethren and friends from the District of Columbia and adjoining states, evidenced the high esteem in which Bro. Boyer was held everywhere.

Following a funeral service by G. E. Marsh, Bro. Boyer was laid to rest in the little cemetery near his home to await the call of the Master of life whom he had so faithfully served.

THE NEXT QUARTER'S LESSONS

On page 3 will be found an article taken from Arnold's Commentary which will be found to be helpful to the teacher in preparation for study for the new series of Sunday school lessons. This series on "The Christian Life" will require more than usual thought and study on the part of the teacher, particularly of the younger classes.

NEVADA WALDO

Nevada Waldo, daughter of William and Elnora Waldo died August 24, 1937. Her illness lasted over a period of 18 years. A greater part of the time she was confined to her bed. She was lovingly cared for all these years by her sister, who was her constant companion and nurse.

She united with the Church of God in early girlhood, and never gave up her faith and hope.

Funeral services were conducted on the afternoon of August 26. After a short sermon and words of hope and comfort extended to the friends and loved ones, she was laid away in the beautiful Blackwell Cemetery to rest until Jesus comes. She had hoped and prayed for that peace and rest so long withheld.

WHAT I EXPECT OF MY SONS

FIRST, I expect my sons to be great boys and great men. You smile, but isn't that one thing a mother is for?

But what do I mean by great men? You have heard these words, "But he that is greatest among you shall be your servant." You have also heard, "If any man serve me, him will my Father honour." So it seems that to be great one must serve. I expect my sons to be servants.

But servants of whom? Jesus said, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God . . ."

So I expect them to be servants of God by serving their neighbor. And I expect them to really grow to be servants. It won't come all at once, for there are many qualities necessary in a good servant. There is loyalty, and with it honesty and humility. He must be quiet, kind, unselfish, even-tempered, forbearing, forgiving, joyful in his service, and above all he must love his Master and do His bidding willingly.

How shall my boys begin to acquire these characteristics? What better way than to learn about and follow some one who has them? Therefore, I expect them to hear about Jesus at home in a way which shall make Him seem lovely to them as a pattern to follow. I expect them to read His words and talk with Him and with the Father who sent Him.

And why do I expect them to follow Him? Because now, while they are little, I am exposing them to the training of influences directed to that very end. In the Sunday school I expect them to gain knowledge of their example, Jesus, and to learn from their consecrated teachers who are trying to do right and live lives honest and straight with the world. Through church services truly worshipful in character, I expect them to see the beauty of worship and think of it as something desirable and necessary in their own lives.

I expect them to be reverent and quiet in the worship services. Why? For years I have been sitting quietly in the pew when the boys came from Sunday school. I cannot expect more of them than I am willing to do. In the services I expect them to be as worshipful as the service and the leaders inspire them to be.

I expect to be disappointed at times and have them make mistakes and have temptations—they couldn't grow without them. But I expect them to have resources stored up within themselves upon which they can depend when those times come.

One habit I expect them to form after they have a good foundation is to make their own decisions. That, too, has to be gradual. Shortly after his eleventh birthday, I said to one of my boys: "You are old enough now to stay all through the church service if you want to. You may do just as you want to—go to junior church or stay here." He had stayed a few times before so knew what to expect. He thought awhile and then stayed. I couldn't have expected him to want to if I had forced him to, but since he made his own decision he enjoyed it.

When they are older I expect that some of their decisions will not be the ones I would make for them. Probably it is better so. They are individuals and must decide for themselves. They won't solve their problems just as I have solved them, but the foundation will have been laid, a habit will have been formed, and pattern established, and I will keep on expecting. In some way, perhaps not in my way, I expect them sooner or later to arrive at the conclusion that their lives are best satisfied, joyful, and at peace when they are in contact with Christian people, when they gather with them to worship a common Father, and then go out to serve as Christian citizens.—Abridged in The World's Crisis from The Presbyterian Tribune.

DANIEL

By Benjamin A. Johnson

"Dared to be a Daniel, Dared to stand alone,"
Dared to challenge heathen rule,
Dared to speak his own.

Dared reprove Belshazzar's act
Reproached by godly scrawl,
He boldly spoke the meaning of
The writing on the wall.

Dared to face Jerusalem
Thrice daily in his prayer,
Dared to serve the living God
And His laws declare.

Dared to face the lion's den,
Rebuked the king's decree,
By Medo-Persian law unchanged
The outcome sure would be.

Dared to make his sacred choice
Upon his own accord,
Dared to be as Daniel
And "be strong in the Lord."

We Are No Judges (Isaiah 55:8, 9)—We are in no sense judges of what is best for us; no, not the wisest of the sons of men. We are like little children, never safe, but when we hold the hand of our merciful heavenly Father, He alone can guide us; He can alone support us. I say we are no judges of what is good or evil for us, except so far as He is pleased to reveal it to us. Often it happens, that what we think of small importance turns out to be of great consequence; while what we treat as somewhat very serious is found, in the end, to be but trifling.—T. Kebler,

Is This Hope Yours?

By Mary A. Gesin

THROUGHOUT the pages of God's Word there runs a "golden thread" of hope and promise which beautifies the pattern of existence for all mankind. The sacrifice of Jesus upon the cross is sometimes referred to as a "scarlet thread."

For it was only by the shedding of His own lifeblood that Jesus brought to men the hope of life beyond the grave. May we not call the hope of His return to earth the "golden thread" of the Bible? Let us see if we can pick out a few of the places where this bright thread appears in God's pattern.

First, let us turn to the record of the ascension of Jesus to heaven. Surely, if at no other time, God would reveal His plans and purposes as to Christ's future work of salvation at the time of His leaving the scene of His life, His death, and His resurrection. For all the work of God's Son is woven together in one harmonious pattern.

After forty days of ministry among His apostles as the resurrected and immortalized Savior, Jesus commanded them to tarry in Jerusalem for the baptism of the Holy Spirit, which God had promised to aid them in further witnessing of Him. "Ye shall receive power," He said, "and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."

Reading these first eight verses of Acts 1, we can sense the feeling of expectancy and awe that must have descended upon the faithful who had followed Jesus so closely those forty days. Though He had told them that "if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again," it is certain they did not grasp the full significance of the promise. To them God's love and mercy had been revealed gradually, "here a little, and there a little." We have the entire scope of salvation spread before us in God's Word, and yet it is difficult sometimes for us to fully understand and accept.

As the import of the final words of their Lord sank into their consciousness, "while they beheld, he was taken up:

"For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that . . . we should live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world; looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of . . . our Saviour Jesus Christ."

and a cloud received him out of their sight." He was gone! Their beloved Lord and Master was no longer at their side. How could they carry on without the encouragement of His presence? How could they proclaim the gospel to the uttermost parts of the earth without the guidance of His words of wisdom?

Their eyes strained upward into the blue of heaven where the clouds had obscured their vision. But, "while they looked stedfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."

Wonderful promise! Could language be plainer? Their Teacher and Friend was gone, but He would return. Again they would clasp His hand. Again He would cheer and comfort them with His actual, living presence. With this knowledge to solace them, they returned to the city to wait for the fulfillment of God's promise of power.

Throughout the Old Testament, before God had sent His Son into the world the first time, He revealed His purpose to send Him the second time. Space forbids mention of many of these references, but a few will suffice to establish this important truth of Scripture. Important? Yes, because tied up with the fact of the return of Christ are all of our hopes of future blessing and reward. It is indeed the most glorious truth contained in God's Word.

The entire 72nd Psalm reveals the wonderful conditions that will prevail when Christ our Lord "shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth." The "golden thread" reveals itself in this Psalm in all its beauty, for life among the downtrodden and oppressed of earth will be the reverse of what it is now.

The Prophet Isaiah also reiterates these same promises so often throughout his book that one can hardly choose from among them. But

Alcoholism Increasing

"At the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder."—Proverbs 23:32.

BOSTON, Mass., Sept. 7.—Two medical research workers of Harvard University, engaged by the WPA to study alcoholism in the Boston City Hospital, reported in the New England Journal of Medicine that alcoholism is increasing rapidly and is becoming "a great chronic emergency." They declared that alcoholism mounted during prohibition and increased after repeal. The report branded alcoholism as a disease and its treatment as "a major scientific problem."

Among the facts brought to light in the report are the following: Alcoholics account for one twentieth of the cases admitted to the hospital, forming one of the largest groups for which it has had to provide care. Deaths from alcoholism are increasing out of proportion to the increase in alcoholic admissions to the hospital, and in the years following repeal of prohibition the annual deaths from alcoholism at the hospital doubled. "Alcoholism may be increasing because people are not built to stand the type of life they are having to live and the excessive strain causes something to go wrong with the human nervous system and the mind." The Bible has a name for this weakness which causes men to turn to the stimulation of alcohol; it calls it ungodliness developed in a pleasure-seeking world. No unregenerated drunkard "shall inherit the kingdom of God" (1 Cor. 6:10).

Labor's Divided Leadership

"They shall not cleave one to another."—Daniel 2:43.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 6.—The rift between President William Green of the American Federation of Labor and John L. Lewis, chief of the Committee for Industrial Organization, which was repudiated by the A. F. L. at their convention in Florida, seems to be widening continually. Each of the leaders gave Labor Day addresses in which they took opposite positions on important issues, as for example, Mr. Lewis favored the organization of a Labor-Farmer political party which Mr. Green strongly opposed, characterizing the CIO as a "new foe" which labor is obliged to fight at a period of its deepest concern over unemployment and other economic questions.

"It seems unbelievable," said Mr. Green, "that any group which professes to believe in the unity and solidarity of labor would deliberately create a split in the organized labor movement. Two years ago," he continued, "a minority which could not force or compel the majority in a convention to accept its will formed a dual organization. They called themselves the Committee for Industrial Organization. This dual movement has been praised and supported by the Communist Party. The representatives of this subversive movement have placed their stamp of approval upon the CIO. This development creates the issue. It marks the difference between the American Federation of Labor and the Committee for Industrial Organization."

Without making any direct reference to the A. F. of L., Chairman Lewis said that he welcomed any opposition and added that while craft workers have been organized for fifty years, nothing had been done to organize the masses of workers. "The CIO," declared, "is the only instrumentality which can successfully deal with mass industry today."

The iron and clay of world-wide discontent and suspicion reveal their presence in every phase of modern life. Labor organizations, business associations, political parties, and international relations, are weakened and made ineffective through the yeasting effect of mutual doubt of the integrity of others. Praise God, "the God of heaven" shall soon "set up a kingdom" of righteousness and love which shall never be destroyed!

Seventh Day Adventists Lose Property in China

"Neither let him which is in the field return back to take his clothes."—Matthew 24:18.

SHANGHAI, China, Sept. 8.—Among the sufferers from the Sino-Japanese conflict, now in its third month, is the Seventh Day Adventist Mission in the Yangtzepoo district northeast of Shanghai. The Japanese took over the mission buildings and compound for military purposes. The missionaries and their families had already evacuated the premises before the arrival of the invaders, as well as medical institutions belonging to the denomination in the Hongkew district on the outskirts of Shanghai.

It will be recalled that the Seventh Day Adventist medical missionaries remained at their posts in Addis Ababa, capital of Ethiopia, during the attack of the Italian army on that city. No doubt in the present situation the faithful advocates of Adventism will continue to render courageous service to all suffering ones they are enabled to reach.

Science and the Bible

The book of Genesis stands as the one and only authoritative record of the origin of our world. Other books give us legendary records regarding creation, but the writer of Genesis begins his story with those famous words, "In the beginning God." We are not left to wonder who is meant by God, for when we read the writings of Moses more fully we find many references to God, the Supreme Being, the Creator of the heavens and the earth. Thus the book of Genesis is given to us as a history of the early days of the earth and the record of God's plan for man.

The scope of Genesis is restricted to matters dealing with God's relation to man. No attempt is made to disclose the origin or destiny of other worlds or of the universe as a whole. Only incidental references are found to the stars or other heavenly bodies, but the whole attention of the book is directed to the problems of mankind's salvation.

Scholars who have studied the book without being influenced by the critical viewpoints of skeptics believe that it was written by Moses during his wilderness sojourn. As he led his flocks through the desert not far from Sinai, God revealed to him the history of the beginnings of this planet. The plan of Genesis is in keeping with its origin. The story is written as common people would read it.

Although dealing with the most profound themes of all times, its language is plain, straightforward, and so simple that a child can understand it. The very simplicity of its construction leads many men to reject it as the product of a crude and primitive people. We should remember, however, that its validity depends not upon its style but upon the fact that it is divinely inspired.

Modern critical scholarship has repeatedly challenged the Genesis record of creation. Atheists deny the fundamental premise that God is the Creator. Skeptics regard the Genesis story as mere folklore. Even professed believers in the Bible are inclined to interpret Genesis in an allegorical sense, as a mere parable or story.

But those who accept the Bible as the inspired revelation of God to man should not be influenced by these skeptical views. To the one who accepts the Bible as the Word of God, the Genesis record is inspired history. As such, its story of historical events is a true record, and cannot be changed by scientific theories. Obviously, a historic record, if true, will remain for all time unchanged by theories and changing viewpoints. Since it is a record of actual events, nothing can ever change that record.

The book of Genesis contains a fundamental philosophy. God is portrayed as the Supreme Being through whose power the heavens and the earth have come into existence. Nature is dependent upon God, and man is the work of His hands. Thus all the elements of philosophy are laid down in this book. The original or first cause, the created material, and man's relation to God and nature are established.

The book of Genesis is basic in its scientific viewpoints. Natural force, instead of being self-operating, is assumed to be under the direction of the One who created all things. All plants and animals derive their life force from the Creator. No more definite and complete explanation of the ultimate forces of life can possibly be given.

"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." Many questions have been asked concerning the meaning of this statement. What is meant by the beginning? The beginning of what? When was the beginning? Most of these questions are irrelevant. The statement is merely one of a fundamental plan.

We must remember that when Moses wrote these words the masses of the world had so far departed from their knowledge of God that they had lost sight of Him as the true and omnipotent Creator. In Egypt, the land of captivity, a crude form of evolution expressed the origin of life as due to natural forces. Although in no sense a scientific theory such as we have today, this ancient philosophy was based upon the idea of nature as self-existent and self-operative. It was against this doctrine that the writer of Genesis made his great pronouncement, "In the beginning God."

Whether we consider the beginning of this world or the beginning of any other part of the universe, the principle holds good. At whatever time any of the heavenly bodies came into existence, whether simultaneously with this world or millions of years before, it makes no difference. The statement applies with equal force. In the beginning of any part of the universe, God was the creative power. This statement stands as a basic truth opposed to any evolutionary doctrine, and is today the center of controversy between the creationist and the evolutionist.

"God created"—again we have a point over which there is much confusion. What is the meaning of creation? A study of the Hebrew in the 1st chapter of Genesis indicates that the work of creation week involved more than a mere speaking of forms into existence. There was both the production of material and the formation of objects from the material.

A great many Christian scholars have placed a gap between verses one and two. In an attempt to explain creation as one instantaneous act which brought all the material of the universe into existence simultaneously, they are obliged to assume that the material of this world was produced millions of years before it was prepared as the home of man. Then, having made this assumption, they must explain conditions during the time when God was developing life upon the earth; or if this (Please turn to page 10)

Between Death and Resurrection

By the Editor

WHAT is the state or condition of man between death and the resurrection? This interesting question is frequently asked by those who think deeply and seriously concerning the future life. As with all other disputed questions, religious or otherwise, it is wise to ascertain at the beginning of the investigation if one or more points of agreement do not exist in the minds of the disputants. In the present instance, an evident point of general agreement is found in the word "resurrection."

While more or less disagreement exists between the various religious schools concerning the time and nature of the resurrection, they generally agree that a resurrection from the dead will actually take place. The statement of our question acknowledges this much to be true.

The Apostles' Creed affirms in its familiar phrase: "I believe in the Holy Ghost; The holy Catholic Church; The Communion of Saints; The forgiveness of Sins; The Resurrection of the body; and the Life Everlasting. Amen." This ancient Christian symbol adds somewhat to the general thought when it defines it as "the Resurrection of the body."

This statement clarifies the thought and gives it a definiteness and precision it would not otherwise possess. The resurrection, as an article of Christian faith, refers to the resurrection of the body. It has nothing to do with what is commonly denominated the "soul" or "spirit." Let us remember this! The resurrection has to do with the body, and with the body only.

It is necessary that we should have this point of general agreement fixed clearly in our minds in order that we may be prepared to understand what the Bible teaches concerning the condition of the individual whose body has been consigned "dust to dust, ashes to ashes," while that body remains in the grave.

In my investigation of the question from sources extraneous to the Bible, I have been impressed with the paucity of conclusive and positive statements I was able to find concerning the intermediate state. The leading theologians seem at a loss to produce any real biblical evidence in answer to our question. For example, the Biblical, Theological and Ecclesiastical Cyclopaedia, edited by M'Clintock and Strong, says regarding the matter, "Respecting this, little is definitely said in the Scriptures, and it is therefore left for our speculation to fill up the lack of information on this interesting theme, guided by such hints as are casually thrown out by the sacred writers, and such considerations as the ascertained nature and destiny of man afford." Other recognized authorities speak with equal modesty of their lack of information on this important subject.

A second discovery in connection with the question is the fact that leading divines and many Protestant denominations teach individually and in their statements of faith that no one goes immediately to heaven or to a place of punishment at death. They generally agree that between death and the resurrection the "soul" or "spirit" is not subject to conscious happiness or sorrow.

Again quoting from M'Clintock and Strong: "In the second place, it follows that the soul can have no cognizance of the passage of time while thus disembodied. . . . We conclude, therefore, that the intermediate will pass to all its subjects as an instant, and that none will be aware of the length of the interval. . . . We are bound to conclude, from the total diversity and even contrariety of their properties and attributes, that a dead man is really dead to everything pertaining to time and sense."

May I bring you further testimony from the pen of Dr. Olin Alfred Curtis, Professor of Systematic Theology in Drew Theological Seminary? He says, "We are never so to regard the doctrine of the intermediate state that it even suggests heaven. The terrible stress upon death is yet lingering there, for no man is complete, no man can be complete until the resurrection" (The Christian Faith).

From all the authorities I have consulted I find in the modicum of definite dogma presented this one point of agreement, expressed so clearly by Professor Curtis: "No man is complete, no man can be complete until the resurrection."

Coming now to what the Bible actually teaches on this subject, we would ask this question: What do we know of the intermediate state from those who have gone there and returned?

The Bible records a number of instances in which individuals have been recalled from the Land of Shadows. There was the son of the poor widow who furnished Elijah with a home during the period of famine. In the New Testament we have the history of the daughter of Jairus (Mark 5:22-43); the son of the widow of Nain (Luke 7:11-15); Lazarus, the friend of Jesus (John 11:1-57); and, last of all, but most important of all, the Lord Jesus Christ.

In all of these recorded resurrections we observe this one outstanding fact, or rather, this one notable omission: not one of these restored individuals tells us a thing concerning his experience between his death and his resurrection! All are silent! Not one word of enlightenment do they bring from the land that lies beyond the valley of the shadow of death! So the only ones from whom we could hope to obtain a satisfactory answer to our question manifest a strange but exceedingly significant silence with regard to it.

The significance of this silence on the part of those who have passed into the great beyond and then been permitted to return is suggested to us by George E. Guille in his interesting little work, That Blessed Hope, published by the Moody Bible Institute in Chicago. While he asserts that it is his belief that "Scripture clearly teaches that happiness in heaven awaits every believer at his death," he immediately nullifies his own conclusion by declaring most positively, "The second reason why merely going to heaven is not the Christian's hope is that Scripture nowhere speaks of going to heaven."

Perhaps, then, the reason why these returned travelers have told us nothing of their experiences in the shadow land is that there was nothing to tell! They saw nothing; they heard nothing; they consciously experienced nothing while their bodies lay in the darkness of the tomb. This conclusion is in such complete harmony with the testimony of the Bible that I feel sure it is the correct solution of the mystery.

M'Clintock and Strong tell us that "little is definitely said in the Scriptures" concerning this matter of the intermediate state, but I am forced to disagree with these able commentators on this point. I find the Scriptures give a clear, full, and logical exposition of the state of man in death. Further, that the Bible description of the conditions prevailing beyond death are in perfect accord with reason, observation, and scientific deduction.

The Kingdom

"Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." — Luke 12:32.

JESUS had much to say about the kingdom. Sometimes He used the expression, "kingdom of heaven," sometimes "kingdom of God," and sometimes, as in the text quoted above, just "the kingdom." It is all the same kingdom, though it has several phases.

There was the past phase, when the kingdom was given to Israel. God was the King and ruled through the judges. Then the people demanded a visible king, and God gave them their desire. Saul was their choice, but he proved a failure, and God gave them David, who was "a man after God's own heart." But his descendants departed from God and led the people into idolatry, so that God by the mouth of His Prophet said, "I will overturn, overturn, overturn, it; and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him" (Ezek. 21:27).

In due time He whose right it is came—Jesus, the Son of God—saying: "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand" (Matt. 4:17). God had said He would "give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end" (Luke 1:32). With this promise He came to His own, but His own received Him not. They said, "Away with him; we will not have this man to reign over us." They rejected the King and the kingdom. Then Jesus said: "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a people bringing forth the fruits thereof" (Matt. 21:43). Here we have the present phase of the kingdom—the church of Christ, those who are bringing forth the fruits of the kingdom.

But there is a future phase, and it is to this phase that Jesus refers in the text at the head of this article: "It is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." This is the "everlasting kingdom" into which Peter says the righteous will have an "abundant entrance." It is the kingdom of which Daniel speaks, saying: "But the saints of the most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom for ever, even for ever and ever" (Dan. 7:18). And again in the 27th verse of the same chapter: "And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him."

It is the kingdom Jesus had in mind when He said, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." This is the kingdom for which the church has prayed these many years, saying, "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." It is the kingdom of which we sing:

"In the kingdom which is coming,
We desire, O Lord, a place;
Where is past all death and weeping,
And the saved ones see Thy face.
In that world so full of glory,
Where the vernal breezes blow,
There the beauties of Thy kingdom
To the faithful Thou wilt show."

Where will it be? Right here on the earth, after it is purified by the cleansing fires of the last judgment. "Under the whole heaven," says Daniel, not in heaven. It is called the "kingdom of God" because God is its founder; the "kingdom of heaven" because its laws are of heavenly origin; the "kingdom of Christ" because Christ is the King.

When will it come? When the King comes; and that will not be long now, if we rightly interpret the signs of the times. Earthly rulers have failed, earthly governments have proved weak and unstable, selfishness and greed rule in the councils of the nations. The whole creation groans and travails in pain to be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. Soon may the glad cry ring out, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever" (Rev. 11:15).—The Herald of Life.

Worth While Ways of Reading the Bible

THE BIBLE is all in all mankind's greatest treasure. A few men may have crowns, and a few may have fortunes; fewer still can enjoy either. But everyone may have the Bible, and everyone who will may enjoy it with a great happiness.

But, of course, no one can enjoy it if it stands dusty on the shelf or dusted on the living room table! It must be read. That is not only the first thing to do; it is almost the only essential thing to do. Read it.

To be sure, men have read it idly, and suddenly their spirits have been "stabbed broad awake," as they have found it speaking right straight to them. But it is no reason for reading it idly. Read it with attention.

Nevertheless, you need not make hard work of reading it. If you come to it as a task, it will likely be a task. Come to it with the spirit of Mary, who sat at Jesus' feet and drank in His words; not in the spirit of Martha, who felt that a piece of work just had to be done. Read as if you were listening to the deep melodies of a great organ, and after a bit you will find your own heart singing a nobler tune. Read it as if you were looking at a great landscape of hills and valleys and plains, of mountains and snow-capped summits, with the great, luminous sky over all. Soon you will begin to see the landscape of human life and destiny in truer perspective, and know what hills you must climb and into what valleys you must descend before reaching the heights.

READING FOR THE FIRST TIME

If the Bible is new to you, or if you have read it only casually, there are many places at which to start. Probably the best is the Gospel of St. Luke and the Book of the Acts. Here are the events and the Person that mark the turning point of human history. Throughout all generations since then they have set countless men and women and youth free from fear and shame and sin, and brought them to a radiant and abundant life. To the light from these chapters the rest of the Bible contributes, and in their light it and all life are illuminated. Whatever ground you traverse, this will be the peak from which you will get your bearings.

Follow with the other Gospels and some of the shorter letters of St. Paul. Then extend your acquaintance—search out the riches of the Psalms, read the early chapters of Genesis, the story of David, the pithy wisdom of Proverbs, some of the ringing messages of the Prophets, and more of the New Testament. By this time you can find your way about in this library of sixty-six books. But do not try too soon to master the whole of it; in reading the Bible, you are not cramming for an examination, but living with a friend.

THE BEST OPEN TO ALL

As you read, imagine as well as you can the scene or the setting. Re-reading will often bring this out. The Bible is a book of life; we best understand it when we enter into the living experiences it records.

Do not be disturbed if there are passages that you do not understand. You live on God's glorious earth, but He doesn't expect you to know every valley of the Himalayas or every port in the seven seas. There is nothing in the Bible essential to life's deepest joys and greatest growth, that is not open to a true and earnest heart. Come to your reading with an open mind and give the Bible its chance to speak to you. It is not simply a record; it is a message.

WAYS OF READING

When you have thus gotten the lay of the land and some insight into what the Bible is about, you will find different ways of reading rewarding. Here are some among many:

(1) Take one book or one group of chapters and read and re-read it scores of times. "By repeated re-reading in the face of our practical problems, a book begins to live in the mind like a magnetic current. To get the benefit of the Bible, one needs not a snapshot, but a time exposure." Creative power comes, not from collecting every new idea, but from being laid hold on by great, vital, and enduring truths.

(2) Read it, especially the Gospels, and from the Psalms and Epistles, for light on personal problems—purpose in life, friendships, anxiety over loved ones, financial perplexities, the guilt of sin, when tempted to do wrong. It can be marvelously helpful.

(3) Read it to find the person most like yourself, and study his experience with God and life. A brilliant woman who became acquainted with Christ only in her mature years compared her experience with the like experiences of men and women in the New Testament.

(4) Read the Gospels and the Acts, and, as you study each scene, think where you—caring for the things you care for—would have been in that scene, had you lived then.

(5) Read to understand thoroughly a single character—what his motive and his hope, what his ambitions, what battles he lost and won. The Bible holds life before us so that you can see into it.

(6) Take a great word or phrase—"faith," "patience," "grace," "the glory of God"—and trace its meaning through the Bible. Or take some great theme—the creative power of God, what God expects of us, what help God gives us, the meaning of courage, prayer. Perchance prayer, that may seem "unreal" to you now, will become alive.

(7) Read the Bible for light on some one of the problems of the world's life—individual rights, freedom and law, the duties of nations, the qualities of public leaders, the foundations of peace.

(8) Sometime you will want to read the Bible all the way through—for what it will do for you, not for the sake of having done it. One of the busiest editors of a metropolitan newspaper remarked lately that he was reading it all the way through for the fifth time, a few verses each day. It will enrich your life as it has his.

SOME GUIDEPOSTS

When is there time to read it? There's the rub! Many find an early morning half hour best; others, the quiet of the evening. The most productive reading requires a definite, regular time. But every day there are intervals which can be seized: on the trolley or train to or from work, in a bit of rest from household chores, waiting for a delayed appointment. A handy copy of a single Gospel or of other separate books or a small Testament in the purse or pocket can pack many spare moments with satisfaction.

For not a little of the Bible commentaries, Bible dictionaries, and other "helps" are of value in explaining the background. But do not let them get between you and the Bible. Use them as you would a dictionary. Note also that chapter and verse divisions, which were not part of the original text, sometimes separate what should be united.

Store up the fruits of your reading. A record of it by date and passage, perhaps with comment, will prove worth making. Summarize what you discover. Memorize great passages that help you. Why keep in the storehouse of your mind only the Ten Commandments, the Beatitudes, the Twenty-third Psalm, learned perhaps when you were only six or eight? Add Job 38; Psalms 19, 24, 46, 91, 103, 104; 1 Corinthians 13; the parables of the lost sheep, the last judgment; the good Samaritan; the prodigal son; St. John's Gospel, chapters 14, 18, 19, 20. There are no finer riches for the mind.

Read the Bible surely by yourself; but also seek companionship in reading. In the family, with a friend or a group of friends, in a class, new discoveries will be made that only such reading can bring. The richest experiences of life must be shared.

When you are in sorrow, in anxiety, in fear, go to the Bible. It can bring marvelous help in life's emergencies. But it is not primarily a shelf of medicines; it is daily food for daily needs. So used it will help all the more when emergencies come, and will deepen every one of life's joys.

For, in God's providence, this is your Book. Men have labored incessant hours, spent all they had, gone footsore and weary to an exile's rest, died in agony a martyr's death, that you might have it.

You will understand why, when you have made it your own.

Read it. Share it.—National Commemoration Committee.

Reverence

SOME words are hard to define. Their meanings are bigger than any definition of them. Human language does not suffice. Such a word is "reverence." To say that it is respect for the holy is not enough. Is it not more than awe or humility in the presence of God? It is greater than a strong sentiment of respect or esteem; more than solemn wonder. The idea of homage or personal devotion is inadequate. Reverence is better illustrated than defined.

Jacob was en route to Haran when night overtook him. He had no place to sleep, so "he lighted upon a certain place, and tarried there all night," sleeping on the ground with stones for a pillow. He dreamed that a ladder extended from earth to heaven on which God's angels were ascending and descending. Then he heard God speaking to him, making precious promises. How assuring must have been God's presence in the darkness! He could not be lonely with God so near. Then Jacob exclaimed, "Surely the Lord is in this place; and I knew it not." He was so awed with God's presence as to shout, "How dreadful is this place! this is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven" (Gen. 28:17). The next morning he erected an altar in that place to the Lord. Jacob experienced reverence.

While Moses kept the flock, an angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a flame of fire out of the midst of a bush. Moses turned aside to see why the bush was not burned. God called to him out of the bush. Moses, recognizing the proximity of God, removed the shoes from his feet, because the "place whereon thou standest is holy ground" (Ex. 3:5). Moses was reverent.

A Roman soldier standing near the cross looked upon the face of Jesus. He had previously observed His deportment preceding the crucifixion. Seeing divinity in Jesus, the soldier exclaimed, "Truly this was the Son of God" (Matt. 27:54). Another case of reverence.

A business man had the habit of leaving the vexing problems of his office in the city to drive several miles into the country. He always went alone into the cemetery and knelt for a moment or two at his mother's grave. Travelers, seeing England, may be noisy and talkative at other places, but when they enter Westminster Abbey, there is a hush. Men remove their hats. A certain man never allows any object to be placed on the Bible; if the Bible is in a stack of books, he places it on top.

REVERENCE NEEDED TODAY

Reverence is more than honoring the Bible, bowing in church, observing silences, respecting personality, using God's name correctly, removing shoes from feet, building altars, although all are illustrations of reverence.

Reverence is badly needed today. Even some church members do not respect holy places, names, and objects as they should. The sacred has become too familiar to some. The sacrosanct has been cheapened. Imagine certain words precious to a true Christian used in commercial advertisements! Think of the church building being used as a place to dance or play cards! This current irreverence is one cause of the condition of the church today. It is in part an answer to world-wide irreligion.

We must get back to reverence. We should respect the holy. When seated in church on the Lord's day, instead of chatting with some one, let us bow for a brief prayer, then sit in silence until the service begins. Instead of racing up and down the highway in an automobile on the Sabbath, instead of commercializing the day, let us attend the service at the house of God, then spend the balance of the day in rest and quietness.

Reverence is positive. In its highest sense it is communion of the soul with God. The story of Jacob's ladder teaches that heaven and earth are close together. God and man can converse. Man can enter through prayer into the presence of God Himself. Prayer is the daily duty of every Christian. He is most reverent who is most worshipful. God deserves the veneration of every person on earth. Reverence makes for a full and complete life. No person can be happy without it. He who is awed at the ineffable presence of God or God's handiwork has within him a self-replenishing fire that burns out dross and purifies, ennobles, challenges his soul, makes for the abundant life. Reverence is too big for definition, but just the right size for practice.

Tithing

QUITE a great deal has been said lately in denominational papers about tithing our incomes. Having been a tither and an Adventist for nearly forty years, I think I can speak advisedly on the subject.

Some time ago a resolution was passed by our denomination that for three months our churches adopt the tithing system as our financial plan. This is, I think, a forward step. It has my hearty cooperation, and will, I trust, lead to a better understanding of the system and its wonderful possibilities. I should like to present four reasons why we should adopt the tithing system.

IT PAYS GOD

Few of the members of our churches pay one tenth of their income to the Lord's treasury. Suppose now every member of our average church should begin to morrow to lay aside his tenth, what would result? The church would meet its current expenses promptly without trouble or embarrassment. The pastor would be spared his frequent benevolent "agonies."

Financial campaigns, drives, tricks, blackboards, together with professional money raisers, would go on the retired list. But the little white envelope, without fuss or tumult, would weekly bring its blessed contributions to the spreading of the gospel. All claims for money to carry on our work would be met in full. A large payment would be made on any debt we might owe. We could use many illustrations to prove the foregoing.

A pastor of an influential church said recently that his large gift to cancel the missionary debt was contributed by two of his tithing members. An overjoyed village pastor exclaimed, "A small band of ten per cent of our membership last year paid over twenty-five per cent of the total church receipts." So it pays God to have a church of tithers.

IT PAYS ME

A glance at the national history of the Jews reveals the fact that as they observed the law of the tithe they prospered. But when Jehovah was forgotten, His sabbaths used for traffic, His treasury robbed for self and idol gods, disaster and desolation came, and the locust and the alien army destroyed their fields and cities.

May not the Father who numbers the hairs of our heads also give a special care to those who keep His law? There are hundreds of testimonies to show that men have been greatly prospered in obedience to this principle. And with reason. How much stronger is a man for business with a clear conscience! When one can step out and face the world and say, "I've tried to do my duty to God and man," he can defy men and devils to overthrow him. He can say, "If I rise, I rise with a clear conscience, and if I fail and go to the poor house, I go as a king." It adds buoyancy to his spirit and courage to his endeavors.

Tithing compels system in finance. It saves its cost by cultivating thrift and economy so that nine tenths often go farther than ten-tenths used to do.

The highest compensation, however, is spiritual. It leaves one's glad heart free for service. It increases capacity for sacrifice. It forbids a paralysis of generosity.

One can hardly grow covetous or forget God, while he pays each week his tenth into the Lord's treasury. It keeps the doors of his heart ever open to one's neighbor. It makes the Christian a real partner and profit-sharer with God.

IT IS PLEASANT

Many could tell you today how precious has become that quiet corner where the tithe box is kept. It makes the house sacred when you have somewhere hidden in it a little ark of God containing His treasure. This plan lifts our giving above all emotional, impulsive, or selfish motives for doing our duty. It is pleasant because it is fair to rich and poor alike.

It is pleasant because it is dignified. It is worthy of the Christian church. It will help to drive religious pauperism from our midst. How much of pleading and scheming, and campaigning; how much shameful humiliation and compromising with the world it will banish from the church.

The golden grain of the mission fields, ripe for the holy harvest, is left to rot upon the ground for want of reapers. The dense population of our great cities is crying for light and God. Yet our churches are loaded with debt and our Christian communities are honeycombed with pauperizing methods of church finance.

IT IS PRACTICAL

There are no obstacles to its adoption which cannot be surmounted. Some one says, "I should begin to tithe if others would, but it isn't fair for only a few." I know it, but why deny yourself a great joy, or God His much-needed portion, because others do so?

Another says, "I am in debt. Ought a man to give before he pays his debts?" Do you buy Christmas or birthday presents before you pay your debts? Would you refuse to help a starving neighbor until all debts were paid?

Tithing is not giving; it is debt-paying. To whom do you owe first of all? Hasn't God a large account against you? Who advanced your capital, your life, your talent, your health, and the favorable conditions which have enabled you to make money?

It is God who gives you this power. Why not make Him a preferred creditor? Is it not time that the church begins to put a difference between itself and the world, not alone in doctrine, but in tithes and offerings? Let us think and pray seriously about this subject and be ready to meet the proposition when it is presented to us. If we pass up this opportunity, I am sure we will be suffering from dry rot and pass out because we know not the day of our visitation.

I am indebted to the Layman Company of Chicago for much that I have written. I am glad to say that the tithing system as applied to our church is more than a mere success; it is the financial backbone of it.—E. S. Hall in The Messiah's Advocate.

God's Purpose in Redemption

"WAITING for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of the body." Thus wrote the Apostle to the Gentiles in one of his spiritual masterpieces, and so expressed the Christian's attitude of expectation and hope. The whole chapter (Rom. 8) rings with the note of assurance. From the opening words, "There is therefore now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus," its theme is gradually developed, until it closes with the great challenge as to who, or what, can separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. The tone is one of confidence throughout. "I am persuaded" is the Apostle's answer to any suggestion to the contrary. But, although such an attitude of spiritual revelation is attained, the fact remains that, for the present, we are identified with a groaning creation. "We are saved in hope"; "waiting."

The condition of pain and groaning which the Apostle depicts is apparent everywhere. It requires no proof. Both saint and sinner are involved in it and the whole creation is calling out for some form of deliverance. It has become, and is becoming, more and more evident that this cannot be brought about through any human agency. Instability and insecurity are the characteristics of our times. There is a general lack of confidence. The war fever is abroad in the world again, and none can foretell what the end of the present disputes may be, or how soon we may witness another "clash of arms." The nations are "arming to the teeth," and may this not be but the prelude to the last great war? One of the saddest and most surprising aspects of the times is the seeming complacency which exists among the common people. Reports of world conditions are broadcast by means of the wireless and the daily press and appear to be received with an air of indifference and careless disregard.

The colossal tragedy confronting the world is little realized. We may be sure that such apathy does not exist in higher quarters. Endeavor after endeavor has been made by leading statesmen to find a way out of the existing dilemma.

It may be said, very truly, that we have entered the period foretold by our Lord Himself, when "men's hearts are failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." We may well inquire, "Is there any way of escape?" And to this we are glad to be able to give an affirmative answer. It is found in the title chosen: "God's Purpose in Redemption." Our authority for this "plan" is the "old Book" which has stood the test of centuries and is as virile today as ever, "the word of God which liveth and abideth for ever." It will be seen that the suggested remedy is found in "redemption," a subject frequently referred to but perhaps not fully understood.

REDEMPTION AND WHAT IT SIGNIFIES

And what does it signify? Several words in the original are translated "redemption" in the Authorized Version of our Bible, and while, in most cases, they are co-related, it is both interesting and instructive to note where they differ. This can be done quite easily with the aid of a suitable lexicon or concordance. The results will well repay for the time spent.

The word translated "redemption" in our text occurs most frequently in the New Testament. It is apolutrosis, and is found ten times altogether. Its first appearance is in Luke 21:28, where it is translated "redemption," and its last in Hebrews 11:35, where it is rendered "deliverance."

It is distinguished from lutrosis, which has the sense of “a wrought redemption” as in Hebrews 9:12, by the prefix apo, meaning “away from.” It therefore points to an “away from redemption” or “deliverance” from the various conditions outlined in the passages where it occurs.

Referring to Romans 8:20 we learn that “the creature (creation) was made subject to vanity.” This is rather an elusive term, but we find it is best expressed by the words “disappointing misery.” It is a strong expression, but how appropriate to the existing conditions! One is often tempted to confess that life seems to be summed up in that one word “disappointment.” How very few attain the goal of their ambition, and of the misery that exists among thousands upon thousands there is no need to comment. From such there is most definitely a need for deliverance.

A further reference to Luke 21 and we shall find the “deliverance” there referred to is from the terrible conditions outlined in that chapter. It will be seen that this has, primarily, to do with the Jews, and will therefore lose none of its significance when viewed in the light of current events. Since their dispersion the Jews have always been “a burdensome stone” among the nations of the earth; they have become one of the “storm centers” of recent years; but the present anti-Semitic attitude with its bitter persecution will never solve the “Jewish problem.” They are being pressed out of many countries and, as far as possible, pressed into their promised land. Political action is being taken to give them a peaceful home there with a measure of self-government. It is estimated that approximately 370,000 Jews have already entered Palestine, and that the partition suggested will accommodate a total of roughly 2,000,000. This is a great step, but it is not the final solution. The whole land was given to Abraham and his seed for an everlasting possession, and deliverance from their present plight into its full enjoyment is intimated in the promise that their “redemption draweth nigh.”

There is, however, a need for deliverance more universal than this. It is introduced in Romans 3:24. The subject is “justification by faith,” and it is from our sinful condition that justification is needed. This is possible only through the redemption (apolutrosis) that is in Christ Jesus. It is there charged against us that “all have sinned” and because of this have fallen under the penalty of death, for death is not an “angel,” as is often depicted; it is an enemy, a punishment, and sometimes inflicted as such upon a saint as well as upon a sinner. It is from this reign of sin unto death that man needs deliverance.

But death is not an isolated act or happening. It is the result of a process. This was originally indicated in the words “dying thou shalt die.” We are also told by the Apostle James that “lust when it hath conceived, bringeth forth sin; and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death.” Now in this process man is heir to pain and sorrow, with its accompanying misery, suffering, and privation. The curse resulting from “the fall” has also extended to all created things. “The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now.” Christians are not immune, for we also “groan within ourselves” and thus, with the creation, wait for a deliverance from the conditions in which we are found.

SCIENCE AND THE BIBLE

seems too near to evolution, they imagine the world to lie “without form and void” for endless ages until God decided to complete the creation process.

Either view is within the range of possibility. God could have used either method. The most interesting point in the whole question is that God does not give us one bit of detail regarding a gap between verses one and two. It is extremely difficult to conceive of a creation method which would allow long ages either for development or chaos between verses one and two—ages in which nothing occurred that would be valuable for man to know. The very fact that not a single word is given regarding this supposed period would lead us to seriously question the validity of any such doctrine.

In addition to the point just mentioned we should add that the principal reason for assuming long periods of time between verses one and two has been the evolutionary doctrines held by various Christian scholars. These doctrines have not been derived from the words of the Scripture. On the contrary they owe their origin to pagan evolutionary concepts, and have been foisted upon the Genesis record in an attempt to harmonize Genesis with pagan views of cosmogony. This is not exegesis—a reading out of the Scripture, but is “endogesis”—a reading into the Scripture. It is a dangerous thing to read carelessly from the Scripture; but it is more than dangerous to read into the Scripture that which is not there. The only safe position which the Christian scholar can take is to read the record as it stands and accept it literally.

How, then, are we to explain the expression, “without form, and void”? Simply this, that the earth in its original form was in a chaotic state—it was not organized. At the time when the matter of this earth was brought into existence it lay in space without any definite form or organization. The words of the Scripture are significant, “The Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters.” We have here a clear suggestion that the work of creation week was actually a process. God spoke, and the material came into existence. The Spirit of God moved upon this chaotic mass and formed it into shape. Thus we have an introduction to the story of the formation of all the wonderful works of creation. The Genesis record is a straightforward, simple story of the origin of the material and the formation of the earth and its plant and animal life.—Harold W. Clark in Signs of the Times.

Without entering into an exhaustive study of the various words used in connection with the general place of the dead, I may profitably call your attention to the word used most frequently in the Old Testament and to the corresponding word in the New.

In the former, we find the word sheol in the Hebrew is generally used to designate the place of the dead, or the place where the dead remain between death and the resurrection. The conditions prevailing there are suggested in the language of Job as he pleads with Jehovah: "O that thou wouldest hide me in the grave (sheol), that thou wouldest keep me secret, until thy wrath be past, and remember me" (Job 14:13, 21). Concluding his petition, he describes the state of one who has entered there. "His sons come to honour, and he knoweth it not; and they are brought low, and he perceiveth it not of them." Again, in the same book we read, "If I wait, the grave (sheol) is mine house: I have made my bed in darkness" (Job 17:13). Again, "Drought and heat consume the snow waters: so doth the grave (sheol) those which have sinned."

The Psalmist adds his testimony to that of Job concerning the unconsciousness that prevails in sheol. "For in death there is no remembrance of thee: in the grave (sheol) who shall give thee thanks?" (Psa. 6:5). Even more emphatic are the words found in Ecclesiastes 9:4-10: "The living know that they shall die: but the dead know not any thing. . . . Also their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished; neither have they any more a portion for ever in any thing that is done under the sun. . . . Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave (sheol), whither thou goest."

The corresponding word in the New Testament is hades, which means essentially the same as sheol, i. e., the general place of the dead, which is further defined in Ecclesiastes 2:20, thus: "All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again."

The unavoidable conclusion is this: between death and the resurrection "the dead know not any thing"; they are "silent in sheol"; they neither love nor hate; they do not even "praise the Lord." They have no knowledge, and because of that, those who have returned from the place of death can tell us nothing of their experience there, for nothing happened. There is nothing to tell.

In the glad morning of the resurrection the Lord of Life shall call His own sleeping ones from the silent, dusty beds wherein they lie, restore them to consciousness, and crown them with life and glory!

"Somehow I'm glad that those we've lost,
Safe lying on th' Eternal Breast,
Can hear no sounds from earth that mar
The perfect sweetness of their rest;

"No evil seen, no murmurs heard,
No fear of sin, or coming loss,
They wait in peace, imperfect yet,
The final triumph of the Cross."

IS THIS HOPE YOURS?

perhaps the 60th chapter brings them before us in their glory and beauty more than some of the others. "Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee," Isaiah calls to his own people. And though the entire chapter is given over to the blessings that Israel will enjoy when the Messiah shall return and be accepted, yet it takes no great stretch of the imagination to see that the entire world will be included and blessed because of Israel's Redeemer. For, "Gentiles shall come to thy light," and "thou shalt know that I the Lord am thy Saviour and thy Redeemer."

A host of the other prophets, through their writings, bring before us this "golden thread" of truth and weave before our eyes a pattern so enticing that one wonders how anyone who reads could fail to appreciate it. But it remains for the Apostle Paul to state this truth in the most simple language. "Our conversation," he assures us, "is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body" (Phil. 3:20, 21). Such a promise holds out an allure to every one of us, rich or poor, high or low—to be possessor of a body like unto His own glorious, immortalized one!

Only through the second coming of Christ can these promises and blessings be realized. "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory," Paul tells us in Colossians 3:4. And "as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order: Christ the firstfruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming," this great writer assures the Corinthian brethren in 1 Corinthians 15:22, 23.

Perhaps the words that are dearest to all those who read and love God's Word are those found in Paul's first letter to the Thessalonians, 4:13-18. So familiar are they it is scarcely necessary to quote them, but the "golden thread" seems to add new beauty each time we read them. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord."

Can human hand pen words of more comfort than these and others found on almost every page? We have not mentioned that strangely fascinating book of Revelation, in which the most beloved Apostle gives us a glimpse of the glory that was revealed to him in those lonely days of his old age on the island of his banishment. Read and study it, along with the others, for your own enlightenment.

Reader, is this "golden thread" the basis of your hope of the future? If not, hasten to study God's plan and pattern for mankind that you may share in the great blessings He has in store for those who believe.

Spiritual Blessings

"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ."—Ephesians 1:3.

Before me as I write are some nice large pumpkins. I rather enjoy gazing at them, for they symbolize to me the bountiful hand of God—a memory of my boyhood and the pumpkin's part in Thanksgiving celebrations. And as I meditate, some of the good things God has done for us crowd my mind. I think of the bountiful crops, the warm homes, the loyal friends. All these, and more, God has given us.

But as I consider and am thankful I suddenly remember that the crops sometimes fail. These material blessings do not always flow with the same steady crowding from the great horn of plenty. Once when the captives of Judah had returned to the wasted city of Jerusalem, and had built their ceiled houses, but had neglected the house of God, the horn of plenty became dammed. The Prophet Haggai came, crying: "Consider your ways. Ye have sown much, and bring in little; ye eat, but ye have not enough; ye drink, but ye are not filled with drink; ye clothe you, but there is none warm; and he that earneth wages earneth wages to put it into a bag with holes. Thus saith the Lord of hosts; Consider your ways" (Hag. 1:5-7). And considering their ways they saw that they had been so busy with their own physical welfare that they had neglected the house of God and their own spiritual welfare. The spiritual life is more important than the physical!

God "hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ" (Eph. 1:3). The spiritual blessings are more gracious than the physical! Physical blessings are kept on earth "where moth and rust doth corrupt." Spiritual blessings are piled up to our account in the heavenly bank. Name them over: forgiveness of sin, adoption into the family of God through Christ, a hope of eternal life, fellowship with the Lord of all, a peace that passeth understanding, a love for our neighbor, a fellowship with beloved brethren in Christ, a faith to live by. The text says, "all." My friends, do we push out to the bounds of the great blessings God has given us? Plow God's acre before you plow your own.

God's Acre

You are God's acre. He pours out spiritual blessings on you. He expects you to bring forth fruit. Now if you had a farm you wouldn't neglect to keep out the weeds. You would be on hand to reap the harvest. How many of us will consecrate our lives to the Lord, and then go get engaged in such pursuits that take all our time and energy and do not leave us any time to keep the weeds out of God's acre, or to reap the harvest? I plead with you, my friends, leave off the pursuit of physical blessings long enough to worship in God's house on Sunday. Of what use is the crop that you salvage on Sunday if you have lost the spiritual crop you should have tended?

"Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting" (Gal. 6:7, 8).

"Ye are God's husbandry" (1 Cor. 3:9). "You are God's field" (Weymouth). "Ye are God's farm" (Rotherham). "You are God's field to be planted" (Moffatt). You are God's acre.

The Finished Product

Before repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment we heard much of the wages the liquor business would pay to the working man. The facts are that fewer wage earners are employed in the liquor business per given amount of capital than in most any other business.

But let us look as the finished product of the liquor industry. There he is in the gutter. His clothes are torn and dirty—the clothing industry has lost a paying customer, the laundry and soap industries are losing business, less razor blades are used. His bed is the gutter—the furniture business didn't make that sale. In fact, his whole house is without good furniture, his family are hungry, they do without in order that he might drink, drink, DRINK; every penny going into the booze industry.

A little bit before this our finished product specimen was able to drive a car—no more now. The auto industry has lost out with this man. But when he could drive the hospital business boomed; the doctors, nurses, undertaking men, were busy. Industry worked night and day to supply him with coffins, bandages, new cars—but no more now. The goose that laid the golden eggs is no longer a customer—he's a finished product. There he is in the gutter.

At least he cannot run over any more little children. Oh, if only the drunkard could go straight from the first drink to the gutter without that long, bloody road in between strewn with the wreckage of human life and character! Industry can stand the loss of business, it can write it off the books. But can humanity stand the terrific loss of morality and decency?

PREPARED BY MARY A. GESIN

"Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not."—1 John 3:1.

In Faith

Our loving heavenly Father,
We come in faith to Thee;
Thou art our blessed Pilot
O'er life's eventful sea.

Let not our hearts be troubled
Though ocean waves dash high;
Thou art the Hand that guides us
And ever wilt be nigh.

We know Thou hast watched o'er us
In days and years gone by;
Most hearty thanks we give Thee,
On Thee we will rely.

Bless Thou our lives still onward,
We fervently would pray,
Till dawns the golden morning
Of an eternal day.

—Mary A. Rude.

God Is Your Heavenly Father

One of the great facts of life that should make every child, every boy and girl, and everybody else, happy is the fact that we all have a Father in heaven watching over us who is more loving than anyone we know on earth. He is more powerful than the greatest man we know. He is wiser than the wisest person we know.

Because God is more loving than even your dear mother, who loves you when no one else does, if you have been naughty, He sent His own Son Jesus to be our Savior. Without Jesus we would have no hope of forgiveness when we have done wrong. We would have no hope of a better and more beautiful life after this one.

Because God is more powerful than even your own father, who can do most anything, you think, He made this wonderful world in which we live. He made the beautiful trees and birds, the warm sun and the pale moon, the twinkling stars and the deep blue sky. And He made it all for us to enjoy.

Because God is wiser than your teacher, who seems to know everything, He knew that men would disobey Him and would bring punishment on themselves. He knew that all this would result in our losing this beautiful home and in death. And all of this is another reason why He sent Jesus into the world.

Now, if you believe the things Jesus taught when He was on earth, the things you are learning each week from Mother, from your Sunday school teacher, and from reading your own little Bibles, you will be a good son or daughter of your heavenly Father, just as your parents count you good children when you obey them.

Would it make you feel important to be the son or daughter of an earthly king or even of a very wealthy person? Well, it is much better to be the son or daughter of God, for He is owner of all the wealth and beauty of the world. And when we truly appreciate what a blessing it is, we will try ever so hard to please the One who has given us so much to enjoy. We will try to avoid doing the things that would grieve Him, and do only the things He wants us to do.

The Island of Birds

On a plain high up in mountainous Tibet is a beautiful large lake in the middle of which rests an isle, called the Island of Birds. The Tibetans, usually considered a barbarous race, are very fond of bird life. Centuries ago they set aside this isle as a mating and nesting refuge for the countless geese and ducks that migrate to India in the winter. Each year it is the custom for the reigning Dalai Lama at Lhasa to send a minor lama to the island as their keeper and guardian. His main duty is to keep the birds well fed while they remain there. Only a man noted for his love of birds is chosen for the task. He comes to know the birds as individuals, and even has names for many of them. They have the fullest confidence in him. He calls; they obey. He talks; they answer. Bird and man are of a family.—John P. Dinneny in Dumb Animals.

A Prayer for the Week

Our loving heavenly Father, we do thank Thee that Thou art pleased to call us Thy children. We thank Thee for the love Thou hast bestowed upon us. We thank Thee for the wonderful world Thou hast given us to enjoy. May we live in a way that is pleasing to Thee, in a way that sons and daughters of the great King should live.

For Jesus' sake, we ask it. Amen.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

ELDORADO, ILLINOIS

On Sunday morning, Sept. 26, Bro. F. L. Austin will begin a series of evangelistic meetings with the Eldorado brethren. This series will continue for two weeks or more if conditions warrant. All who are in that vicinity are urged to attend.

OUR NEW TREASURER ASSUMES HER DUTIES

Sr. Leota B. Hanson, who was elected at the General Conference to the office of treasurer, has moved to Oregon from her home in St. Louis, Mo., and has taken over her duties in the office of the National Bible Institution. In addition to her responsibilities as treasurer, Sr. Hanson will have charge of the bookkeeping and various other duties which are attached to that position.

Years of experience in office administration and business affairs qualify our new treasurer for the position she now occupies. We are sure that promptness and efficiency will be a distinguishing indication of her ability and that her presence will add much to the success of the office.

FELLOWSHIP SUPPER

On Tuesday evening, Sept. 14, members of the Oregon, Ill., church gathered in the Sunday school rooms and enjoyed a fellowship supper with Bro. and Sr. J. W. McLain, who were completing their month of service in Bro. Marsh's absence. After the supper a musical program was given by Margaret Mattison, violinist, Evan Knodle and Bro. McLain, guitars, and group singing of hymns. Bro. Paul C. Johnson spoke in behalf of those present, in appreciation of Bro. McLain's splendid service in the pastor's absence, extending to him and his family Godspeed as they left us. Bro. McLain takes up work on September 22, under the auspices of the Illinois Conference, for the Macomb and Camden churches. We pray for them the blessings of our heavenly Father as they begin this service together.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

Our church has passed through a very sad period in the sickness and death of Mrs. Merton (Thelma) Sleeper of Oakley St., S. W. Sr. Sleeper, although a young woman in her thirties, has not been well for some months. The dreaded disease of cancer developed, and human skill and loving hands could do nothing to save her life. In addition to her husband she leaves a daughter just out of high school and a son who is a senior this year. Following the services which were conducted here we drove with her to the old home community at Traverse City where she was laid to rest amid beautiful surroundings.

Our well beloved "Mother" Skeels, who so successfully came through a serious operation a few months ago, has not been so well the past two weeks, but is much improved at this writing, for which we are duly thankful.

Attention is called to our anniversary meeting to be held the week-end of October 22-24. Bro. C. E. Randall is to be guest speaker. A cordial invitation is extended. Come for the whole week-end if possible, and if not come for at least part of the meetings.

F. E. Siple.

LANHAM, TEXAS

A series of meetings was held, Sept. 4-12, at this place, which is a new field in so far as our work is concerned. A great work can be established here if we can keep in touch with the people. While there were no conversions during this meeting, a deep interest was manifested which will yet ripen into real fruit as a result of the efforts put forth. The writer was welcomed into the homes here and feels that the efforts were not in vain.

There is one outstanding reason why people do not easily and quickly accept the truth, and that is they have heard so much of error that they are doubtful. Until you eliminate this error by preaching the truth you get no results. There are many more places where the truth can be planted. Will the people of God rally to the support of the gospel work? I sincerely appeal to you in the name of the Son of God who gave His life in order to save men and women, to stand behind the gospel effort of the Church of God. Respond to the call for assistance and go forward. Don't wait until you see the results, but give in order that the gospel can be carried to men and women that are lost and that need the Son of God. Today we need more workers who will go forward without stopping to ask, "How much will I be paid?"

May God bless and open the hearts of His people to the need of the hour.

T. A. Drinkard.

GOLDEN RULE NEWS

The following items of general interest are taken from the bulletin of the Golden Rule Church of God of Cleveland, Ohio, which is edited by Pastor M. W. Lyon.

Playtime's over, the young people are back in school, everyone's back from vacation trips and ready to go to work. Time to get back on the job in all departments of church work, too. A good beginning is most important. It will never be easier than now. We want to see all our members back this week, and others, too.

Berean meetings are to be resumed Friday, Sept. 10. Here's a challenge to young people. You want the church to make a place for you and give you opportunities for service. The Berean society is of, by, and for young people. It's your particular sphere. . . . Yet the young people's group in the Berean society has been the smallest of all groups. It should be the largest. Use your society! Attend it! Do things! Make the old folks sit up and take notice! Start out the new Berean year by being at the first meeting, Sept. 10, and on time.

Every Sunday night from now on the church will be open to welcome you. If you cannot attend in the morning, make it a point to attend at night so that you will be at least once in the house of worship each Sunday. . . . All departments of the church are now back on their regular schedule, ready to serve you. Are you ready to serve your Lord with loyalty this year?

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

A note from Sr. Anna Boyanovsky of Marathon, Iowa, states that the meetings in that part of the Hawkeye State continue with unabated interest under the leadership of Bro. A. M. Jones and Bro. J. Arthur Johnson.

Bro. G. E. Marsh returned to his editorial desk last Friday morning after an absence in Virginia of four weeks. He reports an excellent interest at the points visited, the attendance being good, and the brethren standing firmly for the great doctrines of the Church of God.

Brethren of the Oregon church are engaged in painting the dormitory. Needless to say, the work is voluntary. Few who attend the conferences at Oregon from year to year are aware of the work which the members of the local church cheerfully perform without charge in order that those who come from a distance to meet in these great annual gatherings may be comfortably and pleasantly entertained.

A card from Bro. D. G. Harvey, who is a frequent welcome contributor to our columns, breaks some happy news in this fashion: "With the arrival of Miss Patricia Ann at the home of my son Edgar, the 'hoodoo' is broken, and my family now numbers fourteen instead of thirteen. Expressing his own satisfaction over the event, Bro. Harvey quotes Proverbs 17:6, "Children's children are the crown of old men."

A request from Pastor John Manoah, B. Th., of Bangalore, South India, reports that the people "in this great heathen country are hearing the life truth (life only in Christ), and the Lord is opening my mouth to tell the neglected truth to the so-called Christians." He asks for our prayers.

The editor and his wife celebrated their 25th wedding anniversary quietly last Saturday.

The article on Tithing, found on page 8 of this issue, is well worth everyone's reading. It presents the matter in a little different light than is usually the case, and gives unusual reasons for financing God's work by the method established by Him so many centuries ago. This splendidly written article is adapted from The Messiah's Advocate.

The last Truth Seekers' Sunday School Quarterly is now in the mail. Speaking of the Quarterly reminds us that recently we have received by air mail an inquiry from our brethren in Auckland, New Zealand, concerning the possible use of Truth Seekers' Quarterly in their Bible school. The extreme distance is the most serious drawback. An Adventist church in the East has also manifested an inclination to substitute our quarterly for the one they now use. Examine this last issue carefully and see if you can tell why it is that it maintains its popularity among conditionalists.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

In the year's work the church has made decided progress financially. It has bought and paid for a lot, for all the church furniture, and for one fourth the cost of the building. Therefore, we have reason to be thankful. If as much progress is made in another year there will not be much of a debt left.

Sickness and vacations have interfered somewhat with the attendance in the past few weeks. Sr. Marion Richards was among those who have been ill. Sr. Elizabeth Railsback is now in Little Flowers Rest Home, 2009 W. Washington Blvd., and reports some improvement. On September 6 Carol Ann came to take up her abode in the Juden home in Compton. Besides the parents, three sons and two daughters now constitute this church family. May they all grow up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

We are so glad to have Bro. Clyde Long as a regular attendant at our services. Our gain is a loss to the Holbrook, Neb., church.

Recent visitors to our services were Srs. Miller and Corbell of the Tempe, Ariz., congregation. We were happy to greet them.

Sr. Henrietta Billings, who is 82 years young, recently flew to Chicago in order to attend a twins convention in Fort Wayne, Ind. She reported a safe arrival and pleasant trip and sent greetings to the church.

Another recent visitor among us is Elder J. F. Green of Kansas City, Mo. In comparing our studies of the Scriptures we found we had come to the same conclusions in every point touched upon. He was a former member of the Advent Christian group.

Sr. Mary Calkins reports the ninety-first, the happiest birthday anniversary she ever celebrated. She received cards, letters, flowers, and many substantial gifts. May God's richest blessings abide with her.

The Berean class has been having meetings under the stars in the yard of the Stantial home. First an outdoor meal is enjoyed, followed by a study of the Word. Sixteen were in attendance. We are invited to the Bleasdale home on the top of the hill which gives such a wonderful view of the city.

Among those who should have their names on the Honor Roll as regular attendants at all church functions is the Carlson family. No excuses or alibis are ever needed in their case. We believe that more could do as well if they could only be impressed with the importance of never failing to be at their post of duty in the Lord's work.

Sr. Emily Blackwell is taking a much needed rest in the mountains with her daughter, Sr. Rena Taylor.

We are planning a Rally Day service for October 3, and are hoping that Bro. John Eagleston will have returned home from his missionary journey by that date and will be able to give us some assistance as a missionary in our new location.

We would not forget to mention Bro. C. J. Squires who has also celebrated another anniversary of his birth. His method of healing the suffering caused by the loss of his life's companion is in making quilts. They are as beautiful as any made by women experts. He is entering two in the county fair.

JESSIE HARDING GRANT

Jessie Harding Grant, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Willey Harding, and wife of John Abel Grant, was born in Rensselaer, Ind., 79 years ago; and died at her home in the city in which she was born, Sept. 2, 1937.

She was united in marriage with J. A. Grant fifty-four years ago. To this union two sons were born, one dying in childhood; the other, Hale, dying only two months before the passing of his mother, leaving her so sorely afflicted that she was not permitted to attend his funeral nor to look upon his face in death.

Some months before her marriage she was baptized into Christ by Elder D. T. Halstead, from which time she never halted nor hesitated in her devotion to the Master's cause.

Excepting for a few years soon after her marriage when she resided on a farm some miles from Rensselaer, she resided her entire lifetime in the city of her birth.

Of her immediate family she leaves her husband and one sister, with two grandsons and one granddaughter and other more distant relatives and friends to mourn the loss of one whose place in their lives cannot be filled by another in this world.

Appropriate services were held in the church house in which she had been a faithful worshiper of the Lord all the adult years of her life. We laid her to rest in the beautiful but silent city of the dead, while the birds in the trees seemed to chirp an affectionate farewell, to await the Master's return to gather His harvest of jewels.

SI HERREN

The following very brief obituary was sent us by Bro. Marvin Herren:

Bro. Si Herren was born at Carthage, Mo., and died on August 28, 1937, at his home in Republic, Mo., aged 59 years, leaving his wife and two sons to mourn his loss. He was buried on August 29 at Pomperene Cemetery, where are also buried his parents, Bro. T. M. Herren and Sr. Nancy Hereen. A letter from Mrs. Dannie Lowry of Vanzant, Mo., tells us that Bro. Herren was a faithful member of the Church of God for many years, and will be remembered by readers of The Herald as a writer to its columns. Bro. Herren was a brother of Sr. Lowry, and she says she would be glad to hear from members of the Church of God.

Board of Evangelism

Preach the Word

C. E. Randall, Superintendent

You perhaps have already noted that the Mission Board of last year is operating under the name of "Board of Evangelism." The change was made because the latter wording better suited the work being done by the Board. Then, too, the expression is more familiar with our people and conveys to them our objectives in a fuller sense.

The secretary-treasurer, Bro. James A. Patrick, has been invited by the pastor of the Brush Creek church in Ohio to come there and present the work of the Board. This invitation will be accepted and those sturdy contenders for the gospel in sound doctrine along the Miami watershed will be told how they can have a partnership in bringing their distinctive teachings into communities where the message has not gone. The Board is grateful to Pastor Magaw for this gracious invitation to place before his people the gospel work of the Church of God. Other churches which were not visited during the past summer in the interests of the Board of Evangelism will be supplied with a speaker setting forth ways and means whereby the Church of God can put across a constructive evangelistic program, if you follow Bro. Magaw's example and ask that the evangelistic program of the Church of God be presented in your church.

The interests of the Board of Evangelism go beyond evangelistic work in new fields. Attention is given to the welfare of already established churches, especially to see that congregations seeking resident pastors are supplied and that pastors seeking contacts with unpastored churches are given connection. Every flock needs a shepherd! "Smite the shepherd, and the sheep of the flock will be scattered abroad." Immediate attention will be given all requests. Some of our ministers are desiring change and if churches who are needing pastors will get in touch with the Board, every effort will be made to bring you in touch with a suitable prospect.

The Board rejoices with the workers at Ater, Texas, over the successful meeting recently conducted by Evangelist T. A. Drinkard. Meetings that result in converts, who are brought to repentance and confession through the power of the gospel are oases in our national church life. Greetings are also extended to Skelton, W. Va., in their addition of three members, who drove to the Bible School and Conference in Virginia to be baptized. An evangelistic fund made the labor of Bro. Thayer at Skelton possible. His work in this new field a little over a year ago was greatly blessed of the Lord. What was done there can be duplicated elsewhere if efforts are put forth and if the members over the country will come to the help of the work.

Don't forget your regular weekly or monthly contribution to the evangelistic cause of the Church of God! Send your offerings to Elder James A. Patrick, Orange Road, Ashland, Ohio. Let us go forward with the Church of God.

The Temptation of Christ

“For we have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin.”—Hebrews 4:15.

AS OUR representative before God, Christ had to become one of us, not only being made flesh (John 1:14), but also experiencing the life lived by men. He was hungry, thirsty, weary; He felt joy and sorrow; He received acclaim and opposition; He had friends and enemies; and He had to meet the lure, conflict, and decision of temptation.

According to Luke, temptation followed Him through the years with His disciples. But we find no definite record save that of His initial trial at the outset of His public ministry. Like ourselves, with daily tests, there came seasons of special stress, when momentous issues are faced, and life trends directed by the choice made.

Christ had a definite outlook before Him. He must be about His Father's business, an exponent of the principles of God's kingdom, as the visible power of God in healing and miracle. As Son of man as well as Son of God, He had to definitely view His mission and carefully orient Himself in regard to it. He could not seek personal preference. He had come to do His Father's will, to save that which was lost; hence every thought, word, and deed must be in accord with that end.

So, apart from men for forty days, He was in meditation and prayer. Then followed the three recorded temptations. It seems these three are inclusive in principle, and all brands of temptation might be classified under them. The devil began with “if,” a characteristic of his manner of working. In Eden he created doubt first, “Did God say?” And he continues thus until the present time. God gave commands, Christ spoke with authority and surety, but the devil says “if.” Doubt destroys power, definiteness of aim, and will to accomplish. “If” you should not do what you are doing, you cannot proceed with whole-hearted vim and determination.

“If . . . command that these stones be made bread” (Matt. 4:3). This was appeal to personal feeling and desire. He was hungry; He had divine power. Here was material He could transform for His own pleasure. This temptation typifies the appeal to the senses, the pull of the world and the flesh, the yielding to the lust of the eyes. God has given us all the good and beautiful things which the world contains, for our use. But all these must be used legitimately, with regard for their relationship to our mission as ambassadors for Christ. “Let not then your good be evil spoken of: for the kingdom of God is not meat and drink” (Rom. 14:16, 17).

“If . . . cast thyself down” (Matt. 4:6). Said David, “Keep back thy servant also from presumptuous sins; let them not have dominion over me” (Psa. 19:13). As we proceed through the world we need to know the will of God for us. We need often to ask: What is our purpose in doing this? does it advance the power of God over the lives of men? does it save souls? The spectacular can attract for the moment, but its influence is quickly dissipated. Had Christ done this, the multitude would have expected a continuation of useless showing of miraculous power. As it was, even the useful miracles drew men for the loaves and fishes, and they shortly turned back.

That which is seen and handled is understood by the crowd, but the deeper spiritual things are sought by but few. An acrobatic beginning would have attracted the wrong crowd. Christ desired serious-minded thinkers for disciples. When God exercises His power in our behalf it is for a purpose, not just to show off. We can claim God's promise of Mark 16:17, 18 when needed in pursuit of duty. God's children have been protected from poisons, serpents, and dangers of many kinds. They have received healing. These things have occurred when needed as aid to service for God, not when merely flaunted as signs of power. He gives His angels charge when we proceed according to His word and will for His glory. This temptation might be said to cover the whole principle of self-display and includes religious fanaticism.

“All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me” (Matt. 4:9). “What is the use of working hard, struggling, and doing exactly right? Take the easy way! You can get a lot out of life without so much effort.” How common this temptation! It is hard for the flesh to maintain a high standard at all times. Everyone has a streak of innate laziness. It is easier to drift with the current than to swim upstream. This temptation was an appeal to the human love of power, fame, possession; and ease in procuring them. Had Jesus done this, His entire purpose in coming to overcome the devil and destroy his works, would have been frustrated. To have yielded here would have been to acknowledge him as rightfully supreme. The usurper must be ousted, not acknowledged.

What was the secret which enabled Jesus to meet every temptation without yielding? First, an unswerving purpose to do the will of God. He took no temporary vacation from righteousness. He never said, “Well, it may not be exactly the best, but it won't hurt just this once.” He never lowered His standard in a single instance. Second, He did not fail through ignorance. He was familiar with the Word of God, and to every proposal could say, “It is written.”

“Thy word have I hid in mine heart, that I might not sin against thee” (Psa. 119:11). “Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path” (Psa. 119:105).—Janette B. Shuster in The Bible Advocate.

We Plow and Scatter

We plow the fields, and scatter
The good seed on the land,
But it is fed and watered
By God's almighty hand.
He sends the snow in winter,
The warmth to swell the grain,
The breezes and the sunshine,
And soft, refreshing rain.

He only is the Maker
Of all things near and far;
He paints the wayside flower;
He lights the evening star;
The winds and waves obey Him,
By Him the birds are fed;
Much more to us, His children,
He gives our daily bread.

We thank Thee, then, O Father,
For all things bright and good;
The seedtime and the harvest,
Our life, our health, our food:
No gifts have we to offer
For all Thy love imparts,
But that which Thou desirest,
Our humble, thankful hearts.

Abreast of the Times

Pertinent Comments on the News of the Day

"Europe Has Forgotten How to Laugh"

"The mirth of tabrets ceaseth, the noise of them that rejoiceth endeth."—Isaiah 24:8.

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 25.—A distinguished European author, who recently visited Los Angeles, said, according to The Times, that one word describes the difference between the Old World and the New. "Europe has forgotten how to laugh. America has just learned."

Commenting on the statement, The Times remarks:

"Perhaps he is right. Europe has little enough to laugh about, it is true, yet by a paradox—laughter alone is the thing that might save it. Its laughter has been crushed under armament and taxes, the twin enemies of gayety. A red tide has submerged the last faint whisper of humor and hope in bloody Spain.

"In three capitals—Berlin, Rome, and Moscow—grim-lipped men rule by the power of dictatorship. And the laughter that comes from their people is a hollow sound. Laughter is not a thing to be lightly passed over as an unnecessary part of national character. It is the leaven that makes life livable, that makes burdens less onerous. A laughing people can stand trials that would annihilate their frowning neighbors. Laughter indicates the buoyancy of hope."

It is good that America can still laugh—that she still has reason to laugh. But we wonder how long such a happy condition will continue even here? Faith in God and in His promises concerning the future provides the only true occasion for joy, for faith alone bridges the chasm of the present with its anxieties and threatenings, and assures the believer that on the other side tranquillity and security will be realized. And faith, faith in the inspiration of the Bible, the only means by which God speaks clearly to men, is rapidly waning in this country under the blighting influence of modernism, humanism, and skepticism, and we may well address the question Jesus asked to our own people: "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith" in America? It is for you and for me to answer.

Gambling Craze Grows

"And they crucified him, and parted his garments, casting lots."—Matthew 27:35.

NEW YORK, Sept. 25.—Ten billion dollars, just take a glance at the actual figures!—$10,000,000,000! is the sum of money that is being spent this year in the United States in gambling! Not the gambling of so-called "big business" men in the stock and grain markets, but this vast sum of money is being spent this year by people who live in the "lower financial brackets," that is, men and women whose incomes seldom exceed two thousand dollars per annum.

betting on a thousand and one different games of chance!

Thomas Sucrue, writing in the current issue of the American Magazine, points out the alarming increase in gambling in which all classes of our citizens indulge, from the lowest to the highest from the standpoint of earnings. People will bet on anything, he asserts, from how far a Mexican jumping bean will go in a single leap, to how long one can live without breathing! Few men or women are willing to engage in any game, however simple it may be, without betting on the result.

We have noticed during the last few years a great increase in the number of gambling devices seen in the candy stores, drug stores, and ice cream "parlors," all of which are frequented by young people and children.

The dangers that lurk in this form of "amusement" are many. First, it encourages a desire to gain something without working for it and that is destructive to character. Second, the desire to gamble grows upon one with astonishing rapidity. It soon becomes a passion which the victim cannot control and often results in theft, and even murder, that the gambler may provide himself with funds for further gambling or replace money which he has misappropriated to his own use. Third, it gives one a false understanding of life and its purpose. He comes to feel that "the world owes him a living," and he attempts to collect the debt at the expense of others. Last, gambling is an economic waste. It has been thoroughly established that gambling devices never return to their victims more than ten per cent of the money that passes across the table or finds lodgment on the wheel.

Importance of Palestine

"I will be known in the eyes of many nations."—Ezek.

JOHANNESBURG, S. A., Sept. 25.—Addressing the Sixteenth Zionist Conference in this city, General Smuts declared that "beyond all doubt the policy of the National Home (for the Jews) and the British Mandate for Palestine are matters of the greatest international importance." This fact is being recognized by statesmen of all nations.

The God of the Nations

By the Editor

IN THIS and other similar assurances of the Bible lies the hope of the world. And what a glorious hope it is that the time is coming when the present order with its discontent and uncertainty will be swept away forever and the Lord of life and love and mercy shall become visibly, what He already is in reality, the King of all the earth!

This is one of the several splendid truths of Inspiration which the pride of man has shrouded in clouds of forgetfulness for hundreds, if not for thousands, of years. An echo of this glorious hope, faint though it is, has come down to us in the traditions and religions of the world. It was too wonderful a truth to be cast aside and lost altogether.

Among the ancient Greeks this blessed hope was anticipated as a restoration of the "Golden Age," that prosperous and happy period in which, it was believed, the mighty gods ruled and reigned upon the earth. To the early Egyptians also it was more of a historic tradition than an expectation, for they looked backward to the time when Osiris, the greatest of the gods, ruled the valley of the Nile and the people rejoiced and were at peace. They hoped that some day Osiris would return and reestablish his kingdom of glory.

Of course the Jews remembered their "Golden Age," when the God of their fathers exerted His beneficent power over the children of Israel, and so they, too, looked hopefully forward, even in times of bitterest persecution, to a coming day when Jehovah's hand would be extended over them again in blessing at Messiah's coming.

And so many peoples have believed in a marvelous age of prosperity and happiness which the world once knew under the direct and personal rulership of their God or gods, and have hoped for a return of that happy state. Our text expresses clearly this almost universal idea:

"All the ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the Lord: and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before him. For the kingdom is the Lord's: and he is the governor among the nations."

The need for such direct divine intervention in human affairs is becoming ever more apparent. It is obvious to every observer that the efforts of men to rule righteously have thus far failed and that their well-thought-out plans for the establishment and maintenance of prosperity and peace have likewise fallen far short of their desires.

Nor is this all. The calamity which came upon the Ohio and Mississippi River valleys last spring served to show how weak man is when his strength is pitted against the mighty forces of nature and of nature's God. For in the midst of what we have pridefully called the most highly developed and scientifically governed nation on the earth, have come devastating floods, taking a toll of lives and treasure almost beyond computation. Man-made barriers were swept away by the resistless waters which poured from the mountains and roared through the valleys of fourteen states. However much our pride rebels against doing so, we are compelled to acknowledge that we are helpless when the forces of nature are unleashed. The intelligence that planned and the brawn that carried out the conquest of this continent are not equal to the task of controlling weather and fire and flood!

"All the ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the Lord; and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before thee. For the kingdom is the Lord's and he is the governor among the nations."—Psalm 22:27, 28.

But history shows clearly that there is a God in heaven who does possess power over the forces of nature! The waters of the sea have on occasion been stayed at His command, and at the word of His Son the stormy waves and the blustering winds were made to subside. And that is the God, the Maker and Master of nature, our text declares shall one day rule the world!

It is not strange that this should be the case, for it all belongs to Him. He alone is its Creator, for "the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein. For he hath founded it upon the seas, and established it upon the floods" (Psa. 24:1, 2). All things are His by right of creation. And so He says: "If I were hungry, I would not tell thee: for the world is mine, and the fulness thereof" (Psa. 50:12). No, it is not strange that God should one day rule the whole world by the power of His might and by the strength of His arm! It is only strange that men should have forgotten that this once has been and that it is yet to be again!

This it was that Nebuchadnezzar, the proud and haughty king of Babylon, forgot to his sorrow and disgrace. As he meditated upon his own greatness he failed to give to God the glory for it. Looking out over his splendid capital, "the king spake, and said, Is not this great Babylon, that I have built for the house of the kingdom by the might of my power, and for the honour of my majesty? While the word was in the king's mouth, there came a voice from heaven, saying, O king Nebuchadnezzar, to thee is it spoken; the kingdom is departed from thee. . . . They shall make thee to eat grass as oxen, and seven times shall pass over thee, until thou know that the most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will" (Dan. 4:30-36).

It was because the kings of Judah forgot the fact of God's supreme and universal rulership that He withdrew

God's Promises to Israel

THE word "Israel" occurs about seven hundred times in the Bible. In a number of passages of the Old Testament it is employed to designate the ten tribes which separated from Judah and Benjamin in the days of Rehoboam. In a larger number of passages this name is applied to the entire nation, the twelve tribes. Israel, therefore, means everywhere in the Scriptures of the Old Testament the literal descendants of the sons of Jacob. The same word is frequently found in the New Testament, where it has the same meaning.

OTHER VIEWS

Many Bible commentaries advance a different view as to the New Testament use of this word. They tell us it means in the Gospels and Epistles the church of Christ; that the church is the Israel of God now, and that in the church the hundreds of promises given to the literal Israel are now spiritually fulfilled. This mode of Bible interpretation has been called the spiritualizing method. Thus all literal meaning of Israel's promises in the Old Testament has been changed into a spiritual meaning. In other words, we do not need to look for a literal fulfillment of Old Testament prophecies as far as the literal is concerned.

Now, it is no small matter whether the Word of God, especially the word of prophecy, is allowed to stand for just what it declares, according to its plain meaning, or whether its plain, obvious reading is to be discarded and another substituted. Christendom has been taught for centuries to consider itself a spiritual Israel, and to regard all the glorious things which Israel's inspired prophets spoke of their land and nation as being now spiritually fulfilled in the growth and development of the church. However, it is difficult to make the prophecies fit, even spiritually, actual conditions in Christendom.

SPIRITUALIZATION

Let us see, first of all, what the spiritualization of the prophecies of Israel's future really means. It is an impeachment of the wisdom of God; it is wisdom to employ means adequate to accomplish a desired end. For centuries there have been in the possession and keeping of Israel pages upon pages of their own Scriptures filled with prophecies relating to their future. These prophetic promises give glowing and minute accounts of a glorious, national regeneration, and restoration of the literal Israel under Messiah, their King, in the true sense of these predictions, has never yet taken place. Yet history proves that nothing but the hope drawn from the literal sense of these prophecies has enabled that wonderful people to endure all manner of persecution without surrendering their own distinctive being.

Dr. A. C. Gaebelein, author of the following article, which is taken from The Presbyterian, is a well-known writer and lecturer on prophetic themes and the editor of Our Hope. Among his outstanding works are "The Prophet Daniel," "The Prophet Ezekiel," and commentaries on Joel, Zechariah, and Revelation.

Furthermore, it is an undeniable fact that millions of Jews and Christians today still hold fast to the belief that He who scattered Israel literally, will just as literally gather them back to their own land (Jer. 31:

10). The spiritualizing method claims that God never intended to preserve or to restore Israel as such. Those who hold it declare that with the death of Christ, Israel had fully accomplished the purpose of their existence, and that they are never to come into action again as the literal Israel. The eggshell of Israel and Israel's hope was forever broken when the church was born to assume Israel's place.

If this is right, then what does God mean to do with Israel as a nation and with their land? Not only this, but why has He failed to get them out of the way after, as is being said, He was "forever done with them as a people"? God knows well how to make an end of nations after they have served their purpose. Have the people of Israel survived as a nation in spite of Him? Their preservation, one of the great outstanding miracles of history, either serves an object, or it serves none. If it serves an object, if Israel's preservation, which only God could accomplish, is for a great ultimate purpose, the spiritualizing method is wrecked completely. If Israel's preservation serves no end at all, then God's wisdom, as well as governmental dealings, stands forever impeached.

Still more serious is this spiritualizing of prophecy when we consider that it impeaches God's veracity and faithfulness. It amounts to nothing less than this—God in His Word declares one thing, but He means quite another thing. Even if it should be proved that the other thing was infinitely superior to the thing clearly and distinctly promised, it certainly could not and would not atone for the deception practiced. Thousands, yea, millions, believed those national promises in a literal sense, but God deceived them by meaning something spiritual, and not at all what the plain meaning of those prophecies indicated. So far from giving us a higher and nobler, a more exalted conception of God's character, the spiritualizing method plays fast and loose with God's veracity. How can He be trusted if He does not mean what He says? If He did not mean literally what He promised to Israel in oath-bound covenants, how can we know that He really means what He has promised to the church in the New Testament?

ROMANS 9:6 AND GALATIANS 6:16

But are there not certain New Testament passages in which the word of Israel is used in a spiritual way, and where it does mean the church? Let us see. We confine ourselves to the two texts which are most frequently quoted to uphold this view. The first is Romans 9:6, "For they are not all Israel, which are of Israel." This statement was not made to teach that believers generally, without respect of nationality, now constitute the true Israel. The Israel in this passage is still the literal Israel. By it is meant the believing remnant of that people.

The Pauline statement is fully demonstrated in Old Testament history. There we find two Israels. There was proud, stiffnecked, rebellious, and idolatrous Israel, circumcised in the flesh, but not in the heart, serving other gods, to whom God spoke in words of bitter complaint. And there was also the faithful remnant, the inner circle, like the seven thousand who had not bowed the knee to the image of Baal, or the remnant in the days of Malachi.

Isaiah 45:9-13 contains a remarkable contrast between the nominal and the true Israel, the Godfearing, promise-believing, and Messiah-expecting portion of Israel. This true Israel we find on the threshold of the New Testament. Simeon and Anna belonged to this remnant. They were the sheep which did not follow the false leaders, the thieves and robbers, who came before our Lord. These true sheep knew the Shepherd's voice and followed Him out of the Jewish fold (John 10). Nathanael was one of these true Israelites, and so were the one hundred and twenty. When Paul writes that "they are not all Israel, which are of Israel," his meaning is very obvious. He speaks of the literal Israel, that not all of them are the real, the true Israel.

Another passage is Galatians 6:16—"And as many as walk according to this rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and upon the Israel of God." The Israel of God, it is claimed, means the church. It does not. Paul distinguished between Gentile believers and Jewish believers. The latter are the Israel of God. Saintly Bengel in his comment says correctly, "The Israel of God are believers of the circumcision of Jewish nation."

Let us ascertain what the promises of Israel are. It is significant that the Apostle to the Gentiles in the Epistle to the Romans, addressed to a Gentile church, gives such prominence to the literal Israel. "Who are Israelites; to whom pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises; whose are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, who is over all, God blessed for ever" (Rom. 9:4, 5). In the same Epistle he deals in a masterly way with the future of the national Israel (Rom. 11).

ISRAEL'S PROMISES

But what are the promises which belong to Israel? We classify them under two heads.

1. The promises of a Messiah-Redeemer-King. "The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy." The prophets testified beforehand of the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow. They revealed the two advents of Christ, one in humiliation, to suffer and to die, and the other in exaltation and glory, to reign as King supreme. It is unnecessary to point out how literally all the predictions relating to the sufferings of Christ, Israel's Messiah, were fulfilled. Here we must quote another scripture: "Now I say that Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the fathers" (Rom. 15:8). His coming, as predicted by the prophets, also confirmed the promises made unto the fathers. Now a confirmed promise does not mean a fulfilled promise. The prophecies relating to His sufferings, as already stated, were fulfilled, but this fulfillment also confirmed all the other promises made unto the fathers. His coming in humiliation vouchsafes that other coming, His coming in the glory of His Father. While His coming as the suffering One, to die the sinner's death, was a confirmation of all the promises made unto the fathers, the fulfillment of the promises which still belong to Israel comes in the future, and their literal fulfillment is inseparably linked with His future, personal, and visible coming in glory.

UNFULFILLED PROMISES

2. What are Israel's unfulfilled promises? They are the many promises of regeneration and restoration, promises of an earthly kingdom, promises of great spiritual and material blessings, promises relating to the earthly Jerusalem, and promises of universal peace and world conversion. My assertion is, that all these hundreds of promises have never seen their fulfillment, that they are not being fulfilled in a spiritual sense in the church today, and that they will never and can never be fulfilled in the church of the future. Why not? Because they are the promises made to Israel and not to the church.

The final question which the disciples addressed to their departing Lord concerned the kingdom: "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" (Acts 1:6). That these Jewish disciples had a perfect right to expect such a restoration seems very clear. Their expectation rested upon the promises of God. Did our Lord correct their expectation? Certainly not. He rather confirmed it, when He answered: "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power."

But here we meet the challenge of Matthew 21:43—"Therefore I say unto you, The kingdom of God shall be taken from you (Israel), and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." We are told that there is decisive proof that there never will be an earthly kingdom of Israel. They have lost it. The kingdom is here now, and the church is that kingdom. In other words, our Lord, when He spoke of the nation to receive the kingdom, meant the church. But where in Scripture is the church of Jesus Christ ever called a nation? The church is symbolized as the body of Christ and the bride of Christ, the habitation of God by the Spirit; it is also called a house and a holy temple; but there is no verse of Scripture in which the church is called a nation possessing the kingdom. True, Peter says, "Ye are an holy nation," but his Epistle is not addressed to the church, but to the true Israel of God, His own believing brethren in the dispersion. What, then, is the nation which is to receive the kingdom in the future? It will be converted, Spirit-filled Israel; in fact, Israel becomes the first nation which will be all holy.

Remember Thy Creator

By A. H. Zilmer

THESE words form part of an admonition addressed by the Preacher to his son (Ecl. 12:1, 12). To remember is to retain in mind so as to make its recall possible. Another definition, and still more to the point, is to bear in mind with reverence, regard, gratitude, or affection. It is easy to see that to remember the Creator means more than merely to retain in mind the fact that He exists, that He is. Unquestionably the thought in the Preacher's mind was to bear the Creator in mind with reverence, regard, gratitude, and affection, with the accessory idea of rendering service to Him as an expression of such sentiments. This idea is also embodied in the fact that God is youth's Creator. As Jehovah created the earth not in vain but that it should be inhabited, so there was design in the creation of youth, and that is, that youth should serve Him. Since God is the Creator of one youth or young person, He is the Creator of all youths or young persons. Furthermore, He is the Benefactor of all mankind, including youth. This calls for gratitude for favors and blessings constantly received at His hands. "He giveth to all life and breath and all things" (Acts 17:25). Then again, being the Creator of youth as well as adults, He is also their Owner, and they are His property. Therefore, He has the right to command and expect reverence which finds expression in loving and reverential service.

The outstanding idea in this admonition is that the Creator is to be remembered "in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them." The Preacher used a number of striking figures of speech to describe the disabilities that accompany the passing of youth, and the approach of old age, and would have the "youth" turn to the service of God while life is full of vigor and sparkling energy, while sight is keen, the hearing acute, the physical powers alert and active, and the outlook bright. And why not? Why withhold from God that which by every right is His own?

But this is more than merely a matter of duty or obligation. Do not look upon it in that light. There is great joy and peace of mind in the service of the living God. Those who enter that service are conscious of being at one with their Maker. They not only believe in Him; they believe Him. They believe what He says. They obey His commands, not from any compulsion of fear, but out of a heart filled to overflowing with the love of God. To them the service of God, of whatever kind or character this may be, is a source of constant and never-ceasing joy. There are in the Scriptures a number of examples of outstanding youthful piety. There was Joseph in Egypt who, when severely tried, would not "do this great wickedness, and sin against God" (Gen. 39:6-9); Daniel, a Jewish youth in captivity in Babylon, who "would not defile himself with the portion of the king's meat, nor with the wine which he drank" (Dan. 1:3-8); Timothy, a youth in Asia Minor, a convert of the Apostle Paul, who was "well reported" of for his piety by the brethren in the community in which he lived (Acts 16:1, 2). In all these cases such piety was traceable to the home influence and parental teaching, though it was not without the will and choice on the part of those young men.

We must not fail to mention the boy Jesus who at twelve years of age not only knew that He "must be about" that which was His Father's (Luke 2:49), but placed this above every other consideration. All these, owing to their devotion to principle, sacrificed that which would bring them present advantage, or else exposed them to scorn and hardship, if not loss of life itself.

The Psalmist, in making a lengthy composition for use in the congregation of Israel, asked this question: "Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way? By taking heed thereto according to thy word" (Psa. 119:9). "His way" doubtless refers to his manner of living. To "take heed" was to give close attention to. "According to thy word" would be to place the two side by side, and make the Word the standard by which to gauge his actions. With this agree the words of the wise man, that the Proverbs were written "to give subtilty to the simple, to the young man knowledge and discretion" (Prov. 1:4).

It is said of Josiah, king of Judah, who succeeded a wicked father, that during his reign, which began when he was eight years of age, he "did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, and walked in the ways of David his father, and declined neither to the right hand nor to the left" (2 Chron. 34:2, 3). This chapter and the next contain a recital of all the "acts of Josiah, and his goodness according to that which was written in the law of the Lord, and his deeds first and last" (chap. 35:26, 27). The wholesome influence of his mental attitude, and the fine example he set before his people, caused the historian to say, "And all his days they departed not from following the Lord, the God of their fathers" (chap. 34:33).

Do you fear, my young friend, that you will make mistakes, and possibly fall by the wayside? Let no such dismal thoughts disturb your mind. The God who would have you serve Him has provided the means which will enable you to render such service. His divine power has given to us all things that pertain to life and godliness (2 Peter 1:3). We are assured that He is able to do for us more exceeding abundantly than we can ask or think (Eph. 3:20). He is able to keep us from falling, and to present us faultless before the presence of His glory with exceeding joy (Jude 24). Are we hungry? There is the sincere milk of the Word which promotes growth (1 Peter 2:2), as well as the bread of life (John 6:48). Are we thirsty? Jesus will give us living water (John 4:10). Is it required that we overcome? "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith" (1 John 5:4). Do we need perseverance in our effort to gain eternal life? Tribulation worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope, and hope maketh not ashamed, because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit (Rom. 5:3-5). You have access to the unsearchable riches of Christ (Eph. 3:8).

Would you picture to yourself the glory of the immortal state, the endless life, the life indeed? Would you with your mind's eye behold the divine institution styled the kingdom of God existing upon this earth, bringing peoples and races into subjection with the will of God, and at last filling the earth with the glory of God? The most vivid imagination utterly fails to adequately depict the glory that awaits God's people. Will you not be one of those who anticipates that glory?—The Faith.

Our Liberty

By D. G. Harvey

"And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8:32.

ONE hundred and sixty-one years ago our fathers conceived a new form of government, signed the Declaration of Independence, and later the Constitution of these United States—both masterpieces of good judgment and foresight. They must have been guided by the Spirit of God to have planned so well; for this form of government, though not perfect, has stood the test of years and is still declared by men of all nations to be the best on the earth.

You will remember the story of the fifty-six brave men who signed their names to that famous document, the signing of which meant death to every one if the cause should fail. But remember the closing words of that declaration: "And for the support of this declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other, our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor." With that faith in divine protection they could sign boldly.

Another strange connection was the fact that the bell, which we now call the "Liberty Bell," which rang that night in Philadelphia (the City of Brotherly Love), bore this inscription—"Proclaim liberty throughout all the land, unto the inhabitants thereof" (Lev. 25:10). And yet, that bell was cast in London, England, in 1752, twenty-four years before!

Surely God's hand directed the forming of our Nation. This is not strange when we remember the interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's vision of the tree how the king should become as a beast "till thou know that the most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will" (Dan. 4:25).

Then, too, our Nation has always been kind to the Jews. "And I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee" (Gen. 12:3). While we rejoice in this great land of ours and are assured the right to worship our God in peace, we also rejoice in the greater liberty we receive from God's Word.

"And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free" (John 8:32). Free from what? Free from doubt and superstition? Yes. But greater still, free from the "law of sin and death" (Rom. 8:2).

True, we are all under the penalty of death. We inherit death from our first parent, Adam. "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin: and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned" (Rom. 5:12). Death is sure. It comes to all. But when we are led by the Spirit there is not that fear, that horror of death which we would otherwise experience. It can mean but rest at the end of labor—sleep! For we know, as Paul did, and are able to say, "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand, I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing" (2 Tim. 4:6-8). There was no fear of death in Paul's mind, nor did he expect to receive that "crown" at once. It was laid away, made ready, to be received at the Lord's coming. Note the glory of the unselfish Paul—"not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." Do you love and desire His coming? Paul was a wonderful example of "where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty" (2 Cor. 3:17).

But God gave the law; how then are we free? There is but one answer: "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law" (Gal. 3:13). The law a curse? Yes, without law there could be no penalty. Without the law there is no knowledge of sin. Not that the law creates sin, but the law reveals sin. "What shall we say then? Is the law sin? God forbid. Nay, I had not known sin, but by the law: for I had not known lust, except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet" (Rom. 7:7). The law is as a mirror to show us our real selves.

We have listened to long sermons on law and grace. It seems hard to find words to express the difference. Often we are left as much in the dark as before. On one occasion it was my privilege to notice a small boy very restless in church. At last the mother lost her patience, shook him soundly, and whispered in his ear: "You sit still, young man, or I'll skin you when I get you home." The boy sat still. That was law—fear of the penalty. He had no desire to sit still; perhaps his young mind was raging about the injustice of it all. But he sat still—obedience through fear of punishment. On the other hand, could that mother have instilled the desire on the part of the son to sit still, that he might hear and learn of God, that would have been grace.

Law brings obedience by force and fear.

Grace brings obedience by desire and love.

"Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage" (Gal. 5:1).

God's Purpose in Redemption

KNOWING that the conditions mentioned in our previous article are only too true, is it not opportune to ask, Does God care?

And the Scriptures assure us that He does. The subjection to vanity was only of a temporary nature, for we read that the creation was "subjected in hope." And the "hope" to which it looks forward is a final and complete deliverance. It is to be "set free from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." This hope was born in Eden, for as far back as Genesis 3:15 we read that the woman's seed shall bruise the serpent's head. From this time onward God's plan has been gradually unfolded. Its peak was reached in the advent of "the Seed," for that Seed was Christ. Henceforth our eyes are "turned toward Jesus." He has been made to us wisdom . . . and redemption (apolutrosis) (1 Cor. 1:30). That such a plan had been entertained and such a deliverance expected, was evinced by those who, at the time of our Lord's birth, looked for redemption (lutrosis) in Jerusalem. The seeming failure in the realization of this hope had produced sadness and disappointment in the hearts of the two disciples who journeyed to Emmaus. Said they, "We trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed (lutrosis) Israel." But God was working His purpose out and, as we shall presently see, that which was the cause of their disappointment was, in reality, an integral part of His plan. The method of fulfillment was unexpected. The Son of man came not to receive a kingdom at that time, but to minister and to give His life for a ransom (lutron) for many.

This latter is the foundation of the gospel and upon it the scheme of redemption is built. It is an essential part of the testimony committed to the Apostle Paul. His creed is thus briefly expressed: "For there is one God (who will have all men to be saved) and one Mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus; who gave himself a ransom (antlutron) for all, to be testified in due time" (1 Tim. 2:5, 6). The use of the prefix "anti" in this case gives emphasis and value to the ransom price paid, and shows it to be an equivalent or a "corresponding price" to the indebtedness incurred. The significance of this we shall see later. It will also be noted that the effects of this ransom are to be "testified in due time" and this confirms the ultimate consummation of the divine plan.

We shall now examine the application of this "corresponding price" and see how it meets entirely man's need.

In this connection it will be helpful to run over the conditions from which redemption is to be accomplished. For this purpose we shall confine ourselves to those passages which are related by the use of the word translated "redemption" or its cognates. Reference has already been made to the general condition of the vanity to which man has been subjected and from which he needs deliverance. But this subjection was on account of sin; man is a sinner and from this root of all evil he requires to be delivered. Until sin is eradicated its evil fruits will remain. By willing submission to the power of evil the natural mind lacks spiritual vision. Man is under the spell of mental darkness from which he needs redemption. Thus influenced, he is given to vain conversations and is guilty of all forms of iniquity, transgression, and sin. Sin has been productive of all the sorrow, sickness, suffering, and death which abound, and from which man, with all his ability to ameliorate it, is unable to save himself. "None can by any means redeem his brother, nor give to God a ransom for him; for the redemption of their soul is precious." This redemption is a power and glory which belong wholly to God, and the Psalmist learned that He would exercise it in grace toward him, for he continues: "But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave" (Psa. 49:7, 8, 15). We are thus cast entirely upon the remedy which God has, in grace, provided. It is the "away from" all these ills "redemption" which is found in Christ alone. He has become the "corresponding price" for our salvation. He has given Himself as an "equivalent ransom." Redemption, meaning absolute deliverance in its fullest sense, is now the goal of the gospel. It can be the glorious hope of "whosoever will." Let us see how wonderfully it is applied.

In the process of this ransom, Christ has become our kinsman Redeemer. "For verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham"; "as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same." He has, therefore, become a co-sharer of our human nature. Then, as the "captain of our salvation" He has been made "perfect through sufferings"—another vital link with fallen humanity. He was also "tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin." So that every human quality has been found in Him, and having been fully tested and proved He is competent to become our all-sufficient substitute. It is this perfect human life that He has given as a ransom.

If a man is convicted as a sinner, he may be justified freely through the redemption (apolutrosis), that is, in Christ Jesus; for He has been made sin (a sin offering) for us. Condemned by the law, there is new covenant grace, by means of death for the redemption (apolutrosis) of the transgressions that were under the first testament. The curse of the law has been borne, for it is written: "Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree." Beguiled and deluded by the power of darkness, we have been translated into the kingdom of His dear Son; "in whom we have redemption (apolutrosis) through his blood"—the ransom price. It is also the price of our redemption (apolutrosis) from our vain conversations. But for the full experience we are "waiting." "We are saved in hope." We now groan and travail in pain, "waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption (apolutrosis) of the body." This will be a wonderful deliverance from the presence and power of all that vexes us here and now.

But it may be urged that that is the hope of the church. What of the remainder of our groaning race? We noted early in our study that the first occurrence of this word translated "redemption" was in connection with the "hope of Israel," so that provision has been made for the "favoured nation." And do we not already see potent signs that the promises made to that people are in the process of fulfillment? Why, it was to the very conditions we are witnessing today that our Lord directed His hearers in those memorable words: "When these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption (apolutrosis) draweth nigh." For the extension of this provision and its ultimate scope it should be remembered that the promise made to Abraham included blessing for all the nations of the earth through the promised Seed.

There is also a glorious deliverance for those who "sleep the sleep of death." The resurrection of the Lord Jesus and the fact that He "ever liveth" is an undeniable witness that "through death he has destroyed him that had the power of death," and because of this there is a "sure and certain hope" held out in the promise, "I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death" (Hosea 13:14). With these things accomplished, and after the final judgment which will purge the earth of all evil, it will be blessedly true that the whole creation will be set free from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

We have considered, very briefly, the Alpha and Omega of our redemption. Before concluding it may be well to review our present position in relation to it. Needless to say, our deliverance is not yet. We have inherited all the ills common to a fallen humanity. We share its groans. But we are waiting, hopefully and expectantly waiting, for our day of redemption. This does not imply that we are deprived of all the fruits of Christ's redeeming work. Having received the "firstfruits of the Spirit," we have a foretaste of what the coming harvest will be. "Waiting for the adoption"; we have the spirit of adoption by which we already cry, "Abba Father." Brethren, now are we the sons of God, although it doth not yet appear what we shall be. As "heirs of God and joint-heirs" with Christ we have "the firstfruits of the Spirit" as an "earnest of our inheritance." As those who have been "redeemed by the precious blood of Christ," we are "sealed until the day of redemption." This indwelling spirit brings us all the assurances of our new relationship, for it "witnesses with our spirit that we are the children of God."

But for our complete emancipation and manifestation as the "sons of God" we await the coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. This is also the hope of Israel, for they shall be redeemed from the hands of their enemies. The Lord shall go forth and fight for them as when He fought in the day of battle. "In that day living waters shall flow out of Jerusalem, and the Lord shall be king over all the earth." "In that day there shall be one Lord and his name one."

Thus will the "away from redemption" of the whole creation be effected. Whatever we may conjecture as belonging to our privilege and inheritance as the sons of God, such blessings shall also flow to all created things, for all will join in this great deliverance from sorrow, sin, and death.

In conclusion we would note that, in this equivalent ransom, Christ has borne our griefs and carried our sorrows; He has been oppressed and afflicted, and made perfect through suffering; He has been tempted in all points like as we are; He has died our death and even shared our burial in the tomb. In all this there has been a perfect correspondence. It should, however, be stressed that there is no similar correspondence in any revealed scheme of redemption from an eternity of suffering and woe. That is a figment of the human mind, born of the devil's lie, "Thou shalt not surely die." Immediately it is introduced the harmony of the Scriptures breaks down and the application of the atonement fails.

Alas, there are those who will not believe to be saved; they will die in their sins, and after resurrection and judgment will be destroyed in hell fire. Of such God has decreed to make a "full end." Their destruction will be the final act in delivering the universe from the presence of evil and evildoers.

God's work is perfect; all our needs have been abundantly met. The claims of justice have been fully satisfied and the One who, on our behalf, was made a little lower than the angels, is crowned with glory and honor, "waiting" until His enemies be made His footstool.

Ours also is to wait the "day of his appearing," of which there are many signs that "it draweth nigh."

"Our pain will then be over,
We'll sin and sigh no more;
Behind us all of sorrow,
And naught but joy before—
A joy in our Redeemer,
As we to Him are nigh,
In the crowning day that's coming
By and by."

THE NATURE OF MAN

THE account of the creation of man as given in the book of Genesis is so simple, it seems strange there should be any difference of opinion regarding his nature. The account reads: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul" (Gen. 2:7).

We note that the being thus created was called "man" when he was formed of the dust of the ground, and this "man" became a living soul when God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life. There was nothing immortal about him. God did not breathe an "immortal soul" into him, as some have supposed, but the man became a "living soul" after the breath of life, or "the breath of the spirit of life" as the margin has it, was imparted to him. Before that he was an inanimate soul.

This is man as God created him, and as he is today. Nothing has been added to his nature. He is still mortal and corruptible, as the Bible describes him. "Shall mortal man be more just than God?" (Job 4:17). "This mortal must put on immortality" (1 Cor. 15:53).

It is interesting to note that the word "immortal" is found only once in the Bible and is applied to God: "Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honour and glory for ever and ever" (1 Tim. 1:17). And the word "immortality" is found only five times. Three times it is applied to man, but never in his present existence.

1. It is something to be sought for. Romans 2:7: "To them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honour and immortality, eternal life."

2. It is something to be put on at the resurrection. 1 Corinthians 15:53: "This mortal must put on immortality."

3. 1 Corinthians 15:54: "When this mortal shall have put on immortality then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory."

4. It is something brought to light through the gospel. 2 Timothy 1:10: "Who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." That which men have sought for has been brought to light by Jesus Christ, who by His redemptive work has made it possible for men to obtain it.

5. It is something which God alone possesses inherently. 1 Timothy 6:16: "Who (God) only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto; whom no man hath seen nor can see: to whom be honour and power everlasting."

If, then, the Bible teaches that man is by nature mortal, as we have shown, whence came the doctrine of the natural immortality of the soul? It came from Egypt and Babylon. During their captivity in Babylon some of the Jews embraced this heathen notion, but it never was a doctrine of the early Jewish writers. Maimonides, one of the greatest of the rabbins, thus expressed their belief:

"The punishment which awaits the wicked man is, that he will have no part in eternal life, but will die and be utterly destroyed. He will not live forever, but for his sins will be cut off and perish like the brute. It is a death from which there is no return."

This is the clear teaching of the Old Testament writers, and also of Christ and the apostles. The whole scheme of redemption is based on the fact of man's mortality. "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood," said Jesus, "ye have no life in you" (John 6:53). "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly" (John 10:10). "The gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom. 6:23).

This simple teaching concerning man's nature was largely lost sight of during the apostasy of the Dark Ages, when the speculations of Plato and other heathen philosophers were substituted for the truth of God's Word. When the light again shone forth in the reformation and subsequently, and the Bible was translated into modern tongues, making it accessible to the common people, the truth of man's nature once more was seen as men began to study the Scriptures anew; though even today some still cling to the old heathen notion of the natural immortality of the soul. The truth, however, is plain to all who will search the Scriptures to see whether these things are so.—The Herald of Life.

THE GOD OF THE NATIONS

the authority and power by which that kingdom had been sustained for hundreds of years and bestowed it upon a Gentile monarch.

"The Lord hath prepared his throne in the heavens; and his kingdom ruleth over all" (Psa. 103:19).

We have no doubt read those words many times, but have we stopped to ask ourselves just what they mean? Paul declares on his own behalf—"I will pray with the spirit, and I will pray with the understanding also: I will sing with the spirit, and I will sing with the understanding also" (1 Cor. 14:15). The words we read in the Bible, the prayers we offer in our closets, the songs we sing in the service of worship, are of little or no value to us unless we understand the meaning of what we read, and unless our prayers and our songs express something that is intelligible to us.

I found the following lines inscribed in my father's pulpit Bible and have been deeply impressed with the question they suggest:

"Thy kingdom come, ' thus day by day

We lift our hands to God and pray;

But do we really understand the meaning of the words we say?"

What do we have in mind when we offer that prayer? What did the Psalmist mean when he sang, "His kingdom ruleth over all"? Are those who repeat those familiar words generally conscious of their profound and literal import? Are they intentionally asking that the kingdom of God be established upon the earth and exert its power over all mankind? Are all who use that matchless petition even willing that God should take the rulership of the nations out of human hands altogether and place it in the hands of His divine Son?

If that prayer should be immediately granted, if God's kingdom should come today and His will be enforced in earth as it is in heaven, what a revolutionary change would follow! Wars would cease, crime be overcome, injustice put down, and the walls of racial prejudice and antagonism which lead to misunderstanding and strife be broken down at once!

God's relation to the nations outside of Israel, His supreme authority over them, is a fact that has been generally overlooked or ignored even by Christians, and is something which the Hebrews themselves often forgot. In spite of the repeated statements of the prophets to the contrary, the Jews looked upon Jehovah as the God of Israel alone. To disabuse their minds of this thought, a thought so opposed to the universality of God's fatherhood as revealed in the gospel, was one of the most difficult tasks of the Lord.

But now the situation seems to have reversed itself. It is Gentile Christians who seem to think that God and Christ and the Bible itself, are all for them, that the Lord has repudiated "his people which he foreknew" and has cast them off forever! Paul endeavors to correct this false idea as Jesus sought to set the Jews right with regard to the same matter.

"I say then," he asks, "Hath God cast off his people? God forbid." Then he answers the question even more positively and finally by adding: "God hath not cast away his people which he foreknew," and he solemnly warns the Gentile believers, saying, "If God spared not the natural branches, take heed lest he also spare not thee" (Rom. 11: 1, 2, 21).

God has neither cast off the Jews nor has He forsaken the Gentles! He still has a place for both great divisions of the family of nations and races in His plans for the future!

We must not overlook the fact that there is a national phase of salvation as well as a personal and individual one. In the age to come these two phases or forms of salvation are to be blended into one. This is the day of salvation for individuals whom God is calling out and preparing to assist Him in the still greater social and national work of the future.

LIFE AND DEATH

Jeremiah 21:8

THROUGHOUT the Bible life and death are always in contrast. Both words are elementary. They have no synonyms. They cannot, therefore, be replaced by other words, nor can they be simplified by any attempt at definition. Even when used in a secondary sense, the primary meaning is always involved, else no reason for a secondary use would be apparent. To deny the reality of death amounts to a denial of the gospel of Christ, the Son of God, who came that He might redeem us from death.

It is repeatedly asserted in the New Testament that Jesus Christ died and was buried, and that God raised Him from the dead. Has it occurred to you what tremendous issues would be involved had God not raised Him from the dead? Paul says that faith would be vain. The question is a reasonable one; it deserves meditation; it requires an answer; for every doctrine of the Christian religion is affected by it. Test every item of your belief by this searching question, and the inevitable result that He would have remained dead.

THE LITTLE WHITE CHURCH

There's a little white church by the roadside,
Among the old oak trees
That give shelter and food and comfort
To the squirrels, the birds, and the bees.

Oh, come to the church by the roadside,
Oh, come when all nature is green;
The bluebirds chase the robins,
And God's nature reigns supreme.

Yes, there's joy in the churchyard in springtime,
With sweet music in the trees;
For the nesting time is the trysting time
For the birds, the flowers, and the bees.

Its spacious and wide open setting
Invites the weary to call;
There is balm in the fragrance of nature,
There's a welcome from God to all.

In autumn it's a blaze of glory
When the frost has kissed the leaves;
The squirrels are preparing for winter
And are as busy as you please.

And under the leafy carpet
The violets rest for a day;
While the robins are winging southward
For a warmer clime to stay.

In winter it's a silvery palace
When the hoary frost mantles the trees;
It glistens and sparkles like diamonds
As it falls in ropes with the breeze.

Visible from the south ground,
The lovely Cedar flows;
Along its banks on either side
The mighty oak tree grows.

So come to the church by the roadside,
Abide-a-wee, and pray;
You will find the strength and courage
That you may need today.

"Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits."—Psalm 103:2.

United States Constitution

One hundred and fifty years ago, on September 17, 1787, after long months of earnest conferring and debating, the United States Constitution was signed by the convention and sent out to the state legislatures for ratification. As a result the Nation was placed upon a solid foundation and went from depression and turmoil into an era of prosperity. To this day there are many blessings which we owe to the fact that this Constitution is the law of the land.

In order to appreciate our Constitution, let us notice types of government. 1. Government without authority; every man doing as he pleases if he can get away with it: in other words—anarchy. 2. Government that is autocratic; the king or the dictator being supreme in authority. 3. Government of checks and balances, where each part of the ruling power checks the others, and derives its authority from the wishes of the governed.

Our Nation is a nation of checks and balances. Anyone knows that if he reads the paper and understands such words as "veto," "pardon," "ratification," and recently, "hold constitutional" and "declare unconstitutional." Only in this way can the liberties of the people be safeguarded in the present age.

When authority breaks down there is anarchy. We see it in "No Man's Land," in the jungle, in earthquakes and floods. Life, liberty, and property are not safe when authority breaks down.

When one person or one group of persons takes control of a nation and bends all others to their wishes there is autocracy, dictatorship, such as exists in Russia, Germany, Italy, and in many other ill-fated nations. About these nations we read such items as the following. When reporting a death in the German papers the notice no longer reads, So-and-so "died with belief in God," but, So-and-so "died with belief in Adolf Hitler."

Not everyone agrees with the policies of the Government of the United States. It is not to be expected that they shall. Even the framers of the Constitution did not agree entirely among themselves upon the document they signed. It did not matter. In the words of Delegate Wilson of Pennsylvania: "I confess that there are several parts of this Constitution which I do not at present approve, but I am not sure that I shall never approve them; for having lived long, I have experienced many instances of being obliged by better information or fuller consideration to change opinions even on important subjects, which I once thought right but found to be otherwise. It is, therefore, the older I grow, the more apt I am to doubt my own judgment and to pay more respect to the judgment of others. In these sentiments, sir, I agree to this Constitution with all its faults, if they are such, because I think a general government necessary for us."

No one can read the history of the Constitution without noticing the prevalence of Christian men in the convention. Surely we should give credit to our God for the blessings of liberty and justice we now enjoy, and which are denied to so many of the nations of earth.

The Dyke

Our Constitution stands like a dyke against the encroachments of the sea of lawlessness and dictatorship on the outside. However, at present, part of the wall has been broken down by unscrupulous men. The sea of drunkenness is pouring through the gap. Drink is debauching our young people. Unless something is done, and our Lord tarries, the next generation will reap a harvest of lawlessness and dictatorship due to the breaking down of the character of the people. A free people, such as those in the United States, only can be taken over by a dictator when the moral character of the people has been debauched. The Nation should hasten to build up again, stronger than ever, the protecting wall of the Constitution against drink.

Why Do Young People Drink Intoxicants?

A young man recently said to me: "Judge, why do we young people have to take a drink every time we go out for a date or a pleasure trip?"

My answer was "that many young persons are too lazy to become real conversationalists. They do not train themselves to be quick at repartee. They live too fast and sleep too little to study modern and ancient history, with its marvelous link-up to life. So they take a few drinks that they may laugh at things that are not funny; imagine they are gay and sparkling when they are in reality silly and noisy; deceive themselves into being entertained by stupidity and imagine they are having a marvelous time. They trade a glow for a glare—wit for slapstick comedy."—Camille Kelly, Judge of the Juvenile Court, Memphis, Tenn.; selected by J. R. LeCrone, Eden Valley, Minn.

"My help cometh from the Lord, which made heaven and earth. He will not suffer thy foot to be moved: he that keepeth thee will not slumber."

In Thy Hand

My times are in Thy hand, O Lord;
Whatever ill betide,
I lean upon Thy sacred Word,
And trustingly abide.

The griefs I bear are hidden joys;
The sorrows I endure
Are but the means that God employs
To make my soul more pure.

The darkest clouds that veil my sky
Are fringed with sovereign grace;
That darkness ne'er can dim His eye,
Nor hide from me His face.

Be still, my soul! Doubt not His love!
Nor past, nor present things,
Nor life, nor death shall ever move
The hand that to Thee clings.

My days and years in His great hand
Are safe for evermore,
Firm as the eternal hills that stand
Rock-roofed as of yore.

Why David Sang

David was a shepherd boy, and while he was out in the hills caring for his sheep, he often had to protect them from harm and danger. He had to frighten the wild animals that came to seize the young lambs.

When David became lonely or frightened out there alone with the sheep, he thought about God and how He cared for him at all times. Surely, He wouldn't forget him at a time when he needed Him most.

One day David composed a song and called it, "The Shepherd Psalm." It is Psalm 23. I'm sure most of you know it, and you can sing it to a tune something like David did, when he played on his harp.

The first line, you remember, says, "The Lord is my shepherd." If you do not know it all, learn it soon, will you? It is beautiful. The things that David said in that song God did for him, were the things David did for his sheep and lambs.

Another beautiful song David wrote is Psalm 121. Turn in your Bibles and find it. "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help. My help cometh from the Lord, which made heaven and earth," are the first words.

David shows in this Psalm that as long as God is with him he will not be afraid of anything. "The Lord," he says, "shall preserve thee from all evil."

How many of you know what David became when he grew to be a man? Yes, he was the king over God's people. From shepherd boy to king was a long way to go, but David's faith in God had something to do with it, I believe. Don't you?

I wish that all of us may have the trust in God that David showed. We may not become kings, but we will be something greater! We will be a person "after God's own heart," which David was because of his trust in his great Shepherd.

Do You Love Your Mother?

"It is dinner time," called Mother. "Time to pick up toys."

But Martha and Mark played right on. When dinner was ready, the toys were still on the floor. Bedtime came, and Martha said, "I love you, Mother. I would do anything for you."

"If we had a lot of rain as they had in Noah's time," said Mark, "I would build a big boat and save you."

Mother smiled. "I think there is time for a story. Once upon a time many, many years ago there lived a man named Abraham. He was a very rich man and he loved God."

"It is God who gives me everything," said Abraham.

One day God spoke to him and told him, "I want you to go a long way off, to another country."

Now Abraham loved God, and so he obeyed, even though he must have dreaded to go so far away. He said, "It is better to obey than to say, 'I love you.'"

The next evening when Mother called, "It is dinner time. Pick up your toys," you should have seen Mark and Martha obey!—Selected.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

IOWA DISTRICT CONFERENCE

The district conference for the fall season will be held in Gladbrook, Iowa, Oct. 3: Sunday school, 10:00 a. m.; preaching, 11:00 a. m. and 2 p. m. Everyone who can possibly do so, come and enjoy the day together.

The regular monthly schedule for Bro. J. W. Williams is: 1st Sunday of the month at Gladbrook; 2nd, Stanhope; 3rd, Waterloo; 4th, Lake View; and 5th, Clarksville.

Bro. A. M. Jones' schedule is: 1st and 3rd Sundays at Albert City; 2nd at Hickory Grove near Maxwell.

Each locality extends an invitation to all who can to attend its services.

Esther Sealine, Cor. Sec.

LOUISIANA CHURCH NOTES

One of the encouraging signs of future growth and development for the churches here is the fact that there are quite a large number of children of grade school age who are in attendance at most of our church services. The parents don't send their children to Sunday school and church; they bring them! Truly, the words of Solomon can be applied: "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

Plans are being made to improve and enlarge the Blood River church and we feel sure this improvement will add much to our church development.

At this writing we regret to report that Mrs. Carrie Anthon is in the hospital for observation and treatment. We pray for her early recovery to health.

There is much work to be done here and we pray God to give us wisdom and strength to go forward in His service.

Harry Goekler, Pastor.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

Our brotherhood will recall that last spring the undersigned tendered his resignation as pastor of South Lawn Church, to become effective at any time between June 1 and September 1 that would prove to be most convenient to the church and incoming pastor. I asked that the resignation be received as definite, with not vote taken, and the board was courteous enough to comply with that request. A committee was appointed to negotiate for a new pastor. This committee worked hard and faithfully corresponding with our national headquarters and many different ministers, and making three ministers definite offers. In each of these cases the offers were approved by the ministers as very satisfactory, but developments in their local fields caused each of them to decide that he could not accept at this time. The longer time went on the more different ones of the church came to us expressing the feeling that it must be the Lord's will that we reconsider and accept the work again. After long and prayerful consideration, and earnest consultation with various members of the church and a unanimous request of the church board, I have accepted the call and will, according to present plans, become pastor the middle of October.

My wife and I plan to hold meetings at the Salem Church, near Marshall, Ill., from October 1 to 10. Following this we will return to Grand Rapids to undertake the church work more earnestly than it has been conducted for a long time. Everyone recognizes that the mental and spiritual attitude of the congregation as a whole is in much better con-

CALIFORNIA REPORTS AN INSPIRING CONFERENCE

The California Conference of the Church of God met in Pomona from August 27-29. The opening sessions were held Friday morning and afternoon with Sr. Jessie Kauffman presiding. The classes were under the direction of Srs. Emma C. Railsback, Verna Rahn, and Leta Macleod. Sr. Railsback preached on Friday evening, Bro. Norman Macleod on Saturday evening, and Bro. G. P. Lichty on Sunday morning. Bro. Adamson had charge of Communion.

A short business meeting followed the morning session. The results of the election were: president, Sr. Jessie Kauffman; vice president, Bro. J. E. Adamson; treasurer, Sr. Gertrude Johns; secretary, Sr. Marie Bleasdale. Board members for two years are Bro. John Eagleston and Sr. Laura Bleasdale. Bro. Rogers preached Sunday afternoon on "The Leaders of the Bible."

The conference this year seemed to be truly under divine guidance. A feeling of brotherly love in Christ prevailed over all the meetings, both spiritual and social. Even the weather was perfect. Those attending were inspired by the beautiful singing of Charlotte Rahn and Duncan Macleod. All felt they were really in tune with God at the reverent manner in which Sr. Kauffman conducted the classes. One cannot remember the conference without hearing her voice saying, at the beginning of each class: "The Lord is in his holy temple; let all the earth keep silence before him." Even at the outdoor dinners in the park one had a feeling that one was breaking bread with God. Those who came from a distance—and they were many—will feel the divine influence of this meeting together with Him for many months, I am sure, and those who live near by and meet every Sunday will say a prayer of thanksgiving that it is possible for two or three to gather together with Christ in their midst.

Marie Bleasdale, Secretary.

BRUSH CREEK AND LAWRENCEVILLE, OHIO

Attendance at both churches has been steady and interest normal throughout the summer. Both congregations are planning extra work for the fall. The Lawrenceville church plans for a special series of meetings in October, and Brush Creek plans for special meetings in November. Our Sunday evening attendance at Brush Creek has been above average since our return from General Conference.

Sydney E. Magaw, Pastor.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

From their home in Jennings Lodge, Ore., comes the welcome news that Bro. and Sr. T. J. Ellis plan to return soon to Waterloo, Iowa, their former home. The climate on the West Coast with its low altitude seems detrimental to the health of both Bro. and Sr. Ellis. They assure us that they will be glad to get back to their lifelong friends in Iowa and Illinois.

Sr. Leota B. Hanson, treasurer of the National Bible Institution, drove to St. Louis, Mo., the latter part of the week for a brief visit. She was accompanied by Sr. Lewis Lindsay of Oregon, who will spend a few days with her mother in that city.

The attention of local church secretaries is especially called to the request of Bro. M. W. Lyon, General Conference Statistician, which appears in these columns. We are sure that all will be glad to cooperate with Bro. Lyon in his effort to secure a list of our membership throughout the country.

The poem, "The Little White Church," on page 11 of this issue was written and dedicated to the Church of God at Chautauqua Park, Waterloo, Iowa, by the author, Miss Elizabeth McClellan, West Hollywood, Calif., who formerly lived in Waterloo, near the church. The poem was read at the conference in connection with their "Golden Jubilee."

Owing to the fact that correct addresses were not given in reporting those who were recently baptized in Texas, at the request of Bro. T. A. Drinkard we list them again. Imogene Whisenhunt, 18 years of age, Jonesboro, Tex., Rt. 2; Edith Kays, 19, Jonesboro, Rt. 2; and Delbert Melton, Gatesville, Tex., Rt. 3.

Again our beloved twins, Sr. F. M. Cawby of North Judson, Ind., and Sr. Billings of Los Angeles, Calif., who have long since passed the threescore and ten year mark, headed the big parade at the annual convention of twins. Their pictures appeared in many daily papers and their voices were heard over the radio news circuits. Sr. Billings made the long trip from the Pacific Coast to Indiana by airplane in order that she might attend the convention.

Sr. Mittie Chandler of Graham, Tex., writes appreciatively as follows: "As usual I am pleased with the wonderful lessons provided in the Truth Seekers' Sunday School Quarterly. I have just received my fourth copy."

Bro. T. A. Drinkard, Handley, Tex., writes of a fine three-day meeting which he held at Bear, Ark., recently, and announces that he is to be in Cleveland, Ark., from the 23rd to the 26th, inclusive, engaged in a similar evangelistic effort.

HERALD RECEIPTS

dition right now than it has been for years. We anticipate far better work for the Lord this winter. We also feel quite sure that a different kind of message will soon be forthcoming from Grand Rapids that will bring much joy to many.

May we at this time extend a very urgent invitation to the brotherhood and friends to attend our anniversary meeting October 22 to 24. Bro. C. E. Randall is to be guest speaker, and South Lawn Church would like to welcome friends from far and near for this eleventh anniversary. Write Mrs. Joseph Holland, 160 Abbie St., S. E., if you can come, and for how long. Entertainment will gladly be furnished.

F. E. Siple.

KNOTT - HEIDANUS

The first wedding to be solemnized in the new Los Angeles church was that of Douglas Heidanus and Virginia Mae Knott, both of Glendale, on Sunday evening, Sept. 19, in the presence of a house full of relatives and friends.

The church had previously been decorated with beautiful flowers, ferns, and candles, by Mrs. Leta Macleod, Laura and Marie Bleasdale. The service opened with two vocal solos by two of our trained singers, Master Duncan James Macleod and Miss Charlotte Amelia Rahn. As Sr. Leta Macleod began the strains of the wedding march, the pastor, Sr. Railsback, accompanied the groom and best man, Mr. Ernest Moore, brother-in-law of the bride, to the altar. Then the ushers, Mr. Henry Breeden and Mr. Henry Vodigo, led the procession up the center aisle, followed by Virginia Burk and Frances Dickinson, bridesmaids, and Mrs. Kathleen Moore, sister of the bride as maid of honor, and two flower girls, the little Misses Beverly and Jean Alexander, nieces of the bride, strewed rose petals in her path as she proceeded to the altar on the arm of her father, E. E. Knott.

After the wedding ceremony was solemnized, the party marched to the strains of the recessional to the rear of the church where congratulations and blessings were extended to the happy couple. This was followed by a reception in the Sunday school rooms, during which friends and relatives from Perris, Long Beach, and Glendale renewed their friendships.

The bride is a member of the Los Angeles church, having been baptized by Bro. N. J. Macleod during his pastorate here. The groom is a machinist employed in Hollywood, where they will make their home. The entire service was described by many of the guests as being very beautiful.

Our love and best wishes go with this young couple who have thus united their interests in the journey of life.

MELVIN J. SCHULTZ

Melvin J. Schultz was born December 23, 1889, at Moorefield, Neb., and died at his home north of Moorefield on August 23, 1937, having spent his entire life in that community. On May 16, 1900, he was baptized into Christ by Elder Joseph Williams and united with the Church of God, to which faith he remained true to the end. He was the eldest of a family of six boys and the first to be taken by death.

Those left to mourn are: his devoted wife and three sons, Bernard, Elvin, and Melvin; his father, August Schultz; and five brothers, Guinn, Homer, Otto, Emil, and Alton; besides a host of friends.

Funeral services were held at the Church of God in Moorefield by Elder Grover Gordon of Holbrook, Neb., and he was buried in the Moorefield cemetery to sleep until the Lord descends from heaven with a shout and the voice of the archangel and the trump of God.

STEPHEN A. STORY

Stephen A. Story was born in Cedar County, Iowa, Sept. 2, 1855, and died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. John Baxter, Aug. 9, 1937.

He was the last of a family of six boys, one brother, Charlie, having preceded him in death by just one month. When eleven years of age he moved with his parents to Hardin County, Iowa. Here, Oct. 19, 1882, he was married to Cora E. Lamar. To this union three children were born, Janie Baxter and Andrew of Holbrook, Neb., and Elva Keepe of Bayard, Neb.

Nearly fifty years ago he and his wife confessed Christ, and were baptized into His name and united with the Church of God of Holbrook, and during this near half century have remained faithful to their Lord and Master.

Besides his devoted wife and three children, he leaves to mourn, thirteen grandchildren, ten great-grandchildren, and a host of friends.

He was a devoted husband, a loving father, and a kind and helpful neighbor, honored and respected by all who had the privilege of knowing him.

Funeral services were conducted by Elder Grover Gordon at the Holbrook Church of God and he was laid to rest in the Holbrook cemetery to await the call of the Master to come forth to immortality.

MRS. ELIZABETH A. CRONBAUGH

Elizabeth A. Headley, one of the pioneer residents of Iowa County, was born in Johnson County, Iowa, Dec. 17, 1848, and died at the home of her son Warren, near Koszta, Sept. 17, 1937. At the age of eleven she came with her parents to Iowa County, the family settling east of Koszta, where she grew to womanhood.

On January 9, 1870, she was married to David Cronbaugh, and to them were born seven children: Ella J., who died at the age of four; William H., who died in young manhood; Warren, Ray, and Mrs. Cliff Gates of Belle Plaine; Mrs. Roy Shaul of Hampton; and Mrs. Arthur Croft of Owatonna, Minn. Her husband died March 5, 1888, leaving her to care for her children to the best of her ability, which she succeeded well in doing. They were the joy of her life, and she was also always remembering others, wherever she could be of any help. Besides the five living sons and daughters, she leaves seventeen grandchildren and eight great-grandchildren.

She was quite frail for a number of recent years, and gradually sank peacefully to rest. For the last six years she had made her home with her son Warren and wife, where she had the best of care. In early life she was baptized in the Church of God. She was a highly esteemed Christian and neighbor. Everybody loved and respected "Aunt Libbie." Funeral services and burial were at Koszta on Sunday afternoon, Sept. 19, and the great assembly in attendance showed the high esteem held for her.

J. W. Williams.

How Many Members Has the Church of God?

Wouldn't you like to know? But no one does know, for there are no accurate records. You know exactly how much you owe on that mortgage at the bank, how many bushels of corn per acre you raised last year. You know just how many m.p.h. the old bus will do; you know how many acres of land you have, how many horses and pigs and cattle you own, and Lou Gehrig's batting average. But you don't know how many churches of our faith there are or how many members we have! The chances are you don't even know how many members your own church has.

Isn't It a Standing Disgrace to our denomination that, although we have been a people for well nigh one hundred years, we don't know to this day how many there are of us, or whether we are gaining ground or losing?

Wouldn't You Like to Know how many churches we have, how many members we have, what church has the largest membership, how many church buildings we have, how many ministers, how many Sunday schools, how many Berean societies, and how many new members last year?

We Propose to Find Out!

That is the import of the action taken by the recent General Conference appointing the writer as Statistician. When the facts and figures have been gathered, the answers to all these questions, and others, will be available to you and everyone, for the first time in our history. Will you help me in this interesting work? I ask only that some one in each locality, the secretary or pastor or some one else who has the information, report to me the answers to the questions that follow. If such information is not available, it will be well worth your while to secure it, if only for your own records. Besides, the Government requires you to report these figures to the Director of the Census at Washington. It will be convenient to use this material for both reports.

The following information is desired. You may answer by number to save repeating the questions, but please answer every question, and make your information as accurate as possible.

1. If you have an organized church, how many members are there on the roll? (If there is no official list, make as accurate a count as you can of the number of baptized believers in your locality.) How many, if any, not on the roll?

2. If you have no organized church, how many baptized believers of the Church of God faith are there in your community?

3. Do you have a Sunday school? If so, how many on the roll?

4. Do you have a Berean society? If so, how many on the roll?

5. Names and addresses of all isolated members of the Church of God that you know of that are not members of a state conference.

6. Names and addresses of any ministers, either active or retired, that you think may not be generally known.

Churches in the states of Illinois, Indiana, Minnesota, Michigan, California, Virginia, and other churches who sent delegates to the LAST General Conference need not report. Their conference credentials are sufficient. But ALL OTHER churches are asked to report, all who did not send delegates to this year's General Conference. You can use a penny postcard. Mail it now, before you forget, to M. W. Lyon, 13517 Darley Ave., Cleveland, Ohio.

How Many Members Has Your Church?

“Home, Sweet Home”

Provided by the love and sympathy of the entire brotherhood of the Church of God, Golden Rule Home assures to the members of its Family the comfort, security, and solicitous care which the word “home” always suggests.

Here the anxieties of earlier and more active life are laid aside forever. No threat of eviction for non-payment of rent or taxes or other indebtedness troubles the hearts of the residents of Golden Rule Home!

No doctor or hospital bills, no grocery, coal, or light bills to be met the first of the month, bring fear to the minds of the Golden Rule Home Family!

All such obligations and burdens are taken from the shoulders of these older ones immediately upon their entrance into the Home and are carried thereafter by the Golden Rule Home itself, which is amply able to bear the load on their behalf.

A hearty Christian welcome awaits all who seek the protection and lifelong support the Home provides.

Conditions of entrance into Golden Rule Home are as liberal as absolute security permits. Write for full particulars concerning the Home and its advantages. Or, better still, come and visit the Home itself and let the Family tell their own story of its advantages and comforts.

Address: Golden Rule Home, Mrs. Idona Romine, Matron, Oregon, Illinois.
