Protestantism No Longer Protests

By the Editor

PROTESTANTISM, as its name implies, was originally a voice of vigorous protest! It was born in an atmosphere of bitter religious controversy and developed on the sanguinary battlefields of political revolution. Protestantism waged a relentless warfare for centuries against the evil political pretensions and still more pernicious religious doctrinal teachings of Romanism.

Under able and consecrated leadership, the armies of reform swept victoriously forward on every front, wielding with resistless power the Sword of the Spirit in the face of their retreating foe! As they advanced, the masses were aroused to a state of spiritual emotion unequalled since the days of the apostles. Moved by a newly awakened desire to save the dying world, they were driven to preach the gospel not alone in heathen lands but also to those who rested in the false security of Rome's unscriptural promises.

Without exception, those early reformers were doctrinal preachers! They were convinced that salvation depended upon men coming to know the truth and responding to the truth intelligently! It was a Bible foundation upon which they stood!

While we may rightly question the scriptural character of much of the teaching of the reformers of that period, nevertheless we are compelled to applaud the fervency of spirit they displayed in their searching of the Word of God and the fearlessness they showed in the defense of what they believed to be true.

But what a change has come over Protestantism in recent years; Protestantism no longer protests! That is, it no longer arrays itself against religious error nor does it make an effort to defend the principles for which its founders so valiantly fought. Doctrine means little or nothing to the average Protestant today! He has no deeply seated convictions himself and he cares nothing as to what others may or may not believe! Under the guidance of his "spiritual advisers" he has been led to look upon doctrine as of but minor importance, for doctrine has no place in the pulpit of the modernist! (Please turn to page 11)

Pertinent Comments on the News of the Day

Recent Happenings in Palestine

"When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory."—Psalm 102:16.

JERUSALEM, Oct. 1.—On September 6, the Jews throughout the world celebrated Rosh Hashana—"the birthday of the world." It marked the beginning of the year 5698 since the creation, according to Hebrew chronology. The coming new year is observed by the Jews with most impressive ceremonies significant of God's goodness to His people and of their own unworthiness and sin.

Looking back over the past year, the Jews have much for which to thank Jehovah their God. Among other things to which the Jewish Missionary Review calls attention are the following outstanding accomplishments:

German Refugees to the number of 2,671 were aided this year in emigrating from that country of persecution by agencies subsidized by the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee. This figure does not include those who were able to leave without assistance. It is estimated that since 1933, 115,000 Jews have left Germany.

The Hebrew University, established in Jerusalem in 1925, now has over 100 academic members on the teaching staff, 100 technical and administrative assistants, and nearly 700 undergraduate students.

The Jewish Settlement in Hulda, which was deserted after the riots of 1929, was officially reopened to Jewish colonization during the present year.

The Jewish Labor Organization has established a weekly paper which is to be published in Arabic, with the purpose in view of explaining the true aims and aspirations of the Jews in Palestine and so counteract the falsehoods and misrepresentations Arab leaders have been spreading among the masses.

Palestine Trade, as indicated by the export of oranges, in spite of the trouble that has existed in various parts of the country, shows a marked increase in recent years. This increase in business has been about equally divided between the Arabs and the Jews.

The World in Fear

"I will bring their fears upon them."—Isaiah 66:4.

LONDON, Sept. 30.—"We are faced with a grave danger," declared Viscount Cesil of Chelwood in the House of Lords recently. "War is drawing near, and I do not think anyone can doubt it," he asserted. The threat of war is felt in every capital of Europe today, while the actuality of war is present in a major way on two continents. Among the causes which have led to this sad condition are the jealousies and suspicions growing out of the World War.

The heart of world-uncertainty is the Mediterranean. An Italian naval officer has just published a book on the international situation in which he says: "As the Mediterranean is the only sea which unites three continents, it is the theater of countless conflicting interests. As such it may become the setting for the last act of a final settlement."

Thoughtful world observers are thus constantly expressing their agreement with the prophetic Word. The theater of "a final settlement" of the world's age-long problems will, indeed, be in the hollow of the historic "Great Sea" and upon its adjacent shores. There it is that the last great act of the drama of history will be enacted, for there it is that God eventually "will bring every work into judgment, whether it be good or whether it be evil," and whether it is national or whether it is individual. There it is that the words of Joel shall be fulfilled: "For there will I sit to judge all the heathen round about" (Joel 3:1-17).

Vain Hopes

"It is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in man."—Psalm 118:8.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 30.—In its current issue The Presbyterian points out in various ways the fruitless results of the efforts men have made to save the world.

"Ideas about religious liberalism are gradually crystallizing in the conclusion that it has failed of any noteworthy accomplishment. Whatever its ambitions, its results have been negative. . . . From the Christian viewpoint there is no more disappointing will-o'-the-wisp than the hope back of our peace-promoting agencies. With all their anti-war propaganda, they accomplish little except to add to the general uproar. 'It is useless,' declares J. C. Carlisle, 'to build our hopes of the kingdom upon unregenerate human nature. That has been the calamity recurrent in every age, ending in failure.'"

Our Lord's return is the only hope for the world.

BETRAYAL

By D. G. Harvey

"FOR it was not an enemy that reproached me; then I could have borne it: neither was it he that hated me that did magnify himself against me; then I would have hid myself from him: but it was thou, a man mine equal, my guide, and mine acquaintance. We took sweet counsel together, and walked unto the house of God in company."—Psalm 55:12-14.

The words of David seem to describe the feeling of our Lord when He was betrayed by His friend. That false friend has become known as the most dissolute character in the Bible record. If it were lawful for a Christian to hate, we would say he was the most hated man of all time. He was a false friend who walked with the Son of God, one of the chosen few who knew the "man of sorrows," and yet for gain, very small gain, he sold that Friend to His death!

But before we pass judgment upon this man let us consider well for a moment if we can justly do so.

"Therefore thou are inexcusable, O man, whosoever thou art that judgest: for wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself; for thou that judgest doest the same things" (Rom. 2:1). Could Paul have had Judas in mind when he penned these lines? Could you or I commit the "same things" as did Judas? Let us see.

God alone could know the mind of Judas; we cannot. The chief sin of Judas appears to have been his greed. He had been with Jesus during His ministry. He had seen the power granted to His Leader. Perhaps he reasoned, "I have seen Him come to no harm. I saw Him heal the sick and raise the dead. Surely I can take this money, buy much for Him, and no harm can come to my Lord."

Remember, the Holy Spirit had not been given to the apostles. That mighty power came afterward at Pentecost (Acts 2). Peter even failed Jesus in His hour of need, and yet the Spirit had been given to Peter in a small measure when it was revealed to him that Jesus was "the Christ, the Son of the living God." For the Lord Himself said, "Flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven" (Matt. 16:16, 17). Yet Peter failed!

Is it then a wonder that Judas, a mere mortal, without the guidance of that power to reveal to him what his act would bring about, should fail? Do not misunderstand me. I do not say Judas will be saved in the kingdom, or even forgiven. The Father and His Son alone are the judges, not mere man.

But remember again Paul's words: "Thou condemnest thyself, for thou that judgest doest the same things." How? we may ask.

We, too, are followers of the Son of God. Ah, but we have never lived in close contact with Him as did Judas! My friend, we have every advantage over the betrayer. We know that Jesus died. We know that He rose again. We know that He ascended to the Father. And we know that He will come again! Judas did not know these things, because none of the apostles understood them before the death of Christ, and they even expected the restoration of Israel to take place at once after His resurrection (Acts 1:6). How then could Judas have understood? Judas had not received the Holy Spirit.

But we, if we are true children of God, must receive it. Oh, not in the same manner as did the early church. But we all say that we believe that Jesus is the Lord, do we not? Then listen to Paul again, and deny if you can the fact that the church today must have the Holy Spirit. "Wherefore I give you to understand, that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed:

and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost" (1 Cor. 12:3).

Why do we seem so ready to run from that truth and yet claim to be Christ's because of baptism? True baptism is the first work the believer performs. "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ" (Gal. 3:27). Again, "Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his" (Rom. 8:9).

We have the written Word, inspired by the Spirit. This Word contains all things that are needful. But these things "are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name" (John 20:31).

THE EDITOR'S PRAYER

Our Father: With heartfelt gratitude we acknowledge the multiplied blessings which Thou hast bestowed upon those who have directed the publication of The Restitution Herald throughout the years of its service. Without such divine approbation the glad tidings it has proclaimed could not have been kept ringing round the earth.

As we present this, the first issue of the Twenty-Seventh Volume of our paper, before Thee craving Thy approval, we rededicate The Restitution Herald to Thy service. May it ever be an effective instrument in Thy hand for the defense and for the advancement of saving truth.

Preserve its columns, we pray Thee, from advocating error. May its influence ever lead men and women into a clearer and richer understanding of Thy eternal purposes for them, that they may grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, to whom be glory and honor both now and forever. Amen.

Marks of a Christian

WITH just about one half of all the people in the United States connected with the Christian church, why, then, do we not have more influence for righteousness over the country? With men in every sphere of life and every vocation as members of our churches, why are there not higher standards of conduct in business, in politics, in government? As one observes the disintegration of the home, the petty jealousies between sects, social castes, the mad scramble for wealth and luxuries that wealth bestows, the ravages of organized vice, and the corruption of political leaders, he is forced to pause and ask himself, "What does church membership imply?"

If it is true that the ancient world fell before the spiritual attack of a handful of Christians, why is not more spiritual influence exerted by the people of our church over the other half of our population? Possibly the explanation is to be found in our untoward emphasis upon quantity of membership, rather than quality of membership in the Christian church. The sins and indifference of our population surely could not long withstand the insistent appeal and spiritual attack of fifty-five million vitally spiritualized lives!

When a certain Chinese student on tour of America returned to his native country, he was asked by a friend, "What impressed you the most in America?" His answer was, "The thing that impressed me most was the lack of Christians in Christian America."

Dr. E. Stanley Jones tells a graphic story in the experience of one of our missionaries in India. The lady was giving a Bible lesson in a certain locality. In the midst of the most interesting portion, one of the Hindu ladies deliberately got up and went out. After a short time she returned and listened more intently than ever. At the close the missionary asked her why she went out. "Were you not interested?"

"Oh, yes, I was so interested in the wonderful things that you were saying that I went out to ask your carriage driver whether you really meant it and whether you lived it at home. He said you did, so I came back to listen again." That is the test of the Christian religion and the index of the reality of the indwelling Christ: "For if any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his!"

Now, there are certain virtues or qualifications that mark a man as a Christian. They are expressed in the word "fruit" that Jesus so often used. "By their fruits ye shall know them." Every person is marked as to what he is. God placed a mark upon Cain so that everyone would know him. Certainly it is true that everyone carries on his character, his person, the marks of what he really is within. A thief carries the marks of a thief; if you look closely, you will see these marks on his face. A Christian is also marked, and I wish to speak briefly of four marks that we may find in the life of every sincere Christian.

No Christian is perfect! We constantly walk in the way of imperfection. There is no conscious sin, regardless of how small it may be, that does not leave its remorse upon the soul of the earnest Christian. It seems at times so easy to go wrong and so hard to go right! We are constantly weighed down by besetting sins! Man has a dual nature, and struggle is ever evident in the life of a Christian. Both the higher and lower nature struggle for the supremacy. St. Paul speaks of this when he says: "The good that I would I do not; but the evil which I would not, that I do. . . O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death? I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord."

It was the higher nature of Peter in opposition to the lower that wrung from him his great confession—"Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." It was the lower nature of Peter that thrust these words in the face of the mob in front of Caiaphas' house when Jesus needed a friend: "I know not this man."

It was the higher nature of Judas that responded to the call of the Master, "Follow me." But it was the lower nature of Judas that sold Him into the hands of the enemy for thirty pieces of silver!

What, then, was the difference between these two men? Both did the same thing—both responded to the higher and both fell to the lower! The difference is to be found in repentance. Judas was sorry for what he did, but revealed no change of mind in an effort to make good, or to correct what he did. Peter not only revealed godly sorrow for his sin, but again reinstated himself in fellowship with the Master and service in the kingdom. Repentance, therefore, is not only sorrow for sin, but also a change of purpose, a desire to sin no more and to do the right.

The importance of repentance can be ascertained through the emphasis that Jesus places upon it: "Unless ye repent and become as a little child, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven."

The greatest Christians have always realized that they have been sinners and stand in need of the forgiving grace of God. St. Paul speaks of himself as the "chief of sinners, . . . the least of all the apostles." Peter cries, "Depart from me, Lord, for I am a sinful man." Martin Luther stands in his monastery cell and cries: "My sins, my sins!" It is when we see Christ in all His beauty, purity, and perfection, and experience His life surging through our defaulting natures, that we, too, realize our own depravity and inherent sinfulness. And the place that Christian people need desperately to be cleansed is in the realm of the disposition within.

To live in the pure, white life and light of Christ is to see our own imperfection, not others', our own sins of intemperance, our sins of greed, pride, hatred, unbrotherliness, bitterness, and all the rest! We need to come to Him day after day with the penitent's prayer: "God, be merciful to me, a sinner." "Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors." As the gardener makes his way to his garden day after day to make way with the weeds that spring up and choke the good seed, so the Christian also must make his way to the garden of God's love day after day in repentance to make way with the weeds of sin that perpetually spring up to choke the good seed in the Christian life!

Christian faith may be defined as confidence in Christ, His saving grace, His works and teaching. Belief is a mere intellectual assent to a proposition. Faith is trust, issuing in the fruits of the Spirit: "Love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness," etc. Jesus' disciples recognized the unlimited possibilities of individual faith and when they came to Him, it was with the request: "Lord, increase our faith." Indeed, it is our faith that makes us whole, for "faith is the victory."

Jesus constantly urged His disciples to increase their faith, and often He reproved them for little faith. Faith, according to the writer of the book of Hebrews, is just "looking unto Jesus," looking unto Him for strength in time of weakness, looking unto Him for peace in time of trouble, looking unto Him as we meet the common problems that face us day after day. Many a pastor could relate graphic experiences of his people who, having passed through terrific trying of soul, have stood firm through faith in Jesus Christ. God pity the man or the woman who, when the storms of life make their appearance, is not able to say, "I know whom I have believed, . . . and that he is able to keep." One of my prominent elders said to me: "During the trying experiences through which I have passed, I know that it was my faith in God that saved me from doing what a number of our prominent citizens did: nothing less than suicide."

What an awful world this would be if we did not have faith; if we did not trust each other in the common relationships of life! And yet this is exactly the attitude of many Christian people toward the all-providing heavenly Father. They pray, but it is a faithless prayer; they read God's promises, but they do not take them seriously; they want life in its abundance, but they are not willing to trust Jesus and take up their cross and follow Him.

The words of the Record should be the blessed experience of every devoted Christian, the mark that sets him off from the confusion and restlessness of the world: "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee; because he trusteth in thee." (Turn to Page 11)

"Go Home to Thy Friends"

By Sydney E. Mogaw

THE wind stopped, Galilee calmed, and wondering apostles set foot on the shore of the Gadarenes to behold another tempest—one in a man—and to see it calmed. Shall Christ be roused to comfort a sea, yet lie asleep to the surgings of an untamed soul?

This Gadarene was insane, yet strong in body. He freely broke chains and shackles intended to subdue him. He existed among tombs. He cut himself with stones, and cried night and day from pains which he thought were raging devils within him. He was hopeless, an abandoned case, an outcast.

His name was Legion. There are today legions of men, strong in body but without virtue, character, and poise; and not one, but a legion of devils are ever grabbing at the vitals of these spiritual wrecks.

He saw Jesus. He ran. He worshiped Him. He promptly called Him "Son of the most high God." Nevertheless he feared to be cleansed! "Torment me not," and "What have I to do with thee?" were his words to the Physician who cured without price. He just did not understand. He could not weigh spiritual values. He did not sense that "the son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them."

That, too, is the way with men today. Christ is Christ, but what of it? To see Him would be wonderful, to bow in worship natural, but to allow Him to cleanse from that which can only result in death is not wanted. As the brightness of the sun blinds the natural eye, so the transcending glory of the Son is confusing to the natural man.

It is interesting to note that Christ did not attempt to correct this man's mistaken theology about demons. Why argue with a dying patient? The man was cured, and thereby taught. Kindness is always a good teacher. As to the swine—who in God's holy land had license to breed a herd of two thousand swine? When men are made whole by the gospel, and corruption is "choked in the sea," then is Christianity at work.

As on the open sea Christ could be mirrored only after the waves had settled into glassy smoothness, so only by cleansing could this Gadarene become a mirror to reflect Christ. To go with Jesus was not his privilege. Said Christ, "Go home to thy friends, and tell how great things the Lord hath done for thee." The man "began to publish" and "all men did marvel."

Christian brother, we cannot now sail Galilee with Christ. What shall we do? Where shall we go? There is an echo of Christ's commission to the Gadarene that is still heard, "Go home to thy friends." Be a better neighbor, and witness for your Lord!

"The Times of the Gentiles"

MANY are showing great interest in the study of Scripture prophecy concerning "the times of the Gentiles" and are asking these important questions: (1) What do they signify? (2) When do they begin? and (3) When and how shall they end?

We would present the following only as suggestive and aid candid inquirers in their study of what has been revealed upon this subject. We recognize and lament the discredit which has been brought upon the whole subject of Scripture prophecy by setting dates for the "blessed hope" of our Lord's coming to be realized.

We believe the Scriptures teach that as our Lord descends from the heavens all believers, both those who are living and those who are raised from the dead, will be caught up to meet Him in the air, and this we term the rapture. (1 Thess. 4:13-18.) This is an imminent event, the date of which no one but the Father Himself knows. (Matt. 24:36.) After a season in the air our Lord will descend to the earth and appear to Israel as described in the 12th chapter of Zechariah.

We desire to show the system upon which Scripture dates are interpreted and we especially wish to emphasize that all the dates herein considered, if they have any value at all, pertain strictly to Israel's history, and not to the rapture, except so far as they may designate events which occur when and after our Lord shall have appeared to Israel as described above.

In this spirit and attitude let us now take up the study of "the times of the Gentiles."

1. WHAT DO THEY SIGNIFY?

Our Lord gave us this expression, "the times of the Gentiles," in Luke 21:24, when He said, "And they (the Jews) shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled."

The meaning seems clear, viz., that a governmental domination by the Gentiles over the Jews is here asserted; and that the period of time during which it is to continue is called "the times of the Gentiles."

2. WHEN DO THEY BEGIN?

From Jeremiah 27:1-13; 2 Chronicles 36:6, 7; and Daniel 2:37, 38, passages which are too long to be quoted fully here, we learn that this domination began when God gave Israel and many other nations into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar, the Gentile king of Babylon, which, according to Usher's chronology, was B. C. 604.

The Babylonian domination had continued under the succeeding empires of Medo-Persia, Greece, and Rome for over six hundred years when our Lord uttered the solemn prediction that it should still continue "until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled."

The whole course of these Gentile dominating empires is prophetically prefigured by the vision of the image which God gave to Nebuchadnezzar and revealed, together with its interpretation, to Daniel (Dan. 2).

History corroborated the accuracy of the vision, viz.: head of gold, representing Babylon; breast and arms of silver, representing Medo-Persia; belly and thighs of brass, representing Greece; and legs, feet, and toes of iron and clay, representing Rome.

All of these have appeared in the order given, with the exception of the toe. The prophesied smiting of the image on the feet and breaking in pieces the gold, silver, brass, iron, and clay, which becomes chaff and is to be blown away, unmistakably signifies a complete end of these Gentile governments, with their dominion over Israel and treading down of Jerusalem (vv. 34, 35, 45).

God has given a solemn prediction of this end of Gentile governments and their dominion over the Jews who have been scattered among them. "I will make a full end of all the nations whither I have scattered thee (Israel), but I will not make a full end of thee." God adds, however, that He will "not hold Israel guiltless" (Jer. 30:11; 46:28).

From this it seems apparent that "the times of the Gentiles" are to end with a total destruction of Gentile governments; and that Israel, though terribly punished, is to be preserved and continued as the center of a world wide theocracy, the rebuilt "tabernacle of David," the "everlasting kingdom" "which shall not pass away" (Dan. 7:13, 14, 18, 22, 27; Acts 15:16, 17).

The end of "Gentile times" is also signified in the language of Paul: "That hardening in part hath befallen Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in" (Rom. 11:25).

When the church has been completed and caught away and the wickedness of the Gentiles has reached its climax (compare God's reason for turning the kingdom over to the Gentiles (Ezek. 21:24) with the reason given here for taking it from the Gentiles—Editor), then God will make an end of Gentile governments and restore the kingdom to Israel. Then Gentiles shall come to Israel's light and all nations shall serve them or perish (Isa. 60).

3. WHEN SHALL THESE TIMES END?

It is important to note that our Lord did not say time of the Gentiles to designate this period of their supremacy, but He used this peculiar plural expression, "times of the Gentiles," as though it had special significance.

Hence we would first inquire, How long is one prophetic "time"?

An answer to this question appears to be given in the 12th chapter of Revelation and verse 6, where it is stated that the woman is nourished in the wilderness for a "thousand two hundred and threescore days." This nourishing, which is again mentioned in verse 14, is said to be for "a time, times, and a half." The plural, "times," apparently means two "times," which makes a total of three and one half times. This is one half of the seven times of Leviticus 26 and Daniel 4, and harmonizes with the forty-two months of Revelation 11:2, 3, and other scriptural periods.

From this we see that the 1,260 days in verse 6 are equivalent to three and one half "times" in verse 14, and therefore that a Scripture "time" is 1,260 divided by three and a half, which equals 360 days. This is the calendar year, being 12 months of 30 days each. It coincides with the five months which equals 150 days in Genesis 7:11, 24 and 8:3, 4. Thus it appears that a scriptural "time" is 360 days.

Second. What Bible evidence have we as to how many of these "times" are included in the plural expression, "the times of the Gentiles"?

Let us turn to the 4th chapter of Daniel. Here we read of a humiliating experience which came upon Nebuchadnezzar, who symbolized the head of gold of the image. The remarkable visitation related here was intended to teach him that there was a King in heaven superior to all Gentile earthly kings, whom he should praise, extol, and honor. The duration of this strange interlude in the life of Nebuchadnezzar is four times said to be seven times (vv. 16, 23, 25, 32).

Does it not seem probable that the scriptural record of this unprecedented occurrence was intended to serve as a warning, not only to Nebuchadnezzar, but also to all his subjects and to those of the Gentile empires which should follow him? This appears consistent, and leads us to ask:

May these "seven times" be symbolical of "the times of the Gentiles" which shall end in God's demonstration to Israel and to all nations that this King of heaven is the King of kings, the stone which shall smite the image, whose kingdom shall fill the earth, and who shall rule the nations of the world in justice and righteousness?

If so, then "the times of the Gentiles" are to be "seven times." This conclusion is supported by the "seven times" of Leviticus 26.

Let us keep clearly in our minds that "the times of the Gentiles" are specifically characterized by a dominance of governmental power over Israel, during their captivity and the treading down of the holy city, Jerusalem, which is evidently Israel's greatest punishment.

In Leviticus 26, after promising blessing for obedience and various punishments for disobedience, the Lord God pronounced upon Israel an unequalled punishment, which was to continue for "seven times," even till they should confess their iniquity and God should remember His covenant with them and with the land. Four times is this "seven times" emphasized, providing a remarkable coincidence with the four times of Daniel 4.

Many prophetic signs indicate that we must be near the end of time, or "time of the end," as stated in Daniel 12:4; Jeremiah 30:11; and Matthew 13:39; and that Jerusalem's warfare (appointed time) is nearly accomplished (see Isa. 40:2, margin).

The punishment has been awful and will culminate in a crux of desperate affliction, the approaching time of "Jacob's trouble" (Jer. 30:6), when Israel can truly say, "Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by? Behold, and see if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow, which is done unto me, wherewith the Lord hath afflicted me in the day of his fierce anger" (Lam. 1:12).

May we not, therefore, safely conclude that the punishment of Luke 21 is the same as that of Leviticus 26; and that "the times of the Gentiles" are measured by the "seven times" of Leviticus 26, that is, 360 multiplied by 7, which equals 2,520 days?

It is true that the word "times" does not appear in the Hebrew text in this place. It reads, "I will punish you seven." But "times" is plainly the right word to be supplied, and the translators of our English Bible have properly done so, both in the Authorized and in the Revised Versions.

But now we must note that Israel's punishments are measured on the scale of "a day for a year." This is clearly taught in Numbers 14:34. The rebellion of the people, who believed the evil report of the spies after they had searched out the Promised Land for forty days, brought God's punishment upon them and He sent them into the wilderness for forty years, "each day for a year."

The same scale is given in Ezekiel 4:4-6, where the Prophet was commanded to lie on each side so many days, bearing the iniquity of Israel and Judah, "each day for a year." Also 69 and 70 weeks mentioned in Daniel 9, have been fulfilled on this same scale, from the decree of Artaxerxes, B. C. 457, to the baptism of Jesus in A. D. 27, when He was presented to Israel as their Messiah. On this scale the 2,520 days measured 2,520 years as the duration of "the times of the Gentiles," being the period of Israel's punishment.

We repeat that this greatest punishment suffered by Israel began when God gave them into the hands of the Gentile king, Nebuchadnezzar, B. C. 604. Note carefully that Nebuchadnezzar captured Palestine in B. C. 606, when he was his father's general. If Israel had repented they would have been delivered from the dominance of the Babylonians as they were from the Philistines and the Assyrians.

Two years later, or B. C. 604, Nebuchadnezzar was installed as king at Babylon and soon after received the vision of the great image, during the interpretation of which he was told that he was the head of gold, and that the children of men, the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the heaven had been given into his hands (Dan. 2:38). The conquest of Palestine which Nebuchadnezzar effected in B. C. 606 was but the initial step leading to the complete subjugation of Israel. If the people had listened to the pleadings of the Prophet Jeremiah and obeyed the word of God which he declared to them, and served the king of Babylon, they could have continued their national existence in their homeland of Palestine, but they would not. See Jeremiah 27, 28.

Zedekiah, the last king of David's line to reign in Jerusalem, rebelled against the king of Babylon, who promptly came against him, destroyed the city, burned the temple and carried its sacred vessels to Babylon to become the playthings of debauched and drunken nobles (Dan. 5:1-4), and Israel's cherished "Land of Promise" passed completely under Gentile domination.

Measuring the 2,520 years of "the times of the Gentiles" from B. C. 604, the date of Nebuchadnezzar's ascension to the throne of Babylon, we reach the year 1917, evidently the beginning of "the time of the end." Note carefully how this expression, "the time of the end," is used in the record of the different visions seen by Daniel (Dan. 8:17, 19; 11:35, 40; 12:4, 9).

Evidently a brief period is designated in which "the times of the Gentiles" shall come to an end and Israel shall be restored to their land and to loyalty to God and to His Word. If this is correct, then "the time of the end" has begun and the year 1917 must have had some events marking the beginning of Israel's restoration. Praise God! This is just what occurred!

As Cyrus, king of Persia, issued the decree allowing the Jews to return to Jerusalem at the end of seventy years of captivity, so on November 2, 1917, the British Government issued the famous Balfour Declaration, assuring the Jews an opportunity to return to the land of their fathers and establish themselves again in Palestine.

About a month later, December 9, 1917, the city of Jerusalem was delivered into the hands of General Allenby without the drawing of a sword or the firing of a gun.

It is said that when the British army was before Jerusalem, General Allenby, not wishing to harm so sacred a place, cabled to the Government in London for instructions. He was told to use his own judgment. Still feeling uncertain as to what he should do, he cabled to King George and was commanded to pray about it! He and his staff then went aside in prayer before God, and immediately the city was delivered into his hands and he entered on foot with uncovered head.

The airplanes flying over Jerusalem seem to be a wonderful fulfillment of prophecy. "As birds flying so will Jehovah of Hosts protect Jerusalem; he will protect and deliver it, he will pass over and preserve it" (Isa. 31:5, R. V.).

On September 22, 1919, the Balfour Declaration was reaffirmed by Earl Curzon, the new Secretary for Foreign Affairs of Great Britain. On April 24, 1920, the San Remo Council of the League of Nations gave the mandate over Palestine to Great Britain. About the end of May of the same year, the British Government appointed Sir Herbert Samuel, a Jew, as High Commissioner, making him practically Governor of Palestine. June 30, of that year, Sir Herbert Samuel arrived and established his office in the Holy City. About four days later, July 4, 1920, Sir Herbert Samuel declared to the Zionist Commission that neither he nor any Jew of the administration should work on the seventh day Sabbath.

Thus we see that just as definitely as a similar restoration of the Jews occurred under Zerubbabel and Ezra, Jerusalem and Palestine are beginning to be restored again to Abraham's seed, the Jews of our day.

Tragic events are to occur in "the time of the end"! The seventieth week of Daniel 9 will doubtless cover the last of this period, for the seventy weeks are "to finish the transgression . . . and bring in everlasting righteousness" (v. 24).

Students of prophecy may differ as to just how the remaining events will occur, such as the rebuilding of the temple, the destruction of government now occupying the territories indicated by the great image, the arising of the antichrist, the breaking of the covenant, the terrible judgments which shall follow, and the sorrows and despair that continue up to the day of the battle of Armageddon.

But more and more light will be given to the faithful student of the Word as event follows event in the fulfillment of God's precious Book of prophetic truth. But let us say again what we said at the beginning: We have no date set for the coming of the Lord to receive us unto Himself (1 Thess. 4:13-18). We can but watch and wait and pray that we may be found ready when He calls the saints to meet Him in the air.—Condensed from a work by William E. Blackstone.

JEWS RETURNING IN UNBELIEF

AN EXCHANGE, after quoting the statement of Lord Melchett to the effect that "when the Jews come into authority there will be no missions in the Holy Land," asks:

"Can it be that God is sending them back with such a purpose in their hearts?"

The question reminds us of an interview we had some time ago with a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He had just returned from a visit to Palestine and we questioned him as to his observations and impressions with regard to the Jews who had established themselves there.

As was the case with the editor of the exchange mentioned, he said he could not believe that the Jews were returning permanently owing to the fact that the vast majority of those who had gone back were atheists. As he made the statement he said he was reminded of a surprising conversation he had with an Arab Christian regarding that matter while he was in Jerusalem. He had referred to his reason for not believing the Jews were being returned to Palestine by God, to which the Arab Christian replied:

"Perhaps, my friend, the trouble lies in the fact that you have not fully understood the prophecies concerning the return of the Jews. We Christian Arabs believe they are being brought back by God in unbelief that He may cleanse them with the fires of tribulation. They must be here and pass through 'the time of Jacob's trouble' and have 'clean water' poured upon them by the Lord that they may be purified of their skepticism and sin before they can enter into full enjoyment of the blessings God has in store for them."

"The Jews are going back to the land of their forefathers in unbelief, precisely as foretold . . . with the veil still resting upon their hearts and minds as it did in the days of the Apostle Paul," declares George T. B. Davis in "Rebuilding Palestine According to Prophecy."

Ezekiel 36:24-31 indicates that the cleansing of Israel is to follow their regathering rather than precede it.

The One Hope

"THE desire of good accompanied by expectation." Thus is hope defined, and therefore, if Paul is right when he declares that "the faithful in Christ Jesus" were "called in one hope," then there is only one good that a Christian may desire and expect that desire to be brought to fruition.

No matter how that good may be expressed, it must always refer to the same good, and the reason for expecting it must rest upon the same foundation.

With the church professing to hope for different kinds of good, one is led to ask, Is there no simple way by which the one who desires to know the truth and be made free from the fetters of error can find what that one hope is?

It would seem that a brief examination of God's Word should make it plain. This one hope must certainly be that "blessed hope," which the grace of God teaches us to look for, even "the hope of the gospel" (good news).

When brought before the council to answer for his faith Paul declared that it was "touching the hope and resurrection of the dead" that he was called in question.

Did Paul desire a resurrection? He certainly did. Turn to the 3rd of Philippians and see what he counted loss, "if by any means" he might "attain unto the resurrection which is from among the dead." For those who are dying and destined to perish in the grave (if no deliverance be provided), a resurrection is greatly to be desired.

Now what are the grounds for expecting a resurrection? Standing before Agrippa and again defending his faith, Paul says: "I stand here to be judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers." Then he asks: "Why is it judged incredible with you if God doth raise the dead?" In the making of this promise Paul says that God swore by Himself to the end that we might have "strong encouragement, who have fled for refuge to lay hold of the hope set before us," in the promise, of course.

We must, therefore, look to the promise to find the good thing that is set before us which is so desirable that it becomes "an anchor of the soul" (psuche, breath used here, according to Halstead, for "breathing after," i. e., desire), both sure and steadfast and entering into that which is within the veil." This Paul considered the good, contained in the promise, so desirable that it was the culmination of all desire.

The promise recorded in Genesis 13:15 is God's promise to give to Abraham and his seed, "which is Christ" (Gal. 3:16), "all the land," which meant "that he should be heir of the world" (Rom. 4:13), namely, "a new earth," which Peter says we look for "according to his (God's) promise."

God's covenant in answer to Abraham's question, "Whereby shall I know that I shall inherit it?" (the land) is recorded in Genesis 15. In making the covenant God made known to Abraham that he was not to secure the land eternally by not dying. Rather, he made it plain that he should "be buried in a good old age." Then, after Abraham had pledged himself to hold faith in God's promise as long as he lived, God pledged Himself to watch over the promise while he was dead, and by those two things represented by "a smoking furnace and a flaming torch," and bring it to pass.

Abraham having died and been buried, the only way that God can keep His oath is to raise Abraham and his seed from among the dead. The hope, then, that God's promise of an eternal inheritance brings to those who, because of their faith, are to be "blessed with faithful Abraham," is the hope of a resurrection. No greater good can a dying man desire. This and no other good can come to him regardless of his desire, because God's oath-bound covenant makes provision for nothing else. It is the good that we have reason to expect because God Himself has promised.

Thus Paul says: "We bring you good tidings of the promise made unto the fathers, that God hath fulfilled the same . . . in that he raised up Jesus" (Acts 13:32-34). Thus God made the claim of Jesus, when He said, "I am the resurrection," a living, vital truth. It was in the person of Jesus that the hope of a resurrection set before us entered "into that which is within the veil," providing a hope that we can with safety lay hold of for a refuge. It is sure and steadfast, the unalterable Word of God. It is "the hope of the gospel," from which Paul bids us not to be "moved away," because, when "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven . . . the dead in Christ shall rise," for, being Christ's, they are "Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."

But, asserts some one, quoting 1 Timothy 1:1, "Christ Jesus is our hope."

Yes, Jesus is our hope, but not if you separate Him from God's oath-bound promise. The Jesus in whom many are trusting is a creature of their imagination. The Christ who is our hope is the "seed" of promise who is God's channel of blessing, the one whom He had made "the resurrection," that He might fulfill His promises to Abraham.

Do not try to separate Christ from the covenant, or to isolate Him from the promise. It is God's promise that must and will have a fulfillment; its hope is a resurrection, and Jesus is our hope simply because God has made Him "the resurrection." It is this hope, and this hope only, that is sure and steadfast, and once you have it, no man can take it from you.

O glorious hope! Jesus can bring you out of death because He has "the keys," and the key of the grave is God's gift of eternal life, and by that gift He will fulfill the will of God and raise up at the last day those who are to be "the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."—E. F. White in The Herald of Life.

THE GREATEST DELUSION

THE greatest delusion that ever afflicted the human race is the idea that God has conveyed His own essential and inalienable life to all mankind through the channels of natural generation, thereby making every babe that is born into the world a partaker of the divine nature and a begotten child of "the ever-living God."

There is not one word in the account of man's creation to justify the baseless assumption that the words, "death," "die," "life," "live," must be understood only figuratively in the account of man's creation, or that they mean nothing more than two differing conditions of existence, i. e., good and evil. And what violent twists of Scripture language have to be employed in order to sustain this notion! Here are a few of them:

"The breath of life"—breath of fellowship with God. If that is its meaning then the whole of the animal creation had similar intelligent companionship with their Creator, for that expression is applied to them all at the deluge.

"Thou shalt surely die"—be cut off from divine companionship. All but eight living beings are said to have died at the flood; does that mean that they all lost fellowship with God? Yes, if death means nothing more than that, or does not really deprive a creature of existence. But the lower animals never had fellowship with God; then how could they lose what they did not possess? And if all the descendants of Adam and Eve except one family were already dead in the figurative sense of "dead in trespasses and sins," how could their failure to obtain figurative or spiritual life have anything to do with their literal death or loss of life? But what right have we to apply a figurative meaning to "die" in Genesis 2:17, and change it to the literal in Genesis 7:22?

"The tree of life"—tree of fellowship with God. Why write such nonsense? Because in the same sentence (Gen. 3:22) we also find the expression, "live for ever." Does that mean only that man might have had fellowship with God forever if he had not been shut off from the tree of life? Yes, if the words "live" and "life" in this verse mean something different from what they mean in verses 18 and 20; and, if the threat, "thou shalt surely die" (2:17), means only, to enter into another and worse condition of life as the consequence of sin.

What did the deceiver mean when he told Eve, "Ye shall not surely die"? He was contradicting God, who had said to Adam that his life depended upon his continued obedience. What right have we to imagine that God and His enemy were not referring to literal life and the loss of it, but, instead, to two figurative conditions of existence? You cannot obtain a figure of anything without first understanding what it is a figure of. The literal must precede the figurative. But there is nothing preceding God's threat of death and satan's denial thereof to indicate that they were only employing secondary meanings of those words. If they were doing this where shall we find the primary or literal meanings?

We do not need to go outside the Bible to learn exactly what are those literal significations. Perfect examples are afforded when we find the words applied to God Himself and to animals. God speaks of Himself as "the living God" and we also read, "as I live, saith the Lord." Who could be presumptuous enough to claim that the Almighty is here only referring to His happiness or holiness? Is it not perfectly plain that He is asserting the fact of His eternal existence? Then why, in the case of man, should the primary meaning of life be considered as expressive only of a certain condition of existence, instead of existence itself? And why, in John 3:16, should we regard the word "perish" as applying, in the case of man, only to another condition of life? The expression, "as the beasts that perish," ought to be sufficient to settle the meaning of the word in the gospel message as Christ preached it to Nicodemus—"should not perish, but have everlasting life."

Soon now, the great satanic delusion which has adulterated the pure gospel throughout the world will be fully exposed and the world will have to believe, as Christ predicted in John 17:21, 23, that the only way by which endless life can be obtained is through God's gift of His Son to be a new Source of Life for our otherwise perishing race.

"Thou, with endless life the power,
Great Melchisedec I see;
Share with me this priceless dower,
Give me immortality;
King of righteousness and peace,
Priest of God's eternity,
Give me life that ne'er shall cease,
Give me immortality."

UNUSUAL BIBLE QUESTIONS

Who had beds of gold and silver on a pavement of red, blue, white, and black marble? Esther 1:6.

Where is a bed mentioned which was too short and its covering too narrow? Isaiah 28:20.

When did a good cook make a stew that was so appetizing that he was able to trade it for an empire. Genesis 25:29-34.

What Bible character suffered from stomach trouble? 1 Timothy 5:23.

Where does the Bible say some one will hide behind a tree to eat mice? Isaiah 66:17.

Where does God say that He will be for a crown and that His people shall also be for a crown? Isaiah 28:5; 62:3.

What man ordered several others killed because his memory failed him? Daniel 2:1-13.

In what book of the Bible does the name of God occur the least number of times? In a book containing the history of a beautiful queen.

What favorite Italian dish did the Israelites relish? Numbers 11:5.

MARKS OF A CHRISTIAN

If men are going to see Jesus they must see Him through us; and if they are going to see God, they must see Him through Jesus—that is the order: “You, Jesus, God”! This homely little poem expresses it beautifully:

“We are the only Bible
The careless world will read;
We are the sinner’s gospel,
We are the scoffer’s creed;
We are the Lord’s last message
Given in deed and word;
What if the type is crooked?
What if the print is blurred?”

It is true that the greatest hindrance to the Christian religion in its progress throughout the world, is Christian people. The old Petrine experience is true today: “We follow Christ, but we follow Him afar off.”

All life must express itself; the sun must shine and the river flow. The life that is denied expression disappears, and it is for this reason that faith and confession are placed side by side in the gospel and in the church. There are various ways of confessing Christ—the kindly word spoken in His name; standing for the right in opposition to the wrong; participation in the Lord’s Supper; the act of worship in the house of the Lord. Every Christian is an ambassador of Christ, and as such is either representing Christ or misrepresenting Christ. God, make us worthy interpreters of our Lord!

It is true that the Christian is in the world, but he is not of the world. “Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers.” “Come ye out from among them and be ye separate.” “Love not the world,” wrote St. John; but not the world of nature, rather that world of unrighteousness which smacks of opposition to our Master.

A certain lady wrote me: “I have found that the world and the church cannot be combined.” True, the sheep cannot associate with the wolves without soon being devoured. Anything that contributes to our spiritual impoverishment is of the world, and should be abhorred by the Christian. We cannot condone sin and maintain righteousness. We cannot call a bad man good, and increase faith in lofty standards. We cannot waste long hours of precious time over worldly amusements and yet redeem the time for Christ and His kingdom. He who can only satisfy his nature with the pleasures of the world reveals indeed a sad poverty of manhood in the realm of moral and spiritual values. “They that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh; but they that are after the Spirit the things of the Spirit.” To which of these two classes do you belong? Toward which are you growing?

The call of the Christian is the elevation of his standards of conduct far above the standards of the world. There should be no compromise. As a certain great Christian stated: “We are either all for Christ or not any for Christ.” Which is it?—Charles T. Damp; adapted from The Presbyterian.

vantage! Let us take care! Let each examine himself, lest we, too, sell our Master for temporal gain and forget the loss!

Jesus left a great work for His followers to do. “Go ye therefore, and teach all nations” (Matt. 28:19); “and this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come” (Matt. 24:14). End of what? End of the age.

A friend called my attention recently to the words, “in all the world,” rendering them as “in all the age,” and not necessarily in foreign lands. It is not a bad thought, for the words “unto all nations,” take care of that foreign portion of the work.

We know that at the beginning of the gospel age the gospel was preached. Down through the so-called “Dark Ages” the work went on. Through the Reformation period it was continued. But what about 1937?

Oh, so many love to read Mark 13:10—“And this gospel must first be published among all nations”—and boast that the Bible is now printed in every known tongue. But, my friend, What have we had to do with this? We cannot rest upon another’s labor! When Jesus comes to reward “every man according as his work shall be” (Rev. 22:12), what portion of that reward may we claim for the publication of the gospel? Jesus, who told us to “go, teach” and “go, preach,” also said, “Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?” (Luke 6:46).

Judas sold his Master for gain. We hinder, or at least do not over-exert ourselves in the work of the Lord. Judas came to shame and early death. Perhaps when we stand in the judgment we shall come in that class also which the Lord said “shall not enter the kingdom.” “Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity.”

Like Judas, are we to come to shame? “Therefore to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin” and “the wages of sin is death.”

PROTESTANTISM NO LONGER PROTESTS!

Protestantism has ceased to be a voice of vigorous and fearless protest against faith-destroying error and has degenerated into a faint and futile whisper of whining complaint against social and economic evils which pertain entirely to this present life. Consequently it has lost its virile spiritual power, forgotten its missionary zeal, and become but little more than an exceedingly inefficient political machine, vainly battering itself to pieces against the stony ramparts of a ridiculing world!

The Man Born Blind

Question: "Master, who did sin, this man, or his parents, that he was born blind?"

Answer: "Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents: but that the works of God should be made manifest in him" (John 9:2, 3).

There was a cartoon I saw recently in a magazine. A man was walking down the street with an umbrella over his head to keep off a lone column of rain that was following him wherever he went. Bystanders, outside the column of rain, were gaping and snickering, and saying, "He must have committed some awful sin." It is a conceit of the fortunate to be like Job's comforters and imply that the miseries of the unfortunate are coming upon them from the hand of God for their wickedness and hypocrisy.

Job's comforters looked upon Job's calamities and said, "God exacteth of thee less than thine iniquity deserveth" (Job 11:6). But Job answered, "I am not inferior unto you" (13:2). "The tabernacles of robbers prosper," Job said, "and they that provoke God are secure" (12:6). "Miserable comforters are ye all" (16:2). "I also could speak as ye do: if your soul were in my soul's stead, I could heap up words against you, and shake mine head at you" (16:4).

No, while we recognize with Job that "man that is born of woman is of few days, and full of trouble" (14:1), and thus the troubles of the human race are the result of sin, yet individual troubles do not mean that one man is a worse sinner than others.

In some circles any defect of body or mind is a subject for ribaldry and mockery. Such an attitude reveals a coarseness of moral fiber in the mocker that is far worse than the lameness of body of the one mocked at. What a crude, coarse thing it is to mock at human misery! Jesus was filled with a wondrous compassion and sympathy in the presence of suffering. Next time you see a physical wreck of a man it will purify your heart to think, in the words of a great preacher: "There, but for the grace of God, go I."

Many times handicapped people make a greater mark in the world than others who are physically perfect. Blind Milton composed some of the world's greatest poetry. Elizabeth Barrett Browning was an invalid all her life, yet she is conceded to have been the greatest English woman poet. Robert Louis Stevenson was a semi-invalid all his life. Fannie Crosby, greatest American hymn writer, was blind from childhood. Helen Keller is deaf and blind, and has never heard herself talk. President Roosevelt is a cripple from infantile paralysis. These all have used their afflictions as ladders to tremendous service.

The question should not be, "What great sin has this man done to be so afflicted?" but it should be, "What great work of God is to be manifested through that broken and humbled body?"

Spirituality

Whatever makes men superior to things and loyal to great causes; whatever leads men to sacrifice temporary advantage for the sake of permanent worth; whatever causes men to appreciate beauty, truth, and righteousness; whatever enables the spirit of man to master the body; whatever ennobles the relationship between man and woman; whatever strengthens the hope of man in the ultimate triumph of right and the defeat of wrong; whatever purifies the inner life; whatever gives confidence in the personal friendship and solicitude of God; that is spirituality."—Helpful Thoughts; selected by J. R. LeCrone, Eden Valley, Minnesota.

Secret Causes of Failure

"An eagle, carrying a serpent in its talons to its nest on the mountain, was bitten in the heart and fell to the ground.

"Have you ever seen a man or woman in the church fall in the same way? You do not know the secret of their fall, but the omniscient eye of God saw it. That neglect of prayer, that secret dishonesty in business, that stealthy indulgence in the intoxicating cup, that licentiousness and profligacy unseen of men, that secret tampering with unbelief and error, was the serpent at the heart that brought the eagle down."—Theodore L. Cuyler.

"He that diggeth a pit shall fall into it; and whoso breaketh an hedge, a serpent shall bite him" (Ecl. 10:8).

The Reply of the Polished Shoes

When in Egypt some years ago holding meetings among soldiers, J. Stuart Holden asked a big sergeant in a Highland regiment—a man who was as bright and shining for the Lord as it is possible for a saved soldier to be—how he was brought to Christ. The soldier's answer was this: "There is a private in the same company who was converted in Malta before the regiment came on to Egypt. We gave that fellow an awful time. One night, a terrible wet night, he came in very tired and wet, and before going to bed he got down to pray. My boots were heavy with wet and mud, and I let him have one on one side of the head and the other on the other side; and he just went on with his prayers. Next morning I found those boots beautifully polished and standing by the side of my bed. This was his reply to me, and it just broke my heart; I was saved that day."—Sunday at Home.

The Words I Say

Lord, help me say the kind words
 Instead of those which sting;
 Lord, help me give to others
 The gladness kind words bring;
 And help me to remember
 That I shall also find
 More joy in speaking gently
 Than saying things unkind.

"The Gospel According to You"

It had been a great day in the woods for Martin and Mark that first Saturday after school had started. The boys had enjoyed the outdoors more than usual, it seemed. For the weather had been bright and sunny with just enough nip in the air to make one feel full of pep and ready for exercise.

The twin brothers had found some of the specimens of leaves they needed for mounting in their nature books, and were ready to leave for home. They were just putting out the fire they had built to cook their supper.

"It's all out now," declared Mark. "I guess we can go all right."

But Martin's quick eye saw one little spark a short distance from the ashes of the fire. "Oh, well," he thought, "it'll go out itself. There's no use to bother any longer just for one spark."

So they left for home. But a little bit later a wind blew up and fanned the tiny spark until it became a blaze. Then a dead branch lying near caught, and soon some more dry branches were burning.

Many of the beautiful old trees from which the boys had secured the leaves they valued so much, were destroyed. And a bad forest fire was started that did a great deal of damage before it was extinguished. Just from one little spark left by a thoughtless boy!

The words we say are often very much like that. "Behold," says the writer of the text for our Sunday school lesson for October 17, "how great a matter a little fire kindleth!"

Then James, the writer, goes on to say that the tongue is a fire, which works for us either great good or much evil. Do you see, if we do not check our tongues they may bring great distress to some one. While, if we are careful to quench all the harsh words, when evil thoughts arise in our minds, we will avoid bringing sorrow to those about us.

And after a while, if we continue day by day and month by month to put down evil thoughts and think only good happy thoughts, our words will be happy words. They will be the kind of words Jesus would have us say. They will bring joy to those about us.

"You are writing a gospel,
 A chapter each day,
 By the deeds that you do,
 By the words that you say.
 Men read what you write,
 Whether faultless or true.
 Say! what is the gospel
 According to you?"

Ships and Rudders

In apostolic times ships were impelled by sails, the only oars mentioned being the paddles which were used as rudders. By these they steered the ships. While their ships were comparatively small, we know they were capable of carrying not only a considerable cargo of wheat, but also a considerable number of passengers. The ship on which Paul went to Melita (Malta) had 276 people on board. Yet, in spite of their great size, James tells us they could easily be turned about by little rudders.—Our Bible Museum.

A Prayer for the Week

Dear Lord, our heavenly Father, help each one of us to realize the power of the words we speak, the power to wound or the power to make glad those about us. May we choose only such words as Jesus would choose and that will be acceptable to Thee. For Jesus' sake. Amen.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

MINNESOTA FALL CONFERENCE

The Fall Conference of the Church of God in Minnesota will be held at Mora, October 22-24, inclusive. This should be a great and inspiring gathering. All who can possibly do so are urged to make plans immediately to be present throughout the meeting. Your presence and counsel are needed.

MICHIGAN FALL CONFERENCE

The Michigan Fall Conference will convene at Blanchard from October 26-31. Elder Richard LeCrone of Eden Valley, Minn., will be the guest speaker.

The Blanchard church and the Conference board sincerely hope that all the beautiful autumn drives will lead to the Fall Conference this year. Remember the place and date.

Mrs. L. F. Slocum, Secretary.

ILLINOIS TREASURER

The present Illinois treasurer is Bro. Harvey Krogh, Jr., of Ripley. In a recent communication he states that he must have more regular monthly contributions if the work that is being done at present at Macomb and Camden is to be carried on through the year.

This work is evangelistic and missionary in nature and deserves some support from each one of us. Send Bro. Krogh word as to how much you will contribute monthly toward the evangelistic project of the State, or send a cash contribution.

Illinois members, get ready for Dollar Day!
Paul C. Johnson, President.

ROCKFORD, ILLINOIS

With conferences and summer vacations over we are now back on our regular schedule of church services.

Some changes have taken place in our group during the summer. We are very glad to welcome two new members who were baptized at the Illinois Conference: Miss JoAnn Kasper, 1807 Ridge Ave., and Miss Mary Catherine Railton, 1110 N. Rockton Ave. We also have a new prospective member in the person of little Miss Suzanne Somers, who arrived September 3 to make her home with Bro. and Sr. Gayle Somers. Another new member of our Cradle Roll Department is Master Robert Vernon Bodin, whose birthday was July 15. Although Bobbie makes his home in Beloit, Wis., with Mr. and Mrs. C. V. Bodin, we claim him at Rockford because his mother (Kathryn Lansbery) is a member of our congregation. On September 2 we bade farewell to three of our members who left to make their home in sunny California. They are Mr. and Mrs. Glen Starbuck and Mrs. Rose Starbuck. Their address at present is 921 W. 4th St., Ontario, Calif., and we are sure they have already been welcomed by the Pomona and Los Angeles brethren.

October 10 is Rally Day and Homecoming at Rockford, and we shall be glad to welcome any former members of our congregation as well as anyone else who can attend. Sunday school at 10:00; morning worship and sermon at 11:00; evening service at 7:30. Our meeting place is the W.C.T.U. Hall, 1904 N. Main St.

EDEN VALLEY, MINNESOTA

At the present writing (Oct. 1, 1937), Bro. J. B. Gasper is recovering from an operation in a Minneapolis hospital.

Sr. William Hendrickson has also recently undergone an operation at the St. Cloud hospital. She is doing as well as can be expected so short a time after an operation. Both of these sufferers are members of the Eden Valley Church of God.

On Monday evening, Sept. 20, Nadine G. Tritabaugh and John G. Peters were united in marriage by Elder J. R. LeCrone, in a quiet ceremony at the parsonage. Both these young people are members of our Berean society.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

A friend of The Herald sends in a subscription for another and remarks: "I feel that the message that this paper will bring may be of interest to them." We feel sure that this will be true.

A subscriber who is a member of another denomination, but who has taken The Herald for many years, in a recent interview said that she considered our little paper the best religious journal with which she was acquainted, and made it a practice to give her old copies to ministers to read, some of whom assured her that they used the material found in The Herald in the preparation of their sermons.

Watch for the front page editorial in our next issue: "Life Begins at Seventy." It will be of interest to old and young alike, but especially to the aged ones.

Bro. James W. McLain, pastor of the Church of God at Macomb, Ill., is now located with his family at 409 S. Dudley St., in that city. Those who may have occasion to write to Bro. McLain should make a note of his new address.

Last Sunday was "Moral Obligation Sunday." How many of our churches remembered to take a special offering for the Indebtedness Fund of the National Bible Institution? To those who did remember and took such an offering we extend our deepest appreciation. The debt is shrinking and with your continued help it will all be cleared from the books. Let's not forget to take an offering on Sunday, Oct. 24—the 4th Sunday!

Watch for next week's "Abreast of the Times." Startling events took place in Palestine over the week-end which may result in exceedingly important developments. The times are momentous! Let us watch and be sober.

Rally Day was celebrated at Oregon, Ill., last Sunday under most favorable conditions. A beautiful day added somewhat to the attendance which was most gratifying. Following the regular Sunday school session, an interesting program was given, during the progress of which certificates of promotion were presented to those who were being advanced into higher departments.

In the evening Pastor G. E. Marsh took as a question for consideration before an audience of about 75, "Is the United States Responsible for the Present War Between China and Japan?" His topic next Sunday evening will be, "God's Word Unveils the Secret Diplomacy of Europe."

Bro. Siple, now entering upon his eighth year as pastor of the South Lawn Park Church of God in Grand Rapids, Mich., was a pleasant surprise visitor at The Herald office last Friday. With his wife and daughter, Mildred, he was on his way to Burr Oak, Ind., where he was to be the speaker at the Rally Day services on Sunday.

A letter from Sr. (Miss) Leona Marsh, formerly of Ft. Wayne, Ind., informs us that she is now employed in Ohio. Her new address is 296 E. 271 St., Euclid, Ohio. We hope that the change in location will not only be advantageous to Sr. Marsh from a financial standpoint but also from a spiritual one, as it will bring her within reach of the active Golden Rule Church of God in Cleveland.

Sending in his renewal to The Herald, Bro. R. A. Curtis, whose tract, "The Coming of Christ a Divine Necessity, is one of our most popular publications, writes: "The Restitution Herald is my source of consolation in my declining years. After reading it I pass it on to others, to broaden its circle of influence for good, that they may 'know the joyful sound' of deliverance for earth and her toilful millions (Psa. 89:15-29)."

Board of Evangelism

Preach the Word

C. E. Randall, Superintendent

We are mapping out quite an extensive program and will need considerable money to carry it out. We are praying that God will furnish the money through you, brethren of the Church of God. All of you who contribute will be the instruments in His hands to help carry on this work.

I have the names of some workers who want work, and am also in correspondence with places that want men. All places that want pastors or evangelists, or workers that want to do such work, should communicate with me. Send your communications to me as soon as possible.

The names of those who have contributed this year are as follows: Harold Kessler, $30.00; Mrs. James Kessler, $5.00; Mrs. J. H. Snow, $5.00; James A. Patrick, $10.70.

The names of those who contributed last year will be sent in for publication in the near future.

James A. Patrick, Secretary-Treasurer.

The Church of God has a distinctive message and one which we feel is composed of more solid truth than can be found in the tenets of faith of any other group. While our teachings have many things in common with all the sects of Christendom, yet the composite of our clean-cut doctrines are not to be found in any other organized group. This is not a peculiarity—it is the natural result of a determined, truth-loving people forging ahead in search of truth without the restraining influence of creeds or traditions.

Advance truth does not warrant high notions and should not cause people to be self-centered. It does, however, carry with it a responsibility for its care. Truth cannot lie dormant, it must be scattered for reproduction. In this way truth is progressive and it is evident from the Word that God so planned it. In other words, the proper way to care for truth is to broadcast it in Christlike fashion.

The advanced truth which is in the possession of the Church of God is timely in outlook and expressly needed for our day and generation. The appreciation which we have for the compact truth revealed in these latter days can be easily measured by our stewardship in spreading it to those who are hungering for the truth which frees. Before we can be possessed of an evangelistic spirit that will balance the energy and hardihood of the messengers of the first century of the Christian Era, we must be literally saturated with conviction that our message is positive truth and essential—even unto eternal life!

With a full assurance of the truthfulness of our teachings, and led by a humble spirit in discharging our trust, the Church of God can well fulfill her stewardship role in comparison to the importance of her message. To lose sight of the superiority of our biblical vision will mean the impoverishment of our church interest and zeal. If there is a lapse in enthusiasm among our church folk, one need not look further than the indifference to the value of our doctrinal faith. Hence this column believes there must be a strong conviction respecting the urgency and essential need of our church and its message, before there can be a real quickening in constructive evangelism.

To members of the Church of God which the Board of Evangelism represents, there can be no substitute for the Church of God, neither can there be any "just as good" teaching. To us, our church must be "the church." If our faith does not contain more saving truth—vital truth for which we should stand—than is available elsewhere, then there is no justification for our existence as a people.

When the members of the Committee who paved the way for the organization of the General Conference were considering for two days the biblical Church of God as revealed through the Word, their studies led them to the conclusion that there was but "one body, one spirit . . . one Lord, one faith, one immersion." If we are to find a place in this "one body" we cannot relegate the "one faith" into an anteroom over which is placed the inscription: "It doesn't make any difference." Our message is God-inspired and our work God-planned! With this commission in our hands, there is no sacrifice too great or task too small—all is the Lord's work.

Your communications as to meetings in your neighborhood or your fruit-offering to the Lord for evangelism should be addressed to Elder James A. Patrick, Orange Road, Ashland, Ohio.

How Many Members Has the Church of God?

Wouldn't you like to know? But no one does know, for there are no accurate records. You know exactly how much you owe on that mortgage at the bank, how many bushels of corn per acre you raised last year. You know just how many m.p.h. the old bus will do; you know how many acres of land you have, how many horses and pigs and cattle you own, and Lou Gehrig's batting average. But you don't know how many churches of our faith there are or how many members we have! The chances are you don't even know how many members your own church has.

to our denomination that, although we have been a people for well nigh one hundred years, we don't know to this day how many there are of us, or whether we are gaining ground or losing?

Wouldn't You Like to Know how many churches we have, how many members we have, what church has the largest membership, how many church buildings we have, how many ministers, how many Sunday schools, how many Berean societies, and how many new members last year?

We Propose to Find Out!

That is the import of the action taken by the recent General Conference appointing the writer as Statistician. When the facts and figures have been gathered, the answers to all these questions, and others, will be available to you and everyone, for the first time in our history. Will you help me in this interesting work? I ask only that some one in each locality, the secretary or pastor or some one else who has the information, report to me the answers to the questions that follow. If such information is not available, it will be well worth your while to secure it, if only for your own records. Besides, the Government requires you to report these figures to the Director of the Census at Washington. It will be convenient to use this material for both reports.

The following information is desired. You may answer by number to save repeating the questions, but please answer every question, and make your information as accurate as possible.

1. If you have an organized church, how many members are there on the roll? (If there is no official list, make as accurate a count as you can of the number of baptized believers in your locality.) How many, if any, not on the roll?

2. If you have no organized church, how many baptized believers of the Church of God faith are there in your community?

3. Do you have a Sunday school? If so, how many on the roll?

4. Do you have a Berean society? If so, how many on the roll?

5. Names and addresses of all isolated members of the Church of God that you know of that are not members of a state conference.

6. Names and addresses of any ministers, either active or retired, that you think may not be generally known.

Churches in the states of Illinois, Indiana, Minnesota, Michigan, California, Virginia, and other churches who sent delegates to the LAST General Conference need not report. Their conference credentials are sufficient. But ALL OTHER churches are asked to report, all who did not send delegates to this year's General Conference. You can use a penny postcard. Mail it now, before you forget, to M. W. Lyon, 13517 Darley Ave., Cleveland, Ohio.

How Many Members Has Your Church?

“Home, Sweet Home”

Provided by the love and sympathy of the entire brotherhood of the Church of God, Golden Rule Home assures to the members of its Family the comfort, security, and solicitous care which the word “home” always suggests.

Here the anxieties of earlier and more active life are laid aside forever. No threat of eviction for non-payment of rent or taxes or other indebtedness troubles the hearts of the residents of Golden Rule Home!

No doctor or hospital bills, no grocery, coal, or light bills to be met the first of the month, bring fear to the minds of the Golden Rule Home Family!

All such obligations and burdens are taken from the shoulders of these older ones immediately upon their entrance into the Home and are carried thereafter by the Golden Rule Home itself, which is amply able to bear the load on their behalf.

A hearty Christian welcome awaits all who seek the protection and lifelong support the Home provides.

Conditions of entrance into Golden Rule Home are as liberal as absolute security permits. Write for full particulars concerning the Home and its advantages. Or, better still, come and visit the Home itself and let the Family tell their own story of its advantages and comforts.

Address: Golden Rule Home, Mrs. Idona Romine, Matron, Oregon, Illinois.

Life Begins at Seventy!

By the Editor

LIFE in its fullness, in its richness, its beauty and its joyousness, begins at seventy—or at any other age that one becomes a permanent resident of Golden Rule Home! The doors of Golden Rule Home are the doors of a new life to the older ones, opening the way for them to renew and broaden their mental and spiritual horizons and to enter upon a new and promising field of Christian service.

In Golden Rule Home the cares, the distractions, and the irksome, monotonous round of endless duties which occupy the time of those who are maintaining homes of their own, are laid aside forever, and men and women begin to really live! For the first time in their experience they now have the leisure to do the things which they have always wanted to do, but could not, because they lacked the required time and opportunity. In those more active years they were too busy providing food for hungry children, clothing for growing boys and girls, and money for education, taxes, and general expenses of home-keeping, to engage in those pursuits to which their higher natures aspired.

But here in Golden Rule Home they are relieved of all material cares and responsibilities and can devote their entire time, if they care to do so, to the enrichment of mind and spirit. No financial anxieties trouble them. No fears of penury in old age threaten them. The tender, solicitous attention which age craves is assured to them.

“An old age serene and bright,
And lovely as a Lapland night,
Leads on toward close of day!”

Happiness is of the mind and not the body. Yet it is hard for one to be really contented and happy when he “does not know where the next meal is coming from”! But if one’s mind is free from fears of physical want and is kept constantly alert and interested in the life around him, he will never grow old in so far as his sense of happiness is concerned. He will continue to increase his fund of knowledge and to broaden his field of usefulness in the world. Because of his active interest and participation in the life (Please turn to page 11)

Japan Condemned As Offender

"It must needs be that offences come; but woe unto that man (or nation) by whom the offence cometh."—Jesus.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 6.—In a statement issued to-night by Secretary of State Hull, the United States joined with the League of Nations in denouncing Japan as the aggressor in the undeclared war now going on in China and as a violator of the Kellogg Anti-War Treaty and the Nine-Power Pact guaranteeing the territorial integrity of China.

The change in international policy upon which this country has now embarked was announced by President Roosevelt in his speech in Chicago last Monday. At that time he took occasion to strike a telling blow at any or all nations which engage in wars of conquest.

The action of the American Government has been interpreted by the League as an indication that this country is now determined upon a course of action that will make its influence felt throughout the world for peace.

Early this week fifty-two nations denounced Japan through the League and the announcement of our own new foreign policy has greatly strengthened the attitude of those nations toward Japan.

Many thoughtful observers and students of international affairs fear that the announcement of the State Department will do more to aggravate the present world situation than it will to relieve it. They remember that the conscientious purpose of President Wilson on entering the World War was to help make the world safe and to banish war forever, and they recall how that honest effort resulted in nothing but increased "distress of nations" and multiplied "perplexity."

From a human standpoint we "view with increasing alarm" the developments of the past week, but from the standpoint of a believer in the prophecies of the Bible when we see these things coming to pass, we lift up our heads and rejoice, for we know that our "redemption draweth nigh"!

Conditions Grow Worse in Palestine

"It is even the time of Jacob's trouble."—Jer. 30:7.

JERUSALEM, Oct. 6.—"The conditions in Palestine are growing worse hourly!" Such was the alarming announcement made in this city today. The situation is aggravated by the fact that three separate elements of dissension are constantly at work, the Jews, the Arabs, and the communists.

Another general strike has been declared by the Arabs, this time in protest against the British proposal, which has been sanctioned by the League of Nations, to divide Palestine into three parts. With the inauguration of the latest strike, serious rioting has broken out in various localities, a British officer has been assassinated, Jewish shops boycotted by the Arabs and many of them compelled to close, and the communists are demonstrating against the Government in Joppa.

In an effort to put an end to the rioting, which borders on civil war, the British have ordered the arrest of many prominent Arab leaders, among them the Arab mayor of Jerusalem. The latter, in order to evade arrest, has barricaded himself in a Moslem mosque, into the sacred confines of which even the British dare not enter.

Psychology of the "Martyr Race"

"He hath filled me with bitterness."—Lam. 3:15.

NEW YORK, Oct. 9.—"I learned early in life that I was Jewish, and that there was a 'Jewish problem,'" writes Maurice M. Feuerlicht, the son of a rabbi, in a copyrighted article in Forum. At the celebration of the Feast of Lights, or Chanuca, he continues, "I sat at my father's feet . . . and heard him tell the thrilling story of Judas Maccabeus and his brave band who risked their lives for their religion. I lighted candles, and sang,

" 'Children of the martyr race,
Whether free or fettered,
Wake the echoes with your song
Where you may be scattered.' "

He says he had the idea that the Jews were a persecuted and despised race so constantly dinned into his ears that he expected the boys at school to insult him. For three thousand years, Mr. Feuerlicht recalls, the Jews have been a race of wanderers and have never permitted themselves to forget that they are an alien and dishonored people. This psychological attitude, the author believes, is wrong, and that an effort should be made by them to forget the sorrows and disgrace of the past, and recognize the fact that they can be, and are, good neighbors as well as good Jews.

Scripture History Verified

The following letter, written in 1860 from the banks of the Nile, and published in "The Bible Record," is still of interest and serves to confirm the historical records of the Word of God. During the past half century much additional evidence of a similar nature has been uncovered by the spade of the archeologist.

MY DEAR FRIEND: On my first Sabbath upon the Nile I read the prophecies of the Bible in Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel, pronounced more than two thousand years ago against Egypt, then in her pride and power.

"The burden of Egypt. Behold, the Lord rideth upon a swift cloud, and none shall come into Egypt: and the idols of Egypt shall be moved at his presence, and the heart of Egypt shall melt in the midst of it. The Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, saith; Behold, I will punish the multitude of No (Thebes), and Pharaoh, and Egypt, with their gods, and their kings; even Pharaoh, and all them that trust in him. Behold I am against thee, Pharaoh, king of Egypt, the great dragon that lieth in the midst of his rivers, which hath said, My river is my own, and I have made it for myself! Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will bring a sword upon thee, and cut off man and beast out of thee. And the land of Egypt shall be desolate and waste; and I will make the land of Egypt utterly waste and desolate, from the tower of Syene even unto the border of Ethiopia. It shall be the basest of kingdoms; neither shall it exalt itself any more above the nations. I will make the land waste, and all that is therein, by the hand of strangers. I will also destroy the idols, and I will cause their images to cease out of Noph (Memphis); and there shall be no more a prince of the land of Egypt" (Isa. 19; Jer. 46; Ezek. 29 and 30).

How literally are these prophecies fulfilled before the eyes of the traveler through this land! Her cities are destroyed, "waste and desolate," her temples overthrown, her idols cast down. Egypt is the "basest of kingdoms." She has been spoiled by "the hand of strangers," and there is no more "a prince of the land."

(The king of Egypt who was crowned last July was not "a prince of the land of Egypt," but a man whose forefathers lived in Albania, across the Adriatic from Italy.

See "Abreast of the Times" page for August 10, 1937.)

On arriving at Thebes (the biblical No) I visited the great temple of Karnak, built in part by Tothmes III, the Pharaoh of the Exodus. (Other authorities name Amenhotep II or Merneptah as the Pharaoh of the Exodus, but this does not change the force of the correspondent's argument.—Ed.) There, upon the outer wall of the grand hall, we found a record of the invasion and conquest of Judah and Jerusalem by Sheshouk, or Shishak, king of Egypt, as it is written in 1 Kings 14:25, 26:

"And it came to pass in the fifth year of king Rehoboam, that Shishak king of Egypt came up against Jerusalem: and he took away the treasures of the house of the Lord, and the treasures of the king's house; he even took away all: and he took away all the shields of gold which Solomon had made."

This king, Shishak, whose name we read from his cartouche or imperial signet, is represented as riding in his chariot leading the captive Israelites in triumph to Thebes. Their beards and features stamp them unquestionably Jews, as distinctly as the Jewish face can now be recognized in Jerusalem, Constantinople, or New York. Their hands are bound with a rope and their eyes upraised, as if imploring mercy from their conqueror.

The names of the conquered towns and districts taken in this expedition are also recorded in the hieroglyphics. Among them, Champollion has deciphered the kingdom of Judah, and also the Scripture names of Megiddo, Hebron, Beth-shan, Taanac, all the cities of Palestine, and also the valley of Hinnom, and "the great place" or Jerusalem.

Here, indeed, read the confirmation of Scripture history on the temples of Thebes, preserved almost three thousand years to bear their silent testimony to the truth of the Bible.

I also found many verifications of the Scripture history represented upon the tombs of Egypt, cut in the solid rock. In the tomb of Roschere, the overseer of public buildings under Tothmes III, probably the Pharaoh of the Exodus, we saw the whole process of brickmaking depicted. Some are digging and mixing the clay, others are taking the bricks from the form and placing them in rows, and others carrying them away to be dried. (Please turn to page 11)

God the Comforter

O Thou! who dry'st the mourner's tear,
How dark this world would be,
If, when deceived and wounded here,
We could not fly to Thee!

The friends, who in our sunshine live,
When winter comes, are flown;
And he who has but tears to give,
Must weep those tears alone.

But Thou wilt heal the broken heart,
Which, like the plants that throw
Their fragrance from the wounded part,
Breathes sweetness out of woe.

When joy no longer soothes or cheers,
And even hope that threw
A moment's sparkle o'er our tears,
Is dimm'd and vanish'd, too!

Oh! who would bear life's stormy doom,
Did not Thy wings of love
Come, brightly wafting through the gloom
Our peace branch from above?

—Thomas Moore.

“In the Last Days”

By T. A. Drinkard

BY “mountain” is meant the kingdom of God which was seen in the dream of Nebuchadnezzar and interpreted by Daniel in the 2nd chapter of Daniel’s prophecy. “The stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth. . . . And the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever” (Dan. 2:35, 44). Referring to the establishment of the same “mountain” or kingdom, Isaiah writes that then “they shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea” (Isa. 11:9). The establishment and exaltation of this mountain of God is to take place in the last days. It will be known for what it does, and what it does will bring results of a very desirable nature.

When this mountain or kingdom of God is set up, “he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more” (Micah 4:3).

How or why men will teach that the mountain or kingdom of God was established or set up at some time in the past, with this prophecy staring them in the face, appears unexplainable. The mighty power of God will bring about the conditions described here and those conditions will accompany the establishment of the kingdom, as they cannot be separated.

As a result of His rebuke of the nations they will beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruninghooks. Here are two kinds of implements: implements of carnal warfare and implements of industry. The former are to be converted into the latter. One cannot affirm truthfully that the kingdom is now set up without these characteristics! To do so would be to disfigure the prophecy of God and to change the meaning of the inspired Word.

Let us note this: “Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.” Where have you read in any history of man of a time when the nations have ceased to war against each other and have done away with military schools in which the youth of the land were taught the principles of war?

Such conditions as those described by Micah have never existed since man sinned and brought death into the world, and it is very evident that such conditions will never exist until the kingdom of God is set up with Jesus Christ as its King!

To wrest this scripture and seek to make it teach something foreign to that which the Spirit of God intended, is to sin against the expressed will of God. But I appreciate the divine provision God has made in raising up men of courage and of faith who will expose such unrighteous acts of men to build up and advance a human theory.

“In the last days it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills; and people shall flow unto it.”—Micah 4:1.

Why affirm, as some do, that Christ set up the kind of government foretold by the prophets during His personal ministry or on the day of Pentecost, when such affirmation contradicts the scriptural and the historical facts? Why “spiritualize” these plain, positive, God-given statements so as to hide the truth from those for whom it was intended? And why should we sit by and permit it to be done if it is within our power to counteract some of the damaging influence such teaching exerts?

Do we become weary in the heat of the day and decide that so much doctrinal teaching is unnecessary and that we might make better progress if we would teach more along “practical” lines? Both doctrinal and practical teaching are necessary, but when one gives place to the enemy just because he does not approve of the message, a great injury is being done to the cause of God. If Jesus never failed to preach the kingdom gospel regardless of opposition, why should we hesitate to do so? Truth is truth, and error is error. God will hold His people responsible for the way in which they have discharged their obligations as His representatives among men.

This prophecy of Micah points to “the last days” as the time when these things will occur, indicating that they did not transpire in former days unless it can be shown that the conditions mentioned here existed at some previous time, because the kingdom and the conditions which are to immediately follow its establishment are to exist together.

Those opposing this view contend that the kingdom was set up on the day of Pentecost, but they will not assert that those conditions and characteristics of the predicted kingdom existed then.

Their argument destroys the force of prophecy when they attempt to prove that the church is the kingdom of God. They even quote this prophecy to prove that the kingdom was established at Pentecost. But when pressed to verify these claims, they apply the conditions described to the “upper and better phases” of the kingdom. This is the very thing that has deceived and is deceiving men and women, and our message is strongly opposed to it.

May God give us men of courage to stand as one for God and for His truth. Compromise if you will, but you will not accomplish your Master’s work!

Defense of the Truth

PROTESTANTS are fast losing the art of protesting. History furnishes no greater examples of widespread ignorance and indifference of what constitutes pure spiritual Christianity (Matt. 22:29), the corruption of its mission (2 Cor. 4:2) and program (Luke 24:47; Matt. 28:18-20), and the cowardly silence on the part of its prophets concerning this cunningly camouflaged betrayal at the hands of its alleged friends (Jude 3, 4; 2 Tim. 4:1-5; Isa. 58:1). Within so-called evangelical circles we have as grave dangers today as threatened scriptural truth in the days of Luther, Zwingli, and Knox, yet teachers, preachers, and parents are strangely silent.

It is imperative that the masses know the Scriptures, and that the prophets maintain an unwavering allegiance to their revelation in the face of the intricate fabrications of the god of this age (2 Cor. 11:13-15). The prophet that fears what men or Satan may do to him (Psa. 27:1) will never know God's power, and the individual who does not know the Scriptures will frequently be found on the wrong side in the noblest conflict of the ages! Every intelligent and informed person knows full well that it is the corruption and compromise of the professed followers of Jesus Christ, and not the indifference and opposition without, that makes that program the lifeless and powerless spectacle we know today!

With some notable exceptions Satan has stolen a large percentage of even the so-called Christian literature of our children and youth. Some of it he has made unitarian, some of it he has utterly paganized. Sunday school houses print articles about pig's dreams, beautiful princes and princesses, ghosts and goblins and ugly old witches; they highly recommend such books as Skeezix Out West and The Fairy Land of Oz. Sacred trust funds given through sacrifice to spread the gospel of Jesus Christ are sometimes used to purchase paper and print articles on football, cooking, sewing, feeding calves, and hair-raising thrillers of many kinds, while the Babe of Bethlehem, the Man of Galilee, the fact of sin, and the desperate need of the new birth and the new nature are quite largely ignored. It is enough to make the angels weep! But where are the protestants?

Some Christian editors avoid the fertile field of biography, missions, and Bible exposition, stating that our modern youth will not read such articles, and that they ask for more articles on handwork and fiction. Some prophets have ceased to bear down as hard on sin as the Scriptures do, because men have ever rejected truth and persecuted the voice that honored it. I challenge the world to furnish scriptural evidence that one may publish what is popular to depraved men in the name of Christianity or in fulfillment of the Great Commission, and ignore what

The following article, which reached us as "selection" from an unnamed publication, expresses the same thought as that of an editorial which appeared in our last issue under the title, "Protestantism No Longer Protests."

Christ has commanded (Luke 24:47), and the program of the early church (Acts 5:42).

The printed page reaches multiplied thousands where the spoken word reaches hundreds.

(The believer who wants to be "in labors more abundant" (2 Cor. 11:23) should not overlook the golden opportunity of the printed page.) Considered from a moral and civic standpoint alone, who can measure the tragic evil of the constant caricature of love, and the trampling under foot of the God-ordained institution of the home, in the popular publications, the Sunday papers, the comic strips, and in the theaters of the land? Week by week and month by month popular but poisonous literature floods so-called Christian homes, and is more dangerous than razors and rattlesnakes in a nursery! If in the natural realm, this moral sewage needs a purifying current placed alongside of it, how much more the Christian needs to efficiently push purely scriptural literature.

I believe evolution to be an insidious and satanic program to teach a false religion in tax-supported institutions, where pure scriptural Christianity is denied a hearing (2 Cor. 4:4). To how many generations can the materialism of the press, the evolution of the classroom, and the practical atheism of pulpit and missionary endeavor go unchallenged without a breakdown of civilization? But what may be nearer your heart: How many years can you expose your immature boys and girls to the daily propaganda of infidels and atheists without their faith and moral standards being undermined? I believe the general abandonment of historic and scriptural Christianity in the centers of learning, and the daily neglect of Bible instruction in school and home to be the direct reason for our present crime waves, our moral degradation, and the distress of nations. Brute ancestry in the classroom and in literature generally cannot fail to bring brute ethics in society. I believe the deplorable ignorance of the masses concerning scriptural theology makes possible the destructive programs of a falsely trained leadership. (Carefully consider 2 Corinthians 11:13-15.) As the clenched fist of communism threatens civil government, so the apostasy we know threatens the moral and spiritual welfare of millions of children and youth in this and coming generations, for time and for eternity. And concerning these evils I hereby give notice, that I will neither tremble at their threats, bow to their demands, support their programs, or remain silent concerning their sins.

I urge a most careful examination of the "religious" literature of our children. Do the titles deny what the printed Bible verses clearly teach? Do the comments belittle our Christ, treat Him as a mere man, and discredit the Holy Scriptures? Do they teach natural religion or supernatural Christianity? Do they stress mere ethics and sociology or "Ye must be born again"? Have the authors made the blunder of trying to build Christian character without scriptural birth? (John 3:3; 1 Peter 1:23; 2 Peter 1:4.) It will be serious business later to efface the results of several years of unitarian literature. Demand publications for the children that are true to God's revelation, or else secure Bibles and actually teach the Word of God. An honest exposition of a chapter of the Scriptures each week, either in the home, classroom, or pulpit, will revolutionize Christian work and do much to defeat the fanaticism. The Christian and Military Service

"SHALL we, as Christians, participate in war by bearing arms and engaging in the slaughter of fellow mortals?" In determining the answer, consider first the contrast of viewpoints that is involved. Of the man of the world we say that the state's interests are his interests, its enemies are his enemies, its wars are his wars. These things are not true of the Christian. With him the dividing line is not between national and national, but between children of light and those of darkness. So the state's enemies are not his enemies any more than the state's subjects are; and neither is the war his war: it is a conflict between men of the world, over worldly interests. Consequently there is no reason why the Christian should participate in it.

As between Christians, observe what kind of situation there would be if we did participate. Assume that two countries wage war against each other, and that some of us live in one land and some in the other. If, then, we took up arms in support of our respective lands of sojourn, we would have the spectacle of Christians on the one side trying to slay those on the other side; and doing so, let it be observed, over a worldly issue! This is analogous to what was witnessed during the Great War, when members of the larger, professedly Christian denominations, living on different sides of national boundaries, were capturing, maiming, and slaughtering one another. They were all members of the same "church," yet they did it because their respective "countries" were at war! May true Christians do such things? May one son of the Almighty, to whom Jesus has said, "This is my commandment, That ye love one another" (John 15:12), slaughter another son of the Almighty? The answer is obvious.

If we were to participate in these conflicts we would be obligated to "judge righteous judgment" (John 7:24) concerning them. This few persons are able to do, because skilled propagandists are employed to flood the land with reports favorable to the state's interests. Thus we all know of a bullet having been fired at Sarajevo on June 28, 1914, but how many know the true causes of the colossal conflict that followed? Then, even if we were able to determine the facts and judge accordingly, it is not our place to do so. Paul says we are to judge the church, "but them that are without God judgeth" (1 Cor. 5:13). The Most High has delegated the judging of most of the nations' internal affairs to agents of the nations' own appointment; but he has reserved to Himself, as His exclusive prerogative, the judging of the nations themselves; and . . . He uses them as His instruments, and wars as His scourge. He gives the kingdom of men to whosoever He will; and He alone knows His purpose with the combatants. Therefore, His children lack both the knowledge and the permission that are necessary to participation in these conflicts.

The requirements of combatant military service are not compatible with some of the specific commands Jesus and His apostles gave the members of the church for the regulation of their relations with their fellow men. Two precepts will serve to illustrate this fact; some others will be considered separately. The first was stated in emphatic language by the Apostle Paul when he wrote: "See that none render evil for evil unto any man" (1 Thess. 5:15). The second was uttered by Jesus in His Sermon on the Mount, and with its context reads as follows: "Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbour, and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, Love your enemies" (Matt. 5:43, 44). Suppose for a moment that you adopt the state's point of view and regard its enemies as your enemies. Can you then fulfill these laws and yet indulge in war? Can you maim or slaughter your enemies and yet not render evil for evil? Can you have even a minimum of love for him and yet slay him? Once more the answer is obvious.

At this juncture we shall consider the well known command, "Thou shalt not kill" (Ex. 20:13; Matt. 19:18), in its relation to our question. This command was given to the Israelites; and they, while observing it, indulged in many a bloody conflict. What is the explanation of this paradox? First, we observe that Israel was the chosen nation of God, and that it waged war at the direction of the Almighty and His prophets. Secondly, the Mosaic law which had been given to the people provided for those forms of manslaying that were judicial in nature. Therefore, this form of slaying had to do with man's individual relation with his fellow man, and did not include either of the preceding forms. From our point of view the situation has changed radically. At present our citizenship is in heaven, and we, like Paul, "do not war after the flesh, for the weapons of our warfare are not carnal" (2 Cor. 10:3, 4). The nations of the earth, on the other hand, do war after the flesh, and without the direction of the Almighty. In judicial matters the authority to put to death is at present in the hands of the powers that be, who have been ordained of God for the punishment of evildoers (1 Peter 2:13, 14; Rom. 13:1-4).

Before summing up our findings we shall consider another point. Jesus said to Pilate: "If my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews" (John 18:36). Peter did use the sword in a feeble attempt to prevent the Jews from seizing Jesus, and he was reproved by our Lord, who said (among other things): "Put up again thy sword into his place: for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword" (Matt. 26:52). These remarks should not be confined to the incident which gave rise to them; they were intended to be a guide to Peter in his later years of life. By them he (and we who follow after him) was taught that the sword was not one of his weapons of warfare, and that if he persisted in using it he would perish along with all others whose warfare was conducted with carnal weapons.

We shall now revert to our earlier question: "Shall we, as Christians, participate in war by bearing arms and engaging in the slaughter of fellow mortals?" What conclusions have we reached that have a bearing on this query? They are:

- (1) That these wars are not our wars; and that we are brethren, and, therefore, must not slay one another.
- (2) That wars are one of God's scourges, and that the nations are the tools He uses in judging the world.
- (3) That we are enjoined to love our enemies, and not to slay them either by the sword or by any other means.

With these facts marshaled before us we can give one answer only to the question, and it is, "We shall not." Therefore, we conclude that Christians should take no part whatever in combatant military service.

NONCOMBATANT MILITARY SERVICE

We may now ask: "What shall be our attitude toward noncombatant military service?" At the outset we should observe the nature of the work that is included in this category; much of it is not only free from objection, but is in itself meritorious. What, for example, is more commendable than bringing in a wounded man for treatment? We recall that Jesus was asked, "Who is my neighbor?" (Luke 10:29), and that He answered the query by telling His auditors the story of the good Samaritan. We need not detail the story, which is familiar to all. It is sufficient to note that there is no essential difference between the services performed in the two hypothetical cases. The good Samaritan was practicing the second greatest commandment, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself" (Matt. 19:19), in helping the man who fell among robbers as he journeyed from Jerusalem to Jericho. We would be doing the very same thing in bringing in an injured man for treatment, whether he be a soldier from some battlefield or a civilian from the street. We conclude, therefore, that much of the work in this category is unobjectionable.

A prominent member of another religious denomination, whose leadership was followed by many "conscientious objectors" during the Great War, viewed the matter differently. He wrote: "Under no circumstances can I undertake any service that has for its purpose the prosecution of war. Saul of Tarsus, the persecutor, was a noncombatant when he held the clothes of those who stoned Stephen. But he was verily as guilty." Here we have confusion of thought; for at the stoning of Stephen "Saul was consenting unto his death" (Acts 8:1). The fact is that Saul was an active participant in Stephen's martyrdom: his actions were different from those of his fellows, but he shared their sentiment and approved of their conduct. Our position is a radically different one, in that we would not share the sentiment of the combatants. If we undertook their service it would not be with the intention of helping in the prosecution of the war; it would be with the intention of doing good and being of service to our fellow men. So the objection is ill-founded, and our previous conclusion is unshaken.

However, when we examine the circumstances under which the work is to be performed we find serious obstacles in our way. The first of these is that those who join any division of the militia are required to subscribe to the oath of allegiance. Having given our allegiance to the Lord Jesus, who has said, "No man can serve two masters," we cannot do this. In time of war, when compulsory service is introduced, this requirement is frequently dispensed with, and so ceases to be an obstacle. A second barrier is found in the fact that all who voluntarily don the state's uniform are held to have entered its service, and thereby to have become subject to its military law. Those who are so subject have no freedom of conscience, but are required to obey their superior officers. This we will undertake to do only when such commands do not conflict with the laws of our Maker. Thirdly, all who enter the noncombatant service of the militia are liable to be transferred, at a moment's notice, to the combatant service, and there be called on to undertake duties which may be, and in our case are, contrary to their religious principles. For these reasons we conclude that we cannot undertake these otherwise unobjectionable services.

In opposition to this conclusion it has been urged: "You can perform the unobjectionable services and refuse the others, taking whatever consequences that ensue." Yes, you can, as some "conscientious objectors" found during the Great War, when they were executed because they refused to bear arms in an emergency! Surely, no one will suggest that this is the way to put into practice Jesus' injunction, "Be ye therefore wise as serpents, and harmless as doves" (Matt. 10:16)! We assert that the proper course is to refuse the service in the first place; and this course is not dictated by pusillanimous motives; it is dictated by sound common sense. If there is the possibility of our sealing our faith with our blood, we may just as well suffer at home; there is no need to court such a fate by placing ourselves in a position that turns a possibility into a probability or a certainty. Such action would be tantamount to inviting martyrdom, and many thoughtful persons will consider it stained with moral culpability. Therefore, we conclude that the proper and prudent course is not to enter military service in the first place; and give effect to this conclusion by refusing to don the state's uniform.

Led by the Spirit

By Mark Allen

"As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God."—Romans 8:14.

AS MANY as are led by the Spirit of God . . ." That is, as many as are conducted or guided by the Spirit of God, "they are the sons of God" (Rom. 8:14). There are very many at the present time who believe this text to mean that to be "sons of God" they must be guided or directed by some mysterious impression made upon the mind, in some unaccountable manner, without previous instruction. There are many who say, and no doubt honestly believe, that they do receive such supernatural impressions and that these impressions are the leadings of the Spirit of God.

There are certain peculiarities, however, which nearly always pertain to such people which, to the mind of the thoughtful person who is intelligently instructed in the Scriptures, stamp such claims to miraculous "guidance" as false.

Close questioning of those who generally claim to be governed in their lives the most fully by mysterious impulses of the Spirit of God, show them to be very ignorant of the teachings of the Bible. Many of them even make loud boastings of their ignorance, and say that they care little for "the dead letter" (as they almost blasphemously call the written Word). They are full of the good Spirit, they contend, and have no need that any man should teach them because they are directly taught by God.

While under the influence of this "good Spirit," these very spiritual people are continually contradicting and denying many important and vital truths that God, the eternal Spirit, has revealed through His prophets or through the Messiah. As God's Spirit cannot lie, and consequently cannot contradict itself, the claims to divine "guidance" of those who teach contrary to the plain revelations made in the Bible, are necessarily false.

It is not our purpose in this article to deal much with the follies of modern religions and we will proceed at once to show (1) How the Spirit of God leads men; (2) What are the fruits of the Spirit? (3) How may the Spirit be tested; and (4) What will be the result of its guidance?

1. HOW DOES THE SPIRIT OF GOD LEAD MEN?

To be led by the Spirit, in the sense of the text quoted, one must follow the teachings of the Spirit; for it is written concerning such, that "they shall be all taught of God" (John 6:45), and we read likewise that "God is a Spirit"

When many earnest people are being drawn away from the plain teaching of the Bible, and are placing confidence in a questionable "gift of tongues" or in other sources of pseudo-spiritual "guidance," the following article, although originally published in "The Gospel Banner" in 1860, is of great value and timeliness.

(John 4:24). How, then, does God, the eternal Spirit, teach men? The answer is found in the opening words of Hebrews.

"God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son."

From this passage we learn that God has spoken to men by His prophets and by His Son. Let us inquire further as to the instrumentalities used.

TESTIMONY CONCERNING THE PROPHETS

"For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy (Spirit, R. V.)" (2 Peter 1:21). "All scripture is given by inspiration of God" (2 Tim. 3:16). "Thou . . . testifiedst against them by thy spirit in thy prophets" (Neh. 9:30). "The Spirit of the Lord spake by me, and his word was in my tongue" (2 Sam. 23:2).

TESTIMONY CONCERNING THE SON

"The spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him" (Isa. 11:2). "And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him" (Matt. 3:16). "For he whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God: for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him" (John 3:34).

By the foregoing testimony we have it firmly established that God has committed His teachings to men by His Holy Spirit through the prophets and through His Son. Hence their teachings are the Spirit's teachings, and the individual who receives their teachings is guided or led to all intents and purposes by the Spirit of God.

This being true, it becomes necessary for one to become acquainted with what the prophets have written and with what the Son of God has taught, in order to know the mind of the Spirit and be led by it. These conclusions are unavoidable; and though lovers of animal excitement and noisy gatherings may attempt to evade them, they cannot be set aside, but must forever present a hostile and uncompromising front to all who will cling to darkness rather than light, having their understanding darkened by reason of the ignorance which is in them.

2. WHAT ARE THE FRUITS OF THE SPIRIT?

We will first notice the predictions of the Prophet concerning the fruits which should be manifested by the Messiah, and which were actually fulfilled in His life.

"There shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse . . . and the spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding . . . of counsel and might . . . of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord . . . and shall make him of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord" (Isa. 11:1-3).

We find, then, that one of the fruits of the Spirit in the Messiah was a "quick understanding in the fear of the Lord." Such being the case, He was intelligent and enlightened, well qualified to teach others. He was neither a fool, an ignoramus, nor a boaster of His own ignorance. Such will be the case of all who are taught of the Spirit. They will have the fear of the Lord, which is the beginning of wisdom—the wisdom which comes from above—that great treasury of wisdom found in the writings of the prophets, revealed to them by the eternal Spirit of the Most High. Those who follow this teaching will be made wise—wise unto salvation. "The holy scriptures," declares the Apostle, "are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus" (2 Tim. 3:15).

What better fruit of the Spirit can one have than that which makes him "wise unto salvation"? But this is not all, for we are told that knowledge of the teachings of the Holy Scriptures is "profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect (complete), throughly furnished unto all good works" (2 Tim. 3:16, 17).

These, then, are some of the fruits of that Spirit which leads teachable men and women to that glorious fountain of wisdom, the Holy Scriptures, by which they are made wise unto salvation, perfected and thoroughly qualified to perform all good works. What could a man ask for more than this?

Again, we read that "the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering (forbearance), gentleness, goodness, faith (faithfulness), meekness, temperance (self-control), against such there is no law" (Gal. 5:22, 23).

A few of these outgrowths of the Spirit we will notice.

First, love. The Apostle has said in the preceding context (v. 14) that "all the law is fulfilled in one word . . . Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself."

Jesus, the Messiah, in answer to one who asked which was the greatest commandment in the law of Moses, said that upon these two things hang all the law and the prophets: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind . . . (and) Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself" (Matt. 22:36-40; Deut. 6:5; Lev. 19:18).

In our consideration of love we must think first of the love of God.

"This is the love of God," declared that disciple whom Jesus loved, "that we keep his commandments: and his commandments are not grievous" (1 John 5:3). Jesus said, "If ye love me, keep my commandments" (John 14:15, 21, 23). This is an established principle in the Scriptures, that if one loves God, he will keep His commandments.

It may seem to many as an easy thing for them to say that they love God and that they love Jesus, but here is a way in which they can prove whether or not they love the Father and the Son. God's commandments are not grievous, but many do not keep them. If they do not keep the commands of God they do not love Him! That is evident.

Now what is it that God has commanded which so many men and women do not obey?

God, by the Spirit speaking through His Son, has commanded them to believe the gospel of the kingdom of God, change their way of thinking to conform to the Spirit's teaching, and be immersed in the name of Jesus for the remission of their sins.

Yet multitudes who profess to love God and to be led by His Spirit are altogether ignorant of the first principles of the gospel! They claim to be doing the work of God but are not, for Jesus said, "This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent" (John 6:29), or, "that ye believe the testimony of him whom God hath sent."

The testimony of the Messiah whom God sent, and of the prophets sent before Him, concerning the future glorious kingdom which is to be set up here upon the earth when Jesus comes to occupy the throne of David and place His faithful followers at His side to be associated with Him in royal dignity, which comprises the very heart of the gospel, is either unknown by the majority of those who claim to love God, or is relegated to a position of secondary importance in their teaching. If one loves God he will most assuredly love, venerate, and respect His Holy Word and all that it contains above anything that men may say or teach or require.

Love to man comes next. A sincere and honest desire to enlighten and benefit those around us—to make it possible for them to be partakers of all the blessings which we ourselves enjoy—is an evidence that we love them. If we ourselves are truly enlightened and are led by the Spirit's teachings as set forth in the Scriptures, it will lift us above all petty bickerings and strife, and love for this miserable, sordid, money-seeking, pleasure-worshipping world and place us in a position similar to the one Jesus occupied, when He sorrowed greatly on account of His own people, the Jews, who by their unbelief were forfeiting the blessings which they might otherwise enjoy.

While Jesus loved the Jews, He did not love their errors of belief nor make unholy compromises with them! He did not tell them that because their teachers were blind and misled them, they would at last be saved even though they did not believe the truth! On the contrary, He declared that "if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch."

Depend upon it, no man can have the love which is the Spirit's fruit who is not an obedient believer in the gospel of the kingdom, because he proves that he does not love God in not believing that which God has so clearly said by the pens of the prophets and through the lips of His Son.

Again, joy and peace are the Spirit's fruit. "Joy and peace in believing" (Rom. 15:13). Joy and peace in believing what? Answer: The Word which God has sent. And what is that? That is the good news of God's coming kingdom of righteousness and love, the news which is calculated to give peace of heart and joy of mind to those who believe it and who seal their faith in baptism. All who do this, that is, believe the gospel of the kingdom and are baptized, have the testimony or witness of the Spirit, which spoke through the Son of God in the Great Commission, that they shall be saved (Mark 16:15, 16).

"Joy in the Holy Spirit." This certainly cannot be a rejoicing in foolish ecstasies and emotions aroused by unbiblical teachings! "Joy in the Holy Spirit" must mean that joy which is experienced by the obedient believer in what the eternal Spirit of Truth has revealed through the prophets and through Jesus Christ. God, who is love, like true love everywhere, rejoices neither in iniquity nor in error, but "rejoiceth in the truth" (1 Cor. 13:6).

Faith is a direct fruit of the Spirit in that by hearing the Word of God as it is revealed by the Spirit in the Bible, men are led to exercise faith in the Father and in the Son, and thus come to be led by the Spirit to embrace and obey the gospel. (To be continued)

CATHOLICS DEFINE NATURE OF A PIG'S SOUL

A CORRESPONDENT, writing to the question department editor of Extension Magazine, a Roman Catholic publication, asks:

"Does a pig have a soul? If so, where does the soul stay when a pig is killed? Is the soul dead or alive? These questions were brought up among school children and aroused quite a discussion."

We are not surprised that the children should ask such a question, for many grown-ups have done the same thing. And the answers provided have generally been as vague and unscriptural as is the one made by Rev. James A. Magner, the editor-priest, who wrote as follows:

"Pigs and other living things under man have a material soul, or a principle of life, dependent for existence upon conditions of the body. When disease, accident, or old age, renders the body incapable of sustaining this life, the life principle leaves the body of the creature, and is destroyed or transformed into some form of energy. The inner character of life is not known. Man has a rational, spiritual soul, which has the power of directing a material organism, the body, but it is not dependent upon the body for its existence nor does it lose its identity with the death of the body. In a word, the human soul is immortal; the soul of other living creatures on earth is not."

The first thing we would notice is that the editor's explanation is partly true and partly false. When he treats of the soul of a pig he asserts, in harmony with scriptural teaching, that when the life (which he wrongly identifies with the "soul") leaves the body of the animal "it is destroyed" (wrong) "or transformed into some other form of energy" (probably right).

The life is not the soul but the energy which causes the soul to function as a living creature. Contrary to the opinion of our answerer of questions, this is as true of the man as it is of the pig. Rightly, the editor confesses that "the inner character of life is not known." But while we do not know what it is and just how it operates, the Bible clearly teaches that this life-giving "spirit" or "breath" is the same in man and beast, that the two breathe alike, they die alike, and in death they go to the same place (Eccl. 3:19, 20).

When the priest comes to the matter of the soul of man, all that he has said about the nature of the pig's soul or life he regards as inapplicable. He admits by inference that the soul of the pig is not the pig but only the natural energy which causes it to live. But the soul of man is the man himself and his body only the house in which the immortal, intelligent soul lives until death frees it forever from its restrictions!

"In a word, the human soul is immortal," declares the Roman priest, but God says: "The soul that sinneth, it shall die" (Ezek. 18:4)! Let deluded Romanists believe their priest if they will, as Adam and Eve believed the serpent when he uttered the same lie (Gen. 3:4), but as for me I must believe God, whose statement concerning the mortality of the soul is supported by the unanswerable argument of death's reality throughout the world!

DEFENSE OF THE TRUTH

cism, indifference, and apostasy of our times.

I urge Bible-believing men and women to carefully examine the kind of Christian work they are supporting. We investigate before we invest our funds. God will not hold us guiltless if we hand over His tithes and offerings to those who deny the verbal inspiration and full authority of the Scriptures. Nor will He excuse the support of merely social and civic programs that deny the depravity of men and need of the new birth as "an interpretation of the Christ spirit." Christ cannot be interpreted. He has been revealed as "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world." It is our business to believe and share the good news. The ascending Lord commissioned His followers to preach "repentance and remission of sins" in His name among all nations. Christianity is supernaturalism or it is nothing. No son or daughter of Adam now dead in trespasses and sins will see God or know life unless he is supernaturally born into the church (ecclesia) of Jesus Christ. Man cannot take members into this church: they are either initiated through the new birth and the new nature or they are yet in their sins. Any program that comes short of this message is to that extent unscriptural and unworthy of the support of the blood-bought bride of Jesus Christ. Withdraw all moral and financial support from every man and program that denies His revelation, protest error of pulpit or press, be courageous and efficient soldiers of the cross!

I plead for an honest consideration and practical fulfillment of the Great Commission (Luke 24:47; Matt. 28:18-20). It is the most important proposition in the Scriptures for the believer. In the day when "many that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt," how will you stand? Speechless with shame of your selfishness and unbelief, or in the fullness of love and joy that you were true to the work the Lord Jesus Christ commissioned His bride to do? Let us reckon ourselves dead indeed to selfish and fleeting things and let us go now, in this generation, with the message of life to the last erring son of Adam.

There is also the taskmaster with rod in hand overlooking the slaves at their work. I also found another most interesting incidental confirmation.

"And Pharaoh commanded the same day the taskmasters of the people, and their officers, saying, Ye shall no more give the people straw to make bricks, as heretofore: let them go gather straw for themselves. And the tale of the bricks, which they did make heretofore, ye shall lay upon them; ye shall not diminish ought thereof."

Now on one of the tombs of Thebes, the mode of reaping grain is illustrated. It was cut a little below the ear (as is done by the modern "headers" in the great wheat fields of Kansas), and the straw left standing in the field. Thus the Israelites were ordered to go into the fields and gather straw for themselves, instead of having it brought to them by others as before, and yet they were compelled to render the same number of bricks through the day! Such was their additional burden of oppression.

In fact, we see almost the entire history of Joseph and the Israelites pictured upon the tombs and sculptured upon the monuments of ancient Egypt. The steward with his books, taking estimate of his master's goods; the storehouses which were built for the grain of Egypt; the making of bricks with chopped straw, which are still found in the ruins. The Israelites were pursued with horses and chariots. These are represented in every battle scene.

Joseph was made overseer of Pharaoh's house. The monuments furnish many evidences of this custom. Pharaoh put a gold chain about Joseph's neck. The ceremony of decorating persons of rank with a necklace of gold is often seen. Jacob died and was embalmed by the Egyptians. To embalm the dead was customary in those days. Funeral processions and mourning for the dead are frequently represented; indeed, this habit continues in the land until the present day.

All abundantly prove that the author of the books of Moses had lived in Egypt and was "learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians."

During my visit at Thebes I had the pleasure of meeting Sir John Gardiner Wilkinson, veteran author in relation to Egyptian antiquities. I enquired what was his view with regard to the confirmation of Scripture history from the monuments. He replied: "We find that everything confirms the Bible. In fact, the taking of the Jews captive by Shishak, which you saw sculptured at Karnak, is our first determined point in chronology. Before that period all is uncertain. But this date is certain, since the Bible and the record upon the temple entirely agree, and we can therefore trace the subsequent kings in their proper order." He remarked also that, in his opinion, "the explorations and discoveries were still in their infancy."

It was most gratifying to receive this unqualified testimony from one who has spent years in carefully studying the monuments and hieroglyphics, and comparing them with history and the Bible.

On our return voyage I visited the ruins of ancient Memphis, the capital of the Pharaohs at the time of the Exodus. Here were wrought the seven (ten) plagues and all the wonders of the Lord in Egypt by the hand of Moses. Only a fallen obelisk and a few broken statues remain to tell of its former grandeur. So also Heliopolis, the "On" of the Scriptures, has but a single obelisk still standing of all the massive temples and monuments that once adorned the princely city. Thus is the Scripture literally fulfilled. Egypt has become "waste and desolate, the basest of kingdoms."

LIFE BEGINS AT SEVENTY!

around him he will never be looked upon as a burden or a bore. Achievement will ever be within his reach and he will know the joy of accomplishment so long as life shall last!

We have known both men and women whose most fruitful years were those which followed their seventieth birthday. Then, and then only, did they find the time and opportunity to bring out of the treasury of their memories the riches which they had stored away during the years. With the judgment which maturity of mind and experience alone provides, they were able, after seventy years had passed over them, to rightly evaluate their intellectual treasures and to set in order the finished products of their lives for the enrichment of posterity.

After seventy "the enthusiastic and pleasing illusions of youth" are transformed into the solid, if somewhat modified, realities of accomplishment. The sun is no less bright when it shines upon us from the west than it was when it shone upon us from the east! Life is as sweet and the future as alluring at seventy as it was half a century before, if contentment and security remain our portion! And contentment and security are assured in Golden Rule Home!

River and Rock

* * * * By Marion Ellsworth, Blanchard, Mich.

Last night I stood in a troubled dream
By the side of a darkly flowing stream.
The current was broad, and deep, and wide;
It swept along in resistless tide.
But though it was so very deep
I saw on the bottom things that creep;
They seemed to be there in an endless throng,
But the current swept them all along.

And on the surface I also saw
Leaves and logs and bits of straw,
Patches of foam, and bubbles bright,
Carried along by the river's might.
And I also saw in that curious dream,
Out near the middle of the stream,
A rock that lifted its summit high,
While the river and all that it bore swept by.

Masses of wreckage struck the rock:
It did not tremble beneath the shock.
The foam could not cling to the cold, gray side,
But was swept away by the rushing tide.
Then as I watched through the gathering storm,
The great rock slowly changed its form
To the form of a cross that lifted high
A mangled form 'twixt the stream and sky.

Then the river changed before my eyes,
And I saw with wonder and surprise,
That the water was teeming human life
Sweeping along in endless strife;
That what I thought were creeping things,
Were brothels, and dives, and gangster rings;
And all of the festering, putrid mass
Of those who are known as the lower class.

And that which I saw on the surface float
Were the wealthy and great and the men of note;
The glittering bubbles and dancing foam
Were silks and satins and precious stone.
But in between came a mighty mass
Of those we call the middle class;
In unbroken columns, with eyes ahead,
They forward marched with unfaltering tread.

And I knew that the power of that rushing stream,
Were the endless columns that marched between.
Not the foam above or the dregs below
Could change the course of their progress slow;
But onward, with slow and majestic sweep,

Through the endless ages their course they keep;
Though the surface is hidden by drifting fog,
And the sediment stayed by each sunken log.

My thoughts ran back o'er history's page,
The record of every bygone age;
And I knew that each well known, mighty name,
That was blazoned there like point of flame,
Was there in all his glory bright
Because of those marching column's might;
That no leader had ruled o'er hall or throne
By some matchless power all his own.

And that great gray Rock that reared its head
O'er the rushing stream with its mangled dead,
Was He, who to guide that rushing flood,
Redeemed it with His own life's blood;
Who founded the church that set men free,
On the rock-bound shore of Galilee,
When Peter said, "Thou art the one,
The Christ, and God the Father's Son!"

A Remover

Alcohol will remove stains from summer clothes. It will also remove summer clothes, also spring and winter clothes, not only from the man who drinks it, but also from his wife and children. It will also remove household furniture from the house and the eatables from the pantry; the smile from the face of his wife, and happiness from the home. As a remover alcohol has few equals. Where is the friendly beer we hear so much about?—C. E. Lapp, St. Cloud, Minn.

What Science Says

"Many physicians prescribe alcohol only because it is the desire of the patient, and because patients refuse medicine which the physicians would rather use."—Everett Hooper, M. D., Boston, Mass.

"It is time that alcohol was banished from the medical armamentarium, which has killed thousands where it has cured one."—Dr. J. N. McCormack, M. D., Secretary of the Kentucky Board of Health and Organizer for the American Medical Association.

"Whereas, we believe that the use of alcohol as a beverage is detrimental to the human economy; and

"Whereas, its use in therapeutics as a tonic or as a stimulant or as a food has no scientific basis,

"Therefore, Be It Resolved, that the use of alcohol as a therapeutic agent should be discouraged."—Resolution adopted by the American Medical Association in 1917, and never rescinded.

"Look not upon the wine . . . at the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder."—Proverbs 23:31, 32.

Face to Face

I had walked life's way with an easy tread,
Had followed where comforts and pleasures led,
Until one day, in a quiet place,
I met the Master face to face.

With station and rank and wealth for my goal,
Much thought for my body but none for my soul,
I had entered to win in life's mad race,
When I met the Master face to face.

I met Him, and knew Him, and blushed to see
That His eyes, full of sorrow, were fixed on me;
I faltered and fell at His feet that day
While my castles melted and vanished away;

Melted, and vanished, and in their place
Naught else did I see but the Master's face.
And I cried aloud, "Oh, make me meet
To follow the steps of Thy wounded feet."

My thought is now for the souls of men;
I have lost my life to find it again,
E'er since one day, in a quiet place,
I met my Master face to face.

Growing Like Jesus

The letter that the Apostle Paul wrote to Titus contains the text for the fourth lesson of the new quarter. Now, not very much is told us about Titus except that he was quite a bit younger than Paul and that Paul loved him as he would a son of his own. For he addresses his letter "to Titus, mine own son after the common faith."

We know from these words that Titus must have been a very fine young man with a strong character and a loving disposition. Paul would not have given the young man such a responsible position if he had not been so. For Paul put him in charge of the church on the island of Crete.

In this letter he gave Titus some very good advice. It is advice that we, hundreds of years after, might do well to follow.

Paul told Titus that Jesus' followers should be gentle and kind, ready always to do good for some one, even as He was. They were not to be "brawlers," and I think you boys and girls know what sort of people they are. They were to "maintain good works."

Now there is only one way they could grow to be the people Paul desired them to be, and there is only one way we can grow to be such people. We must be continually learning about Jesus, and we must be constantly practicing what we learn.

Every passing day should find us a little kinder, a little less selfish, a little more thoughtful of others. Just as every year that goes by shows you to be taller and stronger than you were the year before, so those about you should notice a change in your behavior, a growing more and more like your great example, Jesus.

How many of you have a mark on the wall or some other place to show how much you are growing each year? Make a mark in your mind and heart how much more you are growing to be like Jesus each year. The way to do it is to study God's Word and to ask Him to help you put into practice what you learn.

The Love of a Father

"A busy judge was about to rebuff a poorly clad and trembling soldier who had entered his office, when he caught the handwriting of his own son in a letter extended to him.

"It read: 'Dear Father, the bearer of this letter is a soldier friend, discharged from the hospital and going home to die. Assist him in any way you can, for my sake. Charlie.'

"All the tender feelings of the father's heart gushed out. He let the stranger sleep in Charlie's bed, clothed him, supplied him with every comfort, for the sake of his own dear son."

Thus does our heavenly Father do for us, for the sake of His own dear Son, Jesus our Savior. When we offer our petitions to Him in Jesus' name, He hears and answers for His sake.

A Prayer for the Week

Help us, our heavenly Father, to grow each day more like Thy dear Son, Jesus our Savior. For His sake, we ask it. Amen.

DIXON, ILLINOIS, RALLY DAY

October 17 will be Rally Day at the Dixon church. Sunday school at 9:45; preaching at 11:00; scramble dinner in the basement at noon; 7:30 in the evening, preaching service. Come and enjoy these services with the Dixon church.

Mrs. William Ford, Secretary.

REMEMBER THE TREASURER

Please keep in mind that the treasurer of the Illinois State Conference is Harvey Krogh, Jr., Ripley, Ill. Illinois members please make your remittances to him that the State program may be carried on successfully.

The annual "Dollar Day" will be Wednesday, Oct. 27. Watch for the letters which will be mailed to you soon.

Paul C. Johnson, President.

CLEVELAND, ARKANSAS

We are happy to report two series of sermons which were given here this summer. The first meeting was held by Bro. E. O. Stewart of Sweetwater, Texas, and began on Monday, July 26, and concluded the following Sunday night.

During his stay with us Bro. Stewart delivered eight wonderful sermons and baptized three, whose names are: Miss Marie Williams (16), Rt. 1; Jerrie Robertson (17); and the writer of this report, Mrs. Ed. Ring, all of Cleveland, Ark.

Then we were very happy to have Bro. T. A. Drinkard of Handley, Tex., come and hold a meeting, beginning September 21 and closing on Sunday the 26th. He brought us seven good sermons, each of which presented the truth as taught by the Church of God. This was Bro. Drinkard's first trip here in twenty-one years.

We were glad to have these able preachers with us this year and hope to have them both back soon.

Mrs. Ed. Ring.

IOWA FALL CONFERENCE

The congregations of Clarksville, Waterloo, Cedar Falls, Koszta, Hickory Grove, Lawn Hill, and Stanhope were well represented at the fall conference when they met with the church at Gladbrook on October 3. About fifty were present.

Sunday school was held and a sermon by O. J. Allard in the forenoon. Several short talks were given by Bros. H. S. Hunt, C. W. Howe, Anderson, and O. J. Allard in the afternoon. Some reports and remarks were also given by the building fund treasurer, Mrs. W. H. Allard, the conference treasurer, Mrs. Lee Fish, Maxwell, and the secretary, Mrs. J. M. Kiger. We found funds were running very low. Anyone wishing to help carry the work in Iowa please remit to Mrs. Lee Fish.

A basket dinner was enjoyed by all present in the beautiful park across the street from the church.

Another interesting meeting was held at the Bro. and Sr. A. M. Jones home in Eagle Grove the same day, when several met there from Albert City, Marathon, Sac City, and Stanhope, with Sunday school and sermon by Bro. Jones in the forenoon, and sermon in the afternoon by Bro. J. Arthur Johnson. At noon dinner was enjoyed together.

Both meetings were inspiring and helpful.

It was decided to hold a winter conference at Waterloo the 3rd Sunday in February if the weather permits, at which time the president wishes the conference board members to be present to start plans for the next annual conference.

Sr. Edna Allard, Rockford, Iowa, and Sr. Rosa Sealine, Stanhope, Iowa, are still confined to their beds, but are very patient. Write them a note of cheer.

Esther Sealine, Cor. Sec.

THE NIAGARA DISTRICT

The "Church of God Messenger" mentions the following items of general interest in its last issue:

Dr. William Lent of the Niagara Falls, N. Y. church is gradually recovering his normal strength following a recent illness.

Bro. T. A. Weldon, elder of the Fonthill, Ont., congregation, has been suffering for some time from an attack of rheumatism. The years are many which have passed over the head of Bro. Weldon and they have all been busy and useful ones. We pray for his complete recovery that his "determination to be about his work this coming week" may be realized.

Beginning this week, the Fonthill choir will enter the season's activity under the instruction of a vocal artist who will direct their work each Tuesday night. Young people who are not in the choir will have the privilege of sharing in this special training. Fonthill is noted for the splendid choir it has maintained in the past and under the new plan its ability and effectiveness will no doubt be increased.

The presence of Bro. W. A. Reid of Riverside, Calif., was greatly enjoyed during his brief visit.

Bro. Arotus Ball and family of Lyford, Texas, who are former residents of the Fonthill community, are visiting among friends and relatives in Ontario.

Bro. George Rennard, whose singing is still remembered by those who heard him some years ago at General Conference and who suffered a stroke nearly a year ago, is still confined to his room. Bro. Rennard has been a faithful elder of the Niagara Falls, N. Y., church for a great many years.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

"The Ripley Evangelist" for October brings this item: "Sr. Mary Laning is in the Rushville, Ill., hospital, recovering from a major operation." The Herald family joins Pastor Harvey U. Krogh in the prayer that the Father may "give her strength and restore her again to us in health." Sr. Laning has been a faithful defender and supporter of the truth in her community for many years and her temporary absence is a real loss to the Ripley church.

Bro. and Sr. Clint Scott of Sweetwater, Texas, send in a subscription to The Restitution Herald for a friend whom they wish to read the paper, and say: "We are still interested in getting people to read the good articles in The Herald. We can hardly wait for it to come each week that we may enjoy the 'meat in due season' which it provides."

From Gladbrook, Iowa, comes the announcement of the arrival of Miss Sandra Sue, who it is reported is to become a permanent member of the family of Bro. and Sr. Earl Reinhard. Little Miss Reinhard reached her destination on September 24, 1937, at 9:25 o'clock in the morning.

Pastor J. R. LeCrone of Eden Valley, Minn., teaches a class in "The History of Worship" each Monday and Tuesday afternoons in the high school in that place. "Young people of the Eden Valley High School are being released from their regular school activities for one hour per week with the consent of their parents for the purpose of receiving religious instruction." The Bible is the textbook used.

Last Sunday Bro. Glen Mills, together with others in attendance at Aurora College, conducted services at the Wayside Cross Rescue Mission. Bro. Mills will be remembered by many who met him some time ago at General Conference.

In the near future a folder descriptive of the services provided by Golden Rule Home, together with a statement concerning conditions of entrance into the Home will be received by our churches. Pastors, Sunday school superintendents, and elders are urged to read this interesting message to their congregations immediately and use their personal influence to arouse increased interest in this splendid Home for elderly people.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI

Bro. S. J. Lindsay held a four-day meeting in St. Louis, beginning on Monday, Aug. 30 and closing Thursday, Sept. 2. All four of Bro. Lindsay's discourses dealt with the central theme of "The Kingdom of God." He approached the subject from the standpoint of types, and also presented it in straight-from-the-shoulder sermons.

As a climax to this meeting, Bro. Lindsay baptized Mrs. Anna d'ailly. She may be addressed at 4318 Olive St., St. Louis, Mo.

Clyde E. Graham, Secretary.

PARSONAGE FOR EDEN VALLEY, MINNESOTA, CHURCH

The Church of God at Eden Valley, Minn., of which Elder J. R. LeCrone is pastor, is securing subscriptions for the purchase of a parsonage in the near future. This is a commendable effort. One of the heaviest expenditures which a minister has to meet is that of house rent. If the church owns a parsonage and provides the larger part of its furnishings, one of the big problems of securing and maintaining a resident pastor is solved. The cost of moving household goods from one place to another is large, and the congregation which employs a pastor should of course meet his moving expenses. A furnished house is a valuable addition to the equipment of a church.

DIXON, ILLINOIS

On Friday night, Oct. 3, the members and some friends gathered at the church in Dixon, Ill., and surprised Mr. and Mrs. Conner, the pastor and his wife. Mr. Conner had come prepared to conduct the usual Bible class, but found many more present than heretofore. As our supervisor, Mrs. Conner, was about to open the meeting, Mrs. Eckert, chairman of the entertainment committee, came forward and asked that the study period be postponed, as the gathering was in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Conner.

A short program was given as follows: The Lord's Prayer was repeated by all; hymns were sung by the congregation; a duet "Sweeter As the Years Go By," by Mrs. R. C. Drew and Mrs. Milton Missman; a piano solo entitled "Calm," by Elizabeth Ford. Afterward all passed to the basement where games were played and a social time enjoyed.

William Eckert, with a few kind words, presented Mr. and Mrs. Conner with some fiesta ware from those present, with their love and best wishes. Refreshments were served at the close.

Mrs. William Ford, Secretary.

KOONTZ - MYERS

"I pronounce you husband and wife!" The solemn words which sealed the union of Miss Viola Amber Koontz and Mr. Eugene Myers, both of Oregon, Ill., were spoken by Pastor G. E. Marsh at the close of a simple but impressive marriage service held in his home in that city Sunday afternoon, October 10, 1937.

The bride is a member of the Oregon church and for several years was an active worker in the Sunday school. The groom is a highly respected young man who is engaged in the ice business with his father.

The young couple was accompanied by the bride's brother, Charles Koontz, and the groom's sister, Miss Rebecca Myers. They will make their home in Oregon.

The good wishes of the community and the prayers of the Church of God go with them as they enter the journey of life together.

CYRUS RANDALL

Cyrus Randall was born at Silver Lake, Minn., April 12, 1866, and passed away Saturday morning, Oct. 2, 1937.

Early in his life he accepted Christ in baptism and became a member of the Church of God. On June 3, 1886, he was united in marriage to Miss Jennie Pettitt. He spent most of the early part of his life at Eden Valley, moving from there to Glenwood in 1909, where he resided until the time of his death. He is survived by his wife and six children. Three children have preceded him in death. The surviving children are: Mrs. Cora Rittger of Waterloo, Iowa; John Randall of Westport; Mrs. Nora Pettit and Mrs. Gertie Snyder of Glenwood; and Clarence and Lester Randall who still live at home. He is also survived by one brother, George Randall, of Mora, besides 15 grandchildren and two great-grandchildren. Bro. C. E. Randall, pastor of the Niagara Falls, N. Y., and Fonthill, Ont., churches is a nephew.

Burial was at Eden Valley.

“Home, Sweet Home”

Provided by the love and sympathy of the entire brotherhood of the Church of God, Golden Rule Home assures to the members of its Family the comfort, security, and solicitous care which the word “home” always suggests.

Here the anxieties of earlier and more active life are laid aside forever. No threat of eviction for non-payment of rent or taxes or other indebtedness troubles the hearts of the residents of Golden Rule Home!

No doctor or hospital bills, no grocery, coal, or light bills to be met the first of the month, bring fear to the minds of the Golden Rule Home Family!

All such obligations and burdens are taken from the shoulders of these older ones immediately upon their entrance into the Home and are carried thereafter by the Golden Rule Home itself, which is amply able to bear the load on their behalf.

A hearty Christian welcome awaits all who seek the protection and lifelong support the Home provides.

Conditions of entrance into Golden Rule Home are as liberal as absolute security permits. Write for full particulars concerning the Home and its advantages. Or, better still, come and visit the Home itself and let the Family tell their own story of its advantages and comforts.

Address: Golden Rule Home, Mrs. Idona Romine, Matron, Oregon, Illinois.

By Richard LeCrone, Guest Editor

WE SOMETIMES attempt to justify our indifference to the welfare of the church in our community by telling ourselves that it’s nobody’s business what we do! If something doesn’t please us, we go about criticizing and knocking the church to whoever will listen, because it is a free country and no man can deny us the right to say what we think!

No one will question the assertion that sometimes the affairs of the church are not exactly what they should be, nor the way we would like to have them. Yet the fact remains that the church is the agency chosen by Christ for the purpose of spreading His gospel of salvation among all nations. When the church ceases to operate the message of salvation is lost to the world, and those who would have been brought to the way of life eternal through the influence of the church are lost to the kingdom of God.

How many of us have a desire to stand before the Judgment Seat of God in the guise of one who has hindered or even wrecked the influence of that church? How many would like to be forced to confess that they have kept even one person from coming into contact with the Word of God?

We are well aware that the church today is made up of human beings and that all human beings are fallible and apt to sin. But we are not asked to close our eyes to the faults of the church or any of its members. All that is asked is that we refrain from making our criticisms and doing our faultfinding where it cannot possibly improve the situation!

If the fault be one of church organization or management, then attend the business session and suggest improvements. If it is a matter of doctrine, take it up with the pastor and the elders of the church. If it is a question pertaining to the conduct of some individual member, “go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone: if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother” (Matt. 18:15).

“For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit. For the body is not one member but many. (Please turn to page 11)

Rome Plans Arab-Jewish Settlement

"He shall come in peaceably, and obtain the kingdom by flatteries."—Daniel 11:21.

NEW YORK, Oct. 4.—According to The Bible Advocate, the Italian Government has a plan of its own for settling the Arab-Jewish problem in Palestine and will make known its details very shortly. The Italian papers which make the announcement claim that the plan, which is said to be the personal creation of Mussolini, will be satisfactory to both sides. Nothing is apparently said with regard to Great Britain's attitude toward it.

"In anticipation of the establishment of a Jewish state in Palestine, Italian commercial circles are preparing to establish friendly relations with Palestine Jewry. The first move in this direction was an announcement by the Italian steamship lines that they would add two vessels to the Palestine service and that both would use the Tel Aviv port," which is exclusively Jewish.

Meanwhile, asserts The Advocate, the colossal image of Mussolini which is to be erected in Rome is being rushed to completion. The statue, which is of bronze, is to be 228 feet high, 65 feet taller than the Statue of Liberty in New York Harbor. The arm of the image, 85 feet long, is raised in Fascist salute above Rome.

Will this be the "image of the beast" which all will be required to worship on pain of death (Rev. 13:15)? Who knows!

Rome Crowns an Image in Los Angeles

"Be it known unto thee, O king, that we will not . . . worship the golden image which thou hast set up."—Daniel 3:18.

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 12.—Signs of the Times reports that recently Los Angeles witnessed the first coronation of a Roman Catholic image ever held in the United States "when a gem-encrusted golden crown, given by Catholics of Mexico City, was solemnly placed on the head of Our Lady of Guadalupe at the entrance to the Calvary Mausoleum. Representatives of twenty-one Latin-American nations were present at the ceremony."

The fact that the early Christians had no images in their places of worship was "made a charge of atheism on the part of the heathen against the Christians." While Romanists deny the charge that they worship images, the presence of such images in the homes and churches leads the uneducated and superstitious masses to actually look upon them as objects of holy veneration. The heathen also made the claim that they did not worship the idols, but those whom the idols represented. The answer Lactantius, a Latin "father" of the third century, made to this heathen pretention is applicable to the Roman Catholic claim: "You worship them; for, if you believe them to be in heaven, why do you not raise your eyes up to heaven? why do you look at the wood and stone, and not up, where you believe the originals to be?"

"Imperial City" of New York

"The substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen."—Hebrews 11:1.

NEW YORK, Oct. 16.—Under a picture of the towering sky line of New York City, presented in the current issue of The Digest, appears Paul's definition of faith—"the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Few who view this picture will realize the source of the accompanying slogan, for few know their Bibles in these days. But if the cloud-scraping structures of a great commercial city, the business of which is based on selfishness and sin, is the "substance" of all for which men hope today and the "evidence" of all that the future contains for them, they are in a sad case indeed!

Palestine Situation Critical

"Pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things."—Luke 21:36.

JERUSALEM, Oct. 14.—Seven persons were killed in Palestine today in a new wave of death and terror. Three lost their lives when a Haifa-Lydia bound train was blown up twenty miles northeast of Jaffa. One Arab was killed and three Jews wounded by a bomb explosion in a suburban bus and another Arab was killed when a second bus was ambushed. Six Jews were wounded by snipers at the scene of still another attack on a bus, and a Jew was shot on the Jerusalem-Jaffa road when his automobile was attacked.

Attacks have been made on armored railroad cars loaded with British soldiers and upon police trucks. A report from a Jewish settlement in the Beisan Valley said that an oil pipe line had been pierced in two places and ignited. It is believed that martial law may be proclaimed in Jerusalem at any time.

The Wonderful Book

By Lottie E. Young

WE ARE so familiar with the Bible, having seen it in our homes from childhood up, that we may never have thought of the wonderful way in which it was composed and how it has been preserved through the ages.

One of the first things about this Book is the fact of its existence. Little by little, part by part, it came in disconnected fragments. Slowly the Great Book grew: here a bit of history, and there a bit of prophecy; here a poem, and there a letter; until at last it came to a needy world in finished completeness. When Moses died there were only five small portions, and when David sat upon the throne only a few parchments more had been added.

By whom was the Book written? By kings, such as David and Solomon; by statesmen, as Daniel and Nehemiah; by priests, as Ezra; by learned men in the wisdom of Egypt, as Moses; by learned men in Jewish law, as Paul; by a herdsman, Amos; a taxgatherer, Matthew; by fishermen, Peter, James, and John, who were unlearned and ignorant men; by a physician, Luke; and by such mighty prophets as Isaiah, Ezekiel, and Zechariah. One by one these men laid on the growing pile their contributions until the Old Testament was as it is today, for no one dared to alter it.

The New Testament is a far greater miracle from a literary standpoint than the Old Testament. The Jews were no authors, and for fifty years after Jesus was born there was probably not a line of the New Testament written. There was no prearrangement in its writing. It is not as if the disciples had come together in committee and Matthew had said, "I will write of Christ as King"; and Mark had said, "I would like to write of Him as Worker"; Luke might have added, "I will tell of Him as the Man touched with the feeling of our infirmities"; and John have said, "I will crown it all by writing of Him as the Son of God." Paul and James did not agree to write on opposite sides, but all simply wrote as they were moved to meet some passing need or teach some glorious truth. Yes, the Book is marvelous; it is unexplainable!

Its pages were penned in the wilderness of Sinai, the cliffs of Arabia, the hills and towns of Palestine, the courts of the temple, the schools of the prophets at Bethel and Jericho, in the palace of Shushan in Persia, on the banks of the River Chebar in Babylonia, in the dungeons of Rome, and on the lonely island of Patmos.

We talk of the Bible as a Book, when it is really a library of sixty-six volumes, written by many authors in three different languages, upon totally different topics, and under very different circumstances. History, biography, theology, poetry, prophecy, are all included. And while it was impossible for the man who wrote the earliest pages to have had any knowledge of what the man would write fifteen hundred years afterwards, yet its contents are so harmonious that no one thinks of it as anything but one Book. Imagine another book compiled in a similar manner! Take sixty-six medical books written by forty different physicians and surgeons during a period of fifteen hundred years, of various schools of medicine, as allopathy, homeopathy, hydropathy, osteopathy, etc., and bind them all together and then undertake to doctor a man according to that book! What success would we expect to have?

Again, it is a wonder it is here today when we think of its age. The greatest test of literature is time. Books which were the rage a few years ago are nearly forgotten today, comparatively few enduring more than a quarter of a century, although they have been sold by the tens of thousands in their day of popularity. Their force is spent, their power is dead; and while the masterpieces of ancient times may be studied by profound scholars, they are really dead books in dead languages. But the Old Book is easily the best seller of the present day, in spite of the fact that it was written in a dead tongue.

Another marvelous thing is that it is the only Book read by all classes and all sorts of people. Persons of literary taste rarely read children's books, but the Bible is read by philosophers as well as by children. A lady said to a nurse, "What are you reading to Baby?" And the little one cried out, "Please don't stop her," being intensely interested in the story of Joseph and his adventures of thirty-five hundred years ago. Boys and girls study it in homes and Sunday school, and yet the greatest scholars, statesmen, and even soldiers, have taken this Book as the guide of their lives.

The largest number of biographies tell only of the good which their heroes have done, but the Bible relates the bad as well as the good of its leading men, such as Abraham, Jacob, Moses, David, and Solomon, charging them with falsehood, treachery, pride, (Please turn to page 11)

The Weaver

My life is but a weaving
Between my Lord and me.
I cannot choose the colors
Nor all the pattern see;
Sometimes He chooseth sorrow
And I in foolish pride Forget He sees the upper
And I the under side.

Not till the loom is silent
And the shutters cease to fly
Will He reveal the pattern,
Or tell the reason why
The dark threads are as needful
In the Weaver's skillful hand,
As the threads of gold and silver
In the pattern He has planned.

God's Marvelous Gift

By Harry Goekler

"For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Romans 6:23.

SUCH is the wondrous statement made by the Apostle of the Gentiles, and it was made on the authority of the great Life-Giver Himself. Paul received his gospel and his commission from the ascended and glorified Son of Man and Son of God, so that there can be no possibility of any mistake about the matter.

This theme of life is ever a thrilling one for a race that is always in conflict with death. When, however, we come to speak of "life everlasting," a life without any terminus, words fail to express the deep importance of such a theme.

This natural life is the most precious of man's possessions and he leaves no stone unturned in order that he may retain possession of it. The need and use of medicines to ward off, or cure, diseases that rob mankind of life run parallel with the need and use of food to sustain life. The science of medicine is one of the most prominent, and one of the most sought after sciences in the world; yet notwithstanding man's best efforts to combat the ravages of sin and to fight the grim monster death, he has to admit that the enemy is too strong for him, and even the most skilled in that warfare have to go the way of all flesh.

Man's present life, both in view of time and of eternity, is but as "a vapour, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away." Our whole race has a life which terminates in death. We pass our years with the stamp of mortality upon us, and the seeds of death working in us, while a few feet under the earth is our destiny.

This needs no proof, for the story of man is written so that he that runs may read. All the generations of the past have been travelers on that journey from whose bourne no one has ever yet returned of his own volition. Death has been the destiny of the whole human family and there would have been no hope of ever living again had it not been for God's marvelous gift. God has not left our race under the dominion of death, but in His love and grace He has provided a Savior and a salvation such as man needed.

When at the beginning God created our first parents, Adam and Eve, and endowed them with life, He made provision that that life might last forever. That provision was in the tree of life and as long as they had access to that tree their life was assured. But there was also another tree in the garden of which they were made the custodians, "the tree of the knowledge of good and evil." In that tree were the seeds of death. Of that tree God had said, "Ye shall not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die."

Satan, by lying, subtly deceived our first parents and caused them to sin. Thus they exchanged their life for the fatal gift of knowledge and from the tree of life they were a. off. From the moment they partook of the forbidden tree they became dying creatures, and when they went forth from Paradise they went forth to die. Their chance of living forever was gone, for behind them were the "cherubims, and a flaming sword which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life." So, generation after generation, all the sons of Adam have gone down into death.

Thus it was that "sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned" (Rom. 5:12). Yet it was God's purpose to give eternal life to man and in the fullness of time Jesus was born to be the Savior of mankind. Paul states it thus: "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive" (1 Cor. 15:22).

Jesus, in His ministry to mankind, declared over and over again the purpose of His coming. Observe the following statements: "For the Son of man is come to seek and save that which was lost" (Luke 19:10). "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly. . . . My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me: and I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand" (John 10:10, 27, 28).

For more than three years the Savior went about teaching, healing, and telling to all the words of eternal life. It was this teaching that caused Peter to say on one occasion, "Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life" (John 6:68).

We read also in John that oft-repeated verse, "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John 3:16). Christ's mission was not only to teach but to give His life a ransom for many.

On the cross He poured out His soul unto death. He was God's great sacrificial Lamb. The first Adam by one disobedience brought sin and death into the world; the second man, the last Adam, or Christ, by one act of obedience has brought in righteousness and life, yea, eternal life! He put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself. By His death on the cross He made an end to sins and by His resurrection He has triumphed over death and him that had the power of death. In His triumphant resurrection He has brought life and immortality to light by the gospel. The redemption of our life was precious or costly, but the price has been paid and accepted.

The gospel is the glad tidings of this eternal life. This marvelous gift is for all who will hear and receive it. Truly did Paul say, "For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." May we all be willing to accept that gift that we might be worthy of life eternal when the King comes.

Led by the Spirit

(Concluded)

By Mark Allen

“As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God.”—Romans 8:14.

IN OUR former article we pointed out, first, how the Spirit of God leads men; and, second, what the fruits of the Spirit are, in order that we might be able to identify those who are really guided in their teaching and in their conduct by the Spirit. We will now take into consideration our third proposition.

3. HOW MAY THE SPIRIT BE TESTED?

The Spirit of God is the Spirit of Truth, hence everything that is in accordance with the Spirit must be truth; for God, the Eternal Spirit, cannot lie.

We may set this down, then, as a fixed principle, that no one who is led by the Spirit or who speaks by the Spirit will deny or set aside any doctrine or teaching contained in the Scriptures of Truth through which the Spirit of God has spoken.

Here we will present, as tests of the antisciptural, and hence antichristian, character of the spirit that guides many modern religionists, some of the many plainly taught and vital doctrines revealed by the Spirit of Truth in the Bible which are either denied or set aside as of no importance by them.

First, we will notice the antichristian hope which is entertained by these sincere but sadly misled people.

As the Spirit of God by its teaching through the Word begets in the hearts of its followers a hope which the Apostle calls “the hope of Israel” and “the hope of the gospel,” so also the spirit of Antichrist (which was already in the world in apostolic times—1 John 4:3) begets in the hearts of its followers a hope, and that hope is directly opposite to the true one. The hope of the Christian is a material hope (using the word “material” in the sense of real); but the hope begotten by the spirit of Antichrist is an immaterial hope, one that is unreal and unsubstantial.

Many who claim much of what is called “spiritual religion,” and who feel that they are “saved” and led mysteriously by the good Spirit, are really guided by the spirit of Antichrist into the unscriptural hope that at death their disembodied ghosts shall be borne on angels’ wings to realms of bliss beyond the skies, where they will sing praises to God forevermore around His throne in heaven. This is emphatically the hope of the Gentiles, the hope of all false and pagan religions.

We do not deny the honesty and the sincerity of the multitudes who hold to this unchristian idea, many of whom die rejoicing in it. But honesty and sincerity are no proof that the thing which is honestly and sincerely believed is true! If the honesty and sincerity of the believer is evidence of the truth of his religious ideas, then the Mohammedan and the Hindu religions are as true as Christianity!

But we do affirm that no one can cherish such a false hope and at the same time be guided by the Spirit of Truth, the Spirit that produced the Bible, or have within him (as is claimed) the witness of the Spirit that he is a child of God. Such a hope is contrary to all of the teachings of the Spirit as revealed by Moses and the prophets.

The hope that the righteous go to heaven when they die denies the truth of the following biblical statements and, therefore, denies the truthfulness of God!

“The heaven, even the heavens, are the Lord’s; but the earth hath he given to the children of men” (Psa. 115:16). “I will give unto thee (Abraham), and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession” (Gen. 17:8). “The meek shall inherit the earth” (Psa. 37:11; Matt. 5:5). “The kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High” (Dan. 7:27). “The righteous shall be recompensed in the earth” (Prov. 11:31).

The unscriptural hope we have named is strongly opposed by such New Testament teachings as these:

“Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven” (the Lord’s Prayer, Matt. 6:10). “We shall reign on the earth” (Rev. 5:10). “No man hath ascended up to heaven” (John 3:13). “Little children, yet a little while I am with you. Ye shall seek me; and as I said unto the Jews, Whither I go ye cannot come; so now I say to you” (John 13:33). Jesus was about to ascend to heaven when He made this statement (John 20:17), and He assures both the unbelieving Jews and the faithful, believing disciples that where He is going they cannot come. Not even David, a man after God’s own heart, went to heaven when he died or at any other time (Acts 13:22; 2:29, 34).

Many other texts might be presented, all of which teach the same thing, that no one, good or bad, believer or unbeliever, except Jesus Christ alone, has, or ever will, go to heaven where God and the angels dwell.

The Spirit of Truth, we are informed, will lead into all truth (John 16:13). In view of this declaration of our Lord, can it be possible that individuals who hold such a fallacy as the one we are discussing can be led by the Spirit of God?

We suggest another test, one given by a prophet of Israel long before our Savior’s birth, by which we are to try all who claim supernatural powers of revelation.

“When they shall say to you, Seek unto them that hath familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep, and that mutter: should not a people seek unto their God? . . . To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them” (Isa. 8:19, 20).

The “law and the testimony” comprise the Old Testament Scriptures and the test suggested is that we should compare the teaching of all who would direct our thoughts religiously with the truth as it is given in the Bible. If they speak not in accordance with the Word “it is because there is no light in them.” It follows, that if there is no light in them, that they must be in total darkness so far as the truth of God is concerned, hence they are not led by the

They Profaned the Name of the Lord

By Nancy B. Robison

“They profaned the name of the Lord when they said, These are the people of the Lord.”—Ezekiel 24:20.

WHIO profaned the name of the Lord? Israel. How? By taking those uncircumcised nations among them, and counting them as God’s people. Do we, as adopted Israel, do the same thing today? How do we come into possession of the name? We read in Ephesians 2:11, 12: “Wherefore remember, that ye being in time past Gentiles in the flesh, who are called Uncircumcision by that which is called the Circumcision in the flesh made by hands; that at that time ye were without Christ, beings aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world.”

When, dear brothers and sisters, were we without Christ, without hope, and without God in the world? It is plainly stated: when we were aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise.

What is the commonwealth of Israel? That which belongs to Israel by the covenant between God and His people. Wealth is common. “In thee and thy seed (which is Christ) shall all the nations of the earth be blessed.” The wealth of the earth belongs to Him: “All kings shall fall down before him, all nations shall serve him” (Psa. 72:11). Again in Psalm 105:9-11: “Which covenant he made with Abraham, and his oath unto Isaac, and confirmed the same unto Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant; saying, Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan, the lot of thine inheritance” (the margin for “lot” is “cord,” which means “together with,” a stronger term than “lot”). Like the beating together of heartstrings bound together by the same cord or covenant.

What are the conditions after we come into covenant relationship? “No more strangers and foreigners, but fellowcitizens with the saints, and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets; Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone; in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth into an holy temple in the Lord” (Eph. 2:19-22).

The question before us is, Can we as adopted Israel (who are to partake of the root and fatness of the tree) profane the name, as Israel of old did, by saying, “These are the people of the Lord”?

If, before we believed the covenants, before we had the seal affixed to our faith, we were without Christ, without hope, and without God, are not all who are strangers from the covenants in a like condition? He that believeth is not condemned, but he that believeth not in the name is condemned already. Can anyone correctly profess this name, and deny all the things promised in that name, “teaching for doctrines the commandments of men,” without even a single thought of that covenant we dare not be a stranger to?

It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. When we say to strangers from these covenants, “You are children of God,” by passing them the bread and wine, or in any way deceiving them, telling them they are God’s children before they have believed those covenants and had the seal affixed to their faith, we are doing just what Israel of old did, profaning the name of the Lord. What is the result of such teaching? You say, in effect, that we are at liberty to fellowship error and to invite all, regardless of their belief, to unite with us. You may proselyte in this way, you may tickle the ears of the people, you may build up a larger church, and it may flourish till the King comes, but if you, like Israel of old, profane the name, you will not grow into that holy temple of the Lord.

Dear brother and sister, “see that no man take thy crown.” There is no greater stumblingblock to the evangelist who is struggling to make known the truth which may bring aliens into covenant relationship with God, than to follow where one professing to teach the gospel says, “O, it’s all right to fellowship others, regardless of what they believe, that you may win them eventually for the truth!”

You, my brother, are not privileged to win anyone except by that gospel which alone “is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.” Let us be careful that we do not profane the name of the Lord!

The Christian and Military Service

(Concluded)

THE final phase of our subject is that relating to civil employments in times of national emergency. It has been said, and perhaps with good reason, that when the next major conflict comes everyone, whether young or old, male or female, will be required to do some work of "national importance." This situation will be similar to the one that confronted Christadelphians in the British Isles during the Great War: those called to "the colors" were granted exemption from combatant service, and from non-combatant service, provided they engaged in work "useful for the prosecution of the war." These facts are set forth in the decision of the Central Appeal Tribunal of Great Britain, which we quote from page 16 of F. G. Jannaway's booklet, Christadelphians During the Great War, and which reads as follows:

"The Tribunal having satisfied themselves that the appellant is a bona fide Christadelphian who joined that body before the outbreak of war, and that the 'Basis of Faith' common to Christadelphians forbids them to take service under military authority, grant the appellant exemption from combatant service only, subject to the proviso that if within 21 days he undertakes work which, not being under military control, is nevertheless useful for the prosecution of the war, under conditions approved by the Tribunal, he shall be exempt from noncombatant service so long as he continues to carry out such work under such conditions, the work proposed to be reported to the Tribunal for approval. Power is reserved to the Tribunal to extend or vary this order, if the appellant establishes to their satisfaction that he has done his best, but has failed to comply with the conditions."

What shall be our attitude toward work of "national importance," or work "useful for the prosecution of the war," as the above decision termed it? As previously stated, we do not accept the state's nationalistic point of view; and we will not engage in this or any other kind of work with the intention of helping on the war: we are not prompted by such motives. But may we, as being prompted by other motives, engage in such work at the behest of the powers that be? In the past some have said that to do so would be "helping on the war"; and they have elected to go to prison rather than do such work. We do not believe this attitude is defensible. If we engage in the production of foodstuffs, and thereby release other men, enabling them to perform other, perhaps military, duties we are "helping on the war." Similarly, when we "render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's" (Matt. 22:21) by paying war taxes levied on us, we are doing the very same thing. These two examples illustrate that it is next to impossible to live a useful life in a highly organized state in time of war, and yet not be said, by reasoning in this circumlocutory way, to be "helping on the war." This being so, where shall the line be drawn? and on what principle? and by whose authority? We think it obvious that the work's relative proximity to or remoteness from war cannot be considered a sound criterion to use. Consequently we must seek some other yardstick.

While searching for one we must remember that we are dealing with a very practical problem; one on which we have little or no direct Scripture instruction; one in the solution of which we must be guided by our general knowledge of biblical teaching, our perception of ethical principles, and our own judgment.

If we return for a moment to our conclusions regarding military service we note that our objections were to the kind of service involved and the circumstances under which it must be performed. From these facts we deduce two definite principles for use in deciding what work we shall, and what work we shall not engage in. We test all occupations with two questions. They are:

- (1) Is the type of work itself unobjectionable?
- (2) Are the circumstances under which it is to be performed acceptable?

In classifying the types of work we include in the unobjectionable category such services as contribute, directly and indirectly, to the necessities, comforts, and lawful pleasures of life; while in the opposite category we place such activities as those that contribute to the destruction of life and property. The circumstances are not susceptible of such ready classification; and in civil employments they, usually, are unimportant. But if they should become a major consideration the military examples and the principles that have been outlined should suffice as guides.

A detailed classification of the two types of work is not necessary for our present purpose; and therefore we shall not attempt to make one. But included in the first category are most of the commercial and industrial activities common to times of peace, examples of which are: the production of foodstuffs by farming and processing, the manufacture of clothing of all kinds, the performance of services such as those of transportation. And we indicate the extent to which the formulated principles may be applied when we say: The food may be for the express purpose of feeding the army, and the clothing may be uniforms or blankets to be used by it; but this makes no essential difference, because soldiers as well as civilians require food and clothing. Some persons have said that they would feel that the making of army or navy clothing would not be a proper occupation for themselves to be engaged in, in which case they should follow the dictates of their conscience and avoid the work; but, as we stated previously, we do not consider proximity to war a sound standard to use. We have used food and clothing for our illustrations:

the reasoning applies equally well to any other kind of work falling in that classification.

As examples of most objectionable types of work, of work that we as Christians should not be engaged in, the making of artillery, firearms, ammunition, and poison gas are cited. It was not without good reason that, during the Great War, public speakers called the munition workers, often much to the latter's satisfaction, a "battalion of death." Without their work the war could not have been continued. And, morally speaking, such work is in the same category as soldiering. There is no essential difference between firing a shell yourself and preparing it for some one else to fire. This appears to be the only sound and defensible ethical position; and this, let it be observed, is also the viewpoint of the powers that be. They have said that if you make the shell you should have no objection to firing it; and they have shown their unwillingness to recognize as "conscientious objectors" persons who are or have been engaged in the manufacture of implements of war. Thus, they expect to find ethical distinctions and consistent practice among those who make claims on them on ethical and religious grounds. And here, again, our reasoning applies to all work that properly belongs in the category.

In conclusion there are two points we must consider briefly. The first is: Between those occupations that obviously belong in one or the other of these categories, is a twilight zone composed of types of work that are close to the line of separation. Some of these employments will belong in one class, and some in the other; and there may be considerable difference of opinion as to their proper classification. In such cases the knowledge, judgment, and good conscience of the individual must be the deciding factors. The second point is: There are some employments which it may be deemed prudent to avoid, so as not to give hostile contemporaries occasion for evil speaking. Through engaging in certain pursuits we may be charged with inconsistency, not because the work is inherently incompatible with our professions, but because those around us do not make (and when their passions are aroused as they are in times of war, do not choose to make) distinctions between things that differ. In these circumstances perhaps the wisest course is to choose some other available type of work.

"To die is gain."—Philippians 1:21.

TO SUSTAIN the doctrine of separate soul existence, this passage is so often quoted, apart from its connection, that one might almost think it is an apothegm, embodying a truth of universal application. The preceding clause, however, limits it to the Apostle, and the well known inference drawn from it is that death to him, as to the Christian, is a gain in that, instead of ending his life and consigning him to the grave, it ushers him into an unending life of unspeakable bliss. So generally is this inference accepted as the real meaning of these words, that possibly the reader will be shocked to be told that they have no reference whatever to such a notion. The question of the possible future of the individual who dies, is not even alluded to in this passage!

It is very easy to decide this. We ask, Does Paul here speak of his death as a gain to himself, or to Christ? To himself, most will reply. And, to draw from it the usual inference, so must it be. But it happens that the context settles this question beyond all controversy.

Going back to verses 16 to 18, we learn that during Paul's present imprisonment at Rome, some there were proclaiming the gospel, not sincerely, but as Paul tells us, "of contention, supposing to add affliction to my bonds. What then," he says, "notwithstanding every way whether in pretence or in truth, Christ is preached, and I therein do rejoice."

Himself, his own profit or gain, is evidently the last thing of which he is thinking. He cares not what may come to him, if in any way the glad tidings of the Master he loves may be made known. And, carrying out this thought, he adds: "According to my earnest expectation and my hope, that in nothing I shall be ashamed, but that with all boldness, as always, so now, also, Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life or by death."

How shall "Christ be magnified" by his living? He goes on to tell us: "For to me to live is Christ"—as living as he would, and so honoring Christ. How shall "Christ be magnified" by his dying? "To die is gain" to Him (i. e., to Christ). To yield up his life for the Master's sake, is a gain to the Master's cause. Is it possible to believe that Paul says, in speaking of magnifying Christ, "For me to live is for Christ's advantage, and to die is for my own"?

Ah, indeed, he has not the least thought of himself, except as, whether living or dying, magnifying his Lord; not one word of what he himself may or may not gain in the future: it is what the Lord shall gain from his death, if He sees fit to permit it. And has not the death of His martyred ones ever been the greatest gain to the cause of Christ, as they seal their testimony with their blood? As our proverb expresses it: "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church!" May not the death of the proto-martyr, Stephen, have been the means by the truth thus testified to, of gaining for the Master His most capable and useful apostle, Paul?

The Biblical Armageddon

THERE is much confusion concerning the "Battle of Armageddon" in the minds of many people. In the first place, it is not the final conflict which will take place upon this earth, although many people are accustomed to consider it as such. A careful reading of Revelation, chapters 16 to 21, will greatly aid in clarifying our understanding on this subject.

Then, too, the "Battle of Armageddon" must be fought in Palestine. Newspapers heralded the World War as "Armageddon." Attempts have also been made to connect the present conflict in Spain with "Armageddon." But that great conflict which will usher in the millennium, end the power of Antichrist, and make possible the righteous reign of the Lord Jesus Christ over the earth with His saints, must take place in the Plain of Esdraelon. By referring to a map of Palestine the Plain of Esdraelon (also called Plain of Jezreel and Valley of Megiddo), can be located, west of the Jordan River, southwest of the Sea of Galilee, and southeast of Mount Carmel. In this plain is the town of Megiddo.

The phrase, "the Battle of Armageddon" does not occur in Scripture. However, in Revelation 16:16, in the Revised Version, we read: "And they gathered them together into the place which is called in the Hebrew, Har-Mageddon." The Authorized Version gives it "Armageddon." The word is a composite formed from the Hebrew words, Har, (meaning, mountain or hill) and Megiddo, the name of the town in the Valley of Jezreel. This is the only time that the word "Armageddon" occurs in the Bible. Here it refers to the place where "the kings of the whole world . . . gather . . . together unto the war of the great day of God, the Almighty."

There are many references in the Old Testament to events connected with the Battle of Armageddon, but the prophets did not always distinguish between Armageddon and Satan's final revolt in leading "Gog and Magog" against the Messianic kingdom after the millennium.

In Revelation 20 John gives us a prophetic foreview of the final rebellion of man against the Lord Jesus Christ and His saints. The rebels will be destroyed by fire when they gather to attack Jerusalem, the capital of the millennial kingdom of Jesus Christ.

The Battle of Armageddon, which occurs at least a thousand years earlier, will be fought by the "kings of the earth" under the leadership of the Antichrist. They will be destroyed by "the sword" which proceeds out of the mouth of the returning, glorified Christ. The Antichrist (beast) and the false prophet will be cast alive into the lake of fire and brimstone. John gives us the details of this battle in different places in Revelation (14 through 19).

We learn, for example, that the blood of the slain will cover a battle front of over 176 miles. Before the World War such a thing seemed fantastic. But the Hindenburg Line was much longer than that.

We learn also that there is to be a great leader over a federated ten-kingdom empire, who will have supernatural powers. He will be defeated and cast into the lake of fire.

Note the reference to the "beast coming up out of the sea." He is also spoken of as "the beast that . . . was, and is not; and is about to come up out of the abyss and to go into perdition." These two references are not merely repetitions. The reference to "the sea" would seem to indicate that the Antichrist will be a dominant figure in the naval world. The "abyss" would seem to indicate his satanic origin. He will be an iron dictator and a regulator of business. Impossible! Not at all. Even in democratic America it was impossible for a time to buy or sell without three letters, NRA. The Antichrist will have three numbers, 666, without which it will be impossible to do business.

We have already witnessed the revival of the Roman Empire. It includes, in addition to the ancient capital of Rome, the Italian peninsula, Sicily and Sardinia and some minor islands in Europe, but also the lands of Ethiopia and Libya and other minor possessions in Africa. Daniel the Prophet spoke of the coming Prince, who "shall come up and be strong with a small people." "He shall do according to his will; and he shall exalt himself and magnify himself above every god and shall speak marvellous things against the God of gods." "He shall stretch forth his hand also upon the countries . . . shall enter also the glorious land (Palestine) and many countries shall be overthrown . . . he shall have power over the treasures of gold and of silver and over all the precious things of Egypt; and the Libyans and the Ethiopians shall be at his steps."

According to Daniel's interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream there would be only four world-empires between the time of the captivity of Israel and her final and complete restoration to her own land. Babylonia, Persia, Greece, and Rome followed each other. Then Rome divided into the Eastern and Western Empires. The Eastern Empire lasted until the middle of the fifteenth century. But the things prophesied as accompanying the destruction of the image did not occur when the Mohammedans took Constantinople.

The image had ten toes. The beast had ten horns. The ten horns are ten kings which were not in existence at the time John wrote. The eighth ruler, who was one of the seven, was yet to come. A revival of the Roman Empire was necessary. It has taken place.

Daniel tells us that "the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary." In 70 A. D. the Romans destroyed the temple in Jerusalem. "And he shall make a firm covenant with many for one week; and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease; and upon the wing of abomination shall come one that maketh desolate." Christ warned of "the abomination of desolation spoken of by the prophet Daniel." So evidently a Roman prince will make a covenant with Israel which he will later break.

Also apparently for a time the Antichrist will tolerate an apostate form of Christendom, but will later wipe it out. The Apostle Paul warned the Christians of his own day (read 2 Thess. 1 and 2).

The one who hinders the manifestation of the Antichrist is none other than the Holy Spirit. As long as the true church is in the world the Holy Spirit must of necessity be in the world, for it is promised as the indweller of the individual believers who make up the body of Christ. When the body is completed then "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout . . . and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive that are left, shall together with them be caught up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord." When the true church is taken out of the world, the Holy Spirit will go. Then there will be nothing to hinder the manifestation of "the man of sin."

When he breaks his covenant with Israel and sets up his own image in the rebuilt temple in Jerusalem and seeks to compel them to worship him as god, they will resist. Then comes the time spoken of by Christ as the "great tribulation." "But immediately after the tribulation of those days . . . shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven, and then shall all tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." It is the coming of Christ, with His saints who have already been resurrected and translated previously, to deliver oppressed Israel which precipitates the Battle of Armageddon.

But before He can come there must first come "the falling away" (from the Greek apostasia, apostasy).

THE SIGN OF APOSTASY

We cannot set dates but we can "discern the signs of the times." In the March issue of the Religious Digest there appeared an able editorial from the pen of Mr. H. L. Mencken, which had been originally printed in The Baltimore Sun. Mr. Mencken is an avowed unbeliever, but he can discern the truth that "the only effect that could follow diluting and polluting Christianity in the modernist manner would be its complete abandonment and ruin." He also said "anyone was free to reject it (the Bible), but no one was free to mutilate it or to read things into it that were not there." Yet multitudes of Christians, and even ministers, seem unable to see the truth that Mr. Mencken expressed, viz., "that the body of doctrine known as modernism is completely incompatible, not only with anything rationally described as Christianity, but also with anything deserving to pass as religion in general."

Mr. Mencken's article was somewhat in the nature of a defense of the late Dr. Machen, who had so vigorously opposed the spread of apostasy in the Christian church. But the quotations given were the words of Mr. Mencken himself.

There are many other signs which would seem to indicate that the time for the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ is drawing near. In spite of the awful World War all the nations are arming at a greater rate than ever before for the next conflict, which they all confidently expect will occur soon. Many nations are taking a part in the present conflict in Spain. This may spread at any moment to take in the whole world. Asia is coming to the front. The Revelation tells of the "kings . . . from the sunrising" who will have a part in the Battle of Armageddon. The emblem of Japan is the rising sun. With the establishment of the puppet state of Manchukuo we have "kings of the sun rising" for the first time in history. Libya and Ethiopia are already in the Roman Empire of our day. Egypt has been threatened and England is desperately rushing her armament program. The "ships of Kittim" are opposed to "the prince." The papers recently heralded the fact that Italy now possesses the two most powerful battleships afloat. England's nearest approach is the old Hood. The beast will have great sea power.

Then, too, Germany was never within the bounds of the old Roman Empire but Austria was. In spite of desperate efforts on the part of the Nazis Austria is much more closely allied today to Italy than to Germany. The revived Roman Empire will be a federal one. It will be composed of ten kingdoms. Spain was a part of the old Empire. Italy is active in Spain today.

Meanwhile, our task is to warn men "to flee from the wrath to come" and be saved through faith in our Lord Jesus Christ.—F. W. Haberer in Religious Digest.

GAIN BY DYING

Had we at this day more of Paul's self-denial, of his self-forgetfulness, we should be more slow to interpret his language here, as not alone to conflict with the context, but also with the spirit of one who reckoned self crucified with Christ; who could say (literal Greek of Gal. 2:20): "I no longer live, but Christ liveth in me."

The popular understanding of the passage is also in direct conflict with what Paul himself elsewhere states. For he, whom we misrepresent as saying it is a gain for him to die, further on in this very Epistle (chapter 2:27) calls it a "merey" to a faithful Christian not to die! In 1 Corinthians 1:10, 11 he speaks of himself as having been delivered from death, and trusts Christians will pray that he may still be delivered, "that for the gift" (of deliverance from death) "bestowed upon us by the means of many persons thanks may be given by many on our behalf."

In 2 Corinthians 5:1-4 he desires not death; he "would not be unclothed," he found naked, as when this earthly tent is dissolved. In 1 Corinthians 15:26, addressing Christians, he styles death, the "last enemy." And was he not right? To the Christian himself, to die is not gain. Death is our "last enemy." It robs us of life, till the Savior comes again, till that "hour when all that are in the graves shall hear his voice." And yet in the final encounter with the adversary, the Christian can, and he should, as the Apostle John expresses it, "glorify God" (John 22:19). This was Paul's expectation and desire. May it be ours also!—Charles L. Ives in The Bible Doctrine of the Soul.

LED BY THE SPIRIT

Spirit which inspired the prophets and apostles of old.

Yet we find thousands of men and women insisting that they are led by the Spirit and that they have the witness of the Spirit in their hearts that they are children of God, who teach things which are absolutely contrary to what is clearly taught by the Spirit in the Word!

When we find one who is really led by the Spirit we will find one who is teaching all things in accordance with what "holy men of God spake" (in the prophecies and other portions of the Scriptures) "as they were moved by the Holy Spirit" (2 Peter 1:21).

4. WHAT WILL BE THE RESULT OF THE SPIRIT'S GUIDANCE?

According to the Scriptures the Spirit will lead by its own teachings in the Word to faith, by which salvation may be attained (2 Tim. 3:15); from faith to love, which is the "fruit of the Spirit" (Gal. 5:22); and from love to obedience in baptism, which is the form of doctrine or teaching which the Spirit has delivered to us (Rom. 6:3, 16, 17) and by which we indicate in symbol our understanding and faith in the truths contained in the gospel.

As we compare our faith and our obedience with the teachings of the Spirit in the Word and find that they agree, that is, we perceive that we have met all the conditions and requirements set forth in the Spirit's testimony, "the Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God: and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together" (Rom. 8:16, 17). Or, as we read in another place, "if we suffer, we shall also reign with him" (2 Tim. 2:12).

It is, then, no mean position to which the Spirit leads us if we follow its guidance as it comes to us through the Word, for we will at last be glorified with the Messiah and be made to share with Him the honor of royal and sacerdotal dignity as "kings and priests" and reign with Him over the nations of the earth.

For this exalted position let us earnestly strive. And may we walk worthily of that high and sacred vocation to which we have been called, with all lowliness and meekness and love, endeavoring ever to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.

THE WONDERFUL BOOK

adultery, cowardice, murder, and gross licentiousness. It also presents the history of the children of Israel as one of ingratitude, idolatry, unbelief, and rebellion. "All scripture is given by inspiration of God!"

Another wonderful thing about the Bible is that it is the one Book that has withstood ages of ferocious and incessant persecution. Century after century men have tried to burn it and bury it. In the year 303 A. D. the Roman emperor destroyed nearly every Bible then in existence, myriads of Christians were put to awful deaths, and a column of triumph erected over an exterminated Bible. But twenty-five years later another emperor enthroned the Bible as the infallible judge of truth! A thousand years later came the prolonged persecution by the Church of Rome when Bibles were burned and all kinds of edicts were issued forbidding its reading. But men and women continued studying it in spite of all kinds of persecution.

And yet, perhaps, the severest test has been brought upon it in the last one hundred and fifty years by men who claimed liberty of thought. Germans, Frenchmen, Englishmen, and Americans have taken up the cry, "Down with it!" but "he that sitteth in the heavens" has had them in derision.

In spite of these age-long persecutions, the Word of the Lord is having free course and is being glorified, having a circulation of twenty-five million copies a year, and being translated into nearly a thousand tongues and dialects, with an influence more far-reaching than it has ever before possessed.

May we never compare this Book with other books. They are of the earth; this is from heaven. This Book not only contains the Word of God, it is the Word of God, and will last forever and ever.

If the foot shall say, Because I am not the hand, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body? . . . And whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; or one member be honoured, all the members rejoice with it" (1 Cor. 12:13-15, 26).

It is no uncommon thing for infection in a sore limb to cause the death of the entire body. Sometimes the limb can be treated and restored to health and usefulness, or if restoration is not possible, it may be amputated and the life of the body saved. No method has yet been discovered, however, that permits the amputation of a sore head without killing the whole body. Let's not be soreheads!

Importance of Religion in Man's Life

This article by Pearl DeWitt is condensed from a talk given in the Blanchard, Michigan, Church. The young people have charge of the service once each month.

Religion is the leading progressive force in the world. The religion of the Bible has given man the power to lift himself above others. It is the force that has lifted man's eyes from the selfish interests of earth to the sky and the stars of heaven. "The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handiwork" (Psa. 19:1).

Of all the animals that live and feel and suffer upon this earth man alone looks upward. The birds are given the power to fly but have no power to think and be inspired with ambition to gain the eternal.

The growth and spread of biblical religious thought has freed man from brutalities, superstitions, hatred, and cruelty. When nations and individuals become indifferent to God, fix their minds only on this earth and its selfish interests and pleasures, they go down and soon are forgotten.

Religious feeling and enthusiasm lend power to the brain and its development. It kindles our greatest force, imagination. Imagination gives us the power of planning, hoping, believing.

A man may study the Bible from his childhood to the last day of his life and always will find fresh inspiration and meaning according to his need. To the unfortunate the Bible offers unailing consolation. To the troubled and sorrowful the Sermon on the Mount offers more comfort than can be found in any man-made book of philosophy.

"Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs' is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are they that mourn: for they shall be comforted. Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth. Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy. Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake."

Until a person has studied the life and character of Christ, and the effect of His teachings, no other study is, after all, worth while.

Report of General Conference

* * * * By Winifred Reynolds, Blanchard, Mich.

(Note: This article is condensed from a report given in the Blanchard Church. Two of our young people won prizes of Teacher's Bibles for attending every young people's class and every sermon from the time they arrived until the close of the Conference. The report was a very full account of the subject of each class and sermon.)

Friday, August 6. Sermon by Bro. J. R. LeCrone, Eden Valley, Minn. "It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life" (John 6:63). Christ is the bread of life to His believers.

Saturday, August 7. Sermon by Bro. C. A. Smead, Blanchard, Mich. His text was found in 1 Corinthians 2. It was on living the life of a Christian as well as telling others how they should live. We must demonstrate Christ by faith, hope, and love.

Monday, August 9. Annual Berean sermon by Bro. G. L. Cooper, Mora, Minn. His text was found in Matthew 13. Beginning with verse 44 the kingdom of heaven is likened to several different things, all of which are of no value compared to the kingdom of heaven. Come unto the Lord and you shall inherit the kingdom of heaven.

Tuesday, August 10. Sermon by Bro. S. J. Lindsay, Tempe, Arizona. His text was found in 1 Corinthians 13. Under the gospel the operations of the Spirit are intended to be general—reproving the world and blessing the church, bringing conviction to sinners and sanctification, gifts, and power to believers.

Wednesday, August 11. Sermon by Bro. A. L. Corbaley, Puyallup, Washington. His text was found in 2 Thessalonians 2. Subject: Signs of Christ's Coming. We should continue in the truth, for we know not when He comes. There is prophesied a departure from the faith before the Lord comes.

Saturday, August 14. Sermon by Bro. Abbott of Minnesota. Text: John 10:10. We must know God's blessings before we can have them. If we pray earnestly God will answer as He sees fit. Christians who do not advance spiritually are not really living the Christian life. We are rewarded for life as it has been lived. We should praise God for His good work.

Sunday, August 15. Morning sermon by Bro. M. W. Lyon, Cleveland, Ohio, on "How to Listen to a Sermon." It takes good listeners to make a good sermon. "Who has ears to hear, let him hear." Listen critically, listen sympathetically.

Closing sermon by Bro. L. E. Conner, Dixon, Illinois, president of the General Conference. Text: 2 Peter 1:1-11. God promised life everlasting, free from sorrow and bitter things. Jesus Christ is the one perfect man, most noble and kind, most loving and charitable. There are seven graces: Charity, kindness, godliness, love, truth, patience, hope. The more we do for others the more God will do for us. Do the best you can with what you have.

In closing my report I might say that this covers only a minor part of all the interesting things of Conference. My one hope and prayer is that many of you who were not present this year will be able to come next year. For my part I got a lot of good out of it. Let's see more of you there next year.

Dare to Be a Daniel

All of you boys and girls who read this page get out your Bibles and turn to the book of Daniel. How many of you can find it at once? I suppose that the boys would outnumber the girls if we were holding a contest. For every boy likes the story of Daniel very much indeed.

The very first chapter of the book starts right out with a most interesting story. Suppose that one of you boys should be called to go to the home of a very prominent person, along with three other boys. Would you have the courage Daniel had? I hope so! Let's see what happened.

You see, the king of Babylon and his army had conquered the country of Judah and taken many of its people captive. King Nebuchadnezzar knew that some of the sons of the royal family of Judah, or Israel, as they were also called, were very wise and skillful. That is, they had a very fine education.

So the conquering king wanted these valuable young men in his palace to be his assistants. That would be a great honor for those who had been captured, and we know most anyone would do exactly as the king demanded in order to receive such notice.

The first thing that happened was that four princes were chosen and given Babylonian names. Our young man, Daniel, was one of the four, and his name was changed to Belteshazzar—a hard name to pronounce and not as brave-sounding a name as Daniel.

I don't believe it is necessary to tell all that happened, for all of you know the story perfectly. At any rate, Daniel asked that he and his companions be allowed for ten days to eat only the simple food and drink the pure water that they had been used to at home.

The result you all know. They looked better than all the others, and they were ten times wiser than all the magicians of the king's palace.

Now look at verse 17, and see who it was that helped these four brave young men. God! Yes, because they had courage enough to follow Him among all those idol worshipers, the one true God gave them strength to resist the temptations that crowded about them on every side. And those temptations were many.

We need many, many Daniels today. Not only do we need Daniels, but we need girls and young women, also, who will be brave enough to follow God and depend on Him for strength to resist temptation.

For today the mocker that Solomon warns us against is found on every side of us, and many are the boys and girls that are deceived by it. Read again the words across the top of the page, and remember they were spoken by the wisest man who ever lived. He knew what he was talking about, you may be sure.

Memorize those words and repeat them to anyone who would tempt you to use wine or other strong drink.

A White Dress

The story is told of a party of friends who were intending to explore a coal mine. Among the young folks was a girl dressed in a spotless white gown. Her friends remonstrated with her, telling her how very inappropriate her dress was. She appealed to the guide thus:

“Can't I wear a white dress down into the mine?” she asked him.

“Yes'm,” said the old guide. “There's nothing to keep you from wearing a white frock down there, but there'll be considerable to keep you from wearing one back.”

That is what the writer James meant when he warned us to keep ourselves unspotted from the world. We cannot expect to mingle with evil things and not be harmed.

A Prayer for the Week

Our heavenly Father, make us strong like Daniel to resist temptation. For Jesus' sake. Amen.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

CHURCH OF GOD CONFERENCE Blanchard, Michigan

This issue of The Restitution Herald is dedicated to the Michigan State Conference of the Church of God which is to convene in Blanchard, October 26 to 31, inclusive.

This promises to be one of the great religious gatherings of the year and everyone, regardless of denominational affiliation, is urged to be present and hear the inspiring sermons which are to be delivered by Elder J. R. LeCrone of Minnesota.

While still a young man, Elder LeCrone has established an enviable reputation as a logical and impressive speaker and is widely and favorably known throughout the Church of God.

The meetings will begin Tuesday evening, October 26, and will continue over the following Sunday. There will be preaching services each night at eight o'clock, and on Sunday an all-day gathering with three sermons in addition to Sunday school. A friendly welcome awaits you.

TO FIVE HUNDRED NEW READERS IN MICHIGAN

Through the courtesy of the Michigan State Conference of the Church of God, this issue of The Restitution Herald is being placed in five hundred non-subscriber homes in the vicinity of Blanchard, Mich. To these strangers to our paper we extend a hearty greeting and echo the invitation of the Michigan Conference asking you to attend the great gathering in Blanchard which will soon be in progress.

Look over this copy of The Restitution Herald carefully, if you please, and study with your Bible in hand the articles contained in it. If you find them to teach that which is in harmony with the inspired Word, accept it; but if what is said is contrary to biblical truth, reject it. It is only the truth that saves and makes us free!

If you are pleased with the paper and interested in its contents, we would be delighted to place your name upon our list of regular subscribers. The price to new subscribers is $1.50 per year. Your subscription may be handed to Pastor C. A. Smead of the Blanchard Church, who is one of our departmental editors, who will gladly forward it to us.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

Our church extends this final, cordial invitation to all those who love the appearing of our Savior to attend our anniversary meetings, October 22 to 24, 1937.

For eleven years this building has stood as a beacon on the corner, and today is endeavoring in the fullest sense to be "The Church That Lights the Way." Come and help us celebrate our birthday.

Bro. and Sr. Skeels are enjoying a visit by their daughter, Kitty, from Oakland, Calif.

The pastor and family have parted with another daughter, Marcile, who is taking training for nurse at St. Luke's in Chicago.

The fall program for the Dorcas Society has started off with good interest, and the Tuesday night devotionals have been resumed with good attendance.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

PENNELWOOD CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

It is with pleasure that we announce that Elder Ray Abbott of Minnesota will take up the duties of pastor of the Pennellwood Church on October 24.

The Abbott family will arrive in Grand Rapids about October 21, and will make their home at 3808 Johns Ave., S. E. Will you join with us in asking God's blessing on the united effort of Bro. Abbott and the Pennellwood group!

Mrs. L. F. Slocum, Secretary.

DOLLAR DAY

Illinois Dollar Day will be Wednesday, October 27. Remember our treasurer, Harvey Krogh, Jr., Ripley, Ill., on that day with your dollars. The purpose of Dollar Day is to rid ourselves of the debt that is on our Conference dormitory.

Paul C. Johnson, President.

ARE YOU GOING TO CALIFORNIA THIS WINTER?

Brethren who plan to spend some time on the Pacific Coast this coming winter should make it a point to include Los Angeles in their itinerary and spend at least one Sunday with the Church of God in that city.

Before leaving home it would be advisable to write to the pastor of the Los Angeles church, Mrs. E. C. Railsback, 1020 S. Burlington Ave., Los Angeles, Calif., who will, we are sure, be delighted to provide all the information visiting brethren may require.

The beautiful new church, which was dedicated recently, is located at 230 W. 103rd St., and may be easily found if you should drop into the city unexpectedly on Sunday morning.

AURORA, ILLINOIS, MINISTERIAL CONFERENCE

The annual Ministerial Conference conducted by Aurora College will be held this year November 15 to 18, instead of between Christmas and New Years Day as heretofore. Several of our ministers have been present at these gatherings in the past and report very favorably of the work being done.

HOME-COMING AT KOKOMO, INDIANA

The Kokomo Church of God held its annual Home-coming and Rally Day on Sunday, September 26. Bro. William Huffer of the Hillisburg Church brought the morning sermon. Bro. O. J. Parker, the local pastor, spoke in the afternoon, and Bro. D. G. Harvey gave the final sermon of the day.

It was with great joy that we gave the hand of fellowship to Mrs. Cora Bryant, W. Markland Ave. Sr. Bryant was baptized by Bro. Parker on September 24. While attendance was not as large as in former years, those present enjoyed the day of fellowship.

Sunday, October 10, two cars of Kokomo brethren drove to Logansport, Ind., where Bro. Parker had been invited to preach in the afternoon at Christ's Mission. The writer was invited to teach the adult Sunday school class. The interest shown by these Logansport friends in the truth is encouraging. We have no membership there. This work in a new field is the first effort of the Indiana Evangelistic Committee.

D. G. Harvey.

LOUISIANA CHURCH NOTES

Our interest and attendance at church services continue to be good and we trust they will continue.

We have been having unusually large and interesting Berean classes at Ponchatoula and Blood River, and real interest is being shown by some who are not members of the church.

One of the most interesting and instructive features of our work here is our Bible study class at Happy Woods. A loyal group meets every Wednesday night and some very instructive thoughts are brought out in each lesson.

We are pleased to report that Mrs. Carrie Anthon has returned from the hospital in much better health.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

"Tell the brethren to watch!" writes a brother in a letter marked "Not for publication." But we venture to bring this warning to the attention of our readers and only regret that we are not at liberty to give you his very interesting letter in full, which points out the reasons why we should be especially alert at this time.

"Attend Berean classes and learn more about your Bible," is the excellent advice of Pastor M. W. Lyon of the Church of the Golden Rule.

Bro. and Sr. Howard Hawkins, Cleveland, Ohio, left early this month to attend a convention in Texas. They will make a tour through sections of the South before their return.

Sr. Eunice Halls of Cleveland, Ohio, was rushed to a hospital in that city on September 24 with a rapidly developing mastoid infection which required an immediate operation. We are glad to report that she is now recovering nicely at her home, to which she was able to return five days after her operation.

PLEASANT VIEW, INDIANA

A series of meetings conducted by Bro. J. H. Anderson with the Pleasant View Church of God, Hedrick, Ind., was closed Saturday evening, October 9. There was good attendance at all meetings. Much interest was shown and one baptism resulted, that of Mrs. Mitchell McLaughlin, Hedrick, Ind.

Beulah Slater, Secretary.

WATCH FOR NEXT WEEK'S HERALD

Among the outstanding features of our next issue will be a stirring editorial by Melville W. Lyon, pastor of the Golden Rule Church of God in Cleveland, Ohio. Bro. Lyon writes vigorously on one of the most vital questions of the day, that of marriage and divorce. Read our Guest Editor's article carefully and prayerfully, and may our ministers especially consider the suggestions Bro. Lyon makes concerning premarital instruction.

Another contribution of great practical and spiritual value reaches us from a new writer for our columns, Mrs. Irene Weldon Holland of Thorold, Ont. This splendidly written article is entitled, "Earnestly Examine Your self." It treats, as the title implies, of self-analysis with the purpose in view of encouraging spiritual self-improvement. It is one of the best along this line we have seen for a long time. Do not miss it! It would make profitable reading for the midweek prayer meeting.

IMPORTANCE OF RIGHT LOCATION

An item in the "Central A. C. Mission Bulletin" calls attention to the effort being made by the Advent Christian Church in Lincoln, Neb., to relocate their church in a more desirable part of the city. The editor of The Herald has had the privilege of knowing many of the Lincoln Adventists personally, having preached for them several times, and can fully agree with the statement made by the "Mission Bulletin" that there are "some very fine people" connected with that congregation. But a church cannot do effective work in a city unless it is situated in a growing residential district, which is not the case with the A. C. Church in Lincoln. The matter of location is one that should receive first consideration by those who contemplate the building of a church in any city.

PAUL'S DESIRE TO DEPART

The last lesson of the present quarter provides the believer in conditional immortality who attends a Sunday school other than his own with an opportunity to explain to others one of the passages of Scripture which is often used to prove that the righteous go to heaven when they die and that death means but a change of location from earth to a place of eternal bliss.

We suggest that the entire chapter in which the lesson is found be carefully studied in connection with the "Study of the Text," provided in the quarterly, and with the Senior and Adult and Practical Applications departments.

As further lesson material we recommend Senior Berean Bible Studies, Book Two, which provides a wealth of information and comments on this difficult subject.

OPEN THE DOOR OF YOUR HEART

Open the door of your heart, my lad,
To the angels of love and truth;
When the world is full of unnumbered joys,
In the beautiful dawn of youth.
Casting aside all things that mar,
Saying to wrong, "Depart!"
To the voices of hope that are calling you
Open the door of your heart.

Open the door of your heart, my lass,
To the things that shall abide,
To the holy thoughts that lift your soul
Like the stars at eventide.
All of the fadeless flowers that bloom
In the realms of song and art
Are yours, if you'll only give them room—
Open the door of your heart.

Open the door of your heart, my friend,
Heedless of class or creed,
When you hear the cry of a brother's voice,
The sob of a child in need.
To the shining heaven that o'er you bends
You need no map or chart,
But only the love the Master gave—
Open the door of your heart.

“Home, Sweet Home”

Provided by the love and sympathy of the entire brotherhood of the Church of God, Golden Rule Home assures to the members of its Family the comfort, security, and solicitous care which the word “home” always suggests.

Here the anxieties of earlier and more active life are laid aside forever. No threat of eviction for non-payment of rent or taxes or other indebtedness troubles the hearts of the residents of Golden Rule Home!

No doctor or hospital bills, no grocery, coal, or light bills to be met the first of the month, bring fear to the minds of the Golden Rule Home Family!

All such obligations and burdens are taken from the shoulders of these older ones immediately upon their entrance into the Home and are carried thereafter by the Golden Rule Home itself, which is amply able to bear the load on their behalf.

A hearty Christian welcome awaits all who seek the protection and lifelong support the Home provides.

Conditions of entrance into Golden Rule Home are as liberal as absolute security permits. Write for full particulars concerning the Home and its advantages. Or, better still, come and visit the Home itself and let the Family tell their own story of its advantages and comforts.

Address: Golden Rule Home, Mrs. Idona Romine, Matron, Oregon, Illinois.

Let There Be Light!

By Melville W. Lyon, Guest Editor

ONE of the most sinister aspects of our modern civilization is the increasing instability of the home. So rapidly is this disintegration taking place that there is now one divorce to every six marriages in the United States. What countless other cases never reach the divorce courts, we can only surmise. But this peril grows constantly more menacing. It is reaching out into the churches, yes, even into the Church of God!

Within the membership of the writer's own local church there are seven instances of broken homes, and many more in the circle of his acquaintance. One girl, not yet out of high school, a member of the church, and whose parents are members, ran away and was married to a man many years her senior. With his still unborn child she left him, returned to her parents, gave birth to the baby, and now a divorce suit is pending. This is a fair sample of the kind of thing that is going on all the time. Isn't it about time some voice was raised in protest?

But why condemn divorce without doing something constructive to prevent it? The time to prevent broken homes is before marriage, not after! We solemnly admonish our young people at the altar that they must not enter the sacred bond "lightly and unadvisedly," but to whom can they go to be advised? Are these impressive words only an empty sham?

What frightful sacrifices do we lay on the altar of ignorance! We are careful to school our children in the three "Rs," we are diligent to educate them well for the business or professional world, for society or for a hundred other things, but for the most important business of all, their marriage, we seem to think they need no preparation! Months and years given over to learning how to make a living, but none whatever to learning how to make a life! Small wonder so many make a mess of their marriage, forced as they are to blunder on, somehow, with only their instinct to guide them through the treacherous, unknown land they must tread together.

The day is past when matters of sex were things to be ashamed of, and not to be spoken of in polite society. At last the light is breaking, and it is high time! If it be sin for our young people to lightly leave one (Please turn to page 11)

Pertinent Comments on the News of the Day

Bomb Explodes in Jerusalem

"Fire and brimstone, and an horrible tempest: this shall be the portion of their cup."—Psalm 11:6.

JERUSALEM, Oct. 19.—A terrific bomb explosion in the Shimon Hezadik oriental Jewish quarter tonight shattered the brief lull in the Palestine disorders. Although no casualties were reported, the presence of blood, spattered on the street, was taken by police as indication that the bomber had been wounded and fled.

Another outbreak occurred when a fusillade of shots was fired at a Jewish bus traveling from Haifa to Jerusalem. British troops blew up three Arab houses at Daharia, near Hebron, in reprisal for an Arab raid yesterday on a police arsenal in which rifles were stolen.

Marriage After Divorce

"Whosoever marrieth her that is put away from her husband committeth adultery."—Luke 16:18.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Oct. 23.—"Did Jesus step out of His usual prophetic role to legislate on the matter of marriage and divorce?" Such is the question which aroused prolonged debate among the twenty thousand bishops, deputies, and other conventioners assembled here in the fifty-second triennial convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

According to The Digest, the House of Bishops and the House of Lay and Clerical Deputies had been plunged into bitter polemics over the issue for two weeks. The "reform" measure, presented by the Rt. Rev. Herman Page, Bishop of Michigan and chairman of the church Commission on Marriage and Divorce, proposed to add a new section to Canon 41, placing, with certain general restrictions, complete authority on the divorce question in the hands of the individual bishop.

"Briefly, it would allow remarriage of a person divorced for any cause by a civil court, after one year had elapsed, upon the approval of the bishop," reports The Digest.

"Lined up in opposition was a formidable group represented in a manifesto signed by 1,300 clergies, said to number a fourth of all priests in the sect. Outstanding among them was Bishop William T. Manning of New York."

The Episcopal Church, both in England and America, has thus far shown strong opposition to the lowering of the bars against remarriage of divorced persons. The question over which the opinions of theologians differ is this: When Jesus gave the instruction recorded in Luke 16:18, was He laying down a definite law, or was He simply giving an admonition? Many thoughtful students insist that Jesus' statement here is as personal and definite as was His command to "turn the other cheek."

It is suggested that the reader consider well the arguments contained in the guest editorial on the front page of this issue of THE RESTITUTION HERALD.

Quake Shakes Palestine

"But the Lord was not in the earthquake."—1 Kings 19:11.

JERUSALEM, Oct. 12.—A slight earth tremor was felt this morning at Jerusalem, Jericho, and Beersheba. No damage was reported. The tremor swayed older buildings, including the United States Consulate here, from which clerks rushed into the streets.

"But the Lord was not in the earthquake!" The time will come, however, when another and mightier tremor will shake the Holy City and the Holy Land from one end to the other and "the desire of all nations shall come" (Hag. 2:7), even the Lord of glory and the Prince of everlasting peace! For it will be under such conditions of distress and fear that the words of Zechariah 14:5 shall be fulfilled: "Ye shall flee, like as ye fled from before the earthquake in the days of Uzziah king of Judah: and the Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee."

Tel Aviv Harbor Completed

"The ships of Tarshish did sing of thee."—Ezek. 27:25.

TEL AVIV, Palestine, Oct. 7.—A year and four months after the first Jewish port was created here, plans have been completed by the Government to permit the debarkation of passengers at the Tel Aviv harbor. The actual landing of passengers is expected to begin very shortly. The project was inaugurated in May, 1936, when an Arab strike tied up activities at the near-by port of Jaffa. First, only limited classes of goods were permitted to be unloaded at the new port, but eventually all classes of cargo were included. With the inclusion of passenger debarkation, the port is expected to become a rival to Haifa Harbor in many classifications of freight and passenger traffic.—The Bible Advocate.

Earnestly Examine Yourself

By Irene Weldon Holland

AS THE fall and winter work approaches us in our various phases of church activities, I cannot seem to refrain from drawing attention to a few facts necessary for the advancement of God's work.

Do you, dear reader, ever sit down in the quietude of your own room and truly take stock of yourself?

No one can do this for you, because you alone know your innermost thoughts and inclinations. You may fool others concerning your intentions and sincerity, but if you give yourself an impartial matter-of-fact examination you will be surprised how much it will help you to improve as a Christian.

We will suppose you have a Sunday school class. Have you thought of what an important place you are filling, trying to teach the Word of God to others? You might ask yourself a few such questions as these: Do I beseech God to give me wisdom and understanding in the leading of my class? Do I attend Sunday school, permitting sickness alone to cause my absence? Do I watch each day of the week for things that will be of help and interest to my class members? Is the meeting with my class so uppermost in my heart that I will not permit things of a worldly nature to cause me to be absent from my class meetings or gatherings? Do I truly try to live, as well as teach, the life of Christ?

If you are not a teacher, perhaps you belong to the choir. Being a choir member should make one feel that he has a very sacred and important part to take in the church services. You are taking upon yourself the responsibility of singing God's praises. These following questions might help you to decide to serve your choir more faithfully:

Do I attend rehearsals on time and regularly, unless illness prevents? Do I realize that I am selfishly hindering the others if I am not there to contribute my part, all being necessary to complete the whole? Can my minister always count on my being in my place to assist him in the musical part of the service? Do I truly love God and Jesus enough to feel it a privilege to serve in sacred song?

If you do not teach or sing you may be a member of a Sunday school class or of a special Bible class. In this case, what kind of a member are you? You know that it takes the combined efforts of all the members to make a successful class, but do you realize that no one but yourself can fulfill your particular responsibility to that class? Try asking yourself these questions about the class you belong to:

Do I take time or interest enough in the lesson to study it before going to class? Do I make it a point to regularly attend the study periods of my class as well as the social activities? Am I doing all I can to make my class a success, or, in other words, what kind of a class would my class be if every member were just like me? If it is a weekly Bible class I belong to, do I set that evening apart entirely for that purpose? Am I spiritually growing to the extent that I would rather be at study than in pursuit of worldly amusements? Do I appreciate the privilege of being able to enjoy fellowship with those of like precious faith? Do I take time to study my lesson or are other things always permitted to crowd Bible study out?

Perhaps you are a member of a church but not active in any special branches of the work. You may feel sometimes that it does not matter very much whether you attend services regularly or not. But it does!

You need the help and spiritual food you receive when in attendance, and your pastor is filled with contented happiness when he sees all the members of his flock in their accustomed places. Then, too, if you are irregular in your church attendance, you are setting an example that is sure to influence others in the same direction. It might be to your advantage to sincerely question yourself as follows:

Am I in the habit of going to church only when I feel so inclined and when I have nothing more desirable to do? Do I permit the slightest excuse to keep me away from church service? Do I go to church desiring to give and to assist in every way possible, or do I selfishly take all that is given and then wonder if it was worth my while to attend or not? If the sermon did not particularly appeal to me, do I realize it might be exactly what my brother or sister needed? Do I hurry away as soon as the service is over, or do I try to increase Christian fellowship by a hearty handshake and a cheery word to the others in attendance?

In closing there is one more thing I would like to mention. Sunday company is so frequently the excuse given for missing church service. If you have Sunday guests and they are sincere Christians, they will no doubt depart in time to attend their own church (Please turn to page 11)

Teach Me Thy Will

Search me, O God, and know my heart,
Try ev'ry thought each day;
Bid ev'ry evil thing depart,
Lead me in Thine own way.

Make me to hide Thy blessed Word,
Deep written on my heart,
Then shall I keep from sin, O Lord,
Never from Thee depart!

Give me an understanding heart,
That I may know Thy will,
Thy Spirit, Lord, to me impart,
Thy law in me fulfill.

Teach me to do Thy will, O Lord,
Teach me to know Thy way,
Help me to walk in Thy perfect will,
And there to live each day.

—C. S. Kauffman.

The European Checkerboard

RECENT European diplomatic discussions may be compared to a huge checkerboard. Nations are changing alliances, treaties, and policies with such rapidity that uncertainty exists in the various capitals of Europe. Each country fearfully awaits the next move of its neighbor. Gun is matched with gun, cannon with cannon, plane with plane, and army with army. Each endeavors to outwit its rival in armament and diplomacy as it flitters about the checkerboard, moving backward and forward, hoping to bolster alliances and augment prestige.

The Spanish struggle is now, more than ever, a contest between two players on the European checkerboard: namely, Fascism and Communism. Britain stands between the players trying to keep them from openly coming to blows and from drawing the spectators into a general fracas. This contest between these rival systems was recognized recently by the British Prime Minister, Neville Chamberlain, in a speech before the House of Commons. He remarked, "If some country or government, representing one of these two ideas, attempted to intervene beyond a certain point, then some other country taking an opposite view would find it difficult, if not impossible, to keep from joining, and a conflict may be started of which no man can see the end."

Recent developments in the Spanish situation do not encourage hope for an early settlement of peace. The breakdown of the nonintervention policy, together with the ministerial crisis in France, has left the Powers at odds. No longer is it possible that Italy is neutral, and charges of unneutral conduct and unneutral attitude have been openly directed at Great Britain, France, and Germany. It would be profitless to examine the charges in detail. Italy and Germany are determined to prevent the establishment of a Socialist or Bolshevik regime in Spain, while France and Russia appear equally determined that Spain be spared a Fascist dictator. The British policy appears to have been directed toward isolating the war, avoiding recognition of the Franco forces as belligerents, and restricting as far as practicable the entry of arms for either side.

The attitude of Germany and Italy has been different. In neither country has there been any concealment of official sympathy for the insurgents, and formal cooperation in a joint patrol of the Spanish coast and naval watchfulness at Spanish ports have not prevented German and Italian volunteers and supplies from entering the country. Loyalist attacks on German and Italian vessels have intensified hostility to the Madrid Government, and the fall of Bilbao has encouraged the expectation of an ultimate insurgent success. Mussolini boasts openly he will not withdraw a man from Spain until Franco wins. Hitler asserts frankly that access to the ore in the Spanish mines is of vital interest to the Reich. France threatens to throw her frontiers wide open to aid the Loyalists. The attitude of Portugal has been a further factor of importance, for not only has Portugal objected strongly to an allied patrol and to supervision of its frontier by representatives of the London Nonintervention Committee, but the frontier itself touches a part of Spain which is in possession of the insurgents.

Premier Mussolini and Chancellor Hitler are determined to prevent the spread of Bolshevism in Europe. With the transforming of Soviet Russia into a dictatorship thinly veneered with Communism, and the forcible suppression of Communism and Socialism in Italy and the Reich, the victory of General Franco would go far to banish the Bolshevik menace and open the way to further advances of Fascism. And it is Fascism that is on the march in Europe. More and more, as economic pressure increases and political government shows weakness, the methods and principles of democratic and representative government are being set to one side and those of dictatorship adopted. The establishment of a Fascist regime in Spain would add another to the countries in which popular government has been displaced and the totalitarian state firmly planted.

Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden warned that, while Britain takes no side in the internal struggle, she will not permit a change in the status or territorial integrity of a country whose coasts impinge on the main artery of the empire.

Anne O'Hare McCormick, Pulitzer prize winner, writes in the New York Times that the British Foreign Secretary "declared that Britain cannot be indifferent where her national interests are concerned." She continues, "This declaration serves to recall the real crux of the Spanish situation to the attention of those distracted by the ideological campaign. Whatever the Spaniards are fighting for or against, for the outside Powers the conflict is essentially a struggle over the Mediterranean, of a piece with the Ethiopian affair, the competition for Morocco, the secret bargains of the World War. Only when viewed from this angle do the international moves become more understandable.

"As the pretense of nonintervention breaks down, even its critics begin to see the advantage of farce compared to the tragedy that may follow. Those who yesterday taunted the British for keeping up the fiction are today demanding why they seem ready to face facts.

FARCE PREFERABLE TO TRAGEDY

"After months of keeping nonintervention alive with an oxygen tank, she seems prepared at last to risk its dissolution.

"One reason for this abrupt stiffening of the British attitude is that the dictators have overplayed their hand. By counting too loudly on Franco's victory (the capture of Bilbao) and simultaneously withdrawing from the naval patrol, they have rung the alarm bell in England,"

The strained international relations resulting from the Spanish situation keep statesmen scurrying about to keep Europe from plunging into another war. They realize that peace treaties, diplomatic moves, and even the League of Nations are little more than names and that in the event of trouble each must depend upon their individual resources. Nations are arming at an accelerated pace as never before seen in history.

Nations fear the strength of potential enemies in time of war. Especially are the Russian and Italian armies the military question marks of Europe. There is no doubt of the Englishman's bulldog tenacity nor of his technical ca-capacity, Germany's military machine may be the nemesis of the Continent, and the Frenchman's fiery courage and martial ability are well known.

But the Red army is as much of an enigma—to Western minds—as the land which gave it birth. There is about its big battalions an air of mystery which none of the world's military attaches have been able to penetrate. Its army of about 1,600,000 men (including the army, navy, air force, border guards, and secret police) is the world's largest; its tank force of 4,500 is the world's largest; its flying fleet is the world's largest; in mass power it should be the world's

The Grace of God

By T. A. Drinkard

"For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men."—Titus 2:11.

THROUGH the manifestation of the grace of God salvation is brought near to men and women to lift them up to a higher plane of life, a life contingent upon the great promises of God through Christ the Son.

By the grace or favor of God salvation is brought to all. That is, God favors "all men" with the offer of salvation, and men can accept or reject this gracious provision as they choose. Through the grace of God we are taught that, "denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world" (v. 12). Not only this, but it teaches us to look for the crowning sequel of our hope, "the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Saviour Jesus Christ" (v. 13). Here is what the grace of God teaches us.

Can we receive this divine favor if we choose? If so, and we accept the provision which comes to us through the grace of God, then we are blessed for so doing. Can we reject it? If we do so, then we reject the grace of God in its operation.

The salvation that is offered us through the grace of God is conditional, as the Scriptures clearly show in Hebrews 5:9: "And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him." If salvation is for "all that obey him" then those that fail to obey Him are not to enjoy the blessings of the grace of God.

In harmony with this thought the Apostle Paul says, "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God" (Eph. 2:8). You will note that "by grace are ye saved through faith." The grace of God operates "through faith" in saving men and women. And this faith comes "by hearing" the Word of God (Rom. 10:17).

God has planned to do His part, and has left it to man to do his part. Through the grace of God we are taught, and it is for us to do our part by accepting that teaching, and receiving the promised blessing (John 6:45). The salvation of Ephesians 2:8 is "the gift of God . . . through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom. 6:23).

True indeed, this salvation did not, and does not, come by way of the works of man (Eph. 2:9; Gal. 5:19-21), but by way of the grace of God. But Paul did not mean to convey the idea that there is nothing for us to do, that we are not to work in Christian service, and to perfect our faith by works of righteousness. The Scripture affirms that "faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone" (James 2:17). And the same authority says that Abraham was "justified by works," because "by works was faith made perfect" (James 2:21, 22). And it is written, "Being justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus" (Rom. 3:24). But we cannot be justified by grace except "through faith," and "through the redemption" that is found in Jesus Christ. And again, "We have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace" (Eph. 1:7). Through the riches of "his grace" we are offered the "forgiveness of sins," which means salvation through Christ Jesus the Son of God.

The transforming power of the grace of God is manifested in the daily walk of His people. And the best evidence of Christianity is the Christian, and he is such because the grace of God has provided these blessings for him, and for all others who choose to do the will of God. And where sin abounds, the grace of God is found seeking and saving the lost (Rom. 5:20; Luke 19:10). But because this is true we are not to "sin, that grace may abound" (Rom. 6:1), for sin is not of God, neither does He use it to teach man the way of salvation which comes to us through Christ the Redeemer.

Palestine—the Coveted Land

“AND a highway shall be there, and a way, and it shall be called The way of holiness; the unclean shall not pass over it; but it shall be for those: the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein. . . . But the redeemed shall walk there” (Isa. 35:8, 9).

The eyes of the world are upon Palestine. At the present it is the scene of intense Jewish activity concerning national settlement schemes, agriculture, education, politics, etc., making for phenomenal development wherever the Jew has gained a foothold. On the other hand, this activity is inflaming the Arab, who is much less enlightened, to jealousy, hatred, implacability, and even murder.

There is also grave aggravation of the situation through Italian propaganda; feverishly prosecuted with the object of furthering the ambition of Mussolini to restore the Roman Empire, which included all the countries adjacent to the Mediterranean.

Added to these there are the interested Arabs of Irak, Hejaz, Ethiopia, and Syria, blood relatives of the Palestine Arab and warm in sympathy with their brethren in the turmoil.

Britain desires to adequately administer the Mandate, which gives the Jews the right again to build a home in Palestine, and whose viewpoint is that of “original owners,” whose land has been wrongfully taken from them, and the Arabs’ unwillingness to either compromise or budge, go to the making of the class problem of the Near East.

The Royal Commission advises the partitioning of the land, giving the Valley of Jezreel and a portion north of the Sea of Galilee, and the fertile coastlands to the Jews, the Arabs to receive the rest, excepting the Jerusalem area, with a corridor to the sea, and Nazareth: these sacred places to be held still under the Mandate. So far Zionists will have none of it, and the Arabs complain that the best land is being given to the Jews, omitting to acknowledge that this land has been made productive solely by Jewish efforts and money.

JEWISH INTENTIONS

There can be no doubt about Jewish intentions. Their talk is all one way, or silence. Said a famous Jew: “Every phase of the reconstruction is in the beginning, but all the beginnings have been made. The dream cherished by a nation for two thousand years is being fulfilled step by step.”

It is most interesting and informative to watch the progress: swift, determined, and amazingly successful. All are at work, girls and women sharing the farming labor with the men. Denuded land is smiling again with trees and grain and fruit. While the Arab was content with a six-inch rainfall, the Jew bores for water and finds an abundant supply.

Three peoples are important in Palestine—the English, the Jews, and the Arabs. Three languages are spoken and written; and the Hebrew of commerce is printed in the vowelless Hebrew of long ago. Three holy days are kept: Friday by the Arabs, Saturday by the Jews, and Sunday by the Christians.

Palestine is again “on the map,” the gateway to the West and to the East, and coveted by nearly every strong power of the world today. From the West it is the gateway to Irak, Iran, Afghanistan, India, China, Japan, Egypt, and all Africa. To these countries access from Palestine is easy and is developing rapidly.

From the East it is the gateway to Europe and the Mediterranean. It is the natural center for world rule, and the time is coming when, under the beneficent rule of the Messiah, the prophecy of Micah will be fulfilled: “Out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of Jehovah from Jerusalem: and he will judge among great peoples, and will decide concerning strong nations afar off: and they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruninghooks; and nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more” (Micah 4:2, 3, R. V.).

Much yet hidden in the counsels of the Most High is to happen in Jerusalem and the land before this most desirable and longed-for condition obtains—before the “highway of holiness” is opened for the redeemed of Israel and all nations to walk upon. But it is surely coming, for God’s Word cannot be broken, and the present clash of interests is but the prelude to great and momentous happenings in the land of Palestine.

JUDGMENT AND BLESSING

As we have before noted, much of the interest in the second coming is fixed upon the translation of the church, but we must not neglect the second phase, the “unveiling” of the Lord for judgment, the deliverance of Israel, and the salvation of the whole world.

The salvation of the world depends upon the saving and restoration of Israel, for the covenant with Abraham declares, “In thee . . . every family of the earth shall be blessed.” This is more than the blessings of Abraham shared by the Gentiles in times past through Christ, for it includes the dissemination of truth by a redeemed Israel, by which, under Messianic rulership, “righteousness shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.” This, too, is a Jewish hope, and their proud boast now is that they have given to the world "the law of the Lord."

The judgment of the world precedes the kingdom—"He will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff with fire unquenchable" (Matt. 3:12). The setting up of the kingdom is synonymous with the deliverance of Israel. At His "unveiling" He comes to Zion as the Deliverer to "turn away ungodliness from Jacob" (Rom. 11:26). This great event is nearing and we rejoice that our "salvation is nearer than when we believed."

There are three phases of experience for Israel before they enjoy their great glory, and their final safety as a nation does not depend upon their righteousness but upon God's Word. There is, however, one great condition laid down. Israel must "repent." They must part company with their "unbelief," and the Scriptures clearly indicate
(Please turn to page 10)

God's Purpose With Israel

ALL Christians will agree that the study of the Scriptures is of vital importance; but many in sympathy with the general thesis fail to remember the admonition of Peter (2 Peter 1:19)—that we should give heed to the word of prophecy, as to a lamp shining in a dark place. We find ourselves, therefore, inevitably committed to an examination of the divine purposes with Israel. Is it still right to speak of the "covenant people"? Are unbelieving Jews and Gentiles to be massed together, since the days of the apostles, or was Paul right in distinguishing between the Jews, the Greeks, and the church of God (1 Cor. 10:32)? Why, since the days of Titus and Julius Severus have the Jews, resisting the melting pot of fusion of their world-wide dispersion, preserved their racial identity and national consciousness? The Prophet Jeremiah voices the consistent testimony of the Bible: "He that scattered Israel will gather him" (Jer. 31:10), but endless passages might be quoted.

Unquestionably, God's primary purpose with Israel was—and still is—to make the covenant nation the channel of the world's salvation: "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." The Redeemer Himself declared that salvation is of the Jews (John 4:22). Hence the long and wonderful history of Israel, interwoven as it is with miraculous interposition, significant ritual, amazing prophecy, and providential blessing as well as judgment. This eventuated in a set-up of privilege and salvability which Paul calls the commonwealth of Israel—to which the once separated and alienated Gentiles were brought nigh (Eph. 2:13). Or, as he elsewhere puts it, Gentile branches have been grafted into the Jewish olive tree, while the Jewish branches, now broken off, shall be grafted in again.

Endless confusion would be avoided if good people would take the trouble to distinguish between the Jew by race, and the Jew considered in the religious sense—in whom God's saving Abrahamic purposes come to flower. See how Paul says that the Gentiles have been made partakers of Israel's spiritual things (Rom. 15:22). In this religious sense, believing Jews, such as Nathanael, are rightly designated Israelites indeed. And here let it be noted that on this religious plane of true faith in the divine Redeemer, there is neither Jew nor Greek, bond nor free, male nor female (Gal. 3:28).

But just here, questions arise. Did the pantheistic system of Spinoza, which provoked the excommunication of the synagogue, make him other than a Jew? Were not Neander, Edersheim, Schereschewsky, Saphir, Bar, and Leopold Cohn, still Jews, after they had recognized Jesus of Nazareth the Son of God and King of Israel? It is as plain as anything can well be that there is, as Paul puts it, an Israel after the flesh (1 Cor. 10:18).

A few high points in a deeply interesting and important subject are all that can be added at this time.

1. We all forget quite too easily the great truth—Calvinistic as it is—that God is an absolute Sovereign. Who are we, that we should reply against God? Is it not best to learn His will from His holy Word? Of old, the Jewish teachers made void the Word of God through their tradition. Are we never in danger of doing the same because we give our pet theological systems precedence? What if so great a man as Charles Hodge did regard a glorious future for national Israel with disapproval? The question is, What are we to do with God's declared purposes (as in Jeremiah 31:10)? Five minutes' reading of the law is worth more than hours spent in theological discussion.

2. Next, it is of the first importance to remember that the gifts of God are without repentance (Rom. 11:29). All will be ready to agree that the promise of salvation made to Abraham and his seed stands fast forever, not invalidated in the least because of the parenthesis of the legal dispensation—as we see from the Apostle's splendid argument in Galatians 3. But let us not forget that these are not the only promises made by Jehovah to His friend Abraham. God made unconditional promises of the land to him—the land of Canaan—and to his seed, as anyone can see by simply referring to Genesis 12:7; 13:14, 15; and especially 17:8. Had we not surely best go slow before we say that God will not or cannot do just as He says He will do?

3. "But does not all this involve a future earthly kingdom for Christ, as well as heavenly rulership?" Of course it does—although we may not be able to do more than merely glimpse it. The angel announced to the blessed virgin that Jesus should have the throne of His father David (Luke 1:2). Was he wrong? "That means no more than the glory of the now exalted Redeemer." Not so; David's throne is not in heaven: "David ascended not into the heavens" (Acts 2:34). Furthermore, did not our Lord promise the apostles that they should sit on thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel (Matt. 19:28)? He did promise this, if you please, and He promised this as the King of Israel (remember the title placed above His cross)—as the King of Israel rejected by the nation (John 19:15). There are those who think that the Lord Jesus is now sitting upon the throne of His glory, that we are now in the "regeneration," and that the apostles are reigning spiritually with Him. But alas for the masters of Israel! In Hebrews 2:8 we learn that "we see not yet all things put under him." Therefore, greatly exalted as He now is, His enemies are not yet made His footstool. The time of His glory is the time of His coming with the angels (Matt. 16:27); and He Himself says that then (Greek, tote) shall He reward every man according to his works. Therefore, then shall the apostles receive their thrones.

"I will give righteousness in Zion, and my glory to Israel" (Isa. 46:13).

What's Doing?

ANNOUNCEMENT in News-Week states that France is planning to turn Madagascar into a home for three million Jews, mostly refugees from Poland. The Minister of Colonies has approved the plan.

Even antigod governments cannot get along without Bible standards of conduct. It is reported that President Cardenas of Mexico has recently proposed a law prohibiting the sale of alcoholic liquors on Fridays, Saturdays, and Sundays of each week, and the prohibition of the manufacture of liquors in Indian zones. All agencies of the Government are preaching temperance. Even the electric light bills carry the slogan, "Alcoholism is the most stubborn and fearful enemy of progress." It is also proposed to expel all foreigners who persist in the illegal sale or transportation of liquor.

According to Capper's Weekly, a recent questionnaire on contents of the Bible was sent to 18,434 high school students in the State of Virginia. Of this number 16,000 were unable to name more than three prophets of the Old Testament; 12,000 could not name the four Gospels correctly; and 10,000 did not know as many as three of the twelve disciples.

"Italy, because of her new policy of encouraging Moslems in the hope that trouble may be made for England, is encouraging the Ethiopian Moslems against the Coptic Church in Ethiopia. There seems to be almost a union of Romanism and Islam against the Coptic Church. The Government has been willing to pay for the reconstruction of mosques, both in Ethiopia and in Libya, where Mussolini recently declared himself to be 'the protector of Islam.'"

It is reported that Geoffrey Lloyd told the House of Commons that British Government factories already have turned out nine million gas masks for the civilian population in case of war. This, said Mr. Lloyd, is "a far greater number" than any other government in the world has supplied to its people.

"Religious Rome has not changed any," observes Re- demption Tidings. "In 1845 Tregelles sought to examine the Vatican Manuscript of the Bible. Seeing that Rome prided herself as being the keeper of Holy Writ, he did expect to have the opportunity of making some corrections therefrom to our Revised Version. But he was denied that opportunity. In 1936 the 'Book Fair' in Rome prohibited the display of the Bible and would not allow any to be sold. The governor of Rome signed the edict, thus showing the alliance that now exists between political and religious Rome."

Evangelical-Crusader reports that the judges of the World Court, sitting at The Hague, will soon receive a request for an opinion on a plan for a United States of the World. It will be borne by a company of youths, starting on its pilgrimage from South America, and adding new recruits as it progresses westward around the globe to the Dutch capital. The plan is based on the conviction, held by these young people of many nations, that "a United States of the World must ultimately become a fact, if humanity is not to sink into a state of savagery."

General Chiang has said that more missionaries from America are needed in China, trained in education, in rural reconstruction, and cooperative effort, but "above all, filled with the knowledge and love of Jesus Christ and the zeal of his service." He asks for the help of the Christians in America "that we may not fail Christ in His purpose for China."

According to Christian Faith and Life, "Austria recently passed a new law that requires every citizen to belong to some church. Many of those not belonging to any church applied to the Protestant churches for admission. As these churches require a course of instruction in the Scriptures for all candidates this has resulted in greatly increased Bible study, with the result that many of these candidates have been soundly converted."

"A tragic evidence of the moral breakdown in our national life is the increasing number of young people of high school age who are addicts of a drug, marijuana, which grows as a weed in many states," reports Revelation. "This narcotic is best known as hashish, and is used in the form of cigarettes sold widely to high school students. The effect of the drug is unpredictable. A user may become a brilliant philosopher or a murderer, but in any case it deprives the addict of all moral sense. Marijuana breeds criminals rapidly, and in spite of Federal attempts at regulation the traffic is growing by leaps and bounds. Bible students know that a characteristic of the end times is moral degeneracy and lack of self-control. 'For men shall be . . . incontinent . . . lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God . . . led away with divers lusts' (2 Tim. 3:2-6).'

Preachers' Titles

By Elizabeth A. Reed

A PRIEST of the English Established Church takes occasion in the (London) Daily News to assert the exclusive claim of his class to the title of "Reverend." Here is his protest:

"If dissenting ministers like to be called 'Reverend,' by all means let them be called so, but I will drop my 'Reverend.' We cannot both bear the same title any more than a quack can bear the title of 'Doctor' in the face of legitimate M.R.C.S. (In America, M.D.) I have paid a large sum of money for my education. I have taken my degrees at Oxford. I have received Episcopal ordination, and now, for I have no business interests, I get about the ordinary wages of a good carpenter, or mason; but then, I am a priest of the regular church, and as such have a standing and a name.

"Why should those who have constituted themselves ministers, and taken to themselves the title of 'Reverend,' be placed side by side with those who have been 'lawfully called'? It is not fair. It is not liberal. The same path is open to all. But if a man is called 'Reverend' merely because he sets up preaching, the sooner the church is disestablished and the clergy allowed to make a title for themselves, so much the better."

Here is a modest (?) man who assumes the almost exclusive right to bear an appellation which is used in the Bible but once, and then is applied only to the Eternal Father (Psalm 3:9).

And why does he claim it? Because he has paid for it!

Paid who? Has God received the money and bartered His own name to a man who, like Simon Magnus, is willing to pay for what he receives?

He does not claim that God granted him what he so haughtily assumes. But he has "taken . . . degrees at Oxford," he has "received Episcopal ordination," therefore, he cannot associate with dissenting (Protestant) ministers, or be placed side by side with those who are not "lawfully called."

He might have obtained a much better education if he had taken his degrees in the school of Christ instead of Oxford, and had he been ordained of God instead of a bishop he would have found the commands, to "give no flattering titles unto men," "be ye not called Rabbi," and many others of similar import.

Can this gentleman imagine the fishermen of Galilee wearing gown and surplice and assuming titles to give dignity to themselves and their calling? If Paul should be raised from the dead and go through the streets of London proclaiming his message—if his voice should thrill the multitude as from Mars' Hill, and ring through English prisons as it rung before in the old Philippian jail—this modern "churchman" would draw his priestly petticoats around him and go by "on the other side"!

But his sneers would affect Paul as much as they would chain the wind or ocean wave, and the fearless Apostle would still declare in the very face of church dignitaries, "After the way which ye call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers."

Oh, that the professed ministers of Christ would be content to wait for their honors until they hear the welcome plaudit, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant"! Surely they forget sometimes that the world is in more danger from arrogance than from an excess of that charity which "vaunteth not itself" and "is not puffed up."

The apostles sought to magnify the work of the ministry, but they did not strive to do it by exalting themselves. We hear nothing of the "Rev. Mr. John," the "Apostle Peter, D.D.," or the "Rt. Rev. Dr. Paul"! They did not even call themselves "Elder," which, though more modest, is just as useless and simple as "Reverend."

No, these modest fishers of men wore no canonical robes, or broad phylacteries; neither did they advertise that they were "preachers" by choking themselves with white cravats, or walking through the streets in a style which indicated that they had stiff spinal columns!

They were straightforward, honest men, men of muscle and of sinew, who were not ashamed of their plain names or of the earnest message they bore. They magnified the work by "preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ." And though the pulse of nations throbbed quicker before his words, the Apostle Paul exclaims in the humility of his soul, "For though I preach the gospel, I have nothing to glory of."

the method of procedure whereby this is to be accomplished.

THE INVIOABLE WORD

We are well acquainted with the covenants by which God covenanted to do all these things for Israel. And this was confirmed by an oath. Now an oath is most binding. Men swear to do a thing under penalties of judgment. But not so God. "When God made promise to Abraham, because He could swear by no greater, He swore by himself, . . . saying, Surely blessing I will bless thee, and multiplying I will multiply thee . . . For men verily swear by the greater: and an oath for confirmation is to them an end of all strife. Wherein God, willing more abundantly to shew unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath. That by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us" (Heb. 6:13-18).

These words were addressed to Christian Jews to remind them of their inheritance in Abraham, which is "the hope set before" them. And the realization of that hope for Israel is steadily drawing near.

Today we see the first process: Israel being driven back to their land. The world situation for them is extraordinary. They cannot help themselves. As one country after another becomes intolerant of them their eyes turn to their ancient home, Palestine, where, unmistakably, they now have a right to go. They are being driven back, but their revived national aims coincide with the process. We are witnessing the miracle of the age—Israel going back to the "land of promise." But they are going back in unbelief.

The second process is described in Jeremiah, and referred to by our Lord, and depicted in some measure in the Revelation. It is called "Jacob's trouble."

"And these are the words Jehovah spake concerning Israel and concerning Judah. For thus saith the Lord: We have heard a voice of trembling, of fear, and not of peace. . . . I see every man with his hands on his loins, as a woman in travail, and all faces are turned into paleness. Alas, for the day is great, so that none is like it: it is even the time of Jacob's trouble; but he shall be saved out of it" (Jer. 30:4-11).

Our Lord, speaking of those days, said: "For there shall be great tribulation, such as hath not been seen from the beginning of the world until now, no, nor ever shall be. And except those days had been shortened, no flesh would have been saved: but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened" (Matt. 24:21, 22).

This is the second process—the humbling and breaking of Israel, out of which experience they shall love the Lord their God and Jesus Christ whom He hath sent.

"I will heal their backslidings, I will love them freely; for mine anger is turned away from him" (Hosea 14:4).

The third process is their reward, restoration to freedom and safety in the land. "Every man under his own vine and fig tree." The "house of David," now "desolate," will be reestablished under Messiah's reign. Their city rebuilt and glorious, their temple reerected on Mount Zion, and all nations flowing into Jerusalem for worship!

We, who know the Word of God, and are blessed with spiritual enlightenment by the Holy Spirit, have come to know these things and can watch the processes of the divine dispensations not only for Israel but for the church and for the world. Great things are imminent.

HIGHWAYS

Palestine is a highway to the East and West now, but there are to be highways to the land, of deep significance, in the future.

Isaiah speaks of a "way of holiness" in a highway there, when weeping is past and the joy of the "morning" of God's day has come. The language is most beautiful: "And the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come with singing unto Zion; and everlasting joy shall be upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away" (Isa. 35:5-10).

There will also be a "highway" to the land for war. "Proclaim ye this among the nations: Prepare for war; stir up the mighty men; let all the men of war draw near, let them come up" (Joel 3:9-13).

Then follows a fearful picture of divine judgment. Jerusalem has been the subject of many battles, and in its vicinity, the Valley of Jehoshaphat, Jehovah will settle forever the wars of the nations, and then shall Jerusalem become indeed the "place of peace."

There will be also highways out of the land to all the world in the day when God sets up His kingdom. Just as streams of water flowing from the temple of God during the millennial period typify the abounding outflow of the blessing of God, so do they typify that grace which shall flow from Jerusalem to all the world in that glorious time.

How pleasant it is to serve the Lord and to sit "beneath his shadow with great delight," and be able to see in these great stirrings of the last days of this age the outworking of the divine purpose and to know that He is on the way!

THE EUROPEAN CHECKERBOARD

most impressive army. But with internal trouble gripping the Soviet, and with agitation on its Siberian border, its untried fighting ability is unknown. Yet the armies of the Soviet and of Il Duce are important pawns in the dangerous checker game of politics that Europe is now playing, and upon their reputation and their prestige—or lack of it—may depend not only the national destinies of two countries but the future history of the Continent.

Even peace-loving nations such as England are being drawn into the armament race leading to war. No nation is able to keep from it because the world today is experiencing the fulfillment of the prophecy made centuries ago. Although statesmen are crusading for peace, the present unparalleled war preparations were predicted by the Old Testament prophet, Joel, "Prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near; let them come up: beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruninghooks into spears: let the weak say, I am strong. Assemble yourselves, and come, all ye heathen, and gather yourselves together round about: thither cause thy mighty ones to come down" (Joel 3:9-11).

Even though men crave peace, though men are anxiously hoping that prosperity may yet abound, this graphic picture points unerringly to the present period of earth's history when the mighty call to arms is resounding throughout the world.

Christ prophesied the condition of the world immediately before His return when He said, "And upon the earth" there shall be "distress of nations, with perplexity," and "men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth" (Luke 21:25, 26).

Dear reader, Christ is calling upon you to sound an alarm and to solicit friends for citizenship in the homeland of the redeemed, when "nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more" (Isa. 2:4).

The Lord is warning the children of men among the nations today, to make their peace, their calling, and their election sure with God.

Will you heed His call?—Donald W. McKay in Signs of the Times.

mate to marry another, is it not the greater sin to keep silent when we could have informed them in time to prevent such tragedies?

Let there be light! Away with the darkness of ignorance and prejudice! Tell your boys and girls the truth about life before it is too late! Tell them how to choose their life partner, what qualities to look for, what dangers are to be faced, what attitudes to bring to their marriage, and specifically what to do and not do in order to increase their probabilities of living together harmoniously. Give them good clean books to read. Be a trustworthy and sympathetic counselor. Unless you have done this, there is no occasion for you to throw stones when, left in darkness by your silence, they stumble and fall!

Why not have classes in preparation for marriage and Christian home building in our Sunday schools and churches and in our annual Bible schools? What finer agency for giving the light than the church? Pastors! Teachers! Parents! This is your solemn responsibility. Darkness has prevailed too long. Let there be light!

service. If they are week-end guests take them to church with you. If they are not in attendance at their own church they certainly should worship somewhere on Sunday.

I think we do not ponder enough over that request, "Make friends of God's children." If you make your friends of those who are not professed children of God you are the one who is likely to weaken and to be led away from your Lord. If your heavenly Father, His Son Jesus, and their gospel work hold first place in your heart you will soon give your friends to understand that you will not permit them to interfere with your regular attendance at services, Bible studies, or choir rehearsals. And, what is more, they will respect and admire you for your Christian standards and principles.

May our Father strengthen and richly bless His sincere workers wherever they may be, is our prayer.

REBUILDING THE TEMPLE

SOME three years ago the editor of THE RESTITUTION HERALD called attention to the announcement made by a Jewish leader in Jerusalem while laying the cornerstone of a new synagogue in that city. "It is hoped," said the unnamed speaker in his dedicatory address given over the radio, "that this stone will mark the beginning of a far greater work than the construction of a synagogue, in fact, that this stone will soon be made the cornerstone of a new and glorious temple for the worship of Israel's God!"

The hope of restoration to divine favor for Israel has always been accompanied by the expectation that the temple would be rebuilt in Jerusalem "the city of the great King." The following, which is taken from The Gospel Banner and Millennial Advocate of May, 1860, expresses this age-old hope of the Jews and of those Christians who believe in the restoration of Israel. The comments are by Benjamin Wilson, editor of The Banner.

"A British religious journal publishes from a correspondent at Jerusalem the words and music of El Bene, a plaintive and touching melody sung by the Jews at the 'Wailing Place' in Jerusalem. The journal adds that it was sung at a recent religious meeting in London 'by a Christian friend who heard the Jews sing it at Jerusalem.' The following is a translation of the Hebrew words:

'The glorious God shall build His temple speedily,
In haste, in haste, in our days speedily, speedily;
Lord, build! Lord, build! build Thy temple speedily!
The blessed God, the great God, the exalted God,
The powerful God, shall build His temple speedily;
In haste, in haste, in our days, speedily, speedily!
Lord, build! Lord, build! build Thy temple speedily!'

Honest Appreciation

One of the most striking things about Paul's writings is the personal note of sincere appreciation at the beginning of each of his letters. Try to put yourselves in the position of the actual recipients of these Epistles and note the glow of happiness that fills you because Paul, the great Apostle, should say such wonderful things about you.

Paul at times becomes very sharp in his criticism of sin, but if you will read his letters carefully you will find that criticism must wait until praise and appreciation have been given. Only in Galatians does his criticism crowd out appreciation; but the Galatians were going after another gospel. Yet even so, there is a current of love and regard throughout the letter.

To the Romans: "First, I thank my God through Jesus Christ for you all, that your faith is spoken of throughout the whole world" (Rom. 1:8).

To the Corinthians: "I thank my God always on your behalf, for the grace of God which is given you by Jesus Christ . . . so that ye come behind in no gift; waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. 1:4, 7). "And our hope of you is stedfast, knowing, that as ye are partakers of the sufferings, so shall ye be also of the consolation" (2 Cor. 1:7).

To the Ephesians: "After I heard of your faith in the Lord Jesus, and love unto all the saints, cease not to give thanks for you" (Eph. 1:15, 16).

To the Philippians: "I thank my God upon every remembrance of you, . . . making request with joy, for your fellowship in the gospel from the first day until now" (Phil. 1:3-5).

To the Colossians: "We give thanks to God . . . since we heard of your faith in Jesus Christ, and of the love which ye have for all the saints, for the hope which is laid up for you in heaven" (Col. 1:3-5).

To the Thessalonians: "We give thanks to God always for you all . . . remembering without ceasing your work of faith, and labour of love, and patience of hope . . . knowing, brethren beloved, your election of God . . . Ye became followers of us . . . Ye were ensamples to all that believed in Macedonia and Achaia . . . In every place your faith to God-ward is spread abroad" (1 Thess. 1:2-8). "We are bound to thank God always for you, brethren, as it is meet, because that your faith groweth exceedingly, and the charity of every one of you all toward each other aboundeth; so that we ourselves glory in you in the churches of God for your patience and faith" (2 Thess. 1:3, 4).

To Timothy: "Unto Timothy, my own son in the faith" (1 Tim. 1:2). And: "When I call to remembrance the unfeigned faith that is in thee" (2 Tim. 1:5).

To Titus: "To Titus, mine own son after the common faith" (Titus 1:4).

To Philemon: "Unto Philemon our dearly beloved and fellowlabourer . . . Hearing of thy love and faith which thou hast toward the Lord Jesus, and toward all saints" (Philemon 1, 5).

PAUL BEGINS WITH APPRECIATION

Besides all these there is a great deal of appreciation and praise scattered throughout the main body of each letter. But the thing that is of special importance is that he begins his letters with appreciation. The Christian must not ride roughshod over others even in criticism.

The next time you feel called upon to read the riot act to some one, start in by thinking and talking about some of the things about that person that you really appreciate. Then when you finally get around to telling him his mistakes you are not so apt to antagonize him. Most people want to do the right thing, but you should consider the other person's feelings before you tell him where he is wrong. In all our dealings with others, may we remember the way of Jesus is to "draw all men unto me." "The love of Christ constraineth."

STARVING FOR APPRECIATION

How many of your loved ones are starving for a bit of appreciation to fall from your lips? So do not think that I mean for you to appreciate people only to prepare them for criticism. Never! Life is so much richer if your friends point out something they like about you. How about it, husbands? How about it, wives? Yes, pastors, how about it? Kind deeds, godly character, flourish under appreciation, even as the flowers flourish under loving care and sunshine. Appreciation is one of the tools a minister should use to fashion vessels for the glory of God.

FELLOWSHIP IN THE GOSPEL

Paul mentions some very lovely things about the ones to whom he writes—faith, hope, charity, perseverance, hospitality which they have manifested. One of the finest is, "your fellowship in the gospel" (Phil. 1:5). There is indeed a bond of fellowship in the gospel that is remarkable. Have you ever traveled into far corners? We have, and the gospel has been our letter of introduction to brethren we had never seen before. There is indeed a unique fellowship in the gospel that draws us together. You and I are friends, yes, brothers and sisters of a common faith. We may never have met, but that doesn't matter. We are loyal friends because we are friends of God.

PREPARED BY MARY A. GESIN

"Forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any: even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye."

For God and Righteousness

O Thou, before whose presence
Naught evil may come in,
Yet who dost look with mercy
Down on this world of sin,
Oh, give us noble purpose
To set the sin-bound free,
And Christlike tender pity
To seek the lost for Thee.

Fierce is our subtle foeman:
The forces at his hand
With woes that none can number
Despoil the pleasant land;
All they who war against them,
In strife so keen and long,
Must in their Savior's armor
Be stronger than the strong.

Lead on, O Love and Mercy,
O Purity and Power;
Lead on till peace eternal
Shall close this battle-hour:
Till all, who prayed and struggled
To set their brethren free,
In triumph meet to praise Thee,
The God of harmony.

—Samuel J. Stone.

Living Together Peacefully

Among the many letters that the Apostle Paul wrote to the different churches of his time is a letter to the church at Colosse. Now this city was situated midway between Ephesus and Antioch, and on the Lycus River. The main caravan route passed through Colosse, which helped to make it one of the most prosperous cities of Asia Minor.

As far as we know Paul never preached at Colosse, though he may have passed through the city on his way to Ephesus. This letter, part of which we are studying in preparation for this lesson, was written by him while he was a prisoner at Rome.

The church at Colosse met in the home of Philemon, where, you remember, the slave Onesimus lived, who later ran away from his master. But that is another story, and we will not have room for it here.

You can tell by Paul's words in this letter that he thought a great deal of the worshipers in Philemon's home. Read the opening words in chapter one, and notice how he said that he never ceased to pray for them that they should "walk worthy of the Lord."

Also, the opening verses in chapter 3, where our lesson is found, show how anxious he was that they should be a united church. For false teachers had crept in and were dividing the church by their errors.

Paul told them to set their hearts on Christ and the things of God, not on "things on the earth." Then when Christ appears in glory they, and all who follow Christ, will also be glorified with Him. Isn't that a great and wonderful promise?

Because Christ forgave them, and forgives us, as well, all who want to share in that promise must forgive each other. They must not quarrel, must not give way to bad temper and covetousness. They must endeavor to grow ever more and more like their great Example, Christ.

Look Out for Your Face

"My boy," said a father who knew how to play and be a chum with his seven-year-old lad, "you do not own your own face."

The boy looked puzzled. He had come to the breakfast table with a frown on his face and had started to eat his food. Everybody felt the shadow of his ill spirits in his looks. His father's words brought him back to life, and he looked up with a guilty expression. But he did not understand what his father meant.

"You do not own your face," his father repeated. "Do not forget that. It belongs to other people. They, not you, have to look at it."

The boy had never thought of that, but he understood, and he did not forget. And all of us should understand that our faces belong to other people, and they should be kept sweet, bright, and clean.—The Watchword.

A Prayer for the Week

Our loving heavenly Father, help each one of us to be kind and loving and forgiving, even as Jesus our Savior was, For His sake we ask it. Amen.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

THANKSGIVING LETTERS BY THE HUNDRED

That's what we want for the Thanksgiving number of The Restitution Herald! We invite our readers to write and tell us what God has done for them in a spiritual and in a material way during the past year that gives them cause for thanksgiving.

Are you rejoicing because the Lord is coming soon? Write a letter and tell us about it! Is your faith more firm and satisfying than it was a year ago? Another cause for gratitude! Have you witnessed conversions and baptisms of loved ones during the year? And did you rejoice with them? Just send us a note about it!

All Thanksgiving letters must reach us by November 15 in order to find a place in the Thanksgiving issue. So sit down right now and WRITE—laymen and preachers—all who are truly thankful to God for His goodness write us a letter!

LET US GIVE THANKS!

Thanksgiving Day, with its turkey and cranberries and pumpkin pie will soon be here! As we plan our menus and arrange for our home-comings, may we also think of ways and means by which we may show our appreciation to GOD for all the blessings He has so graciously bestowed upon us, both spiritually and materially.

Why not send a Thank Offering to help carry on the work of the National Bible Institution, Golden Rule Home, or the Board of Evangelism? Contributions for the National Bible Institution and Golden Rule Home should be made to this office and will be acknowledged through The Restitution Herald. Contributions intended for the use of the Board of Evangelism should be sent directly to the secretary-treasurer, James A. Patrick, Orange Road, Ashland, Ohio.

DOLLAR DAY

Illinois Members: If you have not already done so, get out the letter you have received from our treasurer, fill in the form at the bottom, enclose it with your dollar in the return envelope, and mail to Harvey Krogh, Jr., Ripley, Ill. We will give a report soon on the results.

Paul C. Johnson, President.

CORVALLIS, OREGON

Mr. and Mrs. Hal Gross have moved to Salem to make their home, where Mr. Gross is attending law school.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilber Tremaine and sons Robert and Richard were here visiting Sr. Tremaine's mother, Mrs. Flora E. Hogue. They are from Hollywood, Calif.

Sr. Minnie Kerr was struck down by a hit-and-run car last Tuesday. She received but minor injuries, and we are so thankful. She was able to be back to Sunday school the next Sunday.

Bro. W. O. Belshaw of Eugene has gone to Kitson Hot Springs for his health.

Flora E. Hogue.

BAPTISM AT WELLINGTON, KANSAS

"I am happy to report the baptism of my husband, Claude J. Rinehart," writes Mrs. Rinehart, Rt. 2, Wellington, Kan. The baptism took place on Sunday, October 17. In the afternoon the bread and cup were presented, symbolizing and promising the eternal salvation to be obtained when the Lord comes. Bro. George A. Waters, formerly of Newkirk, Okla., performed the baptismal service and administered the emblems of the Lord's sacrifice.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

September 22, 1937

In order that we may more perfectly serve our heavenly Father and maintain a proper standard of influence among our fellow men, we the undersigned, being the official board members of South Lawn Park Church of God and Pennellwood Church of God, Grand Rapids, Mich., heartily endorse the following statement:

The Pennellwood group is recognized as an independent church and we wish to state frankly that no feeling except that of Christian love and kindness prevails between our two church groups. Whatever of other feeling and attitude has existed in the past has been completely erased, and we hope with cooperative front to do much toward advancing the cause of truth in our community. Full and complete forgiveness has been extended where such was needed, and the two Grand Rapids churches are looking forward to a much stronger work locally, and to much Christian joy in advancing the cause through the State of Michigan.

South Lawn: F. E. Siple, Pastor; Lyle J. Doan; Martha Doan; L. Bridegam; O. Hopkins; Lloyd Stevens; Gerald K. Niles; Francis Van Fleet; Jewel M. Niles; Don Holmes; Ralph Downing.

Pennellwood: Myron Van Portfleet; James W. Cole; Harold W. Simpson; Arlie G. Townsend; Ada C. Simpson; Bee Slocum.

WEST VIRGINIA FORGES AHEAD

The work of the faithful group in the vicinity of Skelton, W. Va., continues to flourish in spite of (perhaps, because of) the many difficulties the leaders and supporters of the group have to face. Just as the early church made its most notable progress under persecution and bitter opposition, so does this little congregation press forward valiantly regardless of the adverse conditions that surround it.

Bro. Clarence Poland, the leader of the group, writes that the Sunday school attendance is between 40 and 45, that evening services have been resumed, and that the attendance at the latter is very good.

Like many other small congregations, the chief drawback in this community is the lack of a suitable building in which to meet. The membership is composed largely of coal miners and their families. Work in the mines is not regular and heavy deductions are made from the pay checks by the mining companies for house rent, accident and health insurance, electricity, water, etc. And pressure is brought to bear to compel the workers to buy their food and clothing from company stores, all of which leaves the miners with little at the end of the month to spend according to their own desires. To build or buy or even rent a building suitable for their church services seems almost out of the question. But the brethren are doing their best, and Bro. Poland is endeavoring to line them all up as tithers.

Here would be a splendid opportunity for some one who is not contributing to the support of any local or general work, and we have many such brethren in the country, to aid in a most worthy effort. We will be glad to furnish any information regarding this group which may be desired to such as may feel moved to assist in the work in this locality.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

"The report was slightly exaggerated," as Mark Twain said concerning the premature announcement of his own death, when our Virginia correspondent mentioned that Bro. Clarence Poland's father, who was baptized by Bro. S. J. Lindsay years ago, was dead. Bro. Poland sends us positive evidence to the contrary in a picture recently taken of the Skelton, W. Va., Sunday school, in which the elder Bro. Poland appears with his grandson in his arms.

We are planning a great Christmas issue of The Restitution Herald this year. You will want to put this number in the hands of all of your friends who do not take the paper. Begin at once to make out your list of those to whom you want us to send this special number. We'll tell you more about it a little later.

For the information of the Berean Correspondence Committee, at the request of Sr. A. J. Chaplin, we provide the following corrected address of Sr. Florence Griffith, recently baptized. Her correct address is 608 N. "B" St., Arkansas City, Kan. The members of the committee are requested to notice this change, as Sr. Griffith has had difficulty in getting letters addressed to her by the Bereans.

"Relationships in the Scriptures" is the subject Sr. Emma C. Railsback, pastor of the Los Angeles church, will present in our next issue. It has to do with the question of the "brethren" of Jesus. Were they really His brothers or half-brothers in the flesh, or did they bear a different relationship to Him? Sr. Railsback presents an interesting, if unusual, answer to the question.

LOUISIANA CHURCH NOTES

The little church among the pines at Blood River is not so little now because an addition has just been built to the rear of the church. This addition provides ample room for a choir as well as making room for more seats in the church, something that was badly needed. Other improvements include a new ceiling where before there was none, and the sealing of the walls on the inside. These improvements not only give us more room, but add much to the devotional atmosphere of the building.

During the past few weeks we have been giving a series of sermons dealing with the fundamental doctrines of the Church of God and find the reception of these doctrines unusually good at both churches.

There has been some sickness among our number, but at this writing most of them are again in good health and able to attend services.

Much good has been accomplished here in the past by the loyalty and faithfulness of the members who desired to see the truth of the gospel presented to the people and because of that desire we have two active little church groups established here, and from all indications, both groups are going to continue to grow and develop.

May we all be found laboring in the Master's vineyard when He comes.

Harry Goekler, Pastor.

IT HAPPENED A LONG TIME AGO

December 25, 1895

Dear Brothers and Sisters of the Household of Faith: Myself and five children, four of whom have just yielded obedience, are now watching and waiting for our soon-coming King. We believe He is nigh, even at the door.

Your sister in Christ,
Arloa Siple.

Editor Restitution: Bro. R. A. Humphreys has been here at Hammond (Louisiana) holding meetings for over a week, and though the attendance was small, his kind, earnest, yet firm way of presenting the truth, had its effect, and two of my brothers and two of my sisters yielded obedience to the gospel. May they prove faithful and be ready when Jesus comes, which we believe is not far distant.

Albert Siple.

TAYLOR - O'BRIEN

Sr. Lela Taylor, youngest daughter of Mrs. Flora E. Hogue, and Donnell O'Brien of Longview, Wash., son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward O'Brien of Toledo, Ore., were married September 3. The ceremony was read in the presence of a few close friends of the couple.

Mr. and Mrs. O'Brien were to leave for Seattle on their wedding trip, and after a short stay in that city will go to Longview where they will be at home in the Jefferson Court Apartments, No. 6.

Sr. O'Brien, who has lived in Corvallis most of her life, attended the local school and Oregon State College. She is a member of the Church of God. Mr. O'Brien was a graduate of Oregon State College with the June class, receiving his degree in forestry.

GOLDEN RULE HOME NEWS

Golden Rule Home family wish to thank Bro. W. A. Reid of Riverside, Calif., for his splendid help about the Home following Conference, while the matron and family were on vacation. Bro. Reid doesn't know the meaning of the word "idle" and he makes a most agreeable member of any group. We were sorry to have to bid him good-bye.

Sr. Leota Hanson, our new National Bible Institution treasurer, has joined the family group and helps to keep the laughs circulating about the house.

Miss Effie Steffa, a sister-in-law of our Mrs. Steffa, has been a visitor at the Home for a few days.

Bro. William Booth of Lake City, Iowa, was a visitor at the Home recently. He is a brother of Sr. Olive Wood, formerly of California, but now a resident of the Home.

Mr. Romine has gone about with his arm in a sling for several days, under doctor's orders, due to a badly sprained shoulder. A difference of opinion between he and bossy cow caused the trouble.

All of the family have been well enough to assemble at table for food, conversation, and daily worship.

Fall housecleaning is under way just now. It's just like housecleaning any place—only more so! Seventeen rooms, besides bathrooms, pantries, and closets, make a real cleaning task. Sr. Edna Gruber of the Oregon church is helping.

To start the work this fall a new dining room floor was laid over the old one. This corrected some sagging places and allowed thresholds, which were likely to make older feet trip, to be removed. Then an inlaid linoleum, in lovely, bright colors, was cemented down in the dining room and kitchen. The walls and woodwork had been painted last fall so both rooms are very cheerful and attractive and much easier to keep clean.

We are planning to buy a bolt of curtain material to make up for the downstairs rooms. Srs. Austin and Whitehead gave the last bolt about eight years ago and these curtains could not survive another washing. The Dixon Aid Society has offered to give five dollars toward this expense and the Oregon Dorcas added a like amount. Material is also needed for new cushion covers for the reed chairs and settee in the sun parlor. Further donations for this purpose would be very welcome. Furnishings are continually needing to be replaced. Any donations may be made for a specified purpose and will be used for the thing specified.

It has been suggested that a list of needed things be given as Christmas suggestions for the Home. We will give that list very soon. Watch for it!

Idona Romine, Matron.

"PREACHERS' TITLES"

The article which appears on page 9 of this issue under the above appellation, was originally published in "The Restitution" more than sixty-five years ago. The author was one of the most talented writers of the past century. She was the author of many splendid works on various religious and scientific subjects, including "Hinduism in Europe and America," "Hindu Literature," and "One Thousand Mistakes of Moses" (an infidel book by Robert Ingersol) Refuted."

She was the only woman ever to be elected a member of the British Philosophical Society, and her treatise on Sanskrit remained for many years a standard textbook in universities.

Her husband, H. V. Reed, was known as one of the most eloquent pulpit orators in the United States. He served the Church of God as an evangelist and was highly regarded for his ability as a debater.

A daughter of Bro. and Sr. Reed, Myrtle Reed, was the author of several novels of unusual merit, one of which, "Lavender and Old Lace," was made into a motion picture. A son also attained renown as an architect and writer of architectural subjects.

A YEAR-LONG CHRISTMAS GIFT!

In planning your Christmas giving, two things should be taken into consideration: first, the suitability of the gift to the recipient; and, second, the lasting quality of it.

When you give your friends a year's subscription to The Restitution Herald as a Christmas present, you meet both of these requirements fully.

The Restitution Herald, with its richly varied contents, provides an interesting and instructive source of genuine pleasure to all members of the family.

As each new issue reaches the one for whom it is intended, he or she is immediately reminded of the thoughtful friend who made its welcome visits possible. The paper thus becomes a WEEKLY rather than a YEARLY Christmas gift!

Put The Restitution Herald at the very top of your Christmas Shopping List at once! Send it for an entire year to your dearest friends, that they may enjoy it with you!

The price to New Subscribers per year is $1.50. Address The Restitution Herald, Oregon, Ill.

The Pine Woods Bible Class, by W. H. Wilson: 480 pages; cloth binding; a discussion, in conversational form, based upon actual class work by the author, on various phases of the gospel; 75¢, postpaid for cash. National Bible Institution.

THE RESTITUTION HERALD advocates: the near return of Christ, Acts 1:11, and life only through Him, Col. 3:3; the literal resurrection of the dead, John 5:28; the immortalization of those in Christ, 1 Cor. 15:53, 54; the final restoration of Israel as the kingdom of God under the kingship of Christ, Luke 1:32, the church to be joint-heirs with Him, Rom. 8:17, and Israel to be made head over Gentile nations, Isa. 60:13; the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began," Acts 3:21. It also firmly advocates repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, Acts 2:38, and a consecrated life as essential to salvation.

“Home, Sweet Home”

Provided by the love and sympathy of the entire brotherhood of the Church of God, Golden Rule Home assures to the members of its Family the comfort, security, and solicitous care which the word “home” always suggests.

Here the anxieties of earlier and more active life are laid aside forever. No threat of eviction for non-payment of rent or taxes or other indebtedness troubles the hearts of the residents of Golden Rule Home!

No doctor or hospital bills, no grocery, coal, or light bills to be met the first of the month, bring fear to the minds of the Golden Rule Home Family!

All such obligations and burdens are taken from the shoulders of these older ones immediately upon their entrance into the Home and are carried thereafter by the Golden Rule Home itself, which is amply able to bear the load on their behalf.

A hearty Christian welcome awaits all who seek the protection and lifelong support the Home provides.

Conditions of entrance into Golden Rule Home are as liberal as absolute security permits. Write for full particulars concerning the Home and its advantages. Or, better still, come and visit the Home itself and let the Family tell their own story of its advantages and comforts.

Address: Golden Rule Home, Mrs. Idona Romine, Matron, Oregon, Illinois.

Jesus Is Coming!

By the Editor

AS WE listen to the mysterious voices which float into our homes from all parts of the world, to be caught and made audible by the miraculous vacuum tubes of the radio; as we scan the startling columns of the newspapers, as we gaze in wonder upon the photo-telegraphic reproductions of events which happened but yesterday in lands half way around the globe from us, as we attempt to analyze what we hear and see and read, we are impressed with the solemnity and significance of the times in which we live.

Sacred and holy are the hours through which we pass! God is adjusting the times and the circumstances of human life according to His own purposes! The hand of the Almighty is stretched out in power in such a fashion as the world has never witnessed before in all its varied history. I say, "in all its varied history," advisedly, for never has the manifestation of God's authority been so widely and so powerfully felt as it is today! God is here! God is present! He is no longer far away beyond the reach of human ken! To hear the voice of the Almighty we need not return with Israel to the time and place where the sea rolled back at His command and thousands passed over dry-shod! God's Voice, His commanding Voice, is sounding over all the world today! His mighty power is felt throughout the earth! For, let me repeat, God is here—He is here today—fighting the battles of His people, preparing the way for the coming of the King who is to reign forever in His name!

So pressing is that power, so evident is that awful Presence with us now, that, like Moses at the burning bush, we feel impelled to take the shoes from off our feet, realizing that the ground on which we stand is holy ground, for God is here! We tremble with godly fear, with deepest reverence, as we watch the effects of God's influence, God's authority, God's Spirit and power, advancing throughout the world and overshadowing the nations of men! God is here!

God, help us to make it plain, that all who read may run, that they may hasten quickly into the Ark that waits still to receive them, even Christ the Savior! For Jesus is coming! The portents of His advent are seen on every side! Your Lord, my Lord, the King of the Jews, and the (Please turn to page 11)

Where Praying for the Government Is Treason

"God forbid that I should sin against the Lord in ceasing to pray for you."—1 Samuel 12:23.

RIGA, Latvia, Oct. 25.—The Moscow daily, Vechernia Moskva, reports the arrest of thirty religious leaders who will be tried on a charge of using the new Soviet Constitution to cover their "anti-communist activities."

The prisoners include, in addition to twelve other members of the clergy of the Greek church, Bishop Innokenti Nikiforov, who is accused of calling upon God in his prayers to lighten the suffering of the Russian people. Petitioning God in this fashion is the same as spreading counter-revolutionary propaganda, the paper asserts. Other priests are accused of the fearful crime of thanking God for the new Constitution and the liberty of conscience which it proclaims. The newspaper writer indignantly states that God had nothing to do with formulating the new Constitution and that it is a counter-revolutionary offense to thank Him for it, instead of Dictator Josef Stalin.

As a writer in the October American Mercury says in an article on "Russia's Goldbrick Constitution," "Dictators and their hired men will have their jokes . . . If there were a Nobel Prize for the jokes of dictators, it would certainly go to Fuhrer Stalin as the author of the new Soviet Constitution. No shoddier goldbrick has been turned out in the long historical process of masking the ugly facts of despotic rule with the pleasing fictions of model, up-to-date laws and constitutions."

Polish Jewish Students Protest

"Hear, O our God; for we are despised."—Neh. 4:4.

WARSAW, Poland, Oct. 14.—A thousand Jewish university students staged a quiet strike today against the inauguration of classroom "ghetto benches" marked to show that they were for Jews. Strong police reinforcements patrolled the city to guard against violence which did not develop. The strikers occupied the Jewish Students' Home and announced they would stay there until the "ghetto bench" regulation was rescinded.

"The first Jewish colonies in Poland date back to the ninth century," says Josef Kastein in his History and Destiny of the Jews (1935). The oppressed Jews of Germany, Austria, and Bohemia, were welcomed for many centuries in Poland. In time, however, persecution was directed to them here also. The Synod of 1542, representing the Christian church in that country, stated that "the church tolerates the Jews only because by their presence they remind us of the martyrdom of our Savior"! In recent years a more lenient attitude has been shown toward them and they have been granted many privileges which they did not enjoy in many other lands, but now the tide of public opinion in Poland seems to be turning again against them. We are sorry for Poland, as she brings upon herself the curse of God (Gen. 12:3).

"Armament Race Ends"

"They shall beat their swords into plowshares."—Isaiah.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 27.—"On Tuesday, December 15, 1921, the Race for Armaments came to an end," declared the Philadelphia Public Ledger on December 16 of that year. Editors all over the world echoed the Ledger's expressed sentiment, basing their optimistic outlook on the signatures which had been affixed to the Washington naval limitation treaties by nine leading powers of the world. An editorial commentator remarks today that "at this writing, the treaties are dying in an atmosphere of international distrust and hatred, with charges of evasion flying in all directions, the armament situation is far worse than it was in 1913 or 1919, and few persons believe that any of the signatories will observe the weak 'notification' clauses any longer than it is politically expedient to do so."

Duce's Pan-Arab Plans Alarm Britain

"Sound an alarm in my holy mountain."—Joel 2:1.

LONDON, Oct. 27.—Great Britain is said to be alarmed over the reports of secret agents concerning the underground activities of Mussolini throughout Palestine, Egypt, Iraq, and Hajaz, Arabia. Ibn Saud, king of Saudi-Arabia, it is said, will, on a signal from Rome, proclaim himself the king of all Arabs, which, it is feared, will start a fire raging from Bagdad, Iraq, to Casablanca, French Morocco.

It is well known that Italy has had a covetous eye on Palestine for years, and what better opportunity could she find to put her plans of conquest into effect than now, when Europe is jittery at the prospect of another World War?

The Hope of the Ages

By Harry Goekler

WE ALL live in the hope of the future. No matter what the past may have been and regardless of what the present may be, we continue to look to the future for the fulfillment of all our dreams. Tomorrow we will accomplish some great project; next month we will take a long-planned trip; next year we will raise a wonderful crop or come into some great fortune. So runs our thoughts and dreams of the future and, truly, "hope springs eternal in the human breast."

We go back to the very beginning of man and discover this same characteristic was given to Adam and Eve. When all hope seemed lost, when they were driven from the beautiful garden because of their disobedience, and only the prospect of suffering and eternal death awaited them, then it was that God gave them a reason to live in hope of the future. This hope is expressed in the following words: "And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel" (Gen. 3:15).

Here we find the first promise of a Redeemer who is to come and destroy the works of Satan, and surely this promise gave hope to our first parents.

It is significant to observe that all through the Old Testament Scriptures this promise of a coming Redeemer runs like a golden thread woven into all its prophecies. The familiar words of Isaiah 9:6, 7 serve as an example: "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this."

Especially did these prophecies of a coming Messiah mean much to Israel after their dispersion. As a nation they had had a glorious past and now that they were scattered and persecuted they longed for the time to come when the glory would be renewed. Thus it was that they lived and hoped for the future and awaited the coming of the promised Redeemer.

Strange as it may seem, when the Messiah really did come and lived and taught among them, they, as a people, refused to accept Him! They were disappointed in the manner of His coming and in the fact that He chose to mingle with the common people. Even those who believed on Him were disappointed because He would not establish His kingdom then, and truly all hope seemed lost when they saw with their own eyes their Leader and Teacher crucified on the cross. He had been their hope and their ideal and now the promised Messiah was dead!

We get a glimpse of that hope and subsequent disappointment in Luke 24:13-35, where we find the touching and revealing incident of Jesus appearing to the two men on their way to Emmaus and hearing their words of despair. They told Him how that Jesus, a man mighty in deed before God and man had been delivered to the rulers and chief priests, condemned, and crucified. Verse 21 reveals their shattered dreams: "But we trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel: and beside this, to day is the third day since these things were done." Truly, their hearts burned within them.

Their sorrow was soon turned to joy, however, by His revealing Himself as the resurrected Christ, and once more hope burned brightly in their hearts. Surely He would now set up His kingdom! The very last question they asked Him, as they stood together on the Mount of Olives, was, "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" What was His answer? Listen! "And he said unto them, It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power" (Acts 1:6, 7). No, He was not going to establish His kingdom then and they were not supposed to know when it would be established. As He finished speaking He was taken into heaven and, lo, as they looked steadfastly upward two men stood by them, "which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven" (Acts 1:11).

Ah, now they knew that Jesus was coming back to earth again and then would He set up His kingdom! With that hope they returned to Jerusalem and, later, with the power of the Holy Spirit, they taught as never before the great facts of Christianity and the coming of Jesus.

"I Come Quickly!"

Revelation 22:20

I'm waiting for Thee, Lord,
Thy beauty to see, Lord,
I'm waiting for Thee,
For Thy coming again.

Thou'rt gone over there, Lord,
A place to prepare, Lord,
Thy home I shall share
At Thy coming again.

'Mid danger and fear, Lord,
I'm oft weary here, Lord,
The time must be near
Of Thy coming again.

Whilst Thou art away, Lord,
I stumble and stray, Lord,
Oh, hasten the day
Of Thy coming again.

GOD SPEAKS

A Sermon by the Editor

OUT of the impenetrable darkness of chaos, out of the profound silence of eternities past, came the Voice of the Almighty in thunderous tones of power:

"And God said, Let there be light: and there was light."

Whenever and wherever the Voice of God speaks it dispels the gloom of ignorance, drives back the clouds of superstition, and opens wide the gates of intellect, that the God of Truth, the King of Glory, may come in!

"Who is this King of glory? The Lord of hosts, he is the King of glory!"

The Fountainhead of all wisdom, the Source of all reality, the Creator of all science, the Revealer of all truth, speaks! And as He addresses us here tonight may each one echo the words of the boy Samuel: "Speak; for thy servant heareth."

Among the many marvelous and almost unbelievable discoveries of science relative to radio, is the fact that radio waves when once set in motion apparently continue to vibrate through space indefinitely.

The first step that leads into the deeper mysteries of God pertaining to this most recent discovery is that these waves of power do not mix or become confused with other similar waves as they circle the earth many times a minute. The speed with which they travel is as difficult to comprehend as are the means by which they retain their identity. And their unchangeableness is as hard to grasp as is the fact of their perpetuity, their endlessness.

Round and round, they circle the earth, and farther and farther they radiate out into space, apparently without ceasing when once they have been set in motion. Such is the conclusion of science. It is claimed that radio waves a full twenty-four hours old have been picked up and translated into audible words and phrases.

If waves of sound, broadcast yesterday, can be heard today, why may not waves of sound of a year ago, two years ago, a hundred, or a thousand years ago, be caught and translated into intelligent tones today?

That is what the scientists are now asking each other. That is the problem they have set themselves to solve. It is said to be merely a matter of proper equipment. Nothing more difficult than that!

"Could such an apparatus be developed we could hear first-hand Mark Anthony's oration at the death of Caesar," some one has suggested. Yes, and we could hear again the commanding voice of Columbus as he directed the anchor to be dropped for the first time in the waters of the New World! We could hear the "Farewell Address" George Washington delivered to his troops at the close of the Revolution! All of these historical speeches and utterances we could hear in the original tones in which they were spoken long ago!

But if we could reach that far back into the past and hear all this, why not go back still farther in the history of the world to the very dawn of creation and hearken to the "music of the spheres," "when the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy"?

Tonight I plan to do something very much like that! I plan to "tune in" on Inspiration's radio so that we may catch the faintest waves of truth which come from the most distant past. We would hear the Voice of God as it has sounded forth from age to age throughout the passages of time. It is the Voice that has called races and nations into being. It is the Voice that has put in motion the wheels of civilization, the machinery of progress. It is the Voice that has spoken peace to the sorrowing, hope to the hopeless, and even life to the dead.

GOD SPEAKS AND BLESSINGS FOLLOW

"And the Lord said unto Abram, after that Lot was separated from him, Lift up now thine eyes from the place where thou art northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward: for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed for ever" (Gen. 13:14, 15).

On that pronouncement of God rests the hopes of the world, for all the world is included in it. Prosperity and peace and joy and life for all eternity hang upon those words of the Almighty, for only through the blessings promised to Abraham and to his Seed can these things be obtained.

God speaks! His predictions go forth and things that are not as sure to come to pass as though they were already in existence, for the Word of the Lord shall not return unto Him void.

God speaks! And peace falls like a holy benediction upon a troubled, war-torn world. God speaks! And joy is born anew in the sorrowing homes of men. God speaks! And the desert is made to blossom as the rose. God speaks! And the dead are raised, the living changed, and the saved of earth caught up to meet their descending Lord. O the wonder and the blessedness that follow when God speaks!

GOD SPEAKS AND JUDGMENT FALLS!

But blessings do not always come when God speaks! He sometimes speaks in judgment.

In the beginning of His dealing with Israel God spoke to the people by His servant Moses and said:

"Behold, I set before you this day a blessing and a curse; a blessing if ye obey the commandments of the Lord your God, which I command you this day: and a curse, if ye will not obey the commandments of the Lord your God" (Deut. 11:26-28).

The question of obedience was the principle upon which the blessing or the curse must ever depend. A blessing would follow obedience, a curse would follow disobedience. And so it came to pass throughout the history of that people, even to the present time. When they obeyed God they were blessed by Him and they prospered in every way. When they disobeyed Him they suffered privation and distress.

God speaks! And Israel trembles in fear as He warns them of the suffering they will undergo if they do not heed His Voice. A thousand years before that punishment came upon them, God foresaw and God forewarned them of its inevitable approach.

"The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from far, from the ends of the earth, as swift as the eagle flieth; a nation whose tongue thou shalt not understand; a nation of fierce countenance, which shall not regard the person of the old, nor shew favour to the young. . . . And (the king of that nation) shall besiege thee in all thy gates, until thy high and fenced walls come down, wherein thou trustest throughout all thy land: and he shall besiege thee in all thy gates throughout all thy land, which the Lord thy God hath given thee" (Deut. 28:49-58).

This prediction was literally fulfilled in every detail by the Romans more than fifteen hundred years after the words were spoken by the Lord! Four hundred years before the foundations of Rome were laid on the banks of the Tiber, those words pertaining to her future history and descriptive of the exact manner of her conquest of Palestine! This prophecy was uttered before Israel had even entered the Promised Land, while the twelve tribes still wandered in the wilderness of Sin in punishment for their sin!

God makes no mistakes; He never errs! God speaks and the thing is done! God good or bad, for blessing or cursing, when God speaks, the thing of which He speaks is done or as good as done!

And so I say that this prediction of Israel's coming punishment for a sin which they had not as yet committed, is now recorded fully and accurately in the pages of history as an accomplished fact, and as an evidence of God's foreknowledge and power. (Please turn to Page 11)

God's Call to Men

By W. W. Arbogast

I BELIEVE that God extends a call to every man at some time in his life. But He calls in different ways to different men. To some He comes when they are faced with a grave temptation, when they are about to commit a grievous sin, and by His presence strengthens them to overcome. To others He comes with encouragement and help when they are moved to perform a deed of kindness and of love.

The Lord came to Samuel when he was a little boy, and called, and Samuel answered, saying, "Here am I!" (1 Sam. 3:4). Samuel, though young in years, was ready and willing to do what God had for him to do. He was ready for the call—he was ready for the task that God assigned to him.

When the Lord called Saul, he who afterward became known to all the world as Paul, and he fell to the earth and heard a voice saying to him, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" (Acts 9:4), Saul showed a willingness to heed the call and follow unquestioningly wherever it might lead.

I feel sure that the Lord will come to us more and more often if we will only listen to His voice and respond to His appeal! If we will not harden our hearts to His call, but rather open wide the doors and let the Lord Jesus come in and have His way with us, what a blessing will be ours!

But here is where many of us fail. We close our hearts to the Lord and we shut our ears to His call. Yet the dear Lord still waits without, still "patiently waits an entrance to gain." If we will invite Him in He will take us by the hand and lead us to the altar of repentance and faith and guide us through the waters of baptism that we may be made "clean every whit."

Or, to change our comparison, if we come to Him as little children, asking for bread, He will not give us a stone. If we earnestly pray for understanding, He will not turn us away unsatisfied. But He expects us to do what God required of Israel, that is, give Him the first fruits of our lives. Only the best that we have is acceptable to the Lord.

God challenges His people to test Him. "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it" (Mal. 3:10).

If we will but heed God's instructions, the ladies of the churches in our land will not need to hold bake sales, card parties, rummage sales, and various other schemes to ask the outside world to help keep up the Lord's house and to supply His needy ones with bread! This is why He has asked us to set apart one tenth of our income, that His work may go forward without asking the ungodly world for help.

To this same end He has called you and me, that we may give our lives to Him until He calls us to Himself and to our eternal reward which the Father in heaven has prepared for His children from the foundation of the world. May many truly seek that straight and narrow way that leads to life, in my prayer. Amen.

History of Man

By John O. Woodruff

THERE was a time when there was not a man upon earth (Gen. 2:5). Let us suppose a sea captain in voyaging over the great deep should land upon an uninhabited island covered with luxuriant grasses, fruits, vegetables, beautiful flowers, pure waters, rich soil, valuable minerals, mild climate, abundance of timber, grand scenery, living creatures, the sea teeming with every variety of fish and other food for man, would not this thought suggest itself to the mind of the captain, "What a beautiful place this would be for inhabitants suited to these conditions"?

This would necessitate organized beings whose wants could be supplied from their island home and its surroundings. To secure all needed blessings the inhabitants of this island must be possessed of sufficient intelligence to enable them to obtain by pleasant exercise of their physical powers all the necessities of their simple, unperverted natures. Such beings would also cultivate refined tastes, a love of the beautiful in nature and art. The delightful scenery of their island home would supply the one, while their inventive genius could supply the other.

Suppose that in later years the captain revisits the island and finds it peopled with such beings as he had once thought would be adapted to the place, do you not think his curiosity would be sufficiently excited to learn the history of these people? How did they reach the island? Where did they come from? Why did they come here? If told that they had a record giving their origin and history, would not the captain take a deep interest in the perusal of this interesting work?

Such is the story, the true story, I propose to tell about man as he appears in his primitive home, a vast island floating in the immensity of space. The information I offer has been gleaned from what I believe to be a truthful record of man's origin, nature, and destiny.

ORIGIN AND NATURE OF MAN

There was a time when the earth was without an inhabitant, as the Bible plainly states. How, then, did it become inhabited? What kind of beings were its first inhabitants? Where did they come from? How were they created?

The same book that tells us that at one time "there was not a man," also tells us how the first man came into being, who the Creator was, and gives us a complete history of the man in every relation he sustains to his Creator. This account briefly, yet plainly, informs us of man's origin, the material employed in the act of creation, and the process by which life was imparted to the organized being to whom God gave the name "Man."

Before introducing the history of man as it is recorded in this Book, let me quote an extract from Thomas Carlyle:

"Histories are as perfect as the historian is wise." As this statement will not be disputed, what tremendous weight belongs to this history of man, for its Author is the very embodiment of wisdom, one in whom "all treasures of wisdom and knowledge are hid." Surely, then, such a record must be reliable and entitled to our fullest confidence.

The introductory facts of this divine history are recorded in Genesis 2:7: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul."

Here, in twenty-seven simple words, is recorded the most stupendous fact in history. Whole volumes of human philosophy have failed to throw a single ray of light upon the grand truths found in this brief statement. But, alas! human wisdom has at best obscured the beautiful light that shines from the inspired words!

That the being described in this passage is the man of God's proposition is fully shown in every relation that man sustains to the divine plan. Ages after this original dust-made man was created the Psalmist David confirmed the fact of man's earthy origin. "He (God) knoweth our frame, he remembereth that we are dust" (Psa. 103:14). Job likewise tells us that man's "foundation is in the dust" (Job 4:19).

Referring to the early history of man as recorded in Genesis 3:19, we find the closing words of the divine sentence pronounced against him as the penalty for sin, declare that "in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

Here man's origin is again described, and his destiny when his sentence is executed brings him back to the condition from whence he was taken. The act of creation made him; the execution of the sentence unmade him.

That the man whose history is here given is a being exactly adapted to the place he was to occupy is clearly stated in the description God gives of man's home in the newly created earth.

"And the Lord planted a garden eastward in Eden: and there he put the man whom he had formed. And out of the ground made the Lord God to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food; the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, and the tree of the knowledge of good and evil" (Gen. 2:8, 9).

That the man whom God put into the garden with instructions to "dress it and to keep it" (v. 15), was an organic being possessed of a tongue, teeth, lips, palate, throat, digestive, and assimilating organs, is evident from the fact that the first command given him after entering the garden was concerning the food he should eat, and forbidding ac-ness of the fruit of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil.

But perhaps the interested reader of this history of man may ask: "If this is a true history of man, in what respect is man superior to the rest of the animal creation; in short, what distinguishes him from the animal creation?"

To answer this question fairly and scripturally, let us note, first, the points of resemblance given in the Bible as being common to both men and animals. God's description of the origin of the lower animals is given in Genesis 2:19: "And out of the ground the Lord God formed every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air."

However humiliating it may be to haughty and proud man to read of the common origin of both man and beast, the fact remains and man cannot change it.

THE BREATH OF LIFE

To constitute man a "living soul," person, or being, God gave him "the breath of life." That "the breath of life" was possessed in common by all living creatures, both men and animals, is clearly established. When foretelling the coming of the flood and the destruction which was to follow, God said: "And, behold, I, even I, do bring a flood of waters upon the earth, to destroy all flesh, wherein is the breath of life, from under heaven; and every thing that is in the earth shall die" (Gen. 6:17).

Also in the 7th chapter of Genesis; after naming the whole animal creation in verse 14, it is recorded in verse 15: "And they went in unto Noah into the ark, two and two of all flesh, wherein is the breath of life."

That both men and animals originate in the dust and live by breathing the "breath of life" is a clearly settled Bible fact, whether men believe it or not. Human logic has no effect upon it. Scholarly ability in vain attempts to set aside God's positive declarations, and infidelity can go no further than to say, "I do not believe it!"

MAN AND BEAST IN DEATH

In order that the comparison may be complete, let us view both man and beast in the state called death. The reader's attention is directed to Ecclesiastes 3:18-20: "I said in mine heart concerning the estate of the sons of men, that God might manifest them, that they might see that they themselves are beasts. For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that a man (in death) hath no preeminence above a beast: for all is vanity. All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again."

Here the broad, sweeping assertion is made that in death man has no preeminence over a beast. However broad the distinctions in life may be, the question is forever settled that during death's reign a perfect equality exists be-

Special Guidance

By W. H. Wilson

SOME time ago we heard a minister say before an audience in the W.C.T.U. Temple in Chicago, that no one could possibly understand the Word of God unless he had the special guidance of the Holy Spirit. He then proceeded to tell what he had learned from the Bible by the aid of the Spirit. He said the Bible taught that there never would be a literal resurrection of the dead and that there never would be a literal second coming of Christ.

How sad! Have we not fallen on perilous times? Can the Holy Spirit contradict its own word? Never! In place of being guided by the Holy Spirit, this man was evidently led by "seducing spirits" to believe "doctrines of devils" which Paul said would be brought into the church in the last days.

So many people are led into error by appropriating to themselves the promise of Jesus found in John 14:25, 26: "But the Comforter, even the Holy Spirit, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring to your remembrance all that I have said unto you" (A. R. V.).

This promise is applicable only to those whom Jesus addressed in person and whom He personally taught, and to no one else. He says he will "bring to your remembrance all that I have said unto you." The words were spoken to persons whom He had specially and individually taught before His ascension for the purpose of qualifying them to be heralds of the message of life to others and who needed the Holy Spirit to quicken their memories as to what Jesus had said to them. It was not intended, nor was it promised, that the Holy Spirit should guide them into a spiritual discernment or spiritual interpretation of what Jesus had previously told them.

Modern teachers, like the one mentioned, seem to believe that the Revealed Will of God is in fact no revelation at all, but a collection of impenetrable mysteries which cannot be understood unless interpreted by the same Spirit which inspired holy men of old to write them.

The speaker to whom we listened claimed that the divine Spirit led him to believe that the Bible taught that there never would be a literal resurrection of the dead, but that references to a resurrection must be understood in a spiritual sense. His instruction must have been derived from lying "seducing spirits" as we have said, because it is at variance with what the Holy Spirit revealed to the Prophet Isaiah, who wrote:

"Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise." (These so-called Spirit-guided interpreters say that dead bodies shall never arise.) "Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust: for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth" (wherein the dead were buried) "shall cast out the dead" (Isa. 26:19).

The same Holy Spirit led Daniel to say: "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt" (Dan. 12:2).

The same Holy Spirit also led John to say: "Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation" (John 5:28, 29).

Modernized preachers who claim Spirit guidance do not hesitate for one moment to affirm that the dead "in the graves shall" never come forth.

The "seducing spirits" which delight in the "doctrines of devils" have led the minister we mentioned to ignore the world's great hope, the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ. But the Spirit of God led a holy man of old to say, "We have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ" (2 Peter 1:16).

Another one, led by the same Holy Spirit, exhorts us that we keep our eyes fixed upon that blessed hope, even the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ. Did not also angels, clothed in white, comfort the disciples when the clouds of heaven received Him, by saying: "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven" (Acts 1:11)? This ascension was literal and visible. He "shall so come in like manner," the heavenly messengers declared. Modern, so-called Spirit-guided men say such a thing will never take place. Which shall we believe?

Whenever this so-called Spirit-guidance leads men to contradict plain statements of God's Word, and leads them into the mazes of skepticism, it is time for all Bible lovers to be very suspicious about this entire matter of miraculous Spirit-guidance about which we hear so much in these days.—The Restitution.

Relationships in the Scriptures

By Emma C. Railsback

THE questions that are asked in Matthew 13:55, "Is not this the carpenter's son? is not his mother called Mary? and his brethren, James, and Joses, and Simon, and Judas?" seem to impress some with the idea that the Virgin Mary had four other sons, and also daughters, beside the Lord Jesus Christ. But this is not the fact of the case.

Let us note first that Young's Analytical Concordance states that "brother" and "sister" are frequently used in Scripture for a relative or companion; likewise "father" and "mother" are used for an ancestor. So if we desire to know where these four "brethren" come into relationship with Jesus, we must make some comparisons.

Two of the apostles bore the name "James." In Matthew 4:21 and 10:2 we read of James the son of Zebedee and John his brother. In Luke 6:15, 16 we read of James the son of Alphaeus, and Judas the brother of James. Mark 3:18 and Acts 1:13 also state this fact.

Turning now to John 19:25 we get another thought. "Now there stood by the cross of Jesus his mother, and his mother's sister Mary the wife of Cleophas." Cleophas is the Greek for the name Alphaeus, Alphaeus being the Hebrew form of the word.

Another fact is found in this verse. The Virgin Mary had a sister named Mary. The concordance states that she was a half sister. In Mark 15:40, 47 and 16:1 she is designated as being the mother of James and Joses. Therefore, the logical conclusion is that Alphaeus (or Cleophas) and Mary (half sister of the virgin) were the parents of James and Joses and Simon and Judas, making them cousins of Jesus. Jude in his Epistle states that he is brother of James. Jesus chose two of these cousins to be his apostles, James and Jude.

James the brother of John was slain by King Herod early in his Christian ministry (Acts 12:2). This left James the brother of Jude to be the head of the church in Jerusalem (Acts 12:17; 15:13; Gal. 2:12).

John, the "disciple whom Jesus loved," having a very kind and affectionate nature, Jesus gave his mother into his care as they stood before the cross, and from that hour that disciple took her into his own home.

One more thought regarding scriptural reference to these brethren of the Lord. Mark 3:21 speaks of them as "friends" and the margin interprets the word "kinsmen."

In Psalm 69:8, which is prophetic of the Lord, we read, "I am become a stranger unto my brethren, and an alien to my mother's children (or people)." When the Apostle Paul referred to James the Lord's brother (Gal. 1:19), he referred to "James the less," the son of Alphaeus, who had charge of the church in Jerusalem at that time.

The Greatest Event

WE ARE on the verge of the greatest event of all the ages—an event the effects of which will be more far-reaching than anything that has ever taken place since the beginning of time; an event that will decide the destiny of this world and of the human race, and that will mark the end of counting time and the ushering in of eternity. This event is the coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ in the clouds of heaven accompanied by all the holy angels.

Ever since sin entered the world and man forfeited his right to eternal life, this event has been the hope of God's people. It has buoyed up the church through trials, tribulations and persecutions. It was the hope of this great event that enabled the martyrs to march to the stake with fortitude. It was this hope that upheld the thousands of Christians cast to the wild beasts and slaughtered in the Roman arenas in the early days of the Christian church.

The Patriarch Job, in the midst of his trials, when he had lost everything that was dear to him and when death would have been a welcome relief, was sustained by this hope when he spoke these sublime words: "For I know that my redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: whom I shall see for myself, . . . and not another; though my reins be consumed within me" (Job 19:25-27).

When the Apostle Paul realized that the time was at hand when he would be called upon to die for his faith, his assurance of the reality of that great event enabled him to say: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing" (2 Tim. 4:7, 8).

The only ray of hope piercing the darkness and turmoil of this troubled world today is the hope of the coming of the Lord to take over the kingdoms of this world and to establish the everlasting kingdom of God. In this event lies the only solution of the great problems confronting mankind. It is the only hope for sin-sick humanity. Without it we can see nothing for the future but universal chaos resulting in the downfall of humanity and a reversion to barbarism and paganism.

If it were not for this great event the future would be hopeless. A life of hardship and care would end in eternal death and oblivion, with no hope beyond the grave, no hope of ever again meeting those loved ones who have passed over to the silent shore, never again to see that gray-haired mother or father or the little ones that we parted from with aching hearts. But, "blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead" (1 Peter 1:3), "which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast" (Heb. 6:19).

Before His crucifixion and death the Savior made this promise: "In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you, and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also" (John 14:2-3).

He was crucified and died. He burst the fetters of the tomb and came forth triumphant over death and the grave. He ascended to His Father, and as He was received up out of sight two angels confirmed the Savior's promise with these words: "This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven" (Acts 1:12).

There is no possibility of doubt that we are on the eve of this greatest event. "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secrets unto his servants the prophets" (Amos 3:7), and as we study the long line of prophecies pointing down to this event we cannot but come to the conclusion that the time is at hand. We have passed all the great waymarks of prophecy, the four great universal kingdoms covering the history of this world down to the time of the end have all passed away and we are now

"Down in the feet of iron and clay;

Weak and divided, soon to pass away."

On the earth we have "distress of nations with perplexity" (Luke 21:25) to an extent never known before. In the political world all is turmoil and confusion. The leading diplomats and statesmen of the world are frantically striving to devise means to stop the terrible cataclysm which they all realize is inevitable, and at the same time the world is being bankrupted to build up armaments in anticipation of the coming struggle. Some unseen power, like a mighty whirlpool, is rapidly drawing the nations to their destruction. Everywhere there is a feeling of dread and uncertainty; men's hearts literally "failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming upon the earth" (Luke 21:26).

James, in speaking of the last days, says, "Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped together treasures for the last days" (James 5:1, 2).

In the business and financial world we find the same condition existing. The stock market is vacillating and uncertain. In the present state of affairs any kind of an investment is hazardous. More and greater taxes are continually being levied upon all kinds of business enterprises. Income taxes are being collected that in many instances amount almost to confiscation. Truly in our day the miseries of the rich are many and there is no brighter outlook for them in the future.

As we turn to the religious world, what conditions do we find? Confusion everywhere! A multiplicity of creeds and every conceivable wind of doctrine, "having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof" (2 Tim. 3:5).

On the other hand, we see beautiful structures dedicated to the worship of God but where the worship is only a meaningless formality. There is no time or place for the old-time religion of our fathers.

We see all the latter-day conditions brought to view in the Scriptures existing in the world today. The Savior in enumerating the signs of His coming, said: "Now learn a parable of the fig tree. When his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh: so likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the door" (Matt. 24:32, 33). He does not say that we are to think that it is near, or to guess at it, but we are to be absolutely certain of it; we are to know it. We have seen all these things and, relying on the Word of Him with whom it is impossible to lie (Heb. 6:18), what is the only conclusion at which we can arrive? If we believe the Word of God we know that the greatest event is at hand, even at the door.

Dear reader, will it be your privilege and mine to witness this greatest event with joy and be able to look up and say, "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us: this is the Lord; we have waited for him, and we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation" (Isa. 25:9)? Will we be able to look upon the greatest pageant of all time "when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ" (2 Thess. 1:7, 8), when He comes as a conquering king accompanied by all the holy angels and followed by the armies of heaven upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean (Rev. 11:14)? "But it is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God" (1 Cor. 2:9, 10).

May we be among those that love Him, is the prayer of your servant.—L. D. Lane in The Bible Advocate.

THE HOPE OF THE AGES

His coming again, they became leaders, when before they were only followers. In the course of time the apostles died, but they left as a heritage for all time the writings of the New Testament. Within those writings we find over and over again the hope of Christ's second coming expressed in positive terms. The coming of the Redeemer is still the hope of the ages. Observe the words of Paul: "So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation" (Heb. 9:28).

The words of Christ Himself as He spoke from heaven to John were these: "And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be" (Rev. 22:12).

We live today in the hope of the future because in that future all our dreams of happiness, peace, joy, and health will be realized. We live in the hope of the future because in that future Jesus is coming back to earth to establish His glorious kingdom. Truly, His coming is the hope of the ages!

A PLEA FOR ISRAEL

Scattered by God's avenging hand,
Afflicted and forlorn,
Sad wanderers from their pleasant land,
Do Judah's children mourn:
And e'en in Christian countries, few
Breathe words of pity for the Jew.

Yet, listen, Gentiles, do you love
The Bible's precious page?
Then let your hearts with kindness move
To Israel's heritage.
Who traced those lines of love for you?
Each sacred writer was a Jew.

And then, as years and ages passed,
And nations rose and fell,
Tho' clouds and darkness oft were sent O'er captive Israel,
The oracles of God for you
Were kept in safety by the Jew.

And when the great Redeemer came,
For guilty man to bleed,
He did not take an angel's name:
No—born of Abraham's seed—
Jesus, who gave His life for you—
Tho' Son of God, was yet a Jew.

And tho' His own received Him not,
And turned in pride away,
Whence is the Gentile's happier lot?
Are you more just than they?
No! God in pity turned to you—
Have you no pity for the Jew?

Go, then, and bend your knee to pray
For Israel's ancient race;
Ask the dear Savior every day
To call them by His grace:
Go—for a debt of love is due
From Christian Gentiles to the Jew.

GOD SPEAKS

"A nation from far," the Prophet said—God said!

History declares that Vespasian, Adrian, and Julius Severus, hurried a part of their troops from Britain to Palestine that they might take part in the final struggle there. The British Isles comprised the most distant possession of Rome, although Rome itself was looked upon by the Jews as "a far country."

"A nation of fierce countenance," God declared.

And such indeed the Romans were! They were soldiers of iron faces as well as of iron swords! They were quick, mobile, resistless, and altogether disregardful of human life and suffering when they were engaged in a mission of conquest in any part of their dominions. In many places the Romans, it is said, put all classes of opposers to the sword, without distinction of age or sex. Terms could not have been chosen which would describe more accurately the soldiers of Rome and the manner and result of their invasion of Palestine than those which were employed by Almighty God fifteen hundred years before the events He depicts came to pass!

"He shall besiege thee in all thy gates."

This, too, was completely brought about. Not a city, and scarcely a village of any consequence, escaped the dire punishment meted out upon the rebellious Jews by their Roman conquerors. It all came to pass! God speaks, I say, and the thing is done!

JESUS IS COMING!

Hope of the Gentiles, is coming back to this earth again! O wondrous theme of unspeakable joy for such a time as this!

Impatient with the times and with the limits apparently placed upon opportunity for labor and achievement by the nearness of the Lord's return, a young man said to me:

"Two years ago I would have said that the age would not end for another twenty years. One year ago I would have said that at least ten years remained for us to go on under present conditions. But now all is changed! Think what has happened in the last year—in the last six months—in the last few weeks!"

This thoughtful young student of the prophecies is right in his conclusion that time, as counted in days and months and years, is short indeed. But as counted in terms of opportunity for service, in possibility of achievement, in the earning of infinite reward, time is more expansive today than it ever was in all the history of the past! We are living a lifetime in a few short months in these wonderful days!

Remember the words of the Lord Jesus concerning the period in which He lived and served and died for God on behalf of men:

"Verily I say unto you, That many prophets and righteous men have desired to see those things which ye see, and have not seen them; and to hear those things which ye hear, and have not heard them" (Matt. 13:17).

These words might well have been spoken of our fathers in the faith! They might have been spoken of ourselves twenty years ago—ten years ago—even five years ago! Events are now happening for which the Christian has been waiting and longing and praying for nearly two thousand years, and we are seeing and hearing them come to pass!

"We are living, we are dwelling
In a grand and awful time;
In an age on ages telling
To be living is sublime!"

Though the clouds hang low over our heads and the winds of disaster sweep in tempestuous fury about us, though lightning cleaves the international skies with the fiery blade of war and the thunders of increasing conflict reverberate from every mountain side: the roaring blast, the flashing lightning, the echoing thunder of the storm, cannot deaden the sound of the Eternal Voice that proclaims the coming of the Son of Man! In fact, all these things but serve to tell the same marvelously welcome story: Jesus is coming! He is coming soon!

HISTORY OF MAN

tween men and animals. They lose the same breath, they die alike, they go to the same place in death.

Failing to find the proofs of certain claims for man's highly exalted position, the advocates of such claims tell us that man's vast superiority over the animals consists of knowledge, while the animal possesses only instinct. But this distinction will not stand, for every Bible student knows that knowledge is by no means man's exclusive prerogative. Here is God's comparative estimate of the intelligence of man and beast: "The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib; but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider" (Isa. 1:3).

This comparative view is certainly not very flattering to man, with all his boasted exaltation!

The merest tyro in knowledge can testify to acts of intelligence on the part of animals. Certain animals have shown a degree of intelligence that would rank them with some of the human family. A few points of superiority in favor of animals ought in justice to them to be presented. Many of them possess greater strength than man, they outspeed him in the chase, they possess keener faculties, the sense of smell is far more acute, they perceive danger, when man with all his boasted knowledge is ignorant of it. Man's utter helplessness in infancy is in sad contrast with the ability of some of the animal creation to take care of themselves almost from birth. What, then, distinguishes man from the lower animals? (Continued next week)

A Demonstrating Church

No matter how loudly the Church of God shouts its message to the world, the world will cast a wary eye unless the church also demonstrates its message.

The second greatest commandment is, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." Most everyone knows that Jesus said, "Whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also" (Matt. 5:39). A church's depth of Christianity is plumbed on those occasions when its members are called upon to put this rule into practice. Also it is great advertising for the church when its members obey this rule of Christ.

An ice house burned down in Denver, Colorado. An editor in that city remarked that there were thousands of gallons of potential fire extinguisher in the building, but it was all frozen.

So the church is in the business of extinguishing the fires of iniquity that burn in the unregenerated heart. It is our job to call men from death unto life. We must not let ourselves get frozen. We must demonstrate Christ by faith, hope, and love before all the world.

The South Bend, Indiana, Visitor remarks: "'Many are called, but few are chosen,' in modern interpretation might be, 'Many are cold, and a few are frozen.'"

If we are in business, let's advertise!

Report of General Conference

* * * * By Frances Sheets, Blanchard, Michigan

(Note: This report also won a lovely Oxford Teacher's Bible. The reporter did not miss a class or sermon from the time she arrived until the Conference closed.)

Due to lack of space I won't try to give you the sermons or go into detail about the classes.

In the forenoon I attended Bro. Marsh's class; in the afternoon Bro. Randall's.

Bro. Marsh's class was more of a lecture type, wherein he told us of things the scientists have discovered to be true, and of how they compare with the Bible. This was very interesting.

Bro. Randall's class dealt more with our own problems. One day anyone could ask any questions and it was discussed. For example: "What should a Christian do when placed in a group of young people who never go to or have any thought of church?" We got many interesting ideas on this subject.

When you go to Conference don't wait for some one to take you around and introduce you. Go and introduce yourself. It sounds hard, but it isn't after you once get started.

As for entertainment, Saturday was "Trip Day." We went to Blackhawk Statue, Lowden's Farm, and the White Pine Forest. On weekdays after breakfast until 8:45 we took trips to the piano factory, the silica works, and the milk condensery.

Meal time is a good time to get acquainted, especially if you work in the kitchen or help wait on tables.

After church each night we had a Friendship Circle on the lawn. Here we played games, sang songs, or some group put on an entertainment.

When you arrive at Conference you are given a badge with a Scripture verse on it. You are supposed to find others with the same text, and together you form a team to put on a stunt one evening.

So many interesting things happen that I know I'm leaving out a lot. The only way you can know what it really is like is to go yourself and find out. I sincerely pray that if we have another Conference before the Lord comes more will go. I know you will enjoy it and will hate to see it end. I know I did.

The Great Remover

It is reported that in the manufacture of pins they are boiled in beer to remove grease and other matter. Now here is a practical use for beer, quite in keeping with its usual use. Beer always has been a great remover. It removes the husband from the wife, the son from his mother, the Christian from Christ. It removes money from the pocket, clothes from the back, health from the body, sense from the mind, and kindness from the heart. It removes food from the children, peace from the family, respect from the neighbors, life and limb from the pedestrian and the occupant of the other car. Oh, there are few things which can equal beer as a remover of all that is good in life and character. But unlike its use in the manufacture of pins, in every other solution beer removes the good and leaves the evil.

Youth, We Need You!

"Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity" (1 Tim. 4:12).

Sometimes we hear people tell us to look to the older people for an example of what we should be like. Sometimes this is true, but it depends upon the individual. Age alone has nothing to do with it. There are good older people and bad older people. So with the young people. It isn't the age of life; it is whether or not you have developed character, Christian character. Next week we will point out several famous people who did great exploits for God when very, very young.

PREPARED BY MARY A. GESIN

"Thou therefore, my son, be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus. And the things which thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also."

Choose Thou for Me

Thy way, not mine, O Lord,
 However dark it be;
 Lead me by Thine own hand;
 Choose out the path for me;
 Smooth let it be or rough,
 It will be still the best;
 Winding or straight, it leads
 Right onward on my quest.

I dare not choose my lot;
 I would not, if I might;
 Choose Thou for me, my God:
 So shall I walk aright.
 Take Thou my cup, and it
 With joy or sorrow fill,
 As best to Thee may seem;
 Choose Thou my good and ill.

Choose Thou for me my friends,
 My sickness or my health;
 Choose Thou my cares for me,
 My poverty or wealth.
 Not mine, not mine the choice
 In things both great or small;
 Be Thou my Guide, my Strength,
 My Wisdom, and my All.

—Horatius Bonar.

Growing Up and Upward

All of you boys and girls are interested in growing up, and you often talk about what you are going to be when you are grown. At different ages you want to hold different places in the world. Sometimes you boys think to be a truck driver would be the greatest thing in the world. Later, you hope to be a policeman, or a barber, or an aviator.

You little girls like to dress up in Mother's clothes and walk around pretending you are a teacher, or a nurse, or a stenographer. Some of you imagine you are Mother and try to act and talk like her.

Growing up is natural. Everything must grow in order to live. If a seed drops from a flower and does not find soil in which it can take root, it withers and never becomes what it might have grown to be—a beautiful flowering plant.

Boys and girls must grow as well. They must grow physically and mentally. Sometimes they grow in one direction faster than they do in the other. That is, they grow tall and strong in their bodies faster than they do in their minds.

But there is also another way of growing, and that is growing upward—upward toward God, toward Jesus, toward those things that are best in life. Jesus grew that way. You remember the verse that tells us about it.

"Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favour with God and man" (Luke 2:52).

We sometimes meet people who have grown up in body, but down in habits and ways of living. We should never take such people for our example, but rather the Lord Jesus who grew upward in every way.

For our next lesson in the quarterly we study about Timothy, who grew up to be a preacher like his beloved friend Paul. We read something very interesting about Timothy's childhood. I wonder how many of you know those words. Here they are:

"From a child thou hast known the holy scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus."

So Timothy, you see, while he was growing up was also growing upward. And while Jesus was his great Example, Timothy's friend Paul was a great inspiration to him, and he wanted to be a preacher like him.

Paul told him to continue in the things he had learned from his mother and his grandmother. He also told him not to let anyone despise his youth. For, you see, Timothy was much younger than Paul and the elders with whom he worked.

By growing upward in all things as the Apostle Paul taught him, along with his mother and grandmother, Timothy became bishop of the church at Ephesus and led many people into the way of salvation.

A Prayer for the Week

Help us, heavenly Father, to appreciate the work of our ministers and to heed the warnings they give us. For Jesus' sake. Amen.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

ILLINOIS QUARTERLY CONFERENCE

The Fall Quarterly Conference of the Illinois Conference of the Churches of God will convene November 6 and 7 in the church parlors of the Macomb Church, 409 S. Dudley St., Macomb, Illinois, with a varied program of speakers. The Conference will convene Saturday afternoon at two o'clock. A full program is being worked out. Come prepared to enjoy yourselves to the fullest.

These quarterly conferences are being planned to further interchurch activity and fellowship, to develop a more spiritual attitude, to strengthen knowledge by conferring together more often, and to increase zeal by enlarging our circle of acquaintance.

James W. McLain,
Chairman Quarterly Conference Program Committee.

ILLINOIS DOLLAR DAY

Word from our treasurer states that at the time of writing he had received $77.00. If you haven't attended to the matter of sending your dollar to him yet, do it at once.

Paul C. Johnson, President.

SOUTH LAWN ANNIVERSARY Grand Rapids, Michigan

The eleventh anniversary occasion at South Lawn Church proved to be a very happy and enjoyable occasion. Bro. C. E. Randall arrived on Friday, Oct. 22, bringing five others from the Fonthill section. Their presence added much to the spirit of fellowship.

The meetings throughout the week-end were well attended, even to the Bible class on Saturday afternoon, and Bro. Randall did a splendid work. The sermons were of a spiritual nature, well presented, and our church group felt amply repaid for its efforts.

An outstanding feature of the week-end was the addition to the church of four splendid persons. Two of these are single young men, Robert Hall, 2152 Audobon St., S. W., and Leslie Niles, 2428 Horton St., S. E. The other two are a young married couple and both teachers in our Godwin School system, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Dykstra of Buist St., S.W. Baptismal services were held Saturday night, and the right hand of fellowship is being extended Sunday morning, Oct. 31.

All were happy to have Sr. Fletcher of Kalamazoo present again to cut the birthday cake. A note of sadness was evident, however, that Sr. Skeels for the first time was unable to attend the anniversary. Bro. Skeels was able to be out for part of the day.

South Lawn wishes to extend to Bro. Randall its deepest appreciation for his work and influence, and heartfelt thanks to all others who helped to make this an outstanding anniversary occasion.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

CHURCH OF GOD, AUSTIN, TEXAS

Brethren: I would like to take this opportunity to give you a report of the series of meetings conducted by Bro. E. E. Giesler of Moorefield, Neb., while with us last spring and part of the summer.

We had, prior to Bro. Giesler's coming, attempted to preach and teach the "gospel of the kingdom" in such a way that a real scriptural church could be established here. Bro. Fred McCullough and his family, by the help of God, led me into the "one faith," and I had been baptized in the "name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." Some advancement had been accomplished, though the growth had been very slow and meager. Up to that time only about a half dozen families were at all faithful in attendance. In a circumstance of that sort it was necessary that an evangelist not only pay his own traveling expenses to us, but that he support himself while here. Unusual and difficult as it was, Bro. Giesler did just that, and gave us a series of meetings that eternity alone will be able to measure in merit and worth. Undoubtedly God sent him at just the opportune time. Consequently our group has more than doubled in number, and the "faith once delivered unto the saints" is deeply embedded in the hearts of the majority of our group and others are showing signs of interest, and the work here is undoubtedly headed for that degree of establishment needed to stand in these trying times.

During Bro. Giesler's visit the work here was set in order under the name "Church of God of the Abrahamic Faith, and our new tabernacle was started and we plan to have it completely finished and paid for by the first of the year. We have about twenty-five baptized members on our church roll, and there are about as many that are deeply interested in the truth and are seriously considering obeying the gospel of salvation.

I would like to extend a cordial invitation to any minister passing this way, who believes in and preaches the "faith once delivered unto the saints," to pay us a visit and lend us a helping hand in our attempt to establish ourselves in the "one faith." Sr. Giesler also shared in a commendable manner in the achievements attained while here. Surely they are constructive instruments in the hands of God.

H. V. Minkler, Pastor,
2601 Canterbury, Austin, Texas.

Board of Evangelism

Preach the Word

C. E. Randall, Superintendent

Sometimes it is well to "forget those things which are behind, and reach forth unto those things which are before." Yet this should not always be done. There is much in life that merits recalling. Considerable Scripture "stirs up our minds by way of remembrance." Experiences of the past contribute in no small measure to present-day achievements and future successes.

In writing to Timothy, Paul, a father in the gospel to this young man, called to mind the "unfeigned faith" that was in his mother and grandmother. There is much in our past church history that stands out as "unfeigned faith" which, if called to remembrance, would greatly stimulate our present zeal and inspire us to a more intensive service in interest of truth.

The church of a quarter century ago was zealously evangelistic. Like the workers of apostolic times, they went everywhere preaching the Word. This spreading out created a sturdiness that was visibly reflected in the individual member. The primary mission of the Church of God founders was to evangelize. They depended on the love of the truth to hold their converts rather than the pastoral activities of a resident minister. The established churches became more or less self-contained. While this method resulted in many of the newly organized groups flourishing for a while and then passing out of existence due to a lack of pastoral supervision, yet the loss was not as great as were the gains. Even though some of the less sturdy churches failed to function permanently, yet many of our prominent lay workers of the present time can be traced back to the evangelistic work done in these localities. The center of our work has always been in the Mid-Central States. From this region our work has branched out and the spreading was almost wholly done during the era of evangelizing.

More and more for the last ten or fifteen years we have been concentrating on pastoral work. This has to some extent strengthened some of the local churches. While concrete figures are not available, observations point toward a pronounced weakening in state work as a result of turning so much of our attention to local work. This is not an accusation against developing and maintaining the pastoral side of our church life, but we are open to question in the neglect of zealous and widespread evangelism. Our growth must come from this type of work as it did in past years. Unless there can be a greater degree of balance between pastoral and evangelistic labors, the future is none too promising. Some profitable reflecting can be done on calling to remembrance the means used in spreading the gospel as understood by the Church of God. The establishing of new churches is almost a lost art among us today! The Board of Evangelism has the secret lost to the church—it is "Evangelism."

MEETING AT ARKANSAS CITY, KANSAS

Bro. E. E. Giesler and wife of Moorefield, Neb., on their trip from a summer vacation in Texas to their home in Nebraska, again stopped with the church people here, and gave us a week's meeting, which was greatly enjoyed and was a real feast of good Bible doctrine and practical sermons. One thing he stressed was that while it was necessary to believe the gospel and obey it in every particular, a knowledge of the gospel alone will never save any person. To be saved one must have a life of good works, devoid of strife contention, and bickering over things of no profit. One must follow peace with all men. We may have all knowledge and understand all mysteries, but if we are heady, high minded, and assume a better-than-thou attitude, we become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal, for charity is not puffed up.

One lady from Wellington, Kan., came here for baptism, Mrs. Ellen Hill, daughter of Sr. J. Hindman of Wellington and sister of Mrs. Hobart Luper of this place. We were glad to welcome her into the church here, and glad to know another had entered into the Master's service. We feel that she will prove faithful to the end, and be a shining light for Jesus.

Sunday, Oct. 3, the services closed with an all-day meeting. There were Sunday school and preaching service in the morning; basket dinner at noon; sermon followed by Communion in the afternoon; and in the evening a sermon on "Christ's Second Coming."

On Monday morning Bro. and Sr. Giesler left by auto for Omaha and Blair, Neb., where he had appointments for a few days at each place. Bro. Giesler won the hearts of our church people here and we hope for a return soon to this place.

Mrs. A. J. Chaplin.

NORTHWEST CONFERENCE

The Northwest Conference of Oregon and Washington, Churches of God of the Abrahamic Faith, met in Corvallis, Ore., October 1-3, for their quarterly conference. The opening meeting was on Friday night, when a Bible study was conducted by the president of the Conference, Bro. H. J. Prosser. His subject was, "Fear God" (Mal. 3:16).

Saturday morning we were pleased to have with us Bro. John Eagleston, who gave us a good talk on "What Sort of a House Will You Build Unto Me?" (Isa. 66:1, 2). Saturday evening we had a fine talk by Bro. Prosser, who gave a beautiful picture of the attributes of God.

Sunday morning Sunday school was held as usual, followed by another good talk by Bro. Eagleston on "I Say Unto You, Fear Him." A basket dinner was served at noon. In the afternoon we were called to order to hear Bro. Eagleston speak on "The Passover, Passion of our Lord, and Memorial." Our closing meeting was in the evening, when Bro. Prosser gave us a very good sermon on "God a Spirit."

We feel we had a very good conference, although there were not very many present.

We were made glad to have Bro. and Sr. Rayfield Skeels with us. Bro. Prosser had not seen Bro. Rayfield for 45 years. Bro. Skeels, Bro. Eagleston and Bro. Prosser sang many beautiful songs for us, which we all enjoyed.

Our next conference will be held the third Sunday in February, at Felida, Wash. So let us all look forward for that meeting.

We were very sorry not to have Bro. A. W. Darby of Gresham with us. This was the first conference he has missed here for years.

Flora E. Hogue, Conference Secretary.

OREGON, ILLINOIS

Bro. F. L. Austin, accompanied by his wife and Miss Leila Whitehead and Mrs. Sitler, all of Chicago, paid a surprise visit to Oregon last Sunday. Bro. Austin was urged by the pastor to fill the pulpit which he had occupied for so many years in the past. His deeply impressive discourse had to do largely with the present and future phases of the kingdom of God. He pointed out that those who accept Christ today acknowledge His kingship over them now and consequently should cultivate that complete obedience to Him which will distinguish their service when they become actual co-rulers with Him in the future.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Moran of Clinton, Iowa, were also very welcome guests at the Oregon Church Sunday.

Sr. Leota B. Hanson, treasurer of the National Bible Institution, spent the week-end with her parents at Lebanon, Ill. She was accompanied as far as Clinton, Ill., by Sr. Mary Jackson, who is spending a few days with her son and daughter-in-law, Bro. and Sr. Sidney Jackson.

Bro. Fred Huber, who celebrated his ninety-first birthday last September 12, is confined to his bed in the hospital near Oregon. This aged German brother has been, so long as his health permitted, a most faithful attendant at the services here, walking the two miles or more from the home where he lived to the church. He is beloved by all who know him. We pray for his recovery.

Bro. William Taft of the Oregon congregation underwent an operation for the removal of infected bone in the mouth. He has suffered severely. We also pray for his restoration.

Bro. Will Booth of Lake City, Iowa, again visited our morning service. He is visiting at the home of his sister, Mrs. J. H. Williams, at Rochelle.

LeCRONE - APPLEBY

On Sunday, October 17, 1937, Miss Lucille LeCrone of Kennard, Neb., and Mr. Clinton Appleby of Blair, Neb., were united in marriage by Elder E. E. Giesler of Moorefield, the same state.

The marriage was solemnized in the Blair Church of God on Sunday afternoon. Preceding the ceremony, the bride's brother, Leslie LeCrone, sang, "I Love You Truly." The bridal party advanced to their places in the front of the church to the strains of a wedding march played on the violin by Mr. Cleo Dixon of Omaha, accompanied on the piano by Miss Clara Krogh of Blair.

The attendants were Mrs. Valura Karnett, friend of the bride, and Mr. Howard Appleby, brother of the groom.

Following the ceremony a six o'clock dinner was served at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Clair LeCrone.

Mr. Appleby is manager of a large farm near Blair, where the couple will make their future home.

Sr. Lucille LeCrone Appleby was a graduate of the Bible Training Class at Oregon, Ill., and served successfully as pastor of a community church in Oklahoma and later as pastor of the Church of God in Arkansas City, Kan. She is possessed of unusual ability as a public speaker and is favorably known among our churches throughout the Middle West.

Mr. Appleby has also been associated with the Church of God for years in his home state and is highly respected in his community.

We extend to Bro. and Sr. Appleby our sincere good wishes for their happiness and prosperity.

IT HAPPENED A LONG TIME AGO

Niagara Falls, N. Y., May 19, 1895

The Blessed Hope Church of God at Niagara Falls, N. Y., was given occasion for rejoicing some forty-two years ago, according to an interesting report made to "The Restitution" by Bro. Fred Greiner, the secretary of the congregation.

"The little flock was planted here, and Bro. (B. W.) and Sr. (Mary A.) Woodward heard the Macedonian cry and came over and watered—commencing their meetings Sunday morning, May 5 (1895), and holding forth every night during the week. . . . The people around and about are so prejudiced against us! (But) under these disadvantages and discouragements, with everyone against us and our glorious doctrine, they commenced declaring the counsel of God in a simple, sound, humble, and energetic way, that carried conviction. The average attendance during the week days was about twenty. On Sunday the brethren gathered together from the distance and good meetings were held. . . . The result: eight were baptized into Christ, believing the gospel of the kingdom. . . . The advice given by Bro. and Sr. Woodward to each of the baptized ones was solemn and so instructive that all here will remember it, as all were weeping."

A YEAR-LONG CHRISTMAS GIFT!

In planning your Christmas giving, two things should be taken into consideration: first, the suitability of the gift to the recipient; and, second, the lasting quality of it.

When you give your friends a year's subscription to The Restitution Herald as a Christmas present, you meet both of these requirements fully.

The Restitution Herald, with its richly varied contents, provides an interesting and instructive source of genuine pleasure to all members of the family.

As each new issue reaches the one for whom it is intended, he or she is immediately reminded of the thoughtful friend who made its welcome visits possible. The paper thus becomes a WEEKLY rather than a YEARLY Christmas gift!

Put The Restitution Herald at the very top of your Christmas Shopping List at once! Send it for an entire year to your dearest friends, that they may enjoy it with you!

The price to New Subscribers per year is $1.00. Address, National Bible Institution, Oregon, Ill.

THE RESTITUTION HERALD advocates: the near return of Christ, Acts 1:11, and life only through Him, Col. 3:3; the literal resurrection of the dead, John 5:28; the immortalization of those in Christ, 1 Cor. 15:53, 54; the final restoration of Israel as the kingdom of God under the kingship of Christ, Luke 1:32, the church to be joint-heirs with Him, Rom. 8:17, and Israel to be made head over Gentile nations, Isa. 60:13; the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began," Acts 3:21. It also firmly advocates repentance and immersion in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, Acts 2:38, and a consecrated life as essential to salvation.

Christmas Gift Suggestions —

"When they had opened their treasures, they presented unto him gifts."—Matthew 2:11.

We do not desire to commercialize Christmas, but we do wish to help our readers select gifts to give to their friends which will remind them of the One whose glorious advent into the world we commemorate on Christmas Day!

It is the birth of the World's Redeemer that we celebrate!

Every Christmas greeting we extend, every gift we bestow, should somehow remind the recipient that there "is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord."

That we may assist our readers in the accomplishment of this ONE GREAT PURPOSE OF CHRISTMAS OBSERVANCE we provide the following

“I Met Her at the Dance”

By the Editor

I HAD NOT heard that their marriage had “gone on the rocks” until the young man walked into my office the other day and told me about it. In fact, I had quite forgotten him and the circumstances under which we had met until he recalled them to my mind, as he was not a resident of our community when I first came into contact with him. He also had forgotten my name, he said, and experienced some little difficulty in discovering just who it was that had asked the questions and received the answers which had made him a husband five years before.

“We always went to the dance on Saturday night,” the young man told me. “That was where I met her in the first place. After we were married,” he continued, “and even after the baby came, we went to the dance on Saturday night.”

It seemed it was almost a religious rite for these young people to attend a dance each Saturday night. Life would not have been complete without it. They lived the other six days of the week as an unavoidable interlude between dances. Marriage and parenthood made no change in their habits.

“Yes,” he said, “I met her at the dance. After we were married, as I worked late on Saturdays, she generally got to the dance before I did.”

This was no complaint on his part, but a simple statement of a commonplace fact. The quicker one could get to the dance, the better, that was all! The young man didn't blame his wife for leaving the baby with the neighbors and going early. That was the natural thing for her to do.

“She met other fellows there, of course,” he went on, “and one of them in particular got to running around with her to other dances and places of amusement while I was at work. But that was all right, too!” he added with considerable emphasis. He may have observed a questioning look in my eye. “That was her business!”

“Finally it got so that she spent so much time away from home that my meals were never ready when I got back from work. Then I did put up a holler! I told her that if she couldn't have my meals on time we'd better split up.

Disciples to Join Religious Council

"Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers."—
2 Corinthians 6:14.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, October 28.—Participation of the Churches of Christ (Disciples) in the formation of a proposed World Council of Churches was practically assured last night. The powerful Recommendations Committee of the Disciples' International Convention, now in session, approved a resolution pledging the denomination's cooperation, and the delegates are expected to concur.

The Disciples were the outgrowth of the great religious reform movement which had its inception in the early part of the past century. A number of able Bible students, who afterward became active in our own and other similar organizations, were associated with Thomas and Alexander Campbell in fostering the movement. Among such, were Dr. John Thomas, founder of the Christadelphian group and Joseph Marsh, the publisher of our first denominational paper.

The September issue of The New Covenant Advocate and Kingdom Herald of Melbourne, Australia, contains a brief but interesting history of the so-called "Campbellite" movement, and stresses its great purpose as being the uniting of "all the churches of Christ which mutually acknowledge each other as such." The present action of this denomination seems to be in line with its past declaration of purpose. To effect such a union of sects, however, will require, as was the case in Canada a few years ago, complete disregard for the doctrines which have made the various denominations what they are today.

Twentieth Anniversary of Balfour Declaration

"It shall be no more, until he come whose right it is, and I will give it him."—Ezekiel 21:27.

JERUSALEM, Nov. 2.—The twentieth anniversary of the issuance of the Balfour Declaration, promising the "establishment in Palestine of a National Home for the Jewish People," finds the country in a turmoil, seething with discontent, bordering on open warfare. It was on November 2, 1917, that Lord Balfour pledged the British Government to what amounted to an "open door" policy for the Jews in the Holy Land. They were to be granted entrance into the country and were assured of the cooperation of the Government in establishing themselves there.

We believe that Great Britain has kept faith with them. Every effort has been put forth to carry out in spirit, as well as in letter, the Declaration made twenty years ago. But the growing opposition of the Arabs, fostered secretly in every possible way by Italy, has made the opposition of the British in Palestine exceedingly difficult. Even the Jews, for whom the Government has done so much, are constantly criticizing and complaining against the Mandate Power. But, of course, we cannot expect a real Jewish State to be established until He shall come "whose right it is" to reign over the house of Jacob forever.

JERUSALEM, Nov. 3.—Yesterday was a day of prayer in the Holy City. Moslems gathered in their mosques and called upon Allah for the restoration of all Palestine to them, while the Jews assembled in the synagogues and besought Jehovah to remember His covenant with their fathers and give to them the Land of Promise.

The strange thing about the situation is that Allah of Mohammed and Jehovah of Moses are one and the same God, for Jews and Moslems worship the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. This leaves the final result of yesterday's pleading entirely in God's hands, to be settled according to His will, which is as it should and must be.

Divorces in Hollywood

"What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder."—Jesus.

HOLLYWOOD, Calif., Nov. 5.—Hollywood sets the styles and forms and habits of millions of people throughout the world. The "movie" characters are better known than those who rule the world politically. It is not strange, then, that matrimonial standards are as low as they are everywhere. Hollywood marriages do not last, therefore, the marriages of thousands of others are of short duration.

An analysis of the matrimonial experiences of eleven of motion pictures' leading stars reveals that they lasted: (Case 1) first marriage, five hours; second, eight months; (2) five days; (3) nine days; (4) ten days; (5) forty-six days; (6) sixty-seven days; (7) four months; (8) ten months; (9) two years; (10) five years; (11) five years.

There can be no doubt but that the influence of these dingy "stars" has contributed largely to the deplorable general divorce record in this and other countries.

“The Blood of God”

By R. H. Judd

WHEN the translators were translating our King James Version of the Bible, they came to a passage in Acts 20:28, where Paul was speaking to the elders of the church at Miletus. “Feed the church of God,” he said to them, “the church of God which he hath purchased with his own blood.” “Oh,” they said, “that won’t do.” And they marked out the word “God.” They said, “God didn’t die—not the blood of God, but ‘the Lord.’” Then one of the translators said, “We are here not to interpret but to translate. This verse says Paul declared it was the blood of God that was shed on Calvary.”

God was in Christ. God was not accepting an offering on Calvary. God was making it. God was in Christ, dying, taking upon Himself His people’s sins. That is why the moment you believe in the cross of Christ and put your confidence in it, your sins are forever removed, and the peace and pardon and power of God come into your soul.—Moody Bible Institute Monthly.

THE quotation above from the Moody Bible Institute Monthly has been passed on to the writer for comment; also for explanation of the passage (Acts 20:28) concerned.

One may be pardoned for questioning the accuracy of the story mentioned in reference to the King James translators. As we shall see later, the verse does not say what is there claimed, nor is any authority given for the authenticity of the incident.

Many persons have stumbled at the phrase in question, and it has frequently been brought into requisition as “proof” of the untenable doctrine that “Jesus Christ is God.”

Anyone who has followed the trend of religious events during the past forty years or less, will have noticed how much more now than formerly emphasis is being laid on the “deity of Christ” instead of His “divinity,” as used to be the case. It is evident that unless that can be established as an article of faith, the doctrine of the Trinity, so widely taught by the churches, loses a formidable support.

From past experience it would seem to be true that Christians in general instinctively shrink from the implied suggestion that the verse gives if read alone in the common version. They naturally cannot conceive of God shedding blood, or dying. Most of them endeavor to avoid the conflict by refusing to investigate, resting their belief on the word of others, whose official positions supposedly imply knowledge and authority. One would think that the very uniqueness of the language used would stir up a spirit of inquiry in reference to so vital a subject.

The selection from the “Moody Institute Monthly,” which is reviewed and criticized so ably by Brother Judd at our request, appeared without comment recently in an Adventist paper, thus bearing the stamp of editorial approval. To us the idea of “the blood of God” is quite as unscriptural as is the expression used by Roman Catholics, “Mary, the mother of God.”

It may with confidence be stated that no fundamental doctrine of the Bible is based on language that is ambiguous in meaning, uncertain as to correctness of translation, or that is not supported by other scriptures that are clear and definite in their presentation. Every one of these features is conspicuous in Acts 20:28. So unusual is the language used, and so uncertain the translation, that there are acknowledged to be no less than six different readings (see Emphatic Diaglott notes). In all such passages the importance of comparing scripture with scripture cannot be overestimated. There is no other passage of Scripture that even suggests the thought that we were redeemed by the “blood of God,” and even in this verse it cannot (in the original) be said to be so stated. The translators of the common version have only supplied an ellipsis which doubtless they thought to be correct. But they did this, apparently, without reference to numerous other scriptures (such as Eph. 1:7; Col. 1:14; Heb. 9:11, 12, 14; 1 Peter 1:19; 1 John 1:7; Rev. 5:9; 12:11), which by statement and by context emphatically declare, without any uncertainty, that we were redeemed “by the blood of Christ.” The passages named (which the reader is asked to read carefully) so definitely distinguish between God and Christ as to make their statements, that we were redeemed by the blood of Christ, doubly significant. No one can thoughtfully read the crucifixion incidents in any of the Gospels without noting the same clear distinction between God and Christ.

Before taking up the explanation of the passage, there is one point which I feel impelled to notice, for it has come with such frequency from prominent professing Christians as to call for immediate comment. We can only suspect that the difficulties under which they labor in endeavoring to harmonize their teachings with Scripture have unconsciously forced the method they employ upon them. It is this: In defense of their position they find themselves obliged to use language alien to Scripture and, what is still more serious, to resort to statements without foundation and often directly untrue. In thus plainly stating the facts the writer believes that he is acting in the interests of truth and kindness, not only as regards ourselves and others, but in reference to those who come under the criticism. The following are a few examples I have in my possession which provide indisputable proof of their actuality.

Rev. R. A. Torrey, D. D., in his attempts to defend the doctrine of the Trinity in his (Please turn to page 10)

GOD SPEAKS

(Concluded)

A Sermon by the Editor

SO SOLIDLY were the foundations of Jewish civilization and of Jewish worship laid, that both were maintained for more than five hundred years after the fall of the nation itself. In the days of Jesus, Jerusalem was still the center of Jewish worship. On the day of Pentecost, which was observed shortly after the crucifixion and resurrection of our Lord, we read that "there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven" (Acts 2:5). They were there to keep the great annual feast of their religion. They were there to worship Jehovah, the God of their fathers, as their fathers had done before them. The temple resounded with the prayers and songs of God's Hebrew people. Daily offerings were brought and presented by the priests before the Lord in that holy sanctuary. The law of Moses was still observed, so far as the restrictions of Roman law permitted. The glory the sacred hill of Zion had in the beginning, still lingered on its slopes. God was there! He still spoke to His people! He still accepted their gifts! To the listening ears of the devout Simeon that Voice came in comforting, assuring accents. To Anna the prophetess, and to Mary the mother of Christ, God spoke! The temple worship was in full operation when Mary and Joseph and the youthful Savior went up to Jerusalem to keep the Passover.

Then what of this prophecy, written away back in the days of Moses, before the temple was dreamed of, while its glory and its greatness were still seen only by the eye of the Lord of Hosts?

"And I will make your cities waste, and bring your sanctuaries unto desolation, and I will not smell the savour of your sweet odours. And I will bring your land into desolation: and your enemies which dwell therein shall be astonished at it. And I will scatter you among the heathen, and will draw out a sword after you: and your land shall be desolate, and your cities waste" (Lev. 26:31-33).

Please remember that this prophecy was uttered fifteen hundred years or more before the thing was done! But God speaks, and regardless of the flight of centuries or of millenniums the thing predicted comes to pass!

GOD'S WORD THE BASIS OF HOPE

Forty years went by after those solemn words of warning were spoken by the Lord and Israel had entered the land of Canaan. Up to that time neither Abraham nor his seed possessed a city or even a foot of ground they could call their own (Acts 7:5; Heb. 11:13). They had no temple in which to worship, nothing but a tent to house the Ark of the Covenant of their God. But here Jehovah warned His people of the loss of cities which were not yet built, and told them of the desolating of sanctuaries of which they had not yet dreamed.

Of course, at such a time, under such circumstances, Israel could not understand these warnings fully. Yet God told them that if they disobeyed they would be scattered among nations, many of which had not yet come into being!

As we read of these things, we feel like echoing the words which David spoke long afterward, when God promised to build him a house that would stand forever: "And this was a small thing in thy sight, O Lord God; but thou hast spoken also of thy servant's house for a great while to come. And is this the manner of man, O Lord God?" (2 Sam. 7:19).

God does speak of many things "for a great while to come" and such surely is not "the manner of man," for man cannot see into the future, no! not for a single hour!

How impressive appears the foresight and the unchangeableness of God, when we consider the fact, so fully attested by history, that only those lands against which God pronounced His judgments have suffered the extremes of desolation which those lands have known! Greece went down, it is true, under the hand of God, but He did not declare that her land should become "desolate"! And so her vine-clad hillsides have continued to yield their increase throughout the long period of her punishment. But Babylon, which was not to be "inhabited for ever," has been utterly deserted since she met the penalty Jehovah pronounced upon her!

And Palestine, upon which the vials of divine wrath were poured in an overwhelming deluge—Palestine, which God declared should "lie desolate in the sight of all that passed by," has indeed met the fate heaven assigned to her. Of this there can be no doubt.

GOD SPEAKS OF RESTORATION

But let us listen again as God speaks!

"Your land shall be desolate, and your cities waste. Then shall the land enjoy her sabbaths, as long as it lieth desolate, and ye be in your enemies' land; even then shall the land rest, and enjoy her sabbaths" (Lev. 26:33, 34).

Notice these words carefully, for in them lies the key that unlocks some of the most profound mysteries of the Near East today.

"As long as it (the land of Israel) lieth desolate, and ye be in your enemies' land; even then shall the land rest, and enjoy her sabbaths!"

Reclamation projects have accomplished wonders in many desolate parts of the world. Improved methods of cultivation, "dry farming," irrigation, etc., have brought vast stretches of desert back to fertility and made them richly productive. But not until lately have reclamation projects, irrigation schemes, or improved methods of agriculture succeeded in accomplishing anything of real benefit in Palestine! Over the hills and once fruitful valleys of that ancient "land of milk and honey," desolation has continued to brood for many generations.

God speaks! And Palestine sleeps!

How long was that state of desolation to continue? "As long as . . . ye be in your enemies' land," the Voice of the Lord had said! But not beyond that point! When the days of wandering are over and the Jew goes home, then will the sabbaths of the land be over! When Israel no longer languishes in the lands of her enemies, then will the desolation pronounced upon Zion end. But not one hour earlier!

A Jewish daily paper published in Chicago, brings the interesting information to my desk, that the orange yield in Palestine is increasing, that grapes and olives clothe the hillsides with living green, that desolation is retreating on every front that is occupied by returned Jews!

That is something to think about! The Jews are leaving the lands of their enemies and going home, and desolation flees before them on every side! God speaks! And Palestine is newborn, for the Jews are going home! None but the Jews can rehabilitate the land which was promised to Abraham the friend of God!

God's Word is true! It never fails! Let no man rob you of your confidence in it! Teach its truth to your children, your neighbors, and your friends! God's Word is true! It has been fulfilled in the past! It is being fulfilled today! It will be fulfilled completely in the future! History, nature, and human experience unite to verify its truth!

God speaks! He speaks through His Word, the Bible! And a "nation is born in a day"! God speaks! And mighty Babylon sinks into the desert's sands! God speaks! And when the thing of which He speaks has been accomplished—the opening of Palestine to the Jew—the greatest war of time comes speedily to a close!

God speaks! He speaks to us through the gospel of His Son—the glad news of the kingdom that is soon to come! Shall we not obey His Voice today that we may have a part in that eternal realm of glory?

The Messiah

By A. J. Eychaner

"And after threescore and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself."—Daniel 9:26.

DANIEL is the only Bible writer who uses the word translated "Messiah." It is the equivalent of the word "Anointed," and it is generally understood that he refers to Jesus as the Anointed One.

While the Hebrew prophets do not use this official title, they speak of the person, birth, work, suffering, death, and future reign of Jesus by the use of other terms, which leave no doubt with the reader as to whom reference is made.

Moses refers to Him as that Prophet through whom God would give a message to the people; and if any should refuse to hear the message, God would require it of them (Deut. 18:18, 19).

Job speaks of the Messiah as the Redeemer who should stand in the latter day upon the earth, and although death should close his eyes for a time, yet resurrected in splendor he should see Him for himself (Job 19:23-27).

Balaam, in his prophecy, says, "I shall see him, but not now: I shall behold him, but not nigh; there shall come a Star out of Jacob, and a Sceptre shall rise out of Israel. . . . Out of Jacob shall come he that shall have dominion, and shall destroy him that remaineth in the city" (Num. 24:17-19).

This man Balaam was not a Hebrew prophet, but it is said of him in the Record, that his eyes were open, and that he heard the words of God, and knew the knowledge of the Most High, and saw the vision of the Almighty. God sometimes uses what to us would seem queer methods to carry out His purpose, yet who may question His wisdom? Balaam perished in battle and sleeps in an unknown grave. He coveted the gold of Balak and grew angry at the ass when his foot was pinched against the wall, but God revealed the message through him to Balak and assured the Prophet that he finally would see the Messiah when seated upon His throne, wielding the scepter over Israel in the kingdom of God.

David's references to the Messiah are numerous. Not only does he speak of His coming, but of His trial and death, resurrection and future glory. Let me read from his pen a few words: "He shall judge thy people with righteousness, and thy poor with judgment. He shall spare the poor and needy, and shall save the souls of the needy; he shall redeem their souls from deceit and violence: and precious shall their blood be in his sight. His name shall endure for ever: his name shall be continued as long as the sun: and men shall be blessed in him: all nations shall call him blessed. . . . Blessed be his glorious name for ever: and let the whole earth be filled with his glory."

Again we read: "Once have I sworn by my holiness, that I will not lie unto David. His seed shall endure for ever, and his throne as the sun before me. It shall be established for ever as the moon, and as a faithful witness in heaven." (Please turn to page 10)

By John O. Woodruff

AT LEAST three things serve to show man's superiority in the divine plan over the other creatures of earth. First, man's Creator showed him a marked preference in giving him a superior form, "the human form divine," for God created man in His own image and after His own likeness (Gen. 1:27). No other creature on earth, in the air, or in the mighty deep can claim this high distinction. God's estimate of the value and sacredness of His image is shown in His displeasure when man's murderous hand is raised to mutilate or mar the beautiful image of the Creator.

"Whoso sheddeth man's blood (mutilates or mars the image), by man shall his blood be shed: for in the image of God made he man" (Gen. 9:6).

Those familiar with the Bible know that an image is an imitation, a copy, a representation or a picture; hence, God's likeness is expressed in the physical form of man. The use of the word "image" in God's history of man has no reference to an intellectual or moral resemblance, as is shown in the use of the word in Genesis 5:3: "And Adam lived an hundred and thirty years, and begat a son in his own likeness, after his image; and called his name Seth."

Here the resemblance is undoubtedly to the physical form, the features. In short, the common use of the word conveys the true idea that "the child looked like its parents"; not in size, not in intellectual or moral qualities, but he bore a striking resemblance to his father in the expression of his features.

The second marked distinction in man's favor is found in his capacity for increasing his stock of knowledge almost indefinitely. The ability of animals to add to their fund of knowledge is very limited, although sufficient to meet their less diverse requirements. The mental capacity of animals, while restricted, enables them to reason upon the simple problems with which they must deal. But man's field of research, investigation, and reason is so vast and the problems he must meet so intricate, that a greatly increased capacity was necessary in his case.

Man's Creator honored him in the scale of existence by constituting him a responsible being, in placing him under law for the regulation of his conduct. This act of the Creator stamped man as a moral agent, making him responsible to the Author of his being. This distinction places man upon the throne of animate existence upon the earth. This exalted position was conferred upon him, not by conquest gained in fierce and bloody struggles with his inferiors, but was given him at the time of his creation.

"And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth" (Gen. 1:26).

Now let us look at the third and crowning mark of distinction placed upon man that raises him above the animal creation.

MAN ALONE PROMISED ENDLESS LIFE

A brief period is allotted as the lifetime of the entire creation, but to man alone has the Creator offered, upon certain clearly stated conditions, a future state of existence entirely free from all the unpleasant environments of this present life. The great value of this grand offer consists in the fact that the future life and the blessings attending it will be endless. Our present brief state of existence, with all of its aches and pains, its bitter griefs and disappointments, does not abate our desire for its continuance, and every effort is put forth to prolong it.

It is no wonder, then, that love prompted the offer of endless life. "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John 3:16).

Should not every heart be attuned to praise God for His wonderful goodness to the children of men? Even inanimate nature should break its lasting silence in tones of praise for such mighty love!

NO EVIDENCE OF MAN'S PRESENT IMMORTALITY

So far in our investigations we have failed to find any evidence or even intimation that man, as at present constituted, is in possession of any life principle which prevents the enemy, death, taking full possession of him. Why this profound silence in God's history of man as to any deathless or immortal principle? Even the words or terms which would express endless existence are not once applied to man in the history God has given of his origin and nature.

With such facts before us, let us review a part of the early history as given in Genesis 2.

Reference is made in verse 9 to "the tree of life in the midst of the garden." The name of this tree would indicate that its fruit could either impart life or prolong life already given. What relation, then, did the man whom the Lord God formed, sustain to this tree? If the tree could give life or sustain life already given, then the prolonging of the man's life would be assured, providing he could have access to the tree.

But to assume this position would be to nullify the penalty God pronounced upon the man, for that penalty declared that should the man eat of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil he should die. Later the meaning of the penalty was fully explained when the statement was made that he should return unto the dust from which he had been taken.

Now, one of two things must be admitted: either the man was prevented from eating of the tree of life, or else God failed to execute the penalty upon him as He had threatened. To settle this question no discussion is necessary. We simply appeal to the history of man as recorded in Genesis 3:22-24.

Let the reader note the facts in the time referred to: the act of sin had been committed, the man and his wife had confessed their guilt, the sentence of death had been pronounced—all while the man and his wife were yet in the beautiful garden.

Now read the language cited in Genesis 3:22-24: "And the Lord God said, Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil: and now, lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live for ever: therefore the Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden, to till the ground from whence he was taken. So he drove out the man; and he placed at the east of the garden of Eden Cherubims, and a flaming sword which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life."

Does this settle the question? Did this act of God prevent the man from continuing his sinful life forever? Can the man, shut off from the tree of life, suffer the penalty of death threatened by his Creator? All of these questions are fully answered in one brief sentence: "And all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years: and he died" (Gen. 5:5).

THE SOURCE OF IDENTITY

We have thus given briefly a history of the man whom the Lord God formed of the dust of the ground. The identity of the man is clearly seen in all his relations to his Creator. In other words, it was the same man whom God formed of the dust of the ground that was put in the garden of Eden to dress and to keep it; it was the same man who was told to eat of all the fruit of the garden except that which grew upon the tree of the knowledge of good and evil; it was the same man that was driven out of the garden and compelled to eat of the herb of the field; it was the same man that was to undergo sorrow and labor all the days of his life for his daily bread; and it was the same man that lived nine hundred and thirty years and died!

In all of these relations no other man has been substituted, and the same dust-made man is the subject of God's attention and dealings throughout the Bible.

In the face of these facts, how can intelligent men affirm that all these evidences found in God's history of man have no relation to the real responsible person, but relate to the body which has been conveniently called "the house in which the man lives"? (Please turn to page 10)

The Awakening in the Morning

"I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness."—Psalm 17:15.

DAVID must have had a vision of the glories that await the sons of God in the day of their manifestation, when he uttered these words. Before him, Job had caught a glimpse of that same glory, and exclaimed: "All the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come. Thou shalt call, and I will answer thee: thou shalt have a desire to the work of thy hands" (Job 14:14).

What rejoicing there will be in that day! Earth's long night of weeping will be over. The archenemy, death, will be forever vanquished. Those whom we have "loved long since, and lost awhile," will greet us again, and we shall be forever with the Lord. Sickness, sorrow, pain, disappointment—all will be gone never to return. Peace shall flow like a river, and the glory of God will fill the earth as the waters now cover the sea. The hope of the fathers will be realized, the expectation of the righteous will be rewarded. Then Zion will begin her glad reign, and the ransomed of the Lord will return with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads.

At that day the voice of the archangel will be heard awaking the sleeping saints of God, as it is written: "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first" (1 Thess. 4:16).

And again: "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed" (1 Cor. 15:51, 52).

It is a fair inference that no dead ones will hear His voice in the day of awaking, who refused to hear it in this life. "My sheep hear my voice," said Jesus, "and I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish." Those who perish do so because they have no hope in Christ, the Life-Giver. They "shall remain in the congregation of the dead," according to the Apostle.

This is a most solemn truth, and should cause us all to consider whether we are "in Christ" or not; for it is to those, and only those, that the promise of awaking is given. "The dead in Christ shall rise first." "The dead shall be raised incorruptible." Job said he would answer the call to awake when the time for his change should come, because he had answered the call to repentance in this life. David had the assurance of his acceptance with God, and so could say, "I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness."

How is it with us? Have we this hope? Can we say, with the Apostle, "We shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is"?

If not, let us make haste to embrace this hope while there is opportunity.—Herald of Life.

The World Ablaze

TO ATTEMPT to sketch the present-day history of European and Asiatic lands is almost an impossible task. Conditions change so rapidly and so many of the "strings" are pulled by diplomats carefully concealed behind the scenes, no one can predict what an hour may bring forth. The critical nature of the situation is revealed quite clearly in the crash of markets a few days ago on both sides of the Atlantic.

The nations are lining up in two great camps. On the one side is Britain, France, China, Russia, and the United States, although the latter nation is making strenuous endeavor to keep clear of all entanglements. How that can be accomplished in view of the complicated tangles of modern commerce is a mystery.

THE RISE OF DICTATORS

Europe has been in turmoils of various kinds ever since the Treaty of Versailles was signed in 1919 to end the World War. Rightly or wrongly, Germany emerged from that council hall with a firm conviction that she had been ill-treated. With the appearance of Herr Hitler on the scene that nation, by devious and often illegal methods, set herself to the task of finding a new place for herself in the world sun. She made friends with Italy, a dictator land, and one might have expected some sort of approach to Russia, another dictator empire. But Germany and Italy chose to regard the Russian Empire as the threat, not only to their own lands, but to all the world, and set themselves the task of keeping the Russian race in order.

In the Far East, Japan announced that henceforth she would be the champion of the yellow races—and that included India—and told all and sundry to keep their hands off the Orient. She, too, was seized with a great fear of Russia and declared her intention of keeping the East free from the taint of communism of the Stalin type. Her loud talk of championship, was intended largely for American and British ears.

Then came the Ethiopian invasion. The quick victory of Italy was as wine to that nation—leaving the leaders with an idea that they were the superiors of all races and that war with them was the first step to oblivion. And by this time Germany had torn up the Treaty of Versailles, that it had passed out of the European diplomatic picture and was a dead letter.

AND THE SPANISH REVOLT

Came the Spanish rebellion. At once Berlin and Rome sided with General Franco, the rebel leader, basing their attitude on the contention that the Spanish Government was in league with Russia and that a victory for Franco was necessary to save Spain from the communist. Into Spain were poured thousands of German and Italian soldiers, tanks, planes, rifles, guns, and ammunition. Franco's gains to date have been made because of that assistance.

It has been a ghastly year—the bombing of open towns and the slaughter of hundreds of thousands of civilians in cold blood—sheer murder in most instances. Lately the situation has become much more critical, for there have been attacks on neutral shipping and sinking of ships until, at this moment, the navies of France and Britain are on guard with orders to sink on sight and "pirate" craft operating against their vessels. One can easily imagine how easy it is just to set the world ablaze again; one might have thought that the memories of 1914-1918 would have kept everyone at peace. But not so.

THE EAST AFIRE

The East is afire. Japan, without declaring war, has launched a new war against China and announced the blockade of the entire Chinese coast. China has almost no war craft, so the blockade can be made with little fear from that country. But the Nipponese have received the surprise of their lives in the heroic defense that the newly trained Chinese regiments are making at Shanghai. In desperation at her repeated failures Japan now is bombing far inland the defenseless towns and even the farmhouses of noncombatants. The attack on Shanghai is too horrible for description—and still Japan has little to show for all her bloody campaign. Why did Japan strike just now? Certain it is that the Russian army and navy must be shaken in morale by the huge number of recent executions of officers from the two arms of the service. Russia wonders, doubtless, how much reliance she can place in her armed men at the present moment. She is compelled, therefore, to be more peaceable than ordinarily. Her attitude in withdrawing from disputed territory claimed by Japan recently reveals this fact clearly. Japan has chosen this hour to launch her forces against China because Russia can give little assistance to her friend and attack the Japan she has loathed ever since the Yellow Sea naval disaster at the turn of the century. But Russia is doubtless finding a way to send stores to the Chinese in secret, while her huge army in her Asiatic Empire keeps an enormous force of Japanese detained in the territory she seized from China in recent years. So, indirectly, Russia is giving very necessary assistance to China in her hour of trial.

The bombing of the International Settlement at Shanghai, the attempted murder of the British Ambassador to China by a Japanese plane, the bombing of a United States merchant ship filled with war refugees, has given the conflict an international significance. Again, in such circumstances, almost anything can happen.

And once again the diplomats who made the war are safely at home, with the innocent privates in the shell-swept trenches, dying for national glory. Or is it for the glory of a few war-mad chiefs?—Exchange.

The Longing for Immortality

ALL normal human beings love life, and in all of us there is a longing for immortality. Some have taken this desire as a proof that we already possess it; a queer sort of reasoning. They would not apply it in any other realm of thought. All men desire health, but who would be foolish enough to say that this proves that all are healthy. Nearly everyone desires wealth, but we know that every one is not wealthy. Instead of the longing for a thing proving its possession, the very opposite is true. We long for things we do not have.

Immortality is one of God's attributes which has thus far been bestowed upon only one man, "the man Christ Jesus." Of Him it is written: "He asked life of thee, and thou gavest it him, even length of days for ever and ever" (Psa. 21:4). And Jesus Himself said: "As the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself" (John 5:26). Here the nature and duration of that life are clearly set forth. It is the life of God, "who only hath immortality" (1 Tim. 6:16), and its duration is "length of days for ever and ever." It was God's gift to Christ, and it is the promised gift to all who believe in Him.

By nature man is mortal, corruptible, depending upon God for every breath he draws. "In him we live, and move, and have our being," says Paul. And this is the testimony of all Scripture. The story of creation contains no intimation of natural immortality. Made of the dust, and breathed into by the Creator, man became a "living soul," but not an immortal soul. He was a candidate for immortality, but because of disobedience he lost the life he might have prolonged indefinitely through access to the "tree of life." Cut off from life's source, he became a dying creature. And so death has passed over upon all men, in that all have sinned. In this state Christ found the race when He came, and to such as these He gives life and immortality; for all of God's gifts to men come through Jesus Christ His Son. The whole plan of redemption centers in Him. "I am come that they might have life," said He, "and that they might have it more abundantly." This is immortality; it is God's gift through Christ.

But it is a conditional gift. Jesus states the conditions thus: "The Father loveth the Son and hath given all things into his hand. He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life: and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him" (John 6:35).

How plain are these words! The "wrath of God" had come upon all the race through Adam's transgression. But Christ, the "second Adam," because He succeeded where Adam failed; because He conquered where Adam was defeated; because He "loved righteousness and hated iniquity," and therefore God anointed Him with the oil of gladness above His fellows; became "the author of eternal salvation to all them that obey him." He "brought life and immortality to light through the gospel."

This was the gospel Paul preached. To the Greeks, who loved the abstruse and mystical teachings of the philosophers, it seemed foolish; and to the Jews, who should have accepted it readily, because it was in accord with their own Scriptures, it was a "stumblingblock." But to us who believe, says Paul, "it is the power of God and the wisdom of God." For "when in the wisdom of God, the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God through the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe."

Not long ago we read this statement by Sir Arthur Keith, the noted British scientist: "I have within me—also have all living beings—a greed of life, an urgent craving for immortality. That longing, which lies at the very root of the Christian religion, I look upon as a sin of the flesh—one to be conquered and suppressed."

What an extraordinary statement for an intelligent man to make! He is to be pitied. Does he not know that this longing for immortality is of God? And if so, how can he think it should be suppressed? The study of science shows him that man is by nature mortal, which is also the teaching of the Bible—"the wages of sin is death." But the same verse goes on to say: "The gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Here is where revelation transcends reason, and faith lights up the path when the light of science fails. What a pity that a man of such attainments should miss the great truth of the gospel of Christ! "If any man thirst," said Jesus, "let him come unto me and drink. He that believeth on me, as the scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water" (John 7:37, 38). Sir Arthur confesses his thirst, but he will not come unto Jesus and drink. His scientific mind cannot solve the problem with a mathematical formula, so he stumbles on in the darkness of unbelief. Truly "these things are hidden from the wise and prudent" and are "revealed unto babes," as Jesus said.

May God, "who commanded the light to shine out of darkness," shine in his heart—and ours—"to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ" (2 Cor. 4:6). Life and immortality are brought to light in the gospel, and nowhere else. "And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life" (1 John 5:11). Here is God's gift to all who have a longing for immortality. Will you accept it?—Editorial in The Herald of Life.

Assuming the existence of such a being, or entity, or, more properly, nonentity, necessitated the coining of new words and phrases to describe that which exists only in the imagination. A great many words and phrases, descriptive of the nature and attributes of the real man whom God created, are found in the Bible, but not one of them is applied to the being that is not even mentioned in that sacred Volume.

The popular words and phrases so often seen in religious literature and heard in public addresses, such as "immortal soul," "immortal spirit," "never-dying soul," "deathless soul," "the immortal part of man," etc., cannot be discovered anywhere in the Holy Scriptures. The reason why these familiar expressions are absent from the Word of God is plain: not one of them belongs to or can be applied to the man whose history is given in the inspired Record! Why did God not employ these phrases? Simply because they could not be truthfully applied to the being that He formed.

Let us examine a few of the descriptive words and phrases which God actually used in His history of man. "Die," "dying," "dead," "mortal," "mortal man," "mortal body," "corruptible man," "flesh and blood," "perish," "destroy," "burn," "burn up," "be as though they had not been," "not be," "silent in darkness," "a vapour that appeareth for a little time and then vanisheth away"—these, and similar expressions, abound in the Bible and exactly fit the man that God formed of the dust of the ground. (Concluded next week)

David's last words were: "The God of Israel shall be as the light of the morning, even a morning without clouds. As the tender grass springing out of the earth by clear shining after rain. This is all my salvation and all my desire."

Thus was David inspired to write about the Messiah yet to come. I have only read a few of his words, but it is plain to see that they can refer only to that Son of his mentioned in the covenant God made with him.

Isaiah tells us "there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a Branch shall grow out of his roots: and the spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and the fear of the Lord." There can be no doubt but this prophecy refers to the Messiah. It is the Heir promised in the covenant with David who is to sit upon his throne.

Jeremiah says of the Messiah: "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely: and this is the name whereby he shall be called, THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS."

"THE BLOOD OF GOD"

Fundamentals of the Christian Faith, makes the assertion that the Hebrew word for "one" "denotes compound unity, not simple unity." In actual fact this is not true. Yet, on his authority, the statement has not only been blindly accepted, but repeated in print by professors and laymen. Rev. David Baron of Montreal, in commenting on Isaiah 53, makes the astonishing remark: "The child was born, but the Son was not born but given."

Any schoolboy with but little acquaintance with grammar, could inform him that the child born and the son given both have reference to the same personality, to say nothing of the fact that the Son of God Himself declared: "To this end was I born."

The Sunday School Times, in making reference to John 4:26, quotes the reply of our Lord to the woman of Samaria as: "I that speak unto thee AM." Then it adds the comment: "This was a self-ascription of the ineffable name of Jehovah"! That such was not His statement, and that the woman did not so understand Him, is evidenced by the context, especially verse 29.

Another in correspondence with me says, speaking of John 8: "In one verse you have 'I AM,' and in another verse lower down you have 'that I am,' thus you have the complete thing, 'I AM THAT I AM.'" Others might be mentioned, but space forbids.

The same regrettable tendency is to be found even in the short extract from Moody Monthly. The writer there says: "God was not accepting an offering on Calvary. God was making it." In undisguised astonishment we ask, What does Scripture say in Hebrews 9:14? "How much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit, offered himself without blemish to God?" Here there is no ambiguity, or any reasonable doubt as to the correctness of the translation, and it is supported by numerous other passages of Scripture. Moody Monthly contradicts this.

To come now to the exegesis of the passage. Nearly all modern editors, fully aware that the term "blood of God" is not a scriptural thought, have endeavored to overcome the difficulty by rendering "church of the Lord" instead of "church of God." It is true that many ancient authorities read "the Lord." The fact remains, however, that the phrase, "church of the Lord," occurs nowhere else in the New Testament, while "church of God" occurs some ten times. This is admittedly strong preponderating evidence in support of the last named rendering and we accept it as correct.

But a most important fact must be borne in mind, viz., that the original, as we have already intimated, does not state that it was the blood of God that redeemed the church. The statement is: "Feed the church of God, which he purchased" (margin, "acquired") "by the blood of his own (Son)." There is an ellipsis here to be supplied, and what that ellipsis should be is clear from many other scriptures, some of which we have already referred to. No one can logically acquire that which he purchases if he forfeits his own life as the means of purchase. If God was making the offering, as affirmed by Moody Monthly, to whom did He make the offering? The question is a reasonable one and shows how little real thought is given to the subject in hand by such writers, and what little ground there is for the translation of the common version.

Every other Bible reference tells us most clearly that we were purchased by the blood of Jesus Christ His Son, who is the "Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." The Scripture testimony against the thought that it was God who shed His blood is so abundant the difficulty is to know which to select.

Peter's message on the streets of Jerusalem, concerning "him whom God raised up," would have been impossible had God Himself died. Among all the three thousand who heard him and believed and were baptized, not one believed that it was God who shed His blood.

Further, the Scriptures definitely associate blood with humanity and human frailness in such a way as to amount to a denial that blood has anything to do with the nature of God. The statement of the Lord Jesus in Matthew 16:17—"Flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven"—draws the contrast between the one and the other in language that cannot be mistaken.

The writer believes that John 1:13, as the context testifies, has reference to the birth of our Lord, otherwise the Gospel of John makes no reference to that event. We cannot enter into the details now, but there is good authority for believing the verse should read: "Who was born, not of bloods" (for it is plural in the Greek). The blood of His mother only ran through His veins, for He had no human father.

In 1 Corinthians 15:50 flesh and blood are associated with corruption, but in 1 Timothy 1:17 God Himself is said to be "incorruptible." Hebrews 2:14 connects "flesh and blood" with death and destruction, and the margin calls our attention to the fact that in the Greek it is "blood and flesh."

Time and time again God declares that He is the "living God." Three times at least (Deut. 32:40; Dan. 4:34; 12:7) does Scripture proclaim that He (God) "liveth for ever." His very name, JEHOVAH, declares that He is and that He will be. Down through the ages His people have rejoiced that He who made heaven and earth (Psa. 121:2) in the untimed past, still lives. "He that keepeth thee will not slumber" (Psa. 121:3). And centuries before Christ died on the cross, the Word of the living God declared: "He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep."

me!' So that was that!" My visitor went on:

"She got her divorce a short time later" (through a false statement which they agreed upon) "and the next Saturday she married the guy I told you she had been running around with.

"A week later I went to the dance as usual. It was one of those dances where you change partners and she and I danced a set or two together just as we always had. Between sets," he said, "I told her I thought we should get together about the kid. He wasn't quite two years old at the time. So after the dance was over I told her husband to 'beat it,' as we had something to talk over that was none of his business.

"We finally agreed to sign a paper giving the boy to me part of the time and to her part of the time. But later we decided that he had better stay with his mother all the time so that when he got bigger he wouldn't have to change schools so much. She said I could have him or come and see him any time I wanted to."

Parental feeling could not have been very strong in the young father, because he told me he had made no special effort to see his little son during the three years or more of their separation.

Just why the young man came back to look me up is not important. It seemed that another change was anticipated in the marital relations of one or the other of the parents, and new arrangements must be made to care for the boy. But that doesn't matter. What difference does it make who cares or fails to care for the child of divorced parents? A child cannot be allowed to keep his father and mother from going to the Saturday night dance! Of course not! So let's forget the little boy whose mother had no time to care for him and whose father really did not want him either, and consider other matters associated with the situation.

Of course the little fellow may have some difficulty in determining what the words "father" and "mother" mean, and just who is his father and who his mother. There will probably be other men whom he will be told to call "Father," and perhaps other women whom he must remember to call "Mother," before he becomes a man. But "that is neither here nor there," but I can't help thinking about it now and then.

I wonder if the result would have been the same had these young people met in Sunday school or at church for the first time? Would their matrimonial bark have "gone on the rocks" as quickly as it did if they had not gone to the dance every Saturday night, but saved their energy until the next day and then gone to the house of the Lord together? And I can't help wondering if that little boy would not have been happier and his prospects in life brighter if his father and mother had taken him to Sunday school each Sunday and attended a class with other young married people?

Just what do you think about it?

Youth

"Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity."—1 Timothy 4:12.

The departure from youth to middle life seems to mark also a departure from faith in God in a great many individuals. Look some church crowds over and you will see a large number of children and young people, and a large number of older folks, but there is not a proportionately large number of those in between. Perhaps the piling up of the full tide of life in other interests has left the religious life at low ebb. This condition is dangerous. Something should be done about it. There is no age of life when a person can do without God.

The religious enthusiasm of young people must be used to prepare them for the dangerous years. A marvelously rich and fruitful middle life will result. Even as this life is a training period for eternal life, so in youth a person should acquire a faith to live by the rest of his life. Youth should be a time for getting under full steam in "things pertaining to God."

WHAT YOUNG PEOPLE HAVE DONE

Jesus Christ was thirty when He began to preach. So was John the Baptist. Joseph became ruler of all Egypt under Pharaoh at the age of thirty. Ruth was under thirty when she made her classic decision to go with her mother-in-law, and thus came into the very ancestry of Israel's kings and of the Christ. Esther was in her twenties when she saved her people from the wicked Haman. Hezekiah was twenty-five when he destroyed the idols out of Judah. Josiah was twenty when he started to repair the temple of God.

Daniel was sixteen when he refused the king's delicacies and eighteen when he interpreted the king's dream and became one of his counselors. Naaman had a "little maid" that told him about Israel's God with the result that he was cleansed of his leprosy. David was sixteen when he slew the giant Goliath.

Samuel ministered to the Lord in Eli's house at the age of twelve. Who can forget that Jesus was twelve when He astonished the rabbis of Jerusalem?

Finally, Moses was just three months old when he shed the tear that melted the heart of Pharaoh's daughter and brought to naught all the wisdom of Egypt.

Yes, children and young people are very, very important in God's scheme of things.

The God of All Comfort

"Blessed be God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies, and the God of all comfort: who comforteth us in all our tribulation, that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble, by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God."—2 Corinthians 1:3, 4.

Comfort is part of the very nature of God, just as love, hope, glory, patience, peace, grace, and truth are parts of His very character.

God has a corresponding comfort for every trouble. We do not know what trouble we may be called upon to bear during our lifetime, but whatever it is, God has a comfort for it.

Much passes for comfort in human wisdom that cannot stand the test of divine sanction. In order to know what the inspired comfort of God is for your particular trouble, you must search out the pronouncements of the Holy Spirit of God as revealed in the Scriptures.

"For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the scriptures might have hope" (Rom. 15:4).

From this text we see that the promises of God in the Bible are the only lawful comfort we may have. But it is surprising that many people seek comfort in hopes which have no basis in the facts of the Bible. They ignore the Bible hopes which are so much more satisfying, so much more glorious.

COMFORT IN DEATH

Man's wisdom seeks to look upon death as a transition from one life to another and seeks comfort in refusing to look upon the reality of death. This school of comfort is apt to call death a "friend," a "door to life." This, of course, is contradictory to the Bible statements which describe death as an "enemy" (1 Cor. 15:26), and Jesus as "the door" (John 10:7-9).

We are not left in doubt as to what is true comfort in regard to death. Death is so hideous, so displeasing to God and man, that it needed a special passage about it in the Bible actually labeled "Comfort." We find that passage in 1 Thessalonians 4:13-18, where it says to "comfort one another with these words."

This passage speaks of the dead as being "asleep." It tells of the resurrection of the dead at the second coming of Christ. It mentions a great meeting in the air, when we shall be together again with our loved ones and the Christ. Herein we find true comfort, for it comes from the "God of all comfort."

Workers for Jesus

Though we are but children small,
There's some work for one and all;
There are duties every day
In our tasks and in our play;
We must be like soldiers true
If God's holy will we'd do.

In our school let's do our work
With no will nor wish to shirk;
In our home bring sunshine gay
By our words and loving way;
In our church let's ever be Working for God's victory.

So we children, though we're small,
Answer to the bugle call
For the boy or girl who's true
And will faithful service do;
Thus we'll win God's loving smile,
And be helpers all the while.

What Can I Do to Help?

Last week we talked about the special work that our ministers do for God and for us. We learned that they are our guides, our beacon lights, to show us the path that Jesus wants us to go. But that does not mean that they are the only workers.

For our lesson for Sunday, November 21, we learn that there is some work for Jesus for each one of us to do. No matter how young and small you are, there is a part for you, as well. And no one can do just that except you.

One of the first things we think of is being obedient to Father and Mother. Everybody must learn to obey and must continue to obey as long as life lasts. Yes, even your parents must obey certain rules. And the younger we learn to obey the easier it is for us.

If your parents are Christians (and I am sure they are, or you wouldn't be reading our RESTITUTION HERALD) then in obeying them you are also obeying God. For they form the rules of life for you according to God's standard.

Another way to help God in His work is to be happy and cheerful always. You know, there is nothing that makes a home more pleasant, just the nicest place to be, than a happy little child in it. The voices of happy little boys and girls are sweeter music than any music heard over the radio.

Then there is going to Sunday school every Sunday. Every little child can do that. That is, if he is situated so that he can get there and is well and able to be out. And how glad you ought to be if you can. Think of the little boys and girls who for many reasons cannot go!

At Sunday school and church you can listen very carefully to your teacher and take your part quietly in all the exercises. You can be very careful not to mar or scratch anything in the church, not to tear the song books or Bibles. You can be an example to some of the older ones sometimes in these things.

One of the things you can do for Jesus is to give your pennies for His work. Out of all the money that is given you, you can take a part for Him. But you must give it happily and cheerfully, as I know you will.

Now, I'm sure, many of you can think of other ways in which you can serve God and His Son, Jesus our Savior. Take your part gladly and do your best, and as you grow older more and bigger things will be given you to do.

The Lookout

How many of you know what a crow's nest on a ship is? It is a kind of platform placed on the masts of ships so that a lookout can keep watch from above the vessel. He is the first to catch sight of land, or the first to give warning of danger.

Of course this lookout must be a dependable man. His higher place is useless if he falls asleep while on duty. He must know about the sea, too, so that he can recognize ice floes or derelict ships. Often the safety of a vessel and the success of a voyage depends upon the alertness and vision of the lookout.

The Christian minister may be compared to the lookout on a ship. He has a high vision of the course of life. He can see where people are going and give warning of danger ahead. He is a dependable man, for he recognizes the dangers and difficulties of life. Paul and Timothy were just such lookouts on the sea of life, and there are many of them today in your church, in mine, and in churches all over the land.—Adapted from The New Century Leader.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

MEMORIAL

"Asleep in Jesus! peaceful rest,
Whose waking is supremely blest;
No fear, no woes, shall dim that hour
That manifests the Savior's power."

In loving memory of our dear Wife and Mother, who fell asleep November 5, 1935.

WHEN ON YOUR HONEYMOON

When you go on your honeymoon or when other pleasure or business takes you to the East Coast, why not plan your trip so that you can view that greatest of all scenic wonders of the world, Niagara Falls? But be sure you slip into a pew on Sunday morning at "Blessed Hope Church of God," for their regular service.

But that isn't all! In the afternoon drive across the gorge on one of those splendid bridges that span Niagara River and follow the fine highway that leads to Fonthill, Ont. It's easy to find! And "The Church in the Heart of the Village," the Church of God, will be the first church building you will see. Stop there for the evening service! You will feel repaid when you have listened to Bro. C. E. Randall's splendid message and have met those brethren of yours in both Niagara Falls, N. Y., and in Fonthill, Ont. The editor of The Herald knows whereof he speaks!

SOUTH BEND, INDIANA

We have just completed an eight-day meeting with Bro. J. H. Anderson as speaker. Attendance and interest were fine, and the subjects considered were chiefly on prophecy. Bro. Anderson's lecture on the "Seventy Weeks of Daniel" was considered so good that it was suggested that he have it printed in tract form.

We enjoyed seeing many from other denominations in attendance. This shows that people are beginning to see the true value of prophecy.

Bro. Anderson speaks in South Bend every fourth Sunday evening at seven o'clock. All within driving distance are invited to attend.
Frances Pierce, Secretary.

OMAHA AND BLAIR, NEBRASKA

Special meetings were held in two Eastern Nebraska communities recently, with excellent attendance and interest at both places. The services began at Omaha on October 5 and closed on the 10th. At Blair they were from October 11-17.

One baptism resulted, that of Mrs. Hazel Appleby, wife of Bro. Richard Appleby of Blair. The husband has been a member of the church for several years and he, with the entire church at Blair, rejoices with this splendid young woman in her new-found faith. May God's richest blessings abide with her and help her to be serviceable and happy in the Master's vineyard, and at last gain that crown of rejoicing (1 Thess. 2:19) and of life (James 1:12) which the Lord has promised to them who love Him.

The meetings at both places were in charge of Elder E. E. Giesler of Moorefield, Neb.

BRUSH CREEK CHURCH OF GOD Near Tippecanoe City, Ohio

Following his very encouraging work at the Lawrenceville Church of God, Bro. F. L. Austin favored the Brush Creek congregation with three evening services, speaking of the Great Pyramid and its seeming agreement with the Bible. A final sermon was given in Dayton on Thursday evening, Oct. 27, on the subject of "The Lord's Day."

Two daughters have recently qualified for our cradle roll, Connie Lou Pearson, born to Mr. and Mrs. Frank Pearson, Oct. 17, and Violet, born to Mr. and Mrs. Howard Rehmirt, Oct. 20. Babies and mothers are doing well.

Bro. James A. Patrick, representing the Board of Evangelism, visited us and spoke at both morning and evening services on Sunday, Oct. 31. The local church is interested in the evangelistic work, and is contributing. When the church builds evangelism, evangelism will build the church.

The annual fall series of meetings will be held November 14-28, with Bro. C. E. Lapp of St. Cloud, Minn., as guest speaker. He plans to bring his family and possibly others. In spite of some sickness the outlook is favorable for a successful meeting. All who can attend are heartily invited. Be a booster.

MICHIGAN FALL CONFERENCE

The fall meeting of the Michigan State Conference was held at Blanchard, from October 26 to 31, with Elder J. R. LeCrone of Eden Valley, Minn., as guest speaker.

Elder LeCrone was accompanied by his wife and daughter and Bro. Gerald Cooper, who gave the Sunday morning address.

Many friends from Sylvester and other outlying communities joined with the Blanchard brethren to enjoy the instructive and interesting sermons of Elder LeCrone. Our hearts were filled with gladness and thanksgiving to the Healer of all ills when a large representation of both Grand Rapids churches arrived on Sunday to make the closing services a fitting climax to a very inspiring series of meetings.

We are indeed happy to welcome to Michigan, Elder Ray Abbott, pastor of the Pennellwood Church of Grand Rapids. We trust that his affiliation may be of great benefit to that church and the community in which they labor and therefore to the state.

If Christ carries, may it be our privilege to enjoy together other feasts of the Word of God.

ILLINOIS QUARTERLY CONFERENCE

The Fall Quarterly Conference of the Illinois State Conference, held in Macomb, Nov. 6-7, may now be listed among the annals of successful meetings. If the growth of the quarterly conference in other states may be an indication, Illinois may expect real uplift and spiritual gain from subsequent meetings. Now that we have started off on the right foot with excellent results both in attendance and in interest, we may with confidence plan for the next quarterly conference to be held at Ripley in March.

Ministers in attendance were F. L. Austin, Paul C. Johnson, Harvey Krogh, Jr., Gerald L. Cooper, and J. W. McLain.

Good representations were sent from Ripley and Oregon.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Bro. Lindsay's "Messenger of Truth" brings the information that Sr. Lindsay rejoined her husband in Tempe, Ariz., on October 13. The Oregon church regretted her departure, but all feel that Bro. Lindsay needed her helpful support more than we do here.

$111.00 was the amount which the treasurer of the Illinois State Conference had received in Dollar Day contributions up to Sunday afternoon, November 7. Those of you who haven't sent your dollar to him yet, why not do so at once?

Sunday school attendance is improving at Oregon as winter approaches. Last Sunday 142 were present, and the preceding Sunday, 146. More than 65 per cent of the children come from non-church homes.

Letters from several of our best contributors who have been asked to prepare special articles for our big Christmas special issue, indicate their willingness to cooperate with us in making this the finest Christmas Herald we have ever put out. Remember! Extra copies should be ordered well in advance. Price, 5 cents per copy sent to any address from this office.

"I could not do without The Herald. It seems to grow better all the time," writes Sr. Sarah Kerr of Cleveland, Ohio, as she renews her subscription. As Bro. Conner said at General Conference, if no improvement were to be noted from year to year it would indicate that we were not benefiting from the experience we gain in life. We appreciate, however, such evidences of approval of the work we are attempting to carry on.

LOUISIANA CHURCH NOTES

There has been a decided increase in attendance at church services the last two weeks and we hope that the coming weeks will see an even greater increase.

Plans are being made for Rally Day services at the Blood River Church Sunday, Nov. 14, and it is hoped that all members within driving distance will attend.

In an effort to add variety and interest to the weekly Bible and Berean classes we are giving short, oral Bible tests to each class. This is in addition to the regular lesson and thus we have found it to be really beneficial and interesting. Both old and young seem to enjoy each "quiz" and look forward with eagerness to the next one. Perhaps we are making the questions too easy!

RECEPTION AT OREGON

On the evening of October 15 the Marsh family were honor guests at a party held in the Oregon church basement, which had been made attractive with seasonal decorations. A cafeteria supper was served, followed by a program, Mrs. Charles Gesin serving as toastmaster. The following brief talks were given: Appreciation of Mr. Marsh and Family From the Viewpoint of the Church, Mr. Carpenter; of the Good Will Sunday School Class, Mr. Taft; of the Dorcas Society, Mrs. Romine; of the Berean Society, Evan Knodle. Responses were given by all three of the Marsh family. Then we all sang, "Blest Be the Tie That Binds." About seventy members were present. Our pastor is now in his seventh year in Oregon.

Mrs. Mabel Lindsay.

GUEST EDITORIAL APPROVED

"I am glad I instructed my boys in matters that lead to successful married life," writes Bro. R. H. Judd, with reference to the Guest Editorial by M. W. Lyon which appeared in a recent issue. "Bro. Lyon's article was good." We are sure that the majority of our readers will agree with Bro. Judd's estimate of the value and importance of the editorial.

BERNICE MOORE

Bernice Moore, the only daughter of Sr. Elsie Moore, passed away at the home of her mother on Friday afternoon, Oct. 15, after a short illness. The following Monday afternoon the home was packed with friends and relatives as the writer spoke on the "Resurrection of Children," pointing out the place they will occupy in the kingdom of God, also the tender affection which the Master showed toward little children.

The many beautiful floral offerings not only spoke of the sympathy of the givers, but in unexpressed language reminded the sojourners of hope of that brighter day when the whole earth shall rejoice and blossom as a rose.

Burial was made in North Ridge Cemetery, some twenty miles distant, where this mother's treasure was laid with a knowledge that when the Redeemer, who is touched by the feelings of our infirmities, returns, Bernice, along with a host of others shall be quickened by the life-giving power which He possesses.

A YEAR-LONG CHRISTMAS GIFT!

In planning your Christmas giving, two things should be taken into consideration: first, the suitability of the gift to the recipient; and, second, the lasting quality of it.

When you give your friends a year's subscription to The Restitution Herald as a Christmas present, you meet both of these requirements fully.

The Restitution Herald, with its richly varied contents, provides an interesting and instructive source of genuine pleasure to all members of the family.

As each new issue reaches the one for whom it is intended, he or she is immediately reminded of the thoughtful friend who made its welcome visits possible. The paper thus becomes a WEEKLY rather than a YEARLY Christmas gift!

Put The Restitution Herald at the very top of your Christmas Shopping List at once! Send it for an entire year to your dearest friends, that they may enjoy it with you!

The price to New Subscribers per year is $1.00. Address, National Bible Institution, Oregon, Ill.

The Pine Woods Bible Class, by W. H. Wilson: 480 pages; cloth binding; a discussion, in conversational form, based upon actual class work by the author, on various phases of the gospel; 75¢, postpaid for cash. National Bible Institution.

Christmas Gift Suggestions—

“When they had opened their treasures, they presented unto him gifts.”—Matthew 2:11.

We do not desire to commercialize Christmas, but we do wish to help our readers select gifts to give to their friends which will remind them of the One whose glorious advent into the world we commemorate on Christmas Day!

It is the birth of the World's Redeemer that we celebrate!

Every Christmas greeting we extend, every gift we bestow, should somehow remind the recipient that there “is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord.”

That we may assist our readers in the accomplishment of this ONE GREAT PURPOSE OF CHRISTMAS OBSERVANCE we provide the following

Christmas Shopping List

THE RESTITUTION HERALD (regular subscription price $2.00). . . . Special Christmas rate to New Subscribers . . . $1.00. . . . THE RESTITUTION HERALD is a weekly religious journal of recognized merit. It has been repeatedly described as “the best Adventist paper published.” This is a splendid opportunity for you to place your beloved paper for a full year in the hands of those friends whom you have been trying to interest in the saving truth and prophetic assurances of the Bible!

TRUTH SEEKERS' SUNDAY SCHOOL QUARTERLY (regular yearly subscription price, 65 cents). Special Christmas rate to New Subscribers, 50 cents. . . . The Truth Seekers' Quarterly is the only Sunday school quarterly published which approaches the study of the International Sunday School Lessons from the standpoint of the believer in conditional immortality, premillennial advent of Christ, restoration of Israel, and the Kingdom of God on the earth. Why not send the Truth Seekers' to the teacher in a Sunday school other than your own?

BIBLES—No present could be more appropriate or more acceptable as a Christmas gift than a fine copy of the Holy Scriptures. We carry them in a great variety of styles and of bindings, ranging in price from one dollar upward. . . . Many different versions, such as the King James, American Revised, American Translation, Moffatt's, Weymouth's, Rotherham's, etc., are carried in stock. . . . Write us of your requirements.

EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT ($2.50). . . . This splendid translation of the New Testament was made by Benjamin Wilson, who was perhaps the best Greek scholar the Church of God has produced. Twenty-Three Years Ago

An Armistice Day Sermon by the Editor

IT HAPPENED twenty-three years ago! A sound no louder than that made by the snapping of a dry twig—a spark, falling from the blazing pistol held in the hand of an irresponsible young Serbian student, fell into the open powder keg of international jealousy and suspicion, and the explosion which followed sent billowing flames throughout the whole world which only the blood of young men, millions of young men, could quench!

Twenty-three years ago! How vividly it all comes back to our minds on Armistice Day! The bold headlines of the newspapers telling of the assassination of an Austrian grand duke!

But what of it? we asked. Dukes have been assassinated before! Even kings and presidents have been killed and the tranquility of the world was not affected! The murderer was known. He would be speedily caught and punished like any other criminal. The excitement would die down in a few days and the entire incident be forgotten. There was no cause for serious alarm.

Of course there might be a few exchanges of diplomatic notes between the nations whose citizens were immediately involved, but surely so small a matter as the killing of one man would not unleash the dogs of war to bring suffering and death to hundreds of thousands of men! The world was too wise to permit that to happen! Civilization was too far advanced to allow such a calamity to occur! The cost would be far too great for the nations of Europe to permit themselves to be drawn into a conflict that might drag on for years! The savants agreed this was so.

But we watched the papers with keenest interest. We, who knew something of the prophecies, kept our hand on the pulse of the nations. We had long known that a great war must some day sweep the world with flaming fire; during which God would call the peoples into judgment before Him. We were expecting such a thing to come to pass, so we were far from indifferent to the events which were happening at that time.

Just the crack of a pistol—then the increasing reverberations of diplomatic thunder. But the thunder did not clear the air. Then (Please turn to page 11)

Death for Arab Terrorists

"Esau hated Jacob because of the blessing wherewith his father blessed him."—Genesis 27:41.

JERUSALEM, Nov. 10.—Sixteen Arabs have been arrested by British troops in the hills about Jerusalem and Bethlehem where David tended the flocks of his father Jesse. They are suspected of the killing of five Jews yesterday. Owing to the increase of terrorism, the British Government today empowered the military courts to exact the death penalty from bombers and gunmen in the Holy Land. An Arab was shot to death and a Jewish porter injured in other parts of the city.

A new ordinance was put into effect limiting Jewish immigration in all categories to 8,000 persons from August, 1937, to March, 1938. No new immigration applications will be accepted until January. The new ordinance was issued to carry out the Government's declaration of July 7. The Palestine Royal Commission on that date recommended that the volume of Jewish immigrants be restricted to 12,000 persons annually for five years. The recorded number of Jews entering the country in 1933 was 30,327; in 1934, 42,359; in 1935, 61,854; and in 1936, 29,727.

It is becoming ever more apparent that the conditions under which the Jews are now returning to the land of their fathers will be similar to those existing at the time of the return under Ezra, when "the people of the land weakened the hands of the people of Judah, and troubled them in building" Jerusalem (Ezra 4:4). Daniel (9:25) suggests that the streets of the city "shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times."

Brazil Adopts Corporative Constitution

"Though thou exalt thyself . . . among the stars, thence will I bring thee down, saith the Lord."—Obadiah 4.

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil, Nov. 10.—With the promulgation of a new constitution today, Brazil introduced what is practically a fascist form of government into America. Under the new constitution—the second adopted in four years—authority will be concentrated very largely in the hands of President Getulio Vargas, making him political dictator of the country. The right of universal suffrage has been withdrawn and officials will no longer be chosen by direct vote of the people. A corporate chamber, which early dispatches indicate will possess only the power to put into legal form the expressed policies of the President, will function alongside the National Assembly, from which also initiative in law-making has been taken.

Thus absolutism creeps farther and farther around the world, preparing the peoples of earth to welcome the arch-dictator, the man of sin, when he appears. Just as the true Messiah had His "forerunner" in John the Baptist, so, no doubt, will the last false messiah have forerunners in these dictators who "exalt" themselves today "above all that is called God" (2 Thess. 2:3, 4).

Ancients Knew Earth Was Round

"In that night there shall be two men in one bed . . . Two men shall be in the field."—Luke 17:34, 36.

CHICAGO, Nov. 10.—According to Science Digest for December, Columbus did not attempt his perilous voyage across the Atlantic Ocean to prove that the earth was round, as was taught many of us in school. When the great discoverer set out from Spain "the sphericity of the earth had been an accepted thing in the minds of scholars for many centuries." As early as the fifth century B. C., Greek philosophers believed the earth to be a globe, Dr. William Arthus Heidel of Connecticut Wesleyan University declares in his recent book, The Frame of the Ancient Greek Maps, published by the American Geographical Society.

Plato relates a purported discussion with Socrates his teacher, in which the latter is said to have expressed the belief "that the earth is really round and at the center of the heavens." Philo and Pytheas, Greek writers of about 300 B. C., seem to have studied the question critically and to have arrived at the same conclusion.

"The theories formed in these early days, the evidence in their support," asserts the Digest, "were never lost. They survived through the Middle Ages and were a part of the cultural equipment of the navigator from Genoa, Columbus."

This much we are sure of, for the evidence is provided in the words of our Savior, that the Christian man, sleeping in the night beside a Christless companion, will be "taken" away to meet his Lord at the same moment that his sister in faith, laboring under the light of a noonday sun on the other side of the world, is snatched from her unbelieving fellow worker, to join the same glorified company of redeemed ones!

The Way of the Cross.

By Harry Goekler

THE SUPREME event in world history was the crucifixion of our Lord Jesus Christ. No other event has so influenced the human race as the crucifixion of Christ. From the prophecies of the past Christ was proclaimed as the Lamb slain. Every animal slain in sacrifice from the time of Abel to the last one offered upon Jewish altars until His advent was a type of His sacrifice. Only from the cross can the meaning of these sacrifices be known and their purpose understood. In themselves they had no redeeming quality. Their significance was in pointing to the cross, the supreme expression of God's infinite love to a world dead in sin.

The sacrificial death of Jesus Christ is one of the outstanding and important themes of the Scriptures because only through His atoning death as God's only Son do we have a hope of securing redemption from the bondage of sin. As the planets in the solar system revolve around the sun as their center, so all the other truths of God's holy Word revolve around this, the most vital and the most mighty of all its teachings.

Christ came into the world as a Savior, yet His power to save is not in His wisdom, though His wisdom surpasses that of all men. His power to save is not in His example, though He is without a flaw. No one has dared to point the finger at Him and find fault with Him. Pilate said, "I find no fault in him." That was his estimate of the Christ, and though he only used it in the sense of His innocence of the crime charged in the indictment, yet this estimate has always been accepted in its fullest sense, that Christ was absolutely sinless. And that estimate stands and cannot be successfully challenged. Christ is the solitary, perfect figure of history.

Neither is His power to save found in Him as a teacher, though He taught the profoundest of all truths, truths that man himself could not discover, yet which he must know if he would be saved. If we think of Christ only as a teacher, He is far in advance of the greatest teachers who have undertaken the task of instructing mankind. All of them must stand in His presence in humble reverence, for here, as everywhere else, He is supreme. He taught with an authority from which there is no appeal.

But the wondrous influence, the sin-destroying virtue, the wonder life-giving power is in His blood, the precious blood that flowed from Calvary's cross! Observe the words of the Apostle Peter: "Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers; but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot" (1 Peter 1:18, 19).

On the part of God the cross was not an afterthought. It was not devised after the fall; for God knew that man would sin: but from the beginning, from a distant past, God purposed to reconcile man to Himself through the death of His only begotten Son upon the cross.

The call of John the Baptist, as he stood on the banks of the Jordan where the multitudes had gathered out of Jerusalem and Judea and all the region round about Jordan, was the call of the forerunner of Christ to Jew and Gentile alike to the recognition of Christianity's central fact, the cross Christ's sacrifice, the atonement.

"God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ," was the proud boast of Paul, the greatest of all the apostles. He could have boasted of many things; some of them he names in Philippians 3:3-5. Intellectually he was the peer of any man of his time; taught by the great teacher Gamaliel, no one exceeded him in loyalty to his nation, none surpassed him in zeal for the honor of Jehovah, but after the Damascus vision he counted

"all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus." And why? He had seen the crucified, but now glorified, Lord!

Christ came to perform the works of His heavenly Father and ever before Him those works led Him in the way of the cross. In the mind and purpose of our Lord the cross was always in view; He never turned away from the path leading to it. From the beginning of His ministry, from the time of His baptism, He walked in a straight path to Calvary.

On the mount of transfiguration we get a glimpse of the glory of the kingdom of God as it shall be. There Moses the great lawgiver, and Elijah the great reformer, both of whom had labored so heroically to bring back degenerate Israel to her allegiance to God, appeared and were talking with Christ upon that holy mount of all He was about to do, and the way of accomplishment was the way of the cross. They were talking of His exodus. Christ was going to accomplish something, not simply die! He was going to victory, not to defeat! In a sense (Please turn to Page 11)

Did You Think of Me?

Did you think of me this morning,
As you breathed a word of Prayer?
Did you ask for strength to help me,
All my heavy burdens bear?

Did you speak of Strength and Courage,
For the trials I must meet?
Did you ask that God might help me,
As you bowed before His feet?

Some one Prayed, and Strength was given
For the long and weary road;
Some one Prayed, and Faith grew stronger,
As I bent beneath the load.

History of Man

By John O. Woodruff

TWO words which occur frequently in the Bible are supposed to favor the belief in natural or inherent immortality. These words are "soul" and "spirit." The two words and their equivalents can be found over fifteen hundred times in the Scriptures, but in all of these occurrences there is a total absence of any word or term connected with them that expresses endless life. The words are not synonymous. Both have a variety of meanings, and both are applied to the lower orders of the animal creation. The word "soul" was applied to every moving and creeping thing named in the Bible before it was applied to man. See Genesis 1:20, margin.

The soul is said to hunger, thirst, eat, drink, breathe, and die. The primary meaning of the word "soul" as used in the Bible, is "person" or "being." In this sense it is applied to man, whether living or dead, and to beasts, birds, and creeping things. A secondary use of the word expresses the thought of life. See Matthew 16:25, 26; Mark 8:35, 36; Genesis 35:18.

Other uses of the word "soul" will be found by consulting a good concordance.

As a soul, whether man or beast, lives by breathing, the word is often used to represent the life, but is never used in the Bible to represent an entity, or thing that can live while the man is dead. Neither life nor death are entities, but both are conditions and exactly opposite conditions.

The word "spirit" has a wider range of usage in the Bible than the word "soul," yet nowhere can we find the word used as it is by the advocates of inherent immortality. They used to teach that man was possessed of a dual nature, comprising a body and a soul. Now they more often affirm that he is tripartite, a body, a soul, and a spirit.

They admit the body can die, that even the soul is not immortal, but that deathlessness inheres in the spirit. But if the spirit is the essential life of man how will they account for certain persons mentioned in the Bible who had no spirit, and yet were living beings? (Cf. 1 Kings 10:5; 1 Sam. 30:12.) Here is one case the queen had no spirit in her, yet she was a living woman, overwhelmed by seeing the glory of Solomon's palace and kingdom. (As we say, the wonders she saw "fairly took her breath.") In the other case the Egyptian was simply exhausted by his long fast, but the food given him restored him to strength and vigor.

USAGE OF A WORD DETERMINES ITS MEANING

As more than forty different "spirits" are spoken of in connection with man, it is readily seen that the use of this word in the Bible must be determined by the circumstances under which it is used. The word "spirit" in 1 John 4:1 is used in the sense of person, prophet, or teacher. Again, the word is used in Ecclesiastes 12:7 to represent death, by man yielding up to God the life principle that God gave him—"the breath of life." The same idea is expressed in Psalm 146:4: "His breath (spirit) goeth forth (to God who gave it), he returneth to his earth (the dust), in that very day his thoughts perish."

Comparing Genesis 2:7—"The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath (spirit) of life; and man became a living soul"—with Psalm 146:4, which was quoted above, we see how death unmakes the man utterly. In Psalm 6:5 we are told by Inspiration that the dead cannot remember God, and in Psalm 115:17 that they do not praise Him. The reason why the dead cannot remember God nor praise Him in death is revealed in Ecclesiastes 9:5, 6, where it is plainly stated that "the dead know not any thing." All of their mental faculties have ceased to act. In short, the man of whom God has given us the history is dead, and not alive! Every fact in his history is found to be in harmony with the description given of his nature and origin. He was "formed of the dust" and became a living being when God "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life." When his breath is taken away he dies and "returneth to his earth, and in that very day his thoughts perish."

PERSONAL IDENTITY BEYOND THE GRAVE

At this point in our investigation another question of the deepest importance presents itself: Does the Bible, in continuing man's history beyond the grave, preserve his identity in the future life? Most assuredly it does! Every promise that God has made to man pertaining to a future conscious existence conveys this idea beyond a doubt.

The promise God made to the fathers of an everlasting inheritance of the land is a clear proof that their identity will be preserved. The identity of the land promised to them is forever established in the description of it provided in the Bible by such terms as these: "this land," "the land whereon thou standest," "arise and walk through the land," and "unto thee and to thy seed (Christ) will I give this land."

The names by which the men, to whom these promises were made, were known by their associates clearly identify them in the time when they will come into actual possession of the land. Christ testified that faithful ones should come from the east and from the west and sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven.

But we have evidence of the most conclusive nature, that the identity of the individual will not be lost but carried over into the future state, in the case of our blessed Redeemer, whom God raised from the dead with an incorruptible body, but which still bore plainly the spear cut and the nail prints. Such proof may be called a demonstrated fact.

All the saints of God have the promise, if they remain faithful, that "these vile bodies shall be made like unto his glorious body." That glorious body of Christ, shining with the glow of immortal splendor, was just as real, just as literal and tangible, as it was when hanging upon the cross, pierced by a Roman spear.

The importance of recognizing the truth as set forth in the history that God has given us of the man of His proposition, will be seen when God's plan of salvation is considered. The dust-made man, the flesh and blood man, the mortal man, in short, the man of God's description, is the only being that can be a fit subject for the salvation that God has promised. An immortal being could not possibly be benefited by such a salvation, for when a proper subject of God's salvation has reached the immortal state his salvation is complete, as Jesus taught in Luke 20:36: "Neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

Salvation completed in this case, puts the subject of it in just the condition that we are told the "real man" occupies at the present time. Such a being cannot perish, therefore, God did not give His only begotten Son to save him from perishing. If there are immortal beings in heaven or earth they need no salvation, for the salvation of God begins with the deliverance of its subject from liability to death, either by a resurrection of the dead to immortality or the changing of the living to a state of deathlessness. No! immortal beings need no salvation! By dying, perishing, mortal men and women are exactly adapted to God's great plan, to the salvation from death which He provides, and to the endless bodily existence in the glorious kingdom which is to be established upon this earth!

Let us rejoice, then, that "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son" (John 3:16), "that whosoever believeth may in him have eternal life" (John 3:15, A. R. V.).

Justification

By T. A. Drinkard

"Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ."—Romans 5:1.

IF JUSTIFICATION is the act of justifying completed, and to be justified is to be "saved from wrath through him" (Rom. 5:9), then it becomes very necessary that man must come to that place where pardon is found. Being "justified by faith" through Jesus Christ, these "beloved of God" in Rome (Rom. 1:7) stood absolved from all sin through the righteousness of God being imputed to them, as Romans 3:22, 25 and 4:6, 7 clearly indicate; and being thus in Christ, their "iniquities are forgiven," and their "sins are covered."

It is written of Abraham, that "he staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith, giving glory to God; and being fully persuaded that, what he had promised, he was able also to perform," and therefore "it was imputed to him for righteousness" (Rom. 4:20-22). Thus it was that righteousness was imputed or reckoned to this man of God.

But "it was not written for his sake alone, that it was imputed to him; but for us also, to whom it shall be imputed, if we believe on him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead; who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification" (vv. 23-25). Our receiving the righteousness of God by way of being imputed is conditional upon "if we believe" on Him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead.

This takes us back to our first passage of Scripture—"being justified by faith"—which entitles all in Christ to the imputed righteousness of God through Him. "We are "justified freely by his grace" because grace works "through faith" (Rom. 3:24; Eph. 2:8) in the accomplishment of our salvation. And that faith we have in God will be accounted to us for righteousness, as it was to Abraham, by virtue of our being the children of Abraham by faith.

The fact that justification comes through the righteousness of God being imputed to us because of our faith in Him, who raised His Son from the dead, in order that "our justification" might be assured, should inspire in us a greater zeal to place these truths in possession of others.

Salvation by grace alone, and separate from a living, active faith, is unknown in the Word of God. Since we are justified by faith that is made perfect by works, and since grace works through faith, therefore, it can be truly said that we are "justified freely by his grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus" (Rom. 3:24). Those whom He calls are justified and also glorified (Rom. 8:30).

Justification through the imputed righteousness of God by way of Jesus Christ is only for those who believe, as Paul teaches in Romans 4:24. Therefore, this being true, it becomes necessary for men and women to become members of the church, the body, of which "he is the saviour" (Eph. 5:23), in order to be entitled to this important blessing. This is God's work and it is marvelous in our eyes. Yes, God is "the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus" (Rom. 3:26). (Please turn to page 9)

Is Heaven Our Home?

By Robert Ashcroft

THE human mind has in all ages solaced itself in the presence of death with a variety of pleasant fiction. Its hopes have uniformly found a ready vehicle in the inherited traditions of its respective countries and generations. The savage has buried with the deceased his bow and arrows in the belief that he would thus be enabled to pursue the chase in the land of spirits. Of our pagan ancestors, the Anglo-Saxons, it is recorded that their ideas of the immortality of the soul were such as to inspire them with a contempt of death. On the other hand, the Buddhist looks forward to entire cessation of conscious being as the highest and most desirable recompense of a virtuous life. The ancient Greeks seem to have varied in their speculations as to a future state of existence—the imagination of some reveling in the prospect of Elysian fields—an embowered and floral paradise, melodious with song and murmuring with the sound of perennial waters; while Achilles, in the Odyssey, is quoted as having “expressed a very natural, and no doubt a very common sentiment, when he said that he would rather be on earth the serf of a needy master, than to reign over the whole kingdom of the dead.”

The Egyptians anticipated departure at death to Osiris, the national benefactor; the Goths to Zamolixis. The doctrine of the Persians was so nearly akin to that of the Hebrews that some writers have hazarded the conjecture that the contact of Zoroastrian opinions may have subsequently favored the development of the latter, though it certainly did not originate it. Zoroaster is said to have put this question to Ormuzd: “The wind bears forth the dust of the body, water washes it away; how then shall the body come again? how shall the dead arise?” Ormuzd answered: “I am he who holds the star-spangled heaven in ethereal space; who makes this sphere, which once was buried in darkness, a flood of light. . . . I created man, whose eye is light, whose life is the breath of his nostrils; I placed within him life’s inextinguishable power. . . . Surely shall thine eyes some day see all these things live anew. Skeletons shall be clothed with veins and sinews. And when the resurrection is finished it shall never a second time take place.” The system of religion which Zoroaster founded gradually sank into the gulf of a mere idolatrous adoration of the fire and the sun.

(In connection with what our author states concerning the similarity which existed originally between the Persian and the Hebrew religions, and the decline of the former to a system of fire worship, it is interesting to note what the great Jewish Encyclopedia says with regard to the present-day belief of the Jews in the immortality of the soul. It declares that this idea was foreign to the belief of the Hebrews until after their prolonged captivity in Persia, where they were brought under the influence of the false teaching of debased Zoroastrianism.—Editor.)

Mr. Robert Ashcroft, author of “The Scriptures Opened,” from which the following address is taken, was formerly minister of the Congregational Church, Rock Ferry, Liverpool, England. Owing to his earnest endorsement of the great doctrines for which the Church of God stands, he was compelled to sever his connection with the Congregationalists and labor independently in Canada, where he came to make his home.

A celebrated Mohammedan writer of the tenth century held out the hope of a final refuge from all life’s troubles in God. “In reunion with Him we shall find eternal rest—a rest without sorrow, a joy without pain, a strength without doubt, a tranquil and yet an ecstatic vision of the source of life and light and glory, the source from which we came.”

The old Romans had their lares, or spirits of those who had led virtuous lives; their larvæ or lemures, the spirits of the wicked; their manes, the spirits of those of whom the merits were doubtful.

THE VOICE OF AUTHORITY

But if we wish authority on the subject and not speculation, we must consult those “oracles of the deity” which were given into the hands of the nation of Israel—the only nation that for many centuries was in possession of so sacred and inestimable a trust.

An “oracle” is a dogmatic religious communication, given for a religious purpose. It teaches no form of natural science or philosophy, unless such knowledge be required as the basis of the spiritual instruction conveyed by the oracle itself.

The author of the Epistle to the Hebrews tells us that the persons whose names he mentions “all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth” (Heb. 11:13). We should not have supposed so much as is here stated of them, from simply reading the biography as given in the book of Genesis. Indeed, the whole Pentateuch is silent on the subject of a future life. The Levitical legislation was restricted to temporal promises.

There is, however, nowhere in the Hebrew Scriptures any unequivocal expression of such hope as we commonly hear, in favor of this contention. In the language they employ, hope lasts no longer than life, and never blends with their lamentations for the dead. Even if Jacob, as some strongly contend, expected to rejoin his son in Sheol (Gen. 37:35, R. V.), the prospect cannot be said to have solaced him in the least, as it surely would have done had it held out the certainty of conscious reunion there.

None of the patriarchs or prophets appear to have anticipated a posthumous bliss, but such expressions as these are of frequent occurrence in their writings: "They that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth" (Isa. 38:18); "Oh, spare me, that I may recover strength, before I go hence, and be no more" (Psa. 39:13); "Man dieth, and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he? As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up; so man lieth down, and riseth not; till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep" (Job 14:10-12).

These are specimens of Hebrew thought and conviction on the subject of man's condition in death. They might be multiplied almost indefinitely. Nowhere in these writings is there a syllable to indicate that the hope of an Old Testament saint was in any sense identical with the heaven-going expectations of modern times. He looked indeed for a renewed existence, but only by means of his redemption from the power of the grave. Meanwhile he must lie in darkness and under the shadow of death—corruption would be his father and the worm his mother, he would go down to the pit and abide like the slain in the grave whom Jehovah remembers no more! But there would come a time of awakening, when the earth would cast out her dead, who would once again see the Lord in the land of the living and rejoice forever in His salvation. Satisfaction would come at last.

Of Him who was to make His grave with the wicked and with the rich in His death, it is immediately afterwards predicted that "he shall see the travail of his soul and shall be satisfied" (Isa. 53:11). "As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness" (Psa. 17:15); "I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction" (Hosea 13:14). On this redemption the hope of every truly enlightened Israelite was fixed, and not on any previous translation to heavenly places.

Descending to New Testament times, we begin to find traces of the belief in a disembodied felicity for all the righteous dead, with a corresponding state of misery for the wicked. Tacitus states that the Jews derived their custom of burying instead of burning their dead from the Egyptians; that they have also the same care of the dead with them, and the same persuasion about the invisible world below.

In his "Discourse to the Greeks Concerning Hades," Josephus describes it "as a place in the world not regularly finished; a subterraneous region, wherein the light of this world does not shine." This region is allotted as a place of custody for souls, in which angels are appointed as guardians to them, who distribute to them temporary punishments, agreeable to every one's behavior and manners. The souls of the just are in the same region but in a distinct department of it. On their entrance they are "guided to the right hand, and are led with hymns sung by the angels appointed over that place . . . This place we call the Bosom of Abraham."

Jesus appears to have made a trenchant and ironical use of this piece of popular fiction in His well-known parable of the rich man and Lazarus—a parable which, strangely enough, has been extensively and seriously employed in support of the very fable it was obviously designed to discredit.

The Jews of Alexandria—led by Philo who was an old man at about 40 A. D., when he was sent at the head of an embassy from them to the Emperor Caligula—held that the body of man was unnecessary to his real existence, and that his true life only began at the epoch of his escape from this fleshly prison. This also appears to have been the doctrine of the Essenes, who used Jewish imagery and forms of speech in its enunciation, but only to convey the teaching of the Alexandrian philosophy.

From those days onward to our time the idea has more or less extensively prevailed that to a righteous man death is but the gate through which he passes into a heavenly state. Bush, in his treatise on the soul, says: "No article of any creed in Christendom is more universally or unhesitatingly held than that each individual enters at death an eternal state of retribution." Language might be quoted from the various religious denominations, from hymns used in worship, and from innumerable published works, which unmistakably set forth this belief. People are accustomed to hear and use this language almost from their very childhood, and perhaps it seldom occurs to them to question its accuracy. The idea it expresses is presented to their minds backed by the enormous force of an established and all but universal authority. It is thus that the opinions of the vast majority of mankind on all religious subjects are molded and determined. Nor is this anything to be surprised at. What is more natural than that persons, who for any reason feel themselves defective in knowledge, should allow the settlement of difficult questions to remain entirely in the hands of those who have been trained for their special treatment? And when churches have been built at great expense, and munificently endowed either by the state or by private liberality and bequest for the express inculcation of certain doctrines, and those only, it is no wonder that those who sustain the office of public teacher in such buildings should discountenance the agitation of them, and be content to have them assumed. When a man is thus bound by considerations so closely affecting his temporal prospects to uphold any established system, he is scarcely qualified to give an impartial verdict upon it. The less he knows and says in opposition to that he is paid to teach, the better for his emoluments and peace of mind.

But we lie under no such unfortunate and vexatious disabilities. Let us see, then, if there be any ground in the New Testament for the idea that heaven is our home.

Jewish rabbinism had no fewer than three heavens. The first heaven was the space occupied by the atmosphere which surrounds the earth. The second was the region of the stars and planets. The third was beyond the confines of the visible creation—the house and throne of God.

But we have no scriptural warrant for such exact definitions. Elijah was taken up by a whirlwind into heaven, and thither Christ ascended. In the one case it is probable that nothing more is intended by the history than the illustrious Prophet's removal from the scene of his labors. The precise locality of the heaven to which he went cannot be conjectured.

(Here we may remark that his subsequent appearance with Moses on the mount of transfiguration, even though it were a literal occurrence, and not a "vision," as the narrative represents, would prove nothing for the common idea; for Elijah's translation was that of a living man, and not a disembodied spirit.)

Jesus ascended to heaven from the Mount of Olives. But even this statement gives us no information as to where heaven is. If He ascended aloft in the plumb-line vertical to Mount Olivet, then, had His ascent been accomplished twelve hours later, He would have taken an exactly opposite direction owing to the diurnal revolution of the earth on its axis.

Some people speak of heaven as located somewhere in the center of the vast expanse of space. They forget that space is boundless, and that which is of infinite extension can have no center. We might as well speak of a central moment in the eternity which is past and is to come. The idea is absolutely unthinkable!

Reliance, however, in support of the popular theory is put upon Christ's declaration to His disciples: "In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you" (John 14: 2). Accordingly it is customary to speak of heaven as "a prepared place for a prepared people."

But what about the ancient saints who are supposed to have gone there hundreds and thousands of years before Christ went to prepare it? Did they go to find heaven in a state of disorder, not ready for their reception? Obviously we must adopt some more reasonable interpretation of Christ's words than the one they are thus made to yield.

THE FATHER'S HOUSE NOT HEAVEN

If we remember that the Father's house is that "household of God," spoken of in the apostolic Scriptures as ultimately to consist of His immortalized sons and daughters, who are in their respective generation being "builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit" (Eph. 2:22), and if we take the rendering of the word translated "mansions," given in the margin of the Revised Bible as "abiding places," we shall see that there is no necessity to suppose that these words contain an allusion to the "heaven" of traditional theology.

Christ proceeds to say: "And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also" (v. 3).

Thus we see that the place promised to them would not be prepared for them before the time appointed for His return to this earth. And as that return has not yet occurred, it is impossible for us to suppose the earlier part of the promise was fulfilled when the disciples died.

To us it seems clear that in this passage Jesus gives a reason for His long absence from them. The reason is this: The house of God was to consist of a great multitude which no man can number, and a large proportion of that multitude had yet to be developed from succeeding generations. The hearts of His disciples were filled with sorrow at the prospect of His approaching departure from them, and in giving them consolation in these distressing circumstances He showed them how needful the separation was in order that an abiding condition or an immortal existence might be prepared for others as well as for them.

He had, moreover, previously declared: "As I said unto the Jews, Whither I go, ye cannot come; so now I say to you" (John 13:33). Here is a distinct assurance that they could not follow Him into the Father's presence to which He was then about to go. But although this was impossible, He would come again and, receiving them unto Himself, give them a permanent membership in the great family of God when the days of its completion should arrive.

"No man hath ascended up to heaven" (John 3:13). Jesus told Nicodemus. How many modern statements are false, if that is true! What becomes of all the comfort it is usual to address to those mourning the loss of dear friends and kindred, when they are assured the departed are "safe in the arms of Jesus, safe on His gentle breast"? If Jesus is in heaven and no man has ascended there (not even the Patriarch David, a man after God's own heart, see Acts 2:34), how can anyone be in His arms and on His breast?

WHY MINISTER SPURIOUS CONSOLATION?

The answer to this question in many cases would be: Because it is consolation, though perchance illusive, and there are cases in which it would be cruel to withhold it. Is this, then, an instance in which it is allowable to sacrifice the truth of God at the shrine of human sensation and preference? What do we lose when we part with a hollow or foundationless comfort? We will let an eloquent author reply:

"We have lost absolutely nothing but that which the traveler loses when the mirage, which has displayed cool waters and green shades before him, melts swiftly away. There were no cooling fountains really there to allay his thirst, no flowery meadows for his weary limbs; his pleasure was delusion and the wilderness is blank. Rather the mirage, with its pleasant illusion, is the human cry, than the desert with its barrenness. Not so is the friendly warning: Seek not vainly in the desert for that which is not there, but turn rather to other horizons, and to surer hopes. Do not waste life clinging to ecclesiastical dogmas which represent no eternal verities, but search elsewhere for truth which may haply be found."

That truth is discoverable in the promises of God. Those promises were the sole basis of all apostolic expectation of a future life. Under their influence the Thessalonians were led to "turn from idols to serve the living and true God; and to wait for his Son from heaven" (1 Thess. 1:9, 10). Would those believers in Thessalonica have been told to wait for Christ from heaven, if it had been the divine purpose that they should go to Christ in heaven eighteen hundred or two thousand years before their Lord's return? Hardly!

Why should sobs of bitter lamentation escape us when standing by the open grave, if the friend we follow to his burial has passed away to the heaven of eternal light and joy? Did we really believe this of him we should surely find our emotions of sorrow less difficult to control. But the fact is, at such times our natural feeling and plain, sober sense involuntarily refuse to be imposed upon by a theological lie, and not all the books that ever bore the title, "Heaven Our Home," would avail to stop a single tear in the presence of that cold and lifeless clay!

From vain and profitless tradition we turn to the words of the Lord Jesus: "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth" (Matt. 5:5).

There is not a single promise in the whole revelation of God which fixes the inheritance of the meek in celestial spheres. That revelation is concerned from first to last with "this terrestrial ball." The upright shall " dwell in the land, and the perfect shall remain in it. But the wicked shall be cut off from the earth, and the transgressors shall be rooted out of it" (Prov. 2:21, 22). "As truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord" (Num. 14:21). "Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession" (Psalm 2:8).

Now look at the picture which these three texts exhibit and see if you cannot make a home of it.

First, you have the earth cleansed from all its moral rubbish—the men "rooted out of it" by whose hands it is made the scene of depravity and woe, which myriads find it to be. "Thou puttest away all the wicked of the earth like dross: therefore I love thy testimonies" (Psalm 119:119). These are they who make the earth a desert instead of a home. Purged from the defilement of their presence, you have only a righteous population remaining. And what does that mean? It means the most exquisite satisfaction that an ideal human intercourse can be imagined to afford. Every man at peace with his neighbor. Every dwelling place the scene of contentment and purity and intelligence. No squalid misery or disease. No bitter, crushing poverty. No "rich man's scorn," nor "proud man's contumely." No violent perversion of judgment and justice. No seasons of industrial depression or commercial panic. No wars or rumors of wars. No "social maladjustments" of any kind. Because all human affairs are divinely administered by the beneficent and unerring hand of "that man whom God hath ordained" to rule the world in righteousness and to whom He has given "all power in heaven and in earth" to accomplish that purpose, those perfect conditions will prevail.

A large proportion of the world's population profess allegiance to Christ in His absence. Why should so many of these be so little able to endure the prospect of His visible presence and control? Human government has not been such a glorious success for all these centuries that any need disdain the thought of the personal rulership of Him whom God has appointed "the heir of all things" (Heb. 1:2), and who in the day of His humiliation could say: "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

If every man upon the face of the earth were a worthy representative of his species—his understanding cultivated, his manners refined, his morals pure, his conversation chaste, his heart filled with affection and a "burning charity divine," his conscience molded and disciplined by an enlightened fear of God—we should surely be living in "a better country, that is, a heavenly." And if in addition to all this, we were destined to " dwell in the land for ever" (Psa. 37:29), we should soon begin to feel ourselves at home, and should want no other "heaven."

Why, then, do men avert their gaze from the revealed future and fix it on the airy phantoms of a paganized imagination? Is there not enough in what God has actually promised to excite the highest and purest aspirations of the human mind and heart, that we must needs look in other directions for the hope and consolation that we need?

"The heaven, even the heavens, are the Lord's; but, the earth hath he given to the children of men" (Psalm 115:16).

Then let us be content with the prospect of the inheritance which may and will be ours if we walk in the way of God's commandments. No longer hoping for that which He has never promised to bestow, we shall act wisely if we search the Scriptures of the prophets and learn from them what glorious things He has prepared for them that love Him.

Already He has done a great preliminary work upon the earth. The soil that carried the weary footsteps of the Man of Sorrows, and received the blood He shed for the remission of sins, shall yet upbear His triumphant march when He comes to rule the world in righteousness and love, to be glorified in His saints, and to be admired in all them that believe.

This confirms fully my former statement, that only those in Christ are blessed with justification. There is no need for the use of ambiguous words and theories to confuse the honest seeker after truth. The question is sufficiently plain for understanding as it is presented in the Word of God.

The faith that secures for us justification from all sins, by having them covered, is a perfected faith or, rather, a faith made perfect by works (James 2:22). Now, in what does the work consist? Paul says, "Faith cometh by hearing . . . the word of God" (Rom. 10:17). Then Jesus says, "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them" (Matt. 7:24), is the man that will be blessed. And again, "But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only" (James 1:22).

Herein the principle that "not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified" (Rom. 2:13), holds true, for men and women come into Christ through obedience to the requirements of the "law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus" (Rom. 8:2). Thus when you do these things, you perform "your work of faith" (1 Thess. 1:3), and "do all things" (Phil. 2:14) to "work out your own salvation" (Phil. 2:12).

Sunday Morning Address

By W. S. Tomlinson

"Wherein God, willing more abundantly to shew unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath: that by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us."—Hebrews 6:17, 18.

SUCH are the words of the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews, when speaking of the promises made to Abraham. They are used as an exhortation to help the brethren keep in the way of life. He had endeavored to show them the fearful consequences of falling away from God's favor—it would be impossible to renew them to repentance (vv. 4-6). But immediately he changes the picture and says: "But, beloved, we are persuaded better things of you, and things which accompany salvation, though we thus speak. For God is not unrighteous to forget your work and labour of love, which ye have shewed toward his name, . . . and we desire that every one of you do shew the same diligence to the full assurance of hope unto the end" (vv. 9-11).

Here we are to note the comparison, "God is not unrighteous," therefore, we ought to "shew the same diligence to the full assurance of hope unto the end." "For when God made promise to Abraham, because he could swear by no greater, he swear by himself" (v. 13).

What a basis for our faith to rest upon! The oath-bound promises of the Eternal One!

When God made the promise to Abraham that He would give him the land of Canaan for a possession, it was a conditional promise. Abraham was to be tried—as all the people of God must be tried—before any lasting good could be bestowed upon him.

In Genesis 22 we have the record of Abraham's trial of faith. He was told to take Isaac, the son whom he loved, and go to Moriah, and offer him there for a burnt offering. Abraham faithfully complied with all the details made known to him, when the angel of the Lord called unto him out of heaven, saying: "Lay not thine hand upon the lad, neither do thou any thing unto him; for now I know that thou fearest God, seeing thou hast not withheld thy son, thine only son from me. . . . And the angel of the Lord called unto Abraham out of heaven the second time, and said, By myself have I sworn, saith the Lord, for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son: that in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea shore; and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies; and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed; because thou hast obeyed my voice" (Gen. 22:12-18).

Do we realize, beloved, that every time we meet around the table of the Lord we meet to remember Him who came "to confirm the promises made unto the fathers" (Rom. 15:8), as Paul affirms? What assurance have we, then, that God will carry out His purpose? He has sworn by Himself that He will do so and, to provide more abundant assurance, He has sent His Son to confirm His promise. "To confirm" means "to make firm; to settle; to render fixed;" but more than that, it means "to satisfy, to bring in force."

Now the promise was that Abraham's seed, whom Paul declares in Galatians 3:16 is Christ, should "possess the gate of his enemies." The greatest enemy that stands between Abraham and ourselves and the inheritance of the promise, is death. Death must be removed before the promise can be fulfilled. It was Christ's work to "destroy him that had the power of death" (Ileb. 2:14). This He did through a flesh and blood nature, which had in it the influence of sin. This influence He overcame by reliance upon divine aid, and by His obedience became the sacrificial victim whose death was necessary to ratify the covenant made with Abraham. And so the words of Hebrews 13:20, 21 come to us like a heavenly benediction:

"Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is wellpleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen."

As we review these wonderful testimonies again and contemplate the words of Jesus on the night of His betrayal when He instituted this ordinance that we might remember Him—"This is my body . . . this is my blood of the new covenant" (the covenant which was about to become effective through His death)—do not our hearts swell with love and gratitude for the blessed privilege of remembering Him who has done so much for us? That He might sanctify the people with His own blood, Jesus "suffered without the gate" (Ileb. 13:12). By Him, therefore, let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to His name!

Oh what joy surrounds this table to those who spiritually partake of these emblems! To them God's faithful of old are brought to view. The present is made joyous by the blessing we derive through our relation to Christ. Condemnation removed, sins forgiven, exalted from creation in Adam to sonship in God with Jesus Christ! The future is made bright and glorious by the blessed hope of seeing Jesus and being made like unto Him, and association with the faithful and chosen ones who shall be made strong after the power of an endless life—The Restitution, Dec. 15, 1909.

the crucifixion was the darkest hour in human history and the three hours of darkness which hung over Jerusalem like the pall of night, were typical of the moral gloom which had enveloped mankind since the fall. But thanks be to God, it was also the birthday of a new era, the completion of the plan of salvation so long foretold.

Let us remember that it is not the cross itself that has any power to save, but rather it was through the instrumentality of the cross that Christ's blood was shed that we might be cleansed from all our sins.

We would not forget that though it was through His death that He became a ransom for many, it was also His resurrection from the dead that gives promise of a future life to those who are faithful. There was His victory! There was His triumph!

There are those who speak of the atonement as a "bloody doctrine," a doctrine repulsive to the finer sensibilities of the soul, as they affirm. But they forget that "the preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us which are saved it is the power of God" (1 Cor. 1:18). It was only by way of the cross that salvation could come.

In Hebrews 12:2 we have this illuminating statement: "Looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God." Truly, the way of the cross was filled with service, suffering, sacrifice, and death, that the greater joy might be obtained through His resurrection and subsequent power and glory. May we as His disciples follow in the way of the cross that we may be worthy of a place in God's kingdom when Jesus comes.

TWENTY-THREE YEARS AGO

came the steady throb of marching troops, the rattle of accouterments, the accelerated tempo of warlike preparations, threats and counter-threats passing from nation to nation. Then the advance of German armies into Belgium. The thunder of the guns about Liege. The French, the Russians, the British, gathering themselves for battle—one after another the Powers entered the lists. The hills, the mountains, the valleys reechoed to the terrific voice of war, red war!

It all started twenty-three years ago, but before it ended our own boys were marching in the tumult and the strife! They, too, were fighting in a cause the nature and purpose of which they did not understand—a cause in which we as a nation had but the scantiest interest or concern!

And yet we fought, we sacrificed, we paid the awful price of making war! Europe was burning with hatred, mad with fury, insane with fear! But what it was all about few even over there seemed to know. And nineteen years after it was all over few seem to know what it was all about!

The common people of Germany did not hate the common people of France. They knew little about them. The common people of France did not hate the common people of Germany. They had no reason to do so. Jacob Schmidt had done nothing to injure Pierre Flandon nor had Pierre done anything to hurt Jacob. In fact, neither knew that the other existed until some one in Germany and some one in France put guns into the hands of the two men and commanded them to shoot each other! Just why they should do this they were not told. Perhaps nobody knew.

But the great men of the nations said that they must kill and be killed and so the ground trembled with the bellowings of war and was made sodden with the blood of the slain! And that was war!

War is opposed by every human sentiment and inclination. No man, who is in his right mind, wants war. Back there we talked about "a war to end war." There can be no "war to end war"! Only peace can end war! Only love and sympathy and understanding can put an end to war. War breeds war as hatred breeds hatred!

But, I say, it is not the hatred of the masses for the masses, but the selfishness of the few that brings about war. Seldom has the world seen those who declared war, personally face its dangers! They conscript other men to do it—men who had nothing to do with the causes of the war—men who feel little or no interest in its declared purpose—men who greatly prefer peace and who want above all else to follow the even tenor of their way rather than to kill or to be killed!

What did the common man, the poor man, the laboring man, get out of the World War? Nothing but privation, hunger, depression, and discouragement! And those who fought its battles won for themselves nothing but wounds and suffering and death! The munition makers made billions of dollars—the common soldiers, billions of tears!

But nations will not heed the lessons war teaches, as is evidenced by the terrific struggles which now rage in China and in Spain. It is all a horrible mistake—a senseless, valueless mistake. But what is the use of talking about it? We have gone over the matter for hundreds of years without profit.

Then have we no hope? Must war go on forever?

Praise God, we have the answer to our age-long query in the Bible, God's Book!

"Not by might," the might of war, cries the Prophet, speaking for the Lord, "nor by power," the power of war, "but by my spirit, saith the Lord of hosts" (Zech. 4:6). In this lies our hope! In this rests our assurance! That which men cannot accomplish by the mighty power of belching guns, exploding shells, and poison gas, the eternal God can and will accomplish by the resistless power of His own divine Spirit operating through His blessed Son when He comes. "The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this" (Isa. 9:7).

Berean Department

Cecil A. Smead, Editor, Blanchard, Mich.

"Thus saith the Lord; Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord. For he shall be like the heath in the desert, and shall not see when good cometh; but shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness, in a salt land and not inhabited. Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is. For he shall be as a tree planted by the waters, and that spreadeth out her roots by the river, and shall not see when heat cometh, but her leaf shall be green; and shall not be careful in the year of drought, neither shall cease from yielding fruit."—Jeremiah 17:5-8.

"Strengthened With Might"

You travel for miles across a desert seeing nothing worthy the name of timber—only sagebrush, mesquite, cactus. And then you come upon a fringe of trees—life in the midst of death. You look for the cause. A stream of water, oft-times underground, but the green leaves tell the story of its presence.

So "man trusteth in man," and the result is a desert—"men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth" (Luke 21:26). Then you see a group standing confident, green and fruitful in this age of unbelief. "Strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man" (Eph. 3:16), their roots go down to "the waters of Shiloah that go softly" (Isa. 8:6).

"A TREE PLANTED BY THE RIVERS"

Who is the man "like a tree planted by the rivers of water" (Psa. 1:3)? The first part of the Psalm tells us: "The man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly . . . but his delight is in the law of the Lord." Jeremiah 17:7 is plain: "The man that trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is."

There is but one source of spiritual strength, there is but one "God of all comfort" (2 Cor. 1:3). The living water is the gospel (John 4:14). The Bible is the Water of Life.

Resurrection is the only hope that can comfort us in death, for it is the only God-given comfort for that situation. Paul labels the doctrine of the resurrection at the coming of Christ, "comfort" (1 Thess. 4:18). All comfort that makes death out a friend is false comfort. Death is not the will of God, it is the will of man. And when man's day gives way to God's day the great enemy, death, is to be destroyed (1 Cor. 15:26).

He who receives strength from the Bible is "like a tree planted by the rivers of water."

Correspondence Committee Report

(The Junior Social Correspondence Committee brings the young people of our churches into social contact. Young people who live in communities where there are few other Christian companions of their own ages, and young people who have just been baptized are especially benefited by this (Committee.—Editor.)

There have been several new members added to the Committee. Here is the list of this year's members (I have placed an asterisk before the names of the new ones): Roselin Fredlund, Mora Minn.; Emily Fyfe, Rt. 2, Jerico Springs, Mo.; Lorraine Brossard, Litchfield, Minn.; Francis Burnett, Ripley, Ill.; Jeanette Romine, Oregon, Ill.; Mildred Siple, 135 Pennell Road, S. E., Grand Rapids, Mich.; Lila Kirkpatrick, % WPA Office, Little Falls, Minn.; June Macy, Rt. 3, Troy, Ohio; * Clyde Graham, 2616A Hodiament Ave., St. Louis, Mo.; * Harry Goekler, Rt. 3, Box 50-A, Hammond, La.; * Gerald Cooper, Ripley, Ill.; * Austin Railton, 1110 Rockton Ave., Rockford, Ill.

Our new members are working like old hands, and are doing splendid work. Our old members, as they have done through all their months of service, are taking all work sent to them without a word of complaint and even are asking for more. I couldn't begin to estimate the good they are doing. I do know that we have a network of letters that covers the United States and part of Canada, and we want more. So if there is anyone that would like a Christian correspondent, write to me and I will find you one. Or if you know of some one else desiring contact with others of like faith, let me know and I will be glad to do all I can to establish such contacts.

We have started a system of monthly reports that is making our work more efficient. Between the 1st and 5th of each month I write to each committee member, sending a list of people with whom they may correspond; then between the 15th and 20th of each month they report to me.

Our biggest month since I have worked with the Committee was the month of September. There was a list of thirty-six correspondents and two different Committee members were to write to each one, making seventy-two first letters written. Besides this there were all the old correspondents who were to be answered. In November there were but three new names to send out.

We have had such wonderful cooperation lately from THE HERALD, the various ministers, and the Bereans in general, that we want you to do only one thing more besides all you are doing. We want more work to do. Send us more names. We ask also the prayers of our fellow Bereans.

"O come, let us sing unto the Lord: let us make a joyful noise to the rock of our salvation. Let us come before his presence with thanksgiving."

The Thanksgiving Football Game

Father drove up just in front of the church and stopped the car to let Betty and Bobby out before parking it. The twins, hand in hand, walked to the steps of their beautiful little church, and there they stopped. A dozen or two people, most of whom they knew quite well, stood about talking excitedly to each other and looking very much distressed. Suddenly Bobby saw the reason why.

Nailed across the fine, heavy doors of the church was an ugly board and above it a sign which read, "Closed by the Order of the Government." Who would dare do such a thing! the boy thought indignantly, as he turned to those nearest him for an explanation.

No one seemed to know the answer. Several muttered to themselves about freedom to worship God. Others endeavored to place the blame upon first one official of the little town and then another. But none of them wanted to shoulder the responsibility for taking off the sign, removing the board, and opening the church.

"Now," thought Bobby, "we won't get to see the beautiful 'mums that Mother said the choir girls had put in all the windows last night. We won't hear that lovely anthem Sister has been practising for a couple of weeks, either."

"Well, now I guess you're satisfied," Betty spoke up in cross and disappointed tones. "You didn't want to come to church. You wanted to stay home and play football with the boys on the lot. Now, I guess you're satisfied, I say."

Bobby looked down at the toe of his Sunday shoe. How he had jerked the strings as he put them on! He wanted to be putting on his old "sneakers." He looked to the right of them and to the left.

"Do you feel better now?" persisted his twin, who could be so aggravating when she wanted to be. "Cat got your tongue?"

"Mmm!" Bobby began to clear his throat. "I wasn't very anxious to go to church this morning, but maybe it wouldn't have been so bad after all."

By this time some of the men had appointed themselves a committee to look into affairs. The twins' father was among them, and he called to Betty and Bobby to come and he would take them home first. Slowly and with many a backward glance they retraced their way.

Football didn't seem so great, after all, mused the young boy. It would probably end up in an argument, anyway. But, of course, since they couldn't go to church, there wasn't anything else to do. They might as well play with the old football. . . .

Bobby stirred, stretched his cramped limbs, and awoke! He started up, straining his eyes in the darkness to see that awful sign across their beloved church doors. Then he pulled on his bed light.

Here he was, safe and sound in bed! It had all been nothing but a dreadful dream.

He was thoroughly ashamed now of how cross he had been last night when Mother said that he must go with Betty to church in the morning. Regretful thoughts drifted across his mind. But soon the healthy young boy was fast asleep again.

Thanksgiving morning dawned clear and cold. Bobby was the first one up, that is, next to Mother, who was always up first, caring for the dear little grandmother who couldn't walk.

Mother couldn't help but notice Bobby's bright face in such contrast to the one she had kissed good night only a few hours before. But, motherlike, she made no comment. Plainly to be seen also were Bobby's efforts to help so that they would not be late for church.

"What if the church should be locked this morning and a sign put up that it was closed by the government?" suddenly Bobby asked as he ate his last piece of toast.

"Whatever put such an idea in your head, Son," asked Father.

"Oh, nothing," replied the boy. "But I guess that's what happens in Russia all right."

"Thank the Lord we're not in Russia, Bobby," replied Father. . . .

How beautiful the voices of the choir sounded, as they sang, "O Come, Let Us Worship." And the tones of the minister's voice were so reverent as he read from Psalm 98, "O sing unto the Lord a new song; for he hath done marvellous things."

Bobby joined the congregation as they sang a thanksgiving hymn, his boyish treble rising clear and true, a prayer of thankfulness to God. If his thoughts strayed once or twice during the pastor's thanksgiving sermon, he was certain to be forgiven. For down deep in Bobby's heart was the real thanksgiving spirit.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

CALIFORNIA QUARTERLY CONFERENCE

A note from Sr. Emma C. Railsback announces a quarterly conference of the Church of God in California will be held in Los Angeles Sunday, Dec. 5. No doubt many of our brethren from other parts of the country will be on the Coast by that time and it will be a splendid opportunity for them to inspect the beautiful new house of worship in the City of Angels and at the same time take part in an inspiring service.

EVANGELIST T. A. DRINKARD'S REPORT

October started out in a very encouraging way and promised to be filled with gospel work. But upon arriving home from Arkansas on the 13th, I found a request for the postponement of an eleven-day meeting in eastern Texas on account of sickness in the community.

Our work is dependent upon the freewill offerings contributed for that purpose, and I sincerely appeal to those who are interested in the work which I am trying to do in carrying the gospel to those who do not know it, to contribute to this missionary effort. No greater service can be rendered than to support the gospel with your means. The Master said, "Occupy till I come," and this is the greatest work on earth at this time. I ask no salary, but appeal to you to give as the Lord has prospered you. If I ever needed help from you, my brethren, to remain in the gospel work, it is now.

Will you not only pray for us, but also support that prayer with means to care for our necessary needs while we are engaged in the Lord's work?

A monthly report will be given through The Herald.

Our financial report for October is as follows: Amount received, $47.05; expenses, $11.89. We preached four sermons at Ater, Tex., Oct. 1-4, and four sermons at Bear, Ark., Oct. 8-10.

My home address is Handley, Texas.

Yours in Christ,

T. A. Drinkard.

HOLBROOK, NEBRASKA

The annual business meeting of the Holbrook Church of God was held October 3, 1937. The following officers were elected: elders—Bros. Arthur Hornaday, Grover Gordon, and A. B. Wilson; deacons—Bros. Wayne Wilson and Irvin Lathrop; trustees—Bros. C. R. Meyerhoeffer, J. H. Adams, and Irvin Lathrop; deaconesses—Srs. Lulu Johnson and Minnie Evans; secretary—Sr. Icel Stedman; treasurer—Sr. Ruey Lathrop.

October 24 was Home-Coming Day for the Holbrook church. We were glad to see a number who cannot meet with us regularly each Sunday, and we were especially glad to welcome Bros. Giesler, Ely, and Shultz from the Moorefield church.

Bro. and Sr. C. R. Meyerhoeffer departed this week for Washington for an indefinite visit in the home of a son.

As the Thanksgiving season draws near may we praise God as did the Psalmist: "O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good: for his mercy endureth for ever."

Icel Stedman, Secretary.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

We were glad to be able to take about thirty of our people to Blanchard for the fall conference, Oct. 31. All enjoyed the Christian associations and the wonderful hospitality of the Blanchard brethren. It was a pleasant surprise to see Bro. Gerald Cooper again, he having come along with the LeCrones. It was also good to see the development Bro. LeCrone is making in the ministry.

Fall activities at our church are progressing well, and we plan another early morning Thanksgiving service from seven to eight on Thanksgiving Day. A fellowship supper is to be held on Friday night, Nov. 19. On this occasion a special offering will be received for printing the church constitutions.

Plans for Christmas are also in the offing, and we hope to have a very worshipful Christmas season.

Sr. Helen Hopkins has been on the sick list of late, but was recently returned home from a period of observation at a hospital.

The pastor is planning to attend the ministerial conference at Aurora, Ill., Nov. 15-18.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

BLANCHARD, MICHIGAN

The annual Fall Conference of the Church of God at Blanchard is over once more. I'm sure everyone feels that this conference was the best and most inspiring of all our conferences for quite a while. Attendance was good, and Sunday the church was full.

The Ladies' Aid had charge of the dinner, and they reported serving two hundred people or more.

Everyone enjoyed Bro. LeCrone's sermons very much. Although there were no baptisms, I feel that each one of us received lots of inspiration and good out of attending this conference.

We were glad that it was possible for Mrs. LeCrone and daughter Alice Fay, also Bro. Gerald Cooper, to be with us.

Each evening, for fifteen minutes before the song service started we had silent prayers. Also each evening there was special music. Sunday evening the choir from South Lawn Church in Grand Rapids sang two special songs.

We wish to extend our thanks to all who helped us, and it is our earnest prayer that each may be with us, if our Lord tarries, next year. May the Lord bless and help us through out, until our Master returns.

Frances Sheets, Cor. Sec.

ELDER OWEN JONES

Bro. Owen Jones of Driggs, Ark., aged 76 years, died after a short illness on November 2, 1937.

Bro. Jones embraced the terms of "the high calling" more than thirty-five years ago, and devoted almost his entire time to teaching the gospel of Jesus Christ. He was one of our ablest teachers, and did much for our cause during his ministry. In his death the Church of God has lost a great worker, but the effects of his life and labors will carry on.

Bro. Jones was never married and leaves no near relatives. Funeral services were conducted by the writer, and he was laid to rest in the Clark Cemetery to await the coming of our Lord.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

A note from Sr. Frances Pierce informs us that Sr. Lydia Railsback is now in the Epworth Hospital, South Bend, Ind. Sr. Railsback has a broken femur. Let us pray for her speedy recovery. Sr. Lydia needs no introduction; she has charge of the Golden Text department in our Sunday school quarterly.

Bro. S. J. Lindsay has the distinction of sending in the first order for our Special Christmas issue of The Restitution Herald. We trust that many of our other ministers will embrace the opportunity concerning which we wrote them a short time ago.

Sunday, Nov., 21, Bro. L. E. Conner of the Dixon, Ill., church is going to exchange with Bro. Harvey Krogh of the Ripley, Ill., church. It is the desire of the brethren of these churches that all within driving distance make an effort to attend the services.

The Executive Board of the National Bible Institution is to meet next Thursday to consider applications which have been made for entrance into Golden Rule Home.

Board of Evangelism

Preach the Word

C. E. Randall, Superintendent

I wish to report to the readers of The Herald about a trip to the Brush Creek, Ohio, church in the interests of the Board. Some time ago Bro. S. E. Magaw, the pastor, wrote and said if I would come there and present the work, he thought it would be both acceptable and profitable. His prediction came true, although I was unable to let them know very long beforehand. Many did not know that I was coming; besides it was Bro. Magaw's day at Lawrenceville and but few had expected any preaching service Sunday morning.

In the morning I spoke on "God's Financial Plan," and there was a sort of round table discussion afterward. In the evening the subject was "Sin." Bro. Magaw took up the financial question and an offering was taken, and although Bro. Austin had been there Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday before, and they were preparing for the special meeting of Bro. and Sr. Lapp in two weeks, the offering was $14.00. Besides about a half dozen pledged to pay something within the next six months.

There is no question but that the Brush Creek church is in a thriving spiritual condition. Whenever a church has the spirit of missions it is sure to grow and prosper; and when it has not, the opposite is true. I know churches that have never had any missionary spirit, and they are dead. The only thing that remains is to give them decent burial.

It is certain that the Brush Creek church and Bro. Magaw are not afraid of having too much money go out of their field. The Brush Creek brethren are not wealthy, most of them are farmers; but they have the Spirit of God and want to see His work advanced. Also they know that "he which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully . . . for God loveth a cheerful giver" (2 Cor. 9:6, 7).

Now, what we need and want is some place where work can be done so that the money on hand can be put to use for the Lord. Those wanting evangelistic services please send your requests to the undersigned. Any money that you want to put to work in this field will be gladly received.

James A. Patrick,
Orange Road, Ashland, Ohio.

A YEAR-LONG CHRISTMAS GIFT!

In planning your Christmas giving, two things should be taken into consideration: first, the suitability of the gift to the recipient; and, second, the lasting quality of it.

When you give your friends a year's subscription to The Restitution Herald as a Christmas present, you meet both of these requirements fully.

The Restitution Herald, with its richly varied contents, provides an interesting and instructive source of genuine pleasure to all members of the family.

As each new issue reaches the one for whom it is intended, he or she is immediately reminded of the thoughtful friend who made its welcome visits possible. The paper thus becomes a WEEKLY rather than a YEARLY Christmas gift!

The price to New Subscribers per year is $1.00. Address, National Bible Institution, Oregon, Ill.

THE TITHING BULLETIN

The bulletin, as prepared by The Layman Company, offers every church the most effective of tithing education plus relief from half of the expense and worries of the ordinary church bulletin.

The bulletin consists of four pages. Pages 1 and 4 are for the use of the local church. They may be printed, multigraphed, or mimeographed at one impression. Pages 2 and 3 carry any one of 32 of the famous Layman tithing messages.

This affords a quiet but effective course in stewardship education. It combines simplicity, effectiveness, and economy.

Sample set containing 32 different tithing bulletins, 20 cents. When ordering, please mention The Restitution Herald; also give your denomination.

Christmas Gift Suggestions—

“When they had opened their treasures, they presented unto him gifts.”—Matthew 2:11.

We do not desire to commercialize Christmas, but we do wish to help our readers select gifts to give to their friends which will remind them of the One whose glorious advent into the world we commemorate on Christmas Day!

It is the birth of the World's Redeemer that we celebrate!

Every Christmas greeting we extend, every gift we bestow, should somehow remind the recipient that there “is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord.”

That we may assist our readers in the accomplishment of this ONE GREAT PURPOSE OF CHRISTMAS OBSERVANCE we provide the following

“I Thank You, O Father”

By Mary A. Gesin, Guest Editor

ONE of the most beautiful passages in all the Bible follows the opening words of this prayer of our Lord, “I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth,” found in the 11th chapter of Matthew. Brief it is, certainly, but it contains thanksgiving, assurance, and comfort.

The corresponding portion of Scripture, found in Luke 10, gives a fuller setting to this prayer of Jesus. Let us study it thoughtfully.

The seventy had just returned with a report of their activities for the approval of the Master. God must have blessed their efforts, for we read in verse 17, that they returned “with joy.” Knowing that these eager workers were not trained as the world would demand, their Lord felt a deep sense of gratitude to His Father for the blessings which He had bestowed upon their labors.

They were termed “babes,” though they had been instructed by the Lord Himself. We find these instructions just preceding the prayer of Jesus, and they seem rather inadequate in the light of modern methods of education. But we do not doubt that these seventy had followed Jesus as He went about declaring the kingdom of God. They had imbibed His very spirit as well as His teachings. What could equal such training?

“These things” have also been revealed to those of our day who may be termed “babes,” in comparison to the highly trained and specialized workers which are sometimes sent out. If an insight into the truth of the coming kingdom of God, with all its resultant blessings, has been granted us we are indeed blessed and have much reason for thanksgiving. In fact, we have therein the greatest cause for rejoicing.

What could equal the hope held so dear by you and me that Jesus is coming soon? From what could we derive greater assurance than that on His return the increasing ills of the world will be healed? What truth could give us greater security than that of knowing that in the establishment of God’s righteous kingdom will the nations of earth learn eternal peace, and thus all peoples of the earth be truly blessed? No material security or comfort of which we may be in dire need, could equal these reasons for the giving of thanks. (Turn to page 11)

Alcoholic Deaths Increase

"At the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder."—Proverbs 23:32.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Nov. 16.—With the greatest reluctance the advocates of liquor are beginning to acknowledge that the Eighteenth Amendment wasn't such an evil thing after all, and that under its restrictions, imperfectly enforced as they were by "wet" officials, deaths from alcoholic causes were not nearly so frequent as they are today. Dr. A. C. Baxter, "chief guardian of the State's health," reported recently that alcohol has been taking an increased toll since prohibition, "particularly among women."

Pointing to a mounting death rate from cirrhosis of the liver and a leveling off of the decline in tuberculosis mortality, Dr. Baxter said: "It seems from available evidence that alcoholism has caused a noticeable increase of conditions caused or aggravated by intoxication."

His figures showed that female mortality traced to the excessive use of alcohol jumped 15 in 1932 to 27 in 1936. However, male deaths attributed directly to the use of alcohol declined from 139 to 126 in the same period.

Dr. Baxter found principal concern in the rise of cirrhosis of the liver deaths, which jumped from 743 in 1932 to 907 in 1936.

"What proportion was primarily alcoholic in origin is not known," he said, "but it is established medical opinion that alcoholic beverages increase the liability to cirrhosis of the liver. The increase in this mortality during the past five years was equal to that of the entire preceding decade."

Health department officials also pointed out that although a steady decline in tuberculosis death has been noted in children, it has slowed in the 25- to 29-year age brackets and stopped entirely in the 35- to 54-year age groups. Health officials said alcoholism, which lowers resistance, might have been a factor.

The extreme reluctance shown by officials under a wet regime to confess the failure of their predictions (that there would be a decided improvement in liquor conditions after the Eighteenth Amendment had been stricken from the Constitution), adds much to the force and meaning of what they say. We suggest a careful reading of the Berean editorial in this issue on this same subject.

The Novelty of Marriage

"Rachel was beautiful . . . and Jacob loved Rachel."
—Genesis 29:17, 18.

OMAHA, Neb., Nov. 5.—According to newspaper reports, Vivian Marble Chinn, a fifteen-year-old miss of this city, who married Albert Chinn last May, "just for the novelty of it," has been granted an annulment.

This little girl was not altogether responsible for her attitude toward the most sacred contract into which two persons can enter. Some one has failed in duty! Some one had not impressed upon this young girl the wonder and the glory pertaining to the holy relationship of marriage. With morals so loose among older folk, and divorce so easy to obtain and so frequently sought by so-called "respectable" members of society of mature years, it is not surprising that girls and boys should fail utterly to see anything sacred, anything binding, in the marriage vows. Not a serious thought of real love and of permanent companionship was considered by these young people. They wanted a new experience and found it for a few days in the "novelty" of marriage.

Much Cause for Thanksgiving

"The glorious liberty of the children of God."—Paul.

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil, Nov. 18.—As his first move since he set up his personal dictatorship on November 10, President Getulio Vargas today blocked legal opposition to authoritarian rule by a sweeping decree abolishing the federal courts in twenty states, the Acre Territory and the Federal District of Rio de Janeiro, which corresponds to our District of Columbia.

The President had already dissolved the Federal Senate and Chamber of Deputies together with all state legislatures and canceled the elections which were scheduled for January. General censorship has been declared throughout the country and the opposing candidate for the presidency is being held "under vigilance for his own safety."

In spite of dictatorial tendencies which many observe in the United States, the right of free speech and free press have not as yet been seriously infringed. For these great blessings we have reason to thank God. In Russia Christians have recently been imprisoned for thanking God rather than Stalin for the religious freedom guaranteed to them by the new Constitution which is now in force in that country.

“They Wrote Letters”

WHEN the Apostle Paul wanted to impress some great and vital spiritual truth upon his brethren in distant places, when he wished to admonish them to faithfulness in the service of the Lord, when they were bowed down with sorrow or burdened with care and he desired to comfort and assure them, he wrote letters!

Letters are such intimate means of communication! They possess so much of the writer's personality, they express so much of his heart, that they often reach down deeper into the lives of their recipients than do even words spoken face to face.

In the following letters of thanksgiving, our readers reveal their profound sense of gratitude to God who has given us all so much to enjoy in this life and so much to hope for in the future life. May these fraternal communications serve to stimulate us all to a keener sense of appreciation for all that our heavenly Father has done, is now doing, and is yet to do for us His people!

The Editor Gives Thanks

AS WE LOOK back over the year now drawing to a close, we are deeply sensible of the marvelous manner in which God has blessed the National Bible Institution and our church everywhere. We cannot hope to enumerate all of the many ways in which the protecting, supplying hand of the Father has manifested its presence around and about us, but we know that God has verified the words of Paul and that “all things” have worked together for good to His name's honor and glory.

And now, on this occasion of nation-wide thanksgiving, we join with the many whose letters appear in this issue, to express our gratitude to God the Giver of all good things. May we all strive in the future to merit more fully than we have in the past the riches that come to us from day to day.

From a national standpoint we praise God that we still enjoy the priceless privilege of religious freedom, that we may assemble in our churches and in our homes and worship God without fear. We are also deeply grateful that our political leaders have thus far succeeded in keeping our country free from war's alarms at a time when many lands are ablaze with the awful fires of human hatred.

As we look into our homes, the homes where our brethren live, we rejoice to learn that boys and girls sometimes hear their parents' voices lifted in prayer, that sometimes the “beautiful words of life” are read about a family altar at the close of the day and that children fall asleep with the knowledge that a loving heavenly Father watches over them until the stars pale before the rising sun.

We are thankful that so many young people, so many

*Now let us thank the Eternal Power: convinced
That Heaven but tries our virtue by affliction—
That oft the cloud which wraps the present hour Serves but to brighten all our future days.*

in middle life, and even some in advanced years, have, during the passing year, embraced the glad tidings of God's kingdom and been baptized into the saving name of Jesus Christ. For this we are especially thankful now.

We adjust the dials of our radio to catch the broadcasts from our pulpits throughout America and we hear faithful young ministers, and preachers who have long since passed the noontide of life, preaching the great and inspiring truths pertaining to human salvation from sin and death that we have loved so long—and we are thankful!

Yes, there is much for which we ought to thank the Lord—for which we as a people do thank His glorious name through Jesus Christ our Lord on this Thanksgiving Day!

For Definite Spiritual Growth

M. W. Lyon, Pastor Golden Rule Church, Cleveland, Ohio

DEAR BRETHREN: Into what solemn times has this last year ushered us! How our hearts leap for joy as we witness the swift-moving events by which nations are being maneuvered into positions for the final conflict. Wars and rumors of wars until the heart grows sick—except for that blessed hope, and that is my first reason for thankfulness, the multiplying signs of our Lord's return.

I am thankful this year for the new moving of the Spirit of the Lord among us, in the awakened zeal for evangelism, and for reaching outward and upward in a deeper Christian experience. Thankful that we are not taking things so much for granted as we were, but are more up and doing about the Master's business. Perhaps this result bears some relation to the first set of events.

And then, I am personally thankful for new and larger horizons of my own during this last year, a better grasp of my work, the problems of self-management and church-management, and what I feel is a definite growth in directions I had not experienced before. Never in all my experience has my life been so rich and significant as this past year, and I am glad to acknowledge my gratitude to my Father for this.

May all of God's dear people experience similar joy and growth!

My Thanksgiving Prayer

* * * *

Mrs. Floyd Nedrow, Oregon, Illinois

I AM THANKFUL that I have the privilege of being able to worship the only true and living God. I thank Him for His precious Son who went to the cross of Calvary for my sins and for the sins of the whole world. How I praise Him for such a Savior as mine!

I thank Him for brethren who take time to be holy, who leave their homes all over the United States and Canada to congregate here in Oregon in Christ's fellowship each year; for those of our own local church who put God and His Son Jesus Christ before the things of the world.

I cherish the memory of a neighbor and friend that I had the privilege of studying the Bible with. We would spend hours and sometimes days talking over one little sentence, looking up references until its meaning became clear to us. While those golden hours are gone, their memory will always live in my heart and I think of them as a bright star, a light shining in the darkness.

I am thankful for the privilege of teaching the Word to a group of under-high-school age, who have promised to dedicate their lives to the service of the Master. When some day those boys shall seal their faith in baptism, my heart will rejoice that I have helped in a little way to lead them to the Master.

Very soon our Savior is coming back as He promised He would. May He find us preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God and telling others of salvation through Jesus Christ our Lord.

A Thankful Pastor

* * * *

Harry Goekler, Hammond, Louisiana

THIS THANKSGIVING season I am indeed thankful for many blessings God has so graciously bestowed upon me—good health, true friends, and, above all, the opportunity for service in the Master's vineyard. We are truly thankful for the fine cooperation and interest manifested by all and pray continued guidance from above.

The President's Proclamation:

I, Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, hereby designate Thursday, the twenty-fifth day of November, 1937, as a day of national thanksgiving.

The custom of observing a day of public thanksgiving began in Colonial times and has been given the sanction of national observance through many years. It is in keeping with all of our traditions that we, even as our fathers in olden days, give humble and hearty thanks for the bounty and the goodness of Divine Providence.

The harvests of our fields have been abundant and many men and women have been given the blessing of stable employment.

A period unhappily marked in many parts of the world by strife and threats of war finds our people enjoying the blessing of peace. We have no selfish designs against any other nation.

We have been fortunate in devoting our energies and our resources to constructive purposes and useful works. We have sought to fulfill our obligation to our national heritage by common effort for the common good.

Let us, therefore, on the day appointed forego our usual occupations and, in our accustomed places of worship, each in his own way, humbly acknowledge the mercy of God, from whom comes every good and perfect gift.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States of America to be affixed.

DONE at the City of Washington this Ninth Day of November in the year of our Lord Nineteen Hundred and Thirty-seven and of the Independence of the United States of America the One Hundred and Sixty-second.

By the President:

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

SUMNER WELLES,
Acting Secretary of State.

Thankful for a Great Meeting

* * * * * Georgie Richardson, Hammond, Louisiana

DEAR BROTHERS AND SISTERS IN CHRIST: I am indeed thankful for many blessings that have come to us all the past year. Especially do I thank God for the splendid series of meetings held by Brother Magaw last spring at our Blood River Church, when eleven persons obeyed in baptism.

Since that time our little church has grown and increased in interest and attendance, chiefly as a result of regular pastoral work by our minister, Brother Harry Goekler.

May we all thank God for these blessings and many others at this time.

Things for Which I Am Thankful

* * * * * Rufus A. Curtis, Dayton, Ohio

"THANKS be unto God for his unspeakable gift" (2 Cor. 9:15). "For in him we live, and move, and have our being. . . . For we are also his offspring" (Acts 17:28). "The joyful sound" of pardon for the penitent, hope for the despairing and life for the perishing, has proved good news, or glad tidings, to Adam's dying race of corruptible and mortal creatures (Psa. 89:15; Rom. 1:23; Job 4:17; Isa. 55:6, 7; Luke 13:1-5).

I am thankful that Jesus came with words of wisdom and touch of healing. He said, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly" (John 10:9-11). Jesus will share with His humble followers the same life that our heavenly Father has shared with Him. "He asked life of thee, and thou gavest it him, even length of days for ever and ever" (Psa. 21:4). I am thankful that we have the promise of eternal life, and a kingdom which shall never be destroyed," but which shall stand forever as a monument of "the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus" (1 John 2:25; James 2:5; Daniel 2:44; Eph. 2:7).

I am thankful to our "Father who called and qualified us for the portion of the saints' inheritance in the light, who delivered us from the dominion of darkness, and changed us, for the kingdom of the Son of his love" (Col. 1:12, 13, Diaglott). Prospectively, I am wealthy beyond compare, for which I am thankful. Although poor in this world's goods, my future inheritance will be incorruptible, undefiled, and fadeless (1 Peter 1:3-5; 2 Cor. 6:10). My life then will be endless, and free from pain, sorrow, and separation forevermore (Luke 20:36; 1 Cor. 15:51-55; 1 John 5:11, 12). I am anticipating with Jesus, my blessed Redeemer, to share in "fullness of joy" and "pleasures for evermore" (Psa. 16:11; Isa. 35:10; 51:11).

Dear members of "the household of faith," I am thankful that "our hope" is a "blessed hope" (1 Thess. 2:19; Titus 2:13).

"O 'twill be a glorious morrow,
To a dark and cloudy day;
When we recollect our sorrow
But as dreams that pass away."

Thankful for a Regular Pastor

* * * * * Amelia Barnum, Hammond, Louisiana

DEAR BROTHERS AND SISTERS OF THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH: I am truly thankful for the many, many blessings God has bestowed upon us in the past year.

It is the first time in our church history we have had a regular pastor, and each Sunday morning at eleven o'clock we have kind, earnest presentations of Bible truth by Brother Harry Goekler. My husband and son, also thirteen relatives and friends, yielded obedience in baptism this year. May we all prove faithful and be ready when Jesus comes.

For Blessings Received

* * * * * Alice Williams, Rochelle, Illinois

I AM very thankful to my heavenly Father for all the blessings He has given me to enjoy to the present time and for the gift of His only begotten Son, that through Him I might inherit eternal life if I prove myself loyal to the end.

May our Lord soon come and bring peace on the earth, is my prayer.

Thankful for THE HERALD

* * * * * R. H. Judd, Toronto, Ontario

I cannot thank the Lord enough
For what THE HERALD'S done for me;
It's helped me clear up many things,
The truth of which I did not see.

It has helped me bear a witness
True, to the mighty Living Word;
To spread abroad the joyful news
Until men's hearts were stirred;

To tell them that one Living God
Is a God that changes never;
That peace and loving-kindness
Are His, and His forever.

"I Thank the Lord"

* * * * * Gerald L. Cooper, Ripley, Illinois

IN THESE DAYS we are apt to forget to thank God for many of the blessings He has promised in the Scriptures. Shall we consider a few of these promises?

"I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you" (John 14:18). A wonderful promise is this! There are so many who will leave us comfortless; thoughtlessly, perhaps, but who will. Not so, God, through Christ! I thank the Lord for this scripture.

"Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid" (John 14:27). The world is struggling desperately for peace which it cannot hope to gain, at this time. The Christian has the assurance of a "peace that passeth understanding" (Phil. 4:7). I thank the Lord for these scriptures. (over)

"And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God" (Rom. 8:28). This is my favorite scripture, and without it I would be lost. To think, that regardless of what happens to us, it is for our good if we love God, is a wonderful promise. It keeps many from becoming discouraged and giving up altogether. I thank God for this great scripture.

Then, brethren, the many wonderful scriptures relative to the nearness of Christ's coming are always a source of inspiration to me. As we observe the "signs of the times," which are all around us, let us each thank God for these words found in Luke 21:28: "And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh." Indeed, I am thankful for this scripture and all others pertaining to the coming of Christ. So should all of us be thankful!

Brethren, let us not take these great promises lightly and for granted, but let us rather praise God for them, not only at the Thanksgiving season but during the whole year.

For Kindness of Fellow Christians

* * * *

Mrs. Jane Glass, Sac City, Iowa

DEAR RESTITUTION HERALD and all the dear ones of the one faith: How kind you have been to me you will never know. I live alone, but I am very much blessed in having my dear ones near me, together with many friends.

I read my papers and mark the best things in them; then I give them to some one or take them to the public library.

I am asking God's blessing for you and for all others who are looking for our Lord's coming.

Thankful for Many Things

* * * *

Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Lapp, St. Cloud, Minn.

FOR JESUS our Savior who saves to the uttermost those who come to Him.

For the faithfulness of our brethren with whom we are working.

For the opportunities to serve in other fields than our own.

For the test of our faith and the way God has proven Himself able to supply all our needs.

For good health and the blessings of a home.

The Prize of the High Calling

* * * *

Gertrude M. Logan, St. Louis, Missouri

IN RESPONSE to your call for Thanksgiving letters, I will say that the thing for which I am most thankful is the chance to qualify for the prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus. Why this marvelous blessing should come to me, has often made me wonder, as I know I am no better, if as good, as many I know who do not get this blessing.

The next thing is the peace of mind that all who have this hope may have amid all this turmoil that is in the world. The sad part is that none of us appreciate it as we should, or we would show it more in our daily walk and conversation, and in our effort to do the things we should. These directions are clearly given in the inspired Word, and if God were first in our hearts, as He should be, we would be more faithful in obedience. Our constant prayer should be for more faith, without which it is impossible to please Him.

I thank Him for the care and protection promised to those who love Him.

For Freedom of Worship

* * * * Mr. and Mrs. Glenn M. Birkey, Rochelle, Ill.

We are thankful to the heavenly Father for the blessing of health during the past year, as well as the many spiritual and material blessings He has showered upon us.

We thank Him for permitting us to live in a land where we can worship Him according to the dictates of our conscience and live in security, as compared with other parts of the world. We thank Him for the visits of THE RESTITUTION HERALD with its many good messages each week. We have seen much good seed sown through the preaching of the Word, the Sunday school, the annual Bible school, and as a result quite a number have laid hold of the hope of eternal life.

Above all, we are thankful for that "blessed hope" (Titus 2:13), as we observe the storm clouds gathering over the world and we realize that security rests only with God and His promises.

May we all stand fast in the faith and make our calling and election sure by giving heed to God's Word.

Thankful Hearts at Golden Rule Home

* * * *

Reported by Mary A. Gesin

FROM EACH ONE living within the spacious walls of Golden Rule Home to whom we talked last week there arises a feeling of deep gratitude for its comforts and associations. All who are so fortunate as to be residents there expressed themselves as being very well cared for, and they are thankful for these many comforts, as they look about and see so much that is enjoyable for them.

Different added blessings were expressed by each one, typical of the person to whom the special blessing appeals. There is a little lady, past 80, whom we all know as Mrs. Steffa. She was just ready to go out for a drive with friends when we met her on the stairs. In addition to the common feeling of gratitude for a comfortable home, Mrs. Steffa mentioned the blessings she enjoys in good health and kindly friends about her.

Another lady, who has just been at the Home a week, is simply overjoyed at the comforts and conveniences the Home affords. Mrs. Harleman mentioned particularly the Matron's kind care. Arrangements are in progress for this lady's membership permanently, and because of her very apparent pleasant disposition and placid spirit we believe she will be an asset.

Mrs. Eva Brew is, at present, a boarder at the Home, and she appreciates, as do the rest, her warm room and comfortable surroundings. Also, she is thankful for improved health and the kind provision that makes it possible for her to live in such a pleasant place.

Typical of Mrs. Wood's energetic spirit, the knowledge that she is able to care for herself and assist others in many helpful ways is especially satisfactory to her. She has been particularly skillful with her needle for many years, but lately has had to forego some of that pleasure because of her eyes.

In talking to Sr. Romine, the matron, she expressed a deep gratitude, with the family, which consists of Mr. Romine, superintendent, and their two daughters, for conveniences and opportunities afforded those who live at Golden Rule Home. In addition, she is thankful for the privilege of being able to carry on a service that we all feel is very much needed.

Sr. Clara Chaffee expresses her thanksgiving in this way: "What have I to be thankful for this year? The Word of God is the greatest gift to me, as I read daily about the promises God has fulfilled all through my life. I am thankful for the blessings in store which He will give to them who believe His Word and seek to do His will. I thank Him for Golden Rule Home where His love is manifested in so many temporal things for the household to enjoy. I am so thankful for the privilege given us to entertain company, either in the living room or in our own room. This Home was God's provision for me through faith in His Word. The longer I am here, the more thankful I am God granted me this place of refuge."

Sr. Leota Hanson puts in her bit with the following:

"Thanks unto the Lord, for He is good:
His mercy endures forever.
Always praise His name, and Never forget His loving mercy and Kindness toward us.
So let us always be thankful."

We Lift Our Voices in Praise

* * * *

Inez M. Titus, Letcher, South Dakota

DEAR BROTHERS AND SISTERS OF THE HOUSEHOLD OF FAITH: We want to lift our voice in thanksgiving and praise for all the blessings we receive.

We are so thankful for the gift of God's dear Son, and that we have the privilege of worshiping in spirit and in truth. (OVER)

KIDNAPED

By May Moore

THERE is a growing conviction in the hearts and minds of God's people the world over, that the "kidnaping" of the saints is near at hand.

Enoch did not know that God would take him to Himself in the manner He did. Enoch lived for God, he walked in the paths of righteousness, he served God whom he loved with all his heart. How true this is with His blood-washed saints! Because of this, God held in store for Enoch a marvelous future—God took him.

The same hope is the hope of His redeemed people, when God shall send His Son to receive them unto Himself. This is expected hourly, and is a great incentive to holy living.

Enoch knew neither the hour, the day, nor the year, but when God's time was fulfilled, it came to pass. The signs of the times convince us that the hour is fast approaching when His church shall, in like manner, be caught away. The trump will sound, the living and dead will be changed and go to meet Him in the air when He comes to receive His own unto Himself! Yes—"kidnaped"!

O, that we may have our lamps full of oil and burning brightly for God and His Word to the saving of souls! When He does come, Christians all over the earth will have been translated in the twinkling of an eye. "What has happened?" the unbeliever will ask. "Where did so-and-so go?" "Kidnaped!" some will answer.

The newspapers will scream with headlines declaring that the most gigantic kidnaping event has taken place that was ever known.

"A miracle," you say. Yes, a miracle will occur when the saints are suddenly called to meet their Lord. These chosen ones of God may not be appreciated now, but they will be missed when they are gone. People will look for us as they looked for Enoch. Men and women will be looking everywhere for loved ones, because mothers will be gone, fathers will be gone, husbands will be gone, brothers and sisters will be gone! All will go who possess Christ and are partakers of the redemption provided on Calvary.

"Therefore, be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh." No more will scoffers hear the little church around the corner singing, "Come, Lord Jesus, come and reign." No longer will they hear them singing, "Hold the fort, for I am coming." No longer will they laugh at a group of God's children as they raise their voices and sing, "I'll exchange my cross for a golden crown," or "Nearer my God to Thee." For the saints will have gone to meet Jesus. Yes, "kidnaped"!

Loved ones in Christ, haven't we, who have this hope, everything to be thankful for on this 1937 Thanksgiving Day? Let us appreciate and praise our God and His gift, Jesus, as we have never done before.

We are thankful for the weekly visits of THE RESTITUTION HERALD with its good sermons and articles. It gives us courage to know that others are earnestly contending for the faith.

We are truly thankful for health and the many temporal blessings we receive each day, and my prayer is that we may be found faithful. Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly.

Thankful for "Work and Wages"

* * * *

Marvin Herren, Republic, Missouri

DEAR ONES OF THE RESTITUTION HERALD: I will try to give a word of thanksgiving. I'm living, I believe, a better life, closer to the Master, most of the time since I enlisted with the Captain or deposited my life with Christ in God.

I confess that I have sometimes wandered away or strayed from my Master's side to do little things which have made my pretty white garments dingy or dirty, but God in His love, mercy, and goodness, has led me back to the fold.

In the past year I have had work and wages with which to provide things needful to my body and to help others. I feel His helping hand all the time, for just when I need Him most He is ready. The way often looks dark ahead, but as I travel on the way opens up somehow.

When my Daddy died the way was opened so that we could bury him nicely by his parents, in the place we all desired, although it was a hundred miles away.

He makes me to lie down in green and shady pastures, and causes me to prosper in my daily life. I am becoming acquainted with many new Christian friends, for which I am thankful, and other good things have come to me from God, for which I want to praise Him in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ.

An Aged Sister Is Thankful

* * * *

Mrs. George Reighard, Wauseon, Ohio

DEAR RESTITUTION FRIENDS: I don't know whether you would call this a Thanksgiving letter or not, but I have a good deal for which to be thankful—for Christian parents who guided our youthful steps in the paths of right; and for my long life, for I am in the ninetieth year of my age.

Although my eyes are not very good, yet I am thankful I can read the dear old RESTITUTION HERALD and Bro. Lindsay's little paper, The Messenger of Truth. I like them both so well, and my dear sister, Mrs. O. L. Miller, subscribes for The Gospel Trumpet for a birthday remembrance for me. She has been an invalid for five years, not able to walk, for she has a bad knee, and when not suffering intense pain she reads and writes for The Trumpet and we exchange our papers. She is always glad to have her relatives and friends call. Her husband died a little more than two years ago. She was baptized by our uncle, George Elton, of the Cleveland church, over sixty years ago.

Thanksgiving Twenty-Five Years Ago

THE following extracts are taken from THE RESTITUTION HERALD of November 27, 1912.

In Memoriam of WILLIAM HARDESTY, Oregon, Illinois

"This is a day set apart by the country for the purpose of giving thanks to the Creator for the bountiful supply of all good things we enjoy at this season of the year. The one hundredth Psalm seems to be very appropriate for this occasion, and so we give it:

"Make a joyful noise unto the Lord, all ye lands. Serve the Lord with gladness; come before his presence with singing. Know ye that the Lord he is God; it is he that hath made us and not we ourselves. We are his people, and the sheep of his pasture. Enter into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise; be thankful unto him, and bless his name. For the Lord is good, his mercy is everlasting: and his truth endureth unto all generations."

"I do not know what more I could add to this, than to emphasize the goodness, mercy, and truth of God. How thankful we ought to be that it reaches even us."

In Memoriam of S. E. BOYER, Dilbeck, Virginia

"Our hearts should overflow with praise and thanksgiving to Him who created all things and who is the Giver of every good and perfect gift.

"We feel thankful for the bountiful supply for our temporal needs; health, food, raiment, kind neighbors, friends, and brethren . . . also for the kindly weekly visits of THE RESTITUTION HERALD, laden with spiritual food, and that we can worship where none doth harm nor molest. . . ."

In Memoriam of Dr. T. J. DANIEL, Magazine, Arkansas

"O how glad I am to read of the many good meetings held and of the many baptized! It makes me think of the days gone by when I used to be in the field heralding forth the glad tidings of the kingdom of God. . . . The many good letters I receive from the brethren cheer me, O, so much! . . . I just got up out of bed to write this letter and shall have to close, as I am very weak."

In Memoriam of J. A. RAILTON, Fonthill, Ontario

"If there is any people on the face of the earth that ought to be thankful to God, it is those who can see with an eye of faith the signs of the times proclaiming in thundering tones that the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.

"I don't know where to commence to enumerate the many blessings we enjoy. We live in a land of peace and plenty, but we have the luxuries of life as well. What shall we render unto God for all His blessings toward us? . . . Are we ready to go out to help the Christ win the victory over sin and death and plant love and righteousness in the earth?"

In Memory of MRS. C. C. RAMSEY, Philadelphia, Pa.

"This is a grand and glorious day in which to be living, if we have made the God of Abraham our strength and shield. The kings of the earth whose strength and pride rest in the armies and navies of the world, are trembling with dread and fear. But we who have made the God of Israel our refuge, can but rejoice as we see the melting away of the Gentile powers who have long trodden down the Holy City. The eternal day is surely dawning. . . . While beholding tottering thrones and falling kingdoms writhing and wailing in devices of destruction which they have themselves constructed, (we know that He) who spoke peace to the troubled sea, (will soon) speak peace to the troubled and raging sea of humanity."

In Memory of MISS ALICE KERR, Dixon, Illinois

"Surveying the whole realm of God's love and mercy to mankind, I can find nothing that so much requires my thankfulness, as God's plan of salvation for us, His forgiveness of our sins, and His love and care and guidance. Our entire lives should be a perpetual thanksgiving and praise to God."

The Devilfish

IT IS remarkable how nature teaches us great lessons. There is not a trait in human character—even some of the distorted characteristics of the "old man" (so called in the Bible for our fallen nature or depraved faculties) but the counterpart may be found in creatures of the forest and field: pride, cruelty, gluttony, lust, cunning craftiness, and selfishness supreme. The antithesis of all these may be found in the lower animals.

For the sake of getting the matter clearly stated we wish to personify sin—sin as an entity divorced from human personality. Sin does not exist aside from human personality, whether original or actual. Sin is a monster, as it is so often described by writers and preachers of all ages. Even in the Bible, it is often spoken of, by inference, as a crouching, man-eating tiger, or the noiseless movements of the hissing serpent.

It has been said that if terror was the object of its creation, nothing could be imagined more perfectly executed than the devilfish, the vampire of the sea. It fills all the specifications of the sea monsters in fiction and mythology. Anyone who has read Hugo's, Toilers of the Sea, will never forget Gilliatt's encounter with the devilfish. Nothing brings such tragic realism as this man's struggle with the octopus among the rocks and sea waves of the cavern. The face of the black spider magnified, they tell us, is the ugliest and most vicious sight in all the realm of nature's monstrosities; but the devilfish has all the horrors of a spider magnified a thousandfold. The devilfish has a round body with a texture all its own: on either side are ribbon-like tentacles which become gradually larger as they approach connection with the body. These tentacles grow in length in proportion to the size of the creature.

When a devilfish travels the tentacles are closed up like an umbrella, but if a victim is sighted those great leathery arms open and grasp the object so quickly that escape is impossible. It hides itself in the most beautiful rock caverns; its presence is not detected even by a ripple on the surface of the sea. When lying quietly the tentacles feel out in every direction. The first contact is a gentle brushing of the delicate ends; then the great cartilaginous arms are thrown around the victim. If one tentacle is not enough another one is thrown around quickly and the victim is encircled with ligaments strong as steel. On the under side of these spidery arms there are two rows of cup-like sucking discs, large at the body but smaller as they reach the extremity. There are twenty-five in each row, fifty to each arm, making four hundred in all. . . . These sucking cups can draw every drop of blood from man or beast within its coils; they do not eat their victims, but absorb them. The arms are so slick and fibrous they cannot be cut with a knife. It is impossible to tear away from a devilfish; any attempt or struggle ends only in a firmer grasp. Every effort produces a tightening of the ligatures.

In the devilfish we have the best illustration of the processes of sin. It begins with the innocent, harmless touch, then the vise-like coils of habit, and finally, utter ruin. The beginning is apparently harmless and is scarcely given a serious thought; but the blood-sucking tentacles soon begin the drawing-out process from the encircled victim: character, will power, and conscience are step by step drawn into the vicious maw of blighting sin. Just as a victim is helpless in the coils of the devilfish, so it is with the devilfish of sin. When the personality is drained by the deadening power of sin, as with the grip of an octopus, the poor wretch soon goes to the final devouring mouth, not to be eaten, but all that is worth while of life's finest and best is destroyed. When the devilfish finishes with its victim only a shadowy skeleton remains. Victims of sin are often above ground with only a skeleton of manhood left. Every god-like emotion is absorbed by this enemy. The devilfish first stupefies its victim, then paralyzes it. In like manner so operates the devourer of the soul.

There is one second of opportunity for a final and last chance for deliverance from the coils of the vampire of the sea—a moment of relaxation. This one half second Gilliatt seized; with his left hand he plunged his knife to the hilt into the head of the devilfish; then so near was he to the blazing eyes that a chill of horror went to his soul, but he gave a furious, circling twist of his knife that caused the monster to have a shivering paroxysm, when the tentacles relaxed and fell away.

The only weapon that can match the hydra-headed monster of sin is the Damascus Sword of the Spirit driven to the hilt, "pricked to the heart" of guilt, bringing a conscious realization of hopelessness of human merit. Such only can break the encircling grip of this silent, insidious destroyer. The tragedy of today is that modern society no longer fears sin; it is just a pink tea affair. No danger! God is our loving Father! No danger! Be it far from us to so delude ourselves. Sin is the vampire of the soul; it first stupefies, then paralyzes. God save us from the satanic devilfish!—C. F. Wimberly in The Pentecostal Herald.

Ten Cents a Chance!

"HARDLY a week goes by but what my children are asked to take a chance on something or other. It's only a nickel or a dime, but I don't believe in letting children in the grades take chances. But what can one do? It's getting awful. Something ought to be done about it, don't you think so?" asked Mrs. Haynes.

Such conversation was typical of what Dr. Smith of First Church encountered in scores of homes as he made his pastoral calls. Inwardly Dr. Smith wondered if at last the theme that he had been stressing during the last two years—of being willing to make sacrifices for the sake of our principle—was taking hold.

Then one night he saw how the thing works out.

The church members were assembled to see what could be done to clear the debt. One ambitious woman proposed that a big bazaar be held, whereupon she proceeded to outline all the money-making schemes that might be introduced: an ice cream stand, a rummage table, a book stall, a handiwork counter, a food booth, and an art exhibit. The list grew. Others added their suggestions. It captured their imagination and it was voted to hold a big church carnival.

In the enthusiasm of the meeting one of the deacons inquired of the newly elected carnival chairman, "Are you going to have chances at this affair? If you are, I will gladly start the ball rolling by donating a vacuum cleaner to be sold on chances."

When the applause subsided Dr. Smith rose and protested. Said he, "Both personally and as a minister I object to the selling of chances at this carnival under the auspices of the church of Christ. It is a form of gambling which is itself illegal and which is contrary to the teachings of the church."

The statement met with the approval of only two in the audience and the meeting was shortly adjourned.

A few days later the chairman of the carnival committee telephoned the minister to ask what she should do. "One of your members, a deacon at that, has left a vacuum cleaner at my house to be sold on chances. What shall I do? I know how you feel about the matter and yet people seem to want to have chances. Shall I keep the cleaner or return it?"

Dr. Smith was indeed in a dilemma. If he ordered the cleaner returned, he would incur the wrath of an influential deacon and dampen the enthusiasm of many supporters; his influence in the community would undoubtedly wane thereafter, and with waning prestige he would be powerless to educate against gambling in the future. Sin would win by forfeiture. On the other hand, if he allowed the cleaner to be kept, he would be reversing the stand he had taken publicly. In the eyes of his parishioners he would be admitting he was wrong and sin would win the victory.

The minister informed the chairman he was not a dictator. Since the church stood for a democratic form of government, he would suggest that the general carnival committee, to whom the church had entrusted the management of the carnival, be called together to hear the pros and cons of the issue presented, and then be allowed to vote for the best interests of the church in the light of that. The church would certainly stand back of the action of its delegated committee.

At this general committee meeting the minister was invited to present his point of view. Said Dr. Smith: "We as a Christian church disapprove of the principle of gambling, whether it be in the form of horse racing, lotteries, or chances. You expect your minister to condemn from the pulpit the gambling practices already so prevalent in this state, and yet you as a church choose to condone gambling when it is held under the auspices of the church. To attack gambling on Sunday and then to sponsor it on Monday is to vitiate the power of the pulpit.

"Many parents in our community have complained to me about the temptations presented to youngsters to take chances. Surely, the evil is just as great even though it be under the auspices of the church.

"To be sure, we may make a little money by permitting chances, but it would seem that something priceless will be lost if we as a church degenerate to gambling. Indeed, it is not sound business to be dependent upon the chance income of chances for our operating expenses."

So pleaded Dr. Smith before the committee.

"How do some of the rest of the committee feel?" inquired the chairman.

"Madam Chairman," began one of the deacons, a spiritual adviser of the church, "the trouble with this church is that it is just about a thousand years behind the times. All the other churches around here hold chances at their fairs. The Roman Catholics over here have held them for years and nobody ever questioned them. If we want to attract people, we have got to have chances."

"Madam Chairman," interrupted Mrs. Jones, "the Ladies Circle has offered chances on a quilt each year for the last fifty years. I don't see why we should make all this fuss over the church's offering a few chances now. People chalk down what they spend for charity anyhow, when it's for church. Why, I'd rather spend a quarter on a chance and have the fun of losing it than to be charged 75 cents for a 50-cent cake at a church food sale any day."

When Mr. Wright could command the floor he proposed: "Friends, I suppose that there is not a person here who would vote to legalize gambling. We all deplore the races and we respect the position of our pastor. We would expect him and want him to take the stand he has. But the fact remains that we need money, and if we want to raise money we must resort to the admittedly rewarding money-making scheme of chances."

"I call for the question."

"All those in favor of offering chances at our carnival? Nineteen.

"All opposed? Two."

After the meeting all nineteen advocates made a special point of assuring Dr. Smith that they thought he was right and said just the right thing, but under the present exigencies they voted for the increased revenue from chances.

The carnival was a grand success. The net profit was more than $1,700, $400 of which was made on chances.

THE SEQUEL

One Sunday morning, nearly a year later, Dr. Smith announced from his pulpit: "The following report was made and accepted at our State Conference; it was further voted at our recent Association meeting that this recommendation be read from our pulpits. I read as follows:

"We wish to urge upon our churches as clear-cut a stand against the widespread craze for gambling in present-day society. Especially do we recommend that our churches as such absolutely refuse to employ gambling methods as some have been asked to do, in their raising of money, and discourage its being done by any organization affiliated with them. It seems shameful to us for the body which declares the principle of giving fundamental in Christian life, to allow itself even to seem to seek support by appeal to the principles of the gambling table."

On the strength of that recommendation, coupled with the previous protest of Dr. Smith, the proposed plan of raffling off blankets was voted by the Ladies' Guild at their last annual meeting.—Paul S. McElroy in Congregational Advance.

PRAISE THE ETERNAL GOD

Hallelujah!

Praise the Eternal from the heavens,
Praise Him in the heights,
Praise Him, all His angels,
Praise Him, all His hosts,
Praise Him, sun and moon,
Praise Him, all stars of light,
Praise Him, heaven of heavens, ye waters higher than the heavens!

Let them praise the Eternal's name;
For He commanded and they were created,
He fixed them fast forevermore,
He set them boundaries they should never pass.

Praise the Eternal from the earth,
Ye depths of ocean and ye waterspouts,
Lightning and hail and snow and ice,
Storms carrying out His will,
Mountains and every hill,
Fruit-trees and every cedar,
Wild animals and every beast,
Crawling things, birds on the wing,
Kings of earth, every nation,
Princes and all authorities,
Young men and maidens, too,
Let them praise the Eternal's name,
For His name alone is supreme;
And His majesty is above heaven and earth,
And He has raised up His people to high honour,
To praise Him is for all His faithful,
For Israel, a folk pleasing to Him.

—Psalm 148, Moffatt's Translation.

"I THANK THEE, O FATHER"

And above all the blessings which lie, we believe, just over the brink of tomorrow is the added miracle that humble followers of the Master are able today to appreciate and to absorb some of His spirit. Long ago in the days of His earthly ministry among the hills of Judea and along the shores of Galilee, the privilege of comradeship with Jesus was granted those whom He chose to be His helpers. If we cultivate that quality of humility which caused their Lord to term them "babes," we, too, may imbibe His teachings and the principles of action that animated His life. Through this fellowship with Him, we may, in turn, be a blessing to those about us.

From the depths of our hearts we repeat after our beloved Lord, "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent and revealed them unto babes."

Who Shall Ascend?

"Set your affection on things above."—Colossians 3:2.

"The story is told of an aviator who was sent on a relief flight to take food, clothing, and medicine to some people marooned by snow. On his way, while over some rocky mountain country where it would be impossible to land safely, he saw a mouse in the cockpit of his plane nibbling away at an important wire. If the mouse nibbled the insulation from the wire there would be a short circuit and his motor would go dead. He couldn't reach the mouse, and he couldn't scare it away. In desperation, he finally recalled that mice could not live in rarified atmosphere. He turned the nose of the plane upward and climbed up and up. At last at a great height he looked at the mouse and it was dead. So his own life and the lives of those he went to rescue were saved. Even so, when you rise to the higher spiritual values of life you "mortify" the petty little earthly irritations. They cannot live in the same atmosphere.

There are two ways to "go up higher" (Luke 14:10). One is in your own airplane, the other is in Christ's. One is limited by human strength, the other is unlimited as Christ is unlimited. Take your Bible and read Colossians 3 to visualize the boundless possibilities of being "risen with Christ."

Paradox

One of the strangest bits of present-day American history is the recent great concern over the "elixir of death," a preparation of sulphanilamide put on the market without due investigation. This elixir has caused some fifty deaths. The newspapers were stirred up about it for quite a time. It appears that the addition of alcohol and other substances had changed this otherwise beneficial remedy into a deadly poison.

At the same time thousands were dying monthly due to the effects of alcohol and the news of the day made no great hue and cry about it. A husband in California, after a few beers, killed his wife and another man in a drunken rage. A young man raped a girl of fifteen in Indiana, and dumped her dead, mutilated body in the ditch. He was drunk. A young man went to a legal death in Washington for killing a man in a bank robbery. His defense attorney pleaded for mercy because legal beer caused him to go the downward path. A drunken father came home and killed his three children in their sleep so he could have more money for booze. A man killed his brother in Iowa as a climax to a quarrel over drink.

SUDDEN DEATH

Sudden Death rides the highway! The newspapers cry out for safer driving, stricter enforcement of the laws against reckless driving. They don't mention in very large type that fully half of the mounting death toll is due solely to liquor. The toll this year will pass fifty thousand dead, with other thousands maimed, human wrecks for the rest of their pitiful existence—all due to the automobile traffic, half or more due to beer.

SOCIAL DISEASES

Social diseases are being given great prominence in the drive being made to stamp out these scourges. In Michigan, as in several other states, a physical examination must be made by a physician to see that neither applicant is suffering from a social disease, before a marriage certificate is granted. Why not tell the whole truth about it? The Juvenile Protective Association says: "The drink and dance taverns are the prostitutes' paradise." The booze dance halls and beer joints supply 75 per cent of the inmates of the brothels that spread the disease.

Truly American history in the making furnishes us with a great paradox.

CHRISTMAS CHEER

And speaking about a paradox, it will need more than a pair of doctors to take care of the drunken celebration that will occur in America to celebrate the birthday of the Holy Child. "Yes, it will be 'joy to the world' this Yuletide season for drunken celebrants—but tragedy and grief in many of their homes. And it will be a 'silent night' indeed for those who lose their lives in the annual Christmas shambles of liquor-bred accidents, murders, suicides, which we predict will out-slaughter anything we've ever seen.

"Christmas—to Christians, the most sacred day on the calendar. Christmas—seized upon by the godless whiskey pagans to reap profit from human weakness. Yes, it will soon be Christmas, folks—exactly the kind of Christmas which the drys predicted a few years ago when wets campaigned for a return of legalized liquor—the kind of a Christmas that will surely shame this country back to national sobriety. A very bleary Christmas."—The National Voice.

Christian, Obey!

"Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you."—John 15:14.

"Do not drink wine nor strong drink" (Lev. 10:9).

"Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink" (Hab. 2:15).

"Woe to that man by whom the offence cometh" (Matt. 18:7).

"Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth" (Col. 3:5).

"Set your affection on things above" (Col. 3:2).

"Praise ye the Lord. Praise God in his sanctuary; praise him in the firmament of his power. Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord. Praise ye the Lord."

Thank You, Lord

"Thank you, Lord," we softly say,
For the happy, quiet night,
For Thy loving, watchful care,
Keeping us 'till morning light.

Thank you, Lord, for this glad day,
Best and dearest one of all,
While we listen to Thy Word,
May we hear Thy gentle call.

Thank you, Lord, for our homes,
For our parents, kind and true,
Most of all for Thy dear Son,
May we try His will to do.

Thank you, Lord, for gifts of love
Daily coming from above,
"Thank you, Lord," we softly say,
Bless and keep us all the day.

From Beginners' Songs.

The Vine and the Branches

In a beautiful little church that we read about the other day there are carvings of a vine in the ornaments on each side of the massive doors. All through the interior decorations the same fine carving is seen. In the dark wood of the pulpit, in the altar railing, this carving speaks to the people who go there to worship, of Christ who is the true Vine.

Long, long ago in an upper room in Jerusalem the Savior spoke these words: "I am the vine, ye are the branches. He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit: for without me ye can do nothing."

We can almost hear Jesus say to us, even as He did to His disciples that night, "You are my branches. Stay close to me. Never lose your hold on me. So will your life be filled with much fruit, because you abide in the Vine."

Jesus, you know, was about to leave His disciples. He knew that they would often grow discouraged. For they would have to pass through great trial and much suffering. So He tried to encourage them with this picture of Himself as the Vine and the disciples as the branches. By it He meant that, though He should have to leave them, He would be with them always to cheer them, to comfort them, and to help them.

Everyone who loves Jesus and desires to follow Him, no matter if he is young, is also a branch. Just think of the honor of being a branch for Jesus. The things that you do that are pleasing to Him are the fruits you are bearing. Do not grow away from Him, as you grow older, or you will stop bearing fruit for Him. As a branch you will wither and be of no help to the Vine.

When you look about you at the bountiful harvests this Thanksgiving season and you see the luscious grapes and other fruits and all the food, in fact, think of Jesus as the Vine and yourself as a branch, close to Him. Ask Him to keep you ever near His side so that your deeds may be beautiful fruits in His vineyard.

Praise God

"Praise God for wheat, so white and sweet,
With which we make our bread;
Praise God for yellow corn, with which
His waiting world is fed;
Praise God for fish, and fowl, and flesh
He gave to us for food;
Praise God for every creature which
He made and called it good.

"Praise God for winter's store of ice,
Praise Him for summer's heat;
Praise God for fruit trees bearing fruit,
To us it is for meat;
Praise God for all the beauty
By which the world is fed;
Praise God, ye children all, to whom
He gives your daily bread."

A Prayer for the Week

Help us, heavenly Father, to look about us and see the many things we have for which to be thankful. Accept our gratitude for these things. In Jesus' name we ask it. Amen.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

CALIFORNIA CONFERENCE

There will be a one-day conference of the California Churches of God at Los Angeles on Sunday, Dec. 5. It promises to be a most interesting meeting. In the morning there will be the usual sermon and a Communion Service. The hour from two to three will be filled with Scripture recitations and music by the young people. At three there will be a social meeting with ten-minute talks.

We are striving to get as much of the Bible as we can into this conference and know it will be a successful meeting if it is founded on His Word.

Marie Bleasdale, Secretary.

THE FOURTH SUNDAY IN NOVEMBER!

Yes, that's next Sunday! But what of it? Why, that's the day when a number of our churches take up a "Moral Obligation Offering" to be applied to the Indebtedness Fund of the National Bible Institution.

Should you not get this little reminder in time to announce an offering for next Sunday, the money received in an offering taken the following Sunday will help just as much!

We are still creeping forward in this matter—not racing at high speed, it's true, but neither are we stopping to rest nor slipping backward. So let's keep trying and we'll reach our goal after a while.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

The attendance at all services has been increasing. At two recent Berean meetings 21 were present. After one of these studies a social hour in the nature of a miscellaneous shower for our bride elect, Sr. Betty Blackwell, was enjoyed. Sr. Betty's wedding will be solemnized in the church the evening before Thanksgiving by Bro. Norman Macleod.

We were happy to have Sr. Ethelyn Allard look up the church recently and we are welcoming her to all the church activities. Sr. Lee Easley is another who has identified herself with the local congregation. Bro. Clyde Long, who has been a faithful attendant at all our services for some time, has recently moved his family to southern California, locating near Fullerton. Bro. J. Eagleston has been active in both the Pomona and Los Angeles churches since his return to this section. Sr. Henrietta Billings is now in Los Angeles again after a three-month absence.

Our first Sunday meeting was attended by brethren from Riverside, Pomona, Pasadena, Santa Ana, and Long Beach.

Bro. Hugh Gillespie, whose parents live in Texas, is located in Whittier. He, too, looked up the new church and we hope to have him with us occasionally. We are glad when members from suburban towns can come in and worship with us, even though circumstances prevent a regular attendance.

Sr. Janet Reid of Pasadena gave two palm trees for the church grounds in memory of our late Bro. John Reid. Bro. Eagleston has planted them in front of the church.

We are glad that the conference board has set the place and date for the next quarterly conference to be held in Los Angeles on December 5. We hope for a large gathering and a spiritual feast. Emma C. Railsback.

OUR NEXT "GUEST EDITORIAL"

Our next issue will carry on the front page a very unusual "Guest Editorial" by Bro. Sydney E. Magaw. From a literary standpoint alone it is worthy a place in any magazine, but from a Christian point of view it is vital with life and meaning. Read it carefully. Pastors would do well to call it to the attention of their congregations. It provides a powerful argument for the "conversion" of many who are already professing Christians.

LOUISIANA CHURCH NOTES

It is always encouraging to witness the obedience of individuals in Christian baptism and the past week it was our privilege to baptize a young married lady into the saving name of Jesus. This young lady was raised a Catholic, but the past summer has been attending our Blood River Church and after careful and earnest thought on the teachings of the Church of God she requested baptism. Her name and address is Mrs. Ellsworth Richardson, Hammond, La., Rt. 1.

We were given further cause for rejoicing when, at the close of the evening services at Happy Woods, Miss Lillian Robinson came forward and presented herself for baptism. Miss Robinson is a young girl of sterling character and is a welcome addition to our church.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Bottolf are the proud parents of a baby boy, born November 8. His name is Charles Gilbert.

The Happy Woods choir met at the home of Miss Ella Siple Friday night and after practicing special songs for an hour the remainder of the evening was spent in a social way. Such gatherings add to the fellowship and enthusiasm of the group and give added incentive to choir practice.

Harry Goekler, Pastor.

ARKANSAS CITY, KANSAS

On Sunday morning after Sunday school, Bro. George Waters of Newkirk, Okla., gave a short sermon on baptism. An invitation was extended and two ladies came forward in response. Mrs. Friend of Newkirk, Okla., mother of Bro. Earl Friend, and Mrs. Lily Lavan of Ponca City, Okla., were baptized in the Walnut River east of Arkansas City. So many, who at different times have united with the Church of God at this place, have been buried with Christ in baptism here that it seems almost like a sacred spot. The church rejoiced with Bro. Earl Friend that his dear old mother came out on the Lord's side, and also that Sr. Lily Lavan accepted the plan of salvation. We hope they will always be happy in their new relationship and that God will be with them, and that to bless. Following baptism they were welcomed into the church and the Communion Service administered.

Bro. Waters and wife will leave the last of this week for Corpus Christi, Tex., to spend the winter. He found his health was much better there last winter, as the climate suited him better. He has been ill for some time. He baptized four this summer and fall at this place. May God be with them and bring them home to be with the church here again.

Mrs. A. J. Chaplin.

HERALD RECEIPTS

James R. Moore; Mary Richardson; Mrs. Ida Overton (for others); Clarence Poland; Mrs. Ida Jeffrey; Frances Walls; Mrs. Bess Kasper; L. E. Conner; Ellen Reisener (for another); Mary Goodyear; June Macy; Mrs. Fern Thompson; Mrs. L. E. Marston; Ida Vogel (for another); Mrs. Isabelle Smith; Cantwell Drabenstott (for another); Mrs. Jane Glass; R. H. Judd (for another).

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

Bros. Conner of Dixon, Ill., and Krogh of Ripley, Ill., exchanged pulpits last Sunday. In the evening at Dixon Bro. Krogh gave an excellent sermon on "Living Waters." Our special correspondent was not present at the earlier service. We hope to receive a report from Ripley of Bro. Conner's visit there before our next issue.

The editor is to deliver a lecture on "World Affairs in Relation to the Plans of God," this evening (Tuesday) at Kings, Ill. Interest in prophecy is steadily increasing and much good may be done if world conditions are analyzed conservatively and "date setting" omitted.

A note from Bro. Rufus A. Curtis comments favorably on various articles and editorials which have appeared "in our beloved paper." How deeply the editor and his fellow writers for The Herald appreciate such words of approval from these older and more experienced ones in the faith! We crave their advice and encouragement, and also their thoughtful criticism, all of which leads to a better paper.

The current issue of "The Bible Advocate," published by the Church of God (Seventh Day), of Stanbury, Mo., contains a reprint of Bro. Harvey Krogh's excellent article, "God's Character," which appeared in our columns some time ago. This argument against eternal torment for the wicked is worthy of wide circulation, and we are glad to see it in "The Advocate."

Remember our great Christmas special number! Five cents will send a copy to anyone, anywhere! And what a Christmas greeting it will be! Better make out your list right away and add to it from time to time as you remember more friends to whom you want to send a real expression of "good will" on this happy occasion.

NIAGARA FALLS, NEW YORK, AND FONTHILL, ONTARIO

The Annual Fall Meeting at Niagara Falls was one of the finest all-day meetings in which we have ever served or attended. The house was packed for all services. The attendance was a testimony of the interest existing among the members in the Niagara District. Then, too, the evidences of God's Spirit and the Christian fellowship manifested, bespeak the spiritual status of the membership. Such gatherings contribute such a wealth of divine power to the inward life of the individual, which is not readily discernible, but which is reflected throughout the entire life of those coming under the influence make this ever-remaining blessing a worth beyond possibility of measure. The Lord was with us on Sunday, Oct. 31. Blessed be the name of the Lord!

The music was well directed and played no small part in getting the worshipers in the right spirit and in imploring God to send His Spirit upon us. The call to worship was well given by the singers. The hearty cooperation of all and the earnest desire for a blessing made it a pleasure to break the bread of life.

A most profitable meeting was held recently in Welland, Ont. It was question night and some real knotty ones were asked. The meeting was also the anniversary of our work in that city. A gift was presented the pastor by the class. Some very fine and stable workers have been found for the Lord and His church in Welland and their addition to the work in this district is a valuable asset. Pray for the effort in Welland! This is the first work to be started in the Dominion since Fonthill was organized over fifty years ago.

On a recent Friday night around eighty members sat down to well-spread tables in the basement at the Fonthill, Ont., church. Following supper, all except those required to clean up the basement and wash the dishes went to the auditorium where a heart-stirring song service was led by Bro. Holland. A number of impromptu specials were rendered. When the basement was ready, all returned there and the rest of the evening was spent with entertainment being provided in a variety of ways by the members as they were called upon. There is considerable talent in the church membership and, as expressed by Bro. Weldon, there is a willingness on the part of the young people to serve which is most commendable. These meetings are to be held the first Friday of each month. The committee in charge of this last program were: Bro. Joseph Fletcher, Sr. Florence Yarnell, and Celaine Randall.

Sr. Seburn is now in the Hamilton Nursing Home, St. Catharines, Ont., where she is suffering a great deal from cancer. She longs for the day of deliverance! Remember her in special prayer.

Some very good reports have been heard concerning those who had charge of the preaching services on the Sunday we were at Grand Rapids. This plan of conducting the work is truly apostolic and naturally has a wholesome effect on the work. Bros. Fletcher, Beemer, and McArthur will be permanently placed on our supply list.

Bro. and Sr. Charles Yates of Norwich, Ont., were among the visitors from a distance to attend the Fall Meeting.

While at the Fall Meeting, Sr. Greiner stated that she saw in the Messenger that the Falls Bereans were learning the books of the New Testament, so she likewise undertook to do the same thing and went on to learn the books of the Old Testament as well. This is indeed typical of the Berean spirit.

—Church of God Messenger.

GOLDEN RULE HOME

Sr. Olive Wood has gone to Sugar Grove, Ill., to spend the holidays with relatives.

The matron, Sr. Idona Romine, accompanied by Bro. Romine and her daughter Joann went to South Bend, Ind., for a brief visit. Sr. Romine's mother, Sr. Cordill, returned with them to Oregon.

Mrs. Minnie O'Brien, a former resident of Oregon, is now a resident of the Home.

Sr. Leota B. Hanson, treasurer of the National Bible Institution, attended services at Dixon, Ill., Sunday night to hear Bro. Harvey Krogh.

FISHEL - TAFT

William Roger Taft, Jr., eldest son of Bro. and Sr. William R. Taft, Sr., of Oregon, Ill., and Miss Lois Pauline Fishel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Fishel of Dixon, Ill., were married at the home of the pastor of the Oregon church, Tuesday evening, Nov. 16, 1937.

The groom was baptized the day after the General Conference closed last summer, on the occasion of the baptism of his father and mother and two sisters. The bride's mother, whose maiden name was Vera Belle Stroh, was baptized by the present editor of The Herald many years ago.

The young couple celebrated their marriage on Wednesday evening by attending the mid-week prayer meeting. They will make their home in Oregon. We pray that the Father's blessing may attend them.

"TEN CENTS A CHANCE"

The selected article under the above heading on church gambling, which appears on page —, treats of only one phase of the almost universal but unscriptural and unchristian money-making schemes employed in many churches, our own, sad to relate, not being entirely exempt from such practices. Card parties, dances, minstrel shows, and a hundred and one other forms of so-called entertainment for which an admission charge is made or a "silver offering" taken, but which are of no spiritual value in themselves and which do nothing to advance the cause of Christ, have a tendency to lower the standard of the church and to destroy its influence as a source of moral and religious leadership in the community.

“Till Seventy Times Seven”

A Parable on Forgiveness

By Sydney E. Magaw, Guest Editor

“Then came Peter to him, and said, Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him? till seven times? Jesus saith unto him, I say not unto thee, Until seven times: but, Until seventy times seven.”—Matt. 18:21, 22.

ONCE each week for one year a brother burned rubbish when my wife had her washing on the line. There were fifty-two sins hard to forgive. This brother failed to return my lawn mower. He dumped rotten eggs from his incubator on my melon patch. Fourteen times he let the compression out of all five tires on my De Soto. He shot my prize gobbler. He painted a bold “G” in front of my public sign, “Oats for Sale.” Eight times he tin-canned my trusty cattle dog, and then fiendishly poisoned him.

This brother’s pranks grew worse. He was purposely gone from home three times when he knew I needed his help to solicit for the church. He malignantly smashed my motor boat. Thirty-one hives of my bees netted him three dollars and forty cents each at a near-by auction. Twice he plugged the sewer. I went security on his note, and he made me pay it all. He once kept me waiting in the cold. He drowned twenty-eight of my chickens—eleven in one year and seventeen the year following.

Now, thoroughly hardened, this former friend knew no bounds. He cut ninety-five logs out of my best spruce timber. At ten other times he stole. Seventeen times he influenced each of my six children to disobey me. He lied about me to forty-four people. Eleven times he cursed me. He smote me once on each cheek. Nine times he sued me. He attempted once to alienate the affections of my wife. He burned my house. For nine consecutive harvests he set fire to my oat fields, causing a ten to forty per cent loss each time.

With some of his pals he kidnaped me, and threatened my life. He ridiculed my faith, and wounded my left shoulder.

It was raining last night, when a rap was heard (Please turn to page 11)

Sheik Executed in Palestine

"Esau . . . shall not be able to hide himself."—Jeremiah.

JERUSALEM, Nov. 24.—An Arab, Sheik Farhan Saadi, described as one of Palestine's worst trouble makers who has been hunted for more than a year for terrorist activities, was captured in a wheat bin near Jenin on Monday and promptly sentenced to be hanged. Seven other accused terrorists arrested with the sheik await similar trials.

LONDON, England, Nov. 24.—William Ormsby-Gore, Colonial Secretary, informed the House of Commons today that between January 1, 1936, and October 31, 1937, there had been 410 slayings in Palestine; 113 convictions secured and seven death sentences imposed. Of the latter six were commuted to life imprisonment.

Palestine Trouble Laid to Italy

"Say ye not . . . whereof this people shall say, A conspiracy; neither fear ye their fear."—Isaiah 8:12.

JERUSALEM, Nov. 24.—"It is now freely asserted," declares a correspondent of The New York Times in a copyrighted article, "that trouble (in Palestine) is the work of Italy, fishing in troubled waters to irritate Britain." Our readers will recall that such reports have been given wide circulation in the past and have aroused much speculation as to just how much confidence may be placed in them. These recent declarations seem to confirm the rumors. It is stated that a pamphlet, severely criticizing the British administration and which was scattered among the Arabs of Palestine, has been traced to Egypt, where it was published by certain "mysterious" foreign agents, now alleged to have been employed by the Italian Government.

BERLIN, Germany, Nov. 24.—"Just as in the days when former Kaiser Wilhelm II, ruled Germany, when the slogan of important German groups was 'look southeastward,' and when Germans helped build the famous Bagdad railway, political and industrial groups in Germany are now seeking close contact throughout southeast Europe and in the Near East," writes Sigrid Schultz, correspondent of The Chicago Tribune.

The Nazis of Germany and the Fascists of Italy are closely akin in both the theory and practice of government. Like Brazil under its new constitution, they are "collectivist" states ruled by dictators. It is exceedingly interesting to the student of prophecy, that Germany and Italy should suddenly develop an interest in affairs of the Near East. The fact provides additional evidence of the close ideological harmony of the two greatest trouble makers of Europe.

Both Germany and Italy comprised parts of the old Roman Empire which is now being restored, and as we follow their developing interest and activity in the Near East, we are sometimes moved to question: Will Palestine, after all, be brought back under the authority of Rome before Messiah comes? Will Rome rule in Jerusalem when Jesus returns to the place of His humble birth as she did when He appeared there the first time? Further, have these two dictatorial powers, Germany and Italy, entered into a secret conspiracy to prevent the return of the Jews to Palestine by organizing the Arabs and other Mohammedans of Egypt, Persia, Iran, and the Holy Land against them?

Cosmic Ray Secret Revealed

"I have shewed thee new things from this time, even hidden things, and thou didst not know them."—Isaiah 48:6.

CHICAGO, Nov. 27.—The mysterious cosmic rays, the source and penetrating power of which have been sought by scientists since their discovery, continue to yield their secrets reluctantly from time to time. The latest discoveries in this interesting field were reported to the American Physical Society at the University of Chicago yesterday, by Dr. V. C. Wilson, who told of the completion of experiments last summer which denote that these strange rays can penetrate the earth's crust to a depth of at least 1,600 feet.

Descending into a mine of the Seneca Copper Company at Mohawk, Michigan, Dr. Wilson set up his instruments at the foot of a shaft that inclined into the earth 34 degrees off perpendicular to make sure the rays would penetrate through solid rock that depth.

It will be remembered by readers of this page that Prof. August Piccard and others have made various ascensions into the stratosphere in an effort to discover the source and nature of the cosmic rays. God has withheld knowledge of many such powerful and valuable natural forces and sources of energy for revelation in the last days when He is preparing the way for the coming of the great Restorer of man's dominion over nature, the dominion which was lost for a time by Adam's sin.

Duties Devolving Upon Christians

By J. M. Stephenson

ACCORDING to the foregoing, the precepts and commandments of Christ, as taught by the apostles, are the divine rule by which Christians must develop characters. They taught verbally the commandments of Christ to the world, and then put them on record that they might be transmitted to all future generations, without change or variation. As twelve legates of Christ, they were authorized to enforce His commandments, with assurance that what they should bind on earth should be bound in heaven. Although clothed with the power of the Highest, they always acknowledged Christ as their legal head. Paul could say, "Be ye followers of me, even as I am also of Christ" (1 Cor. 11:1).

Let us look at the example of the church at Jerusalem, which was instructed by the apostles, both by precept and example, remembering that they were commanded to teach what Christ had previously taught, and that we are commanded to follow them as they followed Christ. "And they continued stedfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers" (Acts 2:42).

1. "They continued stedfastly in the apostles' doctrine." The apostles' doctrine was the doctrine of Christ; for they were not commanded to teach anything to the disciples, except what Christ had commanded them to teach. Their doctrines, therefore, were the doctrines of Christ.

2. They continued in "fellowship." They were all united with the apostles, and with each other, in mutual sympathy, confidence, love, and fellowship. They were a model church. Their example was an exemplification of the teachings of the apostles.

3. "And in the breaking of bread." This evidently refers to the breaking of bread in commemoration of the Lord's death. In Acts 2:46, where the daily observance of a common meal is referred to, meat is associated with bread. But in verse 42, the breaking of bread is associated with the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and prayers, thus teaching that the breaking of bread in the first instance was the doctrine of the apostles, and belonged to the fellowship of the saints, and that the breaking of bread in the second instance referred to a common meal. Why otherwise this plainly marked distinction? Why otherwise associate the one with the great doctrine of the apostles, which that model church stedfastly adhered to, and also the fellowship of the saints, and prayers, and associate the other with the equalization of their goods, having reference to domestic economy and comfort, and their daily meals? I repeat, that the doctrine of the apostles was the doctrine of

"Go ye therefore and teach (or make disciples among) all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them (his disciples) to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

Christ which, according to my text, the apostles were commanded to teach the disciples whom they should make among all the nations of the earth.

But the frequency with which they should observe this test of apostolic doctrine and fellowship is not named in the foregoing record of the faith, steadfastness, and example of the apostolic church at Jerusalem. An institution without any specified time for its observance is too indefinite to secure uniformity of action in the various churches founded by the apostles, as the lighthouses of the world, whose examples were to be followed by all succeeding churches. There had been no precedent for such an institution in the past dealings with God and His people; and it requires too much credulity to believe that Christ would be the first to establish a precedent whose legitimate workings would engender anarchy and inharmony in His family all over the world and through all future time. The duty of unity in faith and harmony of action is everywhere enforced in the teachings of Christ and His apostles. Having prayed that His apostles might be one, as He and His Father were one, He then offered a prayer for the unity of His disciples until He should come again, as an infallible evidence that He was the true Messiah: "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me (John 17:20, 21).

The multitude of believers at Jerusalem were an example of unity in faith, love, and works. "And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart, and of one soul" (Acts 4:32). In the following testimony, unity is enforced, and division condemned: "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind, and in the same judgment" (1 Cor. 1:10). Division of mind will produce division of action. But where all are of the same mind and judgment, there must be uniformity of action. Otherwise schisms and divisions must result. But according to the last text quoted, unity is enforced, and division is condemned. Let it, therefore, be distinctly understood that all the churches in apostolic times were a unit in faith, and a unit in action. They were one body, having one faith, and one hope (Eph. 4:3-5).

All the members of this one body, with a few exceptions, moved in perfect unison with each other. Hence, the custom of one church, in regard to (Please turn to page 10)

The Faith in Scotland

By the Editor

"Nae man can tether time or tide."—Robert Burns.

EDINBURGH, the "Athens of Scotland" and the ancient capital of the "land of Calvin, oat-cakes, and sulphur," as Sydney Smith described it, holds much of interest for the student of religious history even though he may not be a communicant of "the true kirk of God," the Presbyterian, established there by John Knox and "the Lord's of the Congregation."

The Scotch people have ever been renowned for their piety and deep religious consciousness. The justness of this repute is evidenced by the puzzling architectural features observed in some of the historic domiciles to which the attention of visitors to Edinburgh is directed. There appears in certain of these ancient dwellings, says The National Geographic Magazine, "a slit much narrower than other windows. Inspection discloses that these apertures light tiny closets opening off the dining rooms. They were retreats for the head of the house, where he might perform his devotions. Apparently," the writer for The Geographic suggests, "the deeply religious obeyed literally the injunction found in St. Matthew, 'Thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet.'"

To the Church of God in America, Edinburgh is of unusual interest because it was here that the first congregation was founded of men and women who believe that the essential truths of the gospel are expressed in Luke's summary of Philip's teaching, as found in the 8th chapter of Acts and the 12th verse: "When they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women."

Our interest is increased when we learn that these vital teachings, upon which saving faith may alone rest, were introduced into Scotland, and more particularly into Edinburgh, by a preacher from America, Dr. John Thomas of New York. A word regarding this remarkable man may not be out of place here.

Dr. John Thomas was born in England in 1805, but made his home for the greater part of his life in Brooklyn, New York. He traveled extensively both in Europe and America, preaching that salvation and eternal life were dependent upon an intelligent belief of the gospel as preached by Jesus and His apostles, and baptism for the remission of sins. He died in 1871, after having established many small groups of believers on both continents.

At the beginning of his religious activity, Dr. Thomas was associated with Alexander Campbell in what was denominated as an effort to restore primitive Christianity, which, it was alleged, had been lost in the perplexities of traditional theology. Alexander Campbell was born in Ireland and came to America in 1809. Like his father, Thomas Campbell, he was originally a Presbyterian minister. Later both father and son, having changed their views materially, with their entire congregations, were immersed and united with the Baptists. Certain features of their faith proving obnoxious to that denomination, they were forced to withdraw. They then, in 1827, organized "The Disciples of Christ."

It was with this body of reformers that Dr. Thomas first labored. Why he withdrew from it is indicated in Volume 1, Number 1, of the Herald of the Kingdom and Age to Come, which is before us as we write.

In the first editorial in that paper, of which he was founder, editor, and publisher, Dr. Thomas relates his own religious history fully, and mentions the various steps by which he had advanced from the position he occupied with the Disciples of Christ in 1834, to the time of the establishment of the new paper. At a future time the editor of this sketch hopes to present a brief review of the life and teaching of this able Bible student, but for our present purpose it is sufficient to quote the doctor's editorial announcement a little further.

Referring to his growth in scriptural knowledge, to which allusion has been made, speaking of himself in the third person, Dr. Thomas said: "His faith had now attained an amplitude it had not possessed before. It embraced the hope of God's calling to His kingdom and glory in the name of Jesus as the future Lord and Sovereign of the world. He now perceived what the faith of the gospel was that was necessary to constitute a . . . Christian baptism. It was nothing less than the gospel of the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus as the Christ; and he discovered accordingly that if a man would inherit that kingdom he must believe with an honest and good heart the things concerning it. . . . To become a joint-heir with (Christ) of this kingdom, the editor (Dr. Thomas) was immersed in 1847. Having thus obeyed the gospel himself, he forthwith commenced its announcement to others in the United States and afterwards in Britain."

This reference to his work in Great Britain brings us back to our main theme—the spread of the gospel of the kingdom in Scotland. Much of our information will be drawn from "The Jubilee Year" bulletin "of the Edinburgh Church of Baptized Believers of the Gospel of the Kingdom of God," which we acquired through the kindness of Brother John W. Beattie of Glasgow, Scotland, and from a most interesting personal letter accompanying it.

The Edinburgh church celebrated its fiftieth anniversary in 1903, or thirty-four years ago.

In order that the present condition of the work in Scotland may be grasped, we quote the following from the letter mentioned:

"The Edinburgh church was regarded as the mother church of the new religious denomination and a center from which the recovered 'gospel of the kingdom of God' radiated over the whole country. Alas," Brother Beattie regretfully remarks, "the Edinburg Church of Baptized Believers no longer exists, having united with the Church of Christ a few years ago."

Continuing, our correspondent says: "The Churches of Baptized Believers had a monthly magazine called The Messenger of the Churches, founded in 1860." It was by coming into possession of an old copy of this magazine that the writer was made acquainted with the work of the believers in Scotland.

It might be well at this point to mention the fact that while the Church of Baptized Believers was founded by Dr. John Thomas, whose personal following in the United States is large, (Please turn to page 9)

The Second Death

By T. T. Drinkard

"Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection, on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years."—Revelation 20:6.

WHY mention a second death if there is no need for one? It is written, "Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world" (Acts 15:18). It can also be said of Him that He knew the works of man from the beginning; He knew the outcome of man and his ungodly plans, and clearly shows that the whole system and its defenders will find their end in the second death.

To say that the second death is, may I say, God's filtering plant in which all sin will be burned out and the sinners who pass through it given eternal life, is but to wrest the Scriptures and give them an uncertain meaning. He that has "part in the first resurrection" will be entirely safe. He is no more under the power of death. He has passed beyond the vale of mortality. When Jesus Christ was "raised from the dead, (to die) no more; death hath no more dominion over him" (Rom. 6:9). Why? Because He came forth from death crowned with immortality. And John assures us that when Christ appears "we shall be like him" (1 John 3:2). If we are to be like Him, and since His resurrection, "death hath no more dominion over him," therefore, when our redemption becomes an established fact, death will have no further dominion over us.

Another thing that we notice in this account is that "they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him." This will be in accordance with the teachings of Scripture. This is the goal for which God's people have labored so long, and now it seems just ahead. Man and his ways are coming to an end.

The part which the overcomer will enjoy is that he "shall inherit all things" (Rev. 21:7). But the fearful, unbelieving, abominable, murderers, whoremongers, sorcerers, idolaters, and all liars, "shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death" (Rev. 21:8).

The expression, "second death," suggests that there is a first death, and true it is that that first death passed upon all men (Rom. 5:12, 18). But to show how far astray man can and does go in his theory teaching, I quote this: "The unbelieving world is cast into the lake of fire and brimstone which burns out by the great tribulation every sin."

In other words, there is to be no real second death that will destroy sinners, and hence sin, but only a place or condition that will burn out the sin and save the sinner! But I notice that even the devil will go into the second death, and to carry the theory far enough this second death would burn the sin out of him and leave him an equal of the saints in righteousness.

The second death not only destroys the sinner, but sin as well. Let us note this, "But the transgressors shall be destroyed together: the end of the wicked shall be cut off" (Psa. 37:38). And this: The wicked are "reserved to the day of destruction" (Job 21:30; 2 Peter 2:9). This is to the point: "The Lord preserveth all them that love him: but all the wicked will he destroy" (Psa. 145:20). Isaiah foresaw that the wicked would be destroyed, and said, "Behold, the day of the Lord cometh, cruel both with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the land desolate: and he shall destroy the sinners thereof out of it" (Isa. 13:9). He will not merely bring the reign of sin to an end, but "destroy the sinners" themselves. I am willing to concede that God knew just what He intended to do, and it pleased Him to reveal it. But I firmly believe that it is unwise for His people to become dissatisfied and seek to wrest the Scriptures so they will seem to favor a false doctrine. The Apostle Paul had in mind the same thought, and said, "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power."

“Before Abraham Was, I Am”

By Robert G. Huggins

AS MANY people take the words “I am,” when spoken of and by Christ (as in John 8:58), to signify His personal preexistence and immortality, we will make two remarks concerning their import.

First, mortal men often say of themselves, “I am,” without indicating their preexistence and equality with God (Acts 26:29; 1 Cor. 15:10; Gal. 4:12; Phil. 4:11).

Second, “I am” is often used of Christ in a way which destroys His preexistence and deity (Matt. 16:13-17; Luke 2:70; Rev. 1:17, 18; 1 Cor. 15:44-54).

“BEFORE ABRAHAM WAS”

The word “before” means: “In front; ahead. Prior in time; earlier. In front of; ahead of. Prior to, in time; anterior to. In advance of, in rank. In preference to; in comparison with” (Standard Dictionary).

Now Christ was “before Abraham,” not in time, but “in rank; in preference to; in comparison with.” This meaning is made certain by the fact that He was “before” John the Baptist, who was five months older than Christ. And what makes this conclusion doubly sure is, that when Christ said, “Before Abraham was, I am,” the Jews in anger “took up stones to cast at him.” If they had understood “before” to mean that He existed personally before Abraham, and was therefore older than Abraham, why this outburst of wrath, since even the disciples themselves believed the man “born blind” had sinned before he was born? Would they have “cast stones at him” for saying what they believed themselves (John 1:6; Luke 1:24-27; Matt. 11:11; 3:11, 13, 14; Mark 1:7; John 3:30, 31; 5:35, 36; 1:15, 16, 27, 30, 31).

“I AM”

“Before Abraham was, I am,” is an elliptical sentence. I am—what? In Scripture this ellipsis is sometimes filled in to complete the sense, as—“I am—the bread of life” (John 6:35); “I am—the light of the world” (John 8:12); “I am—not alone” (John 8:16); “I am—not of the world” (John 8:23); “I am—he” (John 8:24, 28).

The Fatherhood of God accounts for the greatness of Christ. The texts generally used to prove the prenatal existence of Christ refer to the Fatherhood of God. If they have to do with a personal, preexistent Christ, they platonize and enmesh the proponents of the doctrine with Egyptian mythology. In logic it is difficult to believe in the preexistence of Christ, and stop there. If a little preexistence is good, more of it would be better.

If, when Christ said, “He that came down from heaven,

The address from which the following notes were taken was delivered by the pastor of the Blessed Hope Church of God of Cleveland, Ohio, and was published originally in The Faith, from which we appreciatively copy.

even the Son of man which is in heaven” (John 3:13), He had reference to a previous personal existence in heaven before He was born, He was “Son of man” before His birth. Not a trinitarian in the world believes such an absurdity. He could not be the Son of Man until He became the Son of Mary. It was the Son of Man, therefore, that preexisted, if anything preexisted, and that came down from heaven. The Son of Man, not the self-existent God, came down.

If “he that cometh from above” puts Christ personally in heaven before He was born, then “he that is of the earth is earthy” puts mankind in the earth as preexistent beings before they were born (John 3:31). If “I am from above” asserts Christ’s existence “above” before He was born, the companion statement, “Ye are from beneath,” necessitates our sentient existence somewhere “beneath” prior to our birth (John 8:23). If Christ in a preexistent state was God, how could He say, “I proceeded forth and came from God” (John 8:42)? How could He “proceed forth” and “come from God” if He were God Himself? Did He proceed and come from Himself? He said, “I came out from God” (John 16:27). Could He come out from Himself? “I came forth from the Father,” is another of His affirmations (John 16:28). Yes, but like a son, leaving the Father whole and entire after He came forth. All of these texts have to do with God’s Fatherhood. They say not one word about the preexistence of Christ (John 3:13, 31; 8:19-23; 16:1-3; 8:38-44; 16:27, 28, 30).

Finally, we conclude with a lucid illustration to show how the Fatherhood of God explains the texts which trinitarians quote to prove the preexistence of Christ.

“They that are the sons of Levi, who received the office of the priesthood, have a commandment to take tithes of the people according to the law, that is, of their brethren, though they come out of the loins of Abraham: but he whose descent is not counted from them, received tithes of Abraham, and blessed him that had the promises. And without all contradiction the less is blessed of the better. And here men that die receive tithes; but there he receiveth them, of whom it is witnessed that he liveth. And as I may so say, Levi, also, who receiveth tithes, payeth tithes in Abraham. For he was yet in the loins of his father, when Melchizedek met him” (Heb. 7:5-10).

And now upon this reading, while you are holding your Bibles open, and your eyes are fastened upon its words, allow me to ask a few questions:

1. Where was Abraham when he met Melchizedek and paid him tithes? Answer: In the “king’s dale,” in the environs of Sodom (Gen. 14:17).

2. Was Levi there at the time? Answer: Not personally, for he was not yet born.

3. Where was Levi before he was born? Answer: "In Abraham."

4. Be a little more definite, please. Where was Levi when he was "in Abraham"? Answer: "He was yet in the loins of his father, when Melchizedek met him."

5. Where, then, did Levi and all the Levites come from? Answer: "They came out of the loins of Abraham."

6. Now, who is God? Answer: "God (is) the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ" (Rom. 15:6).

7. Where is God? Answer: "Our Father, which art in heaven" (Matt. 6:9).

8. Where was Christ before He was born? Answer: He was "in the Father" (John 14:10, 11).

9. What do you mean by "in the Father"? Answer: "In the loins of his father," like Levi.

10. Then when Christ was born, where did He come from? Answer: He came out of the loins of His Father.

11. Then, since God is in heaven, and Christ before His birth "was in the Father," does it not follow that at His birth He came out of the loins of His Father; that He "came down from heaven"; that He came "from above"; that He "proceeded forth and came from God"; that He "came out from God"; and finally, that He literally "came forth from the Father"? Answer in a chorus of voices: "Yes, He did; He did!"

Alexander Campbell on Baptism in One Name

IT IS generally known that Alexander Campbell, founder of the denomination known as the "Disciples of Christ," taught that faith in the gospel must precede baptism, that it was for the remission of sins, and consisted in total immersion. But it may come as a surprise to many to learn that Mr. Campbell also insisted that baptism must be performed in the one name, that of the Lord Jesus Christ.

While still not a universal practice in the Church of God, baptism in or into the name of Jesus only has been recognized as scriptural by many of our leaders of the past and present generation, and we find the tendency to use but the one name in performing the ordinance growing in favor among us.

The matter of Alexander Campbell's attitude toward this question was brought to our attention recently when we were reviewing documents having to do with the relation of our early ministers to the movement fathered by Mr. Campbell.

It seems that early in the year 1858, Dr. Henry Ward Beecher, eminent Congregational preacher in Brooklyn, "gave notice of his intention to apply to the trustees of his church, for the construction of a baptistry in the building, after the manner of the Baptist denomination. He explained the immediate occasion of this proposed innovation on Congregational custom. Numbers of persons," he asserted, "had applied for membership, to whom immersion seemed the truest baptism. He had no scruples to administer the ordinance in that mode and, therefore, desired the means of doing so, without being dependent on another church."

Commenting at length upon Dr. Beecher's announcement, in an article which appeared (probably copied from a "Disciple" journal) in the Herald of the Kingdom and Age to Come, October, 1858, Dr. John Thomas, editor of the Herald, gives his sanction to that part of Mr. Campbell's article which deals with the question of the "name."

The following is an exact transcription of the paragraphs of Mr. Campbell's statement having to do with the matter at hand. We retain his use of italics.

"We are not commanded to baptize or immerse any subject of Christian baptism, in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit. We have no such formula in the oracles of God. No one ever was baptized or immersed in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, by any man inspired of God, or commissioned by the Lord Jesus Christ. Eis to onoma and en to onomati, are formulas as wide as the poles apart. The former indicates an entrance into a new relation to all the personalities of the Godhead (the Oeiotēs)." (At this point Dr. Thomas says in a footnote: "Not the personalities of the Godhead; but God manifestation in flesh." We resume Alexander Campbell's article without change of paragraph.) "Hence the commission eis to onoma and not en to onoma—are formulas as wide as the poles apart. The one indicates the authority under which the administrator acts, and the latter the relation into which the subject enters. The Romanists celebrate matrimony, consecrate churches, and burial grounds, and dispossess demons and evil spirits 'in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost,' and so do they practice 'extreme unction.' Protestants tamely imitate them in some of these particulars. Since the coronation (?) of the Lord Jesus as head of the church, the Lord of the universe, all authority is in Him alone. He is to raise the dead and judge the world. He is 'Lord of lords, and King of kings.' 'By him do all princes reign, and all judges decree justice.' He is now autocrat of the universe. By His commission did apostles preach, and baptize the converts."

We are not concerned with the questionable statements in which Mr. Campbell affirms that Jesus is now "King of kings." We wish simply to call attention to the fact that the founder of the Disciples of Christ taught that baptism was not only by immersion and "for the remission of sins," but that it should be performed in the name of the Lord Jesus only.—G. E. M.

Literal—Figurative—Literal

By Reviewer

WE REMEMBER hearing the story some years ago of a Christian and a Jew discussing the literal or figurative meaning of the words which the angel addressed to Mary concerning the future of her promised Son: "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end" (Luke 1:32, 33).

"The first two statements of the passage are undoubtedly to be taken literally," declared the Christian, "for Jesus was unmistakably 'great' in the fullest sense of the word, and He was called the 'Son of the Highest' by the actual voice of the Almighty at the time of His baptism. But," continued the Christian, "the remainder of the announcement must be understood figuratively, for surely the only begotten Son of the eternal God, the second Person of the Holy Trinity, will never literally occupy the throne of David in Jerusalem! Such an idea is absurd."

"My friend," protested the Jew, "you are reversing the order of the literal and figurative portions of this passage. The first part is figurative and the last literal! The Messiah was to be a Son of God spiritually, not literally! He was to be a Son of God as Adam was a son of God (Luke 3:38) before he sinned, and as Abraham was a son of God. The latter part of this so-called angelic annunciation, however, should be taken just as it reads, as altogether literal in meaning. For when Messiah comes," he went on, "He will be an actual descendant of David and will sit upon David's literal throne in Jerusalem, where He will 'reign over the house of Jacob for ever,' for the kingdom of Israel will never be taken out of His hand."

When we heard that story we were impressed with the conviction that the Christian and the Jew were both right—and they were both wrong! For the entire passage should be understood in the most literal way. Jesus was literally "great," He was literally called "the Son of the Highest," and, further, the Lord God shall give unto Him the literal "throne of his father David," and He shall reign over the literal "house of Jacob for ever."

We can find no reason that would justify the assignment of one portion of the verse to figurative interpretation and another to literal. The construction of the passage is such that it must all be taken literally or all figuratively.

We were reminded of this little story today when we were reading an article on the millennium in an esteemed contemporary publication. In his very interesting analysis, the author, who acknowledges himself to be a non-millennialist, believes that what he calls "The Reign of the Martyrs" occurred during the Middle Ages. "During this period of a thousand years," he says, "paganism had no voice in the government."

As to the thrones on which the martyrs sat to reign with Christ, he suggests that while they are not designated, they "probably were the thrones of the leading European nations of the Middle Ages. . . . 'The blood of the martyrs was the seed of the church.' The saints (mentioned in Revelation 20:4) lived and reigned with Christ before the Middle Ages, during the Middle Ages and ever since, and they do today. It is not stated that Christ's reign was limited to a thousand years."

Of course, such an interpretation as this is consistent in that it puts the entire passage on a figurative basis. There would be nothing in it to be understood in a literal sense. But is our statement not too broad? Does not our author suggest that at least the "thrones" may be literal in that they "probably were the thrones of the leading European nations of the Middle Ages"? And the "nations" represented by the "thrones" are apparently also literal, according to this view.

But the "souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus" are not actually living saints, restored to life, nor do they literally "reign with Christ." It is their influence, their past teachings, that rules over the nations of Europe! "They lived," says the Revelator, but not literally, declares our commentator; they "reigned with Christ," John continues, but not literally, again contends our author, who proceeds to ask another question:

"What is the first resurrection?" He answers it himself: "It is not a literal resurrection at the beginning of the thousand years. It is a resurrection up to newness of life in Christ Jesus. It is a spiritual experience we must have in this life, if we have the physical resurrection to eternal life."

In other words, the "souls" of the beheaded "witnesses" are neither dead nor living individual saints, but merely mental concepts, imaginary pictures representing all who through the present age of grace have died to sin. The entire outline is figurative. It has nothing to do with literal resurrection, literal reigning with Christ, or literal thrones. No! we are mistaken there! It is all so confusing to a practical man! The thrones are literal, aren't they, for they "probably (are) the thrones of the leading European nations"? Figurative "souls" reigning on literal thrones in a figurative way! Yes, it is all very confusing.

And a little more about the "souls" mentioned. Our author asks the question: "What souls or persons were seen? Those of the martyrs, beheaded for the witness of Jesus and the gospel. This," he says, "is figurative of the loss of civil, religious, and moral rights." We are not quite clear as to who it was that lost their "civil, religious, and moral rights." Was it the faithful "witnesses" who had died to sin figuratively? If so, then it was the loss of such rights that qualified them to "reign" on the thrones of European nations "with Christ"! Truly, my poor head whirls!

"What about the rest of the dead?" Yes, I hope he will throw a little light on that question to round out our understanding of the whole matter.

"Who are they?" (that is, "the rest of the dead"). "We answer," he says, "the pagans, who were limited and bound during the thousand years. At the close they are liberated and become the head of the state"! Were they literal pagans or figurative pagans? Our commentator does not venture to solve this problem for us.

"Note," says our author, "note carefully that there is no resurrection, literally, at either end of the thousand years." But following the "little season" our writer seems to see a little more of reality in the picture, for he says that then "all the dead become alive and thus stand before God, when they shall see the Holy City, see Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of God and they themselves thrust out." Here he evidently has in mind the wicked who will see themselves literally (?) or figuratively (?) cast out.

Are Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob to be there literally? Are the wicked also to be there literally until they are literally "thrust out"? He doesn't say.

Ah! In the next division of his article the author comes down flat-footedly to earth! He quotes: "'And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire.' What about this lake of fire? Is it literal?" he asks. "We answer, Yes. This is how God is going to dispose of sinners—burn them up root and branch."

Figurative—literal—figurative! It's all so hard to keep straight. We simply give it up and turn to the following "selection" from the writings of an "unknown author" which appears in the same paper with the article we have vainly attempted to understand. It, too, has to do with the millennium, and we wonder if it was not placed just where it is to throw some real light upon this most glorious subject. The selection follows:

THE MILLENNIUM

"In the millennium all the problems which are now the nightmare of statesmen, will automatically disappear. There will be no more war. Militarism will be unknown. There will be no more crime, no more prisons or workhouses. No breweries or distilleries, consequently no drunkards. Slums will no longer exist to be the hotbed of crime and vice, filthiness and disease.

"Poverty and distress, starvation and want, will not be known any longer. Life will be enormously lengthened, because the causes of insanity, disease, and death will no longer exist. No grasping employer will grind the faces of the poor. No enormous fortunes will be made out of the dire necessity of others.

"Vice, blasphemy, brutal sports, gambling, fraud, oppression, lying, trickery, and deceit will cease and low and degrading trade be stopped. And all the power of humanity will be turned into useful and beneficial channels. There will be no idle butterflies of fashion, no 'submerged tenth,' no unrest or strikes and no desecration of the Sabbath. God alone can solve all the problems and right every wrong. He will do this through David's greater Son, He who will take the government upon His shoulders."

The above picture of the millennium is gloriously clear, enticingly appealing, and, better than all else, true to God's prophetic promises!

HE CARES

"Let all who are sad take heart again;
We are not alone in our hours of pain:
Our Father stoops from His throne above
To soothe and quiet us with His love.
He leaves us not when the storm is high;
And we have safety, for He is nigh.
'Can it be trouble which He doth share?
Oh, rest in peace, for the Lord does care."

THE FAITH IN SCOTLAND

States and elsewhere adopted the title of "Christadelphians" (Brethren of Christ) and denominated each local congregation an "ecclesia" (the Greek word rendered "church" in the New Testament) at a convention held in Ogle County, Illinois, in 1862, the "Believers" in Scotland continued under the original name of the "Church of Baptized Believers." There are small groups of Christadelphians in practically all of the larger cities in the United States, Canada, the British Isles, and other English-speaking countries. Unfortunately, however, the Christadelphians are inclined to divide on questions which would appear to others as of minor importance and consequently lack that power which coherency and unity on major issues provide.

As nearly as we can determine with the data at hand, this has not been the case with the Scottish church. While it has not made the progress it might have been expected to make, it has remained true to its original faith and obviously united in its efforts to proclaim the gospel of the kingdom of God to an indifferent and unbelieving world.

The Messenger of the Churches "continued to function," Brother Beattie states, "for fifty-one years till 1911, when it ceased to exist owing to lack of support. Looking back through old volumes of The Messenger, I find," he says, "that the Church of Baptized Believers formerly existed in, among other places, Aberdeen, Airdrie, Belfast, Berwick-on-Tweed, Birmingham, Cummock, Cupar, Crossgates, Derby, Devonport, Douglas, Dundee, Halifax, Dunfermline, Dunkeld, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Haddington, Hamilton, Huddersfield, Kirkealdy, Lanark, Leeds, Lewes, London, Nottingham, Newark, Newburgh, Paisley, Piton, Plymouth, Tranent, and Wishaw.

"As there has been no church magazine since 1911, the various churches have gradually lost touch with each other, and of all the once flourishing group of churches, I believe that the church in Glasgow is now the only active survivor. Meetings for Breaking of Bread are still held in Dunfermline and Huddersfield, and perhaps also in private houses, but there is no public testimony."

Our esteemed correspondent calls attention to the fact that certain features of the faith of the Believers are being carried forward by the Conditional Immortality Mission, an undenominational organization with whose official organ, Words of Life, our readers are acquainted through the excellent articles we have selected from it for the columns of THE RESTITUTION HERALD from time to time.

"About fifty years ago," Brother Beattie continues, "the second coming of Christ was very little mentioned on these shores, but we believe that through the witness of these now extinct churches and subsequently the Conditional Immortality Mission, this doctrine has come much more to the front. However, there is still much 'land to be possessed' and the fallacy of the 'never-dying-soul' dies hard."

In subsequent articles we hope to suggest certain conclusions which may be drawn from the experiences of our Scotch and English brethren which may help the Church of God in America to avoid the unfortunate fate of our sister organizations in the Old Country. Further, we will endeavor to point out the vital differences which exist between the Church of Baptized Believers and the Church of God on the one hand and the Conditional Immortality Mission and many other Adventist bodies on the other.

We acknowledge the splendid work these various "conditionalist" groups are accomplishing, but we feel that much of the force and value of their teaching is lost because of the fact that so many look upon these great doctrines simply as "neglected" rather than as essential elements of saving truth.

the observance of the Lord's Supper, was the custom of all the other churches. Those churches having been founded and either taught by or under the supervision of the apostles, and the apostles having been commanded to teach them nothing except what Christ had commanded them to teach, the conclusion is irresistible that the example of one church in regard to apostolic doctrine was observed by all other churches, and that this example is of divine origin.

With these indubitable facts before us, we are prepared to appreciate the example of the church at Troas, in regard to their stated meetings for the purpose of breaking bread in commemoration of the death of their Lord and Master.

"And there accompanied him into Asia, Sopater of Berea; and of the Thessalonians, Aristarchus and Secundus; and Gaius of Derbe, and Timotheus; and of Asia, Tychicus, and Trophimus. These going before farried for us at Troas. And we sailed away from Philippi after the days of unlevened bread, and came unto them to Troas in five days, where we abode seven days. And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow; and continued his speech until midnight" (Acts 20:4-7). In reference to which please observe:

1. Paul and those brethren with him tarried seven days, for the ostensible purpose of being present at the stated meeting of the church at Troas. The other brethren had waited five days at Troas for Paul. The next day after Paul's sermon they hastened on their journey. As far as the record furnishes any clue to the reason, they tarried seven days that they might attend the regular meeting of the brethren at Troas.

2. "And upon the first day of the week when the disciples came together," or, according to Whiting, "the disciples being assembled to break bread." This simple record shows conclusively that the disciples at Troas were accustomed to assemble on the first day of the week. Paul commanded the churches not to forsake the assembling of themselves together: "Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; (for he is faithful that promised;) and let us consider one another to provoke unto love and to good works: not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching" (Heb. 10:23-25).

According to the foregoing, it was the custom of some at that early day to neglect assembling with their brethren. This habit the Apostle justly condemned, and made the duty of all the brethren to meet in a congregational capacity the subject of a special precept. Little do brethren realize when, for trivial reasons, they stay away from the stated meetings of their brethren that they are violating a plain and positive commandment of Christ, as taught by His authorized Legate. The sad effects of this habit are manifest wherever it is practiced.

Obedience to this commandment is one of the efficient means of holding fast the profession of our faith. Show me a congregation which habitually neglects the duty of assembling themselves together, and I will show you a congregation which hold all other Christian obligations as a loose garment and whose faith will grow weak, their zeal abate, their courage waver, and their minds vacillate.

The life-inspiring influence of a church whose members may always be seen in their places, at the appointed time, is salutary for good: and if it does not act like a charm, it will provoke to love and good works. Such a church is a moral lighthouse to illuminate other churches and the surrounding world.

According to the example of the church at Troas, the appointed time of assembling was the first day of the week.

There must be a stated time for assembling, or how could there be anything like uniformity among brethren? There is an old maxim that says that "what is everybody's business is nobody's business." How true this is in regard to brethren keeping up their meetings! As far as my observation has gone, those churches which have no stated times for meetings, seldom meet at all. Declension follows neglect in this respect, as the shadow follows the substance. I would say to all the churches of Christ to use all the means of life and growth which Christ and His apostles have furnished, or neglect them and add to the wreck of hundreds of apostate churches, scattered along the coast of time, as monuments of folly and reproach.

That it was the custom of the primitive churches to meet upon the first day of the week is evident from Paul's instruction to the churches in Galatia, and the church in Corinth. "Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given orders to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come" (1 Cor. 16:1, 2). Or, according to the American Union and Syriac versions, "on each first day of the week." Campbell's Version and the Diaglott read, "on the first day of every week." The foregoing testimony demonstrates the point, that those churches were accustomed to assemble upon the first day of every week.

According to the foregoing testimony, one object for which they convened on the first day of the week was to break bread (Heb. 10:25). The object of the meeting at Troas was to break bread. Paul being present and preaching was only incidental. True, he had tarried seven days that he might be present at their stated meeting, thus attaching more than ordinary importance to the well-established custom of those brethren. Whether they broke bread before or after Paul's long sermon does not militate, in the least, against the object of the meeting, or the custom of that church to meet every first day to break bread. The Syriac renders Acts 20:7: "And on the first day of the week when we assembled to break the Eucharist."

That the church at Corinth was in the habit of assembling together for the specific object of observing the Lord's Supper is evident from the following language of Paul: "When ye come together therefore into one place, that is not to eat the Lord's supper. For in eating every one taketh his own supper: and one is hungry and another drunken. What? have ye not houses to eat and drink in, or despise ye the church of God, and shame those that have not? What shall I say to you? Shall I praise you for this? I praise you not" (1 Cor. 11:20-22).

The Corinthian brethren came together to eat the Lord's Supper, but instead of doing so, each ate his own supper. Suppose I should invite a company of friends to eat my supper, and they should assemble in my house, but instead of eating my supper each man should eat his own supper? Would this prove that I had no supper? It would prove just the reverse.

The Diaglott's translation is more explicit: "Then, again, your coming together to the same place is not to eat the Lord's supper. Why not? because the Lord had no supper? No. It was not to eat the Lord's supper: for each one takes first his own supper." "First," before what? Answer: Before the Lord's Supper. There must be two suppers for one to be taken first, i. e., before the other. By introducing the marginal rendering, Whiting's translation would read, "When ye come together therefore to one place, ye cannot eat the Lord's Supper; for in eating, each first taketh before his own supper." The word "another," between the words "before" and "his," is supplied by the translators. Of the same import is Campbell's translation. Hence, it is clear that the Lord had a Supper, but the Corinthian brethren had perverted and corrupted that sacred institution.

The Apostle, having corrected this error, proceeded to give the time and manner of observing the Lord's Supper, just as he had received it from the Lord. He said: "For I have received of the Lord that which I also delivered unto you, that the Lord Jesus the same night in which he was betrayed took bread; and when he had given thanks, he brake it, and said, Take eat: this is my body, which is broken for you: this do in remembrance of me. After the same manner also, he took the cup, when he had supped, saying, This cup is the new testament in my blood, this do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me. For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do shew the Lord's death till he come" (1 Cor. 11:23-26). "As oft as ye eat this bread and drink this cup." It is just as appropriate to use this language to denote stated times for the observance of this institution as indefinite. What other language could he have used? It is of the same import as if he had said, "When ye meet."—Selected by Sr. Nancy Robison.

on my door. The rap sounded familiar—a little. I opened the door, and invited my guest to enter. It was my old friend, who had so long plagued me. Now his spirit was broken. The rain dripped off his hat, but it was not rain-drops in his eyes. He entered the open door, and the light from within seemed to cheer him for just a moment. Then he wept. I heard him pray—a voluntary prayer that was pure prayer. His emotions told a story. I helped him to a chair.

From an inner pocket he withdrew a paper, and gave it to me. I saw at a glance that he had written down the transgressions I have told you about, and he had added them up!

Then he said, "Tonight I read the eighteenth chapter of Matthew. I studied the third verse, and decided I had never been really converted. The sixth verse and the seventh brought all my sins before me. At last, in verses twenty-one and twenty-two, I saw your forgiving spirit. I read repeatedly, 'Until seventy times seven,' and I saw that made four hundred ninety. I couldn't stop there! I wrote down my 'offences' against you. I counted them! I was shocked, and shamed! You have the list—there are four hundred ninety sins there. God showed me I had gone to the limit, and that a true Christian can forgive to the limit."

Wolf or Dog?

By Gerald L. Cooper, Ripley, Illinois

An old fable has been told of a dog and a wolf trotting along together. A supposed conversation ran like this:

Dog: "My, wolf, but you are thin! Look at me, my master feeds me well and I am fat. But you have no one to feed you."

Wolf: "But, dog, I can plainly see the marks of your collar around your neck. Your master feeds you, it is true. But he also chains you and subjects you to him. I would rather be thin and have my freedom."

The above is purely imaginary. We know that wolves and dogs cannot carry on a verbal conversation. The point which I wish to present is the freedom of the wolf.

"Satan cares for his own," is a remark that we hear quite often. It is true that if we serve the world it may feed us, clothe us, and shelter us. But it also leaves its mark upon us. It has us chained, as it were, to sin and all its evils.

A man may make his millions, but what joy are they to him? A bodyguard must be on hand all the time to prevent his assassination. Another may have wealth in abundance, but the ghosts of those he has cheated in attaining that wealth return often to haunt him.

The Christian, much like the wolf, may be thin, but he has his freedom. When we join our forces with Christ we die to our old ways; we are dead as far as the world is concerned. We are told in Romans 6:7 that "he that is dead is freed from sin." Thus, if we die to the world, we are freed from sin—justified in the sight of God through Christ.

We may not have all the joys, the pleasures, or even the comforts of the world, but we are free!

Bereans, brethren, everywhere—wouldn't you rather be free from sin and the world than to be in the world and not have that freedom in Christ? He will take care of us both now and forever. We have His promise to that effect: "And, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Amen" (Matt. 28:20)

Sunday

It would appear from a diligent reading of the Bible that the seventh day, or Saturday, was the day that God commanded the Jews to stop their labor and worship Him

(Ex. 20). Why, then, does the Christian church in general worship on the first day, or Sunday?

1. Because Jesus was resurrected on the first day of the week. Mary Magdalene and the other women came to the open sepulcher before the sun was up (John 20:1; Luke 16:2). "Jesus was risen early the first day of the week" (Mark 16:9). Every Sunday thus becomes an anniversary of the resurrection.

2. Because Sunday is the first seventh of our time. In the matter of tithing the tither takes out the first tenth of his income for God and the nine tenths that are left are blessed by the Lord. So, if the first seventh of our time is given to God, the six sevenths that are left are committed to Him for His blessing. Sunday thus becomes a sign that Christians put God first in their lives.

3. Because the Sabbath was a part of the Mosaic law which was done away in Christ (Gal. 3:24; Rom. 10:4). Jesus reestablished the law of faith that Abraham was under (Gal. 3:14). Although Jesus repeated all the other commandments during His ministry He never repeated the law of the Sabbath. The Sabbath was the sign of God's covenant with the Israelites, not the church (Ex. 31:13). Sunday thus becomes the sign of our "liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free" (Gal. 5:1).

4. Because the early church kept the first day (Acts 20:7; 1 Cor. 16:2). We thus preserve the traditions of the church of God throughout the ages. "Therefore, brethren, stand fast, and hold the traditions which ye have been taught, whether by word, or our epistle" (2 Thess. 2:15).

Answer These

1. Were there five crosses, or three, on Calvary?
2. Is there a difference between "kingdom of heaven" and "kingdom of God"?
3. Did Judas partake of the Communion?
4. Did Jesus sanction strong drink when He turned the water into wine?
5. What is the actual birthday of the Lord Jesus?
6. What is the difference between the "church" and "kingdom"?
7. What is the difference between "soul" and "spirit"?

(You should search out the right answer to one or more of the above questions, write each answer in the form of an article of three hundred words, and send to the Berean editor. Answer as many of the questions as you wish.)

PREPARED BY MARY A. GESIN

"The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; he leadeth me beside the still waters."

In God's Own Sight

"When across the hilltops
Evening shadows creep,
Birds and flowers and children
Soon will be asleep.
Peaceful rest enfolds them
All the long night through;
Love that watches all things
Guards the children, too.

"Flowers beneath the starlight
Droop their dewy heads;
Birds in trees are dreaming,
Children in their beds.
Safe are birds and blossoms,
Out there in the night;
Safe are all the children,
Safe in God's own sight."

Resting in Jesus

As Jesus went about all Galilee teaching and preaching and healing, oftentimes multitudes followed Him. They knew that He possessed wonderful powers of healing, and they brought their sick to Him to be cured. Many, many were the crippled and ailing children and grown-ups that received blessings at His hands.

As He looked at the multitudes on the day He spoke the opening words of our lesson, He thought of another need the people had—the need for peace of mind, for rest from worry. This worry was caused, He knew, by sin, and it could be cured only by Himself or His Father. For they are the only ones who can forgive sin.

Jesus looked about Him and saw the Galilean farmers plowing with oxen. On the necks of the animals rested a crude sort of yoke. It was fitted to each animal by forked pieces of wood and was joined under their necks with a leather thong or chain. A crosspiece of wood rested upon the animals' necks.

To this yoke the pole of the simple plow was fastened by thongs or cords. Mostly only one pair of oxen was used for plowing, but in some places in Palestine two pairs were seen. If we had to depend on such slow and simple methods today, we would never get our vast acres plowed.

However, Jesus was not going to give the multitudes a lesson in plowing. But always He looked about Him and drew His lessons from the things with which they were familiar. So He called to the restless multitude to take His "yoke" on them if they would find rest and peace of mind.

The "yoke" that Jesus used in His work was the yoke of love. The heaviest burdens become easy to bear when we wear that "yoke." For it is a self-forgetting and a self-sacrificing love.

Jesus can give a rest which no one or nothing else can give. And that rest those multitudes needed, and all of us today, as well, need. It is the rest and peace that comes when we know we have One who forgives us, One who understands us, and One who cares for us.

A man who was familiar with oxen and yokes used long ago in plowing, we are told, was one day in the audience when a minister preached on these very verses: "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

After the sermon the man told the minister about the yokes his father used in plowing. "They were always made heavier on one side than on the other," he said. "And the heavier side was put on the stronger animal. So he pulled the greater load."

In the yoke Jesus spoke of, the heavy end is on His shoulder, the minister saw at once, from the man's story of the yoke. And that is why His yoke is easy for us and His burden is light. "Casting all your care upon him, for he careth for you," are His words.

A Prayer for the Week

We ask Thee, our Father in heaven, to help us to wear the yoke of love that Jesus offers us and thus to please Thee and Thy Son as we serve. In Jesus' name, we ask these favors. Amen.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

A YEAR-LONG CHRISTMAS GIFT!

In planning your Christmas giving, two things should be taken into consideration: first, the suitability of the gift to the recipient; and, second, the lasting quality of it.

When you give your friends a year's subscription to The Restitution Herald as a Christmas present, you meet both of these requirements fully.

The Restitution Herald, with its richly varied contents, provides an interesting and instructive source of genuine pleasure to all members of the family.

Put The Restitution Herald at the very top of your Christmas Shopping List at once! Send it for an entire year to your dearest friends, that they may enjoy it with you!

As each new issue reaches the one for whom it is intended, he or she is immediately reminded of the thoughtful friend who made its welcome visits possible. The paper thus becomes a WEEKLY rather than a YEARLY Christmas gift!

The price to New Subscribers per year is $1.00. Address, National Bible Institution, Oregon, Ill.

A MESSAGE FROM SISTER LYDIA RAILSBACK

Sr. Idona Romine, matron of Golden Rule Home, visited Sr. Lydia Railsback at Epworth Hospital in South Bend, Ind., recently and "found her improving. She is cheerful in her outlook—no pessimistic invalid air about Sr. Railsback! She asked us to convey to the loved ones of the faith her warmest appreciation of the many messages and remembrances which have reached her. So many have come to her that it has been a great joy and comfort to know she is not forgotten."

KROGH - WESTERFIELD

Miss Clara Krogh, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Krogh, Sr., of Blair, Neb., and J. Arthur Westerfield of Omaha, Neb., were united in marriage by Rev. R. R. Brown at the Omaha Gospel Tabernacle, Saturday evening, Nov. 20, 1937.

Miss Genevieve Westerfield, sister of the groom, sang two numbers accompanied on the piano by another sister, Miss Elizabeth Westerfield. The attendants were Miss Dorothy Krogh, sister of the bride, and Howard Winhaltz of Omaha. The bride entered on the arm of her father and the wedding party advanced to the altar to the strains of Lohengrin's Wedding March.

After the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Krogh gave a reception for the relatives and a few close friends at the home of Mrs. Westerfield, mother of the groom. They will reside in Omaha.

DOLLAR DAY REPORT

Bro. Harvey Krogh, Jr., treasurer of the Illinois States Conference of the Churches of God, reports that to date he has received $134 for the "Dollar Day" fund, which is devoted to the payment of debts incurred against our dormitory by improvements and upkeep. About thirty dollars more would have cleared the old debt away.

MOUNT VERNON, ARKANSAS

Bro. T. A. Drinkard came to our place on Thursday, Nov. 11, and began a meeting that night at Beckett Schoolhouse, with several in attendance. The meeting continued over Sunday night. There seemed to be good interest manifested by those present. We purposed having a meeting Monday and Tuesday nights, but on account of rain and the weather turning cold, there were none held after Sunday night. Bro. Drinkard left here on Wednesday for Cleveland, Ark., where he was to hold meetings. He did some good preaching while here, and to some extent the cause at this place was strengthened. Bro. L. H. Shelton, deceased, held a number of meetings for us and much good was done at that time. Bro. Drinkard promised to come back Friday night before the second Sunday in December. May the Lord bless him in the work and may the church at this place be further strengthened.

ELMIRA MAUD SEBURN

Elmira Maud Seburn died at the Hamilton Nursing Home, St. Catharines, Ont., on November 11, after suffering for many weeks with cancer. For months she was aware of the approaching end, but displayed a hardness of spirit that could only come from a faith well grounded to that within the veil. Her thorny path was more or less trod alone, as Bro. Seburn preceded her in death by two years.

For several years she was secretary of the Ponthill church and just a few hours before her death she expressed herself as wishing to pass into rest with an unquestioned loyalty to her church. On several occasions she related that during all the years she was associated with the church she never realized it could mean so much to one as it did to her during the closing weeks of her life when, as she said, the ordinary things of life held no appeal.

Services were conducted in a funeral home in St. Catharines by the writer, with emphasis being placed upon the resurrection and the life that follows, which will be free from pain and death. She was laid to rest beside her husband, where together they will awake in the morning of that better day.

THE OLD SONGS OF ZION

The beautiful old song, "The Shining Shore," which we publish herewith, is published at the request of Sr. Lowry of Missouri. The desire she expresses in her letter, suggested to us that possibly there are others who recall some "hymn or psalm or spiritual song" which they learned in childhood and would like to have printed in The Restitution Herald. If you have such a song lingering in your heart but not, perhaps, in your mind, we will try to find it for you. Or if you have a copy of some very old hymn which you would like to see again in print for the comforting of others, send it to us. Sr. Lowry's letter and the hymn follow:

"I wonder if any of the readers of The Herald have the song, 'My Days Are Gliding Swiftly By'? I used to hear the Church of God people sing this song when I was a tiny little girl and thought it was so pretty." (We have sent Sr. Lowry a copy of the song.)

"I am getting a lot of good out of The Restitution Herald and a little Berean Bible Study Book (No. 2) my nephew gave me when I was called to the bedside of my sick brother, Si Herren, and I have been helped wonderfully by hearing from Bro. J. H. Anderson, as he told me the very thing I wanted most to know. He said, 'Stay in the one true church, if you stay alone.'

"I was baptized into the Church of God at the age of fifteen and am now sixty-five, and so will take Bro. Anderson's advice and spend the few remaining years with my brethren. Pray for me, brothers and sisters in the faith."

The Shining Shore

My days are gliding swiftly by,
And I, a pilgrim stranger,
Would not detain them as they fly!
Those hours of toil and danger.

Chorus:

For O! we stand on Jordan's strand,
And soon we shall pass over;
And just before, the shining shore
We may almost discover.

Should coming days be dark and cold,
We need not cease our singing;
That perfect rest naught can molest,
When golden harps are ringing.

Let sorrow's arduous tempests blow,
Each cord on earth to sever;
Our King says, "Come," and there's our home.
Forever, O forever!

INDEBTEDNESS FUND

Sr. Isabelle Smith, Ripley, Ill., renewing her subscription to The Herald, writes: "I am sending two dollars to continue my subscription for another year. The Restitution Herald is the most wonderful paper I know of. I wish that everyone would and could read it with understanding."

A Hymn Lover's Book of Remembrance

MUSIC, the joyful expression of praise to God, is a vital element in the Christian life. "Music," says Sidney Lanier, "is love in search of a word." When love has found its word, and noble music and noble poetry are blended in perfect harmony and dedicated to the worship of God, there is released an inspiring and uplifting power which now and again has transformed the church from "a rabble in arms" into a militant force, "terrible as an army with banners."

Not only in the long sweep of the history of the Christian church do we note the power of music and poetry "fitly joined together" to change defeat into victory, but in the experience of great numbers of individual Christians this power is known and gratefully acknowledged. John Keble speaks of those "Who carry music in their heart

Through dusky lanes and wrangling mart,
Plying their daily task with busier feet
Because their secret souls a holy strain repeat."

The source book of these "holy strains" is the hymnal, or perhaps the humbler collection of gospel songs. For a multitude of Christian believers the hymnal is the true "Book of Common Worship." Its use is not restricted to the sanctuary, the place of public worship, for the "trivial round, the common task" of week-day living may be, and often is, glorified by the "holy strains" which repeat themselves over and over in men's "secret souls."

The writer has often wished that he might write a "Book of Remembrance" that would be in any degree worthy of those whose sacred lyrics winged with harmonious music have ministered so largely to the enrichment of his life, giving him songs in the night, songs in the morning, and songs for the burden and heat of the day. That ministry was mediated to me through the medium of a singing mother. Even now, as I write, I seem to hear her singing:

"I will sing you a song
Of that beautiful land,
The soon-to-come home of the soul,
Where no storms ever beat
On that glittering strand,
And the years of eternity roll."

But this is only one of scores which belong to the "Golden memories of childhood (which) Follow me where'er I roam."

The stately hymns of the church were interspersed with the earlier hymns by Bliss and Lowery, and, occasionally, one of the still earlier American spirituals. For Mother, all the tasks of life seemed set to music. She seemed to be always working, yet always singing. All my earliest associations were with singing folk, true lovers of Christian song. All the early associations of life were shot through and through with strains of sacred melody.

Dr. Grenfell tells us that on that night when he was being swept on a small field of broken ice off the coast of Labrador out to the open sea and possible or probable death, there was in his heart no fear. In place of fear was a strain of song with words committed to memory in childhood:

"My God and Father, while I stray
Far from my home in life's rough way,
O teach me from my heart to say,
'Thy will be done.'"

Such an adventure is rare in the experience of anyone, but in the less thrilling adventures common to many, and in the common experiences of temptation, trouble, sorrow, and discouragement, how many have been saved by the ministry of a hymn or gospel song? Yea, and how great is our debt to those by whose ministry this help was mediated to us!

For myself I have such a "Book of Remembrance" as has been suggested. It is in the form of a "Birthday Book," in which are inscribed the names of authors and composers of our treasures of sacred song, the dates of their birth, some items of interest regarding each one and a list of their most useful hymns and tunes.

Gratitude is a measure of character. Doubtless many experience these ministries of helpfulness without thought of the one from whom the help came. Often this is because they do not know to whom thanks would be due. Lacking a definite object, gratitude becomes vague and its own ministry of reaction is made negligible. It is hard to believe that the ratio of the thankless is less than that indicated in the account of our Lord's healing of the lepers: "Were there not ten cleansed? Where are the nine?" And they knew to whom thanks were due.

Of course, it is true for all the holier and most helpful ministries mediated to us by anyone, or originating in any human source, there is One to whom thanks can always be given—the Giver of every good and perfect gift—but we can honor this One the more as we hold in remembrance those through whom He has mediated His gifts to us. Among these gifts the gift and the ministry of sacred song challenge our constant gratitude and our frequent thanks.

Christmas Gift Suggestions—

“When they had opened their treasures, they presented unto him gifts.”—Matthew 2:11.

We do not desire to commercialize Christmas, but we do wish to help our readers select gifts to give to their friends which will remind them of the One whose glorious advent into the world we commemorate on Christmas Day!

It is the birth of the World's Redeemer that we celebrate!

Every Christmas greeting we extend, every gift we bestow, should somehow remind the recipient that there “is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord.”

That we may assist our readers in the accomplishment of this ONE GREAT PURPOSE OF CHRISTMAS OBSERVANCE we provide the following

Summer Training School

By C. E. Randall

FOR SOME YEARS efforts have been made by a few of the workers for the revival of the Training Class. Economic conditions stood in the way. The time did not seem ripe to venture into this field of labor. With the passing of time and expanding of our pastoral fields, a positive need was created for trained workers for the ministry and church school. This need was forcefully presented and felt at our last General Conference. Action was taken to meet the situation. A committee composed of the presidents of the General Conference, Ministerial Association, Berean Society, and the Superintendent of the Board of Evangelism was selected to bring into being a Training School. The members of this Committee are L. E. Conner, M. W. Lyon, Harry Goekler, and C. E. Randall. The Committee met at the close of the Conference and organized, with the writer being selected as chairman.

After some correspondence, the Committee arranged to meet at Aurora, Illinois, in connection with the Ministerial Conference conducted under the direction of Aurora College. There were three members present, Brother Goekler being unable to attend due to the distance. After making a careful survey of our needs, and intent on carrying out the wishes of the membership, it was unanimously agreed that a short summer training course be given at Oregon, Illinois, beginning July 5 and continuing until the close of the General Conference, a period of six weeks. The curriculum, along with the names of the teachers, will be given in a later announcement. It is planned to have three instructors and the courses of study will be adapted to our immediate requirements.

The cost to students taking the course will fall far below the actual expense incurred. It was the desire of the Committee to keep the charges within the range of everyone. Room, board, and tuition for the entire period will be thirty dollars. This low figure will make it possible for everyone who so desires to avail himself of the training afforded by this summer session. It will be a season of intensive teaching.

This announcement is made for the encouragement of those whose hearts are burdened with the interests of the Church of God. You (Please turn to page 11)

War—"Quintessence of Beauty"

"The aspect thereof was terrible."—Daniel 2:31, R. V.

ROME, Italy, Nov. 25.—War is the "quintessence of beauty," Vittorio Mussolini, youthful aviator-son of Premier Benito Mussolini, assures Italian youth in his book on Italy's conquest of Ethiopia, which was put on sale yesterday. Young Mussolini, who recently returned from a visit to the United States, describes his seven months' service bombing Ethiopians as a period of "magnificent sport." The whole of the 150-page book, entitled Flying Over Ethiopian Mountain Ranges, is devoted to the beauty of war and relates the young flyer's experience during the campaign as a second lieutenant of aviation. To Vittorio "everything was fun."

Describing a bombardment of Ethiopian Galla cavalry a few days before Christmas, 1935, he writes: "We arrived upon them unobserved and immediately dropped our loads of explosives. . . I remember one group of horsemen gave me the impression of a budding rose as the bombs fell in their midst. It was exceptionally good fun and they were easy to hit, as we were not too high up. They offered a perfect target."

To the above news bulletin, which was sent to us by Bro. Arthur Gilbey of Ontario, we append the following editorial from The Spectator of Hamilton, Ontario, which comments on the item more vigorously than we could do.

"It is not to be supposed that Mussolini did not first read and approve his son Vittorio's book on the delights of war before it was given to the publishers. In that case, the father must share the son's guilt. Never has a more revealing document been printed. The mentality which regards the bombing of helpless fellow creatures as "magnificent sport" is past praying for. No wonder the world is witnessing the cynical repudiation of treaties, the deliberate blocking of peaceful overtures, wanton murder and destruction on a wholesale scale, chaos and futility everywhere. For the spirit which revels in carnage is a mad spirit. It is the spirit which, one had hoped, had been banished from civilized society forever—the depraved mentality of the arena, gloating over gladiatorial contests and human sacrifices; the sadist's lust for blood—an abnormal, dangerous perversion.

"The grim business of war, to any healthy mind, is repulsive and unnatural. This insidious attempt on the part of belligerently-minded dictators to induce in the young a false notion of it is an unpardonable crime. We have had Bernhardt's dictum as to war being a biological necessity, but even he did not dare to claim that it was 'fun,' as does this vicious book, written, we are informed by the author himself, 'to have Italian youth learn from a young man what it feels like to be fighting a war when only twenty years of age and to be above war's sorrow, appreciating only it beauties.'

"Above war's sorrow—safe up in the clouds raining down death and destruction; what an exhilarating experience! But what of the poor victims down below? Surely, brutal selfishness never appeared in a cruder, more revolting form. Let Italian youth and the youth of the world learn from this callous revelation the hideous effect of killing on certain temperaments."

Holy Spirit Slighted by Catholics

"He saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove."—Matthew 3:16.

DETROIT, Mich., Dec. 3.—"Catholics do not as a rule pay homage to the Third Person of the Blessed Trinity—the Holy Ghost," declared Father Coughlin; former radio priest, during a recent visit to the British Isles. Other Roman Catholics of prominence concur in Father Coughlin's statement and assert that their people show a marked "coldness . . . toward God's Holy Spirit."

Perhaps it would increase the respect they have for God Himself if they could be brought to see the truth concerning the Holy Spirit—that it is really the power and influence of God wherever and however manifested, and not a "person." The only description of the Holy Spirit we have been able to find in the Bible which could, by any stretch of the imagination, be looked upon as a description of a "person," is that quoted at the beginning of this item, in which it is said that Jesus, following His baptism, "saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him." We notice, however, that the "dove" or "person" which Jesus saw, did not speak. The voice that spoke came from heaven! The Spirit or power of God was present on the banks of the Jordan, but the voice came from God, "the First Person of the Blessed Trinity." "Person" is defined in Webster's International Dictionary as "the bodily form of a human being; a living, self-conscious being." God is frequently described in the Bible in a way that is agreeable to these definitions, but the Holy Spirit never.

Mass Salvation

By the Editor

WE HAVE read those words many times. They comprise one of the most familiar texts of the Bible. We have considered them, they would appear, from every possible angle and viewpoint. We would seem to have exhausted their possibilities, to have discovered and brought to light every shade of meaning they contain. Yet almost every time we return to this text we are amazed to find that it has something new for us, something we had not seen clearly before, some rich spiritual treasure we had hitherto overlooked.

What the world and the church need more than all else today is a return to the simple gospel of Jesus Christ. Before we discuss the subject matter of the gospel, however, we would point out a great but sadly neglected truth contained in this remarkable text. It is this:

Whatever the nature of the salvation afforded through the gospel, that salvation is promised only to those who believe!

The gospel preached by Jesus, and by Paul, is here declared to be "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." We would stress that little word, one. The salvation presented here is a decidedly personal one, it is strictly individual. It is not a mass salvation, it is not a national or a racial salvation. In this text salvation is assured to one, the one who believes!

The same thought is strongly emphasized in the Great Commission: "And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature" (Mark 16:15). It is apparent that the purpose of preaching is that the truth of the gospel may reach the understanding of "every creature." The truth must be presented in such a way that it has an individual appeal. It must appear to each hearer that the gospel is especially addressed to him, especially intended for him, and that he is being especially urged to accept it. Mass conversion is precluded; it is not even hinted at.

There was a time, long after the last of the apostles had fallen asleep to await the coming of the Lord, that an effort was made by the nominal church to convert races and nations in the mass. Thousands were forced into reluctant baptism and formal confession of Christian faith. As individuals they knew little, if anything, about the gospel. They knew little about the one true God—little about Jesus Christ. They only knew that they must submit to the demands of the Roman monarchs and call themselves "Christians." At heart most of them were still pagans, still worshippers of idols.

It was really a case of the blind leading the blind, for the majority of the Roman officials who carried out the policy of the nominal church, were as lacking in knowledge of what constituted Christian faith as were the pagans they forced into fellowship with them.

"For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek."—Romans 1:16.

The Spaniards under General Cortes attempted mass conversion of the inhabitants of Mexico. They compelled the unfortunate natives to submit to baptism at the hands of Catholic priests without first "teaching them to observe all things whatsoever" Christ had taught His disciples.

No! Mass conversion or mass salvation is not held out in this text. We may not leave this thought without again asserting that the gospel was not designed to appeal to the mass but to the individual, and that the salvation it offers is not social but personal.

Returning to the Great Commission:

"And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned" (Mark 16:15, 16).

We notice the singular nouns and pronouns carefully. It is "he"—the one who believes, that shall reap the benefits and blessings of salvation. It is not "the influence of Christian teaching" in the world that is to bring salvation to human "society"! Little is said in the New Testament about the influence of Christianity outside of the church itself. The purpose of the gospel is to bring peace and assurance to the troubled heart of the man and woman who believe it, through the knowledge that God has, because of their faith in the gospel. He forgives their sins and promises to them eternal life. As a further consequence of their faith they are taken out of the world and away from its influences, and "added" by the Lord to the number who are potentially saved (Acts 2:47).

A father's faith in the gospel will not save his son. The son must believe for himself and the father for himself. It is true that in the history of the early church incidents are recorded in which entire families were brought into the church together. But the manner of their coming is also revealed. For example, there was the case of the jailer of Philippi, of whom we read in Acts 16:30-33. Having been deeply impressed with the miracles attending the opening of the prison doors, he cried out to his prisoners, who had refused the opportunity for immediate freedom, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" The answer was plain and easy to be understood. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house. And they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house. And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was (Please turn to page 10)

Funeral Customs Deplored

REBELLION against current funeral customs is breaking out spontaneously. In Minnesota and Oklahoma cooperatives have begun tackling the problem of cutting down burial costs, and have succeeded to a phenomenal degree. Groups of clergymen are passing resolutions. Writers in popular magazines are waxing red hot on the subject. Some words that Marian J. Castle wrote in The Forum in April, 1934, characterize the growing mood: "In my observation a 'decent Christian burial' is seldom either decent or Christian."

The ritual surrounding death has become so elaborate and costly that it places an inordinate amount of emphasis upon the dead at the expense of the living. With our skilled embalming, costly caskets, metal vaults, granite monuments, marble mausoleums, and "perpetual care" of burial plots, we are acting as if we lived in the age of the pyramid builders and shared the viewpoint and values of the pharaohs. It is a fact that the average man has luxuries heaped upon his dead body which he never enjoyed, or dreamed of enjoying, in his lifetime—and his widow may bend over a wash-tub or do without actual necessities for years in order to pay for it. It would be a safe guess that seventy-five per cent of life insurance policies are taken out, not for the purpose of providing for the living, but to pay for a fine funeral. All of which is due to a false sense of sentimentality known as "respect for the dead," to an unbecoming family pride and to a suppliancy before a solemn-faced commercial interest.

One of the most interesting recent developments in the crusade for funeral reform is the action of the Ministers' Association of Middletown, New York, a group of eight Protestant clergymen. This body took the subject of funerals under consideration, agreed upon a comprehensive set of recommendations, sent copies of these recommendations to the undertakers of the city, published them in the local press, and then preached upon them on a specified Sunday. What the result of this vigorous gesture will be remains to be seen, but hereafter there can be no doubt in the minds of the twenty-five thousand inhabitants of one community what its ministers think about the disposal of the dead.

The document follows:

"There are many traditional viewpoints and customary practices with regard to the disposal of the dead to which we cannot in good conscience acquiesce; and, speaking positively, there are certain values and standards involved in our concepts of Christianity and of good taste which, we believe, should be observed in so far as the circumstances of a particular situation will allow.

"It is our general opinion that the disposal of the dead

The following article, by Hugh Stevenson Tigner, appeared originally in the "Christian Leader," July 24, 1937, and was adapted for the "Religious Digest." It presents a problem of much interest and importance to every home into which the "last enemy" is destined to come.

should be accomplished in a manner as quiet, as simple, and as dignified as possible, without ostentation, without pride, without emphasis upon the corpse, without unnecessary lacerations of the grief of those involved, and without a crushing burden of financial expense. Specifically, we propose and agree:

"1. That the body be disposed of as quickly after death as is convenient." (This was the practice of the early church. Acts 5:5-10.—Ed.) "We regard the custom of waiting three days as without good reason in itself, and the practice of sometimes waiting longer before burial or cremation as imprudent. Also, we regard the disposition to cling to the corpse of a loved one as something to be discouraged.

"2. That when a large attendance is expected the funeral be held in a church or chapel rather than in a private home, as the latter is not constructed to take care of a crowd and so makes for a clumsy and undignified confusion.

"3. That the casket or coffin be closed before the funeral service, and remain closed thereafter." (Here is another excellent suggestion in our estimation.—Ed.) "Those who may wish to see the corpse may do so privately" (we would say, should do so privately.—Ed.) "by visiting the home or the undertaking establishment at an appointed time.

"4. That music and especially singing at funerals, except that of a classic liturgical nature, is not compatible with the quietness, simplicity, and dignity appropriate to Christian burial." (To this, also, we express our hearty agreement.—Ed.)

"5. That the family should choose between a service by a fraternal order or a clergyman, two or more separate rituals being unnecessary, unseemly, and bordering upon vainglory."

(We cannot refrain from recalling here the embarrassment we have sometimes experienced when, after preaching a funeral sermon in which the reality of death was clearly pointed out from the Scriptures and the mortality of man—a thing which the dead man had earnestly believed and contended for in life—strongly emphasized, some fraternal order has passed about the open grave and dropped in sprigs of evergreen and solemnly intoned: "This represents our brother's faith in the immortality of the soul"! What a time and place to utter a lie of which most of those present were fully conscious!—Ed.)

"6. That funerals on Sunday should be avoided whenever possible, because of the undue burden this normally places upon a clergyman."

(There are two other considerations which should also be taken into account with regard to Sunday funerals. First, that of congested traffic on the highways. A long funeral procession, traveling at slow speed along a busy road becomes an actual menace to life, for there are many driving on Sunday who have little respect for anything but their own convenience and cut in and out of a funeral procession in order to get by and hurry on to their destination. Not long ago we saw a car dash across the road directly behind the hearse, compelling every car in the long procession that followed to stop abruptly and without warning in order to avoid a serious accident. The second objection we have in mind is especially applicable with regard to funerals held by ministers of the Church of God. Our churches are widely scattered and it is sometimes necessary for a minister to travel hundreds of miles or more to reach the place where the service is to be held. This necessitates the pastor's absence from his pulpit for the entire day. Two sermons and perhaps a Sunday school class must be provided for somehow, and the pastor often encounters great difficulty in securing a "supply" who is satisfactory to his congregation.—Ed.)

"7. That the funeral service should constitute the final ritual in the disposal of the dead, that processions to the grave and the addition of a committal service are both unnecessary and contradictory to the principles stated above. In the place of this we suggest that some trusted friend of the family accompany the body to the cemetery and see that the family wishes in the matter of burial are faithfully carried out.

"8. That 'respect for the dead' and 'fine funerals' have no connection whatever, it being a false set of values which causes people to feel required to make lavish outlays of money for the purchase of such things as costly caskets, (Please turn to page 11)

The True Version

By Dr. J. M. Byler

WHAT is God, and who is He? God is the highest type of organized being. God is represented in the Bible in two forms. First as a personality, second as a spirit. Can God be represented as a personality everywhere or at any time on the earth? The answer is no. But by the spirit, yes.

God reveals Himself through the spirit everywhere and to everything on the earth. Now the question arises, What is the spirit? In order to find out what the spirit is, we have to go back to the Greek language. According to the Greek language, "spirit" is the principle of life and is translated as "wind" or "breath." In the Latin, "soul" is umbra, meaning "shade" or "shadow."

In neither language is the soul represented as a living, conscious entity, that exists in or out of the body, as advocated by theology, contrary to the teachings of the Bible.

Job says, "Behold, my spirit is in my nostrils," referring to the breath of life that God breathed into man. What is the breath of life? The breath of life is the air we breathe which is composed of three parts of nitrogen and two parts of oxygen. This is what God blew into man's nostrils when he became a living soul. Since the air is the spirit of God, air is distributed all over the earth and to every living thing. This is the way that God reveals Himself to man through the spirit. We read that the spirit returns to God who gave it, which is the air returning back to its original source. There is nothing said about an immortal soul returning to God, as taught by theology.

When man's brain begins to think, thought is produced. Then thought is put in motion and taken up by the spirit (air) and carried to any receptive body by telepathy and received by the mind and carried into execution, just as thoughts are thrown on the air by the microphone and carried by electric waves to all parts of the world and received by the radio, and carried to the receptive mind. God's thoughts are thus taken up by His spirit (air) and carried to all parts of the world by telepathy, and the saying comes true, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them."

When God created man he formed him out of the dust of the earth and breathed into him the breath of life, and he became a living soul. It was man who became a living soul. Man was the soul. God did not put an immortal soul in man at the time of his creation and man never had an immortal soul as represented by theology. The Catholic Church claims that man has an immortal soul and when it leaves the body it goes to heaven, purgatory, or hell. Heaven is a perfect condition of the soul. Purgatory is a condition of the soul that may be made perfect by prayer, and hell a condition of the soul that never can be changed and lasts eternally. Some of the orthodox churches believe that man has an immortal soul that at death goes to heaven or hell as places instead of conditions.

Christ never taught that doctrine, but He did teach that man had to die and after that the resurrection. Paul says in I Corinthians 15, concerning the resurrection that this mortal puts on immortality. At the resurrection the Christian puts on immortality and is no longer subject to death, but will have everlasting life. The wicked do not put on immortality, consequently are subject to the second death.

Malachi says that the wicked shall be as stubble, they shall be burned up root and branch, and the righteous shall tread with their feet in the ashes thereof. That will put the wicked man out of existence as a human being, when he is returned to ashes.

Catching the Evangelistic Vision

A FEW days ago I came across an editorial which dealt with the current labor situation. After making some very telling points, the writer concluded his observations in a most helpful manner. He stated that most of our labor leaders do not give religion any place at all in their program to improve the conditions of those who toil and then significantly remarked that "it would be a wonderful thing if some labor leader could catch the spiritual vision of an evangelist. What a movement we might have under his guidance."

I had been working on this particular article for some time. Was it strange that his statement poured itself like hot molten metal into my mind and heart? In a very true manner it epitomizes the very contention I make bold to place before the church of the Lord Jesus Christ. In my file on my desk I found a quotation, the author of which I am not able to supply from the record. It is this: "We have been so preoccupied with the fruits of the Christian life that we have given too little attention to the roots. Humanitarian service, a passion for social justice, enthusiasm for a warless world, the devotion to other great causes for human welfare—all these are the rightful fruits of faith in God and an understanding of His will made known to us in Christ. But we have tended to forget that we cannot harvest abundant life unless we patiently and wisely nourish the roots."

Turning to the New Testament, we discover that "faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." The true meaning of this definition cannot be appreciated unless we get the entire message of the book in which it appears. There is a common observation that peoples today are saturated with "things hoped for" and "things not seen," but with their living upon the periphery of life instead of its center they lack that "faith" which gives substance to these hopes and these things. Christian leadership has seemingly been so preoccupied with the fruits of the Christian life that it has almost lost that inner courage and conviction to say to the world, "Thus saith the Lord." He is blind to the deeper undercurrents of contemporary life who does not take note of the multiplied demands for the creation and enrichment of individual faith. Many surface thinkers make the bold assertion that an age of individualism is past while a distinct era of collectivism has rigorously taken its place. Upon more careful thought, one clearly sees that in this view so often the wish is father to the thought. These religious leaders are all too prone to follow in the wake of external economic and political trends; they permit sectors of our environment to dictate their deeper judgments about religion in general and Christianity in particular.

It is all too true that there is a bitter struggle going on in these sections of life between a so-called individualism on the one hand and a so-called collectivism on the other hand.

But Christian leaders ought to be more alert and more thoughtful than to say that just because an era of collectivism seems to have set in in the economic and political world, such an era has also begun in the field of the religious life. Indeed, it seems to the writer that such a viewpoint carries with it false implication. It would be far nearer the truth if we said that the human trend of this current age in the field of religion is exactly the reverse of the trend in these other sectors of life. In other words, it is our conviction that the deeper instincts of human life are guiding peoples not in the direction of a religious collectivism, but forward to a purer individualism in which eternal values again must call the human spirit back to God and the source of its life in the Lord Jesus Christ.

In the truest sense of the term, there is no conflict between Christian "faith" and Christian "works." The Christian life must be thought of always as a unit, and the Lord Jesus Christ must be conceived as the Savior of the whole personality with its wide ramifications. That person operates in grievous error who would balance one against the other exclusively. On the other hand, there is a real dichotomy here when "faith" is thought of as the attitude of life brought about through the regenerating power of the gospel and "works" as the effort of such a regenerated soul in its relation to the external world. I am not contending that this is the Biblical conception, but am only saying that in the Christian mind "faith" and "works" somehow or other have become separate and distinct.

The apostles wrestled with this question. James sets forth the complementary character of faith and works in the unified life of the Christian. After all is said and done on this matter, most anyone would agree that there is an inner life of faith and an outward life of conduct, however much the dialectician attempts to erase the difference. And many persons would be quite willing to lay down the judgment that during the past twenty-five years at least the tendency has been to think of Christian conduct more and more to the exclusion of personal Christian faith. Such a tendency has even been abetted by many Christian leaders who in their eagerness to break down the walls of division between the various denominations have scattered to the four winds of heaven the sublime science of a Christian theology (definite belief).

The amazing thing in this process is the fact that, along with its desire for a larger and richer communion of many diverse Christian souls, together with the unwarranted demand to set aside Christian theology, the faith itself has been negated, if not wholly lost for this generation. One can readily see how unnecessary it is to have a Christian theology if he does not possess an inner Christian faith, for the one is designed to clarify and organize the other. We do not go very far wrong when we say that the reason why so many Christian leaders minimize Christian theology, ignore its tense implications, cast aspersions upon its holy record, impugn its deeper motivations is just this: they have lost the inner Christian faith of the historic church and are trying to operate a purely mechanized worldly wisdom. It is just such a loss and the absence of such a deeply laid faith of Christian content which accounts for the many incipient desires of people for a return to the religion of their fathers.

Resulting from this process there has been the substitution of a system of "pagan works" for "personal salvation" along with the repudiation of Christian theology, and the reason for both lies in the disintegration and loss of a personal religious faith. Most Christian leaders could and might very profitably make a careful and sympathetic study of the reasons why the movement known as Christian Science has attracted so many people to its program. One need not finally accept such a program in order to make this study; so far as the judgment of the Christian world is concerned, this is a movement not so much in the field of religion as in the realm of philosophy and human wisdom. Practically speaking, the movement shows that the deep seat of religion is not the external world and the desire to lift such a world to a higher level through a program of religious works.

Christian Science groups are notorious for the fact that they do not operate any social programs within their churches; they do not make bold and courageous pronouncements upon each and every social ill which confronts the world; nor do they even go so far as to work out a scheme of attack upon each and every habit of the individual life. Their sector of operations is not this external world at all nor the environment of the individual; they center their effort in a "theological" program, if you will, with the desire to unify the personality, to clarify individual experience, and to provide a deep rootage from which will grow the fruits of their own distinctive life. I make bold to claim that such a movement would have had little chance for success in a former age when the genius of a John Calvin came into its most glorious fruitage or the evangelistic preaching of a John Wesley held multitudes through the gospel of the redeeming grace of a living Lord. It does have a power today because the great sectors of the Christian church have traveled far afield from the regions of personal religious faith, repudiated Christianity as a religion of redemption, cast Christian theology (belief) adrift upon the high seas, and presumed to reform the world through a direct attack upon its institutional life.

Unless this process is arrested, the Christian church has somehow or other come to a parting of the ways and is doomed as a world religion. This movement from personal Christian faith to "works" must give way to a movement from works to faith if through us and our contribution the world is to discover and accept the gospel of the kingdom of God as its means of salvation.—Le Roy C. Hansel in The Presbyterian.

Physical Changes in Palestine

A NATIONAL home in Palestine is what all Jews want. It is quite natural that these people, divided, yet united, cohering by the common tie of blood and language, however scattered over the face of the earth they are, should earnestly desire a place in the world which they can call their own, and where they may live in peace and develop—a place of refuge after the storms and persecutions suffered during the centuries since they lost their beloved city in 70 A. D.

They claim as a right the land for the nation, the Messiah, the city for the throne of David, a temple and the development of their idea of a theocratic kingdom. Even though they now nationally reject the King of Israel, they believe that they, as a nation, "will see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living" and again send forth the "law from Jerusalem."

If England is disappointed at the failure of the Mandate, how much more the Jewish people, and they now see by the suggested partitioning of the land, the deferring of their hopes and ambitions for a glorious Jerusalem, the temple and the restoration of their ancient worship. By this "dividing" they are not to have the sacred places, the Dead Sea, the mountains of Samaria, or the hills of Hebron. Alas, their house is still "left unto them desolate," because that blind unbelief which characterized them nineteen hundred years ago still rests upon them, for they "knew not the time of their visitation."

THE AREA

It will be interesting and profitable to again consider the promises of God to these children of Abraham concerning the actual area they are to have, and then proceed to an examination of the scriptures which show the actual locations of the restored tribes when their glorious time comes. They are to have their Messiah, and their country, and their national establishment, safety and glory.

We are quite familiar with the promise to Abraham and his seed, as found in Genesis 15:18—"In that day Jehovah made a covenant with Abram, saying, Unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates" (R. V.).

There can be no mistaking this statement: two sides of the area are definitely given. The next is found in Exodus 23:31, a promise given in the "ordinances" which God commanded Moses to set before the children of Israel. "And I will set thy border from the Red Sea even unto the sea of the Philistines, and from the wilderness unto the river" (that is, Euphrates). Let us note these further border details—the Red Sea, the Mediterranean, the wilderness, the Euphrates.

There is another interesting scripture in Deuteronomy 11:24. Moses is recapitulating the laws and ordinances, given at Sinai, to the new generation of Israelites, just before he himself passes from them and Joshua leads them into the Promised Land. "Every place whereon the sole of your foot shall tread shall be yours; from the wilderness, and Lebanon, from the river, the Euphrates, even unto the hinder sea shall be your border." The "Euphrates" and the "wilderness" are here again mentioned, along with "Lebanon" and the "hinder sea." The Authorized Version has "uttermost sea." The word is acharon, and carries the idea of the "last" or "furthest"; but there is also the word yam.

In the Septuagint Version we have "west sea" for yam and acharon, and the margin of the Revised Version gives "western." The real meaning of yam is "sea," and is so translated 280 times in the Authorized Version, as against "west," 69 times. Now, to speak of the "sea" in Israel was to refer to the Mediterranean, which was on the west of the land, hence the use of yam for west; but it is quite right to translate ha-yam ha-acharon, "the uttermost" or "furthest sea"—and this would be consistent with the other boundaries given—the Euphrates, Mediterranean, Sinai, the Red Sea, and Lebanon—if the "uttermost sea" is the Indian Ocean and the Persian Gulf.

If this is so, then the area for saved and established Israel in the future is fairly extensive, and indicates an increase of these now despised people which will be enormous; and so it will be, according to the prophecies, for the posterity of Abraham is to be as the "sand of the sea."

THE PORTIONS

Having decided the "area," we may now proceed to consider the "portions" to be allotted to the tribes.

In Ezekiel we have details of the (new) Jerusalem for the kingdom, also specific information concerning the glorious temple for this time, within the special portion called the "holy oblation," which occupies the central position among the tribes, and we have also the actual portions for the tribes. In the days of Joshua, the areas were dissimilar and in some cases according to choice; but in the kingdom each tribe takes its appointed place, beginning with Dan, whose portion touches the Euphrates in the north; then Asher, Naphtali, Manasseh, Ephraim, Reuben, and Judah. Then the "oblation," fifty miles square in the oblation portion. Below, there follow Benjamin, Simeon, Issachar, Zebulun, and Gad. These details are found in Ezekiel 48.

It is suggested by Ezekiel 47:14 that the portions shall be the same width: "And ye shall inherit it, one as well as another; for I swear to give it unto your fathers: and this land shall fall unto you for inheritance."

As the "oblation" is fifty miles wide, so, according to the northern and southern boundary marks (Ezek. 48:1, 28), each portion would also be fifty miles wide. With a line running across Jerusalem, from Geba to Rimmon, as a base line, the tribal areas would reach out, if our deductions concerning the "uttermost sea" are correct, across Arabia to the Indian Ocean.

It is very obvious that all this area could not be occupied for a very long time to come by Israel, and so the important developments are in the land now known as Palestine, where the city and temple will be built.

PHYSICAL CHANGES

"And his feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east; and the mount of Olives shall be cleft in the midst thereof toward the east and toward the west, and there shall be a very great valley; and half of the mountain shall remove toward the north, and half of it toward the south. And ye shall flee by the valley of my mountains, for the valley of the mountains shall reach unto Azel" (Zech. 14:4, 5).

The above quotation from Zechariah states that when the feet of the glorious One touch the Mount of Olives there will be a mighty cleavage, creating a large valley. Half of the mountain is to be flung northward, and half southward. The valley is to reach to "Azel."

Many have tried to locate this place, and some suggest it is a contraction of "Ascelon" to "Azelon," and then "Azel." If this is so, then the valley would permit an inrush of the Mediterranean to the Dead Sea; but there is no certainty on this point, although some do assert that this is so, and that the inrush of water turning at an angle to the Dead Sea would there heap up waters until they broke through with a mighty rush down to Arabah into the Gulf of Akaba and the Red Sea.

But one thing is certain, and that is that "living waters shall go out from Jerusalem; half of them toward the former sea, and half of them toward the hinder sea; in summer and in winter shall it be" (Zech. 14:8, 9). Ezekiel also speaks of these waters, of this stream healing the waters of the Dead Sea. "These waters issue forth toward the eastern region, and they shall go down into the Arabah; and they shall go toward the sea . . . and the waters shall be healed. . . . And it shall come to pass that fishers shall stand by it: from Engedi even unto Eneglaim shall be a place for the spreading of nets; their fish shall be after their kinds as the fish of the great sea, exceeding many" (Ezek. 47:8-12).

"Fish of the great sea" (Mediterranean) seems to indicate that the Mediterranean does flow into the Dead Sea, the floor of which would be raised by the mighty convulsions in the land when the Lord returns. The raising of the Dead Sea would also affect the whole of the Jordan Valley; raising the Sea of Galilee, which is 682 feet below sea level, and completely inundating the sites of the ancient cities of Capernaum, Chorazin, and Bethsaida.

It is believed also that the earthquake which cleaves Olivet will reveal in the valley the finest building material in the world. Professor Hull is quoted as saying: "The rocks around Jerusalem furnish not only a solid and durable white building stone, but marbles of red, pink, and yellow colors, capable of receiving a fine polish; . . . the beds of stone locally called Misseh, have yielded large blocks used in ancient structures of Jerusalem, such as the wailing place of the Jews, which have been extracted from the quarries near the Damascus gate."

Here is abundance of material for Ezekiel's temple, the building of which upon the cleansed area of Jerusalem will be in the hands of the priests of a restored Levitical order, and the toilers, those who have escaped the judgments of the "day of the Lord," perhaps former enemies of Israel.

Compare the pitiful intention and desire of this down-trodden people to reerect their temple on Mount Zion, parts of which they have already prepared in different parts of the world, with the prophetic descriptions of that which God will bring to pass in His own time and way. Our hearts are stirred for mistaken Israel.

The "desert is to blossom as the rose" in that great and happy day. "The earth will yield forth her increase," and Palestine, the scene of the greatest of earth's tragedies—Calvary—and the place of battles, will become the envy of the earth and the delight of Israel. The unfruitful land will become the garden of God, full of beautiful things, the laughter of happy children, and an abundance of good things to the "tops of the mountains." And, best of all, the beloved Lord, once despised and rejected of men, will shed the radiance of His glory, goodness, and love over all. —Joseph Salisbury in the (New Zealand) Bible Advocate.

The Fate of the Wicked

NOT long ago there came to the office a letter from one of our readers. He wrote that he appreciated many of our articles, but he was puzzled, he said, by our attitude on the state of the dead. He noticed that we taught that death was a sleep, and that those who are finally lost are not tormented forever. He found it hard to believe these things.

He added that he did not wish us to cite the Old Testament as authority, because he had full confidence only in the words of Christ. Now, we must say that we think all the Scripture is of equal validity. It is true that the Old Testament describes some of the wicked things that men did—so does the New Testament for that matter; but we understand that in both Testaments are found the things necessary for salvation. Both contain a revelation of God. And the statements of both, as regards divine truth, are equally valid.

But to please our friend we shall discuss these questions in the way that he has specified. We shall pass by all the clear statements of the Old Testament on man's condition in death, and shall examine solely those in the New.

Our correspondent particularly wishes that we explain Matthew 25:46, which says, "These shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal." This, he feels, is proof that all who refuse or neglect redemption shall be burned in hell forever, constantly tormented but never consumed, in endless anguish without even the hope of death.

AN EVERLASTING DOOM

But our text does not so say. It merely states that the punishment of the wicked is an everlasting punishment; and so it is. It shall never be changed, revoked, or diminished. And lest any should suppose that this punishment is to be an eternal life in torment, the Savior immediately goes on to state that it is only the righteous who have life eternal. Now, everlasting life is everlasting life, regardless of the conditions under which it may be passed. Endless duration in the pains of hell is just as much an eternal life as endless duration in the joys of heaven. But the wicked do not enter into an eternal life even in torment. They go, says Jesus, not into an eternal punishing, but into an eternal punishment. And eternal life, unending existence, for whom is that? Not for the wicked, but for the righteous.

We are not minimizing the punishment of the wicked. We are merely pointing out what the Scripture says on this topic, as distinguished from the traditional view of a torment extending through millions and millions and millions of years. The punishment of the wicked will indeed be terrible. That it will be by fire the Scriptures make abundantly clear. "Fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them" (Revelation 20:9). If "devour" in this text does not mean destroy, it is hard to say what it does mean. And thus shall be fulfilled the saying of the Apostle, that "the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom. 6:23). In the salvation of the redeemed, the wicked can have no part. From that better world to come they are forever shut out.

Our correspondent then reminds us of Mark 9:43-48: "If thy hand offend thee, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than having two hands to go into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched: where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched. And if thy foot offend thee, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter halt into life, than having two feet to be cast into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched: where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched. And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out: it is better for thee to enter into the kingdom of God with one eye, than having two eyes to be cast into hell fire: where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched."

Our correspondent says: "Let us ask in all reason, Do these most solemn words of our Lord Jesus Christ describe a state of unconsciousness or nothingness after death?"

We think they do. It is not living people whom worms devour; it is dead people. Jesus is here picturing a scene of utter and irretrievable ruin—and that is exactly the portion of the wicked in the judgment.

Nor shall that fire ever be quenched. In this respect it is exactly like the fire which burned down the gates of Jerusalem. We trust that our correspondent will permit us to refer for a moment to the Old Testament, not to prove a doctrine, but to illustrate the use of a word. "If ye will not hearken unto me to hallow the sabbath day, and not to bear a burden, even entering in at the gates of Jerusalem on the sabbath day; then will I kindle a fire in the gates thereof, and it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem, and it shall not be quenched" (Jer. 17:27).

WHAT IS UNQUENCHABLE FIRE?

Now, this prophecy was fulfilled. Israel did not cease to bring burdens into the gates of Jerusalem on the Sabbath day. So the Babylonians came, and kindled a fire in the gates thereof; and it devoured the palaces of Jerusalem, and it was never quenched. This does not mean that the traveler to Jerusalem today may still see the gates burning, or that a tourist descending the Mount of Olives may view a spectacle of flaming palaces. The fire was indeed never quenched; it was so devouring that nobody could ever put it out, not even the Babylonians; and it never was put out. Finally, of course, it died out, probably several weeks after the soldiers had set the city aflame. It died out because there was nothing else for it to feed on. The last particle of wood in those gates, the last fragments of roof and furniture and cloth in those palaces, had been utterly consumed. And that will be the fate of the wicked. We do not think it will be a pleasant fate, and we can see nothing in such a prospect to encourage anyone in a course of evil.

But most of our discussion has thus far been negative. To turn to the positive side, let us see what Jesus said on the subject of death. How did He regard it? Did He believe that righteous persons immediately upon death went into the glories of heaven?

On this point, we shall examine but a single passage. The Gospel of John tells us how a certain man named Lazarus, the brother of Martha and Mary and a great friend of Jesus Himself, was one time taken so grievously ill that he died. The disciples had heard, through a messenger sent by the sisters, that Lazarus was ill; they did not know that he already was dead. "After that he (Jesus) saith unto them, Our friend Lazarus sleepeth; but I go, that I may awake him out of sleep. Then said his disciples, Lord, if he sleep, he shall do well. Howbeit Jesus spake of his death: but they thought that he had spoken of taking of rest in sleep. Then said Jesus unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead" (John 11:11-14).

DEATH AS A SLEEP

Here Jesus plainly spoke of death as a sleep. And it is senseless to maintain that He spoke merely of Lazarus' body as sleeping, for He immediately went on to speak of His intention of awakening him; and one never awakens a body; it is always the mind that is awakened to consciousness, and not the body. Indeed, "sleep" is Jesus' favorite term in speaking of death. We could add other instances of its usage in precisely that sense. But not once does He speak of the righteous dead enjoying the bliss of eternal life before the hour of the resurrection.

Considering further the case of Lazarus, we find that Jesus, in sympathy with the grief of Martha and Mary, raised him from the dead. But would it not have been an act of unkindness to call him back from the glories of that perfect world to the sin and sorrow and imperfection of this one? Jesus held no such view. His consolation to the sisters was not that Lazarus was in heaven, but that "Thy brother shall rise again" (v. 23). Later, as we have said, the Savior raised Lazarus from the dead, but we find no account of the risen man's telling anything of the splendors of heaven, of the wonders of that better world to which, according to traditional theology, he had been temporarily admitted.

Death is a sleep, said Jesus. This is the teaching of the New Testament, and it agrees perfectly with that of the Old. We remain in that unconscious rest until the hour of resurrection. Glorious event, to which by faith we may look forward, knowing that the promise of God shall surely be fulfilled!—Gwynne Dalrymple in Signs of the Times.

MASS SALVATION

baptized, he and all his, straightway. And when he had brought them into his house, he set meat before them, believing in God with all his house."

Here was a mass conversion and a mass baptism, but it was first an individual conversion, for without exception, they all believed before they were baptized. When the "word of the Lord," i. e., the gospel, was preached to them, each one of them accepted what he heard and was moved to demand baptism.

Why are we insisting so strongly that salvation is an individual matter? The answer is this: The world has been trying for hundreds of years to save humanity in the mass. That is why so many different forms of government have been devised, that men may be saved from the poverty and distress which they have experienced under previous systems.

The vital thing, which all who attempt mass salvation overlook, is the fact that the basic cause of human distress lies in the individual and not in the mass. Sin, failure to understand what is right and what is wrong, failure to take the individual into sympathetic consideration, has prevented the accomplishment of many otherwise praiseworthy plans for mankind's betterment. God works with individuals! We want you to understand that. You must believe the gospel of Christ for yourself if you are to be saved. You must respond to our Lord's appeal if you are to reap the benefit from His death upon the cross. There is no salvation outside of Jesus Christ! We want you to have that salvation, hence we warn you that "social salvation" is not a part of the gospel plan.

Individual regeneration must precede world regeneration. The order cannot be reversed. A stream cannot rise above its fountainhead, and the fountainhead of society is the individual.

While the principal phase of the gospel we are discussing here pertains to the individual, we must not overlook the social principles involved in it. Nor must we overlook the political implications of the gospel. Nor the physical.

The gospel of Jesus Christ is calculated to meet every practical need of the individual and of the mass because it includes every righteous phase of human life. It introduces at the very beginning personal regeneration. It involves at a later time social reconstruction. It promises political reformation. It assures land reclamation and conservation. All of these things enter into the gospel in its widest application. It is a vast program that is presented before us in the gospel of the kingdom of God, and a program that requires the cooperation of angels and men to bring it about. It demands time and eternity to complete it. It draws upon the best that is in man, working with God, to carry it forward to its final glorious consummation.

"It is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither (hath it) entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God" (1 Cor. 2:9, 10).

Broad and deep and rich and glorious are the preparations God has made for the welfare and happiness of those who hear and heed the glad tidings of the kingdom!

But let us not forget that the salvation offered today is reserved for the man and the woman who believes! So why not assure yourself of its eternal blessings without delay, while the opportunity is presented, if you have not already done so?

SUMMER TRAINING SCHOOL

are urged to pray this effort through to victory! This special work will be kept before you from time to time. Its success depends upon the measure of cooperation accorded by the pastors and churches. Encourage your young people to take this training. All those wishing to enroll for this short course or desiring detailed information, write me at Fonthill, Ontario.

Another important action taken by the Committee was the arrangement whereby Brother Harry Sheets, one of our competent ministers, will instruct our students in training at Aurora College for two hours each Monday night during the second semester on some of the distinctive doctrines of the church.

The course of study being provided in the short term will in no way take the place of high school or college work. We are not in position, neither is it advisable, to give instruction in such studies as can be readily obtained elsewhere.

If this plan for a Summer Training School is good news to you, let us know about it! Inspire us forward with your word of cheer.

huge floral displays, fine clothes for the corpse" (We know of an old man whose children provided him nothing better than overalls to wear while he lived, but asked the undertaker to buy him a "good suit" in which to be buried.—Ed.), "and expensive grave markers. We believe, for instance, that a coffin serves the purpose fully as well as a casket and that the question as to which shall be purchased should be answered solely by the consideration of one's financial ability. We believe that the same point of view holds for the question as to whether a shroud or newly bought clothes, shall be used; also, with regard to the selection of gravestones. As for floral displays, we consider them a matter of ostentation" (Again we heartily agree.—Ed.), "and suggest that the money usually spent for this purpose be given to some public institution or charitable enterprise cherished by him (this suggestion was made in these columns several years ago), or be given to his family in case of need, or, still better, be put into a fund to provide medical care and hospitalization for the poor."

"O, I shall be satisfied when I can cast
The shadows of nature all by;
When this dreary scene from my vision has passed,
And there is an unclouded sky.
I feel that bright morning is now drawing near,
When earth's fairest objects will fade;
'Tis then in thy likeness, O let me appear,
In glory and beauty arrayed."

THE CURE FOR TROUBLE

Life seems to me sometimes like a sum that a child works on a slate and gets all wrong and smudged, until at last one can hardly read the figures. The child begins to cry, and then everything gets worse, and into such a miserable mess! And then the parent or the teacher takes the slate out of the child's hands and, if it is hopeless, just passes a sponge over it, washes out all the mistakes and does it correctly, and it is all so clear.

So the world can leave off worrying when the Master of Life comes into our poor lives and with hands of power takes hold of them and straightens out all the muddle and trouble. Christ can be born in you and lift you up into that glorious life for which you long.—Maude A. Royden.

Be a Good Driver

"Am I my brother's keeper?"—Cain.

In these days, when everyone who takes the steering wheel of an automobile is taking the lives of others into his keeping, Christians should make it a Christian virtue to be good drivers or else not drive. To drive a car negligently puts one in the same class with the one who waves a gun around that, supposedly, isn't loaded. It is the gun that isn't loaded that accidentally goes off.

I do not claim to be a no-accident driver. My record shows a variety of mishaps and accidents. As a youngster I drove to "show off." But I have driven several hundred thousand miles during the last sixteen years—big city and country road, pavement and mud, light cars to the biggest trucks, around home and cross country—once with a heavy house trailer on what is probably the steepest, wildest, least-used trail over the Rockies—through blizzards, sleet, and boiling sun, always meeting new situations.

Upon my own mistakes, upon those of others, I have meditated, imagining what very easily could have happened. And now, as a Christian who desires to do unto others according to the way of Christ, I realize the need of observing the safety rules of good driving.

Consider driving as a serious business. A car can become a death-dealing monster without an instant's warning. You may be laughing and joking at five seconds to nine and a writhing mass of human pulp five seconds after. Put your best into the business of driving. Keep your mind clear, as though your life depended on it, as it does. Do not drive when tired or sleepy. Anything can happen—and it will. I came along and saw what was left, an hour after a train had struck the empty trailer of an oil truck—smoking twisted metal, the ashes of the driver still inside the cab. It was a familiar crossing with two warning signals, wigwag and semaphore. He stopped the truck to look and then drove right in front of the train. His mind had been on something else. It can happen to you.

Drive at a reasonably slow speed. "He drives fast, but he is a good driver"—a common but untrue remark. One bad habit in driving may mean a horrible death for you and others. Speed is a bad habit.

One dark night I took for granted there would be a road sign at the end of the road. There wasn't, and we rolled over. I took for granted no one was coming around the curve. Luckily there were two policemen there to teach me a lesson. I took for granted I could stop the car quickly and so got into the bad habit of coming at full speed right up to the corner. But there was a sudden drop in temperature, ice formed on the pavement, and we went round and round. I took for granted the brakes would hold if the hill proved too steep to climb, but when the motor coughed and died, the brake pedal broke, and there we were plunging steeply backward toward a bluff at the bottom of which was a river.

Stop taking chances, and cut down on the unavoidable chances by being at your best, not befogged by liquor, or sleepy and tired from long hours or overeating.

Never steer with one finger. A lion tamer says he would rather tame a tiger than a blowout. You need a firm grip. Many situations can be mastered scientifically. If a Christian is to drive, it is his duty to be prepared for any exigency. I have had wheels come off, tires blow out at high speed, axles break, the roadway give way, the oncoming driver go to sleep, bees sting me—all without warning. You are bound to meet like situations. What will you do?

It happens to other folks, but it can't happen to me!" Why not? Listen, "Whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow. For what is your life? It is even a vapour that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away" (James 4:14).

Christians had better do their best to master the art of driving, and then whenever they go out on the highway, "commit the keeping of their souls to him in well doing" (1 Peter 4:19). Do the best you can and then trust in the Lord. "Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in him" (Psa. 37:5).

To All Berean Societies

The new name and address of the National Berean Treasurer is Mrs. Lucille Appleby, Blair, Nebraska. Will all local and state Berean treasurers keep this in mind when sending in their dues?

During the past year the National Berean Society has spent quite a bit of money in evangelistic work. The Bereans have also voted to aid financially the proposed Training Class. In addition to the above expenditures the Bereans maintain two Correspondence Committees and one Home Study Committee, all of which require postage and stationery. Also the Bereans print and distribute free of charge a great number of tracts and are shortly planning to print a number of new ones.

Naturally, the only source of revenue the national treasurer has is the dues and contributions sent in by societies and individuals. For some reason, the past year witnessed a sharp decline in payment of dues. Now, in order to maintain all the above projects, we must have more money than came in during the past year. We appeal to all local societies to bear these things in mind and send in your dues and contributions.

January first is the time for the semiannual payment of such dues and we hope that now, as in the past, the Bereans will continue to support the various undertakings in every way.

A String of Pearls

If we wish for joy in this troubled world,
 If we'd make our pathway bright,
 We must walk in the steps our Savior trod,
 When He set the world alight.
 Loving words are gems that the Savior loves;
 In His sight kind deeds are fair;
 Pure hearts are the treasures He counts His own,
 Making up His jewels rare.

If we think kind thoughts,
 If we do kind deeds,
 Asking help from God above,
 Then our days will be
 Like a string of pearls,
 With the golden clasp of love.

Jesus Our Comrade

Jack and Billy were very happily playing together one bright morning. They were in Jack's back yard, swinging up and down on the teeter-totter. These two small boys thought the old "teeter" had never "tottered" quite so well as it did just then.

Soon George came along and stood watching their fun, wishing he could share in it. Now George was not much older than Jack and Billy were, but he was quite a bit heavier. He chased both of the smaller boys away and sat down on one end of the long plank himself.

George just sat there for a long, long time. At least it seemed a long time to him. When he tried to swing by jumping up off the ground, the teeter came down with a hard bump that jarred him terribly.

The fun was all gone. He finally decided that he couldn't swing by himself, and so he called Henry over to sit on the other end of the plank. But still it didn't work. Henry went up into the air and stayed there, while George was still on the ground.

Then George found out something he hadn't thought of before. And that was that as long as he kept the longest part of the plank he couldn't swing. So George got off, let the board down so that Henry could get off, too, and then divided the board evenly. Once more they started, and the teeter worked perfectly.

The selfish boy learned that he must divide evenly and give pleasure to his companion, if he wanted to have any fun himself.

You know, boys and girls, life itself is a great deal like a teeter-totter. We must share our joys in order to get the most out of them. And one person, living alone or for himself, cannot get the most out of life.

It takes partnership or fellowship, as the Apostle John tells us in our lesson for December 12, to bring out the best there is in us. And the finest comradeship or fellowship is found with Jesus, our Savior.

John tells us how to find this fellowship, and he ought to know. For, you remember, he was called the disciple whom Jesus loved. And he was the one who leaned on Jesus' breast at their last supper together.

John says that if we walk in the light, as Jesus walked in the light, we will have fellowship or friendship with Him and with each other. And John tells us this so that we may be happy. "That your joy may be full," is the way he puts it.

Think of the very best friend you have in life, the one you like most to be with. Then think of Jesus as such a Friend or Comrade, only much better and much dearer. The older you grow the dearer and closer He will be to you.

Letter Writers

Our lesson this week is taken from a letter written by the Apostle John to the church. Of course, you know that in ancient times letters weren't written as they are now. But lately, so the New Century Leader tells us, some letters have been discovered in Egypt that give us an idea of the letter writing of ancient times.

Pens were cut from reeds and looked like what we call "quills." The ink was a mixture of charcoal, gum, and water, and was of excellent quality, the discoverers say, because the color is so well preserved.

The letter when finished was rolled and tied with a string and sealed. It was then carried by a friend to the one for whom it was intended.

Professional letter writers were sometimes hired to do the writing for others, and they are still to be hired in Palestine. These writers are often seen sitting along the streets, and they write many of the letters of those who live in the towns and villages of the Holy Land.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

MINISTERIAL TRAINING

Have you read the very important announcement from Bro. C. E. Randall, which appears on the front page of this issue? If not, you had better do so at once. It is something you have waited for for a long time. Pray over it—talk it over with every person young and old who may be interested in entering the Lord's work. More about this attractive plan for the training of ministers and others in the near future.

CHRISTMAS HERALD ORDERS ARE MOUNTING

Already many orders have been received for additional copies of our great Christmas special. A special cover, printed in two colors, is being planned.

Articles by selected writers will tell the joyful story of the Savior of Bethlehem from beginning to end, unfolding a harmonious picture of God's plan for human redemption in a most appealing way. This is just the thing you have been looking for to give to your friends that they may know the beauty and glory of the hope you hold.

Remember! The paper will also contain brief greetings of the season from many of our ministers, men whom you know and love for what they have done for you and for your family in directing your thoughts toward the coming and kingdom of the Lord.

FIVE CENTS EACH! That is all it will cost you to have a copy of the Christmas Restitution Herald mailed to a friend—One Dollar will send copies to twenty of your relatives and friends and acquaint them with what the Lord Jesus Christ means to you.

Better make that list out at once and mail it to us so that we may know just how many extra copies to print for you!

With deepest sorrow we learn of the sudden death of Sr. Violet Moore of Niagara Falls, N. Y. Sr. Moore was the wife of Bro. James Moore and the mother of Bro. Earl Moore. She has been a faithful and beloved member of the church in the Falls for many years. Our hearts go out in sympathy to her husband and son. Obituary will follow.

LOUISIANA CHURCH NOTES

Rally Day at Blood River was a success in every way, and the attendance exceeded our expectations. There were 60 out for Sunday school and 85 for church service.

We were much pleased with our attendance at the evening service at Happy Woods, too, for the largest audience since July was present.

Another pioneer of the faith was lost to us this past week, when Mrs. L. C. Anthon, Sr. was taken by death after a lingering illness. Mrs. Anthon, together with her husband, was baptized by Bro. W. H. Wilson in 1890, and remained true and loyal to the end.

Plans are being made for the annual Christmas programs to be given at both churches this Christmas season. We anticipate interesting and profitable programs.

Harry Goekler, Pastor.

A YEAR-LONG CHRISTMAS GIFT!

In planning your Christmas giving, two things should be taken into consideration: first, the suitability of the gift to the recipient; and, second, the lasting quality of it.

When you give your friends a year's subscription to The Restitution Herald as a Christmas present, you meet both of these requirements fully.

The Restitution Herald, with its richly varied contents, provides an interesting and instructive source of genuine pleasure to all members of the family.

Put The Restitution Herald at the very top of your Christmas Shopping List at once! Send it for an entire year to your dearest friends, that they may enjoy it with you!

As each new issue reaches the one for whom it is intended, he or she is immediately reminded of the thoughtful friend who made its welcome visits possible. The paper thus becomes a WEEKLY rather than a YEARLY Christmas gift!

The price to New Subscribers per year is $1.00. Address, National Bible Institution, Oregon, Ill.

REPORT OF EVANGELIST T. A. DRINKARD

I am glad to see the interest growing in preaching the gospel. There are many today who need the comforting influence of this glorious truth and it is interesting to see their faith revive when the gospel is presented from the Word of God. Our pioneer brethren had the same Word that we have, but they may not have had so many modernistic theories to deal with.

God sent His Son into the world to save men and women, and that Son selected men who were qualified and efficient to carry on this great work after His death. We are asked, "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation, which at the first was spoken by the Son of God (Heb. 2:1-3)?"

(May the editor also ask: How may we who know these precious and vital truths escape condemnation when the Lord comes if we make no effort to bring them to the attention of others?)

We must carry this message of the kingdom to those in need, to those who have not heard it. This is God's plan and those who assist in carrying it out will be working in harmony with the Lord's will.

My detailed report for November is as follows: Ater, Tex., (6-7), 2 sermons; Becker Mountain, Ark., (11-14), 5 sermons; Cleveland, Ark., (19-21, 25), 5 sermons; Little Rock, Ark., (28), 1 sermon. Places visited 4; sermons delivered, 13. Expenses, $12.94. Receipts, $62.80.

May God give strength to our hands for the work before us and enable us to answer the prayers of many who are calling for help. Will you pray for this work, and not only pray for it, but give of your means to make that prayer come true?

T. A. Drinkard,
Handley, Texas.

TO OUR MINISTERS

If you have not already done so, please hurry your Christmas Greeting to us for the special edition. We want every minister of the Church of God represented. No charge—no further obligation.

OUR EVANGELIST HELPERS

Bro. T. A. Drinkard of Handley, Tex., whose monthly report appears in this issue, enclosed with his report the names and money order for eight new subscribers to The Restitution Herald at our special holiday rate of One Dollar for a full year. We deeply appreciate the help ministers and other workers give us in this way. They realize that The Herald and its success is the responsibility of the entire brotherhood and that the paper stands ready and willing to assist evangelists and pastors and local churches in every possible way in their efforts to advance the truth of God.

ELDER E. E. GIESLER IN TEXAS

Elder and Mrs. E. E. Giesler of Moorefield, Neb., have gone to the Lone Star State for the winter. They will be available for meetings anywhere their services may be desired. Their address is San Saba, Texas. It will be remembered that Bro. and Sr. Giesler were largely instrumental in establishing the new Church of God in the city of Houston, Tex.

The pastor of the Oregon, Ill., church last Sunday night began a series of pre-Christmas sermons under the general title of "Fore-shadows of Bethlehem." They will treat in a dramatic manner of the first and second advents of our Lord. The pastor will be assisted by various members of the congregation and the choir.

LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS

A small congregation of the one faith of the Church of God of the Abrahamic Faith met in the home of Bro. and Sr. R. D. Stanton. Bro. T. A. Drinkard delivered a fine sermon on "The Great Salvation" connected with the kingdom. We had never met Bro. Drinkard before and certainly enjoyed this sermon and his meeting with us. We have planned to have him meet with us around the third Sunday of each month, or shortly thereafter.

Mrs. R. D. Stanton.

HERALD RECEIPTS

"FUNERAL CUSTOMS DEPLORED"

We do not often call particular attention to a selected article, but the one we publish under the above title is of such a nature that we feel that your careful attention should be directed to it. We invite our readers, ministers and laymen alike, to write us briefly as to their opinions of the ideas expressed, whether you approve or disapprove them.

MRS. L. C. ANTHON, SR.

Miss Carrie Trescott was born in Marshall, Minn., September 21, 1866, and died at her home near Hammond, La., November 24, 1937.

She was married to L. C. Anthon in 1885, and to this union seven sons were born, three preceding her in death. Her husband also preceded her in death more than ten years ago.

She became a member of the Happy Woods Church of God in 1890, being baptized by Bro. W. H. Wilson, and since that time has been a loyal worker for the cause of truth.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer Thursday afternoon, Nov. 25, at the home and words of comfort and hope were spoken concerning the morn of the resurrection when sickness, sorrow, and death shall be no more.

Harry Goekler.

"I WILL SEE YOU AGAIN"

The poem which appears in this issue under the above title, was composed by Bro. S. A. Chaplin, Jan. 8, 1875. Bro. Chaplin was editor of "The Restitution" for many years, and one of our most accomplished interpreters of the Bible. He is still affectionately remembered by many of the older ones in the Church of God.

"I WILL SEE YOU AGAIN"

By S. A. Chaplin

"And ye now therefore have sorrow; but I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you." —John 16:22.

The church in robes of widowhood
Awaits her Lord's return;
Sad, homeless here, bereft of good—
Her message many spurn;
With perils thick'ning on each hand,
With aching heart and head,
She treads the desert's scorching sand,
By Cloud and pillar led.

'Tis heavenly bread sustains her heart
Along the dreary way;
Waters from heavenly fount that start,
Her burning thirst allay.
And though her tears bedew the sod
O'er sons and daughters spread,
Unfaltering faith has she that God
Will raise them from the dead.

Lord Jesus, take Thy chosen church
To Thee in wedded plight;
From death and life, in closest search,
Bring her fair form to light.
With crown of glory on her brow,
And regal bridal vest—
Displace the robes that clothe her now,
And take her to Thy rest.

Dr. J. M. Byler, M. D., S. T., author of the article entitled "The True Version," is nearly ninety years of age. He was once an examining surgeon for the United States Government. His home is in Warsaw, Indiana.

APPRECIATION

"My mother subscribed for The Restitution Herald for me recently and I must say that I enjoy reading it very much," writes Mrs. Mac F. Swanson, Hector, Minn. "The present condition of the world surely calls for a righteous Master!"

How glad we are to know that such a "Master" will soon come to rule the nations as God would have them to be ruled!

"I always enjoy reading The Restitution Herald and I know that others do, too," writes Sr. Elias Thorene of Mora, Minn. "I am looking forward to Christ's coming and ask for your prayers that I may prove faithful."

Sr. Thorene will be mentioned in our Community Prayer Service at Oregon on Wednesday night.

Another appreciative reader, Sr. Margaret Burns, Philadelphia, Pa., says, "I am still enjoying The Herald and find it very helpful and encouraging along spiritual lines, especially so during these days of the world's unrest and trouble preceding the Lord's return for His saints."

"The Restitution Herald grows better and better," writes Sr. E. C. Olmstead of Hines, Minn. "One is encouraged to dive ever more deeply into the Word of God by the perusal of its contents."

One of the chief purposes of a religious journal is to encourage Bible study through which spirituality and interest in eternal things is developed. We are pleased to know that The Herald is accomplishing this purpose.

We Are "Falling Away"!

By the Editor

"EXCEPT there come a falling away first!" Those words have a most ominous sound to us—and well they may, for they were not intended for the church at Thessalonica alone, to which body they were originally addressed, but they were indited especially and most needfully to the Church of God in America—and throughout the world—today. Paul, who penned them, may not himself have been fully cognizant of their far-reaching implications as to time. Few of the believers of that period realized that two thousand years must intervene between the ascension and the return of our Lord. Peter, who was warned of that prolonged interval (2 Peter 3:1-4, 8, 9), failed to grasp the fact that "one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." So whatever he was inspired to write—whatever Paul was impressed to assert by way of warning—was looked upon from the standpoint of the immediate present. Each one who spoke as he was "moved by the Holy Spirit" believed his predictions would have their fulfillment in his own lifetime. But let us make no mistake! Those words of solemn warning were intended for us "upon whom the ends of the world are come."

"Except there come a falling away first!" The falling away was to be from the Church of God—from the true body of believers in the gospel of the kingdom of God, not from numerous groups of pseudo-Christians who had long been enmeshed in the mazes of pagan theology and Roman traditions.

"A falling away first!" The falling away here predicted was to take place in the Church of God, not at the beginning of its history, not in the so-called "Dark Ages," not throughout the protracted period of its world wide "witnessing" for Christ, but at a certain specified time, apparently just prior to our Lord's return. The Greek inserts the definite article—it is "the falling away" (1 Thess. 2:3, A. R. V.), not "a falling away." The Emphatic Diaglott renders it "the apostasy"; Goodspeed, "the rebellion," as does Moffatt. The force of the article should not be overlooked nor the equally important fact that the apostasy mentioned here is given as an indication of our Lord's coming.

While it is undeniably true that the nominal (Please turn to page 11)

Religious Freedom Guaranteed

"Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free."—Galatians 5:1.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 1.—Children whose religious beliefs forbid them to salute the American flag cannot be expelled from the public schools for failure to do so, Federal Judge Albert B. Maris ruled today. His ruling came in the case of two children, members of the "Jehovah's Witnesses" sect, who were expelled from a Minersville, Pa., school two years ago. The decision did not order the children reinstated, but held that their religious beliefs relieved them of the duty of saluting the flag unless it could be proved that their refusal was detrimental to the public welfare.

"Liberty of conscience means liberty for each individual to decide for himself what is to him religious," the opinion said. "If an individual sincerely bases his acts or refusals to act on religious grounds they must be accepted as such and may only be interfered with if it becomes necessary to do so in connection with the exercise of police power. . . . To permit public officers to determine whether the views of individuals sincerely held and their acts sincerely undertaken on religious grounds are in fact based on convictions religious in character would be to sound the death knell of religious liberty. To such pernicious and alien doctrine this court cannot subscribe."

Judge Maris said that it seemed obvious that the refusal of the Gobitis children to salute the flag "would not in any way prejudice or imperil the public safety, health, or morals, or property, or personal rights of their fellow citizens."

We have a pretty fine and liberal Government after all! It sometimes takes it a good while to act on a matter where patriotic emotionalism enters the picture, but under normal conditions we may depend upon it to provide the protection and the liberty a free people must exercise in order that they may develop the best qualities of citizenship within them. For ourselves we are glad to salute the flag which assures to us and to our children the free exercise of our religious convictions. We would sooner see the stars and stripes, the symbol of our right to worship God without fear, from within our church, than to see a seal and padlock on its doors from without!

Destiny of World Tied Up in Palestine

"The Most High divided to the nations their inheritance . . . according to the number of the children of Israel."—Deuteronomy 32:8.

CHICAGO, Dec. 12.—"The greatest international crisis is not in the Orient or in Spain, but in Palestine," asserted

Dr. J. Frank Norris, Baptist evangelist of Fort Worth, Texas, in an address in this city today. "In approximately ten thousand square miles of Jewish territory is wrapped up the destiny of the whole world, because it is the home of three great religions—Judaism, Mohammedanism, and Christianity," he continued. "There are in Palestine around 1,000,000 Arabs and only 400,000 Jews. The conflict that is going on there is age-long and world-wide. Arabs know that the Jew is on the run in Europe and must have a place for worship and peace in his spiritual homeland."

Rome Withdraws From League

"This day will I begin to put the . . . fear of thee upon the nations."—Deuteronomy 32:8.

ROME, Dec. 11.—Addressing one of the largest crowds that has ever assembled to hear him, Mussolini, speaking in a drenching rainstorm, announced the withdrawal of Italy from the League of Nations. "Now we are on our own," he shouted, "and depart without regrets from the reeling ship, where they do not work for peace but are preparing for war." Flaunting the military prowess of Rome, Il Duce said, "We have air, land, and sea arms, abundant and tempered by two victorious wars. But above all, we have the heroic spirit of our revolution, which no power in the world can break." Italy was compelled to withdraw from the League, he said, because "it was injuring our doctrine, our style, our temperament as soldiers."

Another announcement made on behalf of the King of Italy and "Emperor of Ethiopia," was to the effect that Victor Immanuel III is now Emperor of the "Roman Empire." This latter announcement is of even greater significance to the student of prophecy than is the former.

Germany naturally rejoices over the withdrawal of Italy from the League. Filled with fear of the possible economic domination of the world by the Jews, she no doubt hopes that a new anti-Semitic group may be formed including the "Roman Empire," Japan, and Germany.

The Wandering Jew

By the Editor

THE remarkable story of "The Wandering Jew" grew out of a misinterpreted remark which was made by our Lord in the presence of His disciples following His resurrection and but a short time before His ascension.

The strange traditions concerning the "Man Who Could Not Die" are found in practically all European countries and reach back as far as the year 1259 A. D., when Benedictine's chronicler, Matthaëus Parisus, gave in his Historia Major an account which he professed to have received from an Armenian bishop, who in turn had received it from the Wandering Jew himself.

Before recalling the story to your minds as it has been handed down through the ages, I will direct your attention to the statement of the Lord, out of which the deathless tradition grew. It will serve the double purpose of illustrating how easily men misapply inspired utterances, and, second, how completely our Lord anticipated such misinterpretations of His words and prepared to overcome their effect.

The passage is found in the 21st chapter of John. Following the miracle of the remarkable draught of fishes, Jesus invited Peter and the others, including John who narrates the happening, to sit down and dine.

After the meal was over the Lord addressed His remarks especially to Peter, questioning him repeatedly concerning the depth of his affection. The record continues:

"Peter was grieved because he said unto him the third time, Lovest thou me? And he said unto him, Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee. Jesus saith unto him, Feed my sheep. . . . And when he had spoken this, he saith unto him, Follow me. Then Peter, turning about, seeth the disciple whom Jesus loved following; which also leaned on his breast at supper, and . . . saith to Jesus, Lord, and what shall this man do?

"Jesus saith unto him, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? follow thou me.

"Then went this saying abroad among the brethren, that that disciple should not die; but Jesus said not unto him, He shall not die; but, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?" (John 21).

Such is the historical source of the strange story of "The Wandering Jew." Beginning in the twelfth century and continuing on down to the eighteenth, there have appeared from time to time in various parts of Europe wanderers who claimed to have been cursed by Jesus to live until He should come again. Traveling from place to place, from country to country, seldom having a settled abode anywhere, these men, or that man, as tradition would have it, continued to live, ever craving the death which would not come!

Now, of course, there is no truth in that strange old story, as we have seen. There is no real historical basis for it. Yet it provides us with a striking parable of the Jewish people from the time in which they rejected Jesus as their Messiah to the present day. For the Jews are a race of wanderers. They are found in all parts of the world.

"From Greenland's icy mountains, To India's coral strand," there is no spot that has not felt the pressure of the foot of the "Wandering Jew"!

The reason for this widespread and lasting dispersion is clearly revealed in the Bible. It was foreseen, and the people were forewarned of its coming as far back as in the days of Moses, who was inspired to say:

"If thou wilt not observe to do all the words of this law that are written in this book, that thou mayest fear this glorious and fearful name, THE LORD THY GOD; then . . . the Lord shall scatter thee among all people, from one end of the earth even unto the other. . . . And among those nations shalt thou find no ease, neither shall the sole of thy foot have rest: but the Lord shall give thee a trembling heart, and failing eyes, and sorrow of mind: and thy life shall hang in doubt before thee; and thou shalt fear day and night, and shalt have none assurance of thy

It is interesting to trace this remarkable race as it wandered hither and thither throughout the earth, observing how everywhere it went it was "evil spoken of"; for the curse of an outraged deity followed it! Escape was impossible! God had predicted (Please turn to page 10)

"Be Ye Also Ready"

Have your lamps all trimmed and burning,
Filled with love and holy yearning,
Waiting for your Lord's returning.

Gird yourselves, and be in waiting,
Nothing from your zeal abating,
Worldly pomp and glory hating.

Be ye patient and forbearing,
In reproaches, meekly sharing,
In the right, be brave and daring.

Poor in life and low in station,
Mind it not, for your relation
Is by faith, in God's salvation.

Things are waxing old and hoary,
Soon will dawn the promised glory,
Burden of the prophets' story.

In the east the light is breaking,
Palestine to life is waking,
European thrones are shaking.

Soon, ah! soon the heavens rending,
Will reveal the Lord descending,
To a reign of peace unending!

The Bible and Biology

By Norman John Macleod

MUCH harm has come to the religious beliefs of the people today because of the misunderstandings created by two classes of teachers. The biologist who knows nothing about religion but who wishes to gain a reputation for knowing a great deal, is no more guilty in the controversy between biology and the Bible than the religionist who knows nothing about biology, but harps on "fundamentals" and attacks the supposed conclusions of the biologists. Much of the misunderstanding arises from a misconception of the nature of biology and of the principal theme of such books as Genesis.

Biology is not a system of religious beliefs. In its true light it does not treat of religion, God, and salvation. It is interested in observing the phenomena of life and in noting their basic interrelations. But this does not say that some people who have gained repute as biologists, historians, scientists, false and otherwise, do not intrude biological theories into religious teaching. That fact is only too well known to need elaboration.

On the other hand, religion is not a science. Genesis is not a treatise on astronomy, biology, geology, or any other science. Its theme deals primarily with God and with the chosen people and their relations with God. But some people have tried to make the first chapters of Genesis serve as a textbook for all the sciences. It will not do. A real basis exists, however, for discussions of the biology of Genesis and the semi-religious problems of biology. Both Genesis and biology endeavor to answer the questions: From where did life come? and, How did life reach its present status? To answer these questions many volumes have been written, some by men who assumed religious authority and others by men who posed as the very best biologists. Most of these so-called authorities on the subject see a great conflict between science and the Bible as to the conclusions reached. So for the ordinary layman who seeks understanding along this line, the way is very difficult. The thoughtful scientist and the intelligent believer will see, however, that no such conflict exists.

One modern writer who has investigated both of the fundamental problems just stated, and has presented them exhaustively, is Henry Fairfield Osborn. In a large two-volume work called The Origin of Life, this author has set forth the opinions of his science as to the subject of how life began on the earth. After he has examined all the available theories of biologists of all times he states that biology cannot answer the question. If anyone wishes an even plausible explanation he must go elsewhere. As far as man with his short life and limited mind is able to penetrate the findings of biology, there never was a beginning. The span of life keeps man from performing the most rudimentary experiments upon plant and animal life, to say nothing of being able to reach a sound theory as to life's origin. But he that is wise knows where to go for an authoritative answer to this, as to other problems pertaining to life and its manifestations.

The following article, which appeared in THE RESTITUTION HERALD, June 18, 1929, is of such lasting value in these times of pseudo-scientific Biblical criticism that we feel that it should be brought to the attention of our readers again.

Another most illuminating work by the same eminent scientist is his From the Greeks to Darwin. Nobody, scientist or believer in the Bible, can assert his claim to knowledge of evolution until he has read that book. Professor Osborn outlines something more than two hundred theories of evolution, beginning with those of the ancient Greeks of the eighth century, B. C., and coming down to that of Charles Darwin in the nineteenth century, A. D. The thought of this work is not summarized but the intelligent reader will draw his own deductions from the text. Some of the theories recounted, especially those of the Middle Ages, were far from scientific. One of the theorists, for instance, said that he sat on a river's bank and saw leaves fall off a tree, and, as they fell into the river, they became ducks! Serious students need scarcely look at such foolishness.

Most of the theories of evolution assume that because the more complex forms of life came on earth later than the simple ones and bear marked resemblance to them, that the former came from the latter. No truly great biologist now admits the possibility that man evolved from an "insignificant piece of protoplasm." One of the foremost biologists at the international gathering of scientists in London held not long ago, stated that there is no scientific evidence that man has ever changed a great deal in his physical appearance; that neither man nor any great group of animals evolved from any preceding group or groups; but aside from the changes due to inheritance and selection which are seen on every hand, biology finds all major forms of life to be essentially immutable. Only such pseudo-scientists as H. G. Wells and his school of teachers and writers, still stick to the complete development hypothesis. At best, evolution is a theory, not a fact. It is a theory offered to explain some very interesting facts of biology. Is Genesis a theory? God forbid!

What was Moses writing about when he wrote the book called Genesis? Did he have in mind the various biological facts upon which are based the semi-scientific theories of the origin of life and of evolution? It is doubtful. Why, then, should he tell about the "beginning"? Was it not to explain the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob to a people brought up in slavery to an idolatrous nation? Many of the children of Israel no doubt had never heard of the true God, or if they had, had paid little heed; so Moses had to tell them that it was not Isis, Ptah, or Amon-Ra, who had brought forth the earth and all that is in it. In the beginning, God! In the end, God! It was God who created all things. The broad minded scientist will admit this point of view. Concerning the cheap-minded propagandist who calls himself a scientist, nobody needs to worry. To us God is "the beginning and the end."

The Superintendent's Responsibility

ANY position, whatever the magnitude of its scope or action, if its objectives are worth while, is a responsible position. The measure of the Sunday school superintendent's responsibility is determined largely by the position he holds in the life and activities of the church, and we believe in most schools that position is next to the pastor. This makes him largely responsible for the success or failure of the school. There are four outstanding types of Sunday schools: the impulsive school, the contentious school, the standpat school, and the progressive school. It is the last mentioned that we have in mind.

The superintendent is largely responsible for his own personality, which is his richest asset and highest qualification for leadership. His Christian integrity, his habits, his daily life, and his appearance count mightily in his work as a leader. The success of any organization depends largely on the personality of its leadership. A leaderless organization is an inefficient and non-productive organization. A person may be pious and good and yet be unable to awaken in others the spirit, the zeal, and the joy of service. Personality is a big factor in a superintendent's success.

The superintendent must know the purpose and objectives of the school. We must remember that the Sunday school is a school of religion. Therefore the superintendent must be a religious educator, one who fellowships with and commits his life to God. In order to do this he must constantly draw upon the available spiritual resources without which he cannot succeed. In fact, he must be a spiritual engineer as well as an educational leader.

The superintendent should acquaint himself with the great Sunday school movement, its origin, history, progress, and its many present activities.

The superintendent is also responsible for knowing the present-day trends in Christian education. The fact is, he needs to know the educational task of the church. He needs to know that the Sunday school is not separate from, but a definite, integral part of the church. He should read and study books on this subject.

The superintendent must be an organizer and administrator and be able, with the pastor and his staff of officers and teachers, to build a thorough, workable, productive organization whether the school be large or small. Size does not mean efficiency. He should be able to visualize or carry in his mind constantly the kind of school he desires and should work zealously toward that end. In order to do this, he must be able to work with others cooperatively and sympathetically. He must give and take. He must be able to delegate responsibility. He must have certain objectives and goals toward which he leads the whole school. Standards of efficiency should have a big place in his thinking and planning. He should have numerical goals such as enrollment and attendance. He should have leadership training goals. He should have spiritual goals such as church attendance, worship, decisions for Christ, uniting with the church, Christian giving, enlistment in Christian service, and personal Christian living. Without these the school is a failure.

The superintendent must have a time and program schedule for all his work as far as possible. By this we mean (1) time for beginning the sessions of his school and the program and associates to be used. An on-time schedule is vital. A belated superintendent means a sluggish, inefficient, uninteresting, unattractive school. (2) His schedule should include a prompt and detailed monthly report to the church board. (3) He should provide time for personal counsel with his officers and teachers with a view to aiding them in the solution of their problems. (4) It is vital that he have a regular monthly meeting of his Sunday school council, which is composed of all workers. (5) He must not fail to share and to lead his school to share the cooperative Christian education agencies, such as his denominational board, the city, county, and state councils of Christian education.

The superintendent should be progressive. A status quo, stereotyped procedure is the chronic disease of too many schools today. People get tired of the same old thing over and over again under the guise of religion. The superintendent's concern should be for the best in preparation, promptness, programs, lesson material, equipment, personnel, and preparation of his staff of workers, in records and reports, in grading and organization, in proper observation of the outstanding seasons of the church year, in music and finance, in the school's relation to the church, in the discovery of weak places in the school, and in the best use of every member of his staff.

The superintendent should keep in close touch with the pastor, the director of Christian education (if the church has one), his assistant superintendent, and all other officers and teachers, and be on the lookout for results constantly. It is a great and glorious privilege to be a Sunday school superintendent, and at the same time it is a great responsibility.—Charles W. Brewbaker in The New Century Leader; selected by James W. McLain.

Heading for the Last Round-up

“Ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times?”—Matthew 16:3.

DEAR READER, it is Jesus who asks this important question. And from one half the people in this wide world today comes the answer, “No, we cannot understand.” Neither do they read their Bibles nor try to understand, for they are willingly ignorant (2 Peter 3:5).

Now you may say, Well, how does this writer know that there are one half of the people who do not understand the signs of the times? For an answer I refer you to the 25th chapter of Matthew. There we have the words of Jesus in a parable comparing the kingdom of heaven to ten virgins which took their lamps and went forth to meet the Bridegroom. Five of them were wise and five were foolish. “And they that were foolish took their lamps and took no oil with them. But the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps.” So you see in this case the wise and the foolish were equally divided. Now the next two verses of this same chapter are very short, yet they have a great deal of importance and meaning in them. The 5th verse reads as follows: “While the bridegroom tarried they all slumbered and slept.” Now the point I wish to bring out is this: We know that the just sleep and so do the unjust. The foolish sleep and so do the wise. But not in the same order, for the wise before he lies down to sleep will bow at his bedside and his spirit will be bowed at the foot of the blood-stained cross of Calvary. Yes,

“He goes to that fountain so rich and sweet,
Casting his soul at the Savior’s feet.”

In so doing he is drinking of the water of life freely (Rev. 22:17). Therefore, he has filled his lamp with the spiritual oil that will last far beyond the midnight hour, and to the dawn of another day. And so you see that while his body is dead to the world in slumber, his spirit is awake and alive to the living God.

Here I have pointed out the ways of the wise and of the righteous person. Now, let us also take a look at the foolish and unrighteous.

He sits down and eats his meals without ever bowing his head or lifting his voice to thank God for his food. He lies down to sleep and never offers a prayer. Therefore, he has not filled his lamp with spiritual oil. And when the Bridegroom comes at midnight, his light will have gone out, for he has been sleeping the sleep of the foolish virgins, indifferent to the salvation of his soul; indifferent to God and blind to the signs of the times and to the soon coming of our Lord.

In Proverbs 6:9-11 we have the following words: “How long wilt thou sleep, O sluggard; when wilt thou arise out of thy sleep? Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep. So shall thy poverty come as one that travelleth, and thy want as an armed man.”

O, my dear people, do you realize that so sound is the sleep of the sluggard and the foolish virgins which are of the same class of people, that neither the mighty earthquakes that are happening in diverse places nor the bloody national calamities can arouse them to serious meditation?

I will next call your attention to the 6th verse of this 25th chapter of St. Matthew. Jesus says the Bridegroom comes at midnight! Why midnight? Because we are told in different places in the Bible that darkness shall cover the earth and gross darkness the people (Isa. 60:2, 3). Joel tells us there will be a day of thick darkness. Daniel says there will be a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation. Dear ones, this darkness doesn’t mean merely the going down of the sun, but it means just this: Those dark, muttering, hissing, growling, snarling, war clouds that are now arising before our very eyes, and the unrest and perplexity of the nations! Now add to these the fact that the hand of time on the great dial of Bible prophecy indicates that the end is near and even at the door. Truly, we are drawing close to the midnight hour! Please remember that God said through Daniel that the wise should understand, but none of the wicked would understand. Dear reader, which class are you in?

Now read and heed the following words from God. He said, in Ezekiel 38:4, that He would turn those warring nations back. Well, He did that. He also said in the same chapter that He would bring them forth again with all sorts of armor. Now this chapter makes it very plain that this next great world war will be the finish and that Jesus is coming during this great time of trouble. My dearly beloved people, please bear in mind the following scriptures that are being fulfilled and are very soon to be all fulfilled right before our eyes:

“When they shall say, Peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh” (2 Thess. 5:3). “For I will gather all nations to battle” (Zech. 14:2). “Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles, Prepare war, wake up the mighty men; let the men of war draw nigh. Beat your plowshares into swords and your pruninghooks into spears” (Joel 3:9, 10).

No wise thinking person can dispute the fulfillment of these prophecies. Truly, the whole world is preparing for war. Also the mighty men are being awakened and never in the history of the world has there been so many plowshares beaten into swords and scrap iron of all kinds has been gathered together in great quantities and manufactured into all kinds of armament. Now the question arises, What is the meaning of all this? The answer is, The end is near, even at our door!

“Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways, and be wise: which having no guide, overseer, or ruler, provideth her meat in the summer, and gathereth her food in the harvest" (Prov. 6:6-8). My dear unsaved friends, is it possible that with all the wisdom you have you are going to let so little a thing as an ant show more sound business judgment than you do? I am intreating you, begging you, to seek the Lord, lest the harvest time pass and you hear the words from Jesus, "Depart from me, I never knew you" (Matt. 7:23).

Christ says in many places in the Bible, "He that hath an ear, let him hear." You have an ear, haven't you? Then you should heed this message, for truly "there is a noise of a multitude in the mountains, like as of a great people; a tumultuous noise of the kingdoms of nations gathered together: the Lord of hosts mustereth the host of the battle" (Isa. 13:4). "A noise shall come even to the ends of the earth: for the Lord hath a controversy with the nations. . . Behold, evil shall go forth from nation to nation, and a great whirlwind shall be raised up from the coasts of the earth" (Jer. 25:31, 32).

My dear friends, I am right here telling you that this prophecy is being fulfilled, for truly a great evil is going from nation to nation, and we can see the nations lining up and taking sides. The wise cannot help but understand that the world is "heading for the last round-up."

In Isaiah 33:7 we read that "the ambassadors shall weep bitterly." Truly, it looks like this prophecy is about to be fulfilled, for the ambassadors have tried in vain to bring about peace. Jeremiah 6:14 and 8:11 tell us that they shall be saying, "Peace, peace, when there is no peace." Isaiah gives forth a warning: "Hearken, ye people: let the earth hear, and all that is therein; the world, and all things that come forth of it. For the indignation of the Lord is upon all nations, and his fury upon all their armies" (Isa. 34:1, 2). In Jeremiah 6:17 we have the following words of God: "Also I set watchmen over you, saying, Hearken to the sound of the trumpet. But they said, We will not hearken. . . Hear, O earth: behold, I will bring evil upon this people, even the fruits of their thoughts, because they have not hearkened unto my words, nor to my law, but rejected it."

O my people, my people, won't you hearken? Won't you hearken to God's words and to His law before darkness covers this earth and gross darkness the people and you feel the wrath of God's indignation being poured out upon you? Then mercy's door will be shut.—J. H. Anderson in The Bible Advocate.

Crystallized Religion

THE constant pitfall of religion has been formalism. Too often the spiritual life of Christians has degenerated into a mere series of ceremonies.

"The tendency of religion in all ages," says Charles Silvester Horne, "has been to stereotype its forms and formulas. . . . To the apostles of uniformity everything is regulated by unchangeable routine. There is no room for surprises. All departures from precedent are extravagances. The Spirit of God is carefully restricted to well-defined functions, and within a limited area. Hence the spiritual life of the people of God must not overflow the appointed channels."

The course of religious history is replete with systems of thought and worship, each of which was a revolt against the crystallization of what was once a spiritual movement. But in a generation or two the new progressive movement becomes conservative and settles into fixed customs, set phrases and forms. Emphasis is laid on phrases and words and genuflections, till life and significance flee, leaving nought but magic formulas and declarations, a mere mumbling of which is supposed to be an "open sesame" to the portals of bliss.

Paganism is largely, if not entirely, such a religion. The old Roman faiths set great value on "the most punctilious observance of traditional religious ceremonies," and had "a jealous aversion to any innovations in religion," Neander tells us. Inasmuch as the very words, phrases, movements, and even the tones used, determined the efficacy of the worship, a priesthood sprang into existence which was expert in this mummery. A man's spiritual state of mind exercised no influence whatever on whether or not he believed in the priest's incantations; this did not enter into the consideration.

The Jewish religion was originally a revelation of God. Moses saw in the mount the sanctuary service in all its details. It was prefiguration of the ministry of Christ, both in His earthly life and in His heavenly mediation. A believing Hebrew looked forward and "rejoiced to see my day: and he saw it, and was glad," Christ said (John 8:56). The book of Hebrews, in the New Testament, is the gospel interpretation of the Mosaic ceremony. The whole system was based on the faith of the offerer. "By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts" (Heb. 11:4). To have efficacy, the sacrifice must be "mixed with faith" (Heb. 4:2).

But the Jewish religion soon degenerated into mere butchery. The offering of the single lamb was sufficient to evidence faith in the coming Deliverer; but imagine the rivers of blood when 22,000 oxen and 120,000 sheep were slaughtered at one time (1 Kings 8:63)! The priesthood had substituted ceremony for worship, and soon real spirituality disappeared. A little Boy of twelve once asked the priests the meaning of it all, and they could not answer Him (Luke 2:46-48).

"VAIN OBLATIONS"

But, centuries before, God had sent strong denunciations of the Jewish formalities through the Prophet Isaiah, con-denying their "vain oblations" (Isa. 1:13), and telling them that the very things He had commanded them to do had become an "abomination" to Him. Amos likewise told the people that God despised their offering and the noise of their songs (Amos 5:22, 23). The Savior Himself, in the days of His ministry, also denounced their "vain repetitions" (Matt. 6:7).

Jesus called for and instituted a spiritual worship. He told His followers: "The hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth: for the Father seeketh such to worship him. God is a spirit; and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth" (John 4:23, 24). The spirit and intention are emphasized anew. Paul phrases it, "If there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath" (2 Cor. 8:12). The poor widow cast in more than all the wealthy (Mark 12:43). The spirit gives life, and is of greater importance than the letter, a slavish subservience to which kills the spirit (2 Cor. 3:6).

But in a few centuries apostasy again places emphasis on the form. Councils are held to determine the exact phraseology of the baptismal formula and other religious rites. Belief has hardened into creeds, the mere repetition of which is all-sufficient. Prayer, as a speaking of the soul to God, becomes a mere repetition of set phrases. Religion becomes nothing more than a round of ceremonies.

As Jesus instructed His disciples, He indeed gave them certain rites which were to serve them as a guide in the practice of their devotions. These are of value as long as they are practiced by a faithful, spiritual child of God; they become meaningless when done as a task wherewith to obtain merit. The value is in their significance rather than in their performance. But these have been prostituted into "sacraments," the mere doing of which is supposed to be efficacious in obtaining merit. Let us notice them one by one:

THE MEANING OF BAPTISM

Baptism is taught early in God's Word. It is made obligatory by Christ in His commission (Matt. 28:19) and in His talk to Nicodemus (John 3:5). But it must needs retain its significance if it is to be of value. It must be an act of worship; and to be this, it must hold its spiritual implication. The sinner who requests baptism must recognize his sinfulness, must accept Christ as his Redeemer, and must confess and renounce his sins. Baptism becomes, then, a burial with Christ (Rom. 6:4). But unless there is previous repentance and confession, unless faith accompanies the act, it is a meaningless ceremony—useless, if not an abomination, in the sight of God.

The act of uniting with the church is a spiritual act of worship. In the apostles' day it was said, "The Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved" (Acts 2:47). This was synonymous with being "added unto the Lord" (Acts 11:24). At rebirth the sinner becomes a member of Christ's mystical body (1 Cor. 12:27). As baptism presupposes, and must be preceded by a dying to sin, if it is to be of any value, and as it is the outward sign of an inward experience, so uniting with God's visible church presupposes a uniting with Christ by faith. The church thus becomes more than a club or society—it is the body of Christ.

The Lord's Supper has a significance which, unless experienced, reduces the act to a mere futility. We are to commune with Christ (Rev. 3:20) daily. We are to eat His flesh and drink His blood (John 6:54). This is a spiritual daily experience, without which it is impossible to grow in the Christian life (John 6:63). How do we grow? By feeding on His word (Matt. 4:4). The significance of the partaking of the bread and wine lies in this daily Christian experience of receiving spiritual help from Christ's word—in living communion with Him. The outward partaking of the bread is but a testimony that the Christian is inwardly partaking of God's strength through an assimilation of His Word. If this is not the case, the outward act is but a meaningless form.

RELIGION WITHOUT GOD

Religion today has largely lost its significance. That is why it places so much importance on the mere externals. "Israel hath forgotten his Maker, and buildeth temples" (Hosea 8:14). Mosques, synagogues, cathedrals, temples, churches, and chapels cover the earth. Never was so much attention given to church architecture; but never was real religion at a lower ebb in the earth than it is today. Carrell has said: "For most civilized people, churches are but museums where rest dead religions." Another writer declares that "our civilization, born of a camouflaged Christianity, is dead also. Selfishness killed it. If the living Christ, the Great Solitary One, had not been exiled from our laws, our customs, even from our religion, we would not be in this extremity."

Form and ceremony abound in the religious world. The Apostle Paul saw that this condition would exist "in the last days," and says that there would be many who would be "having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof" (2 Tim. 3:1-5). Incense does not make the prayer acceptable to God. The sacrifices of the Lord are still a broken spirit; "a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise" (Psa. 51:17). "Wherewith shall I come before the Lord, and bow myself before the high God? shall I come before Him with burnt offerings, with calves of a year old? Will the Lord be pleased with thousands of rams, or with ten thousands of rivers of oil? shall I give my firstborn for my transgression, the fruit of my body for the sin of my soul? He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?" (Micah 6:6-8).

Today, at this time of irreligious pomp and ceremony, of form and rite, with little or no heart service, God sends His message into all "the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him" (Rev. 14:6, 7). A call to renewed worship of God is sounding forth to all the world. A renewed emphasis on the spirit of worship, rather than on a spiritless form, is being made.

This is a timely message. As the president of Yale University has well said, "Our world has today no greater need than a vigorous revival of true religion." And another writer is quoted as giving this timely if alarming statement: "America . . . appears to have done away with religion, while it still keeps the skeleton of Christianity alive."

Is it not time, then, for all Christians to turn to a true and living faith, and to accept the power and grace of Christ into their hearts?—Henry F. Brown in Signs of the Times.

"WITH THESE WORDS"

"WHEREFORE comfort one another with these words" (1 Thess. 4:18). In the five verses preceding this verse in Thessalonians, the Apostle Paul is writing about the second advent of our Lord. Evidently the earnestness of Paul's preaching on the coming of Christ had made some of the newer converts in the church uneasy about their own friends, who either had died, or might die, before His coming. Probably they imagined that these would be excluded from the blessings of that event. This thought, preying on their minds, was working injury to their spiritual life. So Paul felt called upon to allay their fears in this letter.

"I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren," he wrote, "concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not even as others which have no hope." Then he went on to show them that, as Jesus died and rose again, even so them also who are in union with Christ shall be brought to life in that day. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." These are the words with which God's people are to comfort one another.

This is in line with the thought brought out in the 15th chapter of his first letter to the church at Corinth. "Christ (is) risen from among the dead, and become the firstfruits of them that slept." Therefore, "all in Christ shall be made alive." Why the "all"? Because the "last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." Only in the resurrection can death be destroyed. "The dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we (the living) shall be changed. . . . Then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory." The teaching of both the Old and New Testaments is entirely in accord with that of the two chapters just considered.

Yet, as the writer listens to attempts of ministers to "comfort" with other words at the funeral of relatives, friends, and acquaintances, he is forced to wonder and question whether this is wholly through ignorance or a "racket."

Recently, at the funeral of one with whom we had an acquaintance for many years, the minister spoke of God as being ready to welcome into eternal bliss this one who "had not died," but had "just passed on." This, despite the fact that the minister knew that the person had no use for the church or for religion and believed in no hereafter!

This is but one of numerous cases of the same type to which we have listened. Flowery words about the person who is not the one we see lying there, but is gone to be with God! Not dead, but more alive than ever before! Not silent in death, but singing praises around the throne! All this, whether the person be a sinner or a saint. These are the words of comfort usually spoken at the funeral of anyone. No mention of a Christian gone to sleep in the hope of resurrection, or of a hope of future life because that believer died in union with Christ. No! But the same theory for Christian or unbeliever! A mere change of life that does not end! Death not an enemy, but a step from this life to a higher one!—Arthur E. Conant in The Herald of Life.

MEDITATION ON PRAYER

AN OLDER member of our congregation once said in prayer meeting: "When I think of the thousands of prayers that have gone up to the throne of God through the years that I have worshiped here, it makes me realize our ineffectualness." At times all of us have felt that way, both in groups and individually. Surely the fault is with us, for God is more willing to give than we are to receive. Do we hinder our prayers from reaching into the heart of God?

One morning last summer after our morning devotions, the little boy staying with us said to me: "Do you know what you sounded like when you prayed? It seemed that you were telling God, instead of asking Him, and saying please."

How true of many of us. Giving orders to God! Cataloging our needs—businesslike, matter of fact—reminding Him of this and that person or interest we want blessed. Then we hurry from these words, brushing them from our mind for the duties of the day.

Yet, even asking is the lowest form of prayer. Prayer is a magnificent office. It is the greatest act man is capable of performing. Consider the heavens, the whole universe, mankind made in His image. Think of time, eternity, and then realize that that God is your Father!

How, then, do we come into His presence? Will we bluster in, hurriedly, irreverently? Will we spend a few minutes on our knees, our mind playing hopscotch between some petition, and John's plans for his trip—between asking God to keep our loved ones this day, and a pair of shoes in the window which were just what we had been hunting for? It seems sacrilegious to say, yet even in secret prayer our minds do thus dishonor God. Alexander Whyte in his book, Lord, Teach Us to Pray, says: "But if we enter our closet with half the fear, with half the wonder and awe, with half the anxiety to be recognized and addressed, with which we would enter the palace of a prince on earth, then, so willing is God to be approached that He will immediately meet with us and will bless us. Hurry, then, in our secret devotions, is impossible."

God cannot commune as friend to friend if we neglect Him, no more than we can in earthly friendships. Learn to talk with God. Often we truly have no desire to do this. Then tell Him so. Be honest. Discuss your faults. Tell Him about your weaknesses of jealousy, temper, fear, lack of faith. Wait quietly and He will search the inward places, bring them to light, humble you, and show you the way to overcome.

But do not only ask. Do not fail to express your gratitude for the privilege of prayer, for His Son, for His past provision when you so little deserved it and so weakly trusted. If we thus seek we will not be hindering others. With this daily purging we cannot live in hypocrisy.

We must pray humbly, yes, but without wavering, with childlike, utter confidence, having first purged the unlovely from our inner lives. God will illumine us only one step at a time. We must not ask more, else we will not need faith for the future. Long ago a student talked far into the night with a professor about the religious questions that troubled him. As he left, the latter gave him a lantern. "Will this light you all the way home?" the professor asked. "Of course," replied the student. "Yet," the professor added, "it throws its light only a step ahead." For a moment the student looked at his teacher. Then: "I think I see what you mean, sir," he said. "If I keep taking the next step, the light keeps going on before me, one step at a time, all the way."

Let us pray.—Hope Boynton Friedmann in The Herald of Life.

THE WANDERING JEW

that such would be the fate of Israel in case they disobeyed His voice and forgot His law!

The same solemn warning was repeated at different periods of their history.

"Therefore thus saith the Lord; Ask ye now among the heathen, who hath heard such things: the virgin of Israel hath done a very terrible thing. . . . I will scatter them as with an east wind before the enemy; I will shew them the back, and not the face, on the day of their calamity" (Jer. 18:13, 17).

"Thus saith the Lord of hosts; Behold, I will send upon them the sword, the famine, and the pestilence, and will make them like vile figs, that cannot be eaten, for they are so evil. And I will persecute them with the sword, with the famine, and with the pestilence, and will deliver them to be removed to all kingdoms of the earth, to be a hissing, and a reproach, among all the nations whither I have driven them" (Jer. 29:17, 18).

All this predicted disaster has overtaken them!

History shows that when the Romans overthrew Jerusalem for the last time, "the whole of Judea was turned into a desert; about 985 towns and villages were laid in ashes; fifty of their fortresses were razed to the ground. . . (while) previous invasions and conquests had carried away Jewish captives, slaves, fugitives, exiles, and emigrants into the remotest provinces of the empire" (McClintock and Strong).

But the borders of the Roman Empire did not limit their punitive dispersion, for they are known to have established colonies in China about the first century after Christ, and Roman Catholic missionaries found Jews occupying important posts under the Chinese Government in the seventeenth century.

Generally, however, their condition in all parts of the world was deplorable. Ground down into slavery, deprived of their property, driven from their homes, their children taken from them to be brought up in a faith opposed to theirs, they still survived in spite of all because they were waiting—like Simeon in the temple, they were "waiting for the consolation of Israel" and the coming of the "Lord's Christ"!

In England, France, Spain, and Germany, they were under almost constant persecution of the most relentless sort, yet through it all they never altogether forgot the God of their fathers! They sinned against Him grievously, but they did not forget Him! And God has not forgotten them! He has followed them in all their wanderings; He has remembered them in all their sufferings. And now at last the foot of the Wandering Jew is turning homeward—back toward the land of his fathers, back toward the beloved hills of Zion!

The World War opened the way for their return: first, by breaking the chains that bound the Land of Promise to the Turkish Empire; and, second, by establishing over it the sympathetic protectorate of the British Government.

But many of the Jews are not inclined to go back. They are prosperous and happy in the lands of their adoption and they do not care to sever the business and social ties which have been formed. But they must go home! God wills it so! If they will not go willingly, they must be forced to go!

And that is what has been happening during the past three or four years in Germany and is now taking place in Poland, which for so long a time afforded the distressed Jews a refuge. In Russia they are threatened with destruction of their religion if they remain and their religion it is that has held them together, scattered as they were, and made them a distinct and separate people even though they possessed no national home.

The Jew is surrounded by enemies on every side. He fears, as he suspects, all with whom he is compelled to make his home. And yet he has proven himself the greatest friend of all races, and to all the races, of mankind! He has brought to the world at large the richest blessings, the most priceless treasures, the most lasting benefits, of which humanity stands possessed today! For the Jewish people have brought to us the Bible and the Lord Jesus Christ!

In the near future, when they all are gathered home, and their Messiah becomes the beloved Monarch of a united world, when every knee shall bow before Him and every tongue confess to His glory and praise, then the Wandering Jew, now the despised outcast of the nations, will be restored to his former place of honor and, more splendid still, his former place of divine favor and blessing under God! And the Jewish people will no longer be followers, but recognized leaders, marching in advance, in the foremost rank of the world's new civilization, the civilization of the Kingdom of God upon the earth!

THE LIFE DIVINE

He walked the selfsame sod with men,
Saw the same stars and sun,
And rested as earth's weary rest,
When day at last was done—
Jesus the Man of heavenly birth,
The blest and holy Son.

He wept with those who weep below,
Touched childhood's simple grace,
Gave darkened eyes their sight again,
Bade sorrow leave its place,
And left the imprint of sweet joy
On many a saddened face.

He saw the angry scorn that burned
Around Him day by day,
Yet taught, with voice that echoes still,
Life's higher, holier way,
Then left the wondering, restless throng,
In quietness to pray.

He tasted death—all it could bring
Of bitterness and pain—
Passed through our world with all its sin,
Untouched by mortal stain.
They laid Him in earth's silent tomb,
But now He lives again.

O Love supreme, O Love divine,
My spirit longs to see
The sweet reflection of Thy life,
So kind, so true, so free,
Transferred to all the sons of men,
And even, Lord—to me.

WE ARE "FALLING AWAY"!

church, Catholic and Protestant alike, is "losing its hold upon the masses," and declining in active membership as well as in spirituality, this is not what the Apostle had been inspired to assert. The great "falling away" from the Church of God is to occur just before Jesus comes again to release the "little flock" that remained faithful from further anxieties and temptations to join the great army of religiously indifferent ones.

PAUL'S PREDICTION IS BEING FULFILLED AMONG US!

I do not speak here of the "departure from the faith," which some have made in the last few years, but rather of a much more serious condition that has developed among us of which the recession from the truth is but a symptom. What I refer to is the apathy, indifference, and unconcern toward evangelistic work which is apparent in almost every locality where we have a church, and even among the majority of our isolated brethren where no local organizations exist.

The reports from the Board of Evangelism is an evidence that the missionary spirit has almost died out among us. No one seems concerned about the salvation of others—no, that is perhaps a little strong—but no one appears zealously anxious to have the gospel of the kingdom and the great and vital truths which are associated with it, introduced in their communities—among their friends and relatives and acquaintances. This condition reveals a heart-saddening "falling away" from depth of interest in the "things which are most surely believed among us." We no longer feel that each one of us is personally responsible for the salvation of others. We apparently do not care! "The love of many" for the truth is "waxing cold"! Indifference has taken the place of a once fiery zeal. Do you wonder why? I will attempt in succeeding editorials to point out some of the causes that have led us as a people away from truth and earnestness and self-sacrificing service in these days. But until time permits me to do that, may I "beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him," that you pray and meditate thoughtfully on the meaning of these words, words which some one may possibly address to the Judge of all the world on the great day of final accounting in an attempt to excuse his failure to believe the truth that he might be saved: "I looked on my right hand, and beheld, but there was no man that would know me: refuge failed me; no man cared for my soul" (Psa. 142:4).

Berean Department

Cecil A. Smead, Editor, Blanchard, Mich.

We Take the Blame

The regular editor of the Berean Department must not be held accountable for anything that appears here this week. He knows nothing about it. Owing to a change in the date of issue for our Christmas number, of which Brother Smead could not be informed until it was too late for him to get additional material to us, it falls to the office editors to see that this usually very helpful page is filled, even if its contents do not reach the standard maintained by its editor.

We've Waited for This Opportunity

We are taking advantage of the opportunity this temporary change affords us to express a few things we have been thinking about for a long time concerning the Bereans.

In the first place, we would remind the Church of God that the National Berean Society has done more to promote and to maintain unity in this denomination than any other one force except THE RESTITUTION HERALD.

In the splendid series of Berean Bible Studies, which the Society has prepared and published, there has been placed in our hands the finest, the most generally acceptable and carefully systematized scriptural outline of our faith we have ever had. This has had a doctrinally unifying effect upon the entire church.

Neglected Children

None of us like to see children neglected. We want them to be cared for, protected, and taught. So far as the Bereans are concerned, it is quite apparent that they feel the same way about it. And so they have prepared Bible lesson books especially adapted to the needs of children of various ages. But, sad to relate, hundreds of them rest upon the shelves in our storeroom as free from the marks of little fingers as they were when they came from the presses several years ago! This really ought not to be. These books should be out in the homes of our people where children can use them, study them, learn to love them and the truths they so splendidly teach.

But often the children are neglected in planning a local Berean program. Plans generally (and rightly, no doubt) center around young people rather than children. But can't we give the little folks a place in the picture somewhere? We have the materials to work with, we have the leaders who are able to carry on such work successfully. So why not get these hundreds of junior study books and primary lesson helps out where they can accomplish their purpose of teaching the doctrines we love to boys and girls?

Of course one of the reasons often advanced for not attempting to organize junior and primary classes in the Berean society is that the children are receiving instruction in the Sunday school that is equivalent to that which they would receive in a junior society or in a primary Berean class. But, unfortunately, this is not the case. Experience has shown that it is only the exceptional Sunday school teacher who can get real doctrinal instruction out of the International Sunday School Lessons.

Teaching Doctrine to Children

"But," it is often said, "you can't teach doctrine to children! You can hardly teach it to young people and adults!" The latter is true, but the former is not true. It is much easier to teach doctrine to children than it is to teach it to older people. The children do not question the truth of what you tell them. They have no false ideas of which they must rid themselves before they can accept the truth. Everything they are told is true to them. Jack and Jill who went up the hill with such dire results are historical characters to little folks who have been told about them. If children are old enough to "believe in Santa Claus," who comes each Christmas through the frosty air drawn by his ten tiny reindeer, they are old enough to believe in the dearest of all the friends of childhood, Jesus Christ, and His coming in the clouds of heavenly glory back to the earth!

Doctrinal lessons can best be taught to children in the home and in junior and primary classes held by the Bereans for that specific purpose. So give the little folks a place and a chance to learn about the beautiful garden Jesus is coming to plant and care for here in the earth! They will enjoy that story, we are sure, far more than they do those fearful tales of ogres who, with their "fee, fie, foe, fun," proceed to "drink the blood of an Englishman"! And they will certainly be laying a firmer foundation of truth upon which to build a temple of saving faith in the future!

Simple Tales for Tiny Tots

Bible stories are needed for fathers and mothers and big brothers and sisters to read or tell in an entertaining way to the "wee little dimpled darlings" whose constant plea is, "Please tell me anouzzer story about Jesus!" How we wish we might have simple little stories of precious truth written just for the babies in our homes! It would do the mothers so much good to read them. It would do the fathers good to hear them read, and to watch the light of interest dancing in baby eyes as they gazed steadfastly up into the face that is the dearest on earth to them both, and saw reflected in the translucent features of Mother the glorious face of Jesus Christ! Yes, it would do the entire family a world of good to have great truths read in simple words to little children in our homes. May this deeply-felt need be supplied somehow in the near future.

PREPARED BY MARY A. GESIN

"All the ends of the earth shall remember and turn unto the Lord; and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before thee. For the Kingdom is the Lord's: and he is the governor among the nations."

He Will Care for You

Our loving heavenly Father
All living things has made;
The smallest of His creatures
Need never be afraid.

God loves the little babies,
He's never far away;
He gives them tender mothers
To watch them day by day.

Our heavenly Father gives us
Our food, and clothes, and friends,
And all things good and pleasant
In tender love He sends.

He cares for the birds and flowers,
And for His children, too;
He cares for me, so kind is He,
And He will care for you.

From Beginners' Songs..

God's Great Family

We read a beautiful little story the other day of a small boy and his father. The father was a teacher in a great university, and for recreation he often went to a garden belonging to a friend of his, some distance from home. One day in spring when the earth was warm and everything was growing fast, he traced his little son's name in one of the flower beds. Then he sowed seeds in the tracing he had made.

Weeks later the father took the little lad with him to see all the lovely flowers in his friend's garden. There in one corner in a bed all by itself the boy saw his own name growing in tiny flowers. The child's eyes opened wide with glad surprise.

"How did that get there, Father?" he asked excitedly.

"I guess," said his father, "it just happened that way."

"Oh, no, Father, it couldn't have just happened," the small boy replied. "Some one who knew me did it. Father, it must have been you!"

We are living in an orderly and beautiful world. Everything is here for our needs and for our comfort. There are also many good things for our pleasure. Do you think it all just happened that way?

Everything moves exactly according to rules that have been set. The sun never rises at night and sets in the morning. The stars and the moon light the earth at night. Men can tell years and years ahead just how long the days will be.

Do you think for a moment it could all have just happened that way? No, indeed, even the smallest child knows better. We all know that God created everything in the beginning and He regulates His creation so that all things will go smoothly and exactly.

Some one, God, who knows us and cares for us like a father, planned it all for our happiness and our good. Can you help but love and worship such a wise and loving Father? Can you do otherwise than to show Him always the deepest reverence?

To add to our joy our heavenly Father sent His Son, Jesus, into the world to be our Savior. In just a little while we will be celebrating His birthday.

Let us not be thinking about some imaginary person who gives us so many nice things to enjoy. But let us be thinking of Jesus, God's only Son, who lived on earth a little while and did so many kind deeds for those whom He met. "He went about doing good," are the wonderful words we read about Him.

Some day He is coming back to earth to be our King. Then He will be able to send His blessings upon all people. Everyone will learn to know Him from the least to the greatest. And everyone will love this greatest of all gifts, God's own beloved Son.

"For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

A Prayer for the Week

Our heavenly Father, as we enjoy during this Christmas season the wonderful blessings Thou dost shower upon us, help us to remember always that Thou dost provide them. And as we celebrate the birth of the baby Jesus may we never forget Thy greatest Gift. In His name and for His sake, we pray. Amen.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

CHANGE IN DATE OF CHRISTMAS NUMBER

In order that a greater number might take advantage of our offer to send the Christmas issue of The Herald out to their friends as a seasonal greeting, we are delaying the publication of the special number until next week. It will be put in the mails, however, on December 18, and thus should reach those to whom it is addressed, in the majority of cases, before Christmas. Extra copies may still be ordered (until our supply is exhausted) at five cents per copy.

GIFTS FOR GOLDEN RULE HOME

It is suggested by the matron of the Home, that those who desire to send Christmas gifts to Golden Rule Home this Christmas, send them to individual members of the Home Family. This will be, it is thought, a little more personal than to simply send a general gift to the Home itself. Golden Rule Home is not an "institution," but a Christian home composed of individuals of different personalities as is the case in every home, and naturally each appreciates the personal touch at the Christmas season.

OUR MINISTERIAL SUPPORTERS

The ministers of the Church of God throughout the country are giving us such splendid support in every effort we suggest for the advancement of our mutual work that the editorial staff of The Restitution Herald is constantly indebted to them. We only regret that owing to the pressure of work in the office we cannot keep in as constant individual touch with them as we would like to do. We so often need their advice and often could cooperate more fully with them in their local efforts and programs if we could find the time to write to them individually.

In the latest copies of the several local bulletins issued by our pastors, appear strong appeals to the brethren to subscribe to The Herald and to use its Christmas issue as a means of greeting their friends rather than to send out the usual meaningless Christmas cards. These appeals are greatly appreciated by the editors and publishers of our paper. May God bless our workers with increasing success for their faithfulness.

ILLINOIS STATE CONFERENCE PAGE

An entire page is assigned to the Illinois State Conference Board in this issue. Extra copies of the paper will bear the message of the Board to Illinois members everywhere. This is a new departure that is in line with the desire of the National Bible Institution and The Restitution Herald to render the greatest possible assistance to our conferences and churches everywhere. Hereafter, however, when such a page is assigned to a state conference it will be printed only in those copies of The Herald which go to that particular state. We are sending to all of our subscribers this time to illustrate the way in which our paper may contribute to local and district needs to a greater extent than it has in the past.

"Abreast of the Times" is now the most frequently quoted part of our paper. The editors of our exchanges realize, as we do, that world happenings reveal the presence of God and assure us that all that He has promised will eventually come to pass. Not only this, but this feature results in wider circulation and in greater general usefulness for the paper as a whole.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

The work here this winter is proving to be most inspiring. After several months when there was not much work done, and very little enthusiastic interest was shown, it is indeed gratifying to find so many putting their full hearts and strength into the service of God.

The Sunday night sermons are presenting the foundation truths of the gospel in simple style, and the young people are helping to add features of interest to the evening program.

Our Thanksgiving Day service this year, from 7 to 8 a. m., was the best attended for years. Very heartily was it entered into by many, and what a proper beginning it made for such a day.

Following the devotional service on Tuesday night, Nov. 30, the church group met in an informal way to celebrate the birthdays of Bro. Lloyd Stevens and the pastor. Bro. Stevens is our very efficient Sunday school superintendent.

On December 3 the annual church meeting was held. Officers were chosen for 1938, and some constructive plans made.

The church group will meet the last night of this year and have an evening of fellowship followed by a devotional period as the new year is ushered in.

South Lawn extends heartiest greetings of 'Hw 01 uosuas 094 F. E. Siple, Pastor.

CLEVELAND, ARKANSAS

We are glad to report that we had Bro. T. A. Drinkard with us again the first Sunday in November. He preached from Friday night through Sunday and remained over to give us a Thanksgiving Day sermon, after which we spread dinner. We had another good sermon Thanksgiving night. Bro. Drinkard expects to be with us hereafter the third Sunday of each month.

Mrs. Ed. Ring.

LOUISIANA CHURCH NOTES

It was our privilege the past week to baptize Mrs. Taft Richardson into the saving name of Jesus. Mrs. Richardson is a young married lady and, although raised a Catholic, has been attending the Blood River church. After studying the teachings of the Church of God she requested baptism. During the past few months two of her sisters were also baptized and her obedience completes the uniting of three families in the church. She may be addressed at Hammond, La., Rt. 1, Box 116.

The various services at the Happy Woods church continue to show fine interest and attendance and quite a number of non-members are attending regularly. The fine loyalty and cooperation manifested by all give us added incentive for greater work in the Master's vineyard.

Harry Goekler, Pastor.

Bro. C. E. Randall brightened the first page of his "Church of God Messenger" for November with a poem entitled, "Joy Cometh," which is taken from the "Millennial Harp," the first Church of God hymnbook, published by Joseph Marsh, who was also editor of our first denominational paper.

THE CALIFORNIA CONFERENCE

The quarterly conference of the Church of God was held in Los Angeles, Sunday, Dec. 5. The all-day meeting will be remembered as an outstanding success, in spite of the unavoidable absence of many of those who were to have had a prominent part in it.

Bro. Eagleston preached the sermon of the morning, after which Sr. Railsback substituted for Bro. Hatch in taking charge of the Communion service.

Picnic lunch was served in the Sunday school rooms. In spite of the unusual number of visitors, there was plenty for all—as there always seems to be when His followers are gathered together.

The hour from two to three was especially interesting, being dedicated to the young people. Everyone in the Sunday school, from the primary classes through the seniors, had at least one verse from the Bible to recite. The youngest had learned that God is love, and that Jesus loves them. The intermediates had learned fundamentals of doctrine, such as the sleep of the dead and the resurrection, the importance of baptism, and the coming kingdom. The seniors told of prophecies, and of prophecies fulfilled. These recitations were interspersed with musical selections by Sr. Charlotte Rahn of Pomona, and Imogene Rogers. Surely on such a foundation of knowledge, our young people can build great faith.

This was followed by a social hour. Short talks were given by Bros. Adamson and Norman Macleod of Pomona, Sr. Jessie Kauffman and Bro. William Reid of Riverside, and Sr. Railsback of Los Angeles. Many others added their opinions.

This is the kind of meeting that inspires us in our daily lives. May we have many more like it! Our gratitude to President Jessie Kauffman.

Marie Bleasdale, Conference Secretary.

"COME ALL YE SAINTS"

Dear Bro. Marsh:

I want to thank Sr. Damie Lowry, Vanzant, Mo., for the words to the song, "The Shining Shore." For a long time I have sought the words to that song. It is one that we often sang when I was a boy at home on the farm. There were four families who could entertain the other families in turn, holding Bible class every Sunday. This was done for a number of years. For some time Dr. Samuel Jacobs, my mother's uncle, after whom I was named, was our leader. This song was his favorite and as he led the singing much of the time, we heard it often. Late years I lost track of the words, but have retained the tune and often hum it to myself. I am thankful now for the words. Another song, a favorite at that time, was, "Come All Ye Saints to Pisgah's Mountain." Who can furnish the words for that song?

S. J. Lindsay, Tempe, Arizona.

We are glad indeed to be able to supply Bro. Lindsay with a copy of this old familiar song which our fathers loved and sang with so much vim and earnestness. Who will be the next to make a similar request? These old songs carry us back to the days of childhood and childlike faith.

Come, all ye saints, to Pisgah's mountain,
Come view your home beyond the tide;
The land we love is just before us,
Soon we'll be on the other side.
O there are the bright crowns of glory,
And all that the Savior will give,
And they who have loved His appearing,
With Him shall eternally live.

Chorus:

O the prospect is so transporting,
Savior, hasten Thy coming, we pray,
We sigh for the land thou hast promised,
And the dawn of the bright, endless day.

There endless springs of life are flowing,
There are the fields of living green;
Mansions of beauty are before them,
And the King of the saints is seen.
Soon our conflicts and toils will be ended,
We'll be tried and tempted no more;
And the saints of all ages and nations,
We shall greet on that fair Eden shore.

Faith now beholds the flowing river,
Coming from underneath the throne:
There, too, the Savior reigns forever,
And he'll welcome the faithful home.
Would you walk by the banks of the river,
With the friends you have loved by your side?
Would you join in the song of the angels?
Then be ready to follow your Guide.

RIPLEY, ILLINOIS

At the regular annual business meeting of the Church of God at Ripley, the following officers were elected to carry on the Lord's work for the coming year: Elders—J. W. Cooper, L. M. Howell; deacons—Wayne Laning, Harold Burnett; deaconesses—Mildred Hetrick, Margaret Ward; secretary—Loren Burnett; assistant secretary—Mary Krogh; treasurer—Tessa Laning; trustee—Frank Laning; Sunday school superintendent—Gerald L. Cooper; assistant Sunday school superintendent—Wayne Laning; Sunday school secretary—Helen Lewis; assistant Sunday school secretary—Esther Laning; Sunday school treasurer—Emma Paisley; pianists—Ednah Cooper, Helen Lewis; librarians—Orval Dale Lynd, Shirley Logsdon, Marjorie Burnett; program chairman—Tessa Laning.

After the election of officers, the business of the year was discussed and formulated.

We pray God's blessing on our new officers and our work for the coming year.

Ednah Cooper, Retiring Secretary.

A YEAR-LONG CHRISTMAS GIFT!

In planning your Christmas giving, two things should be taken into consideration: first, the suitability of the gift to the recipient; and, second, the lasting quality of it.

When you give your friends a year's subscription to The Restitution Herald as a Christmas present, you meet both of these requirements fully.

Put The Restitution Herald at the very top of your Christmas Shopping List at once! Send it for an entire year to your dearest friends, that they may enjoy it with you!

As each new issue reaches the one for whom it is intended, he or she is immediately reminded of the thoughtful friend who made its welcome visits possible. The paper thus becomes a WEEKLY rather than a YEARLY Christmas gift!

The price to New Subscribers per year is $1.00. Address, National Bible Institution, Oregon, Ill.

BLACKWELL - HUMMEL

In the Los Angeles Church of God, on the evening of November 24, Sr. Betty Blackwell, daughter of Sr. Emily Blackwell of Los Angeles, and Mr. Charles Hummel were married.

The bride was lovely in white satin and lace, with a long tulle veil. She carried large white chrysanthemums. She was given in marriage by Mr. George Munn, an old family friend. Richard Graham was best man. Mrs. Nina Olsen, a sister of the bride, was matron of honor. Her blonde beauty was enhanced by a royal blue lace dress over blue satin of the same shade. Her flowers were pale yellow.

The church was made into a bower of flowers and ferns, lighted by numerous tall white candles.

Bro. Norman Macleod of Pomona officiated, Sr. Macleod played the wedding march, and Miss Charlotte Rahn of Pomona furnished vocal selections.

The wedding reception was held at the club house at Calabassas, in an artists' community in which Mr. and Mrs. Hummel have already purchased a home. There the guests were served before a large log fire. There was an enjoyable social hour, during which the company was entertained with such graciousness by the bride and groom that they were loathe to leave.

Sr. Betty has been a member of our church since childhood. She teaches a class in Sunday school, and is treasurer of the church, and is always generous with her vocal talent. Mr. Hummel is an artist of pleasing personality, whose friendship and cooperation is enjoyed in the Berean work. May God direct their life together, and bless this new home.

Board of Evangelism

Preach the Word

C. E. Randall, Superintendent

Some time ago I promised to send the names of those who had given to this cause last year. But first I wish to give the name of Elder S. E. Magaw, $5.00 for this year.

Last year the following paid: Ministerial Association, $10.00; C. L. Venard, $1.00; Skelton, W. Va., S. S., $4.80; Jessie M. B. Kauffman, $4.00; Cecil A. Smead, $10.00; S. P. Dismukes, $2.00; Wilsie McKnight, $12.75; Paul M. Hatch, $60.00; Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Mills, $11.50; Truth Seekers' S. S. Class, Fonthill, Ont., $5.00; Mr. and Mrs. Fred Austin, Cleveland, Ohio, $15.00; Alice Lindstrum, $1.00; H. H. Hawkins, $5.00; H. J. Stadden, $1.00; Jennie Salisbury, $1.00; Mary Elton, $5.00; H. W. Stadden, $2.00; Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Holland, $10.00.

If I have made any mistakes or left out any names I will be very glad to be corrected. And now, dear people, this Board would like to have your prayers and your help. We have money in the treasury that is waiting and anxious to be out doing something for the Lord. Will you help us find places where work can be done? We firmly believe that we will have no trouble getting the money once the work can be started. But we can get no response from those to whom we have written and would like to help. However, we have not given up and are still trying to contact those that need help.

We are paying Bro. Drinkard $10.00 each month. He is the only one really doing evangelistic work.

Please write the undersigned, if you know of any place where work can be done, and send all money to the undersigned, also. My address is Orange Road, Ashland, Ohio.

James A. Patrick, Secretary-Treasurer.

Evangelism Will Build the Church

"When the Church Builds Evangelism, Evangelism Will Build the Church"

Once Each Month

In order to unify the work of the Lord in our State and to encourage evangelism in obedience to the Great Commission, this page is being sponsored by the Illinois State Conference of the Churches of God. It is to be used once each month and THE RESTITUTION HERALD of that issue will be mailed to every Church of God home in Illinois.

Bro. Harvey Krogh, Jr., pastor at Ripley, and Bro. James McLain, pastor at Macomb, are the editors. They are workers, "fervent in spirit; serving the Lord."

The slogan, "When the Church Builds Evangelism, Evangelism Will Build the Church," is used with the consent of its originator, Bro. S. E. Magaw, pastor of the Brush Creek Church in Ohio.

We seek God's guidance and blessing in this undertaking.

Paul C. Johnson, President.

You Name It

We want an appropriate name for our "Illinois" page. Will you help? Send your suggestions to the editors: Harvey Krogh, Jr., Ripley, Ill., or James W. McLain, 409 S. Dudley St., Macomb, Ill. A year's subscription to THE RESTITUTION HERALD will be given to the one submitting the name finally selected.

Free!

"I thought religion was free," said the colored member as the plate was about to be passed.

"It is," replied the dusky elder. "And so is water, but if we pipes it to you you has to pay for de piping."

As a result of "piping" through evangelism and circuit preaching, most of the work in Illinois has been built to present strength. Those grateful, sincere, consecrated souls who made that work possible in the past, know what that "piping" cost in self-sacrifice and toil.

As a result of the evangelistic program which was launched last year, definite new works have been started. Macomb is growing, not only in numbers and interest, but spiritually. It is only a matter of another year or so until that work will be entirely self-supporting. Camden is holding weekly Bible studies that are beginning to enlist the interest of neighbors. Eldorado has been strengthened greatly, so that they are in search for a full-time pastor. Meanwhile, some one, somewhere, somehow, must help them to take care of the immediate cost of "piping." The great privilege of sharing in this burden is not restricted to the few who are now endeavoring to carry the load; but you, too, may have fruit to abound to your account by sending either a lump sum or steady contribution to the treasurer, Elder H. U. Krogh, Jr., Ripley, Ill.

Parable of the Impotent Folk

Once upon a time there were impotent folk, who were unable to walk by themselves, waiting beside the pool of enlightenment and understanding. They greatly desired to be helped into the pool that they might know the healing power that would come from enlightenment and understanding. They sent out a plea and that plea was heard. A messenger was sent regularly that they might be helped into the pool. They were enlightened; they were given understanding; they were healed; they grew and prospered.

Once more we see another small group of impotent folk who are unable to walk by themselves. They, too, desire to be helped into the pool of enlightenment and understanding. They, too, have sent out a plea. But many, who formerly stood by the pool as impotent folk, have become very deaf.

News Bits

Two young men are studying with the Macomb pastor every Monday evening with a view to taking up the ministry.

There were 17 at the last Bible study in the home of Bro. Rollo Hightower, La Prairie (Camden).

The Christmas program at the Ripley church will be held Thursday evening, Dec. 23, at 7:30.

Moffatt says in Hebrews 12:2 that Christ "steadily endured the cross."

THE RESTITUTION HERALD

At Last!

CHRISTMAS
1937

At last!

The night is at an end,
The dawn comes softly up,
Clear as its own clear dew;
And weeping has gone out,
To let in only songs
And everlasting joy;
At last! Amen!

At last!

The Prince of Life has come,
The Church is glorified,
The sleepers have awoken,
The living have been changed;
Death has at last been slain,
And the grave spoiled forever!
At last! Amen!

At last!

The curse is swept away,
The serpent-trail effaced;
The desert smiles with green
And blossoms like the rose.
'Tis more than Eden now,
Earth has become as heaven!
At last! Amen!

Christmas Greetings From Our Ministers

"The Elders send greeting unto the Brethren."—Acts 15:23.

THE NATIONAL BIBLE INSTITUTION

The Executive Board of the National Bible Institution takes this means of extending to the Church of God everywhere its hearty greeting on this joyful occasion and the sincere prayer of its members is that God may bless our individual and united efforts for the advancement of His cause throughout the coming year.

Yours in grateful memory of our Savior's birth,

L. E. Conner, President,
Dixon, Illinois;
Leland T. Hanson, First Vice President,
Leaf River, Illinois;
Earle Mogle, Second Vice President,
Rockford, Illinois;
Leota B. Hanson, Treasurer,
Oregon, Illinois;
G. E. Marsh, Secretary,
Oregon, Illinois.

MR. AND MRS. A. M. JONES AND SON DELBERT

"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." As the angel of God spoke these words to the humble shepherds on Judean hills on the first Christmas morn, even so they echo in our hearts today. In our Savior's words: "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid."

This is our Christmas message to our dear brothers and sisters everywhere. May His peace abide in your hearts both now and forevermore.

Eagle Grove, Iowa.

MR AND MRS. G. E. MARSH

To Our Beloved Brethren: In recognition of the holy significance of this day, we extend to you whom we have known and loved throughout the years our prayers and best wishes for the future. To the Oregon Church, the pastor would express his sincere appreciation for the loyal support it has given him in his efforts to advance the Master's cause in this community. May the Father's blessing rest upon you all until the King, whose birthday we celebrate, shall come again.

Oregon, Illinois.

MR. AND MRS. JAMES A. PATRICK

The editor has done us poor preachers a great service in giving us the opportunity to greet all of our brethren throughout the country.

So to all the dear ones of the family of God, and especially to those who have worked so faithfully shoulder to shoulder with us in the different churches in different states, helping to build up the cause we so dearly love, we send the season's greetings and pray that God's richest blessings may be yours and that we may be an unbroken family in the kingdom of God.

Ashland, Ohio.

MRS. EMMA C. RAILSBACK

To all the dear and faithful members of the local congregation, and particularly to those who are separated from us by intervening territory yet who are with us in spirit and in heart, holding up our hands in a very material way that the Church of God may have a sanctuary in which to worship and to proclaim the gospel on the West Coast: We wish to thank you for the confidence you have placed in us; for words of encouragement, also; and we wish you the joys and the blessings that go with a realization that all things work together for good to them that love God, who are the called according to His purpose.

1020 S. Burlington Avenue, Los Angeles, California.

MR. AND MRS. L. E. CONNER

We extend to the brotherhood at large our greeting and best wishes for the coming year, and especially to those with whom we have labored so pleasantly in Christian fellowship in Cleveland, Ohio, and in Dixon and Rockford, Illinois. Nor do we forget those whom we have known and loved in the charges where we served in earlier years. May God's blessing be with you all.

Dixon, Illinois.

MELVILLE W. LYON

May this Christmas be for you, as you wait for our Lord's return, a time of spiritual inventory, revealing an increasing mastery of His Word, a more satisfying prayer life, and a deepening joy in seeing the image of the Christ taking form in your life and character.

Oh, He that is to come will come,
He will not tarry long;
And they who watch 'mid pain and tears
Shall burst forth into song!

No more shall hate and wrong prevail
When Christ shall rule our race.
Oh, may you in that day be found,
Redeemed, before His face!

With Jesus in Galilee

By Mary A. Gesin

THROUGH the chill, gray dawn the first crimson streaks of the sun became visible, and a small wind arose that ruffled the placid waters of the lake into a white froth. Sunrise on Galilee! No scene of greater beauty could be painted by artist or conceived by man's most vivid imagination.

A large fishing craft was plowing its way sturdily toward the shore. All night the owners and their assistants had labored, and their catch had been exceptionally good. A nice sum would be added to their already large earnings because of the night's work.

But in the heart of one of the fishermen was reflected no satisfaction because of his share of the profit. Nor was there any peace from beholding the exquisite beauty of Galilee, a beauty unsurpassed in all Palestine. A strange and disturbing unrest had pervaded every waking moment since that memorable day when on his way to the lake he had passed the One of whom the whole countryside was talking.

As Simon, for that was his name, looked up from his net, he saw the same Man coming down the path from a near by hill. For in that clear air every hill and every valley were sharply outlined in the cool hush of dawn. The talk was, in the towns clustered about the lake, that this Newcomer to Galilee was awake and up on the quiet hill-sides long before the muezzin called the faithful from their slumbers.

Surely, thought Simon, He was coming toward their boat! What could He want of any of them, busy fishermen that they were, unlettered and unlearned in the ways of other men? Now he could plainly see the hand that was extended and hear the voice of arresting beauty that had captured the hearts of many in the villages.

"Come ye after me," the Stranger called, "and I will make you to become fishers of men."

To his own astonishment Simon, followed by his younger brother Andrew, with a brief word to his father, clambered over the side of the boat and hastened up the path at the call. Along the shore the Stranger led them until He came to another boat with its load of fish and the men who would market the catch.

At the behest of the One Simon and Andrew were following, came their neighbor fishermen, James and John, sons of the wealthy Zebedee. Five of them now, they turned their steps toward Capernaum, where large crowds gathered every time it was rumored that "He" was present.

The words that fell from His lips, unheard before, sank deeply into Simon's consciousness. For His words were not fawning words, such as the Pharisees sometimes uttered, but they were words of authority and power.

Jesus was His name, and always He spoke of His Father, God, in tones of greatest reverence. The theme of His teaching, the truths that affected Simon so strangely and moved him so deeply, became clearer as day by day he followed his new Master and learned from His lips a new way of life.

Now there were thirteen of them, twelve learners and their Teacher. Everywhere they went Jesus demonstrated His words by miraculous cures. Simon marveled at those who came, singly and in great companies, to beg for healing at His hands. Selfish, they were, thought Simon, tiring the Master, begging for a cure when they should have been happy only to be allowed to listen to the words of wisdom He uttered.

"They that are whole have no need of the physician," He said of the self-righteous Pharisees who sought to trap Him, "but they that are sick: I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." Why would they not forsake their evil ways? wondered the impatient Simon.

"The sower soweth the word . . . And these are they . . . who when they have heard the word immediately receive it with gladness . . . afterward, when . . . (Please turn to page 11)

Golden Rule Would Restore World Peace

"Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them."—Matthew 7:12.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 12.—Secretary of State Cordell Hull called today for a rebirth of the Golden Rule in international relationships as the surest means of attaining a durable world peace. He said in a radio address on the occasion of Universal Bible Sunday that civilization is threatened by "moral and spiritual decadence." Recommending closer adherence to the teachings of the Bible, the Secretary of State decried the drift in many parts of the world "toward a reversion to a system of tyranny of man over man; toward an abridgment or destruction of human liberty; toward a shackling of speech and action and even of individual thought and conscience."

Could the Golden Rule be written into the constitutions of all nations, and its provisions carried out in full, the present tendency of the world "toward a reversion to a system of tyranny of man over man" would be again reversed toward an order which would lead to universal brotherhood and friendly cooperation between all races and nations. While we do not anticipate that such a happy situation will be brought about by the efforts of men, however faithfully they may labor toward that end, nevertheless we rejoice to know that soon, when the Prince of Peace shall come, He who has handed the Golden Rule down to us through the ages, will put that Rule into the basic law of all nations and every individual and social contact of men will eventually be governed by it.

Homeward Bound

"Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears: . . . they shall come again from the land of the enemy."—Jeremiah 31:15-17.

PARIS, Dec. 12.—During the first half of this year 3,641 Jews emigrated from Germany through the aid of a world-wide organization carried on by their fellow Jews for that exclusive purpose. Of the number who left Germany with the help of this organization, 1,363 went to Palestine and 1,870 to other countries. Nearly 5,000 Jews left Germany unassisted.

How pathetic it is to think that this long-suffering people were given the opportunity for immediate deliverance from their enemies and for reestablishment of their nation and rejected it all, largely because of their pride! They would not have the One whose right it was to occupy David's throne, reign over them. But now they are homeward bound and the time is near when they shall say once more, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord!"

Arab-Fascist Bond

"Thou makest this people to trust in a lie."—Jeremiah.

JERUSALEM, Dec. 10.—Commenting on the recent celebration of the birthday of the Prophet Mahomet, the Arab newspaper, Palestine and Transjordan, published here, said: "Another outstanding feature noticeable in the birthday celebrations" (corresponding to our Christmas celebrations) "was the appearance of German Nazi and Italian Fascist flags and the displaying of pictures, beside those of Arab kings and leaders, of Herr Hitler and Signor Mussolini. Many people will undoubtedly misunderstand the significance of such action on the part of the Arabs . . . supposing it to be the fruit of the alleged Nazi and Fascist propaganda in the country. The fact, however, is that it was a significant gesture of sympathy and respect. 'Sympathy' because, feeling the whip of Jewish pressure and influence, the Arabs sympathize with the Nazis and Fascists in their agony and trials at the hands of Jewish finance and Jewish intrigues, and international financial pressure; and 'respect' because knowing the strength of Jewish finance and Jewish intrigues, the Nazis and Fascists have been able to withstand the influence of the Jews. Another political element also comes in. The Nazis and Fascists are, at present anyway, concentrated in one camp, while in the opposing camp Great Britain leads." (Translated for December Current History.)

Rome would make "this people" (the Arabs) "to trust in a lie." Rome did not conquer Ethiopia, as Mussolini so vigorously insisted, in order that the standard of civilization might be extended over that country, but for glory of Italy and for its territorial and economic advancement. So the Arab will discover to his bitter disappointment if he plays into the hands of Mussolini.

But why should we complain? Rome must live again! Her power over other nations must be restored in a measure before the Lord comes and it must be a dictatorial system of government that prevails. The awakening of this ancient iron empire is but one of the long shadows creeping across the country from the East.

The Hope of Israel

By Norman J. Macleod

SO MANY and so thrilling are the happenings in the arena of world politics today that oftentimes we lose our way in the midst of its whirl. To guide our thoughts in the way of truth it is well for us to watch Israel in her exile. The hope of Israel is the hope of the world. Almost thirty-five centuries have passed since Moses made his noteworthy prediction of the glorious return and restoration of Israel. The hope of Israel for many years seemed to be dim and of little moment in world affairs. But today even the most unbelieving person can see that something of unusual portent is happening within the ranks of the "Chosen People."

In a series of orations to the people of Israel assembled on the plains of Moab, Moses rehearsed to the new generation the events of the forty years in the wilderness before turning them over to their new leader. Then in renewing the covenant of God with the new generation he restated the commandments which form the basis of the law and from that to the "blessing and the curse." Like most people they forgot about the curse and looked ever forward to the blessing, which comes at the end of the race. To that generation the immediate prospect of blessing in going into the Land of Promise overshadowed all other things. But Moses told them of the wearisome centuries that must intervene before the culmination of all those blessings.

Centuries passed! The nation of Israel became highly organized under her three great kings, Saul, David, and Solomon. Then the disorganization predicted by Moses set in with the horrors of conquest and exile. The hope of Israel was centered no longer on the immediate conquest of the land, but on the hope of the return predicted by Moses and later by Jeremiah.

"And this whole land shall be a desolation, and an astonishment; and these nations shall serve the king of Babylon seventy years. And it shall come to pass, when seventy years are accomplished, that I will punish the king of Babylon, and that nation, saith the Lord, for their iniquity, and the land of the Chaldeans, and will make it perpetual desolations" (Jer. 25:11, 12). "For thus saith the Lord, That after seventy years be accomplished at Babylon I will visit you, and perform my good word toward you, in causing you to return to this place" (Jer. 29:10).

Daniel, among the captives at Babylon, was looking toward the end of that seventy years, and he was endeavoring to see the things that would happen when the people should return and enjoy the blessings promised by Moses and the other prophets. Instead of the fulfillment of the promises by Moses the children of Israel were undergoing new trials. The hope of Israel must take a new center. Daniel was the one to tell of that hope.

"And it shall come to pass, when all these things are come upon thee, the blessing and the curse, which I have set before thee, and thou shalt call them to mind among all the nations, whither the Lord thy God hath driven thee, and shalt return unto the Lord thy God, and shalt obey his voice according to all that I command thee this day, thou and thy children, with all thine heart, and with all thy soul; that then the Lord thy God will turn thy captivity, and have compassion upon thee, and will return and gather thee from all the nations, whither the Lord thy God hath scattered thee" (Deuteronomy 30:1-3).

"In the first year of his (Darius') reign, I Daniel understood by books the number of the years, whereof the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah the prophet, that he would accomplish seventy years in the desolation of Jerusalem" (Dan. 9:2). The Prophet was puzzled. The end of the seventy years had come, and yet the return had not been accomplished as predicted by Moses and Jeremiah. The prophecy of the seventy weeks told of those things that must intervene before the coming of the promised Seed in whom the hope of Israel became flesh. More than three centuries passed before that blessed event. Signs in the heavens, signs on earth, miracles and wonders told of the blessed event. Choirs of angels sang to the shepherds; wise men came from the East; and even the king on his throne paused to note the coming of the Savior into the world of sin. Surely now was the time for the fulfillment of the hope of Israel!

The regathering of Israel had been accomplished; the "Prophet like unto Moses" had come! What more could happen before the showering of the blessings of the Lord upon them? No wonder the apostles were astonished to hear of new evils to come: of the destruction of the temple; of times of stress such as they had never seen before and dire prophecies of evil. And when, after the Savior arose from the dead, they accompanied Him to the Mount of Olives the thoughts of blessing were uppermost in their minds. But again their hopes were dashed to pieces.

Instead of promise of a definite number of years until the promises of God should be revealed the Savior left them in darkness: "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power" (Acts 1:7). New disasters came upon Israel: those representative people who had returned from Persian captivity and had passed through troublous times with the Greeks, were subjected to new oppressions from the Romans and were scattered to the "uttermost parts of the earth." Nineteen centuries passed before the forlorn people began again to gather hope and could look to the future with anything but foreboding. Surely now is the appointed time. (OVER)

The "Chosen People" are again in their land in large numbers. The new-found prosperity of the Promised Land seems to foretell the dawn of that long-hoped-for day of promise. Troubles have already arisen. Quarrels with the Arabs beset the Jews on all sides. Problems of land ownership, of economic future, of nationhood, all baffle the leaders of Jewry. But he who reads the Prophets will realize that there is much to come of evil days before the great regathering and the final restoration of Israel.

The hope of Israel is centered in the One whom they denied, berated, and crucified. Not until they are brought to realize their need of Him will the promised blessing come.

For first they must pass "into the wilderness of the people," where the Lord shall plead with them as He did in the days in the wilderness of Egypt with "sword, fire, and pestilence." The rebels and those that transgress against the Lord must first be purged out from among them before they can pass over Jordan into the Land of Promise. Only then can come that great regathering and restoration which still is the hope of Israel.

Then, and then only, will the prophecy of Amos be fulfilled: "And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God" (Amos 9:15).

Christmas and the Evangelistic Message

By C. E. Randall

"AND the angel said unto them, Fear not: for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord."

The Christmas message is one of great joy. It contains good news. Remove this word of gladness from the season and it becomes just another holiday. Not purposely perhaps, but unconsciously this very thing is happening year by year. The good news part of the occasion is being lost sight of, with feasting, merrymaking, and the giving and receiving of gifts the major concern of the day. These things are not wrong, only to the extent that they are permitted to crowd out or eliminate the real purpose of Christmas—the announcement of the "good tidings of great joy."

A SAVIOR

Jesus was born a Savior! His life's work was that of a Savior! All that He did and said became a part of the gospel of the kingdom. This gospel constitutes good news, as it reveals the redeeming grace of the Savior and the plan whereby lost humanity can be saved.

As a Savior He is not a respecter of persons, for in His work of Savior He tasted death for every man (Heb. 2:9). In this work He became the Savior of all men, especially of them that believe. In sensing this great work of redemption and our divine call, we must not allow ourselves to be puffed up because of knowledge, for "knowledge puffeth up." We must not feel that because we are members of the Church of God and have a heavenly call, we are the sole custodians of truth and therefore the only "guide of the blind, a light to them which are in darkness."

The Israelites became self-centered and inflated with pride through knowledge that they were the children of Abraham and the channel through whom the promised blessings were to come. Being lifted up with pride they said: "We thank thee, that we are not as other men," and they fell from their national bishopric.

Knowledge entails responsibility! One remains under the call of the Lord only as he does His work and extends his knowledge to others. If the Church of God has knowledge of the good news of the Savior, only as it, in humility, scatters the message will it be true to its name and faithful to its Head!

UNIVERSAL NEWS

The story of the Savior is universal news, for it is to "all people." This message must be told "unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people." And in "due time" this testimony will find its way to every man, for "they shall all be taught of God." Those who hear and learn and come "unto the Father" will be "especially saved." Our mission today is not to "compel" people to accept the good news, but in obedience to inspired command, "preach the word" in season and out of season, with all long-suffering, and allow God to give the "increase," not forgetting that perhaps others than those who sow the good seed may do the watering.

When we recognize that the good news of the Savior is for "all people" and that this good news must be preached everywhere if the command of Jesus to His disciples to "make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," is to be carried out, then, and only then, are we ready to fulfill the mission of the true church of God. The name without the works is a misnomer!

If in our Christmas celebrations we can recast in our minds the meaning of the event, catch the spirit of the good news, and with wholesome determination take hold of the unfinished task of preaching the gospel to every creature, this Christmas will be the beginning of a new cycle in our church life, as the one nineteen hundred years ago marked the birth of a new era in God's dealing with His creation. Christ is Good News! Will the people hear it through us?

The Kingdom of God

Past, Present, and Future

By Emma C. Railsback

THE power through which God operates to save mankind in this present dispensation is the glorious message of the future kingdom which He will certainly establish in the near future on this planet where He has placed mankind (Rom. 1:16). Is the subject an important one?

If the statement of the Apostle in the above text is true, it can readily be seen that the good news of the kingdom of God is the most important subject in all the holy writings. All the promises to the overcomer found therein will be fulfilled after the establishment of God's kingdom. Yet how few sense the importance of the subject!

When the apostles inquired of the Savior, just prior to His ascension to the right hand of the Father (Acts 1:6), "Wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" they implied that there had been a kingdom which might be restored. Therefore, we need to search the history of the Chosen People in order to find a reason for the inquiry.

Turning first to 1 Chronicles 29:23, we read that "Solomon sat on the throne of the Lord as king instead of David his father," showing that the Israelitish kingdom, established with Saul and David preceding Solomon on its throne, was recognized as God's kingdom. King Saul was disobedient to God's commandments (1 Sam. 15) and was rejected by God. David was chosen in his place. Because he was a man after God's own heart (1 Sam. 13:14; Acts 13:22) God made a covenant with him to establish his house, his kingdom, and the throne of his kingdom forever (1 Sam. 7).

When God promised David that he should build Him a house, which should be established forever, He spoke indirectly of the temple built by Solomon, which was built of stone, made ready before it was brought thither, so that there was neither hammer nor ax nor any tool of iron heard in the house while it was in building (1 Kings 6:7). But this was only temporal, a type of the eternal house not built with hands, which God has built in time past (Heb. 4:2) and still is building in these closing days of Gentile times, taking out "living stones" (1 Peter 2:4, 5) to complete this "house of David" of which the Lord Jesus Christ is the Head, the chief Cornerstone (Eph. 2:19-22). This is the present phase of God's kingdom, which we shall examine more fully before we close.

Now to return to the temporal kingdom ruled by mortal, sinful men, we find that the sinfulness of its rulers soon caused a division, which was the beginning of a downward trend and which finally resulted in a complete overturning described by God speaking through the Prophet Ezekiel in 21:26, 27, "Thus saith the Lord God; Remove the diadem, and take off the crown: this shall not be the same: exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn, it: and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him."

The promise contained in this text of the coming One to reestablish the kingdom of God accounts for the question of the apostles to the Savior concerning the time of the restoration. Nor is this the only prophetic utterance foretelling the coming of a righteous Ruler for God's kingdom. The Scriptures abound in types, shadows, and direct statements, giving every phase of the kingdom which is still future. We will notice a few of them.

Jeremiah 23:5: "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth." Here the coming One is held up as the righteous Branch of David's house.

In Isaiah 9:6, 7 we see again the Child, the Prince of Peace, who is to hold the reins of government upon David's throne, which promise was reiterated to the virgin Mary by Gabriel, the heavenly messenger (Luke 1:26-32).

Daniel, in vision, saw the coming One like the Son of Man, coming in the clouds of heaven, to whom was given dominion, and glory, and a kingdom which should not be destroyed. The kingdom under the whole heaven is to be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions are to serve and obey Him.

The Prophet Micah saw the kingdom reestablished over all other kingdoms and God's law going forth from Zion and His Word from Jerusalem. Zechariah tells us that "the Lord shall be king over all the earth: in that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one" (Zech. 14:9).

David, in the second Psalm, reveals the promise of God to give the coming One the heathen for His inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for His possession. He is to have dominion from sea to sea and from the river to the ends of the earth, to break in pieces the oppressor, and deliver the needy (Psa. 72).

We might continue indefinitely pointing out these precious promises, this glorious gospel message found just as definitely in the Old Testament as in the New. Can we wonder that the minds of the apostles turned instinctively to the reestablishment of God's kingdom, especially so when we read that during the forty days between the resurrection and ascension of the Lord, He talked to them of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God (Acts 1:3)?

During His ministry Jesus preached the gospel of the kingdom of God. He came into Galilee first; He went throughout every city and every village, teaching in their synagogues, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, confirming His message and His authority by healings and other signs. Thus He proved conclusively that He was the promised One, coming as the prophets had foretold He would come, as a "lamb to the slaughter," to justify many, a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. He poured out His soul unto death, going into hell (the grave) for three days and nights, enduring all shame, all humiliation, for the joy that was set before Him. He is now at the right hand of God (Heb. 12:2), the Apostle, High Priest, Advocate of all who come unto Him in God's appointed way.

But let us notice particularly some of His statements concerning the kingdom. He told the self-righteous Jews that the publicans and harlots would go into the kingdom of God before them, that they would see Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob sit down in the kingdom of God, with many coming from the east and west, and they would be thrust out. The kingdom would be taken from them and given to a nation (the church) bringing forth the fruits thereof. He exhorted His followers to pray for God's kingdom to come that His will might be done on earth as it is done in heaven; to seek first the kingdom of God and its righteousness. He said that He would drink no more of the fruit of the vine until He would drink it new with them in the kingdom of God.

The thief's request was that Christ would remember him when He came in His kingdom, and it was answered in harmony thereto. After spending His entire ministry teaching the things pertaining to the kingdom of God and expounding the prophetic utterances concerning Himself (Luke 24:27), just before He ascended to the right hand of the Father He gave commandment unto the apostles whom He had chosen to preach the same message to the Jew first, after which they were to go into all the world. This commandment was carried out, is still being proclaimed, and is operating to take out a people for His name to complete the house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth.

We will not take time to go into detail concerning the blessings which will obtain in the coming kingdom for those who love God and are the called according to His purpose. But we will note some of the general conditions which shall prevail in the earth. The inhabitant shall not say, "I am sick." The lame, the deaf, the blind shall be healed. The

Christ's Birthday Celebration

By C. E. Lapp

IF THE LORD allows me to have another birthday, and some of my friends should band themselves together to celebrate that event, I am sure it would be very pleasant. First of all it would make me know there were those who loved me, and that would make me very happy. There would also be the satisfaction of knowing that my life had, to a certain extent, been worth while, else no one would have cared for me. I would also feel that my birthday marked the beginning of a life of influence for good.

The day finally arrives. All my friends come, for it is a time of rejoicing. They bring many gifts, for that is the way of showing their love for me. Surely this is a great day, for honor is coming to me from all my friends.

After the festivities are over it is time for me to receive those gifts, their tokens of love. Each of my friends has enjoyed the party immensely. They take their gifts. Now I shall see how much each one loves me, for the gift will show it. But, what is this I see? So strange, and yet my eyes do not fail me! They are exchanging the gifts with one another! What does it mean? Is there no gift for me? It is true! There is nothing. Soon my friends leave to enjoy the gift that each one has received, leaving me empty handed.

My heart is sad. My hands are empty, for my friends who were celebrating my birthday gave no offering of love to me. The seed of doubt takes root and grows rapidly, for I had thought they were to honor me. Surely this celebration is void of meaning as far as I am concerned.

Year after year Christmas comes and goes. I am wondering what Jesus is thinking of all the bustle and fuss to celebrate His birthday? I, too, am wondering what He will think after all the gifts are given and He is left empty handed.

There will be many feasts at Christmas. Will we ask the Jones's because we were there for Thanksgiving? Will Mabel give Sally a present because she knows Sally is getting one for her?

Jesus said, "But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind: and thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee: for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just" (Luke 14:13, 14). Pure religion is to visit the fatherless and the widows, and in all probability their hearts would be made glad if the spirit of Jesus was revealed to them by you. Not only is it pure religion, but becomes vital when Jesus says, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me," and "inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me" (Matt. 25:40, 45).

Christmas brings us a challenge that we might reveal the spirit of Jesus to the world. Our love will be shown by the one to whom our gift goes.

Why not put Christ into Christmas? Remember His words—"Inasmuch ———."

The Birth of the Christ

By R. H. Judd

"And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth."

HAVE we not all noticed the beautiful simplicity of Scripture language? Monosyllables predominate because they come nearer to original thought. Look at the text heading this article. It is brimful of great truths, yet every word in it is easily understood, and the whole is consequently brought within the range of understanding.

Instead of accepting it as it stands, many persons are prone to base spiritual truths on the mysterious. They actually seek to make a mystery of what God does His best to make plain by use of the simplest language at His command. People seem to forget that spiritual truths must be expressed in language easy to be understood when fundamental issues are at stake. In this case, without authority or precedent, they assume that "the Word" mentioned in our text is a preexistent person. Not only so, they take upon themselves to affirm that it is also the name of that person. We wonder sometimes if these people ever stop to meditate what is involved in their superstitions. For instance:

If "the Word" were a preexistent person, what became of that corporal personality while He who was to be called the Son of God was being made of a woman (Gal. 4:4)? It is a law of nature (and spiritual laws and natural laws, both being God's, are unchangeable) that two objects cannot both occupy the same space at the same time, nor can one object or person be in two localities at the same moment. We have asked the question above mentioned, but the reply never comes, and the reason is obvious.

Further, have our friends considered the fact that if "the Word" preexisted as a personality, then the death of that personality must have occurred before birth through human motherhood could be accomplished. Supposing it be granted that the preexistent personality was the Christ, the inevitable question arises, How often did Christ die? Scripture insistently declares that He died but once and that He died on account of sin—our sin.

But there is equal difficulty in assuming that "the Word" was the name of the preexistent Messiah. That name was not once given to the Messiah until after His second birth by resurrection to endless life. Why? Because Scripture declares that "the word of God liveth and abideth for ever" (1 Peter 1:23). Had the Messiah been honored with that name before He died, it would have been out of harmony with God's truth. We repeat, the Word of God does not die.

We could multiply the difficulties that are consequent upon accepting what is commonly taught regarding our text. John in his Epistle, commenting, as many believe, on the prologue of his Gospel, tells us that they "saw" and "handled" the "Word of life" which was with the Father. He could only mean "the Word (which) was made flesh," for they saw and handled no other. The natural query arises, Was that with the Father? How, then, are we to understand that the "Word was with God, and the Word was God"? Simply by taking it as expressed, that is, it was "the Word" that was "with God" and "was God." As our word represents us and is with us, so does God's Word represent Him as nothing else can, be it object or person.

Some tell us that John omits the birth of the Christ in his narrative for the purpose of stressing the preexistence. That is not so. There is abundance of evidence. The words, "was made (or became) flesh," are themselves indicative of birth. But there is still stronger evidence that John does very definitely make reference to the birth of Christ. The conjunction, "and," of our text links it to the two preceding verses. Verse 13 should read, "Who was born (instead of, which were born), not of bloods, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." Namely, the One on whom they believed was born.

Dr. Schofield, who believes that the Son of God was co-existent with the Father from all eternity, is authority for the statement that the reading, "who was born," was common in the church for the first four centuries and was held by Justin Martyr (193), Tertullian (230), and Irenaeus (202), and that the critic, Zahn, agreed to its correctness. Not until after the third century, when the doctrine of the trinity had crept into the church from heathen sources, was the change made.

We must not stay longer to view these negative aspects except to call attention to one other item that our text records. The birth of Christ was the will of God, not of man, for Christ was born of a virgin. Further, we would note that God is not responsible for all the births that occur in this world, for then the words of the Christ that "it were good for that man had he not been born" would have been a direct rebuke to God Almighty.

The birth of Christ was no ordinary birth. Foreordained before the foundation of the world, as were others in history, the details of it are carried through the divine records century after century of the world's history by God's mighty prophets. It was woven into the history of the Israelitish nation until it became so prominent a fact that their customs and manners were affected by it, and every Israelitish woman who was in line with Abraham's seed hoped earnestly that she might be the chosen mother of the Messiah.

John says that they beheld His glory. It was not a material glory. It was the glory of God's Word fulfilled and the proof that God's Word does not return unto Him void. Read the law of Moses, and the Psalms, and the prophets. There are thrilling word pictures depicting a Man who was to come that have never been written of any other man before or since, nor ever will be. His birth, His life, His death, and His resurrection are all foretold in graphic language. He is the "child . . . born," for whom all Israel looked. He is the "son . . . given," who, as He grew in wisdom and stature, represented His Father as being "full of compassion" among the sons of men. He was a Man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, yet He was a shining Light from Galilee for the nations.

He spoke as man never has spoken, and the multitude marvelled at the gracious words that proceeded out of His mouth, fulfilling the promise of His Father, "I . . . will put my words in his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him" (Deut. 18:18). He was taken from prison and from judgment, for He was the Lamb slain before the foundation of the world. As a sheep before her shearers He was dumb.

He was typified in the tabernacle and its services. He was the Door to the holy of holies. The Passover in Egypt was typical of Him and His sacrificial death. He was the Son of David, the Son of Jesse, the Branch, and the bright and morning Star. He made His grave with the wicked and with the rich in His death.

Again, He was to be the Wonderful Counselor, on whose shoulders the government is to be placed. He is to be called the Mighty God and the Prince of Peace. That the title, "Mighty God," is a representative one, representative of the Father, we may be assured. For the titles are given in chosen order and Prince of Peace comes last as the last and best. No prince could in his own right claim ultimate authority. He is yet to be the King that shall reign in righteousness, when knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth and the wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad.

If His first coming was glorious, how much more glorious will be His second, when He comes to reign! He Himself must have thought of it often, for He said, "I am a king, to this end was I born," and His first coming was that He might bear witness to that truth.

Christ is born! The great Anointed!

Heaven and earth His glory sing:
Oh, receive whom God appointed
For your Prophet, Priest, and King.

Let us learn the wondrous story
Of our great Redeemer's birth,
Spread the brightness of His glory
Till it cover all the earth.

Keep Christ in Christmas

By Gerald L. Cooper

AS WE approach the Christmas season we find, as in past years, that the nation is again going to commercialize this great day and use it for something entirely apart from its intended meaning.

We are admonished by full-page advertisements to give a carton of cigarettes or a certain brand of tobacco to uncle, brother, or cousin. We are advised what sort of whiskey to use in making our Christmas cocktails. We are told repeatedly over the radio where the best place is to buy our gifts for grandpa or grandson.

All of this brings a reaction that is not in keeping with the true meaning of the season. Even as these lines are written (December 2) the children in our small town are agog with excitement, decorating the schoolhouse, practicing for programs, writing letters to a supposed Santa Claus, and various other things. We also hear many adults worrying over what to give a cousin or an aunt, or whether to send a Christmas card to the comparative stranger encountered on last summer's vacation.

This is not as it should be. A man of the world the other day remarked that people thought of everything in regard to Christmas except that it symbolized the birthday of Christ the Savior. It seems when even those of the world can see such things that it is high time for Christians to awake and to celebrate Christmas aright.

We wonder, sometimes, how this error came to be. Every nation has a traditional story of a saint of some sort distributing gifts to the deserving. Many superstitions are built around Christmas which are too numerous to mention here. The greatest error of all, at least to me, is the myth of Santa Claus. It originated with a saint, Nicholas by name, who distributed gifts to the needy, and has evolved into the present-day jolly old fellow whose picture greets us everywhere we turn from now until Christmas. It's just a fairy tale, of course, but the one to whom it has been told, and who later finds out it isn't true, may possibly tell us that the story of Jesus Christ is also a fairy tale.

It may be true that December twenty-fifth was not the birthday of Christ, but we have always celebrated His birth at that time. Christmas means the day of Christ, the Messiah. The Messiah means the Anointed One, the One who has been set apart by God for His own purposes. Do many think of it in this way? I am sorry to say they do not.

Do not misunderstand me in all of this! It is in harmony with Scripture to give gifts at this time. The wise men and shepherds brought gifts to the Babe, Jesus. God gave Christ to the world at His birth. So it is perfectly right to commemorate these great gifts by giving. However, do not give so you will receive a gift in return. Remember the words of Christ Himself, "It is more blessed to give than to receive" (Acts 20:35).

Let us keep Christ in Christmas now and always.

"A Little Gleam of Time"

By Arlen Marsh

THE sun came up out of the eastern mountains and poured long rays on Taos. The air was chill; the mountains that leap from New Mexico's high plateau are rarely warm in spring.

In the village of the Penitentes, there was sudden movement. From the heart of the town emerged a man, becaped and cowed, leading other men—a hundred other men, similarly becaped and similarly cowed.

And, finally, there came a different character.

He was the center of the crowd; on him was lavished the attention of the entire village. Clothed only in a robe that barely took the edge from the early morning breeze, he moved beneath a heavy cross.

His back was bare. The robed figures who walked beside him lashed it unmercifully with a short, thonged whip. Beneath the man's bare feet were cactus spines, measuring a half inch to three inches in length and sharp as finely pointed needles.

Shadows were shorter when the procession reached a small knoll that stood out of the plateau. The man beneath the cross staggered, was seized by fellow marchers, tied to the cross he bore. Thongs were pulled tight, so tight that hands and feet turned slowly black. The cross was lifted, dropped into a socket in the ground.

Time dragged along on leaden feet. The crucified one groaned. Three hours passed, and he was taken down. Weakened from exposure and from loss of blood, almost paralyzed by the savage tourniquets made by the thongs about his wrists and ankles, he lay, half dead. Hands suddenly tender carried him to the village, dressed his wounds.

The Penitentes had celebrated Easter in 1937.

It was so, the Penitentes think, the Christ was crucified. Until a few years ago, when the death rate among victims of the crucifixion grew so high as to draw fire from New Mexican authorities, the human sacrifices were nailed to the crosses with spikes. Since the middle 1500's the Penitentes, descendants of an old Spanish sect, have practiced these same rites each Easter on the mile-high Taos plateau.

Death is no less the symbol of life than resurrection. Had the Christ not been crucified, there would have been no indication of an approaching resurrection. And it is only through the approaching resurrection that life, eternal, pleasant life, is possible.

Christmas and Easter should be interwoven. The coming of the Savior as an infant born in Bethlehem, the death of the Savior on the cross at Calvary, the resurrection of the Savior from the Arimathean tomb, all are meaningless, completely useless, if separated into units. As a combination they spell the more abundant life in a way no man can truly comprehend; as distinct parts of a biography, they are worthless.

It was not anticipated that Christians should mimic the execution scene at Golgotha. The rites of the Penitentes were not prescribed as a hallmark of religious faith and fervor. But the events for which those rites are intended to stand are the most important events in the history of the world, with the one exception of creation itself.

For the Christ came into the world at Bethlehem to see that men should have life, and have it more abundantly. No sociological interpretation should be placed upon these words—Jesus came to teach no social platform save only as His doctrines indirectly influenced humanity to greater justice. The life to which Jesus referred as the more abundant life was a life that never ends.

Life, according to Carlyle, is "a gleam of time between two Eternities." This, the common form, is the life which the Christ was born to replace. Through His birth and death and resurrection, far more than through His teachings (which were simply a repetition of the ideas the world had been given in the Hebrew Old Testament), Jesus arranged the salvation of mankind. Neither birth nor death, nor later resurrection, would have been complete without the others.

Obviously, it is quite as essential that we produce a reason for the being of a Savior as that we believe He is the Son of God. No reason for His being can be found other than that He came into the world to replace mortality with immortality by means of the same processes which He Himself underwent—a resurrection. Certainly, there was no need for such a sacrifice as that shown on Calvary if the sacrifice were intended only to save men from their sins—the Old Testament, perhaps legalistically, but none the less ethically, had already pointed the way to "social justice,"

“good government,” and a “chicken in every pot” platform. A continuous system of divine revelation corresponding to that in vogue during the days of Daniel would have brought salvation admirably, with no such dramatic pain and trouble as are displayed by what some modernist has called the “religion of the butcher shop.”

It is equally obvious that, if it be accepted that Jesus' primary purpose was to save men in a very practical, very permanent sense, it is necessary also to believe that man is mortal. One cannot build a valid conclusion without a valid premise. To put it bluntly, acceptance of any of the numerous theories regarding natural human immortality is an automatic denial of the need for a Savior, an automatic denial of the truth of Jesus' own teachings, an automatic denial of the significance of Christmas, Good Friday, and Easter. And such a denial is not a road to “salvation.”

In short, the celebration of Christmas entails far more than a celebration of the birth of the Son of God; it entails an understanding of (1) the inherent need of men for a life-giving Savior, and (2) the ability of the Christ to give that life. Christmas, with either portion of this understanding lacking, is nothing more than another holiday, set aside by a paternalistic government for the benefit of over-worked shop and office help. Only when it points to life as something more than a “gleam of time” can Christmas be built into a day of real significance.

The King of the Jews

By Harry Goekler

THE wise men had come a long way, but their journey was almost ended. The star had led them unerringly to Bethlehem, and as they entered the city they asked the question that was nearest their heart: “Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him.”

When finally they came to the manger where the child Jesus lay, they bowed in humble reverence and presented unto Him gifts of gold, frankincense, and myrrh. They had sought and found Him who was born to be King of the Jews.

For many years the nation of Israel had looked and prayed for Messiah to come, and now that hope had been realized. Their Messiah and King was born, and the message was given to the shepherds as they watched their flocks by night.

The child Jesus grew and developed into manhood, and except for the occasion when He went into the temple to talk with the lawyers and doctors we have little record of His life until the age of thirty. During this period it seems that most everyone had forgotten about the birth of a child in a manger many years before and that wise men and shepherds had come seeking for the Savior and King.

One day, as John the Baptist was preaching and baptizing by the River Jordan, this same Jesus came to him and requested baptism to “fulfil all righteousness.” Then followed a period of forty days of fasting and subsequent temptation, after which Jesus began to teach and preach the gospel of the kingdom of God. For more than three years He who was born “King of the Jews” went about all the country, and multitudes followed Him and marveled at His authority and power. Still He did not proclaim Himself as King, and though His disciples eagerly awaited such action, it was not forthcoming.

Near the close of His public ministry He rode into Jerusalem amidst the cheers and plaudits of the multitude, and they would have crowned Him King then, but He knew the time was not yet come and refused to listen to their cry.

All this time the leaders had been striving to find excuses to get rid of this Man who taught as never man taught before, but it was only through treachery and false testimony that He was arrested, tried, and sentenced to be crucified.

The remarkable thing about His crucifixion was the fact that over His head was placed the inscription, “THIS IS THE KING OF THE JEWS.” At His birth the wise men came to pay homage to the babe born to be “King of the Jews,” and now at His death the same great truth was presented to the people by the inscription.

Proclaimed King of the Jews! yet never during His life among them did He act in that capacity. Yet the promise by the angel to Mary was, “He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end” (Luke 1:32, 33).

God's Word being true, this promise must be fulfilled; and inasmuch as Christ did not reestablish and sit on David's throne during His life on earth, then the future still holds the fulfillment of that promise.

Years later, as John stood on the Isle of Patmos and heard and saw in vision things of the future, the following words came to him, “And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever” (Rev. 11:15).

'Tis then that Christ will reign as King of the Jews and King over all. On David's throne He will reign, and righteousness and peace will be ushered in. Glorious thought! At this Christmas season let us all think not only of the birth of the King and Savior, but of the future day when in power and majesty He shall reign as King over all.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD

wolf shall dwell with the lamb. The lion shall eat straw like the ox. Man will not say that the fathers have eaten a sour grape. Everyone shall sit under his own vine and fig tree. They shall not learn war any more. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all God's holy kingdom. For the earth shall be full of the knowledge and glory of God, after the times of restitution have expired during which Christ shall reign and the saints as joint heirs with Him until He has put all enemies under His feet, the last enemy being death.

What a glorious theme it is, running like a golden thread from Genesis to Revelation! This, dear reader, is the gospel, of which our Savior said, that he who believes it and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believes not shall be damned.

Remember, that the Lord Jesus Christ is to judge the living and the dead when He appears to establish His kingdom and there is laid up a crown for those who love Him appearing. If you, dear reader, have not believed and obeyed this gospel message, do not procrastinate, for the unbeliever will have no part in it. Lay hold of the promises; make your calling and election sure so that an abundant entrance shall be ministered unto you into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

WITH JESUS IN GALILEE

affliction or persecution ariseth for the word's sake, immediately they are offended." Simon pondered the parable. Who could be offended because of his beloved Lord? Not he, truly! Though all the world forsake Him, yet would he remain loyal.

"For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" Not often did Simon regret, in the early days of his discipleship, his hasty abandonment of the lucrative fishing business. And as the days followed each other the love of his impetuous nature for his Lord became such a force he thought that nothing, no power of evil, could shake it. . . .

Evening had settled down upon Galilee. Not a breath of wind stirred the sheet of blue glass that was the lake. The light of the vanished sun shimmered over the hills and then darkened. Jesus was up on one of the lonely mountains near by, praying. For He knew that without constant communion with His Father He would not have the strength to walk the path that lay ahead to ignominious death on Calvary.

Swiftly down over the low-lying lake a storm descended. Its calm surface was whipped to a frenzy, and boisterous waves dashed over a small vessel wherein were Simon and the other apostles. They would have been lost in the raging sea, as many had been before, but Jesus saw their plight, and walking on the waves He hastened to calm their fears. The story of Simon and his desire to walk on the water as His Lord did is familiar to all, and we must hasten.

Time came that Jesus must leave the Galilee He had learned to love, the Galilee whose every name sounds like the soft lapping of waters upon the shore. Up to Jerusalem He must go, there to be arrested and tried because of the claim that He made of being King of the Jews. Blind and hard-hearted, the chief priests and Pharisees condemned Him to death at an unlawful trial.

Only a few hours before, Simon had protested that though all the world forsake Him, yet he would not, but now he "followed afar off." And when he was asked if he was one of those who had been with Jesus, he declared, "I know not this man." How many of us, we wonder, would have had the courage to act differently.

In the distance a cock crowed. At once he "called to mind the word that Jesus said unto him . . . And when he thought thereon, he wept." Dark days of despair and sleepless nights of remorse lay ahead for Simon. His love and loyalty would have meant so much to his Lord. . . .

"He is risen; he is not here." The unbelievable truth finally fastened itself in Simon's mind when he peered into the sepulcher and saw the linen clothes folded and laid aside. He would go back to his fishing. He had been a failure. He had done the very thing he vowed he never would do. But James and John and some of the others were going to Galilee to meet Jesus on the shore. And they hastened to Simon to tell him that their Lord had included him particularly, and so he went.

As on another gray dawn One stood on the shore and called to men in a boat. At first they did not know Him, thinking Him a fellow fisherman as He gave directions where to cast the net. An abundance of fish was the result. When they reached land, they found supper already prepared by the One who had served them in so many ways in their associations together.

Jesus had often preached forgiveness and now He was ready to demonstrate it fully.

"Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me?" Were the words addressed to him? marveled Simon.

Three times his Master asked the question and as many times Simon reiterated, "Thou knowest that I love thee."

"Feed my sheep," answered Jesus.

In that hour Simon, who could not stand the taunts of a little maid on the night of Jesus' trial, became Peter, the Rock, courageous and loyal even to his own martyrdom. There still was work for Peter to do. Bravely he set his face forward to serve.

A Correction

One of the hardest working and most conscientious members of the exceedingly efficient Junior Social Correspondence Committee is Ethel Fyfe, Lockwood, Missouri. Her work is outstanding, in that she makes up lessons and sends them with her letters. The editor wishes to apologize to her and to the chairman of the Committee for omitting her name from the list that was published on this page on July 6, and again on November 16. We are very sorry this happened. It was entirely unintentional. We are truly grateful to Miss Fyfe for her excellent work.

Marshall, Illinois

The Salem Berean Society, Marshall, Illinois, has decided to hold its meetings at the homes of its members, due to the impossibility of meeting at the church during the winter. On Wednesday night, November 24, the meeting was held at the home of Bro. Sylvan Richey, Martinsville, seventeen being in attendance. The lesson was, "Eternal Life Insurance," and was led by Roger Richey.

"And Thou, Bethlehem Ephratah"

Bethlehem lies in the mountains of Judea, about six miles south of Jerusalem and at about the same height above sea level. It is situated on the summit and side of a steep hill. To the east the mountains fall away abruptly to the Dead Sea, ten miles away. To the west are the foothills, the coastal plain, and the Mediterranean Sea twenty-five miles from Bethlehem.

FRUITFUL

The early name of the place, "Ephratah," means "Fruitful." The hill slopes of Jerusalem are barren, olives being about the only fruit grown. But around Bethlehem are lovely vineyards, almond groves, and fig plantations, watered by gentle rivulets that murmur through the terraces. Truly, Bethlehem is a place of fertility. How appropriate that out of Bethlehem should come the seed of a new race! Jesus, cut off in the prime of life, leaving no children of His own flesh (Isa. 53:8), yet "shall see his seed" (v. 10). He shall yet look out upon an earth peopled by righteous inhabitants, all calling Him, "The everlasting Father" (Isa. 9:6). Surely, Ephratah is fruitful!

HOUSE OF BREAD

Bethlehem means, "House of Bread," "Place of Food." Jesus spoke of Himself as "the Bread of Life" (John 6:48). He told the people that if they ate His flesh they would live forever. What He meant was that in Him were found all the promises of God, and by believing His message they were eating His flesh, they were devouring the "true bread from heaven" (John 6:32). "It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God" (Matt. 4:4).

WATERS OF LIFE

The ancient pools of Solomon are located near Bethlehem. The aqueduct that carried the waters to the thirsty inhabitants of Jerusalem passed through Bethlehem. The aqueduct has been restored and now the pure, sparkling water for Zion passes through Bethlehem. So did the Water of Life sent from God, pass through Bethlehem. Jesus told the woman of Samaria: "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life (John 4:14). God is the great source of life. He has made Jesus the Giver of everlasting life to us. "If any man thirst, let him come unto me, and drink" (John 7:37).

THE FLOCKS OF BETHLEHEM

David was shepherd to his father's flocks on the hills around Bethlehem. There were other shepherds of a later generation "abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flocks by night" (Luke 2:8). Indeed, Bethlehem has seen many flocks of sheep. Every year at Jerusalem the Israelites were required to observe the Passover. The offering of thousands of lambs every year was thus made necessary. "Your lamb shall be without blemish, a male of the first year" (Ex. 12:5). Israelites, coming from a distance, bought their lambs after their arrival. Bethlehem was a center for the production of these "unblemished" lambs, when in her midst was born the only truly unblemished "Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world" (John 1:29).

THE SHEPHERD OF BETHLEHEM

"I am the good shepherd: the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep" (John 10:11). "Our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep" (Heb. 13:20). Few things can illustrate the present care of Jesus and the coming kingdom on earth as well as a loving shepherd watching his sheep. When Jesus rules the nations of men as "King of kings and Lord of lords" (Rev. 19:16), His office will be that of a Shepherd over all the earth.

BETHLEHEM, WE SALUTE THEE

"Thou art not the least ——" (Matt. 2:6). The Father of a new order of beings came from a humble stable in thy midst. The Bread of Heaven for hungry souls was found in thee. The Waters of Life passed through thee on its way from God to man. The Savior of mankind was a Lamb in thy midst. The Shepherd was thy Son. Bethlehem, We Salute Thee!

Cradle Hymn

Away in a manger,
No crib for a bed,
The little Lord Jesus
Laid down His sweet head;
The stars in the sky
Looked down where He lay—
The little Lord Jesus
Asleep on the hay.

The cattle are lowing,
The dear Baby wakes;
But little Lord Jesus
No crying He makes;
I love Thee, Lord Jesus,
Look down from the sky,
And watch by my cradle
Till morning is nigh.

A Tiny Baby

Many of you girls and boys have called on your friends to see a tiny little newcomer. Perhaps you have gone with Mother or an older cousin to visit the new baby, and it was such a happy call.

There is no thrill quite like being allowed to hold a tiny baby in your arms, is there? They seem so small and so helpless, and you feel as though you want to protect them from any harm or danger that might come to them.

Do you know that there was an old, old man who held the tiny Baby Jesus in his arms? Mary, His mother, accompanied by her husband, Joseph, had taken Jesus to the temple, as they did in those days. Baby Jesus was just a little over a month old.

This aged man's name was Simeon and he lived in Jerusalem. God had told him that he should live until he saw the Baby Jesus. And God led him into the temple at just the right time—the time Mary was there with her Baby. Isn't that wonderful?

How do you think Simeon knew, in the first place, that Jesus was going to be born? Well, he had read the "prophets." That is, the books of the Old Testament that tell about Jesus. And he believed every word he read. Let us turn the pages of our Bibles and find some of the words Simeon read and believed.

Isaiah says, "The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light: they that dwell in the land of the shadow of death, upon them hath the light shined. . . . For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given. . . . His name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace."

Simeon knew that this could mean only one person—the Son of God, the Savior of the world, the Baby Jesus! In another place Isaiah says that this Child is to be the Ruler of all the earth. He is to sit on David's throne, and He will rule with judgment and justice forever. No one else could fit into all those particular places, we know.

Then Simeon could read about the Baby Jesus in the book of Psalms. The seventy-second one even tells about the kings from the East that brought golden gifts to Him! There are many other places, too, that tell about His coming.

Now let's turn over to Luke 2, and read what Simeon said when he held this precious Child in his arms. He said that life was filled with joy at that moment for him, and he would be satisfied if he didn't live any longer.

Simeon called Jesus, "thy salvation," and "a light to lighten the Gentiles." That means us, you know. He also called Jesus, "the glory of thy people Israel." A great deal, you say, for one tiny Child to become!

Now, there was also an old, old lady whose name was Anna. She was a prophetess, and she lived in the temple all the time. She came into the room where Mary was with her dear little Baby, and Anna was glad and thanked God that He had permitted her to look upon His Son, also. Perhaps you can figure out how old Anna was from verse 37. Try it.

And so, Mary must have been very happy when she left the temple with her beloved Baby in her arms, thinking of the great things Simeon and Anna had said about Him. And yet, perhaps, she was a little sad also, because Simeon hinted that sorrow would come to her on account of something that would happen to Him. No doubt she wished at that very moment that she could shield her Baby from every harm in the future, even as she did then.

Now we take leave of the Baby Jesus and of Mary, in whose ears were echoing that grand hallelujah chorus of the angels, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

AMONG THE CHURCHES

A GREETING TO YOU

If you are not a subscriber to The Restitution Herald, and receive a copy of this Christmas Number, it is because some thoughtful pastor or other friend has asked us to send it to you as their personal expression of fellowship and good will on this happy birthday of our Lord.

Read its richly varied messages, all of which point reverently to the One who was born in Bethlehem, who suffered and died for us, was resurrected for our justification, and is soon coming again to give those who believe in Him everlasting life.

Love prompted the sending of this gift to you—receive it in the spirit in which it is given and may God's blessing attend you.

GREETINGS FROM KOSZTA, IOWA

The Church of God at Koszta, Iowa, takes this means of sending its Christmas greetings to its friends everywhere. If you live in or near the community this church serves and receive a copy of the Christmas Herald, please accept it as an expression of good will from this congregation. May God's blessing go with you through the new year and at last bring you into the eternal Kingdom which the Son of God will soon establish upon the earth.

GREETINGS FROM R. M. ABBOTT

Greetings in Jesus' name: Strange things can happen in the course of one year's time! We are happily located in Grand Rapids, Mich., where I am serving as best I may a most enthusiastic group of workers in the Pennellwood Church of God. I have found the people to be the best of friends and all anxious for service in building up the work of Christ. These friends have sprung several fine surprises on us, thus making us feel at home.

We are looking forward to seeing many who are still "dead in sin" being "born again" during the next few months.

BRUSH CREEK CHURCH OF GOD

Near Tiptecanoe City, Ohio

Elder and Sr. C. E. Lapp were pleasing and helpful workers among us for the fall series of meetings, Nov. 14-28. The church will long remember their work, and prays for them success in all their efforts for the Lord. The second week, especially, the attendance was very good.

On the closing Sunday a number of the Lawrenceville brethren worshiped with us. Those present for the Sunday school service numbered 120. Miss Gladys Pearson, Tiptecanoe City, was baptized in the afternoon. She is of high school age, and has been trained in a Christian home, and has attended the Brush Creek services from babyhood days.

Sydney E. Magaw, Pastor.

PENNELWOOD CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

As God has shown His care of mother earth in our community and covered it with a protecting, deep, pure blanket of white, so has He covered us with a blanket of love and answered prayer. We are enjoying to the full the sincere example and service of Bro. Abbott and his family.

A full house participated in the Sunrise Service on Thanksgiving. Interest and numbers have been steadily increasing until we find our building inadequate for worship services as well as Sunday school. Plans are being considered for remodeling the building to double the seating capacity.

Our Christmas program includes exercises under the auspices of the Sunday school on the morning of the 26th and a pageant by the junior adults in the evening.

Miss Zoe Hall, daughter of Bro. and Sr. Fred Hall, was united in marriage to Mr. Sam Patterson on December 11. May God's blessing rest upon them on their journey through life together.

The grim reaper, death, entered the family of Sr. Olive Covell and claimed her only daughter, Mrs. Juanita Ames. Sr. Covell has been in poor health for several years and this daughter has been her burden-bearer. Please remember her at the throne of grace. Bro. Abbott conducted the service on December 13.

Pennellwood extends to the staff and readers of The Herald the season's heartiest greetings and best wishes for the coming year.

Mrs. L. F. Slocum, Secretary.

VIOLET MOORE

A long-time member of the Niagara Falls church fell asleep at her home near Ransomville, N. Y., on Monday afternoon, Nov. 15. She had been in failing health for several years, yet her death came suddenly and unexpectedly as she was engaged in conversation with her husband, who also has been a sturdy defender of the church.

Sr. Moore was in her 68th year and had been a member of the Falls church for nearly forty-five years, Bro. Oakley having baptized her in the all-saving name of Jesus. She was fond of music and possessed a talent for singing which she was ever ready to use to further the cause of righteousness.

Although living seventeen miles from the church, she was always in her appointed place of worship until her strength failed her. For a number of years she taught a Sunday school class and was always on time, even though it meant getting up at four o'clock in the morning to get the chores done and get ready to leave at a set time.

A large number of friends gathered at the home on Saturday following her death to pay just respects and listen to a message on resurrection hope by the writer. Our prayers are extended to Bro. James Moore, Ransomville, husband, and Bro. Earl Moore, an only son, Coulee Dam, Wash., Box 373, in their loss.

THE FIRST CHRISTMAS

By Alice Akers Price

"Mother, what does Christmas mean, how did it come about?
This question always puzzled me, I cannot make it out.

Bright merry Christmas, with all its joys—
Mother, did it come just for little boys?"

"O no! dear child. Now listen and I will try to tell

The story of a maiden, pure and holy,
Who lived in Judea and trusted in the Lord;
She was so meek and lowly
She believed His every word.

"One day there came an angel unto this maiden fair,
Who said his name was Gabriel, and told her not to fear.

This angel was a messenger sent from the throne of God
With a promise unto Mary—she believed his every word!

Of all promises yet given, this, the most precious one:

'With God thou hast found favor, and thou shalt bear a Son!

That Son shall be a Ruler and sit on David's throne,

Reign o'er the house of Jacob, the kingdom all His own.'

"And in due time the angel unto the shepherds came,

Saying, 'Unto you is born a Savior, this day in Bethlehem!'

And then a host of angels, bending near the earth,

Sang praise to God in the highest for this noble birth.

"Yes, this was the very first Christmas—the birth of Christ our King;

Let all the world now serve Him and magnify His name,

Let nations bow before Him in humble homage meet,

Let all His saints adore Him, and worship at His feet!

"Yes, this was the first Christmas; it came for all mankind;

The Light of the world is Jesus, who healed the sick and blind."

AT WAYSIDE CROSS MISSION

Bro. Wilsie McKnight, who is preparing for the ministry at Aurora College, recently was called upon to give an address at the young people's meeting of the Wayside Cross Mission. He was assisted in the service by Byron Williams and Elizabeth Drawdy, both students in the college.

"GOLDEN RULE NEWS

(The following items of general interest are taken from "Golden Rule News," published by Pastor M. W. Lyon of the Church of God in Cleveland, Ohio.)

Christmas Entertainment

The program this year is to be in tableaux, or living pictures, depicting the "Coming of Christ." It is a different type of program than has been given before. The committee feels that it will be of great spiritual value to all. Remember! December 22, at 8 o'clock sharp, at Golden Rule Church. Everyone is warmly invited. Bring the whole family out to worship the Babe of Bethlehem.

"Come and worship, come and worship, Worship Christ, the newborn King!"

Young People's Day

A special day was observed on December 12, as "Young People's Day." This seems to be a monthly event in the Golden Rule Church of God. On this occasion the pastor was requested to preach on "Putting our religion in to practice seven days a week." Regarding it,

Bro. Lyon said, "This is a pretty big subject for one sermon." He presented this extremely important topic under the title, "Full Time Religion."

Prayer Circle

"An hour and a half given over to meditation and prayer and examination of the Word of God. You'll find it helpful, inspiring, and strengthening to drop in and share with a few lovers of God's Spirit these moments of communion with the Source of infinite power."

Christmas Meditations

Gold, and frankincense, and myrrh the wise men brought. What gifts might we bring Him today? There are so many.

Perhaps we, too, could bring the gold, for "God loveth a cheerful giver." Not a dime or a dollar thrown into the basket as alms to a beggar, but an honest recognition of Him in our budget throughout the year. Have we brought our tithe into the storehouse? Or we might offer a renewal of our loyalty, grown cold through long indifference. Or a gift of a portion of our time, or service, or the consecration to Him of part of each day in prayer.

It might be worship, which He desires more than all else, and which is the basis of all other gifts. Yes, it might be even the gift of your life to Him. What shall be OUR gift this year to the King on His birthday?

Why should those who love the Lord permit themselves to use the word "Christmas" with the "Christ" left out? It's all right for unbelievers to use the pagan "Xmas" if they must. But for Christians—well, it just seems to us as if we're ashamed to use the name of our Lord. Or else careless.

Isn't that one way of witnessing Him? Let all Christians boycott the use of "Xmas." Keep Christ in Christmas!

Have we really gained anything at all by all this commercializing of Christmas? If it gets to the place where Christmas becomes a burden instead of a joy, how have we honored the Christ? If we could somehow suddenly dispense with the custom of giving gifts to men and observe the day by giving gifts to Him whose birthday it is, if we could replace the revelry and excitement of Christmas with a day of prayer and joyous singing of thankful carols, how much more the real spirit of Christmas would mean to us!

AWAKE—HE COMETH!

By S. J. Chaplin

(This is the last poem written by Brother Chaplin, and was composed some time in January, 1892. The exact date is unknown.—The Restitution, December 25, 1895.)

Awake thee, O watchman, arouse from thy sadness,
The Savior is coming, His advent is nigh;
Then herald the news with transports of gladness,
And tell the despondent no longer to sigh.
The time has been long, and through darkness like midnight
The path of the saints has been shrouded in gloom;
But now its last watches are wearing toward sunlight
Of that day that 'lumines the depths of the tomb.

Awaken, O virgins, with oil your lamps filling,
Light up the dark midnight, for soon you will hear
The cry, "Lo, the Bridegroom!" when if watching and willing
To cease from sweet slumbers till He shall appear,
To the wedding He'll welcome and mansions of light.
Then the long hours of waiting shall ever be past;
Thenceforward is rapture and endless delight
With the Savior forever and ever at last!

O, Church of the Firstborn! the glory-light streaming Adown the blue azure will soon greet your eyes;
'Tis the King in His beauty, with jeweled crowns gleaming
To circle your temples in God's Paradise,
When you walk with your Lord who from death did deliver,
'Neath the shade of the life-tree in home of the blest,
Along the green banks of life's crystal river,
And be in God's Eden forever at rest!

CHRISTMAS

By A. J. Eychaner

Softly fell the touch of twilight on Judea's silent hills,
Softly crept the peace of moonlight o'er Judea's trembling rills;
Gentle dew distilled their sweetness on the greensward and the flowers,
And the winds made low, sweet music in Ephratah's olive bowers.
Slowly o'er the hills and valleys, from the mountains to the sea,
Night had flung her somber mantle round the sleepers, bond and free;
And as shades of night grew deeper from the twilight's purple hue,
One by one the stars grew brighter in the heavens' arching blue.

Shepherds watched their flocks that evening on the verdant plains afar,
When o'er Bethle-em's quiet housetops shone a bright and wondrous star,
Filling earth and heaven with glory till the coming of the morn,
And the shepherds and the magi knew the Prince of Peace was born!
On that silent, peaceful evening long ago, a song began,
Sung by angels in the heavens: "Peace on earth, good will to man!"
Message then of joyful tidings came to earth through angel's word:
"To all men is born a Savior, to the world a King and Lord!"

Softly falls the morning sunlight on the distant mountain peaks,
And the glow of Christmas morning into every valley creeps.
Yes, a beauteous Christmas morning! Wake, O earth! and join the strain!

Let Judea's hills and valleys ever echo the refrain!
Let the world join in the anthem that the angels sang that night,
Till earth's darkness shall be scattered by the glorious gospel light.
And all nature's robed in beauty and our Eden blooms again,
And God's will, as done in heaven, shall be done on earth by men!

—o—
"My friends, it is perfectly safe to take the Word of God as we find it. If it tells us to watch, then watch! If it tells us to pray, then pray! If it tells us that Christ will come again, wait for Him!"—D. L. Moody.

"Our Christmas Social Meeting"

(As reported in "The Restitution," December 25, 1895)

"BROTHER R. S. Dwiggin is the leader of this meeting, but after once opening the service there has been such a hearty response by the brothers and sisters, old and young, that no prompting has been necessary. While we write this, 227 have taken part . . ."—Editor.

"The measure of prophecy is full. The time is at hand. Jesus is coming. He is marshaling His angels preparatory to taking up His abode on the earth and establishing His kingdom in Jerusalem. The Lord hasten the day."—R. S. Dwiggin.

"Another year has gone, taking one year more from the time when the gladsome words rang out over the Galilean hills, 'Unto you is born this day . . . a Saviour.' The signs are more ominous every day that warn us of His return, and they inspire our hearts to work on. And I can say that the way never looked so bright as now after a service of fifty years."—B. W. Woodward.

"Greetings of love, gifts of thought, of wills, of brave lives! Who has them to bestow? Young man, young woman, where are you? . . . Where are the ones who will offer these gifts to the Most High? The Master is calling for workers!"—Mrs. M. A. Woodward.

"Once more we approach that season of the year when we each one like to think of giving and receiving gifts. Many a friend will sacrifice a little in order to remember another in the way of a token. But while we are thus wrapping one more cord about friendship to bind it even stronger, do we remember the circumstances surrounding those events nearly nineteen centuries ago for which this day of the year is commemorated? That then there came into the world not an ordinary being, but One who endured many sacrifices that He might present you and me with that great gift, Eternal Life."—F. L. Austin.

"My good husband and myself are anxiously watching the signs of the times and looking and hoping for the coming of our King. Surely the night is fast passing and soon the morning must come. Having been recently raised up from a long illness, which threatened to prove fatal, my heart has been filled with thanksgiving, and my prayer is that my life may be filled with usefulness."—Elizabeth A. (Mrs. H. V.) Reed.

"The rays of light and hope and glory begin to shine over the eastern hilltops. Cheer up, weary ones, soon our King will come in all His glory and beauty to rescue His humble, faithful children and crown them with glory and honor unfading."—T. E. Adams.

"We will no more follow the solemn peal of the funeral bell in the mournful march to the city of the dead. Jesus will deal a deathblow to the relentless tyrant. Praise God for victory!"—W. H. Wilson.

"The Lord is coming soon! This is the blessed hope and will be voiced and emphasized in all the letters of our love-feast. For forty years I have cherished this soul-inspiring hope, and for nearly this length of time have publicly proclaimed it; and, though it is still deferred, my heart is not sick."—John L. Wince.

"My faith is based upon the promises God made to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. I believe that the time is near, very near at hand, when actual possession will take the place of the promises."—P. J. Graham.

"It is about fifty years since I became interested in the subject of Christianity, and truly I can say, 'Now is my salvation nearer than when I believed.' I am still looking for that blessed hope, when the redeemed will come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads."—P. H. Bouk.

"What would I say to you if I could never speak to you again this side of the coming of the Savior? Be ready! You (who) have this hope in you, purify yourselves even as He is pure. Single acts may decide your destiny."—S. Roxana Wince.

"Let us be faithful to the work before us during the coming year and cultivate a more liberal spirit where we differ. Help the weak to be true to the cause we all so dearly love. Let the fear of God be over us and the love of God restrain us in every work."—A. J. and Anna K. Eychaner.

We wish we might republish all of the inspiring letters with which the brethren greeted each other through the columns of The Restitution forty-two years ago, but space forbids. There is one more, however, to which we must direct attention. The letter opens:

"We, the members of the Church of God of Moorefield, Nebraska . . ." Then follows a greeting based on the hope of the Lord's return. The letter is signed by the following in the order named: M. D. Newell, Mrs. Sue Newell, Mrs. M. H. Ealy, Mrs. C. M. Grimm, P. J. Shultz, A. F. Shultz, E. A. Morgan, M. E. Morgan, B. A. Shaw, Mrs. B. A. Shaw, Jennie Brown, W. T. Brown, C. T. Stedman, L. M. Stedman, S. J. Stedman, L. J. Stedman, M. A. Stedman, E. Stedman, H. M. Shaffer, Mrs. J. P. Johnson, W. S. Grimm, Bessie Newell, Clara Morgan, and C. E. Shaffer.

We wonder how many of these brethren of Moorefield still await in life the realization of the hope their joint letter expresses? And how many of those others who took part in that "Christmas Social Meeting" so long ago are awake and how many sleep?

Christmas Greetings From Our Ministers

"The Elders send greeting unto the Brethren."—Acts 15:23.

MR. AND MRS. S. J. LINDSAY

No specified message has reached us as we go to press from Bro. and Sr. Lindsay, but owing to the fact that they are sending out copies of this paper to friends we know they want their greeting included. Therefore, we venture to be their spokesman, as we wish for them and for the dear ones they serve, a joyous Christmas day.

Tempe, Arizona.

MR. AND MRS. HARVEY KROGH, JR.

To you we extend Christmas greetings in the name of our Savior whose birth we commemorate. May this Christmas help us to appreciate more fully that greatest of gifts that has ever been given to men, and may the coming year for you hold countless hours of joyous fellowship with God and His Son.

Grace and peace be to you through Jesus our Lord.

Ripley, Illinois.

SYDNEY E. MAGAW AND FAMILY

To Our Friends: The first Christmas was marked by the sacred joy of Mary, the singing of angels, a joyous but very serious search for Christ. Sage and shepherd were thrilled beyond measure; they were reverent and zealous. Celebration of the Christ was in the deepest devotion. Men believed—and worshiped!

To a worldly multitude, Christmas now is commerce; but with you, our many Christian friends, we are sure Christmas is still a sacred joy, praise, and song. In that true spirit of Christmas, we send you our love.

Tippecanoe City, Ohio.

MR. AND MRS. F. L. AUSTIN

Mrs. Austin joins the writer in heartiest Christmas Greetings and best Christian Wishes to one and all.

While we pray for current Christmas joy and gladness, yet our deepest wish and prayer is that many, many, yea, all of you, shall fully experience the greater and richer and eternal joys and blessings to be inherited by all First-born Sons of God in the nearing New Christmas Day—the day of Christ's evident soon coming "without sin unto salvation."

F. L. Austin, 5439 West Ohio Street, Chicago, Illinois.

FRANK E. SIPLE

We wish to extend to our many friends throughout the United States and Canada our heartfelt Christmas wishes. May the season bring you joy and comfort, both in the service for today and in the hope of our Savior's return to complete that for which He was born.

Frank E. Siple, 135 Pennell, S. E., Grand Rapids, Mich.

GERALD L. COOPER

Brethren Everywhere: At this glad season of the year, let us remember the condition in which we would find ourselves had not the Christ been born. Let us not celebrate this glad day as an ordinary day of festivity, but as the Day of Christ, Our Soon-Coming King.

May God bless and keep everyone of you in the coming year.

Ripley, Illinois.

“Home, Sweet Home”

Provided by the love and sympathy of the entire brotherhood of the Church of God, Golden Rule Home assures to the members of its Family the comfort, security, and solicitous care which the word “home” always suggests.

Here the anxieties of earlier and more active life are laid aside forever. No threat of eviction for non-payment of rent or taxes or other indebtedness troubles the hearts of the residents of Golden Rule Home!

No doctor or hospital bills, no grocery, coal, or light bills to be met the first of the month, bring fear to the minds of the Golden Rule Home Family!

All such obligations and burdens are taken from the shoulders of these older ones immediately upon their entrance into the Home and are carried thereafter by the Golden Rule Home itself, which is amply able to bear the load on their behalf.

A hearty Christian welcome awaits all who seek the protection and lifelong support the Home provides.

Conditions of entrance into Golden Rule Home are as liberal as absolute security permits. Write for full particulars concerning the Home and its advantages. Or, better still, come and visit the Home itself and let the Family tell their own story of its advantages and comforts.

Address: Golden Rule Home, Mrs. Idona Romine, Matron, Oregon, Illinois.

Why We Are "Falling Away"

Selfishness

By the Editor

"IN THE last days . . . men shall be lovers of their own selves." That means men in the church! Selfishness dominating "Christians," members of the "Church of God"! That is one of the reasons why we are "falling away." I'm ashamed of it—and so are you—but it's true none the less, that we as a people are "falling away" from grace, faith, and usefulness because we are becoming more selfish all the time. Our selfishness is shown in many different ways, but in no way is it made more apparent than in the utter indifference we display toward the salvation of others. The Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us," falls upon ears stuffed with the cotton of evangelistic apathy.

"This is a condition to be expected in the last days," somebody protests in self-extenuation.

You're right! There's no doubt about it, you're right! A "falling away" in love, in missionary zeal and in personal righteousness is to be expected in the last days. But are YOU the one who is to fulfill these predictions? Are you going to permit yourself to become an evidence of the truth of these prophecies? That is the question! "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith" (1 Tim. 4:1); but do you intend to be one of that number?

Peter foresaw that a condition of doubt and indifference would arise. In the world? No! In the apostate, rationalistic, modernistic "church"? No! The first apostle to be especially commissioned by God to carry the gospel to the Gentiles (Acts 15:7) foresaw that this condition would develop in the church, among those who once believed and who laid special stress upon the reality and nearness of our Lord's personal return to the earth! I say it is in the church that teaches the second advent of Jesus Christ "that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts (selfishness), and saying, Where is the promise of his coming?" (2 Peter 3:3, 4).

Christmas Sees Unrest in Holy Land

"All Jerusalem . . . was troubled."—Matthew 2:3.

JERUSALEM, Dec. 24.—Two Jewish officers and ten or twelve Arabs have been killed in the last few days in a renewal of the fighting in and around Jerusalem and Bethlehem. British troops, assisted by the air force, combed half of Palestine today in search of terrorists, whose activities threaten to interfere seriously with the celebration of the birth of Christ.

Sun Spots and Soldiers

"There shall be signs in the sun . . . and upon the earth distress of nations."—Luke 21:25.

URBANA, Ill., Dec. 15.—Again science claims to have lifted an old tradition out of the realm of superstition and placed it upon a firm foundation of natural law. According to Dr. William F. Peterson of the college of medicine of the University of Illinois, the conviction that more boy babies are born in the years preceding a war period is now amply supported by scientific observations.

The cause cited by the investigators for this difference in ratio between male and female births preceding a time of war, appears as strange to the layman as the fact itself, although to the Bible student it seems to find considerable support in various parts of the Scriptures, beginning with Genesis 1:14 and reaching to Revelation 22:5.

The question of Jesus, quoted at the beginning of this editorial, suggests the thought, with which science is now inclined to agree, that there is close connection between unusual solar phenomena (sun spots—"signs in the sun") and the development of the spirit of war ("distress of nations").

Addressing the University chapter of Sigma Xi, a scientific fraternity, tonight, Dr. Peterson said that there is evidence that sun spots engender emotional instability, which is a war factor. Citing studies made in Vermont in 1927, during the height of a period of sun spot activity, he stated also that conclusions drawn from the observations made then served to support the old belief that sun spot periods were followed by an increase in the number of male births as compared with female. His conclusion was that sun spot activity not only stirred up the emotions which lead to war but also served to increase the number of possible soldiers to carry it on. The tradition that war meant more boy babies, and vice versa, he said, has been handed down through the ages, and throughout recorded history, and the tradition has been backed by observations of repeated instances.

"Wars, revolutions, and economic disturbances in general become more pronounced with the environmental instability that is associated with increasing sun spot activity," Dr. Peterson asserted. He added that such trends were world-wide and that now further studies are being made to determine if possible the mechanisms involved in this activity.

Nazi Pagans Change "Silent Night"

"There were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flocks by night."

BERLIN, Germany, Dec. 19.—Hymns sung at Christmas by German sympathizers of the Nazi antichristian system have been rewritten to agree with the "doctrines of the heathen 'German Faith' movement and other neo-pagan movements. 'Oh the Christmas Tree' (the Christmas tree idea originated in Germany) is now to be sung to an old tune to 'show that it is a real old folk song and not a hymn.' Martin Luther's, 'From Heaven on High,' also has been partly rewritten to eliminate any suggestion of Christmas.

"The best known of all carols is 'Silent Night,' which in its original version is as follows:

" 'Silent night, holy night,
All is calm, all is bright
Round yon Virgin Mother and Child.
Holy Infant, so tender and mild,
Sleep in heavenly peace,
Sleep in heavenly peace.' "

"The new 'German Faith' version of the above stanza reads:

" 'Silent night, winter's night,
Snowflakes dance, soft and white.
Life sleeps calmly, protected from harm,
Nestles snugly in mother earth's arms.
Wondrous miracle—despair must go,
Life shall never end.' "

The Young Church, organ of the Confessional or Evangelical Lutheran Church movement, says: "We see everything Christian diligently torn out. If only the substitutes were a little worth while, but how poor they look!"

The Purpose and Value of Prophecy

THE Purpose and Value of Prophecy" is a theme of sufficient interest to hold the attention of the most thoughtful minds, for when we enter upon the study of prophecy we are venturing beyond the realm of the finite into the profound verities of the infinite. Our spirits are humbled as we catch a glimpse of the awful forces operating by the Creator's will and as we realize something of the vastness and scope of His purposes.

The word "prophecy," like many other words in our English Bible, has been borrowed from the Greek tongue, and it is to that language that we must go if we would come to a true understanding of the meaning it conveys. Propheteia—prophecy—is defined by Thayer's Greek-English Lexicon as being "discourse emanating from divine inspiration, and declaring the purposes of God, whether by reproof and admonishing the wicked, or comforting the afflicted, or revealing things hidden; especially by foretelling future events." Prophecy, therefore, covers a much wider range of thought than has been generally supposed. "All scripture given by inspiration of God" is, according to this authoritative definition, "prophecy."

The corresponding Hebrew word which is rendered "prophecy" is nabuwah, and comes from the root, naba, which Gesenius defines in his Hebrew and Chaldee Lexicon as follows: "Naba, to cause to bubble up, hence to pour forth words abundantly, as is done by those who speak with ardor of divine emotion of mind. . . . To speak (as a prophet) by divine power, to prophesy, Greek, propheteia. In Hebrew, the passive forms, naphal and hithpael, are used in this verb, from the divine prophets having been supposed to be moved rather by another's power than their own (which is the simple truth, 'holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost')."

The Hebrew word for "prophecy" suggests, therefore, thought of men into whose minds God poured His supernal wisdom so copiously that they could not contain it. The flood of inspiration "bubbled" up within their hearts and "poured forth" in abundance the "water of life."

The definition of "prophecy" suggested by Peter in his second Epistle (1:21), and quoted by the author of the Hebrew and Chaldee Lexicon to which reference has been made, could hardly be surpassed for accuracy. The American Standard Version (American Revised) renders the passage: "No prophecy ever came by the will of man: but men spake from God, being moved by the Holy Spirit." Observe the added emphasis which this version places upon the divine authorship of prophecy as compared with the King James. The latter, you will remember, renders the text: "Prophecy came not in old time by the will of

The Church of God represents largely a prophetic movement. Throughout our denominational history we have devoted much attention to the study and interpretation of the prophetic Word. The editor presents here his analysis of the Purpose and Value of Prophecy from various standpoints.

man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." The common version suggests that the prophets were "holy men." Of course, no one would deny that this is true; but that is not the thought Peter was seeking to impress upon his readers. He was telling them of the origin and authorship of prophecy, i. e., the revelation of God to man as made through the Scriptures. He was not concerning himself with the character of the individuals through whom the revelations were made, but with the Source of their utterances only. The men were from God. That was the fact Peter sought to stress.

Both the American Standard Version and the Emphatic Diaglott base their translations of this text upon the Vatican Manuscript; the rendering of the Diaglott being as follows: "For not at any time was prophecy brought by the will of man, but men from God spoke, being moved by holy Spirit." The expression, "being moved by holy Spirit," is entitled to further consideration. According to Dr. Marvin R. Vincent (Word Studies in the New Testament), the literal meaning of the word employed by Peter and translated "moved" is "being borne along."

Now let us summarize our findings in this text:

"No prophecy"—no inspiration, no revelation, no part of the sacred writings—"ever came by the will"—the desire, initiative, or power—"of man." But "men" sent by divine compulsion "from God spoke, being moved"—borne along by no effort of their own but by the resistless propulsion of God's "holy Spirit." Prophecy, therefore, is of supernatural origin altogether. Man had nothing to do with its actual authorship. He was but the medium through which the voice of God spoke.

We have found that the entire range of divine revelation, regardless of the nature and purpose of any particular portion of it, may rightly be termed "prophecy." This fact broadens the scope of our investigation into the "purpose and value of prophecy" to such an extent that it really should include the whole Bible. It will be sufficient for our present purpose, however, for us to confine our study to those portions of the Sacred Volume which are commonly called the "prophets."

For clearer analysis, the Bible may be roughly separated into four major divisions: (1) the Historical; (2) the Predictive; (3) the Admonitory; (4) the Promissive. But when we attempt to separate the Scriptures under these various heads we encounter at once the obstacle of the Bible's essential unity. So complete is the oneness of thought and purpose exhibited in this Book of books that it appears almost impossible for us to divide it in any way. It is one! The historical portions (Please turn to page 16)

Was Jesus Christ a Jew?

THE JEW is an outstanding issue today throughout the entire world. The reaction the Jew causes among all peoples appears to be a mysterious and astonishing phenomenon. These people, as an object of contention, are becoming more conspicuous every passing day. The Jew is a powerful factor in world affairs, economically, politically, philosophically, educationally, religiously, industrially, financially, and in other human activities.

Anyone who reads current events extensively is impressed by the quality and persistency of news relative to Jews. Such news brings information of dramatic situations in which Jews are found to fill most prominent places. The outstanding locality from which news of this nature comes is Germany, where Jews have been the subject of special attention by the Nazi regime, under the leadership of Herr Adolf Hitler.

The Government in Germany feels obliged to handle the Jews by special legislation of a very restrictive nature, in order to destroy the dominating position they held up to a few years ago, and to check any return of such power, particularly as related to the spread of communism among the German people.

Furthermore, in many countries, quantities of certain books, papers, and pamphlets have come from printing presses relative to the Jews. These quantities of literature are broadcast in the manner to make the world Jew conscious.

A most striking element of such literature is that which undertakes to convince the world that Jesus the Christ was a Gentile and most definitely not a Jew.

Such literature seeks to remove the accepted sentiment heretofore held in the mind of Christendom that Jesus the Christ was a Jew, and that such a hideous idea must not be longer tolerated. The writers of such literature wish to convince the world that Jesus the Christ was a Gentile, and most definitely not a Jew, and offer these affirmations for their reasons:

He was a Galilean, and the Galileans were non-Jews who occupied the land of Galilee before 4000 B. C.; that the Israelites occupied the territory by invasion and conquest under Joshua in 1451 B. C.; that the Israelites were carried into captivity by Sargon King of Assyria about 722 B. C., and that he replaced them by Arians from Babylon, Cuthah, Ava, Hamath, and Sepharvaim, which were various parts of his scattered dominions (2 Kings 17:24). There was also another group which occupied Galilee, called Scythians, who were white-skinned, and had migrated south to India and Mesopotamia from Russia. Later some far-wandering Gauls settled in Galilee, and it is very likely these same Gauls were the people who gave the name "Galilee" to the country that became in later times the home of Jesus the Christ. The Galileans evidently accepted the religion and nationality of Judaism though they were all Gentiles and predominantly Arian in race. The seven and a half centuries that elapsed from 722 B. C. to the birth of Christ was a very long period of time, and many changes might occur in such an interim, even the conversion of an entire race to a new religion. It is begging the question for anyone to assert that Christ was of the Jewish race. It is childish to appeal to family records (genealogical tables) as if to circumscribe Almighty God within the limits of human exigencies of birth and death, when those records disagree and wholly ignore the mother of Christ. Christ was no Jew, and had not a drop of genuine Jewish blood in His veins. Abraham was a legendary character. God made no covenant with David relative to an everlasting throne. Certain occupants of Christian pulpits, by acquiescence in the Jewish boast that they have given us Christ and our religion, put themselves at an enormous disadvantage before the Gentile world, if not in their own consciences. Gentiles outside the churches have a stake in the purity and perpetuity of Christianity which does not belong to the church alone, but to the entire Gentile world, because it is essentially a Gentile religion not based on Judaism—its Founder not a Jew and therefore a Gentile as the Son of Man. Had Jesus been a Jew He could never have been a Savior of the Gentiles. The truth demanding recognition is that Christ as the Son of Man was a Galilean, and the Galileans were not Jews in race, though in part Judaized in religion and nationality.

The above statements give in a general way the gist of "Jesus the Gentile" exponents, who stand, therefore, on the platform that Jesus the Christ cannot be the Savior of the world if He were of Jewish descent to any degree; that He was a genuine Gentile; that the genealogical tables in the Gospels of Matthew and Luke are unnecessary, contradictory one to another, and are therefore unreliable and useless as evidence of the family tree of the Savior; that in any case, use of a family tree of Jesus Christ is beneath the dignity of His exalted personage; that the Jews as a race are an "utter impossibility" as far as being the soil from which the Messiah could come; that the real issue concerning the background of the Christ is a racial one; that race only counts in this case; and "that the historical-racial proof and that alone is valid and sufficient."

In answering the claims of these people, who insist the Savior came as a pure Gentile, I reply first of all with a word of personal testimony, that I, a Jew, rejoice in Him whom God in love sent into the world as a gift for the salvation of whosoever believes on Him. I add to this that I know I am His, and He is mine, because He said so! I believe in His invitation and His promise: "He that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out" (John 6:37).

I am especially interested in the heavenly mission of Jesus Christ as the Savior of the world, and His racial infirmities must not draw or repel my confidence in Him, while He is in fact the true and only Savior. "For Jesus (is a) quickening Spirit." "The second man (Jesus) is the Lord from heaven" (1 Cor. 15:45, 47).

My confidence in the Bible is an absolute one, and this attitude is based on my belief in its perfect diagnosis of the state of man, the effective remedy it provides for his regeneration by faith, the uplift it achieves, the brilliant future most certainly assured to all who enter the way through Jesus the Christ and finally because of the transcendent personality, of tender mercy and loving-kindness, who looms up in the pages of this most holy Book.

THE GOSPELS AND JESUS

In reading the pages of all four Gospels, we receive information and impressions of a character who is definite in His advent, associations, backgrounds, message, ministry, and accomplishments. The following extracts from the Gospels demonstrate this to be the case:

"The angel of the Lord appeared unto Joseph in a dream, saying, Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife: for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost . . . thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins . . . to fulfil that which was spoken by the prophets, Behold, a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emmanuel" (Matt. 1:20-23).

"The angel Gabriel was sent from God unto a city of Galilee, named Nazareth, to a virgin espoused to a man whose name was Joseph, of the house of David; and the virgin's name was Mary. And the angel said . . . Thou shalt . . . bring forth a son . . . Jesus . . . and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end" (Luke 1:26-33).

These scriptures just quoted point out the fact that Jesus the Christ originated from God by the conceptive power of the divine Spirit, and in fulfillment of ancient revelation and prophecy.

The Jewish identity of Jesus is again made conspicuous by the visit of the magi: "When Jesus was born in Bethlehem . . . there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem, saying, Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him. Herod . . . gathered all the chief priests and scribes of the people together, he demanded of them where Christ should be born. And they said unto him, In Bethlehem of Judæa; for thus it is written by the prophet, And thou Bethlehem, in the land of Juda, art not the least among the princes of Juda: for out of thee shall come a Governor, that shall rule my people Israel" (Matthew 2:1-6).

John the Baptist preached the baptism of repentance, in preparation for the ministry of the Christ. John was the son of Zacharias and Elisabeth, who were descendants of families of the Israelite priesthood.

They were very old when Elisabeth gave birth to John. Elisabeth also had been barren up to that time. Therefore, the birth of John the Baptist was miraculous and consummated by God that His plan of redemption might proceed.

"For this is he (John the Baptist) that was spoken of by the prophet Esaias, saying, The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight" (Matt. 3:3; Isa. 40:3).

This account of John the Baptist gives additional evidence to the Jewish background of Jesus the Christ, as far as His human side is concerned. John's Jewish nationality is not open to question. Mary the mother of Jesus, and Elisabeth the mother of John were cousins (Luke 1:36). Jesus and John were, therefore, distant cousins. The whole setting is a picture of Israelitish people, and this fact is further emphasized in the decree concerning taxation recorded in Luke 2:1-7.

"There went out a decree from Cæsar Augustus that all the world should be taxed. . . . And all went to be taxed, every one to his own city. And Joseph also went up from Galilee, out of the city of Nazareth, into Judæa, unto the city of David, which is called Bethlehem: (because he was of the house and lineage of David:) to be taxed with Mary his espoused wife, being great with child . . . and she brought forth her firstborn son" (Luke 2:1-7).

Joseph was a Judean, belonging to the tribe of Judah, of the family of David, and his ancestral home was Bethlehem where Jesse lived in 1073 B. C., when Samuel the Prophet anointed David his youngest son to be King of Israel (1 Sam. 16:1).

"And when eight days were accomplished for the circumcising of the child . . . and when the days of her purification according to the law of Moses were accomplished, they brought him to Jerusalem to present him to the Lord. . . . And, behold, there was a man in Jerusalem, whose name was Simeon . . . who was waiting for the consolation of Israel: and the Holy Ghost was upon him. And it was revealed to him by the Holy Ghost, that he should not see death, before he had seen the Lord's Christ . . . Simeon took Jesus (the infant) up in his arms . . . and said, Mine eyes have seen thy salvation, a light to lighten the Gentiles and the glory of thy people Israel. And there was Anna the prophetess, the daughter of Phanuel, of the tribe of Asher: she was a widow of fourscore and four years, which departed not from the temple, but served God with fastings night and day. And she coming in that instant likewise gave thanks unto the Lord, and spake of him to all them that looked for redemption in Jerusalem" (Luke 2:21-38).

All these incidents—the purification of Mary, the circumcision of the infant child Jesus, the testimonies of Simeon and Anna, the custom of the parents of Jesus "to go every year to Jerusalem from Nazareth at the feast of the passover" (Luke 2:41)—bear evidence to the fact that the racial identity of Jesus was Israel.

The temptation of Jesus by the Devil in the wilderness; the meeting of Jesus with Moses and Elijah on the mount of transfiguration; Jesus at the well of Sychar, where He declared that "salvation is of the Jews" (John 4:22); Jesus' explanation to the two men on the way to Emmaus, "beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself," are preminent incidents in the earthly life of the Savior which reveal as shining letters the racial identity and His absolute confidence in the testimony of Moses and the prophets.

PETER, STEPHEN, AND PAUL

These three saints, men of God, added their testimony concerning Jesus the Christ and left for us their understanding of what the "holy men of God spoke, being moved by the Holy Ghost" (2 Peter 1:21).

"The God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob . . . hath glorified his Son Jesus . . . the Prince of life. . . . But . . . God hath spoken by the mouth of all his prophets that Christ should suffer, he hath so fulfilled . . . Moses truly said unto the fathers, A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me . . . him shall ye hear in all things whatsoever he shall say unto you. . . . Ye are the children of the prophets, and of the covenant which God made with our fathers, saying unto Abraham, And in thy seed shall all kindreds of the earth be blessed" (Acts 3:13-26).

Stephen, the deacon, preaching before the council in Jerusalem, demonstrated clearly God's plan concerning redemption through the house of Israel and concerning his sermon by declaring: "Moses said to the children of Israel, A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear" (Acts 7).

And now let us listen to what the Apostle Paul declared in a sermon in the synagogue at Antioch, addressing the Jewish worshippers assembled there: "Men of Israel . . . the God of this people Israel chose our fathers . . . and raised up unto them David to be their king; to whom . . . he said, I have found David the son of Jesse, a man after mine own heart, which shall fulfil all my will. Of this man's seed hath God according to his promise raised unto Israel a Saviour, Jesus. . . . And we declare unto you glad tidings, how that the promise which was made unto the fathers, God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again" (Acts 13:14-41).

In like manner, the Apostle reiterated his faith in a speech before King Agrippa, as he stood on trial: "Having therefore obtained help of God, I continue unto this day . . . saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come: that Christ should suffer, and that he should be the first that should rise from the dead, and should show light unto the people, and to the Gentiles" (Acts 26:22, 23).

Paul understood the mystery of the gospel by divine revelation and his message is absolutely reliable. He declared natural Israel is the race into which Jesus was born and whence He came forth to engage in a ministry which was amazing in its conception and overwhelming in its execution. Paul was specific beyond the least question, as to the early origin of Jesus when he wrote that to the Israelites "pertain . . . the covenants, and the service of God, the promises, whose are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came" (Rom. 9:4, 5).

But Paul did not for an instant condone the sins of the Jewish race simply because of their racial connections. He was most outspoken in his condemnation of their wickedness as was also the Christ when He was on earth. "He came unto his own, and his own received him not." How great was the sin of their rejection, only God can know.

GENEALOGY

The exponents of "Jesus the Gentile" idea insist the genealogical tables in the Gospels of Matthew and Luke contradict each other and are unnecessary anyhow. These charges are not correct. The genealogies of Jesus as they appear in the Gospels are perfect to the minutest detail, and are absolutely necessary in proof of the immovable position Jesus the Christ now fills.

The genealogy of Jesus in the Gospel of Matthew begins with Abraham and proceeds down to "Joseph the husband of Mary." The genealogy in the Gospel of Luke begins with "Jesus being (as was supposed) the son of Joseph," and continues up to "Adam which was the son of God" (Matt. 1; Luke 3). Matthew shows Jesus to be the promised Messiah; Luke shows Him as the Son of Man.

Both Joseph and Mary belonged to the house of David. Being two persons, they had different family trees.

The Gospel of Mark gives no genealogical table of Jesus, for in this Gospel our Lord is presented in His work as the obedient Servant, and a servant needs no family tree because of his lowly place.

The Gospel of John presents the person of Jesus, as the Son of God. "In the beginning was the Word . . . and the Word became flesh" (John 1:1-14).

THE JEW AND JESUS

Jesus was "the son of David the son of Abraham." But "he came unto his own, and his own received him not. But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God" (John 1:11, 12). A number of Jews believed on Him while He was on earth. The apostles were Jews.

As a race, however, the Jews habitually, historically, and deliberately rejected Him, and yet because Jesus has acquired a commanding stature in history and is believed on so extensively in the world today, and in order that they might benefit from the vain honor of the reflected glory of the Christ, the Jews would claim Him as their very own, and say, "Jesus was a Jew. It took a Jew to make the greatest impression on the world such as Jesus has done. He was a fanatic if He existed at all; or a deceiver, bastard, hypnotist, or occultist."

"In any case He was great. But we reject Him because He claimed to be divine. Yet we are proud the world gives such honor to the Jew Jesus. We are God's chosen people, ordained to head and dominate the world just as we are, but we repudiate Jesus as the Son of God, deny that He is the Son of God incarnate, the expression of divine spirit. But we are glad to claim Him as our Jesus, the Jew! By this means we slap Christianity in the face."

Such a reception, of course, is based on carnal pride and leaves them in their lost condition, without God and without hope

THE GENTILES AND JESUS

The Gentile is the scriptural designation of all unbelievers who are not Jews. Of course Gentiles have believed on Jesus, and do believe on Him by the millions. They are the great witnesses for Him today and have been so in centuries past. But, alas, many of them are rejecting Him like the Jews! Others have "a form of godliness," but deny the power thereof (2 Tim. 3:5).

The Gentile is saved by faith in Jesus Christ. "For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek" (meaning Gentile), "for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him. For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved" (Rom. 10:12, 13).

And "there is no respect of persons with God," and "tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that doeth evil, of the Jews first, and also of the Gentile" (Rom. 2:9-11). Thus there remains no place for Jewish pride and that Jewish nationalism which is rooted in racial egotism.

To insist that Jesus was a Gentile is to set divine revelation as recorded in the Scriptures at naught, in so far as it bears record of the supreme wisdom of God in His di-

Christmas Greetings

From Rufus A. Curtis

The angelic announcement to the Judean shepherds as they held their lonely vigil by night, as they watched over their flocks, many centuries ago, is as well adapted to banish our fears as it was theirs, for the tidings are just as good and the joy as great now as was the case then.

"And the angel said unto them, Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David, a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord" (Luke 2:10, 11; Acts 13:46, 47). It was "the joy that was set before him" that enabled Jesus to come off conqueror and to "possess the gate of his enemies" (Heb. 12:2, 3; Gen. 22:17, 18; Gal. 3:8, 16; Rev. 1:18; 1 Cor. 15:22-26).

When we "stand in awe, and sin not," communing with our own heart, we are sure to propound the question, "What shall we have therefore?" (Psa. 4:4; Matt. 19:27). God does not want us to act without motives, or to stultify our reason, but to use them in harmony with His instructions (Isa. 1:16; 55:6-9). In unequivocal language Jesus answered Peter's question, as follows: "And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. And every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive an hundredfold, and shall inherit everlasting life" (Matt. 19:28, 29).

In contemplating the transitory things of "the life that now is," I am led to exclaim, "Lord, make we to know mine end, and the measure of my days, what it is; that I may know how frail I am" (1 Tim. 4:8; James 4:14; Psa. 39:4). "Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, whereunto thou art also called, and hast professed a good profession before many witnesses" (1 Tim. 6:12, 19). Having "turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God; and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, which delivered us from the wrath to come," let us as a band of believers say, in the words of David, "My times are in thy hand" (1 Thess. 1:9, 10; Psa. 31:15). Perilous times have come, but they are precursors of "the times of refreshing" that will be inaugurated by the personal presence of the Lord, the Prince of Peace (2 Tim. 3:1-5; Acts 3:19-23; Isa. 9:6, 7; 11:10).

"All honor, then, to that brave heart,
Though poor or rich he be,
Who struggles with the baser part,
Who conquers and is free.

"He may not wear a hero's crown,
Or fill a hero's grave,
But truth will write his name among
The bravest of the brave."

From T. A. Drinkard

Christmas! What a word, and the purpose for which it stands! It means a time of joy and gladness, joy, and happiness to many because they are going back to the old home where they can gather around the fireside with Father and Mother and recount the happy times they have had in the days of long ago, and enjoy the fellowship of home once more, the fellowship that existed before the home ties were broken. I am happy to know that others can enjoy this God-given blessing, even though I am deprived of that privilege.

Above all, this means a time of rejoicing because Jesus was born to be the world's Redeemer, to bless the broken-hearted, to heal the lame, and cure the blind. His message of comfort tends to gladden the heart, to give us hope beyond this vale of tears and cares.

"To you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord," was the most comforting of all messages, and should be cause for great rejoicing among the people of God.

Rejoice! Yes, because my brethren are seeing the need for gospel preaching, and are responding to the demands of the hour, because Jesus is coming soon and they will not need those means then. Now is the time to use their means to carry the glad news to those who have never heard it. Happy! Yes, because THE RESTITUTION HERALD is going forward in strength and power to glorify God by telling the world about Jesus and the purpose for which He came.

May God richly bless each one with His special blessings in my prayer.

The Christian Looks at "Moderate" Drinking

THE older way of looking at alcoholic indulgence was in physical terms. Scientists could prove, even two generations ago, that the regular use of fair-sized quantities of alcohol would lower an individual's resistance to disease, throw a damaging burden on organs like lungs, liver, and kidneys, and shorten life. The returns from mental study were just beginning to arrive. As these have accumulated, they make a far more convincing case against so-called "moderate" drinking than the story that the blood, stomach, and liver could tell.

As recently as 1928, even the definition of drunkenness changed. Purves-Stewart calls the drunken person "one who has taken alcohol in sufficient quantities to poison the central nervous system, producing a temporary disorder of the faculties, so as to render him unable to execute the occupation in which he was engaged at the time, thereby causing danger to himself or to others."

The "moderate" drinker, seeking a "let-down" and the easy-going pleasures of alcoholic companionship, is engaged in poisoning his nervous system. He may not at first wreck his digestion. He may have no tendency to lung disorders which drinking will increase. Indeed, his physical condition may permit him to build up a "tolerance" to the distinctly physical effects of alcohol so that he can increase the doses, presently, and still seem "moderate" in his indulgence. But this indulgence is the consumption of a poison for merely selfish and unworthy causes, and the nervous system knows the difference.

To the drinker, the physical motives of taste and quenching of thirst may seem to explain his use of intoxicants. Frequently, however, alcoholic beverages have been expertly imitated in taste. The substitution does not succeed, and the brewers themselves learned this when they tried to market "near beer" to those accustomed to "beer with a kick."

The "kick," of course, is alcohol. It comes quickly to the user of whiskey, gin, and other drinks high in alcoholic content. It comes more slowly with beer and mixed drinks, yet these are consumed in larger quantities by the typical user. If beer was taken in whiskey glasses, the "kick" would be too light to offer the "let-down" of nerve tension, the "let-down" in crowd behavior, that the individual drinker and the drinking crowd desire.

The light drinker may be well aware that he is not his best self after a glass or two. He does not sense what he has done to his nerves and what, with continued drinking, he will accomplish in impairing will power. "I won't drink if I have work to do," he says. If he plays golf, he drinks after the game, not before. Naturally, his drinks in the clubhouse after the game will cancel the benefits acquired in exercise and relaxation. "But I'm none the worse off," he protests. "I haven't a worry on my mind. Why find fault with that kind of 'let-down'?"

The "moderate" drinker hopes and expects to be compared, in fitness and self-control, with the immoderate, heavy drinker. But the proper comparison is with the abstainer, who has not handicapped the body and mind with a drug and poison that always, inevitably, impairs and weakens instead of benefiting. So the most "moderate" of indulgence can be thus indicted:

1. The body cannot utilize for food and energy the "moderate" amounts of alcohol any more successfully than immoderate, heavy doses. The substance is carried about in the blood stream in the long, damaging process of excretion and oxidation. Sensitive membranes are seared by this poison. The lipoid in nerve cells is poisoned. The heart pumps faster, but does less real work. Digestion may be actually halted while the system tries to repel this invader, alcohol.

2. The higher centers suffer most severely when alcohol comes into the system. The latest of man's controls and valuations are the first to be short-circuited. Alcohol takes command, for a varying period, of the areas in which choices are made and standards are set and maintained.

3. The "moderate" drinker menaces society at several points. If he works after drinking, his efforts are less coordinated than commonly, and his weakened judgment may cause accidents, delays, or losses. The cashier gives out the wrong change; the salesman offends a good customer. A well known physician believes alcohol to be a substantial and important cause of sixty per cent of automobile accidents, while figures from several states prove drinking as the chief cause of twenty-three per cent of fatal automobile accidents, with more evidence to this effect now accumulating.

4. The "moderate" drinker is the so-called respectable front for the liquor business. Repeal came about primarily because numbers of citizens believed that the "moderate" drinker would be able to bring about a "moderate" and hence "safe and sane" consumption of alcohol by those who drank at all. But the persons who thought and voted that way didn't know alcohol! Mere intent won't hold it in check, because drinking so slyly affects standards and will power. From "moderate" drinking all drinking grows. The example that "moderate" drinkers first gave him explains the young person's experiments with liquor—and the drunkard's indulgence as well. Nobody sets out to imitate the heavy drinker, but a good many persons assume they can safely and decently take "a social glass" or acquire "a let-down now and then."

The boundary for the Christian does not separate "moderate" drinking from hard drinking. It is the strong, firm line of right and wrong, set between abstinence and self-control and self-respect on one side, and "moderate" drinking, any drinking, on the other. Choosing to drink now and then certainly allies one with the drinking crowd.

In the war of "drugs against men" the "moderate drinker" has taken sides against men and against the purposes and destiny God has for men!—Bert H. Davis in The New Century Leader.

A Careful Analysis of Romans 7

By D. C. Robison

DID Paul, after his conversion, live a life of righteousness and sin? Many with whom we have talked seem to think so. A few passages taken alone would seem to teach so, but taken with other explanatory verses will give a clearer vision to the careful student. The following verses are given to prove that the Apostle was, during his ministry, under the power of sin: "For the good that I would I do not: but the evil that I would not, that I do. Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me. So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God; but with the flesh, the law of sin."

If these verses, with others, are to be taken without any modifying clauses, Paul did live a life after the promptings of the flesh. It seems to the writer that verses 5 and 6 put a different construction on the above verses. In these verses two conditions are brought to view as occurring at different times. The flesh under the law did through the motions of sins work in our members the fruits unto death. "But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held; that we should serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter" (the law).

Verse 25 is made clear by a translation given by McKnight, which is as follows: "Do I myself then as a slave serve with the mind the law of God, but with the flesh the law of sin? By no means."

From the above the Apostle writes: "There is therefore now" (after having been delivered from the law, v. 6) "no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death" (Rom. 8:1, 2). The "law of the Spirit of life" is the gospel; that of death, the law.

Beginning with the 7th verse the Apostle introduces a Jew who argues the law side of the question. The Jew asks the question, "What shall we say then? Is the law sin?" Paul answers him, "God forbid. Nay, I had not known sin, but by the law, for I had not known lust except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet."

In verse 13 the Jew asks another question, "Was then that which is good made death unto me?" Paul answers, "God forbid, etc." The Apostle's answer is herein given to show the Jew his condition while under the law. In order that we may have a clear conception of the whole subject, we wish to call you to consider Romans 3:8. It was taught by the Jew that the apostles taught, "Let us do evil, that good may come." This is called a slanderous report. In chapter 6:1, 2, Paul says, "What shall we say then? shall we continue in sin that grace may abound? God forbid. How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein?" This chapter tells the Jew how he may be delivered from the bondage of the law, and closes with the statement that "the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

To prove the necessity of living a life of righteousness, the Apostle places the Jew under the marriage law, proving that he was bound until the fulfillment of the law which took place in the sacrifice of the covenant victim. "The woman which hath an husband is bound by the law to her husband so long as he liveth; but if the husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband." The husband was also bound. If either married, adultery was committed. The introduction of the marriage law is a figure and applied to the 7th chapter shows that the violation of law has its penalty. The Jews herein addressed had accepted Christ Jesus as the true Messiah and had killed the law by being espoused to Jesus the Christ through the gospel. The conclusion to be drawn is that if they departed from Jesus they would stand in the same relation to the gospel as would a Jew in violating the marriage law. The penalty will be death. The Apostle announces in the 12th verse that "the law is holy, and the commandment holy, and just, and good." The law had been enacted and Israel placed under it that they might become a holy nation (Ex. 19:5, 6). Therefore, their failure to keep it could have no effect on the law. It still remained as God enacted it, holy and just and good. It had served its purpose and they had accepted the gospel and must not return to the law, as it would become an instrument of death. The law worked in their members to bring forth fruit unto death (v. 5).

Paul was writing to those who knew the law and were slow to yield perfect obedience to the gospel. They were admonished to serve in newness of spirit and not in the oldness of the letter. The Apostle closes this chapter with, "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" This is an expression suited to the Jew and not to Paul. He thanks God, not because he had been wretched, but because he had been delivered from this condition through Jesus the Christ. Then he sees himself serving God through the mind and not through the flesh. The conditions herein existing were peculiar to the Jewish converts in the churches of the early centuries. Those who take cover under the thought that Paul served God through sinful passions will never reach the kingdom.—Taken from a RESTITUTION HERALD published in 1921.

Voluntary Slavery

YOUNG people, how would you like to be the slave of a cigarette, to be driven around day and night, everywhere, so that you would "walk a mile for a 'Hump' "? That is exactly the driving power of the tobacco habit, when it gets you.

You read the history of slavery, and you curse the slave master. To you, that is something unjust, cruel, wrong. But let me say to you, that tobacco is as unjust to its victim as you regard the slave driver. There is this difference, that you have full power to remain free, or foolishly to step into the chains of a disagreeable, worthless, burdensome habit from which it is next to impossible to escape, and from which very few ever do escape, though they bemoan their condition. I meet such daily.

The tobacco habit will force—I say force—you to work hard to get tobacco; it will make young people lie to get tobacco; it will drive them to steal it; it will make men who are in dire poverty spend their last penny for tobacco while their little children go barefooted and hungry. And what it will make men do, it will make you do, if you, too, "get the habit."

One of the wickedest advertisements I ever saw read, "Young man, get the habit, smoke." Why did a big tobacco company spend thousands of dollars to plaster such a sign before American youth? Answer! Was it to help you boys to a happy, joyful, clean life? No! not much! It was to get your money; it was to lead you unconsciously to stick your mind into the bonds of a relentless master-habit, so you would have to buy more and more tobacco.

It was to get you voluntarily to place yourself under an invisible boss, ever present with you, which would make you do what he wants you to do. And let me tell you, that whenever you enthroned in the court of your mind that boss—the tobacco habit—the will and power of choice in the matter step down, and then you do just what the boss says do.

Men bound with the habit often come to me begging for help to break the driving power of tobacco. All tobacco victims deny that they are mentally bound, until they undertake to quit, but then they curse themselves for being too weak. They had maintained all along that they could quit if they wanted to; but when they decided to break away, they found themselves bound hand and foot. Oh, yes, a few do break away, but the great mass, as you well know, are slaves for life.

Say, fellows, you who have not yet been lured by the influence and example of your enslaved parents and associates, how would you like to have such a nagging, driving desire for tobacco that you could not be comfortable at work, at play, at rest, at social functions, anywhere, without a smoke to hold you down; always a cigarette to hold, to puff, to fuss with, to lay down, to pick up, to flip ashes from, to foul your mouth and breath, to irritate your throat and lungs and dull your fine sense of odors and your gustatory pleasures? If you would voluntarily assume such a liability and disability, it is only because of your inexperience and unwillingness to learn from what you see.

As a pharmacologist, I want to make plain to you the mechanism of this slavery. The tobacco habit is entirely different from natural habits such as a repeated use of candy or soft drinks. Their use comes from hunger or thirst or a delightful stimulation of the nerve endings of taste and smell. They are taken repeatedly only because and when they are pleasant to those special senses.

But tobacco, unlike foods and flavored drinks, is a deadly poison and acts on the tissues as an irritant, stimulant, and depressant, causing sickness and even death. Also, unlike most other poisons, by repeated use it actually calls forth a change in the living tissues so that, instead of being made sick, the victim demands it and cannot function comfortably without it.

This acquired tolerance is accompanied by a new psychic appetite akin to hunger, which is stronger than the impaired will, and it takes the saddle. Spurred and goaded by this unwelcomed dictator, the tobacco victim reluctantly and helplessly obeys. If a companion would attempt wrongfully to dictate your life, you would revolt and fight for freedom. But the tobacco habit, enthroned within you, in your tissues, your blood, your nerve cells, is an enemy within, which peculiarly demands that you take more of the very thing that produces and continues the slavery. Therefore, the only safe course is to refuse tobacco and be your own boss.—Leroy D. Swingle, Ph.D.; selected by H. H. Hawkins.

KEEP THE CHRIST IN CHRISTMAS

By Edith Sanford Tilloston

Keep the Christ in Christmas on His natal day,
Let no worldly revel dispute the Christ-Child's sway;
'Tis the holy season that marked the Savior's birth,
Not for greed or folly, but for peace, good will on earth.

Pride and greed and envy, weary toil and care
Are no part of Christmas, they have no meaning there;
They who change His birthday into a sordid thing,
Have not learned the lesson of the coming of the King.

Peace, good will, and glory, friendly hands stretched wide,
Light and song and beauty should mark our Christmastide,
Grateful hearts receiving, God's gift, His choicest gem,
Thus we'll keep the birthday of the Child of Bethlehem.

Keep the Christ in Christmas, Christ the new-born King,
Christ, who came to mortals, life divine to bring.
Christ, the world's Redeemer, honor Him alone,
Keep the Christ in Christmas, give the King His own.

—Adapted from hymn copyrighted by Tuller-Meredith.

Jesus Understands

IN THE dark hours of grief our hearts have often been comforted by the tender words and thoughtful acts, even by the silent understanding presence, of friends. There is healing in the sympathy of those who feel our sorrow with us. Yet many times the grief seems wholly our own, or at most is shared by a few intimate friends and loved ones. How consoling, then, is the assurance that Jesus understands and sympathizes with us!

Jesus is indeed the chief of comforters. A million suns rolling through the vastness of space cannot divert or diminish the personal concern He feels for one poor sinner who needs His help. "Seeing then that we have a great high priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession. For we have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities. . . . Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need" (Heb. 4:14-16).

Yes, Jesus is still touched with the feeling of our infirmities. Our sorrows and griefs are His.

"There's not a friend like the lowly Jesus,
No, not one! no, not one!"

By many evidences in the Scriptures we know that Jesus' sympathy is available for us also. Triumphantly may we say with Paul, "I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord" (Rom. 8:38, 39).

When fond faces look anxiously into eyes that must soon close in the sleep of death; when hearts are sundered by the sudden announcement that life's tenderest ties have been severed; when we hasten to look for the last time, through unavailing tears, upon the face of the dearest in all the world, then it is that Heaven bends low in sympathy. Then Jesus looks earnestly into His Father's face and says, "Father, I will that they also, whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am" (John 17:24). Not until "he shall see of the travail of his soul" will He be satisfied.

Said the Savior to His disciples as He was about to depart from earth, "Let not your heart be troubled. . . . I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also" (John 14:1-3).

When the righteous are resurrected at Christ's second coming, a shout of joy and victory will ring through the courts of heaven, for Jesus will then receive "the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints" (Eph. 1:18). Then all who have said with David, "I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness" (Psa. 17:15), will look joyously upon the face of Christ. The vast family of God, long separated by sin and divided by death, will be in everlasting reunion.

"As a mother fondly looks by the dim light of night upon the peaceful faces of her sleeping darlings, and thinks of the voices that shall ring with laughter and the eyes that shall sparkle with the morning, so Jesus, looking down from heaven, gazes intently into the darkness of this world's night of sin. Though many of His own are sleeping in their graves, He marks the place of their rest and longs for the glad awakening.

"Sing, O heavens; and be joyful, O earth; and break forth into singing, O mountains: for the Lord hath comforted his people, and will have mercy upon his afflicted. But Zion said, The Lord hath forsaken me, and my Lord hath forgotten me. Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee. Behold, I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands; thy walls are continually before me" (Isa. 49:13-16).

He who has "the keys of hell and of death" will open the portals of the grave. To the empty arms and aching hearts of God's weary children shall be borne in immortal glory the precious ones who have long been sleeping in death. With His own hand He shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, eyes that shall never again dim with sorrow, eyes that shall delight evermore to gaze upon the glory of Jesus.

"The ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away" (Isa. 35:10).—James H. Rhoads in Signs of the Times.

WHY WE ARE "FALLING AWAY" Selfishness

The world knows little and cares less about the Lord's coming. And so far as the apostate church is concerned, it looks upon the idea of His personal return as an irrational, fanatical superstition. No one but "adventists," or former "adventists," would ask the question Peter puts in the mouth of these scoffers of the last days!

How are we manifesting our selfishness? We will suggest one answer to that question in our next editorial.

Dad, Give Yourself This Christmas

Two men were talking about Christmas presents.

"It's so hard to know what to get my boy," said Mr. Indulgent. "He has everything he could ever want."

"Let me show you what I am giving my boy," said Mr. Doright. "Here it is. Read it."

"Why, it's a bequest. How strange!" exclaimed Mr. Indulgent, as he read: "To my Son I give for the coming year, to do with as he pleases, one hour of my time every day, and three hours each Sunday. (Signed) Dad."

"What on earth will he do with that?" exclaimed Mr. Indulgent.

"I do not know," said Mr. Doright. "It's up to him. I will tell you how I happened to do this. The other day a beggar stopped me on the street. 'Mister, can you spare a dime?' I looked at him. He was bleary-eyed, dissipated, but young. Suddenly startled, I recognized him as a boy I had known years before. 'Why, Harry, how did this ever happen to you?' I blurted out. 'You had such a wonderful father!' 'Yes, I know,' said Harry. 'Everyone told me he was so wonderful. But I never knew myself whether he was or not. I saw so little of him. He was always busy with something else. He never really talked to me. He never played with me. Oh, it's true, he gave me everything money could buy. I should have appreciated it. But I yearned for him to pal with me, and when he didn't, well, I found my pals elsewhere. I have been told he was a wonderful man, time and again. Oh, I wish I could have known him! If I had, I wouldn't be this way now!'"

After a pause, Mr. Indulgent broke the silence that had fallen: "You have given me an idea. I have given my boy everything he could want as long as the only cost was money. But I see now why at times he looks at me so wistfully, so longingly. Just last night he wanted to show me a model airplane he had made, but I was reading my paper and told him to lay it on the table and I would look at it after a while. He did, and then he went out. Why, I've been criticizing the minister because he boxes with my boy, which is very undignified. Here the other day my boy made a pass at me and wanted to box, but I told him not to bother me. I have given him everything, but I've never yet given him myself. Thank you, old man, for putting me right. I think my boy is going to have the happiest Christmas of his young life this year. He is going to get acquainted with his dad."

The Shepherds Were in Church

Faithful, dependable men, accustomed to responsibility, the shepherds guarded their sheep that night of nights. The starlit Judean hills lay calm and peaceful. Suddenly, all was changed—the angel of the Lord, the glory of the Lord, the multitude of the heavenly host—they were in God's greater church listening to the gospel falling from the lips of God's messengers.

At first they were frightened, remembering the Jewish fable that if any man saw an angel he would die. Even so, many come to church prepared to fear the wrath of God and remain to experience His abounding love.

"Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord" (Luke 2:10, 11).

The gospel is good news about a person, the Lord of all power and might; therefore able to save the lost, the Savior; one chosen by Almighty God to be King on earth, therefore Christ, the Anointed One. This verse is indeed a miniature of the gospel.

"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men" (Luke 2:14). These are the purposes of it all. The time yet will come when "the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea" (Hab. 2:14) when men shall dwell together on earth in love and peace under the kindly hand of "that great shepherd of the sheep" (Heb. 13:20).

Silence again descended on the Judean hills. The light had flashed, the messengers of God had spoken, they had sung their hymn of praise, and then gone away. The shepherds never could be the same again. Theirs was a responsibility. First, they must go tell Mary the glorious tidings; then they must glorify and praise God to all the people. The shepherds had been to church!

"For Where Your Treasure Is . . ."

A recent news bulletin makes a comparison of cold factual statistics as follows: The income of the American people for 1936 exceeded 1932 by 51 per cent. Where was the excess money spent? 41 per cent more was spent at theaters; 48 per cent more for cigarettes; 317 per cent more for beer; 30 per cent less given to churches; 29 per cent less to benevolences; 18 per cent less to colleges.

Where is America's heart this Christmas? In drunkenness, debauchery, gambling, beastliness, crime! With the saloon keeper, the prostitute, the wife beater, the death driver! What a glorious Christmas present the forty million members of the Protestant church could give the nation if they would resolve to vote as they say!

Greetings for the New Year

We are standing on the threshold
Of a newly opened door,
And are now about to enter
Where we have never trod before;
A new year is just dawning
In its fair and dewy light,
While the old is surely vanishing
Into the musty night.

We have left the fields behind us
In the which we scattered grain,
And are pressing on to pastures new Without regret or pain;
Trusting we'll be true to God
In daily service bold,
Our sowing and our toiling here
Will yield an hundredfold.

We are happy as we welcome
The new year with its dawn,
And we'll ring the old out quickly,
For we're glad that it is gone;
We are looking forth for new things,
And we hail the golden day
When the Lord brings in the New Year
Which shall never pass away.

What Did You Give for Christmas?

The question that has been on the lips of nearly all the girls and boys of your acquaintance is, “What did you get for Christmas?” You, most likely, have been asked and have answered it dozens of times, and each of your play-mates, also.

The reply in some cases was a long list of very fine gifts. In other cases it was perhaps a shorter and a simpler one. But in every case there was great pride and pleasure in each gift, no matter how small.

That is as it should be, for the happiness of childhood is the happiness of the world. Without the laughter and joy of young hearts like yours, this old world would be a dreary and dull place in which to live.

There is another side to this Christmas giving, my young readers, that we ought to think about, too. Not only, What did you get for Christmas? but, What did you give for Christmas?

I do not mean the little gifts that you so carefully made with your own hands, or that you bought from your own small sum saved during the weeks before Christmas, to give to those you loved best. Those will be treasured very dearly by Father, and Mother, and all the rest of the family. For nothing can be more valuable though it may have cost ten times as much.

But I mean the little gifts you can give each day—the gift of yourself. The gifts of love, of joy, of happy service, these are the gifts that bring the most pleasure. They are never enclosed again in their beautiful wrappings and laid away in a drawer for safe-keeping, and are sometimes forgotten.

These are the gifts that are enjoyed every day by those who receive them. These are the gifts that increase with the using. These are the gifts that never tarnish, never wear out, never are forgotten.

Every one of you, no matter how young, has a special gift he can give to those about him. Some of you have happy dispositions, a smile all the time. Some of you are sturdy little helpers, dependable and sure. Find out just what “gift” you have and then give it without measure, fully and freely.

You remember that beloved boy Timothy we all like to read about in the Bible. He had a “gift,” and the Apostle Paul told him to “stir up the gift of God” which he possessed. That is, use it.

How happy it makes us when we have given a gift to someone we love which is used every day and of which is said that it cannot be gotten along without. Such a gift is the gift of yourself.

Such a gift was the kind that God gave when He gave Jesus to the world so many hundred years ago. Jesus was the world's greatest Gift, for His love, and His service, and His life are the things the world cannot spare. Without them, as without the smile of you, and you, and you, this world would be dark indeed.

As we study during the next few months how Jesus gave Himself to those about Him, let us follow His example and give ourselves in loving, happy service to each other.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

ARE YOU IN NEED OF A PASTOR?

At the present time we know of one or two fine young men who should be actively engaged in the Lord's work. We will be very glad to furnish any church with information concerning the qualifications and experience of these earnest servants. Write to the secretary of the General Conference regarding your pastoral requirements. Address, G. E. Marsh, Oregon, Ill.

CHRISTMAS AT DIXON, ILLINOIS

Those who have regularly attended the Christmas programs presented by the Dixon church and Sunday school, declare that the one given this year was more interesting than any that has gone before it. Bro. L. E. Conner, pastor of the church, said that he believed the best single item in the program was the play, "How the Girls Kept Christmas," of which Sr. Mary A. Gesin, editor of our children's department, is the author.

As is always the case at Dixon, a large and enthusiastic audience was present to enjoy the program.

OUR CHRISTMAS EDITION

Orders for extra copies of our special Christmas issue exceeded our expectations. Our first printing was exhausted, and we found it necessary to prepare additional copies to fill late orders.

Bro. Paul C. Johnson presented an early copy of the Christmas issue to his wife when he reached home from the office at two o'clock in the morning. Sr. Leota B. Hanson, our treasurer, also was kept busy in the print shop until the early hours.

In fact, our editorial and mechanical departments labored long and earnestly to see that the Christmas Herald reached our readers at the earliest possible moment, carrying the greetings of many of our ministers and the helpful articles of our contributors.

Speaking of the latter, our editorial staff is exceedingly grateful to these faithful men and women who contributed so promptly and so ably to the spiritual feast of this occasion.

Excellent articles, suitable for this edition, reached us too late to find a place in our columns, but recognizing their value, we are including them in this number.

OUR OCTOGENARIAN TWINS AGAIN IN THE LIMELIGHT

The last issue of "Look" (Jan. 4, 1938), a picture magazine, contains an interesting picture of of Srs. F. W. Cawby, Indiana, and Henrietta Billings, California (when she is not in an airplane somewhere in the clouds). These beloved twins of eighty-one years are shown, each holding in her arms a four-week-old "twin" just as they appeared at the 1937 "Twins Convention" held in Fort Wayne, Ind. These sisters in the faith, as well as in the flesh, were the oldest twins present at the convention. The children they held were the youngest.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

The Christmas season is now upon us and the various departments of the church are completing their plans for the proper observance of this sacred occasion. The Sunday school will observe Christmas at the morning church hour, Sunday, the 19th. The choir and others will present the pageant, "The Nativity," at 7:30 the same Sunday night.

The ladies of the Morning Star Class are entertaining the mens' class at their annual Christmas party December 15.

The Crusaders' Class, with Mrs. Siple as teacher, is holding its annual Christmas party and election of officers on Tuesday night, Dec. 14, following the devotional service, at the Barr home. The Crusaders extend a cordial invitation to any young person between the ages of twenty and thirty to attend this Christmas party and get acquainted with one of the up-and-coming classes of South Lawn Sunday school.

The annual business meeting of the church was held December 3, 1937. Several important items of business were taken care of, and officers chosen for 1938. The officers are: Elders—Richard Skeels (honorary), Lawrence Bridegam, Martha Doan, and Dorothy Siple; deacons—Lyle Doan, Oscar Hopkins, Ralph Downing, Don Holmes; deaconesses—Dorothy Newell, Ethel Hopkins; secretary—Francis Van Fleet; treasurer—Gerald Niles; Sunday school superintendent—Lloyd Stevens; Berean superintendent—Edward Dykstra; Doreas superintendent, Mildred Dolph; director of music, Evelyn Barr. A later meeting of the Board of Elders with the superintendents resulted in the appointment of the following: (Sunday school) assistant superintendent—Oscar Hopkins; secretary—treasurer—Jeanne Lyon; librarian—Leslie Niles; Berean assistant superintendent—Mrs. Holland; secretary-treasurer—Jacqueline Stevens.

A special consecration service and installation of officers will be held Sunday night, Jan. 2, 1938.

There will be a gathering at the church annex Friday night, Dec. 31, from 9 to 12:15. The first part of the evening will be spent in a social and fellowship manner, and just before midnight there will be the singing of hymns and a devotional approach to the new year. The young people are especially invited, and a cordial invitation is extended to all to enjoy this occasion with us and to approach the new year in the proper spirit.

The senior and intermediate Christian Endeavor societies have been alternating in taking part in the Sunday night church services. These features have added much of interest.

The pastor is continuing to present the fundamentals of the gospel in simple form on Sunday nights. Young people are all urged to attend these services.

The Sunday school is planning to start a class on Foundation Truth at the beginning of the new year. A series of lessons running until Easter will be studied by this class, which will be made up of persons from any of the other classes who wish to spend three months studying foundation truths.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

We are pleased to see the name of Bro. Wilsie McKnight listed among the students of Aurora College to whom recognition was accorded for superior scholarship during the spring semester of 1937. Bro. Arthur Mills received "honorable mention" for the same reason.

A group of the Oregon Sunday school girls, accompanied by one of their teachers, Sr. Elizabeth Ordnung, and by the pastor, carried the spirit of Christmas into homes of "shut-ins" by calling and singing carols. A chorus from the Lutheran Church visited Golden Rule Home after the Wednesday night prayer service which was held there, and delighted all who were present with Christmas carols.

"Grandpa" Harvey, Kokomo, Ind., informs us with justifiable pride of the arrival of "Miss Rita Caril Snyder, who is visiting with us during the holidays. She was born December 22, 1937." The mother of this little lady will be remembered as Sr. Helen Harvey. Her husband, Frank Snyder, as well as "Grandpa, is rejoicing."

A most interesting and "Christmasy" program was put on by the Oregon Sunday school last week. Sr. George Siple was the chairman of the committee and was justly congratulated for the unique manner in which the program was arranged and presented.

A note from Bro. and Sr. F. A. Stilson, South Bend, Ind., postmarked Yankeetown, Fla., extends Christmas greetings to all, and says, "We are enjoying fine weather. Will move farther south about the end of the month. Expect to do some Bible work among the brethren at Kendall" (a place where Bro. Thayer put in some effective work last winter).

A card from a new subscriber: "Approving the recent article, 'Funeral Customs Deplored.' The useless expense, the harrowing delays, the unscriptural pageantry, the mockery of common sense, all deny the fundamental simplicity of the gosepl. I am a new reader and find much to approve," adds Mr. W. Alford of Rochester, N. Y. We appreciate these words of commendation from a new subscriber who, by the way, lives in the city where the first Church of God paper was founded.

WHO CAN HELP US WITH THIS OLD SONG?

Writing from her home in DeLake, Ore., Sr. Sarah E. Smith says: "Since seeing in The Herald some old familiar songs, I thought of one that I learned in 1875, just from hearing it sung. If it is worthy of a place in our good paper, I would like to see it in print. I can't think of the first line of the second verse. Can you supply it, please?"

The editor regrets that this splendid hymn is unknown to him, and apparently he has no copy of it in his large collection of old "psalms and hymns and spiritual songs." Perhaps a reader will help Sr. Smith and The Herald in locating the missing words. The song follows:

"Behold, the mountain of the Lord
In latter days shall rise,
O'er mountain tops, above the hills,
To draw the wondering eyes.

"To this the . . . (five syllables missing)
All tribes and tongues shall flow
Up to the hill of God. They'll say,
'And to His house we'll go.'

"The beams that shine from Zion's hill
Shall lighten every land;
The King who reigns in Salem's towers,
Shall all the world command.

"Let Satan rage and boast no more,
Nor think his reign is long;
Tho' saints are feeble, frail, and poor,
Their coming King is strong."

WAS JESUS CHRIST A JEW?

vine decrees whereby Jesus came through elected individuals.

Abraham is the "father of the faithful," so that they which have the faith of Abraham are the children of Abraham, for it is written, "Ye (Gentiles) are all the children of God by faith in Jesus Christ, and if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise" (Gal. 3:7, 26, 29).

Those Gentiles who insist Jesus was a Gentile, assert that our Lord ignored Moses altogether and that Judaism makes a strong claim upon the ministry of Jesus. This is a grave misunderstanding, because the unbelieving Jews reject Moses even as they do Jesus. As for Judaism, it is known to be a denial of the covenants made to Abraham, and is a traditionalism that rejects the law of Moses and the testimony of the prophets.

The following scriptures testify to the accuracy of our interpretation: "Jesus said to the Jews, Do not think that I will accuse you to the Father: there is one that accuseth you, even Moses, in whom ye trust. For had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me: for he wrote of me. But if ye believe not his writings, how shall ye believe my words?" (John 5:45-47). Jesus said to the Jews, "Ye make the word of God of none effect through your tradition" (Mark 7:13).

Jesus the Christ is the Head of a new order, one that is spiritual. The first man Adam became a living soul, the last Adam (Jesus) a life-giving spirit (1 Cor. 15:45).

"If any man be in Christ he is a new creature; old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new" (2 Cor. 5:17).

Jesus is a transcending personality, and cannot be claimed by any race on merely carnal grounds, or to satisfy human pride. To claim racial possession of Jesus the Christ, and reject the divine testimony of the Holy Scriptures concerning Him, is very likely to prove to be a journey down a desolate highway.

Jesus came into the world in accordance with divine will, wisdom, and power, to reconcile the world to Himself. And no flesh should glory before God. "Let him that glorieth, glory in the Lord." Jesus said, "I am the bread of life . . . for I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me" (John 6:35, 38).

Jesus Christ in His fundamental personality is . . . identified with natural Israel as to race, family relationships, geographical confinement, immediate teaching, and sacrificial achievement.

"Now the God of peace that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work, to do his will, working in you that which is wellpleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory for ever and ever" (Heb. 13:20, 21).—R. H. Spiro, converted Jew, in The Defender.

THE PURPOSE AND VALUE OF PROPHECY

of the Bible contain so much of prophecy, and the prophetic portions so much of history, of promise, and of admonition that we cannot effectually separate the one from the other; but nevertheless we shall endeavor to confine our investigation as closely as possible to the predictive element which is to be found throughout the Book.

Perhaps no part of the Bible has aroused a deeper interest among us than have the predictions it contains. Of course, every promise of God is a prophecy, for it predicts the blessings or rewards which will come to the righteous when the Lord returns. Every warning relative to sin is a prophecy in that it foretells the doom of the ungodly. But these are not the prophecies we wish to consider at this time. We will put the matter in the form of a question:

"What is the real value and purpose of prophecy—predictive prophecy?" In our study of Daniel, Isaiah, the book of Revelation—what do we find to be the predominating object of them all? And, further, what is the chief benefit we receive to reward us for the effort we put forth to come to an understanding of these books? A large proportion of the Scriptures is occupied with prophetic writings, and surely they must contain something of great value and importance, else so much space would not have been devoted to them. What, then, is the answer to our question?

First, prophecy, like all other portions of the Bible, is designed primarily to instruct the child of God concerning the will and purposes of the Father, and is, therefore, of great educational value. Second, prophecy informs us of events before they occur, and thus our curiosity regarding the future is satisfied. But, surely, education and the gratification of human curiosity cannot be the main purposes of God's marvelous predictive revelations! And this observation brings us to the thought which I wish to emphasize the most strongly: that is, that to appreciate the true and the enormous value of prophecy one must approach its study from a spiritual rather than from a material or carnal point of view.

What I mean is this: Enlightenment concerning the future is not the primary purpose of prophecy. Its true object is an infinitely higher one than that of merely recording the transactions of men and of nations before they occur. Prophecy is addressed to the people of God, not to the world. The full import of no scripture can be apprehended by a carnal mind, by the unregenerated mind of a worldly man. Hear the Apostle Paul on this point: "Now the unspiritual (margin) receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him; and he cannot know them, because they are spiritually judged" (1 Cor. 2:14, A. R. V.). This is perhaps what Peter had in mind when he said, "No prophecy of scripture is of any private (individual) interpretation." Prophecy must be understood in harmony with its spiritual origin if it is to be understood at all!

Yes, the true purpose, the divine purpose, of prophecy is far more important than that of informing the world, or even the church, of impending events, however remarkable such events may be. The real purpose of prophecy is to create a reaction in the hearts and lives of the Father's children favorable to Himself! Prophecy and its fulfillment assures those who believe in its divine origin that GOD IS! It provides irrefragable evidence of His Being, of His faithfulness in keeping the promises He has made, of His constant love and care for His people. It tells them that the mighty Governor of the universe is concerning Himself with their affairs! Prophecy makes the personality of God real and His presence actual to those who seek to do His will, for in the fulfillment of its predictions they are able to see God at work! And they know that He lives because His mighty words are being accomplished before their eyes in just the way the prophets long ago predicted.

It has seemed to us that perhaps we have erred in the past in our manner of presenting the truths of prophecy, both to the church and to the world, in that we have stressed the miraculous nature of prophecy in an attempt to arouse the interest of the public and hold their attention until we could instruct them more fully in what we looked upon as more important truths. We believe that prophecy can be made a powerful instrument by which to induce men and women to forsake their sins, and to be obedient to the gospel of the kingdom of God, by which only they can be saved. As we point out the faithfulness and goodness of God in the past and in the present, as it is made evident in the fulfillment of prophecy, we are able to convince those who are out of Christ that the Father will be equally faithful in keeping His promises to them if they will only believe and embrace them!

Let us, then, make prophecy exactly what it was intended to be—a powerful inducement for men and women to seek after God! Let us not content ourselves with simply interesting people in the strange technicalities of prophetic interpretation, to gratify their carnal, sensation-loving natures, but rather let us put forth every effort to arouse in them a fervent desire for God—a hungering and a thirsting after righteousness! While we hold out to the unsaved the blessed promises of redemption found in the prophets, let us not forget to warn them that unfulfilled prophecy contains nothing of comfort for the willfully negligent and disobedient; but, on the other hand, "a certain fearful expectation of judgment" (Heb. 10:27).

The full blessedness of prophecy, like the full blessedness of the gospel, is reserved exclusively for those who are in Christ Jesus when He comes!

Selfishness of the Local Church

By the Editor

THE first purpose, the main purpose, the last purpose of God in this age is the taking out of a people for His name! And this work is to be done by the "called out" ones themselves. They have no other task so great, so important, as that of preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God to those who have never heard it. When the church fails in this duty it fails in everything, for "this gospel of the Reign (of Christ) shall be preached over the wide world as a testimony to all the Gentiles, and then the end will come" (Matt. 24:14, Moffatt). Individuals may "build themselves up spiritually" (selfishly, may we say?), but the kingdom of God will not come, their rewards (what will they have in the way of reward if they think only of their own salvation and the strengthening of their own local church?) will never be realized until "this gospel of the kingdom shall (have been) preached in all the world"—not alone in their own locality—"for a witness unto all nations."

The coming of Christ, the resurrection of the righteous dead, the immortalization of the living saints, the establishment of the kingdom of God—all depend upon the completion of the missionary task of the church.

Fifty years ago the believers in the second coming of Christ were the most zealous, self-sacrificing, evangelistic group in America. "They went every where preaching the word." In groves and tents, schoolhouses and private homes meetings were held, the coming of the Lord proclaimed, and men and women urged to accept the gospel before the door of salvation was closed forever.

Every believer was a preacher and every preacher an evangelist! The newly baptized did not lean! Each one stood firmly upon his own two feet for the truth he had come to believe. He asked no one to support him. He talked the truth to others—neighbors, friends, business associates, casual acquaintances, and strangers—everybody with whom he came into contact for any reason provided a "congregation" to which he preached a "sermon." He talked long into the night, with well-thumbed Bible in his hand, to anyone and everyone that would listen.

Friend converted friend, neighbor convinced neighbor of the truth. When a wandering "soul sleeper" evangelist (he being a "layman" so deeply impressed with the importance of the truth that he just had to preach it), chanced to visit a community he went immediately to the schoolhouse without invitation and, with the teacher's reluctant consent, announced to the open-mouthed scholars that he would begin a meeting there that selfsame night and admonished them all to go home and tell their parents about it.

When the time came for him to go away he generally left two or three sincere believers behind him, each one of whom, as we have seen, considered himself an evangelist. Pastoral work as it is understood today, was practically unknown, as such pastoral work was unknown in the early church. They did not build churches then for the believers, but for the unbelievers! Only when they could find no other door open did they construct buildings for the special use of the church. (Nearly three hundred years went by after the ascension of Christ before "churches" were thought of as essential to the carrying on of Christian work.)

The effort of the "local preacher" was directed toward the unbelievers in the community, not toward the believers. As soon as a man was converted he hurried away to "call his own brother," sister, neighbor, friend, to hear the glad tidings which had brought joy to his own heart. It was only when evangelistic zeal abated that it was found necessary to devote the chief effort of the church to the task of pastoral supervision. John was not mistaken when he declared that "every man that hath this hope in him" (the hope of the Lord's coming) "purifieth himself, even as he is pure" (1 John 3:2, 3). When preachers neglected (2 Peter 1:12) to keep their people stirred up with the assurance that the Lord was coming soon—when they no longer preached the simple second advent doctrine and the gospel of the kingdom as their principal theme—the members of their churches began to say, "My Lord delayeth his coming" and, growing indifferent to the blessed hope, to the imminence of Christ's return, "prepared not (themselves), neither did according to his will" (Please turn to page 11)

Soul-Winning Passion Cooled Off

"The love of many shall wax cold."—Matthew 24:12.

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 1.—The January issue of Prophecy, the helpful little magazine edited by Keith L. Brooks, in this city, points out in its opening article the fact that the "falling away" predicted by Paul has indeed overtaken the church. He speaks of the "decline of missionary zeal in recent years," and suggests that among the causes of this recessive tendency "is the doubt in many hearts as to whether men are really lost without Christ."

Failure to teach doctrine, that is, definite truths concerning the present nature and state of man, and the necessity of faith in a crucified, resurrected, and returning Savior, has much to do with the decline of faith and with the increase of indifference concerning religion in these days. Let us beware, lest our love for the truth wax cold.

The Church Dances to Swing Music

"To every thing there is a season . . . a time to mourn, and a time to dance."—Ecclesiastes 3:1, 4.

NEW YORK, Jan. 1.—The editor was at a loss as to whether this item should be given a New York date line, or whether it should be placed at Oregon, Illinois! The original happening took place in the eastern metropolis, however, and so we let it stand.

Last week hundreds were turned away from Radio City's Center Theater (which seats 3,500 people) for the first time in its history. The Dance International was in progress and seats were sold by brokers for as much as $25 apiece. But it is not only in theaters and formal ballrooms that dancing is carried on in these days, but hundreds of churches are making the dance their most powerful appeal to the young people of their communities.

Not long ago, a representative of a branch organization of the Federal Council of Churches, in conversation with the editor of THE RESTITUTION HERALD, deploring his inability to induce many to attend a county gathering fostered by his group, suggested that "we" should arrange for a barn dance to be held in a new barn just being erected on his place, in connection with the "religious educational" effort he wanted to put on!

Nature Still Veils Many Secrets

"Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth?"—Job 38:4.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Dec. 30.—Dr. Ralph S. Little, a professor of biology at the University of Chicago, addressing the zoologists' section of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, now holding a convention here, confessed that science has by no means uncovered all of the forces which nature has kept hidden throughout the ages. Particularly is this true in the realm of living things. The life-principle still eludes the hounds of science. The relation which the bodily functions bear to the mind is another problem that is as yet unsolved.

The study of true science—physical science—is the study of the wisdom and power of God revealed in the little things and in the great things He has made.

Church-Sponsored Gambling

"And they said every one to his fellow, Come, and let us cast lots."—Jonah 1:7.

NEW YORK, Jan. 1.—"Bingo every Thursday night in the Holy Spirit Room." Such, according to The Literary Digest, is a sign appearing outside a New York City church, while a Chicago suburban church announces: "Don't miss bingo Friday. Handsome prizes." A survey made by The Digest "shows that the playing of bingo," a simple game of chance requiring no skill on the part of the player, "is spreading rapidly throughout the United States. . . . Attracted by such extra-spiritual (?) heralds (as the notices mentioned above), thousands of Americans sit down in church weekly to try their luck in this national craze. In some localities the Tuesday or Thursday game at the corner church-house overshadows all other events."

Division of Palestine Postponed

"Make them one stick."—Ezekiel 37:19.

JERUSALEM, Jan. 3.—(Via radio.) The British Government has just issued an announcement stating that the proposed division of Palestine into three sections, one to be held by the Arabs, another under the mandate of the British, and a third for the Jews, will not be made for at least ten years, and has inaugurated a determined campaign to put down Arab resistance.

The Second Coming of Our Lord

An Incentive to Evangelism

THE tree is known by its fruit; but by the fruit which naturally grows on the tree, not that which is artificially tied to its branches. So doctrine is known by practice, but only by the practice which it naturally begets. Truth does not become a lie, because perverted, otherwise grace would lose its glory when men take advantage of it to continue in sin.

We say this as a word preliminary. The grand question is, What is truth? That being accurately answered, our next concern is to apply the truth in the best and most helpful way. But, if what was meant to be a tonic and a stimulant, is used as a sedative and a narcotic, ours is the guilt and responsibility of the perversion. The same sun that softens, mellows, melts, also hardens, encrusts, bakes. When, therefore, we boldly affirm that our Lord's second coming furnishes the highest motive to world-wide evangelism, we do not thereby affirm that in every believer that grand truth brings forth fruit which, either in quantity or quality, adorns the doctrine; but only that in this truth lie the possibility and potency of all evangelism; that here the seed which, planted in good soil, taking deep root, having room to grow, unchoked by thorns, will develop the blade, the ear, the full-grown corn in the ear; will find the perfection of its growth, its final ripeness, in reproduction, "seed for the sower" as well as "bread for the eater." In other words, the blessed hope of our Lord's coming, when unhampered and unhindered in its normal action, makes every true believer fruitful in the seed of propagation, fits and prompts him to sow the seed, and himself become the seed, of the kingdom.

THE IMMINENCE OF OUR LORD'S COMING QUICKENS ACTIVITY

Foremost among the peculiarities of Scripture teaching touching our Lord's second coming, is its imminence. Imminence is the combination of two conditions, viz.: certainty and uncertainty. By an imminent event we mean one which is certain to occur at some time, uncertain at what time. Imminent is not synonymous with impending. It is not exact to say that what is imminent is near at hand; it may, or it may not be. It is therefore unfair to discredit the imminence of our Lord's coming by saying that it is a mistake into which even apostles and early disciples were betrayed; that, as they thought the Lord would come in their day, and He did not, it is a misapprehension into which modern disciples have the less reason to fall, since they have this warning before them. Such argument frames into its structure a fallacy, if not a sophistry.

In a vigorous and impressive manner, Dr. Arthur T. Pierson affirms that the second coming of Christ provides a powerful incentive to all forms of evangelistic effort. Read the article carefully, which is taken from Dr. Pierson's larger work on the Lord's return, and compare it with editorials now being published in this paper and with the reports of the Board of Evangelism which appear from time to time on page fifteen.

Primitive disciples believed that Christ might come in their day; the difference may seem slight, but it saves them from the charge of delusion. Your brother is in Europe and may return at any time, even by the next steamer; you do not say he will, and so you are not mistaken if he does not. Anyone who is now reading these lines may die today; yet I do not affirm that anyone will, and should all live to see the next day, or the next century, dawn, no error has been made in the above statement.

The New Testament uniformly teaches the imminence of our Lord's coming. It is an event which in this sense is ever "at hand." Behold, the Judge standeth at the door! His hand may be on the latch. But when He will enter no man knows, not even the angels in heaven. When He does, it will be suddenly and without knocking. His last word is "Watch and pray; for ye know not when the time is."

How does this imminence of His coming affect missionary and evangelistic zeal? How can it affect these parallel lines of effort otherwise than to inspire, quicken, and stimulate their activity?

Our ascending Lord, just before His departure, repeated the solemn words of His last commission: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." Beginning at Jerusalem, repentance and remission of sins were to be preached in His name among all nations, and His disciples were to be "witnesses" unto Him, "to the uttermost parts of the earth." The Son of Man, going into a far country, committed unto His servants and stewards this great trust, saying, "Occupy till I come." Of the hour of His return He gives no hint, that they may be always ready.

What would be the natural consequence? Every faithful servant would hasten to invest his talents in trading, that at His coming He might receive His own with usury. And such was the historic fact. There are two immutable things in which it is impossible for history to lie: first, the early church was premillennial in doctrine, and, second, the early church was evangelistic in practice. The Christians of the first century looked for our Lord's coming as liable to occur at any time; it was so really, vividly imminent that Thessalonian disciples failed to give sufficient emphasis to the Antichrist and the apostasy that must precede the day of the Lord. Yet never was the church, the whole church, so permeated and penetrated by missionary enthusiasm! Even while the apostles were at Jerusalem, those humble disciples "scattered

The Apostolic Preaching to the World

By A. H. Zilmer

WHAT was the minimum embraced in the apostolic preaching to the world for their acceptance unto salvation and admission into the church? The record of the apostolic preaching itself must answer this question. What is that record? It must be clear upon a moment's reflection that not all that is contained in the New Testament enters into the irreducible minimum. Much of the apostolic teaching as contained in the various epistles was addressed either to groups of believers, or individual believers. Not all of this may be cited as proof bearing upon our theme. That is to say, because certain statements occur in the Bible, or even in the New Testament, they are not therefore necessarily to be regarded as belonging to the elementary truths of the apostolic teaching to those without. Not a word is here said against the truth or the utility of those epistolary writings. But inasmuch as there is the "milk of the word" as well as "strong meat" (1 Cor. 3:1, 2; Heb. 5:11, 12; 1 Peter 2:2), and there are "things hard to be understood" as well as "the simplicity that is in Christ" in those writings (2 Peter 3:15, 16), it must at once appear that much that is contained in those writings is beyond, and some of it far beyond, those who are "unskilful in the word of righteousness" (Heb. 5:13). And since there are within the church those who are "not able to bear" more than milk, it is obvious that those who have not even reached the status of babes can at the most occupy themselves with the simplest elements of "the doctrine which is according to godliness" (1 Tim. 6:3). It is part of the "wisdom which is from above" to recognize this and have it always in mind.

Where, then, do we seek for those simple elements? They are to be found in the New Testament book called "The Acts of the Apostles." The apostles, entrusted with a message, and sent upon a mission to "all nations" (Matt. 28:18-20), to "every (human) creature" (Mark 16:15, 16), were to make the "beginning at Jerusalem" (Luke 24:47-49; Acts 1:4). It is therefore necessary to commence with the record of the activities of those men beginning at Jerusalem, and follow it through to its conclusion. What they preached to those without, whether Jews or Gentiles, for their acceptance unto salvation, and as necessary for their admission into the body of believers, is necessary to lay before that class today. Or, to put it another way, we must begin where the apostles began, and not where they left off. In so doing we shall be upon safe ground, and shall include all the necessary things and omit none. We shall at-"Any doctrine not contained in the record of the apostolic preaching to the world . . . is not an elementary doctrine of the gospel," declares the editor of "The Faith." We are strongly of his opinion when he says that the various epistles were, in the main, addressed to believers and not to unbelievers, and consequently treat of matters pertaining to the spiritual growth of those who are already in the body of Christ rather than of the initial or primary condition of salvation.

them "the simplicity that is in Christ" (2 Cor. 11:3) as set forth in the Acts, and occupied themselves with metaphysical abstractions, to the lasting hurt of many. Where, for instance, is the proof that the apostles, in the fulfillment of their mission to the outside world, discoursed to this class about the Trinity, the preexistence of Christ, the personality of the Holy Spirit, and kindred subjects? Such proof simply does not exist. Even were the doctrine of the Trinity true, it did not enter into the preaching of the apostles to alien Jews and Gentiles. The apostles did not fail to preach to Jews and Gentiles the one true and living God (Acts 14:12-18; 17:16-31). They preached Christ was the Son of God (Acts 9:20; 2 Cor. 1:19). In their preaching they associated "power" with the Holy Spirit (Acts 10:38), and proclaimed Jesus as the divinely appointed dispenser of that Spirit (Acts 2:33). But they said nothing about a Trinity of persons in the Godhead. This fact alone rules out the doctrine of the Trinity as an important or even as a constituent element of the apostolic preaching to outsiders.

We instance another doctrine taught in Christendom, viz., the Augustinian doctrine of original sin! Did the apostles in their preaching to the world say aught about the "stain of original sin"; about the corruption of sin being inherited; that actual transgressions proceed from original sin; that mankind is born in a state of guilt because of Adam's sin; that this stain requires forgiveness and is forgiven at baptism, and that it remains in the subject after it is forgiven? The most effective answer to this question is to be found in the record of the apostolic preaching to the world. Here we have "sin" mentioned by name eight times:

"Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins" (Acts 2:38).

"Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, that so the times of refreshing may come" (Acts 3:19).

"Him (Jesus) hath God exalted to his right hand to be tach due importance to all essential matters overestimating none.

From the time when creeds began to be made until the present hour, Christendom in all its branches has been cumbered with heavy creedal documents, the majority of which are beyond the comprehension of the rank and file of the membership. This is because the framers of those documents left far behind a Prince and a Saviour, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins" (Acts 5:31).

"And he (Stephen) kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge" (Acts 7:60).

"To him (Jesus) give all the prophets witness, that through his name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins" (Acts 10:43).

"Be it known unto you therefore, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins" (Acts 13:38).

Ananias said to Saul, "And now, why tarriest thou? Arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord" (Acts 22:16).

Jesus said to Saul, "I send thee to the people and to the Gentiles to open their eyes, to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins," etc. (Acts 26:18).

Anyone carefully reading these testimonies will see that the ecclesiastical doctrine is totally wanting from the inspired record of the apostolic preaching to those without, whether Jews or Gentiles. Both the apostles and the historian Luke, while dealing specifically with sin, said nothing about original sin. In every case on record in the Acts the "sins" spoken of were such as had been committed by those addressed or referred to. The apostolic doctrine of sin and its forgiveness is understandable even to those who are styled "little children": "I write unto you, little children, because your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake" (1 John 2:12).

The same criterion holds good when applied to any other doctrine contained in the creeds. Any doctrine not contained in the record of the apostolic preaching to the world, written by a competent and reliable historian, is not an elementary doctrine of the gospel. In determining what is fundamental and basic it is indispensably necessary to keep always in mind the ability of the hearers to understand. Among those hearers there would be persons of some education, some of limited education, and others who were wholly illiterate. It was necessary, therefore, to suit the gospel message to the capacity of the hearers. And the least informed who was received into the church must be regarded as the criterion for all. That is to say, no higher standard for admission into the church could be maintained than the veriest babe who was within the folds of the church.

It may be asked how we come by this result. We again refer to the record of the apostolic preaching to strangers. There were a number of localities where converts were made as a result of hearing a single discourse. We mention the conversion of the three thousand at Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2); Cornelius and his family a little later on (Acts 10:34-43); the converts at the synagogue at Antioch in Pisidia (Acts 13:43); Lydia and her household at Philippi (Acts 16:14, 15); the jailer and his house at Philippi (Acts 16:25-33). At Jerusalem the Jews "gladly received" the "word" of the Apostle Peter (Acts 2:41); at the home of Cornelius it was through "words" from the Apostle Peter that they were "saved" (Acts 10:22; 11:14); at Antioch converts were made as the result of "preaching" (Acts 13:42, 43); Lydia "attended to the things which were spoken of Paul" (Acts 16:14); the jailer and his house heard Paul and Silas "speak the word of the Lord" (Acts 16:32, 33). In some of these cases it is said that baptism followed immediately after the preaching. This fact makes manifest that there was no time to go into elaborate detail, nor was it opportune to give the hearers the "strong meat" consisting of "things hard to be understood."

In every one of these cases the conversion of the persons mentioned or referred to took place after hearing a single discourse. One of two things follows: Either those persons were well instructed before they heard the preaching of the apostles, or else they were admitted to baptism in the absence of detailed knowledge of the primary elements of the gospel. They knew only the milk of the Word, and not the strong meat. As yet, and for some time following, they were "unskilful in the word of righteousness" (Heb. 5:12-14). Such initial knowledge was sufficient to secure for them the remission of sins, and induct them into the name of the Lord. With this knowledge, what they needed was to "grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ" (2 Peter 3:18).

The beginning at Jerusalem and the example of the apostles must be the standard by which to gauge the admissibility of outsiders into the body of believers. The methods employed by Christendom, including the affirmation of belief in certain extra-scriptural theological tenets, are so far afield as to not only go beyond the apostolic teaching to those without, but they incorporate matters which are not to be found anywhere in the apostolic teaching, and are only reached by an elaborate and involved mental process. Such abstract reasoning can only be engaged in by "the wise, the scribes, the disputer of this world" (1 Cor. 1:20). It is not for the babes, the little children, the users of milk.

The brethren at Corinth, at least many of them, years after their conversion, were not "able to bear" anything in the way of mental food that was stronger than milk (1 Cor. 3:1, 2). Yet this did not disqualify them for membership in the church. They were mostly Gentile believers.

Then there were among the Hebrew Christians many who were in the same backward state of development. Were they cast out of the church because of this tardiness of growth in spiritual knowledge? To have done so would have been fatal and would have defeated the very object of the church's existence. The church was not then, nor is it now, an institution consisting, figuratively speaking, of college graduates, high school graduates, or graduates of any kind, but of disciples, learners, pupils. All this has been largely overlooked and is quietly passed over by the leaders of Christendom.

"Perfect correspondence would be perfect life. Were there no changes in the environment but such as the organism had adapted changes to meet, and were never to fail in the efficiency with which it met them, there would be eternal existence and eternal knowledge."—Spencer.

Christ in the Pentateuch

WE HAVE heard that there is a scarlet thread running through every foot of cordage belonging to the English Navy. That scarlet thread is the Navy's badge of ownership; and wherever a bit of rope is found having that seal, the Navy can claim it.

There is likewise a scarlet line running from cover to cover in the Book of God. That scarlet line is the symbol and token of man's redemption from sin. The five books of Moses are aflame with Christ and Him crucified. From the beginning of divine revelation this fact is most emphatic, that "without shedding of blood there is no remission" of sin. "Savors of the Shambles," say some, as they close their eyes to truth. Nevertheless, "Believe it or not," each individual must "take it or leave it." It is God's plan of salvation for our lost race. This article makes no claim of exhausting the subject. All the books ever published could never do that. Our only hope is to touch upon a few of the high spots. We might spend all the time at our disposal with typical characters in the books of Moses. Moses himself was a type of Christ; so was Joseph. Both these men were great saviors in times of crises. Abraham was a type of Christ; so was Isaac; so was every high priest. Jesus Himself said of Abraham, the father of the faithful: "Abraham saw my day and was glad" (John 8:56). The inspired writer of the book of Hebrews assures us that Abraham was saved by faith in the promised Christ, as surely as we are saved by faith in our crucified and risen Lord.

The aim of this article is to select certain historical incidents, narrated in the books of Moses, which are infinitely more than historical, inasmuch as they are also symbolic of a crucified Christ, hence parables of our redemption from sin through an atoning sacrifice.

THE DAILY SACRIFICE

Going back to the beginning of sinful humanity, we mention, first, the daily sacrifice. Abel was the first to offer a bloody sacrifice, and his offering was acceptable to God, while Cain's offering of the fruits of the ground was rejected. The reason is obvious: Cain was disobedient to the divine command. When God formulated the plan of redemption, He ordained that His well-beloved Son was to be "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." Hence, from the very first, the sacrifice of bulls and goats upon Jewish altars was only so many index fingers pointing to Christ "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." "He was manifested to take away sin." On Calvary's cross He offered Himself once for all to atone for man's transgressions. As there is no need for token money after the gold is paid in, so when Jesus died there was no further need for animal sacrifice.

THE PASSOVER

In presenting this brief series of word pictures of the Bible, we offer in the second place the institution of the Passover (Ex. 12). The Passover is an important event in Jewish history, and orthodox Jews faithfully observe it to this day as a memorial of their miraculous deliverance from the destroying angel of death. But the record is in the Book of God because it is more than history. It is also a parable of our redemption from sin through the atoning merits of a crucified Christ. This all-important fact is too often lost sight of in these modern days. Here is a scene in real life: The time is July 25, 1937; the place is a beautiful temple, costing $150,000, recently dedicated. Local leaders are ambitious to build up a strong men's organization. On this particular gala day, every man in the county-seat town and surrounding country has been invited to attend. A popular teacher of state-wide reputation has been invited to come up from a neighboring city and expound the lesson, which happens to be from Exodus, 12th chapter, having to do with the institution of the Passover. On a blackboard, the expert skillfully sketches a map of Egypt, locating the Nile, and the land of Goshen, the home of the Israelitish slaves. He draws a word picture of the slaying of lambs and the sprinkling of blood upon the lintel and two side posts of the doors of many homes. He describes the great cry heard all over Egypt, when, at midnight, the destroying angel passed over and left the first-born in every home dead, save in those homes where the blood had been sprinkled. He pictured the hasty departure of a great army of slaves from the land of their bondage, their faces set toward a promised land. He told how a grateful people, from that time on, faithfully observed an annual feast in commemoration of this Passover event; and there he stopped; the name of Jesus Christ was not mentioned; he failed to quote the Apostle Paul who wrote to the Corinthian church (1 Cor. 5:7): "For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us." He made no reference whatever to the last Passover Supper attended by our Lord and His twelve disciples, when, after the Supper, Jesus took of the bread, and, after the giving of thanks, broke it and gave to His disciples, saying, "This is my body broken for you"; and likewise the cup, saying, "This cup is the new covenant in my blood. This do in remembrance of me." He did not explain that our Lord, there and then, did away with the symbolic Passover Supper forever, and instituted a sacrament in its stead, to be observed by all Christians throughout the ages until our Lord's return in power and glory to consummate His kingdom. The gold paid in, there is no further use for token money. The expert left his hungry hearers well fed up on a history lesson, but without a single hint of its scriptural significance. The writer of this article vouches for the truth of this story, for he was present and saw and heard it all. The tragedy is that this same thing is happening in thousands of so-called Christian churches.

DIVINE GUIDANCE AND PROTECTION

We find a third symbolism of the Christ in the pillar of cloud and fire. In this instance the emphasis is not so much upon the atonement, as upon the facts of divine guidance and protection. In bringing His chosen people out of their bondage, God assumed the leadership from its very incipency. He provided Moses as the human leader. Approaching the Red Sea, God provided a pillar of cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night to guide and guard. This manifestation of Divine oversight continued during the forty years' sojourn in the wilderness. Christ is the Christian's guide and guardian throughout this wilderness world. The sure promise is, "I will guide thee with mine eye" (Psa. 32:8). Repeatedly He asserts: "I am the Light of the world. He that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life" (John 8:12). He is the "true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world" (John 1:9). But, lest we forget, our constant prayer should be:

"Guide me, O Thou great Jehovah, Pilgrim through this barren land."

"Let the fiery, cloudy pillar
Lead me all my journey through:
Strong Deliverer,
Be Thou still my strength and shield."

THE MANNA

We now mention a fourth symbolism of the Christ, The Manna, a forty years' supply of bread from heaven (Ex. 16). Historical? Does anyone ask? Certainly, but more than history: another parable of our redemption through the atoning merits of a Savior. What assurance, do you ask? The assurance of John 6:32: Jesus said unto His hearers, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, Moses gave you not that bread from heaven; but my Father giveth you the true bread from heaven." "I am the bread of life: he that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst" (John 6:35, 36). The Christian is never to forget that eventually that Bread was broken for us, hence an atoning sacrifice.

THE SMITTEN ROCK

We have just quoted the words of Jesus: "He that believeth on me shall never thirst" (John 6:35). This brings to the front another symbol of the Christ, namely, The Smitten Rock. In the barren wilderness, God's people were thirsty. Water was scarce and nauseous, and there was much murmuring. In obedience to the divine command, Moses with his rod smote the rock at Horeb and pure water gushed forth to satisfy the people's thirst and make provision for their necessities. It is not our assertion that the smitten rock was a type of the crucified Christ. The inspired Paul in his first letter to the Corinthian church assures us of the spiritual import of this history: "Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; and were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea; and did all eat the same spiritual meat; and did all drink the same spiritual drink; for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them; and that Rock was Christ" (1 Cor. 10:1-4). The very next verse asserts that all these things were types. That Rock was smitten for our sins on Calvary's cross. To unbelievers the cross of Christ has ever been a "stone of stumbling," "a rock of offence" (Isa. 28:16; 1 Peter 2:8). Nevertheless, to all who believe "he is precious," and this stone, disallowed by such as "stumble at the word," has become the chief corner stone of the Christian's spiritual house.

"Rock of Ages, cleft for me;
Let me hide myself in Thee."

THE BRAZEN SERPENT

We come now to mention a sixth symbolism that typifies the crucified Christ, namely, The Brazen Serpent (Num. 21:5-9). The Israelites had offended heaven by their unwarranted despondency and constant complaints against God and His chosen leaders. In order to teach them the heinousness of sin, God sent fiery serpents, the venom of which caused death. Repenting and confessing their sins, they besought Moses to pray for a removal of the plague. In answer to his prayer, Moses was instructed to prepare a brazen serpent and raise it upon a pole, and every dying soul that would look upon the brazen serpent would live.

Now this incident in history was symbolic and prophetic. Jesus Himself declares it: "And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up: that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life" (John 3:14, 15). "There is life for a look at the crucified One," for that look involves repentance and faith. The two emphatic words in this scripture are sin and atonement. The Apostle Paul declares the whole truth in few words: "For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom. 6:23). Preachers and teachers need to harp continually upon this string because of the failure on the part of so many to regard sin as deadly and because of the very human tendency to substitute some remedy for sin other than the one and only remedy appointed by God. Some even go so far as to deny the fact of sin. We read of preachers and college professors who preach and teach that sin is not guilt and needs no propitiation; that man needs no salvation because man never fell; they even ridicule the idea of a God who would regard poor, hard-working people as miserable sinners who must seek forgiveness for Christ's sake. With utter disregard for the teachings of the Bible, these false prophets insist on bearing the honored name of "Christian" and upon feeding themselves out of the coffers of the Christian church. Thank God, a tree is known by the fruit it bears. History and experience teach that sin is in the world and that every human being, save one, has been a subject of it. The only gospel worth preaching recognizes the heinousness of sin and the only remedy as the atonement made on Calvary's cross. He who knew no sin was made sin for us that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him (2 Cor. 5:21). Thank God, that is the only gospel wanted by a dying world. It is the only gospel that will fill the pews of the churches, and keep them full. It is the only gospel worth singing; atonement is the theme of all the grand old hymns that can never die. We may and do sing, "Keep on the Sunny Side," "Brighten the Corner Where You Are," and other pleasing melodies, but such have their day and are soon forgotten, but when will the church cease to sing: "When I survey the wondrous cross, on which the Prince of Glory died," or "My faith looks up to Thee, Thou Lamb of Calvary," or "Rock of Ages, cleft for me"? No, never! The Christian world must ever continue to sing, "Crown Him with many crowns, the Lamb for sinners slain." "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth" (Rom. 1:16).

THE TABERNACLE

Seven is oftentimes designated as "the perfect number." Be this as it may, we have reserved seventh place for what we regard the most perfect and complete symbolism of the crucified Christ to be found in the books of Moses, namely, The Tabernacle.

An elaborate tent structure, portable during the camp life of the Israelites, afterwards to be succeeded by Solomon's temple, when they are permanently established in their Promised Land. Three compartments: the court, the holy place, and the holy of holies, or most holy place. God had promised to meet His people in this tabernacle, hence termed "the place of meeting." These two buildings were the only structures ever erected that had God alone as their Architect. The tabernacle was the most perfect structure of its kind ever erected by man. Gold, silver, rare woods, costly fabrics, valued, according to estimates, at more than a million dollars, were cheerfully contributed by people until a halt was called. The last six chapters of the book of Exodus are fittingly taken up with the detailed account of this institution. Designed as a place of worship, God manifested His glory there, and guilty sinners found there a place of propitiation.

Now the ancient tabernacle had its day, served its purpose, and is no more. But, thank God, its Antitype is still with us. The tabernacle, essentially perfect, made in exact accordance with blueprints provided by God Himself, was more than a place of worship. The record finds a place in God's Book because the tabernacle and all its appointments symbolize the whole scheme of redemption through a crucified Christ. Why, even the furniture was placed in the form of a cross. The altar, at the door of the court, open to all, meant atonement for sin; in line with this was the laver, signifying cleansing; in line with these was the altar of intercession; north of this was the table of showbread, symbolic of Christ—the Bread of Life; and opposite this on the south was the golden candlestick revealing Christ as the "light of the world." Between the holy and most holy place was a veil excluding all save the high priest, and he could go in only once a year, bearing atoning blood; but behind that veil was the mercy seat, the cherubim, and the mysterious presence of God, spoken of as the "Shekinah." When on Calvary's cross, Christ bowed His head and gave up the ghost, the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom, thus signifying that a way of approach to God had been opened through the sacrificial mediation of our great High Priest. No further use for token money when the gold has been paid in. "Whosoever will may come."

When the tabernacle was finally completed, it was anointed, consecrated. Christ is the "Anointed One." The very word "Messiah" means just that. So throughout the New Testament the ancient tabernacle is symbolic of Christ and His work. In John's Gospel (1:14) we are informed, "The Word was made flesh, and tabernacled among us." In like manner almost the last word of God's revelation is this blessed assurance: "The tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them and be their God" (Rev. 21:3). Several chapters of the Epistle to the Hebrews, especially chapters 8 and 9, are employed in commenting on how the tabernacle and each of its appointments, including the officiating high priest, were typical of the finished work of Christ our Savior. The cross of Christ is the only place of meeting, the only place of propitiation.

What a pity that on August 22, 1937, this lesson on the tabernacle was taught to millions of needy, hungry souls as a history lesson, and, judging from the "helps" placed in the hands of teachers and scholars by more than one of our major denominations, the name of Christ was not so much as mentioned; much less were unenlightened hearers informed that this is one of the most striking passages to which Jesus referred when He urged: "Search the scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me" (John 5:39).

The incidents narrated are all familiar to every minister and teacher of the Word. The object of this article is to urge the importance of pointing out the Christ, not only in history, but in the unnumbered signs, symbols, and ceremonies of Old Testament ritualism. Unbelief is rampant today, but how can unbelievers "believe in him of whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher?" To point out the Christ in the interesting moving pictures of the Bible is to make the study of the Scriptures fascinating to newly opened eyes. We have considered seven incidents. There are many more. Space fails us to do little more than mention "Aaron's rod that budded," recorded in both the Old and New Testaments. It testifies, however, of the high priesthood of our Lord, who offered once for all the supreme sacrifice for sin, and still lives to make continual intercession for us. Neither can we dwell upon the story of the scapegoat (Lev. 16), which means atonement, and the taking away of our sins through Christ: "As far as the east is from the west, so far hath he removed our transgressions from us" (Psa. 103). We may pause only to name "the year of jubilee" (Lev. 25). It tells, however, how sinful man has lost his divine inheritance, and Christ has restored it.

“Blow ye the trumpet, blow;
The year of jubilee is come;
Return, ye ransomed sinners, home.”

One of the closing incidents in the book of Deuteronomy has to do with the cities of refuge; also recorded in the book of Numbers (chapter 35). Thrilling history, that! But it is a twice-told tale because God wants all men everywhere to know that the avenger is on the trail of every sinner who is not under the blood; also that Christ is our Refuge and our Strength, a very present help in trouble. He is a needed Refuge; a sure Refuge; our only Refuge.

“Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in Thee.”

—Glenroie McQueen in The Presbyterian.

The Ravenous Dogs of War

“IF THE world manages to escape another world war this summer,” declares a well-known diplomat, “there should be an international Thanksgiving next November. Never since 1914 have there been so many bad boys playing with matches in dangerous proximity to half a dozen barrels full of dry gunpowder.”

More than a year has elapsed since that tragic day, July 18, 1936, that witnessed the outbreak of the Spanish Revolution. The world expected a short, decisive conflict, but after all these months the cruel and brutal war rages as fiercely as ever.

Though the death toll has mounted to hundreds of thousands and the property loss to billions, the struggle itself is overshadowed by the peril of a general European conflagration. So serious is the situation that recently in the British House of Commons Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain openly declared: “Europe is on the brink of war.”

The peace of Europe seems about to be crucified once more upon a cross of imperial ambition.

Fascist Italy and Nazi Germany are in the spirit of empire building. They want more territory, no matter what the cost in the lifeblood and tears of their peoples. On the other hand, England and France struggle to hold what they already possess; and the very life existence of these nations has driven them into close alignment with Russia.

England follows her traditional policy of assisting the weaker nation or nations, so as to maintain the “balance of power” in Continental Europe; and accordingly she stands by her ally, France. On its part, the French Government feels a vital interest in the Spanish conflict; for she is already bounded on two sides by fascist neighbors; and to have a third on another frontier would be like another dagger aimed at her heart.

Aside from Spain and the Mediterranean, there are numerous other plague spots on the globe where trouble may develop.

The new British plan to divide Palestine into two separate states, one for the Jews and the other for the Arabs, with Jerusalem and Bethlehem under a separate mandate, has met bitter opposition from both sides. In the meantime, Mussolini has been telling the Moslem world what wonderful things Italy would do for them if she were only given the opportunity.

Recently Japanese and Russian troops clashed along the Manchukuoan border, and a Russian gunboat was sunk in the Amur River. Almost before the sound of this disturbance died away, trouble developed in North China, and the motorized legions of Japan began rushing to the vicinity of Peiping and Tientsin. Soon Shanghai was being bombed and shelled, and, even as we write, a major war, though undeclared, is in progress.

In this modern age of rapid travel, instantaneous communication, international covenants, trade and treaty rights, an explosion in any locality may immediately be felt in all lands, and the flame of hate started in some remote corner might speedily engulf the entire world in war. To all these add the bitter antagonism between fascist and communist, and the imperialistic aspirations of their respective dictators. Of this peril, Mr. John Clayton says:

“It is a conflict dictated by fanaticism, with which reason can have nothing to do. Watching the development of these conflicting issues over a period of twenty years, one is impressed with the fact that government by dictatorship, whether right or left, has become a creed. Its devotees are as blind to logic and reason as were the most bigoted leaders of the religious war that made Europe a shambles for almost a century.

“Already events have transpired that twenty years ago would have been followed immediately by a declaration of war. Statesmen, writing in their own publicity organs or speaking from public platforms, have made assertions that would have been followed only a few years back by the crash of guns.”—Los Angeles Times Magazine, July 18, 1937.

WHAT IS BEFORE US?

Yes, the dogs of war are ravenously hungry; and how are they to be fed? Will they destroy civilization? or what will be the harvest of their lust and greed?

To these questions, human wisdom has no trustworthy answer; human forecast, no assuring solution; while human hopes find little ground for optimism. Yet in this hour the world is not left in utter darkness. There is a Book containing hundreds of divine predictions that have been literally and accurately fulfilled that speaks also to our own day, vividly describing the present world situation, and definitely revealing the eventful future. Thanks be to God for the gift of the Bible!

In that Sacred Volume, which has been so scorned and neglected, every major problem that confronts the world today was foretold by the God of heaven. Through His divinely appointed spokesmen, He announced the dawn of this age of invention and material progress (Dan. 12:4); the vast accumulation of riches (James 5:1-7); the increasing flood of crime, the decay of the home, the craze for maddening pleasures (2 Tim. 3:1-5); and universal "distress of nations with perplexity," with "men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming upon the earth" (Luke 21:25, 26).

God likewise foretold the extensive peace propaganda, on the one hand, and the extensive war preparations, on the other, that would characterize this age. Twenty-seven centuries ago He revealed that "in the last days" "many people" would unite in a mighty crusade for peace, proposing that swords be beaten into plowshares, that spears be turned into pruning hooks, and that the nations should no longer "learn war" or "lift up sword against nation." In fulfillment, behold the peace palaces and organizations of the past quarter of a century, to which some of the world's greatest minds and noblest hearts have given of their best. Behold also the mighty pageant of armaments that God declared would be marshaled throughout the world just prior to the second coming of Christ: "Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles; Prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near; let them come up: beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruninghooks into spears: let the weak say, I am strong. . . . Let the heathen be wakened. . . . Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe. . . . Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision: for the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision" (Joel 3:9-14).

This graphic forecast, with its picture of the "sickle," the "harvest," and "the day of the Lord," points unerringly to the time of fulfillment just before the close of earth's (man governed) history.

Ponder also the prophetic words, "Let the heathen be wakened." For millenniums the pagan millions of Asia and Africa slept on and on. But today, what an awakening! The "unchanged East" throws off its robes of slumber and arises "to the sound of the trumpet, the alarm of war." Here is seen a notable sign of our times; for, according to prophecy, this amazing transformation among the vast pagan multitudes was to occur just prior to the announcement, "Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe."

Looking forward to that time immediately preceding Christ's second coming and the final judgment, John the Revelator declared: "The nations were angry, and thy wrath is come" (Rev. 11:18). In that final clash of armaments designated in Scripture as "Armageddon," the Prophet beheld "the kings of the earth and of the whole world" marshaled for "the battle of that great day of God Almighty" (Rev. 16:12, 14, 16). In any previous age, such an assembling of armed forces would hardly have been possible; but, with the advance of modern science and industry, it could easily happen.

The world stage is today being set for just such a titanic struggle. Thank God for the assurance that it will be brief. Christ will soon return. While the nations are lining up for Armageddon, heaven broadcasts the appeal: "Prepare to meet thy God!"—Roy F. Cottrell in Signs of the Times.

AT WHAT AGE IS IT QUITTING TIME?

THE idea is often expressed, and sometimes cruelly, that when one has reached perhaps seventy years he is "too old" to be of further use, and should drop out of sight. Such talkers have perhaps never known of the many men who have continued to manage their own large businesses successfully even at eighty and more years of age, and have never thought that being fruitful for many years brings greatest power of added usefulness to the well man, while he is more capable than ever and anxious to be useful; and that being bundled off to the relic hall is both cruel and sure to cut life itself short. The following editorial from the Pittsburgh Presbyterian Banner is fine enough to pass on:

"At a recent meeting of the New York Academy of Medicine there were forty-seven papers read by specialists on the subject of old age, its nature and causes. They made a distinction between chronological and physiological old age, the former being age reckoned in years, and the latter age as registered in physiological changes, such as gray hair, physical infirmity, and all kinds and degrees of bodily degeneration. The two may be far from coinciding, as one person may be old in years and young in vitality, and another young in years and old in bodily degeneration.

"No new means for resisting the on-coming of old age prematurely were announced, but the familiar ones were emphasized and the opinion was generally expressed that human life should extend to a century and even beyond. On this point much depends on heredity. If one's parents and remote ancestors were long-lived, he may expect to reach the same age, barring accidents and disease. . . . Regularity of living and eating and working and sleeping is a primary means of prolonged life, and cheerful spirit plays no small part in prompting the same end.

"Nearly all these experts advised against retiring in old age. 'The later years of life should no longer be regarded as a time for retirement, as the days of patient waiting. To grow old gracefully should be to accept old age as the time for which all the arduous years of life have been lived. Ripe in experience, rich in the gifts of wisdom, is it right for a man to retire simply because his years are many? Not if he has a brain which is healthy and firm and capable of serving his fellow men. By proper methods of living and prophylaxis he may keep possession of such brain, though he be nearing the century goal. . . . A brain is not necessarily senile simply because he is ninety-five years old. Its possessor may be active and alert in the business of life.' Live regularly and righteously and you may work far into the sunset.'

In other words, age is not measured by years, but by abilities possessed; and God may have more for one man to do after his threescore years and ten than another man will accomplish after forty; and he must not be hindered in doing it, but helped, as an expert in any secular line would be. The last years with the necessary vigor ought to be the most fruitful ones for God, and are not to be thrown away or despised.—Present Truth Messenger.

HELPING GOD

I SAW a robin tangled in a piece of string, hanging head down from a twig in a bush across the little park from my office window. Its fluttering wings and struggling form told of pain and fear and danger. It was raining hard. I hesitated a moment. After all, it was only a bird. Why should I endanger my health by going out into that driving storm to release it from its fetters? Some prowling dog or cat would soon discover its predicament and put a speedy end to its misery.

But then I seemed to hear the words—softly spoken by divine lips: "Not one of these is forgotten before God" (Luke 12:6).

I donned a raincoat hurriedly and ran out into the storm. I took the frightened bird in my hand. I could feel the tiny heart throbbing in panic. Gently I cut away the twine that bound it to the dripping shrub. I held it a moment in my warm fingers and then released it and watched the fleet wings bear it away through the misty raindrops.

I returned to my office with a glow in my heart that had not been there before. I had worked with God for a little while! I had extended His mercy, His kindness, His protective care, to one of the smallest creatures which He loved, and somehow I was happier.—G. E. M.

SELFISHNESS OF THE LOCAL CHURCH

(Luke 12:41-47). The result was that the preacher felt compelled to devote more and more of his valuable time to acting as a leaning-post for wobbly Christians! Doctrinal sermons, by which the mind of the believer might be stirred up to service, to sacrifice, and to righteousness, through the prospects held out in the gospel, were sadly neglected. "Practical" themes, of doubtful "practical" value as compared with the spiritually regenerating hope of the Lord's speedy coming, took the place of vigorous prophetic, evangelistic subjects.

And the Church of God grew more and more like other churches which have not the blessed hope as the basic truth of their theology.

THE SECOND COMING OF OUR LORD

abroad, went every where preaching the word.'

There was a living link joining this blessed hope and this spirit of evangelism. They looked for their Lord and King to return, and they knew not the hour. The King had entrusted them with the grand commission, and the King's business required haste. There was no tarrying, save for that enduement from on high which was their equipment for their work. To the outmost bounds of Judea, Samaria, Galilee, they bore the message; then to Antioch, the Eye of the East, Cyprus, Asia Minor, Greece, Rome; then, while Peter went eastward toward Babylon, to the elect dispersion, Paul, burning with seraphic ardor and fervor, swept like a flame across Palestine and Syria farther and farther into Europe, till he touched not only Italy, but, as some think, Spain and Britain. Within the lifetime of one generation, the gospel message was borne to the outskirts of the Roman Empire, and the heathen priests trembled lest the fanes of their idols should be forsaken of worshipers.

This heroic evangelism of the primitive church was inspired by their love and loyalty to Him who was to them the Coming One. They were "looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God." Their ascended Lord was only veiled behind the cloud that received Him out of their sight, but still near them, always even unto the end of the age, and that end might be very near. That cloud might at any time disclose Him once more to their expectant, enraptured eyes; and that "same Jesus" who had so suddenly been "taken up from (them) into heaven," would with equal suddenness, "so come in like manner as" they had seen Him "go into heaven." And when He did come, He would claim His own, rewarding faithful stewards and judging the unfaithful. The question was thus ever forced upon every disciple, "Are my talents put to use, or put away in a napkin like a buried treasure?" "A dispensation of the gospel is committed unto me"; am I dispensing that gospel?

Christ Himself warns us of the danger incurred by those who say, "My Lord delayeth his coming." To lose sight of its imminence tempts to self-indulgent indolence and to controversy on minor issues. Under the blessed impulse of primitive piety, stimulated by this hope, all self-denial was cheerfully endured, and all petty jealousies rebuked. The church, "all at it, and always at it," worked as though the time were short and the duty urgent. Today, the hope is so obscured that the bulk of professed disciples push our Lord's coming into the remote future; and the church (including the Church of God, which is represented by THE RESTITUTION HERALD—Ed.) is as leisurely working, if not flippantly playing, at missions and evangelism in general, as though there were geologic cycles in which to witness to the world.

“What Doth It Profit?”

“What profit hath a man of all his labour which he taketh under the sun?”—Ecclesiastes 1:3.

Each person during the year 1937, was the custodian of a certain number of hours. For all who read this it was 8,760 hours. Multiply those hours by all the inhabitants of the earth, and you have the raw product from which all the results of man's labor during 1937 were produced. Survey in your mind all the variety of results, a great jumble indeed. You will visualize great quantities of food, clothing, machinery, books, scientific experiments, travel, transportation, knowledge, services, talk, buildings, yes, and the huge destruction and pillage of war. There were bodies wrecked and bodies healed, characters twisted and warped by evil activities, and characters beautified and ennobled by good activities.

Whether there was a profit or a loss during the year to the world as a whole is hard to say. Of this much we are sure, that profit or loss does not depend on the increase or decrease of material wealth, or fleshly knowledge. It depends upon the amount of riches “laid up in heaven.” It depends upon the increase or decrease among men of the “wisdom of God.” For example, Japan has profited, not according to her acquisition of a slice of China, nor according to her industrial advancements, but she has profited according to the number of her people who have partaken of Christ. America has lost according to the number of her drunkards. She has gained according to the number of those who live for Christ. The infinite mind of the Almighty only is capable of weighing the world's profit and loss during the year. He alone can discern the balances.

But Have You Profited?

You are able to tell whether you have gained. “Examine yourselves.” “The wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be intreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy” (James 3:17). Take a sheet of paper, divide it into two columns, list the qualities God would have you possess in one column, and list either your gains or losses in these qualities in the other column.

God expects you to search the Bible, and learn His wisdom. Then you must bring forth fruit accordingly. “All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works” (2 Tim. 3:16, 17).

Did Judas Partake of the Communion?

*Mrs. Claiborne Lee, Hammond La.
Blood River Berean Class*

When Jesus was in Bethany two days before the Passover, Judas Iscariot, one of the twelve disciples, went to the chief priests and made preparations to deliver Jesus into their hands for thirty pieces of silver.

In Mark 14:12-16 Jesus tells two of His disciples to go into the city and make ready the Passover. When all was ready, Jesus sat down with the twelve. “And as they sat and did eat, Jesus said, Verily I say unto you, One of you which eateth with me shall betray me. And they began to be sorrowful, and to say unto him one by one, Is it I? and another said, Is it I? And he answered and said unto them, It is one of the twelve, that dippeth with me in the dish” (Mark 14:18-20).

We find the same fact recorded by Matthew (26:17-25), that Jesus sat down with the twelve and partook of the supper.

In Luke 22:21 we have these words, “But, behold, the hand of him that betrayeth me is with me on the table.” Surely, from these references we may say that Judas did eat the Passover with the others.

Jesus permitted Judas to partake of the Communion, even though He knew Judas would betray Him. Judas himself was allowed to decide his fitness. And today we examine ourselves as to our fitness to partake of the Communion.

The Inexorable Law of the Harvest

A man rocked a boat to see if it would tip. It did.

A woman looked into a patent medicine booklet to see if she was sick. She was.

Last June a helper smelled escaping gas and lit a piece of oily waste to find the leak. He found it.

A man lit a match to see if he had any gasoline. He had.

A young girl kept late hours to see if it really would injure her office work. And it did.

A young man tried drinking to see if it would make him behave like a fool. It did.—Selected.

“They are slaves who fear to speak
For the fallen and the weak;
They are slaves who will not choose
Hatred, scoffing, and abuse,
Rather than in silence shrink
From the truth they needs must think:
They are slaves who dare not be
In the right with two or three.”—Lowell.

PREPARED BY MARY A. GESIN

"Whithersoever he entered, into villages, or cities, or country, they laid the sick in the streets, and besought him that they might touch if it were but the border of his garment: and as many as touched him were made whole."

The Savior's Hands

A pair of little hands I see,
Two chubby infant hands, so wee,
Clutching sweet Mary's face in glee.

Two boyish hands, sturdy and brown,
Holding the plane in Nazareth town
In Joseph's shop, as the sun goes down.

Two hands of youth, now older grown,
Folded in prayer by a rugged stone
Out on the hillside, all alone.

A young man's hands, toil-worn and strong,
Seeking to aid in the restless throng
The helpless victims of sin and wrong.

Two tired hands 'neath the olive tree,
In the garden of gray Gethsemane
Clasped, for my sin, in agony.

Two outstretched hands on a cross of wood,
From cruel nail wounds red with blood,
Invite a lost world back to God.

Two living hands extended to me
In mercy, and love, and forgiveness free,
God, give me the wisdom now to see.

Oh! hands of the living Christ divine,
Take, take in Thine hands these hands of mine
Until they shall thrill with the power of Thine.

We Learn of Jesus From John Mark

Of the four Gospels, the first four books of the New Testament, the book of Mark is the one best loved by many students. It was probably the first of the four to be written. Its words are mainly simple, straightforward words, words of action. Many of you boys and girls would enjoy reading it through at one sitting.

The first lesson of the new year took us over into the book, to the 10th chapter. Here we found Jesus walking toward Jerusalem with two of His apostles, James and John. These two had rather odd nicknames. They were called, "Sons of Thunder."

Perhaps they got those names from the work they did, perhaps from their dispositions. However, they were fishermen, as you know, and, no doubt, were out on the sea in many a sudden storm. For the Sea of Galilee was their fishing place and storms came up quickly on that lake.

On this walk with Jesus the conversation took a strange turn. Jesus had been telling them of some of the cruel things that He must suffer, some of the sad things that were ahead for Him, things it seemed no one could endure. But James and John scarcely heard Him, for they were thinking only of themselves.

They were not thinking of their Master's sufferings. They were only thinking of His glory. And they begged for the highest positions He could give them, one on His right hand and one on His left. Read verses 42 to 45 in Mark 10, and see what Jesus told them about how such honored places were to be gained.

Later in their lives these two apostles proved that they had learned the lesson of service which their Lord taught them by word and by example. For James gave his life in daily service and finally was killed by the sword for his faithfulness to his Master.

John changed from a "Son of Thunder," to one of love and kindness and gentleness. He wrote the most touching of all four Gospels and was said to be best beloved by Jesus. Do you know what other parts of the Bible he wrote?

The second lesson of the new series shows us another John, John the Baptist, the one who went before Jesus to tell the people He was coming so that they could be ready for Him. It also gives us the beautiful story of Jesus' baptism.

Remember, as you study these new lessons, that Jesus always showed His apostles how to serve by first performing the service Himself. He never told others to do what He was not willing to do Himself, whether it was feeding the hungry multitudes, healing the lame, the sick, and the blind, or preaching the gospel to them, telling them the good news of God's coming kingdom.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

GOD'S WORD UNFOLDS

The following interesting letter relates the experience of Bro. F. B. McCullough of Austin, Tex. It tells its own story of the opening up of truth and the eradication of error. While at Brownfield, Tex., some three years ago, the writer of this letter was led to search the Scriptures to see if certain things he had been taught concerning spiritual gifts were true.

"After trying the spirits to see if they were of God, I found no scriptural foundation for my contention that the church in this age has access to the same measure of the Holy Spirit as did the early church and miracles all ended at the time the Word was fully confirmed by the apostles, until the confirmation of the first dominion of the kingdom begins at Jerusalem. But I can truly say I believe it was the will of God. On my research among the . . . people (who believe that miraculous gifts continue in the church today), my prayerful aim was that the Lord would give us some sheaves as leaders in the work in Texas. And as Jesus never fails, and the Word of God never returns unto Him void, when I completed my prayerful research I saw that I would have to declare that the spirits I was 'trying' had no scriptural support, and I was driven to return to the old paths.

"In the last dark hour of our labor, when it looked as though all of our work had been lost and we were preparing to withdraw from those with whom we had been associated, God touched an honest heart for His name's sake, and we walked out full-handed, so to speak, for God blessed our labor with a young man of great personality, Bro. H. V. Minkler, who is now our pastor, together with his family. I hope to see some of his writings in the Church of God papers.

"Bro. E. E. Giesler paid us a visit from Moorefield, Neb., while visiting his mother this summer, and encouraged us to organize into a church body. And Bro. E. O. Stewart, on his return from a preaching tour in Oklahoma and Arkansas, recently conducted a week of Bible lessons which were very helpful to our little group."

We pray for the continued success of the Austin brethren and that the seed, first sown in their own hearts, may scatter widely over the great Lone Star State.

FROM BROTHER A. L. CORBALEY

On invitation of our editor, my wife and I desire to express our thanks to the members of the Church of God at Oregon, Ill., for the hospitality they extended us while we attended the Conference last summer. It was a foretaste of that future meeting the Lord has promised His faithful servants when Jesus comes. How complete will be our joy, and what a glorious experience it will be if we are among those who will meet with the saints of all the ages, when "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we who are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord." May we be faithful.

A. L. Corbaley.

ST. CLOUD, MINNESOTA

After being away for almost a month, we were glad to be at home once more with our own people. The time spent working with Bro. Magaw in the Brush Creek (Ohio) Church was very enjoyable, and we hope that the blessing of the Lord may continue to be with them.

Upon our return we found that Mrs. B. Leuch and the remainder of her family had gone to join Mr. Leuch and three children who had previously gone West. Their address is 1221 Franklin St., Shelton, Wash. We would be glad to have any brethren near there get in touch with them. May God bless them in their new location.

This has been a busy month. The Sunday school gave an informal Christmas party Tuesday evening in the basement of the church. There were Christmas songs, recitations, the origin of Christmas customs in other lands, and a time of fellowship. Candy canes and apples were presented at this time.

Sunday evening, Dec. 26, the Christmas story in pageant and song was given. A number of the young people gave the story in pantomime while the choir sang corresponding Christmas songs.

As the old year passes away, we thank our heavenly Father for His abundant blessings to all of us and ask an interest in your prayers that we may be used of the Lord during the coming year to win many precious souls.

HOME AGAIN

We left home for Arkansas October 15, to hold meetings at Bear, Magazine, Waveland, and Havana. The interest was good, considering the time of the year and the weather. When the weather was nice farmers were gathering crops, which hindered attendance, and when it rained the congregations were small.

Leaving Arkansas November 21, I went to South Texas. I held meetings at Kingsville, Floresville, and Austin. Splendid interest was manifested at each one of these places, but especially at Austin. The church there, consisting of about twenty-five members under the leadership of Bro. H. M. Minkler, is doing a good work. Bro. Minkler is young in the truth, but he is learning rapidly. He is quick and keen and a man you will love at sight. I am sure the church will prosper under his leadership. I promised to return there next spring for a fifteen-days meeting and I am anxious for the time to come. I received $175; expenses were $25.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

It is quite impossible for the editor and his family to adequately express their gratitude to the many who have remembered them with cheery Christmas greetings. But to all our widely scattered friends we say sincerely, "Thank you, each and every one, and may God bless you abundantly throughout the new year with all spiritual blessings in Christ Jesus."

Sr. Etta Mattison and her daughter Cecil are in Tempe, Ariz., visiting Sr. Mattison's father and mother, Bro. and Sr. S. J. Lindsay. Can't you almost hear the latest record-breaking fish story being related right now to daughter and granddaughter?

Westward Ho! Bro. and Sr. Conner are going West. To grow up with the country? We hardly think so, for the Middle West could not spare them. But they are planning to spend a few weeks with relatives in the country noted for its "unusual" climate. This, we believe, will be Sr. Conner's first trip to California and we rather envy her the delightful experience she will have, for we know there will be a hearty welcome from our brethren and that she will find much to enjoy in the land of sunshine and oranges.

January 3 is the date! What date? Why, the date of Bro. R. H. Judd's birthday. How many milestones does it mark? Your correspondent doesn't know. We do know, however, that it means that our good friend and faithful colaborer in the Lord is advancing in years like the rest of us. May God bless him with health that he may continue to write for our columns until Jesus comes. His address is 111 Milverton Blvd., Toronto, Ontario.

Mr. and Mrs. Ferris Zechiel of Culver, Ind. received as a Christmas present a package which was labeled "Carol Ann." May the young lady see many good days.

The Oregon church had three especially welcome ministerial visitors on the Sunday after Christmas. Bro. F. L. Austin, former pastor of the church was present with his wife; Bro. Harvey Krogh, Jr., pastor of the Ripley, Ill., church, was with us, with his helpmate; and Bro. L. E. Conner, president of the National Bible Institution and pastor of the Dixon, Ill., church was also here under the supervision of his wife. Bro. Krogh gave a splendid sermon on "The Just" to a large and appreciative audience in the evening.

EDEN VALLEY, MINNESOTA

The Church of God Sunday School at Eden Valley, presented a very effective Christmas pageant entitled, "Because of Bethlehem." This program was held on the evening of December 23. Our annual Christmas snowstorm arrived on schedule—the day of our program—but in spite of the weather, our people turned out fairly well, and had a very enjoyable time together.

Jane LeCrone.

ONLY OUR BEST FOR GOD

One of our contributors, who had been asked to prepare an article for our Christmas number on a profound subject, sent us three complete studies of the subject, one after the other. The last one arrived by air mail too late to be exchanged for the second manuscript which was already in type.

The reason why this very busy man rewrote his work from slightly different standpoints so many times was because he wanted to give only the finest product of his heart and mind to the Lord through the columns of The Restitution Herald. All three articles were excellent, but the second was better than the first and the third an improvement over the second—at least such was the judgment of author and editor.

Only our best for God! No time is wasted, no effort misapplied, that has for its object the giving of our best to God.

CONSTRUCTIVE SUGGESTIONS

One of the most helpful letters, from the standpoint of constructive suggestions, that we have received in some time, is the following from Sr. Orval Shepherd of McCook, Neb. Sr. Shepherd, when sending in a subscription for an aunt, whom she was anxious to have The Restitution Herald, writes:

"I enjoy The Herald very much and feel that my aunt will appreciate it also, as she lies on her back in bed with a broken limb. She has been in this position since last May.

"I find the Children's pages, clipped out and put together with an attractive cover on the front, make a very nice Christmas gift for children who enjoy Bible stories. I am wondering if the editor realizes that the Berean page on the back of the Children's page makes it fine for the children when they grow up and discover that they have a new story adapted to their age?

"How I wish each article could be printed in full, one page after another, until the entire piece was finished. Then one could clip them out, put covers on them, and they would make attractive gifts for grown-ups." (What a splendid idea, that of using Herald articles as gifts!"—Ed.) "When the articles are printed on different pages it is hard to clip them without cutting into another good article with which I would like to do the same.

"However, since I'm not the editor, perhaps I am wrong and such a method could not be put into practice. This is just a suggestion."

We appreciate what Sr. Shepherd suggests and it has long been our desire to complete one article in the paper before starting another, but owing to certain difficulties of a mechanical nature it is generally impossible for us to do so. We shall bear all these matters in mind, however, and welcome others of a similarly constructive nature from any of our readers. This is your paper and we want to make it as nearly as possible just what you want it to be.

DAVIS - GOEKLER

A quiet home wedding was solemnized on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 26, when Miss Golda Davis became the bride of Mr. Elmer Goekler. They were attended by Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Goekler, the groom's brother and wife, and the ceremony was performed by Elder Harry Goekler, also the groom's brother.

The groom is a member of the Salem Church of God, near Marshall, Ill., and for many years was active in Berean work. He was a regular attendant at General Conference for a number of years and will be remembered by those who attended then. The bride is a girl of sterling character and in her quiet, friendly way has made a host of friends. They moved to their newly furnished home immediately and may be addressed at Marshall, Ill.

Their many friends wish for them life's richest blessings, both material and spiritual, in the years that are to come.

REPORT OF EVANGELIST

T. A. DRINKARD

My detailed report for December is as follows: Ater, Tex., (4, 5), 2 sermons; Beckett Mountain, Ark., (10-12), 3 sermons; Cleveland, Ark., (18, 19), 3 sermons. Places visited, 4; sermons delivered, 8. Expenses, $13.98; receipts, $75.65, including $6.00 sent by the secretary of the Arkansas Conference.

I am very happy to place this report before the brotherhood. It is interesting to see our brethren respond to the influence of the gospel. At several of the places I visit each month, our brethren are hardly able to supply the expenses, but the interest being manifested causes me to suggest that it is to the good of the brotherhood that you give of your means that the work might continue, inasmuch as it is gospel work.

A brother in Kansas, where they have a small membership of fifteen, writes asking me to promise to come there for a meeting this coming summer. Interest is growing in the things that once stirred the hearts of pioneer fathers. And why not? The gospel work is the greatest on earth, and investment made therein will bring to you more profit than any other you can make.

You may be assured of this, that God materially blessed those who cared for His work in the days of long ago, as you can see by reading Haggai 1:1-15; and the same principle was taught by Jesus Christ (Matt. 6:33), and advocated by Paul (1 Cor. 9:14). God has ordained that His work shall be supported by His people. But our brethren many times forget that we walk by faith and not by sight.

May God richly bless each one that seeks to serve Him. And may we all unite our efforts in gospel service, that God may be glorified. I shall appreciate your cooperation in this evangelistic work.

T. A. Drinkard, Handley, Texas.

FREDERICK HUBER

Frederick Huber was born in Baden, Germany, September 11, 1846, and died at Oregon, Ill., December 14, 1937. He was one of ten sons and one daughter born to Joseph and Mary Ann Huber. He left Germany in his young manhood to avoid military conscription. The prospect of war between France and his native country threatened and he was advised to make his way to America. He arrived in New York City, June 5, 1867, and soon went west to Adeline, Ill., where he later became a farmer. At Forreston, in the same county, he was married to Miss Katherine B. Knock. Two sons were born to them, both of whom survive. His wife died August 13, 1919.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Huber were baptized and became members of the Church of God at Adeline, Ill. Since his wife's death, Bro. Huber has lived in Oregon, where he has been a faithful and beloved attendant at the church services whenever his health permitted.

Funeral services were held in Adeline, conducted by the pastor of the Oregon church. Owing to icy roads, few could attend, and consequently a memorial service was held in Oregon, at which time the pastor spoke on "The Grace of Forgetfulness." Bro. Huber rests in hope and is tenderly remembered by the brethren.

MILLARD W. PERRINE

With a sense of real loss to ourselves and to the Church of God at large, we record the death of Bro. Millard W. Perrine, who for many years was an able contributor to the columns of The Restitution Herald. During recent months we have endeavored to discover why it was that no word was received in answer to various letters we addressed to our dear old friend, and now we learn that he had been taken from the place where he had been living at Everett, Wash., to Seattle, where he died, probably on December 23, 1937, as we learn from Sr. Lottie E. Young of that city, who chanced to see a notice of his death in the paper. We do not regret Bro. Perrine's entering into rest, for he was weary, as he wrote us some time ago. His sight was practically gone, and he patiently awaited the hour to fall asleep in the Lord. We shall see him again, if we are faithful.

Formed Out of the Clay

By T. A. Drinkard

"Behold, I am according to thy wish in God's stead: I also am formed out of the clay."—Job 33:6.

I SUGGEST here that such texts as this one, and others to be cited later, give no little trouble to those who try to prove that the personal pronoun "I" refers to an immortal, immaterial spirit that lives inside of what they are pleased to call the body and to which only is knowledge ascribed. By so affirming they deny that thoughts are the property of matter or material substance, through the agency of mind. Whenever they choose to do this, trouble awaits them. "I also am formed out of the clay," was Elihu's version of the matter, and I am persuaded that he was more reliable than those who teach otherwise.

Since consciousness is a property of the mind, and mind is the result of vitalized brain, and since the vitalization of the brain is the outcome of breathing the breath of life; therefore, when the breath of life leaves man he dies—brain, mind, and thoughts cease to function.

The spirit of man that knows is his mind, which is the product of vitalized brain. Let us read: "For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? Even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God" (1 Cor. 2:11).

If the spirit of man is an immortal entity dwelling within the body of flesh, thus creating a duality, may we not also affirm that the "Spirit of God" refers to an entity in God? Such a hypothesis would do violence to the Word of Truth.

That the spirit here used is the mind of man is evident, "for God is my witness, whom I serve with my spirit in the gospel of his Son" (Rom. 1:9). Here Paul affirms that he served God with his spirit. Now read again: "So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God; but with the flesh the law of sin" (Rom. 7:25).

A Gentile king dreamed a dream and his "spirit was troubled to know the dream" (Dan. 2:3). But Daniel told the king that "thy thoughts came into thy mind" (Dan. 2:1, 29), and "the thoughts of thy heart" (Dan. 2:30). In these verses spirit, mind, and heart are used for the same thing. It is written, "But there is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding" (Job 32:8). Here again the spirit refers to the mind or heart of man, which God endows with knowledge by inspiration. Solomon so understood it, for he said, "Give therefore thy servant an understanding heart to judge thy people" (1 Kings 3:9).

One can have no thoughts save by the proper functioning of his brain, the result of which is "mind." If the mind is not the thing that knows, if thought is not the product of a vitalized brain, why does an injury to the brain cause unconsciousness? If thought is the product of an immortal entity, why does a head injury affect its functioning power? If brain injury affects its functioning power, the inevitable conclusion is that it depends upon material matter for the expression of thought. Therefore, it is apparent that such a theory is not consistent with the teaching of the Scripture or with reason.

Who, or what, commits sin? Suppose that man is a duality, composed of two parts, a mortal body and an entity that does all the thinking and directing, in fact the only part to be saved, is immortal and never dies. Can the body sin if the spirit, as the living intelligence apart from the body, does not direct and force it to do so? If not, then is not the spirit responsible for the deeds of the body? If the spirit is responsible, why kill the body for the sin of the spirit? If the spirit is a man, and is immortal, how can it sin?

By the pen of Inspiration these words were written: "For the living know that they shall die, but the dead know not any thing" (Ecl. 9:5). Death is in the land, as every cemetery will attest. Solomon plainly teaches that the dead are unconscious—they know nothing, their thoughts have perished, and only by resurrection will they live again.

Man is "fearfully and wonderfully made" (Psa. 139:14), and God's work stands unequaled by the wisdom of man. David said, "My substance was not hid from thee, when I was made in secret, and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth. Thine eyes did see my substance, yet being imperfect; and in thy book all my members were written, which in continuance were fashioned, when as yet there was none of them" (Psa. 139:15, 16). You will notice that he says, "I was made in secret, and curiously wrought," and it was done by the creative power of God, who made man, gave him life, and sends him to death because of sin and disobedience. But He promises to bring him out of death through the power of resurrection through Christ (1 Cor. 15:22).

"We are all agreed that life beyond the grave would be a delusion and a cruel mockery without the continuance of the tender household affections which alone make the present life worth living; but to imagine the recognition of soul by soul apart from the material structure in which we have known soul to be manifested, apart from the look of the loved face, the tones of the loved voice, or the renewed touch of the long vanished hand, is something quite beyond our power."—Fiske.

Light in the Eastern Sky

Light in the eastern sky, Jesus returning!
Light in the western sky, Jesus is near!
Soon shall the nations, His advent discerning,
Hail Him with gladness, or see Him with fear.

Bright be our lamps as we watch for the dawning,
Girded our loins, that our strength may not fail;
So as He shines through the mists of the morning,
We may be ready to shout an "All hail!"

Not as at Nazareth, lowly they found Him;
He as a King now returns from the sky;
Borne on the whirlwind, with angels around Him,
Veiling their faces from glory so nigh.

Savior of earth, who in mercy unfailing,
Offered Thyself as atonement for sin,
In that great day, by Thy love all-prevailing,
Grant us a place in Thy kingdom to win!

The Mystery of the Ice Ages

"Fire, and hail; snow, and vapours; stormy wind fulfilling his word."—Psalm 148:8.

PASADENA, Calif., Jan. 7.—"If the average temperature of the United States should drop only eight or nine degrees Chicago would become buried under half a mile of ice and New York would be covered with an ice sheet thousands of feet thick," declares Popular Mechanics in the February issue, referring to a statement recently made by Dr. Chester Stock of the California Institute of Technology in this city.

"Everyone knows that weather and temperature changes go hand in hand, yet the consistency of the basic temperatures that control climate is one of the miracles of the universe," Dr. Stock stated. "Year after year, the annual temperature of any region is practically the same. Life can exist on the earth only inside the narrow range of temperatures that we experience, and these temperatures are regulated by a sort of cosmic thermostat that is infinitely more sensitive than any heat-regulating device that man could make."

Temperatures in the universe range, according to this authority, "from 454 degrees below zero in interstellar space to almost two million degrees above in some of the stars. . . . Almost anything could happen to upset this temperature constant, but the more they study the history of temperatures the more certain are scientists that nothing is likely to happen for an extremely long time to come."

The preservation of an equable temperature on the earth, a temperature that makes possible the maintenance of life in all its forms, is termed by the scientist "one of the miracles of the universe," and so indeed it is. Only an unchangeable God with an unchangeable purpose in process of development could compel such mighty forces to follow the narrow line that marks the separation between life and death for man upon the earth. "I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob (and all mankind) are not consumed" (Mal. 3:6).

Skyscraper Church

"Lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God."—Paul.

NEW YORK, Jan. 9.—A "skyscraper" church that goes in more for dancing than for devotion, more for bowling than for Bibles, more for suppers than for salvation, lifts its twenty-five story Gothic towers on the banks of the Hudson. The structure was completed in 1930, at a cost of more than $4,000,000. Its pastor is Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, who states the objective of the great organization which he heads as follows:

"Modernism is the intellectual endeavor to harmonize our religious thinking with the new world-view that science has brought. Modernism, that is, is primarily an intellectual movement. The modernist cannot live with his intellect in the twentieth century and his theology in the first."

"I am the Lord, I change not" (Mal. 3:6). "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to day, and for ever. Be not carried about with divers and strange doctrines. For it is a good thing that the heart be established with grace; not with meats, which have not profited them that have been occupied therein" (Heb. 13:8, 9). An unchangeable God, an unchangeable Savior, an unchangeable doctrinal basis for faith! These modernism cannot shake.

Use and Abuse of Alcohol

"It is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison."—James 3:8.

NEW YORK, Jan. 7.—Alcohol, like the tongue of which James speaks, is, under the most favorable circumstances, "an unruly evil," and is conceded to be a "deadly poison" by the best medical authorities. The New York News Syndicate in a copyrighted article by Dr. Irving S. Cutter, quotes the physician as saying that while the profession recognizes the value of alcohol as a drug to be used sparingly in the case of elderly people suffering from indigestion, "most medical men prescribe it with caution, since there is always the danger of habit formation. . . . The nervous, jittery type who demands a cloak behind which he may hide his worries, fears, and doubts is likely to become an addict."

Throughout the article, Dr. Cutting speaks of alcohol as "a drug," and warns that even when it is taken under medical advice as a substitute for fats and starches which some chronic invalids cannot take in the form of food, "the one who depends upon it for, say, one fifth of his daily food intake will exhibit poisonous effects." Its use is not necessary even in such cases, he asserts, for "it possesses no nutritive value that cannot be obtained with equal facility from glucose (corn syrup)." Alcohol, he says, slows up both physical and mental action astonishingly.

"Lord, Is It I?"

By the Editor

THE day was over. Night had fallen and darkness enveloped the earth in somber gloom. In an upper room of a private house in Jerusalem Jesus had met with His disciples for the last time before the great sacrifice, and "sat down with the twelve"—the twelve who were shortly to become His witnesses throughout the world.

While the essential facts of what took place on that solemn occasion have been written "for our learning and comfort," all that was said and done very probably was not recorded. But what the historian has provided clearly indicates that in that intimate hour of communion with their Lord, the hearts of the disciples were opened to Him as they had never been opened before and the Master's love reached out and touched them with a revelation of Himself that was more deep and full than they had ever experienced. It was a holy hour, a sacred hour, for both the disciples and their Lord. Each was made known to the other without reserve. Oneness was established between them and for the time being the prayer which He offered later on that same night was fulfilled: "That they may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they may be one in us." It was a unity that was deep and beautiful and soul-satisfying. Each heart there present, with a single exception, was in rapport with all the others, attuned to the same chord of mutual love.

To emphasize and to perpetuate this thought of unity with God was one of the great purposes of the sermon Jesus preached on that occasion. "In my Father's house are many mansions," He declared. There was room for all.

The Greek word rendered "mansions" is derived from a root meaning "to abide," to dwell with another as members of the same household, in unity and love. Hence, Moffatt translates the word for "mansions," "resting places." We find the Greek word repeated many times in the beautiful story of the vine and the branches. "Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me."

What a blessed fellowship with God the Father and with Jesus Christ the Son is suggested here!

But the night was upon them! The glory of the Sun of Righteousness, which shone so brightly into their hearts as they listened to the comforting words of Him they loved, was soon—Oh, so very soon!—to be utterly eclipsed by the blackness of despair! The words of Jesus, spoken as they reclined at the table together, brought this vividly to their minds.

"As they did eat, he said, Verily I say unto you, That one of you shall betray me. And they were exceedingly sorrowful, and began every one of them to say unto him, Lord, is it I?" (Matt. 26:21, 22).

The question provides our text; "Lord, is it I?"

For three wonderful years they had followed Him. Ever since that day when He had called to Peter and Andrew and James and John, saying, "Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men," they had been with Him. They had listened to His Sermon on the Mount with so keen attention that they never forgot the words He spoke. They had seen Him heal the sick, open the eyes of the blind, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead. They had been with Him constantly as He "went about doing good"—teaching, healing, comforting, blessing. This close companionship had developed within them a love for Him that was deep and strong and unchangeable.

But now those tragic words: "One of you shall betray me!" O, it could not be! Surely, not one of those who loved Him so, who had been with Him for so long a time, who had seen Him quiet the raging tempest with a word! Not one of those who had stood beside Him at the open grave of Lazarus so short a time before when He "cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth. And he that was dead came forth" and was restored alive to his bereaved sisters! Surely, not one of them would betray Him! They had every one experienced so much of good at His hands, they had acknowledged Him as the Messiah of Israel and the Redeemer of men; they had felt the healing balm of His forgiveness; they had experienced the joy which only the pardoned can know—all this they had received through their personal association with Him. They could not be mistaken. Peter and the rest of the disciples were convinced that He was indeed "the Christ, the Son of the living God."

The Pharisees might deny Him; the scribes might repudiate Him; the chief priests might seek to betray Him—but not one of these who loved Him! Peter voiced the thought of each one present on that tragic but glorious night as is recorded in Matthew 26:31, 33. When Jesus said "unto them, All ye shall be offended because of me this night: for it is written, I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep of the flock shall be scattered abroad. Peter answered and said unto him, Though all men shall be offended because of thee, yet will I never be offended."

But Jesus knew their hearts and their human weakness far better than they them— (Please turn to back page)

The Utility of Doctrinal Teaching

By A. H. Zilmer

ONE of the definitions of utility is fitness for some desirable practical purpose; serviceableness. We believe that this definition best describes the practical purpose to be served by doctrinal teaching. Doctrine primarily signifies that which is taught. To teach is to impart knowledge or information to; to give instruction to.

In this study we are concerned with that which in Scripture is spoken of in these words, "My doctrine shall drop as rain, my speech shall distil as the dew, as the small rain upon the tender herb, and as showers upon the grass" (Deut. 32:2); or, "That they may adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things" (Titus 2:10). Thus the doctrine with whose utility or practical usefulness we are concerned is the teaching coming from God, which inspired men of old uttered or placed upon record for the instruction of the children of men.

From these observations it will be clear that we are not at present concerned with the doctrines of men, or even religious bodies, whether these be embodied in a creed, or taught by word of mouth. We wish to know what practical end is to be served by teaching the doctrines contained in the Bible.

We believe that the affirmation that God is (Heb. 11:6) is the greatest of all doctrines taught in the Bible. The idea that God is, is the basis of all other religious truths, and the foundation of all essential doctrines. Every moral precept, every valid religious ceremony, has its roots in the fact that God exists. However, the bare idea that God is, while true and indispensable in any system of religious devotion, is an abstraction so long as it does not enter into the human consciousness as a moral force that influences for good the individual who holds that idea. In order that man may be influenced for good by a belief in God, he must of very necessity associate with such faith the idea that he is responsible to God to answer for the discharge of his obligations to his Creator, Benefactor, and Judge. The belief, the concept, the idea, that God is, is only then of practical value when it results in action in keeping with the moral precepts which God has given for the regulation of human conduct. The idea of the existence of God may be compared to a trellis which serves as a support for a vine bearing beautiful flowers. The vine could bud and bloom without the trellis, but the trellis sets off the flowers to advantage. The trellis itself is but a means to an end, and not the end itself. Bear in mind, we are not speaking of the existence of God being a means to an end; but the idea, the thought,

"Doctrine, however essential it may be, is not the end, but a means to an end," declares the editor of "The Faith" (Morrilton, Arkansas), in a stirring editorial in the January number of that magazine. He asserts the real purpose of doctrinal teaching is the development of a "faith that works by love" and assures to the believer who puts it into practice an entrance into the everlasting kingdom of God.

imbedded in the mind, firmly established and constantly held fast serves the useful purpose of reacting upon the character of the individual, of making him better morally than he would be otherwise.

This truth appears in a clear light in the writings of James, "a servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ." Hear him:

"What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? can faith save him? If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body: what doth it profit? Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone. Yea, a man may say, Thou hast faith, and I have works: shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works. Thou believest that there is one God; thou doest well: the devils (demons) also believe, and tremble. Wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead?" (James 2:14-20).

The "vain man" believed that there is one God, and James gave it as his judgment that the man did "well," to which he significantly added, "The devils (demons) also believe, and tremble." We believe these demons were demoniacs, or insane persons, who believed in the existence of God. Of what value was such belief? Would it save them? Being a faith without works, it was dead, and destitute of saving power. Even doing "well" by belief in the existence of the "one God" would not save. There were no beautiful flowers or luscious fruits of the Spirit on the trellis of religious profession and belief.

This also with reference to the belief in the historical existence, the divine sonship, the sacrificial death, the resurrection of Jesus, His ascent into heaven, His coming again to conduct the judgment, and His rulership of the world in righteousness. The intellectual apprehension and mental assent to all of these will save no one so long as such belief is unaccompanied by action in harmony with the divine precepts. Jesus said in addressing, besides His disciples, a great multitude of people out of Judea and Jerusalem, "And why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" (Luke 6:46). The same truth is voiced in Matthew's version, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven" (Matt. 7:21). And again: "Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him to a wise man, which built his house upon a rock; and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not, for it was founded upon a rock" (Matt. 7:24, 25). The wisdom of this "wise man" lay in the fact that he not merely heard and assented to the sayings of Jesus, but did them. The other, hearing and nominally assenting to those sayings, went no further. "Very true, very good," he probably said, but that was all. No action! No wonder his house fell with a great fall (vv. 26, 27).

It is possible for one to know and understand and believe with the utmost nicety all the essential facts of the life of Jesus, and yet fail of salvation. Without suitable action all these are but theories, however correct, that of themselves have no saving value. The various items mentioned in the life of Jesus have their proper place. His divine begetting resulted in the consciousness that He was the Son of the Highest, who as such might claim certain exemptions from suffering and hardship. But nay! He made no such claims but submissively endured "the sufferings of Christ" with the full assurance that glory—endless glory—would follow (1 Peter 1:10, 11).

Being born of a woman, and, therefore, a partaker of flesh and blood, made Him subject to temptation, and capable of sinning. He was in all points tempted like as we are (Heb. 4:15). He said repeatedly that He had overcome (John 16:33; Rev. 3:21). This made it so that when He was tempted He was "without sin." Having undergone those trials, He knows what it is to be tempted, and, therefore, is in a position to give help to those who are tempted. One can believe all this to be true, and yet fail to obtain salvation. Unless one enters into a vital union with the Lord Jesus Christ, and avails himself of the proffered help, all this is but a beautiful theory. It is like looking at and admiring a beautiful painting—very true to life and a lovely picture of the landscape or the object portrayed on canvas. There must be a lively personal touch between the believer and the Savior having these beautiful traits of character.

Enough has been said to make clear that doctrine, however essential it may be, is not the end but the means to an end. The immediate object is to beget faith—a "faith which worketh by love" (Gal. 5:6). Such work has the object to secure an entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Savior Jesus Christ. Thus the kingdom is the end. All that goes before it is a means to the end.

"In the Beginning"

By A. J. Eychaner

THE above words are the first three words of the book of John and of the book of Genesis. They are a translation of two Greek words, en arkee. From their similarity it is thought by many that they refer to a period of time when God created the heavens and the earth. A little reflection will show that John is not writing about the old creation. The "beginning" he speaks of is another beginning, even the new creation. Notice the following points relating to this beginning:

1. Matthew begins his book with, "The generation of Jesus the Christ."

2. Mark, in making his record, starts thus, "The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ."

3. Luke undertakes to give a correct and orderly account of the life and teachings of Jesus from the testimony of those who were eyewitnesses "from the beginning." This beginning in the nature of things could not refer to the creation of heaven and earth, for those of whom he speaks were not present when heaven and earth were made.

4. John began his record at the same "beginning." It was at the time when eternal life was needed, and Jesus came to offer it, for "life and immortality were brought to light through the gospel." This is evident from how John introduces Jesus. In the 4th verse he says, "In him was life; and the life was the light of men." He further explains in verse 5, "And the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not." Here reference is undoubtedly made to the Jewish people. Had they known that Jesus was their promised Messiah, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory.

Perhaps the strongest support to the idea that John refers to the old creation lies in the common translation of verse 3: "All things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made." The word from which "made" is translated may with equal propriety be rendered "done," and is so rendered in the New Testament about sixty-five times, and once in this same chapter, verse 28, "These things were done in Bethabara." It would hardly do to say, "These things were created in Bethabara." Also 1 Corinthians 14:40: "Let all things be done decently and in order." "Created" or its equivalent could not be used and express the thought. So we conclude that "done" would be a better equivalent for ginomai than "made," for then there is a harmony between John's "beginning" and the records of the other evangelists. "All things were done by him." Jesus was the Author and Finisher of the whole scheme. Nothing was done without Him. To Him belongs all the glory. He is the beginning of the new creation. He is the first-born from the dead to the plane of the Spirit—the first-born among many brethren.

The Diaglott rendering is, "was done." Every student of the Bible recognizes two creations. The old creation was a bringing into existence of material upon the plane of the natural. The new creation brings the old upon the plane of the spiritual. It is more properly a regeneration through Christ. The first was temporal; the second is eternal. The earthly Adam was the figurehead of a second Adam, who would stand at the head of the spiritual and immortal. As Adam the first stood at the portal of the first Paradise to dress and keep it, so Adam the second stands upon the threshold of Paradise restored, as King and Ruler of the world to come. Each creation has its beginning, and John's Gospel has to do with the new and not the old. God is distinctly stated to be the Author of the old creation, as Christ is of the new, "for we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works."—The Restitution.

Jesus and His Mother

By Lottie E. Young

CHRISTMAS is past! The story of the Babe of Bethlehem has been told in song and story to millions, and now the thought is uppermost as to what the new year has in store for us. God grant that it may bring this one-time tiny Child as a mighty King who will bring the peace and good will to earth's suffering and longing ones about which the angels sang on the morning of His birth!

The question may arise in some minds as to who took care of this little Babe and growing Child, who was able to answer the questions of the learned doctors of the law. Only one character is associated with the whole life of Jesus of Nazareth, and that was Mary His mother.

Some of the most marvelous pictures ever painted have introduced a figure of which we know very little; the one to whom the angel said, "Hail, thou that art highly favoured, the Lord is with thee; blessed art thou among women." The annunciation, the birth in the stable at Bethlehem, the adoration of the wise men, the flight into Egypt, are all familiar scenes, and yet there are only some half dozen references in the Gospels to this important character. What an exceptional woman she must have been to have been trusted by the Father with the bringing up and education of His Son!

Let us picture a beautiful Jewish girl standing before an angel and listening with bowed head and a strange outward calm to a message about God's will for her, which so far as she could foresee would utterly destroy her good name among her people. One expects her to shrink back with horror, but she has learned to accept the will of Jehovah without a murmur, and she only folds her hands upon her breast and calmly replies, "Behold, the handmaid of the Lord; be it unto me according to thy word." It was Mary's devotion to God which gave her the faith and courage to accept anything which she believed to be His will, even if it meant enduring shame for His name's sake.

Later on Luke tells us that "Jesus advanced in wisdom and stature, and in favour with God and man." Perhaps our imagination will see a little fellow sitting on the doorstep with His mother beside Him telling about the men and women who have lived in Jewish history, particularly about His great ancestor, David, who was born in the same Bethlehem as He had been. She must also have told Him of His wonderful birth and that God was His Father, as the Bible tells us that when, as a boy of twelve He visited Jerusalem and was found talking to the learned men in the temple, and when gently reproved for causing His mother anxiety, He could say, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" So many things must have been mysterious to Mary, but the record says she "pondered them in her heart" and trusted God.

What sort of a home did the boy Jesus have? We know practically nothing of the average Jewish home of Mary's day except that in its simple furnishings it was probably very much like the average home in the East today, with none of our modern conveniences. It was, however, the home of a deeply pious Hebrew, and an equally pious Hebrew mother, whose one ambition was to bring the Child up in the knowledge of Jehovah, and in accordance with the law, carrying out God's command: "These words which I command thee this day shall be in thine heart; and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." So perfectly was this accomplished that the Boy became the sinless One, the Savior of mankind.

It is evident that in her home activities Mary centered everything in God. Having accepted the Child from Jehovah, it was only natural that she should make her home a God-centered home, or one in which everything was done with the understanding that God was supreme, the standard by which everything must be measured. What a contrast to a large majority of our present-day homes where, if questions arise as to right and wrong it is, "What will people say?" or "Will it pay?" instead of, "What will God think?" or "What would Jesus say?"

Every generation has its strong points, and also its weak ones. At present there is an intense interest taken in the training and education of the bodies and minds of children, which is good. But why is there such indifference in parents as to spiritual training? Children often are supposed to get all their religious training in about twenty minutes per week in Sunday school, and if no questions are asked

Jesus Comes to Reward His Servants

OUR LORD'S coming is the signal for rewarding His servants. It supplies a motive for world-wide evangelism, because it is inseparably associated with the glorious compensation for all service, suffering, and sacrifice for His sake.

"Behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." It is not our death, but His coming, that is linked with the wedding feast into which the wise virgins enter; with that joy of the Lord, of which faithful stewards partake; with that award of prize to those who so "run" as to "obtain." It is when He comes that martyrs "faithful unto death," "receive the crown of life"; those who "love his appearing," the "crown of righteousness"; those who as shepherds feed the flock, "the crown of glory"; those who win souls, "the crown of rejoicing"; and those who "keep under the body and bring it into subjection," the "crown incorruptible."

What incentive and inspiration to carry the cross at all risks to the very summit of sin's citadel, that the humble follower of Jesus is "filling up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in his flesh, for his body's sake which is the church"! He is looking for the coming of the King, when he who has fought a good fight shall exchange the armor of the warrior for the crown of the victor. . . . It is then, and not till then, that they that be "teachers shall shine as the brightness of the firmament and they that turn many to righteousness as stars for ever and ever."

Paul tells the Philippians of his renunciations and compensations. He counted his gain as loss, and even refuse, to be trodden under foot; and it was all joy to him because he looked forward, not to death, but to the exanastasis, that "out-resurrection" from among the dead. He could accept the fellowship of Christ's sufferings in view of the fellowship of His glory; could die with Him as a malefactor, that he might rise with Him as a benefactor; dying while others live, that he may live when others are dead.

It is to be regretted that, with even the majority of disciples, this whole revelation of rewards is obscure. In fact, many are in doubt whether rewards can have any place in an economy of grace, since "to him that worketh is the reward not reckoned of grace but of debt."

The Sermon on the Mount teaches us that salvation and reward are not identical: "Except your righteousness exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." The one condition of entrance is a divine righteousness, imputed to us and received by faith alone. But having entered there, our place, or relative position, is determined by the measure of fidelity with which we "do" and "teach" the words of Christ. Jesus taught the woman at the well that eternal life is the gift of God, to be had for the asking; but that chapter also contains an additional revelation touching rewards: "He that reapeth receiveth wages and gathereth fruit unto life eternal." Wages for work differ from a gift bestowed without reference to service rendered. The sinner is saved by grace; the saint is rewarded for work done.

In this, the second article by A. T. Pierson, the author points out that one of the purposes of our Lord's return is to reward those who have carried on His work during His absence. "It is not our death, but His coming," that is linked with the thought of salvation and reward, he declares.

So, in the First Epistle to the Corinthians, Paul tells us that a man may be "saved" and yet "suffer loss," his work being burned; and that he may both be saved and "have a reward," his work abiding. The Christian worker, dying daily, bearing in his body the marks of the Lord Jesus, lifts up his eyes and sees redemption drawing nigh. He follows his Lord in His humiliation, remembering that "in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory," he shall sit with Him.

This blessed hope of the Lord's coming with His reward, is an hourly inspiration. He watches prayerfully, toils wearily, waits patiently; the Lord is at hand; at any moment "this same Jesus" may "so come in like manner" as He was seen to "go into heaven." Then shall the wrongs of the ages be righted, and the martyrs of Jesus shall receive their long-deferred crown.

The whole tendency of such a hope is to unfix the disciple from the world and the world from him. Those who say, "My Lord delayeth his coming," may be tempted to self-indulgence, hoarded treasure, intoxicating pleasure. But the steward whose Master may at any hour return to call him to account, cannot bury his talent in houses and lands, costly plates and shining gems, stocks and stores; he feels that he must invest it—it must be currency—current from hand to hand, increasing as it goes. And so as he labors he ever remembers that "the time is short," "the judge standeth at the door" and when He knocks, His servant must be ready to "open to him immediately," his work always done and ready for rigid scrutiny.

THE BLESSED HOPE WEANS US FROM THE WORLD

The blessed hope of our Lord's coming weans believers from this world. The practical effect of looking for and waiting for His advent is to make disciples unselfish and spiritual, to relax their hold upon worldly things and carnal lusts, and make all things seem small and insignificant beside the magnitude of eternity. The consistent believer in this truth can neither lay up treasure upon earth nor lay out vast plans for indolence and indulgence. While preparing for a long life of luxurious ease the midnight cry may be heard, and he wants no treasures or pleasures, pursuits or possessions, which His coming can interrupt, or condemn, or bring to naught. Nature's Bible Lessons

ONE of the first requisites in teaching Biblical truths, and, in fact, in teaching any truth, is to realize its importance. Although one may feel that he is a very ordinary teacher, yet he becomes great when he goes to his class with the conviction that his subject is most important.

Teaching Biblical truth, by means of nature as an instrument, is important, because it is attractive. The young are interested in nature. We gain their attention at once by reference to it.

The writer has for many years felt the value of this method, but never more than recently when he called the attention of children to objects in nature; the moon and some facts about it; the stars, their names, distances, and peculiarities; the trees, their food, and methods of growth. Such facts are listened to with eager attention.

Without doubt God intended that nature should instruct us, as well as feed and clothe us. Rightly used it always leads to Him. And so His prophets, under divine illumination, used natural things to teach their spiritual truths. And it is well known that our Savior taught marvelous religious truths, using material things as His instruments.

It is the writer's experience that lessons taught by this method are sometimes remembered for a lifetime.

In teaching such truths, one may use familiar objects, but he needs to unfold new and unusual facts concerning them. Everything in nature is marvelous, when we know its secrets.

To use a magnet to show how it will draw iron to itself, is not very impressive, because boys and girls generally know that. But the why of it always gains their attention, and fastens itself, and its lessons, in their memory.

The magnet is composed of atoms, really miniature worlds, having their north and south poles, or positive and negative, as truly as this world has its poles. These tiny bodies lie in a confused manner, higgledy-piggledy, as so many boys all pulling in different directions, and hence they pull nothing. But a new and wonderful energy comes near them in the electric current sent over the magnet. They feel its force, and swing around into harmony with it, and all pull together, and send out their lines of force, which in turn, swing the atoms in the iron near the magnet into a similar harmony, and so the iron and the magnet leap toward each other.

The countless number of miniature worlds in the magnet, and in the iron, are utterly helpless, until the strange and mighty energy in the electric current transforms them, and then they do marvels.

This readily suggests that divine power in the Spirit of Christ which transforms and harmonizes us.

To show the colors of the rainbow, when a beam of light is passed through a prism, is mildly interesting. But its explanation is fascinating. The prism is wedge-shaped, and the light passes more readily through air than through glass, and so it takes longer to go through the thick part of the prism than through the thin part, and as a result the ray of light is bent, and spreads out fanlike, and then the colors which were hidden in the beam, and invisible, stand out in all their beauty. Now the prism is clothed with new interest.

We are to be like the prism, and let the light and love of Christ, the Sun of Righteousness, invisible to the world, shine through us, that His beauty may be revealed.

THE MUSIC OF NATURE

On every hand are wonders in nature which illustrate the teachings of the Scriptures. The music of nature is one of them. "They break forth into singing" (Isa. 14:7). "Then shall the trees of the wood sing out at the presence of the Lord" (1 Chron. 16:33).

The aggregate sound of nature, as the roar of a distant city or the waving of foliage, is said to be a single definite tone, middle F of the piano, which is thus termed the keynote of nature.

It is also known that the molecules and atoms of all things are in a state of vibration.

Violins, and other stringed instruments, and the sounding boards of pianos, are carefully selected with a view to their response to the waves of music which sweep over them.

The molecules of wood composing a violin are all marshaled into harmony by the music played upon it. What a spectacle for the eye of reason to see all the molecules begin to form into line, and step out to the chord of sweet sounds born of the mind of the musician!

Many years ago, by experiment, I discovered that I could use trees as aerials in sending and receiving wireless messages. The trees were found to receive and vibrate in harmony with the electric waves sent upon them.

All the beautiful colors of the world, whether in the clouds, in the leaves in autumn, or in the rainbow, or flower gardens, are delicate vibrations of music, shading off from the bass notes in the red, up through the orange, and so on to the highest soprano tones of the violet. There is about one octave of vibrations in the colors which we see, from 434 trillions of vibrations a second in the red to 740 trillions in the violet. Sight is about thirty-three octaves above the range of hearing. Were our ears as sensitive to vibrations as our eyes, we would hear all the intervening thirty-three octaves between sound and light, and many others. All the varied colors of autumn leaves, and of other objects in nature, would then be heard singing their praise to the Creator.

We are constructed on the principles of a musical instrument, and can see and hear, and detect odors, because our organs of sense are in tune with certain vibrations. By the 24,000 cords in the organ of Corti in the ear, resonating in harmony with air waves, we hear; and by the millions of rods and cones, beneath the retina in the eye, responding to the ether vibrations, with which they are in tune, we see.

How unfortunate to us if, while all nature is vibrant with praise to the Creator, we, His children, should be discordant notes, because of our unbelief and complaints. "Let every thing that hath breath praise the Lord."

THE ATMOSPHERE OR AIR WE BREATHE

Nothing is more familiar to us than the air, and yet nothing is more mysterious.

("Air" is a word of singular significance to the careful Bible student, for God selected Hebrew and Greek words of equivalent meaning to express the idea of His own self-existent life and also the life-principle of all breathing creatures. The editor of THE RESTITUTION HERALD has in course of preparation an exhaustive article treating of the Biblio-scientific significance of all the original words used in the Scriptures with reference to air as the source of life and energy.)

It is the symbol of lightness to us. We say, "as light as air." Since it is so light, and the earth moves at such tremendous speed, revolving on its axis at a thousand miles an hour, and traveling around the sun at 65,000 miles an hour, why is not the atmosphere dashed off the earth with explosive violence, and lost in the immensity of space?

Reason, the earth's attraction toward its center draws down the air, so that it not only has weight, but it presses down upon the earth, and on all objects, fifteen pounds on every square inch of surface. Upon a man of ordinary stature there is a pressure of fifteen tons, or 30,000 pounds. Why it does not crush us, and all the buildings on earth, is because it presses equally in all directions. It is upon us, around us, and within us, and so we can freely move in it, utterly insensible of its presence and weight.

It is a mixture of gases, and is not at all a chemical compound, like water, which is composed of hydrogen and oxygen, a thing different from both. There is no such combination, or alternation in the gases of the air. Each keeps its own character. They have different weights, and yet they are so thoroughly and completely mixed that generally the air in different parts of the world varies but little.

Because the earth attracts them, and the heat of the sun expands them, the gases are so perfectly balanced, that the heavier and lighter gases are forced to mix with one another.

In a gallon of air, about 21 per cent is oxygen, seventy-eight per cent nitrogen, eight tenths of one per cent argon, and small quantities of watery vapor, carbon dioxide, with smaller traces of ammonia, and the rarer gases, such as helium.

Air is a staff of life. Nothing can live without it. Fish must have it. Water cannot support life without air. By the weight of the atmosphere, over a ton on every square foot, and by its motions, water is aerated, and is thus life-sustaining. Water devoid of air stagnates and is death dealing.

The impurities of the blood are burned up by the oxygen received in breathing, and so our perishing cells are constantly being renewed. We live by dying.

The skin must breathe as well as the lungs. Our pores are stimulated by currents of air. The great discomfort experienced from bad air is due largely to the excessive heat and humidity interfering with the proper action of the skin.

One who was enclosed to his neck in an air-tight vessel, and yet permitted to breathe fresh air from without, suffered all the usual effects of a lack of ventilation, and excessive heat. He was relieved at once when the temperature of the chamber was lowered. One great benefit of air is that it cools the body, and hence the value of fresh out-of-doors air.

It well nigh surpasses belief what we take into our lungs with each breath. According to no less an authority than Dr. G. Johnson Stoney, a cubic millimeter, smaller than any pinhead, at ordinary temperature, contains thirty-one quadrillion molecules of nitrogen, eight quadrillion of oxygen; and other gases amounting altogether to about forty quadrillion molecules. And these tiny missiles dash about, and clash with their neighbors, six billion times a second, traveling more than a thousand miles a second.

We breathe 635 such millimeters a second, or about twenty-five quintillions of these molecules, and each one is a tiny universe in itself, and moves at a speed faster than the earth.

Such thoughts lead us to exclaim with the Psalmist of old: "O Lord, how manifold are thy works! in wisdom hast thou made them all."

Air not only recreates the cells of our body, and does other marvelous things for us, but without it there would be no sound, not a word could be uttered or heard; no beauties of the sunset seen, no refraction of light, and the inside of our houses would be midnight blackness.

Air forms a gentle, invisible blanket, diffuses the sun's rays, and retains the heat from radiating away at once; for it is a poor conductor. Were it not so, our days would be unbearably hot, and almost absolute zero would prevail at night, and no animal could long exist on earth.

It has just the right density to permit the birds to fly, and airplanes to mount into it, and yet we move about in it feeling little or no resistance from it.

Were its mixture of gases changed, so that nitrogen were increased, we would be smothered, and if the oxygen were materially greater, our tissues would be rapidly oxidized, we would be burned up, and the atmosphere itself would easily take fire.

There are thousands of other marvels in this strange medium, in which we live and move and have our being. And he is blind, indeed, who can consider even a few of them, as above, and not be led to believe that we have a wise and loving heavenly Father, who by His works, anticipated our needs, and provided for them, and He will continue to do so. "He giveth to all life, and breath, and all things," and should have our unceasing thanks.—Charles H. Tyndall in New Century Leader.

The Villages of Palestine

PALESTINE has few cities. Greater Jerusalem has a population of 90,000 and Tel Aviv, grown up on the sand dunes just north of ancient Joppa since the World War, has 58,000. Haifa, by Mount Carmel, the significant seaport town, has 60,000, and Jaffa has 55,000. Aside from these there are no population centers worthy of the name "city."

Bethlehem, with 6,200, is still a "little town," far more rural than urban. Nazareth has few more than 8,000. Many of these are members of religious orders. Gaza, with 18,000, is not a city, but a point of departure for caravans to southern Arabia. These towns, and others such as Tiberias and Beersheba, are really large villages, providing some city conveniences, but generally giving the impression they are closely connected with the soil.

The smaller villages of Palestine are the insignificant population centers. Ranging from a dozen families to three hundred people, each village is self-reliant. They sell or buy very little. What they do not produce they do without. Money is a negligible factor in daily life except at tax-paying time.

Individual families never live on separate farms as in the United States. All rural life is the result of necessity in former times, and of tradition.

In ancient Palestine the farmers lived in walled towns, and farmed the near-by areas as they do today. This was for self-protection. Only twice have villagers ventured to build homes outside the city walls. The first was during the rule of Rome and the second is the present. They are beginning to feel that walls are useless under modern conditions of warfare.

Village farms are always small and never hard to reach. Many whole villages would count themselves rich to have under cultivation an area equal in productivity to the average size farm of the Mississippi Valley. In the hills a field seldom contains as much as two acres. Larger fields of the plains are divided into small plots.

The desire for companionship has also brought the farmers together into communities. This has also promoted a sense of group responsibility. How often in the Bible whole villages are condemned as one man! The cities of Sodom and Gomorrah were condemned as if they were individuals. Chorazin and Bethsaida were denounced on account of their wickedness and called to repentance as we would speak to a person. Authorities now find it expedient to hold an entire village responsible for a crime committed by any one citizen. And the people do not regard such treatment as unjust.

There are other farmers who live under somewhat different circumstances. If you were to visit Taamira, a few miles southeast of Bethlehem, during the harvesting or planting season, you would not find a single person at home. They would all be living in tents near their fields. After the season they return to their homes. The Feast of Tabernacles in ancient Israel was closely connected with this type of life.

Five main types of land ownership are recognized in Palestine today. Some farms are individually owned, but the rights are very limited. Only a small percentage of the land is thus owned.

In the second type, the state has actual ownership but the right of occupation belongs to the individual (Luke 19:12, 13). The land may be used as the occupant pleases, so long as he uses it (Luke 19:20-24). After three years of non-cultivation the land reverts to the state. Most of the farm land is thus owned and occupied.

The state owned land is rarely held by individuals but by villages in common. Each family is usually assigned a tract of land, and from time to time these are redistributed, so that the sense of ownership does not develop (Lev. 25:25-31; Psa. 24:1; 1 Cor. 10:26, 28). Neither does it build up a desire to improve one's fields. It is like tenant farms in the United States.

A third type of ownership is Waqf, or land belonging to religious or charitable organizations. The administration is bound up with Moslem law. The fourth class is public land, for roads, public buildings, parks, places of worship, etc. The fifth is the waste land or desert. This cannot be occupied without government permission, and is the home of the nomad (Isa. 35:1, 2; Ezek. 34:22-31; 36:34-36).

Village life is simple, and narrow. There is no dream of vast riches. Life is regulated by the elders (Deut. 27:1; Matt. 27:1; Acts 4:8; 15:6; 20:17, 28; 1 Tim. 5:17; Rev. 5:8-10). The muktar keeps the records, collects the taxes, entertains the strangers (Heb. 13:2), and, with the aid of other elders, administers justice (Prov. 31:23).

Holy days are observed by all. Market day attracts people from neighboring villages. Weddings are festive occasions. Community activities are very simple, being closely tied with religious practices.

But life is far from ideal. Sanitation is almost unknown. There are no doctors in the villages. Superstitious practices are used against disease (Acts 8:9, 10; 19:19). Illiteracy was almost universal until recently. Only one boy in five and one girl in twenty learned to read and write. Most information was handed through the generations by stories and proverbs.

But every village has its place of prayer. Religion is the type that binds the community. Unfortunately the religious beliefs are generally primitive and moral codes relatively low.

The American community will do well to learn from the Palestinian that there can be no satisfactory community life without a satisfactory community religion. And we can teach the Palestinians that the only satisfactory religion is that found in Jesus Christ.—Religious Digest.

JESUS COMES TO REWARD HIS SERVANTS

If, step by step, human enterprise, worldly civilization, and ecclesiastical progress could bring on the latter-day glory, we should be justified in building as though everything were to last at least a thousand years; but if all these things are to be dissolved, if only the graces and fruits of the Spirit are to survive and endure, then let us expend our energy upon imperishable things. There is no proof which demonstrates that this doctrine is of God so forcibly as the fact of its undeniable dominance over the believer's life, making him unworldly, uncaral, unselfish.

Here is another vital link between this hope and missions. No work demands for its earnest doing, more unworldly and unselfish devotion than foreign missions. Much so-called Christian work may be prosecuted in the energy of the flesh, for such service promises a rich and prompt return in temporal and financial prosperity. A railway magnate may give money in large sums to build schools and churches in new settlements along the lines, on commercial principles; the church or school is a nucleus for population; population means travel and transportation; and so, revenue to the railway, increased value to stock, and ultimate enrichment to stockholders. There is no doubt that much so-called benevolence is in its last analysis only the cloak of a shrewd, calculating business enterprise.

The fact is significant that, although during the first centuries the church was both premillennial and evangelistic, so soon as the Lord's coming ceased to be regarded as imminent and was projected into a remote future, the evangelism of primitive days declined and has never been revived. Few disciples flame with zeal for foreign missions; the bulk of church members regard the work with comparative indifference, and some even contend that it "does not pay."

When we pierce to the core the difficulty, we find it is simple selfishness. Beyond any other form of Christian work, this is carrying the gospel to those so far off, so needy, so distant, and so destitute, that we can expect no returns. They cannot recompense us; we must look for our recompense "at the resurrection of the just," and nowhere this side of that. The most frantic appeals for perishing souls along the Congo, beneath the shadows of the Himalayas, or in the Korean valleys, awaken no response from hearts encrusted and electroplated with selfishness. Of course, foreign missions do not pay, if by "pay" we mean a compensation to avarice, appetite, or ambition or any form of temporal interest and self-employment. To evangelize a great city is applying salve to the festering ulcers upon the body politic; it promotes the safety of our homes, protects life, liberty, property; helps to assure our temporal peace and prosperity, and to pull up anarchy (and communism) by the roots.

To evangelize likewise "pays"; the returns will come, though it may take a little longer to reap the harvest. Facilities of travel and transportation no more surely bring to our doors the granary and treasury of the continent, than do the normal growth and healthy development of the remotest members help the whole commonwealth; while a thorn in the farthest extremities inflicts such a pang on the whole body that the whole body stoops and bends, and brings every other member into requisition, to pluck it out.

In city missions and home evangelization we may appeal to commercial enterprise and selfish instincts. But when we are pleading for South Sea cannibals, or African Hottentots, or half-idiotic Cretins of the Alps, or the despised opium-loving Chinamen, or the stupid Esquimaux, or the exclusive Lama worshipers of Tibet, we have no hold on selfish souls. To give money for such a purpose is like putting it "into a bag with holes"—you will never see it again, and may never see adequate results. It is doubtful whether the Lord means that you shall. He puts this work before us as the nearest in spirit and motive to that which brought our Redeemer to this earth. . . . He who, either in prevailing prayers, consecrated offerings, or personal service, seeks to set up the banner of the cross amid the millions of Brahmins and Buddhists, Confucianists, Mohammedans, and Jews, Parsees and papists, devil worshipers and fetish worshipers, must first of all "have the mind of Christ"; he must consent to "humble himself and be obedient unto death." The carnal must die if the spiritual is to live; the miser expires when the missionary is born.

JESUS AND HIS MOTHER

at home as to what they have learned, any information will soon evaporate. Some fathers and mothers even say they do not feel like tackling a child's religious education; they may, by and by, but there is no hurry about it, and perhaps it is just as well to let it alone until the child can decide for itself, as they do not believe in forcing them! How would such a plan work in regard to going to day school, or making them take medicine, no matter how bitter, if they are sick?

O, for more mothers like Mary, Elisabeth, Hannah, and Eunice, who truly believed, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it"!

Ten Reasons Why I Do Not Drink

1. Because of the bad reputation of John Barleycorn. (Exemplified prohibition.)

For long years alcohol has been associated with crime, vice, moral corruption, suffering, sickness, and ruined homes. I cannot make friends with anything that has such a reputation. Men who have made friends with alcohol and have fallen as human wrecks along the highway of life are, to me, examples from which I take warning.

2. Because, to me, drink is repulsive. (Physical prohibition.)

My whole physical nature rebels against alcohol or the thought of it: I hate the looks; I hate the smell; I hate the taste; I hate the environment. The very idea of alcoholic consumption is nauseating.

3. Because of scriptural injunctions against it. (Scriptural prohibition.)

In many places in the Holy Scriptures, we read such injunctions as: "Be not drunken with wine, wherein is riot" (Eph. 5:18); "Be not among winebibbers" (Prov. 23:20); "Woe unto them that rise up early in the morning that they may follow strong drink; that tarry in the night till wine inflame them" (Isa. 5:11); "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbour drink" (Hab. 2:15). The Bible is my guidebook and it prohibits me from using strong drink.

4. Because alcohol is a poison. (Scientific prohibition.)

The verdict of the laboratories of science is, "Alcohol is a poison." You wouldn't expect me to eat Paris green or drink strychnine. Therefore, do not expect me to take alcohol, which is poisonous to the human body.

5. Because doctors and coaches advise against it. (Advised prohibition.)

The great doctors and scientific men advise against the use of alcohol. The use of it affects one's sight, smell, touch, taste, and hearing. Thus, a user of alcohol becomes blunt and dull. Great athletic coaches have found that one who drinks is not physically up to par. I am willing to profit by their findings.

6. Because I hate snakes. (Mental prohibition.)

In Proverbs 23:33 we read: "Thine eyes shall behold strange women, and thine heart shall utter perverse things." There is a God-placed enmity between man and the serpent. I have always hated snakes, and knowing that the habitual use of alcohol causes delirium tremens in which the sufferer is the constant companion of snakes, pink elephants, etc., I am taking no chances.

7. Because it blights character. (Moral prohibition.)

A drinker is loose in his morals, and the more he drinks the looser he is. I have placed before me life's high moral standards and I know that I cannot reach nor keep that goal if I use alcohol.

8. Because I love my home. (Domestic prohibition.)

Statistics have shown that a great percentage of idiots come from drinking parents and that a large portion of the paupers are drinkers. It has also been estimated that over eighty per cent of our crime is committed by men under the influence of liquor. Drink has been the direct cause of many broken homes. I love my home. Therefore, I do not drink.

9. Because drinking is an insult to the Spirit of God. (Spiritual prohibition.)

Paul, in 1 Corinthians 6:19, says: "What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own?" My body, then, is the temple of the Holy Spirit and is to be filled with that Spirit and not with beer and whiskey. I feel that I should give the Spirit of the living God a fit place in which to dwell.

10. Because I could not be a true Christian and drink. (Christlike prohibition.)

A Christian is to "abstain from all appearance of evil." A Christian should be Christlike and I cannot conceive of Jesus doing the things that drinkers always do. I would be like Jesus. Therefore, I cannot and will not drink.—Carlton C. Buck, pastor at Arlington Christian Church, Riverside, California; selected from The National Voice.

The Lord is My Shepherd!

* * * *

The Personal Psalm

"The Lord is my shepherd;

I shall not want.

He maketh me to lie down in green pastures:

He leadeth me beside the still waters.

He restoreth my soul:

He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for His name's sake.

Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death,

I will fear no evil:

For thou art with me;

Thy rod and thy staff they comfort me.

Thou preparest a table before me

In the presence of mine enemies:

Thou anointest my head with oil;

My cup runneth over.

Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me

All the days of my life:

And I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever."

After seeing the Psalm in the preceding arrangement, a man said: "I thought I knew the 23rd Psalm, but I never really read it until now. It makes me homesick for God."

PREPARED BY MARY A. GESIN

"Jesus said unto them, Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men. And straightway they forsook their nets, and followed him."

Youth Is the Time for Service

While you are young and eager,
Strong with a strength untried,
Pledge all your life to Jesus,
And for His cause decide.

Treasure this joy and courage,
Spirit of youthful days;
Let not such gifts be wasted,
Spent in unworthy ways.

Youth is the time for service,
Youth is the time for praise,
Earnest and careful training,
Thought for the coming days.

So to our Lord and Savior
We offer our youthful days,
Give Him the years of promise,
Give Him our heart's first praise.

—Charlotte Irene Ford.

A Good Beginning

How many of you have stood on the shores of a beautiful lake and watched the waves come in, wash over the sands at your feet, and go out again into the sea? Perhaps some of you have seen some of the large pleasure boats sailing on the surface of a lake, beckoning you to come and discover the other side of your little world. I remember as a child I often stood just so on the shore of Lake Michigan and felt in my heart a longing to be off, sailing on its smooth surface.

Jesus spent much of His time, during His years of preaching, on the shores of a beautiful lake. It is called the Lake of Galilee, and it is so blue it looks as if a great bottle of bluing had been poured into it. In the story around which is centered Lesson 3, we find Jesus walking along the sands of Galilee.

It was a year or more after His baptism, of which we studied last week. The sea was full of fish, and there were many fishermen mending their nets; casting them into the waters, and drawing them out filled.

People who have visited there tell us that now there are only a few boats to be seen, and the fishing business does not thrive as it did in Jesus' time. In the city of Capernaum, where Jesus spent so much of His time, there probably were many Greek traders, Jewish farmers, and Roman soldiers. And He found many to talk to, to heal, and to teach a new way of life.

As you read the story of Jesus' calling of the first four apostles, try to picture the scene in your mind. Simon and his brother Andrew had, no doubt, heard of the great Healer and Teacher who had just come into their neighborhood. On the day of which we are reading they were intent on their tasks.

But a voice called to them in tones which they could not disobey, and at once they arose, left their nets, and followed. Jesus had a great work before Him, and He must have helpers.

That great work, we know, was spreading the good news all about concerning the kingdom of God. The healing that He did merely proved that the words He spoke were true. He was sent by His Father, God, to tell the weary people of earth the glad, the life-giving news.

As Jesus and Simon and Andrew walked along the shore, Jesus called to two other fishermen to follow Him, and they, too, came. Find their names also. Now there were five of them, four helpers and their Leader.

Some day when you are wishing for something to do take the words, "straightway," and "immediately," and count the times you find them in this interesting book of Mark's Gospel.

Now read verses 21 and 22, and see what Jesus did as soon as He had chosen these first four helpers. To what city did they go and to what place in that city? What did Jesus do at once? He was already beginning to preach the gospel. How did the people receive His message?

"We would see Jesus in the early morning,
Still as of old He calleth, "Follow me!"
Let us arise, all meaner service scorning,
Lord! we are Thine, we give ourselves to Thee."

AMONG THE CHURCHES

CHRISTMAS FORTY-TWO YEARS AGO

An echo of our Christmas issue reaches us from Sr. Clara Stinnette of Moorefield, Neb.:

"We enjoyed the Christmas Herald so much! I am one of the members of the Moorefield Church of God that sent the letter to The Restitution (which was published in the Christmas Herald) forty-two years ago. I cannot tell you all that are asleep, but a good many are I know. Among those who are at rest are Mrs. H. M. Ealy, Mrs. C. M. Gunn, P. J. Schultz, E. A. Morgan and Mrs. M. E. Morgan (my father and mother), E. Steadman; Mrs. J. P. Johnson, W. S. Grimm, and possibly others."

Generation follows generation in the service of God as in the service of the world, but the godly have this consolation, the separation that death brings to all classes will not be eternal to them. Some day they will meet again in the land where partings never come.

A DELAYED NEW YEAR GREETING

The following was received too late to appear earlier, but we are glad to give it a place here.

"To those of like precious faith, greeting: May the new year be a prosperous and happy one for each of you, and may it yield more fruit for the Master than that which is past, is our prayer. Yours in hope,

"George A. Waters,
"3316 Avenue D, Corpus Christi, Texas."

IN MEMORY OF A LOVED ONE

"Behold, I come quickly: hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown." "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away" (Rev. 3:11; 21:4).

These verses hold so much of comfort—also of warning! May we ever stand faithful to the end. Let us push forward with the message to the world in a far greater way this coming year than we have in the past.

Yours in hope of the soon-coming of our King Jesus,

Mrs. Mae Magnus, Detroit, Mich.

DE WITT - STEWART

Under an archway between two beautifully decorated Christmas trees, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Homer DeWitt, Miss Pearl DeWitt and Raymond Stewart were united in marriage Christmas morning. They were attended by the bride's twin sister, Miss Myrtle DeWitt, and Kieth Decker, Elder C. A. Smead solemnized the marriage, using a beautiful single ring Ian MacLaren service. A lovely wedding dinner was served to the immediate families.

Mr. and Mrs. Stewart will make their home in part of the home of Mr. and Mrs. Almon Kelly, near Blanchard, Mich. The church extends best wishes for a long and happy married life.

ARKANSAS ANNUAL CONFERENCE DATE SET

The annual conference of the Arkansas Church of God will convene (D. V.) at McGintytown, July 28-31, 1938. The conference will be preceded by a series of meetings to be held at the same place, beginning July 22, is the announcement made through The Gospel Trumpet by Bro. G. H. Bradford, conference president.

WILLIAM READ

A long-time member of the Fonthill Church of God fell asleep in death at the home of his daughter, Sr. William Jenter, Niagara Falls, Ont., on Monday morning, Dec. 13. If he had lived till March 7, he would have been eighty-six years of age. He was baptized over sixty years ago by Elder R. V. Lyon, and remained loyal to this espoused faith until he had finished his course. He had enjoyed a good measure of health until a few weeks before his death, when he suffered a stroke from which he failed to recover. Sr. Read preceded him in death by three years.

One of the sweet memories of this aged couple that will linger long in our mind, happened when the first meetings were held in Welland. In good and bad weather alike, this aged pair walked several blocks to attend the meetings, and were present nearly every night. It was a faithfulness that was inspiring and proved a source of encouragement during the campaign.

"The Coming of Christ and the Hope of Resurrection" claimed our attention during the short discourse at the family home, after which he was placed in his earthly bed beside his wife in Fonthill Cemetery, where both will sleep unaware of each other until the rising call in the morning of the resurrection.

TO A CORRESPONDENT AT LITCHFIELD, MINNESOTA

A correspondent, evidently a reader of The Restitution Herald, has written us as follows, but failed to sign his name to his card, hence we must reach him in this way.

"In your next issue of your paper would you please explain the following scriptures, which for a long time have been a puzzle to me? I will appreciate it and look for an answer. The scriptures are: Matthew 18:8; Luke 16:23; Revelation 20:10 and 14:11. If the righteous go to everlasting life, why will not the wicked go to everlasting punishment?"

This is a most interesting question and one of general interest; but owing to pressure of work just at this time the editor has asked one of our most accomplished Bible scholars to prepare an article on this subject which we trust will appear in the paper in the near future. If our correspondent is not a subscriber, and will send us his name and address, we will be glad to send him a copy of the paper containing the article whenever it is published.

BETWEEN YOU AND ME—

With sorrow we learn of the recent death of Sr. Carrie E. Hilsabeck, formerly of Marshalltown, Iowa. Together with her parents and family Sr. Hilsabeck has been a most earnest contender for the faith. We hope to obtain the particulars of her passing in the near future.

We had the opportunity recently to review a Christmas play written by Sr. Jeanette A. Romine of Oregon, Ill. We were impressed by the depth of feeling it created in our own mind. There was careful character analysis, deep spiritual insight, and obvious appreciation of dramatic and literary values which are seldom found in a work of this nature that does not come from an experienced dramatist. We regret that it is too long to appear in our columns.

The Central Advent Christian Bulletin for January calls attention to our summer intensive training school which is to begin July 5 at Oregon, Ill., and also to the fact that Bro. Harry A. Sheets is to meet with the Church of God students at Aurora College each Monday night during the next semester to conduct a class in doctrinal teaching.

"Whosoever will be great among you, shall be your minister" (Mark 10:44).

Pastor James W. McLain, Macomb, Ill., tells of a delightful gift that came to Mr. and Mrs. John Roberts, Blandinville, Ill., on Christmas morning, when Glen Sterling Roberts arrived in a nine and a half pound bundle. "Grandmother (Sr) Phoebe Pestle is helping take care of him," Bro. McLain adds.

AN HUNDREDFOLD NOW IN THIS TIME

By S. P. Dismukes

"And Jesus answered and said, Verily I say unto you, There is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake, and the gospel's, but he shall receive an hundredfold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come eternal life."—Mark 10:29, 30.

IN THE foregoing scripture Peter was told that a man should expect to receive an hundredfold of that which he had forsaken. When? "Now in this time"—the time in which one may render such service to the Lord. We notice, too, that the "hundredfold" is accompanied by persecutions. Do these words teach what they seem to imply? Let us picture for a moment the man who would "forsake all" to go out to preach the gospel in service to his Lord.

He gives up his business and the possibility of prospering to the extent that he might retire in his old age. He forsakes the comforts of his home, the association of his wife and children, together with those around them, returning occasionally for only a short time.

And thus he continues down through life until he is sixty or seventy years of age, or possibly older. He has forsaken all. He has given his entire life to the Lord and His cause; yet, in this time he is to receive an hundredfold of that which he has forsaken—an hundredfold of houses, brethren, sisters, mothers, even children and lands! Not at all. We can readily see that to think of this as an hundredfold of material blessing would be impossible. So it is evident, since the blessing is to be received "in this time," that it is a spiritual blessing, and that which no man can take from him—a joy and satisfaction that is equivalent to an hundredfold of that which he has forsaken.

And so it is with the "giver." "Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, shaken together, and overflowing, will be given into your lap. For by the same measure with which you measure, it will be dispensed to you again" (Luke 6:38, Diag.). Not in worldly material, be it goods, gold, or silver, but in spiritual gifts—the joy and satisfaction of knowing that we have rendered an offering to Him who gave His very own life for us, and that we may have helped to make it possible for some one else to come into the way of salvation.

Friends, if you would render a service to your Master, now is the time to begin. God does not require anything unreasonable, for the Apostle Paul writes: "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."

Time is swiftly passing, we cannot recall it. Opportunity to attain that special calling may be cut short by the coming of the Lord or the uncertainty of life, so, as it is written, I would that we "be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God" (Rom. 12:2). And when we have reached the end of our way we can say, as did the Apostle Paul, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing" (2 Tim. 4:7, 8). I ask you sincerely, Would not that joy and assurance be equal in value an hundredfold that which thou hast forsaken?

WHAT DOES THE BIBLE SAY?

WILLIAM WILEMAN of England points out in the Religious Digest a few "nots" for preachers to remember. We quote some of them, add some more, and ask concerning each one the further question: "What does the Bible say?"

"The Bible does not say that man shall eat bread in the sweat of his brow." What does it say? Gen. 3:19.

"The Bible does not say that Cain took a wife in the land of Nod." What does it say? Gen. 4:16, 17.

"The Bible does not tell us that God placed a brand of any kind upon Cain." What does it tell us? Gen. 4:15.

"The Bible does not say that he who runs may read. This blunder was set on its way by Keble in 1827, and it has been 'running' ever since. Please stop it!" What does the Bible say about this? Hab. 2:2.

"The Bible does not tell us that he who giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord. What it does tell us is something much better." What is the better thing the Bible tells us? Prov. 19:17.

"The Bible does not say that money is the root of all evil." What does it say? 1 Tim. 6:10.

The Bible does not say the angels sang, "Glory to God in the highest," at Jesus' birth. What does it say they did? Luke 2:13, 14.

The Bible does not say that the soul is immortal. What does it say? Ezek. 18:4, 20.

The Bible does not say that a man who pleases God goes to heaven when he dies. What does it say? Acts 13:22, 36; 2:29, 34; John 3:13.

The Bible does not say the man who sins and is cast into hell dieth not. What is it that does not die in the fire that is not quenched? Mark 9:48 with Isa. 66:14, 15, 24; Mal. 4:3; Psa. 37:20.

The Bible does not say that anyone, except the devil, shall be tormented day and night forever and ever. What does it say? Rev. 20:9, 10.

The Bible does not say that the lake of fire is hell. What does it say about hell? Rev. 20:14.

The Bible does not say that the faithful are rewarded when they die. What does it say? Heb. 11:39, 40; Matt. 16:27; Rev. 22:12.

“LORD, IS IT I?”

selves, and said, “All ye shall be offended because of me this night” and “one of you shall betray me.”

PETER'S GREAT CONFESSION

Going back for a moment to Peter's confession, we recall the circumstances under which it was made. Jesus had asked His disciples this question: “Whom do men say that I the Son of man am? and they said, Some say that thou art John the Baptist: some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets. He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am?” It was then that “Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God” (Matt. 16:13-17).

Jesus was not so much concerned as to what the world might say about Him, but He was concerned as to what His disciples might say about Him. The witness they bore was important, for the world would judge Jesus finally by the testimony of His followers. And—“One of you shall betray me!” One of them would not only fail to bear true witness to Jesus, but would actually betray Him into the hand of His enemies to be put to death! Such would be the testimony one of them would bear.

Then there would come Peter's awful oath of denial—the false testimony of the man into whose hands Jesus had committed the keys of the kingdom of God! How could it be!

As you and I meet in our churches on each Communion Sunday, one of our chief purposes is to reaffirm our faith in Jesus Christ as our Savior. With Peter we say again and again: “Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God,” and by implication we declare that we shall remain true to Him until He comes (1 Cor. 11:26), and that we will account it all glory if we are permitted to “suffer with him.” With Paul we assert our readiness to “suffer the loss of all things” if we may but win Christ and have the joy of fellowship with Him forever.

A HEART-SEARCHING HOUR

That hour in the upper room was a heart-searching hour for the disciples who met there about the table of commemoration with the Lord. So should also the celebration of the Lord's Supper be on every occasion.

“Let each examine himself.” Are we sure, more sure than Peter was, that though all men should forsake the One whose betrayal and death we are made to remember here, that we will remain true, that we will not betray Him through the false testimony of our lives or lips?

In the not distant future, when this present selfish, sinful order gives way to the perfect conditions promised for the kingdom age, when the Lord Jesus comes the second time without a sin offering unto salvation, He will be questioned by those who denied Him here.

“What are these wounds in thine hands?” they will ask. “Then he shall answer, Those with which I was wounded in the house of my friends” (Zech. 13:6).

That question will apparently be asked by Jews, the Jews who cried in a delirium of hatred, “Away with this man! Crucify him! Crucify him!” And the question will be answered by the Lord of glory: “These are the wounds with which I was wounded in the house of my friends.”

The most painful wounds from which Jesus has ever suffered have been those which have come from the hands of His professed friends: men like Judas and Peter—perhaps men like you and me—men who cannot bear up under the cross of ridicule and temptation.

It was not the Pharisees that betrayed Jesus. It was not the scribes who denied Him with an oath. It was two of His own disciples, men who had been with Him from the beginning! In the kiss of Judas and in the bitter oath of Peter, Jesus suffered His deepest pain.

AM I THE BETRAYER OF CHRIST?

We are told of those who prove untrue to Christ, whose lives are out of harmony with their profession of faith, who neglect worship and make no effort toward spiritual development, that “they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame” (Heb. 6:6). That was true of Peter and of Judas. Jesus was crucified by Peter and Judas before He was nailed to Golgotha's cross! He was put to “an open shame” before both Jews and Romans and, typically, before all the world, by the cowardly conduct of His professed friends.

What pathos! What depth of sorrow is expressed in these words of our blessed Lord: “One of you shall betray me!” It is no wonder that “they were exceedingly sorrowful, and began every one of them to say unto him, Lord, is it I?”

Theirs is a question which we, too, should ask. “Am I bringing dishonor, discredit, disgrace, upon the sacred name I bear as a Christian?” We are repeatedly warned “that in the last days perilous times shall come.” And the reason given is that “men shall be lovers of their own selves . . . having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof” (2 Tim. 3:1-5). Peter, who himself was led to deny His Lord, foresaw the possibility of a similar temptation coming to us. “But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them. . . . And many shall follow their pernicious ways” (2 Peter 2:1, 2).

May God preserve us, each and every one, from falling a victim to such false teachers! May we also be kept from bearing false witness to the character of the Lord! As we contemplate the apostasy of the “many,” may we ask ourselves that heart-searching question: “Lord, is it I who will turn away from truth?” Some one will prove untrue—“Lord, is it I?”

Saint Paul's expression of Christian hope is not deliverance from the body, but redemption of the body. The redemption of the body is the last stage in the great process of adoption (Greek: huiothesia, “placing as a son”) by which we are made “sons of God” (Rom. 8:23).—Chancellor Bernard on “The Resurrection.”

The Abrahamic Faith

By J. M. Stephenson

FAITH is the mainspring of all intelligent action. The farmer would not prepare his ground and sow his seed unless he believed that his efforts would be blessed with a harvest of ripe grain. The mechanic would not remove the rubbish and lay the foundation unless he had faith to believe that he would rear the superstructure. Wise men will engage in no enterprise unless they have faith in its feasibility and reasonable confidence in its final success. This is equally true in all the pursuits of life, Christianity not excepted. All the great sacrifices and wonderful achievements of the greatest moral heroes whose names have been enrolled upon the sacred scroll, were nerved to action by faith in the glorious rewards promised.

Faith sustains the same relation to every other virtue that the foundation does to the superstructure. Remove the foundation, and the whole superstructure must fall. It sustains the same relation to all the other graces which adorn the Christian's character that the first unit does to every other unit in the great book of mathematics. You may add hundreds and thousands and millions and billions, to the utmost bounds of enumeration, and yet the first unit lies at the base of this vast pyramid of figures. Just so in regard to faith. All the noble virtues which shine like sparkling diamonds in the good man's character are added to faith as the first unit of all the Christian graces.

When Peter would sum up all the duties and virtues which shall qualify the Christian man for an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, he commences with faith, and climaxes with love (2 Peter 1:5-11).

The great central idea of all religion is the acknowledged existence of God. The great prompting cause of all intelligent action is proffered reward. The love of reward is inwrought with the constitution of every man's mind. Closely allied, therefore, with all intelligent worship is not only the acknowledged existence of God, but the correlative

The following, which originally appeared in "The Herald of the Kingdom," comprises "the substance of a lecture delivered in Chicago, on Sunday, August 22, 1869." The "lecture" was based on Hebrews 11:6: "But without faith it is impossible to please him; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."

idea that "he is a rewarder of all them that diligently seek him." Abstract from proffered reward there can be no incentive to action. Abstract from goodness there can be no moral obligation. Power, untempered with love and kindness, may cause the trembling vassal to quail before the tyrant's frown, but can never win his confidence or affection. That king has the strongest government who reigns in the hearts of his subjects. The armies and navies of the world are weak when compared with the golden chain of reciprocal love which binds the whole family of God to His throne.

The great God does not command the children of men to serve Him through disinterested benevolence, or because He possesses power to dash them to atoms in a moment, but He holds out the most glorious rewards that His infinite wisdom would provide, or the mind of man conceive. He does not appeal to the dastardly passion of fear, but calls upon men to serve Him because such service will result in their everlasting good. Deep, therefore, in the everlasting interests of man, are laid the foundations of his obligations to love and serve the living and true God. Rewards and obligations go hand in hand. If one man should offer one thousand dollars, and another two thousand, for the performance of the same work, the latter offer would contain twice the moral power of the former. If Christianity does not offer the richest and most glorious rewards of any system of religion it does not devolve the greatest obligation upon man to accept it. But the rewards it promises excel by an infinitude those offered by all other systems of worship. It, therefore, brings man under paramount obligations to love and serve God. We must, therefore, "believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of all them that diligently seek him." These are the two main pillars upon which rest the great superstructure of faith and hope.

Pertinent Comments on the News of the Day

G. E. Marsh, Editor

Liquor Causes Many Fatalities

"This is an evil among all things that are done under the sun."—Ecclesiastes 9:3.

BOSTON, Mass., Jan. 9.—"Drunken pedestrians are an even greater source of fatalities on the highways than drunken drivers," declared Dr. Henry R. Desilva, head of the motor vehicle driving section of the Bureau of Traffic Research of Harvard University, in a public lecture at the Harvard Medical School today. "The last year promises to bring the total of automobile fatalities to a new record of 40,000," he said. "The percentage of accidents associated with alcohol is nearer 25 per cent than 10 per cent. It would be ideal if we could legislate intoxicated drivers and pedestrians off the road."

The statement quoted at the head of this item might well be carried further in connection with the thought of the results which follow drunkenness in these days of congested traffic. "This is an evil among all things that are done under the sun: . . . madness (the madness produced by intoxication) is in their heart while they live, and after that they go to the dead." Death follows close on the heels of the drunken driver or pedestrian in these days and threatens the lives of sober people who seek to avoid the insane inebriates whom they chance to meet.

Eleven Million Unemployed

"Why stand ye here all the day idle? They say unto him, Because no man hath hired us."—Matt. 20:6, 7.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 5.—The unemployed census, which was recently taken throughout the United States, resulted in the discovery that more than 11,000,000 men and women were without work. Since the conclusion of the census tabulations a month ago, at least another million have been thrown out of work in this country. It is stated that there are now a million more men unemployed than there were at the height of the depression four years ago. Furthermore, the effort made by the Government to restore prosperity and to allay distress has in the same period increased the indebtedness of this country from $20,000,000,000 in 1932 to $37,000,000,000 at the present time.

We believe that the United States possesses as able statesmen as any nation in the world and that they are sincerely endeavoring to direct the course of our Government wisely. But this very fact, that our rulers are wise with the wisdom of the world, serves but to show more clearly the weakness of humanity. Only when the King comes will the people of the earth rejoice in lasting prosperity and righteousness.

Astronomy Reveals New Marvels of God

"Seek him that maketh the seven stars of Orion, and turneth the shadow of death into the morning."—Amos.

CHICAGO, Jan. 14.—North of Orion (Job 9:9; 38:31; Amos 5:8) and visible to the naked eye, hangs the giant star Epsilon Aurgiae, surrounded by a mysterious red light. The nature of the red light about the mammoth star has long been questioned by astronomers, but Dr. Otto Struve of the Yerks Observatory announced Wednesday, in the Astrophysical Journal, that the mystery has now been solved by the spectrograph and that the light is due to a second an even larger star that lies directly back of Epsilon Aurgiae and which possesses an infra-red atmosphere. A similar red star was discovered some years ago in Scorpio that is said to be so large that our own solar system, from the sun out as far as Mars, might find a place within it.

Neglect of Christ Brings World Ills

"Repent, and turn yourselves from all your transgressions; so iniquity shall not be your ruin."—Ezek. 18:30.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Jan. 2.—In an address recently delivered in Milwaukee, the city noted for the production of beer and for its socialistic government, Mayor Daniel Hoan declared that many in this country are denied happiness and security "because we have not yet learned collectively to bring into practice the teachings of Christ. We have placed too much emphasis on personal success," the mayor said, "and have neglected to develop our capacity for social action. As a result, in our land of bountiful resources and fabulous wealth, we have widespread unemployment—a cancer that not only tends to deteriorate the afflicted but gnaws at the vital organs of our republic."

The Decline of Millenarianism

By A. H. Zilmer

MILLENARIANISM is the belief that Christ will reign personally upon the earth with His saints for one thousand years, or an indefinitely long period before the end of the world (Standard Dictionary).

There is an abundance of evidence showing that for several centuries immediately following the days of the apostles the belief prevailed in the church that there would be a literal reign of Christ upon this earth lasting a thousand years; that the saints would reign with Christ and that the coming of Christ and the resurrection of the just would precede such millennial reign. Likewise it can be shown by an abundance of evidence when this teaching began to fall into discredit, through whose influence this was done, and to what extent.

This is just as true of other doctrines taught in Scripture. We mention here the doctrines of the absolute oneness of God, the nature of man, the destiny of the wicked, the scriptural teaching concerning sin, the form and design of baptism, and many others which fell under the baneful influence of speculative minds not content with "the simplicity that is in Christ" (2 Cor. 11:3).

The famous historian, Edward Gibbon, who cannot be justly charged with being biased in favor of Christianity, had this to say as touching the millennium: "The assurance of such a millennium was carefully inculcated by a succession of fathers from Justin Martyr (A. D. 105-167) and Irenaeus (130-202), who conversed with the immediate disciples of the apostles, down to Lactantius (260-325), who was the preceptor of the son of Constantine." Gibbon styled the millennial doctrine "the ancient and popular doctrine of the millennium," and said that it was "intimately connected with the second coming of Christ" (Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, Vol. I, pp. 397, 398). "This witness is true," as we know from original sources. The ecclesiastical historian, Mosheim, said that "long before this (the third century) an opinion had prevailed that Christ was to come and reign among men a thousand years." He further said that "this opinion . . . had hitherto met with no opposition, but in this century its credit began to decline, principally through the influence and authority of Origin (186-253), who opposed it with the greatest of warmth, because it was not compatible with some of his favorite sentiments" (Mosheim, Ecclesiastical History, p. 68).

Professor A. Harnack of the University of Berlin says that Jerome (340-420) "already feels himself emancipated from 'Jewish opinions,' and he ridicules the old anticipations," and then significantly adds, "It was reserved for Augustine (354-430) to give a direction to western theology which carried it clear of the old millenarianism. He himself had at one time believed in it; he, too, had looked forward to the holy Sabbath to be celebrated by Christ and His people on earth. But the signs of the times pointed to a different prospect. The church had attained a position of supremacy. . . . Under these circumstances Augustine was led to grasp and elaborate the idea that the church is the kingdom of Christ. He was the first who ventured to teach that the . . . church in its empirical form was the kingdom of Christ, and was therefore an accomplished fact. By this doctrine of Augustine's the old millenarianism, though not completely extirpated, was at least banished from the realm of dogmatic. For the official theology of the church it became a thing of the past" (Encyclopedia Britannica, 9th ed., Vol. XVI, p. 317).

We shall now give extracts from the writings of the "fathers" of the first three centuries which establish the truth of the foregoing statements, and as nearly as possible shall give them in the order in which those men lived.

"To Him who is able to bring us all by His grace and goodness into His everlasting kingdom, to Him be glory and honor and majesty forever. Amen" (Polycarp, 69-166, Ante-Nicene Fathers, Vol I, p. 43).

Papias (70-155) testified, "'For He must reign until He hath put all enemies under His feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death.' For in the time of the kingdom the just man who is on the earth shall forget to die."

"Other things also the same writer (Papias) has set forth as having come down to him by unwritten tradition, some new parables and discourses of the Savior. Among these, he says, that there will be a certain thousand years after the resurrection of the dead, when the kingdom of Christ will be established visibly on this earth" (Taylor's Reign of Christ on Earth, p. 56).

"If, therefore, you fall in with certain who are called Christians, who confess not this truth, but dare blaspheme the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in that they say that there is no resurrection of the dead, but that immediately when they die their souls are received up into heaven, avoid them and esteem them not as Christians. But I and whatsoever Christians are orthodox in all things, do know that there will be a resurrection of the flesh, and a thousand years in the city of Jerusalem, built, adorned, and enlarged according to the prophets. For thus hath Isaiah spoken of this one thousand years, 'For there will be a new heaven and a new earth,' " etc. (Justin, quoting Isaiah 65, 105-161).

"And when you hear that we look for a kingdom, you suppose, without making (Please turn to page 9)

The Purpose of This Present Age

ACCORDING to the teaching of our Lord Himself, what is the purpose of the present dispensation?

Many hold vaguely that it is a world's conversion. According to their view, the gospel is a small mustard seed, set in the soil of society, ever rooting deeper and spreading wider, assimilating to itself and incorporating with itself the elements of society; up-reaching and out-reaching until the earth is filled with the shadow of it, and its boughs are like the goodly cedars. Like leaven, hidden in three measures of meal—"the world, the flesh, and the devil"—the gospel is to pervade, penetrate, permeate the whole lump, modifying the evil with which it comes in contact, until it transforms the world into the church, the flesh into the spirit, and the devil is leavened out altogether, like the gases which are expelled from the fermenting dough.

The careful student of Scripture sees another quite different teaching. He finds dispensation succeeds dispensation in human history, all marked by seven features, essentially the same. First, an advance in fullness and clearness of revelation; then gradual spiritual declension; then conformity to the world, ending with amalgamation with the world; then a gigantic civilization, brilliant but godless; then parallel development of evil and good; then an apostasy, and finally a catastrophe.

The present dispensation began on a higher plane than any that preceded it, but bears the same general marks. It opened with the fullest revelation of God as found in the written Word, the Living Word, and the coming of the Holy Spirit. It moved step by step downward and backward; primitive piety declined; the church courting and finally wedding the world. That there has been a growth of good no one will deny, and blessed harvests from the seed of the kingdom, thirty, sixty, even a hundredfold; but there has been a parallel development of evil. The tares grow side by side with the wheat, each ripening to the harvest.

It behooves us not to lose our candor, even in the heat of controversy. Who can doubt the fact that this high civilization of which we boast, is the amalgamation of church and world? The world has become a little churchly, adopting some Christian ideas and sentiments, molding its moralities and philanthropies into a semblance to the gospel pattern; but while world has grown a little churchly, the church has grown very worldly—hopelessly worldly. The dialect of Canaan is corrupted with the language of Ashdod. Professing disciples do not even profess self-denial. The "strait gate" has given place to an easy and attractive entrance, and the "narrow" way is broadened into a stately avenue, smoothly paved and bordered with fragrant flowers. Though there be "no royal road to learning," the church (thinks it) has found a royal road to salvation.

In this, the third article by A. T. Pierson on the second coming of Christ, the author insists that it is not God's purpose to convert the world in this age, but to evangelize it and thereby take out of it a select "people for his name."

We have spoken of the conformity of the church to the world as hopeless. Abundant proofs are at hand. Our church life is honeycombed and undermined by worldliness. There is little, if any, practical "separation." The bulk of professing Christians, if not wholly worldly, are worldly "holy." At the door of this world's frivolities and gayeties, they shuffle off their Christian character as easily as an Oriental guest his sandals, and mingle indiscriminately with those who bow at the idol shrines of folly and fashion. There seems to be a process of moral putrefaction, or loss of godly savor, of godly sensibility, which threaten the very existence of any pure and primitive type of piety. The "garment spotted with the flesh" communicates the contagion of a worldly leprosy, and those who are warned to keep themselves unspotted from the world are overspread with its uncleanness.

What is the result? Instead of presenting, like Joseph in Egypt or Daniel in Babylon, a perpetual contrast to our surroundings, the only line of separation that remains is the church roll. Instead of being spiritually isolated and insulated, so that we may be charged and filled with the life of God, and the power of God, the witness of a separate sanctified life is gone.

What is the real character of our present civilization? We may as well face the facts. Gigantic as it is in invention, discovery, enterprise, achievement, it is gigantically worldly; monstrously God-denying and God-defying. "Christian civilization" has indeed produced giants in these days, men of renown; but they often use their intellect, knowledge, and fame only to break down, as with the iron flail of Talus, all Christian faith. Philosophy now blooms into a refined and poetic pantheism, or a gross, blank materialism, or a subtle rationalism, or an absurd agnosticism. Science constructs its systems of evolution and leaves out a personal God; spontaneous generation becomes the only Creator, natural law the only determining power, and natural selection the only providence.

Civilization itself is turned into the stronghold of unbelief; its imaginations and inventions are "high towers that exalt themselves against the knowledge of God," and the thoughts of our great thinkers have never yet been brought into "captivity to the obedience of Christ." While the blatant, blasphemous infidelity of the Voltairean type does not now exist to the degree in which it marked the close of the last century, a more refined and subtle skepticism is at work, which to an alarming extent pervades our public journals, literature, philosophy, science, and even our pulpits.

We have the ripest form of worldly civilization, but the ripeness borders on rotteness. While men boast of the massiveness of the fabric, its very foundations are falling into decay. . . . If the reign of law be, as many think, the great hindrance which prevents the development of the man of sin, we are on the verge of the final catastrophe; for the reign of lawlessness seems now at hand!

And yet, there are not wanting those who openly affirm that the millennium is a present fact—this is the millennium! They think they see already the fulfillment of prophecy. In these days of popular education and rapid locomotion, "many run to and fro, and knowledge is increased." In the marvelous triumphs of electricity, in telegraph and telephone and radio, the lightning is literally "coming from the east and shining unto the west"; in the grand achievements made in agriculture and horticulture, "the wilderness and the solitary place" are already glad and the desert rejoices and blossoms "as the rose." In the cable (the radio, airplane), and giant steamships that move round the world with such incredible speed, there has come to be "no more sea." In the peace societies and courts of arbitration the nations "learn war no more" (!). In the wide dissemination of the Scriptures in hundreds of dialects and in the dispersion of missionaries in all lands, the earth is already "full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea." Then why look for any other millennium, when these and other marks of fulfilled prophecy are furnished in current history?

In a way scarce less frivolous than this, have we known modern advocates of an existing millennium to torture prophecy, warping the testimony of the Word to fit the crook of their notions (as they do in their attempts to support many other unscriptural doctrines of equal importance), and virtually turning the sublime testimony of inspired seers into farce or falsehood!

If the purpose of this last and highest dispensation is to convert the world, developing a millennium by a process of assimilation, this dispensation is, so far, a failure. That the world has made progress, we have already admitted, but it is not progress toward salvation.

Whenever the material condition of the world advances, without corresponding advance of the spiritual, it only develops materialism, magnifying things seen and temporal and obscuring the unseen and eternal. It matters little whether the form which materialism takes be gross and coarse, or refined and cultured. The habit of thinking, planning, living, only with reference to time and sense, beneath whatever guise or veil, is still materialism, and materialism is practical atheism!

I fear many of us will be compelled to reconstruct our notions of the millennium and the process by which it is to become a reality. The Word of God does not present it as a human development, as the outcome and outgrowth of civilized or even enlightened society. In the interests of both truth and of evangelism, we need to emphasize the fact that the millennium is not a culmination of human progress along an inclined plane of gradual ascent, but the era and epoch of a divine force uplifting, renewing, and transforming human society; if represents not an evolution but a revolution.

The dream of the image of world power, is divinely interpreted by Daniel as a vision of what should be thereafter. You will find in it, however, no hint of assimilation or incorporation of even the best worldly elements into the kingdom of God. Instead of this there is a process of comminution—crushing, crumbling, grinding, pulverizing—that the wind may sweep all away like chaff from summer threshing-floors. The stone, cut out without human hands, grows without human aid, refusing to incorporate with itself clay or iron, or even silver and gold, rejecting alike the best and worst, the most precious and most worthless: That stone is a millstone, grinding all alike to powder.

What is the teaching of all this but that the kingdom of God is essentially celestial in its nature and elements? As the wheat does not change the tares so that both are bound in the same sheaves (Matt. 13:30); or the good fish, the bad, so that both are put in the same vessels (Matt. 13:47-50); so the stone does not change the elements of this world, growing by assimilation and accession. This world has ever been the foe of God, neither worthy nor capable of such transformation and incorporation; its end is to be burned.

As Scripture does not teach such a millennium as many look for as the final evolution of human society, so the facts do not encourage such expectation. It is patent to the careful observer that so far little progress has been made toward converting the world, and those who cherish such a hope confess that the prospect disheartens. After nineteen centuries of Christian history, only about one fourth of the race is even nominally Christian and three fourths of these are ignorant of the Bible itself and, swayed by superstition and priestcraft, but one removed from paganism. At this rate of progress it would take a cycle of centuries to convert the world to even a nominal Christianity. Nay, it may be questioned whether the natural increase of the race would not always outrun the increase of church membership by conversion. (In India "heathens" are increasing seventy times as fast as are the converts to Christianity.—Ed.)

Without being conscious of morbid despondency or pessimism, we cannot but think the present condition of both the world and the church calculated to take the heart out of any Christian worker who looks for a millennium upon scientific principles of development, by a process of evolution, with natural selection and survival of the fittest. Optimists triumphantly array facts and figures to prove the progress of Christianity; but if "facts and figures do not lie," they are sometimes arranged and arrayed in deceptive forms and combinations. The immense "numerical progress of Christianity" is like a soap bubble, brilliant but illusive.

Has Christianity, then, been a failure, and shall we give up, as hopeless, the task of evangelizing this world? By no means! Failure is a comparative term. If God had meant to accomplish the conversion of the world in this present age, so far there would have been disastrous failure. But if tares and wheat are to grow side by side, and side by side ripen till the harvest; if the gospel net, cast into the wide world-sea, is not to enclose all the fish in the sea, but only the elect number, then, far from failure, there has been and is exactly what the Lord purposed and prophesied as the outcome of this dispensation.

To see this truth, taught in the Word and wrought in the facts of history from Christ's ascension until now, kindles in the despondent breast of a weary workman a new celestial fire of contagious courage and enthusiasm. The handwriting on the wall of this world's palaces of riot and revelry, selfish luxury and profane sensuality, may be a sentence of doom—"numbered," "weighed," "wanting," "divided"—but it is the handwriting of God. What if we do behold

"Right forever on the scaffold,
Wrong forever on the throne;
Yet that scaffold sways the future,
And behind the dim unknown
Standeth God amid the shadow,
Keeping watch above his own"?

Is Father Always Wrong?

IN THE far-gone days of the Victorian era, it was a maxim that "Father is always right." But we have now gone to the other extreme; and too often we are told that "Father is always wrong"; that youth must be served; and that the sole responsibility of parents is to foot the bill.

Well, of course there are different kinds of fathers—good, bad, and indifferent, with all varieties in between. But in the Book which God has given us to guide our lives aright, we still may read those old-fashioned words, "Honour thy father and thy mother: that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee" (Ex. 20:12). And we shall not go far astray if we remember that obedience to parents is still a virtue, and disobedience is still a vice. Nor is this solely the teaching of the Mosaic dispensation. The writers of the New Testament counsel, "Children, obey your parents in the Lord: for this is right" (Eph. 6:1).

But the new philosophy would teach us otherwise. In reading a magazine devoted to the problems of children and parents—probably the most widely circulated publication of its type—I was interested to note how often it was emphasized that parents must not cross their adolescent young people; that everything must be done very cautiously and tactfully; that no commands must be issued, but rather gentle suggestions; and above all that no requirements must ever be made which would make the young person different from those around him—he must always be allowed to be "one of the crowd," whatever the standards of that crowd might be.

This doctrine, so zealously taught by child psychologists, has been widely accepted by the youth themselves. In a recent canvass of young people, when questionnaires were sent to 369 high school boys and 415 high school girls, with a request that they list the ten qualities which they regarded as most desirable in a parent, the quality receiving the second largest number of votes was, "Respecting his children's opinions."

Against this teaching of unlimited self-expression for youth, we may cite the sensible remark of J. Edgar Hoover, Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, United States Department of Justice, that "the sentimental theorists who dominate present-day child guidance, however, believe that if a child is chastised, it may develop an inhibition or affect its later self-expression. So long as we fail to recognize that discipline is an essential part of human development, just so long will we have an aimless, directionless milling of the herd which can result only in mental panic and a thorough disregard for the rights of society to peace and order."

There are times, of course, when parents should be pliable. But it is equally plain, we think, that there are other times when in upholding the standards of the home they must be inflexible. The Bible tells us an interesting story of a man—one of the high priests of Israel, by the way—who had many excellent qualities. Eli was pious and devout. As we say in the language of today, he wanted to do the right thing. He had two sons, who were likewise priests, but disgraced their high office by acts of violence and sensuality. The father was ashamed and alarmed, but would take no definite steps to restrain his sons. His weakness in this respect is condemned by the Scriptures as a most flagrant sin, and he is held up as one who signally failed in his duty.

Commenting on this story, which is found in 1 Samuel 2:12 to 4:22, a well-known writer has remarked that "Eli was priest and judge in Israel. He held the highest and most responsible positions among the people of God. As a man divinely chosen for the sacred duties of the priesthood, and set over the land as the highest judicial authority, he was looked up to as an example, and he wielded a great influence over the tribes of Israel. But although he had been appointed to govern the people, he did not rule his own household. Eli was an indulgent father. Loving peace and ease, he did not exercise his authority to correct the evil habits and passions of his children. Rather than contend with them or punish them, he would submit to their will, and give them their own way. Instead of regarding the education of his sons as one of the most important of his responsibilities, he treated the matter as of little consequence. The priest and judge of Israel had not been left in darkness as to the duty of restraining and governing the children that God had given to his care. But Eli shrank from this duty, because it involved crossing the will of his sons, and would make it necessary to punish and deny them. Without weighing the terrible consequences that would follow his course, he indulged his children in whatever they desired, and neglected the work of fitting them for the service of God and the duties of life."

We must frankly confess that one of the most serious problems confronting our world today—and particularly the United States—is that so many thousands of parents are following the course marked out centuries ago by mistaken Eli.

Youth needs, of course, much more than a mere series of "don'ts." Many youngsters err, not from any real desire or determination to go wrong, but rather from the great strain which the environment places upon them. In millions of cases, young people grow up in complete idleness. They do nothing. They are, if we may say so, practically parasitic. They have no particular responsibilities in connection with sustaining the home; they are all on the receiving end.

Madame Chiang Kai-shek recently offered a pertinent criticism of our modern system of education, which tends to foster and actually develop this listlessness and irresponsibility. In discussing the problems of China's awakening, she remarked: "People ask, 'What about the students you sent to foreign universities? Why do they not lead the way? Is it largely the fault of old-time officials who would not cooperate? or of the American universities?' I am certain that too many of the returned students have not been taught to think; they were ill-prepared to cope with workaday problems. My observation is that, as a rule, with noteworthy exceptions, the returned students are not willing to suffer hardships. They prefer the fleshpots of the coastal cities to laboring in the interior, where the movie, the night club, and the soda fountain do not exist. They loathe being thrown on their own resources for amusements and pastime. Is it that their colleges have neglected character building? They abhor rolling up their sleeves and abandoning their 'white-collar' attitude."

But it is, we submit, a trifle unfair to expect young people suddenly to develop a thirst for work, after rearing them in idleness for eighteen or twenty years. Childhood and youth are the best times for learning and forming habits; and what is not learned then will seldom be learned later. It is for this reason that so many educational authorities are pointing out the value of rural life for the young person. It has been well said that "an expensive dwelling, elaborate furnishings, display, luxury, and ease, do not furnish the conditions essential to a happy, useful life. Jesus came to this earth to accomplish the greatest work ever accomplished among men. He came as God's Ambassador, to show us how to live so as to secure life's best results. What were the conditions chosen by the infinite Father for His Son? A secluded home in the Galilean hills; a household sustained by honest, self-respecting labor; a life of simplicity; daily conflict with difficulty and hardship; self-sacrifice, economy, and patient, glad service; the hour of study at His mother's side, with the open scroll of Scripture; the quiet of dawn or twilight in the green valley; the holy ministries of nature; the study of creation and providence; and the soul's communion with God—these were the conditions and opportunities of the early life of Jesus."

The mention of Jesus and His life in Galilee reminds us that one of the great needs of youth today is strong religious convictions. It is not sufficient, for this, to send the child to Sabbath school, while Father and Mother never see the inside of a church except for funerals or weddings. We can hardly communicate religion to others, if we have none of it ourselves. But where the father and mother, though firmly upholding standards of conduct and decency, yet show in their lives and daily acts the spirit of Christian love, sympathy, and forbearance, some effect will surely be noticed in the life of the child. It was, once upon a time, the custom, in many Christian homes, to gather the family once or twice a day for prayer and worship, and the consideration of spiritual things. Would it not be well today to revive the custom?

The tendencies of our times are against the formation of strong Christian character. The rising percentage of urban population; the thirst for pleasure and extravagance; the quest for amusements which cater to weakness rather than strength; the decay of religion in the home and in the community at large—all these things can but make harder the already difficult task of the parent. Yet "if God be for us, who can be against us?" (Rom. 8:31). The call of the hour is for more diligence and zeal and prayer on the part of the father and mother; and for cooperation and obedience on the part of the child. The situation has been well portrayed in the stirring words of Elizabeth Rosser, who writes:

"Are all the children in? The night is falling,
And storm clouds gather in the threatening west:
The lowing cattle seek a friendly shelter;
The bird hies to her nest;
The thunder crashes; wilder grows the tempest,
And darkness settles o'er the dreadful din;
Come, shut the door, and gather round the hearthstone.
Are all the children in?"

"Are all the children in? The night is falling,
When gilded sin doth walk about the streets.
Oh, 'at the last it biteth like a serpent'!
Poisoned are stolen sweets.
O, mothers, guard the feet of inexperience,
Too prone to wander in the paths of sin!
Oh, shut the door of love against temptation!
Are all the children in?"

"Are all the children in? The night is falling,
The night of death is hastening on apace;
The Lord is calling, 'Enter thou thy chamber,
And tarry there a space,'
And when He comes, the King in all His glory,
Who died a shameful death our hearts to win,
O, may the gates of glory shut about us,
With all the children in!"

“That the Father May Be Glorified”

By F. L. Austin

“THAT the Father may be glorified in the Son,” is the express reason given by the Savior for His promise to do “whatsoever ye shall ask in my name.” The glory of God has always been the chief object of Christ. He sought not His own will, He stated in John 5:30, “but the will of the Father which hath sent me.” It was to glorify God, to magnify Him before man, before the eyes of all God’s creation that Jesus labored. And having thus labored through His mortal life, He sought still to so labor after His ascension. He was going away, He notified His apostles; nevertheless He would not leave them helpless and to the end “that the Father may be glorified in the Son,” “whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do.”

That this principle was always uppermost in the mind of the Savior is also made plain by His introductory words in that heart-searching prayer of John 17: “I have glorified thee on the earth”; “glorify thy Son, that thy Son also may glorify thee.” In His every expression of purpose, His effort was to glorify His Father. It was for this that He lived and labored in the ministry; it was for this that He petitioned increased strength at the right hand of His Father, namely, that He might do more to magnify God before man.

Every effective prayer of the Christian must therefore seek the same end. Nothing can be sought in the name of the Savior that does not seek the Savior’s aim. As Christ’s aim was the glory of the Father, so also must be the aim of him who would follow Christ and the prayer of him who follows Christ cannot have other thought or aim than that of assistance and strength to carry out the aims of Christ.

Does this reveal one reason why so many prayers fail in their answer? Does this reveal a reason why so many would-be Christians fail in their Christian strength and life? Man is sinful. The thoughts and imaginations of his heart are evil continually. Such was not God’s good pleasure, but man has turned to evil and follows thereafter. He seeks to serve self, to please self, to satiate his own longings. In so doing, he sins against the very highest motives of God, against the highest pleasures God has designed for man. His prayers so frequently are mere petitions that the Father will aid him in satiating his own cravings, his own carnal aims. Christ has never taught that such prayer was even legitimate.

God is the Leader of the universe. He is not only the Creator, He is the great Ruler, the great Leader. Man, in serving self best must serve God most. He must willingly be the one who is led. His every will must be to please and exalt the Father. In no other way can man realize his own best good. Therefore, his every prayer must be, in order to his own best good, a prayer that will seek first to glorify God, to exalt God’s name and life before the world.

Not only is this true of prayer life, it is equally true of Christian living. The Christian life, like the life of the Savior, must be a life devoted to magnify the Father, to exalt His name, to honor His labors, to glorify Him. In no other way can man successfully follow Christ. Not only did the Savior seek the Father’s will, He sought His words, He sought His works. It was because that in all things, in work as well as word, He magnified God that the Father anointed Him “with the oil of gladness above (His) fellows,” that the Father crowned Him “with glory and honour, and didst set him over the works” of God’s hands.

So, too, of the Christian. If he would follow Christ in word and work, he must seek to glorify God in every work of his life, in every pleasure that is enjoyed, in every vision that he seeks to realize.

With such constant purpose of life one is in readiness to realize the beauty of the Savior’s assurance in John 14:13: “Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do that the Father may be glorified in the Son.”

All prayer, as all Christian life, should seek to glorify God. The prayer that cannot be answered of the Father not only fails to glorify Him, but deprives Him of glory already established. The prayer that can be but partially answered radiates but partial glory to the Father. God is glorified by answering man’s prayer. Such answer magnifies God in the eyes of man; it magnifies God in the eyes of the world; it reveals to the petitioner and to others the great truth that God lives and moves and has His being; it reveals to the petitioner and to others that God is watchful of the interests of man; it reveals that man can place trust in God—it glorifies God.

Thus again the Savior’s statement grows in magnitude. He would grant whatsoever is asked in His name. Not alone to the benefit and to the advantage of man, but to the aggrandizement of God, of all of God’s plans, of all of God’s purposes. Prayer thus answered can but draw others unto the Father.

As Christians, let us live to the glory of God. Let us pray. Let us pray with a realization that through prayer God has opportunity to glorify Himself through man. Let us so live that we can properly pray. Let us pray, not for the satisfaction of our own carnal purpose, but that the prayer shall redound to the honor and glory of God.

“Whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God.”

“The gold of our best motives is so mixed with the dross of selfishness and unworthiness that we can neither take too much credit to ourselves for any of our good deeds, nor afford to throw discredit upon any performed by our neighbors.”

THE ABRAHAMIC FAITH

The necessity of faith is enforced in the first clause of my text: "Without faith it is impossible to please him." Christ says in the Great Commission, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." There is no way of escape, no alternative: we must believe and be saved, or not believe and be damned. God is not a man that He should repent. Hath He promised and will He not fulfill? Hath He threatened and will He not execute? Sooner far shall heaven and earth pass away and the whole realm of nature be dissolved, than that one jot or tittle should pass from His Word without being fulfilled. His plan is as immutably fixed as His own eternal throne. We must come up to it, it will not come down to us. We may belong to the church, we may have been immersed in water for the remission of sins, we may partake of the emblematical representatives of the broken body and shed blood of the Son of God—we may go through the whole routine of Christian duties, and yet "without faith it is impossible to please him."

Power and obligation are indissolubly joined together, so much so that the mention of one presupposes the existence of the other. Since God has commanded men to believe, we conclude that man possesses the inherent power to believe. If he does not have that power, as an inherent quality of his own mind, he is no more responsible for its exercise than is the unconscious dust he tramples under his feet. Every promise, from the first promised access to the tree of life in the Garden of Eden, down to the last promised ingress to the tree of life and river of life in the closing up of the Apocalypse, presupposes man's intellectual power to believe, evidence, and just condemnation in case he should refuse. Every threatening, from the first penalty thundered forth against the guilty pair, down to the closing plagues in the amen of Revelation, presupposes the free agency of man to believe, or not to believe, at the peril of his salvation or condemnation. Faith is not the gift of God in any other sense than the power to walk, to talk, to think, to reason, to love, to hate, to taste, to smell, or to exercise any organ or faculty of body or mind, is the gift of God. God is the Author of these faculties and organs, but not their development nor exercise (except as they are influenced by His Word). It does not follow that because God made my eyes, that He, therefore, sees for me, or because He made my brain, that He, therefore, thinks for me, or because He made the organs of faith, that, therefore, He believes for me. God is only the Author of faith in that He made the brain with which man thinks, and is the Author of the Word by which faith is developed. Man possesses a distinct intellectual faculty of faith. If he had not this faculty, evidence would no more affect his mind than it does a stone.

Speaking, hearing, and believing are so closely connected that any one implies the other two. Why should one man have the power of speech if another had not the power of hearing? and why should one man have the power of hearing if he had not the power of reason, to compare the evidences pro and con? and the power of discrimination, to weigh in the scales of judgment the relative merits of evidence, and the power to decide accordingly? It is the province of reason to equipoise two scales, placing all the evidences in favor of the proposition in one scale, and all the evidences against it in the other scale, and whichever outweighs the other will determine in his mind which is true and which is false. This power to discriminate between right and wrong, truth and error, lies at the foundation of all responsibility. It is an essential element of free agency.

Man has but one faculty of faith. This he exercises upon every class of evidence which is brought in contact with his mind. All responsible men, and all men whom truth can make responsible, possesses this faculty. It is not peculiar to the Christian. If the sinner does not possess this faculty, how could the gospel devolve responsibility upon him to believe and obey it, before having thus obeyed? Man exercises the same faculty in believing the Koran that he does in believing the Bible—in believing the life of Socrates, that he does in believing the life of Christ—in be-inquiry, that we speak of a human kingdom; whereas we speak of that kingdom which is of God, as appears also from the confessions of their faith who are charged with being Christians, though they know that death is the punishment awarded to those who so confess. For if we looked for a human kingdom, we should also deny our Christ, that we might not be slain, and we would strive to escape detection that we might obtain what we expect. But since our thoughts are not fixed on the present, we are not concerned when men cut us off; since death also is a debt which must at all events be paid" (Justin, 110-165, Ante-Nicene Fathers, Vol. I, p. 166).

THE DECLINE OF MILLENARIANISM

"But I and others who are right-minded Christians are assured that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, and a thousand years at Jerusalem, which will be rebuilt, adorned, and enlarged, as the prophets Ezekiel, Isaiah, and others declare.

"We have perceived, moreover, that the expression, 'The day of the Lord is as a thousand years,' is connected with this subject. And, further, there was a certain man with us whose name was John, who prophesied by a revelation that was made to him, that those who believe in our Christ shall dwell a thousand years at Jerusalem" (Justin, Ante-Nicene Fathers, Vol. I, p. 239).

"If, therefore, the great God showed future things by Daniel, and confirmed them by His Son; and if Christ is the stone which is cut out without hands, who shall destroy temporal kingdoms, and introduce an eternal one, which is the resurrection of the just, as he declared, 'The God of heaven shall raise up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed' (Irenaeus, 130-202, Ante-Nicene Fathers, Vol. I, p. 555).

"'Thy kingdom come' has also reference to that whereto 'Thy will be done,' refers—in us, that is. For when God does not reign, in whose hand is the heart of all kings? But whatever we wish for ourselves we augur for Him, and to Him we attribute what from Him we expect. And so if the manifestation of the kingdom pertains to the will of God and unto our anxious expectation, how do some pray for some protraction of the age, when the kingdom of God, which we pray may arrive, tends to the consummation of the age? Our wish is that our reign may be hastened, not our servitude protracted. Even if it had not been prescribed in the prayer that we should ask for the advent of the kingdom, we should unbidden have sent forth that cry, hastening toward the realization of our hope.

"Nay, Lord, Thy kingdom come with all speed, the prayer of all Christians, the confusion of the heathen, the exultation of angels, for the sake of which we suffer, nay, rather, for the sake of which we pray" (Tertullian, 160-220, on "Prayer," Ante-Nicene Fathers, Vol. III, p. 683).

"After a little space the stone will come down from heaven which smites the image, and breaks it to pieces, and subverts all the kingdoms, and gives the kingdom to the saints of the Most High" (citing Daniel 7:13, 14). "All these things, then, are in the future . . . Moreover, concerning the resurrection and kingdom of the saints, Daniel says, 'Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall rise, some to everlasting life.' And John says, 'Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection.' These things I have set shortly before thee, O Theophilus, drawing them from Scripture itself, in order that, maintaining in faith what is written, and anticipating things that are to be, thou mayest keep thyself void of offense both toward God and men, 'looking for that blessed hope and appearing of our God and Savior,' when, having raised the saints among us, He will rejoice with them, glorifying the Father" (Hippolytus, 170-236, Ante-Nicene Fathers, Vol. V, p. 209).

"Two advents of Christ are foretold: one in humiliation, which He has accomplished; the others in glory, which is hoped for to be accomplished, when He shall come to give the kingdom to those who believe in Him, and who observe all things which are commanded" (Clement, 250).

We now briefly summarize the teaching contained in the foregoing extracts:

1. Polycarp, living very close to the days of the apostles, with others, was hoping to be brought into the everlasting kingdom of God.

2. According to Papias, the just man living on the earth at the time of the kingdom would forget to die, i. e., he would be immortal.

3. The thousand years spoken of in Revelation 20 would be after the resurrection. This would be the time of the kingdom.

4. It was considered to be orthodox to believe in the millennial reign after the resurrection, and unorthodox to believe otherwise.

5. The Christians of the second and third centuries were looking for the kingdom—not a human but a divine kingdom to be set up on this earth.

6. The expectation of such a kingdom was based upon the prophecies of Isaiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, and others, as well as the Apocalypse of John.

7. The Christians during the first three centuries were praying that the kingdom of God might come, using the formula, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven."

8. They were expecting that the kingdom, when set up, would break in pieces all existing kingdoms.

9. To those Christians all this was in the future.

10. In order to obtain an entrance into the kingdom the believers must do those things which were commanded.

11. The doctrine of the millennial reign was both ancient and popular long before the third century, and met with practically no opposition until the time of Origin (186-253).

12. Augustine, the great Latin theologian, was the first to conceive the idea that the church was the kingdom, that the millennium had commenced with the appearing of Christ, and was, therefore, an accomplished fact.

13. This was due to the fact that by the time of Augustine the church had become wealthy and powerful, and was able to sway theological opinion in the western part of the Roman Empire.

14. This caused the ancient doctrine of the millennium to become, for the official theology of the church, a thing of the past.

We now transcribe the doctrine of Augustine with reference to the kingdom as contained in his work, De Civitate Dei (The City of God).

"The church now on earth is both the kingdom of Christ and the kingdom of heaven . . . The saints reign with Him now. Thrones (Rev. 20) may not be understood of the last judgment, but by the thrones are meant the rulers' places in the church, and the persons themselves by whom it is governed . . . The church which is now is the kingdom of God. Thus, then, the church reigns with Christ . . . Christ's kingdom is the church" (Augustine, 354-430, in The City of God, Vol. II, p. 256).

Here we see the gradual decline of millenarianism from the days immediately following the apostles down to the full development of the Augustinian doctrine that the church is the kingdom of God or of Christ. Not only did Augustine seize and elaborate this idea but, owing to the tremendous power he wielded in the church, he "gave a tendency to western theology which carried it clear of the old millenarianism" (Harnack), and the western church became the most outstanding and resolute proponent of the idea that the church is the kingdom of God. Others before him, such as Origin and Jerome, had opposed the idea of a millennial reign of Christ, but it was reserved for Augustine to develop and introduce into the church the doctrine that the church is the kingdom. The twentieth century teachers who advocate this theory are but following in the wake of Augustine, and upon this point are in complete harmony with the western church.

We give herewith extracts from two of the published works of Mr. Alexander Campbell, a prolific writer of great ability, and founder of a religious group with various ramifications. Mr. Campbell sets forth the idea that the church is the kingdom of God. The extracts follow:

"The first act of His (Christ's) reign was the bestowment of the Holy Spirit, according to the prophecy of Joel and His own promise. . . . Thus commenced the reign of heaven on the day of Pentecost, in the person of the Messiah, the Son of God, and the anointed Monarch of the universe. Under Him His people, saved from their sins, have received a kingdom which cannot be shaken or removed. . . . Every immersed believer of good behavior is by constitution a free and full citizen of the kingdom of heaven. . . . Such . . . constitute the present kingdom of God in the present world. So far the phrases 'kingdom of heaven' and the 'congregation' or 'body of Christ' are equivalent in signification" (The Christian System, pp. 145-147).

"Some of the disciples not only saw the Son of Man enter upon His reign and the kingdom of God come on the day of Pentecost, and carry its conquest over Judea, Samaria, and to the uttermost parts of the earth, but they saw the Lord come with power and awful glory and accomplish all the predictions on the deserted and devoted temple, city, and people" (Christianity Restored, p. 174).

As the well instructed reader will see at a glance, this view overlooks an array of scriptural testimony which is not inconsiderable. The writer of these extracts saw Christ as King, and the saints as citizens or subjects of His kingdom, whereas, according to the scriptural teaching, the saints are to reign with Christ. This is stated often, and with slight variation. "If we suffer, we shall also reign with him" (2 Tim. 2:12; Rev. 2:26; 3:21; 5:10; 20:4-6). Those who shall "enter" into or "inherit" the kingdom must first "do" or forbear doing certain things (Matt. 25:34; Acts 14:22; 1 Cor. 6:9, 10; Gal. 5:19-21; Eph. 5:5; 2 Peter 1:10, 11).

There were some in the church at Corinth who imagined they were reigning as kings. To such the Apostle Paul wrote: "Now ye are full, now ye are rich, ye have reigned as kings without us: and I would to God ye did reign, that we also might reign with you" (1 Cor. 4:8). Such an attitude was an evidence of being "puffed up" (v. 6). Their reigning as kings was "without" the Apostle Paul and Apollos (v. 6), as well as "Sosthenes our brother," whom Paul associated with himself in the composition of this letter (chap. 1:1). But more than this, the Apostle expressed the ardent wish, "I would to God that ye did reign" so that Paul and his associates "might reign with" them. This was a most effectual way of denying that the brethren at Corinth were in any manner reigning in the kingdom of God. The saints have been promised a kingdom (James 2:5), as also a crown (chap. 1:12), but they will only receive the crown at Christ's appearing (2 Tim. 4:1-8; 1 Peter 5:4). No one would think of reigning without being crowned.

Thus the idea of a present church kingdom is proved both historically and scripturally to be erroneous. Better be a "disciple" such as was Joseph of Arimathea, and be "also looking for the kingdom of God" (Matt. 27:57; Mark 15:43; Luke 23:51; John 19:38).

GOD'S WORKERS

"Christ has no hands but our hands
To do His work today;
He has no feet but our feet
To lead men in the way;
He has no tongues but our tongues
To tell men why He died;
He has no help but our help
To bring them to His side;
We are the only Bibles
The careless world will read;
We are the only gospel;
We are the scoffer's creed.

"We are our Lord's sole message,
Given in deed and word.
What if the type is crooked?
What if the print is blurred?
What if our hands are busy
With other work than His?
What if our feet are walking
Where sin's allurements is?
Each time we fail our duty,
In country or in town,
We hinder God Almighty,
And slow Christ's kingdom down.

IT IS SERIOUS

CHESTER ROWELL, one of the greatest of authorities, said . . ., concerning the world situation:

"There are no neutrals left in the world. The fifty-two League nations have formally declared themselves unneutral and have named Japan as the 'aggressor.' The next day our Government made the same declaration. Germany and Italy are not neutral, either. They are at this moment fighting on Japan's side through the back door of Spain. America is not neutral. It has at no time been neutral in the sentiments of its people, and now it has ceased to be even officially neutral by a formal declaration of the Government. There are no neutrals."

If this isn't a serious condition, what is it?—M. V. Borden in Messiah's Advocate.

“The Lord’s Day,” “The Lord’s Supper”

“The Lord’s,” the concordance reads, “belonging to the Lord, kuriakos.” This word is found twice only in the Bible: Revelation 1:10, “the Lord’s Day,” and 1 Corinthians 11:20, “the Lord’s supper.”

“The Lord’s Day”

The Lord’s day is yet future, referring to the day when the Lord will judge the world at His second coming. Now man is examining and judging: it is “man’s day” (1 Cor. 4:3, margin). Man’s day will continue on up to the coming of Christ, and then the Lord’s day will begin and never end. “His dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed” (Dan. 7:14). The Lord Himself will preside over that day, it will belong to Him.

“The Lord’s Supper”

The Lord’s Supper is that fellowship of the Lord with His people, the sign of which is the breaking of bread and the drinking of the cup in the Communion service. While all the rest of the world is following the “wisdom of man,” the followers of Christ are feasting on the “wisdom of God” as revealed through Christ. The Lord has provided the feast with bread and cup, and the guests all belong to Him. The time will come when the earth shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption through this group. God shall deliver the earth out of the hands of those who ruin it through “the wisdom of man,” into the hands of those who will build it again in true beauty through “the wisdom of God.”

The Communion

“The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ? The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ? For we being many are one bread, and one body: for we are all partakers of that one bread” (1 Cor. 10:16, 17).

The disciples were about to undertake a great missionary work. Jesus was soon to leave them to their task. So He instituted this Communion to give them strength from on high. They were like the grains of wheat gathered from perhaps many hills but made into one loaf. The glorious thing about it is that the fellowship in the loaf is not with other Christian followers only, but “truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ” (1 John 1:3). Here is strength unlimited for the most faint-hearted.

The Host

When we partake of the Communion it is proper to place a vacant chair at the head of the table. The Lord, though absent in person, is still “the head over all things to the church” (Eph. 1:22). It is not ours either to invite or to reject, or, if a Christian, to refuse to partake. It is ours to do whatsoever the Lord has commanded: believe the gospel, repent of sin, be baptized, live a life of faith and holiness. Remember always, this is the outward sign of our fellowship. Let it not be an empty form, “as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal.” “Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom” (Col. 3:16).

“Not Discerning the Lord’s Body”

It was the custom of the early church to meet together for social meals, even as it should be now. These were called “love feasts,” or “feasts of charity” (Jude 12). In the early church these love feasts were followed by the Lord’s Supper. But the Corinthian church had fallen into a grievous error. The rich would bring rich food and fare sumptuously, and the poor could not bring much and often would go hungry. Selfishness is out of place at the Lord’s Supper. It is always out of place in the Christian life.

“This Do in Remembrance of Me”

It has always brought a feeling of sadness to me to think of anyone who is a Christian rejecting the emblems of the Lord’s Supper. When a person says he feels too wicked to partake he should be told that he, of all people, needs to partake and get back to the Lord. It is just when we have stumbled that we need the helping hand of Christ the most. “This do in remembrance of me” (1 Cor. 11:24), is a commandment. Never yet has the breaking of one commandment been a valid excuse for breaking another. Would you partake of the spirit of Christ in your everyday life? Then publicly acknowledge it by partaking of the Communion emblems.

“Ye Do Shew the Lord’s Death Till He Come”

In this Communion service we visualize the Christ on the cross, His body broken because of us, His blood poured out to seal a new covenant between God and man. In the old covenant, blood of animals sealed the covenant. “How much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?” (Heb. 9:14). The Christian should keep his attention fixed on Christ and the sacrifice He made for our redemption. In the holy of holies of the tabernacle was the mercy seat on top of the ark. Out of each end of the mercy seat were the cherubim bending over looking at the mercy seat. The mercy seat is Christ, the cherubim are the church made of one piece with Christ. The blood was sprinkled on the mercy seat. Until Christ comes again let us meditate upon His death for us.

We Will

Great and many are the chances
Placed today within our reach,
As each shining hour advances
What a lesson it can teach!
Let us try to be the sharers
In God's blessed work divine;
Let us be His standard bearers,
Marching under His own sign.

We can teach what He has taught us,
Say what He to us has said,
Share the blessings He has brought us,
Point the light that leads ahead.
By our acts and deeds we show Him
To the eyes that sin makes blind;
They through us may learn to know Him,
Thus the way of life they'll find.

If we will we can make ready
Paths for other feet to go,
If we keep our purpose steady
When the way to them we show.
Nothing but weak wills can make us
Leave the work He bids us do;
May temptation never shake us!
Keep the faith our whole lives through.

A Sabbath Day With Jesus

Jesus is often called, "The Great Physician." And such we find Him to be in the lesson for January 23. For the mother-in-law of one of Jesus' apostles was very ill, and He healed her at once.

No long and lingering return to health! No daily care and constant nursing were necessary. But "immediately," when Jesus took her by the hand, she became well, and she took up her daily duties for the household.

How wonderful to have such a doctor as Jesus was! How great an opportunity to have Him near! No wonder "all the city" was gathered together at Simon Peter's door!

All of this must have tired the Master greatly. For whenever He healed He felt strength go out of Him. And we read that He arose very early, long before daylight, to spend in prayer to His Father the hours when others slept.

Because of the crowds around Him continually during the day, He found no time to talk quietly with God. And He, the Son of God, needed this quiet time when He could gain strength for His great tasks. If He needed that, surely we do. Don't you think so, girls and boys?

Now read verses 40 to 45 of Mark 1, and see what a dreadful illness one poor man suffered from that Jesus healed. Look up in the encyclopedia or ask your teacher what sort of disease leprosy is and how incurable it is even today.

Did that daunt Jesus? No, indeed! Nothing was too hard for Him, for with God on His side no evil could conquer Him. No force of wrong could hold His hand.

What did Jesus do besides heal the sick and make the lame strong again? Verses 38 and 39 tell you. He preached! And if you look at Mark 1:14, you will see what it was Jesus preached. The gospel of the kingdom of God!

Now, "gospel," as you all know, is "good news," glad tidings of a kingdom to come wherein all will be righteousness. No evil, no sin, no sickness, no death! Telling the people what they must do to enter that kingdom was Jesus' greatest work.

Do you see that the healing was only secondary? If they knew what they must do and then did it, so that when that kingdom came they would be worthy of it, their ills would all be healed.

The reason Jesus healed those whom He could reach was because of His great heart of love and sympathy, but most of all to prove that what He preached was true. For He told them of a kingdom that would be perfect, the like of which they had never seen.

As we go on in our studies in this fascinating book of Mark, we hope to learn more and more of this great kingdom. We hope to learn also what God expects of those who wish to enjoy that perfect kingdom. For we know it will be worth every effort we may put forth.

AMONG THE CHURCHES

SUMMER TRAINING SCHOOL

By C. E. Randall

"Sanctify yourselves, and prepare your brethren, that they may do according to the word of the Lord."

With the passing of time, the plans for the forthcoming Summer Training School go forward toward completion. The desires of earnest hearts and prayers of faithful servants, who have worked toward this goal are nearing realization and answer. All who have expressed themselves, feel that it is a long-delayed move in the right direction. Surely it is a work of the Lord! The teaching staff will be Bros. Lindsay, Marsh, and Lyon. The full curriculum will be announced soon.

Since the good news of the coming school was given in The Herald, a most inspiring letter has been received from one of our isolated young ladies, and we are taking the liberty to quote from it. She writes:

"I am a relatively new member of the Church of God, having been baptized August 19th of this year by Bro. Corbaley of Puyallup, Wash. I live with my parents in Wichita, Kan., where there is no church of our faith. Although I never attended one of our churches, my parents have been members for eleven years. . . . I know I am not familiar enough with the Word of God to try to explain it to others or discuss it with others than the older members of the church. But in a community so isolated from evangelists of our faith, I recognize my opportunity and should like to prepare for it."

Doesn't such a sincere passion for individual preparation for service in the cause of truth, fire you with zeal and flame anew the dying embers of that portion of your spirit that is disconsolate? If you caught the vision of service breathed in these few lines, it will do you good if you drop Gladys Dart, 2415 E. 2nd, Wichita, Kan., a line and tell her so.

Another communication, a joint-letter from two young ladies who attended the Bible School last summer, expressed the hope that they might attend the coming Summer Training Class. They concluded with this sentence: "However, there is some doubt as to our attending because of financial difficulties." The Training Class Committee in setting the amount covering board, room, and tuition placed it at a very low figure, considerably below actual cost in order that all who wished might avail themselves of this training. In cases where individuals are anxious to attend, are qualified and have in the past shown natural ability in leadership, but are unable to take advantage of this work because of financial stringency, the local church will do well to come to the assistance and send the deserving one or ones to the school. Such investment in gospel workers will return unto the church manyfold. This work of training workers is naturally an outlay for future compensation. The whole set-up anticipates the morrow. We can conceive of nothing more profitable than the exchange of a little capital for trained Christian leaders!

We will be back with you again in the near future with more information, but in the meantime, we are asking you to remember this special work before the throne of victorious power.

GOOD NEWS FROM SISTER

LYDIA A. RAILSBACK

After a nine weeks' sojourn in the hospital with a broken hip, Sr. Lydia A. Railsback of South Bend, Ind., is back in her home and steadily recovering her strength. For many years Sr. Railsback has prepared the comments on the Golden Text for the Truth Seekers' Sunday School Quarterly and her work has been deeply appreciated. And for still more years she was president of the National Berean Society where she rendered splendid service. We rejoice to know that she is recovering.

In her letter to us she mentions gratefully the many letters, cards, and packages she received while in the hospital from brethren in all parts of the country. She says, "There was a package to be opened nearly every day I was there. At Christmas time a tree was provided and carols were sung for my special benefit. I am now dressed every day and will soon be able to use crutches."

LOUISIANA CHURCH NOTES

After spending the Christmas holidays at home with our family in Illinois, we are glad to be back again to resume our work with the two churches here. We were pleased to note the fine interest and attendance that greeted our first service of the new year.

There has been quite a bit of sickness among our church folks the past few weeks, but at this writing nearly all are able to be out for the various services again.

As the new year opens before us we trust that continued improvement and development will be shown by both church groups and that the gospel of the kingdom will be taught with increased zeal.

MIRACLES IN THE LAST DAYS

Some say that the day of miracles is past. With one line of words they would have us believe that the power of the Holy Spirit is not today what it was in the time of the apostles.

Mistakes like this are made for the simple reason that faith has been allowed to weaken. The power of the Holy Spirit is what it has always been and our access to it is in proportion to our faith.

Direct healing of bodily ailments in answer to prayer tells me that the day of miracles is not past. I can bear witness to the healing of a broken wrist and an injured knee during the years 1936 and 1937. My doctor, and he is a capable physician, witnessed before seven men that nothing but an operation would heal a badly swollen and painful knee. In less than five hours after I had prayed for healing, my knee was healed. That was in 1937, and my knee is still well.

No, my brother, it is not a lesser power of the Holy Spirit that prevents our seeing miracles performed, but it is on account of people believing and preaching that the day of miracles is past, and thus influencing others to be faithless, instead of full of faith.

Wake up, O Church of God, and see our need!

R. M. Abbott,

PENNELWOOD CHURCH OF GOD

Grand Rapids, Michigan

Our work here is gratifying. Last Sunday there were 127 in the Sunday school and a good attendance at all other services. We are in need of larger quarters, but in spite of that are putting on a drive to increase attendance at both Sunday school and church. Our prayer is that God will open the way for us to have a church equal to the needs of our growing congregation.

R. M. Abbott, Pastor.

WALTER CLINE

Walter Cline was born July 3, 1887, in Clark County, near Martinsville, Ill., where he spent all his life. He died December 29, 1937. He was the son of George M. and Mary Ida Morris Cline, both of whom preceded him in death. He confessed his faith in Jesus in his early manhood and was baptized and became a member of the Mount Pleasant Church, where he was a faithful member. He held offices in the church and Sunday school until he moved from that vicinity.

He was married to Anna Lula Day, November 23, 1919, and to this union were born four children, Robert, Reba, Hattie Jane, and Norris Lee. He leaves to mourn his death his wife, four children, two sisters, Mrs. Golden Buckle and Mrs. Henry Huffman, and one brother, Ora. There are also two aunts, four uncles, several nephews and nieces, and many other relatives and friends.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer and the large audience was a silent testimony of the esteem in which the deceased was held. Words of comfort were spoken concerning the glad day of resurrection when sorrow and death shall be no more.

Harry Goekler.

ARCHIE F. SMITH

Archie F. Smith, son of Francis M. and Nancy M. Smith, was born in Saranac, Mich., January 15, 1869, and died at Blanchard, Mich., January 3, 1938. He was connected with Christ by faith in early youth and has always lived a loyal and faithful life. He has indeed brought many spiritual blessings down from heaven upon his family and his friends. The text at the funeral held at the Church of God in Blanchard was Hebrews 11. Truly, here was a man of faith.

He leaves to mourn him his devoted wife and two daughters, Marie and Edith. He was a devoted husband and most loving father. His many friends and relatives will sadly miss him. He spent the last afternoon of his life reading the Bible and singing hymns. He went to do the farm chores in the evening, singing as he went, but was stricken in a few moments, the victim of a sudden and fatal heart ailment.

a commonplace happening. Should it be? As a people, would we profit by a deeper and more passionate regard for the salvation of the unsaved? A little stock-taking of our spiritual aims and purposes would be a wholesome move and if the inventory revealed a need for a change in some of our policies, devotion to righteousness would yield to the adjustment.
C. E. Randall.

I am glad to report that negotiations are now under way which, if carried to a successful issue, will result in a very good work being done. And it doesn't seem at present as if it would cost this Board very much money. However, there are other projects in view that will cost us something, so don't forget us when you make up your budget.

We have had a call from a church that wants a pastor, and from two men that want work. We have sent the names of the two men to the church. We hope all their needs will soon be supplied.

We will be pleased to help churches find pastors and pastors find churches, if you will just write us your needs. But we can't help unless we know what you need.

Send all requests along these lines, and all money for these needs to the undersigned.

James A. Patrick, Secretary-Treasurer,
Ashland, Ohio, Orange Road.

Not long ago a leading English churchman said: "The church of today is giving more consideration to the unemployed than to the unsaved." This terse analysis of the aim of the present-day church strikes at the root of the ineffectiveness of the modern church; not because of the interest shown in the unemployed, but the lack of concern over the unsaved.

If we probe our own work, we are bound to discover a growing tendency in this same direction. There are communions where the whole purpose seems to be to proselyte the members of other faiths and a blind passing by and total disregard for that great mass who have no religious affiliations, having never made a confession of sin or been under Bible teaching. It is stated upon reliable authority that there are around forty millions of children and young people in the United States without any religious training whatever. To reach this growing army of unlightened and unsaved there is need of return to the singleness of purpose of the Master in His statement: "For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." Over against this work is the Pharisaical practice of compassing "sea and land to make one proselyte." The Pauline policy of avoiding to build on another man's foundation compels one to go out into the lanes and highways to search out guests for the coming marriage feast. A going to those who have not heard the Word will bring back into our preaching repentance, confession, and a loving urgency to "seek first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness."

Complete faith in the teachings of the church is a vital factor in our denominational life. This, however, should not be our purpose. Our work is to reveal Christ and His redeeming grace. Only as we employ our teachings to this end are they profitable. Knowledge of our truths may not be interlaced with a knowledge of Christ. Such unity should exist, but knowing the doctrines for the mere sake of knowledge creates pride and bigotry, for "knowledge puffeth up." If there has been inclination to go in this direction, then it is past due time to recast our purpose and conform our labors to the task of seeking that which is lost.

The widespread neglect to extend an invitation to people to accept Christ and the growing reserve and aloofness toward evangelism would seem to indicate a loss of anxiety over the salvation of the unchurched and unsaved. The liability of this sluggishness toward revivals and saving sinners appears in fewer baptisms and diminishing church and Sunday school attendances.

Not long since a member said that only one person in the church ever approached her concerning coming into the church and obeying Christ in baptism. This is in all appearances

The Restitution Herald extends its heartiest congratulations and best wishes to its first Editor who, next Saturday, January 22, will celebrate the passing of another milestone in the journey of life. Few men have contributed so much to the furtherance of the gospel of the kingdom of God throughout the country as has our esteemed first Editor. THE ABRAHAMIC FAITH believing bad news, that he does in believing good news. The difference does not consist in the use of a different faculty, but in the different classes of evidence believed. Paul reasoned logically when he said, "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." Thus good news, if believed, will make us feel good, and bad news will make us feel bad. Man exercises the same faculty in either case, but these antithetical causes will produce opposite effects.

This brings us up to the philosophical conclusion that faith is an effect whose exclusive and only cause is evidence—so much so that no evidence, no faith; strong evidence, strong faith; weak evidence, weak faith; clear evidence, clear faith; cloudy evidence, cloudy faith. In all cases the faith will be the exact counterpart of the evidence which produced it. We might as well suppose fruit without a tree, a stream without a fountain, or an effect without a cause, as to suppose faith without evidence. And in all cases faith will partake of the nature of the evidence which produced it. We may have any amount of credulity without evidence, but faith is absolutely dependent upon evidence for its origin. We can only have stronger faith in the teachings of the Bible than in the teachings of any other book to the degree that the Bible provides stronger, clearer, and more consistent evidence of its truth.

The Apostle Paul teaches that there is only one faith (Eph. 4:5), and Christ and all the other apostles show that this one faith is an effect whose cause is the one gospel. We find the Apostle's definition of the nature of faith in the first verse of Hebrews 11, where he says that "faith is the substance" ("confidence"—margin) "of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Paul evidently uses the cause for the effect.

That hope is confidence in the promises of God will appear by reference to Titus 1:2—"In hope of eternal life which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world began." That faith upon which the approbation of God can rest, is of the Abrahamic type. No other kind of faith will be approved of God. A class of philosophers has arisen in these last days who (profess to) believe nothing except that which they can demonstrate. Rationalism is fast supplanting true faith. What we can demonstrate is not faith, but knowledge. The simplicity of Abraham's faith was to trust God for what he did not understand. When God commanded him to leave his native land, the homes and graves of his fathers, he obeyed and went out, "not knowing whither he went." Had Abraham not had implicit faith in God he would have asked a multitude of questions regarding the latitude and longitude of the land to which he was commanded to go, its soil, climate, and resources. But perfect faith, having no doubt or question, carried him forward in prompt obedience.

Again, God commanded Abraham to sacrifice his son, his only son of promise, after having assured him that he would have a numerous seed in him. Abraham, without a murmuring word or a moment's parley, moved forward in obedience to this command, not knowing (or asking) how God could fulfill His promise if he killed the only medium through whom that promise could be accomplished. That is true faith and nothing less.

If my boy should be lost in the woods the whole day long, and just as gray twilight was gathering around him he should descry his father approaching in search of him, and his father should take him by the hand and promise to lead him home, would that child, if he had perfect confidence in his father's word and ability to fulfill his promises, doubt, or hesitate, or ask a question as to whether his father knew the way, or could take him home? Just so in regard to confidence in God. Doubts may imply skepticism, and skepticism, if long indulged in, will lead to open infidelity—unbelief.

There are, and there can be, no failures with God. Omnipotence knows no impossibilities. Abraham knew that if he killed his son Isaac, God could (and would) raise him from the dead (Heb. 11:17-19). He, therefore, resolved to do his duty and leave the consequences with God. When God commands and man obeys, He will take care of the consequences. When God suspends promises on certain conditions, and we comply with those conditions, He will fulfill His part of the contract though all the world may oppose.

For one, I am willing to trust God for what I do not understand. He has promised to raise the dead and I believe that He has power to fulfill His Word, but the process by which He will accomplish this grand and glorious work, I have no means of knowing, nor do I care to know. How God so combined the elements found in the dust of the ground as to make man in the first place, I do not know, but, nevertheless, I believe the fact of man's earthy creation. By what fine process He will so reorganize the same dust as to retain man's identity (in the resurrection), and yet make him incorruptible and immortal, I do not know; but I am sure that the same power that made man in the first place can remake him out of the same material; and that the same power that can make a brilliant diamond out of the dark gross material of charcoal, can make an incorruptible body out of corruptible dust. He has promised to do this very thing, and faith of the Abrahamic type says that it can and will be done!

We are dependent on the veracity of God for all of our knowledge of His revealed will concerning both the past and the future. Firmer than a munition of rocks, firm as the throne of the Eternal, is that man's faith which has the unerring Word of God for its foundation. Earthquakes may shake the foundations of the world, revolutions may hurl from their thrones the crowned tyrants of earth and dissolve into dust the great kingdoms and dynasties of history, the last winds and floods and warring elements, mingling with hailstones and fire, may sweep away the last refuge of lies; yet firm as the everlasting hills shall abide that bark, though frail it may appear, which has its anchor fixed in the immovable and immutable rock of God's Holy Word! Heaven and earth may pass away, but His Word shall remain unchanged forever!

"I Will Sing Unto the Lord"

By the Editor

I CAN remember Father coming home at midnight, after having walked for miles from the schoolhouse where he had preached that day—and he was singing! Father was always singing! "If the day was clear, or dark and drear," it made no difference, he always found something for which he could praise God in song, rapturous song!

One of the most popular hymns he ever composed, and he was the author of many, expresses more clearly than any words of mine can do, the spirit that animated him. The joyful little song was first sent ringing out through the world in the early seventies, when Father was traveling in Missouri and southern Iowa with A. F. Duggar, who was one of the founders of the Seventh Day Church of God. Later the song appeared in "Gospel Hymns" and was used in the Moody and Sankey revival meetings almost everywhere. It was republished in the most recent edition of that favorite old song book.

"My life flows on in endless song,
Above earth's lamentation;
I hear the sweet, though far-off hymn,
That hails the new creation.
Through all the tumult and the strife,
I hear the music ringing;
It finds an echo in my heart—
How can I keep from singing!"

Singing had its origin in heaven, among the angels, long before man came into being. It was to this fact, attested by God in His address to Job, that John Greenleaf Whittier referred in the verse printed at the head of this article:

"Then the Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind, and said, . . . Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth . . . when the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy?" (Job 38:1, 4, 7).

"Dear to gods and men is sacred song," declared Pope, and he was not mistaken. "Psalms and hymns and spiritual songs" are the natural overflow of man's instinctive spirit of worship, the spirit that prompts him to seek fellowship with the Deity. Men sing because they find delight in singing. Attuning their voices to the music of the stars, to the cosmic melodies of the circling planets, we sing with Longfellow:

"God sent His singers upon earth,
With songs of sadness and of mirth."

It is the old songs we love best to sing. They seem like old friends who have returned out of the shadowy past to bless us again with their presence. Who is not carried on the wings of memory back to childhood's happy, carefree days, on the tender strains of "Home, Sweet Home"? And who does not shut the door on his present workaday world and "dream dreams and see visions" of half-forgotten scenes of beauty and of happiness when he lifts his voice again in these familiar words:

"There's a land that is fairer than day,
And by faith we can see it afar;
For the Father waits over the way,
To prepare us a dwelling place there."

And then that heart-stirring chorus! How the old schoolhouse used to ring and echo to it as we sang,

"In the sweet bye and bye,
We shall meet on that beautiful shore;
In the sweet bye and bye,
We shall meet on that beautiful shore."

Sometimes, like the songs of forsaken Zion, the old hymns of childhood seem almost too sacred, too holy, too precious for us to sing "in a strange land." We would have our dear ones of the past with us when we sing them! And some day, they will be with us, praise God, and we'll raise our voices in unison with theirs on the "evergreen shores" of His kingdom!

Pertinent Comments on the News of the Day

Rumanian Anti-Semitism Increases

"Arise ye, and depart; for this is your rest: because it is polluted, it shall destroy you."—Micah 2:10.

BUCHAREST, Rumania, Jan. 15.—Seemingly in an effort to forestall the organization of a genuine Nazi government, Rumania has inaugurated a powerful anti-Semitic movement with the approval of King Carol. Premier Octavian Goga will soon seek in the forthcoming general elections greater parliamentary power to carry out the new policy. Among other steps now under consideration, is the passage of a measure to forbid Jews to own restaurants and one which would prohibit the employment in Jewish households of female servants under forty years of age.

BERLIN, Germany, Jan. 15.—The leading Jews of Germany are now convinced that the only hope for them is emigration. A resolution adopted by the German Jewish Council urgently appealed to the Palestine Government and to other countries which have shown friendliness toward their race, to assist them with emigration plans. Dr. Leo Baeck, president of the Council, declared Jewry's position throughout the world was becoming more difficult all the time. In the meantime high authorities in the German Government indicate that the economic ministry, directed by Hermann Wilhelm Goering, will soon establish a special office charged with the complete liquidating of the Jew in economic life.

"Profane and Vulgar Patriotic Songs"

"I say unto you, Love your enemies."—Jesus.

NEW YORK, Jan. 10.—Addressing a forum in the Community Church, the pastor, John Haynes Holmes, declared that "The Star Spangled Banner," national anthem of the United States, is "probably one of the most vulgar and profane of all the world's patriotic songs." It is "full of boasting and pride; it celebrates war and its horrors; it breathes hatred and vengeance upon our foes. Peace on earth expresses the true spirit of love for man and God. 'The Star Spangled Banner' is a war hymn," the minister continued, "exulting in victory and slaughter of our enemies." He referred especially to the third stanza, which he says is rarely printed. "A national anthem means more to us than all church hymns," Rev. Holmes asserted, "a flag is more sacred than an altar, a national honor more imperative than the love of God."

Respect for constituted authority, even for those who "bear the sword," is an obligation binding upon the conscience of the disciple of Christ, for they are said to be "God's ministers," appointed to preserve the peace and protect the lives of Christians and non-Christians alike "continually" (Rom. 13:1-7). We agree heartily with the minister's statement, that with the majority of the people of any country in the world, "a flag is more sacred than an altar, a national honor more imperative than the love of God." But the speaker overlooked the fact that the majority of people "have not the love of God" in their hearts and that patriotism is the highest emotion of which they are capable. A study of both Testaments shows clearly that God has ever recognized two standards of righteousness, one for the carnally minded who live entirely on the plane of the flesh, and one for the spiritually minded, who "mind not the things of the flesh." "To be carnally minded is death"—death on the battlefield, death in the brothel, death brought about by sin in any of its diversified forms. But to be "spiritually minded is life and peace."

Science and Religion

"Skilful in all wisdom, and cunning in knowledge, and understanding science" (Daniel 1:4).

CHICAGO, Jan. 16.—An editorial in one of the city papers declares today that "the ranks of those who contend that science and religion are mutually exclusive, that there is irreconcilable conflict between the Bible and the theory of evolution, are ever growing smaller. The importance of the finding of the committee of the Church of England that science and religion are not incompatible is highly significant. The Anglican church has never been noted for progressionism. That such an ultra-conservative body should reach such a conclusion will help create a better understanding between a great group of highly intelligent people to whom the findings of science are indisputable, and those whose religious beliefs close their eyes to scientific evidence. . . . True science and religion serve a common cause. Both are seekers after truth."

God declares that "the earth hath he given to the children of men," and they are to "subdue" all of its forces to their service. But to do this it is necessary that they should use their intelligence, and "seek out wisdom and the reason of things" in nature about them.

Are We Afraid to Trust God?

By Vivian Kirkpatrick

ARE we afraid to trust God? Rather a foolish question, perhaps! or is it? The answer, were it put individually to each person reading this, would be, "Such a question is foolishness itself. Of course we trust God!

We believe in all of His promises." But, do we trust God?

I've listened to a number of sermons in which this passage was read: "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it" (Mal. 3:8-10).

I have watched audiences who listened unmoved and unconcerned to that passage and the message which followed. I have watched them drop their nickels and dimes in the collection plate, put their quarters, halves, and bills back into their pockets and lean back with a satisfied air, as much as to say, "There, I've done my share." And when asked for more they would reply, "I'm sorry. I'd like to give more, but it costs me so much to live these days, you know. The fuel bill is mounting and the meat prices are still very high. I just can't afford it." Are we afraid to trust God?

No, my friends, this isn't another article from a tithing crank. I'll confess that I'm on the tithing fence. Formerly I was proud to be listed as a tither. Now, I'm just a little bit ashamed to admit that a tither is all I am. Don't get me wrong. I firmly believe that tithing is the least one can do, but, personally, I am now inclined to believe a tither is a piker. We are afraid to trust God!

Suppose we go back to the passage just quoted. We are accused of robbing God. (And while it was written long ago, I think there are few persons to this day who will not fall under that accusation.) We are not charged with robbing Him of "tithes or offerings," but "tithes and offerings." We are inclined to think the word is "or" instead of "and," and so in place of a tithe we put in an offering—of ten cents—that won't be missed.

After the accusation comes the invitation: "Prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." Are we afraid to trust God?

Several hundred years later Christ repeated the promise: "Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure,

The author, a student at Aurora College, presents a heart-searching question for our consideration. "After all," he says, "money is of minor importance. What is important is that we should follow the example of Christ."

pressed down, shaken together, and overflowing will be given into your lap. For by the same measure with which you measure, it will be dispensed to you again" (Luke 6:38, Diaglott).

There are two significant items in this short message: "Give" to receive; and, "the same measure" you use shall be used on you. Do you see the significance? I no longer wonder why the "dime-givers" never seem satisfied, while the tithers and givers, who seemingly have no more of the world's goods than anyone else, are happy and satisfied. Perhaps they aren't given back in the same exchange, but they are repaid in love and happiness and freedom of care. After all, the promise was not of monetary gain. Likewise, if you give the Lord a dime when you could and should have given a dollar you will get your dime's worth of happiness and satisfaction.

Many a time have I heard this verse quoted by persons who didn't think tithing necessary: "Every man as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity." I'll agree; it about does away with tithing. But, read the preceding verse also: "But this I say, He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully" (2 Cor. 9:6, 7).

This verse doesn't change the meaning of the verse previously quoted, it merely explains it. Surely, give only what you purpose in your heart, whether it be a dime, a tithe, or an offering. (The word, "offering," to me signifies a tithe plus an additional gift. Webster defines an offering as a gift to a church. This bears out my definition, since a tithe is a requirement.) If you offer a dime—only a part of a tithe—don't be surprised if you receive little satisfaction and happiness; don't be surprised if the church doesn't appear as friendly as it should; don't be surprised if the sermon is meager—you are getting your dime's worth. You are reaping the reward of another promise, "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap" (Gal. 6:7).

Please don't misunderstand me. I'm not advocating church giving as a means of getting rich quickly. After all, money is of minor importance. What is important is that we follow the example of Christ and the monetary gain will be sufficient to care for our needs and we shall reap the reward of God in peace, happiness, and good will.

I think that the thought of the people is reflected in the church, and again we might ask, "Is the church afraid to trust God?" The churches are in need, as are the evangelistic funds, and all departments of the church, national and local. I wonder whether or (Please turn to page 11)

"As His Custom Was!"

By C. E. Lapp

"As his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the sabbath day, and stood up for to read."—Luke 4:16.

WE ARE what we are today largely because of habits formed in early life. It is becoming more and more apparent that as the child is, so shall the man become. The child who in early life learns of Jesus, will have a much better opportunity to lead a Christian life than the one who waits until later years.

The habit of attending Sunday school and church regularly is a good one to cultivate. Peter tells us that Jesus left us an example that we should "follow his steps" (1 Peter 2:21). Contrary to the opinion of some, who would have us believe that Jesus taught and preached only in the open air, we read that "he came up to Nazareth, where he had been brought up: and, as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the sabbath day, and stood up for to read" (Luke 4:16).

Jesus had been away for some time. He had performed miracles and had received great acclaim, but when at home with those of His own flesh, He did not forget the place of worship. He could have excused Himself by saying that He must have a little time to attend the family reunion. But instead of saying that, "as his custom was," He went to the place of worship.

A prominent religious leader of this country gives the six "Rs" why people do not attend church. It might be interesting for you to write down the excuses people give for being absent from church and classify them.

The first "R" is REST. God made all of His creation in six days, and the seventh day He rested and hallowed that day as holy. He knew man needed physical rest at least one day in seven. And some people excuse themselves for not attending church services because they need to rest on Sunday mornings. The one who spends the larger portion of Saturday night seeking the "bright lights," naturally has not the ambition to get up in time on Sunday morning to go to the house of worship, where he will find spiritual rest.

When Jesus said, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," He did not necessarily mean physical rest. Jesus came to sin-sick men who had burdens that were heavy because of their sins, and who were weary because of the evil lives they had led. He promised to become yoked together with them, that He might help to bear their burdens and lighten their loads. He promised rest to their souls. How comforting it is to have one who is stronger than ourselves give us a helping hand, or a word of encouragement, even today! If you want rest for your souls, you will find it with the Lord. Why not seek rest with God's people, as was Jesus' custom?

The RADIO is a wonderful invention that baffles even the most brilliant mind. We agree that many good things come to us over it. Nevertheless, those who consistently claim that they get good sermons over the radio, and use that for an excuse for not going to church, should remember that a church somewhere is sponsoring that religious program and if everyone absented himself from the local church, soon there would be no minister and no sermon "over the air."

There is also the fellowship one enjoys in attending church which he cannot experience simply by listening to a radio service. Jesus said, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them" (Matt. 18:20). The Lord promised to meet with those who worshiped in spirit and in truth together, for He had found such gatherings places of refreshing in God's Word.

RIDING is becoming more and more a serious drawback to those who might otherwise attend divine service. One or two hundred miles in our present automobiles amounts to nothing. More people are killed in "auto" accidents over week-ends than at any other time—and it isn't because they are on the way to church! Such suggestions as these are often heard in the average home as the week draws to a close: "Let's go to the beach, the lake, the mountains, the movies, the ball game," or a thousand and one other places, "to spend the week-end." But there are a few, thank God, who say, "Let's go to worship God!" Where the treasure is, there will the heart be also.

At our Minnesota State Conference last fall, Brother George Randall, father of Brother C. E. Randall, told how, when he was a young man, they drove an ox team three days to travel seventy miles to attend the conference. Yet with all the effort and hardship required in those days to reach the place of meeting, more were present than go to such gatherings now, with all of our modern means of swift and easy transportation. A good many people are absent from church more when they have a car than when they are without one. Make it a habit to be in the house of worship—it was Jesus' custom.

READING is many times given as a reason for staying away from church. The Sunday newspaper, magazines, dime novels, wild west stories, fiction of all kinds, true (?) romances, and all sorts of cheap literature hinder people from going to church. Jesus went to the synagogue and opened the Scriptures to read from the prophecy of Isaiah. No one had to find the place for Him, and the chances are that He was one who, like the noble Bereans, "searched the scriptures daily."

Reading is to the individual what water is to the pipe. The same kind of water that goes into it will be the kind that comes out, and the same thoughts that we take into our minds will be the thoughts that are manifested through us. "As he thinketh in his heart, so is he" (Prov. 23:7). Fill your mind with the good things of God that He may cleanse your heart of its impurity. Go to the place where God's Word—the "bread of life"—is broken, that you may feast upon it. It was Jesus' custom!

RELATIVES often can be the source of great comfort and blessing, but when they drop in on Sunday morning and keep you from going to church and Sunday school, or come just when you are ready to start for the evening service, they are not a help but a detriment. Just now I am reminded of a home where "company" is always most welcome. But it is also a home where the visitor is invited and expected to accompany the family to church.

If there is any "pulling" to be done, let us be the ones to do it. Let us lift others to a higher level rather than allowing them to pull us down. Let us get so in the habit of attending church that we will feel that something is missing from our lives, something vital and beautiful, even if our nearest relatives should be the ones who prevent our attendance at the place of worship. RELATIVES, don't keep anyone from God's house! Make it a custom to go to church when you are on a visit.

RUM (the last of the six "Rs") is one of the most blighting of all the curses which have been allowed to fasten themselves upon the people of the United States. It is quite obvious why anyone under the influence of liquor does not go to church. Liquor not only demoralizes a man mentally and physically, but numbs every holy impulse and leads farther and farther from all things spiritual. It takes away all sense of reverence for God.

In all of the six "Rs" mentioned, we can see nothing but the desires of the flesh being gratified. Paul says (Rom. 8:7) that the "carnal mind is not subject to the law of God," and, further, that it cannot be. He also asserts that the carnal mind is at enmity with, or hostile to, God. May the Lord so change our lives and cleanse our hearts that we may not serve the flesh on the day set apart for His worship, but earnestly seek to "enter into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise," that we may not forget the One who has bought us with His own blood.

It was Jesus' custom—let us make it ours!

"Full of Good Works and Almsdeeds"

By Mary Martha Macfarland

LONG, long ago there lived in the city of Joppa a follower of our Lord and her name was Dorcas. It is written of her (Acts 9) that she was "full of good works and almsdeeds." In other words, her time was spent, like her Master's, in going about doing good.

But one day she was no longer able to leave her home on these many errands of mercy, for she was very sick. Steadily she grew worse, and finally she died. We like to think that she was not alone, but that tender and grateful hands ministered to her in her illness and finally prepared her body for its long sleep.

Those to whom Dorcas had been so kind now came to her home, and with them they brought the many little garments she had made for their children. Thoughts of Dorcas and the little coats and dresses were so intermingled they could not be separated. But some of Dorcas' fellow disciples, hearing that Peter was in the near-by village of Lydda, sent for him, and he came without delay.

The scene in the room where Dorcas lay must have told Peter the beautiful story of her life, and he knew at once that here was one who could not be spared. When the last weeping woman had left the room, Peter kneeled down and prayed. Then turning to the body, he said, "Tabitha, arise."

When Dorcas opened her eyes and saw Peter she sat up. He called in the disciples and all those that were there and presented her alive and well. Weeping was turned to rejoicing, tears to smiles of joy. And many believed on the Lord because of the miracle that day.

This simple and touching story has been the inspiration and the stimulus to many throughout succeeding years. To be a "Dorcas" is indeed something worthy of emulation. For in the first Dorcas we find a disciple deserving of mention along with Peter and Paul, though her work was along less pretentious lines.

Here and there throughout the brotherhood of the Church of God are women banded together to do good. Among them are some who have been trained and educated so that if they were out in the world they could command large salaries. Graduate nurses, teachers, trained office workers, home economists—these are numbered with many an organization called the "Dorcas."

But these are all wives, mothers, homemakers, whose sphere of usefulness is limited, though none the less important. Large pay envelopes are not at their disposal. However, their desire to do good is just as ardent. And so they have turned to the work of their hands to do their Master's service.

Among those organizations with which the writer is familiar it is not the purpose to finance the church. A little study will give us the rule whereby this is to be done, and we believe that among Dorcas members there are many, many tithers.

The Eternal Abode of the Saints

FIRST, the question: "But will God indeed dwell on the earth?" (1 Kings 8:27). Second, the answer: "Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God" (Rev. 21:3).

Here, in two texts of Scripture, in words which need no twisting to suit the whims of any section of Christians, we are informed that we are to live on the earth, purified by fire and made meet for God Himself to take up His abode, with His blessed Son as King, and His trusting, faithful people as subjects (rather, as associate rulers).

If this does not conform to the ideas of the majority of believers it is no fault of ours, for these words aforementioned, with many others we might produce, have been with us from time immemorial in the pages of Holy Writ. There was a time when the writer, like thousands of others, passed them by without particular notice. But they were there all the time! And because he was "pulled up," so to speak, to take notice of them, he has been led to see that they are an integral part of the gospel economy, for if those who are saved in Christ are to live forever, then they must live somewhere. And God has denoted that "somewhere," "by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began"; yea, through His own dear Son; and after this there should be no question about the matter. What were those memorable words of God's Son? Let us see. Negatively, He did not say, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall live with me in heaven"; but, positively, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth" (Matt. 5:5). Not merely "occupy" but inherit it! Listen again to this: "The righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein for ever" (Psa. 37:29). And there are six other references in that one Psalm referring to the selfsame thing.

The silver-tongued Isaiah was inspired to write about it. This is what the Holy Spirit instructed him to say: "For thus saith the Lord that created the heavens; God himself that formed the earth and made it; he that established it" (David adds, "that it shall not be moved"—Psa. 93:1); "he created it not in vain; he formed it to be inhabited" (Isa. 45:18). When our blessed Redeemer uttered the words quoted above (Matt. 5:5), was He not perfectly acquainted with the tragedy in Eden? Most certainly. Then He knew of the promise made also, that the "seed" of the woman should bruise (or "crush") the serpent's head; and we believe He knew also He was the "seed" appointed for that purpose, and is proved by Hebrews 2:14. Now, Psalm 25:13 declares that "his seed shall inherit the earth." And Paul has told us that "if we are Christ's" we are that seed (Gal. 3:29).

There are several reasons for believing that the earth shall be the saint's abode. In its primary state it was pure, good, peaceful, and free from sin; also, that God came down and communed with Adam, suggesting blessed fellowship.

And again, death had not made its appearance, neither in tree, flower, bird, nor beast. It was the great tragedy of human sin that brought a blight, a curse, upon God's fair creation; and one can almost detect, in the ferocity of the animal creation, that which seems to say, when they come into contact with man: "You were the cause of all this!" But with the Word of Inspiration before us we hear these blessed, heart-comforting words: "There shall be no more curse" (Rev. 22:3). Oh, that perishing humanity would have faith to grasp these promises of God!

Then, there are several things that prove to us that this earth is not ours at present, viz., we cannot roam about where we like; we cannot buy what we like; we cannot sell what we like; and we cannot plant and build where we like. Also, there are many things to the eye and heart of the believer that are so contrary to what it will be in the "world to come," that he would not like to live here permanently. Here are a few: its disordered condition; the fear of war; the grinding greed of money-grubbers; the blighting, blasting influence of sin, disease, decay, and death; the millions lavished on the most devilish contrivances for blowing men and women and children to pieces; the reckless spending of money on things that do not satisfy; crooked dealing in business; the gambling evil, and the almost now universal disregard of Sunday as a day of rest and worship.

But here, for the sake of believers, let us strike another note. Paul tells us that "ye are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief" (1 Thess. 5:4). And however much worse it can or may get, the "sure word of prophecy" remains. Here it is: "Nevertheless, we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness" (2 Peter 3:13).

One more thought. The reasonableness of believing earth to be the eternal abode of the saints is because it was here our blessed Redeemer came and preached the good news of life eternal to people that were dying without hope; it was here He suffered, "the just for the unjust," to bring us to God (1 Peter 3:18); it was here He "poured out his soul unto death: and he was numbered with the transgressors" (Isa. 53:12); it was here He appointed a kingdom; it was here He "purchased" the field; it was here that He came back from the dead to show us there was a life beyond the grave; and it was here He made the promise of coming back again (John 14:3). It was here that He planned how sinning men and women may become rightful heirs to the kingdom of which He spoke and promised. What more reasonable, then, than that He should return to the scene of His former labors of love and sacrifice and draw together in one glorious family all who have trusted Him, and walked by faith in Him since He went away?

But let us dwell on one other thing. Can you realize, that since the days of the apostles over seventy millions of God's people have been put to death in all manner of brutal ways—men and women, too? Those whose principal fault was to love and serve the Christ whom they loved, and who had redeemed them! Why should they not come back from the dead, and live again on the earth which was once the place of their humble labors, and enjoy it ten thousand times more, because of the pristine glory into which it will be transformed by its rightful King, the Lord of glory? And in addition, to be transfigured into the same glory as their Lord? Who can refrain from exclaiming, "Hallelujah!" to this?

Now, dear brethren, you know that when "ye believed, ye were sealed with the Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest (or pledge) of your inheritance, until the redemption of the purchased possession" (Eph. 1:13). Yes, He bought back the "field" with His precious blood, and as that crimson stream flowed from His side, it assured the cancelling of all sin to all who believe in Him; and as a part of that cleansing blood trickled into the earth, here, too, was an indication that one day the earth itself shall be delivered from all its corruption "into the glorious liberty of the children of God" (Rom. 8:21), and be transformed into a habitation fit for the King and His subjects. And so the saints will regain their ancient homestead, and the ransomed of the Lord will spend their endless day in peaceful and joyous possession of the very earth and soil whereon they knelt and prayed, and wept and suffered. And where stood the shameful cross, shrouded with the gloom of grim Golgotha, the royal city, great capital of the new earth, shall fling open her jeweled gates, revealing to the gaze of the enraptured throng, the glorious Person, crown, and scepter of their mighty King, once the Crucified, now the Lord of lords. But of that city, more anon.

Earth had once in its history a great upheaval, called a "flood," when every living thing in it was destroyed. And that was referred to by our Savior, when He prophesied that in the day of His coming again, the same conditions would obtain, when another cataclysm would take place—one of fire, which will burn and melt every bit of dross and every atom of sin the world contains, and in 2 Peter 3 we are told both of the conditions that would obtain at that time, and how they are to be brought about. And remember Peter is quoting from the prophets!

May I quote from one of our conditionalist poets on this theme?

"The earth, emerging from her flood of fire
Baptismal, by a new and heavenly birth
Arose regenerate. The dews of God,
As once in Eden, cooled the ardent soil;
And rivers from innumerable springs
Flowed, intersecting every gorgeous clime
With living waters. Like a smile of light
The Sun of Righteousness in rising shed
Healing from His benignant wings; and earth
Who came forth naked from her bath of flame,
Felt His rich blessing at her heart, and smiled Responsive; and in blushing haste put on
Her beautiful robes of immortality:
And earth from pole to pole was one vast Paradise."

Now let us dip our pen once more in the ink of inspiration, and listen to a new song! "And they sung a new song, saying: Thou art worthy to take the book, and open the seals thereof; for thou was slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation, and hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth" (Rev. 5:9, 10). And let me remind you, dear brethren, this was one of the things that Christ told John should be "hereafter" (Rev. 1:19); and when these things are accomplished facts, there will be no hereafter! It will be ever-present eternity!

But let us not forget the Holy City, the new Jerusalem, which "comes down" to adorn, and be the capital of, the new earth. We have a wonderful description of it in Revelation 21. The old Jerusalem was glorious ere it was marred by the invader's hand. But the "city of the great king" will surpass in splendor the conception of created mind. Think of the flashing beauty of its foundation stones (Rev. 21:19, 20). A "jasper" is of the color of white marble, with a light shade of green and red; a "sapphire" is of sky blue, speckled with gold; a "jacinth" is of red purple; an "amethyst" is a violet purple; a "sardonyx" is red, streaked with white; a "sardius" is of deep red; a "chrysolite" is of deep yellow; a "chrysoprasus" is green, and transparent with gold specks. What splendor, as these foundation stones sparkle in the light and glory of the throne! O beauty ineffable! O jeweled city of our God! Descend, and shed effulgent glory over all creation!

Our poet speaks again:

"There is a city in splendor sublime,
O, how turrets and battlements shine!
Pearls are its portals, surpassingly bright,
Jasper its walls, and the Lamb is its Light;
Angels stand beckoning us onward to share
Glory unfading—we long to be there!"

There is another Bible aspect of this renewed and purified earth. It is also called a "kingdom." Let inspiration speak once more. Here is the Authorized Version: "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever" (Rev. 11:15). Rotherham renders it "kingdom," i. e., in the singular. Westcott, in his "lessons on the Revised Version," renders it "kingdom," also; the same applies to the Emphatic Diaglott; and while I am not in agreement with all that Moffatt's translation gives us, yet his rendering of this verse seems very suggestive: "The rule of this world has passed to our Lord and His Christ." Does not this text affirm that both Father and Son are connected with this wonderful kingdom? So the text teaches me.

Now, what does a kingdom suggest to us? I would say, three things, first, a king; second, territory; third, subjects. In the first we have our glorious Redeemer, whose titles were given to us by the angel before He was born. Speaking to Mary, he said: "Thou shalt bring forth a son, and shall call his name JESUS. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end" (Luke 1:31-33).

Dear friends, all the prophecies point to the Lord Jesus Christ. But be it noted, when He came He never pointed to another!

Then, the land. Here we go back to our father Abraham, to whom God promised it, and the Scriptures say: "God gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on; yet he promised that he would give it to him for a possession, and his seed after him, when as yet he had no child" (Acts 7:5). Here's faith for you! And it is recorded: "He staggered not at the promises, but believed that what God had promised, he was able to perform." So Abraham still sleeps, and waits for the time of fulfillment, as millions of God's people do. Please see that that mighty act of faith affects you and me. I am quoting from Romans 4: "Now it was not written for his sake alone . . . but for us also, to whom it shall be imputed, if we believe on him that raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead." O, that the whole church of God would take this to heart!

Then the "subjects." And who can they be other than those just mentioned, who believe in the glorious resurrection of the Son of God, as a guarantee of those who shall have fallen asleep up to the time of His coming? Does not this salutation thrill you: "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world"? If you are in love with His return, it will! Nichol, the famous hymn writer, once wrote these words in one of his sets:

"And the future holds the promise of the end of sin and pain,
When the law of love every heart shall prove, and Christ shall reign."

(NOTE: Our author apparently overlooks the fact that every king has associate rulers whose duty it is to help him in the administration of the law. Hence we conclude that Jesus also will have such aides and corulers, who will sit with Him in His throne, as He now sits with the Father in His throne (Rev. 3:21), and assist Him in dispensing justice throughout the earth (Rev. 2:26; 5:9, 10). The "subjects" of the kingdom, in our estimation, will be the survivors of the nations, they whose lives are preserved by the shortening of "those days" of tribulation which precede the visible advent of Jesus (Matt. 24:22).—Editor RESTITUTION HERALD.)

To the Prophet Daniel was given the outline of the kingdoms of the earth, their rise and fall—too vast a subject to dwell upon here; but God made no mistake—He never does—when He informed Daniel in his 7th chapter that this kingdom of which we speak was to be "under the whole heaven." And as a parting exhortation before leaving the subject, let me repeat Peter's word of counsel, and he is speaking to believers, too: "Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure, for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall; for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ" (2 Peter 1:10, 11). Will friends please note that this is something the saints have to enter into, and not something which has to enter into the saints!

So, beloved brethren, amid evil report and good report, we wait the coming of Him who alone can make all these things a reality.

While we wait and labor we see many of our dear ones taken from us by the pitiless hand of death, but here we are exhorted not to "sorrow" as those who have no hope, for He who dried the tears of Martha and Mary by bringing their brother from the tomb (not from the skies), will do the same for the millions who have trusted Him, and finally and irrevocably the great enemy, death, with its author, the devil, will be consigned to the lake of fire, which, we are told, is the second death.

Then for the glories of that immortal kingdom, peopled (finally) with immortal subjects, ruled over by an immortal King, whose name is the Lord Jesus Christ!

Brethren in Christ, we are nearly there! Yet fain would I quote another gem from our same poet, when speaking of the world to come:

"What world is this of which St. John says such wonderful things? Who are these blissful creatures with tearless eyes, deathless forms, and shining brows? and whence came they? What royal race is this, that 'God himself' should be 'with them, and be their God'? What favored 'land' is this, ne'er seen by mortal eyes, ne'er blighted by a curse, ne'er saddened by pain, nor touched by sorrow, ne'er shadowed by the black wing of death? What 'skies' are these, ne'er darkened by a cloud, nor riven by red lightning's flash? What 'shores' are these, ne'er shaken by earthquake shock, or blackened with the wrecks of angry seas? What mighty Empire may this be, with Metropolis built by the Mighty God, and sent down from heaven?

"These scenes are surely not of earth. These storm-fretted skies of ours never smiled on picture such as this since mortal year began!

"Lift up your heads and hands, ye ransomed of the Lord! Break into song and shout, all living tongues! Awake and sing, pale lips of the dark valley! Join, seraphs of the skies! Let heaven and earth resound with hallelujahs! This is 'Paradise restored,' the promised 'new creation,' the land bonded to Abraham, the kingdom under the whole heaven, the 'field' purchased by our rightful Prince, the sweet 'new heavens and new earth' predicted by Isaiah, sung by David, assured by Christ, claimed by Peter, and seen by John. This is God's own picture of the Home of the saints, and the saints at Home."

"The storms are done,
And the last breaking wave has spent itself;
The winds are dying into peace, and morn
Smiles down upon me from the hills of home.
Life's weatherbeaten bark has safely reached
The long-sought bay. The worn-out keel at length Grazes the strand. I leap to land, and find Myself at last upon the stormless shore!"

Rebuilding Our Hope

By A. T. Pierson

IN SPITE of widespread apostasy within the church, we are not disheartened, for, as has been shown in previous articles, such a condition was foretold. If the "progressive orthodoxy" of a "new" and "liberal theology" insinuates its subtle coils into theological seminaries; if the "supremacy of the ethical conscience" supplants the supremacy of the cross of Christ in the faith of many believers; if the speculations on ("universal reconciliation") embolden men in sin and harden them in impenitence and cut the nerve and sinew of foreign missions with those who believe and teach it; if millions of believers are by mighty tidal waves of error swept away from all moorings of doctrine and duty, and the ancient landmarks which the fathers set up are all removed—we are not surprised or discouraged. Prophecy is only finding its Champollion in history; and the obscure hieroglyphs on its monuments, an unerring interpreter. We are persuaded only the more firmly that God rules and is surely working out His plan for time and for eternity.

CIVILIZATION IS NOT CHRISTIANIZATION

In its actual religious state the world is no nearer a scriptural millennium than it was hundreds of years ago. Civilization is not Christianization, nor culture, piety. None more obstinately resist the direct appeals of the gospel than the worldly religious moralists. They are the modern Pharisees, who crucify the Son of God afresh.

The remedy for discouragement and despair may be found in the reconstruction of our hope itself. If we have been looking for a result which the Word of God does not warrant; if the Scriptures do not represent the conversion of the world as the end or aim of the present dispensation—some of us have been working on a wrong basis, trying to achieve impossibilities, and of course we are discouraged; our inevitable drift is toward despair.

The soldier who mistakes the object of a campaign may see all the movements of the army in a false light. If he thinks the whole force of the foe is to be captured and converted into loyal adherents, the seizure of a few leading strongholds is only the next thing to absolute defeat. But if he learns that this is in accordance with orders from headquarters, and that subordinate officers are carrying out the plan of the great commander, seizing and holding in all parts of the enemy's territory the representative fortresses which command the situation, waiting until the general-in-chief himself arrives on the field with reinforcements, sounds his imperial clarion along the whole line of battle and leads on all his hosts to one overwhelming charge: what before seemed next to absolute defeat is now seen to be preparations for final and complete success.

Our author, in his fourth article on the Second Coming of Christ, points out the vital necessity of definite doctrinal preaching being resumed, if the church is not to lose all interest in evangelistic and missionary activity.

We believe that the Word of God will be found, on closer study, to hold up before us no hopes which are not even now steadily moving on toward full fruition. Nowhere is the purpose of this dispensation represented as the conversion of the world, but always the out-gathering from the world of a people for God. As Anthony Grant sententiously said in the Bampton Lectures of 1843, "The gospel is not to be in all places at all times, nor in all places at any one time, but in some places at all times and in all places at some time." God purposes that everywhere the banner of the cross shall be lifted as a witness to His grace, and "then shall the end come."

Our Lord's second coming is thus a center of both convergence and divergence; all Scripture converges in it, and all final success radiates from it. It is no small matter to have a rational scriptural hope, for hope is one of the main factors in a joyful, serviceable life; the blow which cuts off expectation is crushing.

Let the believer once get this scriptural conception of the world's evangelization rather than conversion, rooted within him as an intelligent conviction, and he organizes victory out of defeat. Hope that has lost her wings, plumes herself for tireless flight; the dirge, chanted at the grave of buried expectation, changes to the song of rejoicing at the rent tomb from which expectation rises to a new and deathless life. The whole world, with all its oppositions, becomes but the scaffolding about the church of God, to be used in construction, and torn down and burned up when the capstone of God's building is laid.

The Apostle James in inspired words outlined at that first church council the whole plan of the divine Architect and Builder.

"Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles to take out of them a people for his name. And to this agree the words of the prophets, as it is written: After this I will return and will build again the tabernacle of David which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof and I will set it up; that the residue of men might seek the Lord and all the Gentiles upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord who doeth all these things." And the Apostle significantly adds, as though to assure disheartened disciples that God's plan steadily advances toward completion, "known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world" (Acts 15:14-17).

We are not entrusted with a world's conversion, but with its evangelization. The power of man, or of all men combined, cannot convert one soul: that takes omnipotence, and to combine a million impotences, will not make one omnipotence. We are responsible, not for the conversion, but only for contact: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." There our commission begins and ends. With results we have nothing to do; and we are incapable of tracing or gauging them. We are to sow beside all waters; much seed will be borne by the receding flood to distant fields, whose harvests we shall never see, or connect with our sowing, until hidden secrets are revealed. It is enough for us that God's pledge is given that His Word shall not return unto Him void.

It is a matter of no small moment to get God's point of view and look at this world through His eyes. From that high outlook, all needless discouragement vanishes like a cloud, and we breathe the inspiration of a hope that shall never be ashamed, and behold a prospect bathed in the eternal sunlight of His promise. He has told us His pleasure and the mission whereto He sends forth His Word: first He gathers out from the nations His own elect; then, the times of the Gentiles being fulfilled, all Israel shall be saved; and then shall come the true millennium when "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea," and the residue of men shall seek after the Lord. Whatever triumphs the gospel may meanwhile achieve, they are only foreshadowings and foretastes of the great victory, at the epiphany of His parousia.

Everlasting Punishment

By A. E. Griffiths

IN THE issue of January 11 of THE RESTITUTION HERALD, a correspondent asks for information on this subject, and quotes Matthew 18:8 as one text which needs explaining. A question of this nature gives the impression that it comes from some one who is not thoroughly conversant with the truth, and if this is the case, perhaps the doctrine of the immortality of the soul is not entirely eradicated.

In the first place, we must realize the difference between life and death. We are of mortal nature; that is, we are subject to death. When Moses gave us the history of the creation, he states: "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul" (Gen. 2:7).

Imagine God making a man composed of bones, flesh, and blood. When he had got this far the man was not living, but after God put breath in him he became a live man, or soul. After Adam had been created, and also Eve his mate, they were told not to eat of a certain tree under penalty of death: "For in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die" (Gen. 2:17). We know that Adam disobeyed God's command, and consequently died (Gen. 5:5). This has been happening to his descendants ever since.

This is a dark picture, but God has diffused a little light into it on certain conditions, and those conditions are that we seek what God wants us to do and then obey Him. If we do this then He is willing to bestow on us eternal life, but if we disobey, eternal punishment will be our portion and that punishment is eternal death.

So many people cannot divorce themselves from the theory of an immortal soul. But we have shown conclusively that the first man was made a living soul. God did not put something separate into him called a "soul," but the man became a living soul or person. And souls, being persons, die: "The soul that sinneth, it shall die" (Ezek. 18:4). (Read also Psa. 78:50; Rev. 16:3; James 5:20.)

The foregoing remarks lead us to the text in question. Paul says, "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom. 6:23). This harmonizes with Romans 2:7: "Seek for glory and honour and immortality, eternal life." We surely would not seek for something we already possessed, and so those who believe and obey God are rewarded with eternal life and those who disobey with eternal death. And that means that the wicked pass out of existence: "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence" (Psa. 115:17). "For in death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave who shall give thee thanks" (Psa. 6:5). David knew that he was going to sleep in the grave. Notice what he says: "As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness. I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness."

The key to the whole matter is the fact that the word "grave" is translated from the Hebrew word sheol in the Old Testament and the Greek word hades in the New Testament. The word "hell" is translated from the same word, hades. Consequently, when we read about "hell" it refers to the grave.

The original word "hell" comes from the old Saxon word heel, which means "to cover." In many parts of England today the word "healing" is used to define the binding of a book, which, of course, is to cover it. So when we put a dead person in a grave we cover him with earth and the grave becomes "hell."

There is another text to which we would like to draw your attention: "Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell" (Matt. 10:28). The word "hell" in this verse is translated from the Greek Gehenna, known as the Valley of Hinnom (see Josh. 15:8 and 2 Kings 23:10). This valley was used for the worship of Molech; and Josiah in his zeal against idolatry dedicated it to pollution and as a place in which to burn the filth of the city. They threw the carcasses of men (criminals) and beasts into it and kept a fire continually burning so as to destroy all that went into it. This is the Gehenna or "hell" where the wicked will be thrown for destruction in the future age when the temple is built in Jerusalem. We read about it in Isaiah 66:23, 24. Notice, "Their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched." This reference answers the question about Matthew 18:8.

Mark records the same words of Jesus in Mark 9:43-48, and says they go to this same Gehenna, where the fire shall not be quenched. This does not mean that the fire shall burn for all eternity, but that it will not be quenched until all the wicked are destroyed by it. The Master explains this clearly in Matthew 13:41, 42: "The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity, and shall cast them into a furnace of fire."

Paul wrote to the Thessalonians in the same vein: "When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power" (2 Thess. 1:7-9). You will notice that the punishment is everlasting destruction. Everlasting torture is not taught anywhere in the Bible; therefore, when they are subjected to everlasting punishment they are completely destroyed and never live again in any form.

When you read the book of Revelation, you must remember that it is all symbolic. The first verse in the book tells us that Christ gave John this prophecy by "signifying" it by his angel. So it is in sign language, and when we read that "they shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever" (Rev. 20:10), it means that the torment will be absolute and complete. The Greek word basamos, which is translated "torment," means to test, question, inquire, and examine. So the wicked, after being subjected to examination or testing are to be entirely destroyed when found unfit for the kingdom of God.

Let us realize God's power and fit ourselves for His presence and not for destruction.

It is the little extra deed of kindness that is so much appreciated that is performed by the "Dorcas." It is the needful service of love that is carried out unheralded and unperceived by many. Does the mother of a growing family need a new layette for the tiny newcomer? Dorcas members get their nimble fingers busy at the task. Is a widow's coal bin getting empty? Fuel is purchased with the money that has come from the sale of a quilt made by skillful needlewomen among the "Dorcas."

Church grounds, which otherwise might have been neglected, are cared for by one group. Church interiors, which might be overlooked by "mere males," are beautified and made mete for the worship of God by another.

Further detail regarding the work of these societies is unnecessary; nor is it desirable. It is the quiet service that the Master approves and that the true "Dorcas" desires to render. The rewards are vastly greater than one can imagine who has never participated in such service of love.

May those who are numbered in such groups be worthy of their great predecessor. May they be true to the memory of that first Dorcas of whom only good may be said.

"We need Thy help that we may be Helpful to all around;
O, may Thy help and strength and love
In each frail heart be found.
We need Thy strength, dear Lord, to live
That we Thy life may prove,
That others may in us behold
Thy goodness and Thy love."

ARE WE AFRAID TO TRUST GOD?

not our churches are becoming too commercialized in their efforts to raise funds, and are consequently missing the very purposes for which they were intended? A church which cannot trust in God is not the church to attract members or to be capable of doing the Lord's work here on earth. Is the church afraid to trust God?

I think the best illustration of the charge of commercialism I have brought is the following poem sent to me a year or so ago. I do not remember who sent it, who wrote it, or from what paper it was taken, but it emphasizes the point perfectly:

RAISING MONEY FOR THE CHURCH

"O, Lord, I come to thee in prayer once more;
I've labored in Thy vineyard, Thou must know;
I've sold ten tickets for the minstrel show;
I've called on fifteen strangers in our town;
Their contributions to our church put down;
I've baked a pot of beans for Saturday's sale—
An old-time supper it is going to be.
I've dressed three dolls, too, for our annual fair,
And made a cake to be raffled there.
Bless the bean supper and the minstrel show,
And put it in the hearts of all to go.
Induce the visitors to patronize
The men who in our program advertise;
Increase the contributions to our fair,
And bless the people who assemble there;
Bless Thou the grab-bag and the gypsy tent,
The flower table and the cake that's sent;
And when Thou hast bestowed these blessings, then
We pray that Thou will bless our souls. Amen."

Destiny

In church one day
A beautiful girl
Sat beside me.
And she had
The loveliest voice.
And after church
I asked if she Would sing alone.

But her mother,
So richly dressed,
With soulless face,
Said Rebecca could not
Sing church hymns.

And Rebecca looked indignant
And said she could, too;
She could sing
"Beautiful Isle of Somewhere."
And so she sang!

And the sweetness
Of her voice
Brought tears
To our eyes.

And we asked her
If she had ever thought
Of consecrating her voice
To Christian service.
And her eyes brightened
And her cheeks flushed.

But her mother said
Rebecca was going
On the stage.
And Rebecca did!
Then one day I found
Rebecca's picture
In a large newspaper.
My little Rebecca
With the golden voice.

And she had made
A name for herself
As an actress.

And opposite her
Was the picture
Of the man
She had married,
And there were rumors of divorce.

And yet some people claim
That home environment has nothing to do
With a child's destiny!

What Manner of Love!

"Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God" (1 John 3:1).

The Authorized Version has as the title of this chapter, "The singular love of God in making us his sons." Indeed, when we consider what sort of sons God could have, and did have in His Son Jesus, we marvel at His manner of love in calling us His sons. Compare, if you will, the life of the Lord Jesus with our lives. Meditate upon the perfect qualities He had—spontaneous love for all, even His enemies; unswerving faith in the Father; perfect obedience to the Father's will. Does the realization of this marvelous love of God in making us sons in turn puff us up with pride? Does it not rather humble us, making us compassionate for the suffering, helping the weak, and by no means will allow us to become a stumblingblock unto others?

However, there is a yet deeper meaning in this text. The word "that" means, "in order that" (Companion Bible), "so that" (Diaglott). "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, (in order) that we should be called the sons of God." The purpose of God's love for us is to make us over into sons of God!

People have different ways of showing their love for their dear ones. Often, love will lead a mother unwittingly to spoil her son. A father may do too much for his boy along certain lines, and thus the boy does not develop strong character. Not so with God. His manner of love is calculated to develop in us the traits of faith, hope, and love that are essential to sons of God.

Encouragement to Preachers

In a study made by Professor Stephen S. Visher of Indiana University, it is stated that among the 24,278 biographies in "Who's Who," it required 48,000 unskilled laborers to furnish one son eminent enough to be included. Among carpenters, plumbers, mechanics and other skilled laborers, one out of 1,600 furnish a son or daughter for "Who's Who." The farmers did better, with one notable child from 800. But the astonishing fact is that among the clergy, one out of every twenty has a child listed among these distinguished persons.—Selected.

The Shepherd Is Calling

Out in the wilderness, far from the fold,
The Shepherd is calling His own,
One little lamb that is lost in the cold,
Away on the mountain alone.

Over the mountain side, thro' rocky steeps,
Thro' chasms both yawning and wide,
Following the cry, in the right path He keeps,
And comes to the wanderer's side.

Safely He gathers the lamb to His breast,
Not heeding His own wounded feet,
Joyfully singing, He cheers the distressed
With words that are soothing and sweet.

The Shepherd is calling, not one must be lost,
The Shepherd will follow, whatever the cost;
No lamb is too small for His kind, loving care,
He'll bring them safe home, any time, anywhere.

When the House Was Crowded

Just after the story of last week Jesus had to go out into the desert because of the people who continually crowded round Him. When the news of the healing of the leper was told everywhere, the people came from every direction with their sick and lame and blind. They all wanted to be healed by the Savior.

After He had rested in this quiet place a few days, He returned to the city of Capernaum. For He had a message for those lost and sin-sick people, and He must go where they were, even though it meant being very, very weary at times.

He was scarcely in the house, we read, before the people began to flock to Him. Most likely this was Peter's house, for we know He made that His home when He was in Capernaum. The people crowded around Him and He preached to them. Perhaps the people stood in the yard while Jesus spoke from the doorway.

If you will look in verse 2 of Mark 2, you will read that He preached "the word." Now we know this was the news about the kingdom of God, of which we read last week. For that was His great message.

All of you boys and girls know, I am sure, that God once had a kingdom on earth. You have read about those three greatest kings that ruled over it—Saul, David, and Solomon. You remember that many years after Solomon's great reign the kingdom was destroyed and the throne overturned. It is still overturned, we know.

But it will not always be so because God promised that there was One coming who had a right to that throne. Turn back in your Old Testament to Ezekiel 21:27. Read the words there. I'm sure that you will all agree that the One who has a right to that throne is none other than Jesus, God's own Son. And when He reigns He will be the greatest of all the kings of earth, even greater than Solomon.

It was all about this kingdom (which is still in the future) that Jesus was telling the people that day so long ago in Capernaum. He told them that if they would only come to Him in faith, believing, He would forgive their sins. Then they would be worthy to live in His kingdom and enjoy the blessings of it.

Now read verses 3 to 12 of Mark 2, and tell Mother the exciting story you find in them. Those four friends were so anxious to have the poor crippled man healed that they—but read it for yourself. You might like to draw a picture of it, too.

Notice especially what Jesus said to the fault-finding scribes who watched the healing. He told them it wouldn't make any difference whether He said to the poor man, "Thy sins be forgiven thee," or "Arise, take up thy bed, and walk." The result would be the same. The man would be healed.

And so will it be in God's kingdom. There will be no lame, no blind, no sick. For all wrong will be wiped out, all sins forgiven. It will be wonderful to be there.

"At even, ere the sun was set,
The sick, O Lord, around Thee lay;
O in what divers pains they met!
O with what joy they went away!"

AMONG THE CHURCHES

ATTENTION, CHURCH SECRETARIES!

Have you reported your membership, officers, pastor, and work to Bro. M. W. Lyon, 13905 Diana Ave., Cleveland, Ohio? You will recall that Bro. Lyon was appointed as General Statistician and that all churches were urged to give him the fullest cooperation by providing him with the data concerning their own local organization and membership. If you have not yet reported, will you please do so as soon as possible?

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

Bro. L. E. Conner and his wife are with us. You who have been favored by a visit during their westward journey know just what we are enjoying now, and you who are yet to see them and to hear Bro. Conner talk, can anticipate the treat in store for you.

Last Sunday morning the sermon to a capacity house was on the same text he had chosen just fifty-two years before on the occasion of his first sermon—that wonderful lesson on charity. The afternoon talk was on the 72nd Psalm.

If Bro. Conner was more eloquent and sincere than usual, the incentive was the presence of his daughters and their families. We enjoyed their happy reunion during the picnic dinner.

In the afternoon, many who attended morning services in their own home churches in near-by towns were able to be with us.

Before the morning sermon Sr. Railsback introduced Bro. Conner very graciously. She told us that he had baptized her more than forty years ago. Bro. Norman Macleod had charge of the Communion service, and Sr. Macleod the entire musical program. She was assisted by her son Duncan and Charlotte Rahn.

We are looking forward to another day with Bro. Conner a week from Sunday at Pomona.

At the regular business meeting on January 9, all of the old officers were reelected: Bro. Rogers, whose term of one year as trustee had expired, was reelected for a period of three years.

On last Thursday the Dorcas Society, at their regular meeting, gave Sr. Railsback a surprise birthday shower and dinner. Her appreciation of the many lovely tokens of esteem was so sincere and genuine that we were all glad to assist in the celebration. We rejoiced with her especially because her daughter, Sr. Rahn of Pomona, was able to be there with other Pomona friends.

Laura H. Bleasdale, Secretary.

PEABODY - ENGBRETSON

Miss Lorainé Peabody of Woodville, Wis., and Mr. George Engebretson of Clear Lake, Wis., were united in marriage at the parsonage in Chippewa Falls, Wis., Saturday afternoon, Jan. 15, 1938. The ceremony was performed by Elder A. E. Hoskins.

The bride was attractively attired in a gown of blue silver. The attendants were Mr. and Mrs. William Hurek. The groom is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Engebretson, faithful members of the Church of God at Graytown.

THE SHADOW OF DEATH

Does death cast a shadow? If it does, what is the shadow of death? David said, "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death" (Psa. 23:4).

A person may go "through" the shadow, but can he go "through" the "object" that casts the shadow?

Death is commonly called a "sleep" in the Bible. Therefore, sleep is the "shadow" of death. John 11:11-14; Psa. 23:4.

In Jude, verse 13, we are told what "death" is: "The blackness of darkness for ever."

Let us be careful that we are not carried by the swift current of the Jordan River (of death), down into the Dead Sea, from whence there is no outlet.

He who awakens in the morning has been "sleeping," but he who fails to awaken in the morning is "dead." C. Drabenstott.

Our little boy soprano, Duncan Macleod, sang two selections, and he is improving all the time and singing for programs and people."

JOHN MARK

Little is definitely known concerning the personal history and antecedents of John Mark (Acts 12:25), the author of the second Gospel. It is generally presumed that he was a native of Jerusalem, where his mother, Mary, had a large house and was apparently a woman of considerable means (Acts 12:12, 13).

How or when Mark came to believe the gospel and to be associated with the church at Jerusalem is not known. Some suppose that the "young man" referred to in Mark 14:51, 52 may have been the author of the record which bears his name. We do know, however, that "less than fifteen years after Pentecost both Mark and his mother were prominent members of the Christian community in Jerusalem." (New Standard Bible Dictionary.)

Mark accompanied Paul and Barnabas on their first missionary journey, but before its close he returned to his home in Jerusalem (Acts 13:5, 13). Paul disapproved so strongly of this apparent desertion that he refused to permit Mark to join himself and Barnabas on their second proposed tour. Barnabas, who is described as a "cousin" (Col. 4:10, R. V.) of Mark and consequently inclined to be more lenient toward him, was compelled to separate from the Apostle on his account, as he insisted that his relative should not be barred from the evangelistic party (Acts 15:36-40).

Some years later Mark was fully restored to Paul's favor and the Apostle asks the church at Colosse to "receive" him and speaks of him as one of his "fellow workers" in Rome. Still later he requests Timothy to bring Mark with him to the capital where Paul is in prison, "for he is profitable to me for the ministry" (2 Tim. 4:11).

Papias (who wrote in the first half of the second century) speaks of Mark as the constant companion of Peter and consequently well fitted to write a Gospel in harmony with Peter's teaching.

STORIES OF GREAT HYMNS "It Is Well With My Soul"

By Mary A. Gesin

HORATIO G. SPAFFORD was a prominent young lawyer of Chicago in the 1870s. His life was most pleasantly situated on a small estate at the edge of the city in what was then known as "Lake View." Here he lived with his dearly-beloved wife and three children. One autumn it was agreed that Mrs. Spafford should take the children to Europe to add to their education and culture by travel. Half way over, on the journey commenced under such happy auspices, a terrible storm arose during which many lives were lost, the three Spafford children among them.

The heartbroken mother and wife could cable to her husband at home awaiting news of them, only these words, "Saved alone." When the stricken father was able to look up amidst his sorrow he penned the words of this, one of our most beautiful hymns. With these circumstances in mind how much deeper meaning we see in the words, "When sorrows like sea billows roll."

Not many years afterward this same young lawyer with his family went to Jerusalem and there founded what is now the universally known "American Colony," primarily because of his firm belief in our Lord's soon return to earth—a faith which we also hold dear. The fourth verse of this grand old song puts this belief into majestic language.

I KNOW SOMETHING GOOD ABOUT YOU

Wouldn't this old world be better,
If the folks we meet would say,
"I know something good about you!"
And then treat us just that way?

Wouldn't it be fine and dandy,
If each handclasp warm and true
Carried with it this assurance,
"I know something good about you"?

Wouldn't life be lots more happy,
If the good that's in us all
Were the only thing about us
That folks bothered to recall?

Wouldn't life be lots more happy,
If we praised the good we see?
For there's such a lot of goodness
In the worst of you and me.

Wouldn't it be nice to practice
That fine way of thinking, too?
You know something good about me!
"I know something good about you!"

CHRIST'S WAY PRACTICAL

"Whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain" (Jesus).

The story is going the rounds of a city man who bought a farm. While examining the fence which had been the source of much quarreling in the past, the neighboring farmer said:

"That fence is a full foot over on my land."

"Very well," said the newcomer, "we shall set the fence over two feet on my side."

"Oh! But that is more than I claim," stammered the surprised farmer.

"Never mind; I would rather have peace with my neighbor than two feet of earth."

"That's sure fine of you," replied the farmer retractably, "but I couldn't let you do a thing like that. Let's not move the fence at all."

It is suggested that the next time you have a dispute about "rights," you try surprising the other fellow by giving him more than he claims and then see what happens.

MY PRAYER

Have words I spoke in anger
Caused another's tears to start?
Has a thoughtless act that I have done
Brought pain to some one's heart?
Have words of mine, that might have healed
A heart all bruised and sore,
Been left unsaid? Have I been slow
To enter sorrow's door?
Oh, Father of the Universe,
I pray Thee to forgive;
And from this day—I humbly pray—
God, teach me how to live.

Is some heart a little lighter
For some deed that I have done?
Is another's pathway brighter
For a song that I have sung?
Has a word of mine brought sunshine,
Where a cloud had been before?
Has my hand held balm and comfort
To a heart all bruised and sore?
Oh, Father of the Universe,
I thank Thee for this day;
And for Thy gentle, guiding hand
That helped me find the way.

“THAT BLESSED HOPE”

THE message of the second coming of Christ is no longer a distinctively denominational message of the Adventist bodies. Earnest men in all denominations believe and preach it. In fact, it is difficult to understand how any candid reader of the New Testament can fail to see this prominent truth, it stands out so clearly as the great hope of the church. Here is how Moody viewed it:

“Behold, I come quickly,” said Christ to John. Three times it is repeated in the last chapter of the Bible. And almost the closing words of the Bible are the prayer: ‘Even so, come, Lord Jesus.’ Were the early Christians disappointed then? No. No man is disappointed who obeys the voice of God. The world waited for the first coming of the Lord for four thousand years, and then He came. He was here only thirty-three years, and then He went away. But He left us a promise that He would come again; and, as the world watched and waited for His first coming, and did not watch in vain, so now, to them who wait for His appearing, shall He appear a second time unto salvation. Now let the question go around, ‘Am I ready to meet the Lord if He comes tonight?’ ‘Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh.’”

Moody rightly regarded the second coming of our Lord as a sanctifying hope and preached it as such. There is no teaching more practical than this.

Another great preacher, Prof. Charles R. Erdman, D.D., saw in this doctrine one of the strongest motives for evangelistic and missionary work. He writes:

“The return of Christ is a fundamental doctrine of the Christian faith. It is embodied in hymns of hope; it forms the climax of the creeds; it is the sublime motive for evangelistic and missionary activity; and daily it is voiced in the inspired prayer: ‘Even so, come, Lord Jesus.’”

“It is peculiarly a scriptural doctrine. It is not, on the one hand, a dream of ignorant fanatics, nor, on the other, a creation of speculative theologians; but it is a truth divinely revealed, and recorded in the Bible with marked clearness, emphasis, and prominence. . . . No other truth than that of the return of Christ is more inspiring for the immediate task of evangelizing a lost world. None other can make us sit more lightly by the things of time; none other is more familiar as a scriptural motive to purity, holiness, patience, vigilance, love. Strengthened by this blessed hope, let us press forward with passionate zeal to the task that awaits us—

“Till o’er our ransomed nature,
The Lamb for sinners slain,
Redeemer, Mediator,
In bliss returns to reign.”

This is clear reasoning and timely counsel. It has the seal of our Lord who commended that servant who is found “giving the household meat in due season.”

Probably the reason why some preachers fail to see the importance of the doctrine is their notion that the conversion of the world is the church’s task. There is no scriptural promise that the world will ever be converted. Jesus said, “This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world as a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come.” To some the gospel is a “savour of life unto life,” and to others it is a “savour of death unto death,” depending on whether they receive or reject it.

Dr. John McNicol of Toronto says:

“The conversion of the world is not the object of the church’s hope . . . the hope of the church is the personal return of her Lord. . . . The attitude of the New Testament church is represented by the Apostle John in the closing words of the Apocalypse. Visions of heavenly glory and millennial peace have passed before him. He has seen the new heaven and the new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness, and the Holy City, New Jerusalem, whose light was like a stone most precious. But, at the end of it all, the longing of the aged Apostle is not for these things to come. Greater than all these glories, dearer than all these dear things, is the Master Himself—and the prayer that rises from his heart as he closes his wondrous book is simply, ‘Come, Lord Jesus.’ . . . If we follow his example we will return to the simple, unmistakable, New Testament type of experience, and, with faces uplifted toward the veil, within which the Lord of glory waits, and with hearts all aglow with a personal love for Him, we will carry on, through all our life and service, the same apostolic prayer.”

To all of which we can say a hearty, Amen! And we might add, that the second coming of Christ is absolutely essential to salvation. Why, then, should we not rejoice in this “blessed hope” and tell it out to all who will hear? Let us be faithful to our calling.—The Herald of Life.

THANKFULNESS

We thank Thee, Lord, for the things that never happened—
The things whose near approach sent blinding fear,
Those things that make our hearts grow cold with terror,
By merely knowing that death stalked so near.

We thank Thee, Lord, for the things that never happened—
Obstructions seen in time to save the fall;
The smoke discovered that could cause disaster—
Oh, Lord, today we thank Thee for it all.

Catastrophies Thy watchful eye averted,
That saved us much in heartache and in loss;
Yes, we thank Thee for the things that never happened—
For bridges we have never had to cross.

Do the Wicked Live Forever in Torment?

By R. H. Judd

“WHEREFORE if thy hand or thy foot offend thee, cut them off, and cast them from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life halt or maimed, rather than having two hands or two feet to be cast into everlasting fire. And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life with one eye, rather than having two eyes to be cast into hell fire” (Matt. 18:8, 9).

God’s Word is given to men and women in their own language, for the express purpose that they may understand it. In stating truths that are vital to our present need and future salvation, it makes use of the plainest terms possible—mostly elementary and monosyllabic—that there may be no question as to its meaning.

Anyone who will read the passage quoted carefully, cannot but come to the (perhaps surprising) conclusion that it is the natural man, as we know and see him, that is said to be cast into hell. If this is true, and the hands and feet mentioned are literal, then the fire is literal also, and all are aware of the dreadful effects of fire on the human personality.

We cannot too strongly emphasize the fact that the Bible is a message to men and women as God created them (see Gen. 2:7). His history starts from there and is continued throughout the Scriptures with that point in view. Get this fact well in mind and the difficulties of many such passages will vanish.

We would next call attention to the fact that there are two outstanding contrasts, viz., “life” and “hell.” One is put in direct antithesis to the other. In other words, one is the negative of the other. So accustomed have we become to the theological idea that there is life in hades, we are naturally confused by such a text, and believe also that life is not extinguished in Gehenna. A study of the scriptural usage of the word “Gehenna” will reveal, however, that it denotes utter and irremediable destruction, a fact that has been frankly acknowledged by eminent scholars on both sides of this controversy. In these passages Christ was expressing in vivid language an already well-known fact. One so generally recognized, indeed, as to have passed into some of the trite proverbs known to man, such as, “For to him that is joined to the living there is hope; for a living dog is better than a dead lion” (Eccl. 9:4); “While there is life, there is hope”; “All that a man hath will he give for his life” (Job 2:4). Many a man has had arms and limbs amputated in order that he may live. The writer knows of at least one such person in Toronto. Throughout Scripture life and death are always in contrast.

The following analyses of several scriptural passages having to do with the destiny of the wicked were prepared at the request of the editor, and are published in answer to questions asked by a correspondent in our issue of January 11, 1938.

EVERLASTING FIRE—EVERLASTING PUNISHMENT

“Then shall he say also unto them on the left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels. . . . And these shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal” (Matt. 25:41, 46).

The meanings expressed in the former passage hold good here. The contrasts are life and death, for if life is the reward of the righteous, it obviously cannot be punishment of the wicked. If the reader will take a few moments to consider the matter, he will realize to his own surprise, no doubt, that death is the only punishment that can be everlasting. Every punishment that can be inflicted on man will terminate in death, and God alone can terminate that. People seem to temporarily forget that the sentence is pronounced against man, and not against some indefinable being of which we have no knowledge. Take away a man’s life and what is left? His everlasting punishment is an everlasting loss of life, the only possible means of coming into conscious contact with all that gives value to being. His loss is the measure of what the righteous gain, and the duration of both is the same.

Pertinent Comments on the News of the Day

Nazis Order Jews to Sell Stores

"The time is come, the day draweth near: let not the buyer rejoice, nor the seller mourn" (Ezekiel 7:12).

BERLIN, Germany, Jan. 24.—Directions were issued today for the "Aryanization" of German business, which is a newly coined word for the sale of Jewish business enterprises to Germans. The buyer must pay "only for the material value of the enterprise," it was declared, "and not for its reputation (goodwill). The price will not be especially advantageous for the buyer, and still less advantageous to the person selling it."

Asiatic Despotism Will Follow Another War

"To prepare the way of the kings of the east" (Rev. 16:12, Moffatt).

NANCY, France, Jan. 22.—In an address delivered in this city, United States Ambassador to France, William C. Bulliett, asserted today that another general European war would lead to "Asiatic despotism, ruling over the fields of the dead. There are still at large murderous clowns who write of their pleasure in the jolly sport of dropping bombs on helpless men. Their return to sanity may be long delayed." (This was probably a reference to the statement made recently by Vittorio Mussolini, son of the Premier of Italy, in a book of which he was the author. He described a bombardment which he directed as "exceptionally good fun." See Abreast of the Times, Dec. 7, 1937.)

In concluding his speech, Mr. Bulliett said that how to bring peace about was a problem so complex as to be "almost beyond human force." We agree with the Ambassador with the exception that we would delete the word "almost" from the assertion. Only "the zeal of the Lord of hosts" is equal to this stupendous task.

Find Very Old Tomb in Egypt

"They found an Egyptian" (1 Samuel 30:11).

CAIRO, Egypt, Jan. 22.—It was a living Egyptian that David's servants found in a field, but it was a dead one whom W. B. Emery, an English Egyptologist, reported finding recently. Only two weeks ago he unearthed what may have been the true tomb of Menes, the first Pharaoh, and his latest discovery was made at Sakkara, while seeking graves of Menes' servants. The contents of this second tomb, including a great crumbling coffin, exquisite bowls, and other objects, had apparently not been disturbed since the burial of the occupant, an Egyptian nobleman, whose interment, it is estimated, took place more than 5,000 years ago. The discovery of the tomb was hailed as a feat comparable to the finding of Tutankhamen's burial place in 1922. Egyptologists hitherto had thought the chances of finding such a tomb intact were negligible. Only in rare instances has a tomb been discovered that had not been robbed of much of its valuable contents. Of the seventy-two pyramids opened, only one was found to contain the body of the person for which it was built. In all other cases the pyramid had been entered and the riches buried with the dead, and also the body itself, carried away.

Rumanian Jews Seek Haven in Palestine

"Seekest thou great things for thyself? seek them not . . . saith the Lord" (Jeremiah 45:5).

BUCHAREST, Rumania, Jan. 22.—Rumanian Zionists planned a meeting today at which it was believed they would vote to appeal to the British Government to grant additional facilities for immigration to Palestine, where entry of Jews has been restricted. Authoritative sources, discussing various reports of Rumanian friendship with Germany and Italy, said today that no new treaties were necessary for the development of good relations between these countries.

Perhaps in the growing friendship of Rumania with Germany and Italy, may be found the cause for the anti-Semitic program now being inaugurated in Rumania.

BUCHAREST, Jan. 23.—Mr. Julius Berger of Jerusalem, delivered a pessimistic report on the possibility of the mass of the Jews in this country finding a refuge from Rumanian persecution in the Holy Land. In harmony with his report, the London Zionist organization telegraphed that 200 Jews could be received into Palestine under the 1937 quota providing that each could take with him $500 in cash, but that mass immigration of Jews to the homeland was practically impossible.

Medical students of Bucharest University notified University authorities today that they would strike if several Jewish assistant professors were not dismissed by Tuesday.

Is the Church Retreating?

By the Editor

THE three most powerful factors that enter into the life of any people for good are, the Church, the Home, and the State. Each of these factors contributes its quota to the enrichment of human life upon the earth, and to the restraint of those evil and demoralizing influences which would rob mankind of happiness, prosperity, and peace. The free and constant functioning of these three social forces, each in its own sphere of activity, yet all operating in perfect harmony with each other, is essential to the life and progress of mankind.

Should any one of these vital organs of the social body fail in the performance of its task, should its work be suspended or even misdirected for a time, the entire system of civilization which depends upon it for life and health would suffer.

There are many thoughtful people in the world today who are convinced that not only one of these essential factors in our social economy is wasting its power for good, and forfeiting its right to moral leadership, through misdirection and misapplication of its energy, but that all three—the Church, the Home, and the State—are doing this very thing. In short, they contend that the forces of good are retreating on every front before the forces of evil.

We would approach the question, however, from the religious standpoint alone. Therefore, we do not ask, Is the Home retreating under the assaults of the enemy of all righteousness? Nor do we inquire, Is the State losing ground and fleeing from the advancing armies of political iniquity? We must leave these questions to be both asked and answered by the sociologist and the statesman. Our question has to do only with that part of the problem with which we are the most familiar, the Church. And so what we ask is this: Is the Church of the living God retreating? If it is, there is, indeed, but little hope for this old world of ours! If the deepest, the most sacred, the most divine of all appeals to truth and goodness is failing to move mankind, its condition is deplorable in the extreme and but little hope remains!

IS THE CHURCH RETREATING?

But is it true? Is the Church of the living God now on the retreat? Is it fleeing before the enemy?

Before we venture to suggest an answer to our questions, let us study the situation thoughtfully and prayerfully, resting our final conclusions upon two things: first, the testimony of the Word of God; and, second, what we know of the position occupied by the Church at this time.

The general thought of the world and, we are sorry to say, of a great many sincere church members, is that the Church is retreating, that it is going backward rather than forward, that it is turning, reluctantly in many cases, it is true, from the vantage ground of truth it has so long occupied, and is being forced back over the road it covered with so much effort and sacrifice and pain during the past twenty centuries.

The famous English historian and novelist, H. G. Wells, is reported to have said recently with evident regret:

"Great multitudes of us are living in a state of faded religiosity. The formal religious organizations of the Atlantic world are little more than the spiritualized husks and trappings of long-abandoned efforts to begin a new way of life for mankind."

Dr. Henry High, at one time assistant secretary of the Methodist Board of Foreign Missions and editor of The Christian Herald, and, still later, an advisor of the President of the United States, commenting on this statement of Mr. Wells, confessed that "the facts seem to justify his conclusion. The drift of the times is away from the Church. . . . Almost every current discussion of the Church by churchmen starts out with his assumption."

In other words, according to Mr. High, the Church is not only retreating, but it recognizes and confesses that it is doing so!

The Christian Century, said to be the most influential Protestant paper published, in summing up one of the world religious conferences held recently, asserted that "it was far more than one church that showed itself in full retreat at (the conference; it) was a warning that defeatism is the mood of the churches" everywhere today.

That was a very disheartening confession for a great religious journal to make and also a most alarming one. This is especially true in the light of the positive pronouncement made by Jesus Christ regarding the irresistible power of the organization He founded and for which He died. Addressing Peter on one occasion He said: "On this rock I will build my church, and the powers of death shall not subdue it" (Matt. 16:18, Goodspeed).

If this is true, as so many assert, that the Church is really retreating, then these words of Jesus have but little meaning for us today. If the Church is failing, if it is giving way under the attacks of sin, then "the gates of hell," or "the powers of death," are prevailing successfully against it, and Jesus' words are proven to be untrue.

It is, therefore, a serious question that we are facing, a question involving the truthfulness of our Lord Himself, when we ask: Is the Church of the living God retreating?

WORLDLY CONDITIONS INDICATE RETREAT

Conditions prevailing in the world, when viewed wholly from a worldly standpoint, or from the standpoint of one not fully informed as to the nature of God's purposes in this present age, clearly show that (Please turn to page 10)

The Importance of Prophecy

WHAT is the greatest and most distinctive attribute of God? Various answers might be given to such a question. God was the Creator. No other can create—but man can seemingly create—and some might be deceived if that were the only distinctive attribute of God. But we find there is an attribute of God which none can duplicate, and deceptions concerning it can last only for a short time and are easily found out. That is the power of prophecy. “To whom will ye liken me, and make me equal, and compare me, that we may be like? . . . Remember this and shew yourselves men, bring it again to mind, O ye transgressors. Remember the former things of old: for I am God, and there is none else; I am God, and there is none like me. Declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done” (Isa. 46:5, 8, 9). And so prophecy shows us the true God as distinguished from the false.

Why does God want us to know Him and not be deceived? It is because He is love—He has an interest in us. The Psalmist tells us that “his mercy endureth for ever.” “Thus saith the Lord, the King of Israel, and his redeemer, the Lord of hosts; I am the first, and I am the last; and beside me there is no God. . . . Fear ye not, neither be afraid: have not I told thee from that time, and have declared it?” In His great love, God has desired we might not fear as we see things take place in this world. And so He has told us before of these things, in the Bible. Jesus revealed this true use of prophecy when He said, “Now I tell you before it come, that, when it is come to pass, ye may believe.” Prophecy is thus of special help to the believer—the one who really is following Christ. He studies the Word of God and compares it with history. There is historical and archeological proof that the Bible was written before history. And so as we see how history has fulfilled the Bible prophecies, our faith is made strong. And even now, as we see world conditions fulfilling the prophecy concerning the “last days” we realize that the Word is true, and we rejoice in its promises. And so it is truly wonderful that God in His great love has given these prophecies.

As with all other things, there is both a right use and a wrong use of prophecy. We live in an age when people are hungry for the unusual, the sensational, the daring things. The world is troubled—people want to know why—and what they may expect to happen in the affairs of nations. They are ready and anxious to read anything which purports to know the future, not because they want to learn about the Word of God, but to satisfy their curiosity, and to see if the interpretations given do come true. There is an ever-growing class of periodicals, supposedly religious, which cater especially to this class. The chief hold on their subscribers and readers is through sensational articles on the prophecies and huge, daring illustrations of world characters depicting their interpretation of their place in prophecy.

Thoughtful people easily recognize that this is a wrong use of the prophetic Word. It tends to bring discredit and distrust in the Bible. Such papers and articles practically always speak as though they were sure of their sensational interpretations and predictions. But if it happens that things do not turn out as they expect, they never mention the fact, but go serenely on making more predictions. And the people forget past failures and continue to give support to such papers.

The great warning message for this time is not that a war is about to begin, or that Hitler is passing some new rules in Germany, or that Mussolini is about to take some new possessions, or that Japan is about to conquer China. The warning message is much more than these—and even more than the message that Christ is coming soon. Of this last point we are sure—of the others we can only speculate. But if I were warned and thoroughly aroused about all of these things so that I understood them perfectly—and then if I died tomorrow, having heard no further message, all would have been to no avail. I would never have heard the real warning message of the Bible—which is that every individual will some day have to give an account of his deeds while here and will have to meet his Maker. An important part of the true message is a warning against the danger of missing the wonderful prize to be had, and joy of eternal life on a perfect earth made new.

The sensational article and huge picture may catch the eye of the curious, but it is not apt to lead souls to Christ. It leads to a state of hysterical excitement which is not conducive to true spiritual growth. Even in the most important and trying times just before His crucifixion, Jesus never became excited. He was always calm. He taught His disciples that it was possible to be zealous and do a great work for Him without radicalism or sensational propaganda? His true church will always follow His example.

There is another point of information we can gain concerning the periodicals which publish articles which give final interpretations to prophecies not yet come to pass. They are most probably controlled by a single individual. There are many religious papers which are so published, and there is nothing wrong about that. An individual who publishes a paper is free to publish just what he pleases, and interpret any part of the Scriptures just as it appeals to him. While we might consider such to be “private interpretation,” yet it is the right of an individual publisher.

An official church organ which really speaks the united voice of its membership could not if it would wish to, carry such sensational articles and pictures. Different Bible students have different ideas of the way future prophecies will probably work out. Those who understand the purpose of the prophetic Word do not care to bind themselves to definite predictions about such things. When they come to pass God's true people will see and know and their faith will again be strengthened so that they will be able to withstand the trying times.

Some supposedly "official organs" do at times indulge in sensational articles and pictures of the type we are discussing, but careful investigation will reveal that the paper and the organization supporting it are controlled by one individual who puts his ideas to the forefront to the exclusion of all others. As careful students of the Word, we believe in studying together and withholding any "private interpretation." The great prophecies which have been definitely fulfilled in the past, we declare, and frequently carry articles explaining their fulfillment. Brief, carefully worded studies suggesting possible future developments are also frequently carried. But our great message of salva- tion through faith in Christ, who was the true Son of God, lived a perfect life in this world for our example, died that we might be spared from eternal death, rose again that we might have the assurance of the resurrection from the natural death, and ascended on high, from whence we look for Him to come soon to redeem all His true children.

May God help us never to be deceived into thinking that the group which puts out the "best appearing" publications, boasts the loudest of its achievements, and publishes the most sensational articles and pictures, has the most truth. The true message of the Lord goes ever onward, without display or ostentation. May we take courage in the assurance that "nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his" (2 Tim. 2:19).—S. T. Kauer, editor of The Bible Advocate.

Mosaic Roots of Christianity

CHRISTIANITY, we say, is two thousand years old; but in reality it is infinitely older than that. Its roots reach far back of Bethlehem, almost to the lost Garden of Eden. They cross the dusty Syrian desert. They lie beneath the forgotten walls of Canaan and the granite slopes of Sinai. It is suggested by some ardent religionists that Christian people should confine their attention to the New Testament; that living under the covenant of grace, we are no longer concerned with the covenant of the law; that the code of Moses is incompatible with the code of Christ.

The unprejudiced student, however, will know that Christianity did not spring into being over night, like a mushroom, not even on that wonderful Bethlehem night. A movement so strong at its seeming birth, so appealing to the multitudes at its seeming adolescence, establishing itself so victoriously over the world-wide area during its seeming maturity—such a movement must have roots that extend far beyond the spot from which they seem to spring.

Christianity began before God called Abram out of Chaldea, but it was then that God revealed His plan to select from humanity a certain people whom He linked to no other existing nation; to whom, indeed, He gave merely the name of "wanderers" (Hebrews). These people were by Him made into a nation—Israel. They were taught by the highest cultured nation of that day (Egypt) the art of national housekeeping; were inseparably welded together by theocratic law and government, and bred from generation to generation in the atmosphere of religious genius, so that in due process of time these Israelites could, in partnership with God, produce One who deserved the titles "Son of Man" and "Son of God."

The Old Testament may be likened to the prepared soil of Christianity; Judaism to the shell of the Christian faith. At the appointed time Christianity left "its outgrown shell by life's unresting sea"; but that soil, that shell, are intensely interesting and important. Botanists are concerned not only in the flower, but in the kind of soil that produces it; metallurgists care not only for the gold, but for the veins that carry it; psychologists study not only the mood, but the causes that gave it birth. The Christian comes to a greater appreciation of his faith by the study of the divinely wise and age-old preparation of the human race for the appearance of Jesus Christ as told in the Old Testament. Doubtless, there is truth and help and beauty in the New Testament, all by itself, but there is far more excellent appreciation and understanding of the whole Christian message, yes, of God Himself—when the gospel is studied in the light of those majestic centuries that made so straight and clean the way for the coming of the King.

In that long, long trail of years there is one century of especially significant contribution to Christianity—the era of Moses. It is not strange that he grew up in Egypt and then fled to the fastnesses of Sinai, there to become "a shepherd of white sheep" for forty years. After a while he would lead two million people out of that Egypt he knew so well, into that wilderness which in storm and sunshine he had tramped with his flock until he knew every cranny in its rocks, every dip in its hollows, every winding path and trail that crisscrossed its wide expanse.

In this historic drama of the making of a Messianic nation, what part did Moses play? What roots has Christianity that run back into the land of the burning bush? It is eminently fruitful to study that era, from the standpoint of the faith we now claim.

First of all, it is quite clear that Moses put the note of authority into the Hebrew religion. Naturally, a people growing up wild and free as had these nomads, were inclined to be very much a law unto themselves. When they became slaves to Egypt, where they had no share in the making of the law, but simply in the obeying of it, they did not love and honor its restrictions and directions more, but less. Hence, when after four hundred years the day of freedom dawned, and they struck again the wide open spaces of the desert, there came the instinctive revolt against all compulsion—the wild urge of a bonded people for unrestrained liberty. One can sympathize with Moses in his leadership of such a group. It needed a master mind and hand. Moses had herded sheep for forty years. Could he lead men? He could? Firmly, gently, insistently, he at last brought them to know the rightness and force of “Thou shalt” and “Thou shalt not,” in religion and in life. The Hebrew learned to obey.

The trends of modern psychology are distinctly away from this ideal. It is considered ill-advised to subject anyone to compulsion in anything. “Freedom” is interpreted as release from all restriction—freedom to follow whatsoever impulse is uppermost. Religion has thereby become mostly a matter of choice and desire. Not only that we may be free to choose a God or no, but within that choice of God there is “personal liberty.” The Bible, it is claimed, has no authority—it is merely suggestive. The church has no power—it has merely a challenge. There is, according to modern psychology, no room for authority in religion, for authority’s stock is below par in every mark of life.

The student of Christianity, however, cannot honestly accept that view without reservations. Jesus said some things that seem to carry very clearly the note of authority. “Ye must be born again”; “Unless ye become as a little child ye cannot enter”; “He shall say to them on his left hand, . . . depart . . . inasmuch as ye did it not.”

Read the New Testament carefully. It is not a wishy-washy, “let-your-conscience-be-your-guide” program. It rings with the music of love, but unequivocally it circumscribes the areas of personal freedom. Christianity, presented by Jesus, stands as a religion of authority—the same high authority that burned its sternness into the stones brought by Moses from the mount. Of Jesus Himself they said, “He speaketh as one having authority.” Christianity is a religion not only of choices but of obediences. There are in it some matters which admit neither personal opinion nor debate. There is a fine tonic effect in the word “must” that braces Christianity wondrously, and gives it staying qualities which commend it heartily to a generation weakened and sickened by a psychology that has no backbone.

A second root of Christianity is discovered in Moses’ introduction and enforcement of harmony between life and religion, a most characteristic element of Christianity. That, too, was new for the captives so lately out of Egypt. One’s duty to God was a certain thing; one’s daily life was quite as certainly a different thing. But under the tutelage of this son of the desert they came to know that religion must be woven into the warp and woof of life. The ethics and morals of the Ten Commandments were the pronouncements of Jehovah for daily living—touching decisively their eating and sleeping, their work and play, their government and schools. It was irksome, perhaps, but way down the years there waited the perfect flower of that sort of faith—Christianity with its Golden Rule. It is quite evident that the socially revolutionary, reconstructive program of Christianity could never have issued from a religion whose practices were related simply to the forms of worship.

(NOTE: While heartily agreeing with the general thought and purpose of this excellent article, the editor of THE RESTITUTION HERALD believes that the author has erred of Christ were declared to be “the salt of the earth” and here in a measure. For while it is true that the followers “the light of the world” and thus agents for the sweetening, preserving, and illuminating of a sin-corrupted and sin-darkened society, the final outcome of Christianity will not be the carrying out of a “socially revolutionary, reconstructive program” in this present age, but quite the reverse. In fact, the primary purpose of Christianity now is to “take out” of present corrupt society “a people” for God’s name—to separate those who respond to the gospel call entirely from the rest of mankind in order that they may be cleansed and qualified to be co-workers with the King when He comes, who alone will be able to accomplish the reconstruction of society, which the author rightly anticipates will one day be done. The work of Christianity today is first destructive—not socially, but individually—it destroys sin in all who believe and obey the gospel of the kingdom of God. It does not reform, it transforms and recreates. The real Christian is not an old sin-stained person, who has discontinued his most obvious evil practices, but he is “a new creation in Christ Jesus.”

“Society” must eventually pass through a similar experience. It cannot and it will not be reformed or “reconstructed” through the influence of Christian teaching, but it must be destroyed in its entirety when the Lord comes before it, too, may be made new. “To this day, we know, the entire creation sighs and throbs with pain; . . . even we sigh deeply for the redemption of the body that means our full sonship” (Rom. 8:22, 23, Moffatt). We resume our author’s own words.)

During the years between Moses and Christ, the vision of that harmony grew faint, and Judaism undertook to pay its respects to God without any special respect for its neighbors. One might worship beautifully in the temple, and behave shamefully on the street. No doubt the crowd that dragged the adulterous woman to the feet of Jesus were an unusually pious lot. But in the heart of Christianity lived the seed of the ancient rule of Sinai, and Christ restored the old Mosaic emphasis. In effect He told His people that there could be no vitality in their approach to God without an equally vital outreach toward their fellows.

The third, and perhaps most significant contribution made to our faith by the shepherd-statesman, was the implanting in the heart of the Jew the Messianic Hope. Israel, said he, is a chosen people, chosen to be the progenitors of the Messiah. We do not know the time, but some day a Jewish girl will mother the Redeemer. Who, out of all the maidens of Israel, will so live that this honor may come to her? So Moses fired every Jewish girl with a great motive for high and holy living, and it is significant that though Jewish men seemed morally little superior to those of neighboring nations, Jewish women were and always have been, among the cleanest, morally highest, of the world.

Christianity continues to be a religion of dreaming and striving. It is the most idealistic religion in the world. It offers wealth—but the treasure is spiritual; it promises joy—but no carnal, lustful paradise (as does, for example, Mohammedanism). It teaches happiness—but not ribaldry. Always its challenge is to those things which are within and above. One of the greatest inducements of our faith is its power to keep us unsatisfied and to send us always on the greater quests of life. "We would see Jesus" is the motive driving millions of hearts on the upward trail and keeping them from surrender to the low. The root of this great urge is uncovered in the magnificent words of Moses, the grand old lawgiver of Judaism, "The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a Prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him ye shall hearken" (Deut. 18:15, 18).—O. G. Herbrecht in New Century Leader.

Condemned by Itself

WHAT is condemned by itself? Why, evolution is! Says an able writer: "A few years ago a college professor, James H. Leuba, decided to find out just what college students and teachers believed regarding the great cardinal doctrine of God. He employed the questionnaire method, and published his findings in a book entitled, The Belief in God and Immortality. Professor Leuba is an avowed higher critic and liberal, yet in this volume he has proved to be a demonstration of the contention of orthodox Christians that the evolutionary philosophy of life drives the idea of a personal God out of the life."

Professor Leuba continues in his book (p. 202), saying, "Considered all together, my data would indicate that from forty to fifty per cent of the young men leaving college entertain an idea of God incompatible with the acceptance of the Christian religion, even as interpreted by the liberal clergy."

Yes, yes! We must admit it! The modern drift among college students is toward evolution at an alarming rate! What means this? It can mean nothing less than the rejection of a personal God, and His only begotten Son, our Lord Jesus Christ.

On page 212 is a summary of his study of the questionnaires of the college students. He says:

The deepest impression left by these records is that, so far as religion is concerned, our students are groveling in darkness. Christianity, as a system of belief, has utterly broken down, and nothing definite, adequate, and convincing has taken its place. Their beliefs, when they have any, are superficial and amateurish in the extreme. There is no generally acknowledged authority; each one believes as he can, and few seem disturbed at being unable to hold the tenets of the churches."

On page 249 he says: "Over two thirds of the greater men are not able to affirm belief in the God of the Christian churches." He means by "the greater men," the most noted scientists.

In another book by this learned professor, A Psychological Study of Religion, he says (p. 315): "The leaders in philosophy, science, literature, and even in religion, as well as increasing numbers of the rank and file, reject openly or secretly the traditional belief in a divine Father in direct communication with man."

With regard to evolution, the editor of the Outlook said that "the conception of evolution has come as a new revelation of God." But how can the editor square himself with Jesus, who says, "The only begotten Son . . . hath declared (revealed) him"?

Says Professor W. H. Faunce of Brown University: "The fundamentalists present the dread alternative: 'Science or the Bible—you cannot believe both.'"

But the fundamentalists do not say, "Science or the Bible." They do say, "Evolution or the Bible—you cannot believe both."

He who holds up, as does Professor Faunce, the idea that Christians and the Bible are opposed to science, is infringing on the divine regulation which says, "Lie not one to another"! That the church of God believes that true science and the Bible are mutually antagonistic is false.

William J. Bryan, Dean Gray, Dr. Haldeman, etc., have been just as loyal to science as this Professor Faunce, or Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, ever dared to be!

Dr. S. P. Cadman, a clergyman of Brooklyn, is quoted by Faunce as saying: "Of all the theories science has put forth, that of evolution is the most capable of being reconciled with revelation." And Professor Faunce swallows such a hollow declaration with great gusto! This statement is as false as it is wicked.

Touching this perilous situation an able scribe has well said:

"To such a pass has come the so-called higher education in a land founded by praying Puritans! As believers in the fundamentals of Christianity, we have always held that the evolution interpretation employed in all fields of learning would ultimately change men's basic conception of God and Christianity; that it would banish God and nullify Christianity. And, lo, a liberal now rises to confess that just this has taken place; and few feel to dispute his conclusions because they are based on the written replies of the students and teachers investigated. (over)

"It is high time that Christian parents remove their children from such schools, and that a sharp line of cleavage be made between those who hold the fundamentals of Christianity and those who reject them; 'for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? . . . or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel' (2 Cor. 6:14, 15)?"

THE WEALTH OF GOD'S CHILDREN

By Cantwell Drabenstott

"JESUS answered and said, Verily I say unto you, There is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake, and the gospel's, but he shall receive an hundredfold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come eternal life" (Mark 10:29, 30).

None of us have many brothers and sisters in the family of the flesh, but when we come into Christ we have a hundredfold now, in this time, of brothers, sisters, mothers, and children, whom we have taught the truth. So Paul taught Timothy, whom he addresses as "my own son in the faith" (1 Tim. 1:2). Christ spoke of those who believed in Him as "little ones" (Mark 9:42), and called His disciples "children" (John 21:5).

As for houses and lands, wherever we go among the brethren we are welcomed by them with the greatest pleasure and told to make ourselves "at home." And so we enjoy the houses and lands (produce) of every brother and sister whom we visit. Because we are now members of the family of God our Father, we have a hundredfold more brothers and sisters, homes, houses, and lands, to enjoy than we had in the family of the flesh.

"With persecutions." Yes, persecutions will arise, both from the world and also from "false brethren." Jesus foretold the first (John 15:18-21), and Paul predicted the second (2 Cor. 11:26).

We are a new family, the nature of which Jesus defined when He said: "Whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother" (Matt. 12:50). To fully understand this statement, the entire passage of which it forms a part should be read, beginning at verse 46. We see here two families set in contrast with each other by our Lord Himself.

Now, as to forsaking all the world and following or serving Christ: We do forsake all the world (which Paul describes in Galatians 1:4 as "evil") with regard to the gospel and faith. That is, we forsake all who are not of the faith, together with their sinful works, but we unite with all who are of faith, and our material wealth is augmented. At the same time our spiritual riches are increased by an entirely new inheritance—eternal life—which we receive by promise, if we qualify for it.

THE RIGHTEOUS KING

"Remove the diadem, and take off the crown . . . I will overturn, overturn, overturn, it: and it shall be no more until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him" (Ezekiel 21:26, 27).

ANYONE familiar with the life of Jesus, is also impressed with the duality of His nature. As William N. Pile expressed it: "I partake of the characteristics of my mother and of my father. Jesus was the Son of God and the son of Mary." It was a miraculous birth. Being literally Mary's son, prophetically Jesus was the son of David, because Mary descended from King David.

There were two promises made by Jehovah to Abraham, and they both were of land. One was for the land of Canaan, which his descendants occupied in his day. The other was of "the whole world" for "an everlasting possession" and comprehended a resurrection for his descendants, "the faithful"; or, prophetically speaking, for Christ, "The Resurrection," and those baptized "into him."

Although armed with Jehovah's own promise, Abraham understood that in his day he had possession of "not so much as to set his foot upon," so that when Sarah his wife died, when offered by the sons of Heth a field as a gift for her burial place, he refused it, buying rather from Ephron a field of Machpelah, where Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were afterwards all buried.

Abraham's faithfulness would not compromise the gift of the Promised Land by taking any part of it before he should receive it all from the hand of Jehovah!

The son of Abraham according to the flesh was Isaac. The son of Abraham according to the Spirit was and is Christ.

In miniature, the "planting" of the Promised Land was in Palestine! (If H. G. Wells says "nothing ever happened in Palestine," he may well be glad if he is privileged to eat of the fruit of that neglected land!)

The 110th Psalm is a high sierra of prophetic implications of which Peter, under direct Pentecostal inspiration, reached the summit in verse 1: "The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand until I make thy foes thy footstool." Jehovah, speaking through David!

Then at verse 5: "The Lord (Jehovah) at thy right hand shall strike through kings in the day of his wrath. He shall judge among the heathen, he shall fill the places with the dead bodies; he shall wound the heads over many (margin, "great") countries."

In the alignment of nations that has been forming about the Mediterranean, Russia — and pronouncedly, Italy — is displaying marked interest, particularly in Palestine.

The British people are noted as the most successful colonizers in the world. Paralleling this fact, the British Lion is "marked" by a land-grabbing spirit by which it contrived, under Allenby, to get a "paw" on Palestine, and there it has remained. It may be significant that Great Britain is known to many Bible students as the largest remnant of Isaac's sons (Saxons). Perhaps none need wonder at the festering position Britain finds itself in in Jerusalem just now, when continual snarling and snapping sounds have been repeatedly heard thereabouts. Even the lion-hearted have had to be intent.

The claims of any of the nations to the Holy Land are all baseless! But "wheresoever the carcase is there will the eagles (birds of prey) be gathered together."

However, the words to Daniel will be fully verified: "But the judgment shall sit . . . and the kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him" (Dan. 7:26, 27).—J. W. Conrow in The Herald of Life.

DO THE WICKED LIVE FOREVER?

he lifted up his eyes, being in torments" (Luke 16:23).

Why read Luke 16:23 without reading Luke 16:22? Or, better still, read the narrative from verse 19, where it begins. The only fair way to construe any person's language is to read the entire passage under consideration. The man described in verse 19 is unquestionably the same man referred to in verse 23. Most of us would have little difficulty in describing such a man, his whole physical make-up, including the most expressive portion of his being, his eyes. Verse 22 tells us that this same man, eyes and all, was buried and, without any change in the conversation, the next verse tells us that "in hell (hades) he lifted up his eyes . . . and seeth Abraham." How could a man that was buried lift up his eyes except in parable? Impossible, utterly impossible! In Genesis 25:7-10 we read: "And these are the days of the years of Abraham's life which he lived, an hundred and threescore and fifteen years. Then" (mark the word) "Abraham gave up the ghost, and died in a good old age, an old man full of years . . . and Isaac and Ishmael his sons buried him in the cave of Machpelah." John, the 8th chapter, and Hebrews, the 11th chapter, also record the fact that Abraham died. If Abraham was "an old man" in 1853 B. C., we leave the reader to calculate his age in Luke 16:23, and to explain how the rich man, never having seen him before, recognized him. Obviously, the story is a parable.

Our correspondent may remind us that the beggar "was carried . . . into Abraham's bosom." If we should ask him what it was that was carried, like others, he would doubtless reply that it was his "spirit." The narrative, however, does not even mention "soul" or "spirit." We would point out that if it was the spirit that was carried, then, according to verse 22, it was the spirit that "died," for that which "died" was "carried." But we doubt whether our friend would be prepared to admit that a spirit required to be carried.

The sheol (or hades), where the rich man was, is the place of burial (in the generic sense), where people "perish" and are "consumed," the following passages should be sufficient to convince the most skeptical: Numbers 16:33; Job 24:19, 20; Psalm 49:14; Isaiah 38:1, 18; Psalm 6:5; and many more that might be quoted.

TORMENTED DAY AND NIGHT FOREVER

"And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever" (Rev. 20:10).

Here we have the devil, the beast, and the false prophet. The beast is unquestionably, as all eminent Bible students agree, representative of political power. Logically the other two are representative also. Space will not permit us to go into these details.

Fire and brimstone and the effects they produce have been well understood throughout human history. What fire does is well described in the previous verse. Why it should do one thing in verse 9, and quite a different thing in verse 10, needs explanation that no man has as yet given. The word "are" is in italics, and may be as correctly translated "were." It is no uncommon thing, even today, to speak of an object as still in the fire long after it has been consumed. Comparison of scripture with scripture will show that the "smoke of her torment" and "the smoke of her burning" are equivalent expressions. Smoke has no torment.

The word "torment" does not always mean conscious suffering. In Matthew 14:24 the same word is used in reference to the boat in which Christ slept. The beast and the false prophet are represented as being cast alive into the lake of fire, but not kept alive, any more than Korah, Dathan, and Abiram were kept alive when they went down into sheol. They "perished" in their iniquity. In Daniel 7:11 we read: "I beheld, even till the beast was slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame." This is commonly believed to be the same beast (the Roman world power) which is referred to in Revelation. The word "for ever" in Scripture is always limited to the lifetime of the person or object to which it is joined. To this very day property is deeded to "him and to his heirs forever." Hannah said she would take Samuel to Shiloh "that he may appear before the Lord for ever" (1 Sam. 1:22). In verse 28 she says, "I have granted him to the Lord as long as he liveth."

"THE SMOKE OF THEIR TORMENT"

"And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name" (Rev. 14:11).

In connection with this verse, the reader is urged to read the following passages carefully: Isaiah 34:9, 10; Revelation 18:18 and 19:3. These, and other similar texts, together with Revelation 20:10, speak of fire and brimstone, smoke and burning, in harmony with our own experience with such things and, as we have noted, in the way in which the Bible universally uses the terms, as agents of destruction. Could any man of reason, facing the facts calmly, arrive at any other conclusion? (OVER)

One word of vital importance that occurs in most of the passages cited is "smoke." The writer submits that this is one of the most forceful words in any of these passages, indicating complete destruction. There positively can be no smoke without consumption. Smoke is itself the proof of the destruction of that which produced the smoke. So true is this, that we say expressively, "It has gone up into smoke." A more apt illustration of utter destruction could not be found expressed in a single word. Bible words describing the ultimate fate of the ungodly are among the most simple, yet the most forceful, in the English language. Here are a few: "death," "destroy," "perish," "blot out," "burn up," "consume," "corruption," "shall not be," "everlasting destruction," etc. THE RESTITUTION HERALD has never taught that the wicked "won't go into everlasting punishment." They will do so, for the only punishment that can be everlasting is death, and death is "the wages of sin" (Rom. 6:23). Anyone who will read and believe from the heart, the clear and definite statement of John 3:16, is unlikely to be led astray from any fundamental truth.

MAKING UNLEAVENED BREAD FOR MEMORIAL

TAKE one pound of genuine whole-wheat flour, preferably whole seed wheat ground in your sight; three pints of water, preferably spring water, uncontaminated with aluminum, chlorine, or other so-called "purifier" chemicals. Only these two elements, flour and water, are used; no salt, no sugar, nor any other ingredients ordinarily put in bread.

Mix flour and water, stirring thoroughly. Spread batter thinly on grill or in a moderately hot pan or skillet, taking care to put no fat or grease of any kind in the clean, dry pan, or on the grill. Handle as an ordinary pancake, until both sides are well done; before turning it over, cut cake in quarters. When done, put pieces in oven, with heat not over 325 degrees Fahrenheit, to bake thoroughly until crisp and dry, ready to serve.

It is well to practice a while in making this bread, so as to obtain best results whenever needed. This is a delicious, nourishing, and scripturally correct food for regular use.

A DISCUSSION

Adventist: And so, my brother, you claim the wicked will live forever in hell?

Orthodox preacher: Oh, no! They do not live forever there. They are dead forever, in hell, for "life" means happiness, and "death" means misery, you know.

Adventist: So? Suppose we examine the Scriptures a bit. "Dust shalt thou (the serpent) eat all the days of thy life" (thy happy existence) (Gen. 3:14). Did God mean that? Does God begin in Genesis by telling us that life is happiness? Then, if so, the devil was promised a happy existence "all the days" of his life (see John 8:40-44). Is that your idea of life, my brother?

Orthodox preacher: Well, I never thought of it in that way. But, anyhow, death means misery. The worm dieth not. It never dies (Mark 9:48). That proves the soul lives eternally—never dies.

Adventist: What do you mean by that word "die"? Does the worm never get miserable? Is that it?

Orthodox preacher: Oh, well, not exactly.

Adventist: Is it not true that you orthodox folks give the advent definition of death here? Why do that? You do not do that with the other texts you quote on life and death. Please explain.

Orthodox preacher: I'll have to see you later. Excuse me for now, please. Good day!

Adventist: Good day. But use your thinker from now on!—Messiah's Advocate.

THE POWER OF PRAYER

Lord, what a change within us one short hour
Spent in Thy presence will avail to make!
What heavy burdens grom our bosoms take!
What parched grounds refresh as with a shower!
We kneel, and all about us seems to lower;
We rise, and all, the distant and the near,
Stands forth in sunny outline, brave and clear;
We kneel, how weak: we rise, how full of power!

Why, therefore, should we do ourselves this wrong,
Or others—that we are not always strong—
That we are sometimes overborne with care—
That we should ever weak or heartless be,
Anxious or troubled—when with us is prayer,
And joy and strength and courage are with Thee!

—Archbishop Trench.

IS THE CHURCH RETREATING?

the nominal church is retreating. To the man that does not study his Bible comprehensively, this is undoubtedly true.

Our attention was drawn to the report of a commission of laymen, which, after visiting mission stations in several foreign fields, asserted that not only Christianity but all religions were in full retreat everywhere.

Dr. High is authority for the statement that there are 700,000 Germans enrolled in the League of Freethinkers; that 200,000 German children are numbered in the schools of atheism in that country, and that the result of all of this atheistic activity is a reported loss in membership in the German churches of some 300,000 per year for several years past. Everywhere he finds the same condition prevailing. He predicts that by the end of the next five year period not a vestige of organized religion will be found in all Russia. No doubt, all that Dr. High says is true. The Church is being driven out of politics! It is being forced out of the public schools! It is being excluded from the great universities which it founded years ago! It is apparently losing its influence and power throughout the world.

Yet in the face of these undoubted facts, we ask again: Is the Church retreating? Is it facing final ignominious defeat? And we answer with the utmost confidence, No! The Church is not retreating! Nor can it ever be defeated! It must go on, and it will go on, until its victory over sin is complete and the whole wide world is "full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea"! The Church is going forward, not backward! Its flag still waves over a world-wide battlefield and sin and its cohorts will be vanquished forevermore!

A WORLDLY CHURCH CANNOT WIN THE BATTLE!

But such a victory as this cannot be won by a worldly church. It cannot be won by a politically-minded church. Nor yet by a church that does not believe the Bible is really the Word of God. That battle will not result in success to a church that attempts to carry on its struggle by its own power alone. And, strangest of all, the victory will not fall to a great and powerful church, that is, a church possessed of millions of members and vast wealth.

Before the final overthrow of sin takes place, there must come the "falling away" which was predicted both by Jesus and by Paul—the falling away of which the worldly church knows nothing because it knows nothing of the prophecies telling of these things.

Dr. High acknowledges that it was when the Church was weak in numbers and in influence, when it had no political standing, when its membership was drawn mostly from the more humble classes of the Roman Empire, that it made its greatest gains. Those were conquests of faith, not of the sword or of the ballot. They were victories of righteousness and of gospel truth, not of legislation. In those trying days the Church believed in God and in a coming Savior. Disciples leaned heavily upon the divine arm and trusted not in their own strength. They had no faith in the power of the world to bring peace, prosperity, and salvation; for while they were in the world, they were not of the world. Few in number they were, but mighty in the power of God. Such were the disciples, and such was the Church that they composed, during the early centuries of Christian history.

THE CHURCH OF GOD ADVANCING!

Let us not be misled by those who do not know the Creator's eternal purposes! The Church of God is pressing forward on every front! It is advancing on every field! And it is accomplishing all that God intended—all that Jesus commissioned His disciples to accomplish in this age. But its objective is not political, it is not reformatory, it is not in accord with human ideas and methods; for the purpose of the Church today is the same as it was nineteen hundred years ago—to preach the gospel of the kingdom of God as a witness unto all nations before the Lord comes!

To accomplish this mighty purpose, the Church of God must assure the world that the end of human authority in the earth is at hand; that God is now fulfilling His Word,

His prophetic Word, in a most marvelous way; that only by the coming of Christ and the establishment of His kingdom on the earth can victory over sin and wrong and misgovernment be achieved. This is the work of the Church of God now, even as it was two thousand years ago! And this work, which is so discouraging to the nominal "Christian," is the God-given task of the Church, and there is none other. To convert men and women to Jesus Christ by the power of the gospel of the kingdom alone, that is our task!

All of these conditions of sinfulness, of declining spirituality, of a nominal church ceasing to function and dying in its rich and stately temple of unbelief, fostered by its own ministry, were predicted of this present age long, long ago!

THE GOSPEL OF ETERNITY

The author to whom we have so frequently referred, and whose writings, in fact, provided the inspiration for this article, apparently cares little for a religion that centers its hope in the future—the eternal future that lies beyond the portals of the grave. He would have us focus our attention on the now! He would have us hope only in the present! Almost, it would seem, he would have us trust alone in the arm of flesh for our salvation! Dr. High discredits the entire idea of resting in the faith we have in Christ, regardless of what may be occurring in the world around us.

Dr. High states very clearly that he considers looking forward to the coming of the Lord as more than foolishness, as worse than delusion. With others who believe as he does, that the work of the Church should be what he terms, "this-worldly," he talks impressively of reviving the "real religion of Jesus." And yet he almost ridicules the thought of the Master's return, which was one of the cardinal truths He taught!

Here is a verse of a song that Dr. High believes should not be used, because "it deadens the mind of the Church to the needs of the world today":

"The world is very evil,
The times are growing late,
Be sober and keep vigil,
The Judge is at the gate!"

But to us those words sound like the warning voiced by our Lord Jesus Christ Himself while He was still upon this earth! Listen! and tell us what you think about it!

"In your patience possess ye your souls. . . . For these be the days of vengeance, that all things written may be fulfilled. . . . And these signs shall be in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring: men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh" (Luke 21:19, 22, 25-28).

No! The Church of God is not retreating! It is going forward until the Lord comes! Will you go forward with it—my brother—my sister? It is for you to decide.

“Improved Means to an Unimproved End”

So Henry D. Thoreau called our civilization. Are we who have modern improvements any better than our great-grandfather, who had to ride in a buggy? Yet, how superior we do feel! We have the movie to more efficiently ruin good morals; the radio to disseminate more foolishness; the auto to prosper crime; the cable and telegraph to communicate our hard feelings to each other; and the airplane and chemistry to destroy each other.

All are good implements. Granted! What potential powers for good! But the good depends not on the device, but on the user. If a savage uses them they result in more savagery. The whole world is plunging on toward Armageddon today because its unregenerate heart has too much power. “Power is never a good, unless he be good that has it,” said Alfred the Great. Read Dr. Fosdick’s treatise, “On Being Civilized to Death,” in Reader’s Digest, February, 1938.

Bible Training School

In view of the above I beseech you young people who are seeking a career, to diligently consider that the world needs to come under the regenerating influence of the Christ more than it needs television. The Master needs more workers in His vineyard than ever, in this, the eleventh hour. You should go to the coming Summer Training School, even if it means a great sacrifice of worldly gain on your part. You will find there is something of the greatest importance that you can do.

We Can Close the Church

Anti-Church Party Hopeful of Churchless City in Three Years (a Parable).

“With more lukewarm church members giving their silent aid to us, we can do it,” says the Unworshipful Master of the Anti-Church Party. In the statement, released last night, to all enemies of the church, the leaders of the movement to close the churches boasted of the fine aid which “the many Protestants who do not attend church often if at all” were giving the crusade for a Godless America. Looking over the figures of financial support of the churches, the secretary said, “Why, it’s in the bag!”

“We intend to publish an educational pamphlet for our movement in which we will print nothing but the collected excuses which the members and friends of churches give for non-attendance upon the church service of worship,” said Professor I. M. Sophisticated, director of propaganda against religion. “Even though they sound like poor alibis to us, we believe these excuses will carry weight with the unthinking masses.”

A LENIN NOT NEEDED

Commenting on the change of tactics and the decision not to organize a violent movement against the churches along the lines used in some countries, the chairman of the Society for the Promotion of Godless Sundays, a subsidiary of the Anti-Church Party, said, “We do not need to force people to stay away from church. We can sit back and let the unchurched help us. We do not need a Lenin, neither do we need the communists to close the churches. We can count on the indifference of Protestants. If we told Americans that they could not go to church they would all want to go.”

HELP NEEDED IN ROGERS PARK

Alarmed by the steady increase in church attendance and the growth of the Sunday school at the Congregational Church in Rogers Park, the master of the Anti-Church Party urges the members and friends of that church to stay away next Sunday and begs them not to bring their neighbors with them. “Volunteers for the crusade against this church are asked to stay home the next four Sundays.”

“Stay home Sunday morning at eleven and help the forces of unrighteousness to discourage the church. Let the pews stay empty.”

(Written by Stanley B. Crosland, Jr., minister of Rogers Park Congregational Church, Chicago, Illinois.)

Advice to the Perplexed

On the radio and through the press advice on individual human problems is constantly being given. There are times when every one of us needs an advisor. Much of the advice given is good, but usually it is based upon human wisdom. My friend, do not take as the last word what your favorite columnist or radio advisor may say, even though it will solve your problem for this life. Let the Bible have the last word. If your advisor and the Bible agree, well and good, but remember, the Bible solves problems for eternity. There are certain principles of faith in God, hope in life eternal, and good will toward all people that must of necessity enter into the true solution of every human problem. Ignore them to your eternal loss.

Habits

A person is like a garden. Bad habits, like weeds, come naturally and must be weeded out. Good habits, like flowers, are developed and must be protected. A baby naturally cries; his smile must be coaxed.

My Best for Jesus

My best for Jesus, my Lord and King,
The best I have I will gladly bring;
No gift so precious but He shall share,
He who has offered His love so rare.

My best for Jesus, my King above;
Could I give less to the One I love,
And yet be worthy to call Him mine,
Since He has offered His love divine?

My best for Jesus, Lord, may it be
A consecration of life to Thee,
A love-gift worthy a child of Thine,
Whom Thou hast offered Thy love divine.

My best for Thee, Lord, Thine alone,
My best for Thee, Thou holy One,
Thou who hast given Thine all so free,
Help me to give my best to Thee.

When Jesus Had Dinner With Matthew

Immediately after our lesson of last week Jesus left the house of Simon in Capernaum and walked by the seaside. You remember He had healed the man sick of the palsy, and the crowds of people who had gathered there were amazed.

We read that they glorified God, and said, "We never saw it on this fashion." That is, they had never seen anything like that before, for when one had been healed by the doctors it took time, sometimes a long, long time. They used medicines, also, and needed careful nursing. This man was healed by just the word from Jesus.

As He walked along the seashore the multitudes followed Him and He taught them the gospel of the kingdom of God. We learned about that gospel, or good news, last week, you recall. We reviewed some of the facts about God's kingdom. And that was what Jesus was telling them there.

Now all of you turn to Mark 2:14, and read what you find there. Can you name the other disciples who had been called by Jesus to be His helpers? Do you know another name by which Levi was known? What part of the Bible did he write?

What was almost the first thing Levi did after Jesus called him? Look in verse 15 and see. Who were some of the other guests? Do you know what a publican was? Levi was one, you know.

As we read on in this interesting story we learn that the scribes and the Pharisees objected to Jesus' eating with publicans and sinners. They really did not care so very much, I think, but they were always looking for something for which to criticize Him.

But Jesus had come into the world to save sinners, and He wasn't afraid to go where they were so that He could do them good. He called these sinners "sick," and they were the ones who needed Him, not the ones who thought they were righteous.

Wherever we live there are those who are lonely and who are looked down upon by those about them. Sometimes it is no fault of theirs that this is true. There may be things you can do to encourage them.

It is easy, you know, to be friendly to those who have many friends, and it is pleasant to be friendly to those who love us. But to be kind to those who have no friends is not so pleasant. Jesus was that sort of Friend.

But we must be very careful when we are helping some of the despised ones in our community. That is, we must be careful of our own conduct. We must not do any of these kind deeds in a lofty manner, to make them think we consider ourselves so much better than they.

Nor must we follow in their steps if we find them following the ways of sin, as we do sometimes. We must endeavor to attract them to Jesus by teaching them the things He taught and by our own example. There are many little ways in which we can do that. Let us look about us and see how we can serve Jesus by serving others.

Can You Find—

"Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.

"Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls.

"For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light"?

AMONG THE CHURCHES

EDITORIAL POLICY OF OUR NEWS PAGES

Letters, articles, reports, etc., appearing on the church news pages of The Restitution Herald reflect only the sentiment of the writers, not the opinion of its editor and manager. This being the case, it is advisable that such communications should not be made the basis of pointed "follow-up" criticism.

ADDRESS CORRECTION

Bro. M. W. Lyon, pastor of the Church of the Golden Rule, Cleveland, Ohio, emphatically informs us that his address is 13517 Darley Ave., and not 13905 Diana Ave., as we have erroneously stated in two recent papers. We beg your pardon, Bro. Lyon.

PLEASE NOTE CORRECT ADDRESS OF T. A. DRINKARD

Brethren: If you plan to write to me be sure that you send your letters to Handley, Texas. There is a Hedley, Texas, and when the "n" is left out of Handley your letter will go to Hedley, Texas, as three or four have recently. Your mistake will delay your answer.

T. A. Drinkard, Handley, Texas.

OREGON, ILLINOIS

Bro. and Sr. George Siple left early last week for Louisiana, where they will spend a part of the winter with Bro. Siple's mother and other relatives. Bro. Siple is one of the elders of the Oregon church and Sr. Siple one of our most faithful Sunday school teachers.

Bros. Harold and Robert Hardesty and Sr. Margaret Mattison, the latter a granddaughter of Bro. and Sr. S. J. Lindsay, took part in a radio program over station WROK at Rockford, Sunday afternoon. Many favorable comments concerning their work have already reached us.

The pastor is concluding on Wednesday evening the series of studies on "The Presence of Christ," which he has been presenting at the community prayer service at Golden Rule Home. The subjects discussed included: "The Presence of Christ in the Prophetic Purposes of God"; "The Presence of Christ in the Days of His Flesh"; "The Presence of Christ in the Spirit of Power"; and "The Presence of Christ in the Glorious Future." A number of our young people and several children have been among the most regular attendants at these mid-week services.

The song-sermon series of Sunday evening meditations also came to a temporary conclusion on Sunday night in order that the pastor may review the startling events which are now transpiring among the nations of the world, all of which have been announced in advance by the prophets. Next Sunday evening's lecture will be entitled, "Flashlight Glimpses of World Events."

In spite of icy roads the Sunday school attendance has ranged from 130 to 147 during the month of January and that of the mid-week meeting over thirty. A recent report of the church secretary indicated a net increase in church membership for 1937, of 16, bringing the total to around 150.

CALLING ALL CHURCHES!

How many have sent in your census report since the request in The Herald four months ago! Just three! These were from Moorefield and Holbrook, Neb., and Delta, Ohio. Indiana Conference also sent a very complete report of all her churches, and several isolated members reported. To all these, thank you!

But where are the rest? Time is passing, and it will soon be conference time again. I must have reports from all our churches well in advance of July.

If you have not already done so, will you please compile the following information AT ONCE, and send it to

M. W. Lyon,
13517 Darley Ave.,
Cleveland, Ohio.

1. How many members of the Church of God are there in your church locality?

2. How many members do you have on your Sunday school roll, if any?

3. How many members do you have on your Berean roll, if any?

4. Names and addresses of all isolated members of the Church of God that are not members of a state conference.

5. Names and addresses of any ministers that you think may not be generally known.

For more complete information, look up your old copy of The Herald for September 28 or October 5, 1937.

You need not write a letter. A penny post card will do. All that I want is just the items specified. But they are VERY IMPORTANT.

Don't put it off. Please take care of this now, and help me to prepare an accurate record of our membership. I cannot do it without your help. I am counting on you. You'll help me, won't you?

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

The advanced young people's class had their monthly meeting at Robert Hall's home on January 19, with twenty-five young people present. This class would be a credit to any church.

Sr. Doan has been ill for the past two weeks, and greatly missed in church activities. Her class of loyal girls, however, took charge of the opening exercises at church Sunday night, the 23rd, and did a very fine job of it. Other classes are taking their turns, and this has helped to add much interest to the evening services.

Most of the choir in a body recently attended a concert by the famous St. Olaf's, a capella choir. There is real inspiration in such music.

Genuine interest is being manifested in the classes on first principles, and we trust that much good may result from this work.

The interior of the men's room has recently been plastered, the windows cased and decorated. This is now one of the most attractive rooms we have, and the men's class is making real progress. The present teacher is Bro. G. K. Niles. Which reminds us that Bro. and Sr. Niles are the proud parents of a daughter, Dorothy Janell, who has come to keep her two brothers company.

CHURCH OF GOD MESSENGER

Fonthill, Ontario

We take the following items of general interest from the Church of God Messenger, which in its new dress is the most attractive local church bulletin we have as yet seen. The cover carries a fine new picture of "The Church in the Heart of the Village" and the inside cover an excellent engraving of Christ in the Garden. Each of the departments has a suitable illustration suggesting the purpose of that section of the 8-page stapled folder. The articles appearing in it, as might be expected when a man of Pastor C. E. Randall's ability has charge, are of a varied and helpful nature.

"The Niagara Falls senior and junior choir have secured Mrs. Cummings as instructor. She took over her new duties on Wednesday night and if the opening session is an indication of what may be expected, we forecast many happy and profitable practice periods for the future. The practice and study which preceded it were held at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Will Lent.

"The Welland Sunday school held its annual election on Wednesday night of last week, following the regular Bible study. Officers elected were as follows: Superintendent, Thomas McArthur; assistant superintendent, John Spry; secretary, Maria McArthur; treasurer, Ethel Dilamarter. Every member of the school should get behind these officers with all their might. Hold up their hands!

"Installation of the officers elected at the church business meetings will take place Sunday, Jan. 30. Every officer of the church should be set aside by prayer.

"The Truth Seekers' Class voted to give ten dollars to the forthcoming Summer Training School (to be held in Oregon, Ill., preceding the General Conference). This is a worthy cause, which has been largely sponsored by the young people over the country. The young people of the Church of God are really gospel-minded and vitally interested in the future welfare of the church. When the young people of a denomination take hold of the work its future is assured. Praise the Lord for consecrated young people!

"The annual church meetings were held this past week, when the following officers were chosen:

"Niagara Falls—elders: William Moore and George Rennard; deacons: Dr. Will Lent and Clyde Shea; deaconesses: Mrs. Faye Brown and Mrs. Jesse Shea; secretary: Elsie Moore; treasurer: Elgin Culp; Bro. Culp was also elected trustee; choir director: Mrs. Grace Lent; organist: James Engle; ushers: Jack Brown and L. Moore, Jr.

"Fonthill—elders: Arthur Gilbey and Joseph Fletcher, Jr.; deacons: Maurice Anger and Peter Standing; secretary: W. H. Beemer; treasurer: I. H. Barnhart; trustees: Horace Haines and Fred Jones; ushers: William Bell, Celaine Randall, Maurice Anger, Melvin Haines, and Clarke Gilbey; choir director: Blanche Page; auditors: Marion McClellan and Margaret Shute.

"Dr. Will Lent recently led the Falls Bereans in a lesson on "How to Study the Bible." The meeting was held at the home of the Berean president, Mrs. Faye Brown."

MAGAZINE, ARKANSAS

Bro. T. A. Drinkard of Handley, Texas, delivered a wonderful message at the Mt. Olive church house. We surely appreciate having the gospel preached as Christ and His apostles taught it, and we hope Bro. Drinkard will be with us again soon.

LAWRENCEVILLE, OHIO

The Sunshine Class of the Church of God at Lawrenceville, Ohio, held its first organization meeting Friday evening, Jan. 21, 1938, at the home of Bro. and Sr. Clark Ballentine. This is a class of young married people, together with a few unmarried ones of about the same ages.

Our aim is to increase our Sunday school and church attendance, and we hope, in the near future, to be able to support a full-time pastor.

The first part of the evening was spent in electing officers, appointing committees, a short Bible discussion, and class business. The latter part of the evening was spent socially.

Meetings will be held the first Friday evening of each month. The next meeting will be February 4, at the home of Sr. Erma Bowser.

Comments from other classes or individuals are solicited and will be gratefully received.

Mrs. Paul Overholser, Secretary,
Springfield, Ohio, Rt. 2.

EDNA EDITH ARTHAUD

Edna Edith, youngest daughter of Samuel F. and Julia M. Keeney, was born near St. Paul, Neb., Jan. 8, 1879, and died at Aberdeen, Wash., Jan. 11, 1938. She was married to Riley E. Arthaud on March 20, 1898, and to this union two children were born, Paul Arthaud and Mrs. Verna Weatherwax.

About eighteen years ago the family moved to Aberdeen, Wash., where she lived until her death.

Besides her husband and children she leaves two grandchildren, Patti Weatherwax and Bobby Arthaud; also two sisters, Mrs. Clara Freeman of Burbank, Calif., and Mrs. Minnie Rogers of Eugene, Ore.

When about sixteen she accepted Jesus as her Savior and was baptized by Bro. Almus Adams. She was a kind and loving wife and mother and a wonderful friend and neighbor, doing everything in her power to lead others to a knowledge of the truth of God's Word that she loved so well. During her long illness she was very kind and considerate of the loved ones who did everything that possibly could be done for her, and her trust and faith in God were examples for all her friends. She sleeps peacefully waiting for her Savior's coming.

We sorrow not as others which have no hope, "for if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him" (1 Thess. 4: 14). "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints" (Psa. 116:15).

MRS. ADAM LOBELL

Lulu Levella Richardson was born in 1882 and died January 23, 1938, after a short illness. Early in life she married Adam Lobell and to this union nine children were born, six sons and three daughters. One son preceded her in death. Besides the children she is survived by her husband, five brothers and four sisters, and many other relatives and friends.

She was formerly a member of the Methodist Church, but some years ago was baptized into the Church of God by Bro. S. J. Lindsay. From that time forward she was a loyal and fearless worker among the people at Blood River and through her teaching and influence others were led to obey the gospel. For a number of years she was one of the elders of the Blood River Church, and more recently held the position of deaconess. Her loss will be keenly felt by the church and entire community.

Services were conducted by the writer, after which she was laid to rest in the beautiful little cemetery near Blood River. Now she rests from her labors, awaiting the glad morn of the resurrection.

CARRIE E. HILSABECK

Mrs. Carrie E. Hilsabeck, nee Williams, was born in Westmoreland County, Pa., June 25, 1849, and died December 30, 1927, at Madison, S. D., at the home of her daughter, Mrs. W. R. Renner, where she had made her home for the last seven years, receiving the best of care to the last.

When two years old she went with her family to Whiteside County, Ill., and a few years later to Iowa, locating near Davenport. The family came to Marshall County when she was fourteen.

On July 25, 1871, she married David I. Hilsabeck, and they lived for a time near Gilman. Mr. Hilsabeck died March 16, 1916, and after that she lived for a time in Marshalltown and afterward with her children. Four children were born to them. One daughter, Mrs. S. J. McClain, died December 4, 1922. The surviving ones are Alfred B. of Glasco, Kan.; Harvey L. of Green Mountain, Iowa; and Mrs. W. R. Renner of Madison, S. D. There are also thirteen grandchildren.

She has been a member of the Church of God since early life, and in addition to being a faithful wife and loving mother, she was an ardent Christian, which is a worthy heritage to leave to her sorrowing children.

Funeral services were held by J. W. Williams of Gladbrook, Iowa, in Marshalltown, on New Year's Day, and she was laid to rest in Riverview Cemetery in that city.

Signs of the Times

"Can ye not discern the signs of the times?" (Matt. 16:3).

SERIOUS reflections may well fill our minds. The feeling seems to be widely spreading that we are on the eve of events which will bring vast and startling changes.

The Bible student is well aware of what is at hand: "The coming of the Lord draweth nigh."

As the subject of Christ's return is of ever-increasing interest and importance, we desire to help young Christians and to stir up, it may be, the minds of older ones by way of remembrance, by drawing attention to some of the many "signs of the times" which are now demanding the notice of every thoughtful person.

Universal Unrest. Within the memory of the present generation there has not been known such a time of upheaval among all nations of the earth. "The times of the Gentiles," which began with Nebuchadnezzar, are nearing their fulfillment. Influences are now at work, socially and politically, which will soon produce that "distress of nations, with perplexity," and that disturbance of all order.

"Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth" (Luke 21:26).

Development of Jewish National Sentiments. The Jews have been scattered among the nations ever since the days of Titus, but the national feeling is awakening with ever-increasing strength. So far as Israel is concerned, it is God's purpose to gather them back into their own land, and make them "a strong nation" (Micah 4:7). Had they been faithful and obedient in the past, the Lord would have made them the head and not the tail (Deut. 28:13). Through their sins of disobedience, idolatry, and crucifying their Messiah, they have become "an astonishment, a proverb, and a by-word among all nations" (Deut. 28:37). Terrible tribulation is yet to be their lot, more than they have ever before known. But the Lord will do better unto them than at their beginnings (Ezek. 36:11); they will yet dwell in the land of Palestine and there be blessed (Ezek. 36; 37).

Awakening of the Eastern Nations. Ezekiel 38 and 39 show that when Israel are gathered back into their own land and are dwelling safely there, a tremendous invasion of the nations of the East and North will sweep down upon them. They will come like a storm, and like a cloud to cover the land.

What do we see today? Japan has suddenly sprung into the front rank of great powers. China is rapidly awakening from the sleep of centuries. India, Persia, and the whole Eastern World, in mighty commotion, are all preparing to take their places in the drama of the last days—days long since clearly foretold in prophecy and accurately described.

Rapid Progress of Infidelity. The last great empire of "the times of the Gentiles" is characterized by blasphemous antagonism to God. The beast will speak great words against the most high God (Dan. 7:7 to end; Rev. 13:1-8).

Do we not see in the alarming spread of doctrines today this very spirit of atheism with its utter rejection of all belief in God, and all subjection to His Word?

Increase of Romanism. In spite of all the strenuous efforts of our Protestant brethren, who can doubt that in the religious world Romanism is on the increase? We may be told that on the Continent, in France, Italy, and Austria, it is losing ground. This we admit; but it is giving place to infidelity and not to evangelical faith.

European Changes Toward the Revival of the Roman Empire. That this Empire is to revive (Rev. 17:8) leaves no manner of doubt—"the beast that was, and is not, and yet shall be." Students of prophecy are agreed that Russia is to take her place along with, or at the head of the great northeastern confederacy of nations. Germany in the past was outside the limits of the Roman Empire. Whether she will in her entirety be outside it in the future it is not for us to say. We incline to think she will be linked with Russia. But the rest of Western Europe will, with little doubt, be leagued together—ten kings under one head. The menace of the East, with its startlingly rapid development of militarism, is even now producing symptoms of European defensive combination.

Preparation for Antichrist. And what shall we say as to the leaders of religious thought in professed Christian lands? The scene that was lately witnessed at Nottingham has brought the blush of shame and a shudder of apprehension throughout the whole land. That ministers of the Christian religion should tolerate on their platform "an enemy" (Matt. 13:28) so pronounced, and that they should extend to him the right hand of fellowship, is evidence of the most appalling nature of the "falling away" which will bring about the revelation of the man of sin, the Antichrist (2 Thess. 2).

We have not spoken of the revival of the hope of Christ's return in the hearts of true believers. Thank God, we see the sign everywhere spreading.

"The Spirit and the bride say, Come" (Rev. 22:17). The midnight cry began to be heard about seventy years ago. The waking up of the wise and foolish virgins is now taking place. The little interval of time between the revival of the hope of Christ's coming and His actual descent into the air to call His people is near its close. In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, He will come. His people will pass into the joy promised. The door will be shut and the unconverted professors be shut out.

Then the bitter cry, "Lord, Lord, open to us!" But the door is shut, and that forever. Christendom's day of grace will be over. The strong delusions from God will make those believe the lies of Antichrist who refused to believe the gospel of God's grace and truth (2 Thess. 2).—A. H. Burton in The Jewish Hope.

Life Only in Christ

By James A. Patrick

PETER, before the high priest and his kindred, said of Christ, "This is the stone which was set at nought of you builders, which is become the head of the corner. Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby ye must be saved" (Acts 4:11, 12).

John uses language that dovetails in with the foregoing very nicely. He said, "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself: he that believeth not God hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son. And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life" (1 John 5:10-12).

What is the record we must believe or, failing to believe, make God a liar? "And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son."

"But," some one will ask, "doesn't every professing Christian believe this?" Let us look at the matter more closely and see if they do.

What is life? This is one of the very hardest questions that can be propounded. Miles Grant, in his Positive Theology, says, "All know what life means; while none know what it is."

Life has been defined as "animated existence," and Henry Drummond said life is correspondence with our environment. But these definitions make things no clearer than does the word "life" itself, and hardly fit in with some Scripture expressions.

Those that believe in the inherent immortality of man have explained life as "union with God," and death as "separation from God." "Everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord," to them means only everlasting separation from Him. But these definitions will not fit in with Biblical statements. For instance, in Leviticus 17:11, and other texts, it is said, "The life is in the blood." Is "animated existence" or "union with God" in the blood?

Let us look at another text, and see if we cannot come to a better understanding of life. In Genesis 2:7 we read, "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath (Hebrew, n'shah mah) of life; and man became a living soul." Is the breath of life a "vapour that appeareth for a little time and then vanisheth away"? It most certainly is.

According to the record, all that God ever gave to man to make him live was "the breath of life." According to many texts which time and space forbid me giving, it was this same "breath of life" that made all the rest of the animal creation live.

One text will suffice to show the truth of the foregoing statement: "For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no preeminence above a beast" (Ecc. 3:19). The word for "breath" in this text is the same Hebrew word that is usually translated "spirit," that is, ruach. Some one will probably exclaim, "Do men and beasts have the same spirit?" So says this text and others. Primarily "breath" and "spirit" are synonymous expressions.

In Psalm 104:23 and on, the Psalmist tells us of man, creeping things innumerable in the sea, great and small beasts, ships, and leviathan, and in verses 29 and 30 he says to God, "Thou hidest thy face, they are troubled: thou takest away their breath (Hebrew, ruach, "spirit"), they die, and return to their dust. Thou sendest forth thy spirit (Hebrew, ruach), and they are created." Job 34:14, 15 reads, "If he set his heart upon man, if he gather unto himself his spirit (Hebrew, ruach) and his breath (Hebrew, n'shah mah); all flesh shall perish together, and man shall turn again unto dust." It will be noticed that the word for "breath" in the last verse is the same as the word for "breath" in Genesis 2:7. God gave this breath and man lived; He takes it away and man dies. It isn't man's spirit that makes him live, but God's. This breath-spirit is simply loaned to man "for a little time, and then" (so far as man is concerned) "vanisheth away."

It is very evident from the teaching of Scripture that man is entirely dependent upon God for his life, and not upon anything within himself. (Please turn to page 11)

Pertinent Comments on the News of the Day

Dictators Multiply

"He shall work deceitfully: for he shall come up, and shall become strong with a small people" (Dan. 11:23).

ATHENS, Greece, Jan. 31.—Although officially denied, the rumor persists that Greece is about to be placed under a dictatorship, that of the "strong man of Greece," General John Metaxas, who already holds the offices of Premier, Minister of War, Foreign Affairs, Marine, and Air. The Greek legation at Washington, D. C., to controvert what it terms "malicious" charges, issued today the following statement, admitting at the same time that fifteen political agitators had been exiled from the country.

"As malicious news concerning Greece continues to be circulated in certain foreign newspapers despite a formal communique of the Athens news agency, we deny categorically all rumors about sensational events. It is untrue that the most rigorous form has been imparted to the regime which in no way has swerved from the plan initiated by the change of August 4, 1936."

MEXICO CITY, Mexico, Jan. 31.—Is Mexico to fall into line with Brazil and establish a complete dictatorship, but of communistic form, rather than fascist? That is a question which is arousing the attention of American business men both here and in the United States. It is not a pleasant prospect to have as a next door neighbor a country governed by any form of dictatorship. We watch developments in the republic to the south with careful attention.

So far as Christianity and the status of the Jews are concerned, it makes no difference which form of dictatorship is established, it is sure to result in the curtailment of religious liberty and the persecution of the Jews. This fact points strongly to the antichristian character of such political systems and stamps them with the mark of the man of sin.

Egyptian Arabs Protest British Action in Palestine

"Cursed be their anger, for it was fierce; and their wrath, for it was cruel" (Genesis 49:7).

CAIRO, Egypt, Jan. 30.—The possibility which has caused British statesmen great anxiety in connection with their mandate over Palestine, seems closer to realization than at any time in the past: that is, that the entire Arab world may be stirred to sympathy with their compatriots in the Holy Land and organize themselves openly in opposition to the Government. Today, for the first time, Egyptian Arabs of high standing made a vigorous and concerted protest against what they termed "a policy of despotism toward the Arab nation and the Moslem world." The protest, which was transmitted to the British Ambassador to Egypt, Sir Miles Lampson, was signed by ninety-two senators and deputies of the Egyptian parliament.

The use of the phrase, "Arab nation," especially excited the British officials in Cairo tonight as marking another step toward Arab national consciousness, although the so-called "nation" is still a chimera.

CAIRO, Egypt, Jan. 31.—The possibility that Egypt's young King Farouk, would have conferred upon him the title, Caliph of Islam—Commander of the Faithful—appeared imminent tonight as a result growing out of a conference now in progress of various Mohammedan sects. Since the Caliphate was abolished by Kemal Ataturk, now the dictator of Turkey, and Sultan Mohammed VI was exiled (1923-1924), it has remained suspended. The Caliphate corresponds roughly to the Roman Catholic Pontificate, the Calif of Islam being the supreme earthly authority among the Moslems.

Secretary Ickes Warns Jews

"The treacherous dealer dealeth treacherously."

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 23.—In an address before the national conference of the United Palestine appeal, Secretary of the Interior, Harold Ickes, warned American Jews against certain unnamed but easily recognized groups, which he said are arrayed against democracy.

"Subtle pressures may be exerted upon you as upon other minority groups to array yourselves, not with, but against, those battling to preserve democracy. Never forget," he warned them, "that the foes of democracy in other lands were financed by economic groups that professedly were attempting to protect their property from political incompetence."

The most relentless enemies of the Jews are found in Fascist and Nazi governments, both of which are the avowed foes of democracy.

The Great Salvation

By J. M. Stephenson

"HOW shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation: which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him; God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will" (Heb. 2:2-4).

The deliverance of Noah and his family from destruction by the deluge was a great salvation. The deliverance of the Israelites from Egyptian bondage was a great salvation. The deliverance of Christians from the awful suffering and tribulations consequent upon the destruction of Jerusalem, and the overthrow of the commonwealth of Israel was a great salvation. But these salvations were only temporal deliverances, leaving their subjects still exposed to sin, temptation, and death; but the salvation spoken of in our text is eternal deliverance from sin, temptation, mortality, and death, to glory, honor, and immortality in the everlasting kingdom of God.

There is, therefore, an infinite disparity between all other salvations, however grand and glorious, and that great salvation which was spoken by our Lord at the beginning of His preaching, and was confirmed to Paul and his Hebrew brethren by those who heard Him, "God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost."

This is evidently the same salvation promised in the gospel which our Savior began to preach in Galilee, and published throughout Judea, and afterward commissioned His apostles to proclaim to the world; and which was confirmed by the signs following. (See Mark 16:15-18.)

This salvation is denominated by the same Apostle, an "eternal salvation" (Heb. 5:9). It will be eternal, not because the process of saving men will be eternally going on, but because its results will be eternal—because it will be final and changeless. Its subjects will be sinless, incorruptible, and immortal, and, therefore, never can be again involved in the thralldom of sin or death to need a savior or salvation.

With these introductory remarks, I will enter upon the investigation of this thrillingly interesting, and vitally important subject.

The word "salvation" signifies deliverance from either actual thralldom or imminent danger. Thus, "few, that is, eight souls were saved by water." They were not saved from death caused by drowning, but from being destroyed with an ungodly world. The great salvation under consideration not only proposes to deliver its subjects from sin and death, but to give them an incorruptible constitution which shall be imperishable as the divine nature, and which cannot change or sin; and, therefore, shall be absolutely invulnerable to temptation or disease—a constitution which shall bloom in fadeless and immortal youth, and an endless life, which can never be quenched by the cold tide of death. This is the victory over death and Hades, which the slumbering millions of saints shall gain, when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, and when the language of inspiration shall be verified that "death is swallowed up in victory," and when the triumphant song shall be sung—"O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? . . . But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. 15:53, 55, 57). An incorruptible constitution may challenge forever the sting of death, and an immortal life may challenge forever the triumphs of the grave. The death and the grave will have gained their last victory over the saints of God.

This is the great salvation involved in our Savior's reply to the Sadducees, in which He says, "But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world (age), and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage: neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection" (Luke 20:35, 36).

This salvation not only delivers all the sleeping saints from the dominion of death, but includes in its plenitude the deathless nature of angels; thus placing all who shall be accounted worthy of this exalted nature forever beyond the power of death, and the triumphs of the grave. All other salvations which God has wrought out for His people shrink into insignificance and nothingness, when compared with this great and eternal salvation. This is the great salvation in which the blessed and holy to whom the Revelator refers, will have part. He ex- (Please turn to page 10)

Some Day!

Some day all doubt and mystery
Will be made clear;
The threatened clouds which now we see
Will disappear.
Some day what seems a punishment,
Or loss, or pain
Will prove to be God's blessing, sent
For every gain.
Some day our weary feet will rest
In sweet content;
And we will know how we are blest
By what was sent;
And looking back, with clearer eyes,
O'er life's short span,
Will see with wondering, glad surprise
God's perfect plan;
And knowing that the way we went
Was God's own way,
Will understand His wise intent
Some day—some day.

GOD'S BEST

MANY of God's children never possess God's best because they seek only His better. Many others never possess God's better because they seek only that which is good. As God places before the Christian that which is good, that which is better, and that which is best, He bids him choose the best! God's best is never enjoyed by those who are too easily contented. God's best is only realized by those who aim high. It is known to such as can truthfully say at all times: "One thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, . . . I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

All of God's gifts are good. Some are better than others. "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning" (James 1:17). In spite of this truth uttered by the Apostle James, the Apostle Paul urges us to seek earnestly "the best gifts" (1 Cor. 12:31). We readily recognize a scale of values in material things; we think of things as good, better, and best. We should not be surprised to find a like scale in spiritual things. Concerning the purchase of material things we sometimes hear it said that it always pays to get the best. In the spiritual realm it is certainly true that it is worth while to pay the price and enjoy God's best.

It is good to know that God is. It is better to know about God. It is best to know God. It is good to eat the crumbs that fall from the Master's table. It is better to sit at the Master's table and feast with Him. It is best to sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. Upon the mount of transfiguration Peter said, "Lord, it is good for us to be here!" It is better at times to be in active service for the Master. It will be best to be in the kingdom of glory when Christ shall come the second time. It is good to draw near to God. The best will be to enjoy God forever. Yet it is true that God's best for us in the present may be enjoyed by each of us now if we will have it so. The best robe, the finest of the wheat, the sweetest of the honey is for us now.

Why be satisfied with less than God's best? Why risk being saved so as by fire, escaping by the skin of your teeth, inasmuch as you may have an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ? Why be content with knowing the truth, while you might be happier in the love of the truth? Why get along with a partial vision, since it is your privilege to see clearly?

Not only is it our privilege to have God's best for us, but it is our privilege to be our best for God. This does not mean aspiring to a big place if God has given to us a place that seems small. This does not mean looking for a public position if God has assigned a private sphere. We should be willing and anxious to fill as big a place as God has for us, but be perfectly satisfied in the humble place if it be the place of God's choosing. God has many places to be filled by His children, and we may be at our best for God in any of these places.

God's second best is for some who will not have His best. While we would not say to anyone, "Be satisfied with God's second best," we feel that God is merciful and should be praised for providing a second best for such as make second choice, instead of cutting them off entirely. Abraham made such a second choice when he stopped at Haran instead of going directly to Canaan. Lot failed of God's best when he set his heart upon the verdant hills and well watered plains of Jordan and pitched his tent toward Sodom. Moses failed of God's best when he excused himself from speaking to Pharaoh on the ground that he was not fluent of speech. Martha failed of God's best, being cumbered with service. Work and worship are both good, but worship should come before work.

Adam and Eve missed God's best through disobedience. Redemption was God's second best for them. God's best is to preserve us from evil; his second best is to deliver us out of evil. God's best is for us to get the mind of God before entering into the relations of life. Failing here, we may experience God's second best by finding His grace sufficient to make the best of circumstances in such cases where God does not call upon us to annul such relationships upon which we have unwisely entered.

God's best for us may be for us to keep well by right living; His second best may be to make us well after we have gotten sick. Divine healing, precious as it is, may be only God's second best. God's best way may be to keep us out of trouble; His second best may be to hear and help us when we call upon Him in the day of trouble.

God's best for Israel was constant victory. Failure to obey God absolutely brought the Israelites into captivity to the Philistines, the Midianites, the Babylonians. God's second best was their deliverance from captivity. Israel missed God's best when they refused to cross over into the Promised Land at once. God was patient with them and allowed them to have their second choice. This was wandering in the wilderness for nearly forty years. When they did enter the land of promise that was only God's second best for them. It was their privilege to enter into rest instead of wandering for so many years and then fighting for so many more years.

How is it today? Are not many living an up-and-down life, winning today, losing tomorrow, whereas they might be winning constant victory? Do not some Christians rejoice in light, whereas others have greater joy because of additional light? Do not some have life while others have life "more abundantly"? Do not some have faith, while others have more faith? Do not some have an experience of salvation, while others know a deeper work of grace? Do not some have the Holy Spirit, while others are "filled with the Spirit"?

If we are satisfied with God's second best may it not be true that we are in great danger of losing out? I have known pupils in school who were satisfied if they could barely make a passing grade. They have said: "All we care about is just barely getting over the margin." I have known such to fail entirely.

Shall we not all seek God's best? His best is for us to start to serve Him in the days of youth. If we have failed here shall we not make the best of His second best? God will help us to redeem life from utter failure. He will give us grace to be what we can be, if we cannot be all that we would like to be.

"God has His best things for the few
Who dare to stand the test;
He has His second choice for those Who will not have His best."

—W. S. Bowden in Present Truth Messenger.

This Same Jesus Will Come Again

BOTH the modernists and the Jews reject the miraculous acts recorded in the Scriptures concerning our Lord. The Jews brand Jesus as an imposter, while the modernists regard Him as a man who lived a life of piety and good deeds worthy to imitate. In their preaching they quote from Him, and deceive the people, who are led to believe that they teach the Bible doctrine concerning Him.

These false shepherds and their erroneous philosophy give us another Jesus, instead of the one who made the atonement on the cross of Calvary. They deny His miraculous conception by the Holy Ghost, His virgin birth, the miracles He wrought during His sojourn here, His resurrection from the dead, His ascension from the Mount of Olives, and His second coming. Theirs is an altogether different gospel from the one preached by the early church.

Paul declared "that if we, or an angel, preach unto you any other gospel than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." There is only one gospel, and there is only one Jesus. There is only one ransom for sinful man, and that was made by Him that loved us and gave Himself for us. No true Christian will consider the crucifixion as being an ordinary event. The powers of heaven were shaken even to the throne of the great God and Father of the universe, when Jesus was nailed to the cross. How humble we should feel when we remember that it was for our sins that He suffered that death of shame.

After His resurrection He appeared to many witnesses. First, to the women at the sepulcher, to Peter and the other disciples. He ate and drank with them. He talked with them concerning their future work and His second coming, and the end of the world. "To whom also he shewed himself alive after his passion (crucifixion) by many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God" (Acts 1:3).

Forty days after His resurrection the time came for His last visible appearance, and farewell meeting on the Mount of Olives. "When they therefore were come together, they asked of him, saying, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" They could not give up the idea that He had come to set up His kingdom. Now that He was alive and with them again, the hope revived again that He would now take His place as King, and give them a prominent place in that kingdom. "And he said unto them, It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power. But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judæa, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth.

"And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight." Right before their eyes, while they were looking at Him, He began to rise, and their eyes followed Him until a cloud received Him out of their sight. And they stood gazing up hoping they might get another view of Him. The power of gravitation could not hold Him. Up He went! "Lift up your heads, O ye gates; and be ye lift up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory shall come in." Through the heavens He went, right into the Most Holy Place, to the right hand of the Father, "to appear before the face of God for us." The Father has said: "Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchizedec." The Aaronic and Levitical priesthood perished by limitation at the cross. No duplicate of the earthly tabernacle ever existed in heaven. He did not stop in a hypothetical holy place for eighteen hundred years, with a veil between Him and the Father. He went straight through to the unveiled presence of God, the Most Holy Place in the universe, and has been there ever since as our Advocate.

So Jesus went up. It was the last great miracle of His sojourn on this earth. He took His visible, glorified body with Him, with the nail prints in His hands, and the scar in His side, left by the Roman soldier's spear.

"And while they looked stedfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven" (Acts 1:10, 11).

The same Jesus; conceived by the Holy Spirit, born of the Virgin Mary in the manger in Bethlehem; He who worked in the carpenter shop at Nazareth; the same Jesus who for three years and a half preached the gospel to the poor; who was sent to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and the recovery of sight to the blind, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord (Luke 4:18, 19), "shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Could any words be plainer? He went in a cloud. He shall return in a cloud. John cried out: "Behold! He cometh with clouds." He went away in glory. He will come in glory. He went in body; He will return in body. The martyr Stephen saw Him standing on the right hand of the Father. John on the Isle of Patmos saw Him a number of times. He went away suddenly; He will return suddenly. His disciples saw Him go; the saints will be looking for Him and will see Him coming and will look up and say, "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us." The world of wicked people will be surprised, and confounded when He comes. They will flee from Him, and cry for the rocks to fall on them, and hide them from the face of Him that is coming in the clouds.

Before He went away, Jesus gave us much prophetic light on the condition of this world at His second coming. In Matthew 24 He outlined in plain terms what would happen before His return. He warned us against false Christ's that would arise and deceive many. "There shall be wars, and rumours of wars." "Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom." Many of these signs are in the past.

But the twentieth century is fulfilling much of this prophecy. It looks now as though the whole world would soon be in a deadly conflict. Communism and fascism are at each other's throats. Droughts, famines, floods, and earthquakes, are becoming more numerous, and are occurring in diverse places. Pestilences are increasing in number and violence. The atheistic, communistic Jews in Russia are trying to spread their apostate doctrine all over the world. "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you: but rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's suffering" (1 Peter 4:12, 13).

There is everywhere an increase of lawlessness. Immorality and vice are rampant. The racketeers are getting rich, while wrecking the lives of our boys and girls. Especially is this true in the large cities. The immoral and crime-teaching motion picture shows are endorsed and patronized by professed Christians.

We see the accumulation of wealth in the hands of a few hard-hearted and selfish men. There is rapid transit on land and sea and in the air. "Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." Another sign is distress of nations. No land is exempt. France and Germany and other nations are in the deepest distress financially. Why? Because they are numbered among those who have fostered infidelity and idolatry. If God turned from His chosen people because of these sins, what will He do with these atheistic, ungodly nations? In all countries taxes are a millstone around the necks of the people.

The Jews in Palestine are one of the last signs of His coming. When you see the fig tree (the Jews) budding and putting forth leaves you may know the coming of Jesus is near. "And they shall say, This land that was desolate is become like the garden of Eden; and the waste and desolate and ruined cities are become fenced, and are inhabited" (Ezek. 36:35). We only have to read what is going on in Palestine to see that this prophecy is now being fulfilled.

Moral decay is eating into the very heart of society. "As it was in the days of Sodom and Gomorrha," and "as it was in the days of Noah." People are calling on jails and penitentiaries to house their sex perverts and prostitutes. This condition is only a repetition of what happened to cause the destruction of the world by a flood.

Another sign is strange sights in the heavens. Many have already occurred. The dark day, the falling of the stars are some. London reports a mysterious sign. The arc of light was seen in the heavens recently which lasted for two hours. The whole sky was a brilliant red. People are committing national and individual suicide. In a day when people should be seeking God, they are foolishly thinking about taking their own lives. Why? Because they have been disappointed, and have lost faith in God and in humanity, and have nothing to live for. But the child of God has a Rock to anchor to. In poverty or in pain, day and night, winter and summer, in hunger or in fullness, we know that all things work together for good to them that love the Lord, and to those who are called according to His purpose.

I have mentioned some of the signs which mark the return of Jesus soon. The last sign is that separation of the believers from the worldly churches. "And I heard another voice from heaven saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." It is strange that God has to call His people out of the churches who profess to be His people. Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof, they are teaching that the Christian can practice both good and evil and be saved.

Our Savior is not tolerant of sin. The Word of God declares in no uncertain terms that the wages of sin is death. No sinner will stand in the last day. The soul that sinneth, it shall die. Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart. Our Lord declared, "Ye must be born again." There is no sin in the newborn child. The old man, born of the flesh, must die. "He that is born of God doth not commit sin." He that abideth in Him sinneth not. If we are dead to sin, how can we live any longer therein?

To as many as believed on him, gave He power to become the sons of God. My friends, have you gained the victory over sin?—J. J. Allen in The Bible Advocate.

—o—

If it be the purpose of God that, in this present dispensation, the preaching of the gospel shall only issue in the gathering out of an election from all nations, then also the purpose of God shall be accomplished, and no more. But it be plain that in this case the preaching of the gospel will have been a success (though the world be not converted by it).—S. H. Kellogg, D.D., Presbyterian Seminary, 1879.

Evolution Versus Inspiration

I DO NOT believe in evolution because it is contrary to the Bible account of creation, which tells us that man was "created" in the image of God—that "in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea and all that is therein" (which agrees with all true facts of science, which the truth of God irrevocably is). "God is truth," to which "there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning," and His Word which has stood the test of centuries and was endorsed by hundreds of quotations by Christ and His inspired apostles, and is constantly being fulfilled, is a supernatural Book, in that it produces results that cannot be accounted for in the natural. Wild savages, through its influence, are tamed to the harmlessness of doves. "Stony hearts" are made "flesh." The libertine, out of whom is cast seven devils, becomes a humble follower of the meek and lowly Galilean, for all of which true evolution has no place. This Holy Book produces holy lives in those who obey its precepts, while those who disobey, oft fall from their high estate and become the companions of "all who oppose the truth."

Evolution, in denying the miraculous, denies all that will fulfill the soul's need. Our dreams and hopes, our lofty ideals, our thirst for attainment, find little satisfaction here. Adverse conditions, the brevity of life, the fickleness of society in refusing to honor worth, the scientific advancement that leads to self-extermination, the spread of evil—all these and sinister forces at work without hope for a better world, would leave us hopeless and stranded. The advancement in medical science hardly keeps pace with new and startling disclosures. Cancers are gripping the vitals—"men's hearts failing them for fear" (Luke 21:26), drink and drug addicts increasing, auto wrecks with their toll of lives invading our highways. There are many sick beyond the help of a physician—strange infections, with nearly everyone afflicted in some way. People are chained with habits they are unable to break. And evolution, if true, with its slow growth, can give no help. If our help is through natural law, we are indeed in a hopeless and undone condition.

But when we turn our eyes to the omnipotent God, and to His eternal and never-failing Word, all is different. Here we find true worth will be rewarded. Here we find fulfillment of all our desires. Here we have hope that leads us away from natural law which ends in death, to a supernatural realm that is perfect and unending. And this we find that Christ, out of all order as an evolutionist, perfecting the divine plan centuries ago and living a perfect life, died to bring. And contrary to natural law, through supernatural power alone, burst the fetters of the tomb and became "the author of eternal salvation unto all those who obey him."

The evolutionist seeks to solve the mysteries of our mortal existence, which he is unable to do, as all life is of God.

But the whole truth must include the mysteries of life beyond, and the vain imaginings (Rom. 1:21, 22) of finite man can help us not a whit in solving our difficulties or in attaining our goal. Our salvation rests entirely on the naked Word of God, and we who are acquainted with its Author deny anything that would impeach His veracity, and especially since we have watched the "oppositions of science" (1 Tim. 6:20) and speculations of those who claim at the best to have only a theory, who "oppose themselves" in their millions of unproved years.

There can be no dependability in a "chance selection," for chance is never dependable, and is the direct opposite of law. The world, from the minutest invisible atoms to the stars in their courses, all run, as scientists must agree, on incontrovertible law. All inventions are but discoveries of divine laws and forces outside of man already in existence, who understands only in part. But the fact that he deals with forces entirely beyond himself disproves evolution. He is a limited being, and as such can only unravel such of the secrets of God as He wills. As says the inspired writer: "When I survey the heavens, the work of thy hands, and the moon and the stars which thou hast made, what is man that thou art mindful of him?" He realized the immensity and the immeasurability of the divine creation, and agreed with Job that "there is no searching of his (God's) understanding."

Man is finite, and apart from a higher power (a death-blow to evolution) nothing ever advances. Take, for example, the sower who sows the seed, nature (God's agency) has produced. If no sun or moisture appears he is entirely helpless, and without nature's production he himself could not long endure. He is entirely dependent, whether he realizes it or not, on divine mercy. (God often withholds mercy that erring man may realize the source of supply.) And if seed were not forthcoming he could not "produce" anything. It is the order of God alone that each herb produce "seed after its kind," which law is still in force and disproves the doctrines of the evolutionists, who claim we have advanced from one form of life to another. But whatever the speculation, we face incontrovertible facts. God has allowed man to cooperate with Him, and through selection and cross-breeding improve the species (which if let alone soon revert back to their natural order), but there is absolutely no crossing of the species. The hog still remains a hog, and the horse a horse. In fact, all varieties of plant and animal life may grow together in one field with no crossing or lack of distinction. From the same soil which in its virgin state is apparently lifeless, there grows hair on the horse, wool on the sheep, and bristles on the hog, with a great array of versicolor feathers on the fowl. From the same spot appear plants directly adverse, in form, habit, scent, and color, and this, year after year. And in our gardens the rank onion grows beside the delicate kale, with no mixing of scents; the delicate arbutus beside the skunk flower.

Also, through all the discoveries of archeologists this distinction is in evidence. If evolution were true there would be, not only one missing link, but many. We would find evidences of the law at work; but the facts are, there is no evidence of any mixing outside of the species that bears reproduction. The vine may mix with vine and the corn with corn (that man may have the honor of cooperating with the Almighty), but the corn and vine, the cabbage and potato do not mix. With reasonable care, after centuries of reproduction, there will be a like number of species. This is evidenced by the growth in unpeopled sections. Through centuries flowers of myriad variety grow gorgeously unseen, and the rocks bear mute evidence that it has always been so. And, in fact, bear evidence that the "earth is waxing old as doth a garment." Through the encroachments of civilization some of the species of our noble wild life have become extinct, and the rock formations in many sections reveal mammoth forms of life, buried in the time of the flood or in the course of years, that are not in existence today. Evolution, in denying the fall, denies the flood, but is not able to explain and is forever speculating on its evidences. Why the remains of torrid growth as found in glacial sections? Why the sea shells on high mountains? Whence the trees (the coal mines) buried deep in the earth? But the flood account explains all this. With water coming in torrential deluge from under the earth and from "the windows of heaven" for forty days and nights till the highest mountains were covered, when every living thing died (save what were in the ark), with the earth being tipped on its axis, affecting weather conditions (such a catastrophe that the inspired Peter wrote that "the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished"), there could not be but vast changes in earth conditions. In this perishing was buried the life that then was—called in modern language the "prehistoric age," but this is not true, as the Biblical account is very minute and graphic. Christ endorsed that account, and His word is preferable to this mixture of hodgepodge science. His-tory—His-story.

I deny evolution because it denies facts and is based on supposition only (they admit it is not a proved theory). Their main point, "the survival of the fittest," is not true in fact. Death still "loves a shining mark"—wars still take their toll of the flower of our manhood. Oppression and injustice still crush the most worthy.

Our penal institutions are more and more filled with educated youth, which institutions corrupt, rather than reform, their victims. After centuries of man-rule, or misrule, the world is in worse state than ever, and thinking men everywhere are admitting it. And inheriting the weaknesses and inabilities of his ancestors, surrounded far more with moral degeneracy than he is with moral worth, "shapen in iniquity," what chance has he for escape?

Man can never attain unto righteousness. It is "the gift of God" alone. Christ taught by example and precept that without dependence on God He was as helpless as any.

Evolution, denying the fall, denies any need of redemption, thus leaving the race without hope. The world about us is evidence beyond dispute that man cannot obtain purity through human effort. World statesmen, our great scientists and sociologists agree as never before that we are seeing the "deterioration of human ideals," and that without divine intervention we are lost. "He Saw the Calf and the Dancing"

By James W. McLain

THE things that happened to Israel in the wilderness happened to them for examples, and were written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come, to the intent we should not lust after evil things, as they also lusted.

Moses was chosen of God to be the savior of Israel from Egypt. They were baptized unto him in the cloud and in the sea. They communed together in the same spiritual food and drink, yet with many of them God was not well pleased, overthrowing them in the wilderness, that they should not reach the Promised Land.

When we notice the parallels drawn between Moses' baptized followers and many followers of Christ, we pause to wonder if Christ is well pleased.

Moses ascended the mount into the presence of God to receive the law. While he tarried, the people became restless. They brought together their gold and made a calf which they worshiped, and to which they made sacrifices. "And it came to pass, as soon as he came nigh unto the camp, that he saw the calf, and the dancing: and Moses' anger waxed hot, and he cast the tables out of his hands, and break them beneath the mount." In speaking of this great sin of the people, Paul says, "The people sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play."

Christ has ascended to the right hand of the Father. Many are becoming restless because He tarries. They bring together their nickels, dimes, and quarters, amounting to millions of dollars, to build huge corporations of pleasure. It is to such a golden calf they make sacrifices. They sit down to eat and drink, and rise up to play. The cabaret is testimony to this. When our Lord returns, will He find us dancing? (1 Cor. 10; Ex. 32.)

God's Program Versus Man's

THERE being but one God, He has but one program, while man has many programs, some of which do away with God, leaving man without hope, save as he can mold the future and make the world a better place for the habitation of the human race and bring about that condition of good will which will produce peace.

There are others who still believe in God, but who do not understand God's program, and are consumed with the idea that it is their business to find some method of transforming the inhabitants of the world so that this world will be ready to receive the Son of God and be governed by Him.

Even granting that man's program may be conceived in an earnest desire for the good of his fellow man, it can never succeed, because of the very fact that man is man, possessing man's "heart," which is "deceitful above all things, and . . . exceedingly corrupt." Unfortunately, "there is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death."

As the ostrich hides its head in the desert sands, and what it cannot see does not exist to it, so man hides his head in the shifting sands of human ideas, and because he cannot see God, to him there is no God.

Man's refusal to believe a truth never changes the truth, neither does his refusal to admit that the things which he sees were created by the God whom he does not see, do away with God. Human wisdom has never been able to comprehend God, therefore, as Paul says, "He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is the rewarder of them that seek after him." The reason lies in the fact that "in the wisdom of God, the world through wisdom knew not God," but "it was God's good pleasure through the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe."

God has a program for the salvation of those whom He has been able to gather out of the world for His own possession, and who, like Abraham, have believed Him. The program is "the eternal purpose," purposed in Christ.

Perhaps nowhere is this purpose more fully expressed than in Isaiah 45:22, where God says: "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God, and there is none else." And he gives the reason, "Thus saith Jehovah, that created the heavens, the God that formed the earth and made it, that established it and created it not in vain, that formed it to be inhabited."

You say, "It is inhabited." True, but a dead, a dying race was not God's vision when He formed the earth, for, as Jesus said, "God is not the God of the dead, but of the living." Because of this, Jesus declared that when Moses called Jehovah "the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob," he proved that there would be a resurrection; for while these men to whom God had covenanted to give "all the land" as an eternal inheritance slept the sleep of death, they were to live again, and so they "live unto him."

As long as this world is peopled with them that perish because sin has brought death into the world, they are dead in God's eyes. Yet God loved those who were lost through sin, and called them to look unto Him and be saved. All He asks is faith, and He offered faith in His ability to raise the dead by raising His own Son, and simply asks that we accept Him, assuring us that "he that hath the Son hath life," for this is the witness of God, "that God hath given unto us eternal life, and this life is in his Son."

Man's program at best is, as Jesus expressed it, washing the outside of the platter, and believing it to be clean because he cannot see the inside. Man believes that he can change man by changing his environment, that he can legislate or regiment righteousness, but God, who reads the heart and knows the thoughts of man, operates with the individual, creates within him a clean heart, clothes him with the righteousness of Christ. Therefore, Peter assures us that according to God's promise we look for a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.

God's program calls for the preparation of a people to inherit the land which He had promised to Abraham, and to those, who because they are Christ's are Abraham's seed, and heirs according to His promise.

True, this is not the thought of man for himself, but then God assures us that His thoughts are higher than man's thoughts and His ways higher than man's ways, assuring us that the word which went forth from His mouth should not return unto Him void, but it shall accomplish that which He purposed, and prosper in the thing whereunto He has sent it.

This word is the promise of eternal life, and by it those who believe were foreordained unto adoption as sons through Jesus Christ unto Himself, according to the good pleasure of His will.

Man may arrange some other program, he may deceive himself into believing that he can transform a world of untransformed people into a paradise. He may try to take the sting out of death and deceive himself into believing it to be Glory's gate; but the truth still remains, that Jesus is the way, the only way of life, and that they who would have life must obtain it through Him who is the resurrection, and who assures us that it is the will of God that He should raise up at the last day those who believe.—E. F. White in The Herald of Life.

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

HYPOCRISY is sin. How many times have you said, "Pleased to meet you," when introduced to a stranger, when you know very well that you hate to meet people?
—Harvey Krogh, Jr.

EVOLUTION VS. INSPIRATION

I am not an evolutionist because I prefer to trace my lineage back to the divine image in the Paradise of God, rather than to a "freckle" rolling in the mud and slime of a murky and unproved antiquity. I prefer the ministry of angels to the babble and chatter of the bewhiskered chimpanzees. As our character is shown by the company we keep, it is no wonder our world is awry, and our youth demoralized through absorbing such teaching! If we are simply on a level with a beast, let us live like one—"eat and drink, for tomorrow we die." This is the teaching in some of our "higher" institutions of learning and the logical result, the mooted "hypothesis" of all evolutionary theories. In fact, evolution is the foundation stone of modernism, which denies the miraculous, thus denying all that would lift our holy religion out of the realm of the natural. If the miraculous be not true, then we must live a few short years in bondage here, and die without hope. How thankful we should be that we need not "dwell in darkness," but through His grace may be permitted to sit with him in "heavenly places" here, and thus appreciate to an increasing extent the great marvels of His creation, His divine foresight for all His creation, His omnipresence and omniscience, and be assured of an abundant entrance into "the ages that are to be," beside which this age is as a thing of naught. In God we face all that is heartening. Chained as we may be with the limitations of the flesh, we may enjoy a deeper and fuller knowledge of the Spirit, which must increase throughout the endless ages of eternity, for in Him is life eternal, and we are "complete in him." He has planned all for man's blessing and security. Let us fall in line with that plan and thus gain an abundant entrance into that eternal kingdom.—Mrs. Millie Morrison in Messiah's Advocate.

THE GREAT SALVATION

claims, "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years" (Rev. 20:6). Hence the subjects of this great salvation will not only be exempt from the second, and last death that any shall die, but will be elevated to thrones of glory, and reign with Christ as kings and priests for one thousand years. This is the great salvation of which Christ is the "firstborn" among many brethren, who will share with Him the incorruptible and immortal nature of His divine Father and the glory and honour to which He is Heir, and they will also belong to the new creation of which He is the first-born (Col. 1:15).

Hence this salvation will as far surpass all other salvations as the incorruptible nature surpasses the corruptible, the immortal the mortal, and the new creation the old creation. The Apostle, therefore, has well denominated it the great salvation. This is the most exalted nature in the empire of God. It is the nature of the supreme Ruler of the universe, and His holy angels. It is called, by way of pre-eminence, the "divine nature." The most exalted conception of the great God, which inspiration has given, is expressed in the following sublime language: "Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honour and glory for ever and ever. Amen" (1 Tim. 1:17). The same Apostle accuses a class of the worst sinners in his day with having "changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image like to corruptible man" (Rom. 1:23), thus teaching that the nature of God is immortal and incorruptible, in contrast with man's nature which is mortal and corruptible.

But, as has been clearly proved, this great salvation proposes to deliver man from mortality and corruption, and clothe him with the divine nature. This is the strongest motive to self-denial and fidelity held out in the Bible; and through its magic power the Christian is enabled to triumph over the world and escape its allurements. The anticipation of this glorious salvation has been the patent cause of the grandest achievements of faith, and the noblest heroism the world has ever known. Infinite wisdom could devise no greater reward, and to all eternity neither man nor angels can realize any greater boon.

According to our Savior's discourse with Nicodemus, this great salvation will, prospectively, save all believers from eternally perishing. He said, "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved" (John 3:16, 17). According to the foregoing promise, to save everyone who believes, and to give eternal life to every believer in the Son of God, are one and the same thing. The perishing spoken of, and eternal life, are placed in direct antithesis: it, therefore, involves eternal death, the proper antithesis of eternal life. The great salvation, therefore, includes eternal exemption from death, and the obtaining of its opposite—eternal life.

According to Paul in his letter to the Romans, glory, honor, and immortality are indissolubly joined to the promised gift of eternal life. He says, "To them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honour and immortality, eternal life" (Rom. 2:7). Thus this great salvation commences with deliverance from death, and climaxes with glory, honor, immortality, and eternal life. I might say that it commences with the deliverance of the sinner from his sins, but this part of our subject cannot be considered now.

This is the better resurrection that inspired the faith, animated the hope, and was the prompting cause of all the splendid triumphs and glorious achievements of the long line of martyrs from Abel down. It was the bright hope that cheered their drooping spirits in the darkest hour of persecution and trial—that quenched the raging flames, plucked the venomous sting from the grim monster, and enabled feeble women to spurn the present life with all its endearing associations, and suffer the most cruel torture and infamous death that they might obtain this "better resurrection"—that they might with the redeemed host of God's elect, possess to all eternity the ever-increasing joys and glories of this great salvation. It is the culmination of all the good which God has ever promised and that an ever-increasing capacity through the ages of eternity can enjoy or realize. It will be the climax of all the hopes of the church of the living God, and the realization of all their bright visions of happiness and glory.

No wonder, then, that the great Apostle to the Gentiles should willingly, yea gladly, give up all his fair prospects and forego the bright anticipation of glory, honor, and position which had so long dazzled his eye, and be defamed and made as the filth of the world, and the offscouring of all things, that he might know Christ and the power of His resurrection, and if by any means he might obtain this great salvation as involved in the resurrection from among the dead (1 Cor. 4:13; Phil. 3:8-11).

It is no wonder that Moses, the man of God, could mock the might of empire and tarnish the glittering treasures of Egypt, in his heroic decision to suffer affliction with the people of God rather than to enjoy the pleasures of sin in its most fascinating form, that he might receive the recompense of reward (Heb. 11:24-26).

The Son of God endured the most malignant hatred and cruel persecution, and died the accursed death of the cross, that He might be made perfect through suffering, and thus be qualified to honor the Author of eternal salvation (Heb. 2:9). "For it became him for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings" (Heb. 2:10). And being made perfect, He became the Author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey Him.

In this and all the foregoing texts, the great salvation is offered to the obedient only. Those who neglect to comply with its conditions will not obtain it. It is the salvation which our Savior affixed to the faith and obedience of the gospel. In the Great Commission He said to the eleven apostles, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned" (Mark 16:15, 16).

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST

The best illustration of this is the electric motor. The mechanic finishes every part and puts it into its place in relation to every other part, and he has a perfect motor: but it is lifeless. But he turns on the current and it at once becomes full of life and power. But after the motor has run a while, some part will wear out and it will again be lifeless. It must be renewed before it will work again.

God made man much as the electric motor is made. He turned on the current: He breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul. But after a time some part will wear out, and man cannot use the current any more; he becomes lifeless. The dread enemy has done its work.

"But," some one may ask, "hasn't man an immortal soul that will never die?" If he has, the Bible record tells us nothing about it. Immortal soul, deathless soul, never-dying soul, and kindred terms never once occur in the Bible.

The word "immortal" occurs but once in the Bible, and then is applied to God: "Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God" (1 Tim. 1:17). "Immortality" occurs five times, and when applied to man always refers to the future life; never to this life.

Once, in Romans 2:7, we are told to seek for immortality. Do we seek for that which we possess? Besides, it is said to belong to God alone: "Who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto" (1 Tim. 6:16).

How can anyone who believes the Bible say that man is possessed of immortality now in the face of these facts?

Do those who believe in the immortality of the soul believe the record that God gave of His Son? They believe they have life in themselves: God says it is in His Son.

I heard a man, while preaching a funeral sermon, say over and over, "Death is swallowed up in victory," and he was referring to the dead person before him.

I have been accused of saying that man is no better than a beast, and I replied that he isn't in one respect. And I did not say he was no better than a beast in that respect—God said it! I turned and read Ecclesiastes 3:19, 20: "For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath (spirit); so that man hath no preeminence above a beast. . . . All go unto one place; all are of dust, and all turn to dust again."

But thanks be to God, even though man by his disobedience has brought himself into a condition which will finally return him to dust, God has provided a way whereby he may be brought out of that condition! Even though the motor went out entirely, God can restore it again. But He has provided that it must be done in and through the name of His Son Jesus Christ.

When all men have finally passed before the Lord in judgment, some will have obtained immortality, and some will have returned to the elements from whence they came, never to live again.

Every living thing loves life, but some love this life so well that they never make any preparation for the future, and so this life is all they get.

Are any of our friends or loved ones in this condition? Have we any responsibility in the matter? Some one may say, "If we hold our own in this day and age, we are doing all that can be expected of us." Did you ever see a church just hold its own? When anything stops growing it begins to die. Are we growing or dying? As Boake Carter would say, "You answer that one." If we are dying, who is to blame? You answer that one, too.

The Berean Road to Faith

"These were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the scriptures daily, whether those things were so. Therefore many of them believed" (Acts 17:11, 12).

Thus the Bible records how people in ancient Berea came to believe in Jesus. It is the Berean Road to Faith.

The Bereans courteously listened to Paul's message, but that wasn't enough. They searched in what they knew was the Word of God, the Old Testament Scriptures, then they believed. Simply to be credulous is not a virtue. Adam and Eve were credulous of the serpent in the garden, but it was sin. The swindler gets people to believe in his scheme through his seemingly magnetic personality, which is usually a false front covering up clever appeals to the victims' appetites and vanity. The crooked salesman buys your dinner for you or gives you a drink and you buy his goods without investigating their quality. The oil well swindler covers up the true facts and appeals to your greed to be rich. The serpent merely appealed to Adam's appetites. He promised Adam and Eve a higher social position—to be like gods, and that they would never die. They were credulous, they didn't investigate his claims, but believed the serpent in preference to what God expressly had told them, and fell.

The Berean Road to Faith is the road of investigation. They searched the Scriptures—therefore they believed, was their formula. Let's make it ours. Would you develop that marvelous confidence in God that leads men and women to weather the fiercest storms of life and come off conquerors through Him that loves us? Would you have the "peace of God, which passeth all understanding" to garrison in your heart and mind? Then you must follow the road of the Bereans. Listen to the one who claims to be the messenger of God, investigate in the Bible, and believe the truth.

I am talking also to you who already have a true understanding of the promises of God. Would you have more faith, the power behind a happy life? Then notice, "They searched the scriptures daily." Faith needs daily nourishment, too.

Faith Is a Channel

Water flows from a supply high in the mountains, over mountains and across deserts through the aqueduct that supplies water to the thirsty city of Los Angeles. Faith is the channel through which God's saving grace flows to us. "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God" (Eph. 2:8). Both grace and faith are gifts of God. "Not of works, lest any man should boast" (v. 9). No man can earn salvation by works, no man can hew out the channel of faith himself—"faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God" (Rom. 10:17). These things are all the gifts of God. But He never builds a channel of faith in you without your consent. His grace never flows to you unless you open the head gates.

Is Man Tempted of God?

* * * *

Ernest Barnum, Hammond, La.

"In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." He created all living things that creep upon the earth, and therefore He created Satan. But it does not follow that God tempts man. Satan was created to test mankind and to develop character.

In Mark 1:13 it is stated that Jesus was "tempted of Satan." It does not say "tempted of God."

We find recorded in Genesis 2:16, 17, the following words: "And the Lord God commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat: but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die."

Later Satan entered the garden in the form of a serpent and said, "Yea, hath God said, Ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden? And the woman said unto the serpent, We may eat of the fruit of the trees of the garden: but of the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden, God hath said, Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die. And the serpent said unto the woman, Ye shall not surely die" (Gen. 3:1-4).

We are told in Titus 1:2 that God "cannot lie." If God cannot lie, then it was the serpent who told the lie, and consequently God is not the tempter.

Observe James 1:13: "Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man."

According to these scriptures we are forced to believe that God tempts no man.

"The Fool Hath Said"

"In your patience possess ye your souls."

A clergyman was dining in a hotel with some commercial travelers, who made jokes about him. He moved not a muscle of his face, and after dinner one of them approached him, saying: "How can you sit quiet and hear all that has been said without uttering a rebuke?" "My dear sir," said the cleric, "I am chaplain of a lunatic asylum."

Lord of Lords

Lord of the realms of time and space,
Sovereign of land and sea,
We in our songs extol Thy grace,
Glory we give to Thee,
Ruler of all creation wide,
Hear thou the cry that rings,
"Praise ye the Lord, revered and adored, Praise ye the King of kings."

Lord of the seasons circling round,
Master of night and day,
Each must follow Thy law profound,
Each must Thy word obey,
Stars seek the courses set by Thee,
Each in its orbit swings;
Nature proclaims the greatest of names—
Hail to the King of kings.

Lord of the hearts of men of earth,
Teach us to look to Thee:
Grant here today a glad new birth,
With love and loyalty,
Speak through these shining gifts of Thine,
Teach us what nature sings,
One Lord alone, one Monarch we own—
He is the King of kings.

Jesus and the Sabbath Day

Long, long before Jesus was born God had set aside one day out of the seven for His people to keep as a day of rest and worship. This was the seventh day, the one we call Saturday. God knew that man needed one day on which to rest and rebuild his body, but more than that, to refresh his mind with thoughts of His Creator.

Now God had given His people, the Israelites, laws by which they should govern their actions on this day which they called the Sabbath. But the scribes and Pharisees of Jesus' day had added to these laws until trying to keep the day became a very great burden. There were so many "don't's," that one was certain to forget one or even more of them, thus breaking the Sabbath.

In our lesson for today we find two stories showing how these critical rulers accused Jesus of breaking the Sabbath laws. In the first one we find Jesus and some of His disciples walking through a field of grain. This grain is called corn in our lesson, but we know that corn, as we know it, was not raised in Palestine. So we are sure it was some sort of small grain.

They were hungry, and as they walked they gathered some of the grain, rubbed it between their hands, and ate it. And the Pharisees called that breaking the Sabbath. Just because it was work! Imagine that!

Now turn back in your Old Testament and see what God had said they could do as they walked through the grain field on a Sabbath. Deuteronomy 23:25 will tell you. Very simple, isn't it?

Notice that Jesus recalled to their minds something that their own king, David, had done long ago, David of whom they were so proud. You will find that interesting story in 1 Samuel 21, verses 2, 3, and 6.

You will find God's directions for baking this shew-bread and for setting it in a row on the Lord's table in another of the early books of the Bible—Leviticus—chapter 24, verses 5-9. Be sure to read them, especially you girls.

We do not keep the seventh day apart from the others for rest and worship. But we keep the first day of the week. How many of you know why? Most all of you do, I'm sure. To those who do not know, I'll whisper a question. On what day of the week did Jesus arise from the dead? Now you know!

Are you careful to show a difference between Sunday and the other days? Do you go to church and Sunday school every Sunday that you possibly can? If you are very busy with your school work the rest of the week, this is the day that you can use in reading your Bibles and studying your lesson for the next Sunday. There are many other little things you can do in the afternoon, such as, going to see a sick friend and making others happy in many ways. The more you do of such things, the more you will really enjoy Sunday.

"Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God?"

AMONG THE CHURCHES

NOTICE TO IOWA CHURCHES

There will be no winter conference held at Waterloo this month as previously planned.

The funds of the Iowa Conference are seriously low, and we appeal to any who are interested in the Iowa evangelistic work, and especially to the Iowa brethren, to send their contributions to the treasurer, Mrs. Lee Fish, Maxwell, Iowa. This will be much appreciated.
Esther Sealine, Cor. Sec.

RIVERSIDE, CALIFORNIA

Two more wonderful sermons were given by Bro. L. E. Conner in the little Pomona Chapel this past Sunday. The first one was on faith, and the second on what we must do to add to this faith. If we could feel daily as we do when hearing such words, there would be no fear of our ever being eligible for the kingdom, for I felt I could love my neighbors as I love myself, and that I would have the patience of Job, and I would be temperate in all things, and all the rest of the requirements. How much we need such words to help us as we go about our daily living!

With Christian greetings to all,
Jessie M. B. Kauffman.

SOUTH BEND, INDIANA

Rev. J. H. Anderson preached for the Church of God on January 23. His subject was, "God: Immortal Plane, the Sinless Plane; the Mortal Plane of Sin and Death." Friends from Lakeville and Nappanee, Ind., were present. The senior choir rendered several musical selections very beautifully. The junior choir, under the direction of Mrs. Lottie Piekerl, is improving and is an added and helpful feature to our Sunday school program.

An election of officers for the church resulted as follows: Elders—Rolland Stilson and Horace Pierce; deacons—Elmer McChesney and John Houser; secretary—Mrs. Dessie M. Fox; treasurer—Mrs. Frances Boyle.

Everyone is urged to attend these church services which are held on the fourth Sunday at 7:30 p. m., in the Community Room at the Y.M.C.A. Sunday school is held every Sunday at 10:00 a. m., at the same place. Dale Rouch is the superintendent.

Mrs. Dessie M. Fox, Sec.

LOUISIANA CHURCH NOTES

The Happy Woods church has just received a new coat of paint on the outside, adding much to its appearance. Another improvement was the building of a pulpit and choir platform.

Mr. and Mrs. George Siple of Oregon, Ill., are visiting relatives and friends here and we are pleased to have them attend the various services and sing in the choir.

The Blood River church has recently lost a loyal and capable worker by the death of Mrs. Adam Lobell. Her influence lives on, however, in the little church she loved so well.

Good attendance and interest continues in most all our various church activities and with such cooperation we anticipate further growth and development.
Harry Goekler, Pastor.

PENNELWOOD CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

We are glad to report that Mrs. George Holly is recovering nicely from her operation of December 23. She has been home from the hospital several weeks and is able to be up and around the house.

Our plans for remodeling to enlarge the auditorium did not materialize as we had hoped. However, as the attendance at Sunday school is steadily increasing, our landlady is having a partition removed to make another classroom in the chapel and is converting a double garage into a suitable room for class purposes.

As a New Year's resolution, many of the church families pledged to give Five Cents a day with the aim of completing payment, by the end of the year, on two lots to be used later as a building site.

The Berean hour on January 27 was given to Mr. and Mrs. Peterson, returned missionaries from Cambodia in French Indo-China. They have spent ten years as missionaries there and gave a very interesting illustrated lecture on the country, people, and their work. They also brought many articles of native clothing, household utensils, and tools. The Petersons are planning to return to Cambodia in June. May God bless these people who are willing to be separated from loved ones and endure the discomforts of a tropical climate to carry the gospel message to those who have never heard of our loving Savior.

Mrs. L. F. Slocum, Sec.

FRANK V. BLAKELY

Word reaches us of the sudden death of Frank V. Blakely, who for many years was associated with the work of the Church of God in Michigan. He will be remembered appreciatively by many old friends throughout his native state and in other states where he assisted at conferences and Bible schools. He was an excellent student of the Bible and an interesting speaker.

He was born March 16, 1880, at Eastport, Mich., the son of Mr. and Mrs. Dan Blakely. Our sympathy goes out to those who mourn his passing, especially to his daughter, Sr. Lois Blakely of Grand Rapids.

T. A. DRINKARD AT HORTON, TEXAS

Beginning on Friday night before the fifth Sunday in January, 1938, Bro. T. A. Drinkard of Handley, Tex., held meetings for three nights at Horton, Tex. Horton is located on the Cotton Belt Railroad, five miles east of Commerce, Tex.

REPORT OF T. A. DRINKARD

My detailed report for January is as follows: Ater, Tex. (1, 2), 3 sermons; Beckett Mountain, Ark. (7-9), 4 sermons; Cleveland, Ark. (14-16), 4 sermons; Mount Olive, Ark. (19), 1 sermon; Driggs, Ark. (22), 1 sermon; Horton, Tex. (28-30), 3 sermons. Places visited, 6; sermons delivered, 16. Expenses, $15.93; receipts, $42.35.

I am again happy to place another report before the brotherhood. I am sure you will rejoice to know that the gospel is being carried into the homes of those whose hearts respond to its influence. The work was hindered to some extent by rainy weather while at Driggs, Ark., for which four sermons were planned, but the weather prevented carrying out the plan. A very fine crowd greeted me on Saturday night before the 4th Sunday. This is where our dear brother, L. H. Shelton, lived and died. The fruit of his labor still lives. The Southern cause of God lost one of its greatest defenders by his death.

On Wednesday before I met with the brethren at Mount Olive, about 6 miles west of Driggs, near where Bro. Jones, who died November 2, is buried. Here Bro. Jones labored for so long and his work will manifest itself through the years.

They want more preaching at these places. Will you help me to keep the gospel hope alive in these and other localities? It is not a question, Can we find where we can preach the gospel? but, Can means be raised to support the effort. I say this because so far I have requests for eleven meetings.

This report is given that you might know what I am trying to do, and I appeal to you for help to answer these calls.

T. A. Drinkard, Handley, Texas.

APPEALS TO THE ISOLATED IN OKLAHOMA

To the isolated members of the Church of God in Christ, Greeting: We are now trying to revive the work of the church in this part of the vineyard, and to this end we are begging each isolated believer in the one faith to send us his or her name and address to be enrolled as a member of the Church of God in Bristow, Okla. Our purpose is to help you and your loved ones to make ready for the Lord's coming that you may obtain eternal life. You can help us in this great task by your prayers and by contributing at least one tenth of your income to aid in carrying the gospel of Christ forward and for the relief of those in need. The Lord will bless you for so doing. Gen. 28:22; Mal. 3:9, 10.

We are making Bristow the headquarters for our isolated members in the Southwest and we invite, nay, urge every one thus situated to join with us in this effort. We look upon this as a great call to arms in the fight of faith in the service of Christ. 1 Tim. 6:12; 2 Tim. 4:7. Come, let us try to save a few more before it is too late!

CALLING ALL CHURCHES!

How many have sent in your census report since the request in The Herald four months ago? Just three! These were from Moorefield and Holbrook, Neb., and Delta, Ohio. Indiana Conference also sent a very complete report of all her churches, and several isolated members reported. To all these, thank you!

But where are the rest? Time is passing, and it will soon be conference time again. I must have reports from all our churches well in advance of July.

If you have not already done so, will you please compile the following information AT ONCE, and send it to

M. W. Lyon,
13517 Darley Ave.,
Cleveland, Ohio.

1. How many members of the Church of God are there in your church locality?
2. How many members do you have on your Sunday school roll, if any?
3. How many members do you have on your Berean roll, if any?
4. Names and addresses of all isolated members of the Church of God that are not members of a state conference.
5. Names and addresses of any ministers that you think may not be generally known.

For more complete information, look up your old copy of The Herald for September 28 or October 5, 1937.

You need not write a letter. A penny post card will do. All that I want is just the items specified. But they are VERY IMPORTANT.

Don't put it off. Please take care of this now, and help me to prepare an accurate record of our membership.

“Home, Sweet Home”

Provided by the love and sympathy of the entire brotherhood of the Church of God, Golden Rule Home assures to the members of its Family the comfort, security, and solicitous care which the word “home” always suggests.

Here the anxieties of earlier and more active life are laid aside forever. No threat of eviction for non-payment of rent or taxes or other indebtedness troubles the hearts of the residents of Golden Rule Home!

No doctor or hospital bills, no grocery, coal, or light bills to be met the first of the month, bring fear to the minds of the Golden Rule Home Family!

All such obligations and burdens are taken from the shoulders of these older ones immediately upon their entrance into the Home and are carried thereafter by the Golden Rule Home itself, which is amply able to bear the load on their behalf.

A hearty Christian welcome awaits all who seek the protection and lifelong support the Home provides.

Conditions of entrance into Golden Rule Home are as liberal as absolute security permits. Write for full particulars concerning the Home and its advantages. Or, better still, come and visit the Home itself and let the Family tell their own story of its advantages and comforts.

Address: Golden Rule Home, Mrs. Idona Romine, Matron, Oregon, Illinois.

An Appeal to Science

By Harry V. Minkler

IN THIS age, referred to by Daniel as one in which "knowledge shall be increased," we find it ever more necessary to be able to "give a reason" of the hope that is within us. Enlightened students in every branch of modern learning are no longer satisfied with dogmatic assertion and repeated statement of traditional tenets of belief. I believe that this is the reason why more and still more intelligent thinkers are turning thumbs down on any approach to a study of the Scriptures. But I am glad that this is so, for only thus can "orthodoxy" be brought to see the error of its ways.

Even among those of us who have been able to supply a degree of reason to our study of the Bible, there still seems to remain a certain tendency to revert to traditional practices and ideas in our approach to an understanding of fundamental truths, such, for example, as the nature of man. It appears that even among our most able students there are some who (perhaps because they have never been compelled to meet vigorous opposition on doctrinal points) are inclined to take for granted that their own individual interpretations just must be right! This should not be so. For unless we are able to start our investigation of a particular subject upon a sound, reasonable, and "sure" foundation, it would be useless for us to undertake it. We might just as well end our study in a maze of mystery as to start it under such conditions. To reach out into an "orthodox" "heaven" to find angels (some of which have fallen) is, to my mind, as foolish as it is to end with the same "heaven." In other words, we cannot end upon the earth, unless we start from the same place. Is this not reasonable?

If we cannot eliminate the so-called "miraculous" (mystical) from the foundation of our Christian teaching and get our feet upon the ground and keep them there, understanding, believing, and at all times applying the underlying truth that God always works according to His established laws in every avenue of His intercourse with man-

We are pleased to present to our readers a new and accomplished writer in the author of the following Biblico-scientific article. We commend his work especially to the attention of our ministers and our young people.

kind, then, but not until then, shall we be able to "give an answer to every man that asketh . . . a reason for the hope that is" in us! This, I believe, is the key that will unlock and stimulate the interest of otherwise intelligent scoffers at the orthodox interpretation of Biblical teaching!

GOD MADE MAN A LIVING SOUL

In the 2nd chapter of Genesis and the 7th verse, we find that God breathed the breath of life into the man after He had fully developed him physically. Let us start carefully! Nothing is said that would imply that God breathed life into the man, but that He breathed into him the breath of life. Life, you will readily see, existed before a portion of it was breathed into Adam. If life had in any manner been injected into him, he would have been immortal then and there. No one can doubt that! It may easily be seen, then, that so long as that breath of life remained in Adam he would live and definitely no longer.

Now in this particular place we must define the word "breath" as "spirit," or influence and power; for when that breath goes from the man this "spirit," influence or power of God ceases to function in the man (Psa. 146:3, 4). The thinking apparatus in Adam (inoperative before) started when he began to breathe and stopped when he ceased breathing. It was at the moment he started to breathe that Adam "became a living soul."

Inspiration tells us (Lev. 17:11) that "the life . . . is in the blood." Bear in mind that this scripture does not state that the blood is the life, but merely that the life is in the blood. We know that a man may have a normal amount of blood free from all disease, and that every organ of his body may be in perfect condition, but let the life be taken from the blood and he is dead instantly! How may the life be taken from the blood? Just close the man's nostrils and mouth for a few moments and (Please turn to page 9)

Science Agrees With Bible Record of Creation

"And God said, Let the earth bring forth the living creature after his kind" (Genesis 1:24).

CHICAGO, Ill., Jan. 30.—All major types of life appeared simultaneously on the planet Earth, according to the new theory of the origin of animal forms developed by Dr. Austin H. Clark of the Smithsonian Institution, reports Philip Kinsley for The Chicago Tribune. This theory, called eogenesis, dispenses with the so-called "missing link" of evolution and asserts that while the basic standard pattern of a man, a crow, a lizard, a codfish, or a monkey was the same, if there ever was any connection between them it was in the cellular stage where all life is assumed to have originated.

Dr. Clark, a zoologist, has carefully checked all of his conclusions with other specialists and has determined to his satisfaction at least, that the vertebrates, including man, did not evolve from something lower, but arose through variation in the same type of gastrula (a sac with a double wall, one stage in the development of every animal embryo) from which the others arose.

"There is no evidence against this assumption," said Dr. Clark, "which is in agreement with the geological background of life" (and in basic principle agrees with the record of Genesis.—Editor); "with the fossil record as illustrated by fossils from strictly comparable environments; and with the assumed necessity for a system of checks and balances between the different types of life."

In support of his argument he states that "conditions on the earth in so far as they create the physical and chemical environment under which plants and animals live have remained unchanged from the very earliest times, except in the distribution of climatic zones. From the very beginning of the fossil record," Dr. Clark asserts, "the broader aspects of animal life upon the earth have remained the same."

In a radio educational broadcast, a recognized authority in the field of psychology, declared, in harmony with the physical deductions of Dr. Clark, that the mind of man, that is, his intellectual capacity, showed no signs of having been enlarged from the date of the earliest available records. He has learned many new things as the treasures of earth and air and sky opened up before him, but his capacity to think and to reason shows no appreciable improvement since at least five thousand years before the birth of Christ. Man has remained essentially the same mentally and physically, in form and in tendency, from the earliest ages.

The eogenesis theory "does not deal with the origin of life." While evolution is an accepted theoretical principle of all science, the problem of the origin of life is still unsolved (outside of the Bible).

Looking at it from the standpoint of biology, there is no such thing as life. There are only living things. "Whether we regard life," says Dr. Clark, "as a thing apart from the purely material, or as a resultant of chemical and physical interactions, the fact remains that it is always evidenced in bodies with, and a function of, their chemical and physical environment, and that they are dependent for their being upon chemical and physical phenomena."

Physical nature and life must be fused, as body and mind must be fused (recognized as component parts of a unit individuality), before we can get any understanding of them, Dr. Clark declares.

"It has been found, according to Professor Ralph S. Lillie, biologist, that there is something creative, physically indeterminate, about life, which is beyond the known laws of chemistry and physics." (The italics are ours—Editor.) "Life, then, may be conceived of as a process of creative activity, form and being arising at each step out of some mysterious inner force. And there can be no end to that process."

In connection with this editorial, the reader is urged to study carefully the article appearing on the front page of this issue by Harry V. Minkler, who presents a very interesting explanation of the origin of life based on Biblico-scientific grounds.

The chief importance to the student of the Scriptures, in Dr. Clark's new theory of eogenesis (a compound Greek word: eos, "dawn," and genes, "a beginning," signifying "from the starting point of being") lies in the fact that scientific authorities are evidently discarding the Darwinian theory of selection so far as the origin of species is concerned, and are approaching very close to the inspired declaration as to man's nature and the origin of life. Man is not an educated monkey whose tail has been amputated by evolution's buzz saw, but he is and always was a man and nothing else.

LAZARUS AND THE RICH MAN (LUKE 16)

By H. V. Reed

THOSE who contend for continued consciousness of the soul after death, and that it can enjoy life or suffer pain without the body, refer to the parable of Lazarus and the rich man as proof of the truth of their position. The question is, Does this parable teach that the soul (or spirit) is conscious in a bodiless state? We might ask the question in another way: Does the parable refer to the state of man in death at all, or to his condition in this life and to his condition after his resurrection from the dead?

It is plain to us that not one word is said about either Lazarus or the rich man while dead. The scene lies beyond the resurrection after judgment has been pronounced. Our reasons for so believing are based upon the terms used in the parable. The reader will observe that not one word is said about the soul or spirit. It does not say the body died and the soul was tormented, neither does it say that the spirit went away with the angels, etc. The whole parable is based upon the idea of two men with bodies, having hands, eyes, and tongues. Furthermore, no mention is made of any intermediate state between death and the resurrection, but the resurrection is referred to and the scenes of the judgment state depicted in graphic words. In order to show the reader the points clearly we will present them in their order.

1. Lazarus dies and is carried by the angels to Abraham's bosom. Now the question is, When do the angels come to carry the saved to Paradise? There is but one answer to this question in the whole Bible, and that is when the Son of Man comes in His glory with the angels, then He shall reward every man. He shall send His angels and they shall gather His chosen (see Matt. 16:27; 24:31-33). The saints are not gathered until the Lord comes, and that is the time of their resurrection and reward. Hence Lazarus will be remembered at that time. No account is taken of him while dead.

2. Lazarus was conveyed away to Abraham's bosom, which, probably, refers to Paradise. If this be so, then it follows that the poor man will, after his resurrection, inherit the Paradise of God wherein grows the tree of life, and this also belongs to the new state after the resurrection (Rev. 2:7; 22:1-5). The time when the heirs of promise associate with Abraham is when the kingdom is established, as will be seen from the words of Christ: "And I say unto you, That many shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. 8:11). The angels will gather the believers into His kingdom at the time of the resurrection, and that is the time when the angels will convey Lazarus to Abraham's bosom or kingdom.

3. The rich man died and was buried, and in Hades he lifted up his eyes. In other words, the rich man dies, is buried in the grave (Wakefield), and awakens to consciousness, and sees Abraham in the kingdom of God and the poor man with him. Then comes his remorse in the full consciousness of his great loss. This point is amply sustained by a parallel passage in Luke: "There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth when ye shall see Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets in the kingdom of God, and you yourselves thrust out." "And they shall come from the east, and from the west, and from the north, and from the south, and shall sit down in the kingdom of God" (Luke 13:28, 29). This points to the torment in the flames, the time when those who are rejected see Abraham and the saved in the kingdom of God. Here is a fair parallel to the parable, which makes it plain that the scenes are after the resurrection, in the judgment age. There can be no impassable gulf until after judgment has been rendered. The words "now he is comforted and thou art tormented" sustain the point clearly. The reward and punishment are states on the two sides of the impassable gulf. When the rich man awakes from the grave he sees Lazarus in Abraham's bosom enjoying the comforts of Paradise. His poverty is gone and the true riches have become his. Then the rich man beholds his own poverty and the great loss which brings the anguish and agony, ending in the destroying flames of the second death (Rev. 20:13-15)!

It is further evident that the scenes here depicted refer to events after the resurrection from what is said by the rich man to Abraham: "If one went unto them from the dead they would believe," etc. This shows that Lazarus had been raised from the dead. He did not say, "If one went to them from the spirit land!" The poor man had been awakened from the dead and the angels had conveyed him to Abraham, and the rich man saw them together in the kingdom. This view relieves the parable of all ambiguity and dignifies the grand object our Lord had in view. The state of man while dead is not the object of the illustration. The reference reaches out beyond into that age of judgments and rewards, and those who are worthy receive the blessings of life, while those trusting in the things of this lifetime lose the comforts of the kingdom of God. When the rich man died he left his brethren at his father's house enjoying this life. He now sees the uncertainty of trusting in riches, and pleads for them to be warned; but they had Moses and the prophets, which were ample in their instructions as to these affairs, and the answer is, "They would not be persuaded though one went to them from the dead." Is the Gospel a Failure?

Number 1

PEOPLE are saying so on many sides. Even ministers are saying it. They claim that it is losing ground and not making the progress it should.

Some counsel a new gospel, that the old is no longer acceptable. Churches are not attended as they used to be. Sunday is made a day of pleasure-seeking rather than one of church attendance, and many amusements are allowed on Sunday drawing the young and unstable from the church. Various teachings are gaining ground, which counteract the gospel and make appeals to people's passions and prejudices rather than their principles.

All parties are full of gloomy forebodings concerning the world. The future looks dark. Nations, even those called by the Christian name, are arming beyond any former times and are ready to fly at each others' throats. Vast sums of money are, accordingly, spent in military armaments, causing the burden of taxation to rest heavily upon the common people. Diplomats are taxed to the utmost to keep the peace of peoples who have allowed themselves to be called by the Christian name that signifies the Prince of Peace. And this after two thousand years of gospel preaching! Various disturbing elements are breaking up old and God-given institutions, such as divorce in the home.

The picture might be further painted without roseate hues. But are there no features of our times that merit praise? There are many. The age is unparalleled in many respects. Let some of the fathers and grandfathers of a generation or two ago but arise from their graves and what astonishment they would express. The automobile, the radio, the airplane, and many other inventions have changed the complexion of society. Distant places have been brought near, travel has been wonderfully accelerated, electricity has lightened burdens and made life more pleasurable. Medical and scientific discoveries have solved many of life's problems—and all would seem to these supposedly resurrected fathers greatly changed, and they would wonder if they had come to the same world if they did not notice that the same great routine of nature still prevailed, such as the daily circuits of the sun, the monthly phases of the moon, and the moving constellations.

They would, however, notice a change from their lifetime in the church habits of the people. The filled sanctuaries would now be much depleted in attendance if not entirely abandoned. The sociability and neighborliness of former times would appear to be exchanged for a rushing rampage of selfish greed and forgetfulness of others.

And yet we do not wish to picture conditions unfairly or untruthfully overdraw them. There are doubtless noble exceptions to these drab colors in some parts of the world. But in these United States and adjoining Canada, much we have described would appear too true.

But our caption question deserves attention. What we have said has a bearing upon it in that the gospel is supposed to correct these things instead of allowing a condition so contrary to its spirit. It therefore appears to some to be a failure.

In considering the matter of failure of anything, two things, at least, should be considered. First, has it been properly used, and second, is the thing itself a failure however earnest the attempts to use it. A thing may be good in itself but in the hands of bad manipulators become a failure, or a thing may not be the best but in the hands of good operators may prove quite effective, and a good thing, in itself, and well used, ought to produce astonishing results.

Another thing to be considered, especially with the gospel, is, what was its purpose. What might we expect, from the terms of its announcement, its outcome should be? A thing cannot be said to be a failure if it does not do what it never purposed to do. Maybe we are judging it a failure because of misinterpretation of its declarations of purpose. It has failed to do the thing they have conceived as its object, when plain announcement of its purpose is something entirely different.

A common conception of this purpose is that the world will be converted and Christianized, thereby bringing the kingdom and glory of the heavens to it; and all this is looked upon, on the part of many, yea, may we say the majority, as gradually coming through the preaching of the gospel and moral and social endeavors in this age. But it is not doing it, and therefore the conclusion is pressing on the minds of many that in the form formerly preached, it has failed, and that the desired goal can only be attained by changing the old for some new gospel.

There is no question but that the Bible does predict a time to come, on earth, when wars shall cease, when every man shall dwell peaceably and free from national invasion, or other disturbing elements, when the glory of God shall fill the earth as the waters cover the ocean bed, when men will beat their swords into plowshares and spears into pruning hooks, when nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

The doings of the present period of this age are far from the least approach to this Utopia. It seems more like beating plowshares into swords and other agricultural implements into war weapons. And, instead of not learning war any more, we have large military schools in which the latest discoveries of science are being applied to military ends.

But times and movements are a great paradox. Along with these mammoth war preparations we have peace movements. Every year prizes are given for the best declamations and peace essays. These essays, however, seem to have little effect on those faced with the practical issues that demand war preparations. These declamatory contests are sponsored by the prominent Protestant churches, and may have some influence upon the youth who are principally the declaimers. But will it root itself sufficiently deep in them to stand against the whole military system, or when a real issue comes, when war is imperative, will they be deemed traitors to their country, targets for the firing squad, or be caused to languish in prisons?

The paradox seems climactic—greatest advocacy of peace on the one hand and greatest preparations for war on the other. The picture is confusing to many good and devout souls.—A. H. Kearney in World's Crisis; to be continued.

Tithing—a Sacrifice Acceptable

By Mrs. Tom Savage

TITHING, while recognized by the Israelites, did not begin under the law. Abraham paid tithes to Melchisedec long before Moses was given the law (Gen. 14:18-20). Christ is a high priest after the order of Melchisedec (Heb. 6:20). Why not pay Him your tithe?

Tithing is a subject for believers, for surely one who does not love or fear God would not give much of his material wealth to His work.

What couldn't God help us to do if all our church members tithed? We could care for our poor, widows, and orphans. Missionaries could work abroad and at home. All our churches could have shepherds—pastors able to live as other people, for one must have a certain amount of money for expenses in today's existence. But when Christian members begin to covet money, then the roots of evil begin to grow in their hearts. What do we mean by coveting? When one gets too eager to buy this new car or that electrical appliance, this new dress or that new suit, so that one fails to pay the Lord His due, that person is covetous, and covetousness is idolatry (Col. 3:5). Those who are idolaters cannot inherit the kingdom of God (Gal. 5:19-21).

"The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom" (Prov. 1:7). Do you fear you may not please God? If the law recognized the tithe as right and just, how much more should we give, who serve the Lord with a far greater love than did they who lived under the law? If God called the Israelites robbers when they forgot to give tithes and offerings, what is He calling us today if we do not give tithes and offerings? (Read Malachi 3.)

The tribe of Levi was the priestly tribe; Judah, the kingly tribe. We are called to be kings and priests unto God (Rev. 1:6). We are, then, really kings and priests now, aren't we? If you were to die today, you would be resurrected as you died, for the dead know not anything. You would never be raised a priest or king unless you lived as one before you died. Would you be raised a robber? an idolater? or one who feared the Lord? one who loved Him, so that you did God's will? Of course, the Lord is going to perfect us. We'll have an immortal body and see Him face to face. But that does not excuse anyone from being as perfect now as he knows how to be.

Giving alms to the poor is not giving into the storehouse (treasury) to keep God before a dying world. At least the largest part of one's tithe should be given where you worship. That's where you get most of your spiritual food. Did you ever hear of one buying groceries at one store, yet paying his bill at another? You pay where you get your food. God's work may be somewhat different, for wherever you give your tithe it will be a blessing to some one. But if you are interested in having your church continue, you should give generously to keep its doors open.

In 1 Corinthians 13 we read that even though one gives all his goods to feed the poor, it profits him nothing if he does not have charity or love. In Romans 12:1 each one is asked to present his body a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God.

The real churches are made up of people, not just buildings. Christ is the Vine and we are the branches. If we are not fruit-bearers we'll be cut off. His work doesn't depend on any one of us, but if we do not share our material blessings we will miss the spiritual ones.

Next pay day give an offering, a sacrifice, tithe or more to the Lord. Don't give to be seen of men or for glory for yourself. Don't give your offering as a bribe. Give it cheerfully as a gift, wholly pleasing to the Lord.

You know when you are not giving enough, for 1 John 3:20, 21 tells you that your heart will condemn you. Read it. One who is not a Christian, one who doesn't study God's Word, might not feel condemned, yet not be supporting the work. Our Bible tells us that "if our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost" (2 Cor. 4:3). Pray for such a one to receive salvation. Our Bible tells us that loving service is better than sacrifice. So is cake better than bread, but you do not exclude one because you have the other. God wants loving service. I'm glad He values people more than money, aren't you?

The scribes and Pharisees paid tithes, yet Christ said they were hypocrites, for they forgot that He values loving service more than sacrifice. They forgot to be kind, merciful, and to practice what they knew to be good and right. Christ said, "These ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other (payment of tithes) undone" (Matt. 23:23). Did you say Christ didn't teach tithing?

He also said that where one's treasure was there would his heart be also. We are told to cast our bread, not crumbs,

The Church Conflict in Germany

READERS will have been puzzled by the news that on Christmas Eve all Protestant ministers and theological students who have been kept in Germany's prisons and concentration camps were to be released by special order of Herr Hitler. This event seemed to foreshadow an end of the church conflict which has been raging now for almost five years. Yet it must not be forgotten that a similar "generous" move had been made in February, 1937, when the Fuehrer proclaimed that the Protestant church would be allowed to hold free elections and given freedom to settle its disputes by itself. But these elections have never been held, and only recently Herr Kerrl, the State Commissioner for Church Affairs, announced that they would never be allowed, "because of the disunity prevailing in the Protestant church"! The truth is that after the Fuehrer's offer all truly evangelical elements in German Protestantism (the Council of the Confessional Church, the Lutheran Council, and the bishops of Hanover, Wurtemberg, and Bavaria), had formed a league to oppose the so-called "German Christians," i. e., those people who hold that the Christian belief and the church must be subservient to the Nazi philosophy and the present regime in Germany.

When Herr Hitler made his offer of free elections, the Government had obviously hoped to manipulate the church elections in the same way as the last Reichstag elections, which brought the Government the surprising majority of 98.2 per cent. Once they realized that the leaders of the church would prefer to recommend entire abstention from the vote rather than to give in to the comedy of a manipulated vote, the Government discovered suddenly that the disunity of the church made elections impossible, while in February, 1937, they had declared that the elections should be held to remove the existing disunity! But the inhibition of elections is but a symptom of the change that has taken place in the Nazi religious policy.

Whereas, until 1936 the German Government proudly declared that they were anxious to base their policy on the twenty-fourth point of their program, which states that National Socialism rests upon "positive Christianity," the radical elements in the Nazi Party have succeeded since in bringing about a policy which is openly hostile to Christianity. Through the mouth of Reich Minister Dr. Frick, the Government has now declared in an authoritative way that "they stand firmly by the principle of protecting the freedom of all religious confessions and that they seek peaceful collaboration with the various religious confessions," that is to say, including all the new pagan religions which for a long time already had been sponsored unofficially by the Nazi Party.

To understand the religious situation in Germany, one must not forget the important fact that National Socialism is itself a religious movement, and that as a result of its totalitarian character it can at the best tolerate Christianity, but never recognize it as a congenital religion nor grant it equal status with the new state religion. For a long time the leading men in the Nazi Party thought it would be inopportune to admit openly the religious character of their movement, and they bashfully called it a weltanschauung (world view). Now they have changed their attitude, because they have realized that by denying the religious nature of their own movement, they had strengthened the importance which the existing Christian religion had for the life of their own members. The Nazi leaders rightly feel that Christian religion in its essence is opposed to the reckless policy, the brutal methods, and the unbridled national pride of National Socialism. Thus their aim is now to propagate National Socialism as a kind of theistic religion. In it God seems to be mainly concerned with the honor and greatness of Germany and the Nordic race, and fighting against the Jews and for the expansion of Germany seems to be the paramount religious duty of every German man and woman. In order to prevent the church from thwarting the propagation of such a religion, it is deemed to be necessary to cripple it to the utmost financially and by administrative measures.

An article in Das Schwarze Korps, the official paper of the Nazi Blackshirts, reveals what is now in the mind of the Nazi leaders. The author says that the church must be confined to the "care of souls," i. e., to the cultivation of an absolutely otherworldly piety, and must be deprived of all opportunities of making its influence felt in public life. The author continues:

"National Socialism is a religious movement which not only recognizes allegiance to God and the divine order, but puts it into effect. The state itself is, therefore, as the national community's form of life, a practical expression of belief in God. That is our state religion and it must go beyond the confessions. It must be independent of the dogmas which we receive as the work of men. There can be only one divine order, but how the individual receives it and where and by what means he finds it revealed to him, is his own affair. He can please himself, or can submit to the interpretation which a confession offers him. The state, bound to the divine order, leaves a man free to choose whether he will express his sense of religion in working for the national community, or by seeking allegiance with like-minded people in one confession, one church. The confessions are human communities seeking to mediate between God and man. Those who simply believe in God, on the other hand, hope to be able to avoid this mediator. They are not a community with a purpose, and consequently not a confession."

In this same connection, the question of the religious instruction and care of the nation is solved as follows: "Against confessionally determined religious instruction in the schools there is nothing to say, for a child belonging to a particular confession should also have his religious instruction in his confession. But children brought up to 'believe in God' (i. e., to have the Nazi view of God), have the same claim to religious instruction, only it must not be tied up with a confession. We certainly do not want specialists to emerge for the religious instruction of those who believe in God. The development of a new form of mediation between God and man is the very thing that we are anxious to avoid. It is much more important that a National Socialist teacher, strong in his ideology and without any specialized 'proofs of qualification,' should be in a position to impart religious instruction to the children and to teach them to recognize in nature the revelation of God. A clear separation of this kind would also be welcomed by the churches, for no guarantee can be given that non-church teachers will impart religious instruction in the way that the churches think it should be done."

As regards church property, it is stated that "we shall not be able to deprive ourselves of the painful task of deciding, one day, to whom the so-called church property really belongs. It has to be admitted that these possessions have come about through the common work of all compatriots, and at a time when state and church were still one unity. Those who paid for them did not suppose that they were making contributions to a private organization which assumed no obligations toward the community of nation and state. And it is not to be admitted that such common possessions should suddenly become the legal property of churches which now have nothing but the name in common with the earlier conception of the church." (I.C.P.I.S., Geneva.)

These quotations from an official article will suffice to show that National Socialism, being itself a religious movement, is by its inner logic bound to combat Christian religion. Hence not too much importance must be attached to the release of pastors from prison. Moreover, as the newspapers report, notwithstanding the Fuehrer's amnesty, more than fifty pastors are still kept in prison, among them Pastor Niemoller, the leader of the Confessional Church. This clearly shows that the Nazi Party is firmly decided to carry on its antichristian policy.—Otto Piper, D.D., in The Presbyterian.

Origin of the Church of God

By A. E. Griffiths

WE frequently hear the remark, "All churches are the church of God because all churches worship God." That sounds very logical, but is it correct?

To ascertain a true answer to this assumption let us trace the history of the church back as far as we can. There are many denominations professing the Christian religion, but how far do they go back? We find John Wesley establishing the Wesleyan Church in England and the Methodist Church in America; John Knox of Scotland established the Presbyterian Church. These only go back as far as the 18th century. The Church of England, or Episcopal, was established in the reign of Elizabeth, Queen of England, who came to the throne in 1553. All others except the Roman Catholic Church came into existence about the same time, which was the time of the Reformation.

Luther was the prime mover in this movement in Germany, and then Calvin followed in France. All of these denominations sprang from the Roman Catholic Church, and that claims to be the original church, started by the apostles, with Peter as the first pope. But history proves this claim to be false.

After the death of the apostles, the church began preaching false doctrines, and only a few adhered to the truth as taught by them. Paul was much concerned about this fact, for he reminds us that "the mystery of iniquity doth already work" (2 Thess. 2:7). The doctrine of the immortality of the soul was well established at this time, having been introduced by Socrates and Plato in the Athenian temples, about 400 B. C. This doctrine had also been taught in a somewhat different form by the Egyptians, which dated back before the time of Abraham. In following up this thought we are recalled to the Garden of Eden, where this false doctrine originated when "the serpent said unto the woman, Ye shall not surely die" (Gen. 3:4), and the churches of the world have been preaching this original lie ever since.

Now if we can trace the false doctrines back to the Garden of Eden, it is only reasonable to suppose we can also trace the true one.

John writes: "Beloved, now are we the sons of God" (1 John 3:2). Therefore if we, who have been baptized into Christ, are called sons of God, then all who have been identified with God in the past are also the sons of God. This goes right back to Adam who "was a son of God" (Luke 3:38). From Adam to Noah were ten generations, and all these men knew God's law, therefore were sons of God, but not all of them were faithful sons. Only one faithful one is spoken of, and that was Enoch, the seventh from Adam, whom Jude uses as a type: "And Enoch also, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these, saying, Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints" (Jude 14). Here we have a man who was born 3017 B. C., looking forward to the same hope that Moses had over fifteen hundred years later: "The Lord came from Sinai, and rose up from Seir unto them; he shined forth from mount Paran, and he came with ten thousand of saints: from his right hand went a fiery law for them" (Deut. 33:2). And we, in turn, are looking for precisely the same thing over three thousand years later still.

These generations that lived before Noah are an object lesson to us. Remember Paul's words: "Now all these things happened unto them for ensamples (types): and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come" (1 Cor. 10:11). What were these things that were types? "And it came to pass when men began to multiply on the face of the earth, and daughters were born unto them, that the sons of God saw the daughters of men, that they were fair; and they took them wives of all which they chose, and the Lord said, My spirit shall not always strive with man" (Gen. 6:1-3). Here we find sons of God mixing with evil nations, a thing which they had been told not to do. Cain and all his offspring had been ostracized, but yet the sons of God disobeyed God and eventually brought the destruction of all mankind in the waters of the flood, with the exception of Noah and his family. This proves to us that the fact of becoming a son of God does not necessarily save us. Baptism is only the beginning of a new life and we must then work out our own salvation with fear and trembling (Phil. 2:12).

Let us now define the meaning of the word "church." It is translated from the Greek ekklesia, meaning a congregation or body of people organized for worship. Therefore the word refers to people and not to a building. There is no mention of any building when Cain and Abel made their first offering to God (Gen. 4:3-7), and after Noah left the ark he first "built an altar unto the Lord" (Gen. 8:20). An altar is simply a pile of stones upon which to sacrifice animals. God told Moses that "if thou wilt make me an altar of stone, thou shalt not build it of hewn stone" (Ex. 20:25). There is no mention of a room of any kind built to worship in made in the records we have of the lives of the early fathers, and yet they comprised the true church of God. God's laws were first handed down by word of mouth from father to son. When the church increased in numbers Moses started writing the laws of God, and all instruction we have received since then has been handed down by writing, hence the word "Scriptures," derived from the Latin script, meaning "to write."

There has been a selected people all the way down from Adam who have respected God's laws. We read: "So shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it" (Isa. 55:11). Let us not fall into the error that Elijah did when he said, "I have been very jealous for the Lord God of hosts: because the children of Israel have forsaken thy covenant, thrown down thine altars, and slain thy prophets, with the sword; and I, even I only, am left; and they seek my life, to take it away" (1 Kings 19:14). But he was wrong. He was not the only one left. God said, "Yet I have left me seven thousand in Israel, which have not bowed down unto Baal" (1 Kings 19:18). Paul quotes this scripture in Romans 11:1-5, and finishes up by saying, "Even so then at this present time also, there is a remnant according to the election of grace"; and that same remnant is in existence at the present moment. God has never allowed the truth to die out since He made man. If He had, civilization would have been wiped out long ago. God is merciful, "who will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth" (1 Tim. 2:4). The church of God may have had very few members in some of the past generations, but there has always been a remnant. "Except the Lord of hosts had left unto us a very small remnant, we should have been as Sodom, and we should have been like unto Gomorrha" (Isa. 1:9).

There are many references in the Bible to the house of God, and perhaps that is sometimes regarded as a building. But this again is erroneous in most cases. The record of Jacob's dream of the ladder proves this (Gen. 28:11). Jacob took some stones for a pillow and lay down in the open. After he awoke "he was afraid, and said, How dreadful is this place! this is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven" (v. 17). The fact that God manifested His presence there made it the house of God, and in verse 22, he said, "And this stone, which I have set for a pillar, shall be God's house." Note he first speaks about a pillow to lie upon and then of a pillar, which is the support of an edifice. Paul uses this expression in writing to Timothy: "But if I tarry long, that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth" (1 Tim. 3:15). He speaks in the same manner in Ephesians 2:20: "And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." We see by these references that the true believers have always been associated with the house of God, which is the church of God, or the assembly or congregation that worships Him in spirit and in truth (John 4:24).

Let us not imagine that the truth has been revived again during these last days by some man or men, for no man can be relied upon for truth. We know what the wise man said: "God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions" (Eccl. 7:29), and the Prophet declared that "the heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked; who can know it?" (Jer. 17:9).

Therefore we will abide by God's Word only. "To the law and the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them" (Isa. 8:20). We are the children of light, so let us walk as children of light (Eph. 5:8).

POPULAR OBJECTIONS ANSWERED

We conclude, therefore, that the parable is a graphic description of this life and the final state beyond the resurrection. It is a strong proof against the consciousness of the soul while the body is dead. Nothing being said about the souls of men, but the whole scene applies to two men with bodies, which places it beyond the death state and proves that the resurrection is necessary to a future life, for the language is direct: "If one went unto them from the dead!"

TITHING—A SACRIFICE ACCEPTABLE

upon the water.

Giving is also placed among the gifts of the Spirit in Romans 12:8. Do you have that gift? How could one who loves the Lord say, "Give good measure, heaping up," and then offer only a dime and expect God to bless the giver when it should have been much more? To sacrifice means to give until it hurts; to give so much you have to deny yourself of things you want and even need.

"What shall it profit a man, if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" (Mark 8:36). My brethren, "think on these things" (Phil. 4:8).

NIGHT — MORNING

The darkest hour before the dawn
Upon this earth descends,
And troubles deep we'll gaze upon,
Before this dark hour ends.

The world exalts its conquerors now,
When virtue's overthrown,
While many hearts with sorrow bow,
And many spirits groan.

Yet we are listening apart,
And hopefully we sing;
Christ's praises rise from every heart,
And joyful carols ring.

Praise Him, ye morning stars of light,
Praise Him, ye heavenly bands,
Praise Him who leads us through the night,
With His dear, nail-pierced hands.

For faith and trust to us are given,
A gladsome morn to see,
When Christ shall part the clouds of heaven,
And set His children free.

A new earth, radiant and bright,
Awaits His spoken word,
Where we shall rest in peace and light,
Forever with the Lord.

AN APPEAL TO SCIENCE

the life is taken from him. It is equally true that a man can be dangerously near death from the loss of blood (the vehicle that carries life to all parts of the body) and then, by the efforts of a man (whether he believes in God or not, it makes no difference), blood can be transfused into the dying man from another person, and immediately the sick man revives and soon becomes normal. Now let us follow this thought to its ultimate conclusion and see how utterly untenable the prevalent view upon this point is.

If a "soul" were "departing" as the result of natural causes we would be forced to admit that such "departure" was accelerated or retarded according to the rate at which the blood was being lost. Again a law of nature was in operation. Thus far no "summons" from on high was calling the "soul" away. There was no necessity for such a "summons," for without such a "call" the man would surely die when all the life-bearing blood was gone. We can see, then, that the physician in his employment of blood transfusion was virtually forcing the so-called "soul" to continue to abide in the body. In other words, the soul was under the direct will and power of man!

THE SOURCE OF LIFE RENEWAL

Let us next consider where this life-renewing element came from. Holding in mind the thought that the dying man's "soul" had departed (just to the degree that his blood had been lost), we find that by taking a small portion of this life-giving substance from the other man, that a portion of his "soul" had been taken from him also. This would cause us to question as to just how much "soul" a man has and how much of it he can lose and still be a man.

Then, too, if the patient borrowed or bought some of the second man's "soul" and was made alive by it, in just what status would that place each of them in the eyes of God? Suppose that for some other reason the patient later died and went to heaven or hell, would he receive judgment according to the proportion of his own "soul" which he still possessed, or would the other man be held accountable in part? Rather tangled, isn't it?

There are professional blood donors who follow that line for a living. Blood in these days is sometimes even put in cans and preserved in storage to be used in emergency cases. This would suggest that a man is a bit like an automobile that carries a spare tire. In the process of several months a professional blood donor would have completely depleted his own blood and it would be dispersed among dozens of people of every type and character. Often blood is taken from a person of one sex and transferred to the opposite. Just consider the confusion this would result in before the judgment seat of God! There is no limit to the absurdities into which this thought would lead us if we hold that punishment is meted out to a "soul" and not to the man.

WHAT IS THE LIFE THAT ADAM RECEIVED?

But let us consider the matter from still another angle by seeking an answer to a natural question and one that is often asked: "If the blood is not the life, then what was the life that God breathed into Adam?"

The answer is too simple to be accepted by the multitude, for unless we can color our left-handed answers with mystery and superstition few will take our explanations seriously. Is this not true? A man pursuing his normal industrial duties is delayed an hour beyond the time scheduled for an appointment. Upon his arrival he finds it "necessary" in most cases to avoid the simple truth, that he had ordinary tire trouble on the way, and reach out in his imagination and create a fanciful series of unusual dramatic happenings to account for his late arrival or the one who awaited his coming would not believe his explanation. As a race we have developed to a place where we refuse to believe anything unless it smacks of the miraculous or is shrouded in mystery! Even when it would be much easier to be simple and candid, we insist upon an opposite procedure.

In this case, however, there is only one answer. God, applying a new law of nature, caused the vacuum in Adam's lungs to be unstopped, and he automatically drew oxygen into himself that caused the inanimate blood to become of the proper texture needed to carry that same oxygen to all members of his body. In order to make man wholly dependent upon God throughout his life, or to make him dependent upon the laws of nature, which are the laws of God, man only lives one breath at a time! Here we observe another law of God which man cannot break without paying for it.

"What of the unborn babe that cannot breath this life or oxygen into itself?" you ask. "Surely the unborn are very much alive."

Our answer to this: The blood that carries life through the mother's body, carries life also to the babe. If the babe had a separate "soul" or life of its own, implanted there by God, then the babe's advent into the world would not be contingent upon the mother's life and health.

In support of the thought that an unborn babe has a "soul" of its own, some will say, "But what of John, the unborn son of Elisabeth, who leaped in his mother's womb?"

Let us examine the Scriptures on this point and see exactly what they say. The record is found in Luke 1:36-45. First, we ask, Was not Elisabeth's entire being quickened and made joyful at that particular moment by the filling with the Holy Spirit (v. 41)? What more natural, then, than that the babe should "leap" or "move" as the result of the mother's ecstasy?

Here we find the writers of the King James Version (consciously or unconsciously) attempting to mystify a simple narrative in such a way as to make it support their obvious belief in the immortality of the soul. The word-for-word translation of the original Greek for verse 44, as rendered in the Emphatic Diaglott, is as follows: "Lo for, as came the voice of the salutation of thee into the ears of me, leaped the babe in exultation in the womb of me." Now I ask, Will not the same condition occur in any mother at that particular stage in the development of her unborn child? Will not the child react to the mother's fright or happiness or other overpowering emotion, especially when the cause of the emotion appears suddenly? Most certainly, such will be the case! Surely that settles the question of the babe's conscious being at that time, and there is really nothing mysterious about it.

We introduce another thought: If we conclude that God breathed or in any manner imparted a "spirit" or "soul" into Adam in the beginning, it would naturally follow that He would be compelled to observe the same procedure in every instance thereafter or we would not be the same type of man as Adam and consequently not amenable to the law by which he was governed! So if a "soul" or "spirit" is in any way imparted to the child, when does it happen?

If we say that the "soul" is given before birth, we are reversing the procedure followed by God when Adam was made a living soul. We cannot do that! But if we say that it was imparted at birth, we find ourselves placing man in a position where he decrees when and how it shall be done. In a recent case published in the papers, we read of a mother who died as the result of a broken natural law. She was about to become a mother and the physicians decided that the child should live. I am sure they did not call upon God for a vision picturing what they should do, or ask Him to send them a message of instruction relative to the matter! But at the very moment when the mother ceased breathing they proceeded to operate (exercising again man's own initiative) and brought the child into life, separating it from its dead mother.

Does not this event show clearly that if the orthodox view of this matter is correct, man exerted a power that forced God to function at the pleasure and whim of man? How contrary such a thought is to our knowledge of God's limitless power! Can we find anywhere in the Bible a statement that even hints that the "soul" is in any way under the dominion of man? (That is, is the final disposal of life ever said to be subject to the will or power of man?)

The "devil," or carnal nature in man's own heart, in the Garden of Eden made his initial advent into history by fathering a lie. Apparently unable to originate another, "he" continues to follow his own precedent. Lying he started, and lying he goes on to the end! That one original lie, "Thou shalt not surely die" (Gen. 3:4), which was addressed to Eve in the beginning, must therefore be covered and recovered throughout the ages by other innumerable lies, not the least of which is this popular one: "Man has an immortal soul!"

SCIENCE AGREES WITH THE BIBLE

Does not even nature teach that this breath of life (oxygen) must be present in just the right quantity in order that not only the physical body but the products of man's inventive genius, may function properly? An automobile must breathe this same breath of life in order to generate power. Plants die immediately when the breath or oxygen is cut off. Even the earth must be stirred and turned (this is the function of earthworms as well as of the farmer's plow) so that new breath or oxygen can penetrate its surface and stimulate plant growth. Death and deterioration start the moment breath or oxygen is finally expelled or withheld.

Science tells us, and establishes the contention with unmistakable proof, that if, by any process, the nitrogen is separated from the oxygen in the air, any matter that will absorb oxygen will immediately burst into flame by spontaneous combustion.

Let us leave that thought for a moment and turn to the Scriptures. "And the seventh angel poured out his vial in the air" (a gaseous compound, made up of about 78 parts by volume of nitrogen, 21 parts of oxygen, and 1 part of argon): "... and there were voices, and thunders, and lightnings; and there was a great earthquake . . . and men blasphemed God because of the hail" (Rev. 16:17-21). This same phenomenon is described elsewhere in the Scriptures as fire (2 Peter 3:7-12). Viewing this, therefore, with the thought mentioned in the preceding paragraph, that the withdrawal of nitrogen from the air will result in spontaneous combustion of anything which absorbs oxygen, a fact attested by science, we need no longer look upon this "fire from heaven" as a supernatural or miraculous event. Rather, we can see in it the operation of an established law of nature applied by God Himself for the accomplishment of His own purposes. Surely the God who made such laws can operate them by the application of other laws equally as natural! Even the Antichrist will have gained sufficient knowledge in advance of his fellows to manifest this truth and thereby induce certain groups to believe and follow him.

INCREASED KNOWLEDGE IN THE LAST DAYS

We can now begin to see why it is vitally necessary that knowledge shall be increased (Dan. 12:4) in this age in order that the foretold plan of God may culminate properly. Nations that are at war today are beginning to understand these facts and are employing them when they construct and use modern chemical "fire throwers." Then there is the defensive side of the question. Gas masks, that keep the "breath of life" properly mixed, are now in use extensively.

Looking thoughtfully ahead to the day when "fire from heaven" shall fall and consume the wicked at the battle of Armageddon, we can see even now the elements, regulated by established laws of nature, being employed by human ingenuity, while God, knowing all laws and all possible combinations of elements, puts into operation again a method by which fire will fall upon His opposers and reduce them to ashes under the feet of the righteous (Mal. 4:1-3). Surely God's army will be a prepared army and so protected, still by natural law controlled by God, that they shall each and every one escape the terrors here described! (Compare Daniel 3:27, 28.)

God never meant for man to die. Death is a condition man brought upon himself. Had he not perverted himself after having been given that greatest of all gifts, the breath of life, he would never have had "reaping" to endure. We can readily see the fulfillment not only of the Scriptures, but of natural law as well, in the results that follow the planting of the seed of sin. "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap," is carried to its natural conclusion when God applies one of His own great laws that takes the very breath of life away and transforms it into an instrument of destruction to annihilate the incorrigible. What could be a more fitting finale to a life of wickedness?

There are innumerable other approaches to the reconciliation of the fundamentals of the Scriptures with known facts of science, I believe, that would, if applied carefully, court the sincere interest and attention of this scientifically-minded generation, and possibly lead many to faith. If this be so, is it not high time that we, as ministers of the gospel, should apply ourselves to a determined, almost desperate, effort to bring these things to the attention of misguided students who cannot accept the paradoxical and contradictory traditions of orthodox teaching? If we hold the key that unlocks the glorious temple of harmony that is manifest in God's two books of the revelation, the Bible and Nature, and make no use of it, how much greater is our responsibility before God!

Let us examine the principles we claim to believe and discard from them every atom of mysticism and superstition and get our feet upon the solid ground where God meant them to be and keep them there!

THE SILENCE BROKEN

Hebrews 10:37

"Our God shall come," the silence shall be broken,
Which long has reigned o'er this sin-stricken world;
The saints of every name and tongue shall gather Beneath His banner which shall be unfurled.

"Our God shall come," earth's babel and confusion
Shall be hushed when His great voice is heard;
Faces shall pale, and be upturned with terror,
Those who have hated and despised His Word.

"Our God shall come" to scatter all oppressors,
For He, the righteous Judge, shall fill the throne;
No longer shall the tyrant have dominion,
No longer shall the helpless captive groan.

"Our God shall come" according to His promise,
To dry the tears and bind each bleeding heart:
To bring about the saints' eternal meeting,
Where sin and death shall never make us part.

"Our God shall come": the sands are surely dropping;
"A little while"—He will not tarry long;
Sin's shadows then from His bright path receding,
The right will then have triumphed over wrong.

"Our God shall come," the Father of the orphaned,
The widow's Friend—the Savior of the lost;
The Rock of Ages for the tried and tempted,
The Lifeboat and the Shelter for the tossed.

Gems From the Quarterly

Time Out for Prayer.—Mark 1:35: "A great while before day." We sometimes say that we can find but little time in our busy lives for prayer and Bible study. Jesus solved the problem when He realized that prayer was more vital to His success than sleep.

Would You Favor a Blood Purge?—Mark 2:16: "Scribes and Pharisees." These were the bitter critics and relentless enemies of all who were not of their own cult. Smugly self-righteous, they looked upon the publicans with abhorrence and had no sympathy with anyone who made an effort to reclaim them. There are many professing Christians today who despise thieves, drunkards, and prostitutes, and have no Christlike sympathy for them and show no interest in their salvation.

Mark 2:17: "They that are sick." In implying that sinners were "sick," the great Physician anticipated by nearly two thousand years the conclusions of modern medical men and psychiatrists, who now quite generally agree that drunkenness and criminal tendencies are often directly traceable to constitutional physical weaknesses which may be corrected by proper treatment.

"The Love of Christ Constraineth Us."—Mark 2:28: "Lord even of the sabbath." "To call the Christian Sunday 'the sabbath' is to give a wrong and misleading name, to mix up Judaism and Christianity, and to introduce a false and dangerous legalism into the observance of Sunday."—Lenski. Nowhere in the Bible is the observance of Sunday as a holy day commanded, and nowhere in the New Testament after the crucifixion of Christ, is the observance of any day as especially holy commanded (Gal. 4:10, 11). Sunday observance is wholly a voluntary act of devotion on the part of the Christian. Cf. Rom. 14:1-6.

Is Preaching a Lazy Man's Job?—Mark 6:31: "Rest a while." There is no work more tiring to mind and body than that of preaching. Jesus here lays down a precedent justifying ministers taking vacations away from their fields of labor. John says this retreat was a place of "much grass" (John 6:10), a pleasant spot in which to commune with God.

A Wonderful Opportunity—the Summer Bible Training School.—Judges 13:12: "How shall we order the child?" "What is to be the boy's training and vocation?"—Am. Tr. This is a question all parents should ask of God concerning their children. What does God want these boys and girls to be? Too many Christian parents pay far more attention to the business education of their sons and to the social "finishing" of their daughters, than they do to their spiritual development!

More Than Half the Babies of Cigarette-Smoking Mothers Never Grow Up.—Judges 13:14: "Neither let her drink wine." She must set before her son an example in harmony with the moral and spiritual advice she gives him. A cigarette-smoking, cocktail-drinking mother cannot expect her children to take her advice against such indulgences seriously.

(Note: the above gems of truth were collected from that mine of Bible truth, the Truth Seekers' Sunday School Quarterly. You should use this quarterly yourself.)

Prayer

Prayer is a vital part of our lives and should not be neglected. Some people probably think they do not have time for prayer, but this should not be their attitude. There is always time for prayer if one will only find it.

Every Christian knows that prayer is the means by which we communicate with God, and our communication should be from the depths of our hearts. Prayer that is uttered from the lips only and not from the heart is truly useless. God probably hears their requests, but does not grant them. This communication does not merely involve a mumbling of words; it has a fuller meaning. We offer a petition to God desiring certain things to be granted. If we are Christians, are truly sincere, our requests will be granted as far as they are reasonable and if it be God's will. May I repeat again that prayer, whether public or private, should be sincere, in earnest, and truly from the heart. Let us all strive to be truthful and sincere in our petitions to God.—Mary Richardson of the Blood River Berean Class, Hammond, Louisiana.

Funny Papers

If "the funnies" are really funny why don't people smile when they read them? On the contrary, grown-ups and children will wear as serious expressions as if they were reading about floods, earthquakes, and wars. Once in a while an isolated "funny" will provoke a smile. The "funny paper" is an adroit form of teaching, and has come to be one very insidious as well. Little three-year-old tots will develop a vocabulary like Popeye the Sailor, much to the distress of the conscientious mother when the little one addresses the neighbor lady that he doesn't like as a "Swab."

And what kind of morals does it teach when Jiggs tricks his wife into thinking he will be at the opera when in reality he will be at a burlesque show? And remember, impressions of childhood go on through life. If one could understand the psychology of it what a multitude of adult evils could undoubtedly be traced to their inception in the "funnies" of the child! Matrimonial disloyalties, business trickery (what else was it when Little Henry put the fish he had caught through the wringer so as to make it acceptable to a prospective customer who wanted a certain kind of flat fish?), evolution and its attendant atheism (see the clever evolution propaganda in Alley Opp, and the Goons!), to name just a few.

Twelve Men Who Went With Jesus

From far and wide people came to see Jesus when they heard of the miracles He performed, people from different parts of Palestine and also from the countries near by. However, as we learned in last week's lesson, the Pharisees and the chief priests were already plotting to kill Him.

Let us not forget that the performing of these miracles was not the main purpose of Jesus' life, though they did fill a great need. His greatest work was, as you all know, the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom of God. The miracles proved that what Jesus taught was truth.

For He told them that in the kingdom of God the people would none of them be sick. There would be no lame ones. Nobody would be blind or deaf. And so He healed all who came to Him, thus showing them what His Father's kingdom would be like.

Now the work of telling this good news was such a great work, so vast and so important, that Jesus knew He would need helpers to aid Him, especially after He would have to leave this earth. He knew that the time would come when He should be crucified and should die. He knew also, that God would raise Him up and that He would ascend to heaven to be at His Father's side.

So He chose twelve men and taught them the truths of the gospel and how they ought to live. Then He gave them power to perform miracles, as they had seen Him do. He told them to go into all the world and preach the gospel, and those who believe it and obey it would be saved.

We read in verse 14 of Mark 3, that Jesus chose the Twelve to "be with him." In no other way could they learn what they needed to learn as well as by being with Jesus daily, watching Him teach and heal. Think how grand it must have been to enjoy such a companionship!

But, even though He has gone to be at the right hand of God, yet all of us can be close friends of His today. He will teach us through the pages of God's Book and we can talk to Him in prayer. He will hear us just as surely as He did the twelve so long ago.

One day He's coming back to this earth to be King of that kingdom of which He taught the people when He was here the first time. Then it is that we can really be with Him, side by side, as we are with our dear ones today. Don't you wish that time would hasten?

Here is an easy way to learn the names of the Twelve:

"Of all the twelve apostles
The Gospels give their names:
First, Andrew, John, and Peter,
Bartholomew, and James;
Matthew, Simon, and Thomas
Were friends, both tried and true;
Then Philip, James, Thaddæus,
The traitor, Judas, too;
They followed Christ the Master,
O'er mountain, shore, and sea,
Samaria, Judea,
Perea, Galilee."

AMONG THE CHURCHES

NOTICE TO IOWA CHURCHES

There will be no winter conference held at Waterloo this month as previously planned.

The funds of the Iowa Conference are seriously low, and we appeal to any who are interested in the Iowa evangelistic work, and especially to the Iowa brethren, to send their contributions to the treasurer, Mrs. Lee Fish, Maxwell, Iowa. This will be much appreciated.

ELDORADO - RIPLEY - OMAHA

(We regret the delay in the publication of this report. It is due entirely to the mistake of the editor, who filed it with correspondence rather than with matter for publication. We shall endeavor to see that the error is not repeated.)

On November 17 we started on a trip to Eldorado, Ill., to hold a series of meetings. While en route we stopped off in Missouri, to visit relatives of my wife whom she had never seen. When we arrived at Eldorado we found a nice group of brethren who own their church but have never established a continued work except for Sunday school, and while Bro. Lapp was at Ripley he preached for them once a month. We surely enjoyed meeting with these believers and wish to express the gratitude we feel for the cordial way we were received into their homes and for the receptive minds receiving instruction from God's Word.

December 2 we were on the road again, stopping off that evening at Ripley, Ill., where we had the pleasure of speaking to a good sized and attentive audience and renewing acquaintance with those we had had the pleasure of meeting and working with more than two years previously. Bro. and Sr. Harvey Krogh, Jr. are to be congratulated for the good work they are doing in that field. We enjoyed visiting in their home a great deal.

December 3 found us on our way to Omaha, Neb., and though we drove in rain all day we arrived in Omaha early in the evening of the same day. We rested for a day, and on Sunday, Dec. 5, we began a series of meetings which lasted until the 19th. The faithful group at Omaha are making an effort to keep the church together after having lost their leader, Bro. Almus Adams, and even though they have no public place of worship they hold a weekly Bible study at the different homes and their Sunday school at Bro. Dixon's home. There is a nice group of believers there, mostly middle aged and young people and there are others who are very much interested in the things the Church of God teaches. Bibles and pencil and paper were very much in evidence at each service which shows an interest and a desire to learn.

We arrived home December 20, after an absence of almost five weeks and found the church at Holbrook going along about as usual. Bro. Arthur Hornaday and others had supplied in our absence. The Holbrook church has lost several members by death and several families have moved away in the past year. The places left vacant have not been filled and they are sorely missed.

Grover Gordon.

OREGON, ILLINOIS

The Golden Rule Classes and the Good Will Class of the Oregon Sunday School held a joint social gathering last Friday night at the home of Bro. and Sr. Roy Blanchard. The two groups decided on forming separate organizations and to that end held simultaneous business meetings. Sr. Leota B. Hanson was chosen president of the Good Will Class and Sr. Iva Reynolds president of the Golden Rule Classes.

The pastor is now presenting a new series of Sunday evening sermons, the primary purpose of which is to emphasize the spiritual value of prophetic study. Next Sunday night he will speak on "The Problem of the Jew: the Race That Will Not Die."

The mid-week meeting continues to draw a number of young people and children, whose interest is being stimulated by questions. The question to be answered this week is: "What group of men became so frightened at what they saw while they were with Jesus that they did not know what to say, but one of them said something anyway? What did he say?" The incident upon which the question is based will provide the subject for study at the next meeting.

Saturday night we received a telegram from Bro. R. H. Judd of Toronto, Ont., bringing the sad news that his wife was seriously ill. We trust and pray that she has surprised her physicians and brought joy to her husband's heart by improvement by this time. In any case our sympathy goes out to Bro. Judd in the hour of his anxiety.

A note from Sr. F. M. Cawby, North Judson, Ind., informs us that her twin sister, Sr. Billings of Los Angeles, and she herself, have been ill for some time. But sickness cannot check Sr. Cawby's cheerful outlook on life. It seems she is suffering from a very painful attack of shingles, concerning which she says, "I would like to trade my shingles for a load of wood." These elderly sisters will be remembered in our prayers.

AUSTIN, TEXAS

Dear brethren and friends of the Church of God: For the next few weeks our address will be 2601 Canterbury St., Austin, Tex., phone 2-6475. The editor of The Herald was so thoughtful in sending The Herald to us at San Saba. Thanks, dear editor. Please send it to our new address. We would not want to be without it. While here we will assist in the church work at this place, San Antonio, and other places near by. If you can use us in your church work write or call.

Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Giesler.

MARY ETHEL JOHNSON

Mary Ethel Dunblazier was born June 11, 1864, in Fulton County, Ill., and died January 4, 1938, at her home near Bartley, Neb. In 1885 she was united in marriage to Curtis A. Pickering, and to them one daughter, Lulu, was born. Some years after the death of Mr. Pickering she was married to Nels Johnson of Table Grove, Ill., to which union one daughter, Golda, was born.

Early in life she united with the Christian Church, but after coming to Nebraska she accepted the faith of the Church of God. For a period of over thirty years she has lived in unwavering hope of the soon-coming King.

Two daughters, five granddaughters, a step-mother, four half-brothers, and one half-sister are left to mourn. Her husband, Nels Johnson, preceded her in death five years ago.

Much could be said concerning her life as a Christian mother and friend, but words are not necessary, as her life was an open book to all who knew her. We mourn not as those who have no hope, for we know her life is hid with Him who has power over death and the grave.

Funeral services were conducted at the Christian Church in Bartley, Neb., by Elder Grover Gordon of Holbrook, and she was laid to rest in the Bartley cemetery to await the call to life.

THE TITHING BULLETIN

The bulletin, as prepared by The Layman Company, offers every church the most effective of tithing education plus relief from half of the expense and worries of the ordinary church bulletin.

The bulletin consists of four pages. Pages 1 and 4 are for the use of the local church. They may be printed, multigraphed, or mimeographed at one impression. Pages 2 and 3 carry any one of 32 of the famous Layman tithing messages.

This affords a quiet but effective course in stewardship education. It combines simplicity, effectiveness, and economy.

Sample set containing 32 different tithing bulletins, 20 cents. When ordering, please mention The Restitution Herald; also give your denomination.

CALLING ALL CHURCHES!

How many have sent in your census report since the request in The Herald four months ago? Just three! These were from Moorefield and Holbrook, Neb., and Delta, Ohio. Indiana Conference also sent a very complete report of all her churches, and several isolated members reported. To all these, thank you! But where are the rest? Time is passing, and it will soon be conference time again. I must have reports from all our churches well in advance of July.

If you have not already done so, will you please compile the following information AT ONCE, and send it to

M. W. Lyon,
13517 Darley Ave.,
Cleveland, Ohio.

1. How many members of the Church of God are there in your church locality?
 2. How many members do you have on your Sunday school roll, if any?
 3. How many members do you have on your Berean roll, if any?
 4. Names and addresses of all isolated members of the Church of God that are not members of a state conference.
 5. Names and addresses of any ministers that you think may not be generally known.

A satisfying library of Bible information is found in this fourth revised edition, which is now selling at reduced prices. The 856 pages contain 6,000 articles, 229 good illustrations, and accurate colored maps. The articles cover the contents of the books of the Old and New Testaments in both the King James and Revised Versions, together with the First Book of the Maccabees in the Revised Version. The articles on the canonical books have been elaborated to show the place which the books have occupied and to exhibit the personal traits of the writers. Meanings and pronunciations of proper names, geographical description of persons, and locations of places add to the comprehensiveness of the book.

“Home, Sweet Home”

Provided by the love and sympathy of the entire brotherhood of the Church of God, Golden Rule Home assures to the members of its Family the comfort, security, and solicitous care which the word “home” always suggests.

Here the anxieties of earlier and more active life are laid aside forever. No threat of eviction for non-payment of rent or taxes or other indebtedness troubles the hearts of the residents of Golden Rule Home!

No doctor or hospital bills, no grocery, coal, or light bills to be met the first of the month, bring fear to the minds of the Golden Rule Home Family!

All such obligations and burdens are taken from the shoulders of these older ones immediately upon their entrance into the Home and are carried thereafter by the Golden Rule Home itself, which is amply able to bear the load on their behalf.

A hearty Christian welcome awaits all who seek the protection and lifelong support the Home provides.

Conditions of entrance into Golden Rule Home are as liberal as absolute security permits. Write for full particulars concerning the Home and its advantages. Or, better still, come and visit the Home itself and let the Family tell their own story of its advantages and comforts.

Address: Golden Rule Home, Mrs. Idona Romine, Matron, Oregon, Illinois.

The Spiritual Value of Prophecy

THE BIBLE provides the reference and textbook library of the student in the University of God. It may be said to contain works on each of the major subjects comprising the curriculum of that great school. First, there is the textbook on history, which records God's dealings with men from the beginning of time. Second, a volume on the law of God as it was revealed through Moses and later was defined by Christ. Third, the science of ethics, the regulations governing human relationships. Fourth, the privilege and the value of worship, telling how men may enjoy fellowship with God. Fifth, a course which no other university in the world can provide—an outline of the promises which God has made to His children as those promises pertain to the life that now is and also to the life to come. Last of all, there is the department devoted to prophecy, to the unfolding of the future in the same way that history unfolds the past. It is of this sixth textbook in the disciple's library that I wish to especially speak, for prophecy is the link that binds all the other courses into one. Prophecy provides the reason and suggests the purpose of all of God's revelation to man.

The history of the Bible is a record of the fulfillment of prophecy. The laws laid down in the Bible afford prophetic revelations in the form of types and shadows. The ethics taught in the Bible have as their incentive the enjoyment of the blessings promised by the prophets. Worship is the natural result of one's coming to understand and appreciate the glorious things which God has prepared for those who love Him as those things are described by the prophets.

Every promise of God, whether it pertains to this present life and its spiritual possibilities or to the future life and its eternal rewards, is a prophecy. All that God has in store for His people and for the world has been the subject of predictive revelation.

PRIMARY PURPOSE OF PROPHECY

The primary purpose of the prophetic Word, like the sees and hears and responds to the pleas of His needy children.

The Jewish service begins and ends with this idea. Each Saturday night, at the close of the Jewish Sabbath, we listen with devout attention to a rabbi speaking over the radio as he solemnly intones these words: "Eternal truth it is that Thou art God, and there is none beside Thee!" That is the great affirmation of Judaism and the basic tenet of Christianity. And to make God known to mankind is the purpose of all that has been written in the Holy Scriptures. God would have us to be ever conscious of His presence among us. And that is what prophecy is calculated to create within us—a consciousness of God's reality. When, in the fulfillment of prophecy, we see His purposes being accomplished, we know that God lives, that He is indeed "the living God." The evidence of His being is seen in His activity.

Recognition of God is our highest spiritual attainment. Morality, praiseworthy as it is, may be carnal rather than spiritual. The carnality or the spirituality of an act does not depend upon the character of the act itself but upon the motive that prompted it. If we are moral because we believe that morality leads to health or wealth or to the honor and respect of our fellow men, our morality is carnal, not spiritual. But if we live clean and upright lives because God has cleansed our hearts through faith in the gospel and strive for godliness because we love righteousness and hate iniquity as God does, then our conduct may be said to be spiritual and not carnal.

It follows, then, that anything that has a tendency to make us more conscious of God's nearness, of His concern in our well-being, of His constant oversight of our lives, is of great spiritual value. (Please turn to page 10) primary purpose of the entire Bible, is to develop in the hearts of God's people a consciousness and an appreciation of their heavenly Father. God would make Himself known to us as a reality. He would have us see in Him the living God—One who

Moscow Seizes Church Property

"He commanded to bring the golden and silver vessels which . . . Nebuchadnezzar had taken out of the temple which was in Jerusalem" (Daniel 5:2).

RIGA, Latvia, Feb. 9.—Church-owned property to the approximate value of $3,575,000,000 has been confiscated from the Christian churches in Russia since the Communist Government opened its war of extinction on religion twenty years ago, according to the Moscow Izvestia, which is the first publication to give detailed figures on the result of the antichristian drive from a financial standpoint. Asserting that the 100,000 congregations which existed at the beginning have been reduced to less than 30,000, the paper is obliged to confess that in spite of intense persecution and opposition of the Government, there are now indications of a religious revival, and it urges the GPU (secret police) to arrest all who manifest a disposition to encourage such a movement.

Methodists Quit Sending Food to Russia

"Only they would that we should remember the poor; the same which I also was forward to do" (Gal. 2:10).

RIGA, Latvia, Jan. 23.—American Methodists have discontinued sending food, clothing, and money to their fellow Methodists in Russia because of the persecution of the recipients of such gifts by the Soviet authorities. Bishop Raymond Wade, who arrived in Riga today to preside over the Latvian Methodist conference now in session, made the disclosure, declaring that attempts by Christians abroad to help believers in Russia are doing more harm than good, because entire families were sometimes arrested by the GPU (secret police) and exiled following the receipt of packages from foreign friends. The Chicago Tribune was informed that American Baptists have taken similar action.

New Revised Version Started

"I will read the writing . . . and make known . . . the interpretation" (Daniel 5:17).

CHICAGO, Ill., Feb. 10.—A new translation of the Bible is now under way according to an announcement made yesterday by Dr. Roy G. Ross, Executive Secretary of the International Council of Religious Education, which is an offshoot of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

Like the English revision of 1880, and the first American revision of 1901, the new translation will be based on the King James Version of 1611. Many privately made translations, some of undoubted merit, as Moffatt's, Smith and Goodspeed's, etc., have appeared in recent years, but none have had the stamp of general Protestant approval. The new version is being prepared by scholars representing the forty-one denominations composing the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ and will be officially recognized by them as the New Standard or Authorized Version.

Dr. Ross called attention to the decline of opposition to the making of new translations of the Scriptures and attributed it to two main factors: the people are now more generally aware of gradual changes in living languages, and there is popular realization that archeologists are constantly making discoveries which shed new light on old truths. We also find the new revisions are generally more in harmony with the original Greek and Hebrew versions than is the King James in many places. This is due, not alone to the new discoveries which are being made by the archeologists, but to the fact that modern scholars are far less inclined to be influenced in their renderings by theological ideas and traditional interpretations. This is indicated in a host of passages in the present American Standard Version. For example, the word "hell" does not occur in the American Standard Version of the Old Testament anywhere, the translators knowing that "hell" as generally understood does not express the thought of the Hebrew word sheol. You may recall that in the King James Version sheol is rendered "hell" thirty-one times and "grave" thirty-one times. Another striking change is observed in the omission of 1 John 5:7—"For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one." The American Revised, and all other recent translations as well, omit this entire verse as it does not occur in the original and therefore has no place in the Bible.

We trust that this newest translation will adhere as closely to the original as did the former one. The believer in the Bible has nothing to fear from any honest translation of the Holy Scriptures.

Faithfully Handling the Word of God

A Serious Matter

By R. H. Judd

DURING early years of manhood the writer was awakened to consider more seriously current teaching concerning the vital truths of God's Word because he felt the general tone of it was out of harmony with plainly stated language of Scripture. Force of circumstances led him to abandon the search for truth for some years, when he was again aroused in earnest to diligently search for himself. Conviction brought responsibility for testimony, and testimony brought serious persecution and trial, for which he is now thankful, for it both strengthened his personal character and developed a profound love for the Word of God.

Today he is once more aroused by the increasing frequency with which prominent church leaders are endeavoring to support their untenable teachings by statements that are in direct contradiction to the written Word of the living God.

For a very considerable time past he has made it his custom when reading an author to immediately verify any doubtful statement by direct appeal to the Bible. He can most heartily commend the habit, for such it has come to be. Owing to human limitations few, even among the best of us, are able to become really proficient in the study of more than two or three distinct topics. The above method is a workable plan that will go far towards safeguarding us from error along other avenues of thought. Thus while bearing our own testimony concerning which we believe God has given us responsibility, we are given wonderful glimpses of what He has in store for us to learn when we are able to give attention to it.

Some persons make much of numerical strength as an indication on which side right is to be found, and the question is often asked, "Can so many good people be wrong?" Scripture specifically warns us, "Thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil" (Ex. 23:2). Generally throughout Scripture, it has been minorities, and not majorities, who were in the right. To the above question the statement is frequently added: "By their fruits ye shall know them," thus indicating in another way that numbers are the fruit to be desired and are proof of God's blessing. The remark that "the church has endorsed the teaching" is no proof of its correctness. The only appeal that can have real authority is the inspired Word.

But there is a more serious aspect to the subject than any yet mentioned. More and more it is becoming a regrettable practice that actual untruths (in some instances we believe unintentional) are being brought into requisition as means of sustaining doctrines that are antagonistic

"He that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully" (Jer. 23:28). "Death and life are in the power of the tongue" (Prov. 18:21).

to the plain, positive declarations of God's Word. Not only so, but we shall see that the very language of Scripture is used for the purpose. The writer is aware that this is a strong charge, but the matter is of such importance that it needs to be emphatically stated, and the instances to be brought forward will abundantly prove the correctness of it. The seriousness is enhanced by the terribly sad fact that it is leaders of the great denominational Bible colleges, seminaries, publishing houses, and even missionary organizations that are thus turning aside millions who naturally look to them for light and guidance in spiritual things. Following are some of the instances to which reference has been made. Any Christian who will, with unbiased mind, compare them with Bible statements will be amazed at the misrepresentation and definite denials of Scripture truth which they convey.

Obviously our knowledge of God should have paramount importance over every other theme, for no subject is of real consequence to mankind apart from Him. The next unquestionably is the person, nature, and station of Jesus the Christ, and the relationship of the Holy Spirit to both. Inextricably interwoven with the study of these are the subjects of the nature of man, and his destiny as revealed in the Word of God.

In their strenuous efforts to redeem their standing and to maintain the current doctrine of the Trinity, ministers and evangelists have during recent years redoubled their energies endeavoring to prove that Jesus Christ is Himself God. Strangely enough they fail to see inconsistency in their teaching that He is the Son of God and is at the same time "the Jehovah of the Old Testament."

The Sunday School Times (Philadelphia, Pennsylvania) which probably has the largest circulation the world over of any similar magazine, commenting on John 4:26, affirms that Jesus the Christ here claims to be "the I AM," and that His statement to the woman of Samaria was "a self-ascription of the ineffable name of Jehovah." We very courteously, but very definitely, challenge any honest reader of the incident to extract any such meaning from the narrative. Certainly the woman concerned had no such convictions, for in verse 29 she says, "Come, see a man, which told me all things that ever I did; is not this the Christ?" "Christ" means "anointed," and God is never called Christ.

There is no occasion here to enter fully into the usages of the words ego emmi and the various instances of their occurrence. If the reader will examine them he will become convinced that the translators (Please turn to page 10)

Popular Objections Answered

“OUR EARTHLY TABERNACLE”

By H. V. Reed

“For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven: if so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life” (2 Cor. 5:1-4).

This language of the Apostle has sometimes been looked upon as affording strong evidence of the existence of the soul after the death of the body, but a little reflection upon the various expressions occurring in the text will show the reader that the Apostle does not here refer to the condition of death. Please consider the following points in the text:

1. The tabernacle.
2. Dissolved.
3. The “clothed upon” state.
4. Mortality swallowed up of life.

THIS language of the Apostle has sometimes been looked upon as affording strong evidence of the existence of the the human body. Throughout the Mosaic dispensation the word “tabernacle” referred to a place of worship or to some residence, never to the body of man. Paul therefore used a term perfectly familiar to his readers. The reader will observe that there are two tabernacles alluded to in the text. The first refers to the order of things under the ministry of the Jewish ritual, all of which are grouped under the expression “the earthly house of this tabernacle.” It includes the suffering condition of the present life. The whole church of Corinth was in that state, groaning with the groaning creation, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of the body.

The word “tabernacle” as used in the New Testament never refers to the human body as the place where the soul resides, and the language here has no reference to that idea. The Apostle is referring to that great change which will take place when the earthly life is succeeded by the new and eternal state under that dispensation when “the tabernacle of God shall be with men” (Rev. 21:1-4). That tabernacle is eternal, it is now in heaven, and is the place where Jesus is ministering, but no one can enter it during its abode in heaven. Neither can any man enter it until after the seven last plagues are poured out. In proof of these points, please read Hebrews 8:1-3, 10, also Revelation 15.

Peter states that he will put off his tabernacle as the Lord showed at the mount of transfiguration. It was on that occasion that he cried, “Lord, let us make here three tabernacles.” Christ showed him by the great change from the mortal state to the kingly position how he was to become the inheritor of the glory of God’s kingdom, and that in the future the tabernacle of God, immortality and honor, should be a real possession.

Dissolved. This expression is generally supposed to refer to death, or what is termed “the dissolution of the body.” But the word occurs only ten times in the Bible, and never refers to death. In the New Testament it refers to that grand change which shall take place when the old heavens and the old earth give way to the new. Peter says, “Seeing that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought we to be,” and then refers directly to the Apostle Paul as having spoken of the same dissolution. It is remarkable that this leads directly to the text under consideration. When the present order of things is dissolved the new age will come, and then the tabernacle of God will be with men.

The “clothed upon” state. This is most beautifully illustrated by the white raiment, the marriage scene, and the glory of the new world when the redeemed shall be clothed in white and be with the Lord in His glorious kingdom. The disciple is admonished by our Lord to keep his garments lest he walk naked and they see his shame. Hence the expression that “we would not be unclothed, but clothed upon.” Compare 2 Corinthians 5:1-4 with Revelation 3:5; 19:7, 8; 7:13, 14. The saints will have the investiture of the heavenly ornaments of the bride when she comes forth as queen of the millennial day.

“Oh, bridal hall and bridal robe,
How silver bright your jeweled gleam!
Like sunrise on the gentle face
Of some translucent mountain stream.”

Swallowed Up of Life. Our life is hid with Christ in God, and when He who is our life shall come from the invisible, we shall behold the full meaning of that sublime utterance in Isaiah, “I will swallow up death in victory.” Life swallows up mortality. This will not take place, however, until this mortal puts on (is clothed upon with) immortality and corruption puts on incorruption. Then, says Paul, “Death is swallowed up in victory.” This is the time to which he refers in the text under consideration—when mortality is swallowed up of life in the kingdom of God (1 Cor. 15:52-56).

In the light of a careful examination of the text, we can see that the Apostle is referring to that glorious epoch, when the earthly state and abode, with its pains and tears, shall give way to the endless life and the eternal home of

Is the Gospel a Failure?

Number 2

IS THERE no sunshine that can dissipate the clouds and give steady confidence that the old gospel is still the power of God unto salvation, and that it is doing its appointed task in the world, and that no state or condition, when read aright, is, in any way, derogatory to its fullness, perfection, and supreme efficacy?

Let us come to the plain facts relative to the gospel and what it is expected to do. The commission, as announced by Matthew is, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost" (Matt. 28:19). The margin reads, "make disciples (or Christians) of all nations." As given by Mark, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned" (Mark 16:15, 16).

The plain import of these commissions is that individuals are to receive and obey the gospel, which puts them in the salvation class, while unbelievers and rejecters are classed for perdition. There is no hint that all will become Christian, or that the world will be converted and glorified by this process.

The true purpose of all this is stated by James at the Jerusalem council, "God did at the beginning visit the Gentiles to take out of them a people for his name" (Acts 15:14). According to this the purpose is to take out of the mass of mankind a people and not to convert all the people.

The term "church," in the original, literally means the called-out ones. They are called out as special associates with Christ in the final redemption of the world and the bringing of the glorious utopian state prophesied by the ancient seers.

This work, of calling out of individuals, is going on, and shall go on till our Lord returns. Amid all the confusion, and apparent decline, God has had His witnesses in the earth; and through their testimony and proclamation people are responding, not in mass, but one by one here and there. The gospel is not a failure, but has accomplished, and is accomplishing, what it was intended to do, and shall continue to do so till Jesus returns at the end of this age.

But some may say, and we have often said the same, that all the good things we enjoy as a nation have come as the result of the gospel and its influences. But civilization as a fruit of the gospel is rather a by-product and not the result of direct effort. The beginning of reforms is in preaching the facts concerning Jesus Christ, His sufferings and resurrection. This proclamation is attended by a moral force that tends to uplift and elevate even those who do not cherish an evangelical faith. The Sun of Righteousness shines on believers, and the light reflected benefits even the unbeliever. A general atmosphere is created by the gospel's spread that makes more satisfactory conditions for even the worldling to live in. As soon as preaching is carried on without any regard to the original purpose of the gospel, and only on the level of reform, the reforms under such propaganda will not be anything like those that result from the preaching that keeps to the divine plan for its proclamation.

Resort is oftentimes made to the parable of the leaven in the meal in support of the world-conversion idea. Inasmuch as this parable has not been explained by the Master, and also because we have two parables of the same chapter (Matt. 13) explained, and one of them as explained (the wheat and the tares) gives an entirely different view than the world-conversion conception, we feel that if the Master had explained the leaven parable, He would not have given it a meaning different and opposite to the one He had explained. We deem it an unwise use of Scripture to base such a program as the world's conversion on a mere human interpretation of a parable, when the same area has been covered by another parable which the Master has explained with an opposite interpretation.

We again deem it unwise to make the principal element of an unexplained parable—the leaven—mean goodness, when its nature is corruption. It seems more consistent to apply it to some sort of badness than goodness. The only possible justification of the world-conversion view, from this parable, is the fact of permeation, irrespective of the quality of that which permeates. But we feel such an application untenable because the explained parable of the wheat and tares confirms an opposite view.

According to the wheat and tares parable the gospel is not a failure. The wheat gathered into the barn is the fruit of gospel propaganda, and such a propaganda as is now being pronounced a failure—the old gospel of Jesus and the resurrection. This ingathered harvest will be at the end of the age, a time not yet come, as all must admit. The same gospel that was preached at the beginning, and which produces wheat for the garner of God, is the same that produces the same kind of harvest at the close of the age. There is no such thing as one gospel at the commencement and another at the end of the age. The same gospel is designed to do the work divinely intended from Pentecost to the second advent.

We are not to judge the success or failure of the gospel by a too narrow scanning of local conditions, either in our own times or former periods of the dispensation. We can go, in imagination, to those parts of the world where it was first preached, churches formed, and a good work carried on for long periods of time, but now those same lands are desolate, so far as spirituality is concerned, and we have to

A Visit to Palestine

AT last we are on the steamer that will carry us to our final port, Bombay. From thence we shall take a train to Madras, and our home.

Our trip from England and through the Mediterranean was colder than we had anticipated, but otherwise very pleasant. We have been blessed all the way with calm seas and friendly fellow passengers. Although Christmas Day was very uneventful, we felt a bit of Christmas cheer as we realized how many of the folks "back home" were with us in thought and were wishing us a Merry Christmas. A good many sent their greetings through the mail, and such personal touches mean so much.

When we reached Port Said on the 29th of December, we felt very uncertain as to the advisability of visiting Palestine, with the political situation so disturbed. However, after much earnest prayer for guidance, our decision was to go; and now we feel that God led, indeed, for we all came away at the end of a week's time, strengthened, inspired, and blessed.

Our first night off the ship we spent in Cairo, Egypt. On the train between Port Said and Cairo we came into conversation with a Christian Egyptian, and when he learned that we were visiting his home town just a day and a half, he very kindly offered to spend the evening "showing us around." We were delighted, for he took us to the interesting points of the city where we could see the night life. Everything was astir, and places of business were open, just as though it were midday, until 2 a. m., and then open again at 6 a. m.

We were greatly impressed by the Egyptian people themselves. They are a beautiful race, friendly, and seemingly so carefree and happy-spirited. On the other hand, there are professional beggars who just rend your heart with their pitiful wailing.

Another striking feature was to see the peculiar combination of the primitive and the modern in costumes, customs, and conveyances. It was a grand panorama: latest Paris styles, red Turkish fezzes, ancient Arabian costumes, Mohammedan purdahs, and bundles of rags—Chryslers, Plymouths, Fords, bullock carts, bicycles, donkeys, and camels. And as for shops, everything from modern department stores, with elevators and Mickey Mouse, to little hovels along the street, crowded with food, flies, and a whole family of children.

We found rooms in the Y.W.C.A. and retired fairly early, in preparation for a big day to follow. We had hoped to be out at the Pyramids in time to see the sunrise the next morning, but as the alarm clock was out of commission, we had to do the next best thing and start out right

The following intimate account of a recent visit to Palestine and the Near East was written to "The Herald of Life" by Miss Mary Wellcome, an Advent Christian missionary en route to her station in India. The letter provides a more personal view of conditions in these Bible lands than would a more formal article.

after breakfast. We went by train to the edge of the city, a ride of about three quarters of an hour, and then Belle and I mounted camels for the last part of the way. Miss Jones, however, was afraid of being seasick on the camel's back, and so went on foot.

Out on the desert we were greeted by a strong wind which swept across the Sahara, rudely forcing the desert sands to the roots of our hair, down our throats, and into our eyes. In spite of it, however, we managed to cling to our camels, and spent a most interesting hour inspecting old tombs, pyramids, and the Sphinx. Much of the construction is of granite, marble, and alabaster. We just marveled at the huge slabs that had in some way been hoisted to great heights, no one knows how. At the end of the hour the camels had to be surrendered to their owners, so we completed our trip on donkeys. As for me, I prefer camels!

Although we were stiff and tired when we reached "home," we decided we must not leave Cairo without visiting the museum. So we went, right after lunch, to wander in and out among the mummies, sarcophaguses, and ancient relics of that place. We were most interested in the exhibit of the findings from King Tut-ankh-amen's tomb.

Immediately after tea we boarded the train for Jerusalem, tired but happy. We spent the night sleeping and waking intermittently; but when at last it was daylight we found ourselves on real desert—white sand stretching out as far as we could see, with only a few palm trees, and now and then a caravan of camels and occasional bedouin tents to break the monotony. The Arizona desert is a garden compared to this!

When we finally reached Palestine, and the train began to climb through the Judean hills, we were simply thrilled! The sides of the hills are terraced so that every part of ground can be cultivated. The gardens, orange groves, and green fields all looked so prosperous. The houses, built of white stone, are still made with flat roofs, and many have the outside stairway, as in New Testament times. The people we saw plowing in the field, or carrying water from the well, could easily have been Abraham, Isaac, or Jacob; Rachel, Rebecca, or Ruth.

When we reached Jerusalem we set our luggage down at St. George's Hostel, and rushed away again to make the most of every minute in the Holy Land. We first were driven (in a new Plymouth car) toward Bethlehem. We passed the tomb of Rebecca, looked out over the hills and the valley where David met the Philistines and killed Goliath, got just a glimpse of the Dead Sea in the distance, and saw the mountains of Moab in outline beyond it. When we reached Bethlehem we found it to be a quaint little town, very com-partly built against the hills. We visited the Church of the Nativity, and as I looked on the place where Christ is said to have been born, I felt a bit disappointed to find it so enshrined and covered with hangings and ornaments, altars and idols, that for me the spirit of the place was lost.

We went back to Jerusalem by way of the Mount of Olives, and were thoroughly blessed as we stood on top of the mountain and looked over the old city wall into Old Jerusalem in the light of a most gorgeous sunset.

On New Year's Day we joined a party from the hostel and walked to the Damascus Gate and into the old city, and were thrilled beyond measure by what we found. The streets are cobblestone, very, very narrow, built in steps instead of incline, and filled with busy people buying and selling from every niche and corner. We had a very efficient guide who showed us over the temple site, took us through the mosques built there, and then through Solomon's stables.

We took cars at the gate of the city and were driven to the ruins of Jericho, a few miles away, where excavators have uncovered parts of brick walls still intact, and bits of pottery. From that place we went down, down, down, until our ears fairly burst with the change of altitude, and at last came to a beautiful spot along the Jordan River. We could stay there but a few minutes, for the sun was getting low, and we had been warned to be in before dark, lest we should be stabbed in the back, or shot from ambush! Down we went, still farther, until we reached 1,300 feet below sea level, and stood on the shores of the Dead Sea. Just a taste of the water on the tips of our fingers was sufficient to convince us it was rightly called the Salt Sea. It was so salty it was bitter! I can still taste it! We went home rejoicing at the end of a perfectly delightful day.

Here I have mentioned the highlights, while perhaps the charming part of the trip was the beautiful view of mountain and valley, shepherds watching their sheep as they grazed on the rocky hillsides, and the caravans of camels we passed on the road.

The following day, Sunday, was to me one of the most impressive days we spent in Palestine. We spent the day visiting the places where our Lord spent many bitter hours. We went to the Garden of Gethsemane, to the Ecce Homo Church, where the original cobblestone pavement of the courtyard in which Christ was scourged is to be seen, saw the names of the Roman soldiers carved in the pavement, and visited the two disputed places of Golgotha and the Holy Sepulcher. The one is enshrined with ornate altars and entirely covered by a massive and ancient church; the other, far more impressive, is just outside the city wall, where we could plainly visualize the three crosses standing on the hill, Golgotha, and could see the way that might have been taken leading down to the garden of Joseph of Arimathea, and into the sepulcher, which so perfectly corresponds with the description in the Gospels. Never before had the story of the cross been so vital and so vivid to me. It left a deep impression which will not soon fade away.

Just before the sun went down that day, we took a drive out a few kilometers to Ain Karem, John the Baptist's birthplace, and again enjoyed a gorgeous sunset over the hills.

Early Monday morning we started by car to Galilee. That day included many more interesting features: a drink from Jacob's well; a visit in one of the poorer type of Arabian homes, a simple mud hut in Cana; a visit to the place held to be Joseph's home and carpenter shop in Nazareth; a walk through the narrow little streets of Nazareth; and, most captivating of all, a view of snow-capped Mount Hermon in the background, just as we came into view of the beautiful blue Sea of Galilee. Reaching Capernaum about noon, we saw the ruins of the old synagogue, Simon Peter's house, and the place where Matthew "sat at the receipt of custom," which he left to follow Christ. Then we spent a blessed hour on the edge of the Sea, meditating and absorbing new inspiration as we looked on the places our Lord loved so well. That hour alone was well worth the day's tour.

That night we spent at Haifa, at the foot of Mount Carmel. The proprietors of the hostel were Americans, and I thoroughly enjoyed sitting down to a real American "square meal." Just before retiring we heard President Roosevelt's speech to Congress, which came over the radio amazingly well. It made the world seem very small, after all. The whole of the next day we spent on the train, crossing barren deserts, with only sand, camels, and Arabs to look at.

Now, as I write, we are back on the ship and in the midst of the Red Sea, enjoying the tropical sunshine. Everyone is dressed in summer togs, and I don't envy one bit you folks away back there in the cold!

We feel very thankful to God for affording us the privilege of such a trip to Palestine, and my prayer now is that the value I received may result in greater usefulness in His service. Our visit was so hasty that, doubtless, we have but a contorted conception of the country and conditions existing. We did note beautiful villages with modern conveniences of every kind being built around and in the midst of the old villages. There are signs of progress and prosperity side by side with the primitive strata of living. We had but a taste, but how thankful we are for that!

Soon we'll be settling down to real business and still other new experiences. I am sure your prayers will be continually and increasingly needed.

UNITY ON ESSENTIALS

EXPRESSING regret that some cause contention through their efforts to advance their own individual interpretations of Scripture, an editorial in the World's Crisis says: "All that we are pleading for here is that we shall not distract the world with divergent personal opinions on minor points, but by reasonable unanimity on main issues seek to convince the world that we are living in an hour of startling prophetic significance. Let our message be rugged, outstanding, specific, comforting to saints and terrible to sinners. Let it be buttressed with prophecy and proved by the times. Let us present a united and orderly front."

WAR

TODAY we are witnessing a world in the throes of a universal war fever. News writers are telling us that another world conflict is in the offing, and that the beginning of the conflict is imminent, if not already begun. We read regularly of the progress in war preparations—poisonous gases, death rays, invisible power bolts, and other modern inventions which, it is claimed, will destroy populations in short order. Great progress has been made in cannons, guns, tanks, airplanes, and other parts of the mechanical fighting equipment. We know from the daily papers that more men are under arms today than ever before, with the exception of the close of the World War. Truly a spirit of war is prevailing. Nations are feverishly preparing for a great struggle, and secretly dread to think of the coming conflict. Jesus' prophecy is fulfilled, wherein He said that at the close of the age, "men's hearts (shall be) failing them for fear, and for looking after the things which are coming on the earth" (Luke 21:26).

In an atmosphere such as this, should we not consider carnal warfare from the viewpoint of our modern thinking men and women who have given the subject mature thought, and have expressed their candid opinions upon it? What conclusions have they expressed concerning war? Can they find any good outcome from war? Do they trust in war to make wrongs right? These are questions we shall answer with quotations from men and women of our day.

Ex-President Coolidge, in an address before the American Legion in Omaha, Nebraska, October 6, 1925, stated emphatically that he was opposed to war. In his denunciation Mr. Coolidge said, "War in its very essence means destruction. . . . Modern warfare becomes more and more to mean utter loss, destruction of the best there is of any people, in its valiant youth and its accumulated treasure. . . . It is impossible to believe that any nation now feels it could better itself by war. . . . In spite of all arguments in favor of great military forces, no nation ever had any army large enough to guarantee it against attack in time of war. No nation ever will. Peace and security are more likely to result from fair and honorable dealings and mutual agreements from a limitation of armaments among nations than by any attempt at competition in squadrons and battalions."

C. E. Jefferson, of the American Association for International Conciliation, is quoted as saying that "everything in Germany, Italy, Austria, England, and Russia is held back by the confiscation of the proceeds of industry carried on for the support of the army and navy. In the United States the development of our resources is checked by this same fatal policy. We have millions of acres of swamp land to be drained, thousands of miles of inland waterways to be improved, harbors to be deepened, canals to be dug, and forests to be safeguarded, and yet for all these works of cardinal importance we can afford only a pittance. . . .

We have pests, implacable and terrible, like the gypsy moth, and plagues, for whose extermination millions of money are needed at once."

Our United States Senator Norris was quoted in The Golden Age as saying, "The millions of our youth who went into the orgy of murder (of the World War) were promised a new and better order of things. Here, years later, they can see special privileges and power of money more securely enthroned than ever before in the seats of the mighty. For the thousands of our young men killed, for our billions spent, for the countless millions of heartaches, we have what? We have political corruption such as was never dreamed of before."

Our General Pershing, before an assembly of French and Americans at St. Mihile Cemetery, May 30, 1928, stated that millions of graves cry out against war, and the big nations must show the way to a durable peace. The war that threatened our civilization came, he said, because of the "fallacious theory that war is an essential element in the national policy of government and an erroneous belief that nations became great through aggressive undertakings carried on regardless of right and justice. Against such views, the reasonings of cabinets and the creation of ententes too often have shown themselves powerless." He further stated that he believed that all "nations that attempt in the future to achieve greatness through unjust aggression are certain to incur the active hostility of all nations." The duty of great nations, he concluded, is to formulate some "simple, understandable agreement, not only as a deterrent to war among themselves, but as an example to their more backward sisters."

President Marsh of Boston University was quoted in The Golden Age magazine as having said in an address: "Why should we create in the minds of the young the idea that there is glory in something in which no glory exists? War is of the Devil. It is brutal and brutalizing. It holds neither life nor property nor honor as sacred. There are certain well meaning persons who are desirous of civilizing warfare. With utter sincerity they are striving to make war humane. It cannot be done."

In this same magazine, Lydia G. Wentworth is quoted in regard to modern warfare. She says: "War has descended to us from savagery. Shall we, who claim civilization, continue to pattern our customs and practices by savage customs and practices? Can't we improve on ignorance and savagery? . . . War is futile. It never settled anything that could not have been settled better by reasonable means in a manner consistent with civilization. War is senseless. Even the victorious side pays penalties in many ways as great as the vanquished. I challenge any person to state any reason or cause which will serve as sufficient or adequate ground for declaration of war by one nation to another in these days. Causes of war are disputes and should be settled by arbitration or legal procedure.

"Wherein does killing by wholesale—the massacre of millions of the enemy and perhaps as many of our own people—the bombarding of villages, towns, and cities, retrieve or avenge or maintain the honor of any nation? Does it not drag honor in the mud? Is honor more likely to be maintained by persons 'seeing red' or by the calm and deliberate procedure of arbitration by the best minds among a nation's people. . . .

"Wherein are the vital interests furthered or maintained by collective homicide, the sacrifice of millions of persons innocent of any wrongdoing toward each other? Does it not seem reasonable to assume that the vital interests of any nation would be far better sustained by peaceful procedure insuring the preservation of property rather than by destructive methods? . . .

"Wherein does the extermination of legions of lives—the greatest number possible of opponents that could be killed—maintain with justice the rights of any foreigners in a land other than their own? If the laws or practices of any land do not suit, let foreigners stay away. . . .

"There are causes of war which are not publicly announced which are falsely represented as national honor, vital interest, etc. To misrepresent these to the people of any country by false propaganda is the most gigantic betrayal, the most colossal wrong that can be perpetrated upon a people. That is what was done in every country before the last World War; for, as Lord Robert Cecil has said, 'If the situation had been known to the world, no nation could have forced its people to fight.'

"We were betrayed once by propaganda, and 'it is for the people to see that they are not deceived and betrayed again. It is for the people to refuse to believe war propaganda—however specious it may be—and to demand the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.'"

These quotations from well known thinkers, speakers, writers, and educators of our day, are concrete evidence that men and women, once they consider the cost, do not conclude in favor of war. But in addition to the reasonings of scholars, we must add the testimony of the Holy Scriptures, which forbid wholesale murder, commonly called war, by these words, "Thou shalt not kill" (Ex. 20:13). This short command from God's moral law, points out to all mankind His will regarding life, and is the proof that Jehovah alone has the right to slay or have slain, one of His creatures.

Jesus in His ministry magnified the Decalogue. From His lips came such commands as, "Put up the sword," "Love your enemies, and do good to them," "Resist not evil, but overcome evil with good." Following the Master, the apostles of the Lord also taught the law of love and life, saying, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself," and "If thine enemy hunger, feed him."

Have we not all one Father, regardless of tongues, colors, sects, creeds, and nationalities? "Hath not one God created us" (evolutionists to the contrary)? Have we not all sprung from one blood? Are we not, therefore, brothers?

Should not nations and peoples, regardless of propaganda and the war spirit, live in harmony, peace, and goodwill among themselves? The divine injunction is, "Do good unto all men," and how pleasant this old war-torn world would be if men and women everywhere and at all times would heed His command of love. And, praise God, some day it shall be!

The prophets of God foretell the day to come when the Lord "maketh wars to cease unto the ends of the earth; he breaketh the bow, and cutteth the spear in sunder; he burneth the chariots in the fire" (Psa. 46:9). "He shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid."

The ways of the Lord are peace, love, joy. Praise the Lord.—C. O. Dodd, editor of The Faith (Seventh Day monthly).

IS THE GOSPEL A FAILURE?

send missionaries there again. We note the places where Paul and his co-laborers organized churches, as reported in the Acts of the Apostles, but now this same area is missionary territory. Are we to conclude that the gospel has been a failure in those regions? Not a bit of it. It accomplished its purpose in those lands, of taking out a people for the name of the Lord. Stones for the great eternal building of God have been quarried, squared, carved, polished, labeled, and laid away, awaiting the time when the great Master Builder shall bring them forth and place them in the great edifice.

Or we may view the work nearer by and a shorter time since, where there were large and flourishing churches that have gone down and the buildings gone or in a dilapidated state. Are we to conclude the gospel has been a failure in those localities? Nay, verily. Near-by cemeteries hold pious souls awaiting the resurrection trumpet to life eternal, or possibly some have moved to other parts and been pillars to some new work that is still going on.

The misgivings concerning the gospel's efficacy to meet present conditions grow, in the writer's estimation, out of the elimination from their program of the second coming of Christ. In Romans the 8th chapter, Paul speaks of the whole creation groaning and travailing together, awaiting the manifestation of the sons of God. That manifestation, by resurrection and translation power, will be a most potent move toward bringing in a glorious earth freed from the curse. This will mean the reorganization of the component parts of the kingdom, from which shall be eliminated the discordant elements producing tumult and burdened conditions in this age.—A. H. Kearney in World's Crisis.

THE SPIRITUAL VALUE OF PROPHECY

And that is exactly what prophecy does for us.

Our Lord used prophecy and the fulfillment of prophecy as the foundation of His teaching. In the Sermon on the Mount, which is recognized as the most comprehensive discourse on morality that was ever delivered, Jesus said concerning the purpose of His first coming: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil" (Matt. 5:17).

Paul gave as the reason why the Scriptures were written, the larger part of which are prophetic, was that God's children might realize their Father's mercy and love. "For whatsoever things were written aforetime," he asserts, "were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the scriptures might have hope" (Rom. 15:4). "Comfort" and "hope" are derived only from the promises God has made and revealed to us through the prophets.

It would be interesting to enumerate how many times such expressions as this are found in the New Testament: "This was done that the scriptures might be fulfilled." Jesus' life, from Bethlehem to Calvary, was a continuous fulfillment of prophecy. The manner and place of His birth, His preaching to the poor, healing the sick, raising the dead; His own death, burial, and resurrection, had all been foretold by the prophets.

JESUS TAUGHT THE LITERAL FULFILLMENT OF PROPHECY

There can be no doubt but that Jesus was firmly convinced that the prophetic Word would all be fulfilled literally. He spoke of prophecy as though it were history written in advance, and He saw in many of the things occurring during His earthly ministry literal accomplishment of what the prophets had foretold. For example, there is the circumstance upon which our morning meditation was based (Matt. 13:14), in which Jesus, referring to the Jews' failure to understand His parables, said, "In them is fulfilled the prophecy of Esaias, which saith, By hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand; and seeing ye shall see, and shall not perceive."

Our Lord rested His claim to the Messiahship upon the fact that in Him was fulfilled the predictions of the prophets concerning the Redeemer that was to come. When John the Baptist sent from his prison cell to ask, "Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?" Jesus answered and said to the messengers of John, "Go and shew John again those things which ye do hear and see: The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them" (Matt. 11:3-5).

Jesus obviously believed that through Him were being literally fulfilled the wonderful predictions of Isaiah and the other prophets who had described in advance the accomplishments of the Messiah.

Speaking of the coming of the "time of trouble," Jesus said, "These be the days of vengeance, that all things which are written may be fulfilled" (Luke 21:22).

Good things and evil things have been predicted, and both shall come to pass at the time appointed (Josh. 23:14-16). But so far as the Christian is concerned, all will eventually work out for good. As this fact is brought to our attention by the prophets we are comforted and assured. And so Jesus taught in His great, final prophetic sermon when He said, still speaking of the horrors and sufferings of the tribulation period, "And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh" (Luke 21:28).

The great spiritual value of prophecy, that is, its power to make us conscious of God's presence in the world today and His nearness to us, lies in this: that the believing student of these things, the one who is attentively and prayerfully watching all that is happening throughout the world, as he sees conditions developing exactly as the prophets of God predicted they would develop in the last days, is made to rejoice, for he knows that God is here, working out His far-reaching and ever-beneficent plans for the redemption of His people. Consequently godliness, piety, prayerfulness; sacrifice, service—every Christian grace that can be named—is encouraged and cultivated by the knowledge the fulfillment of prophecy brings (1 John 3:3). Our God is alive—He lives today! Our Savior also lives and acts—today! God's Word is rapidly coming to pass and soon, O very soon, the King shall come!

"Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless" (2 Peter 3:14).

FAITHFULLY HANDLING THE WORD OF GOD

made no error in supplying the pronoun "he" in such passages as John 8:24, 28; for the sense requires it. It should have been supplied also in verse 58, as it is in some well known versions. In view of the facts the statement made by the Sunday School Times calls for strong protest.

Another similar misrepresentation of facts occurs in the February issue of Young China, which is one of the official organs of the China Inland Mission. After stating in capital letters that "JESUS IS GOD," reference is made to the temptation of Christ in the wilderness. Quoting the words of verse 7, "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God," the implication is made that Christ used these words with direct reference to Himself, meaning that the adversary was not to tempt Him. In contrast to any such thought, Christ recognized God as His God, and that even He though the Son of God, had no right to tempt God with the preservation of His life by wrongful act. With the same fundamental view in mind, the Sunday School Times for May of the past year, published a cartoon by Dr. Pace, depicting Christ in the burning bush, with the accompanying comment that "The Jehovah of the Old Testament is the Jesus of the New." Scripture declares that God is not a God of confusion, but think of the resulting confusion from such teaching as this!

In the endeavor to maintain the doctrine of the Trinity, the Hebrew word echad (one) is produced as "infallible proof" that the Bible proclaims it. The late R. A. Torrey, D. D., Prof. Angell, Rev. Elijah Jacob Baron of Vancouver, W. Hamilton and W. E. Hodgson of Toronto, also Rev. David Cooper, President of the Biblical Research Society with centers in many large cities, have made themselves responsible for the statement that the Hebrew word named above "denotes compound unity, not simple unity." As an illustration, one writer gives a bunch of grapes or a bundle of sticks.

Apart altogether from the questionable suggestion that there can be such a thing as compound unity, there is positively no mistaking the fact that the numeral has reference to the bundle, and not to the things in the bundle. It is one bundle as against two or more bundles. The following are a few instances of simple unity, and very many more could be given: Genesis 2:21, "one of his ribs"; Genesis 42:13, "sons of one man"; Exodus 29:23, "one loaf of bread."

Rev. Baron also brings forward the passage contained in Ezra 2:64 to 3:1. The first verse mentioned states the number of persons in the congregation to be 42,360, and verse 1 of chapter 3 tells us that "the people gathered themselves together as one man." Quoting this, Rev. Baron deliberately omits the word "man," and places the quotation marks after the word "one," with the evident intention of suggesting that the word "man" is not in the Hebrew. He then says, "The assembly referred to contained 42,360 people, and the word used to express their (italics mine) unity is echad." The veriest beginner in the knowledge of grammar could inform him that the primary reference of the word "one" is to the word "man," and that he has omitted to recognize the qualifying word "as," and that without the word "man" the passage loses its intended significance. We may be pardoned if (while not questioning the sincerity of purpose of the expositor) we question the honesty of such an exegesis.

He says further: "If it were intended that God should be represented as an absolute oneness the word yachid would have been used." Not being a Hebrew, or making any pretense to Hebrew scholarship, I am open to correction, but nevertheless I think I am quite right in stating that yachid is never used in Scripture as a numeral. Its occurrences are few, not more, I think, than half a dozen, but it is in every instance translated by the word "only."

The next illustration is from Genesis 2:24. He says that here "echad is used to describe the unity of man and wife." The passage in question does not say this. It does say, "They (italics mine) shall become one flesh," which is scientifically true, but quite a different matter from what Rev. Baron asserts.

His next remark is that his arguments concerning echad and yachid are "incontestible, and can only be avoided by those who have a motive to avoid the truth." In view of what we have said, we simply blow back this little cloud of dust upon him. What is probably true is that Rev. Baron is overjoyed in having found the true Messiah in Jesus the Christ, and we join in sharing that joy with him. But, because Rev. Cooper was the instrument in that happy event is no proof that he is to be depended upon in all else that he puts forward. However, we have ourselves been guilty of the same mistake. It is not an unnatural mistake for a young believer. No argument of Dr. Cooper's can make void the plain declaration of our Lord in John 17:3: "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent"; nor will any argument bring it into harmony with the doctrine of the Trinity.

the redeemed. Not a word in the text dwarfs its glorious meaning to the passage of a soul from a body. Not a word about the soul or spirit. Even the word "death" does not occur. The terms used all refer to that sublime age when the weeping church shall lay aside her cross and receive her crown, for, says Paul, "We walk by faith and not by sight." May our faith rest on these heavenly promises, until we gain that rest which is now so near, when the marriage of the Lamb shall come and

"By angel hands the board be spread,
By angel hands the sacred bread
Be on the golden table laid."

RECOMPENSE

Straight through my heart this fact today,
By Truth's own hand is driven,
God never takes one thing away,
But something else is given.

I did not know in earlier years,
This law of love and kindness;
I only mourned through bitter tears
My loss, in sorrow's blindness.

But, ever following each regret
O'er some departed treasure,
My sad repining heart was met
With unexpected pleasure.

I thought it only happened so;
But Time this truth has taught me—
No least thing from my life can go,
But something else is brought me.

No matter if the crushing blow
May for the moment down me,
Still, back of it waits Love, I know,
With some new gift to crown me.

“What Must I Do to Be Lost?”

“Why, do nothing,” you will say. “Men are naturally sinful and lost. We live in a lost world. The only way to be saved is to get on board the gospel train and be transformed from man’s image to God’s image. But if you don’t do anything about your present condition it just naturally follows that you will be lost. You will go out with the tide.”

“But you do not understand,” I say. “I’m not a non-Christian. I’m a son of God by faith in Christ Jesus. God takes care of His family. How can I be lost?” And thus emboldened I am apt to go on heedlessly slipping into sin, thinking that once a son, always a son; once in grace, always in grace.

But there is ample scriptural evidence to support the statement that a one-time true Christian can turn and go back to destruction. We had no choice in our natural birth. Therefore I could not change natural fathers if I wished to do so. But by my voluntary decision I entered the family of God. There is a difference.

A Castaway

“But I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection: lest that by any means, when I have preached unto others, I myself should be a castaway” (1 Cor. 9:27).

Even Paul needed to be on guard! Miraculously called of God, a chosen vessel, one who had worked miracles, yet he uttered the conviction that even now he could turn and rush down the road to destruction. He later wrote of some who “concerning faith have made shipwreck,” and the reason given is that they had “put away” (thrust away) “faith, and a good conscience” (1 Tim. 1:19). A Christian may voluntarily scuttle his own ship and become a castaway!

The Willful Sin

“For if we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins” (Heb. 10:26). Some of the Jews received the truth of Christ (we have no reason to doubt their sincerity), they became Christians, and then deliberately turned back to Judaism. But “no more” would the sacrifice of bulls and of goats be acceptable. There was no other sacrifice to which they might look. Indeed, the Bible holds forth that even “enlightened,” spirit-filled, and power-endowed Christians, who have actually “tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come,” may “fall away” (Heb. 6:4-6).

“Thou standest by faith. Be not highminded, but fear”

(Rom. 11:20). I am not trying to unsettle your confidence, or peace, except where it needs to be unsettled. If you have a false confidence it is time you were finding it out before it is too late. If Paul could afford to be constantly on guard, so can you.

The Seed That Never Grew Up!

“These have no root, which for a while believe, and in time of temptation fall away” (Luke 8:13). We all recognize that “the seed is the word of God” (Luke 8:11). “And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you” (1 Peter 1:25). This seed is “incorruptible” (1 Peter 1:23), and by that very fact will not remain to develop in the heart of a man whose thoughts and intents are corruptible. “What fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness?” (2 Cor. 6:14). “Quench not the Spirit” (1 Thess. 5:19). If the seed of God leaves your heart to its deadness it will be because you voluntarily cast it out by disloyalty, disobedience, and neglect, or choke it with “cares and riches and pleasures of this life” (Luke 8:14).

A Leaking Vessel!

“Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip” (Heb. 2:1). The marginal reference says for “let them slip,” “run out as leaking vessels.” What are some of the leaks in Christians that will let their faith, hope, and charity run out as water from leaking vessels? Some vessels are as full of holes as a sieve. Before you can expect your church going and your Bible reading to fill you with the Spirit you must plug up the holes! One preacher preached the same sermon over and over again to his congregation until they thought perhaps that was the only sermon he knew. But when the pulpit committee questioned him about it he replied that he was continuing to repeat the sermon because no one in the congregation had as yet put what he preached into practice and it was their move!

A Christian is like a water pail. It is his duty to bring the water of life to the thirsty, dying people around him—those who are without hope and without God in the world. This is a heavy responsibility. “But we have our treasure in earthen vessels” (2 Cor. 4:7). Use means wear, and wear develops imperfections which we must speedily repair. Therefore let us examine our lives constantly to discover those little things which sap our very lifeblood. On a water main with too many outlets the last user doesn’t get much water. Does Christ get your best service, the full volume of your devotion, or are your service mains worn out?

"What manner of man is this, that even the wind and the sea obey him?"

Savior, Teach Me, Day by Day

"Savior, teach me, day by day,
Love's sweet lesson to obey;
Sweeter lesson cannot be,
Loving Him who first loved me.

"With a childlike heart of love
At Thy bidding may I move;
Prompt to serve and follow Thee,
Loving Him who first loved me.

"Teach me all Thy steps to trace,
Strong to follow in Thy grace;
Learning how to love from Thee,
Loving Him who first loved me.

"Love in loving finds employ,
In obedience all her joy;
Ever new that joy will be,
Loving Him who first loved me.

"Thus may I rejoice to show
That I feel the love I owe;
Singing, till Thy face I see,
Of His love who first loved me."

Of More Value Than Money

You all have teachers whom you love very much—Sunday school teachers and public school teachers and music teachers. There are special reasons why you love them. Perhaps they have helped you with a very difficult subject. Perhaps they have cheered you when you were discouraged and wanted to quit trying. Perhaps they have understood the things about you that others have criticized and they have helped you overcome them.

Jesus was just such a Teacher, only so much more so. He was as kind as the kindest teacher you ever had, and kinder! He was as helpful as the most helpful, and even more! He was as loving as the most loving one you can think of, and still more loving than that!

After Jesus had chosen His twelve helpers, those who were to learn from Him to be teachers, He started out once more to teach. He often stood on the shores of the Sea of Galilee to give His lessons to the people. For great crowds gathered there always.

Now this time of which we are studying the multitudes of people became so great that He stepped into a ship and taught them from there. The people on the shore gathered just as closely to the water's edge as they could. They didn't want to miss a single word of what He was saying.

As they stood there listening, perhaps they could see a man on one of the near by hillsides sowing seeds. They had to do all their farm work by hand, you know, because they had no fine machinery in those days.

Along the western shores of Galilee the soil was fertile, and even today one may see on this plain, fine gardens and rich fields. On the east side, however, it is very hilly, even down to the water's edge. In these hills there are caves where a certain man lived whose meeting with Jesus meant so much to him. But we are getting ahead of our story.

As Jesus taught the people that day so long ago He said that He was a Sower. And the seeds He was sowing were the truths of the gospel of which we have been learning this quarter. Those who listened to His words and obeyed them were "good soil." Those who listened gladly for a while and then turned away were "stony soil." Those who paid no attention to Jesus' words and gave no heed to the gospel were "wayside soil."

Now that "parable," as we call it, is easy to understand, isn't it? Three kinds of soil, people are, and we want to be the "good soil," the kind that brings in a fine, big harvest for the work that our teachers, the sowers, do. The harvest is our reward and theirs, too.

Soon it was getting dark, for evening came early among those hills. Jesus and His disciples began to row across the lake. Jesus, being weary from long hours of teaching, lay down in the rear part of the ship to sleep. He needed that rest so much, but was He to enjoy it long? Look at Mark 4:35-41, and see what exciting thing happened.

Storms came suddenly over Galilee because the winds swept down through those valleys from the mountain gorges. It may have been calm as a mirror on the surface of the lake when Jesus lay down to rest. But suddenly the disciples were terrified, fearing they would all drown. What did that wonderful Teacher do?

But our time is up and we are just ready for the lesson story.

BRO. JOHN EAGLESTON NOW IN POMONA, CALIFORNIA

"I have moved from Los Angeles," writes Bro. John Eagleston, evangelist of the Pacific Coast, "and my address now is 247 S. Rebecca St., Pomona, Calif." He says that he expects to start again on the circuit he has followed for the past two years (D. V.) this coming summer. He anticipates a busy and successful season. He expects to revisit in June communities in Washington and probably hold some meetings at a schoolhouse near the home of Bro. Smalley, where a good interest was developed a year ago.

Bro. Eagleston suggests that he would be glad to visit any community within 100 miles of Pomona where the brethren may desire his services. He generously says that "if there are any I could reach within that distance from my home, I would make an extra effort to see them. I do not want them to pay my fare, nor do I want to burden them with any expense on my account. I just want an opportunity to serve them and to encourage them on the way. I expect to start out about May 1."

Anyone who is interested in Bro. Eagleston's offer should address him as early as possible as indicated above.

BRO. AND SR. CONNER REACH HOME

After an absence of about six weeks, during which they visited brethren, churches, friends, and relatives in the South, Southwest, and Pacific Coast region, the president of the National Bible Institution and his wife were welcomed home at Dixon and Oregon last Wednesday.

From reports reaching the office, the churches in the various localities visited by Bro. and Sr. Conner enjoyed greatly the services at which Bro. Conner spoke and the opportunity of meeting Sr. Conner. It was the latter's first visit to the Far West.

LOUISIANA CHURCH NOTES

It was our privilege to have Bro. and Sr. L. E. Conner with us from February 11-15. Bro. Conner preached at the Blood River church Sunday morning, and at Happy Woods Sunday and Monday nights. Three wonderful sermons were delivered and we were surely sorry that he could not stay longer.

We are glad to report that Mrs. Gilbert Bottolf is able to attend church services again after several weeks' illness, and we trust that she will soon be able to resume her duties as teacher of the intermediate class.

All departments of the churches seem to be making progress and with the loyalty and cooperation of the members being manifested we feel encouraged to press forward in the Master's service.

Harry Goekler, Pastor.

SOUTH LAWN CHURCH, GRAND RAPIDS

A most encouraging feature since the Christmas season has been the added number of men showing a definite interest. There were thirty men present at the monthly meeting of their class, Feb. 12, and a very pleasant and profitable evening was had together. At the half-way mark of the auto race contest between Sunday school classes, car No. 1, representing the men, was well in the lead, but being steadily pursued by car No. 8, representing Mrs. Holmes' class of girls.

The ladies had their monthly class meeting February 16, and report a splendid gathering.

Sr. Gersie Holland, who has been employed by WLS in its entertainment field since January 1, was home for two days recently. We were glad to see her, and she reports very favorably upon her work.

Marcile Siple, daughter of the pastor, has completed her probationary period at St. Luke's Hospital, Chicago, and is being "capped" with fitting ceremonies February 24. Her sister, Marjorie, is a graduate nurse employed at the same institution.

The choir is working on Easter music, and other preparation is being made for this, the most sacred day of the entire year.

F. E. Siple, Pastor.

RIPLEY, ILLINOIS

The Sunday school and church attendance has held up very well this winter. The average number present has been over fifty. We did not have a service in the evening of Sunday, Feb. 6, but Bro. Gerald Cooper preached in the morning in the absence of our pastor, Harvey Krogh, who was assisting Bro. James McLain in a protracted meeting at Christian Neck, a community in the country about eighteen miles northeast of here.

Sr. William Laning, who underwent an operation last fall and was confined to her home for months, has been again able to meet with us during the past few weeks.

Remember, the next Illinois Quarterly Conference is to be held at Ripley on March 26 and 27. Plan now to attend.

Bro. F. E. Siple of Grand Rapids, Mich., is to be guest speaker at special meetings in Ripley which are to begin about April 26 and continue for two weeks. Pray for the success of these meetings.

Loren Burnett, Secretary.

LAWRENCEVILLE, OHIO

The Sunshine Class of the Lawrenceville, Ohio, Church of God Sunday School held its regular monthly meeting Friday evening, Feb. 4, at the home of Sr. Erma Bowser. There were fourteen present, including our pastor, Sydney Magaw, and his wife and daughter.

The topic for discussion was, "Is it necessary for church members to attend church regularly?" Thoughts were presented on the subject from which we may all profit.

After the business meeting and Bible discussion, the evening was spent socially. The next class meeting is to be at the home of Bro. Raymond and Sr. Margaret Beck.

Mrs. Paul Overholser, Secretary.

BOTTOLF - BOLLIN

It was the writer's privilege on Sunday morning, Feb. 13, to unite in marriage Miss Anna Mae Bottolf and Mr. Lawrence Bollin. The ceremony was performed at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Bottolf, in the presence of the immediate family.

The bride is an active member of the Happy Woods church and a most loyal worker in its various activities. She attended conference a number of years ago and will be remembered by those who met her then. The groom is a successful business man of Hammond and a man of high integrity. They will make their home in Hammond.

Their friends wish them a life of happiness, both material and spiritual, in their new life together.

Board of Evangelism

Preach the Word

C. E. Randall, Superintendent

"They went every where preaching the Word" (Acts 8:4).

The apostolic church was a growing church. It was determined to fulfill the work delegated to it by the great Head of the church. The obstacles in the way of the primitive organization were greater than those which beset the church today—at least in this country. Their disadvantage in having these problems, if such really handicapped them, was courageously overcome by their enthusiasm for the preaching of the Word and carrying out the injunction of the Redeemer. In doing as they were commanded, the church expanded and the numbers steadily increased. If we pursued the same policy today, do you think our work would show a multiplying membership? In answering this question, it will be necessary to survey in a small way some of our past labors.

Seventy-five years ago our workers followed the apostolic principle of preaching. Their aim was not to centralize their work, but to compass the land with their message. Pastoral work was carried on by appointed and ordained elders, with the ministers in the majority of cases serving as evangelists.

A few examples of the energetic evangelism carried on by the workers three quarters of a century ago follow: Bro. J. Blain, Buffalo, N. Y., in 1859, in making a report to the "Expositor and Advocate," Rochester, N. Y., published by Elder Joseph Marsh, stated that he had just returned from an eight-months' tour of five states and sold and distributed some twelve thousand books and tracts on the "Coming of Christ," "Nature of Man," etc. In that same year, Elder R. V. Lyon held meetings in Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New York, Vermont, and Canada West, now the Province of Ontario. In one report he recorded six different meetings held in the communities near Prescott, Ont. The church at Springfield, Ohio, hired Elder L. H. Chase to "travel as evangelist in Ohio." In an open letter to the brethren of Ohio, Bro. William Fish stated: "It is hoped that brethren of this state will arouse to the importance of missionary work. The fields are whitening for the harvest, and the laborers are few. The Lord is soon coming, and what are we doing? . . . How many are there who could spare a hundred acres of land, or one hundred dollars, to be spent in teaching the destitute the way of life?" We do not know what response there was to the appeal, but this lone congregation assumed the financial responsibility for sending out an evangelist, and in a later report Elder Chase had held meetings in six different localities around Springfield.

At this time J. M. Stephenson was living at Eureka, Wis. After attending conferences in Minnesota, Illinois, and Indiana, he wrote: "The Macedonian cry is coming from all parts, 'Come over and help us.'"

These accounts give some idea of the evangelistic spirit and mind which gripped our people in the former days when they were really gospel conscious!

Most of the meetings held years ago were conducted in schoolhouses. The majority of the schoolhouses were available in those days as they are today, the only difference being that the pioneers took advantage of the opportunities afforded.

In these earlier days, if a family moved into a new community, about as soon as they would get settled in their new home, they would get in touch with one of the evangelists and arrange for some meetings. In 1858 a man by the name of Norton settled at Wilton, Minn., a little hamlet about eight miles west of Bemidji. He soon located another believer by the name of Salisbury, some six miles away, and they began to spread literature and make plans to get an evangelist to hold meetings. True, many, many of these efforts failed to bring into being an established church. What of it? A few were saved by the truth and in turn moved elsewhere and became disseminators of the gospel. We need to relearn the lessons of our fathers, one of which is, that our sole duty is to spread the gospel, rather than to give all effort in building local churches.

If people would cut loose from a lot of their worldly social activities and club life and give some of their energies to opening the way for our ministers to evangelize, we would not be so destitute of new fields in which to preach the gospel. The secretary of our Board of Evangelism reports it almost impossible to get people to even answer his letters offering to extend help and send an evangelist into the field. If we are to sing, "Faith of Our Fathers," with real meaning, there must be an about face in our evangelistic attitude.

Next time we are going to review a little of the early activity in the Northwest and West. We salute our brethren in this district!

C. E. Randall.

For the encouragement of those who are interested in the evangelistic work, I want to say that definite plans have been made to start work in Nebraska in the near future. One feature of this work is that the two ends of the State that have been divided for so long have decided to work together.

Omaha is trying to raise the means to employ a man full time there, but if they can't, they are willing to join forces with the western conference and employ a man until such time as the work can be brought up to where it will support two or more men.

I am happy to make this report, for at times things have been somewhat discouraging. It seemed that every avenue was closed; but at last things have begun to look up. I have written eighty-six letters and have forgotten the number of postal cards that have been written besides, and there have been a considerable number.

Others are inquiring about the work and what prospect there is of our assisting them. We want to give assistance wherever we find a worthy cause and as long as the money holds out.

Money keeps coming in slowly. We received a very liberal contribution from one brother. Names will be published in the near future.

All requests and money should be sent to the writer at Orange Road, Ashland, Ohio.

JAMES WILLIAM BLAIR

James William Blair, son of Sr. Ferne Logan Blair, was born February 1, 1935, and died February 10, 1938. The dear child had been sick from birth and had spent more than two years of his short life in a hospital.

Little Billie was never able to laugh and play in this life, but we praise God for His gracious promise in Zechariah 8:5: "And the streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing in the streets thereof."

He was laid to rest in the grave of his little sister Betty, who preceded him in death twelve years ago, and beside his father, who died when he was seven months old.

There in silence they will sleep together till they are called forth to be taught the knowledge of our Lord in the new earth, where there will be no more pain, sickness, or death.

“Home, Sweet Home”

Provided by the love and sympathy of the entire brotherhood of the Church of God, Golden Rule Home assures to the members of its Family the comfort, security, and solicitous care which the word “home” always suggests.

Here the anxieties of earlier and more active life are laid aside forever. No threat of eviction for non-payment of rent or taxes or other indebtedness troubles the hearts of the residents of Golden Rule Home!

No doctor or hospital bills, no grocery, coal, or light bills to be met the first of the month, bring fear to the minds of the Golden Rule Home Family!

All such obligations and burdens are taken from the shoulders of these older ones immediately upon their entrance into the Home and are carried thereafter by the Golden Rule Home itself, which is amply able to bear the load on their behalf.

A hearty Christian welcome awaits all who seek the protection and lifelong support the Home provides.

Conditions of entrance into Golden Rule Home are as liberal as absolute security permits. Write for full particulars concerning the Home and its advantages. Or, better still, come and visit the Home itself and let the Family tell their own story of its advantages and comforts.

NUMBER 22

The Grand Old Text

By D. G. Harvey

"For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

PERHAPS no verse of the Bible comes more often to the memory of man than that beloved verse of John 3:16. As we again read it, we are struck with wonder by the beauty and the depth of meaning it contains. Too often we Bible readers only so lightly drink the wonderful truth of the Word! Have you ever noticed the complete doctrinal meaning of this grand old text? Most Bible students agree that the number "seven" is a symbol of completeness. Then if we can find seven essential doctrines in this one verse we have even greater cause to love it.

1. "God so loved." God loved His creation. He loved Adam, and while Adam had turned from Him, yes, turned from his own Creator, God loved him. "But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us" (Rom. 5:8).

2. "That he gave." God gave His Sacrifice, His Ransom! Adam had lost life; a perfect life must be given to redeem the life that was lost. "Then thou shalt give life for life" (Ex. 21:23), reads the law. God's love, God's sacrifice, paid the debt! "Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things . . . but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot" (1 Peter 1:18, 19).

3. "His Son." Here we have proof of the separate personalities of God the Father and of Jesus His Son. God gave, not Himself, but His Son. "Father" denotes the Life-giver, and "Son," one who receives life from another. Note the prayer of Jesus recorded in John 17:21, when the Son prayed for His church, not only the early church, but for the brethren of 1938, "them also which shall believe on me (Christ) through (the apostles') word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us." No one would venture to assert that the members of the church were one person. No, but God the Father, Jesus the Son, and the church are one in purpose.

4. "That whosoever believeth in him." Belief in God's Son is the foundation of faith. But the question is asked, "Are not 'belief' and 'faith' the same?" No! Faith is stronger than belief. To believe leaves room for doubt; but faith is absolute confidence, perfect trust. Like Paul, one can say, "For I know whom I have believed (margin, "trusted"), and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day" (2 Tim. 1:12).

5. Faith will produce works, for we read, "Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone" (James 2:17). The first work to follow belief is baptism, for by that step we show our faith. While the doctrine of baptism is not referred to directly in John 3:16, we remember the command of Jesus, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved" (Mark 16:15, 16). And then we have the example of the eunuch and Philip as recorded in Acts 8:26-39. Here no mention is made of Philip preaching baptism, but he "preached unto him Jesus," and the eunuch asked to be baptized. Philip's only request was, "If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest." We should also remember the example of the mode of baptism, i. e., immersion: "when they were come up out of the water" (Acts 8:39).

6. "Not perish." This denotes that man is of a perishable nature, for God created the man Adam, our forefather, not of heavenly, but of earthy elements: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul" (Gen. 2:7). Note that "man became," he was not given a "living soul." When Adam disobeyed his Creator, God passed the death sentence upon him, which in itself is proof of the perishable nature of the race, for no stream can rise higher than its source. Mankind, then, of itself can never rise to a (Please turn to page 11)

Pastors Urge No Gambling in Churches

"Ye have made it a den of thieves" (Mark 11:17).

CHICAGO, Ill., Feb. 22.—In a strongly worded denunciation of church-sponsored gambling, the Civic Relations Commission of the Chicago Federation of Churches yesterday called on Protestant churches to stop the practice. Declaring that raffles, bunco, and door prizes are immoral and illegal means of raising church funds, the Commission voted to send letters immediately to pastors of 1,058 churches, denominational heads, and police, asking cooperation in a campaign to eliminate such practices. Rev. Philip Yarow, chairman of the Commission, declared that "gambling is a vicious, dirty racket. It is still connected with gangsters. We must get it out of our churches, no matter in what form it is there."

There is much less excuse for turning modern churches into places of merchandise, amusement, and gambling, than there was for permitting the sale of doves designed for sacrifice in the temple in Jesus' day. The birds were required in the actual worship of God then in vogue, but such merchandise as is sold in the churches now has nothing to do with worship and the amusements provided have nothing to do with religious observances of any kind. We fear that if Jesus entered some of the churches of America (we sometimes doubt if He ever enters them, looking upon them as centers of worldly pleasure rather than as places of worship) He would apply stronger methods of cleansing than those He employed in the temple!

New Austrian Government Anti-Semitic

"I say then, Hath God cast away his people? God forbid" (Rom. 11:1).

VIENNA, Austria, Feb. 19.—The first anti-Jewish decree issued by the new Austrian Government was made public today. After a conference with Adolf Hitler in Berlin, Minister of the Interior and Public Security Arthur von Seyss-Inquart ordered mayors throughout Austria to cease assisting priests in bringing about the baptism of Jews if the Austrian citizenship of the Jews was not assured. The decree particularly affects thousands of German Jews who have sought refuge in Germany, and who, in order to protect their property rights, have in hundreds of instances applied for baptism at the hands of the Catholic clergy.

It is reported in Paris that Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg, in a recent conference with the French minister to Vienna, Gabriel Puaux, assured him that Austria had no intention of expelling the German Jewish refugees now in the country.

There is nothing new in the tendency of the Jews in Austria applying for Christian (?) baptism when threatened with persecution and loss of property. When the protection of the church is available under such conditions thousands will seek to obtain it. During the World War the editor of THE RESTITUTION HERALD was appealed to to baptize a young man who acknowledged that he did not believe the Bible to be inspired and who was actively affiliated with a Spiritualist organization! His thought was that by uniting with the Church of God he could escape military service. Needless to say, his request was denied.

They Met at a Church Dance

"Having a form of godliness . . . evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse" (2 Timothy 3:5, 13).

ROCKFORD, Ill., Feb. 15.—They met at a church dance, a social event sponsored by a religious group that no doubt believed that young people should have an opportunity to meet and enjoy each other's society "under the best Christian influences." And so they held card parties, basket ball games, and dances in the church parlors to which young people were invited. The young folk naturally paired off after the parties and went home together. Of course, they sometimes met strangers at the dances and other "wholesome moral entertainments" which were provided by the church. In fact, that was one of the chief purposes of those events—that strangers might become acquainted and induced to enter into the "spiritual life" of the community. And so that was how these two young women met the two young men who asked to take them home after the dance in young men who asked to take them home after the dance.

The young men are now lodged in jail, unable to pay the $5,000 bonds demanded by the judge for their release while they await trial for attempted rape. One of the girls jumped from the moving car while it was traveling at twenty miles an hour to escape from her would-be seducers. When apprehended by the police, one of the boys with whom the girls became acquainted in the safe, uplifting atmosphere of the church, was armed with a .38 caliber revolver. One of the girls was beaten severely, her clothing torn and blood-spattered, on her way home from the church dance. "Think upon these things."

Then and Now

THE early church had ever before it the idea of God as the great Giver, and of the Lord Jesus Christ as His great Gift. "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son." That was the highest possible conception of giving. It marked the limitlessness of God's willingness to give. "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not also with him freely give us all things?" He was that "God who giveth us richly all things to enjoy." Paul set forth this thought of God even to a non-Christian audience. Speaking on Mars' Hill, he reminded the Athenians that it was God who "giveth to all life, and breath, and all things."

And the Christian thought of Christ conceived Him both as the great Gift and the great Giver. He was the Good Shepherd, who gave His life for His sheep. "He loved me, and gave himself for me," was Paul's simple, eloquent statement. "He gave himself a ransom for all." And this was but an echo of His own words: "The Son of man came . . . to give his life a ransom for many." His account of Himself was of a giver—"I give eternal life."

And the duty of giving was one of the foremost duties He laid on men: "Give to him that asketh thee"; "Give to the poor." The one saying of Christ's which the New Testament preserves and which is not recorded in the gospels is the saying recalled by Paul in his address to the Ephesian elders: "Remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive." But though the Gospels did not record that saying, two of them did record the incident of the poor widow who cast into the treasury the two mites which were her entire living.

With the example of God and His Son so bright before them and with the remembrance of Christ's own words, it is not surprising that the early church, in the joy of its love, was ready to give all it had to Christ and His cause. There was evidently no constraint, but of a willing and eager mind the first disciples brought their possessions into the common treasury, which they conceived as Christ's, to be used for His brethren. "Neither was there any among them that lacked: for as many as were possessors of lands or houses sold them, and brought the prices of the things that were sold, and laid them down at the apostles' feet: and distribution was made unto every man according as he had need" (Acts 4:34, 35). Those who had aught had it not for themselves. They could have truly sung:

"Naught that I have my own I call;
I hold it for the Giver."

The first Christians were not rich, as Peter told the lame man at the temple: "Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have, give I thee." Now and then some one of the early Christians is spoken of as a man of means or standing, in a way that makes plain what the general situation of the others was.

Giving was conceived as one of the great Christian attributes, and Paul names it altogether with the gifts of prophecy, ministry, teaching, exhortation, ruling. And those whose chief service was giving were to do it with liberality, singleness, and simplicity.

One reason why we should work is that we may be able to give. Let him work "with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth" (Eph. 4:28).

And the nice meaning of "communicate" in the New Testament is to share, to give, to help. "Let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things" (Gal. 6:6). "That they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate" (1 Tim. 6:18). "To do good and to communicate forget not: for with such sacrifices God is well pleased" (Heb. 13:16).

This was the "fellowship" for which Paul was so grateful to the Philippian church. "Now ye Philippians know also, that in the beginning of the gospel, when I departed from Macedonia, no church communicated with me as concerning giving and receiving, but ye only. For even in Thessalonica ye sent once and again unto my necessity. Not because I desire a gift: but I desire fruit that may abound to your account" (Phil. 4:15-17).

But Paul's great words about giving are in the two Epistles to the Corinthians. The first of them is in the first Epistle. He had been speaking of the resurrection in one of the greatest passages ever written, and then, with no sense whatever of breaking the thought or descending to lower things, he proceeded: "Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come" (1 Cor. 16:1, 2). And he returns to this in the entire 9th chapter of the second Epistle. Read that chapter and note these facts: his firmness, his tenderness, his appeal. He does not hesitate to set the Christians on to emulate the good example of the brethren in Macedonia, and he stresses the spiritual meaning and enrichment of giving.

From these passages it is easy to draw great principles. Giving should be regular, systematic, proportionate, sacrificial, and should be exercised with a single-minded and joyful heart. The Greek word used for "cheerful" is the word from which our word "hilarious" is derived. It was happy, glad, thankful giving that Paul practiced himself and advocated for others.

The note of selfishness is a strange and alien note in the New Testament. How can we be less eager today to give back a portion of that which was first given us when we have all that was given them, yea, vastly more?—Bible Faith Mission Standard.

If I Were Not a Christian

I AM a Hebrew, and about thirty years ago some one handed me a little book which, because I found it so interesting, I spent the whole night in reading. And as I was reading it the personality depicted upon its pages captivated my soul. The conviction grew upon me that a great wrong was committed. Was it this Man, I wondered, whom I was taught to shun and despise all these years? I decided that as far as my own life was concerned I must undo the wrong. I ceased thinking evil of Him and began, instead, to honor and to love Him. I also found Him a refuge in my great need. At a time when the very foundation of my life seemed to slip under my feet He came to me as a stay and a goal, supporting life and making it worth while. Therefore, before a company of men and women, who had grown old in their experience and loyalty of that Person, I confessed publicly that from henceforth I would take Him as my Guide forevermore. Needless to add that that little book was the New Testament, and that personality, Jesus Christ the Son of God.

I want to tell you what I might be doing at this time if I were not a Christian. Notice, please, I have not stated my proposition as, "If I were a Jew," for the reason that I have never ceased to be a Jew. My faith in Jesus Christ has not made me less a Jew than I was before I had known Him. Faith does not alter the facts of birth and race. Instead, whatever good there is in the Jew, or in any other person, Jesus never makes "less" but always more abundantly so, and never in my life have I felt myself so one with my people as I do this day. I am a Jew but one who has entered upon his own heritage of light and peace through Jesus Christ, the Messiah and King of the Jews.

It is not difficult for me to visualize myself following the old-time ways and customs of my people. Aside from the knowledge of Jesus Christ, there is nothing so beautiful and so satisfying as the ancient faith of Israel. There is a dignity, a reverence, and an utter abandonment of the humble soul to the will and the way of its Maker. Even death, the faithful Jew is bidden to embrace as a visitation from an all-merciful Father, for his eternal good and as a means of atonement for his soul. I was always serious in matters of religion. Although it did not prevent me from seeking to obtain all the knowledge of the world around me, I possibly could, yet I never felt I knew enough to be able to live without God. Beyond the little I seemed to know, there always loomed the vast ocean of the unknown, and to venture into its solitudes without a guide seemed unbearable to me. I sought for Him, I longed for His fellowship, and even as a child when hurt and I thought that even my mother could not help me I ran out away from the house where the human eye could not see me and cried to God.

And because I was loath to relinquish my childhood I felt faith in God and in the Jewish Bible, and because in later years I felt that, removed from the influence of my Jewish home, I could not stand unaided against the temptations of the world and of my own heart, I came to Him for succor and He preserved in me what in my very soul I had always known to be the best and holiest of my father's faith. In Him also I found strength for the battles with the evil inclinations of my heart.

On winter mornings, before dawn, we used to rise in our home and by candlelight study the portion of the law assigned for the week. The three daily prayers, morning, afternoon, and evening, were recited every day of our lives without exception—more prayers on the Sabbath and other festive occasions. It seems that the chief business of the pious Jew was to pray and praise His God, and to work and eat and sleep in the brief pauses between his incessant devotions.

Now we are in the days of the Feast of Chanukah. If I were not a Christian I would light the Chanukah candles for eight days in succession. Chanukah means dedication, and commemorates the cleansing of the temple of Jerusalem and its rededication to the service of God by the Maccabean heroes long, long ago. Light is the symbol of the law of God, the Torah. The enemies of Israel, at that time the Syrian king, Antiochus, endeavored to destroy the Jewish religion and extinguish the light of God upon the earth. They made the services of the temple to cease and offered swine upon the holy altar of sacrifice. The books of the law were burned and the people forbidden, on pain of death, to worship the God of their fathers. But a handful of brave men, under the leadership of Judas Maccabeus, resisted the impiety of the heathens, routed their armies, ten times their number, and after delivering the Holy City from the Syrian yoke, they cleansed the temple and rededicated it to the service of Jehovah. "Who is like unto thee among the gods, O Jehovah?" was the battle cry on Israel's banners. The first letters of the four Hebrew words of this challenge spelled the word "Maccabeus"—hence the name Maccabeans for the champions of the Hebrew faith.

On the first night of the eight days of the feast I would light one candle, two on the second night, and so on until eight on the last night of the feast. The candles are placed on the window sill or by the open door so that all who pass by may see "what the Lord hath wrought."

The Gentile Christmas sometimes occurs the same week as our Chanukah. When that happens we look upon it as a misfortune. For Chanukah is a season of rejoicing for our people and no Jew may rejoice on this feast of the Christians. So that when Christmas and Chanukah come together on the same day, we know not whether we should laugh or weep. Moreover, Christians take occasion of their feast to mock and maltreat our brethren. The more drunken with joy they are, the more they delight in our tears. The sorrow of centuries for our people was borne that night. The feasts of the Gentiles seem to have been devised to the intent that hatred against Jews should never die out. Their holy nights are nights of terror to us. Like the night of Job, fain would we not reckon it among the days of our year. It is therefore given over to play and to pursuits unusual and unseemly among our people. The young men play cards and dice and old men even lay aside the study of the law.

Around the beautiful light of the candles we gather our children and tell them the glorious story of our ancient heroes and their valiant exploits in the defense of their God. We tell them, also, of the brave mother of Israel, with her seven sons, who would see them with her own eyes be done to death, one after another, rather than be disobedient to the God of their fathers who commanded, "Thou shalt have none other gods beside me." We sing songs, we relive the past, we forget the present, we hope for the future when our God in His mercy will again have compassion for His people and forgive us our sins and lift up our heads and bring us back again to the land of our fathers. This hope makes us truly happy, so that in spite of the misery of the present we rejoice in the fact that we are the chosen people of God and despise the Gentiles who worship a man as their God and live in ignorance of the holy law.

Then when Chanukah was over and the noise and laughter of the children was silent, memory would bring to my mind the Chanukahs of past years that came and went, and

"Jesus, I My Cross Have Taken"

By Mrs. A. J. Chaplin

I HAVE been thinking of an article I read a long time ago about how the beautiful song, "Jesus, I my Cross Have Taken," came to be written. I will give it to the readers of THE HERALD as nearly as I can remember it.

It was composed by the daughter of a very wealthy family who, while away from home attending college, had become a Christian, not just in word, but she fully consecrated her life to Christ and His service. She could not follow the world in all of its pleasures as she once did and still be a follower of Jesus. Neither did she try to do so.

When college days were over and she returned to her home in the city, she was the same sweet girl she had always been in the home, but to the consternation of her parents and friends she did not go to the worldly amusements in which she had once been a leader.

Her mother, like many mothers today, thought more of her social standing than of her life for Christ, and determined to break down her religious convictions. So she gave a party for her in their home and all her old-time associates were there. She was the same sweet, gracious girl she had always been, and to all outward appearance everything seemed going her mother's way. Finally, before the party was over, her friends begged her to play and sing for them something of her own composition. So she sang and played this song that, unknown to any of them, had been composed for this very occasion: "Jesus, I My Cross Have Taken." She sang as she had never sung before, and when she came to the words,

"Let the world despise and leave me—
They have left my Savior, too,"

there was not a dry eye in the house. And after it was finished, many of her friends came to her and told her that they, too, would like to be Christians and were sorry they had taken the stand against her. Her firmness for truth and righteousness caused her parents, who were worldly people, to turn to the Lord and give themselves to His service.

Read the song, and as you read picture in your minds that girl telling Jesus that she was living for Him, and her friends of the great decision she had made.

"Jesus, I my cross have taken,

All to leave and follow Thee!
Naked, poor, despised, forsaken,
Thou, from hence, my all shall be.

Perish every fond ambition—

All I've sought, or hoped, or known;
Yet how rich is my condition!

Thou, O Lord, art still my own.

"Let the world despise and leave me—

They have left my Savior, too:

Human hearts and looks deceive me—

God is not, like them, untrue.

And whilst Thou shalt smile upon me,

Lord of wisdom, love, and might,

Foes may hate and friends disown me,

Show Thy face, and all is right.

"Go, then, earthly fame and treasure,

Come disaster, scorn, and pain.

In Thy service pain is pleasure,

With Thy favor loss is gain.

I have called Thee, Abba, Father!

I have set my heart on Thee;

Storms may howl and clouds may gather,

All must work for good to me."

(The words of the above song were copied from "The Christian Psalmist," published by Bro. Thomas Wilson in 1872. The book is the property of Sr. Mina Knodle of Oregon, Illinois.—Editor.)

The Passover: Its Jewish Symbolism and Spiritual Meaning

THE Passover is the great birthday feast of the Jewish nation. It is the annual family gathering, and takes a similar place to that of Christmas with the Christians, though it differs in time, because it is held in the spring, the month of Nisan or Abib (green ear month) when Israel came out of Egypt; and in importance, for it was most definitely ordained by Jehovah, the God of Israel, as a memorial of their national birth and His mighty deliverance of them out of the hand of Pharaoh and the bondage and slavery of the Egyptians.

The original meaning of the Hebrew word pasach (Ex. 12:11) is an over-leaping, perhaps in the sense of sparing or of protection. It is used forty-eight times in the Old Testament, and is eight times called Jehovah's Passover (Ex. 12:11, 27, 48, etc.).

In the New Testament it is mentioned twenty-eight times (once called Easter, Acts 12:4), and seven times spoken of as the feast of unleavened bread (Mazzoth), making thirty-six in all. (Matt. 26:17.)

After the nine plagues of Egypt, which God had brought upon its king because he was unwilling to let the chosen people go into the wilderness to worship Him, the original threatened slaying of the first-born son of Pharaoh was to take effect.

The children of Israel were ordered by the Lord to choose, on the tenth day of the month, a lamb without blemish (taken from the sheep or goats), and the head of the household was to take it, separate it from the flock, and keep it for four days, viz., until the fourteenth day at even (Num. 9:5; Josh. 5:10; 2 Chron. 30:15; 35:1).

As there were four days' preparation for the slaying of the Passover lamb, in which any defect might be discovered (Ex. 12:3, 6), so our Lord Jesus Christ came into Jerusalem four days before His Passover, and in this connection it is that He who is the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world (Rev. 13:8), according to corrected calculation was born and was in His conception and birth free from all taint of sin, as the Son of God.

In contrasting the original and primal celebration in Egypt and the annual or permanent celebration in the Land of Promise, we notice that the latter was extended to seven days. The first and last were to be a "holy convocation" or "a solemn assembly for religious worship," and so from being a family and home feast, it became a national and public festival as well.

The part the children took in asking questions, their instruction in the meaning of the feast, the questions of those who were journeying, the right of strangers to share in it, and the other sacrifices to be offered at the time, are all dealt with in the Holy Scriptures.

Let us consider now the Passover as held in the time when our Lord was on earth. A week before the feast there would be great excitement in Jerusalem, because of the command in the law (Deut. 16:16), "Three times in a year shall all thy males appear before the Lord thy God in the place where he shall choose; in the feast of unleavened bread, and in the feast of weeks, and in the feast of tabernacles: and they shall not appear before the Lord empty."

It is said by Josephus that in 66 A. D. two and a half millions celebrated the Passover in the Holy City. Of course, there was a general cleaning up of houses, and pots and pans that would be used in connection with the Passover feast. Perhaps one might wonder how all these could be accommodated who came up to Jerusalem, but in those days the simplest form of bed was no doubt used, as is generally the case in Palestine today. More like a cloak is the Bedouin outer garment, which is used in the warmer nights as the only necessary covering, and no doubt the same custom obtained in many cases in those days. Besides the tents that would be on the hillsides around Jerusalem, Bethany and Bethphage are specially noted in rabbinical books for their hospitality at Passover and other feasts.

It is believed that some 250,000 lambs would have been slain for the Passover festival, and so the sacrifice probably commenced at 2:30 o'clock in the daytime. We are told that on the first day of unleavened bread, our Savior sent His two apostles, Peter and John, to follow a man bearing a pitcher of water. As the women generally carry the water in the East, this would be significant for them. They were to find a large upper room, furnished and ready, which the good man of the house would show them. The Lord and the disciples would, at this celebration of the Passover, be reclining with shoes off, not as in the first time in Egypt, when the Passover was partaken of in haste, with loins girded, with shoes on feet, and staff in hand.

We turn to the modern method of the celebration of the Passover, by the orthodox Jews, in which the program as found in the Talmud is followed. Every Jew drinks four cups of wine, and the four words found in Exodus 6:6, 7, are said to be the reason. "I will bring you out," "I will rid you," "I will redeem you," "I will take you to me." The service beginning at the setting of the sun lasts about three hours, and the cups are drunk at intervals. The first when they sit down, the second before the meal, the third afterwards, and the fourth at the conclusion. These cups are filled with red wine diluted with water, and everyone at the table has a separate cup.

The head of the family pronounces the Sabbath blessing, "Blessed art thou, O Lord, our God, King of the universe, who didst create the fruit of the vine," and adds the following: "Who has kept us alive, and sustained us, and permitted us to reach this season."

The first cup appears to be mentioned in Luke 22:17, 18: "And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and said, Take this, and divide it among yourselves: for I say unto you, I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, until the kingdom of God shall come."

After the first cup of wine follows the first washing of hands, and this the head of the family does alone. On the table there will be placed vegetables, a piece of parsley or lettuce, dipped into salt water. The act of breaking of bread follows. The Passover cake is dry, thin, easily broken, and of course made of unleavened bread.

Generally on the Jewish Sabbath there are two loaves of bread on the table, to remind the children of Israel that two measures of manna were gathered in the wilderness on the Friday; there are, however, three cakes on the Passover night. The head of the family breaks the middle loaf into two parts, and lays aside the larger part to be eaten at the end of the supper.

Taking up the broken bread, he says, "This is the bread of affliction which our forefathers ate in the land of Egypt. Whosoever is hungry, let him come and eat." Thus we have a reminder of the Egyptian bondage and thanksgiving for redemption.

Our Lord Jesus Christ, we read in Luke 22:19, "took bread, and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave unto them, saying, This is my body which is given for you: this do in remembrance of me."

The significance of this symbolism, of course, was to remind them that in the future when they held the Lord's Supper, they would not merely thank God for the redemption from Egyptian bondage, but in remembrance of Him, who through His precious blood as the Paschal Lamb, slain on the cross of Calvary, redeemed them out of the power of Satan, and from the slavery of sin.

Next there would follow the proclaiming of the story of deliverance, and the drinking of the second cup. We read in Exodus 13:8, "And thou shalt shew thy son in that day, saying, This is done because of that which the Lord did unto me when I came forth out of Egypt." We remember how in the previous chapter, the 24th to 27th verses, we read, "And ye shall observe this thing for an ordinance to thee and to thy sons for ever. And it shall come to pass, when ye be come to the land which the Lord will give you, according as he hath promised, that ye shall keep this service. And it shall come to pass, when your children shall say unto you, What mean ye by this service? that ye shall say, It is the sacrifice of the Lord's passover, who passed over the houses of the children of Israel in Egypt, when he smote the Egyptians, and delivered our houses."

The table is covered at this point that the children's curiosity may be aroused, the youngest boy saying, "Why is this night distinguished from all other nights?" The father relates then the whole national history, and the first part of the Hallel is recited (Psa. 113; 114).

The second cup or cup of Haggadah or "Proclaiming" is drunk. This word is the same one used in 1 Corinthians 11:26, "For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do shew the Lord's death till he come."

Then comes the second washing of the hands before meals; all have a share. It was probably at this time that our Lord washed the disciples' feet (John 13). Grace is said before meat, and small pieces of the Passover cake are distributed and eaten. Then the bitter herbs, or sop, called Charoseth, is taken, in memory of the bitterness and persecution which the Israelites endured in Egypt. It is mixed up into a sauce of the appearance of clay, and reminds the guests of the bricks which their ancestors made in Egypt. This is the sop which our Lord gave to Judas.

In Psalm 41:9 we read, "Yea, mine own familiar friend, in whom I trusted, which did eat of my bread, hath lifted up his heel against me." In John 13:30 we read that Judas, "having received the sop went immediately out: and it was night," and at this point the Lord's Passover, some think, is turned into the Lord's Supper.

The real meal now commences. Everyone has a hearty supper, and they wash their hands for the third time. After the meal, the hidden part of the cake of Passover bread, called the Afikoman, is brought out and eaten.

Then follows a cup of blessing! Spoken by our Lord in Luke 22:20: "This cup is the new testament in my blood, which is shed for you."

The Apostle Paul refers to this cup (1 Cor. 10:16): "The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ?"

Then comes the filling of the fourth cup, and the second part of the Hallel is recited (Psa. 115 to 118) and the Great Hallel (Psa. 136). The cup is then blessed and drunk.

We are told by Matthew that "when they had sung an hymn, they went out" (Matt. 26:30). This was probably these Psalms.

Prayer and other hymns follow now in the modern service. There is placed on the table a half-burnt shank bone or arm of a lamb, all that they have to represent the Paschal offering. The arm is chosen because of Exodus 6:6, where we read of the "stretched out arm" of the Lord.

Since the destruction of the temple, an egg is placed on the table; this the Eastern Jews regard as a symbol of mourning. Later, of course, it has come to be associated with the thought of new life and resurrection.

The Jews believe that it will be at the season of the feast of Passover the Messiah will come, preceded by Elijah, so in the modern service a vacant chair is placed at the table with a glass of wine before it, and the door is open to welcome Elijah with the words, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord."

Without the blood of the Lamb, the knowledge of a crucified Messiah, and a risen Redeemer, illustrated by the offering of the omer of the first-fruit sheaf on the third day after Passover, Israel after the flesh is still blind and unprepared for the second coming of our Lord. Turning to 1 Corinthians 5, we read in verses 7 and 8, "Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened. For even Christ our passover is sacrificed (slain) for us: therefore let us keep the feast . . . with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth." (OVER)

The Apostle is dealing with those who have fallen into sin; and speaks of delivering such to Satan for the destruction of the flesh that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus. We remember how in Exodus 12:13, the Lord says, "When I see the blood, I will pass over you, and the plague shall not come upon you to destroy you." We need continually to reckon upon the righteousness and sacrifice of our great Paschal Lamb, when conscious of sin or conscious of want of the real spirit of sincerity and truth. Instead of malice and villainy, we are to live in love that seeks the welfare of all—S. B. Rohold in New Century Leader.

Is the World Getting Better or Worse?

IT IS frequently charged that belief in the return of Christ cuts the nerve of Christian service. It is said to be an opiate rather than an incentive. The basis for this accusation is in the assumption that all who believe in the return of Christ hold the conviction that the world must inevitably get worse and worse; that it must finally fall apart from utter rottenness, and that the return of Christ is God's last resort in His effort to make the world a kingdom of God. Unfortunately the charge has some basis in fact, for where pessimism has not cut the power line, it has discouraged many Christians until they have lost enthusiasm for Christian service. "What's the use?" they ask. "There's no hope of our doing anything, and the Lord will fix it all up anyway."

I wish to raise the question: "Is deterioration inevitable despite all that we do?" I believe the answer to be in one of Jesus' parables—that of the wheat and the tares. But before coming to a consideration of this scripture there are certain factors that must be taken into account.

1. There are two extremes to be avoided. One is the conclusion of certain elementary evolutionists that progress is inevitable. The second is that of some Biblical expositors that deterioration is inevitable. Both are false and dangerous attitudes because both are untrue to the facts of history and both, with equal efficiency, cut the nerve of human effort.

2. There is an unfortunate and inadequate understanding of Bible prophecy. Too often prophecy is regarded merely as prediction. The suggestion, more or less specifically made, is that the prophets spoke not for their own days but for a distant future; in other words, that they were not in touch with life. Starting from this faulty assumption there is a failure to study historical backgrounds, and many lurid and grotesque interpretations of God's Word result.

3. There is a natural human tendency to discount the present and romanticise the past. The mountains which seemed so rugged and steep when we came over them are covered with a blue haze of beauty as we move farther away.

4. We often rationalize our own failures by asserting that life, in the form of predicted and therefore inevitable evil, is too much for us.

Part of our answer to the question which we are considering is to be found in an understanding of the Biblical term, "the last days." It is sometimes wrongly assumed that this term can be applied, without exception, to the days just preceding the return of Christ. However eager we may be to take this position, the facts do not justify it. There are at least three different meanings for these words in the Bible. (1) The term is used to designate the days of Christ's earthly ministry: "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son" (Heb. 1:1, 2). (See also Isa. 2:2 and Acts 2:12). (2) The term is used to designate the end of the age. Jesus declares in John 6:39, 40 that He will raise the dead at "the last day." Peter (1 Peter 1:5) comforts us by saying that we are "kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last day." (3) There is another and much larger set of usages where the term refers to the entire period between the ascension of Christ and His return. The familiar passage in 2 Timothy 3 is a case in point. This indictment which begins with the words, "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come," was intended by Paul as a warning to young Timothy. (See verses 10, 12, 14). It does not in any verse refer to the second coming of Christ. It is warning and instruction for Timothy and for us. While our times certainly fall under the times described by the Apostle, it is hardly predictive prophecy in the ordinary sense. 2 Peter 3:4 and Jude 17, 18 must be interpreted in the same light.

Our Biblical answer to the question raised is found in Jesus' parable of the wheat and the tares. It is a kingdom parable; it deals specifically with our question; and Jesus was careful to interpret it Himself. The several conclusions which we may reach from a study of the parable are as follows:

1. The world is a battlefield; it is the scene of a terrific struggle between good and evil; i. e., the wheat and the tares. The world is not a unit to be thought of as getting either better or worse. The world is not developing into the kingdom of God, nor is the world deteriorating inevitably.

2. The struggle grows more intense as harvest time nears. Jesus' figure presents two kinds of life growing side by side: "Let both grow together until the harvest." No evidence need be cited that the tares are growing apace. Crime, thievery, dishonesty in high places—these increase with terrible speed. Evil men and seducers do wax worse and worse; but it is just as true that good also increases.

The wheat is ripening for harvest, and this fact is in line with Jesus' other parables such as that of the mustard seed, the leaven, the dragnet, and His description of Christians as "salt" and "light." When one studies history with the long view, Christian standards and ideals today are more Christlike and far higher than ever before. One has only to think of ancient Rome and Greece, and the religion of the Middle Ages to see how true this is. One has only to compare our own country today with the America of one hundred and twenty-five years ago when atheism was dominant and church members were few in proportion to the population; when Thomas Paine was the national hero. Yes, the wheat has grown much! Today the struggle is growing more intense as we come up to the final Armageddon, the great spiritual conflict between the kingdom of righteousness and the kingdom of sin.

3. Our third conclusion is that there will be a harvest time. Jesus' word is clear. "Both grow together until the harvest"; but the harvest depends on the condition of the wheat, if we are to take His figure as true. The coming of Christ is not primarily a chronological event; it does not depend upon the calendar, but upon the ripening grain.

4. Jesus' parable has in it a counsel of warning for us:

sin is ripening for the fire; it is worse than it ever was. But it has also counsel of encouragement: the good is ripening for eternity. It is better than ever!

No, the world is not worse than it used to be. Sin is worse, but righteousness is better and stronger, and there is less danger of the good being uprooted than in the days of its first planting.

What of it? What does it all mean to us? (1) There is no neutrality in the struggle between the wheat and the tares. There are no side lines and no spectators. We are all part of the struggle whether we will or not. How we are indicted for our casualness and indifference, and for our "playing with religion"! (2) We are challenged to ask our own hearts if we are doing all that we can to bring the wheat to harvest preparation. We must stand and be counted on the side of the kingdom. We must pray, sacrifice, and work with the passion of Christ. We cannot be casual or careless about the work of His kingdom, for "the day of the Lord will come." We hasten on to

"... that divine event

Toward which the whole creation moves."

The Golden Rule in Business

By Arthur Gilbey

THE current issue of the National Nurseryman Magazine carries the following article; and in view of the present-day conditions and the opinions expressed from time to time of doubt that business can be successfully operated along the lines of the Golden Rule, it is interesting to have some light on the subject from one who, having used the Rule, has traveled far enough along the road of life to get a really good view of the back trail.

"An interesting peony catalogue received from the Bonnewitz Gardens, Van Wert, Ohio, contains among other comments, the following summation:

"At the age of seventy I look back on forty years of my life as a successful Christian business man in a small country town. With my family I was able to spend a month each year in New York for grand opera. We had vacations in Florida, California, Cuba, Europe, and the Near East. As a Sunday school superintendent and elder in the church I particularly enjoyed trips to Palestine, Egypt, and Rome.

"During those successful years I acknowledged Jesus as the greatest spiritual Teacher the world has ever known, but (I am humiliated when I tell it) I thought—yes, I really believed—that Jesus taught nothing whatever about conducting a successful modern business. Now, after years of depression with time for reading and reflection, I find that the ministry of Jesus was very much taken up with teaching men how to live together here on earth.

"Modern business is our method of living together, and our inflations and our depressions are bringing suffering to millions. I believe there are thousands, or even millions, of people today who are beginning, like me, to see that the teachings of Jesus must be used as the foundation of our civilization if we wish it to endure longer than the great civilizations of the past."

"Because it is so unusual to have thoughts such as these expressed in a nursery catalogue, it is doubly refreshing. First of all it was good to learn that a delightful hobby of thirty years has proven a profitable pleasure.

"Interesting, too, was the summing up of his findings, after seventy years, in relation to the ethics of business. The age-old admonition—'Do unto others as you would that they should do unto you'—has been transposed somewhat—'Do unto others before they do you.'

"Viewing conditions in the world today, it seems that the works of the world's greatest teachers have been somewhat futile. Buddha and Confucius right now are at each other's throats; while the life and teachings of Jesus, the greatest of all teachers, is being ignored. Scripture tells us 'He came to take away the sin of the world,' and realizing that the sin of the world today is selfishness, there probably won't be any harmony until this has been taken away."

Armageddon—When?

WITH the most feverish preparations of non-belligerent nations in apparently peaceful times, the increasing mobilization of forces on the Sino-Japanese front, and the beginning of the most atrocious and fiendish war in civilized times, can we be far wrong in supposing that the deliverance of man is at hand?

We read in the Scriptures that "nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom." This has all been fulfilled to a surprising extent. Japan is divided into three classes: (1) those who wish to attack Russia first, and after Russia has been defeated, then Great Britain and America, and thus the entire world; (2) those who would attack Great Britain, and then America and Russia; and (3) those who propose to first attack America, and then Russia and Great Britain. In any event, Japan plans to make the world a Nipponese footstool. The world is in a more precarious position today than it was at the outburst at Sarajevo that started the World War. America entered the last war on less grounds than the sinking of the Panay.

Hitler and Mussolini have separately announced that in March they will make "a startling announcement" of great importance. It would appear as if these announcements will have a direct bearing on the status and policies of these countries concerning the present conflagration.

Allow me to quote General Sir Ian Hamilton, noted British leader, and hero of Gallipoli, when questioned as to what would happen if, and when, Japan gets possession of China's vast man power. With regard to the danger of Japan overrunning India and the Near East, General Hamilton said: "Japanese expansion might quite easily have been stopped at first. Now it is like a flood that has swept away its dam."

In other words, the snowball formed by our "open-door" policy has become so great that we can't stop it from rolling into us.

Asked whether he thought it might eventually become necessary for Great Britain to mobilize India's man power, General Hamilton replied: "I cannot believe that a motley horde could successfully hold up a homogeneous invading army, any more than the Emperor Porus (an Indian prince who ruled in the fourth century) could hold up Alexander the Great. No, I have looked carefully at the map, and the best spot for Europe to meet and throw back Asia is called Megiddo, or, in some maps, Armageddon."

You will notice that he did not say for Great Britain to throw back Japan, but for Europe to throw back Asia, indicating a world conflict. This is no civil war, like the Spanish, nor is it a war between two countries, as was the Italo-Ethiopian War. It will be a war among at least three continents, Europe, Asia, and America, and probably also the remaining ones as well. It will not only be a time "such as was not since men were upon the earth," but it will also be the Battle of Armageddon.

It has long been known that by the strategic position of Singapore, situated at the end of the Malayan Peninsula, England completely controls the eastern approach to the Indian Ocean.

Karl H. Van Wiegand, American war correspondent, says: "The Singapore naval base is one of the strongest and most important 'bastions' of the British Empire. The loss of this 'pillar' not only would decide the fate of Australia and New Zealand, open the way to invasion of India, but cause the loss of the Dutch East Indies to Holland, and virtually end the influence of the white man in the western and southwestern Pacific."

Still mindful of the necessity of this port for the preservation of western civilization, let us turn our gaze for a moment toward Japanese strategical preparations on the same subject. Japan is nearing the completion of the Cra Canal, a canal that will cut through the Malay Peninsula at the shortest point. This will completely cut out Singapore, and open the road to Armageddon.

We see that the "battle of the great day of God Almighty" is surely coming. We now ask when? What more appropriate time is there than in the spring? The children of Israel, God's chosen people, left Egypt in Abib, or April. Christ was born in the spring of the year. Christ died and rose again in the spring. It is then that we wonder what the context of Hitler's and Mussolini's declarations this March will be. Is it not another prophetic period of great significance pertaining to the time of the end, as we have already been living in the end of time? Will Mussolini's message be instrumental in stirring up the Arabs against England? Will they involve Germany and Italy in the last battle of civilization? Will they hasten the coming of the Lord? Only time will tell.

Thus comes to pass the saying, "And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh" (Luke 21:28). Will He strike like a thief in the night to us? Will we be like the sleeping virgins, with our lamps trimmed and ready, but no oil, in the face of this approaching world catastrophe? Or will we be ready and watching for this great and terrible day?—Ellen Flude in Herald of Life.

THE founders of the Methodist Episcopal Church, John and Charles Wesley, were strong believers in the reign of Christ upon the earth following His second advent. John Wesley looked for the millennium in 1836, remarking that "in a short time those who assert that they (the thousand years) are now at hand, will appear to have spoken the truth." Charles Wesley, who was as highly regarded for his hymn-writing as his brother was for his preaching, composed more than fifty inspirational songs pointing to the blessed hope.

IF I WERE NOT A CHRISTIAN

it would seem to me that I was moving in a wheel of time, merely repeating what was old. Machzor—repetition. As the years go by the movement seems faster with no step forward and the only goal in view of complete standstill. Innumerable children of our people through innumerable years seemed to be doomed to an existence without profit or meaning. Where is the voice of the prophets of Israel to which even the nations of the world did hearken? Instead, we are a byword and a reproach among the peoples of the earth. Surely a great and grievous sin must have been committed by Israel, the burden and punishment of which is overwhelming our soul and darkening our mind, to such a measure that we cannot discover the remedy. Oh, that the God of heaven would open our eyes so that we may see and find Him who will bring atonement and healing to our souls, Jesus the Christ, the Son of the living God!—S. Birnbaum in The Hebrew Baptist Herald.

higher nature than Father Adam possessed. Read again the penalty of Adam's disobedience: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return" (Gen. 3:19).

Now let us read Paul's words: "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned" (Rom. 5:12). Paul reasons there is no difference in the death of Adam and the death of men today. "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Truly we are a dying race, a perishing race.

But we have hope if we will but accept God's Gift, His great Sacrifice, the Ransom He has paid, if we will only believe and trust God's Son. For the Son has said that though we perish and return to dust in the grave, we are not forsaken, for He will call us from that grave. Listen! "Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth" (John 5:28, 29).

7. "Everlasting life." Such is God's final gift, the gift of His love. Life without end in the wonderful conditions of Eden restored! "Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away" (Rev. 21:3, 4).

Yes, John 3:16 is a grand text! It teaches all of the essential doctrines. Small wonder that we love to read it again and again—"God so loved the world!"

SERVICE

By Lottie Young

How distasteful the word "servant" is to most of us! And yet the key verse of the Gospel by Mark is the 45th of the 10th chapter: "For even the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister"—really to be a servant. And we all know what wonderful service He rendered to the multitudes of Israel's lame, blind, and otherwise afflicted persons who thronged the paths on which He trod.

None of us can perform the miracles He did, but there are numberless little kindly acts of service which we can render to those about us if we keep on the lookout for opportunities. Jesus praised even the "cup of cold water" given to those in need, and the loving deed of Mary of Bethany Jesus said would be "for a memorial of her" wherever the gospel should be preached.

Jesus' life of service comprised the following:

S-acrifice
E-arnestness
R-eadiness
V-ision
I-ntercession
C-ompassion
E-xample

In how many of these can we imitate the Master!

THE CROSS

I longed to write a story of the cross
And of its meaning in this changing world.
But thoughts were vain; the uncouth words a loss,
A sacrilege; their use a soul imperiled.

Was I too worldly; was my faith too weak
To write in words of Christ the crucified?
Or did it need some miracle to speak
Of love that bore pierced hands and riven side?

I wished my thought to be deeply profound—
To waken worlds with its philosophy.
Word-centered, I forgot a King thorn-crowned,
That I might trim my theme appealingly.

Yet as I struggled, slowly there came light,
The great force wrought in Christ's simplicity.
So now in love I am content to write
These saving words, "Christ died for you and me."

"Faith Cometh by Hearing"

"Be not deceived: evil communications corrupt good manners" (1 Cor. 15:33).

How many of you are subscribers to a daily newspaper costing four dollars or more? Or a national magazine at two dollars or more? If so, the chances are that your eyes fall several times in each issue upon material as poisonous as the apple the wicked queen fed to the innocent Snow-white. I refer especially to the tobacco and booze advertisements. They deal in misery, cruelty, indecency, desecration, degeneracy, brutality, idiocy, ruin, and death. But they are dressed up with the rosy-cheeked promises of the apples of Sodom and the persimmons of Gomorrah. And these disguised snakes are admitted into many Christian homes without a word of warning to the innocent children and young people who must associate with them. At the same time many of these homes "can't afford" to subscribe to a religious periodical like THE RESTITUTION HERALD, or a temperance tabloid like The National Voice. It seems that the least thing a Christian could do would be to provide the right sort of reading material to offset the evil communications that enter every home.

Here is something that every young person in the Berean Society can do. Find ways and means of getting THE RESTITUTION HERALD into more homes. The opportunity is unlimited in its possibilities. THE HERALD is the most effective evangelist the Church of God possesses.

The Stumblingblock

One of the arguments of those who scuttled the good ship "Prohibition" was that repeal would bring drunkenness out in the light of day. They seem to think that exposed sin is less sinful than hidden sin. In fact, many people seem to pride themselves on being out-and-out what they are, whenever they do wrong, as if that made their wrongdoing any the less reprehensible. The fact of the matter is that so many people doing their wickedness in public sets a preponderance of bad examples before the young, and this persuades many more to be bad. If anyone is going to be bad, it is better for the good of those who are in the impressionable ages not to witness such a bad example. No one respects a sneaking sinner, yet he does less harm than the "good" fellow who doesn't care that his open defiance of the laws of God cuts a wide swath and brings misery to many who otherwise might have amounted to something. If you do not agree with this viewpoint, you had better think it over some more. Sin is ugly whether it rears its snaky head in public or in private. I hold no brief for the hypocrite, neither do I hold one for any type or kind of sin.

The Antiquity of the Earth

"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth" (Gen. 1:1).

There is no statement here as to when the beginning was. All estimations as to how long ago this was are merely suppositions. Perfection is implied in the word "created." "His work is perfect" (Deut. 32:4). Now it is a divine fact that the earth is perfect or imperfect according to the moral condition of those who have dominion over it. At the present time man has dominion over the earth and man is sinful. Therefore at the present time the earth is imperfect. But there is evidence to think that originally the earth was created perfect:

"For thus saith the Lord that created the heavens; God himself that formed the earth and made it; he hath established it, he created it not in vain, he formed it to be inhabited: I am the Lord" (Isa. 45:18). The same Hebrew word for "in vain" in this passage is translated "without form" in Genesis 1:2: "And the earth was without form, and void." Apparently these statements contradict each other, for one passage says it was not created in vain, and the other says it was in vain. However, when we dig into the meaning of the word "was" we find a difference in what was meant and our common understanding of this word. To illustrate: It is translated "became": "And man became a living soul" (Gen. 2:7); "And she became a pillar of salt" (Gen. 19:26). In fact, this is the proper translation of the word. "The earth became without form and void."

Now, if the earth was created perfect in Genesis 1:1, and became imperfect in Genesis 1:2, there is evidently a lapse of time between verses 1 and 2. How long this time was we are not told, and when geologists have finished finding out how ancient are the fossils they dig out of the earth, they can determine the length of the period between verses 1 and 2.

But, even so, the future of the earth is more glorious than the past. We must never forget that "he formed it to be inhabited." There will be another upheaval of the earth when the earth casts away its thorns and becomes perfect. This will take place when man casts away his sin and becomes righteous. "For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now" (Rom. 8:22). And what is the creation longing for? "For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God" (Rom. 8:19). In other words, the whole world is waiting for the coming of Christ, when the glorified sons of God with immortal bodies shall take possession of the earth and reign here to the most distant ages of the future. May the Lord hasten that day.

Serving Where You Are

"Though you may not do for Jesus
Just the thing you'd like to do,
Though so many paths of service
Seem forever closed to you,
Though some distant field invites you,
And some providence may bar,
Do not be depressed or weary,
You can serve Him where you are.

"There is need the wide world over
Which our hearts would oft appall,
Everywhere is sin and sorrow,
Everywhere sad voices call;
Do not waste the moments sighing
For the fields that lie afar;
Nor be shaken from your purpose—
You can serve just where you are.

"If you find the path to service
Leads to distant lands or clime,
Do not hesitate to follow
Every day and all the time;
But be sure that you are serving—
Whether it be near or far—
With a heart sincere and steadfast
Every day just where you are."

On a Journey With Jesus

Between the lesson of last week and the one for this week two most interesting things occurred. Jesus had left Decapolis where He had healed the insane man and had returned by boat to Capernaum. At the seashore He found many people waiting to see Him.

In the forefront of the crowd stood one of the rulers of the synagogue, and his name was Jairus. As soon as Jesus set foot on the shore he hastened to Him and knelt down at His feet.

"My little daughter lieth at the point of death," exclaimed Jairus. "I pray thee, come and lay thy hands on her, that she may be healed; and she shall live."

Though the poor father was almost beside himself with worry over his little girl's illness, yet he knew that if only Jesus would come and speak the word she would be well.

There was no doubt at all in his mind. That is what we call faith, real faith!

Jesus started at once with Jairus to go to his home. But there was such a crowd around them they couldn't go very fast. They were continually held back, first by one person, then by another.

In this large crowd was a woman who had been sick for twelve years. She, too, had complete faith in the great Healer.

She thought to herself, "If I may touch but his clothes, I shall be whole."

And as Jesus passed her she touched the hem of His garment. At once she was healed. Just like that!

Now Jesus knew some one had touched Him and been healed, and He asked who it was that touched Him. His disciples sort of laughed, for they pointed to the crowds and said it was no wonder some one touched Him.

All of you turn in your Bibles to Mark 5:33, 34, and see what the woman did who had been healed and what the kind and loving Savior said to her. That was faith, again, wasn't it? Faith equal to that of Jairus!

In the meantime, what was happening at the ruler's house? If you read verse 35, you will learn the sad news. Did those who came with the message to Jairus have faith equal to his? What would they have said if they had?

Write the verse just as you think you would have said it if you had been there. Then send the verse to me, written in your own words, you know, with the faith that you have in Jesus. Address, Oregon, Illinois. Then we'll put some of them on this page.

Now read carefully verses 38-42, and find out just what happened. Ask Mother to explain to you what Jesus meant when He said that the little girl was not dead, only asleep. Do you know of another person who was dead and of whom Jesus said the same thing? Look in John 11.

Don't you think that was a happy family that day? And don't you think their love for Jesus and their faith in Him was stronger than ever?

And now we have just reached our lesson story for March 6. If you read it carefully you will see that Jesus did not find such faith among the people of Nazareth, where He had spent His boyhood days, as he had in Capernaum.

CAN YOU FIND—

"Jesus said unto her, Thy brother shall rise again"?

AMONG THE CHURCHES

"SEARCH THE SCRIPTURES" QUESTIONS

To stimulate interest in the searching of the Scriptures by young people, the pastor of the Oregon, Ill., church has been trying out the following plan, which thus far has been successful in its purpose. The questions are handed out on slips of paper to everyone present at the midweek meeting, which includes a number of young people and even some children. All are invited to make an effort to find the answers to the questions, but the youngest ones in the group are first questioned.

The order followed is this: The question to be answered is assigned a week in advance and is designed in such a way that its correct answer has something to do with the lesson to be studied by the entire group on the succeeding Wednesday night. In at least one case, the questions have been taken up briefly in the Sunday school class and suggestions concerning possible solutions made by the teacher.

Among the interesting results noted is an increased interest in Bible searching by both young and old. The pastor is often "cornered" after the morning service and "pumped" for information that may help in discovering the answers. One very able Bible student read practically the entire four Gospels through before finding the solution. The younger ones are learning how to use the concordance and marginal references. All in all, the results have been encouraging.

Among the questions thus far asked are the following, the correct answers to which will be given in our next issue:

1. When was an army routed by a song?
2. To what two persons did God give the largest farm in the world? and why are we interested in it?
3. Name two characters of the Old Testament whose names were changed for a purpose?
4. Name four characters in the New Testament who were given new names and tell what those names mean.
5. When were men killed because they could not pronounce a word correctly?
6. In what strange place did a group of musicians hide their instruments? and why did they do it?
7. When did a man have a dream about a barley biscuit that tumbled into an army camp and knocked down a tent? What came of it? The words in blackface type provide a key to help locate the passage.
8. What man took a nap in church, but slept more soundly outside?

Elder Ray Abbott, pastor of the Pennellwood Church of God of Grand Rapids, Mich., was recently called to his former home in Minnesota to attend the funeral of his mother. He is now back at his charge in Michigan.

Summer Training School

By C. E. Randall

"Who then is willing to fill his hand unto the Lord this day?"

Such were the words of David when he called upon those of willing hearts, to bring of their precious possessions and give toward the building of the temple, which his son was divinely delegated to construct. Their response was so great and prompt that the king rejoiced with great joy, "because with perfect heart they offered willing to the Lord."

We are not building a structure made of precious stones and timbers, but we are preparing living stones for a building not made with hands. As the spiritual excels the natural, so this latter house excels in glory the one made of dead materials.

The Training School is an effort to build into this holy temple made of lively stones. All energy and freewill offerings are spent in shaping these God-called members for their abiding place in this great building. How much more willingly should we respond to the call for aid in building this temple than the one which Solomon built!

The School will be operated on a minimum of expense to the students. The reason why the Training Class Committee decided to set such a low figure for tuition, board, and room was that there might not be anyone within the fellowship of the Church of God, who desired to take this training course to prepare to better serve his Lord and Christ, that would be prevented because of the cost. The church will be blessed because of this work. Why shouldn't they have a part in it? Where can you find an investment that will return larger dividends than that invested in training young men and women for the work of the Lord? There is rejoicing among the angels of heaven over one sinner that repents. Training a single person for Christian service may mean the salvation of hundreds of thousands. Just consider the possibilities!

To make this training available to all our people whose hearts the Lord has moved upon to serve Him in a special way, we need to have a free-hearted response from the membership over the country. There are several ways you can help this worthy work in righteousness. First, pray unceasingly for the Lord's blessing on the undertaking. Make this coming Summer Training School a daily matter before the throne of all grace. Keep it on your prayer list.

Another way that will stimulate interest is to talk much about it in your home, prayer meetings, Bible studies, classes, and church services. This will keep all interested and will greatly entice those that have an inward longing to fully consecrate self unto the work of the gospel. Then, too, inspiring letters through The Herald would be encouraging to all.

To make this effort a permanent institution of Christian instruction and training, we must have a generous financial response. Sr. Leota Hanson, treasurer of the National Bible Institution will handle all funds for this work. She has opened a special account at the bank just for the Training School funds. The National Berean Society has $100 to turn over towards this worth-while labor. The Dixon, Ill., Sunday School has contributed $10, and the Truth Seekers' Class, Fonthill, has given a like amount. These groups have given leadership in the right direction. All our organizations and classes should be quick to get into line. Every gift will be given mention in The Herald! Be sure when sending your contributions to the treasurer mentioned above to state that they are for the Training Class. While conferences, Sunday schools, Berean societies, classes, and aid societies will plan to give to this most important arm of the church, still the individual must rise to his full responsibility in every venture of this kind. You will want to have a part and have your name enrolled with those responsible for establishing the Church of God Training School. Promptness will be a boon to the cause. Every one can have a part!

cisco, Sacramento, or other places on the Coast, please write him as soon as possible regarding their desires in this matter?

"I would like to call on these brethren," he writes. "All I ask is a place to sleep while I am with them, for I am working for the Master who has all authority in heaven and in earth, and Paul says that He will reward His servants and crown the faithful at His coming."

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

Bro. Howard Moore and family of Mineral, Calif., are visiting relatives and friends in the southern part of the State during the month of February. The Railsback family held a reunion on the thirteenth, twenty-three being present. Bro. Macleod preached to an audience of sixty in Los Angeles at that time, and officiated at the baptism of Sr. Lanora Board, following the sermon. This new sister is the granddaughter of Sr. Dora Courtney of Norco. She resides in Los Angeles at the present time and we trust will continue to do so.

Sr. Alma Brandt of Washington has come to southern California again and has opened a dress shop in Burbank. We are glad to welcome her to our worship and are hoping for success in her business venture. Also, Sr. Eva L. Stearns is making her home in Los Angeles again, and we are counting on her full cooperation, knowing that her ability will mean much to the church.

The church work is progressing nicely. In these strenuous times when the earth (particularly this section of it) is "filled with violence," the need of workers to warn the inhabitants of the earth is great.

Emma C. Railsback.

BLAIR, NEBRASKA

We were very happy to have Bro. Richard LeCrone with us for two sermons on Sunday, Feb. 6. Both were very timely and struck home. We had discontinued all of our services until spring, but our conscience bothered us after listening to his sermons. As a result, we are glad to say we have started midweek meetings in the various homes on Thursday nights.

He also gave a very interesting talk in the DeSoto Schoolhouse. We have started Sunday evening services in this schoolhouse by request. It is the country school of the community where I now live. The interest and attendance have both been very gratifying thus far. They are beginning now to ask for organization of a Sunday school. We pray that this move may meet with the Father's approval that we may be blessed in our effort to spread the gospel. We will try to send in a report of our progress from time to time.

HENRIETTA S. BILLINGS

Henrietta S. Billings was born February 6, 1856, in Warren County, Ind., and died February 18, 1938, in Los Angeles, Calif. Her husband preceded her in death some twenty years ago. She is survived by her twin sister, Mrs. F. M. Cawby of North Judson, Ind., and a younger sister, Mrs. W. J. Lhaman of Columbia, Mo., and her daughter, Mrs. E. K. Sunday of Washington, D. C.

Mrs. Billings was a member of the Church of God, having been baptized in her girlhood days in Indiana. She has been a member of the local church for about fifteen years. She was in attendance at the services on January 16, when Bro. Conner was with us, but the next day was not able to be up, yet she kept up her courage for three weeks, hoping to regain her strength.

Funeral services were conducted at the Pierce Mortuary on February 21. A nephew and two nieces were present, besides friends and members of the local church. Srs. Thelma Moore and Marie Bleasdale sang, "Does Jesus Care?" and "Abide With Me." Man's condition in death and the hope of a future life was the theme of the funeral discourse.

Emma C. Railsback.

ANOTHER PIONEER PASSES

Caroline Maria Cole was born in Juneau County, Wis., March 29, 1855. At the age of three years she came to Minnesota with her mother, four brothers, and three sisters, after her father's death. The family lived there until after the Indian outbreak, from which they escaped injury after being warned of their danger by friendly Indians.

She married I. M. Abbott April 17, 1873, and they made their home in Stearns County, where Mr. Abbott had taken a homestead in 1867. Ten children were born to them, two of whom preceded her in death. Mr. and Mrs. Abbott and family moved to Eden Valley in 1900, and from there to Paynesville in 1908. In 1932 they went to International Falls, where they spent their remaining years. Mr. Abbott passed away three years ago.

Mrs. Abbott was a pioneer member of the Church of God Conference in Minnesota, and both by example and precept was diligent in spreading the teachings of righteousness, and by her life demonstrated the principles of true Christianity. Up to the very last her life was one of devotion to her family and of unselfish service to others. Life held an interest for her only so long as she could be helpful to her children and friends. She was steadfast in her faith in God, uncompromising with any evil, dynamic in purpose. This example left a lasting impression on those with whom she came in contact. It is thought she was one of the few remaining charter members of the Church of God in Minnesota.

In spite of a life filled with the many hardships of pioneering, she fearlessly faced and rose above every obstacle. She leaves to mourn her loss three sons and five daughters, one of the sons being Bro. Ray Abbott, pastor of the Pennellwood Church of God in Grand Rapids, Mich. May our Father, whom she loved, give comfort to all who are sad because of her going.

RUFUS OVERHOLT

A letter from Sr. Rhoda Hanson of Caledonia, Mich., informs us of the death of Bro. Rufus Overholt, which occurred recently.

"Bro. and Sr. Overholt have for many years been regular attendants and supporters of the work in Michigan," writes Sr. Hanson. "The funeral services were conducted by Bro. Abbott, pastor of the Pennellwood Church of God of Grand Rapids, and were held in the farm home of Bro. and Sr. Overholt near Dutton, Sunday afternoon, Feb. 6.

"So many came to pay their respects to one who was loved and respected by all the community, that there was not room in the spacious house to accommodate them. Sr. Overholt, who is compelled to walk with the assistance of crutches, has gone to stay with her daughter, Mrs. Hunsberger."

THE TITHING BULLETIN

The bulletin, as prepared by The Layman Company, offers every church the most effective of tithing education plus relief from half of the expense and worries of the ordinary church bulletin.

The bulletin consists of four pages. Pages 1 and 4 are for the use of the local church. They may be printed, multigraphed, or mimeographed at one impression. Pages 2 and 3 carry any one of 32 of the famous Layman tithing messages.

This affords a quiet but effective course in stewardship education. It combines simplicity, effectiveness, and economy.

Sample set containing 32 different tithing bulletins, 20 cents. When ordering, please mention The Restitution Herald; also give your denomination.

Financial Report

Our monthly outgo for pastoral evangelism in the State of Illinois is over $5.00 above our income. With deepest appreciation and thanks to those who are liberally supporting the State work, we say to the rest of you: We can't keep this up for very long. Shall we cut down our evangelism, or shall we rise to the need?

Who will come to the front and help keep this work going. (Send money to the treasurer, Harvey, Krogh, Jr., Ripley, Ill.)

Highway Robbery

The other day a man was knocked down by a robber and his money was taken away from him. The robber has been caught. There are robbers who have not been caught, but as surely as a man must die, they shall be. They are called Christians (we doubt if they are), who could easily afford to pay their tithes, as well as a small offering to the Lord's work, but do not. The Bible says that men will rob God. Beware that you are not numbered with those robbers.

The Damnation of Selfishness

Some people (not true Christians), have done what they feel necessary to be saved and yet they have failed to do anything that some one else might be saved. To those Jesus has said, "For whosoever will save his life shall lose it."

If you lose your life or use it for Jesus (and whenever you help one of His you are doing it for Jesus), you shall really find eternal life.

The Parable of the Pond

There is an old parable of a man who had a pond of water on his land. He was always hoarding water, turning every little ditch into his pond, setting tubs and buckets under the eaves and spouts, and carrying the water thither. He envied even the birds what they drank, fearing lest some day the pond would be dry and he would perish with thirst. But coming one day with an unusually heavy load of water, he slipped and, falling into the pond, was drowned. In like manner many have hoarded wealth to their eternal undoing.—Selected by Leota B. Hanson.

Holding to Sin

A child was one day playing with a valuable vase when he put his hand into it and could not withdraw it. His father, too, tried to get it out, but all in vain. They were talking of breaking the vase when the father said, "Now, my son, make one more try; open your hand and hold your fingers out straight, as you see me doing, and then pull."

To their astonishment the little fellow said, "Oh, no, I couldn't put my fingers out like that, for if I did I would drop my penny."

How like people today! They get into trouble, but unless they are willing to "forsake" their sins God cannot help them.—New Century Leader.

March 26 and 27 at Ripley

The next Illinois Quarterly Conference will be held on the last Saturday and Sunday of March at the Ripley Church of God. Everyone who is interested in the Lord's work is not only invited, but requested to attend.

Those coming from a distance may find lodging among the brethren at Ripley.

There will be preaching service Saturday night, Sunday morning and evening, and other forms of Christian services. A more detailed announcement will be in next month's issue.

Purpose of the Conference

Everyone of us needs the strength that comes by meeting together with those who hold dear that precious faith in Christ. We are admonished to not forsake the assembling of ourselves together, and so much the more as we see the day approaching. We need to confer together and talk over the truths of God and the rapid fulfillment of prophecy.

Illinois Conference Board Attention!

The board will meet at Ripley, either Friday night, March 25, or early Saturday morning. It will take most of one day to complete the plans for the coming Bible School and Conference in August. Every member should be present if it is at all possible.

What Do You Think About It?

If the members of the Church of God were what they ought to be our number would be increasing continually and we would be supporting the Lord's workers in all parts of the world as well as all over this country. What do you think, or do you bother yourself about those things?

We have made a very small beginning by trying to evangelize two or three little places in the State of Illinois. Let us be what we ought to be and the Lord will have more work for us and He will provide the strength needed.

The Weather?

No! We have not been talking of the weather. The most notable thing among people when they talk about the weather is that no one ever does anything about it. If you have read the things on this page and do nothing about it you are no different than those who talk about the weather and do nothing about it.

We have been talking of things that are of vital concern to you who expect the Lord Jesus to remember you when He comes. "Faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone." Let us therefore be up and doing something about this work.

The Problem of the Jew

The Race That Will Not Die

FROM the beginning of history this strange race has been at once a mystery and a problem to every country in which its lot has been cast. Owing to certain deeply seated peculiarities of character, the Jew does not lend himself to assimilation by other races, nor does he blend readily into the life of other social and business groups. He has ever stood aloof. Despised and persecuted, exiled and downtrodden, in spite of all opposition he has continued to press onward generally at the very forefront of civilization. His remarkable business acumen has brought upon him the charge of being a merciless, grasping financial oppressor.

"This is the Jew

That Shakespeare drew . . ."

in the "Merchant of Venice"—the Shylock of tradition, demanding his pound of flesh.

This familiar picture is not altogether overdrawn. But the Jew is not himself entirely responsible for the somewhat repulsive lines that mark his character. In many instances his enemies have forced him into procedures and attitudes which he might not have assumed otherwise. To cite a single instance from history to show why he has been compelled to become a money-lender and a "usurer" rather than to occupy any other position in the life of his adopted haven of refuge, we notice that in Germany in the latter part of the 18th century the Jews "were excluded by oppressive laws from all trades except that of peddling old clothes . . . specially taxed, confined to Ghettos and Jeddengassen, strictly prohibited from entering some towns . . . forbidden to marry except under restrictions designed to check the growth of the Jewish population, disabled from employing Christian servants. . . . Their business was confined to trade in money or goods" (Ency. Brit.).

Such stringent laws were passed and enforced against them even under the monarch, Frederick the Great, who held the maxim that "to oppress the Jews never brought prosperity to any government." (Gen. 12:3.)

In a prophetic lecture before his congregation in Oregon, Illinois, the editor of THE RESTITUTION HERALD pointed out recently why the Jew has been, and still is, a problem to every nation where he has been granted refuge. The substance of his address is given here.

In many lands they were forbidden to own real estate or to engage in business of a settled nature. They were thus compelled to become a race of peddlers and money-lenders. They had no other way of making a livelihood. And of course, constantly fighting for existence under such restrictions and limitations, they developed a spirit of bitterness against Christian society everywhere and used their financial resources as a weapon to harass their enemies.

To go back to an earlier period still, we find that immediately after the church became secularized (I would prefer the phrase, "politicalized" under Constantine, it began a campaign of persecution against the Jews. As early as 315 A. D., the conversion of a Jew to Christianity was made a crime punishable by death! Further, laws were enacted forbidding the marriage of a Christian and a Jew, also on pain of death. It is apparent that the action of Germany, denying the right of marriage between Jews and Aryans, is "no new thing under the sun," nor is the recent enactment in Austria, which forbids a priest to baptize a Jew until the Jew's Austrian citizenship has been definitely established. (See Abreast of the Times, March 1, 1938.)

There is not a European country from which the Jews have not at some time been excluded, nor one in which they have not suffered persecution. England expelled them in 1290 A. D.; France followed in 1395; Spain in 1492, and Portugal in 1495.

"In this way it came about that the Holy Roman Empire—Germany, Italy, and adjoining districts—became the chief abode of the Jews," which, strange to say, are the countries in which they now suffer the greatest oppression!

When the Black Death was ravaging Europe (1348-1350) the Jews were accused (Please turn to page 11)

Pertinent Comments on the News of the Day

Japan Launches Anti-Jewish Drive

"Bow down their back alway" (Rom. 11:10).

Tokyo, Japan, Feb. 26.—The Japanese Government launched a violent anti-Semitic campaign today, accusing "Jewish agencies" of seeking to defeat Japan's policies in the Far East. The cabinet's intelligence service amassed an exhibit consisting of charts, pictures, and propaganda publications to show Jewish organizations are systematically striving to balk Japan's Far Eastern expansion. The campaign is being carried on along typically Fascist-Nazi lines, with Soviet, British, French, and American institutions and individuals signaled out for attack. The bill, sponsored by the cabinet and termed Fascist by more liberal members of the Diet, failed to get through a stormy session and was forced back to a committee for further study.

This is a development for which we have been watching for several months, although no intimation has previously appeared that Japan, credited by the World Almanac for 1938, with but one thousand Jews in its entire population, had either reason or inclination to join other Fascist-Nazi nations in their bitter drive against the Jews. We felt that the aggressive war Japan was waging in China must have some prophetic significance, but we could not assure ourselves of that fact. "Wars and rumours of wars" are not in themselves "signs of the times" (Matt. 24:6). To be really significant from the standpoint of prophecy the war must have some connection with God's chosen people. The divine purposes revolve around Israel now as they did in the days of ancient Babylon, Persia, and Greece. So it was not until Japan inserted the Jew, the key of history, into the lock of current events, that the door was thrown open and the hand of God revealed working in the Far East after the same powerful fashion that it is in the Near East and in Europe.

But Why Do They Want 'Em?

"It pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe" (1 Cor. 1:21).

BELVIDERE, Ill., Feb. 23.—On a ballot to determine whether to continue having sermons at Presbyterian Church services here or to dispense with them, 117 members of the congregation voted for sermons and only three against. For several years there has been a strong movement developing among Protestant churches to discontinue the sermon as a part of the regular church service and to occupy the worship period with music, formal prayers, and Scripture readings.

The only thing we cannot understand with regard to the vote taken in Belvidere is why the non-sermon faction did not win "hands down"! If we are to judge the value of all sermons by the ones frequently heard in the modern church, we seriously question whether or not it would not be more beneficial than otherwise to dispense with them altogether. The value of a sermon is exactly in ratio to its Biblical content, that is, to the amount of solid meaty doctrine it contains. Moral essays, political addresses, and book reviews, can never accomplish the marvelous results which follow the "foolishness of preaching" the old-fashioned gospel of the kingdom of God.

Bible Students Imprisoned in Germany

"Others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover of bonds and imprisonment."

BERLIN, Germany, March 4.—Nearly one thousand members of the International Bible Students Association (the Russell-Rutherford movement) are still imprisoned in a camp at Sachsenhausen, Saxony, where they are being held as "offenders against the state," together with 2,400 other Protestants who have resisted the Nazi attempt to dominate religion in Germany and to prohibit freedom of speech in the pulpit. Encouraged in their outspoken opposition to Nazi interference in religious matters by the teaching of Judge Rutherford, who affirms that the disciple of Christ must acknowledge allegiance to no human government, the Bible Students in Germany, as in the United States, have come into frequent clashes with the political authorities. It will be recalled that the children of a Rutherford follower in the East refused to salute the American flag and were excluded from the public school. The children have since been reinstated, following a decision of the Supreme Court, to which the case was carried by liberty-loving sympathizers.

Our sympathy goes out to those who suffer for conscience sake in Germany and throughout the world, but we cannot convince ourselves that in this country any follower of Jesus Christ has real cause for showing other than respect for our Government, which affords us freedom of speech and of worship unequalled in any land save those which come under the British flag.

Death—Not Life

By C. Colegrove

A PREVAILING popular sentiment is ready to answer affirmatively. A great multitude of people, with or without Christian faith, learned and ignorant, philosopher and peasant, are ready to affirm that things are not what they seem, that man does not and cannot die and, in fact, that there is no death. But in the beginning we might ask if there is moral death. Seeing that none can deny the existence of such a death, who will arise to declare that this is not what we have believed; that death is life in spite of all the righteous dread and deprecation of the good and true, felt and expressed, concerning moral evil? Who will dare to say this? As well aver that there is beauty in deformity, purity in corruption, order in confusion, as that spiritually death is life.

Let us imagine Eve looking at the dead body of her husband Adam. She sees his face pallid, his eyes closed, and every sense and power utterly paralyzed. She remembers the divine mandate uttered nine hundred years before, that having broken an express prohibition they must die. Eve, gazing at the awful spectacle of her lifeless lord, grown rigid and cold after his last expiring breath—does she believe that this dead Adam still lives in spite of all the sadness of that spectacle, those lips motionless, those eyes unseeing, that form prostrate and powerless? How can she believe it unless she credits the daring assertion of the serpent, which was a contradiction of her Maker's saying? Will she believe the deceiver and destroyer? Has she not grace and faith to reject the lie, and put no trust in an enemy that by evil insinuation has brought about this dreadful shipwreck of happiness and hope? Will she not rather believe in the coming seed who shall crush the enemy? and has she not instinct of a resurrection?

Strange, that all the world should so easily grasp at the illusion, that life not only survives death, but is even liberated and immensely developed by death! Strange, that the egg of the oviparous serpent should find such congenial lodging place, and its pestiferous germ such definite culture and evolution through the ages!

Here is a book by Frederick Gerhard, entitled The Coming Creed of the World, heralded even by a religious paper with a blare of trumpets, in which the amazing question is asked, "Is there not a faith more sublime than Christianity?" And this book (or the author) is entitled "A Voice Crying in the Wilderness." A voice, indeed! But into what deeper and intenser darkness will it lead those who trust in it? It will indeed utter some things good and true, but it will deny Jesus Christ, because it denies the fact or possibility of miracles, and makes an urgent onslaught on Holy Scripture. And what is its central declaration? Be-

Is death life? Or is there life in death? Are the millions alive that have died for nearly sixty centuries?

tween a "belief in God" and "the freedom of the human will" is stationed this magical doctrine of immortality, while various voices of acclaiming journals, religious and otherwise, utter endorsing "Amens." Thus are good and evil, true and false, coupled together in unholy union, and any "coming creed of the world," essentially at variance with the teaching of Jesus Christ, will doubtless tend toward and merge into the completed doctrine of Antichrist. "Man is immortal," says one writer, commenting on the book, "and will improve after death until he has reached perfection."

Why all this eagerness and persistence of philosophers and churchmen to emphasize this idea of life in man that survives death, that defies it, and is immeasurably entranced by it? Is it not a certain "pride of life" and restlessness of "invention," kindred with that of the antediluvians? Is it not a glory-seeking of the Babel builders? Is it not a mental denial of the province of death to dominate the man, making that which is real only a semblance, and substituting a vain imagination for an obvious verity?

How shall we know that he who is unmistakably dead, is nevertheless indisputably and unconquerably alive? Look at the vast extent of subordinate animal life! No one for one moment imagines life in death among these infinitely diversified breathing and moving hosts.

Take the universal verdict of facts in human experience. When the functions of the brain are positively interrupted and arrested by external violence, it is well known and established that consciousness is impossible. I do not now refer to cases of brain disorder through disease. There are abundant instances of thought perverted and impaired by various forms of sickness, and by sudden shocks of bereavement, and sore experiences of trial. In these cases the brain has at least a fraction of its functional prerogative remaining. But when the suppression of its activity is total, as in sudden concussions, and in compression of its substance by a fragment of investing bone, there is no thought, and no power to think, nothing but the total blank of oblivion. This may be laid down as axiomatic and universal. In other words, to think without a brain is impossible. To know, to imagine, to perceive, to remember without molecular cerebral motion or vibration, is absolutely beyond the power of any creature that ever lived.

Take the cases of all who are scripturally recorded to have died, and who were raised from the dead. Elijah, Elisha, and Peter, each raised at least one from death. Our Lord certainly raised three. In no case is there one reversion in the record of the resurrected men or children to a thought or an experience while (Please turn to page 10)

Our Hope

SOME few years ago, at a big political meeting in Queen's Hall, London, I heard one of our leading statesmen say that the only hope of the world was the League of Nations. Since then one of the leading members of the League, in fact, one of the leading three, Italy, has made war on and practically wiped out one of the lesser members, Abyssinia, and today Japan, who was a member, is making war upon another member, China. The one great purpose of the League of Nations, the object for which it was formed, was to maintain the world's peace. In this it has hopelessly failed. If it has failed in its one great object, and failed without the hope of success, what becomes of it as the only hope of the world? According to this leading British statesman, the only hope has failed: therefore the world is left in a hopeless condition.

Three weeks ago I was attending a service at the Bath Abbey. The preacher, the Rev. Livingstone, stated that "the hope of the world lies in the Christian community," and followed this up with the further statement that "the salvation of the world lies in the church." I scribbled these two statements down and settled in my seat to hear how the church was going to save the world, but, to my astonishment, before I could collect my thoughts to follow him, he pronounced the benediction. His sermon on the church as the hope of the world occupied about five minutes. I do not think I missed much of value. I should have liked to have heard his definition of the Christian church. I doubt not he would have included the Roman Catholic Church. If so, it is a notorious fact that in certain countries of South America, where the Roman Catholic Church has had the monopoly for three or four hundred years, the condition of the people from the spiritual and moral standpoints is far worse than in heathen lands—the people are worse than before they were Christianized. And the Roman Catholic Church is by far the largest so-called Christian community. Is the Greek Church any better? It is doubtful. And what is the condition of the Protestant churches? In Germany, the home of Protestantism, the National Church is given over to man-worship, the portrait of Hitler being placed over their so-called altars, while they boldly proclaim that Jesus Christ was not a Jew: a manifest lie. The leaders of the true protesting church are to be found in prisons or concentration camps.

In our own land (England) the Protestant churches are, for the most part, becoming either sacerdotal or modernist. The number of their members is diminishing. Both numerically and spiritually they are declining. The old Protestant standard of the infallible Word of God has gone. The Bible has been shelved or torn to pieces as a standard. A brother-in-law of mine, a minister of the Church of England, who lately returned from many years of work in America, says that in some Sunday schools teaching of the Bible is being replaced by the works of so-called great men.

(NOTE: Many Protestant churches in America have discarded the uniform Sunday school lessons and have adopted a "graded series" in which the lives of religious and political leaders are substituted for Bible characters as subjects for study.—Editor.)

Well, the Christian church has had nearly two thousand years in which to save the world, and what is the state of the world today? Sir Christopher Wren's epitaph in St. Paul's Cathedral reads, "If you desire my monument, look around." Look around at the state of the world, not from the social standpoint, but from the spiritual or religious standpoint, and is it getting better? Is it drawing closer to God? The Bible states truly that "the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." How much fear of God is there today? A generation is growing up that neither fears God nor man. The aim of present-day training is what is termed self-expression, which is another name for self-will. Never was the word of prophecy truer, "We have turned every one to his own way." This is self-expression—going one's own way.

I should like to have asked the Rev. Livingstone how long he reckoned it would take the church to save the world. So far as I can judge, at the present rate, it will not take long for the world to obliterate the Christianity of the church. The world is flooding the church. I admit this will not be entirely so, for God will always preserve His little flock. But His true ones are becoming hidden away, as one would expect from these prophetic words of our Lord, "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith (or the faith) on the earth?" If the normal Christian community or church is the hope of the world, what a hope! It is certainly not the hope the Bible sets forth. The Bible states that "evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived," that it shall be "as it was in the days of Noe," and "as in the days of Lot," "in the day that the Son of man is revealed."

In the days of Noah God sent the flood because "the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." Each age of human history has ended in disaster. God has had to come to the rescue. Now if it were God's plan for the church to save the world in this age, it would do so. But nowhere do you find such a plan. This age, like all others, is to end in a demonstration of human failure and depravity: to end in catastrophe. And this catastrophe is to be greater than any previous one.

God has His saving purpose for His true spiritual church, but it is not for this age. The church will not succeed in this until united to its Head, Christ. At present the purpose of the church is not to save the world, but to gather out from the world a people for His name: an elect people separated from the world. Whatever lies in the future, in the present age the hope of the world is not the church.

We have had a statesman's hope and a churchman's hope; we will now view the hope of a Nonconformist minister. Some time ago I attended a Sunday morning service at the Union Church at Portishead. It unites the Baptist and Congregationalist denominations. The young minister had the reputation of being a very able preacher. His sermon was an inquiry into "Authority—Our Basis." He first informed us that the basis of Protestant Christianity in the past had been the Bible, and with that I heartily agreed. He then made a fierce attack on the reliability of the Bible, proving to his own satisfaction, but not to mine, that it had been found to be unreliable and, therefore, was no longer our standard. What then, he asked, was to replace it in these modern times? I waited in wondering expectation. He stated that what would replace the Bible was the united opinion of men of good will.

He did not tell us how to distinguish men of good will from men of bad will. It were easier not to look too closely into his proposition. He ended by completely exploding it himself, for he concluded by telling us how he had lately attended a Copek Conference at Birmingham where, after a long debate on the question of pacifism, they found they were hopelessly divided. So much for our united opinion of so-called men of good will—hopeless division over such an important question. Where is the hope in such a basis? We need a firmer basis than this. The best of men are hopelessly divided. And yet in most of our Nonconformist churches today the preaching of positivism or man-worship, the worship of the human mind, is replacing the Christian faith. The fact is that all these hopes are proved failures—the League of Nations, the Christian community or church, and the so-called united opinion of men of good will. Neither will nor can save the world. Such hopes are futile.

We will now turn to Our Hope, the true Christian Hope: the only hope the Word of God sets before us. It is the personal return of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, to establish His kingdom upon earth.

This is the one great hope of the Bible from beginning to end. After the fall, the redemption of humanity is intimated through the promised Seed of the woman. At the call of Abraham the Seed is promised that will bless all families of the earth. All the prophets point on to the coming of the Messiah, the promised Seed, who will establish a reign of righteousness, peace, and knowledge of the Lord.

When Christ came and did His mighty works, many saw in Him the promised Messiah, and His disciples were so confident of it that they forsook all and followed Him. They could not understand His reference to death, and when He died a felon's death they were filled with disappointment. "We hoped that it was He which should redeem Israel." (The divine program was blessing first on Israel, and then through Israel to the world.) Though He had told them plainly of His death, and resurrection after three days, they had not understood Him. It was all a great puzzle to them. They could hardly believe their senses when He returned from the grave, but they took it that, at last, what they had been looking for was to be. He would now declare Himself as the promised Messiah; call down His angelic army from heaven and establish His kingdom. They put the question to Him, "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" expecting a favorable answer. He did not tell them they were mistaken in their hope and that they should wait millions of years for the kingdom to gradually evolve, but He told them that it was not for them to know the times or seasons which the Father has set, or reserved, within His own authority. They then were to wait for the promised earnest of the kingdom, the gift of the Holy Spirit.

After telling them this, He was taken away from them and, caught up in the clouds, ascended to heaven. Their hope was again disappointed. But as they stood gazing into heaven, two men in white apparel stood by them, and said to them, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye looking into heaven? this Jesus, which was received up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have beheld him going into heaven." This was the solution: He would come again. As He ascended in clouds, so would He descend in clouds. He told them this when with them: "And they shall see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory." This is what they were to wait for. This was their hope. They wrote of it as "that blessed hope," "a lively hope," our "one hope," "the hope of our calling," and "the hope set before us." They patiently labored on, enduring persecution and martyrdom with this one great hope before them. In Paul's Epistles one verse in ten contains it; in 1 Thessalonians one verse in seven, and in 2 Thessalonians, one in three.

Paul's summary of the Christian position is, "Ye turned from idols to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven." He states definitely that "unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation," and counsels us to "consider one another to provoke unto love and good works, and so much the more as ye see the day approaching."

Peter, James, and John all write to the same effect, the highest note being reached by the last named: "We know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure."

So we find this one great hope permeating the whole of the New Testament. It ends with, "He which testifieth these things saith, Yea: I come quickly. Amen: come, Lord Jesus."

The same hope is found in the writings of the early church fathers. Clement of Rome, writing about 95 A. D., states: "Let us be followers of those who went about in goat skins and sheep skins preaching the coming of Christ." Justin Martyr, writing about 150 A. D., spoke of those as "destitute of just reason who did not understand that which is clear from all Scripture, that two comings of Christ are announced." Numerous other quotations could be given. Those not only prove that the hope remained the same in the early church, but they also prove that the New Testament hope did not have its fulfillment at the fall of Jerusalem in 70 A. D., as some foolishly teach.

It is said that the apostles were mistaken in this hope and that this is proved in that they expected it in their lifetime. Now this is a plausible mixture of truth and error. They certainly hoped for it in their lifetime. I believe that it was God's intention that this hope should be a living hope, possible, so far as can be seen, in each generation of the church's history. That it was to be nearly two thousand years distant was certainly hidden from them, and properly so. On the other hand, they were warned not to expect it soon. Christ, in His parable of the talents, stated: "Now after a long time the lord of those servants cometh, and maketh a reckoning with them": "after a long time." He speaks about the death of Peter and of James and of John; so it is evident that His return was not to be during their lifetime. (Please turn to page 9)

Where Art Thou?

By D. G. Harvey

WE ALL love our beautiful homeland, each state has a spot of grandeur of its own — beautiful lakes, enchanting rivers, the mountain splendor, and the peaceful valley. Yes, our land is a thing of beauty, when we forget the disfiguring marks of man's work—the graft, the misery, the pain of it all. It is a wonderful land, for our Father in heaven is its Creator.

In the beginning when God "planted a garden eastward in Eden," it was indeed wonderful. We mortals fail to find words to express the beauty of the first home of our race. Man today has spent millions to build parks in an effort to preserve some of the natural beauty of the earth. But no mere mortal will ever be able to restore the beauty and peace of Eden. Think of Eden as the one perfect spot on the earth. It was God's own work and "his work is perfect" (Deut. 32:4). Peace, plenty—everything needed for man's good, man's every comfort, were provided. Man himself was perfect, mentally and physically, altogether free from fear, worry, pain, and death.

But he was not satisfied. Adam and his wife desired more than God saw was good for them to have. They wanted knowledge of good and evil. And what a price they paid for that knowledge! Man by his own act cut himself off from communion with his Creator. Man listened to the serpent's lie; "Ye shall not surely die," and believed God was withholding from him some great glory. His desire was to exalt himself, to be able "as gods, knowing good and evil." Adam turned from a wise and loving Creator to take the advice of the adversary. Desire for glory was the cause of all the sorrow of the whole human family.

When Adam heard God walking in the Garden, he first knew fear and hid himself. Then God called His created son: "Where art thou?" Must we understand that the all-wise God, who knows the very thought of the heart, did not know where Adam was? Surely God knew! But Adam must be made to realize his position; he must be brought to trial and receive the penalty for his transgression. Adam was ashamed of his act, to be sure. We remember the excuses he made—"The woman thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat." Adam not only blamed the woman, but even hinted that God Himself was to blame for his fall, since God had given him the woman.

We, today, hide behind a high wall of excuses. Yes, we, as children of Adam, have followed in our father's footsteps. We inherit the same selfish desires, wish to glorify self. "All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way" (Isa. 53:6). "God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions" (Ecc. 7:29). "They have corrupted themselves . . . they are a perverse and crooked generation" (Deut. 32:5). But the Lord still loves His creation. He "so loved the world" (John 3:16), that He gave His Son to provide a ransom for sinful men. During almost two thousand years God has been calling out a people for His name (Acts 15:14). These people are chosen to become "sons of God" (1 John 3:1) by adoption (Gal. 4:5). They are to become a new people. They represent God in the earth, and as His representatives they have a great work to carry on, a work that was started by God's only begotten Son before He left the earth. His followers must continue that work until He returns.

Listen to the words of Paul: "Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new. And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation" (you see our work just starts at baptism); "to wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation. Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God" (2 Cor. 5:17-20).

What a wonderful service to render! What a position to hold! We can now represent Christ! We! Oh, how humble we should be and how thankful, that God, our heavenly Father, has chosen us to speak for His Son! This is the privilege, yes, the duty, of every member of the Church of God. When we forget our duty and our vows, can we not hear the still small voice calling, "Where art thou?" Are we going astray again?

"We then, as workers together with him, beseech you also that ye receive not the grace of God in vain."

Youth Faces the Future

GROWING up around us all are thousands upon thousands of boys and girls, young men and young women, an army of glorious youth, throbbing with vitality, radiant with hope, overflowing with enthusiasm. They are thronging the grammar and high schools, crowding colleges and universities, absorbing, under the most advantageous conditions, the accumulated knowledge of the ages. Full of courage and ambition, they are striving to succeed, planning great conquests, dreaming of love and home and life's most precious things. Keen, alert, active, critical, they are looking out with wondering eyes upon this strange, troubled world in which they find themselves.

What does the future hold for all these boys and girls? How should they relate themselves to the awful issues of this mighty hour?

FALLING SHADOWS

Alas, the dark clouds of world ruin and despair, rolling up fast from every horizon, are already casting their shadows over these fair young lives.

Youth cannot escape the crisis. They are in it. Already the storm rages round them. Loving hands may for a time keep it from beating in full force upon their heads, but they cannot provide permanent shelter. Sooner or later all must be involved, for the issues before the world today are on a huge, unprecedented scale, embracing all mankind. As Sir George Paish has said, "It is not the wreck of a single nation, but the wreck of a world" that we face. In politics, religion, and social life the stage is set for tremendous upheavals that may well change the course of history. Wars, revolutions, and famines are threatened on a world scale. With vast new sources of power in the hands of men, with wild passions unsubdued, almost anything is possible. And in all these developments the youth of today will be called upon to play their part.

As in the past great crises have called forth the men to meet them, so undoubtedly today many young men and young women will feel a deep urge to rise above the besetting troubles and triumph over them. They will aspire to great achievements, despite the forbidding circumstances. The darker the prospect the more desperately will they strive to break through to light. It is the way of youth.

Youth delights in difficulties. If there is a battle to be fought, they are there to fight it. If there is a noble cause languishing for help, they rush up with their enthusiastic aid and glory in giving to it the best they have. Old men may say that youth is indifferent and careless; but show them a task that no one else has accomplished, a problem that has baffled solution, a goal none other has reached, a record that needs to be broken, and they will spring, sometimes with disconcerting suddenness, into life and action.

Great issues invariably produce great souls from the ranks of youth. Every crisis, in war or peace, has led to the discovery of young men and young women of unsuspected capacity and latent power. So also in this greatest crisis of the ages young people in every walk of life, and particularly those who have consecrated their lives to God's service, will be moved by the very solemnity of the times to deeds of heroism and self-sacrifice without equal in the annals of time. The tenness of the final struggle will beget earth's noblest sons.

After all, it is no small privilege to be living in such an hour as this, and with youth still on one's side. To watch events moving toward the culmination of God's eternal purpose, the unfolding of the last fragments of unfulfilled prophecy, the gathering of the forces of good and evil for the final conflict, is surely a rare opportunity—coveted by patriarchs, prophets, and apostles, but reserved for the youth of this generation.

Young men and young women who appreciate the significance of these stirring times may well say, in the words of Spalding's soul-moving poem:

"Oh, I am glad that I was born in Time,
Ere the great war of God had passed for aye,
When they that would delight in deeds sublime
Must press the ancient: 'Tell us of that day'."

"Oh, I am glad I live in Time, and Time's last hour,
And I shall see the last great fight, and shout
Upon the mount of triumph, when the power
Of Satan has gone down in utter rout."

"Oh, I am glad; for surely nevermore
Can love unfold such pageantry divine;
And through what little part therein I bore
There shall be joy and glory ever mine."

NOBLE TASKS WAITING

In such an hour as this the call of God comes to every young person as it came to Queen Esther when peril threatened her people: "Who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?" (Esther 4:14). Through the scheming of the wicked Haman, the king had published an edict permitting the massacre of the Jews. It was a crisis of terrible moment for them. Their

COMMENTARIES

THERE is a certain reading habit which is to the reader more intriguing than profitable. It is seemingly plausible. It is certainly studious, religious, and, may we say, Christian. The habit may fascinate the reader for a time; but soon becomes a weariness to the flesh, brings him into bondage to many masters, leads to confusion of thought, and is likely to leave him in doubt and not in a state of Christian joy.

We refer to the habit, practiced by many Christians, of indiscriminate reading in whatever commentaries may be at hand. Far be it from us to discourage the judicious use of any good helps to Bible reading. When a Christian comes upon a Bible passage that is obscure to him, it is his right to discover the meaning. But if he rushes to the first commentary he can find, supposing that because it is a commentary it must therefore certainly throw light upon his problem, he may be led farther and farther from the truth only to awake some day, if ever he does awake, to see that he has made as great a mistake as though he had come upon a problem in American democracy and had applied credulously for help to one of the European dictators. The dictators themselves have their fundamental differences and political and personal interests. So have the commentators. It is a long road for a Christian student when he starts out via the commentaries to find a congruous and consistent interpretation of the Bible.

There is extant a good story about a certain author who had written a "Commentary on the Lamentations of Jeremiah." Desiring to have his manuscript read by others before it was published, he took it to a well known Bible expositor and asked him to read it and express his judgment upon it. Many months elapsed and the expositor had not reported his opinion. Becoming impatient, the author called on him one day and asked if he had finished the reading. "Yes," replied the expositor, "I have read through your 'Commentary on the Lamentations of Jeremiah.'" "And may I ask what you think of it?" "I only wish," replied the expositor, "I only wish that Jeremiah could be here to utter his Lamentations on your Commentary!"

That is it, you see. Jeremiah knew what he was driving at. The commentator did not seem to know; but he had a doctrinal hobby to exhibit, so he set the Prophet astride and started a little parade. Very convenient for the commentator; but wouldn't Jeremiah seem more impressive on his own superb steed than when dismounted and forced to ride obsequiously on a little hobby horse led by a string?

An aged saint is reported to have exclaimed: "I do so much enjoy the Bible, because it throws so much light on the commentaries." Evidently he had had his experiences of perplexity over the commentaries, and had at last found his way back home—to the Bible itself. What a relief and what a joy!

There are some Bible passages more or less obscure; but when these are read in the light of the rest of the Scripture, the obscurity many times vanishes. It is a great joy when the light comes in this way. Up to a certain limit the Bible is its own best commentary. It is at least consistent with itself. If the time spent upon the reading of commentaries were spent upon the Bible itself, there would be fewer and fewer "obscure" passages.

We do not wish to be understood as disapproving the judicious use of good commentaries. But we do believe that if the Christian will give his time to sincere reading of the Bible itself, to prayer for light where the meaning seems obscure, to meditation upon what he has read, to the thoughtful comparison of scripture with scripture, to the intention to live up to the light he has, then he will come through with more knowledge of the Bible, more light upon it as a whole, more fruit of the Spirit, more treasure laid up, than if he should neglect his Bible and turn to the contradictory commentaries.—World's Crisis.

PAGEANTRY IN THE PULPIT

WITH the increase of last-day worldliness we note the substitution of various features of an entertaining nature for the old-time preaching of the gospel in the house of God, until the preacher is in danger of being crowded out of the pulpit almost entirely—especially Sunday evenings. There is more of an emphasis being placed on dramatics in the Sunday school, while pageantry, plays, and pictures are becoming more and more common in the church services. It will be recalled that preaching had a large place in the early church, until the pulpit gave way to the Roman altar, candles, pictures, images, and a lifeless liturgy. Then came the great Protestant Reformation and a restoration of the pulpit, which has been one of the principal factors in the strength of Protestantism down through the years. But the Protestant pulpit is in danger. Not only is it being used for the dissemination of infidelity, but for worldly entertainment.

Students of church history well know that when the church lost out in pentecostal power, it tried to keep things going by means of man-made substitutes. And it will be recalled that the religious drama came into prominence at about the same time. In reality, it had its birth in the paganism of Egypt and Greece. But it appeared in the nominal church of Christ when purity and persecution gave place to pagan pomp and popularity.

So long as the followers of Christ were filled with the Spirit and actively engaged in the carrying out of the Great Commission, there was no time nor inclination for religious make-believe. It was enough that they should light the fires of Nero's garden with their own bodies, and furnish Rome with entertainment by being slaughtered by wild beasts in the amphitheater. All that was a reality for the Christian of those days, without any make-believe. But when the persecuted church became popular and a sad pretense of her former self, it was quite natural that she should go in for the religious drama and substitution of pretense for reality.

"The medieval religious drama," says a former actor in the Sunday School Times, "had its source in the liturgy of this paganized church. At first these 'sacred plays' were acted only within the confines of the church; later they were performed outside. Hannah Moore describes them as 'uncouth pieces, in which the most sacred persons were introduced as interlocutors, and events too solemn for exhibition, and subjects too awful for detail, were brought before the audience with a formal gravity more offensive than levity itself.'"

Now history has a remarkable way of repeating itself. We, too, are living at a time of great apostasy, with real spirituality at low ebb, the Great Commission of our risen Lord sadly neglected, and worldliness coming in like a flood. There is, indeed, "a form of godliness," but, alas, a denial of power. It is not surprising, therefore, in the light of history, to note a revival of the religious drama in these Laodicean days.

We want to say, however, that there is something far better than any religious make-believe. No imitation can surpass the reality. There are still opportunities for real heroism, not only in foreign lands, but all about us in the home field, opportunities for real service and sacrifice, without having to act out these things on the stage. Let believers get the vision and the passion of the pioneers, . . . and there will be real experiences, more heroic and more thrilling than anything of the mere make-believe variety.

Moreover, as for acting out the sacred scenes of Bible history, we want to say that for the consecrated child of God there is a reality in the conscious fellowship of Jesus Christ that is far more satisfying than any stage or screen impersonation. The true church of Christ does not need the assistance of a worldly state in order to make known the wonderful grace of God. "The foolishness of preaching" is still "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."—Linden J. Carter in Messiah's Advocate.

Again, Paul, writing to the Thessalonians, warns them that the day of the Lord would not be until after the man of sin had arisen and run his course.

Those who desire to wrest Scripture have no difficulty in finding ways and means of doing so, for there is much that is difficult to understand. It was not easy to retain the coming of Christ as a living, ever-present hope, when actually it was not to be for some two thousand years. To do so, God the Father reserved this knowledge to Himself. It was reserved to the time of the end, and was then only to be made known, approximately, to those termed "the wise."

This brings us to our last section, which I must deal with very briefly. It is that our one great hope, the return of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, is an immanent hope. All generations have had this hope, but no generation has had it with the same certain immanence as the present one.

The understanding of the prophetic times was sealed up until the time of the end. They are now being unsealed. The time of the end has arrived. Our hope is about to be realized. I cannot go fully into this. I have been occupied during the last five years in writing a work dealing with this. The subject is a big one. I will now only mention two signs that point to its nearness. One is the Great War, and the other the freeing of Jerusalem. Both of these we find in Christ's Olivet prophecy.

Christ was asked by His disciples for a sign of His coming and of the end of the age. He gave them several. One was that Jerusalem "shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." The next outstanding event to this was "the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory." All that our Lord prophesied as coming on Jerusalem came about exactly as He stated, in every detail. It was desolated, the temple destroyed so that one stone was not left on another—all were thrown down. The site was even dug up and plowed so that future generations should not know where it had stood. The inhabitants of Jerusalem fell by the sword and were led captive into all the nations, and century after century Jerusalem was trodden down by one nation after another, the last desolation being the bloodthirsty Turks.

Since General Allenby, at the head of the British and Allied Forces, marched on foot into that city on December 11, 1917, its treading down has ceased, and we are witnessing an initial time of restoration. . . . This is in preparation for the coming of David's greater Son, who is to sit on the throne of His father David and reign over Israel and all nations from His metropolis, the New Jerusalem. This freeing of Jerusalem is one great God-given sign of the nearness of our Lord's return.

Another is the Great War. Our Lord spoke of an awful time of tribulation that was to end the present age. This time was to resemble travail. Travail precedes birth and this was to be the birth of the new millennial age. Travail is made up of birth pangs, one following another until the great final one. The first of these birth pangs—the beginning of travail—was to be a world-wide war. All down through the Christian era there were to be wars and rumors of wars, but when there came a time of world-wide war, "nation against nation and kingdom against kingdom," accompanied with famines and earthquakes in divers places, then we might know that the beginning of travail had come. The Great War met this description perfectly. It was a world-wide war such as had never been before, and it was accompanied by terrible famines and earthquakes in different places, far more numerous than had ever been before. This was the first great birth pang of the new age. Others have followed; others may come; the last is to be the worst tribulation the world has ever experienced or will ever experience. We may be seeing the first stages of this final birth pang in the war starting in the East, for the final trouble is to come from the East.

I am convinced the Great War was the beginning of travail and, if so, our Lord, later in prophecy, most plainly intimates that all these things were to come on this same generation: that is, the generation which sees the beginning will also see the end—"Even so ye also, when ye see all these things, know ye that he is nigh, even at the doors. Verily, I say unto you, this generation (or that generation, the Greek word stands for both) shall not pass away, till all these things be accomplished." There is therefore strong reason for concluding that we are now in the last generation and that this generation includes the Great War and the freeing of Jerusalem. If this is so, at least more than half of this last generation is gone—and, as it is to be shortened, we must now be fast nearing the end.

These are but two signs of many. I could easily occupy every night for a whole week with the many signs that point to the immanence of the return of our Lord and Savior.

"Watchman, what of the night? Watchman, what of the night? The watchman said, The morning cometh, and also the night." It is said the darkest hour comes before the dawn. The world has still to face that last darkest hour, but, glory to God, we know what lies beyond it. "The morning cometh"—the glorious resurrection morn—the great consummation of all our hopes—our one great hope—the return of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, to establish here His kingdom and reign as King of kings and Lord of lords: a reign of righteousness, peace, joy, and love. May we each and all be ready to receive Him and to reign with Him. This is our Hope.—Harold Norris in Our Hope.

"In 1859 no one could ride on the Boston and Maine Railway on Sunday unless he satisfied the railroad officials that he was making the trip to go to church."

DEATH—NOT LIFE

in the state of death. Why is this? Is it a mere fortuitous omission? Could we have not a word from the region and sphere of the dead? Should not those who have entered the unknown tell us a little of its mystery? On the contrary, all is silence. There is nothing reported because there is nothing to report. Christ Himself gives no intimation whatever of anything thought, said, or done, during His term of detention in the tomb. Are the dead in our day better than the dead of other days? Do they, or can they, know more? Let us not deceive ourselves. Let us not be misguided by the brave assertions or the flattering insinuations of a fond philosophy, neither let us tamely yield to the influence or authority of erring though venerable tradition.

If we believe in life after death, life through an indestructible vitality, we so far deny or discredit the need of a resurrection. We render it practically superfluous. We detract from the sublime prerogative of Christ as the "resurrection and the life." We magnify our natural derivation from Adam, and disparage the necessity and min-ify the dignity of redemption. We reduce to a point of triviality and inconsequence all those assurances of the special and sublime prerogatives of Christ to bring the dead out of prison and darkness. He who was dead and is alive, He, the very Prince of Life—He it is, and He only, who can restore the dead myriads to life and consciousness and reason.

Hence, in the New Testament we find the resurrection continually magnified. It is not a case of convenience poetically and pictorially suggested, but of positive necessity emphasized. The Apostle Paul, singularly beloved for his devotion to his Lord, and well instructed and clear-seeing in divine things, makes the resurrection preeminent in all his doctrine. "If the dead rise not," he declares, "then they which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." What could be more tersely said? What could be more unmistakably plain? But if they are gone to heaven at death, certainly they have not perished. No reason for the resurrection—they can live without it! This is literally the teaching of millions in our day. It is iterated and reiterated, times without number. But the saying of Paul stands like a column of granite, practically unassailable.

It is when the Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout—it is then, and only then, that the dead live or can live. At that glorious and sublime moment, the dead in Christ shall rise first. They have not risen before. They have never ascended by a native disembodied ethereal force from a bed of death. They have slept inert in their tombs without a dream or thought, or one note of lapsing time, and at the mighty word of their Prince they rise!

Suppose there are passages which at first sight seem to intimate an instantaneous ascent to life and joy, when the last breath has been drawn? Let it be well considered if these do not at most imply the unappreciated interval of unconsciousness, which to the dead is as nothing. As a fact they may sleep for even many hundred years. As an experience they seem to themselves not to have slept a day. But the fact remains undisproved and unshaken that they have lain at rest and quiet, waiting for the resurrection word of power—waiting for the morning of their joy and their glory—waiting for the presence and salvation of their divine Lord at His majestic second coming! This is the testimony of Christ Himself, and that of His apostles and prophets.

It is perfectly in order to inquire what scriptures, whether taken in an isolated way or in groups, magnify the force or perpetuity of innate Adamic life. So vast in superiority over this frail, failing, natural life is the life brought to the world by the Messenger anointed, that it is declared by a foremost apostle that "he that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." The natural or physical life is esteemed as nothing in comparison. All the glory of physical or intellectual man is but as a shadow and vanity, contrasted with that exalted and enduring life proclaimed in the gospel. And this life, too, is had and held by the believer in infallible guaranty. It is sealed and assured upon the obedience of faith. Its joy may begin here in part, by anticipation, and in conscious and growing concord of faith with the will of the Holy One, but its reality and effectualness are experienced only at the coming of the Son of Man.

"Your life is hid with Christ in God," declares an apostle. "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear," is fully equivalent to the assurance that He will appear. And in that day of culmination and coronation, the resurrected saints "will appear with him," and "with him in glory." No half life of a preliminary disembodied being is hinted. It is life in its fullness and perfection, at the signal moment beginning its immortal course, and manifesting its electric potency and sweetness when the magical almighty word is spoken.

Our Lord Himself says, "Except ye eat of the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood ye have no life in you." How is it, then, that natural breath-life is so almost idolatrously magnified? Why is it so italicised and intensified in almost all popular or so-called philosophical discourse? Why is it so championed and inculcated in modern theology? Why is it stamped and glorified with imagined immortality?

Let us be careful. Let us beware of even unconscious and unsuspected, but glaring, aberration from the truth. Shall we rob our Redeemer, who alone has the true immortal life to give? Shall we vainly impute to ourselves what belongs to Him only? Shall we assume for ourselves post-mortem attributes and functions of life that are impossible without a resurrection? Vain and foolish enterprise, when all the fullness and intensity of the only true and immortal life belongs to our exalted and immortal Redeemer alone!

So far as relates to the real or alleged reluctance of few or many to accept a doctrine which involves a period of total unconsciousness, of what practical or ideal force is such objection in the light of sound reason or living faith? Is a little moment of unknowing interval to be once mentioned as a matter of concern or aversion? Where is the calmness and virtue of our faith, that we cannot be content to be "asleep in Jesus" for a little moment of unnoted time? Are we so faint and fearful that we cannot rest in the love and faithfulness of our Lord who Himself descended into that Hades, "where there is no wisdom, nor device, nor knowledge"? What sleep under heaven can be more honorable and secure than the sleep of saints expressly in the sight of their pledged and infallible Restorer? Will we not trust Him perfectly to raise us out of our shadow of night, our short and dusty oblivion? Who will remember us if He does not?

Let us lie down (if we must needs die before He call) without a shadow of apprehension or trembling. Noble and unflinching watch-care will He take of His beloved who have died trusting in Him! If He Himself could die, trusting in the arm of Eternal Might to raise Him from the grave after all the bitterness of the cross, and all the helplessness of expiring nature, surely we may trust Him to remember us! We may close our eyes in the untroubled assurance of hope that He will find us (even though it were after ages). But we may know surely that the day of salvation at His second coming is near. So let ours be the unfearing and perpetual triumph of faith.

of casting a spell on the drinking water or of poisoning the wells and were consequently bitterly persecuted. Of course the Roman Church did not openly countenance such persecution, but it was, nevertheless, carried on by its superstitious adherents.

According to the authority before quoted, "the popular aversion rested by no means exclusively on religious considerations; worldly motives were also present. The Jews of that period had a still higher degree than now the control of financial affairs in their hands; they used it without scruple. The church herself had unintentionally given them a monopoly of the money market, by forbidding Christians to take interest. In this way the Jews became rich indeed, but at the same time made themselves still more repugnant to the Christian population than they previously were by reason of their religion."

Thus the alleged economic domination of the Jews today may be traceable to the restrictions and persecutions under which they labored in the past.

It is an established historic fact, that this race has ever been a source of irritation throughout the world. No doubt much of the fear Gentile nations have experienced was un-called for, but nevertheless the fear was there and it was inspired by the presence of the Jew among them. Numbering, according to the Jewish Scientific Institute of Warsaw, less than 17,000,000 in all the world, there is no denying the fact that the Jews present a very real problem to mankind. They are a constant "thorn in the flesh" from a religious, political, and economic standpoint to all nations.

But they do not perish! They cannot be eradicated. No matter how powerful the pressure brought upon them they survive. Fortunately or unfortunately they do not increase in numbers so rapidly as many other races—but neither do they die! Wherever they go they are either a blessing or a curse. When they are received with kindness and their lives and property made secure, they inevitably return much of good to their hosts, bringing business prosperity, scientific advancement, and social and religious well-being to the nation.

The reason why this is true is found in the promise God made to Abram, before his name was changed to Abraham, when He said:

"I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing: and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: and in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed" (Gen. 12:2, 3).

The Israelitish people are thus associated by God with the destinies of all races. These races and nations will be blessed or cursed, according as they bless or curse the Jew, until the Jewish Messiah comes again to assume His destined place as Sovereign of the "Glad New World"!

The Model Prayer

Effie Wall, Blood River Berean Class, Hammond, La.

This prayer, recorded in Matthew 6:9-13, is spoken of as the Lord's Prayer by most every one. Christ gave this prayer to His disciples as an example to follow.

Very often this prayer is repeated without thinking of its meaning. If you will notice the first words of the prayer, you will see that it teaches us that we all have one Father. If we "hallow" anything we treat it as holy. We are to treat the name of the Lord as holy at all times.

Our Lord said in this prayer that the kingdom to come would be on earth, but many misunderstand this and think that our future and eternal home will be in heaven.

"Give us this day our daily bread," means that we are not to be over-thoughtful about our supply for tomorrow. There is one who is willing and ready to meet all our needs.

To be true Christians, we must forgive those who have done things against us, because our heavenly Father will forgive our many, many sins, as Christ taught in verse 12.

An example of the temptation which is meant here was the tempting or trying of the faith of Abraham by requiring Isaac's life (Gen. 22:1, 2).

May we strive to apply the teachings of this model prayer to ourselves and to live a true Christian life and at last receive everlasting life in the kingdom of God.

A New Berean Class Organized

A new Berean society has recently been organized in Piedmont, S. C., at the Guthrie Grove Church of God of the Abrahamic Faith. The first meeting was held February 12. Sixteen members were present at this first meeting and elected the following officers: President, Miss Mellie James; first vice president, Miss Jessie Belle Chandler; second vice president, Miss Corine James; recording secretary, Mrs. Gertrude James; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Annie Mills; treasurer, Miss Bertha McCoy; teacher, Bro. Weldon McCoy.

Meetings are held each Saturday night at the homes of the members. The name of the society is "Piedmont Berean Society." This class has enrolled as a member society in the National Berean Society, and will use the Berean books for study.

To the above report received from the president of the National Berean Society, Bro. Harry Goekler, we append the following from Miss Jeannette A. Romine, Oregon, Ill., who was instrumental in the organization of this new class through her correspondence with Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Mills, 4 Parkrow St., Piedmont, S. C. "Make a plea on the Berean page that other societies write a letter of welcome, congratulations, and encouragement to this new sister society. It will be a real encouragement to them to know that all of us are behind them and will help them where we can in their difficulties when they need us." This is a very good suggestion indeed, Jeannette, and I hope the societies will use this opportunity for Christian encouragement to assure this new society of our sincere and lasting interest in them.

The Importance of Baptism

Ernest Barnum, Blood River Berean Class, Hammond.

As we search the Scriptures, we find in them the word "baptize." Then we go on and try to find its importance.

In Matthew 3:13-16 we find that Jesus was baptized by John in the Jordan River. This is our example. Jesus had no sins, but was our guide and in fulfilling all righteousness was baptized.

We find also in John 3:5 the statement of Jesus as given to Nicodemus: "Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." This statement must refer to water baptism.

In the Acts of the Apostles there are many references showing the importance and necessity of baptism. Notice Acts 2:38: "Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Our baptism is for the remission of sins.

Again in Acts 8:12 we read, "But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women." Belief in the kingdom, and in Jesus Christ was followed by obedience in baptism.

Faith, repentance, and baptism are the means of entering the kingdom of God; therefore baptism is important.

Make Shadows Fall Behind

* * * The Nobler, Minnesota Berean Society

"Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path" (Psa. 119:105).

Can we truthfully say, "I'm not afraid of the dark"? When night falls we naturally want company and shelter. We desire light to guide us so we do not stumble or encounter barriers. Life without God's guiding Word is like wandering in the dark. God gave His Word that man might have a light to show him the way, and if he accepts it, without a doubt he will find a way home. When we are without a guiding light we are harassed by shadows brought on by constant erring. We see no future, no reward in our work without the light.

"I long had sought a place to go
Where shadows could not find me,
And then I faced the light, and lo,
My shadows fell behind me."

PREPARED BY MARY A. GESIN

"I am the bread of life: he that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst" (Jesus' words in John 6:35).

We Plow the Fields, and Scatter

"We plow the fields, and scatter
The good seed on the land,
But it is fed and watered
By God's almighty hand;
He sends the snow in winter,
The warmth to swell the grain,
The breezes, and the sunshine,
And soft refreshing rain.

"He only is the Maker
Of all things near and far;
He paints the wayside flower,
He lights the evening star;
The winds and waves obey Him;
By Him the birds are fed;
Much more to us, His children,
He gives our daily bread.

"We thank Thee, then, our Father,
For all things bright and good,
The seedtime and the harvest,
Our life, our health, our food;
No gifts have we to offer
For all Thy love imparts,
But that which Thou desirest—
Our humble, thankful hearts."

A Boy's Part in a Great Miracle

Did you ever stop to think, boys and girls, that Jesus never used His power to perform miracles for His own good? When He needed rest He didn't cause the crowds to disappear instantly, as He might have done. He kept right on giving them the things they needed, whether it was food for their hungry bodies or truth for their needy minds.

I am afraid that we would not have been so unselfish. Aren't you? We would, no doubt, have used that wonderful God-given power more often for our own benefit than for the good of others. But not once did Jesus do so!

In our lesson for March 13, we find that the apostles, whom Jesus had sent out two by two to preach the gospel, had returned from their first tour. They were anxious to report to their Teacher just what they had done. Jesus realized that they must have been weary from their labors, and He told them to come and rest in a "desert place."

Now we are told by students of the Bible that a "desert" in the Bible does not always mean a place where there is no water and where nothing grows, as we use the word today. But some of these deserts had houses and tents and wells and cisterns. The people who lived there had camels and sheep and cattle.

There were, also, large spaces that were not occupied, where shepherds roamed with their flocks. And the Hebrew word for "desert" means "a place for driving cattle." Probably Jesus and the apostles went to just such a place, where there was a thick carpet of grass for them to rest upon a while.

Now read verse 33, and see what the people did when they saw Jesus and His followers leaving by boat to find the rest they so much needed. The crowds must have hurried to get there ahead of them. Most likely the disciples were rather provoked at the people, but Jesus was not, we are sure.

To Him they seemed like "sheep without a shepherd." And we know that that was a very dangerous condition for either people or sheep to be in. The Eastern people never leave their sheep out in the fields alone. For they do not have fields with safe, tight fences around them as we have. Their sheep are fed in the open country and are in danger from wild animals and robbers, as well. So they take great care of them.

Now read what happened after Jesus had taught the multitudes all day and evening was drawing near. In verses 35 to 44 you will find the story, and a most interesting one it is, as you will see.

The disciples wanted to send the people away, but Jesus had a better plan. He used a young boy's lunch to feed all that crowd. Notice it says the boy had five "loaves." We learn that the loaves in those days were more like small pancakes, about one half inch thick or a little more and seven or eight inches across.

Do you know how they were made? Well, they consisted only of barley flour mixed with water and a little salt and baked as your mother bakes pancakes! Sounds sort of dry and tasteless, doesn't it? But travelers who have tasted them say they are sweet and good to eat. Notice that Jesus "blessed" the bread. Do you at your table?

CAN YOU FIND—

"Give us this day our daily bread"?

AMONG THE CHURCHES

KOKOMO, INDIANA

The Church of God at Kokomo, Ind., closed a very interesting and profitable series of meetings Sunday, Feb. 20, with an all-day service.

Evangelist Sydney E. Magaw of Tippicanoe City, Ohio, used his most wonderful chart. "Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world." The average attendance was about 50. We were glad to welcome visitors from the Hillisburg and Burr Oak churches during the series.

Bro. Magaw made many friends in Kokomo, who pray that he may long be spared to the service.

Elder O. J. Parker, pastor of the local church, rejoices to introduce to the brotherhood the following who were baptized: Bro. and Sr. Beamen, husband and wife, S. Plate St.; and Bros. Clayton Hale and Lloyd Charles, cousins, E. Vaile Ave. May they, with us, be faithful until "Thy kingdom come."

D. G. Harvey.

With much regret we report the illness of Sr. Julia Ordnung, beloved and useful member for many years of the Oregon, Ill., church. She is confined to her bed much of the time, but it is believed that with an easing up of activity for a few months she will be restored to health again. The prayers of the entire church are for her speedy recovery.

THE PENNELLWOOD CHURCH Grand Rapids, Michigan

(Facts not before at our disposal make the republication of some of the following items from Grand Rapids advisable.—Editor.)

Mr. Rufus Overholt, aged seventy-five years, passed away at his home near Dutton, Feb. 4, 1938. The funeral sermon was preached by Bro. Ray Abbott, pastor of the Pennellwood Church. The large number in attendance at the service testified to the esteem in which Mr. Overholt was held in the community in which he had lived for seventy-one years. Although not a member of the Church of God, he was a frequent attendant at the Pennellwood Church. His wife had long been a member of the church at Dutton.

During the absence of Pastor Abbott to attend the funeral of his mother in Minnesota, Mr. Walter Ellis of Wayland supplied in the pulpit here.

Miss Doris Schooley was united in marriage to Mr. Orwin Van Buskirk on February 12. A shower was held in her honor at the home of Mrs. Cecil Koon on February 25.

Our two new Sunday school classrooms are now in service. The rebuilt double garage made a fine large room in which the men hold their class sessions. It also provides a convenient room for the Sewing Circle and for class parties. By reversing the seats in the auditorium, we were able to increase the seating capacity by thirteen more seats, which were much needed.

Our Sunday school attendance went "over the top" on February 27, with 157 present.

Mrs. Rhoda Hanson is on the sick list at this writing.

Mrs. L. F. Sloeum, Secretary.

THE REWARD OF FAITHFUL TEACHERS

Recently the Lutheran Church in Oregon, Ill., selected as a special project the opening of a branch Sunday school on the east side of Rock River in Oregon. The residents of that part of our little city consist mostly of laboring men and their families. Before carrying the project out definitely they made a house-to-house canvass of the community, asking at each home how many children would attend such a school, and, in case it was found advisable to send a school bus to take them to the established Sunday schools across the river, to which church they would prefer to go. The result was interesting.

It was found there were some 54 children in the neighborhood, more than 25 of whom expressed the desire to attend the Church of God Sunday school, the rest dividing their interest between the Presbyterian and the Lutheran.

The result was significant in that the Church of God does not have a single member living on that side of the river within the city limits, but each of the three other churches are represented by several families.

The pastor of the Church of God was invited to meet with the ministers of the three other churches to discuss what might be done. He was asked as to the cause of our Sunday school's strong following on the East Side and was pleased to tell his questioners that it was due to the faithful work of teachers, and to one teacher especially, who had labored long and earnestly with children from the poorest homes, at times holding classes in a gas station unprovided with seats, musical instrument, or any of the equipment usually looked upon as essential to the success of a Sunday school. Such faithfulness deserves recognition and emulation.

Under a temporary arrangement between the four churches, a school bus will gather the East Side children each Sunday morning and bring them across the river and distribute them to the various schools of their choice. After Sunday school is over they will be returned to their homes in the same way.

A note from Bro. William Platts of Welland, Ont., tells of his safe arrival at home after a trip to Delaware (where he lived some years ago) and to Florida, where he and his wife spent a part of the winter. "We had a wonderful trip and met people from all parts of the country and from every walk in life," Bro. Platts states.

SOUTH BEND, INDIANA

Elder J. H. Anderson preached in South Bend, Ind., on the fourth Sunday evening in February, in the Community Room of the Y.M.C.A. Building. His subject was, "The One Foundation." The senior choir rendered several beautiful selections.

The junior choir sings for Sunday school and is under the direction of Sr. Lottie Pick-erl. Each Sunday they give a special number, which is an added feature to the Sunday school. The choir is composed of nine members.

Sr. Lydia Railsback attended Sunday school on last Sunday for the first time since she recovered from her accident last October. We were glad to see her again in the service.

We forgot to mention in our January report that we had four members of our Sunday school who were present every Sunday. They were Dale Rouch, Marjorie Rouch, Patsy Rosner, and Alverta Leighty. Alverta has had perfect attendance for two years and received a bar for the second year, and all the others received a pin.

On Sunday, March 6, the intermediate class will have charge of the Sunday school. Come and hear them.

REPORT OF T. A. DRINKARD

My detailed report for February is as follows: Ater, Tex. (Feb. 5, 6), 3 sermons; Little Rock, Ark. (15, 16), 2 sermons; Cleveland, Ark. (19, 20), 3 sermons; Driggs, Ark. (25-27), 4 sermons. Places visited, 4; sermons delivered, 12. Expenses, $13.29; receipts, $60.16.

I am very happy to place this report before the brotherhood so that you may see just what I am doing. May God in His own good way bless those that have given toward this work, as I know that without your help I could not carry on. Knowing it to be a worthy cause, I do not hesitate to pray for your help that the work may continue.

At Little Rock, Ark., the weather was very bad, hence the attendance was small. Our first night at Cleveland, Ark., went by without services on account of rain, but good attendance and attention were enjoyed at the rest of the services. The three nights' services promised Mount Olive, Ark., were postponed on account of sickness, but I promised to go there in March. While at Driggs, Ark., the weather was excellent, and we had fine attendance and interest at every service. I promised to go there every 4th Sunday, also to hold a series of meetings the last half of June. Our series of meetings for Cleveland was set for the first part of September. The meeting at Ater, Tex., will be held the first of July; and another one is promised for Bristow, Okla., the first part of June; and still another promised for about the last of August in Kansas. And I am not forgetting the meeting at McGintytown, Ark., to be held the last of July. There are other places that have asked for meetings, but no time has been set. I am reserving the first half of August to attend the General Conference. I shall be happy to hear from those interested in the gospel work.

T. A. Drinkard, Handley, Texas.

ANSWERS TO "SEARCH THE SCRIPTURES" QUESTIONS

1. When was an army routed by a song? 2 Chron. 20:21, 22. The entire chapter should be read to get the entire thought.

2. To what two persons did God give the largest farm in the world, and why are we interested in it? God promised the "world" to Abraham "and to his seed" (Rom. 4:13), "which is Christ" (Gal. 3:16). We are interested in the matter because if we have been baptized into Jesus Christ we are also "Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise" (Gal. 3:27, 29).

3. Name two characters in the Old Testament whose names were changed for a purpose. Abram's name was changed to Abraham when God promised to make him "the father of many nations" (Gen. 17:4, 5). "Abram" means "father of height" or "mighty father." "Abraham" means "father of a multitude." Jacob's name, which signified "supplanter," was changed to Israel, which means, "ruling with God" or "he who strives with God" (Gen. 32:28).

4. Name four characters in the New Testament who were given new names, and tell what the names mean. "Simon he surnamed Peter," meaning "a rock," as does Peter's other name, "Cephas" (Mark 3:16; John 1:42); James and John who were both called "Boanerges," that is, "Sons of thunder" (Mark 3:17); and Saul ("asked"—compare 1 Sam. 8:5, 6 and Acts 13:21 on the meaning of "Saul"), who apparently assumed the name "Paul" ("little") after his humbling experience on the road to Damascus (see 1 Cor. 15:9).

5. When were men killed because they could not pronounce a word correctly? Judges 12:5, 6. The entire chapter should be read and an effort made to show that God through His appointed agents tests His people in many different ways.

6. In what strange place did a group of musicians hide their instruments, and why did they do it? Psa. 137:3, 4. The entire Psalm suggests that sacred songs should not be sung for simple amusement, nor for mere entertainment, and that the purpose of such songs is to remind us of God and of His coming city and kingdom upon the earth.

7. When did a man have a dream about a barley biscuit that tumbled into an army camp and knocked down a tent? What came of it? The words in blackface appear in the passage in which the answer is found (Judges 7:13). The story involves the experience of Gideon, and shows that numbers are not needed to accomplish God's purposes so much as faith and obedience. What came out of the incident is told in the ensuing verses.

8. What man took a nap in church, but slept more soundly outside? (Acts 20:7-12). The young man slept under the long sermon of Paul. Probably the lights (v. 8) had a tendency to increase his drowsiness. Falling from the window in the upper part of the house, he broke his neck and slept the profounder sleep of death "outside."

MRS. ADELINE F. TAYLOR

Adeline F. Allard, daughter of Benjamin and Nancy Allard, was born in Freeport, Ill., Sept. 11, 1857, and died at Waverly, Iowa, Feb. 26, 1938.

She was married to William Henry Taylor, Feb. 27, 1883. They lived on a farm south of Gladbrook, Iowa, two years, when they moved to Jewell County, Kan., where they lived for seven years. They returned to the old homestead south of Gladbrook, where they resided until the spring of 1914. From Gladbrook they moved to Benson, Minn., where her husband died on their wedding anniversary in 1922. Had she lived ten hours longer, her death would have been on their wedding anniversary also.

Mrs. Taylor lived in Cedar Falls, Iowa, from 1928 until 1937, when she went to Waverly, and resided there until the time of her death. The funeral was held at Cedar Falls, after which the body was taken to Gladbrook and laid to rest beside her husband.

She was preceded in death by her husband and four sons, three of whom died in infancy. Harry Garner of Long Beach, Calif., a son by a former marriage, died Jan. 31, 1938, just a few weeks before his mother. She leaves to mourn her loss, a daughter, Irene Taylor; a sister, Mrs. Lillian Starbuck; six grandchildren, and three great-grandchildren; besides many other relatives and friends.

She was baptized as a young woman at Gladbrook by Elder A. J. Eychaner, and was affiliated with the Church of God from that time onward. She was a faithful servant of the Master until the end.

During her later years she used Psalm 4:8 as her daily evening prayer: "I will both lay me down in peace, and sleep: for thou, Lord, only makest me dwell in safety." That prayer was not only applicable to her daily trust in God, but also now as she lies down and sleeps the sleep of death in peace, and we know that He will keep her safely in His memory until that blessed time when the dead in Christ arise with bodies fashioned like unto His glorious body. MRS. MARY JANE SNOW

Mrs. Mary Jane Snow, eighty, widow of W. J. Snow, died December 18 at her home near Conway, Ark. She is survived by three sons, T. F. of Greenbrier and J. R. and W. C. of Conway; a daughter, Mrs. Alice McCollum of Greenbrier; and a sister, Mrs. Effie Bogard of Mena.

Sr. Snow was one of the oldest members of the Church of God in the South. She was baptized by Bro. Sem Etheridge in 1874.

I read a part of the 15th chapter of 1 Corinthians, then, after prayer, made a short talk in regard to the Christian hope, reading from Job 14:7: "For there is hope of a tree, if it be cut down, that it will not cease," showing that a Christian's hope is in the resurrection from among the dead. Sr. Snow received this hope when she obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine, being made free from sin by this hope which she embraced. She then received that germ of life that never dies. This, I showed, was the Holy Spirit that is in all children of God, and if we have not this Spirit we are not His, but if that Spirit dwells in us it will quicken our bodies and fashion them like unto His glorious body.

Then I showed from the Scriptures that the one sleeping in death was the one that obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine, and was the mother of those children, and that she knew nothing, and would know nothing any more until Christ by the power of His Spirit called her from the grave, which is her house until the resurrection morn, and this same body, when it puts on its deathless robe, will enter the city of God and not another.

YOUTH FACES THE FUTURE

only hope lay in the successful appeal of the beautiful young queen. Being a Jewess, though queen of Persia, Esther realized that God had raised her up for this very task. Bravely she shouldered the responsibility, though to visit the king uninvited was to court disfavor and perhaps death. "If I perish, I perish," she said, as she went forward courageously to play her appointed part. The crisis stirred her soul to noble action, and God wrought a great deliverance for His people.

As the eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth today, seeking those whose hearts are toward Him, they light again and again upon the fine, stalwart young men, the keen, thoughtful young women, of the rising generation. He longs that they shall give themselves unreservedly to Him, that He may use them mightily in the closing scenes. He has great tasks for them to perform, calling for the highest courage, the steadiest nerve, the greatest endurance. Among their ranks He sees His strongest champions who will maintain the honor of His name against the fiercest opposition of Satan. To them He looks for witnesses who will remain loyal to Him though the heavens fall.

These may be times of unemployment so far as certain worldly activities are concerned, but for the children of God there was never more to do than now. No young person who desires to do His will need be out of work. Idleness for God's champions is unthinkable. To them He commits the task of taking to all mankind His last warning and saving message. It is for them, with all the power of their being, by voice and pen, by preaching and visiting, by missionary service and printed page, to arouse men and women everywhere to a realization of the full significance of this solemn time.

God's invitation to young people today is indeed a call to noble tasks. The very gravity of the crisis provides for them abounding opportunities for service. All who yield themselves to Him and throw themselves whole-heartedly on His side, determined to champion His cause against all opponents, and at all costs to "keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus," will find that He will honor their faith and courage. He will not disappoint them. He will find for them more work than they can do, and their bread and water shall be sure.

When the rich young ruler came to our Lord and talked with Him about the way of life, we are told that "Jesus beholding him loved him" (Mark 10:21). He wanted to do right. He was keeping the commandments to the best of his knowledge. Jesus was drawn to this fine, strong, upright young man, and rejoiced in his pure and beautiful life. So far no one had come to Him of such rare promise. What rich possibilities were here! Surely in this splendid youth was the making of a mighty champion of righteousness. To turn his life into richer, deeper channels, He suggested an act of sacrifice. He wanted the young man to realize that the keeping of the commandments, though very commendable and very necessary, was not sufficient of itself. Faith was indispensable, and could not in his case be developed until confidence in riches had been shaken.

The young man went away sorrowful, not willing to make the surrender asked of him. Though he knew it not, the greatest opportunity of his life had passed. He held on to his money, but lost eternal riches. Instead of becoming a great leader in God's cause and championing the fortunes of the early Christian church, he faded out of the picture, and all that remains is the record of his tragic failure.

God is speaking to the youth of today. Beholding them, He loves them. To every young lad He is saying, "My son, give me thine heart" (Prov. 23:26). With every girl Jesus is pleading: "Come unto me . . . Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me" (Matt. 11:28, 29). He desires to save them from the evil that is in the world, and to preserve them from the judgments that so soon must fall upon it. He wants them to give their lives to Him, that He may make of them strong men and women after His own heart. He calls them that He may send them to lift up His fallen standard in the dark places of the earth. He wants to use them to prepare a people to meet Him at His coming.

Money or position makes no difference with Him. He found David with the sheep, Gideon at a wine press, and Paul on the Damascus road. It is not place or social standing that matters in His sight, but willingness to listen and obey. Amos was only a herdsman, a gatherer of sycamore fruit, the poorest of the poor, yet the Lord took him as he followed the flock, and said: "Go, prophesy to my people Israel." To him also was given the stirring message: "The end is come . . . Prepare to meet thy God."

Once in a time of Israel's trouble, when God sought for a leader who might deliver them, He found a lad who worked as a helper in the temple courts. In the dead of night He called to this boy with the Godward heart: "Samuel, Samuel!" And he replied, "Speak, Lord; for thy servant heareth" (1 Sam. 3:9). Then, though but a child, his mind was opened that he might understand God's purposes, and ere many years had passed "all Israel from Dan even to Beersheba knew that Samuel was established to be a prophet of the Lord."

Have you, dear boy or girl, young man, young woman, heard the call of the Lord? Perhaps He is speaking to you even now. If so, it is a moment of supreme opportunity. Listen with all care. Tell Him that you want to do His will, that you desire His help. And if He asks you to be His champion in this mighty hour, accept His commission. Say to Him, as Isaiah said in his youth, "Here am I; send me" (Isa. 6:8). Such an act of surrender will bring you immediately into the company of His chosen ones, and open out the widest possibilities of rich and joyous fellowship and service with Him. You will become something far greater than you could ever have been without Him—a living power for good, a constant source of blessing. As F. B. Meyer once wrote: "There is no limit to the possibilities of the life that is fully surrendered to God, that has become the aperture, or channel, through which God can pour Himself forth to the world."—Arthur S. Maxwell.

“Such As I Have”

“Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee” (Acts 3:6).

IT WAS truly a golden text—the one selected by the International Committee on Religious Education for the Sunday school lesson for March 6, 1938. It is a remarkable passage in many ways, but our great interest in it is not due to the miraculous occurrence it relates, attesting, as it does, the truth of Peter’s testimony to the resurrection of Christ and proving that the authority with which He spoke was from God. Rather it is the lesson the incident has for us who live nearly two thousand years after the miracle took place.

We observe first, that the lame man who sat at the gate called Beautiful asking alms, must have made a strong appeal to Peter when he observed him there, for the man was poor and Peter also was poor at this time and knew what it meant to a hungry man to be without means of securing food. Of course Peter had not always known poverty, for his father was, or had been in the earlier period of the gospel narratives, a well-to-do man. He was the owner of a small fishing fleet which he employed others to operate. Peter, too, must have been possessed of considerable property at the time that Jesus called him to become a fisher of men, for it is quite generally assumed that he had a house at Bethsaida (John 1:44) and another in the seacoast fishing town of Capernaum (Matt. 4:13, 18).

But at the time this story opens, Peter was as much without funds as was the beggar at the gate. He had forsaken all to become a follower of Jesus (Matt. 19:27), and for some years, so far as our definite knowledge goes, he had no obvious source of livelihood. Like Barnabas, who had been a wealthy citizen of Crete, he had laid his entire fortune upon the altar of the gospel service.

So the lame man and Peter had a bond of sympathetic understanding that naturally brought them closer together.

“Peter, fastening his eyes upon him.” It was not just a careless, indifferent glance that the chief of the apostles turned toward the pathetic figure who sat beside the road with pleading eyes, but a penetrating, heart-searching gaze that saw deep into the man’s inner self and revealed the deepest longings of his nature and even recognized his potential faith in Jesus Christ!

His sympathy went out to the man but, having long ago “forsaken all” his worldly wealth, Peter had nothing in the form of money to give him.

“Silver and gold have I none.” How often we hear people say, “How I wish I had a million dollars! There are so many people whom I would like to help.” They feel that without money they have nothing to give. Only those, they believe, who have gold and silver in their pockets can give anything to relieve the suffering of the poor who sit with pleading eyes at the gate called Beautiful—more often the place these poor folk occupy is the doorway of a sordid, repulsive hovel. Because they have no money, they think, I say, that they have nothing to give, but how mistaken they are!

The lame man thought that all he wanted was money—money to buy a little bread to sustain life in his crippled body. He had been lame all his life. He had never known the joy of a long tramp through the blossom-scented woods in springtime. He never expected to be able to walk and run and leap as others did. He had been born lame. He had known nothing but the restricted life of a cripple from childhood. He had no conception of what strength of body and limb would mean. To be like other men physically—that was something of which he had never dared to dream!

Peter could, no doubt, have provided the means whereby the lame man could have obtained the financial help for which he asked. The gift of miracle-working power could operate in many different ways. There is no limit to the power of God to accomplish wonders. The disciples had once been in need of money to pay the head tax imposed by the Roman Government but they had no money. So Jesus told them to go fishing—and they found the required coin in the mouth of the first fish they took! Peter could have performed a similar miracle and made the money thus secured available to supply the lame man with the necessary things of life. But he did not do that. (Please turn to page 11)

Abreast of the Times

Pertinent Comments on the News of the Day

Boy Criminals

"The imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth"
(Gen. 8:21).

CHICAGO, March 9.—"This case is evidence of a critical situation," declared Chief Justice Cornelius J. Harrington today, as thirteen boys still in their teens, paraded through Criminal Court before him. "Boys of fifteen and sixteen are continually appearing before us charged with the most serious crimes," he asserted. "The situation seems to be growing worse." Members of the grand jury who were present nodded their heads in agreement.

Later in the day another judge, Francis B. Allegretti, accepted the State's plea for maximum prison terms—one year to life—for four other young robbers. State's Attorney Francis McCurrie told the judge that "age is no excuse in this case. The courts are filled with youths of this type. Apparently the only way to stop them is to inflict the full penalty."

The moral fabric of society is breaking down through the failure of parental discipline and spiritual influences in the home. Nor is the church and Sunday school free from blame in this matter. The church is largely what its leaders make it. If religious leaders have no real faith in God or in the Bible, they can do little to stem the tide of crime among young people or older ones. So long as preachers continue to seek political and legal support for their programs rather than preach the simple gospel of Jesus Christ, just that long will their efforts to save young people from a life of crime prove ineffective.

Religious Revival Needed

"O Lord, revive thy work in the midst of the years"
(Hab. 3:2).

CHICAGO, March 10.—"The nation needs much in the way of understanding and amity, but it needs most a spiritual revival—not the showy kind—but the kind that comes from conviction that without spiritual guidance the greatest nation in the history of mankind will become vulnerable," declares the Chicago Journal of Commerce. "The newspapers could well inculcate a little fear of the ultimate consequences that come to nations which try to get along without frequent revivals of faith in Christianity."

This is a remarkable sentiment to find editorial expression in a purely business publication in these days! The Presbyterian, commenting on it, says, "It is a significant fact that today, when so many ministers belittle the revival, secular journals frequently plead for it." Perhaps the reason why the "revival" is belittled by ministers is because they themselves have no spiritual life to be "revived." They are still "dead in trespasses and sins" and have never been awakened to true spiritual consciousness. A religion that lacks the reviving power of the gospel, that feeds alone upon politics and sociology, has little to inspire its ministers with a zeal for converting multitudes of sinners to Jesus Christ.

North Syria Rests on Sunday

"The Lord . . . may give rest to the land" (Jer. 50:34).

ALEXANDRETTA, Syria, March 7.—Since November 29, 1937, Alexandretta has flourished as an independent "sanjak," or state, in northern Syria. Under the League of Nations settlement, which paved the way for Alexandretta's freedom from Damascus, the Syrian capital, local affairs have been administered without reference to Syrian officials. Among the changes this new status has brought about, perhaps the most noticeable is the fact that the weekly bank holiday has been changed from Friday, the Sabbath of the Moslems, to Sunday, the rest day of the Christians.

German-Italian Split Rumored

"They shall not hold together, any more than iron blends with clay" (Dan. 2:43, Moffatt).

ROME, Italy, March 10.—The Fascist Grand Council, Italy's highest advisory board on foreign policy, convened at Venice Palace tonight with Premier Benito Mussolini as rumors spread that the Rome-Berlin axis was splitting under strain of Austrian developments. The fear that such a disaster may come is based on the possible result of the Austrian chancellor's call for a plebiscite to be held Sunday on the question of Austria's independence. A state bordering on civil war now exists in Austria, where Nazi and anti-Nazi forces are fighting in the streets of the capital and of other cities with fists, clubs, and even guns.

Students of prophecy are quite generally agreed that the Roman Empire is to be revived in some form in the last days. At the same time the Scriptures point out plainly that such a revival will not result in complete coherence of the various "toes" (Dan. 2:42).

The Dilemma in Palestine

Is There a Way Out?

THINGS have reached an impasse in Palestine. No way has been found to reconcile the aims and demands of Jews and Arabs. Jews focus their aims and base their demands on the terms of the Balfour Declaration which promised a home for their people in the land of their forefathers. With this objective Arabs have never been in agreement, and from the first have been vigorous opponents of Zionism. While the Fellahin have got along amicably with the Jews with whom they have been in contact, the Arab leaders have sought in every way to frustrate Zionist plans by arousing the fanaticism of their followers in other parts of the land.

This opposition may be easily understood. Arabs were deliberately excluded from the counsels of the League of Nations when plans for a Jewish homeland in Palestine were approved. And, while their rights were specifically guarded in the provisions of the mandate assigned to Great Britain, the Jews were to occupy a place of privilege. Besides, Zionism cut across their own national aspirations. They, with their kinsmen across the border, to whom they were bound by ties of religion and language, were also inflamed with nationalistic ambitions. They were dreaming of an Arab empire of which Palestine was to form a part. So long as Jews came in as colonists to make for themselves agricultural settlements, no objection was raised. But when they began to come in large numbers, and openly asserted their determination to secure political domination in Palestine, Arab leaders at once began to organize rebellion against the Mandatory Power.

The fact is that, in competition with the Jew, the Arab knows that he has no chance. The inertia of centuries is not easily cast off, while Jews bring to Palestine the skill and adaptability which they have acquired abroad, and which gives to them a conspicuous advantage in almost everything they undertake. From the seemingly bottomless purse of the Jewish National Fund, Arabs have been tempted by the extravagant prices offered, to part with their heritage. They have seen the fattest and broadest acres of Arabic Palestine pass into the hands of men sworn never again to allow them to get into alien hands. Elbowed to less productive soil, or to the rocky uplands, while they have scratched the ground with oxen and primitive plow, or reaped the scanty crop with the ancient hook, they have watched their Jewish neighbors with teams of well-fed mules, drawing the modern plow through the rich soil, or gathering with modern harvesters the fat sheaves from the acres that once were theirs.

What has stimulated Arab leaders even more to retain their hold of Palestine has been the vision of possibilities aroused by Jewish enterprise. Not only have they seen industrial enterprises like the Ruthenberg Dam on the Jordan for the development of electric power and factories for the extraction of wealth from the limitless chemical resources of the Dead Sea, but the results of efforts to bring back fertility to the land of Israel. Barren hills have been clothed with trees, hillsides have been terraced and planted with vines, pestilential marshes have been drained and made fruitful, stony ground has been transformed into fruitful fields, and desert places made to rejoice and blossom with extended groves of fruit-bearing trees. They begin to recognize what they have missed, and are determined to hold for themselves all that remains.
